Alabama: Code 1907, § 3374 (certified copy of a duly recorded "conveyance of property," admissible); § 3395 (similar, for conditional sales of personalty); § 4000 ("If the original of any paper, properly registered, is lost or destroyed, a certified copy from the registry shall be deemed good secondary evidence"); § 4001 ("If the original is found to have been recorded, and it does not appear whether it was done on proper probate, the court shall presume, until the contrary appears, that the same was done on proper probate"); St. 1911, No. 52, p. 31, Feb. 20, § 2 (certified transcript of recorded corporate conveyance, admissible; unless the corporation is in possession and forgery is pleaded); 1832, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 3 Stew. & P. 81, 83; 1834, Tatum v. Young, 1 Port. 298, 310; 1839, Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. 39, 57; 1839, Smoot v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. 72, 75; 1874, Keller v. Moore, 51 Ala. 340; 1878, Sharpe v. Orme, 61 Ala. 263; 1879, Hart v. Ross, 64 Ala. 96, 97; 1880, Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 259, 267; 1880, Boykin v. Smith, 65 Ala. 294, 300; 1881, Dugger v. Collins, 69 Ala. 324, 328; 1881, Coker v. Ferguson, 70 Ala. 284, 287; 1884, Roney v. Moss, 76 Ala. 491; 1885, England v. Hatch, 80 Ala. 247, 249; 1886, Tranum v. Wilkinson, 81 Ala. 408, 1 So. 201, semble; 1889, Patterson v. Jones, 89 Ala. 388, 8 So. 77 (statute held to apply to conveyances of personal property also); 1890, Caldwell v. Pollak, 91 Ala. 353, 359, 8 So. 546; 1890, Robinson v. Cahalan, 91 Ala. 479, 481, 8 So. 415 (mortgage; certified copy admitted as "self-proving"); 1894, Jinwright v. Nelson, 105 Ala. 399, 401, 17 So. 91 (statute held to apply to conveyances by corporations); 1895, Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Brantley, 107 Ala. 683, 18 So. 320; 1897, Jones v. State, 113 Ala. 95, 21 So. 229; 1898, Foxworth v. Brown, 120 Ala. 59, 24 So. 1, semble (record of mortgage, admissible); 1899, Stamphill v. Bullen, 121 Ala. 250, 25 So. 928; 1904, Norris v. Billingsley, — Ala. —, 37 So. 564; 1915, Burnett v. Roman, 192 Ala. 188, 68 So. 353 (Code § 3374 applied to admit a certified copy of a deed recorded in a county other than the locus of the land).

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 525, 532, 534 (substantially like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 9876, 9892, 9894); § 542 (like ib. § 9909); § 497 (married woman's recorded list of personalty, provable by certified copy); § 555 (conveyances of personalty; commissioner's certified copy, admissible, but only to prove the filing); § 747 (mortgage of personalty; recorder's certified copy, admissible "without further proof of the execution of the original").

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 1743 ("Every instrument" permitted or required to be recorded with the county recorder and "lawfully proved or acknowledged," is provable by the record or a duly certified copy); § 4128 (county recorder's certified copy of chattel mortgage, to be evidence of filing, "but of no other fact").

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 1531 (record, or recorder's certified transcript, of deed or other instrument affecting real estate, duly recorded, is admissible, the original being lost, etc.);

§ 1535 (deeds of administrators, etc., provable by recorder's certified copy underseal); § 7385 (chattel mortgages; recorder's certified copy, admissible); 1838, Brown v. Hicks, 1 Ark. 233, 243 (bill of sale); 1843, Brock v. Saxton, 5 Ark. 708 (same); 1853, Dixon v. Thatcher, 14 Ark. 141, 146; 1856, McNeill v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 154, 169; 1856, Trammell v. Thurmond, 17 Ark. 206, 215; 1886, Apel v. Kelsey, 47 Ark. 413, 420, 2 S. W. 102.

California: Here the rulings had originally refused to recognize the register as evidence: C. C. P. 1872, § 1919 ("A public record of a private writing may be proved by the original record, or by a copy thereof, certified by the legal keeper of the record"); § 1951 as amended by St. 1889, no. 45 ("every instrument conveying or affecting real property, acknowledged or proved and certified as provided in the Civil Code" may be read "without further proof"; "also, the original record of such conveyancy or instrument thus acknowledged or proved, or a certified copy of the record of such conveyance or instrument thus acknowledged or proved, as the original instrument, without further proof"); Civ. C. 1872, § 1207 (certified copy of defective instrument affecting real property recorded before Jan. 1, 1915, admissible; but if recorded within 15 years before trial, the original instrument must first be shown genuine); St. 1915, p. 1932, Nov. 3, No. 1049, in Deering's Gen. Laws, §§ 27, 41, 48, 52 (land title registration; quoted ante, § 1225); 1853, Powell v. Hendrick, 3 Cal. 427, 430 (recorded agreement, copy and original offered, not evidence of execution); 1862, Touchard v. Keyes, 21 Cal. 202, 210 (county recorder's certified copy of Alcalde's deed-records legally put in his charge, receivable; Norton, J., diss., because the Alcalde's records were not made upon any requirement of previous proof of execution); 1862, Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219, 223 (deed duly proved and recorded, received without further proof; the recording statute held to apply to deeds theretofore made); 1863, Tustin v. Faught, 23 Cal. 237, 239, semble (deed duly proved before a notary, etc., received); 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 405 (general principle laid down, that a deed duly proved and recorded may be offered without further proof; see quotation supra); 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238, 244 (certified copy of a deed duly recorded, receivable without otherwise proving execution); 1869, Anderson v. Fisk, 36 Cal. 625, 635 (certified copy of a recorded deed made prior to statute, receivable, though not acknowledged or proved, the statute treating such deeds as entitled to record and to the evidential benefits thereof); 1869, Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 216, 219 (like Touchard v. Keyes; Sprague, J., diss.); 1869, Mayo v. Mazeaux, 38 Cal. 442, 449 (general principle declared, as in McMinn v. O'Connor); 1872, Moss v. Atkinson, 44 Cal. 3, 17 (same); 1874, Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal. 242, 248 (same); 1884, Anthony v. Chapman, 65 Cal. 73, 76, 2 Pac. 889 (same); 1897, Davis v. Impr. Co., 118 Cal. 45, 50 Pac. 7 (same).

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 4901 (for a recorded instrument not duly acknowledged or proved, a certified copy may be "proved or acknowledged" with like effect as the original); § 4903 (a duly recorded instrument may be proved by the record thereof, "whether an original record of any mining district, or a copy thereof deposited in the recorder's office of any county" under the law, "or a record of such recorder's office," "or a transcript from any such record certified by the recorder of the proper county"); § 8741 (recorder's certified copy of "all papers filed" and of records, admissible); § 5052 (certificate of sale by trustee under trust deed, provable by certified copy); § 1374 (recorded sale of automobile; State secretary's certified copy admissible "to prove title"); § 4905 (deeds defectively recorded, to serve as notice, but not to be admissible in evidence unless otherwise proved); § 4907 (instruments affecting real estate in this State, acknowledged or proved before a notary public in a U. S. State or Territory, admissible; also a certified copy of the record); § 5094 (recorded chattel mortgage, provable by certified copy); 1874, Sullivan v. Hense, 2 Colo. 424, 431.

Columbia (District): Code 1919, § 1071 (a certified copy, by the keeper of the record, under official seal, of "the record of any deed or other instrument in writing, not of a testamentary character," duly recorded by law, admissible to prove "the existence and contents" and "that it was executed as it purports to have been"); § 519 ("the record or a copy thereof of any deed recorded," but defective and cured by certain sections, is admissible).

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 1306 (certified copy of a recorded tax-collector's deed, admissible); § 311 (town clerk's or his assistant's certified copy of recorded deeds, to be conclusive evidence of the fact of record); § 319 (town-clerk's certified copy of recorded survey-map, admissible); 1806, Wells v. Tryon, 3 Day 490 (copy of record, receivable; here the document was defectively copied); 1808, Talcott v. Goodwin, 3 Day 264, 267; 1814, Cunningham v. Tracy, 1 Conn. 252; 1847, Kelsey v. Hanmer, 18 Conn. 311, 318 ("in all cases where a party is authorized to read in evidence a copy of a deed from the public records"); 1902, Colchester Sav. Bank v. Brown, 75 Conn. 69, 52 Atl. 316 (admissible for a deed to a third person; compare the citations ante, §§ 1224, 1225).

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 1388 (county deed-recorder's record, or certified copy, of any instrument authorized by law to be recorded, admissible); § 3215 (record or office copy thereof, admissible to prove a duly recorded deed); §§ 3202, 3203 (recorded deeds of trustees for married persons, provable by certified copy); §§ 3213, 3214 (certain defectively acknowledged but recorded deeds, provable by certified copy); § 3238 (recorded deed by foreign corporation of land in Delaware, provable by certified copy); St. 1917, Apr. 25, c. 235 (validating recorded deeds dated before Jan. 1, 1915); 1835, Roach v. Martin, 1 Harringt. 548 (certain old deeds thus provable, even though in strictness not properly recorded); 1837, Porter v. Buckingham, 2 Harringt. 197.

Florida: Here the subject has been even placed in the Constitution, by one of those whims which prove that democratic government can be just as misguided and inapt as autocratic government: Art. XVI, § 21 ("A certified copy of the record of any deed or mortgage that has been or shall be duly recorded according to law shall be admitted as 'prima facie' evidence thereof, and of its due execution, with like effect as the original duly proved; provided the original" is duly accounted for etc.); Rev. G. S. 1919, § 1036 (suits on official bonds, etc.; quoted post, § 1680); § 2724 (State land conveyances, etc. provable by State commissioner of agriculture's certificate); § 2720 (to "a deed, conveyance, paper, or instrument of writing," lawfully filed or recorded in public office of this State or a county, provable by the custodian's certified copy under official seal, or if none, under private seal); 1896, Parker v. Cleaveland, 37 Fla. 39, 19 So. 344.

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5798, 5806 (record in a public office is provable by certified copy); § 4210 (a "registered deed shall be admitted in evidence . . . without further proof," unless the maker or heir or opponent makes affidavit that it is a forgery, whereon an issue of genuineness shall be tried); § 4212 (if the original is lost, "a copy from the registry" is admissible); 1851, Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440, 443, 445; 1853, Jones v. Morgan, 13 Ga. 515, 522; 1858, Watson v. Tindall, 24 Ga. 494, 502; 1858, Poulet v. Johnson, 25 Ga. 403, 409; 1860, Oliver v. Persons, 30 Ga. 391, 398 (the mere fact of record, insufficient; proper probate must appear); 1860, Payne v. McKinney, 30 Ga. 83, 85; 1861, Gill v. Strozier, 32 Ga. 688, 694; 1870, Eady v. Shivey, 40 Ga. 684, 686; 1874, Highfield v. Phelps, 53 Ga. 59; 1876, Graham v. Campbell, 56 Ga. 258, 260; 1876, Gardner v. Grannis, 57 Ga. 539, 554; 1877, Eaton v. Freeman, 58 Ga. 129; 1877, Hearn v. Smith, 59 Ga. 703; 1879, Eaton v. Freeman, 63 Ga. 535, 538; 1882, Chapman v. Floyd, 68 Ga. 455, 458; 1893, First Nat'l Bank v. Cody, 93 Ga. 127, 143, 19 S. E. 831; 1894, Bagley v. Kennedy, 94 Ga. 651, 20 S. E. 105; 1898, Hayden v. Mitchell, 103 Ga. 431, 30 S. E. 287; 1900, Garbutt L. Co. v. Gress L. Co., 111 Ga. 821, 35 S. E. 686; 1902, Crummey v. Bentley, 114 Ga. 746, 40 S. E. 765; 1902, Griffin v. Wise, 115 Ga. 610, 41 S. E. 1003; 1902, Anderson v. Leverette, 116 Ga. 732, 42 S. E. 1026 (recorded bills of conditional sale of personalty, admitted on the same conditions as mortgages); in the following rulings it is held that, under the statutory proviso, there must be other evidence of execution, if the statutory affidavit alleging forgery is made; 1867, Doe v. Stevens, 36 Ga. 463, 472; 1869, Hanks v. Phillips, 39 Ga. 550, 552 (the proponent must then prove it "as on other papers not required by law to be registered"); 1870, Eady v. Shivey, 40 Ga. 684, 687; 1877, Hill v. Nisbet, 58 Ga. 586, 589; 1887, Holland v. Carter, 79 Ga. 139, 3 S. E. 690; 1898, Anderson v. Cuthbert, 103 Ga. 767, 30 S. E. 244 (but the statute does not exclude evidence denying a deed's genuineness even though no affidavit is made); 1902, Crummey v. Bentley, 114 Ga. 746, 40 S. E. 765; 1904, Bentley v. McCall, 119 Ga. 530, 46 S. E. 645; 1905, Flint R. L. Co. v. Smith, 122 Ga. 5, 49 S. E. 745 (power of attorney); 1906, Bower v. Cohen, 126 Ga. 35, 54 S. E. 918; 1909, Leverett v. Tift, 6 Ga. App. 90, 64 S. E. 317 (ancient deed, recently recorded and no affidavit of forgery filed; admitted and burden of proof expounded); 1916, Haithcock v. Sargent, 145 Ga. 84, 88 S. E. 550.

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3117 ("The record of an instrument duly recorded, or a transcript thereof duly certified," may be admitted, if the opponent shows that proof for record was made "upon the oath of an interested or incompetent person, neither such instrument nor the record thereof shall be received in evidence until established by other competent proof"); §§ 3100–3102 (recorded conveyances out of the Territory but within the U. S.; may be acknowledged before any officer there authorized to do so, with a certificate of the Secretary of State under State seal, or of clerk of a court of record under court seal, attesting the officer's authority, as here prescribed in detail; provisions for acknowledgment of conveyances in foreign countries).

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7953 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 7969 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951, omitting "the original record").

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 20, as amended by St. 1903, May 28, p. 118 (for deeds, etc., without the State and within the United States or any Territory or Dependency or the District of Columbia, an acknowledgment or proof may be made "in conformity with the laws of the State, Territory, Dependency, or District where it is made"; and "if any clerk of a court of record within such State, Territory, Dependency, or District shall under his hand and the seal of such court certify" to the conformity of the acknowledgment, or the conformity shall appear by the laws thereof, "such instrument, or a duly proved and certified copy of the record of such deed, mortgage, or other instrument relating to real estate, heretofore or hereafter made and recorded in the proper county, may be read in evidence as in other cases of such certified copies.

Fourth: All deeds or other instruments or copies of the record thereof duly certified or proven which have been heretofore acknowledged or proven before either of the courts or officers. . . may be read in evidence without further proof of their execution, with the same effect as if this act had been in force at the date of such acknowledgment or proof"); § 21 (instruments affecting land, executed and acknowledged or proved before a justice out of the county of the land, but recorded in the county of the land, shall be treated as legally recorded notwithstanding the lack of a proper certificate of the justice's office; provided that the record "shall not be read in evidence unless the certificate of the proper county clerk under his official seal is produced, or other competent evidence introduced," of the justice's office at the date of acknowledgment); § 31 (recorded deeds, etc., not duly acknowledged or proven "shall not be read as evidence, unless their execution be proved in a manner required by the rules of evidence applicable to such writings, so as to supply the defects of such acknowledgment or proof"); § 35 (record or a certified copy by the recorder of an instrument concerning land, lawfully recorded, to be admissible, "without further proof thereof"); § 36 (same, where proof of loss, etc., is made by the party's affidavit); c. 95, § 5 (same for duly recorded chattel mortgages); c. 109, §§ 2, 11 (same for duly recorded plats of subdivisions); St. 1897, May 1, § 39 (registrar of title's certified copy under seal of an original certificate of a registered title, and the owner's duplicate certificate, to be admissible); § 58 (certified copy admissible in place of a lost duplicate original certificate of title); St. 1907, May 28, p. 376, § 5 (recorded claim for horse-shoer, provable by recorder's certified copy or the certified original); St. 1921, June 30 (recorded surveyor's plat; certified copies may be used like deeds); St. 1921, July 13, § 5 (chattel mortgages; certified copy by the county recorder of deeds admissible "upon the same conditions as copies of deeds and conveyances of land so certified"); 1840, McConnel v. Johnson, 3 Ill. 522; 1844, Graves v. Bruen, 68 Ill. 167, 172 (certified copy not sufficient for an auditor's patent to public land; the registry acts not applying); 1864, McCormick v. Evans, 33 Ill. 327; 1864, Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161, 167; 1886, Lake v. Brown, 116 Ill. 83, 89, 4 N. E. 773.

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 478 (copies of record of "deeds and other instruments," provable by keeper's attestation under official seal, and, if no seal exists, certified by clerk of court of county under official seal); § 3987 (record not evidence unless a certificate of acknowledgment or proof is recorded); § 8388 (recorded apprentice's indenture, provable by certified copy); § 3993 (same for recorded power of attorney to convey land); §§ 5830, 5836, 5848 (same for deeds re-recorded on change of county boundaries or creation of new county); § 9499 (same for certain re-recorded deeds); § 3988 (conveyances 20 years old and recorded in the wrong county, etc., provable by certified copy); 1838, Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. 522, 527 (record copy sufficient, whenever the original need not be produced); 1839, Dixon v. Doe, 5 Blackf. 107 (record of a deed to other than the offeror (see ante, § 1225) admissible without otherwise proving execution); 1839, Rucker v. McNeely, 5 Blackf. 123 (record admitted after proof of loss); 1842, Rawley v. Doe, 6 Blackf. 141, 144 (proof of execution of recorded land-patent not necessary); 1842, Foresman v. Marsh, 6 Blackf. 285 (general principle of Bowser v. Warren repeated); 1843, McNeely v. Rucker, 6 Blackf. 391 (like Rucker v. McNeely); 1847, Stephenson v. Doe, 8 Blackf. 508, 512 (like Rawley v. Doe); 1858, Tenant v. Rumfield, 11 Ind. 130 (chattel mortgage; general principle affirmed); 1860, Lyon v. Perry, 14 Ind. 515; 1865, Allen v. Vincennes, 25 Ind. 531; 1877, Westerman v. Foster, 57 Ind. 408, 410; 1878, Steeple v. Downing, 60 Ind. 478, 495 (justice's office); 1878, Gossett v. Tolen, 61 Ind. 388, 391 (betterment assessment); 1883, Benefiel v. Aughe, 93 Ind. 401, 405; 1891, Adams v. Buhler, 131 Ind. 66, 30 N. E. 883 (mechanic's lien notice); 1895, Krom v. Vermilion, 143 Ind. 75, 41 N. E. 539 (mortgage); 1907, New Jersey I. & I. R. Co. v. Tutt, 168 Ind. 205, 80 N. E. 420 (whether a 24-inch tile would suffice for a ditch, allowed).

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4630, Comp. Code, § 7337 ("any instrument" recorded in a public office by authority of law is provable by record "or a duly authenticated copy thereof"); § 7343 (so also for copies of entries in a book of "copies of original entries"); § 7348 (land-office receiver's duplicate receipt is proof of title except against holder of actual patent); 1887, Carter v. Davidson, 73 Ia. 45, 49, 34 N. W. 603.

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7273 (any paper required or authorized to be filed or recorded in "any public office" is provable by the legal custodian's certified copy under official seal, or by record); §§ 2078–83, 1901 (record of a deed, etc., defectively executed or acknowledged or recorded at the time of this act is to be admissible, when the original is lost, etc.); G. S. 1915, § 2077, G. S. 1868, c. 22, § 27 ("Every instrument in writing, conveying or affecting real estate," provable by copy "duly certified by the register of deeds" where recorded, on proof of loss etc.; similar instruments recorded for ten years in other States and affecting land in this State, provable by copy "duly authenticated by the proper custodians of the records"; G. S. 1915, § 2084, St. 1905, c. 324, § 1 (defectively acknowledged or recorded instruments, on record for 10 years, provable by the record or a duly authenticated copy thereof); G. S. 1915, § 6791 (register of deeds' certified copy under official seal of recorded patent of U. S. or Kansas land, admissible); ib. § 6792 (certified copy of U. S. patent to land, by "the proper officer having such records in custody," admissible); ib. § 6499 (register of deeds' certified copy of chattel mortgage, admissible, but only to show fact of filing); 1911, Van Hall v. Rea, 85 Kan. 675, 118 Pac. 693 (a U. S. government receiver's receipt for public land, recorded but not acknowledged, admitted under the curative act of 1905).

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1638 (an instrument duly registered out of the U. S. is provable by the keeper's attested copy certified under official seal by a U. S. consul, charge, or minister); § 519 ("certified copies of all instruments legally recorded" are admissible); § 519 a (certain defectively recorded deeds, provable by certified copy); 1813, Eastland v. Jordan, 3 Bibb 186, 187 (here excluded for defect of probate); 1814, Wells v. Wilson, 3 Bibb 264, 265 (admitted where recorded upon the acknowledgment of the opponent; other cases undetermined); 1815, Tebbs v. White, 4 Bibb 42 (admissible in "all cases where the original would be relevant"); 1818, Morgan v. Bealle, 1 A. K. Marsh. 310 (here excluded for defective probate); 1820, Barbour v. Watts, 2 A. K. Marsh. 290 ("the well-known common-law rule with regard to enrolled deeds attaches to them"); 1820, Hood v. Mathers, 2 A. K. Marsh. 553, 558; 1821, Womack v. Hughes, Litt. Sel. C. 292, 294 (see quotation supra, § 1649); 1821, McIntire v. Funk, Litt. Sel. C. 425, 427; 1823, Sharp v. Wickliffe, 3 Litt. 10, 12; 1823, Rees v. Lawless, 4 Litt. 218; 1824, Young v. Ringo, 1 T. B. Monr. 30; 1827, Hunt v. Owings, 4 T. B. Monr. 20 (the probate must be set out); 1830, Edwards v. Hanna, 5 J. J. M. 18, 26; 1835, Ross v. Clare, 3 Dana 189, 195; 1838, King v. Mims, 7 Dana 267, 269; 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 62, 69; 1854, Hedger v. Ward, 15 B. Monr. 106, 114; 1868, Patterson v. Hansel, 4 Bush 654, 656; 1899, Middlesborough W. Co. v. Neal, 105 Ky. 586, 49 S. W. 428.

Louisiana: The civil-law doctrine of "authentic acts" makes it difficult to consider the Louisiana cases from the point of view of common-law principles; the statutes, moreover, seem to lack systematic arrangement; Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2234 ("The 'authentic act,' as relates to contracts, is that which has been executed before a notary public," etc.); § 2235 ("An act which is not authentic . . . avails as a private writing, if it be signed by the parties"); § 2236 ("The authentic act is full proof of the agreement contained in it," as against the parties, unless proved a forgery); §§ 2251, 2253 (notaries, outside of New Orleans, are to deposit with the parish recorder "the original of all acts passed before them," after recording them in their own record-books; acts under private signature, for sale or exchange of realty, are to be acknowledged or proved before record by parish recorder); §§ 2255, 2257, 2260, 2261 (notaries in New Orleans are to register every deed affecting realty with the parish register; the register's certificate under seal is to be "received in courts of justice in evidence in the same manner as all other public acts"; private act, if recorded, may be acknowledged or proved if the parties wish); § 2267 (recorder's copies under official seal of "original acts deposited with them" are to be "legal evidences of their contents," if the act is an authentic one; duly certified copies of official bonds "shall always be admissible in evidence"); § 2268 (notaries' certified copies of original acts of which they are depositaries, "make proof of what is contained in the originals"); § 2269 ("When the original title or record is no longer in being, a copy is good proof . . . when it is certified as being conformable to the original by the notary who has received it or by one of his successors, or by any other public officer, with whom the record was deposited, and who had authority to give certified copies of it, provided the loss of the original be previously proved"); § 2270 ("When an original title, by authentic act, or by private signature duly acknowledged, has been recorded in any public office, by an officer duly authorized, either by the laws of this State or of the United States, to make such record, the copy of such record, duly authenticated, shall be received in evidence, on proving the loss of the original, or showing circumstances, supported by the oath of the party, to render such loss probable"); Ann. Rev. St. 1915, § 1455 (sheriff's deed, provable by certified copy by the clerk or deputy clerk of the court where recorded; and if the original has been "lost or mislaid" without being recorded, then "a copy of the same, certified as aforesaid, being recorded in said office," shall have the same effect as if original had been recorded; the affidavit of any person interested being sufficient to establish loss or mislaying and to entitle to record); § 3080 (recorder's copies under official seal of notaries' acts deposited with him are to be "legal evidence of the contents of the original acts"); C. Pr. 1900, § 142 (notaries are not bound to produce "the record of acts passed before them, of which authentic copies may be obtained, except when it is necessary to prove the genuineness of the signatures affixed to them"); § 698 (recording officer's certified copy of a recorded sheriff's deed, admissible; so also for a copy of a certified copy recorded in place of a lost or mislaid original); St. 1894, No. 117, § 3 (commissioners to acknowledge deeds in another State; certified copy is to "make proof" only to the extent of a copy of an "act under private signature"; but if the original is deposited with a Louisiana notary then the notary's certified copy thereof has the same effect as notary's copies in general); St. 1914, No. 68, p. 165 (any deed, contract, etc., "purporting to be attested by two or more witnesses and accompanied by an affidavit of the grantor or vendor or by one of the witnesses," "shall be deemed . . . 'prima facie' and without further proof as being true and genuine"); St. 1918, July 10, No. 192 (provision for authenticating deeds, etc. before a military, or naval officer); St. 1918, July 11, No. 256 (similar, for other officials out of the State); 1826, Norwood v. Green, 5 Mart. N. S. 175 (excluded); 1830 Walden v. Grant, 8 Mart. N. S. 565, 569 (excluded, in the absence of express statutory authority); 1851, Duplesis v. Miller, 6 La. An. 683, Slidell and Preston, JJ., diss. (conveyances recorded in U. S. land-office are not documents that can be proved by the register's certified copy); 1859, Reynolds v. Stille, 14 La. An. 599 (same as Walden v. Grant); Grant's Succession, 14 La. An. 795 (same); compare also the cases cited ante, § 1225, and post, § 1676.

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 131 (in actions affecting realty, attested copies of recorded deeds are admissible without proof of execution, when the offeror is not grantee nor heir nor "justifies as servant" thereof); this statute in effect merely enacts the rule of the earlier decisions; compare also the citations ante, § 1225; c. 87, § 132 (attested copies by register of deeds, of early deed records of specified counties copied into modern books, admissible); c. 14, § 38 (certain Indian deeds, recorded with Penobscot county, register of deeds, provable by copy attested by register of deeds or by Indian agent); c. 96, § 5 (recorded notice of mortgage foreclosure, provable by "the copy of such record"); c. 12, § 13 (register of deed's certificate shall state date of making, fact of comparison with original, and date of deed being filed for record, "but shall be only 'prima facie' evidence of the last fact"); § 19 (records of original proprietors of town or plantation, deposited with Maine Historical Society, and secretary's certified copy filed with register of deeds; the register's certified transcript admissible "with the same effect as though the original records were produced"); 1833, Knox v. Silloway, 1 Fairf. 201, 216 (admitted under a rule of Court; "this rule is in unison with immemorial usage in Massachusetts; the Courts of this State have uniformly observed it; and it is believed that a similar practice has long prevailed in most if not all the New England States; . . . it dispenses with proof of execution in all cases but one, namely, the case of a deed to the party himself"); 1834, Kent v. Weld, 2 Fairf. 459 (same; but this is allowable, under Court Rule 34, only "in actions touching the realty," "when the party offering such office copy in evidence is not a party to the deed, nor claims as heir, nor justifies as servant of the grantee or his heirs"; not applicable, therefore, to a recorded power of attorney in an action for services rendered to an alleged agent of the defendant); 1851, White v. Dwinel, 33 Me. 320 (not applicable to an office copy of a deed to the ancestor under whom the plaintiff claims as heir); 1898, Flynn v. Sullivan, 91 Me. 355, 40 Atl. 136 (ruled applied); 1901, Egan v. Horrigan, 96 Me. 46, 51 Atl. 246 (same).

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 42 (any instrument required, by the law of the State or country where executed, to be registered, and lawfully registered, is provable by the keeper's certified copy under seal of court or office); Art. 21, § 28 (instruments of contract for conveyance of real estate, provable by certified copy like deeds); Art. 35, § 56 (certified copy by land office commissioner of extract of a deed lost or destroyed, admissible); 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18, semble; 1801, Carroll v. Norwood, 1 H. & J. 167, 178, 184, semble; 1804, Cheney v. Watkins, 1 H. & J. 527, 532; 1823, Connelly v. Bowie, 6 H. & J. 141; 1824, Craufurd v. State, 6 H. & J. 231, 234 ("where an instrument of writing is required by law to be recorded, the enrollment of it is evidence of all circumstances necessary to give it validity"; here, of the delivery of a bond in the Orphan's Court); 1843, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 1 Gill 66, 81 (the due acknowledgment of an heir's record release, presumed); 1854, Barry v. Hoffman, 6 Md. 78, 87; 1854, Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 525, 537.

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 114, § 4 (clerk's or secretary's certified copy of cemetery conveyances recorded by the corporation, admitted); c. 185, § 54 (recorder's certified copy, under seal of court, of the original certificate of registered title, and the owner's duplicate certificate, admissible); § 111 (new duplicate certificate, issued in place of a lost one, shall be "regarded as the original duplicate for all the purposes of this chapter"); 1828, Eaton v. Campbell, 7 Pick. 10, 12; 1829, Hathaway v. Spooner, 9 id. 23, 25 ("the very registry proves the execution, for the deed cannot be effectually registered without an acknowledgment before a magistrate"); 1834, Ward v. Fuller, 15 id. 185, 187; 1848, Stetson v. Gulliver, 2 Cush. 494, 498 (bond not required, nor perhaps competent to be recorded; office copy by the register allowed where the opponent had refused to produce the original, but semble not where the offeror relies simply on the deed being presumed out of his control; the reason is not clearly explained, but seems to rest on a theory that in the latter case the registrar's copies are "original evidence," and hence applicable only to lawfully recorded documents); 1863, Thacher v. Phinney, 7 All. 146, 149, semble; 1870, Samuel v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207, 209; 1872, Gragg v. Learned, 109 Mass. 167 (sufficient, if "not made to either party to the action, or presumed to be in the custody of either").

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11696, 11697, 12508, 11727, 11728, 11741, 11775, 11778, 12517, 11783, 12509, 410 ("conveyances and other instruments" lawfully registered are provable by register's certified copy; certain defective ones are validated); § 11993 (filed chattel mortgage, with affidavits, etc., is provable as to the fact of filing by the municipal clerk's certified copy, but as to no other fact, i. e. execution); § 14864 (municipal clerk's certified copy of filed notice of horse-shoeing lien, admissible only to prove the fact of filing); 1849, Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308, 310; 1862, Hall v. Redson, 10 Mich. 21, 24 (record is evidence of execution by such persons only as execute properly); 1863, Brown v. Cady, 10 Mich. 535, 538 (record not receivable apart from statutory authorization); 1866, Farmers' & M. Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361, 369 (same); 1870, Raynor v. Lee, 20 Mich. 384, 386; 1871, Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410, 423; 1871, Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481, 487, 488; 1877, Grand Rapids v. Hastings, 36 Mich. 122; 1877, Bills v. Keesler, 36 Mich. 69; 1878, Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 189, 192 (a record-copy may be used in any court of the State); 1882, Taylor v. Youngs, 48 Mich. 268, 12 N. W. 208 (defects of record may be cured before trial, so far as use in evidence is concerned); 1885, Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 Mich. 456, 458, 21 N. W. 888 (certified copy of a deed assigning a contract, not admissible to prove the fact of assignment under the circumstances); 1888, Sheldon v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 156, 37 N.W. 66 (certified copy of a mortgage filed with a town clerk, not evidence of execution); 1891, Butler v. R. Co., 85 Mich. 246, 258, 48 N.W. 659 (lost land patent; "Scranton Abstract" received to prove it).

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8456 (record or a transcript, certified by the register, of instruments authorized to be recorded, and duly acknowledged or proved, admissible); §§ 2312, 6848 (certain curative acts, making admissible certified copies of instruments otherwise not entitled to record or defectively recorded); §§ 6903, 6907 (registration of title; similar to the Illinois act supra; provision made for certified copies of the certificate of title, of deeds, etc., filed with the registrar, etc.); §§ 6845, 6846, 6847 (legalizing the record of prior recorded deeds defective in various specified ways, and making record admissible in evidence); St. 1917, c. 200, § 2 (same); St. 1919, Apr. 15, c. 266 (certificates of discharge from U. S. army or navy, provable by certified copy of record by county register of deeds); 1864, Lund v. Rice, 9 Minn. 230 (excluding the record of a copy from a defectively recorded deed in another State); 1866, Wilder v. St. Paul, 9 Minn. 192, 211 (applying the statute admitting deeds defectively acknowledged); 1867, Lowry v. Harris, 9 Minn. 255, 267, 269; 1871, Mankato v. Meagher, 17 Minn. 265, 271; 1886, Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 425, 29 N. W. 54; 1886, Ellingboe v. Brakken, 36 Minn. 156, 30 N. W. 659 (chattel mortgage); 1901, Van Dervort v. Northwestern F. Co., 85 Minn. 25, 88 N. W. 2 (same).

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1954, Hem. § 1614 ("copies of the record of all instruments in writing which by the laws of any foreign country may be admitted to record upon acknowledgment or proof thereof" are admissible if certified under official seal by the "officer having custody of the record," and "authenticated by the certificate of any public minister, secretary of legation, or consul of the United States"); § 1955, Hem. § 1615 (same, for instruments "required or permitted to be recorded" in the U. S., a State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, first certificate sufficing); § 1956, Hem. § 1616 (same, for instruments "required or permitted to be recorded" in this State, and making the original record also admissible); § 1957 (conveyance under justice's judgment; quoted post, § 1681); 1848, Thomas v. Bank, 9 Sm. & M. 201; 1858, Harper v. Tapley, 35 Miss. 506, 510; 1858, Cogan v. Frisby, 36 Miss. 178, 183 (gift of chattels); 1860, Davis v. Herndon, 39 Miss. 484, 505; 1873, Lockhart v. Camfield, 48 Miss. 471, 488.

Missouri: Here the decisions originally refused to use the register as evidence: Rev. St. 1919, § 405 (deeds of guardians and curators, when acknowledged for record, receivable "without further proof"; § 1665 (certified copy of recorded sheriff's deed, admissible); § 1979 (certified copy of decree in action to perfect land-title, recorded with county recorder or register, admissible); § 2208 ("every instrument in writing, conveying or affecting real estate," duly acknowledged or proved and recorded, provable by recorder's certified copy under official seal, when original is lost, etc.); § 2210 (such a record not to be read "until established by other competent proof," if the opponent makes it appear that the proof was taken "upon the oath of an incompetent witness"); § 2216 (certified copy of a duly recorded instrument executed out of the State but within the U. S., conveying military bounty land in this State, provable by certified copy, when the original is lost, etc.); § 5357 (records of the French or Spanish government, and deeds before their officers, etc., provable by certified copy by the recorder of land-titles); § 5358 (conveyance, etc., among the archives of the French or Spanish government, filed and recorded with the county recorder, and the records of such government there deposited, provable by recorder's certified copy); § 5359 (certified copy of the record of such instruments, admissible where the original is shown lost, etc.); § 5366 (deed recorded more than 20 years, though not duly acknowledged, etc., and afterwards proved on trial, a copy being preserved in bill of exceptions and transcript filed in certain courts, is provable, if lost or destroyed, by a certified copy by the clerk of the proper court); § 5369 (certified copy of a record, made one year before this law's taking effect, of a deed, will, etc., not duly acknowledged or proved, to be admissible only when the execution of the original is duly proved, "except where such record shall have been made 30 years or more prior to the time of offering it in evidence"); § 5393 (certified copy, under the recorder's official seal, of a marriage contract duly acknowledged or proved and recorded, admissible when the original is lost, etc.); § 9285 (county recorder's certified copy of a recorded plat, admissible); 1823, Chouteau v. Chevalier, 1 Mo. 343 (copy of marriage-contract in Spanish archives, excluded for insufficient certification); 1829, Philipson v. Bates, 2 Mo. 116 (apart from statute, the record is inadmissible); 1829, Strother v. Christy, 2 Mo. 148 (same, for a statute not expressly making certified copies admissible); 1837, Miller v. Wells, 5 Mo. 6, 10 (apart from statute, the acknowledgment and record are not sufficient); 1838, Newman v. Studley, 5 Mo. 291, 295 (certified copy of a recorded sheriff's deed; undecided, under the law of 1835); 1842, Moss v. Anderson, 7 Mo. 337, 340 (certified copy admitted, though evidence of identity may be required under the act of 1825); 1844, Roussin v. Parks, 8 Mo. 529, 537, 546 (recorder's certificate of authenticity of a deed found among Spanish archives, admitted under the statute); 1855, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 21 Mo. 590 (statute as to Spanish archives, applied); 1855, Aubuchon v. Murphy, 23 Mo. 115, 123 (Act of 1845; a deed not recorded within one year; evidence of identity required, under § 18); 1859, Garnier v. Berry, 28 Mo. 438, 449 (Act of 1845; § 58 applied; § 16 applied); 1862, Gwynn v. Frazier, 33 Mo. 89, 91 (deed recorded within one year); 1872, Briggs v. Henderson, 49 Mo. 531, 534; 1872, Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 415, 417 (military bounty land); 1872, Ryder v. Fash, 50 Mo. 476 (same); 1872, Callaway v. Fash, 50 Mo. 420, 422; 1873, Yankee v. Thompson, 51 Mo. 241, 244; 1883, Hoskinson v. Adkins, 77 Mo. 735, 539; 1893, Hunt v. Selleck, 118 Mo. 588, 593.

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10569 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 10598 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951, as amended by St. 1889, adding, after "Civil Code," "and every instrument authorized by law to be filed or recorded in the county clerk's office"); § 6932 (duly certified copies of certain defectively recorded "instruments affecting real property," admissible); § 8284 (chattel mortgages acknowledged and recorded; county clerk's certified copy admissible, "without further proof of the execution"); § 7104 (declaration of claimant of water appropriated for irrigation; record to be taken as evidence "of the statements therein contained").

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 5609 (duly recorded deed, provable by record or certified copy); §§ 5654, 5657, 5660 (validating the evidential effect of defectively recorded deeds executed in this or another State or by corporations); 1896, Thams v. Sharp, 49 Nebr. 237, 68 N. W. 474.

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 1044 (a "conveyance, or other instrument conveying or affecting real estate," duly recorded, is provable by the record or the recorder's certified transcript under official seal "without further proof"); § 1094 (duly certified copies of instruments already recorded before 1862, Dec. 17, but not lawfully, admissible when proof is made that the originals "were genuine instruments, and were in truth executed by the grantor or grantors therein named"); § 1046 (if it is shown that the proof for record was taken "upon the oath of an incompetent witness," the record is not receivable "until established by other competent proof"); §§ 1100, 1636, 2424, 2429, 2432, 2467, 2473, 2475 (mining; sundry contracts, claims, transfers, etc., provable by certified copy); § 3789 (county recorder's certified copy of assignment or payment of mortgage, admissible); § 5414 (recorded conveyances of realty; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951).

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, § 23 (certified copy, by the proper officer, of any document required to be recorded in a public office, admissible); compare the rulings cited ante, § 1225; 1831, Southerin v. Mendum, 5 N. H. 420, 428, semble; 1833, Montgomery v. Dorion, 6 N. H. 250, 252; 1835, Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475, 483; 1840, Pollard v. Melvin, 10 N. H. 554, 557 (sufficient "only in a chain of title, where due proof has first been made of the execution of the last conveyance"; not applicable to third person's title); 1840, Loomis v. Bedel, 11 N. H. 74, 86 (same); 1843, Homer v. Cilley, 14 N. H. 85, 98 (same); 1844, Lyford v. Thurston, 16 N. H. 399, 404 (same); 1845, Andrews v. Davison, 17 N. H. 413, 415 (same); 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 617, semble (same); 1850, Forsaith v. Clark, 21 N. H. 409, 421 ("Ordinarily the admission of an office-copy admits all that appears upon it, — execution, acknowledgment, and record"; here, it was taken to cover the authority of the magistrate taking the acknowledgment in another State, the document being old; yet "the deed directly to [the offeror] himself must be proved"); 1859, Farrar v. Fessenden, 39 N. H. 268, 276 (general principle affirmed); 1861, Wendell v. Abbott, 43 N. H. 68, 73 (same); 1879, Smith v. Cushman, 59 N. H. 27 (same); it does not appear what the effect is of the statute upon these decisions.

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Conveyances, §§ 55, 56, 57*c* (record or certified copy of a duly recorded conveyance, admissible, to be as "available in law as if the original . . . were then and there produced and proved" unless opponent demands original); § 57 (record or certified copy of a deed not recorded till ten years after date, not to be admissible unless original is destroyed, lost, or taken away); § 70 (railroad or canal lease, provable by the Secretary of State's record or certified copy); §§ 64, 68, 117, 123, 124, 127, 133 (validating certain acknowledgments); St. 1889, p. 421, § 5 (recorded conditional sales of personalty, provable like deeds); Mortgages, §§ 18, 33 (same for mortgages of lands or chattels); Fences, § 17 (same for fence-agreement); Judgments, § 19 (same for assignment of judgment); Leasehold Estate, § 8 (same for leasehold deeds); Evidence, § 27 (a document recorded in a foreign State is provable by copy exemplified according to the U. S. law, if the record is admissible in that State); Conveyances, § 6 (exemplification of "any deeds or writings relating to estates real or personal" within N. J. "proved and certified under the city seal of London or Edinburgh . . . or of Dublin . . . or under the great seal of any British colony in America prior to July 4, 1776, and any of the public books of records or registers of the province of N. J. or of either of the divisions thereof, prior to that date," admissible "as if the originals were then and there produced and proved"); 1826, Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275, 279 (copy of a duly recorded certificate of manumission, not received to show execution of the certificate, because the record-law provided for no means of evidencing genuineness before the recording; "an entry by a clerk in a book in his office of an instrument not previously acknowledged or proved or otherwise authenticated, and which therefore does not bear with it the slightest proof of genuineness," cannot be received); 1839, New Jersey R. & T. Co. v. Suydam, 17 N. J. L. 25, 59 (clerk's certified copy of a recorded deed, admissible, but not of recorded mortgage, because only an abstract is recorded and no copy of the acknowledgment, etc., is required).

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2188 (abstract of title, as described in the quotation post, § 1705, to be received "in the same manner and to a like extent that the public records are now admitted"); § 4792 (record, or recorder's certified transcript, of a duly recorded "writing conveying or affecting real estate," admissible "without further proof"); § 567 (record, or (recorder's certified transcript under official seal, of a duly recorded chattel mortgage, admissible "without further proof"); § 570 recorder's certified copy of an affidavit, etc., of a mortgagee's interest, admissible to prove the fact of filing); § 1621 (recorded contract of sale, etc., of animals, provable by certified copy); § 1125 (new county to be equipped with transcription of records of transfer of property in that part of old county, and new county clerk's certified copy to be admissible).

New York: Cons. L. 1909, Lien § 237 (custodian's certified copy of chattel mortgage, to be evidence only of fact of filing); Real Property § 331 (foreign law or decree appointing to act for real property in the State, provable by certified copy or translation under the great seal, if recorded with the county register or clerk); C. P. A. 1920, § 384 ("1. A conveyance, acknowledged or proved, and certified, in the manner prescribed by law to entitle it to be recorded in the county where it is offered, is evidence without further proof thereof. 2. Except as otherwise specially prescribed by law, the record of a conveyance, duly recorded within the State, or a transcript thereof, duly certified, is evidence, with like effect as the original conveyance. 3. The certificate of the acknowledgment, or the proof of a conveyance, or the record, or the transcript of the record, of such a conveyance, is not conclusive; and it may be rebutted, and the effect thereof may be contested, by a party affected thereby. 4. If it appears that the proof was taken upon the oath of an interested or incompetent witness, the conveyance, or the record or transcript thereof, shall not be received in evidence, until its execution is established by other competent proof"); § 392 ("A conveyance of real property, situated without the State, acknowledged or proved, and certified, in like manner as a deed to be recorded within the county wherein it is offered in evidence, is evidence, without further proof thereof, as it related to real property situated within the State. A conveyance of real property, situated within another State, or a Territory of the United States, which has been duly authenticated, according to the laws of that State or Territory, so as to be read in evidence in the courts thereof, is evidence in like manner"); C. P. A. 1920, § 402 (sale, etc., of a U. S. vessel, recorded in the U. S. customs' office after due proof, provable by collector's certified copy); § 393 (conveyance of realty in another U. S. State or Territory, recorded according to the law of such State, provable by exemplification of record under seal of the custodian, if the "original cannot be produced"); 1837, Morris v. Wadsworth, 17 Wend. 103, 112 (sufficient; here offered against the grantor acknowledging it); 1837, Van Cortlandt v. Tozer, 17 Wend. 338, 340 (a deed duly recorded according to the process prescribed by the Legislature may be proved genuine by certified copy; here the legality of the proceeding of record, with reference to the place, the officer, and the mode of proof to the officer, was in issue); 1859, Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279, 294 (construing the terms of the early statutes authorizing a recorded deed to be assumed genuine); 1888, Sudlow v. Warshing, 108 N. Y. 520, 522, 15 N. E. 532 (certified copy sufficient).

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, §§ 1763, 1765, 3319 (registry or certified copy of instrument "required or allowed" to be recorded, admissible, providing that the original may on certain conditions be required); § 1777 (a deed by an inhabitant of another State or Territory, of domestic property, is provable if the original cannot be obtained, by copy certified either under Federal law or "by the proper officer of the said State or Territory"); § 3559 (county register of deed's record of certificate of survey, admissible); 1878, Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342, 345, 349; 1882, Love v. Harbin, 87 N. C. 249, 253 (register's certified copy, held sufficient on the facts with reference to the probate of execution; a certified copy is admissible to prove execution of a lost deed, even where the execution is expressly put in issue by denial); 1900, Cochran v. Linville I. Co., 127 N. C. 386, 37 S. E. 496 (certified copy, dated 1859, and proved genuine, of a deed dated 1796, admitted); 1909, Thorp's Will, 150 N. C. 487, 64 S. E. 379 (record in Superior Court Book of Settlements of a discharge from an insane asylum, not authorized to be recorded, excluded).

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 2208 (county auditor's certified copy of tax deed record, admissible); § 5597 ("duly certified transcript" of the record of "all instruments entitled to record may be read in evidence without further proof thereof"); § 7916 (the record, or a "duly authenticated copy," of "every instrument conveying or affecting real property," when duly acknowledged or proved and certified, admissible).

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 8524 (auditor's certified copy under official seal of the record of a lost or destroyed State deed, admissible to prove "the existence of such deed"); § 8540 (recorder's certified copy under official seal of a recorded power of attorney, admissible); §§ 8557, 8558 (recorder's certified copy under official seal of a recorded instrument, admissible); § 8822 (recorder's certified copy of a grant of way or easement to railroad, admissible); § 8533 (agreement for site of corner or line, between adjoining owners, provable by certified copy of record); § 8571 (chattel mortgages; certified copy, admissible, but with certain distinctions as to the effect of the evidence in different cases); 1824, Johnston v. Haines, 2 Oh. 279 (55); 1847, Webster v. Harris, 16 Oh. 490, 499; 1877, Warner v. R. Co., 31 Oh. St. 265, 270.

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 638 ("all papers" lawfully recorded in "any public office," provable by legal custodian's certified copy under official seal); § 654 (record of "paper, document, or other instrument authorized to be recorded", admissible with "same effect as the original"); § 5267 (all instruments affecting real estate and duly recorded are provable by copies "certified from the records by the register of deeds"); St. 1919, c. 23, Mar. 12 (county clerk; certified copy of filed chattel mortgage, admissible "without further certification").

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 9876 (record, or county clerk's certified transcript, of duly recorded conveyance, admissible); § 9892 (powers of attorney and contracts for the sale of land); § 9894 (instruments heretofore acknowledged or proved in accordance with the laws of the State at the time "shall have the same force as evidence" as those conforming to the present law); § 9909 (deeds of sales defectively made by executors, etc.; the record, "duly certified by the county clerk, shall be evidence in all courts, and have the same effect as the original"); § 767 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 9858 (deeds of land, duly executed in a foreign country, and recorded in this State in the proper county, are provable by certified copies of the county clerk); §§ 9900-9907, 9914, 9915, 9918, 9920, 9923, 9929 (certified copy of various kinds of deeds defectively executed or irregularly authorized, admissible); § 9926, as amended by St. 1921, Feb. 26, c. 230 (recorded deeds heretofore executed with defective acknowledgment, etc.); § 7640 (coowners of mines; certified copy of recorded notice of work, etc., admissible as in the case of deeds of realty).

Pennsylvania: St. 1715, May 28; § 5, Dig. 1920, § 8824 Deeds (certified copies, under seal, of deeds duly recorded, receivable); St. 1870, Jan. 26, § 1, Dig. 8792 (same for land in more than one county); St. 1853, Apr. 5, §§ 4, 5, Dig. §§ 8908, 8909 (mortgage of coal-mining rights; certified copy of a recorded instrument is evidence of contents and filing, but of nothing else; provisions obscure); St. 1854, Dec. 14, Dig. § 8795 (letters of attorney relating to personalty, duly made abroad before a U. S. officer or a notary, and here recorded, receivable, as also a certified copy, when the original is lost; also, affidavits before a proper officer, duly certified, in another domestic State); St. 1885, June 3, § 1, Dig. § 8797 (letters of attorney relating to personalty, duly recorded authenticable by exemplification); St. 1887, Apr. 28, § 8, Dig. § 8923 (certified copies of recorded mortgages, etc., of iron ore and other specified personalty, receivable); St. 1905, Apr. 22, § 6, Dig. § 8840 (same for sheriffs' deeds recorded with the Court of Common Pleas); St. 1834, Feb. 21, § 1, Dig. § 10310 Evidence (record or exemplifications of papers lawfully recorded, receivable); St. 1840, Apr. 11, § 4, Dig. § 10311 (certified copy, by the recorder of deeds, of a justice's bond, recorded, receivable); St. 1840, § 5, Dig. § 10312 (same, for commission of justice or alderman); St. 1844, Apr. 29, § 3, Dig. § 10315 (certain entries in the probate register's office, authenticated by his copy under seal); St. 1846, Mar. 14, § 1, Dig. § 8796 Deeds (records or duly certified copies of duly recorded Commonwealth patents, sheriffs', coroners', marshals', and treasurers' deeds, and deeds under decree of Court, receivable); St. 1849, Apr. 5, § 2, Dig. § 8794 (same, for deeds of county commissioners); St. 1849, Apr. 9, § 14, Dig. § 8846 Deeds (same, for assignments of mortgages and attorney-powers authorizing satisfaction of mortgages); St. 1828, Apr. 15, etc., Dig. §§ 8797–8801 (copies under the recorders' seal of duly recorded written discharges of "any legacy or recognizance charged upon lands" in the State, receivable; also other specified releases to executors, etc.); St. 1705-1915, Dig. §§ 8738–8770 (various defectively recorded conveyances, validated, so as to be admissible in evidence); St. 1847, Mar. 9, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 8802 Deeds (recorded receipts for taxes on unseated lands, provable by duly certified copies); St. 1919, Apr. 4, § 1, Dig. § 8817 (deeds and patents to land from the Commonwealth; the records on certified copies, to be admissible wherever the original would be); St. 1872, Apr. 2, Dig. 1920, § 57, Adoption (recorded deed of adoption, provable by certified copy from county record of deeds); St. 1895, May 22, Dig. § 11236 (recorded deeds of growing timber, etc., provable by certified copy); 1759, Hyam v. Edwards, 1 Dall. 2 (copy of a deed proved and enrolled in England, received); 1810, Carkhuff v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 4, 7, 10 (under St. 1781, April 9, authorizing copies from the land-office); 1811, Vickroy v. McKnight, 4 Binn. 204, 208; 1821, Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. 313, 318; 1828, Duffield v. Brindley, 1 Rawle 91, 95 (but here the deed was ancient); 1834, Hellman v. Hellman, 4 Rawle 440, 444 (release of a legacy, excluded); 1842, Brotherton v. Livingston, 3 W. & S. 334, 337 (certified copy is "enough to dispense with the common-law evidence of execution"); 1844, Fitler v. Shotwell, 7 W. & S. 14, 16 (same).

Philippine Isl.: Civ. C. §§ 1216–1224 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 4290–4298); C. C. P. 1901, § 314 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 331 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951); Act No. 496, Nov. 6, 1902, § 47 (land registration; "the original certificate in the registration book" or a duly certified copy under the signature of the clerk or the registrar of deeds, or the owner's duplicate certificate, to be admissible and conclusive); Admin. C. 1917, § 194 (a recorded instrument "affecting the title of unregistered land" is provable by "any certified copy of such record"); § 198 (recorded chattel mortgage or filed instrument is provable by a duly certified copy); 1908, Bagsa v. Nagramada, 11 P. I. 174 (notarial copy of a deed, not admissible since Act 136, c. 36, establishing the land registration system).

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 4290–4298 (public instruments); these provisions, quoted ante, § 1225, represent Spanish law; see the note ante, § 1225; the following represent Anglo-American rules adopted from the California Code of Civil Procedure: § 1416 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1893); § 1438 (like ib. § 1919); § 1462 (like ib. § 1951).

South Carolina: St. 1731, Quit Rents, § 30 (grants in auditor-general's office, and grants and deeds duly proved before a justice and recorded; attested copies are "as good evidence" as the original); C. C. P. 1922, § 712 (certified copy, by the Secretary of State, of a grant and plat of land from this State, or a certified copy of a grant of land from the State of North Carolina, receivable conditionally); § 713 (certified copy of a recorded deed, receivable on the same conditions, and on ten days' notice); St. 1731, id. §§ 716, 717 (exemplifications of records attested under seal of a mayor, Governor, or notary of domestic or foreign State, receivable, but only conditionally for claims against residents of this State); 1795, Purvis v. Robinson, 1 Bay 493 (record copy, sufficient, provided the original is accounted for; compare the rulings cited ante, § 1225); 1853, Lamar v. Raysor, 7 Rich. 509, 514 (office copy of a recorded deed, sufficient, although the proof required for recording did not appear on its face; the deed here being old, and the purpose a collateral one); 1892, Stone v. Fitts, 38 S. C. 393, 397; 1895, Hobbs v. Beard, 43 S. C. 370, 21 S. E. 305 (the fact of registration is evidence of execution, where the records have been burnt); 1897, State v. Crocker, 49 S. C. 242, 27 S. E. 49 (official record itself of a deed, admissible, if the deed is lost, as a common-law method, independent of the statutory provisions as to certified copies, and notice thereof in R. S. 1893, § 2361, Jones, J., diss.); 1905, Uzzell v. Horn, 71 S. C. 426, 51 S. E. 253 (State v. Crocker approved).

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2724 (the record, or a certified copy, of "every instrument in writing which is acknowledged or witnessed and duly recorded or duly filed," is admissible "without further proof"); § 2725 (similar, for instruments affecting real property defectively recorded before Feb. 1, 1911); § 2679 (certified copy, by the register of deeds, of a recorded certificate of tax-sale, admissible); § 2892 (record, or certified copy, of affidavit of foreclosure sale, admissible); 1905, Bruce v. Wanzer, 20 S. D. 277, 105 N. W. 282 (certified copy of a duly recorded mortgage, admitted, under Rev. C. C. P. 1903, § 533).

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5573 ("duly certified copies" of all records, receivable); § 3748 ("any of said instruments [i. e. deeds, etc.] so proved or acknowledged and certified and registered shall be received as evidence"; extended to old or mutilated records re-copied, by §§ 3778, 3786, 3793, 5575); § 3704 (register's certified copy of an acknowledgment of release of lien, receivable); § 3711 (copy of a registered copy of a deed of lands in different counties, receivable); § 3711*a*1 (similar to § 3711, for power of attorney); 1805, Miller v. Holt, 1 Overt. 111 (proper proof before the register must appear to have been made, in order that a copy may suffice); 1805, Craig v. Vance, 1 Overt. 182; 1807, Miller v. Holt, 1 Overt. 243; 1808, Frazier v. Basset, 1 Overt. 297, semble; 1809, Reed v. Dodson, 1 Overt. 395, 398, semble; 1823, Norflet v. Nelson, Peck 188 (North Carolina grant); 1825, Wilson v. Smith, 5 Yerg. 379, 407 (due probate of original presumed); 1832, McIver v. Robertson, 3 Yerg. 84 (a certified copy must show that the deed had been properly probated before registry); 1833, Batte v. Stone, 4 Yerg. 168; 1836, McIver v. Clay, 9 Yerg. 257, 259 (like McIver v. Robertson); 1840, Gaines v. Catron, 1 Humph. 514, 521 (same); 1844, Saunders v. Harris, 5

Humph. 345, semble (like McIver v. Clay; here the recording was in a State not requiring probate for recording); 1858, Brogan v. Savage, 5 Sneed 689, 692; 1899, Bond v. Montague, — Tenn. Ch. App. —, 54 S. W. 65.

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3699 ("all conveyances and other instruments of writing between private individuals, which were filed in the office of any alcalde or judge in Texas previous to the first Monday in February, 1837," are provable by certified copy under official seal of "the officer with whom the originals are now deposited"); § 3700 ("every instrument of writing" lawfully recorded with the clerk of a county court, after proof or acknowledgment according to the law at the time, and every instrument recorded for 10 years whether lawfully or not, is provable by a certified copy of the record, when filed with the papers of the suit three days before trial begun, and notice given to the opponent, unless the opponent within three days before trial files an affidavit of forgery); § 6856 (all instruments permitted by law to be registered, and recorded before Feb. 9, 1860, are provable by certified copy when the acknowledgment or proof was made before certain officers); § 3701 (early records of de facto counties prior to Jan. 1, 1882, provable by certified copy); § 3702 (similar, for specified counties); 1847, Craddock v. Merrill, 2 Tex. 494; 1857, Butler v. Dunagan, 19 Tex. 559, 565; 1878, Wiggins v. Fleishel, 50 Tex. 57, 62 (an original deed properly certified cannot be read without statutory notice, etc.); 1879, Texas Land Co. v. Williams, 51 Tex. 51, 58; 1881, McFaddin v. Preston, 54 Tex. 403, 407; 1885, Hancock v. Tram Lumber Co., 65 Tex. 225, 232; 1887, Shifflet v. Morelle, 68 Tex. 382, 388; 1888, Boydston v. Morris, 71 Tex. 697, 699, 4 S. W. 843 (certified copy not admissible to prove execution of chattel mortgage); 1888, Falls Land & C. Co. v. Chisholm, 71 Tex. 523, 527, 9 S. W. 479; 1890, Kimmarle v. R. Co., 76 Lex. 686, 693, 12 S. W. 698; 1895, Davidson v. Wallingford, 88 Tex. 619, 32 S. W. 1030; 1899, Heintz v. Thayer, 92 Tex. 658, 50 S. W. 929, 51 S. W. 640; 1907, Burton v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 196, 101 S. W. 226 (bigamy; rule of Civ. St. 1895, § 2312, applied to a recorded marriage certificate).

In this State, as in Georgia, the filing of the statutory affidavit of denial under Stats. 1895, § 2312, Stats. 1911, § 3700, prevents the use of the registry copy: 1878, Gainer v. Cotton, 49 Tex. 101, 116 (statute applied).

In this State there is special learning about the authentication of government land-office documents; the statutes are given ante, § 1239, and the following decisions deal with the subject: 1848, Glasscock v. Com'r, 3 Tex. 51 (statutory certificate, by commissioners, of land-office certificates, etc.; mode of authentication determined); 1848, Bracken v. Wells, 3 Tex. 88 (similar); 1851, Herndon v. Casiano, 7 Tex. 322, 333, 337 (Spanish deed-copy, not properly in the land-office; copy probably inadmissible); 1852, York v. Gregg, 9 Tex. 85 (county court clerk's copy of Spanish land-documents, excluded); 1883, Holmes v. Anderson, 59 Tex. 481, 482 (certified copy of land-certificate on file in land-office, admissible; Short v. Wade, 25 Tex. 510, being of no force since the statutory changes); 1883, Burkett v. Scarborough, 25 Tex. 495, 498 (similar); 1883, Thomson v. Hines, 25 Tex. 525 (similar).

In this State, moreover, the proof of the early Spanish land-titles (testimonio, etc.) has peculiar rules, partly depending on Civ. Stats. § 3699, quoted supra; the following decisions, dealing with them, should be compared with those cited ante, § 1225: 1851, Paschal v. Perez, 7 Tex. 348 (leading case); 1851, Edwards v. James, 7 Tex. 372; 1864, Lambert v. Weir, 27 Tex. 359, 364; 1867, Hatchett v. Connor, 30 Tex. 104, 110; 1875, Wood v. Welder, 42 Tex. 396, 408; 1877, State v. Cardinas, 47 Tex. 250, 287; 1878, Gainer v. Cotton, 49 Tex. 101, 114; 1882, Storey v. Flanagan, 57 Tex. 649, 655.

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7092 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 7116 (substantially like id. § 1951); § 7117 (like id. § 1855); § 477 (recorder's certified copy of duly filed chattel mortgage, admissible "without further proof of the execution of the original").

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 2742 (attested copy of a deed recorded with county clerk, receivable); § 2748 (certified copy of a recorded power of attorney for a deed, receivable); St. 1919, Mar. 27, No. 72 (recorded deeds and public records "in another State or foreign country," provable by certified copy; quoted post, § 1681); 1814, Pearl v. Howard, D. Chip. 173; 1827, Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329, 336; 1834, Hart v. Gage, 6 Vt. 170, 172 (copy by town-proprietors' clerk, excluded, in the absence of an authorizing statute); 1840, Bush v. Van Ness, 12 Vt. 83, 91 (certified copy of a power of attorney to convey, received, but not of a revocation not authorized to be recorded); 1842, Royalton v. R. & W. T. Co., 14 Vt. 311, 324 (town-clerk's record of a town-contract, not receivable to authenticate it); 1850, Williams v. Bass, 22 Vt. 353, 356 (the record of a deed is evidence of due execution, but "by this is to be understood a perfect record"; here, the seal being missing, the record afforded no such proof; for this point, compare the citations post, § 2108); 1851, Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435, 446, 448 (legality of record "will depend upon the inquiry whether at the date of the registry there was any law justifying such registry"; here also applied to exclude a copy of a deed registered in the wrong county); 1852, Preston v. Robinson, 24 Vt. 583, 589 (the clerk's duty as register is to certify a copy of the record, not of the original deed; but a "copy of the deed" will be intended to mean a copy of the recorded deed); 1854, 1859, Townsend v. Downer, 27 Vt. 119, 125, 32 Vt. 183, 193; 1856, Colchester v. Culver, 29 Vt. 111, 113

§ 1652. Same: Registry out of the Jurisdiction. That an official statement authorized to be made is the statement of a foreign officer does not make (Williams v. Bass approved; but here in a similar case the fact of a preceding contract to convey sufficed to admit, the deed being old); 1861, Pratt v. Battles, 34 Vt. 391, 397.

Virginia: Code 1919, § 6241 (no certified copy of any deed, will, account, or other original paper required to be recorded in a court, is to be used as evidence in place of a destroyed original or record, until such copy has been admitted to record in substitution); § 6195 (copies of deeds imperfectly recorded under certain early statutes, receivable; these early statutes do not appear in the current revision); § 6207 (deeds executed without the U. S., quoted post, § 1676); 1794, Turner v. Strip, 1 Wash. 319, 322, semble; 1796, Lee v. Tapscott, 2 Wash. 276 (attested copy of land patent recorded in the county court, admitted; here being old and accompanied by possession; Lyons, J., diss.); 1797, Maxwell v. Light, 1 Call 117, 121, semble; 1804, Hord v. Dishman, 5 Call 279, 284; 1815, Rowletts v. Daniel, 4 Munf. 473, 482 (certified copy of a recorded deed dated 1765, received; no reasons given); 1821, Baker v. Preston, Gilmer 235, 284 (registry copy admissible; definite decision after ample argument); 1824, Ben v. Peete, 2 Rand. 539, 543 (certified copies of recorded deeds are "every day admitted without other evidence"; even if deeds are not lawfully recorded, copies are admissible against the maker by virtue of his acknowledgment, or against those claiming under him subsequently to the acknowledgment); 1835, Petermans v. Law, 6 Leigh 523, 526 (certified copy of North Carolina deed, defectively authenticated as to seal, etc., admitted under statute); 1845, Pollard v. Lively, 2 Gratt. 216, 218, 4 Gratt. 73, 80 (like Baker v. Preston); 1852, Hassler v. King, 9 Gratt. 115, 124; 1855, Fiott v. Com., 12 Gratt. 564, 570, 577 (office copy of a deed not duly authenticated before record, admissible, where the inquisition under which both claimed referred to the deed as recorded); 1880, Carter v. Robinett, 31 Gratt. 429, 432, 440 (power of attorney); 1897, Barley v. Byrd, 95 Va. 316, 28 S. E. 329.

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1260 ("any deed, conveyance, bond, mortgage, or other writing," lawfully recorded or filed, is provable by copy duly certified by the official custodian under seal of office if any, and if none, then with his official certificate); § 8760 (county auditor's certified copy of an instrument duly acknowledged abroad and recorded here, admissible "to the same extent and with like effect"); 1905, Chrast v. O'Connor, 41 Wash. 360, 83 Pac. 238 (under the statute for deeds, the original's execution need not be otherwise evidenced than by the certified copy).

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 73, §§ 7–11*a* (certified copy of a duly recorded deed, admissible, to prove execution, etc., semble; but of a recorded deed not properly acknowledged or proved, admissible to prove contents only, in case of loss); c. 130, § 4 (certain recorded deeds of Virginia, provable by copy); 1884, Peterson v. Ankrom, 25 W. Va. 56, 60; 1895, Clark v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 300, 21 S. E. 735; 1908, Cobb v. Dunlevie, 63 W. Va. 398, 60 S. E. 384 (certified copy of record of contract not acknowledged, not admitted under Code 1899, c. 73, §§ 2, 3, Code 1906, §§ 3075, 3076).

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4156 ("every conveyance" executed and acknowledged or proved so as to be entitled to record, and every land-patent from the U. S. or this State, and the record of either in the registry of deeds, and every document "affecting land or the title thereto," kept lawfully with a register of deeds, is admissible "without further proof thereof"; "whenever any presumptive effect as evidence is given by law to any such patent, conveyance, or instrument, such record, as well as duly certified copies thereof, shall have the like effect"); § 4173 a (certified copy of a conveyance, admissible to prove title in a criminal case); § 2318 (certified copy of a chattel mortgage, admissible only to prove its filing); §§ 2215*a*-2220 a (curative acts for various kinds of defective conveyances); 1850, Davis v. Ruggles, 2 Pinney 477; 1864, Hinchcliff v. Hinman, 18 Wis. 130, 135; 1871, Smith v. Garden, 28 Wis. 685, 688; 1872, Evans v. Sprague, 30 Wis. 303, 305, semble; 1885, Herren v. Strong, 62 Wis. 223, 227, 22 N. W. 408.

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4588 (the record of any instrument concerning any interest in land in this State, duly acknowledged or proved, or the register's certified transcript is admissible "with like effect as the original" on showing loss, etc.); § 1495 ("copies of all papers filed" in the office of the county clerk as register of deeds, and transcripts from his records, certified by him under seal of office, admissible); § 3097 (livestock brands; certified copy of assignment of brand or mark recorded with the State board of livestock commissioners, to be admissible "as is now provided for certified copies of instruments affecting real estate"); § 2116 (official survey or perambulation of town boundaries, provable by register of deed's certified copy); § 4378 (certified transcript of mining regulations filed with register of deeds, admissible); § 4603 (letters of attorney and contracts for sale of land, provable like conveyances); § 4664 (certified copies of certain defectively recorded conveyances, admissible); § 4689 (county clerk's certified copy of recorded chattel mortgage, admissible).

it any the less admissible (ante, § 1633, par. 2). The essential thing is the authority of the officer, and a foreign authority equally satisfies the principle. There is, in the United States, the additional consideration that under the Federal Constitution (Art. 4, § 1) and the Federal Revised Statutes (§ 906) the Courts of each State are required to give full faith and credit to the records of other States, and this may well be held to imply that recognition should be given (not merely as a matter of comity, but as a matter of legal right) to an official authority created by the laws of another State for its domestic recording officers.

It is generally conceded, then, that the registry of a deed in another State is admissible to prove its execution.[1] But several different attitudes may be taken:

(1) It may be held that the existence of a registry-law in the other State authorizing the record of deeds is sufficient, without more. That is, the Court merely transfers its point of view to the other forum and asks whether the law there has vested the registrar with powers of record, precisely as it would ask the same question for local registrars. This is the simple and orthodox view.

(2) It may be maintained that the foreign law, additionally, must not merely authorize registration, but must expressly declare the registry admissible in its own courts. This additional requirement is perhaps plausible; but it is inconsistent with the orthodox principle already expounded (ante, § 1648), and long recognized in almost every jurisdiction; for it is immaterial whether the foreign statute expressly makes it there admissible, or whether it is there received by judicial ruling, or even whether the rules of evidence there receive it at all; the sufficient thing is that the officer there has an express authority which if created by the domestic law would have been sufficient. It follows, however, under either of these first two views, that the statutory authority given by the foreign law must be duly observed, and a registration not thus lawfully made will of course be rejected, under the general principle (ante, § 1649).

(3) It may, again, be maintained (as a modification of both the preceding views) that if the foreign registration system, in a fundamental respect, requires less than the domestic law, the foreign register will not be recognized. For example, if under the foreign system no provision is made for informing the registrar, by acknowledgment or proof, as to the deed's execution, the willingness of the foreign State to accept such a register in evidence of execution should not be allowed to override a fundamental requirement of the domestic law in that respect. This limitation is one likely to find favor;[2] and yet it is difficult to reconcile it with the view that the recognition of § 1652. [1] The contrary has been held in Georgia: 1884, Baskin v. Vernon, 74 Ga. 371 (mortgage recorded in Alabama, without other evidence of execution, excluded); 1884, Papot v. R. Co., 74 Ga. 296, 310 (same for deed).

[2] E. g. in Saunders v. Harris, Tenn., cited ante, § 1651.

foreign registers depends upon the Federal Constitution; for the constitutional command is absolute.

(4) Finally, it may be also held (here as an enlargement of the first two rules above) that the foreign register is receivable if its formalities in the case in hand satisfy the domestic law, even though they do not satisfy the law of the place of registration.[3] This is in practice not harmful, though it seems unsound on principle.

All these views are represented in the precedents, which are comparatively few;[4] but in several jurisdictions the matter has been expressly dealt with by statute.[5] It should be added that the foreign statutory authority must of course be expressly evidenced, according to the various principles elsewhere discussed (ante, §§ 564, 690, 1271; post, § 1684).

Note, however, that on the French (not the Anglo-American) principle of conflict of laws (ante, § 5) the foreign record may be admissible irrespective of any of the above considerations.

§ 1653. Same: Modes of Proof Available when Registration is Unauthorized. Certain minor problems, depending upon the foregoing principles, have now to be considered.

(1) Suppose the statute authorizes the recording, but does not provide for probate of execution before the registrar, so that the register is inadmissible to prove execution (according to the principle of § 1648, ante); nevertheless, may not the register be used to show the contents of the deed, supposing that its execution is otherwise evidenced and that its non-production is accounted for? It would seem that it could; for the authority to record is an authority to make a copy in the register, and ought to suffice for that purpose at least. This seems to have been the result in England;[1] and

[3] 1857, Clardy v. Richardson, 24 Mo. 295, 297, semble.

[4] Besides the foregoing and ensuing cases, compare also the cases cited for notaries' certificates (post, § 1676); and cases cited ante, § 1633, n. 2 (nature of duty), and § 1644 (marriage-registers); 1897, Union P. R. Co. v. Reed, 25 C. C. A. 389, 80 Fed. 234 (power of attorney purporting to be acknowledged before a Missouri mayor, and recorded in Nebraska, but lacking a clerk's certificate, excluded); 1906, McCraney v. Glos, 222 Ill. 628, 78 N. E. 921 (certified copy of a recorded deed in Iowa admitted, the acknowledgment being defective by the law of Illinois but correct by the law of Iowa; point not noticed); 1853, Palmer v. Stevens, 11 Cush. Mass. 147, 151 (deed recorded in New York in 1802 before a mayor; a record copy allowed as proof of execution, though not shown to have been lawfully acknowledged and therefore lawfully recorded); 1905, Wilcox v. Bergman, 96 Minn. 219, 104 N. W. 955 (certified copy of a deed-record in North Dakota; held, that the statute of that State authorizing the record must be shown, and also "the effect given to certified copies as evidence in the Courts of that State"); 1848, State v. Engle, 21 N. J. L. 347, 364 (certified copy of power of attorney not duly recorded in New York, excluded); 1895, Chase v. Caryl, 57 N. J. L. 545, 31 Atl. 1024 (exemplified copy of a mortgage duly recorded in New York under a statute making such copy admissible, held receivable in New Jersey under U. S. Rev. St. § 906, quoted post, § 1680, for giving faith to the records of other States; good opinion by Lippincott, J.).

See additionally the following cases cited under § 1651, ante: Alabama: Mitchell v. Mitchell, Tatum v. Young, Swift v. Fitzhugh, Smoot v. Fitzhugh, Keller v. Moore; Arkansas: Dixon v. Thatcher, McNeill v. Arnold; Minnesota: Lund v. Rice; Pennsylvania: Hyam v. Edwards; see also Garrigues v. Harris, Pa., cited post, § 2105, n. 4; Virginia: Peterman v. Laws.

[5] In Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina; see these statutes cited ante, § 1651.

§ 1653. [1] See the citations in § 1650, ante, and also some of the American cases cited in § 1651, e. g. Powell v. Hendricks, Cal.

it has also been reached in many rulings (and sometimes by express statute) for record copies of ancient documents whose execution was sufficiently evidenced by their antiquity.[2]

(2) Suppose that the statute authorizes the recording, but that owing to non-fulfilment of its requirements the register is not admissible to prove execution; nevertheless, may the register not be received to evidence the contents of the deed, assuming that its execution can be otherwise proved and its non-production accounted for? This inquiry differs slightly from the preceding one; because in that case there was a clear authority to record a copy of the contents, while here the doubt may be raised whether the authority to record a copy is separable from the authority to record as to execution; i. e. does not the whole authority fall to the ground if the requirements as to execution are not complied with? It is an arguable question, and in the realm of the substantive law has been the subject of much difference of judicial opinion in its bearing on the problem whether an improper record of a deed will serve as sufficient legal notice to subsequent purchasers. The more practical view seems to be that the authority to record a copy is separable, and that the record is therefore receivable at least to prove contents.[3] By judicial ruling and express statute this result has been reached for record copies of ancient deeds;[4] but it is not likely to be accepted for ordinary deeds.[5]

(3) Suppose that the offeror of a duly recorded deed produces the original, as required by the general rule (ante, § 1178); may he not then use the register (or, what is the same thing, the registrar's certificate on the deed) as evidence of the deed's execution? If he could not, the law would place him in the absurd position of being required to bring witnesses for a deed in court but not to bring them for a deed not in court. If the registrar's official statement suffices in the one instance, it ought equally to suffice in the other. The argument to the contrary has proceeded mainly upon the faulty wording of the earlier group of statutes, which usually declared merely that the record (or a certified copy) could be used when the original deed was shown to be lost or otherwise unavailable, and the suggestion was that this statutory authority was confined to the specified case of a deed lost or the like. But the statutory proviso was in reality intended to sanction the rule requiring production of the original (ante, § 1224), and had no other limitations in view; so that, when that rule was satisfied, and the execution remained to be proved, the registrar's statutory authority to take probate of execution was still in full effect and could be availed of for that purpose, even though it was not needed for proving the deed's contents. This result was generally reached by judicial construction, and the modern statutes have often taken care to make express provision for it.[6]

[2] The subject is treated under that head, post, § 2143.

[3] See Fiott v. Com., Va., cited ante, § 1651.

[4] The cases are collected under that head, post, § 2143.

[5] The cases are collected ante, §§ 1225, 1226, where they are equally involved under that principle.

[6] The authorities are collected post, § 1667*a*, because it is on principle a question of the use

(4) Suppose the register not admissible because of requirements not fulfilled; nevertheless, proof of execution may be made in the ordinary way, — by calling the attesting witness, if that is the law under another rule (ante, § 1287), or by evidencing the genuineness of the signature, or by showing the document an ancient one, under another rule (post, § 2137), or by any other appropriate mode (as enumerated post, § 2131). The imperfection of the record may under the substantive law affect its validity, and may thus render it immaterial in the case and therefore forbid its proof by any mode; but this is the result of the substantive law. No rule of evidence forbids the offeror to fall back upon other sources of evidence simply because he is unable to avail himself of the mode additionally provided by the registration statutes.[7]

(5) Where the register thus fails to assist because not made according to statutory requirements, and the offeror must fall back on other evidence, may not the official certificate of acknowledgment, by a notary or magistrate, be treated as an attestation, so that, upon calling the officer as attesting witness or proving his signature if he is deceased or out of the jurisdiction, the execution is sufficiently evidenced, upon another principle (ante, §§ 1292, 1505, 1508)? That this mode can be used seems clear.[8] That any doubt was ever raised was probably due only to the failure to perceive that the imperfection of an acknowledgment with reference to the substantive law of registration has nothing to do with its sufficiency as an attestation under the rules of evidence.

(6) It was conceded in England that, even though the register was in general inadmissible to prove execution, nevertheless a registration based upon an acknowledgment made by the very opponent in the case would be receivable as embodying his admission of the execution.[9] This concession no longer has any practical bearing for the law in the United States, since the register is now everywhere admissible; except that a mode is thus suggested by which a deed may be proved when the registration was not made according to the statutory rules. If the register contains an entry of acknowledgment made, and (probably) if some further evidence of identity is offered (post, § 2529), then it would seem that the register-entry could be used as embodying an of Certificates (on the deed) and not of Registers. The use of certificates of notaries, etc., to prove an unrecorded deed is treated post, § 1676.

[7] 1849, Hutchinson v. Kelley, 10 Ark. 178, 181; see also the cases cited under § 1226, ante, where a similar question is involved and compare the doctrines of § 1679, par. (2), post, and § 1635, n. 4, ante.

[8] 1878, Sharpe v. Orme, 61 Ala. 263, 268 (Brickell, C. J.: "The acknowledgment and certificate in this case is merely a substitute for an attestation by a witness, the parties to the deed being able to write and having signed it. . . . The certificate of acknowledgment, operating as a substitute for the attestation of a witness, when it is shown that it is legally impossible for the party proposing to introduce the conveyance in evidence to produce the officer making it, by reason of his residence without the jurisdiction of the Court, may be proved by evidence of his handwriting, and when the evidence is given the conveyance may be read"); 1851, Borst v. Empie, 5 N. Y. 33, 37 (acknowledgment is not essential, except for purposes of record, etc.; and a deed imperfectly acknowledged may be proved in the common-law mode; here by treating the notarial officer as a subscribing witness).

[9] Ante, § 1650.

admission by the party-opponent making the acknowledgment.[10] Furthermore, whenever by any other rules of evidence (ante, §§ 1294–1298, post, § 2132) the opponent's admission suffices to evidence execution, then the irregularity of the registration is of course immaterial (for the reasons just suggested in par. 4). Finally, such an admission, when made expressly with reference to the registry-entry in question, will suffice to admit it without regard to the irregularity of the record and without other evidence of execution.[11]

(7) In a few other ways, the register of a deed not placed there according to law could be availed of for other purposes than to evidence execution. For example, the notorious presence on the record, or the manual possession of a certified copy, of a document purporting to vest a certain person with title may amount in effect, under another principle (post, § 1777), to a "verbal act," constituting a claim of title or color of title.[12] Again, where certain consequences in substantive law ensue from the failure to have a deed recorded, the condition of the register will be in issue for this purpose.[13] Such uses of the register have no bearing on its admissibility under the present Exception.

§ 1654. Same: Register as Evidence of Other Matters Recorded. The statutes authorizing registration give expressly to the registrar the authority to make the entry in certain terms. This entry is therefore (on the general principle of § 1639) admissible to prove whatever facts are thus authorized to be entered — that is, usually, the time [1] and the fact [2] of record; on these points the statute commonly makes the entry expressly admissible. The entry, conversely, is not admissible to prove facts which the registrar is not authorized to record or to ascertain.[3] In practice, the only controversy that has here arisen is as to the conclusiveness of the record, — a different principle (ante, §§ 1346, 1352). Whether the record is evidence of the deed's delivery is chiefly a question of the presumption as to delivery (post, § 2550).

[10] It might perhaps be objected that the registrar has no authority to make hearsay statements as to acknowledgments, except for the purpose provided in the statute; but this objection seems finical.

[11] Fiott v. Com., Va., cited ante, § 1651; 1892, Chicago M. & S. P. R. Co. v. McArthur 10 U. S. App. 546, 569, 3 C. C. A. 594, 53 Fed. 464 (defectively recorded plat, used as having been recognized in defendant's dealings as correct). But not for those deeds, e. g. of homestead by a married woman, for which an acknowledgment made at the time of execution is an essential formality of the act: 1914, Severtson v. Peoples, 28 N. D. 372, 148 N. W. 1054.

[12] 1828, Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 531 (irregularly enrolled lease; examined copy of enrolment admissible to show an "act of ownership"); 1894, Knight v. Lawrence, 19 Colo. 425, 36 Pac. 242; see analogous instances post, §§ 1777, 2132.

[13] 1885, Steiner v. Snow, 80 Ala. 45 (penalty for not recording satisfaction of mortgage; record produced).

§ 1654. [1] It is also evidence of the time of the deed's receipt for registration: 1822, Sherman v. Goble, 4 Conn. 247, 256. Compare the cases as to certificates of record, post, § 1676.

[2] 1895, Thompson v. Anderson, 94 Ia. 554, 63 N. W. 355 (certificate of a recorder, indorsed on a mortgage, admissible if the law requires or authorizes the certificate to be made); 1881, Jakway v. Jenison, 46 Mich. 521, 522, 9 N. W. 836; 1894, Garneau v. Mill Co., 8 Wash. 467, 473, 36 Pac. 463 (lien-notice; the original bearing a certificate received).

[3] 1855, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 21 Mo. 590, 597 (a conveyance of a slave, authenticated by a Spanish official, in a region where slavery was lawful, is no determination of the transferred person's slavery).

§ 1655. Same: Sundry Questions involving Certified Copies and Sworn Copies of the Register. In the foregoing inquiries, it has been assumed that the register itself is offered in evidence, and not (as is usual) a copy of the register. Does this assumption affect the correctness of the results reached under the foregoing principles? By no means. If the register is not produced, as of course ordinarily it cannot be, this inability to produce it serves as an excuse, under another rule (ante, § 1218), for using a copy of it (sworn or certified) to prove its contents. But this use of a copy of the register only removes by one stage the general inquiry as to the admissibility of the register. The copy is of itself of no efficacy except to prove the contents of the register; and, having thus proved its contents, the party is merely in the same position (ante, § 1226) as if he were offering the register itself in court; and thus he must after all face the main question, whether the register itself is admissible for any purpose, — the question dealt with in the seven preceding sections. The fundamental inquiry, then, so far as concerns the evidence of execution and contents of the recorded deed, involves the admissibility of the register itself; and this must be first determined upon the principles just examined, before any other question as to the use of copies of the register can be of any consequence.

But suppose that the admissibility of the register has been settled in the affirmative, and that none of the problems discussed in the foregoing sections are concerned, and suppose that a copy of the record is desired to be used, then certain other questions arise. It may be premised that, in the traditional usage of the profession, a "certified" or an "office" or an "attested" copy (being one and the same thing) is a copy given out by the official custodian of the record and certified or attested by him as correct; while an "examined" or a "sworn" copy is a copy made by some other person and sworn to by him testifying on the stand.[1]

(1) May a certified copy by the registrar be used? This is a question whether the registrar's hearsay official statement as to the contents of the record is receivable under the present Exception. A certified copy, however, of any document, is of the nature of a Certificate, not a Register (ante, § 1637), and this inquiry properly concerns the admissibility of certified copies in general (post, § 1677). It is enough here to note that, at common law in this country, the principle was recognized that every custodian of records had an implied authority to certify copies of them, and in particular, as to registrars of deeds, that by statute almost everywhere the registrar's certified copies are expressly made admissible and the mode of authentication prescribed.[2]

(2) A few of these statutes that expressly make certified copies of the register admissible fail expressly to make the register itself admissible. It is obvious, however, that this omission should not render the register inadmissible, supposing it can be produced. The certified copy merely proves the register's contents; and it would be absurd that a document which merely evidences the register should be admissible to prove the deed (from which it is twice removed), and yet the register itself should be for the same purpose inadmissible. The whole virtue of the certified copy, for proving the deed, comes from the register; and, if the register were inadmissible, the singular trick would be performed of making an inadmissible thing admissible by merely copying it. The clear implication of such statutes is that the register also should be admissible, provided it is in court; and this is the usual judicial construction.[3] It should be noted, however, that we are here dealing merely with the admissibility of the register so far as the Hearsay rule and the present Exception are concerned. There may be other reasons why the register itself should not be admitted, — the reason, for example, that the law has forbidden its removal and that its production is therefore a violation of the law; or the reason that a due regard for its safety and for public convenience requires its continuous preservation in the registrar's office; these reasons have sometimes availed with Courts (post, §§ 2182, 2183, 2373).

§ 1655. [1] See a further explanation of these terms, ante, § 1264.
[2] Post, §§ 1677–1682, where the authorities are examined.

(3) Suppose the statute to make the register, or a certified copy of the register, admissible; will not a sworn copy of the register be equally admissible? On principle, there is no doubt that it would be. The reason appears in what has already been said. The register is the fundamental document; the registrar's entry, based on the probate made to him, is the official statement to which faith is given; and the primary object is to offer that statement in court. The register itself cannot be removed; so that its contents must be proved by copy. A sworn or examined copy is the most straightforward and unquestionable mode of doing this; but the statute has also expressly authorized, by way of exception to the Hearsay rule, the use of a certified copy. This, however, is merely an additional means provided; there is no reason why it should displace the other preëxisting legitimate means. The circumstance that the statute expressly mentions a certified copy only is no reason for excluding the other sort; for that mention was intended only to remove the doubt which otherwise might have been raised (post, § 1677) whether the certified copy could be used at all. A sworn or examined copy is therefore equally admissible, as it would be for any other public record.[4]

(4) A superficially related, but entirely distinct question, is whether a certified copy is preferred to a sworn one; i. e. whether the former kind must be shown unattainable before the latter can be used. The orthodox and sound opinion is that no such rule of preference obtains; the principle has already been discussed (ante, § 1273).

[3] The cases are collected ante, § 1186.

[4] 1859, Farrar v. Fessenden, 39 N. H. 268, 276 ("an examined copy of any instrument thus recorded" is admissible "without proof of the original"); and cases cited ante, §§ 1225–1227. Contra, but unsound: 1914, Judson v. Freutel, 266 Ill. 24, 107 N. E. 207.

(5) Since the register is the fundamental document whose entries evidence execution, it is to the register alone that the certified copies must relate; a certified copy of the deed itself is unauthorized, and can evidence nothing. In form, then, the certified copy must be of the register, not of the deed; although a certificate in the latter form could hardly be made except by inadvertence, and would therefore be liberally construed by the Courts.[5] But a certificate of execution appended to the deed may be admissible (post, § 1676*a*).

§ 1656. Same: Other Principles of Evidence Discriminated. We are concerned here only with the use of the register under an Exception to the Hearsay rule; and the following discriminations are worth noting. (1) There is in practice always to be considered at the same time the rule requiring the production of the original of a document, with its exception for recorded deeds (ante, §§ 1224–1227). (2) There is also to be considered the principle as to a preference between various modes of evidencing the contents of documents not produced, — that is, as between copy and recollection or as between different kinds of copies (ante, §§ 1265–1275) and a copy of a copy (ante, § 1275). (3) Again, there are principles determining the qualifications of a witness to a copy (ante, §§ 1277–1280). (4) There are also rules about proving the whole, and not merely a part, of a document (post, § 2107). (5) Finally, there are rules as to the authentication (or proof of genuineness) of a document produced (post, § 2129).

§ 1657. Record of Assignment of Patent (of Invention). It seems for a long time to have been the understanding of the profession that the Federal record of assignment of a patent (of invention) was admissible to prove its execution. That this opinion was unsound seems clear, in the light of the foregoing principle (ante, § 1648), so firmly enforced by the Courts of the various jurisdictions; for the Federal law regulating the record of such assignments provides for the registrar no means of informing himself as to the genuineness of the document. Nevertheless, the Federal judiciary for many years recognized the register (or a certified copy) as admissible to prove the assignment's execution and contents.[1] In more recent times, however, the propriety of this view has been generally questioned, on the grounds noted (ante, § 1648). Discordant rulings have been made in the different circuits.[2]

[5] 1858, Vickery v. Benson, 26 Ga. 582, 588; 1882, Preston v. Robinson, Vt., cited ante, § 1651.

§ 1657. [1] 1860, Lee v. Blandy, 1 Bond 361, 363; 1886, Derrick v. Whitman A. Co., 26 Fed. 763. Other cases, sometimes cited for this point, seem to deal only with the rule as to production of the original; they are given ante, § 1225.

[2] 1893, Paine v. Trask, 5 U. S. App. 283, 286, 5 C. C. A. 497, 56 Fed. 283 (admissibility doubted; partly because "no provision is made for authentication of the genuineness of the instrument to be recorded, as frequent in laws providing for registry, but a forged assignment may be recorded equally with a genuine one"); 1894, Mayor of New York v. American Cable R. Co., 26 U. S. App. 7, 9 C. C. A. 336, 60 Fed. 1016 (certified copy excluded; in part because "any stranger can put an assignment upon record"); 1896, Standard Elevator Co. v. Crane El. Co., 46 U. S. App. 411, 22 C. C. A. 540, 76 Fed. 767, 789 (certified copy admitted; the above arguments answered by the suggestion that the commissioner's record "is in law tantamount to a finding by the certificate that the original is genuine"; the opinion does not seem to apprehend correctly

§ 1658. Record of Wills. Upon the principle already examined (ante, § 1648), the record of a will cannot be received as evidence of its execution and contents, unless the recording officer has authority to record such documents, and, in particular, has authority to inform himself as to the will's execution. Such was in fact the recognized rule of the common law. Until the middle of the 1800s, the jurisdiction in England over matters matrimonial and testamentary had been for many centuries in the ecclesiastical Courts. But this jurisdiction over wills was understood not to concede to those Courts any jurisdiction to determine the title to lands; their jurisdiction was confined to wills of personalty. Their records, therefore, finding the due execution of a will, were not receivable to evidence its execution so far as it disposed of lands, because the ecclesiastical officers had no authority to deal with wills in that respect:

> 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 71: "If a man devise lands by force of the statute of wills or by custom, the probate of the Spiritual Court cannot be given in evidence; for all their proceedings, so far as they relate to lands, are plainly 'coram non judicé,' for they have no power to authenticate any such devise. . . . [But] in a suit relating to a personal estate, the probate of the will under the seal of Court, is sufficient evidence, and no evidence contrary to it can be given that such will was not the last will and testament of the party deceased; for the Spiritual Court are the proper judges of what is and what is not the will of the testator, and since the authority of judging is committed to them, the Temporal Courts are bound by their judgments."

This had been apparently an arguable question in the preceding century;[1] but by the time of Chief Baron Gilbert the principle was fully settled. It will be noticed that, where the ecclesiastical Court had jurisdiction, its record of probate was not only admissible, but conclusive; because it was not merely an official register, but a judicial determination.

the principle of admissibility of deed-records); St. 1897, c. 391, § 5, Mar. 3, 29 Stat. L. 692, St. 1922, Feb. 18, § 6, Code 1919, § 6141 (Rev. St. 1878, § 4898, which declared an assignment of patent void against a purchaser for value without notice, unless recorded in the Patent Office within three months, is amended by adding that if such assignment is acknowledged before a notary or U. S. commissioner, or a secretary of legation or consular officer duly authorized, "the certificate of such acknowledgment under the hand and seal of such notary or other officer shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the execution of such assignment, grant, or conveyance"); 1900, National Cash-Reg. Co. v. Navy C. R. Co., 99 Fed. 89 (the original's execution and loss must be shown); 1905, American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds & C. Co., 140 Fed. 981, C. C. (certified copy of the patent-office record of an assignment, excluded, in the absence of evidence of the existence and loss of the original; Mayor v. American Cable Co. and National C. R. Co. v. Navy C. R. Co., supra, followed); 1913, Toledo Computing Scale Co. v. Computing Scale Co., 7th C. C. A. 208 Fed. 410 (certified copy of assignment not duly acknowledged, not admissible to prove execution).

Compare the statute for patent-office records (quoted post, § 1680, n. 1).

§ 1658.[1] 1635, Netter v. Brett, Cro. Car. 395 (will of land; excluded); 1688, Anon., Comb. 46 (same); 1696, Puleston v. Warburton, Comb. 394 (same); 1697, King v. Raines, 12 Mod. 136 (admitting the probate of a will of personalty in the Ecclesiastical Court; "because they having jurisdiction of the cause, it was an undeniable evidence, which should conclude all others from saying the contrary"); 1699, St. Legar v. Adams, 1 Ld. Raym. 731 (register of the Spiritual Court, to prove the contents of a lost will, admitted; but in Anon., 1 Ld. Raym. 732, semble, contra); 1701, Dike v. Polhill, 1 Ld. Raym. 744 (register of the Spiritual Court, not admissible to authenticate a will of land; Tracy, B., contra, where the purpose is not to establish title through the will).

In the United States the same principle was accepted. But at an early date the unendurable division of judicial functions in testamentary matters was almost everywhere ended by statute, and the jurisdiction over wills of both kinds was placed in a single Court; so that the determination of that Court was admissible for all wills, and where it was not conclusive, it was no more so for one kind of will than for another:

1858, LUMPKIN, J., in Churchill v. Corker, 25 Ga. 479, 490: "We maintain broadly that it is not necessary in this State that any will, whether of realty or personalty, should be proven when offered in evidence as a muniment of title; but that a certified copy, from the Ordinary, under the seal of that Court makes it evidence. This results necessarily from the fact that by law Courts of Ordinary in Georgia are clothed with original, general, and exclusive jurisdiction, except by appeal, over testate and intestate's estates, and are also courts of record. It is here that the validity of the will must be tried and established."

Thus the statutory reform granted a uniform authority, and the older distinction ceased to be of practical consequence.[2] The record of a probate of a will, when offered in evidence, is of course still receivable only where the Court granting probate had authority to do so; but this now depends entirely on the terms of the statute. These statutes are without the present purview, because they concern primarily the subject of jurisdiction of courts.

Certain other principles affect the use of will-records. (1) Supposing the

[2] The following cases illustrate the early American common-law doctrine; some of them are rendered under the statutes abovementioned, but will serve to show the distinction: Fed. 1909, Copley v. Ball, 4th C. C. A., 176 Fed. 682, 688 (certain certified copies from W. Virginia, passed upon); Fla. 1906, Thomas v. Williamson, 51 Fla. 332, 40 So. 831 (statutes as to the effect of probate, construed); Ga. 1858, Churchill v. Corker, 25 Ga. 479, 490 (certified copy of a probate will under Court seal, admissible); 1876, Thursby v. Myers, 57 Ga. 155, 157 (copy of record of will from ordinary's office, admitted); Ill. 1868, Gardner v. Ladue, 47 Ill. 211 (certified copy of a foreign will probated, admitted); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 13941 (record of probate to be evidence of heirship); Minn. 1873, First National Bank v. Kidd, 20 Minn. 234, 238 (certified copy of a probated will, admitted); Mo. 1838, Haile v. Palmer, 5 Mo. 403, 417 (sworn copy of a will registered in Louisiana, excluded because it was not shown how the law of Louisiana required wills to be executed and proved); N. J. 1888, Nelson v. Potter, 50 N. J. L. 325, 15 Atl. 375 (statute as to proof of wills construed); Comp. St. 1910, Conveyances, § 62; N. Car. 1912, Riley v. Carter, 158 N. C. 484, 74 S. E. 463 (under Rev. St. 1905, § 3133, a probated will from Maryland, by certified copy signed by the register of wills, excluded; the clerk of the court of probate should have signed); Pa. 1759, Lewis v. Stammers, 1 Dall. 2 (exemplification of a will probated in England, admitted, under St. 1705); 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 66 (same); 1791, Walmesley v. Read, 1 Yeates 87, 89; 1807, Sharp v. Petit, 4 Yeates 413; 1819, Logan v. Watt, 5 S. & R. 212 (probated will of lands, received); 1835, Smith v. Bonsall, 5 Rawle 80, 83, 86; 1848, Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Pa. St. 234 (probated will provable by certified copy); S. Car. 1824, Franklin v. Creyon, Harp. Eq. 243, 249; Tenn. 1848, Weatherhead v. Sewell, 8 Humph. 272, 282 (the production of an attested copy of a probated will of realty under St. 1784, c. 10, § 6, is 'prima facie' evidence of execution, and throws on the contestant the burden of going forward); Va. 1831, Ex parte Poval, 2 Leigh 816, 818 (duly authenticated copy of a foreign probated will, sufficient, without re-proving it by witnesses); Ex parte Todd, 2 Leigh 819 (same); 1844, Taylor v. Burnsides, 1 Gratt. 165, 168, 210 (office copy of probated will and proceedings, received).

If the record was not admissible, the will's execution might of course be evidenced in the ordinary way: 1820, Hood v. Mathers, 2 A. K. Marsh. 553, 555; 1823, Elmondorff v. Carmichael, 3 Litt. 437, 479.

The statutes expressly admitting the record-copy of a foreign probate of will are collected post, § 1681, with other statutes for judicial records.

record itself to be admissible, under the above principle, to prove the will's execution, it still remains to prove the contents of the record, the production of the record itself being unnecessary, under another rule (ante, § 1215). For this purpose, a certified copy is desirable; here, however, is involved the general principle concerning the proof of judicial records by certified copy (since a probated will becomes a part of the court-records); the statutes affecting the use of certified copies of probated wills are therefore examined under that head (post, § 1681).

(2) A question may arise, under the doctrine of Completeness (post, § 2094), as to the sufficiency of the contents of the record as evidenced by the certified copy; how far, for example, the copy or the record must set out the kind or the tenor of the testimony upon which the probate was granted, has been a matter of some controversy. This, however, besides being largely regulated by statute, is in substance a question of what constitutes a proper record and of the presumption of the regularity of judicial proceedings, — matters beyond the present purview.[3]

(3) The recorded copy of an ancient will may sometimes be admitted without other evidence of execution, on the principle of Authentication (post, § 2143).

(4) The application of the rule requiring production of the original, especially as affecting letters of administration, has already been considered (ante, § 1238).

(5) The record of preliminary probate, before a judge without a jury, has in strictness no place as evidence on appeal at a final trial of probate before a jury, and therefore may be forbidden to be read;[4] but it seems an excess of judicial nicety to see any harm in it.

§ 1659. Records of Government Land-Office. The records of a government land-office, dealing with grants, patents, warrants, certificates, scrip, and the other variously named indicia of title, are available in evidence on principles no different from those applicable to other official deed-registers and public documents. The peculiarities, however, that are to be found in the mode of proving them are due, not to the rules of evidence, but to the principles of substantive law.

The chief question having practical effects upon the mode of proof is as to the nature of the title-document, — known variously as patent, certificate, or grant. If this document is of the nature of an ordinary deed of grant, then the record remaining in the government office is a mere register or copy of the substantive title-deed delivered into the grantee's hands, and consequently it must be accounted for (under the principle of § 1179, ante) before the register (or a certified copy of it) may be used. But if the constitutive document of title is the entry in the official record, then the document given to the purchaser is a mere copy of this, and therefore since the original is in official custody, a copy of the official original may be used without accounting for the copy given to the grantee (under the principle of § 1218, ante). Thus the question depends in truth upon the theory of the substantive law as to the nature of the title-document. Moreover the matter is in most jurisdictions affected by express statutory provisions. On account of this complicating element of substantive law, and the frequent difficulty of determining the precise principle involved in a decision, the statutes and decisions can best be considered under one head, in dealing with the rule for production of the original (ante, § 1239).

[3] The subject is further noticed post, § 2110.

[4] 1904, Weston v. Teufel, 213 Ill. 291, 72 N. E. 908 (citing prior cases). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1417.

In addition to this general question, however, decisions and statutes upon a few other special rules concerning land-office documents are elsewhere to be considered; these concern (1) the register (or a copy) as evidence of the execution of a grant (ante, § 1651); (2) land-office certificates (post, § 1674); (3) certificates summarizing the entries of a register, instead of copying them in full (post, § 1678); (4) land-office reports as evidence of title (post, § 1672); and (5) returns of government surveys (post, § 1665).

§ 1660. Judicial Records (Judgment of Conviction of Crime; Judicial Establishment of Lost Documents). (1) A judicial record is not evidence of something else; it is a constitutive act. It is the judgment itself, not evidence of the judgment. Whether the record of another Court shall be considered when offered is not a question whether something is admissible in evidence, but whether the Court of the forum is willing or is obliged to lend its assistance to enforce the judgment of the other Court. This principle is considered elsewhere (ante, § 1347, post, § 2450), and need not be further noticed; for no question of an exception to the Hearsay rule is involved.

The question most frequently treated as one of evidence (as distinguished from that of conclusiveness under § 1347), is whether a judgment of conviction of crime is admissible to prove the fact of guilt when relevant in another civil or criminal case between other parties.[1]

But the admissibility of certified copies, as evidence of the contents of a judicial record, is genuinely a question of evidence, and involves the general principle of certified copies in a particular application (post, § 1681).

(2) Statute has in many jurisdictions provided a proceeding for judicially reëstablishing the contents of documents lost or destroyed, — deeds, wills, official registers, and many other specific classes of documents. The documents thus reëstablished are usually under the statute preserved as official records; so that such a repository of private documents becomes a record or register of a peculiar sort, by which the documents can be proved in a manner analogous to the use of deed-registers. Nevertheless, these records are after all not ordinary official registers, given in evidence by way of exception to the Hearsay rule, but are in the nature of judgments; for the statutory proceeding is almost everywhere a judicial one; and the typical question arising in their use is whether the record is to be taken as a judgment in rem, binding on all the world, or as a judgment affecting only the parties to the proceeding. The conditions of their use involve the principles concerning the effect of judgments, and are thus without the present purview.[2] The use of recorded abstracts of title to prove lost or destroyed deed-records is elsewhere considered (post, § 1705).

§ 1660. [1] Some authorities have been collected ante, § 1347 (sundry cases).

§ 1661. Records of Corporations. (1) The records of the proceedings and acts of an ordinary private corporation are, according to one theory, the constitutive acts of the corporation; they are not evidence of what is done, but they are what is done; since the proceedings must be in writing. According to the other theory, they are merely entries of the oral doings, and are thus analogous to any ordinary person's contemporary entries of his doings. The chief practical difference between the two theories is as to their effect on the conclusiveness of the entries; and in this aspect the subject is considered under the Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2451).

But the books of account, the stock-books, and other books recording the acts of the officers and employees of the corporation stand on a different footing; they are merely some person's assertion; and, so far as they are admissible, they naturally come in under the Exception for Regular Entries (ante, §§ 1523, 1547), if the maker is accounted for as unavailable, or as Memoranda to aid Recollection (ante, § 735). Here, however, statutes have in some jurisdictions intervened to modify the Exception's ordinary rules and to admit the books without producing the maker of the entries. Furthermore, against persons having knowledge of their contents, the corporation records may be received as embodying an admission, i. e. by a presumed assent to the known statements. In these aspects they have already been elsewhere dealt with (ante, § 1074).

[2] Besides the following statutes, compare the rulings cited ante, § 1215 (whether the loss of the original must be expressly proved), ante, § 1347 (whether the record reëstablishing the document if conclusive), and ante, § 1275 (whether the prohibition of a copy of a copy applies to such copies); the following list of statutes is probably not complete; Ireland: 1917, Kelly v. Kelly, 1 Ir. R. 51; Shanahan v. Shanahan, 1 Ir. R. 57 (suits to establish lost or destroyed documents; called here suits to perpetuate testimony); United States: Fed. Rev. St. 1878, §§ 899-904, Code §§ 1402-1407; 1918, Virginia & W. Va. Coal Co. v. Charles, D. C. W. D. Va. 251 Fed. 83 (careful opinion by McDowell, J.); Ala. Code 1907, § 5739 ff.; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. §§ 682, 4725-4731; Cal. St. 1906, Spec. Sess., c. 55, p. 73, June 16, § 2; id. c. 60, p. 82, June 16; Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 5614; Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, §§ 3246-3267 (establishment of lost papers, records, etc.); 1903, Hoodless v. Jernigan, 46 Fla. 213, 35 So. 656 (certified copy of a clerk's minute-book in which a reëstablished lost judgment and execution were entered, held admissible); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, §§ 4191, 5810, 5312-5328; 1902, Leggett v. Patterson, 114 Ga. 714, 40 S. E. 736 (judicially established copy suffices to prove execution); 1903, McLanahan & Alford v. Blackwell, 119 Ga. 64, 45 S. E. 785 (certified copy of a judicially established copy of a lost document, admitted); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 116, §§ 1–5 (judicial records); § 9 (plat or map); § 13 (deeds, etc.); Ia. Comp. Code, §§ 8082-8086, St. 1886, No. 57; La. St. 1910, No. 234, p. 397, July 6 (detailed provisions for use of certified copies from re-established archives, the originals being burned); Miss. Code 1906, §§ 3170-3186, Hem. §§ 2511–2527; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, §§ 10611–10616; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5630–5646; N. Car. Con. St. 1919, §§ 365–384; Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 1151, 3610, 12359–12365; Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 9539; Or. Laws 1920, §§ 593–596; Pa. St. 1786, Mar. 28, § 2, etc., Dig. §§ 8826–8835 Deeds; S. Dak. Rev. C. 1919, § 3048; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 6778–6785; Vt. Gen. Laws, 1917, § 2485 (judicial record); § 2488 (instrument affecting real estate in more than one town); Va. Code 1919, §§ 6203, 6241; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 1270–1277; W. Va. Code 1914, c. 130, §§ 14–18; Wis. Stats. 1919, §§ 4151*j*–4151*o*; Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, §§ 6704–6707 (lost or destroyed will).

(2) There is, apparently, no sound reason for regarding the records of a public corporation as governed, for the purposes of evidence, by principles any different from those just enumerated. Nevertheless, a loose and intangible doctrine has received some currency, by which the books of a public corporation are said to be admissible to prove the facts entered,[1] — apparently with some suggestion that, as official books, they have a force under the present Exception which is denied to other corporate records. The authority on the subject is scanty; but this doctrine, in its application to the present Exception, has probably misunderstood and exaggerated the significance of the precedents. The true extent of the doctrine is a narrow one, and seems to be as follows:

(a) Books of entries of corporate proceedings are (as above noted) ordinarily not receivable under the Regular Entries Exception without calling the clerk or other entrant. But the records of a public officer are admissible under the present Exception without calling the entrant, because he is a public officer; and therefore the books of a public corporation (that is, with us, usually a municipal governing body) are receivable without calling the official entrant; their contents, as irremovable from official custody (ante, § 1218), being provable by certified copy (post, § 1680); the original may require to be authenticated (post, §§ 2159, 2169).

(b) The facts which such entries are admissible to prove are merely those which may be conceived as contained in the entries themselves, namely, the doings of the corporation. This is their sole scope as testimony; the officers are authorized to record the corporate acts or proceedings; their authority to record extends no further, and their record is therefore (ante, § 1639) no further admissible. So far, then, as the entries record (for example) the corporation's vote to lay out a street through certain property or the corporation's appointment of a wharf toll-master or the corporation's act of receiving a deed of land, they are admissible. But so far as they record the fact that Doe lived in a house on the street, or that the river-bank was public property, or that Roe had title to the land deeded, they are not admissible, because these entries record, not the corporate acts, but extrinsic facts. It is true that a statute may expressly authorize the corporation to ascertain and record such extrinsic facts, and then the record would presumably be admissible (ante, § 1639). But, apart from express authority, the books are receivable only to prove corporate acts. This, it will be seen, is in fact the narrow scope of their use, so far as the precedents carry it; the entries of customary rights, admitted in the older cases,[2] being in fact merely entries of corporate acts which served to found a prescriptive exercise of the right. The important thing is, then, that the ordinary phrase about using corporate books to prove "public but not private facts" [3] is misleading, so far as it suggests that the entries can be used to evidence matters other than mere corporate acts; for, whether the matter is "public" or not, the entries are not receivable to prove it if it is not a corporate act.

§ 1661. [1] 1801, Peake, Evidence, 64 ("Corporation books, concerning the public government of a city or town, when publicly kept, and the entries made by a proper officer are received as evidence of the facts contained in them").

[2] See the cases collected in note 5, infra.

(c) Supposing the entries to be offered to prove merely some corporate act, nevertheless the doctrine of the disqualification of parties as witnesses (which prevailed down to the middle of the 1800s), would prevent the corporation from using its books on its own behalf; and it was apparently upon this principle that the adverse rulings were based. The Exception for Parties' Books was not recognized in England after the end of the 1600s (ante, § 1518).

(d) But since, under the English borough and parish system, the inhabitants were members of the corporation (so clearly that it was long maintained that an inhabitant in a suit by or against the corporation was disqualified by interest), and since as a member he had the right of access to the corporate books,[4] it would follow, on the principle of Admissions (ante, § 1074), that this constructive knowledge of the contents of the entries made them receivable against members as admissions, i. e. on the ordinary principle upon which corporate books are admitted as against stockholders (ante, § 1074). Thus, the entries must be of genuinely public matters, i. e. matters in which the inhabitants at large had an interest, and for which alone they could in theory be expected to consult the book. For such entries, thus placed on the footing of admissions, the book became available against all the inhabitants; and the objection as to testifying on one's own behalf disappeared, since the book was not offered as the corporation's own testimony, but as embodying an admission of the opponent.

Such seems to be the explanation of this obscure and confusing line of precedents.[5] The rulings in the United States are not complicated by the [3] E. g. in Marriage v. Lawrence, infra, often cited.

[4] 1708, Love v. Bently, 11 Mod. 134 ("Every parishioner has a right to the parish books").

[5] 1718, Thetford's Case, 12 Vin. Abr. 90, Evidence, A, b, 15 ("The books of a corporation, containing their public acts, are very proper evidence"; here a book not appearing to be kept by the proper person was rejected, "yet their common books are evidence in regard they contain a register of their public transactions"); 1718, R. v. Motherwell, 1 Stra. 93 (supposed corporate minutes, all written by one not an officer, rejected; "Corporation books are generally allowed to be given in evidence when they have been publicly kept as such and the entries made by the proper officer; not but that entries made by other persons may be good, if the town clerk be sick or refuses to attend; but then that must be made to appear"); 1720, Warriner v. Giles, 2 Stra. 954 (London city books, said to be evidence to prove the boundaries of the markets set out by the city); 1789, London v. Lynn, 1 H. Bl. 206, 214 (on an issue as to a custom of exemption from toll, the defendant town was not allowed to use its books on its own behalf); 1809, R. v. Martin, 2 Camp. 100 (parish vestry book, admitted to show due notice of a meeting of the vestry; "what is thus recorded before the inhabitants of the parish, I must consider as having their assent"; here, the defendant, a resident, was indicted for libel on the parish treasurer, whose appointment at the above meeting was in issue); 1812, Price v. Littlewood 3 Camp. 288 (action for disturbing the plaintiff's right to a church pew; the vestry-book entry stating a user by license, etc., of the pew, admitted; in Sturia v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 646, Lord Blackburn places this case on the ground that "the entry in the vestry was intended for the information of all the parishioners who liked to come and use it"); 1818, R. v. Debenham, 2 B. & Ald. 185 (pauper-settlement; an entry in old corporate books interest-disqualification; but their scope does not seem to be different from that indicated above (par. b).[6] It may be added that the use of public corporation books as admissions against the public at large would to-day be wholly inappropriate. On the other hand, the disqualification by interest has disappeared.

§ 1662. Records of Legislature (Journals of Proceedings, Statutory Recitals). (1) Entries in the legislative journals, for reasons analogous to those just noted with regard to corporations, are admissible to prove the proceedings of the Legislature; because the entrant is an officer charged with the duty of making such a record. This general principle is undisputed. So far, then, as the proceedings of the Legislature are relevant to be proved, the journal is admissible. If the proceeding, for example, consists in the receipt or acceptance of a report or a petition, the statements in the report or petition may be inadmissible;[1] but the fact of its receipt or the mode of its treatment may be relevant, and therefore may be evidenced by the journal.[2] was offered as "a public document, for it is kept in the parish chest and by a public body," but was excluded because it dealt with a fact tending to exempt the entrant parish from supporting the pauper); 1819, Marriage v. Lawrence, 3 B. & Ald. 142 (trespass, the defendant justifying as bailiff of Malden; an entry in old corporate books as to an early instance of a custom as to the levy of toll, etc., was excluded; Abbott, C. J.: "This was no more than a minute made by a party in his own memorandum-book, and it was in fact making evidence for himself. It is said these were public books in which this entry was found; but they were not public books for all purposes"; Bayley, J.: "If a corporation enter their own private business in the public court-book, that circumstance will not alter the nature of the entry"); 1827, Attorney-General v. Warwick, 4 Russ. 222 (whether a nomination to office belonged to the vicar or to the corporation; the latter's books not admitted on its own behalf, following London v. Lynn).

The conclusiveness of the enrolment of an act, as against the journals, has already been considered (ante, § 1350). The use of printed volumes to evidence the contents of the journals is governed by the principle of certified copies (post, § 1684).

[6] 1820, Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. 420, 424 (public-land trustees; "the books of such a body are the best evidence of their acts"; here admitted to prove their allotment of land, etc.); 1873, Wilson v. Waltersville S. Dist., 44 Conn. 157 (clerk's record of a vote at a school-district meeting, on a subject not lawfully before the meeting, excluded); 1900, Harris v. Ansonia, 73 Conn. 359, 47 Atl. 672 (city council records, though admissible under charter, receivable only as to matters upon which the council could lawfully act); 1855, State v. Van Winkle, 1 Dutch. N. J. 73, 74 (book of trustees of school district, admitted to show notice put up by them; the corporation being "established by law for a public purpose," though not required to keep a record of proceedings); 1831, Denning v. Roome, 6 Wend. N. Y. 651, 656 (trespass, defendant justifying as superintendent of city repairs under a city ordinance ordering a street widened; city records admitted to show the proceedings of the council as to the property, on the principle that "the books of a public body are . . . the best evidence of their acts"); 1845, Gearhart v. Dixon, 1 Pa. St. 224, 228 (trespass, defendant justifying as levying a tax under orders of a board of school directors; the board's records admitted to prove their proceedings); 1876, Fraser v. Charleston, 8 S. C. 318, 337 (books of a municipal corporation receivable to show "the exercise of the power not, as here, to show the transfer of stock issued by it).

The innumerable statutes making the records of various governmental bodies admissible to prove their proceedings need not be here noted, because they merely apply the common-law principle.

§ 1662. [1] For the use of reports of officers or committees, see post, §§ 1670, 1672.

[2] 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 32 S. W. 102 (Senate journal, admitted to prove a report presented to it); 1832, Thomson v. Gaillard, 3 Rich. 418, 419, 425 (entry about a petition in Senate journal, receivable to show its contents); 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 13, 101 (journals of Legislature showing a petition relative to a forfeited estate, and a report thereon, admitted).

(2) With the conclusiveness of a statutory recital or preamble, in a public or a private act, upon the parties interested in the subject matter, we are not here concerned; the question there raised is one of the scope of legislative powers and the effect of a judgment (ante, § 1352). The inquiry here is whether, as against persons who are in no sense parties to a prior proceeding, the recitals of a statute may be used as evidence of the facts recited, on the ground that they are official statements by persons authorized to investigate and record. It is clear, in the first place, that the statements concern matters not within the personal knowledge of the declarants; the recital deals, not with the legislative proceedings, but with extrinsic facts. It follows, then, under the general principle (ante, §§ 1635, 1639), that, unless there is an official duty to investigate and obtain adequate information, the statement should not be received. The publicity and solemnity of the declaration — an argument sometimes advanced [3] — cannot otherwise suffice to give it any weight as evidence in a controversy. But, next, it is clear enough that the Legislature has within itself the authority to inform itself properly; for, if it can give such authority to others, it can assume the authority for itself. Accordingly, when the recital is not a mere allegation, but is a statement of the result of due investigation, it should be receivable; and this was in fact the distinction applied to the use of recitals of pedigree in English peerage acts and the like.[4] But statutory recitals have not ordinarily such a basis. They may represent merely the partisan pre-judgments of the majority; they may represent only general conclusions in which the recited particulars have not been verified with special attention; they may have been inserted without any investigation at all; and they are in general only a statement of motives — "an apology for the passage of the act" (in the apt phrase of the Court of Kentucky), rather than a deliberate finding of fact:

1816. Messrs. Denman and Phillipps, arguing, in R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532, 539: "As to their [these preambles] proving that the facts [here a riot in certain districts] were notorious, — if by that is meant [merely] a notoriety such as exists in general rumor, then the jury ought not to have taken that into consideration; if it be meant that all the world knew them, 'a fortiori' they might and ought to have been proved. For to assume that the recital in every act of Parliament is even 'prima facie' evidence of the facts recited in it, would lead to very extensive consequences, and might sometimes perhaps bring the truth into hazard. . . . And it is singular that one of the preambles now in question should have recited that these disorders pervaded the county of Nottingham and the adjoining counties, so that, if this were evidence, it might be adduced as proof that they existed in Lincolnshire, when it is perfectly well known that that county has been entirely free from them. . . . [The preamble] is but matter of inducement, and cannot be founded upon oath, for neither branch of the Legislature can for this purpose administer an oath; whereas all evidence ought to be upon oath."

[3] 1816, Bayley, J., in R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532, 549 ("When we consider in what manner an act of Parliament is passed, and that it is a public proceeding in all its stages, and challenges public enquiry, and when passed is in contemplation of law the act of the whole body, it seems to me that its recital must be taken as admissible evidence").

[4] 1844, Wharton Peerage Case, 12 Cl. & F. 295, 302 (recitals of family relationship, admitted; L. C. Lyndhurst: "It is the well-known practice of this House not to allow the insertion of a statement in the recitals of a private act of Parliament, unless the truth of that statement has been previously proved to the satisfaction of the judges, to whom the bill has been referred"); 1857, Shrewsbury Peerage Case, 7 H. L. C. 1, 13 (recital of a death without issue, and other recitals, admitted; Lord St. Leonards, referring to the preceding quotation: "That used to be the practice, but it is not so now, . . . and future recitals will not therefore be evidence"); 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 411, 432, 436 (Brett and Cotton, LL.J., doubt whether such recitals are admissible at all, outside of the Committee on Privileges, but seemed unaware that the committee professed to follow the ordinary law).

1823, Per CURIAM, in Elmondorff v. Carmichael, 3 Litt. 472, 480 (excluding a recital of naturalization, etc.): "We well know that such applications [for private beneficial acts] are made frequently 'ex parte.' And if they are not entirely so, but the party affected appears and resists the statute, it is very questionable whether the facts recited ought to be evidence in a future contest. The Legislature, in all its inquiring forms, by committees, makes no issue, and in their discretion may or may not coerce the attendance of witnesses or the production of records, and are frequently not bound by those rules of evidence applicable to an issue properly formed, the trial of which is an exercise of judicial power. Once adopt the principle that such facts are conclusive or even 'prima facie' evidence against private rights, and many individual controversies may be prejudged and drawn from the functions of the Judiciary into the vortex of Legislature usurpation. The appropriate functions of the Legislature are to make laws to operate on future incidents, and not the decision of or forestalling rights accrued or vested under previous laws. Hence, such a preamble as the present ought in such a controversy to be taken to answer the purpose for which it was intended, that is, an apology for the passage of the act and the reason why the Legislature so acted. Such a preamble is evidence that the facts were so represented to the Legislature, and not that they are really so."

These considerations indicate it as the wiser course to reject ordinarily such recitals as evidence. Should it be made to appear that the recitals offered in a given case are not merely allegations resting on an unknown basis, but are in fact the findings of the Legislature after proper means of information have been deliberately sought, there seems good ground for their admission as official statements made with due authority and upon adequate sources of knowledge.

So far as the precedents speak, there is no general agreement;[5] but in [5] ENGLAND: 1571, Leicester v. Haydon, 1 Plowd. 384, 396, 398 (whether one erroneously attainted on indictment was bound by a recital of the attaint in an act of Parliament confirming it; assumed on all hands that the recital was at least admissible); 1628, Coke upon Littleton, 19*b* ("The rehearsall or preamble of a statute is to be taken for truth; for it cannot be thought that a statute that is made by authoritie of the whole realme, as well of the King as of the lords spirituall and temporall and of all the commons, will recite a thing against the truth"); 1816, R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 542 (preamble of a public act, reciting the fact of rioting in certain districts, admitted; quoted supra); 1825, Gardner Peerage Case, Le Marchant's Rep. 276 (recital as to legitimacy, in a private act, excluded, as against one not a party to the act); 1829, Brett v. Beales, M. & M. 416, 421 (a private act's recitals — here as to the right of a town to levy tolls — not admitted as evidence, even where the final clause declared it to be taken as a public act).

CANADA: Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 55 (like Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 122, § 2); Br. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 236, § 2 (vendors and purchasers; like Ont. Rev. St. c. 122, § 2); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 122, § 2 (quoted ante, § 1573).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1893, Kinkead v. U. S., 150 U. S. 483, 498, 14 Sup. 172 (legal effect of recitals in private-claim acts, determined; distinguishing Branson v. Wirth, 17 Wall. 32, and U. S. v. Jordan, 113 U. S. 418); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1903 (recitals in public and private statutes, conclusive, for certain purposes; quoted ante, § 1352); Georgia: 1849, Birdsong v. Brooks, 7 Ga. 88, 92 (recital of a bank's assignment, etc.; "the plaintiff can take nothing by the recital of that fact in the act, when an issue is made on it"); 1850, Beall v. Bealls, 8 Ga. 210, 222 (constitutionality of an act of legiti-

England, and perhaps elsewhere, the distinction would probably be taken that the recitals of a public act, but not those of a private act, would be admissible; this distinction, however, being apparently not only without principle to support it but also ill adapted to indicate the true grounds of trustworthiness.

§ 1663. Executive Proclamations. Executive proclamations are difficult to classify; they are precisely neither Registers nor Returns nor Certificates. So far as recitals of fact therein are germane to the doing of the executive act itself, they are on principle admissible. The Executive cannot be supposed to need express authority, because he has no superior. And, in general, the office of the Executive should suffice to make admissible any recital of fact announced or recorded by him in the line of duty.

The precedents indicate no accepted rule.[1]

mation; "as to the facts in this case," the records of the Legislature "are to be treated as true until the contrary appear"; apparently meaning to treat them on the analogy of a judicial record appealed from); 1852, Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459, 520 (preceding case followed); 1854, Lane v. Harris, 16 Ga. 217, 222 (recitals in public acts; admissible); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7947 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1903); Illinois: 1905, Wilder v. A. D. & R. E. Traction Co., 216 Ill. 493, 75 N. E. 194 (recital of a petition in a city ordinance, held 'prima facie' evidence); Iowa: 1861, Duncombe v. Prindle, 12 Ia. 1, 11 (preamble reciting a clerical error in a former statute, not received as conclusive); Kentucky: 1823, Elmondorff v. Carmichael, 3 Litt. 472, 480 (alienage; recital of R. B. being a naturalized citizen and of a power and a conveyance from J. B., in a statute confirming the title of a transferee from J. B., excluded; quoted supra); New York: 1845, Parmelee v. Thompson, 7 Hill N. Y. 77, 80 (statute of indemnification of G., held not to prove him a tavern-keeper; "the Legislature has no jurisdiction to determine facts touching the rights of individuals"); 1860, McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 206, 213 (ejectment; recitals as to forfeitures and the true ownership of the forfeited land, excluded, approving Elmondorff v. Carmichael); North Carolina: 1833, Drake v. Drake, 4 Dev. L. 110 (act of legitimation; Ruffin, C. J., holding the recitals as to legislative proceedings conclusive: "As to other recitals, it would seem but a decent respect, though they be not conclusive, to treat them as true until the contrary appear"); Oklahoma: 1913, Shawnee G. & E. Co. v. Motesenbocker, — Okl. —, 135 Pac. 357 (city council's resolution reciting the negligent methods of the defendant in the use of its wires, excluded); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 750 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1903); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7086 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1903); Vermont: 1903, Davis v. Moyles, 76 Vt. 25, 56 Atl. 174 (legislative report and recitals in a private act, as to the confiscation of certain land, excluded).

Compare Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 375 (1888).

§ 1663. [1] CANADA: 1881, Stone v. Nash, 2 P. E. I. 415 (the Governor-General's proclamation is evidence that the necessary preliminary proceedings to the coming into force of a law were duly had).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1902, Chicago v. Pennsylvania Co., 57 C. C. A. 509, 119 Fed. 497 (action for goods destroyed by a mob during a riot; the mayor's proclamation calling for troops to suppress the riot, admitted as "a public act which had become a part of the history" of the period); 1919, Shidler v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 620 (charge under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, § 3, Espionage Act, of attempting to promote the success of the enemy cause by utterances falsely stating the motives and objects of the war; the President's message to Congress on April 2, 1917, asking for a declaration of war, and stating the causes rendering such action desirable, admitted, as "an official public statement made in the course of official duty by the head of the Government to Congress" as evidence upon "the truth or falsity of the statements alleged to have been made by the defendant"); Arkansas: 1898, Masons F. A. A. v. Riley, 65 Ark. 261, 45 S. W. 684 (policy on accidental death; Governor's pardon of S. for killing the deceased, excluded); Illinois: 1839, Lurton v. Gilliam, 2 Ill. 577, 579 (Governor's proclamation, admitted to show S.'s election to Congress); Massachusetts: 1871, Whiton v. Ins. Co., 109 Mass. 25, 30 (certain proclamations and official letters of the Secretaries of State and Treasury, admitted to show that the United States "had acquired and had asserted against foreign governments a title in the island of Navassa" and that it was a guano island); 1874, Hanson v. S. Scituate, 115 Mass. 336, 340 (governor's general order calling for troops and assigning

2. RETURNS AND REPORTS.

§ 1664. Returns, in General; Sheriff's Return; Sheriff's Recital in Deed. A return or report differs from a register, according to the use of terms already explained (ante, § 1637), in that a return is only a single document, made separately for each transaction as occasion arises, and not necessarily collated regularly with others in a book; this difference arising usually in practice from the circumstance that the statement deals with something done or occurring without the official precincts. A further distinction, between returns proper and reports, is that the former term applies typically to something done or observed personally by the officer, while the latter embodies the results of his investigation of a matter not originally occurring within his personal knowledge.

Considering first the nature of a return in the narrow sense, it would seem, under the general principle (ante, § 1632), that wherever the duties of an officer require him to act without the premises of the office, he has by implication an authority to return, — that is, to write down, upon his return to his office, a statement of his doings. The necessity of preserving a record of his doings is particularly apparent where his duty is performed without the premises of the office; and therefore the general implication of an authority to make a return is no less strong than that of an authority to keep a register for doings within the office (ante, § 1639). The question, then, ultimately is whether the officer's duties require or authorize him to do or observe the matter in question. Since the distinction between returns proper and reports is not always carefully observed in common usage, and is perhaps often difficult to draw clearly, sundry common-law rulings as to both classes may be later considered (post, § 1672). There are, it would seem, only two clear instances at common law of officers impliedly authorized to make returns, — the sheriff and the surveyor. In this place may be examined first the use of a

Sheriff's Return. (a) It is clear enough, and well accepted, that the sheriff's office authorizes him by implication to make a return of his doings under the customary authority of his office, and this return is admissible, without calling the sheriff, as an official statement under the present Exception:[1] quotas, admitted as evidence of the call and the assignment; here, of course, the order was the call and the assignment); New York: Laws 1893, c. 661, § 6 (Governor's order to abate a nuisance, admissible to show the existence of the nuisance); Rhode Island: 1904, Bosworth v. Union R. Co., 25 R. I. 309, 58 Atl. 982 (injury to a passenger during a riot; the Governor's proclamation to disperse the riot, noticed).

Compare the cases as to the King's certificate (post, § 1674), and the citations under judicial notice (post, § 2578).

§ 1664. [1] Cal. Pol. C. 1872, § 4159 ("The return of the sheriff upon process or notices is 'prima facie' evidence of the facts in such return stated"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 3598; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 37, § 12 (sheriff's returns of service of notices, etc. not required to be served by an officer, to be 'prima facie' evidence); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 4779; 1849, Browning v. Flanagin, 22 N. J. L. 567, 574 (admissible, because it is "his answer under oath respecting the duty enjoined upon him by the writ"); N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 921 (return of service); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 3392 (sheriff's return upon process or notices is 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts stated in such return"); Ut. Comp. L. 1917, § 1510.

1628, Dalton, Office of Sheriffs, c. 36, p. 87: "These returnes are nothing else but the sherifes' answers, certifying the Court touching that which they are commanded to doe by the King's writ, and are to ascertaine the Court of the truth of the matter."

1809, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Gyfford v. Woodgate, 11 East 297, "was of opinion that this [return] was 'prima facie' evidence of the facts stated in the return, upon the ground that faith was to be given to the official act of a public officer like the sheriff, even where third persons were concerned."

1845, NELSON, C. J., in Browning v. Hanford, 7 Hill N. Y. 120: "The return of a sheriff is nothing more nor less than his answer under oath respecting the duty enjoined upon him by the writ, and is intended to inform the Court of what has been done in the premises. . . . If it embraces matters not pertaining to the duties which the writ commands, that is, not touching the things which the officer is required to do in executing the process, it is thus far made without the sanction of the sheriff's official oath, and must be treated like the unsworn declaration of a private individual."

It follows, therefore, that it is admissible even against persons not parties to the suit, as any official statement is; i. e. the limitations applicable to its other aspect (to be noted later) as a part of a judgment record, do not affect its admissibility as an official statement.[2] It follows, also, that it is admissible only for such matters as are within the authority of his office; here the question becomes ultimately one of administrative law, i. e. the extent of the sheriff's duties.[3]

(b) The sheriff's return is, however, also a part of the record of proceedings leading up to a judgment in litigation; in this aspect, therefore, the principles of the law of judgments may come into play, and the question may arise as to the conclusiveness of the return. There are thus some situations in which the return is binding upon the parties only, and there are others in which it may not be disputable by any one in a collateral proceeding. The solution of such questions has occasionally been put upon grounds of policy as to the desirability of preventing repeated controversies; [4]

[2] 1809, Gyfford v. Woodgate, 2 Camp. 117; 1821, Waldo v. Spencer, 4 Conn. 79, 94; 1916, Cox v. State, 61 Okla. 182, 160 Pac. 895 (seizure of automobile for illegal carriage of liquor; sheriff's return held no evidence of "facts which he is not required to certify"); 1832, Lowry v. Cady, 4 Vt. 504, 505. Contra: 1908, Driggers v. U. S., 21 Okl. 60, 95 Pac. 612 (a marshal's return on a subpœna that the witness was dead, not admissible; but the opinion erroneously relies upon the theory that it is "not binding" except between the parties; of course it is not binding, but that is not the question; the only real doubt of law here was whether a return of death, instead of not found, was within his authority).

[3] A few illustrations only must here suffice; 1901, Schloss v. Inman, 129 Ala. 424, 30 So. 667 (sheriff's inventory of goods levied, not admissible to prove their value); 1869, Obermier v. Core, 25 Ark. 562, 564 (sheriff's certificate of seizure, not under process, excluded); 1900, People v. Lee, 128 Cal. 330, 60 Pac. 854 (sheriff's return of "not found" for J. P. C. as witness, not admissible to prove that no J. P. C. had existence at the time in the county; on the ground that this was not a matter "which the sheriff was required to officially ascertain or declare"; this seems erroneous, because the natural way to prove a person not within the jurisdiction is to prove that he cannot be found there; compare § 1313, ante); 1907, Driggers v. U. S., 7 Ind. Terr. 752, 104 S. W. 1166 (return of death, for a witness whose former testimony was offered); 1848, McCully v. Malcom, 9 Humph. Tenn. 187, 192 (a sheriff's return on a warrant is evidence that he had it when arresting).

[4] E. g. in the following opinions: 1675, Atkyns, J., in Whitrong v. Blaney, 2 Mod. 10, 11; 1824, Sergeant v. George, 5 Litt. 199; 1829, Taylor v. Lewis, 2 J. J. Marsh. 400.

The subject is admirably examined from the historical point of view in Professor E. R. Sunderland's "The Sheriff's Return" (1916, Columbia Law Rev. XVI, 281).

but this is after all the same policy that governs the conclusiveness of judgments, and no other principles than those of that branch of the law seem to be involved. This aspect of sheriff's returns has therefore no concern for us here.

(c) A return acted upon by another party may create for the sheriff an estoppel, so that he may not dispute it in an action against himself. It is, at the least, necessarily an admission (ante, § 1056) usable as evidence in an action against him. The controversy here, then, is whether it amounts in a given case to an estoppel or is a mere disputable admission. This, being a question of substantive law, is beyond the present purview.

(d) A question of much interest, and in great controversy, has been whether the recitals in a sheriff's deed are admissible to prove his authority to sell, without producing the judgment and the execution. On principle, the solution is as follows: (1) The deed is not valid unless the sheriff had authority to sell; that authority to sell could come only from a judgment against the owner and a writ of execution, based upon the judgment, ordering the sheriff to sell; this judgment roll, therefore (or a certified copy) must be produced, in order to prove the sheriff's authority; (2) Even if it could be assumed that the sheriff's office gives him a general authority to recite that he has in this instance a specific order to sell, nevertheless, since this order is contained in a written document, the contents of the document must be proved by production or by copy (under the rules of § 1215, ante, and § 1678, post), unless we are further to assume that the sheriff has an implied authority both to state the contents of the judgment and to state them in summarized form (as an exception to the rule of § 1678, post). These steps of assumption have usually proved too radical for the Courts to take on common-law principles; the general attitude is represented in the following passage:

1866, SHAFTER, J., in Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 280, 288: "The judgment and execution go to the sheriff's power to sell and to his power to recite a sale, and therefore the recitals are not admissible to prove the sheriff's authority to sell or his authority to recite a sale. To hold otherwise would be to reason in a circle. The power to sell, to recite, and to deed, having its origin in the judgment and execution, must be proved by a production of both under the rule of best evidence. But when the power has been proved, the sheriff becomes, so to speak, the accredited historian of his acts under it. He may narrate his proceedings on the back of the execution and return it into court, and, with or without that, he may issue a certificate to the purchaser; and both the certificate and the return, if made, would, within the limits of the authority delegated to him, be evidence against all persons of the facts stated or recited therein. As already remarked, it is also the official duty of the sheriff to make a like statement or recital in his deed; and it follows that a recital so made must be entitled to the same effect, as an instrument of evidence," as the return on the execution.

This conclusion seems unavoidable on strict principle. The contrary conclusion reached by a few Courts, seems to have rested in part upon the presumption of the regularity of official doings (post, § 2534). But practical convenience seems in experience to have demanded the latter, and not the former result; so that statute has in many,[5] perhaps most jurisdictions, interfered to exempt from production of the judgment roll or a copy of it, and to permit the sheriff's recital to suffice.[6] It should be added that, even

[5] E. g. Ark. Dig. 1919, § 1534; § 8390 (quieting title). Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1928 (sheriff's deed of conveyance to be 'prima facie' evidence of transfer); Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 1306 (tax-collector's deed); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 12 (in deeds by masters in chancery, sheriffs, executors, etc., a recital of the judgment or decree in full is not necessary); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 5402; § 12948; Va. Code 1919, § 6196; Wis. Stats. 1919, §§ 4154, 4155.

[6] Since the statutes have so widely abrogated the judicial rule, and these statutes are too lengthy and too complicated with matters of local execution-procedure to be dealt with here, it seems undesirable to attempt to set forth the state of the law in the various jurisdictions. The following list contains only some of the series of cases illustrating the common treatment: Arkansas: 1849, Hutchinson v. Kelly, 10 Ark. 178, 181, Scott, J., diss. (production required); 1853, Newton v. Bank, 14 Ark. 9, 10 (not required); 1856, Jordan v. Bradshaw, 17 Ark. 106, 108 (same); California: St. 1850, April 22, § 207 (a sheriff's deed must recite the "date of the judgments, and other particulars as recited in the execution and these recitals shall be "evidence of the facts recited"); 1866, Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 280, 288 (judgment and execution being produced, the deed-recitals by the sheriff are evidence of the sale; explaining Donohue v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 411; the statute was not referred to, but the judgment and execution were themselves offered, and the recitals were relied on only to prove the sale; quoted supra); 1874, Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133, 140 (declares that "judgment and execution must be introduced," but the statute, "when the recitals are full, dispenses with the necessity of introducing the judgment and execution"; Hihn v. Peck not cited); 1878, Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233, 234 ("the method of proving the judgment to be valid is by the production of the roll"; no statute or cases cited); Florida: 1893, McGhee v. Wilkins, 31 Fla. 83, 85, 12 So. 228 (judgment and execution must be produced); Georgia: 1861, Boatright v. Porter, 32 Ga. 130, 140 (recital sufficient, upon loss of judgment, etc., being shown); 1880, Shackleford v. Hooper, 65 Ga. 366 (production required); 1903, Sweeney v. Sweeney, 119 Ga. 76, 46 S. E. 76 (prior cases examined); 1906, Patterson v. Drake, 126 Ga. 478, 55 S. E. 175; New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 376 (recital in recorded sheriff's deed of a sale twenty years before, to be evidence of a lost execution or writ, on certain conditions); North Carolina: 1878, Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342, 348 ("The return to an execution is ordinarily the best evidence of a levy and sale"; but if it is not returned and is lost, and a judgment and execution are proved to exist, the recital in the sheriff's deed is admissible as an official statement to show the fact of levy and sale; and, semble, also of the judgment and the execution, provided the sale is an ancient one; explaining Edwards v. Tipton, 77 N. C. 222, Hardin v. Cheek, 3 Jones L. 135, and Owen v. Barksdale, 8 Ired. 81); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 599–1 (county records destroyed); Pennsylvania: 1784, Burke v. Ryan, 1 Dall. 94 (recitals admitted, without producing the record; but here there had been ancient possession); 1796, Wilson v. M'Veagh, 2 Yeates 86 (judgment and execution required to be shown by exemplification or abstract; 'the consequences of asserting the doctrine that a sheriff by his recital could deduce a power to sell lands would be highly mischievous"); 1819, Weyand v. Tipton, 5 S. & R. 332 (recitals are no evidence of authority to sell judgment and execution must be produced); 1823, Hampton v. Speckenagle, 9 S. & R. 212, 221 (same); 1841, Braddee v. Brownfield, 2 S. & R. 271, 289 (preceding cases approved); South Carolina: 1802, Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 441, 445 (recitals in a sheriff's deed, admissible for all parts of his proceedings; production of the execution or fi. fa. not required; Waties and Grimke, JJ., diss.); 1805, D'Urphy v. Nelson, 1 Brev. 476 (recital of the execution, here lost, received); 1811, Tobin v. Seay, 2 Brev. 470 (production not required); 1819, Barkley v. Screven, 1 N. & McC. 408 (production of the execution required, but only the last, not the intermediate ones; for lands, the judgment also); 1820, Vance v. Reardon, 2 N. & McC. 299, 302 (same, but applied equally to personalty; extracts of executions, in proving a sheriff's sale, held insufficient; Colcock and Bay, JJ., diss.); 1839, Smith v. Smith, Rice 232, 238, semble (judgment must be produced, to show authority); 1852, Floyd v. Mintsey, 5 Rich. 361, 365, 372 (recitals not sufficient, without producing the judgment at least); Tennessee: 1833, Nichols v. Ridley, 5 Yerg. 63, 65 (recitals to show the fact of sale, admitted); 1874, Sampson v. Marr, 7 Baxt. 486, 488 (sheriff's deed-recitals, evidence of advertisement, etc.); Vermont: 1874, Maxham v. Place, 46 Vt. 434, 442 (execution reciting judgment; proof of loss of judgment, held sufficient); Virginia: 1847, Robinett v. Preston, 4 Gratt. 141, 147, semble (sheriff's recitals of judgment and execution, sufficient without production, as against strangers setting up a title adverse to that conveyed by the officer); 1848, Jesse v. Preston 5 Gratt. 120, 130 (tax-collector's recitals of at common law, the main difficulty being the requirement of producing the judgment roll, the recitals of the deed were admissible if the loss of the roll was shown; moreover, if the roll (or a copy) was produced, and the rule thus satisfied, the recitals were of course admissible to prove the fact of the sale as being an official act of the sheriff.

In the same connection, the question constantly arises whether the whole of the record of judgment and execution must be proved, and, conversely whether, though the judgment be produced in entirety, this suffices even where the land is not adequately identified; here the principle of Completeness (post, §§ 2094, 2110) comes into play.[7]

(e) The same principles are illustrated in the use of recitals in a collector's tax-deed, or in a deed by any other officer empowered to sell on a certain warrant.[8]

(f) Somewhat different considerations are involved in the subject of recitals in old deeds other than sheriffs' (ante, § 1573), and the admissibility of a sheriff's inquisition of title (post, § 1670).

§ 1665. Surveyors' Returns (Maps, Registers, etc.). The very office of a surveyor is to run lines and establish boundaries for the purpose of applying the terms of grants and patents and thus of perpetuating the settlement of boundaries; it is therefore a natural implication that he has the duty and the authority to make a written return of his doings.[1] At common law in England due proceedings authorizing sale, not sufficient without production; preceding case distinguished because adverse possession there accompanied the deed).

By statute, the recitals in an administrator's deed are sometimes given similar effect.

[7] The cases cited in the foregoing note illustrate this principle also; compare further § 2110, post.

[8] Bolan v. Bolan and Burke v. Burke are useful cases: Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2721 (tax-deeds to be 'prima facie' evidence); Illinois: 1908, Glanz v. Ziabek, 233 Ill. 22, 84 N. E. 36 (tax-deed alone insufficient); Iowa: 1899, Lawless v. Stamp, 108 Ia. 601, 79 N. W. 365 (receiver's recital of his appointment, not admissible); Kentucky: 1906, Husbands v. Polivick, — Ky. —, 96 S. W. 825 (collector's return of a tax-sale is presumptive evidence, under Stats. 1899, c. 81, § 7, Stats. 1915, § 3760, quoted ante, § 1352, n. 11); Massachusetts: 1898, Burke v. Burke, 170 Mass. 499, 49 N. E. 753 (tax-collector's deed-recitals, not evidence of facts recited); 1801, Simon v. Brown, 3 Yeates 186 (recitals of payment of taxes in a county commissioner's deed excluded); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 2132 (tax collector's deed); Nevada: 1868, Bolan v. Bolan, 4 Nev. 150 (tax-deed; production of judgment required); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 8034; Tennessee: 1848, Henderson v. Galloway, 8 Humph. 692, 696 (recital of notice in a trustee's deed not receivable like a sheriff's); 1883, Coal C. M. & M. Co. v. Ross, 12 Lea 1, 8 (clerk's deed; production of decree required); Vermont: 1832, Hall v. Collins, 4 Vt. 316, 326, semble (tax-collector's deed-recital not evidence against one not a party, because he is "not by any law made a certifying officer for the purpose"); 1859, Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183, 190 (collector's deed-recitals of having done all things required, not evidence); Virginia: 1815, Christy v. Minor, 4 Munf. 431 (U. S. marshal's tax-deed recitals, not sufficient without "other proof of authority"); 1829, Allen v. Smith, 1 Leigh 231 (U. S. marshal's tax-deed recitals, not sufficient without proving the prerequisites of advertisement, etc., although here there had been 20 years' possession); 1830, Chapman v. Bennett, 2 Leigh 329, 330 (sheriff's testimony of sale of land for taxes, not sufficient without showing preliminary proceedings); 1848, Wynn v. Harman, 5 Gratt. 157, 166 (decree of partition and report of commissioners, sufficient without producing the whole record, if the land is adequately described); 1848, Masters v. Varner, 5 Gratt. 167, 171 (marshal's conveyance under Court decree ordering sale of land "in the bill mentioned"; production of a record sufficient to identify the land, required); 1852, Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. 194, 198 (deed of commissioner for delinquent taxes; recitals insufficient, without proving authority, where there is no "long acquiescence and possession").

Compare the statutes for old recorded deeds (post, § 2143, n. 5).

§ 1665. [1] His record is usually indexed and filed, and is perhaps sometimes kept as a

there were doubtless few instances of persons whose sole or constant official duty was that of a surveyor; so that most surveys became official only by virtue of a special warrant to make them. Nevertheless, the principle was sufficiently recognized at common law;[2] and it may therefore be said that wherever the office of government surveyor has been created,[3] the officer has an implied authority of office to make return of his official surveys, and his returns are therefore admissible.

The admissibility depends upon the authority (ante, § 1633); hence, on the one hand, the returns of the government surveyor are admissible to evidence only those matters which he is authorized to do; and, on the other hand, a private person's survey, if made under special warrant or if otherwise sanctioned by proper authority (ante, § 1633, par. 10), may become admissible:[4]

Register; but in its nature it is a Return (as defined in § 1664). Whether the surveyor's Return is not, after all, a Report (ante, § 1664) is a nice question; but it seems more correct to regard it as a statement of the surveyor's own doings.

Compare the rule for inquisitions of domain (post, § 1670), in which the application of the principle is slightly different.

[2] 1838, Evans v. Taylor, 7 A. & E. 617 (a survey of a manor in the duchy of Lancaster, not admitted to show the boundary of the manor, because the statute Extenta Manerii, 4 Edw. I, c. 1, gave no authority to define the boundaries of a manor, and no authority for the survey except this statute was shown); 1844, Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 531 (an ancient extent, or official survey, of Crown lands, admitted; Parke, B.: "It is a finding by a public officer on a public matter"); 1852, Daniel v. Wilkin, 7 Exch. 429, 434, 437 (a private surveyor's survey, excluded; Parke, B.: "If the survey had been made by officers of the Crown, no doubt it would have been admissible"); 1867, Phillips v. Hudson, L. R. 2 Ch. 243 (a grant and survey of a manor formerly belonging to the Crown, made by the Crown under a general statute and recorded in the Augmentation Office, but relating to private property of the King, not admitted for the tenants against the lord).

But the following more recent cases, in which none of the above rulings were cited, are more strict: 1904, Mellor v. Walmesley, 2 Ch. 525 (report of a surveyor to a municipal board, excluded); 1904, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 534, 541 (report of a surveyor made to the Warden of the Cinque Ports, excluded; quoted ante, § 1634, n. 1); in Mellor v. Walmesley, 1905, 2 Ch. 164, 166, the Court of Appeal reversed the ruling in Mellor v. Walmesley, supra, but rather on the principle of § 1524, ante; in Mercer v. Denne, 1905, 2 Ch. 538, 555, the Court of Appeal affirmed the ruling in Mercer v. Denne, supra.

[3] That a distinction could be taken in this respect between surveyors of the State, a county, or a town, seems untenable; yet it seems sometimes to be made; see the citations infra, note 4.

[4] ENGLAND: 1899, Evans v. Merthyr Tydfil, 1 Ch. 241, 250 (survey of Crown land, made under the provisions of a statute and filed in the Law Revenue Office, admitted).

CANADA: 1834, Badgeley v. Bender, 3 U. C. Jur. o. s. 225 (official survey or map, admissible); 1877, O'Connor v. Dunn, 2 Ont. App. 247, 254 (surveyor's official survey, semble, admissible); 1885, Vankoughnet v. Denison, 11 Ont. App. 679 (city surveyor's map excluded); 1857, Maynes v. Dolan, 3 All. N. Br. 573 (Crown survey, not admitted to show that the line had actually been run).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1854, Stein v. Ashby, 24 Ala. 530 (government map, admissible); Connecticut: 1839, Wooster v. Butler, 13 Conn. 309, 315 (survey must be one made by authority); Florida: 1884, Simmons v. Spratt, 20 Fla. 495, 499 ("the simple filing of a private survey in a public office does not make it evidence"); Georgia: 1889, Polhill v. Brown, 84 Ga. 342, 10 S. E. 921 (State map of county, admissible); 1903, Berry v. Clark, 117 Ga. 964, 44 S. E. 824 (Secretary of State's certified copy of a county map on file in his office, admitted, without showing its authorship); 1877, Maples v. Haggard, 58 Ga. 315 (surveys made by other than county surveyors are not admissible without calling the persons making them); 1906, Bower v. Cohen, 126 Ga. 35, 54 S. E. 918 (map by one not a county surveyor not acting under court order, excluded); Iowa: 1870, Pfotzer v. Mullaney, 30 Ia. 197 (map in MS. used in city office as official, not admitted); Louisiana: 1841, Carrollton R. Co. v. Municipality, 10 La. 44 (city map, admissible); Massachusetts: 1903, Clark v. Hull, 184 Mass. 164, 68 N. E. 60 (official chart of coast, made by authority of St. 1807, Feb.

1836, STORY, J., in Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 412, 441: "The survey, made by a surveyor, being under oath [of office] is evidence as to all things which are properly within the line of his duty. But his duty is confined to describing and marking on the plat the lines, corners, trees, and other objects on the ground, and to subjoin such remarks as may explain them. But in all other respects, and as to all other facts, he stands, like any other witness, to be examined on oath in the presence of the parties and subject to cross-examination. . . . It has never been supposed that if in such a survey the surveyor should go on to state collateral facts, or declarations of the parties, or other matters not within the scope of his proper official functions, he could thereby make them evidence as between third persons."

These principles generally receive consistent application. In many jurisdictions, statutes have expressly made admissible the returns and records of the surveyor-general and of the county-surveyors, as well as of various special commissioners and other officers having a surveyor's duties.[5] In a

10, § 1, admitted); Michigan: 1864, Smith v. Lawrence, 12 Mich. 431 (book of township plats of title, not required by law to be kept, excluded); Minnesota: 1866, Wilder v. St. Paul, 12 Minn. 192, 209 (map made by statutory authority, admitted); New Hampshire: 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 412 (town map made under State authority, admissible); New Jersey: 1795, Denn v. Pond, Coxe 381; New York: 1807, Jackson v. Witler, 2 Johns. 180 (official map bearing an indorsement of partition by persons chosen thereto; excluded, because the surveyor had no authority to report as to title); 1893, Blackman v. Riley, 138 N. Y. 318, 329, 34 N. E. 214 (ancient map by a city surveyor for a private party, received); North Carolina: 1888, Dobson v. Whisenhaut, 101 N. C. 647, 8 S. E. 126 (unofficial map, inadmissible); 1889, Burwell v. Sneed, 104 N. C. 119, 10 S. E. 152 (map made by a surveyor appointed by the county, excluded); 1904, Cowles v. Lovin, 135 N. C. 488, 47 S. E. 610 (certificates of survey by a former county surveyor now in Texas, excluded; following Burwell v. Sneed, supra); Pennsylvania: 1773, Biddle v. Shippen, 1 Dall. 19 (official map or survey, admissible); 1797, Shields v. Buchanan, 2 Yeates 219 (survey made by a private surveyor, under land-office order, and returned into the surveyor-general's office, admitted); 1817, Salmon v. Rauce, 3 S. & R. 311, 315 (deputy-surveyor's return to an order of survey, receivable, because he is a sworn officer; but not when he states matters not within his duty; a return that a former survey was mistaken, excluded); 1836, Com. v. Alburger, 1 Whart. 469, 473 (ancient plan of Philadelphia as officially laid out in 1683, received); 1840, Wolf v. Goddard, 9 Watts 544 (official warrant and survey return, receivable to show the lands taken); 1869, Baird v. Rice, 63 Pa. 489, 497 (like Com. v. Alburger); Wisconsin: 1901, Schlei v. Struck, 109 Wis. 598, 85 N. W. 430.

veyor's survey or plat, admissible, "if the opposite party has notice that such survey is to be made"); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1737 (record of survey, etc., by State engineer or deputy or municipal engineering department, admissible); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 1897 (county surveyor's record, by certified copy, admissible); § 1901 (no survey by other than county surveyor or deputy to be "considered as legal evidence," unless made under U. S. authority or by "mutual consent of the parties"); § 4746 (U. S. surveys of public lands, on file with State land commissioner, admissible); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 8823 ("The certificate of the county surveyor or any of his deputies shall be admitted as legal evidence"); § 3303 (survey plat of mining claim made under court order and recorded, admissible); § 5042 (U. S. field notes and plats, copied and filed with county clerk, to be evidence); St. 1921, c. 120 (hydrographic records of stream-flow, etc.; State and division engineers' records, to be "evidence of the facts contained therein"); Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1575 (District surveyor's records, admissible by his certified transcript); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 602 (county surveyor's survey or plat, made by order of Court on notice to parties, admissible); § 6314 ("no survey shall be received in evidence "unless 10 days' notice had been given of taking the survey); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 3671 (county surveyor's certified copy of U. S. field notes filed, admissible); § 3674 (no surveys to be "legal evidence" except when made in accordance with U. S. manual, etc.); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 133, § 7 (county surveyor's record of surveys, admissible); § 10 (so also for U. S. surveyor-general's field-notes in State auditor's office, admissible); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 9518 (county surveyor's survey to be 'prima facie' evidence of corners and lines); § 8570 (coal-mine map on record with inspector of mines, admissible); Iowa: Code 1897, § 538, Comp. Code § 3389 (county surveyor's field-notes and plat, admissible against persons requesting survey or having reasonable notice of it beforehand); Rev. Code § 7341 ("A copy of the field notes of any surveyor, or a plat made by him and certified under oath as correct, may be received as evidence to show the shape or dimensions of a tract of land, or any other fact the ascertainment of which requires the exercise of scientific skill or calculation only"); 1919, Peterson v. McManus, 187 Ia. 522, 172 N. W. 460 (a Canadian official survey, not admitted, on the facts, under Code § 4634); Kansas: G. S. 1915, § 2708 (U. S. plats and field notes, copied by county surveyor and filed with county register of deeds, admissible); ib. § 2704 ("any survey made by any county surveyor or his deputy shall be evidence," but not conclusive); St. 1921, c. 154 (amending Gen. St. 1915, § 2704; survey by county surveyor or deputy or city engineer, to be evidence); Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 1437 (State surveyor's plan of town lots, after filing in parish recorder's office and public notice given, to be evidence "of the description and dimensions of said property"); also § 2466; St. 1912, No. 182, p. 326, July 11 (surveys established by parish authorities; the official survey, duly certified, to be "conclusive evidence," unless set aside in a direct action for fraud or gross error); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 75, § 152 (county maps issued under authority of certain prior statutes, to be admissible to evidence water boundaries); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 42, § 9 (topographical survey commissioners' triangulation points, to be evidence of town boundary lines); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 2329 (county supervisors' record of boundaries perpetuated, admissible); § 2481 (surveyor's or deputy's certificate of survey, admissible where the surveyor or deputy is not interested); § 3350 (municipal survey-plat, admissible); §§ 3364, 3365 (same for county-supervisors' resurvey of municipal plat); 1903, Sherrard v. Cudney, 134 Mich. 200, 96 N. W. 15 (statute applied); § 468 (field notes, etc., in office of State land commissioner, recorded by copy in county registry of deeds, admissible); St. 1921, No. 312, p. 577 (proceedings to establish section boundaries, etc.; record of field notes, etc., to be admissible); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8455 (certificate of a county surveyor or deputy, or of U. S. survey, admissible); § 790 (county commissioners' establishment of certain boundaries, etc., admissible); § 8418 (records of surveys by municipal engineering department, admissible); Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1963, Hem. § 1623 (certificate of a county surveyor or deputy, of a survey made of lands in the county or under Court order, to be presumptive evidence of "the facts connected with and pertinent to the survey," if the maker is not interested therein); § 1962, Hem. § 1622 (field-notes; quoted post, § 1680); § 1828, Hem. § 1461 (report of surveyor in ejectment, admissible if made after notice to opponent); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5508 (certain returns of county surveyors, to be evidence); § 12719 (no survey to be "legal evidence," except those made by a county surveyor or deputy or by the U. S. authority or by mutual consent); § 12730 (certified copies of U. S. surveyor's field-notes, filed with county surveyor, admissible, by surveyor's certified copy); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 5018 (county surveyor's certificate of "any survey made by him of any lands in the county," to be presumptive evidence, "unless such surveyor shall be interested in the same"); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 1667 (certificate of a county-surveyor or deputy, admissible); St. 1915, p. 385, being St. 1913, Mar. 22, § 88 A (State engineer's maps, plats, surveys, etc., admissible in water-right contests, after 90 days' notice of intention); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, §§ 1294, 1299 (survey, plat, or field-notes or survey books of a county surveyor or deputy, admissible "only when the surveyor may be dead, or when it shall be impossible to obtain his evidence either by his personal attendance or by means of a deposition"); St. 1919, Mar. 17, c. 124 (hydrographic survey reports by State engineer or his authority or by U. S. engineer or "by any other engineer in the opinion of the State engineer qualified to make the same" is admissible); New York: C. P. A. § 389 (maps, surveys, and official records on file in certain public offices in New York city for twenty years, admissible); Cons. L. 1909, Drainage § 13 (filed map by drainage commissioners, admissible); Canal § 4 (State engineer's map and field-notes of canal lands, admissible); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 7572 (county surveyor's record of surveys, in office of register of deeds, to be evidence); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 3427 (certificate of survey of lands by county surveyor or deputy, to be evidence, unless he is interested therein); § 3437*a* (county surveyor's records of field-notes and plats, admissible); § 5018 (county surveyor's or deputy's certificate of survey of lands in the county, to be presumptive evidence, unless he be interested therein); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 2797, 2801, 2811, 2815, 3613 (certain surveys of a county surveyor, and of a private survey under official order, to be evidence); 1902, State v. Cincinnati T. & J. Co., 66 Oh. 182, 64 N. E. 68 (under §§ 218–223, Bates' Annot. St., the findings, maps, etc., of the canal commissioners are admissible only for the kinds of land there specified); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, §§ 5909, 5910 (county surveyor's survey to be held "presumptively correct"; his record of field-notes and plats to be admissible); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 3431 (county surveyor's certified copies of field notes from U. S. surveyor-general or land-office, admissible); § 3423 (no surveys to be legal evidence, except those of county surveyor or deputy, "unless attested by two competent surveyors," except made by authority of U. S.

[5] Alabama: Code 1907, § 6023 (county sur-

few of these jurisdictions, chiefly in the South, the statutory procedure (based apparently upon an early local common-law practice [6]), necessary to make the official survey receivable when it deals with private boundaries, requires the parties interested to be first notified of the intended survey so that they may attend and coöperate.[7]

Statutes also have made admissible various kinds of surveyors' certificates (post, § 1674). The proof of the contents of the surveyor's records by certified copy depends upon the general principle applicable to proof of official records by certified copy (post, § 1680); for a certificate of the contents of a surveyor's record another principle (post, § 1678) is also involved.[8]

Other principles concern the use of private surveys as embodying reputation to boundaries (ante, §§ 1582–1595), the statements of deceased surveyors under the peculiar exception for private boundaries (ante, §§ 1563–1571); the testimony of a surveyor on the stand, with his map (ante, § 791); the authentication of ancient surveys (post, §§ 2137, 2158) by age or official custody.

Distinguish the use, under substantive law, of a survey which has been referred to by a deed or a land-patent and thus incorporated into it; [9] here the survey is received, not as evidence, but as a part of the description in the deed (post, § 1777) or as a source of interpretation (post, § 2465); and this use includes most of the instances in which in practice a survey is resorted to. The conclusiveness of a government survey in establishing a boundary, and or the State or by parties' consent); Pennsylvania: St. 1804, Mar. 19, Dig. 1920, § 17825 Public Land (State surveyor-general; certificate of certain entries in books of account, admissible); South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, § 5527 (disputed boundaries; sworn return of surveyor appointed by Court, admissible); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 8194 (State engineer's hydrographic survey filed in office, admissible "as evidence in suits for the adjudication of water rights"); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3695 (county surveyor's records of surveys and plats, "whether private or official," admissible); § 7747 (in trespass to try title, a report under oath of a surveyor appointed by court is admissible, "if said report be not rejected for good cause shown"); Vermont: St. 1902, no. 62 ("all books, papers, and records of the surveyor-general" in possession of the State are provable by certified copy of the Secretary of State); Virginia: Code 1919, § 2680 (county surveyor's recorded report and plat, to be conclusive evidence of boundary lines); § 2977 (municipal council's survey of streets, etc., to be evidence of boundaries); Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 3975 (certificate of a county engineer or his deputy, to be presumptive evidence of the facts contained, "unless such engineer or deputy shall be interested therein"); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 67, § 2 a (surveyor's records, impliedly admissible, and provable by certified copy); St. 1915, cc. 114, 121, 130, 139, and St. 1917, c. 91, § 3 (official reporter's transcript of testimony in certain courts, receivable); St. 1921, c. 112, § 18 (certified copies of certain road maps, admissible); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 5964 (certificate of a county surveyor or deputy, admissible, to be evidence of the facts therein stated); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 1544 (county surveyor's certificate of survey to be "admitted as legal evidence"); § 2116 (official survey or perambulation of town boundaries, admissible).

[6] 1813, Ewing v. Savary, 3 Bibb 235 (surveyor's report made without notice to absent resident, excluded).

[7] 1902, Boyett v. State, 132 Ala. 23, 31 So. 551 (statute applied); 1921, Cannon v. Yarbrough, — Miss. —, 89 So. 911 (Code 1906, § 1828, held not to exclude a survey made after suit begun and without notice to opponent); Lenoir v. Bank, 87 Miss. 559, 40 So. 5, followed); 1903, Watkins v. Havighorst, 13 Okl. 128, 74 Pac. 318 (survey without notice held not binding). That there is no inherent necessity for this notice, see ante, § 1385, and post, § 1860.

[8] For land-office registers, see ante, § 1659.

[9] E. g. 1849, May v. Baskin, 12 Sm. & M. 429 ("the original survey fixed the rights of the parties; the government sold the land according to that survey"); 1848, Eberle v. Board, 11 Mo. 258.

the preference for a surveyor's record rather than his testimony, involve still other principles (ante, § 1352, post, § 2427).

§ 1666. Testimony at a Former Trial; (1) Judge's Notes. Under the orthodox common-law trial system it was the practice of judges at a trial to take full notes of the testimony of the witnesses, in order to aid themselves in commenting upon the testimony in the charge to the jury. This practice has naturally died out in the United States, under the misguided and vicious rule (post, § 2551) now almost universal (a veritable mutilation of the common-law trial by jury), forbidding the trial judge to charge the jury upon the effect of the testimony. But while it prevailed, the question was often presented whether these notes of the judge were admissible, without calling him, to prove at another trial the terms of testimony delivered on the former occasion. It was generally agreed that they were not, because the notes, however full they might be, were not taken under any official duty,[1] — a strict application of the general principle (ante, § 1633):

1839, ABINGER, L. C. B., in Leach v. Simpson, 5 M. & W. 311, 7 Dowl. Pr. 514: "A judge only takes notes for his own private convenience; there is no law which requires him to do so."

1811, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Miles v. O'Hara, 4 Binn. 110: "It is refining too much to say that he takes his notes under the obligation of his oath of office. . . . In general, where the law directs a judge to do an official act, it receives his certificate as sufficient evidence of the act being done. But the taking notes of the evidence was not an act required by law; therefore his certificate is no evidence that these notes contain the truth."

§ 1667. Same: (2) Magistrate's Report. For one sort of judges' reports of testimony, however, there has long been a basis of statutory authority, —

§ 1666. [1] Accord: 1883, Schafer v. Schafer, 93 Ind. 588; 1867, Webster v. Calden, 55 Me. 171 (report signed by the judge); 1890, State v. Whelehon, 102 Mo. 17, 22, 14 S. W. 730; 1898, People v. Corey, 157 N. Y. 332, 51 N. E. 1024 (statement made from the bench); 1821, Foster v. Shaw, 7 S. & R., Pa. 162; 1844, Livingston v. Cox, 8 id. 62; 1908, Richards v. Com., 107 Va. 881, 59 S. E. 1104 (judge's notes, excluded); 1875, Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216, 229 (justice of peace's minutes, excluded); 1891, Elberfeldt v. Waite, 79 Wis. 284, 48 N. W. 525 (preceding case followed); 1903, Eggett v. Allen, 119 Wis. 625, 96 N. W. 803 (justice's minutes excluded).

Yet modern practice in England does not seem to observe a definite rule upon this point: 1851, R. v. Child, 5 Cox Cr. 197, 203 (excluded); 1858, R. v. Harvey, 3 Cox Cr. 99, 103, semble (excluded); 1860, Watson v. Little, 5 H. & N. 472 (legitimacy; to prove inconsistent statements of the mother in a proceeding for filiation of a bastard, the order of filiation, by deceased magistrates, reciting her oath, were admitted); 1874, Ex parte Gillebrand, Re Sidebotham, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 52 (judge's notes of evidence received, when "verified"; whether this means "sworn to," does not appear); 1892, R. v. Britton, 17 Cox Cr. 627 (judge's notes of proceedings, excluded in a prosecution for perjury); 1896, Griffin's Divorce, App. Cas. 133 (judge's notes of testimony, offered by certified copy, received upon verification by a witness to the testimony); 1898, Re Batt & Co.'s Reg. Trademarks, 2 Ch. 442, 701.

In Canada there is authority for admission: 1848, Doe v. Murray, 1 All. N. Br. 216 ("he takes them under the sanction of an oath"); 1862, Bennett v. Jones, 5 id. 342; N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, §§ 26, 27 (judge's notes admissible, when by him produced and read by him or transmitted "to the presiding judge to be read by him"); 1890, R. v. Mills, 2 N. W. Terr. 297 (admitted; the judge being required by law to take notes).

The notes may of course be used by the judge to aid his memory on being called to the stand (ante, § 757). Whether he is compellable to take the stand involves a question of privilege (post, § 2372, § 2376).

committing magistrates' reports of testimony at the preliminary hearing for committal.

By statutes in England, first enacted in the 1500s, and extended in scope from time to time,[1] the magistrates were directed to take the testimony, or the material parts thereof, in writing, and to return it to the proper office for preservation. The statutes, however, did not expressly make this magistrate's return admissible (i. e. as an official statement, without calling the magistrate or the clerk acting under his direction). Accordingly, for a long time it seems to have been thought necessary to call the magistrate or the clerk, who verified the notes and thus used them as an aid to memory (on the principle of § 737, ante). Such at any rate was the English practice down to the 1700s.[2] It persisted as a tradition into the 1800s; but by that time the sounder view was occasionally advanced that the magistrate's express statutory authority to make the return sufficed to admit it (when duly authenticated) as an official statement, without calling him or his clerk.[3] The matter remained, however, in the dubitable realm of conflicting nisi prius rulings, until in 1847 a statute expressly adopted the correct and practical view.[4]

In the United States, the same result is reached by a majority of the Courts, although the original English view is also here represented;[5] one reason for § 1667. [1] They are collected in full, ante, § 1326.

[2] 1666, Lord Morley's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 770 (coroner's examination; oath of coroner required); 1679, Langhorn's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 417, 467 (Lord's Journal of an examination before them, not admitted without some witness' oath); 1679, Wakeman's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 591, 654 (same; L. C. J. North: "When there is an examination in a court of record, these not passing the examination of that Court but being taken by the clerks, we always in evidence expect there should be somebody to prove that such an examination was sworn and subscribed to"); 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1440 (like Langhorn's Case); 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, II, 52 ("Oath is to be made in Court by the justice or his clerk, that these examinations and informations were truly taken"); ib. 284 ("that they are the true substance of what," etc.).

[3] 1808, R. v. Howe, 1 Camp. 462, 6 Esp. 125 (magistrate's record of conviction, containing the witness' testimony, as required by law, excluded); 1831, R. v. Watkins, 1 C. & P. 550, note (Bosanquet, J.; the clerk taking the examination must be called, using his paper to refresh his memory); 1834, R. v. Chappel, 1 Moo. & Rob. 395 (Lord Denman, C. J.; neither magistrate nor clerk must be called); 1835, R. v. Richards, Moo. & Rob. note (Patteson, J.; same); 1835, R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 148 (Bosanquet and Alderson, JJ., "intimated an opinion that the [accused's] statement might be read on proof of the magistrate's handwriting, on the ground that the law required the magistrate to certify that it had been duly taken"; remarking, in reference to Lord Hale's doctrine, "it could not be intended that the magistrate or his clerk must be called, on account of their office"); 1839, R. v. Pikesley, 9 C. & P. 124 (held, on the facts, desirable, but not legally necessary, to call the magistrate).

[4] 1847, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, § 17 ("it shall be lawful to read such deposition in evidence," signed by the witness and the justice or justices); § 18 (the examination of the accused "may if necessary be given in evidence against him").

[5] Federal: 1918, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Neasham, 9th C. C. A., 250 Fed. 787 (coroner's report of testimony, made by law under Nev. Rev. St. § 7550, excluded, because not read to or by the witness or signed by him; unsound); Arkansas: 1874, Bass v. State, 29 Ark. 142, 145 (escape; coroner's minutes of inquest-proceedings, excluded); 1899, Payne v. State, 66 Ark. 545, 52 S. W. 276 (magistrate's report excluded, except as an aid to memory, because it is legally required to contain the substance only; Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 588, explained as decided contra under a statute requiring reduction of the whole to writing and the signature by witness); California: 1872, People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452 (coroner's report of testimony, admitted, the coroner being required by law to return it in writing); Connecticut: 1792, Benedict v. Nichols, 1 Root 434, semble (examination before a probate judge, admitted); Florida: 1901, Green v.

adopting it (in some jurisdictions at least) being the supposed incompleteness of the report (post, §§ 2098, 2099), — either because the local statute requires only the "substance" to be taken down,[6] or because in practice the notes are carelessly taken and are untrustworthy (though even these would seem safer than mere recollection-testimony, which is universally received).

It will be remembered that there are two other ways in which the report may be used, even though it is inadmissible as an official statement. (a) The magistrate or the clerk, being called, may use it to aid his memory.[7] (b) If the report is signed by the witness or the accused (as is usually required by statute), then it has become by adoption his own statement, and it is no longer merely the magistrate's report of what was testified; consequently, it may be put in as the witness' or accused's own statement, if his signature to it as read to him is proved; and an oral acknowledgment of its correctness will suffice for the same purpose.[7] It follows, when the document is used in this way, that the objection as to not calling the magistrate or his clerk disappears, since it is not put in as the officer's report.[8] Conversely, it is

State, 43 Fla. 552, 30 So. 798 (justice of the peace's certificate of a dying declaration, excluded, the justice not being called); Georgia: 1900, Haines v. State, 109 Ga. 526, 35 S. E. 141 (magistrate's report, reduced to writing "some time after the trial"; admitted); Illinois: 1862, Schoonover v. Myers, 28 Ill. 308 (magistrate's notes of testimony, not read to or signed by the witness, excluded); Indiana: 1920, Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Dobbs, — Ind. App. —, 126 N. E. 869 (testimony taken before the State fire marshal, certified by the marshal and attested by the Secretary of State under seal of State, admissible); Iowa: 1876, State v. Hayden, 45 Ia. 11, 13 (even to impeach by inconsistencies, the clerk's minutes of grand-jury testimony or the magistrate's of testimony on preliminary examination, are inadmissible, because of their customary brevity and uncertainty; the clerk or magistrate or other hearer must be called; even a report signed by the witness himself is not sufficient, unless its contents were made known to him at the time); 1899, State v. Reinheimer, 109 Ia. 624, 80 N. W. 669 (under Code 1897, § 5227, the committing magistrate's minutes, taken by the reporter but not read over or signed by the witness, are not admissible; compare the Iowa rule for grand jury minutes, post, § 1669, n. 2); 1907, State v. Hoffman, 134 Ia. 587, 112 N. W. 103 (approving State v. Reinheimer); Massachusetts: 1883, Com. v. Ryan, 134 Mass. 223, 225 (justice of the peace's report of a case, under Pub. St. 1882, c. 26, § 15, is not usable as an official record of testimony); Michigan: 1868, Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507, 512, semble (clerk's minutes of testimony before a magistrate, admissible); Mississippi: 1901, Cunning v. State, 79 Miss. 284, 30 So. 658 (magistrate's report, uncertified and unverified, excluded on the facts); New York: 1832, Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. 598, semble (committing magistrate's report, admissible); 1840, People v. White, 24 Wend. 520, 533, 556 (coroner's report of testimony, excluded because in pencil; Furman, Sen., diss.); North Carolina: 1847, State v. Valentine, 7 Ired. 225, 226 (magistrate need not be called); Pennsylvania: 1902, Edwards v. Gimbel, 202 Pa. 30, 51 Atl. 357 (coroner's written report of testimony, excluded, because no duty required him to record it); Philippine Isl. 1908, Bagsa v. Nagramada, 11 P. I. 174 (justice's report of testimony, admitted to contradict the witness, even though the justice lacked jurisdiction); South Carolina: 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 227, 7 S. E. 296, semble (coroner's report, admitted; though other questions are confused with it).

The magistrate's report is sometimes excluded because it is not in the form precisely prescribed for it: 1850, R. v. Miller, 4 Cox Cr. 166 (deposition signed by "H. J.," not purporting to be a magistrate; not admitted, nor his actual magistracy allowed to be shown, because the statute requires it to "purport" to be so signed); 1896, State v. Hatcher, 29 Or. 309, 44 Pac. 584 ("The statute, having provided the manner in which the statement must be authenticated, would seem to exclude oral evidence in aid of a faulty execution, or to supply the necessary certificate").

[6] See the statutes, ante, § 1326.

[7] The cases to this effect are collected ante, § 1328.

[8] 1834, R. v. Chappel, 1 Moo. & Rob. 395 (Denman, L. C. J.); 1835, R. v. Richards, ib. 396, note (Patteson, J.); R. v. Hopes, 7 C. & P. 136 (Vaughan and Patteson, JJ.); R. v. Reading, 7 C. & P. 649 (Parke, B.); R. v. Rees, 7 C. & P. 568 (Denman, L. C. J.). receivable as an official statement, even though the signature of witness or accused is not appended.[9]

From the use of the magistrate's report under the present Exception, the application to it of certain other principles of Evidence must be distinguished; namely, its required use as a preferred sort of testimony (ante, §§ 1326–1329), its force as conclusive testimony (ante, § 1349), and the necessity of showing it to a witness under cross-examination before it can be used to prove his prior contradictory testimony (ante, § 1262). Moreover, the magistrate's report of oral testimony is distinguished from the deposition proper, in which the witness testifies originally in writing; the distinction has been examined, ante, §§ 802, 1331, 1376, 1401.

Whether the whole of the testimony and the precise words must be proved involves the principle of Completeness (post, §§ 2098, 2099).

§ 1668. Same: (3) Bill of Exceptions. A bill of exceptions usually embodies so much of the testimony as is needed to be laid before the Superior Court in order to enable it to understand and rule upon the questions of law raised by the exceptions; it is signed by the trial judge, partly (at least) in token of his approval of it as a fair representation of the issues raised. May it not therefore be regarded as an official statement, by the judge, of the tenor of the testimony, whenever in another trial (even between other parties) it may be desired to prove the parts of the testimony stated in the bill? The arguments for so receiving it have been forcibly put in the following passages:

1824, OWSLEY, J., in Baylor v. Smithers, 1 T. B. Monr. 6: "The statements contained in a bill of exceptions must be supposed to have undergone not only the inspection of each party or their counsel, but moreover the scrutiny and supervision of the Court, by whom the exceptions are signed. When enrolled, those statements in fact compose part of the record, and are entitled to as much verity and are deserving as much credit as would be the testimony of any witness who might prove what the witness whose statements are contained in the record proved on a previous trial."

1859, BENNING, J., in Smith v. State, 28 Ga. 19, 23: "The test ought surely to be no more than this: Is it probable that the [party's] admission admits only what is true, that the [Court's] judgment sanctions only what is true? For the truth is all that justice requires; and taking this as the test, the paper in question would, it is certain, be admissible. Is it likely that the parties agreed to anything as proved that was not proved, even though the only purpose of this agreement was to comply with the requisitions of the law as to new trials and the law as to writs of error? Is it likely that the Court would have approved as true anything that was not true, even though the purpose of the approval was merely to comply with the requisitions of these same laws? Certainly it is not. Surely all will agree that a paper thus agreed to by the parties and approved by the Court will be more trustworthy on the question what was the evidence delivered on the trial than the daily fading recollection of persons who happened to hear the evidence when it was so delivered."

Nevertheless, the objections to this persuasive exposition are serious, and they are mainly three, — first, it is not the judge's duty to make a report of the testimony, but only to approve the form of the exceptions, so that upon strict principle the bill does not contain an authorized official statement by him; secondly, the bill contains only such fragments of the testimony as bear upon the exceptions, and is therefore not necessarily a fair representation of its tenor; thirdly, the bill is customarily prepared under conditions not likely to ensure a sufficiently correct statement of the testimony. These objections are forcefully detailed in the following passage:

[9] 1897, Miller v. Busick, 56 Oh. 437, 47 N. E. 249.

1868, BECK, J., in Boyd v. Bank, 25 Ia. 257: "The rule which admits in evidence against the accused his voluntary confession and statement upon a preliminary examination is supported by reasons which do not exist in the case of a bill of exceptions. The magistrate is charged by law with the duty of reducing correctly to writing such confessions and statements. They are read over to him under the provisions of our statute, and he has the opportunity to correct them. In all cases where the authorities hold such statements to be admissible, it is the duty of the officer reducing them to writing to do so correctly; and it is presumed that the writing contains fully and perfectly the statements and admissions made by the accused. Bills of exceptions are prepared with no view to such accuracy in the statements of witnesses. They are not required to contain all of the evidence of the witnesses, nor the language used by them, but only so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the ruling of the Court. They are never read to the witnesses, who in fact have nothing to do with their preparation. They are often written out days, weeks, and even months after the trial. . . . The bills of exceptions are then presented to the judge, who, unless they contain some glaring mis-statements, will usually sign them. We are warranted in saying that some judges seldom refuse to sign, and often do not look over and read with care bills of exceptions presented to them by respectable opposing counsel with an indorsement of their approval and agreement. In the preparation of bills of exceptions in open court, the counsel of the respective parties often disagree upon the evidence intended to be stated, and their differences are reconciled, with the approbation of the Court, by mutual concessions which finally present the evidence as claimed by neither and which in fact does not fully satisfy either. . . . As the statute does not require it to be prepared with a view that it shall contain an accurate report of the evidence, and as in practice this is not always so, it ought not to be admitted in evidence in any proceeding to impeach or contradict a witness whose evidence it purports to contain, unless verified and supported as other proof."[1]

The majority of Courts, on one ground or another, receive the bill to prove the tenor of the former testimony.[2] From the point of view of practical safety, § 1668. [1] See also a good opinion by Lawrence, C. J., in Roth v. Smith, 54 Ill. 431, 433.

[2] Arkansas: 1895, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Sweet, 60 Ark. 550, 31 S. W. 571 (bill of exceptions, excluded); Columbia (Dist.): 1897, Anderson v. Reid, 10 D. C. App. 426, 430 (bill not purporting to be "an agreed statement of all the evidence of the witnesses," excluded); Florida: St. 1909, c. 5897, p. 45, June 3, now Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 2723, as amended by St. 1921, c. 8572, No. 177 (on a new trial, in civil cases, if the Court is satisfied that evidence "used at the former trial, and incorporated in the bill of exceptions, cannot be had," then the bill of exceptions "may be used as evidence"; provided that "no evidence given upon a former trial . . . shall be used as evidence . . ."except as follows: (1) that the former testimony was "reported stenographically or reduced to writing in the presence of the court"; (2) that the party now was a party then; (3) that the issue is the same; (4) that the witness cannot be produced; and (5) that "the Court is satisfied that the report of such evidence taken at such former trial is a correct report"; for par. (2), (3), and (4), see further §§ 1387, n. 2, 1413, ante, where the principles thus involved are considered); 1914, Bennett v. State, 68 Fla. 494, 67 So. 125 (St. 1909, c. 5897, held to be not exclusive of other modes of proving former testimony); 1920, Blackwell v. State, 79 Fla. 709, 86 So. 224 (applying St. 1909, c. 5897, Comp. L. 1914, § 1523, admitting the bill of the question is a difficult one to settle by a general rule, and must depend much on the local professional methods. But it seems clear, so far as principle is concerned, that where the parties to the later trial are (as in the usual case) the same in interest, the signing of the bill in the first trial is an admission of the correctness of its statements, and the objection that the admission was intended for that trial only (ante, § 1066, post, § 2592) may affect its weight but not its admissibility; while, as against one not a party to the former trial, the bill involves no admission of his, and is furthermore not available as an official statement of the judge.

§ 1669. Same: (4) Notes of Stenographer, Attorney, Juryman. (a) The appointment of an official stenographer has chiefly an administrative purpose, — that of providing conveniently, constantly, and (sometimes) without exceptions, and making it the exclusive mode); Georgia: 1852, Riggins v. Brown, 12 Ga. 271, 275 (bill of exceptions; not decided); 1859, Smith v. State, 28 Ga. 19, 23 ("brief" of evidence, agreed to by parties and approved by the Court, admitted to prove former inconsistent testimony; partly as an admission, partly as a judicial order; quoted supra); 1869, Adair v. Adair, 39 Ga. 75 (testimony on a former trial as agreed upon by counsel and approved by Court, admitted); 1883, Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128, 155, semble ("brief" agreed upon for a motion for new trial, admissible); 1891, Lathrop v. Atkinson, 87 Ga. 339, 343, 13 S. E. 517 ("brief" of evidence, approved by Court, admitted, though not complete); 1897, Columbus v. Ogletree, 102 Ga. 293, 29 S. E. 749 (brief of evidence, filed with a motion for new trial and approved by the judge, receivable); 1900, Owen v. Palmour, 111 Ga. 885, 36 S. E. 969 (testimony in a brief of evidence at a former trial, admitted); Illinois: 1870, Roth v. Smith, 54 Ill. 431, 433 (bill of exceptions, excluded); 1882, Stern v. People, 102 Ill. 540, 555 (same); 1898, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ashline, 171 Ill. 313, 49 N. E. 527 (same); Iowa: 1868, Boyd v. Bank, 25 Ia. 257 (excluded; quoted supra); Kentucky: 1824, Baylor v. Smithers, 1 T. B. Monr. 6 (bill of exceptions admitted to prove former inconsistent statements; quoted supra); 1873, Kean v. Com., 10 Bush 190 (witness deceased; admissible in a civil case, but not in a criminal case, because in the latter the accused has the right to cross-examine a reporting witness to the terms of the former testimony; an erroneous distinction, because the present exception to the Hearsay rule exists equally for criminal cases; ante, § 1398); 1895, Reynolds v. Powers, 96 Ky. 481, 29 S. W. 299 (former testimony provable by bill of exceptions); 1896, Louisville Water Co. v. Upton, — Ky. —, 36 S. W. 520 (same); 1897, Boner v. Com., — Ky. —, 40 S. W. 700 (same; but only for civil cases); Michigan: 1898, Breitenwischer v. Clough, 116 Mich. 340, 74 N. W. 507 (bill of exceptions excluded); Minnesota: 1911, Finnes v. Selover B. Co., 114 Minn. 339, 131 N. W. 371 (evidence preserved in a "settled case," allowed and certified as required by statute, is admissible on a later trial); 1911, Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co., 116 Minn. 256, 133 N. W. 557 (same); Missouri: 1865, Jaccard v. Anderson, 37 Mo. 91, 96 (bill of exceptions containing the substance of the witness' testimony, admitted); Rev. St. 1919, § 5401 (evidence preserved in a bill of exceptions may be used as if it had been preserved in a deposition in the cause; but the opponent may prove "any matters contradictory thereof" as though the witness were present); New York: 1806, Neilson v. Ins. Co., 1 Johns. 301 ("case made" on a former trial, corrected before the judge, not admitted to prove inconsistent statements, because "not conclusive against third persons whose veracity or credit is called in question"; a poor reason, because no claim that it is "conclusive" is involved); Ohio: Gen. C. Annot. 1921, §§ 11496, 5242*a* (bill of exceptions purporting to incorporate "all the evidence given by such party or witness," admissible); 1874, Kirk v. Mowry, 24 Oh. St. 581 (bill of exceptions, excluded); Pennsylvania: 1902, Edwards v. Gimbel, 202 Pa. 30, 51 Atl. 357 (testimony in a bill of exceptions, not admitted in impeachment on a later trial); Texas: 1891, McCamant v. Roberts, 80 Tex. 327 (a statement of facts as testified to, made up by either counsel or Court, inadmissible to contradict a witness by his former testimony); Wisconsin: 1874, Wilson v. Noonan, 35 Wis. 343 (admissible, because the bill is consented to by the parties); 1875, Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216, 229 (undecided).

In any case the bill may be availed of by witness or counsel (on the principles of §§ 737, 762, ante) as an aid to memory: 1885, Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 34 Kans. 443, 458, 8 Pac. 730.

Whether the whole of the testimony must be proved (post, §§ 2098, 2099), and whether the witness whose testimony is reported must be shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable (ante, §§ 1401–1418), involve independent rules.

expense to litigants, a trustworthy person (usually under oath of office) to record the testimony for reference during and after the trial. Does the stenographer, under the general principle (ante, § 1633), become an official authorized to report the testimony, in the sense that his report is admissible in other trials (without calling him to the stand) as a statement made under an official duty? The answer should be in the affirmative, on principle; practical convenience would of course be advantaged; while in trustworthiness such reports would greatly surpass the ordinary recollection-testimony. Nevertheless, Courts generally declined to recognize the reports of an official stenographer as admissible under the present Exception.[1] It was left for statutes, in many jurisdictions, to provide expressly for the admission of such reports.[2]

§ 1669. [1]1895, Jenkins v. State, 35 Fla. 737, 18 So. 182, semble; 1887, Hardeman v. English, 79 Ga. 387, 390, 5 S. E. 70; 1889, State v. Adams, 78 Ia. 292, 43 N. W. 194 (report of stenographer appointed by justice of peace, excluded); 1899, State v. Reinheimer, 109 Ia. 624, 80 N. W. 669 (similar); 1881, Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 4; 1880, Misner v. Darling, 44 Mich. 438, 7 N. W. 77 (Cooley, J.: "There is no law making them evidence generally nor should there be"); 1881, Edwards v. Heuer, 46 Mich. 95, 97, 8 N. W. 717 ("The Legislature, in providing for the assistance of shorthand writers, did not intend that their notes should have more force than judges' minutes," which could not be used); 1887, People v. Carr, 64 Mich. 702, 706, 31 N. W. 590 (Misner v. Darling approved); 1888, Toohey v. Plummer, 69 Mich. 345, 350, 37 N. W. 297; 1895, People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196; 1886, Lipscomb v. Lyon, 19 Nebr. 521, 27 N. W. 731, semble; 1894, Smith v. State, 42 Nebr. 356, 359, 60 N. W. 585 (official stenographer's report of proceedings at a trial, not receivable as a public document); 1888, Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 677, 8 S. E. 493; 1883, Rounds v. State, 57 Wis. 52, 14 N. W. 865, semble; 1905, Havenor v. State, 125 Wis. 444, 104 N. W. 116 (grand-jury's stenographic reports of testimony "are to be treated as memoranda to be used by these officials when they are called as witnesses").

Distinguish the question whether the official stenographic report, if admissible, is preferred to other reports of the testimony (ante, § 1330).

As to the standing of an official stenographer's notes in regard to the certifying of a bill of exceptions, distinguish a series of cases in Pennsylvania: Taylor v. Preston, 79 Pa. 436; Chase v. Vandegrift, 88 Pa. 217; Janney v. Howard, 150 Pa. 339, 24 Atl. 740; Rosenthal v. Ehrlicher, 154 Pa. 396, 26 Atl. 435; Connell v. O'Neil, 154 Pa. 582, 26 Atl. 607; Com. v. Arnold, 161 Pa. 320, 326, 29 Atl. 270; Pool v. White, 171 Pa. 500, 33 Atl. 879; Smith v. Hine, 179 Pa. 203, 36 Atl. 222; Woodward v. Heist, 180 Pa. 161, 36 Atl. 645; Harris v. Traction Co., 180 Pa. 184, 36 Atl. 727; see also Cummings v. Armstrong, 34 W. Va. 1, 11 S. E. 742.

[2] CANADA: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 26 (stenographer's notes certified pursuant to c. 119, are admissible); St. 1913, 3 Geo. V, c. 16, § 5 (official stenographer's transcript of testimony to be admissible); N. W. Terr. St. 1902, c. 5, § 2, and St. 1903, c. 8, § 1 (official shorthand reporter's report of testimony, admissible, when certified by himself or the clerk of court where filed); Ont. 1917, R. v. Baugh, 33 D. L. R. 191, Ont. (conspiracy; transcript of stenographic notes of former testimony, admitted under Can. Cr. C. § 999, though not signed by the judge till offered at the trial); P. E. I. St. 1899, c. 15, §§ 5, 8 (official stenographer's certified transcript, to be admissible); St. 1909, 9 Edw. VII, c. 3, § 15 (official stenographer's certified transcript of testimony, admissible); Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 39, § 40 (official stenographer's transcript, certified by him or by the local registrar of the court, to be admissible).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1915, Todd v. State, 13 Ala. App. 301, 69 So. 325 (St. 1909, p. 266, § 7, applied, on a charge of perjury); 1920, Vaughn v. State, 17 Ala. App. 383, 84 So. 879 (official transcript in defendant's hands, paid for by him, admitted under St. 1909, p. 263, § 7); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1679, P. C. § 1052 (official stenographer's certified report of testimony, in a criminal case, admissible); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 273 (official reporter's report of testimony, admissible); 1880, People v. Lee Fat, 54 Cal. 527, 529 (official stenographer's report, made evidence by statute, excluded, partly on the principle of Confrontation, ante, § 1398); 1899, People v. Plyler, 126 Cal. 379, 58 Pac. 904 (statute applied); 1901, Benton's Estate, 131 Cal. 472, 63 Pac. 775 (C. C. P. § 273 admits the official transcript, but only when filed); P. C. 1872, § 869 (in cases of homicide, the testimony before the committing magistrate may be proved by a transcript in longhand certified by the reporter appointed by the magistrate and filed with the county clerk); St. 1895, Mar. 26, p. 168 (Deering's P. C.

Stenographic notes, whether official or private, are not, at common law, exclusive or preferred evidence to the tenor of the testimony so reported; but statute has occasionally changed this rule (ante, § 1330).

1915, p. 765; coroner's official reporter; longhand transcript to be evidence of testimony taken); 1904, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169 (the certified transcript under P. C. § 869, supra, is in such cases the only mode of proving the testimony; but the records must affirmatively show the lack of such a proper certificate in the absence of a specific objection; prior cases cited on the interpretation of this statute); 1904, People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 Pac. 467 (preceding case approved); 1904, People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 77 Pac. 777 (similar point); Colorado: Comp. L., § 4490 (industrial commission; official stenographer's certified transcript of testimony, to be admissible "as if such stenographer were present and testified"); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5724 (exemplified transcript of testimony and proceedings by an official stenographer, to be 'prima facie' evidence); § 5723 (testimony of a witness absent, etc., is provable in civil causes by a certified copy of the court stenographer's notes, "verified by his oath"); Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2723, as amended by St. 1921, c. 8572, No. 177 (bill of exceptions preserving testimony may be used, in civil causes; if not so preserved, but preserved stenographically or reduced to writing in the presence of the Court, the report may be used if the Court is satisfied that it is correct); § 3093 (official stenographer's transcript, certified and acknowledged, to be "'prima facie' a correct statement of such testimony"); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 10052 r 2 (testimony before State public service commission, provable by official stenographer's certified transcript under oath, "as if such reporter were present"); Iowa: St. 1898, c. 9, § 1, Code Suppl. 1902, § 245 a, Comp. Code § 7391 (original or transcribed notes of testimony, "by the shorthand reporter of such court" are admissible on a retrial of the same case, "and for purposes of impeachment in any case," with the same effect as a deposition; after office ended, the reporter's transcript sworn to by him before an officer is admissible; further regulations in detail); 1898, Grieve v. R. Co., 104 Ia. 659, 74 N. W. 192 (statute applied); 1902, Walker v. Walker, 117 Ia. 609, 91 N. W. 908 (official reporter's certified transcript of testimony in another trial, not admitted except for the limited purpose of c. 9, 27th Assembly, 1898; § 3777 of the Code of 1873 being omitted from the Code of 1897); 1904, Wiltsey's Will, 122 Ia. 423, 98 N. W. 294 (Walker v. Walker, supra, followed); 1904, Lanza v. Le Grand Quarry Co., 124 Ia. 659, 100 N. W. 488 (testimony taken under the above statute is subject to the rules for depositions, ante, § 1415); 1907, Greenlee v. Mosnat, 136 Ia. 639, 111 N. W. 996 (St. 1898, c. 9, § 1, Code § 7391 supra, held not to make admissible the former testimony of a party now disqualified by the opponent's death, the testimony being otherwise inadmissible on the principle of § 1409, ante); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 3003 (the transcript of a court stenographer's notes, verified by his affidavit or certificate, of "all the evidence of any witness" at any trial, etc., may be used "under like circumstances and with like effect as the deposition of such witness"); 1909, Wilmoth v. Wheaton, 81 Kan. 29, 105 Pac. 39 (St. 1905, c. 494, p. 810, making the court-stenographer's certified transcription admissible, does not prohibit the stenographer's oral testimony from his notes without transcription); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, §§ 1019 a, 4643 (official stenographer's report of testimony, admissible); 1903, Sievers-Carson H. Co. v. Curd, — Ky. —, 71 S. W. 506 (official stenographer's transcript, admitted at a second trial, under Stats. § 4643); 1904, Beavers v. Bowen, — Ky. —, 80 S. W. 1165 (incomplete notes by stenographer, excluded; but the part of the opinion applicable to the stipulation for using the notes as if the stenographer were present is obscure and unsound); 1904, Fuqua v. Com., 118 Ky. 578, 81 S. W. 923 (former testimony of a deceased witness, admissible in a criminal trial without the defendant's consent mentioned in the above statute); 1906, Austin v. Com., 124 Ky. 55, 98 S. W. 295 (the official stenographer's bill of evidence, under Stats. 1899, § 4643, cited supra, held not to be preferred to, nor to be exclusive of, the testimony of another stenographer verifying his notes); Louisiana: 1901, State v. Banks, 106 La. 480, 31 So. 53 (Act 123, of 1898, admitting a stenographer's certified report of testimony in Orleans parish, applied); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 67, § 12 (testimony taken in courts of probate, official stenographer's certified copy of transcript admissible); c. 87, § 171 (similar, for testimony at a former trial in any court); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 80 ("transcripts from stenographic notes duly taken in the superior court under the authority of law, when verified by the certificate of the official stenographer or assistant taking them" are admissible, when the testimony itself is competent); Michigan: § 8131 (proceeding of State railroad commission, or testimony provable by official stenographer's transcript); Missouri: 1906, State v. Coleman, 199 Mo. 112, 97 S. W. 574 (former testimony here not admitted under the statute, because the witness was present in court); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 8935 (certified report of a court stenographer "is 'prima facie' a correct statement of such testimony," etc.); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 4561 (official stenographer's certified transcript of notes of testimony before State railroad commission, to be admissible "as if such reporter were present and testified"); § 4912 (official court reporter's transcript of testimony, certified by him, to be 'prima facie' evidence); § 5472 (like Utah Comp. L. 1917, § 7205); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 11 (official stenographic report of testimony of a deceased witness, admissible on a new trial); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11496 (a "competent official stenographer's" report of testimony, admissible); § 534 (State utilities commission proceedings; official stenographer's transcript of testimony, admissible "as if such reporter was present and testified"); §§ 1465-71 (same, for State liability board); § 1553 (court of common pleas; official stenographer's transcripts of testimony, to be taken as "'prima facie' evidence of their correctness"); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 3071 (official reporter's certified transcript of notes of testimony, admissible "in all cases" with like effect as testimony taken by deposition); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 932 (official reporter's certified transcript of testimony, admissible); § 5854 (State public service commission; official stenographer's certified transcript of testimony, admissible); 1911, Beard v. Royal Neighbors, 60 Or. 41, 118 Pac. 171 (applying the above statute, now § 932); Pennsylvania: St. 1887, May 23, §§ 3, 9, Dig. 1920, § 8172, Crim. Proc., Dig. § 21859, Witnesses (former testimony may be evidenced by "notes of his examination" or "properly proven notes"); St. 1907, May 1, § 5, Dig. § 20206, Stenographers (official stenographer's certified transcript of testimony, or clerk's certified copy, admissible "without the necessity of calling the stenographer"); Philippine Islands: P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1908, § 32 (criminal cases; official stenographer's certified transcript, to be 'prima facie' evidence); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 27 (stenographer's sworn transcript of shorthand deposition, admissible); c. 292, § 42 (stenographer's certificate of transcribed testimony taken "under statutory authority" and "allowed by the Court," to be admissible); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7205, 9277 (official stenographer's report, certified by him, receivable when the witness is dead, etc.); § 1879 (official stenographer's certified transcript of testimony, to be "'prima facie' a correct statement of such testimony"); §§ 8553, 8750 (official stenographer's notes at preliminary hearing before magistrate, admissible when transcribed and filed); St. 1919, Mar. 13, c. 36, amending Comp. L. § 1885 (city courts may appoint reporter, whose certified transcript may be read in evidence); 1910, State v. Vance, 38 Utah 1, 110 Pac. 434 (stenographic notes received under the foregoing statute; procedure of filing, discussed); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1628 (official stenographer's certified transcript of "evidence or proceedings," admissible); Washington: St. 1913, c. 126, p. 386, § 6 (certified transcript by official reporter, to be evidence of "testimony or other oral proceedings"); West Virginia: St. 1921, c. 98, § 3 (official reporter's transcript of testimony, when certified by him and by the judge "shall be authentic for all purposes"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 1797-13 (State railroad commission; official stenographer's certified transcript of testimony admissible "as if such reporter were present and testified") § 4141 (official stenographer's certified transcript of testimony admissible without calling him in person); 1905, Havenor v. State, 125 Wis. 444, 104 N. W. 116 (statute supra not mentioned in excluding the stenographic reports of testimony before a grand jury); 1905, Wells v. Chase, 126 Wis. 202, 105 N. W. 799 (the statute supra perversely applied; see the citation ante, § 1330); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 1170 (official stenographer's certified transcript of "facts, testimony, and proceedings," with the clerk of the court's certificate "that such person is the official reporter thereof," to be evidence).

(b) The reports of an ordinary private stenographer are of course not receivable, being merely hearsay reports by a person not produced.[3] If, however,

Whether the whole of the testimony must be proved (post, §§ 2098, 2099), and whether the witness whose testimony is reported must be shown to be deceased (ante, §§ 1401-1418), involve other principles.

Distinguish also the question whether the official stenographic report is preferred to other reports (ante, § 1330).

[3] Eng. 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 State Tr. N. S. 1 (report of trial of Feargus O'Connor, taken in shorthand and published by himself; received, at 391, but rejected at 571); Can. 1919, Menard v. King, 59 D. L. R. 144, Que. (stenographer's transcript purporting to report testimony before a royal commission); U. S. 1920, Sneierson v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 268 (notes read to the jury; exact circumstances not stated); 1907, Degg v. State, 150 Ala. 3, 43 So. 484; 1906, Williams v. Sleepy H. M. Co., 37 Colo. 62, 86 Pac. 337 (notes certified by a stenographer not called); 1871, Phares v. Barber, 61 Ill. 271, 276 (transcribed stenographic report, excluded); 1918, Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 132 Md. 113, 103 Atl. 426 (counsel not allowed to read transcript of stenographic report of former testimony without calling the stenographer); 1882, People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 58, 11 N. W. 782; 1867, Morris v. Hammerle, 40 Mo. 489, 490; 1914, State v. McPherson, 70 Or. 371, 141 Pac. 1018; 1896, Redford v. R. Co., 15 Wash. 419, 46 Pac. 650; 1888, Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 677, 8 S. E. 493.

the stenographer is accounted for as deceased or otherwise unavailable, they should be received as coming fairly within the Exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1523);[4] or (by statute in a few States) they may, when sworn to be correct, be received in affidavit form (post, § 1710), without accounting for the stenographer's absence. If the stenographer is produced, the notes may of course be used as an aid to memory,[5] under the general principles of that subject (ante, §§ 735, 758); or may be read to contradict the stenographer himself, under the rule for self-contradictions (ante, § 1259), if shown to him (when called for the opponent) and admitted by him to be genuine.[6]

(c) No member or clerk of a grand jury is authorized by his office to report testimony, and his notes are not receivable as an official statement.[7]

(d) Nor is an attorney vested by his office with such authority, so as to make his notes admissible.[8]

§ 1670. Reports and Inquisitions, in General; Inquisitions (1) of Domain; (2) of Escheat (Pedigree and Title); (3) of Title to Personalty (Sheriff); (4) of Pedigree (Heralds' Books). A report is to be distinguished from a return, as already defined (ante, § 1664), in that the latter is typically concerned with something done or observed personally by the officer, while the [4] This has been provided by statute in New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 348 (notes of former testimony, taken by a stenographer now deceased or incompetent, may be read by a competent person).

In Washington, the stenographer need not be accounted for; St. 1905, c. 26 (testimony at a prior trial, etc., "when reported by a stenographer, or reduced to writing, and certified by the trial judge," upon three days' notice to the opponent with service of copy, "may be given in evidence in the trial of any civil action, etc.").

[5] 1911, Jones v. State, 174 Ala. 85, 57 So. 36; 1893, People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 227, 32 Pac. 11; 1909, Wilmoth v. Wheaton, 81 Kan. 29, 105 Pac. 39; 1912, State v. Gentry, 86 Kan. 534, 121 Pac. 352; 1907, Lake v. Com., — Ky. —, 104 S. W. 1003 (official stenographer); 1918, People v. Fisher, 223 N. Y. 459, 119 N. E. 845 (stenographer's notes of testimony taken before a magistrate, verified by the stenographer on the stand, admitted; what was there here to waste time upon?); 1909, State v. Longstreth, 19 N. D. 268, 121 N. W. 1114 (Ellsworth, J., diss. on not easily intelligible grounds); 1898, State v. Bartmess, 33 Or. 110, 54 Pac. 167; 1910, Smith v. State, 60 Tex. Cr. 293, 131 S. W. 1081 (prior cases examined); and cases cited ante, §§ 737, 761.

[6] People v. Sligh, Kerr v. Lunsford, note 1, supra; 1906, State v. Woodard, 132 Ia. 675, 108 N. W. 753, semble (minutes of testimony before the grand jury, though not usable to impeach the witness, may be used by counsel as the basis for framing questions).

Whether the whole of the testimony must be proved (post, §§ 2098, 2099), and whether a copy, not the original, of the notes may be used (ante, § 749), are independent questions.

[7] Ia. 1865, State v. Ostrander, 18 Ia. 435, 455 ("minutes of testimony taken before the grand jury" under statute, excluded); 1873, State v. Hayden, 45 Ia. 11, 13 (cited ante, § 1667; here a statute required notes to be taken); 1898, State v. Porter, 105 Ia. 677, 75 N. W. 519 (minutes of grand jury testimony are not "independent evidence"); 1906, State v. Woodard, Ia., supra, n. 6; 1902, State v. Phillips, 118 Ia. 660, 92 N. W. 876 (under Code 1897, § 5258, providing that the grand jury's clerk shall take the testimony and that the minutes shall be read over and signed by the witness, the minutes are receivable, to impeach the witness; pointing out that State v. Hayden is no longer law for grand jury minutes); 1907, State v. Hoffman, 134 Ia. 587, 112 N. W. 103 (following State v. Phillips); Mo. 1889, State v. Thomas, 99 Mo. 235, 255, 261, 12 S. W. 643 (minutes of testimony taken by a grand juror and signed by the witness, excluded, partly because the juror could not remember the testimony, partly because the minutes were too brief; apparently erroneous); 1890, State v. Whelehon, 102 Mo. 17, 22, 14 S. W. 730 (minutes taken by a grand juror acting as clerk, according to statute, inadmissible); Wis. 1905, Havenor v. State, Wis., supra, n. 1.

[8] 1895, Jenkins v. State, 35 Fla. 737, 18 So. 182 (State's attorney); 1872, Waters v. Waters, 35 Md. 539.

For interpreters and official translations, see ante, § 811, post, § 1810.

former embodies the results of his investigation of a matter not originally occurring within his personal knowledge. The older term customarily applied to the former type of statement — "inquisition" or "inquest" — suggests more clearly its special quality, namely, that of resting upon means of information other than original personal observation.

Now an inquisition or report, if made under due authority, stands upon no less favorable a footing than other official statements. As a statement made under official authority or duty, it is admissible under the general principle (ante, §§ 1633, 1635):

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 260: "Inquisitions, which are of a public nature, and taken under competent authority, to ascertain a matter of public interest, are, upon principles already announced, admissible in evidence against all the world. . . . It is not essential to the reception of evidence of this nature that the inquiry should have been made by virtue of some judicial authority and by means of witnesses examined upon oath;[1] it is sufficient if it was made by virtue of competent authority on behalf of the public, and on a subject-matter of public interest. . . . It is, however, of the very essence of evidence of this nature that the inquiry should have been made under proper authority; in general, therefore, unless the authority be in its nature notorious, it must be proved by the production of the commission; as in the case of an inquisition 'post mortem' and such private offices."

But the fundamental doctrine of the common law seems to have been that no authority to make an inquisition will be implied merely from the general nature of the office, and that an express authority must be created for the purpose; the report or inquisition thus being sharply distinguished in principle from the return proper (ante, § 1664) and the register (ante, § 1639). The general quality of a statement made under authority (should it exist) will suffice to admit it; but the authority which can be implied from the nature of an office is (sensibly enough) an authority to record or return only those things personally done by or before the officer (ante, § 1635, par. 3). An authority to record matters out of his personal knowledge — matters to which he could ordinarily not testify even if called to the stand — must therefore properly be sought in an express command, — a command involving the special task of seeking extrinsic sources of information and thus qualifying himself for the unusual duty. The command need not be renewed for each instance; it may be a general command, or a special command; but it must be an express command. It is this principle of express authority which serves to explain the attitude of the common law toward the use of inquisitions or reports. The principle is best illustrated in the doctrines about certain older forms of inquisition, now fallen into disuse, but valuable as embodying the fixed policy of the law.

(1) Beginning with Domesday Book itself,[2] there is a lengthy and numerous series of inquisitions into the state of the regal or baronial domain, the § 1670. [1] That it is 'ex parte' is no inherent objection (ante, § 1385).

[2] 1897, Maitland, Domesday Book and Beyond.

kinds and incidents of feudal privileges, the rights of tithe and toll, and other local customary rights.[3] In the following passage, one only of the various sorts is illustrated:

1793, KENYON, L. C. J., in Beebee v. Parker, 5 T. R. 14: "Near a century and a half ago the homage (the tenants holding under the lord of the manor) being convened together 'eo nomine' as the homage (not for the purpose of extending their claims either against the lord or strangers) . . . proceeded to describe the several customs which regulated the descent of the different species of tenure within this manor. Now can it be supposed that these persons, acting under the sanction of an oath, could for no purpose whatever give a false representation of these customs? or is it not more probable that their account was the true one? Common sense and common observation would induce us to believe the latter." [4]

These proceedings all rested for their sanction on warrants ordering the inquisition or "survey," and would no doubt be admissible to-day, had they ever any bearing; although it has long been the rule, by reason of the antiquity of the proceedings, to dispense with a distinct showing of the express authority and to presume that it existed.[5]

(2) There was also, as a once common proceeding, the inquisition of escheat (usually termed "post mortem"), which, when made by express authority, was always received and highly valued:

1844, Mr. J. Hubback, Succession, 584, 589: "Upon the death of each tenant 'in capite' of the Crown, a jury was summond to inquire, first, of what lands the party died seised; secondly, by what rents or services the same were held; thirdly, who was his next heir, and of what age the said heir then was. The inquest was taken upon oath, and the verdict, under the seals of the jury, was returned to the officer by whose summons the jury was assembled. This duty appears first to have belonged to the justices in eyre, but was afterwards transferred to the escheators, officers appointed by the Crown for the purpose. . . . They were continued until the restoration of Charles II, when the practice of taking them ceased, in consequence of the abolition of military tenures. . . . A genealogical utility unequalled by any later institution has been ascribed to these proceedings by very high authority. . . . [Lord Mansfield said:] 'The proof of pedigrees has become so much more difficult since inquisitions 'post mortem' have been disused, that it is easier to establish one for five hundred years before the time of Charles II, than for one hundred years since his reign.' . . . The true ground of their admissibility is the fact that they are the results of inquiries made by virtue of competent public authority. . . . An inquisition 'post mortem' cannot be read in evidence unless it be proved that a commission was issued to warrant it."

This form of inquisition has been availed of in evidence in fairly modern times, and even in our country.[6]

[3] 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, II, 101 (referring to numerous instances, not in judicial archives).

[4] Accord: 1786, Ashhurst, J., in Goodwin v. Spray, 1 T. R. 473; 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, 743 (a "caption of seisin," made by commissioners of the Duke of Cornwall, and showing the tenants and rental of each holding, admitted).

[5] 1747, Kellington v. Trinity College, 1 Wils. 170 (ancient "survey," from the first-fruits office, of the possessions of a nunnery, admitted to show tithe customs; on objection that the authority for the survey did not appear, it was answered "that these surveys have always been allowed as proper evidence, and to be read, notwithstanding the commissions under which they were taken be lost").

Compare the cases of an official survey (ante, § 1665), in which the application of the principle is slightly different.

[6] 1709, Burridge v. Sussex, 2 Ld. Raym. 1292 (inquisition 'post mortem' of 5 Car. I;

(3) The sheriff's inquisition into the title of personalty, seized by him under a writ and claimed adversely by some third person, may originally have been receivable. But by the 1800s it began to be rejected, for the very reason that it did not fulfil the fundamental doctrine of express authority, since no writ commanded the sheriff to investigate the title; and, while it might serve as indirectly indicating the sheriff's good faith and negativing malice, it would not be received (for example) as evidence of a third person's title in support of the sheriff's allegation that his return of 'nulla bona' was true.[7]

(4) But the most informing illustration is found in the judicial treatment of the heralds' records. There were various sorts of books kept of old by the heralds, and concerned in various ways with the pedigree and privileges of peers and gentry. That one, however, which alone was allowed to be availed of in evidence, as an official statement by the heralds, was the visitation-book, or record of inquisitions of pedigree made from time to time by warrant from the chief of their order, who as head of the Court of Chivalry had jurisdiction over the privileges of honor and rank:

1844, Mr. J. Hubback, Succession, 541, 543: "These visitation-books contain the pedigrees and coats of arms of the nobility and principal gentry of England. . . . By the terms of the royal commissions the heralds were authorized to make circuits through the different counties within their respective provinces, and 'to peruse and take knowledge, survey, and view all manner of arms, cognizances, crests, and other like devices, with the notes of the descents, pedigrees, and marriages of all the nobility therein; and also to reprove, control, and make infamous, by proclamation, all such as unlawfully and without

"resolved by the whole Court, that it was good evidence, and did prove the deed and intail"); 1712, Newburgh v. Newburgh, 3 Brown P. C. 553 (inquisition 'post mortem', about 1636, excluded because no commission to warrant it was shown; but if its issuance is shown, production is not indispensable); 1720, Leighton v. Leighton, 1 Stra. 308 (inquisition 'post mortem' of 25 H. VIII, admitted to prove the deceased's seisin in fee); 1726, Anderton v. Magawley, 3 Brown P. C. 588 (like Newburgh v. Newburgh); 1757, Tooker v. Beaufort, 1 Burr. 146 (return under an inquisition under commissioners in 1591 as to the seisin of a priory; objected to because the defendant, not being a party, "could have no notice nor opportunity to defend it"; admitted, but no reasons given); 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, in App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 409, 442, 460, 476 (inquisitions of escheat on the earldom of Banbury, admitted; other instances of such inquisitions cited at p. 476); 1837, Vaux Peerage Case, 5 Cl. & F. 526, 540 (inquisition 'post mortem,' dated 18 Jac. I, reciting the marriage of the deceased's son in 2 Jac. I, admitted; inquisition in 10 Jac. I, after the coming of age of Lord Vaux, on his attainder for recusancy, reciting an indenture, admitted); 1826, Stokes v. Dawes, 4 Mas. U. S. 268 (attorney-general's inquest of office as to an escheat, admitted, though the tenant was not privy; Story, J.: "The inquest of office is undoubtedly evidence in this case of a very high nature").

[7] Eng. 1795, Latkow v. Eamer, 2 H. Bl. 437 (after serving a writ of execution, the sheriff summoned a jury to try the title to the goods; their inquisition was excluded; Buller, J.: "The inquisition is not under the king's writ, but merely a proceeding by the sheriff of his own authority"); 1814, Glossop v. Pole, 3 M. & S. 175 (levy upon debtor's goods, returning 'nulla bona'; defendant's inquisition as sheriff as to the property of the goods, not admitted, even to mitigate damages; repudiating a dictum of C. J. Eyre in Latkow v. Eamer); 1817, R. v. Bickley, 3 Price 454 (sheriff's inquisition of title to goods; the claimant held entitled to appear and cross-examine and give evidence; admissibility not referred to).

U. S. 1811, Bayley v. Bates, 8 Johns. N. Y. 185, 188 (inquisition of office, made in good faith, held a defence for the sheriff in an action for false return); 1813, Townsend v. Phillips, 10 Johns. N. Y. 98 (inquisition admissible in mitigation of damages, in an action of trespass); 1818, Van Cleef v. Fleet, 15 Johns. N. Y. 147 (action for a false return; inquisition excluded, because the actual value of the goods was alone asked).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1664.

just authority usurped or took any name or title of honor or dignity.' . . . [One of the orders for their work provides] that 'in all entries of descents in visitations, the said provincial kings of arms and their deputies shall not enter more descents or collateral branches with their hatches (unless the same be made out by deed, evidences, or other authentic proof) than that the partie appearing shall either probably affirm of his owne knowledge to be true or [shall] manifest that that he hathe received from his parents or neer relations, or which shall be attested by one or more persons of good quality of the neighborhood or some other credible testimony.' . . . It is obvious that, where the instructions contained in these commissions and orders were fully acted up to, a very copious and accurate genealogical history of the principal families of the kingdom would be compiled. . . . It has been stated that the visitation-books are of authority as evidence in the nature of official records. It does not appear that their admissibility has ever been judicially questioned."

When these books were offered in evidence, the reports of the heralds were received whenever they appeared to have been made by virtue of an express warrant or commission authorizing them to investigate a particular pedigree or group of pedigrees; and they were rejected when they appeared to have been made without such a warrant. In the following passages this distinction is clearly illustrated:

1857, Shrewsbury Peerage Case, 7 H. L. C. 1, 20; a book enrolling the pedigrees of subscribers to a building fund of the Heralds' College was offered; the book had been compiled under a royal commission authorizing the raising of the fund and the enrolment of subscribers' pedigrees. Mr. Serj. Byles, objecting: "Here there was no power to inquire officially into anything. The authority given was merely to receive money from all who were willing to subscribe it, to become 'benefactors' for the purpose of rebuilding the college; and, as an encouragement to subscribe, they were permitted to deposit their own statements of their own pedigrees in the College. The maker of this pedigree appears to have subscribed £20; his statement was therefore received; but no authority can be attached to it, for there was no authority in the Heralds' office to inquire into the truth of it, or to reject it if untrue. It cannot therefore be received as an official document." L. C. CRANWORTH, excluding it: "This pedigree certainly does not stand on the footing of a Heralds' visitation, for that is a document made upon authority and with means of investigation, and it is the right and duty of the persons who make these visitations to inquire and to report the result of their inquiries."

1880, Lord BLACKBURN, in Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 623, 644: "The visitations of heralds were proof. There the Court of Chivalry was a prescriptive court, and the object of the Court of Chivalry and the inquiry of the heralds . . . was that they should inquire into the arms and pedigrees for the very purpose of making a register of them, and for both these reasons it is clear that, when the visitation of the heralds appointed for this purpose had been made, these things could be and they always have been received in evidence."

It was upon this principle that the heralds' books were treated when offered in evidence.[8] Accordingly, when the old practice of issuing commissions of inquisition fell into disuse (probably in the 1700s), and the heralds thereafter made up their records solely by compilation from other books, or by mere enrolment, without inquiry, of such 'ex parte' statements as claimants chose to bring for the purpose, these modern heralds' books ceased to satisfy the fundamental requirement of the law, and were no longer receivable as official statements by the heralds:

[8] 1683, Thanet v. Foster, T. Jones 224 (to prove an heirship, the heralds were sworn to a pedigree-tree made from the records of the office; but the Court required production of "the books and records from which it was deduced"); 1688, Matthews v. Port, Comb. 63 (visitation-book of Worcester county admitted); 1692, Stayner v. Droitwich, 12 Mod. 86 ("Herald's books have been allowed evidence in pedigrees"); 1717, Pitton v. Walter, 1 Stra. 162 ("to prove the pedigree, the Chief Justice [Pratt] admitted a visitation in 1623,

1857, De Lisle Peerage Case, quoted in Hubback on Succession, 546: "The House made a distinction in receiving as evidence books from the Heralds' College. When those books contained the substance of the information obtained in consequence of inquiries which were made under judicial authority, when the heralds were in the habit of travelling round the country and examining the witnesses, they were held to be evidence, and had been produced in Committees of Privilege; but when that ceased, and the books were mere entries of that which the parties had chosen to have entered on those registries, without any due authority being shown for the entry, they had not been received in evidence." [9]

In this fate which overtook the heralds' books in the days of their degeneration is notably illustrated the orthodox doctrine of the common law, — a doctrine maintained with fair consistency in the present day for the very different sorts of inquisitions and reports which the novel conditions of other generations and another nationality have made familiar. The Court of Chivalry and the heralds with their inquisitions of pedigree were the prominent figures in the working out of the common-law principle; their place is now taken by the State railroad commission, with its reports of overcharges and of collisions, and the State chemist, with his analysis of food-samples. But the sagacious principle of the common law has still survived as a fair and adequate foundation for testing the propriety of modes of proof, — namely, the principle of express authority to investigate and report.

§ 1671. Same: Inquisitions (5) of Lunacy; (6) of Death (Coroner); (7) of Population (Census). (5) An inquisition of lunacy is founded on a commission authorizing expressly the investigation of the person's condition and a finding as to his lunacy:

1812, Mr. G. D. Collinson, Idiots and Lunatics, c. XII, §§ 2, 29, 31: "By the common law, the king's officers, his sheriff, coroner, and escheator, were bound 'virtute officii' to make inquiry concerning any matter which gave the King a title to the possession of

made by the heralds, entered in their books, and kept in their office, to be read in evidence"; also "the minute book of a former visitation" found in Lord Oxford's library); 1719, Anon., 12 Vin. Abr. 119, "Evidence," A, b, 39 (herald's books, not received by Fortescue, J., to prove a pedigree, "for he said it was made up by the party that signed it and returned into the office, and not the entries of any public office"); 1731, Norris v. Le Neve, 2 Barnard. 26 ("A book out of the Heralds' office was produced to prove the pedigree; . . . the Chief Justice at first doubted; but as it appeared that this pedigree was taken upon an inquest made on a visitation, he allowed it to be good evidence"); 1857, Shrewsbury Peerage Case, 7 H. L. C. 1, 25, 34 (a book from the College, not appearing to have been compiled under authority, "but probably more as a part of their pleasure than their duty," withdrawn on objection; a book of 1671, enrolling the pedigrees of benefactors who had subscribed to the rebuilding of the College, not admitted as a heralds' statement; an ordinary heralds' visitation under a commission, received; quoted supra); 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 411, 432, 436 (Brett and Cotton, LL.J., doubt as to the admission of heralds' visitation-books outside of the Committee on Privileges; yet the Committee professed to act on a general rule of law).

[9] Accord: 1844, Hubback, Succession, 551 ff. (citing other peerage cases).

lands, tenements, goods or chattels. . . . On special occasions, writs were directed to them to make the inquiry, and commissioners were sometimes appointed for the same purpose. When idiots and lunatics came within the jurisdiction of the crown, the king's title was found in like manner by these officers, assisted as in other cases by a jury of the county, whose verdict was called an inquisition, or inquest of office. . . . As the inquiry might be made either by writ or by commission, the latter being the more large and general, was universally adopted in preference to the former. . . . Commissions in the nature of the ancient writs are made by letters patent under the Great Seal, directed to five persons as commissioners, who, any three or more of them, are to inquire upon the oaths of good and lawful men of the county, as well within the liberties as without, by whom the truth of the matter may be better known, whether the party against whom the commission has issued be an idiot and without understanding from his nativity, or (according to the commission) a lunatic, or in the enjoyment of lucid intervals, so that he is not sufficient for the government of himself, his manors, messuages, lands, tenements, goods, and chattels; and if so, from what time, after what manner, and how; . . . [and whether and to whom he has alienated lands, etc., etc. The commissioners are ordered] diligently to make inquisition in the premises, and to send the same without delay [to Chancery; . . . and the sheriff is to cause to appear so many good and lawful men of his bailiwick as the commissioners shall direct,] by whom the truth of the matters in the premises may be better known and inquired into."

(a) There is not, therefore, and never has been, any doubt as to the admissibility of an inquisition of lunacy, in any litigation whatever, to prove the person's mental condition at the time. The only controversy has been whether it is conclusive, i. e. whether it is to be regarded as a judicial proceeding and a judgment 'in rem,' binding upon all persons whatsoever.[1]

§ 1671. [1] ENGLAND: 1742, Sergeson v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 412 (objection made "because it is offered as evidence to affect the right of a third person [the issue being as to the mental capacity of an ancestor at the time of a purchase] and as it likewise had a retrospect of 8 years"; Lord Hardwicke "overruled the objection, and said that inquisitions of lunacy, and likewise other inquisitions, as 'post mortem', etc., are always admitted to be read, but are not conclusive evidence"); 1804, Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. 605 (admissible against third person); 1811, Faulder v. Silk, 3 Camp. 125 (capacity of the obligor of a bond, defendant's intestate; inquisition under a commission, held admissible).

UNITED STATES: Mo. 1905, King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367 (capacity of testator; guardianship not conclusive); N. J. 1828, Den v. Clark, 5 Halst. 217 (capacity of a mortgagor; inquisition of lunacy, admitted; the only question being as to its conclusiveness); 1907, Sbarbero v. Miller, 72 N. J. Eq. 248, 65 Atl. 472 (bill of account by a lunatic's guardian; the finding of the commission of lunacy admitted); N. Y. 1831, Hart v. Deamer, 6 Wend. 497 (capacity of defendant as obligor of a bond; inquisition under a writ 'de lunatico,' held admissible); 1842, Osterhout v. Shoemaker, 3 Hill 513, 516 (Bronson, J.: "It seems to be settled that such evidence is admissible, though not conclusive"); Pa. 1847, Rogers v. Walker, 6 Pa. St. 371, 373 (admissible against third persons); 1902, Com. v. Harrold, 204 Pa. 154, 53 Atl. 760; 1903, Hottle v. Weaver, 206 Pa. 87, 55 Atl. 838; Vt. 1904, Wheelock's Will, 76 Vt. 235, 56 Atl. 1013 (raising a presumption of testamentary incapacity); Wash. 1916, Roberts v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., 93 Wash. 274, 160 Pac. 965 (personal injury resulting in insanity; record of adjudication and commitment as insane, and of discharge as cured, admitted); Wis. 1899, Small v. Champney, 102 Wis. 61, 78 N. W. 407 (admissible in an action by the lunatic's representative to set aside a transfer).

See other cases cited in Buswell, Insanity (1885), §§ 194 ff.

No distinction is made for criminal cases, the inquisition being equally admissible to prove the defendant insane: 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 885, 937 (insanity; to prove one of the defendant's relations insane, the fact that he has been confined under a commission was proved); 1812, R. v. Bowler, cited Phillipps, Evidence, II, 99 (inquisition admitted to show the accused insane); 1878, Wheeler v. State, 34 Oh. St. 394 (same); 1921, Barton v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 387, 230 S. W. 989 (whether a former committal as lunatic was conclusive, on a plea of insanity in a criminal case); 1922, Kellum v. State, —

There also arises for it the question whether the person's mental condition at the time of the inquisition is evidence of his condition at the time in issue; this is merely a question of the relevancy of the fact evidenced by the inquisition (ante, § 233) and not of the admissibility of the inquisition.[2] But this traditional proceeding upon a writ 'de lunatico inquirendo' had originally for its object (as the passage above quoted explains) the sequestration of the lunatic's property into the king's hands as guardian, and this character it has preserved in the modern equivalent proceedings for appointing a guardian and taking from the lunatic the management of his property. Its scope was thus strictly limited to the ultimate purpose of caring for his property.

(b) In the enlightenment of modern times, however, a second proceeding has grown up, having an analogous object, but capable of being independently pursued, — the proceeding to confine the lunatic in an asylum or hospital, i. e. to care for his person, not his property. Either or both may be necessary according to the particular nature of the hallucination or disease; but the insanity cannot be said to be less or greater that suffices to justify the one or the other proceeding. Nevertheless, by a few Courts the singular distinction has been made that the finding of an inquisition of the former sort is admissible in evidence, while that of the latter sort is not; this has been justified in the following passage:

1873, MORTON, J., in Leggate v. Clark, 111 Mass. 308, 310 (excluding an order of committal to an asylum): "The order of the judge of probate was in a proceeding to which the tenant [here defendant] was not a party, and as to which he had no opportunity to be heard, and was upon an issue different from the issue on trial. The demandant contends that it is analogous to an inquisition of lunacy or a decree of a judge of probate appointing a guardian of an insane person, and therefore admissible against strangers. But an inquisition of lunacy under the English system, and proceedings under our system to appoint a guardian of an insane person, are in the nature of proceedings 'in rem,' and are designed to fix the status of the person proceeded against. Under our system careful provision is made for notice to the alleged insane person, and for a full hearing, and the decree fixes the status of the ward as an insane person 'incapable of taking care of himself.' . . . The necessary effect of the decree is that the ward is in law, what the decree declares him to be, incapable of taking care of himself, as to all the world; otherwise the object of the statute would be entirely defeated. But an order under the statute of 1862, c. 223, § 3, [committing to an insane hospital,] is not of this character. . . . It affords a justification for the restraint of his person, but is not designed to fix his status."

As to this reasoning, it may be answered: (1) The authority of the inquisition is the same in both cases; no statute makes either expressly admis-

Tex. Cr. —, 238 S. W. 940 (robbery; defence, insanity; judgment of a county court negating insanity, two months earlier, held admissible; citing the above text with approval).

On direct appeal the finding may in any event be 'prima facie' valid: 1873, McGinnis v. Com., 74 Pa. 245, 247 (inquisition of habitual drunkenness).

The following ruling went on the present analogy: Hill v. Clifford, [1907] 2 Ch. 236 (dentists' partnership dissoluble in case of "professional misconduct"; order of Medical Council, having sole authority, expelling a partner for professional misconduct, admitted to prove the misconduct; one judge diss.).

[2] An inquisition may for this reason alone be excluded, just as any other mode of proof would be; e. g. 1897, Rhoades v. Fuller, 139 Mo. 179, 40 S. W. 760 (inquisition held after the time of the sale in issue, excluded).

sible; the common-law principle of an express authority to investigate suffices for both; (2) the fact that the present opponent "was not a party and had no opportunity to be heard" in the other proceeding is as good an objection to the guardianship-proceedings as to the committal-proceedings;[3] to say that the former is a "proceeding 'in rem'" is mere assertion, for the true nature of a proceeding 'in rem' implies a notice (by advertisement at least) to all the world, and if a proceeding without that feature can in despite be made a proceeding 'in rem' by calling it so, then it is quite as easy to call the committal-proceedings by the same name; (3) the one proceeding, as much and as little as the other, "fixes his status," that is, the one confines itself to his property, and the other to his liberty, — the latter right being hardly less important than the former. In short, there seems to be no real reason for enforcing a distinction, as to admissibility in evidence, between the two sorts of inquisition. But the erroneous reasoning in the passage above quoted has led a number of Courts to the contrary conclusion.[4]

[3] In most States, at least, there is no notice other than to the alleged lunatic and (perhaps) his relatives. But the objection is not valid: ante, § 1385.

[4] Excluded: Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 2603 ("the commitment of any person to said [insane] hospital shall not raise any presumption against the sanity of the person"); Indiana: 1884, Goodwin v. State, 95 Ind. 550, 557, semble (capacity of accused; judgment of insanity by a commission for confinement in asylum, held not conclusive, "even if competent evidence at all"); 1896, Naanes v. State, 143 Ind. 299, 42 N. E. 609 (examination under statute for committal of defendant, excluded); 1873, 1905, Hicks v. State, 165 Ind. 440, 75 N. E. 641 (proceedings of committal for insanity, not admitted to impeach the person as a witness); Massachusetts: Leggate v. Clark, 111 Mass. 308 (insanity of demandant's husband, as voiding a deed; order of the Probate Court committing him to the asylum, excluded, partly because the issues as to mental condition would not be the same, and partly because of the reasons stated in the quotation supra; no precedents cited on the point); Nebraska: 1893, Dewey v. Algire, 37 Nebr. 6, 9, 55 N. W. 276 (action by a guardian to set aside a conveyance; commitment proceedings not admissible to show lunacy); 1895, Pflueger v. State, 46 Nebr. 493, 64 N. W. 1094, semble (holding such an adjudication of insanity not conclusive as to an accused person, but apparently leaving open the question of its admissibility).

Admitted: Federal: 1904, Keely v. Moore, 196 U. S. 38, 25 Sup. 169 (committal to an asylum, received, and discharge therefrom, but not the certificate of the examining physicians; yet Leggate v. Clark, Mass., is approved); Arkansas: 1920, McCully v. State, 141 Ark. 450, 217 S. W. 453 (incest, plea of insanity; record of a probate court showing committal to an asylum, admitted); California: 1922, People v. Prosser, — Cal. App. —, 205 Pac. 869 (certificate of discharge from hospitals "not insane," admitted); Georgia: 1907, Slaughter v. Heath, 127 Ga. 747, 57 S. E. 69 (will; a finding on an inquisition of lunacy "is admissible, but not conclusive," whether for or against sanity); Illinois: 1915, Holliday v. Shepherd, 269 Ill. 429, 109 N. E. 976 (testamentary sanity; appointment of a conservator admitted, since it did not appear that the appointment was solely based on the party being a spendthrift or a drunkard); Indiana: 1910, Taylor v. Taylor, 174 Ind. 670, 93 N. E. 9 (adjudication of insanity appointing a conservator, held admissible, but here excluded on the principle of § 233, ante); Iowa: 1910, Van Houten's Will, 147 Ia. 725, 124 N. W. 886 (finding in a proceeding for confinement and guardianship, admissible as 'prima facie' evidence); Kansas: 1896, Rodgers v. Rodgers, 56 Kan. 483, 43 Pac. 779 (adjudication for commitment, admitted in a divorce action by a wife); Minnesota: 1913, Bullard's Estate, McAllister v. Rowland, 124 Minn. 27, 144 N. W. 412 (adjudication of guardianship for an insane person, made two months after a will made, admitted; repudiating the contrary ruling in Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 280, 6 N. W. 791, 7 id. 144); New York: 1920, Prentice's Will, Surrog., 181 N. Y. Suppl. 679 (order appointing a lunacy committee, whether after a jury hearing 'de lunatico' or after a proceeding under C. C. P. § 2323 a, is 'prima facie' though not conclusive, evidence of insanity); Ohio: 1878, Wheeler v. State, 34 Oh. St. 394 (probate judge's finding, for committal to asylum, admitted to show the accused insane, under a statute by which the

(6) Coroner's inquisitions, so far as criminal proceedings are concerned, are "in the nature of indictments";[5] and it would therefore be superfluous (rather than improper) to offer them against the accused on trial;[6] they are the foundation of the charge against him, and are a part of the formal proceedings rather than a source of evidence. If this be so, the inquisitions of the coroner would still be admissible on the part of the accused if the findings declared another person to be the wrongdoer.

But they would at any rate be admissible in civil proceedings as duly authorized official statements, and this seems once to have been the law,[7] but most Courts to-day appear disinclined to recognize them.[8] It may be finding "was in effect the same as where a guardian was appointed"; the reasoning in Leggate v. Clark disapproved); Oklahoma: 1900, Maass v. Phillips, 10 Okl. 302, 61 Pac. 1057, semble (on a motion in arrest of judgment based on the defendant's insanity, an order of confinement by the county board of insanity is not controlling upon the Court); Pennsylvania: 1921, Com. v. Loomis, 270 Pa. 254, 113 Atl. 428; Tennessee: 1914, Bond v. State, 129 Tenn. 75, 165 S. W. 229 (plea of insanity in Sept. 1913, inquisition of lunacy in Nov. 1909, and verdict of insanity at a former trial in May, 1910, admitted); Vermont: 1909, Ex parte Allen, 83 Vt. 365, 73 Atl. 1078 (physician's sworn certificate, admitted, under a statute expressly making them admissible).

So also for a certificate of discharge: Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 4590 (certificate of discharge from insane asylum, by medical superintendent or resident physician, "shall establish the presumption of legal capacity in such person from the time of such discharge").

The following statute goes upon this principle: Haw. St. 1905, No. 19, p. 22, Apr. 3, Rev. L. 1915, § 2931, St. 1915, Apr. 28, No. 192 (divorce for leprosy; that the person "has been declared according to law to be a leper" shall be 'prima facie' evidence).

[5] 1803, East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 389; compare 380 ff.; 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 416 ("An inquisition taken before the coroner 'super visum corporis' in the point of felo de se is of great authority and a sufficient record whereupon process may be made upon those that detain the goods found in the inquisition").

The early history of the coroner's functions has been fully examined by Professor Gross, in his Introduction to Select Cases from the Coroner's Rolls, 1896, Seld. Soc. Publ., vol. IX.

[6] The following rulings have been made: Eng. 1915, George J. Smith's Trial (Notable British Trials; 1922), p. 210 (wife-murder; the defendant was allowed to put in the coroner's summing-up at the inquest); U. S. Fed. 1918, U. S. v. Sonico, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 671 (man-slaughter; to show the wound to have been the cause of death, the record of the coroner's inquest was admitted); La. 1852, State v. Parker, 7 La. An. 83 (the finding admitted as to the "physical facts as to the death of the deceased," but not as to the tracing of the death to the accused); 1855, State v. Melville, 10 La. An. 456 (State v. Parker followed); 1898, State v. Tate, 50 La. An. 1183, 24 So. 592 (verdict admissible "to show the fact of a homicide having been committed," but not "the recitals of fact therein contained"; no authority cited); 1906, State v. Hopkins, 118 La. 99, 42 So. 660 (murder; coroner's certificate of death, admitted); Mass. 1806, Com. v. Selfridge, Mass., Lloyd & Caines' Rep. 22, 2 Amer. St. Tr. 544, 566 (manslaughter; inquisition offered to prove the fact of death; practice said to vary; no decision); Mo. 1905, State v. Coleman, 186 Mo. 151, 84 S. W. 978 (murder; inadmissible); Ohio: 1831, State v. Turner, Wright 20 (coroner's inquest not received against the accused); 1878, Wheeler v. State, 34 Oh. St. 394, 398 (State v. Turner approved); Tenn. 1901, Colquit v. State, 107 Tenn. 381, 64 S. W. 713 (murder; coroner's verdict as to the cause of death, held inadmissible in criminal cases); Wis. 1910, Hedger v. State, 144 Wis. 279, 128 N. W. 80 (murder; coroner's verdict excluded).

[7] 1660, Toomes v. Etherington, 1 Wms. Saund. 361 (issue as to an intestate's 'felo de se'; an inquisition 'super visum corporis,' admitted); 1718, Jones v. White, 1 Stra. 68 (issue upon a testator's capacity; a coroner's inquest, finding him lunatic, was offered; the Court were divided; but the discussion treated it from the point of view of judgments).

[8] ENGLAND: 1918, Bird v. Keep, C. A., 2 K. B. 692 (workmen's compensation; coroner's verdict held not admissible to show the cause of death; Swinfen Eady, M. R.: "It is true that at different periods of our history, other views on this subject have prevailed"); 1921, Barnett v. Cohen, 1 K. B. 461 (death by wrongful act; coroner's verdict excluded, following Bird v. Keep).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1888, Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Womack, 84 Ala. 149, 4 So. 618 (coroner's verdict, not admitted to show that the deceased was "accidentally run over," etc.); Arkansas: 1906, Grand Lodge v. Banister, 80 Ark. 190, 96 S. W. 742 noted that the lack of a special commission to investigate in each instance is here immaterial; since the coroner by his office has a general warrant to investigate the circumstances of a death.

(not decided); California: 1888, Hollister v. Cordero, 76 Cal. 649, 18 Pac. 855 (inheritance of persons murdered, and an issue of survivorship; the coroner's verdict excluded); 1901, Rowe v. Such, 134 Cal. 573, 66 Pac. 862, 67 Pac. 760 (coroner's verdict, not admitted to show the cause of death); 1906, Dolbeer's Estate, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695 (testator's capacity; coroner's verdict excluded); Colorado: 1897, Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Ross-Lewin, 24 Colo. 43, 51 Pac. 488 (coroner's verdict not admitted to show suicide); Columbia (Dist.): 1914, Levy v. Vaughan, 42 D. C. App. 146, 154 (mal-practice; coroner's certificate of cause of death, based on hearsay only, excluded); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 1369 (coroner's record of inquest, admissible "to prove the matters therein contained"); Georgia: 1878, Central Railroad v. Moore, 61 Ga. 151, 152 (death of a husband; "that there was a verdict at the inquest," excluded); Illinois: 1885, Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McGrath, 115 Ill. 172, 3 N. E. 439 (point not raised); 1887, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Kielgast, 26 Ill. App. 567, 571 ("that the record of the coroner's inquest" and the depositions "are not competent evidence in this suit would seem to be settled" by the foregoing case); 1889, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Vocke, 129 Ill. 557, 562, 567, 22 N. E. 467 (on appeal from the preceding ruling; coroner's verdict of insane suicide, admitted as an "inquisition made by a public officer, acting under the sanction of an official oath, in the discharge of a public duty enjoined upon him by law"; leading case; good opinions by Craig and Baker, JJ.); 1892, Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 46 Ill. App. 506, 509 (verdict admitted to show how the deceased came to his death, but not a finding that "the switch was negligently placed" by the defendant, this being "extraneous to the province of the inquest"); 1892, Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Staff, 46 Ill. App. 499, 501 (similar; finding as to the defendant's negligence in the rate of speed, etc., held no evidence); 1895, Pyle v. Pyle, 158 Ill. 289, 300, 41 N. E. 999 (verdict of suicide, admitted); 1897, Grand Lodge v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 48 N. E. 59 (verdict admitted); 1904, Knights Templar & M. L. I. Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066 (verdict admitted); 1910, People v. McMahon, 224 Ill. 45, 91 N. E. 104 (reading coroner's verdict and grand jury's indictment so as to show that another person was exonerated, held improper); 1913, Foster v. Shepherd, 258 Ill. 164, 101 N. E. 411 (death by wrongful act; coroner's verdict admitted); 1915, Devine v. Brunswick B. C. Co., 270 Ill. 504, 110 N. E. 780 (death by wrongful act; a coroner's verdict finding the defendant "blameless for this unfortunate occurrence," held admissible); 1916, Armour & Co. v. Industrial Board, 273 Ill. 590, 113 N. E. 138 (workmen's compensation; coroner's verdict as to cause of injury, held admissible); 1916, Novitsky v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 276 Ill. 102, 114 N. E. 545 (the plaintiff's intestate was run over and killed by the defendant's wagon; the coroner's verdict was admitted; its finding stated that N. came to his death by being run over by the defendant's wagon, and concluded by finding "that had the C. C. R. S. W. Co. not blockaded Archer Ave. with cars on both sides of street crossing this accident would not have occurred and deceased not lost his life in such a manner, and in this respect censure the above-named company"; a verdict having been rendered for the defendant, it was held that the admission of the above passage was error, since "it was not within the province of the jury to fix the civil liability of any one, etc."; this is an extraordinary ruling; the coroner's verdict said not a word about any one's civil liability; it stated that the defendant's wagon was the direct cause of death and that the R. Co. was also a cause of death; the Court's comment that the statement of the railway's blockade as a cause of death and the censure of the railway "are mere surplusage" is unfounded, and is based on a singular inattention to the idea of causation); 1917, Ohio B. S. V. Co. v. Ind. Board, 277 Ill. 96, 115 N. E. 149 (workmen's compensation; coroner's verdict as to cause of injury, held competent); 1917, Albaugh-Dover Co. v. Ind. Board, 278 Ill. 179, 119 N. E. 994 (workmen's compensation; coroner's verdict as to cause of injury, held inadmissible; foregoing cases not cited); 1918, Peoria Cordage Co. v. Ind. Board, 284 Ill. 90, 119 N. E. 996, June 20 (workmen's compensation; coroner's verdict as to cause of injury, held inadmissible on the ground that the coroner's authority is limited to a "death by violence, casualty, or any undue means"; all former cases approved, three judges diss.); 1918, Morris v. Ind. Board, 284 Ill. 67, 119 N. E. 944, June 20 (workmen's compensation; coroner's verdict as to cause of injury held admissible; former cases approved; three judges dissenting; the majority opinion was voiced by one of those dissenting in the foregoing opinion, filed on the same day); 1919, Spiegel's H. F. Co. v. Industrial Commission, 288 Ill. 422, 123 N. E. 606 (death of employee of plaintiff; Peoria Cordage Co. v. Industrial Board affirmed; all prior rulings repudiated in so far as they admitted the verdict in a civil suit to establish personal liability for a death); St. 1919, June 28,

(7) The census is an inquisition of population, manufactures, agriculture, wealth, and many other classes of sociological data, and is made under an express legislative warrant and authority; it is therefore admissible under the general principle already considered.[9] But the authority is to report

amending Rev. St. 1874, Coroners, § 18 (coroner's verdict not to be admissible to prove any fact in controversy in action for damages due to negligence resulting in death or for collection of a policy of insurance); Iowa: 1900, Metzradt v. Modern Brotherhood, 112 Ia. 522, 84 N. W. 498, semble (admissible); 1913, Tomlinson v. Sovereign Camp, 160 Ia. 472, 141 N. W. 950 (admitted; but with an insinuation that Metzradt v. Brotherhood is now doubted); Kentucky: 1904, Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Milward, 118 Ky. 716, 82 S. W. 364 (excluded; best opinion on the subject, by O'Rear, J.); Kansas: 1921, O'Brien v. New England M. L. Ins. Co., — Kan. —, 197 Pac. 1100 (death claim on insurance policy; coroner's report of suicide, held not improperly excluded on the facts); Maryland: 1880 State v. County Commissioners, 54 Md. 426 (death by wrongful act; coroner's verdict not received to show that the death was due to an unsafe crossing); 1899, Supreme Council v. Brashears, 89 Md. 624, 43 Atl. 866 (not admitted to show suicide); Massachusetts: 1914, Jewett v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 219 Mass. 528, 107 N. E. 433 (report of a medical examiner, provided for by Rev. L. c. 24, § 9, held not admissible, in an action for wrongful death, to evidence the cause of death or other matters therein stated; unsound; a surprisingly backward-looking opinion); 1917, Shamlian v. Equitable Acc. Co., 226 Mass. 67, 115 N. E. 46 (death certificate of the State medical examiner, or coroner, as to the date and cause of death, admitted under Rev. L. c. 29, § 20); Michigan: 1901, Wasey v. Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 119, 85 N. W. 459 (coroner's verdict, not admitted to prove suicide); Mississippi: 1901, Supreme Lodge v. Fletcher, 78 Miss. 377, 28 So. 872, 29 So. 523 (verdict admissible to evidence the cause of death); Missouri: 1910, Queatham v. Modern Woodmen, 148 Mo. App. 33, 127 S. W. 651 (admissible to show death, but not the cause of it); Rev. St. 1919, § 13642 (workmen's compensation; coroner's inquest over employee's death, admissible); St. 1921, Mar. 28, p. 425, § 50 (workmen's compensation claims; report of proceedings at coroner's inquest, provable by certified copy); Nebraska: 1911, Walden v. Bankers' Life Ass'n, 89 Nebr. 546, 131 N. W. 962 (coroner's verdict, excluded); North Dakota: 1905, Puls v. Grand Lodge, 13 N. D. 559, 102 N. W. 165 (not decided); 1905, Kinney v. Brotherhood, 15 N. D. 21, 106 N. W. 44 (coroner's inquest-blank, filled out, excluded, no inquest having been held; but Puls v. Grand Lodge, supra, is referred to as if it decided something on this point); Oregon: 1903, Cox v. Royal Tribe, 42 Or. 365, 71 Pac. 73 (coroner's verdict not received to show suicide); Philippine Islands: 1908, U. S. v. Lorenzana, 12 P. I. 64, 70 (homicide; certificate of autopsy on the deceased, by the provincial medical officer, held not admissible to show the cause of death, under C. C. P. § 313); South Dakota: 1904, Chambers v. Modern Woodmen, 18 S. D. 173, 99 N. W. 1107 (benefit insurance; coroner's verdict not admitted to show the cause of death); Texas: 1905, Boehme v. Sovereign Camp, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 501, 85 S. W. 444 (verdict not admitted to show suicide); Virginia: 1884, Whitehurst v. Com., 79 Va. 556, 557 (murder; coroner's verdict excluded); Wisconsin: 1904, Fey v. I. O. O. F. Ins. Soc'y, 120 Wis. 358, 98 N. W. 206 (doubted); 1913, Krogh v. Modern Woodmen, 153 Wis. 397, 141 N. W. 276 (coroner's verdict, excluded); 1921, Groeschner v. John Gund Brewing Co., 173 Wis. 366, 181 N. W. 212 (death by defendant's wagon; coroner's verdict, not admitted to negligence).

Distinguish the use of the verdict as an admission, in proofs of loss by an insured's beneficiary (ante, § 1073), and the use of testimony given at an inquest (ante, § 1374).

[9] ENGLAND: St. 1910, 10 Edw. VII & 1 Geo. V, c. 11, § 8 (Census Ireland Act; certificate from the General Register office, purporting to be signed by the Registrar-General, to be evidence of population in any county, etc.).

UNITED STATES: Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 427; State census; "the statistics as to any such enumeration" shall be "'prima facie' evidence of any such enumeration"); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 1955 (city or town official census, filed with clerk, to be "legal evidence of the number of bona fide inhabitants"); 1907, Gregory v. Woodbery, 53 Fla. 566, 43 So. 504 (population of a town; State census admitted, under the express provision of St. 1903, c. 5191, p. 134, § 3, now Rev. G. S. § 1955); Ia. St. 1904, c. 8, § 8, Comp. C. § 290 (census of Iowa to be evidence of "all matters therein contained"); St. 1911, c. 3, p. 2, Feb. 27, Comp. C. § 292 (Federal census report of Iowa population, to be evidence when published by the Secretary of State with a certificate as specified); Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8453 (Federal census reports of population of Minnesota filed with Secretary of State to be evidence of "the facts therein disclosed"); Mo. 1862, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 33 Mo. 194, 201 (printed census report of Canada, admitted); 1895, State v. Marion Co., 128 Mo. 427, 30 S. W. 103, 31 S. W. 23 (U. S. Census admitted to show the population of a county); 1902, State v. Evans, 166 Mo. 347, 66 S. W. 355 (U. S. Census); N. Y. C. P.

general classes of facts; the details as to individual persons, factories, farms, and the like, are noted only as a necessary basis for the general and anonymous summaries. Hence the census reports are not receivable to show the age of a particular person, or the product of a particular factory, or the area of a particular farm.[10] Nevertheless, if by special authority a local census — as of an Indian tribe — is taken for the express purpose of registering individuals, it would become admissible; for in such case they virtually become registers of specific individuals and fall within the principle of § 1644, ante (register of birth, marriage, and death).[11]

Distinguish the process of judicially noticing a fact, such as the population of a town; thus to dispense with all evidence (post, § 2580) is a different thing from receiving the census as evidence.

A. 1920, § 401 ("a certificate of the director or other officer in charge of the census of the United States, attested by the Secretary of the Interior, stating the population of any part of the United States, or giving the result of said census otherwise, shall be received as 'prima facie' evidence of such facts"); Vt. 1888, Fulham v. Howe, 60 Vt. 351, 357, 14 Atl. 652 (Compendium of U. S. Census, admissible to show a town's population); Wash. 1901, State v. Neal, 25 Wash. 264, 65 Pac. 188, 68 Pac. 1135 (U. S. Census).

[10] Accord: 1902, Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 755 S. W. 257 (school census not admitted to show the minority of certain individuals); 1905, Campbell v. Everhart, 139 N. C. 503, 52 S. E. 201 (census list, not admitted to show that L. W. was "not 'in esse' at the date of the deed"); 1906, Gorham v. Settegast, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 254, 98 S. W. 665 (Federal census not admitted to show the existence, etc., of particular persons).

Contra: 1896, Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217, 231 (census reports, for the age of a person, admitted); 1906, Priddy v. Boice, 201 Mo. 309, 99 S. W. 1055 (title by deeds executed by minors; a certified copy of the Federal census record of the ages of these families, covering the censuses 1830–1890, admitted to show the ages of individuals); 1914, State v. Vinn, 50 Mont. 27, 144 Pac. 773 (statutory rape; county school census, required by law to be kept, admitted to show the girl's age); 1921, Bradshaw v. State, — Okla. Cr. —, 197 Pac. 715 (rape under age; to prove the female's age, the county school district census, held admissible as a "record required by law to be kept by . . . any public officer," under Rev. L. § 5115); 1904, Murray v. Supreme Hive, 112 Tenn. 654, 80 S. W. 827 (British census report, admitted to show a person's age).

[11] Fed. U. S. St. 1906, Apr. 26, § 19 (sale of allotted land by a full-blood Indian, forbidden; "for all purposes the quantum of Indian blood possessed by any member of said tribes shall be determined by the rolls of citizens of said tribes approved by the Secretary of the Interior"); 1915, U. S. v. Stigall, 8th C. C. A., 226 Fed. 193 (under U. S. St. 1906, Apr. 26, § 19, the Dawes Commission's entry of the name of a member of the Seminole tribe by adoption, held not evidence of the race, whether white or Indian, of the adopted person); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 1010 (census record of clerk of school district, admissible to show child's age in delinquency proceeding); Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 5160 (census-roll and allotment-roll of treaty Indian tribes in Kansas, admissible to prove tribe-members, families, etc., of allottees); Miss. 1840, Newman v. Doe, 4 How. 522, 554 (official register of Choctaw heads of families, admitted); Okla. 1917, Miller v. Thompson, 63 Okl. 167, 163 Pac. 533 (U. S. Census card, admissible to show age of an Indian); 1919, Munnah v. Gates, 76 Okl. 167, 184 Pac. 127 (certified copy of Indian census card, issued under U. S. St. 1904, April 21, c. 1402, showing a name entered on the roll of the Seminoles by blood and as a member of the tribe by adoption is not evidence of the person's race; the issue being whether the plaintiff was a Creek of full blood); Tex. 1920, Langford v. Newsom, — Tex. —, 220 S. W. 544; and cases cited ante, § 1347 (conclusive evidence).

For the conclusiveness of records made under U. S. St. 1906, Apr. 26 and St. 1908, May 27, by the Commissioners to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, see ante, § 1347.

The following case is peculiar: 1894, Hegler v. Faulkner, 153 U. S. 109, 14 Sup. 779 (special Indian agent's finding, under authority of U. S. St. 1854, July 31, as to the age of an Indian allottee, held inadmissible, because age was not essential to the finding of allotment title, although age was directed by the department chief to be embodied in the agent's return; unsound; this kind of artificial pedantry over the hearsay rule removes the law of evidence a thousand leagues from practicality, disgusts the bewildered layman with methods of justice, and reflects discredit upon the mental elasticity of judges who can solemnly promulgate such formulas without any regret for the condition of the law).

§ 1672. Sundry Instances of Returns and Reports, at Common Law and by Statute. The principle illustrated in the foregoing instances — that a report or inquisition as distinguished from a return proper, must be founded on an express warrant or authority to investigate and report — has received a fairly consistent recognition in its application to the miscellaneous official documents of that sort.[1] The following illustrations, more than a century apart, are typical:

§ 1672. [1] In the following list, sundry instances both of returns proper (ante, § 1664) and reports are included, because it is sometimes difficult to draw the line; for government land-office reports, compare also §§ 1659, 1665, ante, and the cross-references there given; compare also the rulings dealing with sundry certificates and registers, post, § 1674, ante, § 1639.

ENGLAND: 1799, Wright v. Barnard, 2 Esp. 701 (report of condemnation of a ship as not worth repairing, made by certain ship-carpenters in a foreign country, excluded); 1801, Roberts v. Eddington, 4 Esp. 88 (consul's report of arrival of ships abroad, excluded); 1815, Watson v. King, 4 Camp. 272, 275 (official report to the Admiralty, at the end of a voyage, by the captain of a royal vessel, received); 1880, R. v. Labouchere, 14 Cox Cr. 419, 427, Cockburn, C. J. (report from the Prefect of Police in Paris to the head of the Criminal Investigation Department in Scotland-Yard, describing, in answer to the latter's request, the criminal record of a person whose conduct had been libelled by the defendant, excluded); 1880, Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 623 (inheritance; issue as to the birthplace of one Mangini, a Genoese diplomatic agent; the report of an official committee, appointed to investigate his application for office, reporting in his favor and stating among other things his birthplace, excluded; by L. C. Selborne, because it did not appear to be founded upon inquiry in M.'s family; by Lords Hatherley and Watson, because it did not appear to be founded on sufficient inquiry as to the fact in issue; by Lord Blackburn, because it was not a "public" document in the sense of § 1634, ante; the decision is certainly over-technical; the fear expressed by L. J. James, in the case below, 12 Ch. D. 437, that there might be "misapprehension on the part of the Italian Government" was natural, for it would certainly be difficult for one not aware of the narrow spirit dominating many of our evidential rulings to suppose that this extreme ruling represented the general practice under a rational system of proof).

CANADA: 1916, R. v. The Despatch, 28 D. L. R. 42, E. C. (Canadian naval charts, receivable).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1856, Bryan v. Forsyth, 19 How. 334, 338 (report of a land-register to the Secretary of Treasury upon titles; "the competency of these documents as evidence in the investigation of claims to land in the Courts of justice has not been controverted for twenty years, and is beyond question"); 1842, Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 25, 56 (report of commissioners under a legislative act confirming a title, admitted); 1846, Buckley v. U. S., 4 How. 251, 258 (official appraiser's appraisement of goods imported, in a return filed in the custom-house, admitted); Alabama: 1903, Culver v. Caldwell, 137 Ala. 125, 34 So. 13 (report of an examiner of public accounts upon the accounts of the department of agriculture, excluded); Columbia (Dist.): 1892, Birmingham v. Pettit, 21 D. C. 209, 213 (report of a board of boiler-inspectors, as to the cause of explosion, the statute not requiring a report, excluded); Georgia: 1900, Bridges v. State, 110 Ga. 246, 34 S. E. 1037 (embezzlement of a school fund; the findings of a board of education, inadmissible); Iowa: 1874, Gordon v. Bucknell, 38 Ia. 438 (report of a land-office register as to the ownership of land, excluded); 1876, Butler v. Ins. Co., 45 Ia. 93, 96 (return of a physician examining for committal to the State insane hospital, excluded); Kansas: 1897, State v. Krause, 58 Kan. 651, 50 Pac. 882 (action on a treasurer's bond; an official examiner's report as to the condition of the treasury, excluded); Massachusetts: 1893, Wellington v. R. Co., 158 Mass. 185, 187, 33 N. E. 393 (award of land-damage commissioners, to show value, excluded); Michigan: 1868, Woods v. Monroe, 17 Mich. 238, 242 (administrator's report of sale, used to prove publication of notice); 1906, People v. Michigan C. R. Co., 145 Mich. 140, 108 N. W. 772 (taxation; certain official acts and reports, noticed and taken as evidence); Missouri: 1852, Childress v. Cutter, 16 Mo. 24, 31, 45 (official Spanish inventory of deceased's property admitted as evidence of survival of two minor children); Nebraska: 1902, Sovereign Camp v. Grandon, 64 Nebr. 39, 89 N. W. 448 (physician's death-certificate, required by ordinance before burial, excluded); New Hampshire: 1821, Davis v. Clements, 2 N. H. 391 (a surveyor was bound to pay over balances, but not to make on his warrant the return offered in evidence, excluded); Ohio: 1842, State v. Wells, 11 Oh. 261 (auditor's account current, not admitted to prove a treasurer's default); 1846, Lyon v. McCadden, 15 Oh. 551 (to show

1784, Com. v. Fairfield, Mass., Dane's Abr. c. 84, art. 2, § 3: "Indictment for passing a forged government security; the Legislature prescribed the forms of said securities and directed the treasurer to publish a list of those notes, made out in the newspapers; this he did. This list was produced to show the note in question was not in it; objected, it was no part of the treasurer's official duty to publish such list, and there was no oath it was a true one, but he ought to be in court to swear it is a true one; and the Court allowed the objection."

1894, LUMPKIN, J., in Jones v. Guano Co., 94 Ga. 14, 20 S. E. 265, rejecting an analysis of a fertilizer made by the State chemist: "[In the official analysis], samples are taken by the inspectors and submitted for analysis to the State chemist, who makes reports to the commissioner of agriculture. . . . [But] we know of no law making official an analysis by the State chemist at the instance or request of a purchaser of fertilizers. Indeed, as we understand it, the State chemist is under no obligation to make an analysis for any private person at all. If he does so, it is simply a matter of courtesy; and although he may report an analysis thus made to the department of agriculture and it may be entered upon the records of that department, this will not give to that analysis an official character by virtue of which a copy of it will be rendered admissible as evidence in the courts."

The tendency of the Courts is to disapprove rather than to favor the admission of such reports or inquisitions, and to require a clear showing of an express authority to investigate and report. This attitude of the Courts has been, on the whole, far too strict (as noted ante, § 1636). There has thus arisen increasingly a need for the more liberal recognition of an authority such as would make admissible various sorts of reports dealing with matters seldom disputable and only provable otherwise at disproportionate inconvenience and cost. Accordingly, statutes in many jurisdictions have, for various officials, not merely granted special authority to report, but expressly declared these reports admissible. This policy, when judiciously employed, greatly facilitates the production of evidence without introducing loose methods.[2] the amount of work done under a public contract, the official engineer's estimates were received); Pennsylvania: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64 (official list of original-purchasers of land from William Penn received); 1774, Hurst v. Dippo, 1 Dall. 20, semble (same); 1823, Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. 383, 387 (same); Philippine Islands: 1909, Gonzaley v. Palenca Tan-Quinlay, 12 P. I. 617 (balance of accounts due; reports of experts appointed in a criminal action against some of the parties, not admitted); Tennessee: 1900, State v. Missio, 105 Tenn. 218, 58 S. W. 216 (Secretary of State's annual official list of corporations, not admissible to prove the existence of a foreign corporation filing a charter); Texas: 1860, Allbright v. Governor, 25 Tex. 687, 694 (comptroller's unauthorized book-account, excluded); 1860, Highsmith v. State, 25 (Suppl.) Tex. 137, 139 (assessor's unauthorized accounting, excluded); Washington: 1898, Bardsley v. Sternberg, 18 Wash. 612, 52 Pac. 251 (payment of city warrants; to show that funds were in treasurer's hands, the council finance-committee's report of their examination of the treasurer's books was received).

Distinguish the use of a report (for example, of a municipal council) as an admission, e. g. 1850, Collins v. Dorchester, 6 Cush. Mass. 369.

[2] In the following list are collected sundry instances both of returns proper (ante, § 1664) and of reports, because the distinction is sometimes difficult to draw; statutes dealing with magistrates' returns upon a deposition, are not included, because they deal rather with a matter of procedure and also because their multiplicity of details forbids the surrender of so much space; instances of registers and certificates (so-called, but sometimes difficult to distinguish from reports) are placed ante, § 1639, and post, § 1674.

ENGLAND: 1893, St. 56 & 57 Vict. c. 23, § 3 (a written statement, made by an officer having power to stop a ship engaged in the seal fishery, of the circumstances of the stopping, etc., to be admitted).

CANADA: 1894, Ship Minnie v. R., 23 Can. Sup. 478 (official statement of captain of war ship on duty at the seal fisheries, received under St. 56 & 57 Vict. c. 23 § 3); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 39 § 10 (injuries to submarine telegraph cables; certain reports by ship-captains and others, made admissible to prove the facts stated, and without proof of signature).

Distinguish certain classes of statutory reports, sometimes thus provided for, which are not properly to be regarded as coming within the present principle:

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1906, June 29, § 15, c. 3592, St. L. vol. 34, p. 601, Code § 3695 (for cancelling a certificate of citizenship of a naturalized alien returning to his original country, the "statements duly certified" of U. S. diplomatic and consular officers as to the residence of such persons abroad are admissible); Code § 8133 (report of investigation into ship's provisions, made by U. S. naval officers, consul, etc., and forwarded, to U. S. district court, to be "received in evidence"); Alabama: Code 1907, § 549 (examiner of public accounts; his report to be a "public record"); § 3990 (Secretary of State's schedule, printed in pamphlet Acts, of the "rate of interest of each State and Territory," receivable); 1886, Camp v. Randle, 81 Ala. 240, 2 So. 287 (Code § 3990 applied); 1899, Holley v. Coffee, 123 Ala. 406, 26 So. 238 (same); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 6991 (county timber inspector's certified bill of log scalement, to be presumptive evidence); § 7014 (State secretary's certificate of public ownership of land, admissible in proceedings for trespass); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 2891 (report of appraisers as to the amount of damage by fire set by a railroad, to be evidence of the amount); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 2352 (returned notice by a factory inspector, to be evidence of notice given); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 2346 (State lumber inspector's certified bill of logs scaled or measured to be evidence "of the facts therein contained and of the correctness of such scalement or measurement, in all courts, except in favor of the inspector who made the same"); § 2465 (State public utilities commission's report of accident not to be admitted as evidence in action for "loss of life or injury to person or property"); § 4979 (State insurance examiner's report on oath, to be evidence in any proceeding in the name of the people against the insurer); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 9467 (blue-sky law; State bank commissioner's report to be 'prima facie' evidence); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 165*a*, par. 11 ("every official report made by the commissioner" of banking, "and every report duly verified of an examination made," shall be 'prima facie' evidence, where the bank is a party); Gen. St. 1899, c. 81, § 17, Stats. 1915, § 3760 (official returns in general; quoted ante, § 1352, n. 11); Stats. 1915, § 2725 (report of the State inspector of mines; a certified copy "shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the truth of the recitals therein contained"); 1905, Andricus' Adm'r v. Pineville Coal Co., 121 Ky. 724, 90 S. W. 233 (inspector's report admitted, under the foregoing statute, to show defective ventilation of a mine); Louisiana: Ann. Rev. St. § 1439 ('proces verbal' by the recorder of New Orleans or a justice of the peace, as to a fire, admissible); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 152, § 9 (industrial accidents; "the report of the physician shall be admissible in evidence," provided copies have been seasonably furnished to employer and insurer); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, §§ 5457, 5761 (surveyor-general's scale-bill of logs, timber, or lumber surveyed, admissible); 1885, Clark v. Lumber Co., 34 Minn. 289, 25 N. W. 628 (scale-bills of surveyor-general, admitted under statute); 1888, Pratt v. Ducey, 38 Minn. 517, 38 N. W. 611 (scale-bill partly rejected on the facts); 1893, Douglas v. Leighton, 53 Minn. 176, 54 N. W. 1053 (similar); 1899, Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen, 176 U. S. 126, 20 Sup. 325 (Minnesota surveyor-general's certified scale-bills, admitted); Mississippi: Code 1906, § 4869, Hem. § 7654 (railroad commission's finding as to the unsafe condition of a bridge, roadbed, etc., to be 'prima facie' evidence of negligence); Code § 2909, Hem. § 5244 (land-commissioner's finding as to a claim to public lands, to be 'prima facie' correct); Code § 4451, Hem. § 7131 (board of supervisor's valuation of timber taken for a road to be 'prima facie' evidence); New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 104, § 9 (militia clerk's certificate of an offence making liable to a fine, admissible); New York: Cons. L. 1909, Insurance § 39 (insurance superintendent's report of the condition of an insurance corporation, admissible in a State proceeding against the corporation or officers); Banking § 26 (State bank superintendent; "every official report" and "every report duly verified of any examination made," is admissible); St. 1913, c. 559, p. 1515, § 11 (amending Consol. L. 1909, Public Health, by inserting § 21 b; written reports of public health officers and their representatives "on questions of fact" under the health laws, to be admissible); 1921, Broeniman Co. v. Liberty E. & I. Co., Sup. App. T., 191 N. Y. Suppl. 429 (breach of warranty in sale of condensed milk for export; a survey-report made by an expert in Brussels, filed with the clerk of court of Commerce there, and certified by the American Consul there, excluded; the ruling exemplifies the blind bigoted technicalism that still dominates our courts in matters of proof; a trial was ordered on this ground alone, and thus the Fetish of Formalism was duly appeased by the benighted judges); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2718 ("Any map or publication printed by order of either branch" of the Legislature or of Congress is a "public document," and is admissible); § 10324

(1) The findings of an auditor, in the judicial system of New England and elsewhere,[3] are in effect equivalent to the report of a master in chancery; he is a part of the Court, not an extraneous officer, and his report is a preliminary finding of the Court;

(2) The report of an appraiser, appointed to value a decedent's estate, is admissible at common law in the same proceedings, and the statutes appear not to do more than declare this;[4] whether the order of the Court would suffice as an express warrant to make the report admissible in other litigation may be doubted;

(3) The findings of a jury of fence-viewers,[5] or such other body as concerns itself with highway repairs and the like, are in fact the verdict of a special tribunal, whose judgment is enforceable in its own right; the principles of judgments, not of evidence, are involved;

(4) The findings of a State industrial accident or public utilities commission are in effect often the judgment of an administrative body on a litigated issue, and the judicial hearing is virtually an appeal; thus by statute it has been made admissible at the trial. But the 'ex officio' inquiry of such a commission, and its report thereon, belongs rather under the present principle.[6] Here, however, a public policy, applying to reports upon injuries done, seeks to induce the railroad or industrial agents to make full and prompt returns to the State official, by pledging the non-disclosure of official reports based on such information; thus a privilege applies, and the statutes in this respect are further examined post, § 2377;

(illegal sale of liquor; quoted post, § 1680); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 2033 (Secretary of State's published list of corporations, admissible to prove the corporation's existence); § 1589 (report of appraisers of value of stock killed or crippled, to be 'prima facie' evidence).

[3] Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 669; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 88; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 221, § 57; N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 227, § 8; Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 2045 ("When judgment is rendered otherwise than on the verdict of a jury, the judges of the court may, by themselves, by the jury in court, by the report of the clerk, or by the report on oath of a person appointed by the court, ascertain the sum due").

[4] Colo. 1906, Austin v. Terry, 38 Colo. 407, 88 Pac. 189 (inventory admitted to show property to be "parcel of the estate"); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3730 (inventories and appraisements of decedents' estates, admissible in actions by and against executors or administrators); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 3, § 56 (inventories and bills of appraisement of decedent's estate may be given in evidence "in any suit by or against the executor or administrator"); 1908, Bailey v. Robinson, 233 Ill. 614, 84 N. E. 660 (statute applied); Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 93, § 159; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 73 (inventories and appraisements of deceased's estate, admissible); W. Va. Code 1914, c. 85, § 12 (personalty of decedent's estate).

[5] N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, County § 119 (fence-viewers' certificate of damage to sheep, admissible).

[6] The following are merely a few of such statutes; their bearing is procedural rather than evidential: Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 2514 (State public utilities commission's findings in valuation proceedings, certified under commission seal, to be admissible); Louisiana: St. 1915, No. 11, § 17 (trusts and monopolies; "any report by a legislative committee" of this State or the U. S., or of "any bureau or department or of any commission" of either, is admissible); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 499-17, 580 (State utilities commission's findings, certified under commission's seal, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 4741 (findings of a railroad commission on investigation of a complaint against a common carrier, admissible); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 9519 (findings of State railroad commissioners on a complaint against a common carrier "shall thereafter in all judicial proceedings be deemed and taken as 'prima facie' evidence as to each and every fact found").

(5) The findings of a commission to enroll Indian tribes, for the purpose of land-allotment, have sometimes by Federal statute been made, not merely admissible, but conclusive; in that aspect they are noted ante § 1347; in the former aspect, ante § 1671 (census);

(6) The statutory prohibition, occasionally found, of the use of the report of a fire marshal, bank-examiner, commission of public utilities or industrial accidents, and the like, is in essence the establishment of a privilege for the persons revealing their information to the official; these statutes are noted post, § 2377.

3. CERTIFICATES (including CERTIFIED COPIES)

§ 1674. Certificates in General; Sundry Instances at Common Law and by Statute; Certificates by Private Persons. A certificate, as already defined (ante, § 1637), differs from a return in that it is not preserved by the officer, but is given out by him to the applicant and is kept by the latter.

This distinction is not always observed in common usage, for the term "certificate" is often applied to what is properly a return. But the distinction is a plain one; it is based on real difference of policy, and is attended with an important legal and practical result. The policy applicable to the conditions of the two is different, because the certificate, by remaining in the custody of the applicant, is not only more liable to injury or fraudulent alteration than if it had remained in official custody, but is also more open to initial forgery and more difficult to authenticate.

(1) The legal consequence of the distinction (a consequence based probably on some notion of this difference of trustworthiness) is that at common law (with two exceptions) no authority to give certificates was implied from the office alone. An authority to keep a register (ante, § 1639) or to make a return (ante, § 1664) might be implied from the nature of the office; but the marked tendency of the Courts was to require an express authority to make a certificate, before it could be received to prove the facts certified. The earliest definite utterance upon this subject, often quoted in later times, is broad enough in its terms:

> 1744, WILLES, L. C. J., in Omichund v. Barker, Willes 538, 549 (disapproving the latter part of the ruling in Alsop v. Bowtrell,[1] where a foreign clergyman's certificate was admitted to show not only his performance of the marriage ceremony, but also the parties' subsequent cohabitation): "For our law never allows a certificate of a mere matter of fact, not coupled with any matter of law,[2] to be admitted as evidence. Even the certificate of the King under his sign manual of a matter of fact (except in one old case in Chancery) has been always refused. . . . Besides, it is not the best evidence that the nature of the thing will admit; but the proper and usual evidence of a fact arising beyond sea is an affidavit or deposition taken before a public notary and certified to be so under the seal of the place or the principal officer of the place; which had been admitted as evidence in some cases, where it would be too expensive, considering the nature of the cause, to take out a special commission [for a deposition]."

§ 1674. [1] Cited ante, § 1645.

[2] This phrase "matter of law" apparently refers to the bishops' certificates of marriages, considered in a prior part of the same opinion; these could be used in some cases as conclusive proof of marriage; they were a mode of trial, and the bishop's certificate was in reality the adjudication of another tribunal, as already noticed (ante, §§ 1347, 1645). The language of L. C. J. Willes seems to signify that a certificate not amounting to a lawful adjudication by a competent tribunal ("not coupled with any matter of law," he says), i. e. in effect every certificate, in the sense now employed, was inadmissible.

It is apparent, however, that Chief Justice Willes, in his unqualified statements about certificates, had in mind those certificates only which were made without specific order and under an authority implied from the general nature of the office. He clearly did not mean to disown certificates made by specific and express authority; for in the same case of Omichund v. Barker, where Chancery commission had been sent to Calcutta to take the testimony of Hindus and had received instructions to alter the form of the oath and to "certify in what manner the oath was administered to the witnesses and what religion they were of," the Chief Justice refers repeatedly to this return or certificate as proving the facts necessary to justify the oath and the witnesses' capacity.[3] It is evident, then, that the passage above quoted from his opinion is to be understood of those certificates only which are given under a supposed duty implied by the nature of the office. In effect, he denies that there can be any such implied duties. No one, probably, has ever supposed that a duty or authority expressly given by judicial order was insufficient to admit a certificate thus authorized. Indeed, it is precisely this distinction upon which turns the orthodox common-law rule for the admission of certified copies of judicial records (post, § 1677). But his words serve to show, at any rate, what is undoubted in the law, — the traditional inclination of the Courts to reject certificates, and the necessity at common law of showing an express authority, judicial or statutory, for the making of the certificate.

(2) It follows, then, on the general principle (ante, § 1633), that the certificate is admissible only for those facts covered by the terms of the authority,[4] and, conversely, that it is admissible to prove all the facts thus included:

1840, SHARKEY, C. J., in Newman v. Doe, 4 How. Miss. 555: "Certificates and other documents made by persons entrusted with authority for the purpose are evidence of the facts which they are required to certify to, to the extent of their authority."

1886, DEVENS, J., in Com. v. Richardson, 142 Mass. 74, 7 N. E. 26: "As to matters which the officer is not authorized by law to attest, his certificate is extra-official, can have no higher weight than that of a private citizen, and is therefore inadequate to make the proof required."

In the application of this principle, only a few classes of cases call for special consideration:

(a) The admission of the King's certificate (it may have been given in the form of a return) was perhaps an exception based on necessity, for he was

[3] E. g. "This certificate, I think, fully answers the objection that it does not appear that the witnesses believe in a God."

[4] 1789, Johnson v. Hocker, 1 Dall. 407 (a certificate of more than is authorized is admissible; the surplusage being rejected).

privileged from summons into court (post, § 2369), perhaps even from testifying at all (post, § 2370), and the taking of his deposition would not (in former times) have been consistent with his dignity. Yet it is possible to say that this instance is no exception, and that the King, as the source of authority, could, with the same stroke of the pen that wrote the certificate, give himself the authority to make it.[5]

(b) The case of the notary's protest was the single well-settled exception at common law (post, § 1676).

(c) The use of certified copies by the official custodian of the original (post, §§ 1678–1683) was not recognized in the English common law, apart from an express authority to make a copy, and therefore was no exception to the rule. But in the United States many Courts did recognize an exception in this respect, and implied an authority from the nature of the office.

(d) The case of an official printer's copy (post, § 1684) was not an exception, for there was here an express though general authority.

(e) The proof of a deed's execution by a notary's or registrar's certificate (post, § 1677) was not allowed at common law; and the modern practice rests on express statutory authority.

The various judicial rulings[6] dealing with the use of certificates show a [5] Historically, to be sure, the rule probably went back to the early doctrine that the King's word was indisputable and that his seal imported absolute verity: 1224, Bracton's Note-Book, II, No. 239 ("Testificacio domini Regis per cartam vel viva voce omnem aliam probationem excedit"); and the citations post, § 2426. The rule is later mentioned in the following places: 1532, Perkin's Profitable Book, 142 ("in time of war" divers things shall be "tried by the certificate of the king's marshal"; but this was really a case of separate jurisdiction, like the bishop's, supra); 1613, Lea's Case, Godb. 198 (that A had promised the King according to a certain tenor, was proved in the Court of Requests by "a certificate made by the King's majestie that he made such a promise to him"); ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, part III, § 21, in Hargr. Collect. Jurid. 206 ("The king may yield a testimony in any cause, for so did King James . . . in chancery by his letters under his signet in the lord Auberville's cause. The great judges of the realm may yield testimony; but that they do by certificate under their hands, if not by oath; but upon their bare certificate many men have been sentenced; . . . but that was only where they were authorized under the broad seal to take their verdict, for otherwise I conceive not any man should be punished under a certificate without oath"); 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, II, 282 (after declaring the King disqualified by interest on a charge of treason, he names other cases, not open to that objection, in which "the King's testimony under his great seal is allowable"); 1669, Litcot v. Blackwell, 2 Keb. 349 (trover; one Tytus, "sent by the King to this purpose," was excluded, "this being a difference between party and party; but were the matter only concerning the King, his testimony were good, as a letter, in Sir Gerrard Fleetwood's case"); 1694 (?), Abigny v. Clifton, Vin. Abr. Evidence, R, b, 1, pl. 6, vol. XII, 190 ("the King under his sign manual certified to the Lord Chancellor a promise made to him in behalf of another, and this certificate was allowed good evidence").

For Executive proclamations, see ante, § 1662.

[6] Compare with the following list the other instances cited under registers (ante, § 1639), returns and reports (ante, § 1664), surveyors (ante, § 1665), certificates of administrators' appointments (ante, § 1238), post-marks (post, § 2152), land-office records (ante § 1659), and certified copies (post, § 1681), the varying nomenclature making it difficult to classify the documents accurately; compare also the rules for admissions (ante, § 1048), and for hearsay statements against interest (ante, § 1455), under which some of the following documents may sometimes become admissible.

ENGLAND: 1796, R. v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 619, 630, 635 (indictment for presenting a false certificate of justices that a road was in repair; the certificate, apparently in effect a judgment, and so treated in counsel's argument, was held to be a legal instrument of evidence; their admission was justified as "now become too inveterate to be overturned"); 1799, Moises v. Thornton, 8 T. R. 303 (treating a diploma of fairly consistent application of the general principle already noticed, with the marked tendency to exclude them in the absence of a clear showing of authority.

medicine as a certificate of an act of the corporation conferring the degree; it must appear that "the persons whose names were subscribed had authority to grant the same"; per Kenyon, L. C. J.); 1806, Johnson v. Ward, 6 Esp. 48 (to prove goods to have been on board a ship, the official certificate based on a report by the customs-searcher was admitted as "a paper made by authority of an act of Parliament by an officer of the customs appointed for the purpose"); 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, 743 (document made by the Duke of Cornwall, admitted as a public document because of the Crown's interest in his lands); 1847, R. v. Bourdon, 2 Cox Cr. 169 (excluding the clerk of assize's list of prisoners sent to the jail in specifying the term, etc.); 1837, Vaux Peerage, 5 Cl. & F. 526, 541 (funeral certificate, made by the heralds, on the faith of the signatures of the executors and mourners, but required by special order of the Earl Marshal of England, admitted "as an official document taken by persons whose duty it was to make it up"); 1844, Hubback, Succession, 554 (other instances cited from records of peerage cases); 1880, Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 623, 633 (L. C. Selborne: "[The funeral certificates entered in the heralds' books] stand upon this ground; it was the official duty of the heralds to receive such certificates from persons who were by law competent witnesses, and to record the statements of those persons in their books").

CANADA: 1898, Quintal v. Chalmers, 12 Man. 231, 235 (grain inspector's certificates, excluded).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1804, Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cr. 187, 239 (translation certified by a consul, excluded); 1811, U. S. v. Mitchell, 2 Wash. C. C. 418 (U. S. consul's certificate to deposit of a ship's register, admitted); 1811, U. S. v. Mitchell, 2 Wash. C. C. 95 (certificate of governor of St. Thomas that permission had been refused by him to take away ship's cargo, admitted); 1836, Levy v. Burley, 2 Sumn. 357 (consul's certificate of non-deposit of a ship's register, excluded); 1887, Coan v. Flagg, 123 U. S. 117, 130, 8 Sup. 47 (letters by the land office commissioner as to the time of filing a survey, admitted); 1898, Rollins v. Board, 33 C. C. A. 181, 90 Fed. 575 (semi-annual statement of indebtedness by the clerk of a county board, not admitted on the facts); 1902, U. S. v. Lew Poy Dew, 119 Fed. 786 ("the certificate of an officer is worthless as evidence unless the making of it was an official duty, and even then it is not evidence except so far as made such by some statute"; excluding a U. S. commissioner's certificate of the adjudicated status of a Chinese immigrant); 1908, Lederer v. Saake, C. C. E. D. Pa., 166 Fed. 810 (certificate by the Librarian of Congress that book-copies were duly on deposit with him for copyright, admitted); 1919, Lo Hop v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 489 (certificate of Chinese Viceroy at Canton, vised by U. S. Consul-General at Hong Kong, as to facts of mercantile status of an intending emigrant; effect of this certificate under U. S. St. 1904, April 27, c. 1630, 33 Stats. at L. 428, considered); California: 1853, Powell v. Hendrick, 3 Cal. 427, 430 (tax collector's certificate of payment, excluded); 1870, Hastings v. Devlin, 40 Cal. 358, 364 (certificate of the U. S. land register, as to a survey, etc., held not an official statement within any statute); Connecticut: 1876, Wilson v. School District, 44 Conn. 157, 160 (clerk's unauthorized certificate, excluded); Georgia: 1903, Trentham v. Waldrop, 119 Ga. 152, 45 S. E. 988 (county clerk's certificate of physician's licensing, admissible); Illinois: 1871, Harbers v. Tribby, 62 Ill. 56 (certificate of enlistment, not admitted); 1899, Consolidated Coal Co. v. Seniger, 179 Ill. 370, 53 N. E. 733 (State mine examiner's certificate of an engineer's competency, admitted); 1899, Chicago v. English, 180 Ill. 476, 54 N. E. 609 (comptroller's certificate of the amount of a city debt, excluded); Indiana: 1866, Fry v. State, 27 Ind. 348, 350 (State auditor's unauthorized certificate of account, excluded); Iowa: 1898, Lacy v. Kossuth Co., 106 Ia. 16, 75 N. W. 689 (board of health's certificate of services performed by a physician, admitted); 1902, Wilbur v. R. Co., 116 Ia. 65, 89 N. W. 101 (letter from the general land-office commissioner to a land-office register, excluded); Louisiana: 1836, Stein v. Stein, 9 La. 277, 280 (consular certificate of a foreign official's signature, excluded); Maine: 1841, Morton v. Barrett, 19 Me. 109 (consul's certificate of the death of an American seaman excluded); Massachusetts: 1874, Hanson v. South Scituate, 115 Mass. 340 (certificate of discharge from the army, admitted); Michigan: 1877, Smith v. Rich, 37 Mich. 549, 553 (county surveyor's certificates, not made according to statute, excluded); Minnesota: 1896, Ripon College v. Brown, 66 Minn. 179, 68 N. W. 840 (tax receipts by a county treasurer, admitted); Missouri: 1868, Williams v. Carpenter, 42 Mo. 327, 345 (land-office certificate of "confirmation of title" and "Hunt's minutes" receivable; but questions of substantive and statutory law are involved; compare the cross-references in § 1659, ante, for other Missouri authorities on related points); 1887, State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 310, 4 S. W. 931, note 4 (certificate of superintendent, of poorhouse, excluded); 1892,

(3) This tendency, while sufficiently proper as a judicial policy, has, however, left the process of proof often encumbered by disproportionate inconvenience and cost, in summoning witnesses to prove official acts not fairly disputable by the opponent. A need certainly exists (ante, § 1636) for the liberal grant to certain classes of officials of express statutory authority to give certificates. Accordingly, in most jurisdictions statutes have not merely granted express authority to certify specified classes of facts, but have declared such certificates admissible in evidence.[7] These statutes are, however, cum-

State v. Austin, 113 Mo. 538, 544, 21 S. W. 31 (prison warden's certificate of discharge, admitted, the warden being required to record discharges); Nevada: 1869, Western Union T. Co. v. Atl. & Pac. S. T. Co., 5 Nev. 102, 110 (postmaster-general's letter stating a party's acceptance of a privilege, probably sufficient); New Hampshire: 1833, Dunlap v. Waldo, 6 N. H. 450 (county clerk's certificate of appointment of a justice of the peace in New York, admissible under the law of that State); New Jersey: 1871, Hawthorne v. Hoboken, 35 N. J. L. 247, 252 (provost-marshal's certificate of enlistment, admitted); New York: 1815, Jackson v. Belknap, 12 Johns. 96 (surveyor-general's statutory certificate that certain lands had been forfeited by attainder, etc., received); 1830, Jackson v. Cole, 4 Cow. 587, 596 (similar certificate, by commissioners of forfeiture, of the location and appraisal of lands, received); North Carolina: 1820, Governor v. Jeffreys, 1 Hawks 208 (adjutant-general's certificate of delinquency, excluded on the facts; cited ante, § 1635); Ohio: 1842, State v. Wells, 11 Oh. 261 (county auditor's certificate of payment of land fees, excluded); Pennsylvania: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 65 (certificate of a former surveyor-general that a survey had been made, received); 1789, Johnson v. Hocker, 1 Dall. 406 (State treasurer's certificate, admitted to show the receipt of money from H., but not to show a tender elsewhere made by H. to J.); 1792, Jones v. Ross, 2 Dall. 143 (certificate of a list of prisoners in Hamburg, by the "late directors" of the prison, excluded as not official); 1793, Todd v. Ockerman, 1 Yeates 295, 299 (similar to Morris v. Vanderen; received as an official certificate of a sworn officer); 1895, Sewell v. Moore, 166 Pa. 570, 31 Atl. 370 (certificate of a fire-escape inspector, rejected because made at a time not sanctioned by the statute); Tennessee: 1845, Foster v. Montgomery, 6 Humph. 231 (clerk's certificate of the making of a lost affidavit preliminary to a deposition-order, received); Vermont: 1832, Seymour v. Beach, 4 Vt. 493, 497 (the register's certificate of administration is evidence of an administrator's appointment); Virginia: 1836, Wilkinson v. Jett, 7 Leigh 115 (certificate of a postmaster-general as to irregularities in mail-carrying, excluded); 1858, Ushers v. Pride, 15 Gratt. 190, 195 (auditor's certificate of delinquent tax-land, admitted); Washington: 1909, Dunkin v. Hoquiam, 56 Wash. 47, 105 Pac. 149 (army medical examiner's certificate of disability entitling to pension, not receivable in an action for personal injury); Wisconsin: 1919, Vogel v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co., 168 Wis. 567, 171 N. W. 198 (proof of value of goods consigned from abroad; consular certificate of invoice values, by the U. S. consul-general at Frankfort, admitted under U. S. Rev. St. §§ 2855, 2862, Wis. Stats. §§ 4148, 4164).

[7] Compare the cross-references at the beginning of the preceding note; compare also, as to certificates of forgery of official signatures on bills, and of analysis by chemists, § 1707, post, for such certificates are sometimes admitted only as affidavits; compare also § 1678, post (certificate of contents).

ENGLAND: St. 1905, 5 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 51 (trade-marks; the registrar's certificate to be evidence of matters certified); St. 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 29, § 78, Patents and Designs Act (comptroller's certificate of any matter or entry authorized, admissible); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, § 88 (reform school certificate of reception of juvenile offender, or of sum due, etc., to be evidence); St. 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 58, Criminal Justice Administration, § 38 (in summary courts, a certificate of non-payment, by a person to whom a sum of money has been ordered to be paid, is admissible, unless the Court orders the person to be called as a witness).

CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1906, c. 133, § 17 (official analyst's certificate of adulteration of a sample, admissible, subject to the defendant's "right to require the attendance of the analyst for the purpose of cross-examination"); c. 48, § 262 (official customs certificates, admissible); c. 75, § 32 (animal contagious diseases; an order of the Governor, or the minister, or a certified copy of the inspector's declaration, etc., is 'prima facie' evidence of the existence of infection, etc., in a place, vehicle, etc.); ib. § 34 (officer's certificate is 'prima facie' evidence of an animal's infection, etc.); St. 1914, c. 12, § 8 (white phosphorus matches; certificate of an inspector as to their use, etc., to be evidence "of the matter certified"); British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 142, § 9 (report of inspector of liquor licenses on a matter within his duty, to be admissible); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1914, c. 126, § 58 (purporting certificate of a council registrar of a medical man's registration is admissible); c. 153, § 23 (similar for pharmacists); c. 202, § 26 (similar for veterinarians); c. 41, § 5 (registrar's certificate of incorporation of coöperative associations, admissible); c. 59, § 322 (election returning officer's certificate, admissible); c. 30, § 18 (inspector's certificate of immigrant child's age, to be conclusive); c. 82, § 24 (half-breed land titles; certain officers' certificates of birth, parentage, or death of any half-breed or descendant, or an allotment list or notice, admissible); c. 8, § 57 (official veterinarian's certificate of animal's disease, admissible); New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 74 (secretary-treasurer's certificate of appointment of any parish or county officer, under the municipal seal, admissible without proof of seal, signature, or official character); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 22, § 170 (customs certificates; cited more fully post, § 1680); Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 12 (certain certificates under the Canadian Banking Act, admissible on proof of the signature); St. 1918, c. 8, Temperance Act, § 44 (analyst's certificate of liquor analyzed; cited ante, § 1352); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 215, § 106 (in prosecutions for liquor offences, the certificate of the government analyst as to "the analysis of any liquor" is conclusive); 1916, R. v. Hurley, 31 D. L. R. 18, Ont. (illegal sale of liquor; Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 215, § 106, interpreted); Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, §§ 13–16 (certain certificates of inspection, etc., issued under the Canada Grain Act, to be evidence); c. 194, § 87 (liquor offences; in prosecutions the provincial analyst's certificate of analysis of liquor, to be admissible); c. 44, § 21, par. 2 (land-title registrar's certified abstract to be 'prima facie' proof of "the state of the title"); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 12 (Treasury board's certificate under Dom. St. 1890, c. 31, § 14, admissible, on proof of signature).

bersome in their number and variety, and could easily be simplified under some such general form as that sanctioned in New York or Florida, or under the broad rule already proposed (ante, § 1636).

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 884, Code § 1387 ("every certificate" executed by the comptroller of currency "in pursuance of law, and sealed with his seal of office," admissible); § 890, Code § 1392 (in suits for balances due from postmasters, a certificate of demand by the proper officer, stating certain details, admissible); 1892, U. S. v. Dumas, 149 U. S. 278, 285, 13 Sup. 874 (statement of a postmaster's account under statute, admitted); St. 1909, Mar. 4, c. 320, No. 349, Code § 6261 (35 Stat. L. p. 1075), § 55 (register of copyright's certificate under seal, to be evidence of "the facts stated therein" as to copyright); Code § 8071 (U. S. shipping commissioner's official act under seal, admissible as presumptive evidence "of the truth of the facts therein set forth");

Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 43–48 (on a trial involving "the merits of such fertilizer or chemical," an official analysis of it by the department of agriculture, proved by copy under seal, admissible); § 1575 (State chemist's certificate of test of illuminating oil, by copy under seal of the board of trustees of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, to be "evidence of the facts therein stated," etc.); § 1615 (support of indigent relatives; certificate of a county probate judge, that the person maintained by the county was a pauper and was so maintained, admissible); § 224 (same for dental examiners); § 984 (militia commander's certificate of membership, admissible to prove exemption from poll-tax and jury-duty); § 3924 (treasurer's certificate, admissible to prove judge of probate's failure to pay over escheat-money); § 5933 (Supreme Court clerk's certificate of the neglect of a circuit court clerk to send a transcript in an appealed criminal case, admissible); § 5916 (Supreme Court clerk's certificate of the sending of an execution to a sheriff, or its receipt by him, admissible); § 5987 (his certificate of a rehearing, etc., admissible); § 5810 (road-overseer's sworn certificate of defaulters in road-duty, admissible); St. 1911, No. 119, p. 104, Mar. 9, § 9 (certificate of official analyst of commercial feeding stuffs, under oath, to be evidence in prosecutions under the act);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 3800 (inspector's sworn certificate of violation of infected sheep law, to be evidence); § 4063 (State mine inspector's notice of dangerous condition of mine, to be evidence of party's negligence); § 4442 (State laboratory; director's certificate of analysis of food, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); 1898, U. S. v. Marks, 15 Ariz. 404, 52 Pac. 773 (to show money illegally retained by a postmaster, the departmental statement of his accounts and an order of the postmaster-general reciting his false returns, received);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4123 (certified copy of balance due, by a public officer whose duty it is to audit and keep account, admissible to prove a balance of debt due to the State); § 4736 ("official analyses" of fertilizer etc. samples shall be admissible on any issue as to "the merits of such fertilizer"); St. 1919, Mar. 28, No. 493 (death claims against insurance companies for persons in military service; U. S. Adjutant-General's certificate of death of insured, to be 'prima facie' evidence);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1379 (certificate of a foreign officer to take acknowledgment and oaths, receivable to prove the identity of a claimant for administration, conditionally); § 1798 (non-resident guardian's claim to appointment, provable by a certificate that by the law of his residence-country he is entitled to the estate's custody without judicial appointment; the certificate to be under seal of clerk of the court having jurisdiction, or of the highest court, attested by a minister, consul, or vice-consul of the United States resident there); Civ. C. 1872, § 2059 (certificate from ship's master or chief surviving officer "that a seaman exerted himself to the utmost to save the ship, cargo, and stores" is evidence in action for wages); St. 1885, 43, Mar. 9 (State analyst's certificate of analysis of food, drug, liquid, etc., duly submitted to him, to be 'prima facie' "evidence of the properties of the articles analyzed by him"); St. 1903, c. 225, § 11 (the certificate of the State University director of the agricultural experiment station, under University seal, of his analysis of a sample of commercial fertilizer, shall be 'prima facie' evidence, etc.); St. 1907, p. 230, Mar. 11, § 13 (State laboratory director's certificate of analysis of drug, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); St. 1911, p. 1248, May 1, § 5 (insecticide, etc.; like St. 1903, c. 225, § 11); St. 1921, June 3, c. 719, p. 1235 (fruit and vegetable standardization; certificate of quality and condition of fruit, etc., by agent of State agriculture department to be evidence of "the truth of the statement therein contained");

(4) From the use of certificates under these statutes, distinguish certain other things superficially related. (a) An officer authorized to certify a copy cannot at common law certify merely the effect of the record; but sometimes

Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 2891 (report of appraisers as to the amount of damage by fire set by a railroad, to be evidence of the amount); § 5052 (certificate of sale by a trustee under a trust-deed of land, admissible); § 1014 (State chemist's "certificate of analysis of foods, drugs, or water, duly signed," to be presumptive evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 3038 (State dairy commissioner's reports of analysis and tests shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the "properties, constituents, or condition of the articles analyzed"); St. 1921, c. 173 (marketing; State director's certificate of "the grade or other classification of any farm product," to be 'prima facie' evidence);

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 2435 (certificate of a director of the agricultural experiment station, or of department of health laboratory admissible to show a defect in milk); § 2826 (State chemist's certificate of analysis of liquor presented to him officially, admissible to show the facts stated);

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3528 (State chemist's sworn certificate of analysis of a sample of imitation butter, admissible in a prosecution under this act); § 703 (State chemist's sworn certificate of analysis of fertilizer sample, admissible); § 3525 (similar for meat sample);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2725 ("The certificate of any State officer under his seal of office as to any official fact occurring in the course of the official business of the office in which he presides shall be 'prima facie' evidence of that fact"); § 2724 (commissioner of agriculture's certificate, under official seal, as to ownership of land by the State or by a school, seminary, or internal improvement fund, admissible); § 2737 (U. S. land-office receiver's receipt, to be evidence of title in the payee named); § 2043 (State chemist or assistant's certificate of analysis of sample of food or drug, verified by his affidavit, to be evidence); § 2062 (similar, for commercial feeding stuffs); § 2405 (similar, for fertilizer); § 2727 (official certificate of sanitary condition of premises, duly posted by owner, etc., admissible in defence in action for injuries); § 4108 (State secretary's certificate of foreign corporation's compliances with law, admissible); § 4448 (similar for State treasurer's certificate of authority of fraternal benefit society); § 5470 (liquor offences; certificate of State chemist or assistant, duly made under oath, admissible to prove analysis of sample); 1914, Collins v. Plant, 68 Fla. 337, 67 So. 80 (like the next case); 1919, Adams v. American Agricultural C. Co., 78 Fla. 362, 82 So. 850 (State chemist's certificate of fertilizer analysis, admitted under Gen. St. 1906, § 1271); 1921, Fleischer v. Virginia-Carolina C. Co., 82 Fla. 50, 89 So. 401 (similar; statutory requirements for procedure in making the analysis, considered); 1895, Yellow River R. Co. v. Harris, 35 Fla. 385, 17 So. 568 (certificates of the land-office receiver, admissible as evidence of title under certain conditions);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 1773, 1783 (State agricultural commissioner's "official analysis of any fertilizer or chemical," admissible, by certified copy under department seal); § 1829 (State oil inspector's analysis, "sworn to by any witness competent to make such analysis," or State chemist's certificate of analysis, admissible); 1913, Arlington Oil & G. Co. v. Swann, 13 Ga. App. 562, 79 S. E. 476 (State chemist's certificate of analysis of fertilizer, deposited under Civ. Code, § 1773, admissible; analysis of the specific lot sold to the party is not necessary);

Idaho: § 1681 (State chemist's sworn certificate of analysis of food, drink, oil, etc., to be evidence "of the facts therein certified");

Illinois: St. 1909, p. 145, June 4, § 2 (validation of deeds executed outside of the State without a seal; certificate of Secretary of State or court of record or judge thereof, under seal, of by statute he is authorized to do so; these statutes, which are sometimes impossible to be discriminated from those of the above class, are later dealt with (post, § 1678). (b) When a certificate is authorized, the question may the "country or other place," where executed, as to local law or usage dispensing with seal, admissible);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 477 (State secretary's certificate under State seal as to time of deposit of act of the General Assembly, admissible); § 6993 (commissioners' certificate of a recount of ballots, admissible to prove the facts recited); § 9211 (Secretary of State's certificate of the date of receipt of laws in counties, admissible); § 4545 (county recorder's certificate of the filing of a road-corporation's articles, admissible in an action for or against the latter); § 4629 (Secretary of State's certificate of an increase of an insurance-company's capital stock, admissible);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 4099 (animal feedstuffs; State director of experiment's "certified statement of the results of the analysis," admissible); ib. § 4854 (similar for fertilizers); § 9921 (State experiment station chemist's certificate of analysis, under oath, of dairy product, admissible in prosecutions);
Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1631 (auditor's certificate of returns of delinquent taxes, sale, etc., admissible); Gen. Stats. 1899, c. 81, § 17, Stats. 1903, § 3760 (official certificates in general; quoted ante, § 1352, n. 11);
Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 6 (publication of a law, provable by the Secretary of State's certificate under official seal, "delivered from" his register);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 2, § 51 (clerk of court's attested list or certificate, under court seal, shall be "legal but not conclusive evidence of the appointment and qualification" of justice of the peace, trial justice, and notary public); c. 30, § 43 (municipal officer's certificate of inspection, when posted, to be evidence of compliance with fire precautions); c. 36, § 20 (certificate of analysis of fertilizer, food, drug, etc., by director of the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated");
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 19, § 22 (comptroller's certificate of account of an officer collecting State moneys, admissible in an action against officer); Art. 32, § 7 (registration book of State board of dental examiners, provable by transcript of custodian under board seal);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 138, §§ 54, 56 (department of health's certificate of analysis of liquor seized, admissible); c. 112, § 45 (board of dentistry-registration's certificate, to be evidence of the right to practise dentistry);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 11776 (certificate of appointment of an executor, etc., admissible); § 62 (dates of a legislative session, provable by certificate of the Secretary of State printed with the session-laws); § 100 (amount of an extradition fee, provable by certificate of the proper officer in the other State); § 2629 (publication of a village ordinance, provable by the clerk's certificate); § 3003 (same for a city ordinance); §§ 3160, 3391 (municipal or county treasurer's certificate of the amount of compensation in the treasury for land or improvement condemnation, admissible); § 3467 (municipal clerk's certificate of a fireman's service, admissible); § 3597 (notice of register of electors, provable by certified copy by the county clerk); § 4044 (collector's certificate of tax, valuation, etc., admissible); § 4098 (all tax records, certificates, etc., to be 'prima facie' evidence of facts stated); § 4264 (auditor general's certificate of tax due from a corporation, etc., admissible); § 4362 (court's certificate of proceedings to lay out county road, admissible);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 5470 (surveyor-general's certificate of a recorded log-mark, to be evidence of ownership); § 3838 (certificate of a licensed physician as to violation of duty to furnish seats to female employees, admissible); § 3710 (commercial food stuff; sworn certificate of analysis of official chemist of State dairy and food department, to be 'prima facie' evidence); § 3742 (similar, for food, etc., in misbranding offences); § 3767 (seeds; certificate of analysis by State agricultural experiment station, to be presumptive evidence);
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1965, Hem. § 1625 (certificate by the clerk of a county board of supervisors of the default of any clerk or district attorney in transmitting a list of executions or statement of sheriff's returns, admissible); Code §§ 4423, 4429, Hem. §§ 7103, 7104 (certain official certificates to be evidence of delinquencies in road-labor); St. 1912, c. 139, p. 140, Mar. 16, § 9 (in prosecutions for offences concerning commercial feeds, the State chemist's certificate of analysis to be evidence of "the facts therein certified"); St. 1912, c. 138, p. 133, Mar. 16, § 16 (on trial of "any issue involving the merits of any fertilizer, cottonseed meal, or fertilizing material," the State chemist's "official analysis" of samples, under seal, to be evidence "in any reports [sic? Courts] of this State"); St. 1910, c. 132, § 8 (similar, for foods and drugs; here, a sworn certificate); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, §§ 7797, 7855, 8139, 8148, 8301, 8305, 8323, 8333, 8369, 8483, 8501, 8507, 8705, 8708, 8758, 8761 (certain tax-bills made evidence of the amounts due, etc.); § 8734 (State secretary's certificate of organization of corporation, admissible); § 10146 (same for manufacturing and business arise how far the detailed steps of official action need to be set out in it, or can be supplied by implication without other evidence, — for example, whether with a tax-collector's certificate of sale it is necessary also to evidence the corporations); § 11867 (State bank commissioner's certificate of organization of savings bank, etc., admissible); § 11993 (dairy product; sworn certificate of analysis by chemist of State food and drug department, admissible);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 2595 (State agricultural college chemist's report, to be evidence of impurity of drug or food);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 2816 (Secretary of State's certificate, under State seal, of the failure of local officials to make due return of election, admissible); § 4163 (State comptroller's account, admissible in an action to recover a debt due to the State);
New Hampshire: Pub. St. c. 164, § 3 (Secretary of State's certificate of bank's failure to make returns, admissible);
New Jersey: St. 1911, c. 201, p. 414, § 33 (department of weights and measures; State, county, or municipal superintendent's certificate of correctness of weight or measure, admissible);
New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 367 (official certificate or affidavit, required to be made and filed, admissible to prove facts therein alleged); C. P. A. § 356 (official sealer's certificate of correctness of a surveyor's measure, admissible); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 514 a (certificate under seal of a prison warden, etc., admissible on a trial for a subsequent offence, to prove the imprisonment and discharge); Cons. L. 1909, Gen. Bus. § 273 (transportation superintendent's certificate of appointment of a milk-can agent, admissible); Executive § 102 (county clerk's certificate under seal of a notary's appointment and the genuineness of his certificate, admissible); Prison § 244 (prison official's certificate of sentence-commutation, admissible in a prosecution for a subsequent felony); Legislative § 41 (Governor's or Secretary of State's certificate, admissible to prove the time of a bill's becoming law); Town § 94 (town-meeting clerk's certificate of election of a justice of peace, admissible); Tax § 128 (State treasurer's and comptroller's certificate as to tax-redemptions, admissible); Drainage § 40 (drainage-commissioner's certificate of an assessment-sale, admissible); Railroad Title § 16 (railroad corporation's certificate of abandonment of a right of way, admissible); Insurance § 4 (State insurance commissioner's certificate lawfully issued, to be admissible);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 964 (State secretary's certificate of appointment or removal of commissioner of deeds, admissible); § 2286 (appointment of guardian for lunatic, etc.; certificate of superintendent of any government hospital that the party there confined is insane, sworn to and certified, admissible); § 4696 (analysis of the unlawful ingredients of a fertilizer, published in the Bulletin of the department, to be evidence in an action to recover the price); § 4697 (State chemist's certificate of analysis of fertilizer, under seal of department of agriculture, admissible); § 4741 (official analyst's sworn certificate of analysis of feeding stuff, admissible); § 4748 (similar, for stock and poultry tonics); § 4756 (similar, for foods and drugs); § 4788 (similar, for classification of farm products); § 4827 (similar, for seeds; but on accused's motion, analyst may be called for cross-examination); 1880, Palmer v. Love, 82 N. C. 478 (legislative scale of Confederate money-values; St. 1865–66, c. 39, § 1, applied); 1921, American Fertilizing Co. v. Thomas, 181 N. C. 274, 106 S. E. 835 (St. 1917, c. 143, cited);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 513 (certificate of the secretary of the State board of dental examiners under the board seal, that a person is or is not a registered dentist, admissible); Comp. L. 1913, § 2895 (State chemist's certificate of analysis of a commercial fertilizer, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); § 2906 (State botanist's certificate of analysis of seed sample, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); § 2930 (State chemist's certificate of analysis of formaldehyde, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); § 2936 (similar for Paris green); § 2950 (similar for "any drug, drug products, or medicine"); § 7430 (service of process by mail, "the return registry receipt of the post office department shall be 'prima facie' proof of its mailing and of its receipt by the defendant to whom it was mailed"); § 10201 (illegal use of imitation butter; sworn certificate of the State chemist of analysis of sample, admissible);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921 (certificate under seal of the insurance superintendent, made in pursuance of law, admissible); § 677-6 (certificate etc. by State inspector of building and loan associations, under seal of office, or copies authenticated under seal of office, admissible); § 4231 (city clerk's certificate of publication of ordinance, admissible);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 7407 (fish warden's certificate of issuance or non-issuance of a license, admissible); § 8670 (certificate of analysis of "any food product," by State dairy and food commissioner or his deputy, admissible); 1919, Kuntz v. Emerson Hardwood Co., 93 Or. 565, 184 Pac. 253 (labor commissioner's certificate of existence of reasonable safeguards in factories, admissible under Lord's Or. Laws § 5046, and St. 1907, p. 302; Harris, J., diss. in part); Pennsylvania: St. 1837, Mar. 31, Dig. 1920, § 10352, Evidence (certified translation by advertisement of notice; this involves usually either the presumption of regularity of official doings (post, § 2534) or the rule of completeness (post, § 2108).

(c) Courts are bound, in recognizing the existence of foreign States or

U. S. consul of an extract of certain foreign burial registers, receivable); St. 1869, Feb. 18, Dig. § 12502, Interpreters (certified translations, by an official interpreter in Philadelphia, of any paper in a foreign language, attached to the original, receivable); St. 1911, June 1, § 4, Dig. § 21604, Weights (official weigh-master's certificate of coal measurement, to be evidence of the facts certified);

South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, § 3553 (commercial fertilizers; sworn certificate of the chemist of the Clemson Agricultural College of South Carolina of analysis of the various brands, to be evidence of "the value and consistency shown by the said analysis"); Crim. L. 1922, § 315 (food offences; "the sworn certificate or a certified official report" of the chemist of the Department of Agriculture, etc., analyzing a suspected sample, to be admissible); § 857 (foodstuff offences; certificate of "the analyst or other officer, making the analysis or examination," admissible when sworn to);

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 10391 (city public weigher and measurer's certificate of weight, to be 'prima facie' evidence);

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 1045 (comptroller's "statement" of the amount due from a delinquent tax-collector, admissible); § 325 a 73 (State agricultural director's certificate of analysis of commercial fertilizer, etc., under commissioner's seal, admissible);

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3708 (comptroller's certificate, from the rolls in his office, of assessment or payment of taxes, admissible); St. 1911, p. 218, § 5 (State chemist's certificate under seal of analysis of commercial fertilizer, admissible "as if it were his deposition");

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 5719 (State auditor's due account, to be evidence of default of money to the State); § 1960 (food adulteration; State chemist's certificate of "any analysis or examination of any article" mentioned, to be evidence of the "facts set forth in such certificate");

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 790 (certificate by assessor's clerk as to publication of assessment list in newspapers, admissible); § 5909 (test of milk by the agricultural experiment station, admissible); § 6290 (foods and drugs; certificate of analysis by chemist of State board of health, admissible);

Virginia: Code 1919, §§ 6197-8 (certificate of the auditor of public accounts as to tax-sales, etc., and of the auditor of West Virginia on similar matters, receivable, conditionally in certain cases of 20 or 40 days' notice to the opponent); § 3580 (county-clerk's certificate of a recorded log-brand or mark, to be evidence of it); § 1119 (State chemist's analysis of fertilizer sample, admissible on trial of "anything involving the merits" of the fertilizer); § 1136 (same, for analysis of agricultural lime); § 1150 (seed; department of agriculture's sworn chemical analysis, admissible; but on motion the analyst may be called for cross-examination); § 1178 (food; State analyst's sworn certificate, to be admissible); § 4621 (illegal transactions in ardent spirits; like ib. § 1150); St. 1918, Mar. 19, c. 388, § 30½ (certificate of analysis of intoxicating liquor, by chemist employed by State agriculture commissioner, admissible, but on motion the chemist may be called to the stand); 1916, Bracey v. Com., 119 Va. 867, 89 S. E. 144 (St. 1908, p. 286, § 24, making admissible the State chemist's certificate of analysis of a beverage, applied);

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 5947 (certificate of the superintendent of a State insane-hospital, to be evidence of employment therein as exempting from jury-duty, etc.); § 6027 (hop inspector's certificate of the grade or quality of hops, admissible); 1896, National Bank v. Galland, 14 Wash. 502, 45 Pac. 35 (certificate of the comptroller of the currency, admitted to show the organization of a national bank);

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 5 (auditor's certificate of a return or sale of delinquent land, or of payment or not of taxes thereon, or of non-entry for taxes, admissible if filed before-hand and 20 days' notice given before the first day of the term); § 5 a (same for a county court clerk's certificate of the last two matters, and of the amount of taxes due); § 7 (same for a Virginia auditor's certificate, with 40 days' notice);

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4152 (lists of land certified by a U. S. officer as conveyed to the State, admissible); § 4164 (substantially like N. Y. C. P. A. § 367); § 4766 (justice's certificate of conviction, admissible); § 2276 a (county judge's certificate of heirs, etc., of a person deceased, when recorded with the register of deeds, admissible); § 959 (38) (city clerk's certificate, under city seal, of a special assessment lien, admissible); § 2070 a (county judge's certificate of death of a life tenant, etc., admissible in certain cases); § 1735 (State lumber inspector's certified scale bill to be "presumptive evidence of . . . the correctness of such scalement," except in favor of the inspector); § 4152 a (trespass on public lands; State secretary; certificate of State's interest in specified tract, admissible); § 14.37 (certificate of an account by State boards, etc., to be evidence of its correctness);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 3765 (State chemist's certificate of analysis of commercial feeding stuffs, admissible in prosecutions); § 3833 (similar, for official analyst's certificate of analysis of seed).

sovereigns, by the action of the Executive (post, § 2574); recognition by the Executive is sometimes to be ascertained by a "certificate" furnished by the Executive; but this is not an evidential use of the certificate, for the act of furnishing it is itself an act of recognition.[8] So, too, the use of a certificate of foreign law[9] seems to be an instance of the judge's informing himself, under the doctrine of judicial notice (post, § 2569), rather than of the present principle.

(d) Sometimes the statute makes the certificate conclusive; this involves another principle (post, §§ 1347, 1352).

(5) There may also be noted here a restricted class of quasi-official certificates by private persons. Where a statute creates a duty or an authority for a private person to give a certificate, it may be argued that this authority is in its nature official, at least for the purpose of making such a certificate admissible. The principle has already been examined (ante, § 1633*a*); and one instance of its application — certificates of marriage by ministers — has been considered (ante, § 1645). At common law such an authority has occasionally been deemed sufficient;[10] and by several statutes, based on convenience in proving certain formal and not disputable matters, such certificates by private persons have been expressly declared admissible.[11]

[8] 1830, U. S. v. Benner, 1 Baldw. 234, 237 (certificate of a Secretary of State that a person is a foreign minister or a member of the diplomatic staff "is ' per se' an authorization and reception of him").

[9] 1806, Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 561 (certificate of the Chief Justice of Trinidad as to the law there prevailing, offered and apparently received); 1832, Dormoy's Goods, 3 Hagg. 767 (probate law of St. Martin's French Island; the ambassador's certificate, or semble the consul-general's, sufficient); 1862, Klingemann's Goods, 3 Sw. & Tr. 18 (certificate of the minister of the King of Hanover, to probate law, admitted); 1884, Prince Oldenburg's Goods, L. R. 9 P. D. 234 (Russian ambassador's certificate, admitted, to show the probate law of Russia for the royal family); 1859, St. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63 (provisions for obtaining from a Court in some other part of the British Dominions, having a different law, a judicial certificate of the law there obtaining); 1861, St. 24 Vict. c. 11 (similar, for the law of foreign countries with whom a convention may have been made); the latter statute has remained futile, because no such convention has yet been made: 1902, Phipson, Evidence, 3d ed., 342.

[10] 1827, Dole v. Allen, 4 Greenl. Me. 527 (certificate of membership in the Quaker sect, authorized by statute, admitted, as showing membership to procure immunity from militia service).

The following case seems to belong here: 1859, Stearns v. Doe, 12 Gray Mass. 482, 486 (residence-port of owner of a vessel; a Federal statute requires it painted on the vessel's stern; this painted name of a port held admissible, as made presumably in compliance with the law).

[11] With the following compare the citations post, § 1683 (certified copies by bank-officers, etc.), § 1710 (affidavits), §§ 1698, 1702 (scientific and commercial reports), and § 2484 (experts summoned by the judge).

CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, R. 534 (like Ont. Rule 268); Br. C. Rules of Court 1912, R. 781 (judge in chambers; like Ont. R. 268); Man. Rules of Court 1912, R. 165 (like Ont. Rule 268); N. Br. Rules of Court, 1919, Ord. 55, R. 19 (like Ont. Rule 268); R. 165 (in equity, like Ont. Rule 268); Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 50, R. 29 (judge in chambers; like Newf. Ont. Rule 268); N. Sc. Rules of Court 1919, Ord. 55, Rule 12 (like Ont. Rule 268); Rev. St. 1900, c. 44, § 10 (medical practitioner's certificate of insanity for admission of patient to Government hospital is receivable); N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, § 490 (like Ont. Rules 268); Ont. Rules of Court 1913, No. 268 ("The Court may obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, or scientific persons in such way as it thinks fit, the better to enable it to determine any matter in evidence in any cause or proceeding, and may act on the certificate of such persons"); 1892, Wright v. Collier, 19 Ont. App. 298 (Court Rules, § 94, held not to justify the implicit acceptance of a certain marine expert's opinion as the basis of decision); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 515 (similar to Ont. Rule 268).

UNITED STATES: Cal. Civ. C. 1872, § 2059

§ 1675. Notary's Certificate of Protest. A notary is a public officer, who takes an oath of office and (usually) is required to give an official bond. It follows that his statement made under some specific official duty is admissible in evidence without calling him; and his is the sole instance, universally accepted at common law, in which a duty to furnish a certificate is regarded as sufficiently implied from the nature of his office without the aid of an express warrant: [1]

1843, ABINGER, L. C. B., in Brain v. Preece, 11 M. & W. 773, 775: "A notary is a public officer, and is sworn to do his duty as a notary. . . . [It is not necessary to call him, for] it is like any other case of a public officer who does anything in the course of business."

1861, DIXON, C. J., in Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 413: "The notary's official oath is substituted for the ordinary judicial oath taken in the presence of the Court and jury."

And yet the limitations applied in practice were plainly inconsistent with this theory. At common law it was generally agreed that the notary's protest was admissible to evidence only the dishonor (i. e. presentment, demand, and refusal to accept or to pay) of a foreign bill of exchange; it was therefore not receivable for an inland bill,[2] nor for any note,[3] nor for the fact of notice [4] or any other facts except the dishonor. The last two limitations could be explained by declaring that such facts were not within the scope of his duty (although this was a forced distinction); but the first was clearly inconsistent with the theory of official duty, for a domestic notary was equally an officer with the foreign notary, and any recognition of the office would naturally discriminate, if at all, against the latter.[5] Accordingly, it was attempted by some (certificate of the master or chief surviving officer of a wrecked ship that a seaman claiming wages exerted himself to the utmost to save the ship, etc., admissible); Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 5730 (certificate filed with State secretary by any corporation pursuant to law, to be 'prima facie' evidence, when proved by State secretary's certified copy under seal); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 1945 (highway assessments; certificate of service of notice "by the person making the same," admissible); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 4485 (recorded certificate of election of certain church officers, admissible); § 4980 (same for election in lodges, societies, etc.); Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 51, § 24 (clerk of corporation's recorded certificate of his appointment, admissible in proving service of process); N. Dak. Comp. L. 1913, § 6172 (like Cal. Civ. C. § 2059).

The ordinary corporative "certificate of organization" does not belong here; it is a constitutive, not an evidential document.

§ 1675. [1] It is true that the notary now often or usually keeps a register of protest and gives only a certified copy of this, so that the duty to keep a register might be implied, under § 1639, ante; but this was not the original practice as to protests; the notary gave an individual certificate, not a copy of his entry, and thus the case was, at least originally, a genuine one of an implied duty to give a certificate.

[2] 1815, Chesmer v. Noyes, 4 Camp. 129 (nor even of a foreign bill presented in England); 1824, Robinson v. Johnson, 1 Mo. 434; 1829, Townsley v. Simrell, 2 Pet. 170, 179; 1844, White v. Englehard, 10 Miss. 38 ("The only competent evidence would have been his deposition taken according to law, or a 'viva-voce' examination in open court"). Each of the United States was here as to another a foreign State; 1829, Townsley v. Simrell, 2 Pet. 170, 180; Buckner v. Finlay, 2 Pet. 586.

[3] 1823, Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, 331 (Story, J.: "If he had been alive at the trial, there is no question that the protest could not have been given in evidence, except with his deposition or personal examination to support it"); 1819, Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380, 384; 1855, Layman v. Brown, 1 Disney, 75,76.

[4] 1850, Rives v. Parmley, 18 Ala. 256, 259; 1854, Schneider v. Cochrane, 9 La. An. 235; 1842, Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill N. Y. 227.

[5] The truth seems to be that the common-law Courts merely gave recognition to international commercial usage as far as they were forced to, the notary not being a native common-law officer. For his history, see the citations judges to explain the law by another theory, namely, that the notary's certificate of protest was not received as an official statement, but as the statement of a private person whose certificates were by commercial usage deemed trustworthy, and that hence, when the maker was not available for testimony on the stand, and then only, — i. e. when he was deceased [6] or resided out of the jurisdiction, — his certificate or entry could be received, on the analogy of the Exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1521):

1823, STORY, J., in Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, 333, and 1829, Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. 170, 179: "Upon what foundation does this doctrine rest, but upon the usage of merchants and the universal convenience of mankind? There is not even the plea of absolute necessity to justify its introduction, since it is equally evidence, whether the notary be living or dead. The law, indeed, places a confidence in public officers, but it is here extended to foreign officers acting as the agents and instruments of private parties. . . . Where parties reside in the same kingdom or country, there is not the same necessity for giving verity and credit to the notarial protest; the parties may produce the witnesses upon the stand, or compel them to give their depositions."

1854, SHAW, C. J., in Porter v. Judson, 1 Gray 175, 176: "[A deceased notary's protest of a promissory note is admissible], not because the protest of a promissory note is necessary and strictly an official act, . . . [but] because it is in the usual course of their duty and business to keep such memoranda."

The traces of this theory are still found in the statutes of some of the older States.[7] It successfully explained why a foreign but not a domestic protest was receivable; but it was in its own turn inconsistent in not applying the doctrine to protests of notes and to the fact of notice, for the common usage and duty of notaries was notoriously both to protest notes and to certify the fact of notice.[8] This inconsistency was perceived by a few Courts; and it seems to have been as a logical development of the theory of usage and regular entries that by those Courts the protest was admitted, as under common-law doctrine, both for notes [9] and for the fact of notice.[10]

Nevertheless, the theory of official duty, with its inconsistent and unpractical limitations, prevailed almost universally. The situation stood in need of statutory reform, both to abolish the untenable limitations and to specify the particulars of the scope of the duty. Accordingly, in almost every jurisdiction, statutes have abolished the three chief restrictions above named, and have in some instances specifically added other facts — such as the post, § 1676, ante, § 1650. In Louisiana, under the civil law, they naturally ignored the limitation as to foreign protests; 1827, Allain v. Whitaker, 5 Mart. N. S. 511, 513.

[6] 1854, Porter v. Judson, 1 Gray 175, 176 (promissory note).

[7] For example, New Jersey, New York, and South Carolina.

[8] 1855, Storer, J., in Layman v. Brown, 1 Disney 75, 76 ("Although the practice prevailed in all the commercial cities of the Union to employ a notary to present dishonored notes, and to notify the indorsers if payment should be refused, it was never decreed that the practice changed the general rule of law"); 1838, Cowen, J., in Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. 81, 85 (states it as the notary's practice to give and certify the notice).

[9] 1895, Nelson v. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 798 (Minnesota statute applied to admit the certificate of protest of a note; the same result approved as a common-law rule); 1904, Ewen v. Wilbor, 208 Ill. 492, 70 N. E. 575 (inland promissory note); 1844, Williams v. Putnam, 14 N. H. 540 ("There can be no sound reason given for establishing or preserving a distribution between them").

[10] 1841, Fitler v. Morris, 6 Whart. 406, 415.

mode of notice and the residence of the parties — to those provable by the certificate.[11]

[11] Of the rulings interpreting these statutes only a few are here given, since so much of substantive law is incidentally involved.

CANADA: Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, §§ 38, 39; Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, §§ 29–31; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, §§ 28, 29; Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, §§ 34, 35; P. E. I. St. 1889, §§ 35–37; Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, Evidence Act, §§ 22–24; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, §§ 28, 29.

UNITED STATES: Federal: Code 1919, § 3816 (Alaska; notary's protest of bill of exchange or promissory note, to be 'prima facie' evidence); Alabama: Code 1907, § 5171 (a certificate evidences presentment, demand, protest, service of notice, mode of notice, and reputed place of residence and post-office of the person notified, for "any instrument governed by the commercial law"); 1834, O'Connell v. Walker, 1 Port. 263 (not evidence of the fact of agency of the person notified); 1840, Castles v. McMath, 1 Ala. 326, 328 (same); 1851, Phillips v. Poindexter, 18 Ala. 579, 582 (protest is evidence of the agency of the person of whom demand is made as against the acceptor, where the bill is foreign); 1877, Bradley v. Bank, 60 Ala. 252, 259 (Louisiana notary's certificate of presentment, non-payment, and notice, received; the statute applies equally to foreign notaries); 1890, Gorce v. Wadsworth, 91 Ala. 416, 8 So. 712 (same; Texas notary's certificate of acknowledgment of a power of attorney received); § 3992 (record of officer protesting a note or bill, is evidence of "the facts therein stated" touching dishonor and notice, "when verified by the oath of the officer," and a copy is evidence); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 384 (like Cal. Pol. C. § 795); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1740 ("all declarations and protests made and acknowledgments taken by notaries public," admissible); § 139 (notary's protest, under his hand and official seal, of bill or note, stating presentment, etc., to be 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts contained therein"); § 140 (notary's certificate, under his hand and official seal, of "official acts done by him as such notary," to be presumptive evidence of the facts); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4125 (notary public's protest under official seal, admissible to prove the facts stated); § 4126 (his like certificate of notice of protest, admissible); California: Pol. C. 1872, § 795 (notary's protest of a bill or note, stating presentment, dishonor, service and mode of notice, and reputed residence of parties and nearest post-office, admissible); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5732 (protests of notes and inland bills, protested without the State, admissible to prove the facts stated); Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 570 (notary's certificate under seal of office, "drawn from his record, stating the protest and the facts therein recorded," is evidence like "the original protest"); § 1422 (notary's protest; similar to Cal. Pol. C. § 795); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5822 (notarial acts required by law as to bills and notes, provable by notary's certificate under seal); 1847, Walker v. Bank, 3 Ga. 486, 493 (the statute impliedly makes the certificate evidence of notice also); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, §§ 3127, 3129; Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 212 (notary's protest of a bill or note, admissible to prove dishonor, service and mode of notice, and parties' reputed residence and post-office); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 99, § 14 (notary's record of notice of protest and time and manner of service, admissible); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 476 (certificate under seal of a notary in the U. S., admissible to prove the facts stated); § 9538 (notary's certificate under seal, admissible to prove the facts which he is authorized to certify); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4624, Comp. Code, § 7331 (notary's protest admissible to prove dishonor and notice of bill or note); 1859, Sather v. Rogers, 10 Ia. 231 (certificate must expressly state the fact of notice); 1860, Thorp v. Craig, 10 Ia. 461, 465 (same); 1860, Bradshaw v. Hedge, 10 Ia. 402, 405, semble (not evidence of residence or address); 1868, State v. Reidel, 26 Ia. 430, 436 (not receivable in a criminal case to show lack of funds at a bank drawn on; see ante, § 1398); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, §§ 479, 3725, 3726 (protest to be evidence of dishonor and notice, for all bills and notes; effect to be given to protests of notaries in other States, on certain conditions); Louisiana: R. S. 1870, § 326 (notary's certified copy of protest of facts of demand and notice for bills, notes, and orders for payment of money, admissible); § 325 (notaries' and parish recorders' record of protests and notices; the record attested by two witnesses to be "legal proof of the notices"); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 40, § 28 (notary's certificate under official seal of protest of "foreign or inland bill of exchange or promissory note or order," admissible to show "all facts therein contained"); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 13, § 6 (notary's protest of any bill or note, admissible to show non-acceptance, non-payment, presentment, and time and manner of notice); 1843, Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill 127, 149 (at common law, it was evidence of presentment and of protest; by St. 1837, c. 253, additionally, of notice sent or delivered; the whole to apply to inland and foreign bills); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 2497 (notary's certificate under official seal of "official acts done by him," admissible, but not to prove notice of non-acceptance or non-payment, if denied by affidavit); 1898, Union N. B. v. Milling Co., 117 Mich. 535, 76 N. W. 1

Certain other principles concerning notarial certificates are to be discriminated. (1) A notary's certificate may evidence the execution of a deed or the making of an affidavit (post, § 1676); his functions in that respect are not here involved. (2) When a notary enters his protests originally in the form of a register, and furnishes the party with a copy of the register to serve as a certificate of protest (as is the practice in many jurisdictions), the general principle as to certified copies of public documents becomes applicable (post, § 1680). (3) An officer certifying a copy under this principle must set out the literal words, not merely a summary of their effect; this principle may be applied to notaries' copies, or statutory exceptions may be recognized (post, § 1678). (4) The genuineness of a notary's certificate is sufficiently evidenced by an impression purporting to be that of his seal of office; this doctrine involves the principle of Authentication (post, § 2165). (5) Whether the certificates must be founded on the notary's personal knowledge has been already considered (ante, § 1635).

(statute applied); 1901, Sexton v. Perrigo, 126 Mich. 542, 85 N. W. 1096 (under C. L. § 2635, a notary's certificate of protest was held not admissible after his death, where the fact of notice is denied by affidavit); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, §§ 5718, 5719 (record or instrument of protest of a notary of this State or a U. S. State or Territory, for a bill or note, admissible to prove the facts certified); Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1979, Hem. § 1639 (the "record of the officer protesting any" note or bill, and verified by his oath, to be evidence of facts therein stated touching dishonor, giving of notice, and post-office address); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5385 (notary's certificate of protest of a bill or note, admissible to prove dishonor, notice thereof, "and the manner of each of said acts," when verified by his affidavit and filed fifteen days before trial); 1840, Moore v. Bank, 6 Mo. 379 (protest of an inland bill, received, under a statute providing "like remedy" as for foreign bills); 1855, Williams v. Smith, 21 Mo. 419 (protest of a non-negotiable note, excluded); 1880, Faulkner v. Faulkner, 73 Mo. 327 (certificate not receivable under a statute to prove notice, unless verified by affidavit); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 391 (notary's protest of a bill or note is evidence of presentment, dishonor, service and mode of notice, and parties' reputed residence and nearest post-office); § 393 (county clerk's certified copy admissible for records of a former notary deposited with him); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 4818 (notary's certificate of demand, protest, and notice of any bill, note, or other obligation, admissible); § 8847 (notary's protest, admissible to prove dishonor and notice of a bill or note); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 2755 (notary's protest of a bill or note, admissible to prove dishonor, service and mode of notice, and reputed residence and nearest post-office of parties notified); § 2754 ("any certificate or instrument, either printed or written, purporting to be the official act of a notary public under his seal or signature," admissible "as 'prima facie' evidence of the official character of such instrument and of the truth of the facts therein set forth"); New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 18, § 3 (protest of a bill or note, to be evidence of the facts stated and of notice); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence §§ 21, 22 (notary's certificate, admissible to prove the facts stated as to presentment, dishonor, and notice; unless the opponent has notice of intention to dispute the facts); Negotiable Instruments § 207 (record of protest, or certified copy, by a notary or justice deceased or removed out of the State or not to be found after diligent inquiry, admissible to show the facts of demand and notice of bill or note); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, §§ 3935, 3937 (notary's record of protest for dishonor and of notice, for "any bill of exchange, promissory note, or other written instrument," and of time and manner of service, and of all addressees' names, also of the description and amount of the instrument admissible); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 368 (notary's certificate under seal, of presentment, protest, or service of notice, of a bill or note, admissible; unless, perhaps the opponent by affidavit denies receipt of notice; in case of his death or insanity, or absence or removal preventing testimony in court, the original protest and memorandum or register is admissible); § 369 (proof of presentment, etc. of bill or note payable in another State or county may be made "in any manner authorized by the laws" thereof); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 842 (notary's record of protest, to be evidence of notice and time and manner of service); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 128 (protest by notary, of this State or any U. S. State or territory of dishonor of bill or note, to be 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts therein certified"); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 3180 (notary public's "record of all notices" and time and manner of service, etc., to be "competent evidence"); Pennsylvania: St. 1815, Jan. 2, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10350, Evidence (official acts, protests, and attestations of all domestic notaries public, admissible "in evidence of the facts therein certified"); St. 1876, Apr. 27, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10355, Evidence (official acts and exemplifications of foreign notaries, made according to law of the country, are 'prima facie' evidence of the matters therein set forth; the U. S. consul to verify the document as specified); Philippine Islands: Admin. C. 1917, § 241 (notary public is empowered to "receive the proof or acknowledgment of all writings relating to commerce or navigation," enumerating them, and to "certify the truth thereof under his seal of office concerning all matters done by him by virtue of his office"); South Carolina: St. 1822, C. C. P. 1922, § 703, C. C. § 3865 (notary's protest of an inland bill or note, admissible to prove notice, if he is deceased or lives out of the county); 1826, Dobson v. Laval, 4 McC. 57 (the statute making the protest evidence of notice was intended to make it evidence of demand also); South Dakota: Rev. Code 1919, § 524 (notary's record of notice of protest of any written instrument, admissible); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 3203–3206 (notary's "attestations, protestations, and other instruments of publication" under seal, admissible); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 591 (notary public's protest of bill or note, provable by certified copy of notarial record under seal); § 3697 Rev. Civ. 1895, § 2309 ("all declarations and protests made and acknowledgments taken by

§ 1675*a*. Certificate of Service in Army, Navy, or Civil Office; Certificate of Death in Service. A certificate of service in army, navy, or civil office, made pursuant to duty imposed by custom or statute is admissible, on principle. In the first place, it is virtually no more than a certified copy, in summary, of the regular record of service kept in the department; the record would be admissible on the principle of § 1639, ante, and the certified copy on that of § 1677, post. In the next place, it is made for the specific purpose of being exhibited and used; and to shut off its use in courts is to defeat its purpose in part. In the third place, to call for anything else in lieu of it is impracticable; for all the officers who shared in making the record cannot possibly be had as witnesses; and the chief of a Federal records-bureau is virtually inaccessible for 'viva voce' testimony; moreover, he personally knows nothing beyond the record. To exclude the certificate is practically to exclude all evidence on the subject.

In view of the fact that the United States Army and Navy contained more than four million persons during the Great War, it is essential that the admissibility of service-certificates, under whatever name, should be recognized. A few statutes have expressly so provided.[1] The Courts, however, have somenotaries public," admissible); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 4254 (notary's record of notice of protest admissible "to prove such notices"); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 2851 (notary's certificate is evidence of protest, non-payment, and notice, for notes and inland bills, as in the case of foreign bills); 1898, First Nat'l Bank v. Briggs, 70 Vt. 599, 41 Atl. 586 (a foreign protest is not evidence of notice); Virginia: Code 1919, § 5680 (a notary's protest is evidence of the facts stated as to presentment, demand, dishonor, and notice, both of inland and foreign bills and also of certain notes payable in this State, whether protested in or out of the State); Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 8300 (notary's record of notice of protest, with the time and manner thereof, and the names of parties notified, admissible to prove the facts stated); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 51, § 7 (notary's protest of bill or note "shall be 'prima facie' evidence of what is stated therein . . . in relation to presentment, dishonor, and notice thereof"); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4508 (notary's certificate under official seal, to be evidence of "the facts contained in such certificate").

§ 1675*a*. [1] ENGLAND: St. 1912, 2–3 Geo. V. c. 5, § 6 (certificate of deserting soldier's surrender, admissible).

CANADA: Dominion: Order-in-Council, Aug. 5, 1916, superseding that of Jan. 6, 1916 (desertion; "written statement" by commanding officer of military district that "the accused is absent from the corps or unit to which he belongs" is 'prima facie' evidence of absence without leave); 1916, R. v. Poulin, 31 D. L. R. 14, Ont. (order applied).

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1918, Mar. 8, times shown a narrow common-law attitude which not only affronts common sense, but must cause deep resentment in the minds of all who value their records of military service.[2] The civilian mind here needs some liberalizing.

A certificate of death in service, made by the proper officer, ought equally to be admissible; for the record on which it is based is admissible, by copy, on common-law principles (ante, § 1641). But it has usually been left to statutes to make express provision.[3]

§ 691 (Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act: "in any proceeding under this Act a certificate signed by The Adjutant-General of the Army as to persons in the Army . . . shall when produced be 'prima facie' evidence as to any of the following facts stated in such certificate: That a person named has not been, or is, or has been in military service; the time when and the place where such person entered military service, his residence at that time, and the rank, branch, and unit of such service that he entered, the dates within which he was in military service, the monthly pay received by such person at the date of issuing the certificate, the time when and place where such person died in or was discharged from such service. It shall be the duty of the foregoing officers to furnish such certificate on application, and any such certificate when purporting to be signed by any one of such officers or by any person purporting upon the face of the certificate to have been so authorized shall be 'prima facie' evidence of its contents and of the authority of the signer to issue the same"). Manual for Courts-Martial, ed. 1921, § 270 ("The certificate of discharge may be used by the defense either before or after the findings, for proof of good character"; this Presidential regulation has the force of law for courts-martial); Ariz. St. 1918, Sp. Sess. June 20, § 14 (civil rights of persons in military service; certificate of facts of military service by Adjutant-General or other named officials, admissible); Ark. St. 1919, Mar. 28, No. 493, Dig. 1919, § 6157 (death in foreign country in U. S. military service; in action for insurance U. S. adjutant-general's certificate sufficient); La. St. 1918, July 10, No. 131, § 16 (soldiers and sailors civil relief; certificate of military service by adjutant-general, etc., admissible, as in U. S. St. 1918, Mar. 8); Me. R. S. 1916, c. 87, § 134 (cited post, § 1678); c. 84, § 7 (cited post, §1681); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 1078 (soldier's discharge, recorded with county clerk, provable by certified copy "in all cases where such evidence may be required"); N. J. St. 1918, c. 253, Mar. 4, § 15 (like U. S. St. 1918, Mar. 8, § 601); S. D. St. 1921, c. 352, amending Rev. C. 1919, § 569 (certified copy of recorded certificate of discharge of soldiers, admissible, etc.); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4170 (cited post, § 1678).

[2] One reason for some of these rulings may be the judicial failure to recognize good moral character in service as relevant to disprove the doing of a bad act (ante, § 59); California: 1887, People v. Eckman, 72 Cal. 582, 14 Pac. 359 (burglary; certificate of discharge of defendant from the U. S. army for disability, with good character, excluded, as a "written declaration made out of court"; no authority cited); Georgia: 1904, Taylor v. State, 120 Ga. 857, 48 S. E. 361 (homicide; certificate of discharge of U. S. army officer, stating good character, excluded; no authority cited); Massachusetts: 1874, Hanson v. South Scituate, 115 Mass. 340 (certificate of discharge from the army, admitted); Minnesota: 1921, State v. Dolliver, — Minn. —, 184 N. W. 845 (carnal knowledge of a female under age; certificate of honorable discharge from the U. S. Army, 6 months before, stating "that his character was excellent and that his services were honest and faithful," admitted on the trial, but said to be doubtful on appeal); Missouri: 1922, State v. Taylor, — Mo. —, 238 S. W. 489 (robbery; honorable discharge from the U. S. Army, not admitted to evidence accused's good character, because "not in the nature of an official document"; another example of the gross unfairness done by judicial ignorance of military traditions and regulations); Montana: 1899, State v. Spotted Hawk, 22 Mont. 33, 55 Pac. 1026 (certificate of discharge from the army, not admissible to show the facts for which discharge was given); New Mexico: 1921, Keyes v. Keyes, — N. M. —, 199 Pac. 361 (crim. con.; to evidence plaintiff's good character, a service certificate by the Governor of the Panama Canal, Geo. W. Goethals, was excluded; the certificate read: "Voluntarily resigned, effective Mar. 10, 1915; during this period of employment his general workmanship was excellent and general conduct very good"; this is stigmatized by the Court as an "ex parte certificate"; the opinion shows no acquaintance with the law of official statements as exceptions to the hearsay rule); Washington: 1913, State v. Shaw, 75 Wash. 326, 135 Pac. 20 (murder; to discredit the accused as a witness, a military certificate of discharge for bad conduct, signed by the commanding officer, was excluded).

Compare the statutes and cases cited ante, § 1641 (army and navy military registers). A few other sorts of certificates from military officers are noted ante, § 1674.

[3] CANADA: Manitoba: St. 1919, c. 32, inserting § 53 A in the Evidence Act (certificate

§ 1676. Certificate of Execution of Deed (unrecorded). Not only did the common law not recognize any officer having power to certify to the execution of an unrecorded deed or other instrument of grant or contract; but its peoples seem also to have felt a repugnance to any system of authenticating deeds in that manner; so that a long time elapsed, even after the institution of the registry system, before such an innovation was attempted. The notary, that prominent figure in the legal profession on the Continent, who draws up the "act" for the parties and proves its execution by his certificate, is wanting in our legal history.[1] First appearing, with the introduction of written documents, in the countries of southern Europe, he seems never to have found favor among Germanic peoples, except as a character imported with the Roman and Italian law.[2]

In this country an occasional early statute[3] made provision for recognizing the certificates of foreign notaries or magistrates. The habits of the civil law of Europe had been adopted from the beginning into Louisiana practice,[4] and had also become familiar to the profession in Missouri, Texas, and California, where the French and Spanish archives of the original governments were a part of the legal sources. Moreover, in Pennsylvania, the practice was already sanctioned before the 1800s by a venturesome piece of judicial legislation.[5] But these instances seem to have remained purely local.[6] The doctrine of the common law, refusing to recognize such certificates, prevailed in the general understanding and practice.[7] of the adjutant-general, etc., stating that a person was a member of the Canadian Expeditionary Force and "that he has been officially reported as having died, been killed in action, died of wounds, or presumed to be dead, shall be sufficient proof of the death of such person for any purpose"); New Brunswick: St. 1919, c. 43 (military certificate of death; similar to Ont. St. 1919, c. 30, § 2); Ontario: St. 1921, c. 40, Soldiers' and Sailors' Proof of Death Amendment Act, § 2 (revising St. 1919, c. 30, § 2; a certificate by the adjutant-general or other specified officer stating that a person was a member of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, etc., and "that he has been officially reported as having died, been killed in action, died of wounds or presumed to be dead, shall be sufficient proof of death").

UNITED STATES: Fed. St. 1918, Mar. 8, § 601, Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act; and the State statutes are cited supra, n. 1.

The following ruling rests on contract (ante, § 7*a*): 1921, Woodmen of the World v. Maynor, 206 Ala. 176, 89 So. 750 (U. S. adjutant-general's certificate of date and cause of death of insured while in military service, admitted, under a by-law of the insurer requiring that proof of death be made by such a record).

§ 1676. [1] In de Balzac's novels of "Two Brothers" and "Cousin Pons" may be seen depicted the ways of the French notary.

[2] Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre, 1889, I, 493-499, 549-551; Brissaud, History of French Public Law, 1915, § 430, History of French Private Law, 1912, § 502 (Continental Legal History Series, vols. III, IX); Giry, Manuel de diplomatique, 1894, b. VI, c. 1, p. 824.

[3] As in Mississippi, South Carolina, and Virginia; possibly also in Alabama.

[4] An account of "Louisiana: The Story of Its Jurisprudence," is given by the present writer in 22 American Law Review, 890.

[5] Note 9, infra.

[6] On the principle of § 1633, par. 2, ante, the Courts might at least have recognized the authority of a foreign notary in a country under the Continental system where he had the function of taking proof of deeds; and this they seem usually to have done, as indicated in the rulings infra, note 11, in England, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Hampshire, and New York. But this was made easier for them by the fact that the original, in the Continental system, was the "public act" kept by the notary in his office as his public record and that what he gave to the parties was in theory a copy of this; so that this latter could be received as a certified copy, under the principle of § 1680, post.

[7] Possibly a Dutch tradition survived; but it is a little singular that nothing appears of the Dutch civil-law practice in New Jersey or New York. In Mr. Douglas Campbell's

The codification reforms in New York, between 1830 and 1840, under the leadership of Mr. David Dudley Field, made apparently the first important attempt to introduce the broad functions of the Continental notary into our jurisprudence. The draft of those laws served as a model for the early Codes of Dakota, California, and Iowa. The lack of appurtenant traditions, and of a true notarial profession, and the loose and informal methods thus likely to prevail, were unfavorable to a wide recognition of the notary's functions and a thorough trust in his services. Yet the new system was carried by these Codes into a number of other jurisdictions,[8] and finally found a legal recognition even in the home of the great Code champion himself. Still, however, the marks of racial tradition and cautious hesitation are easily to be traced; for the method is in several States adopted to a limited extent only. Unrecorded deeds of realty, with certificate of execution by an authorized officer, have been made admissible, but wills and commercial paper are often expressly excepted from the principle.[9]

"The Puritan in England, Holland, and America," this interesting history of Dutch influence is traced, but his claims are probably too large; Judge Daly has examined the Dutch traces in New York in 1 E. D. Smith, Introduction.

[8] No attempt has here been made to examine the detailed statutory development in each State. But it seems clear that the main source of the spread of the system was these Codes; they served to make its history.

[9] In the following list are included both common-law rulings refusing to receive the mere certificate of a notary or a magistrate, and also statutes and interpretative rulings receiving the certificate; the rulings in note 2. § 1676 a, post, and also those in § 1651, ante (record as evidence of a deed's execution), should be compared.

ENGLAND: 1725, Walrond v. Van Moses, 8 Mod. 322 ("copy of an agreement registered in Holland, and attested by a public notary there," admitted on the facts; see supra, note 8); 1822, Ex parte Church, 1 Dowl. & R. 324 (U. S. notarial certificate of execution of a power of attorney, excluded; "probably in a court of civil law the notarial certificate would be sufficient"; see supra, note 6).

CANADA: British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 127, § 82 (every instrument duly proved and certified under the registry act shall be admitted "without further proof of execution"); Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 26 (a deed executed out of the Province, as well in foreign countries as in the British dominions, is receivable if indorsed with "such a certificate of its execution as is required by the Registry Act for the registration of such deed"); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 27 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 26, inserting "bill of sale or other document").

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1897, Mar. 3, St. 1922, Feb. 18, § 6, Code 1919, § 6141 (amending Rev. St. § 4898; assignment of patent for industrial invention; certificate of acknowledgment by officers named, to be 'prima facie' evidence of execution); 1807, Mulatto Lucy v. Slade, 1 Cr. C. C. 422 (justice of the peace's certificate of acknowledgment, not admissible against a third person); 1815, Peabody v. Denton, 2 Gallis. 351 (notarial copy of a note, admissible to show contents, but not to show genuineness); St. 1904, April 19, c. 1398, Stat. L. vol. 33, p. 186, Code § 683 (when a U. S. land-office register is subpœnaed to produce any original application for entry, etc., in any U. S. court or State court of record, the commissioner of the general office shall transmit it to him with a certificate of authenticity under official seal, and it shall then be received in evidence); St. 1909, Mar. 4, c. 320, No. 349 (35 Stat. L. p. 1075), § 43, Code § 6249 (assignment of copyright executed in foreign country; certificate of acknowledgment under official seal of U. S. consular officer or secretary of legation, admissible);

Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 5170, 5173 (notaries may take and certify acknowledgments of conveyances, oaths, affidavits); 1839, St. John v. Redmond, 9 Port. 428, 433 (notary's certified acknowledgment of a power of attorney to accept a bill, received); 1841, Hill v. Norris, 2 Ala. 640 (certificate of a release of debt, not admissible at common law or under the then statute);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 520 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 9870);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1873 ("Every instrument" permitted or required to be recorded with county recorder, and lawfully acknowledged or proved, "may be read in evidence without further proof"); § 1746 ("Every written instrument," except notes, bills, and wills, may be acknowledged as by law, and the certificate of the proper officer

There is no reason why the system should not with us be as extensive in scope and practice as on the Continent and in the rest of the entitles it "to be read in evidence . . . without other proof of execution");

Arkansas: 1839, Wilson v. Royston, 2 Ark. 315, 327 (deed acknowledged before a notary in another State, not received); 1881, Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181, 190 (due acknowledgment, without recording, insufficient); 1881, Watson v. Billings, 38 Ark. 278, 282 (same); 1882, Dorr v. School District, 40 Ark. 237, 242 (same); 1884, Grisler v. McKennon, 44 Ark. 517, 521 (same);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1948 ("Every private writing, except last wills and testaments, may be acknowledged or proved and certified" like conveyances of realty, and the certificate is evidence of execution); § 1951 (quoted ante, § 1651); Civ. C. 1872, § 1189 (county or district court's certificate to a certificate of acknowledgment of any instrument is 'prima facie' evidence of facts stated); Pol. C. 1872, § 3341 (city fire companies; secretary's certificate of exemption or active membership, admissible); 1918, Thomas v. Fursman, 177 Cal. 550, 171 Pac. 301 (Code § 1948 applied to an assignment of a cause of action);
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 4901 (a duly acknowledged or proved instrument in writing "may be read in evidence without in the first instance additional proof of the execution thereof"); § 4891 (enumeration of officers in foreign countries whose certificates under seal of acknowledgment of a deed will suffice); § 4907 (instruments executed out of the State; cited more fully ante, § 1651); § 5388 (certain documents in the administration of estates, provable by certificate of acknowledgment; — though the awkward construction and wasteful verbiage of this simple measure represents a task of disentanglement for the reader which none but a Colorado practitioner should be forced to suffer); 1894, Knight v. Lawrence, 19 Colo. 425, 36 Pac. 242 (statute applied to a married woman's deed); 1897, Trowbridge v. Addoms, 23 Colo. 518, 48 Pac. 535 (deed acknowledged in Canada, conveying land in Colorado, no statute then providing for such certificates, excluded);
Connecticut: 1901, Barber v. International Co., 73 Conn. 587, 48 Atl. 758 (genuineness of a certified copy, by a foreign official corporation-registrar, of a filed contract and schedules, allowed to be proved by a notary's certificate, attested by the U. S. deputy consul-general; good opinion by Baldwin, J.);
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3217 (mere certified acknowledgment or proof of deed is not to make it evidence without being recorded);
Florida: 1911, Malsby v. Gamble, 61 Fla. 310, 54 So. 766 (certificate of deed's acknowledgment, not evidence of execution; Const. Art. XI, § 21, quoted post, § 1676 a, n. 2, applies only to admit recorded deeds upon the certificate of acknowledgment);
Georgia: 1903, Durrence v. Northern Nat'l Bank, 117 Ga. 385, 43 S. E. 726 (under Code 1895, § 3628, quoted ante, § 1651, a deed filed for recording, but not yet recorded, is admissible without further evidence); 1904, Long v. Powell, 120 Ga. 621, 48 S. E. 184 (U. S. consul's certificate of acknowledgment, admissible under Code § 3621);
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3116 ("every conveyance or other instrument, stamped and acknowledged or proved, and certified in the manner hereinbefore prescribed," may be "read in evidence without further proof");
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7968 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1948); § 7969 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951, omitting "the original record");
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 20, as amended by St. 1903 (quoted ante, § 1651); c. 30, § 35 (an instrument affecting land, duly acknowledged or proved, "whether the same be recorded or not, may be read in evidence without any further proof of the execution thereof"); c. 103, § 1 (certificate of acknowledgment of an official bond shall be 'prima facie' evidence of signing, sealing, and acknowledgment, and shall have the same effect as evidence as for a deed of realty); 1902, Ramsay's Estate, 197 Ill. 572, 64 N. E. 549 (R. S. c. 103, § 1, applied);
Indiana: 1841, Sheets v. Dufour, 5 Blackf. 549, 551 (certificate of acknowledgment by a justice insufficient);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4621, Comp. Code § 7328 ("Every private writing, except a last will and testament, after being acknowledged or proved and certified in the manner prescribed for the proof or acknowledgment of conveyances of real property, may be read in evidence without further proof"); § 4629, Comp. Code § 7336 (so also for a written instrument affecting realty or a minor's adoption, if acknowledged or proved and certified "as required");
Kansas: G. S. 1915, § 2076, G. S. 1868, c. 22, § 26 ("Every instrument in writing, conveying or affecting real estate, which shall be acknowledged or proved and certified" is admissible "without further proof");
Louisiana: in this State not only is there a cumbersome mass of statutes (quoted ante, § 1651), but the application of the civil-law theory involves local peculiarities; these will be found explained in the following cases: 1816, Las Caygas v. Larionda, 4 Mart. N. S. La. 283 (Spanish notary public's certificate of execution of power of attorney, admitted to have "the same credit in our courts of judicature which it would have in those of Spain"; see supra, note 6); 1830, Walden v. Grant, 8 Mart. 565, 568; 1832, Delogny v. Smith, 3 La. 418, 419; 1887, Leibe v. Hebersmith, 39 La. An. 1050, 3 So. 283; 1905, world, provided only the administrative machinery is duly furnished and safeguarded.

Werner v. Marx, 113 La. 1002, 37 So. 905 (power of attorney from Germany, held duly authenticated by a U. S. consul's certificate to the signature and seal of the German police officer taking the acknowledgment, under Rev. St. 1876, § 1436);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, §§ 44, 45 (an instrument executed in another of the U. S. or in a foreign country; proof of execution allowable by certificate of a commissioner, judge, etc., of the proof by witness, etc., made before him, and authenticated by official seal, if a commissioner or notary, or otherwise by certificate under seal of Governor, etc.);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12508 ("conveyances and other instruments authorized by law to be recorded," and duly acknowledged or proved, "may be read in evidence . . . without further proof thereof"); § 12529 ("every written instrument," except notes, bills, and wills, may be proved by certificate of execution made as for conveyance of realty);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8425 ("every written instrument," except bills and notes and wills, may be proved or acknowledged like a conveyance of realty, and then "the certificate of the proper officer endorsed thereon" entitles it to be read); § 5741 (certificate of acknowledgment of instrument by a corporation, to be evidence "that the execution and delivery thereof was authorized by law"); 1891, Lydiard v. Chute, 45 Minn. 277, 278, 280, 47 N. W. 967 (deed acknowledged abroad but not under statute, excluded); 1893, Romer v. Conter, 53 Minn. 171, 173, 54 N. W. 1052 (admitting a bond proved under statute by certificate of acknowledgment); 1907, Tucker v. Helgren, 102 Minn. 382, 113 N. W. 912;
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1954, Hem. § 1614 (the original of all instruments "acknowledged or proved according to the laws of the [foreign] country where they are executed, so as to be entitled to be recorded there, shall be evidence without further proof of the execution thereof"); Code § 1955, Hem. § 1615 (same for a U. S. State or Territory or District); Code § 1956, Hem. § 1616 (same for an instrument in this State, when duly certified, and "whether the same shall have been recorded or not, or disputed by the opposite party or not"); 1846, Sessions v. Reynolds, 7 Sm. & M. 130, 154 (certificate of deed from Liverpool, sufficient on the facts); 1849, Routh v. Bank, 12 Sm. & M. 161, 185 (notarial certified copy of a document 'authorized by Louisiana law to be kept by him, admitted under the Federal statute; see supra, note 8); 1854, Hardin v. Ho-yo-po-nubby, 27 Miss. 567, 580 (certificate of a clerk of the D. C. Court to a power of attorney, excluded); 1859, Morris v. Henderson, 37 Miss. 492, 501 (undecided, as to general principle); 1860, Lock v. Mayne, 39 Miss. 157, 164 (the existing statute makes an acknowledged deed admissible without other proof of execution only when it has properly been recorded; see the later St. § 1956, supra);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, §§ 2207, 2210 ("every instrument in writing, conveying or affecting real estate," duly acknowledged or proved and certified, is admissible "without further proof" except as provided); § 5386 (letter of attorney, other than for conveyance of real estate, if acknowledged or proved as for deed of real estate, may be read in evidence "without further proof of the execution");
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10596 (like Col. C. C. P. § 1948); § 6933 ("all deeds to real property, heretofore executed in this State or any State or Territory of the U. S., which shall have been signed by the grantors in due form, "shall convey title," "and such deeds so executed shall be received in evidence"; a singular provision);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8856 ("Every private writing," except wills, "after being acknowledged or proved and certified in the manner prescribed for proof of acknowledgment of conveyances of real property, may be read in evidence without further proof"); § 5609 (same for deeds); § 5664 (certificates of acknowledgment, etc., by duly authorized U. S. Army officers are assimilated to notarial acts); 1898, Linton v. Cooper, 53 Nebr. 400, 73 N. W. 731 (deed acknowledged, receivable without other proof of execution and delivery; here acknowledged before a consular agent); 1901, Brown v. Collins, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 173 (statute applied to a mortgage); 1903, McKenzie v. Beaumont, 70 Nebr. 179, 97 N. W. 225 (statute applied to a mortgage);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 1044 ("every conveyance, or other instrument conveying or affecting real estate," admissible, if duly acknowledged or proved and certified, "without further proof");
New Hampshire: 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152, 169 (notary's copy of his register, admitted under the law of Canada; because the originals are retained by the notary; see supra, note 6);
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Conveyances, §§ 20 b, 20 d, 22 (deed bearing a due official certificate of proof or acknowledgment before a deed commissioner, etc., admissible as if "then and there produced and proved"); § 23 (same, for deeds proved or acknowledged before specified officials elsewhere in the U. S.); §§ 64, 68, 117, 123–133 (validating certain acknowledgments);
New York: Cons. L. 1909, § 108 (commissioner's or notary's certificate of acknowledgment or proof of a written instrument, sufficient to admit it in evidence, except for bills, notes, or wills); Cons. L. 1909, Real Property, §§ 310, 311 (authentication of a certificate of acknowledgment); C. P. A. 1920, § 386 ("any instrument, except a promissory note, a bill of exchange, or a last will, may be acknowledged, or proved, and certified, in the manner prescribed by law for the taking and certifying the acknowledgment or proof of a conveyance of real property; and thereupon it is evidence, as if it was a conveyance of real property"); ib. § 392 (conveyance of real property; quoted ante, § 1651, n. 5); St. 1913, c. 208, p. 369 (amending Consol. L. 1909, Executive, § 105, relating to notary's powers to certify the execution of deeds for use within the county); St. 1913, c. 209, p. 371 (amending Consol. L. 1909, Real Property, § 311, as to certificates of execution of deeds without the State); 1816, Mauri v. Heffernan, 13 John. 58, 73 (notarial certificate of the execution and contents of an obligation entered into in Spanish Venezuela, received; see note 7, supra);

§ 1676*a*. Certificate of Execution of Recorded Deeds. Where a registry system is provided, and the registrar is authorized to record a deed as executed

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7916 ("Every instrument conveying or affecting real property, acknowledged or provided and certified as provided in the Civil Code," admissible); § 5597 ("all instruments entitled to record . . shall be admissible in evidence . . and may be read in evidence without further proof thereof");

Ohio: 1827, Allen v. Parish, 3 Oh. 107, 110, 124 (notarial copy of a deed, by a deceased notary in another State, admitted after evidence of existence of the deed; see supra, note 6);

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 5267 (instruments affecting real estate and duly acknowledged are receivable "without further proof of their execution");

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 9870 (a conveyance acknowledged or proved and certified as required for record is admissible "without further proof thereof"); § 9926, as amended by St. 1921, Feb. 23, c. 230 (deeds heretofore executed by signature only, with acknowledgment, etc. or defectively acknowledged, to be admissible); 1897, Laurent v. Lanning, 32 Or. 11, 51 Pac. 80 (notary's certificate of a deed-acknowledgment, admitted);

Pennsylvania: St. 1705, Dig. § 10329 (bond, specialties, powers, etc., proved before proper officer and certified "under the common or public seal of the cities, etc." where proved; "such certification shall be sufficient evidence to the Court, and jury for the proof thereof"); St. 1840, Apr. 3, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 8685, Deeds (deed acknowledged, within or without the State, and certified pursuant to law of this State for recording; such certificate will be "'prima facie' evidence of such execution and acknowledgment on proof," without requiring proof of officer's seal); 1782, McDill v. McDill, 1 Dall. 63 (a deed lawfully proved by one witness before a justice according to St. 1715, but not recorded, admitted; see this statute ante, § 1651); 1784, Hamilton v. Galloway, 1 Dall. 93 d (same; "the recording does not contribute to the proof of the deed, which is established by the oath before the justice; the recording only gives the deed a special operation by the express provisions of the Act of Assembly"); 1833, Duncan v. Duncan, 1 Watts 327 (same, though the statute did not expressly provide for this); 1821, Foster v. Shaw, 7 S. & R. 156, 163 (same for a deed so probated abroad);

Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, §§ 1, 2 (mode of authenticating documents from other parts of U. S. and from other countries; rules applicable to "an instrument or document"); § 331 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951); 1917, Antillon v. Barcelon, 37 P. I. 148;

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1462 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951);

South Carolina: St. 1731, Civ. C. 1922, §§ 716, 717 (deeds, bonds, other specialties, letters of attorney, etc., attested to have been proved before a Mayor, Governor, or notary of one of the United States or a foreign State, receivable "as if the witnesses to such deeds were produced and proved the same 'viva voce'"; but not to show a claim against a resident of this State, unless in "such foreign country" similar treatment is given to instruments from this State);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7114 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1948);

Virginia: Code 1919, § 6207 (declaring admissible a deed or power of attorney executed out of the State and certified as duly proved so as to be eligible for record; or a policy of insurance, or charter-party, attested by a notary under seal of office, certified by a court of record or mayor or under the seal of State of the Kingdom, province, etc.); 1823, Kidd v. Alexander, 1 Rand, 456, 457 (execution of a release of a claim under seal; notarial certificate excluded); 1825, Sexton v. Pickering, 3 Va. 468, 470 (certificate of execution of a deed by a 'feme covert' or by a husband; when made by a magistrate of a domestic State, receivable for the former case by St. 1814, but for the latter not until St. 1819);

Washington: 1894, Gardner v. Port Blakely M. Co., 8 Wash. 1, 5, 35 Pac. 402 (original domestic deed, improperly recorded, provable by certificate of acknowledgment); 1913, Koloff v. Chicago M. & P. S. R. Co., 71 Wash. 543, 129 Pac. 398 (Bulgarian power of attorney to sue; certificate of acknowledgment, not admitted);

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 21 (a deed or power of attorney executed out of the State and certified so as to entitle to record here, and a policy of insurance or charter-party, upon information furnished him in the shape of an acknowledgment or other appropriate proof, the register-entry (or a certified copy) is an authorized official statement of the deed's execution, and is to-day everywhere in the United States admitted for that purpose (ante, § 1651).

But suppose that the recorded original deed itself is produced, bearing the certificate of due acknowledgment or proof by the registrar or other officer to whom proof or acknowledgment was made, is not this certificate equally receivable to evidence the deed's execution?[1] The answer must be in the affirmative.[2] Otherwise the law would place the offeror in the absurd position executed out of the U. S. (?), is provable by a notary's certificate under seal, authenticated by a court of record, or the chief magistrate of a county or city, or the great seal of State); 1904, Rutherford v. Rutherford, 55 W. Va. 56, 47 S. E. 240 (certificate of acknowledgment of a release unrecorded, or not entitled to be recorded, inadmissible);

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4156 ("every conveyance" executed and acknowledged or proved so as to be entitled to record, and every land-patent from the U. S. or this State, and every document "affecting land or the title thereto" kept lawfully with a register of deeds, is admissible "without further proof thereof"); § 4185 ("every written instrument," except bills, notes, and wills, when proved or acknowledged and certified as provided for a conveyance of realty, admissible as if a conveyance);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4587 (instruments concerning an interest in land in this State, duly acknowledged or proved, "may be read in evidence, without in the first instance additional proof of the execution thereof"); § 4689 (recorded chattel mortgage, admissible).

The sufficiency of an identity of name, to indicate the identity of the person acknowledging with the party in issue, is considered post, § 2529, under the presumption of identity. The propriety of taking an acknowledgment over the telephone is noticed ante, § 669, post, § 2155. The operation of an acknowledgment, though defectively taken, as an admission is considered ante, § 1654, par. 6.

Compare the presumption of execution for a recorded or acknowledged deed, post, § 2521.

§ 1676a. [1] 1843, Woods, J., in Wark v. Willard, 13 N. H. 389, 398 ("The whole office of an acknowledgment is the verification of the due execution of the deed").

[2] Admissible: CANADA: Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 172, § 50 (registrar's certificate of due registration on an original instrument shall be evidence "of the due execution of the instrument"); New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1904, c. 151, § 55 (registrar's certificate and indorsement of registration shall be evidence "of the due execution of the instrument," and no proof of the registrar's signature or office is needed); § 57 (all such instruments shall be "as good and sufficient evidence as any bargains and sales enrolled" were in England); Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, § 47 (certificate of registration indorsed on a deed or mortgage, purporting to be signed by the registrar or assistant, shall be presumed genuine and be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 50 (deed or mortgage executed out of the Province; annexed certificate and affidavits "required for the registration thereof," with the registrar's certificate of due registration, is evidence of "the due execution thereof").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 82; Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 3374, 3360 ("conveyances of property," duly acknowledged or proved and recorded, receivable in evidence "without further proof"); § 3395 (same for conditional sales of personalty); St. 1911, No. 52, p. 31, Feb. 20, § 2 (corporate conveyances, executed by president, etc., when recorded, are admissible "without further proof"); 1834, Toulmin v. Austin, 5 Stew. & P. 410, 418; 1875, Harrison v. Simons, 55 Ala. 510, 515; 1877, Hart v. Ross, 57 Ala. 518, 520; Arkansas: Dig. 1919, §§ 1530, 1531 (every "instrument in writing conveying or affecting real estate," when duly recorded, "may be read in evidence without further proof of execution"); 1853, Hogins v. Brashears, 13 Ark. 242, 250; 1856, McNeil v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 154, 169; California: 1862, Clark v. Fry, 20 Cal. 219, 223; 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 405; Florida: Here, by some freak such as occasionally disfigures our State constitutions, and in phraseology of crude draftsmanship, the subject is even enshrined in the Constitution: Art. XVI, § 21 ("Deeds and mortgages which have been proved for record and recorded according to law shall be taken as 'prima facie' evidence in the courts in this State without requiring proof of execution"); Georgia: 1859, Bell v. McCawley, 29 Ga. 355, 360; 1860, Oliver v. Persons, 30 Ga. 391, 398 (under St. 1856 the record certificate, when the records of office are destroyed, is only presumptive of execution and may be contradicted, the issue being for the Court); 1861, Gill v. Strozier, 32 Ga. 688, 694 (applies only to documents authorized of being required to bring witnesses for a deed in court but not to bring them for a deed not in court.

That any doubt could have been suggested is due merely to the faulty wording of the earlier group of statutes; these usually declared merely that to be recorded); 1867, Doe d. Hollis v. Stevens, 36 Ga. 463, 472; 1884, Ross v. Campbell, 73 Ga. 309, 315; Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 35 (quoted ante, § 1676); St. 1897, May 1, § 37 (a duly witnessed or acknowledged receipt of the owner of a registered title to land shall be "'prima facie' evidence of the genuineness of such signature"); St. 1907, May 28, p. 376, § 5 (horse-shoer's lien); Indiana: 1860, Lyon v. Perry, 14 Ind. 515; 1865, Allen v. Vincennes, 25 Ind. 531; 1884, Carver v. Carver, 97 Ind. 497, 509, 513 ("In all cases where the record is competent evidence, the deed is also competent, without further proof of its execution"); 1895, Krom v. Vermilion, 143 Ind. 75, 41 N. E. 539; Kansas: G. S. 1915, § 2084, St. 1905 (defectively acknowledged or recorded instruments, on record for 10 years, provable by production of the original); Maine: 1833, Knox v. Silloway, 1 Fairf. 201, 216, 219 (quoted supra); 1841, Ayers v. Hewitt, 1 Appl. 281, 286; Maryland: 1854, Barry v. Hoffman, 6 Md. 78, 87; Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 525, 537; Michigan: 1856, Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140, 150; 1897, Webb v. Holt, 113 Mich. 338, 71 N. W. 637; Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8456 (an instrument authorized to be recorded, and duly acknowledged or proved, is admissible "without further proof"); Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1956, Hem. § 1616 (recorded original of any instrument required or permitted by law to be recorded, when duly certified to be acknowledged, etc., admissible "without further proof of its execution and delivery"); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5356 (deeds, etc., before officers of the French or Spanish government, receivable "without further proof" when certified as recorded by the recorder of land titles); § 5293 ("marriage contracts, duly proved or acknowledged and certified and recorded," admissible "without further proof of their execution"); § 1665 (sheriff's deed recorded, admissible "without further proof of the execution thereof"); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 2754 (notary's certificate of acknowledgment; quoted ante, § 1675); § 5414 (instruments affecting realty; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910 (quoted ante, § 1676); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 11 (the execution of all written instruments whether or not affecting real estate, except commercial paper, may be evidenced by certificate of acknowledgment by notary, etc.); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 384 (a duly recorded conveyance is provable by certificate entitling to record); North Carolina: 1900, Griffith v. Richmond, 126 N. C. 377, 35 S. E. 620 (chattel mortgage); Pennsylvania: St. 1911, May 11, p. 259 Dig. § 8841, Evidence (sheriff's deeds; prothonotary's certificate of acknowledgment under Court seal, when the deed is recorded, suffices); Philippine Islands: Admin. C. 1917, § 198 (recorded instrument affecting title of unregistered land is "competent evidence"); South Carolina: 1834, Monk v. Jenkins, 2 Hill Ch. 9, 15, semble; 1840, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 85, semble; C. C. P. 1922, § 714 ("the production, without further or other proof, of the original of any and every instrument in writing," other than wills, required by law to be recorded "shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the execution of such instrument," provided it is duly recorded and ten days' notice of intention to produce is given to the opponent); § 715 (the foregoing is not to apply where fraud in the execution is claimed, provided ten days' notice of the claim is given); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2724 ("Every instrument in writing which is acknowledged or witnessed and duly recorded or duly filed" is admissible "without further proof"); § 2725 (similar, for instruments affecting real property, defectively recorded before Feb. 1, 1911); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3700 ("Every instrument of writing," lawfully recorded with the clerk of the county court and proved or acknowledged according to law at the time, or recorded for 10 years whether lawfully or not, is admissible "without the necessity of proving its execution," on conditions stated ante, § 1651); §§ 6855, 6856 (certain instruments recorded before Feb. 9, 1860, as noted in § 1651, ante, admissible); Vermont: 1827, Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Aik. 312, 315 (clerk's certificate of the fact of record or execution of a deed, etc., receivable); 1827, Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329, 335 (admissible "without other proof of its execution than was furnished by its containing all the statutory requisites of witnessing, acknowledging, and recording"); 1832, Johnson v. McGuire, 4 Vt. 327 ("it is not made evidence by any statute"; but is admissible); Washington: 1900, Blewett v. Bush, 22 Wash. 536, 61 Pac. 770; Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4156 (quoted ante, § 1676).

Inadmissible: Possibly in Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire; see the citations ante, § 1651. In Indiana, Mullis v. Cavins, 1839, 5 Blackf. 77, excluding it when offered by a grantee, is probably not law since the rulings supra.

Undecided: 1888, Lander v. Propper, 6 Dak. 64, 65 (chattel mortgage; question not decided); 1852, Sanders v. Pepoon, 4 Fla. 465, 469 (undecided; but not admissible where not duly acknowledged).

the register (or a certified copy) could be used when the original deed was shown to be lost or otherwise unavailable, and the argument was made that the statutory authority for the use of the register was confined to the specific cases of a deed lost or the like, and furthermore that no express authority was given to the registrar or other officer to place a certificate upon the original deed. As to the latter argument, it is enough to answer that the practical inconsistency produced by the contrary result must suffice to imply such an authority. As to the former argument, it is clear that the statutory proviso was in reality intended to sanction the rule requiring the production of the original (ante, § 1224), and had no other limitations in view; so that, when that rule was satisfied, and the execution remained to be proved, the officer's statutory authority to take the probate of execution was still in full effect and could be availed of to evidence execution, even though it was not needed for evidencing the contents:

1833, MELLEN, C. J., in Knox v. Silloway, 1 Fairf. 201, 218 (after pointing out that an office-copy would suffice): "Now by what magic has a copy from the registry acquired more solemnity and virtue than the original, and why is it entitled to more credit in a Court of justice? Why is not a registered, unproved, original deed as good, as safe, and as satisfactory evidence, as a certified copy of such unproved original, or rather as a certified copy of the record, which is no more than a copy of the original? Is not the supposed distinction the merest phantom? . . . It must be remembered that, in the above-mentioned cases in which certified copies are admitted in evidence, they are admitted not because the registry of the original deed is full and conclusive proof of the legal execution of it, but because it is presumptive and 'prima facie' proof that the original is what it appears to be, namely, a fair and perfected contract, inasmuch as the person claiming under it has voluntarily placed it on the public records of the county. The Court, therefore, for these reasons and in these cases, presume the original deed to have been duly executed, and thus throw the 'onus probandi' upon the other party, who if he can may impeach the deed as a forgery or show that it was never delivered and perfected by the grantor."

This result was generally reached by judicial construction; but the modern statutes have often taken care to declare expressly that the original deed bearing the proper officer's certificate of due acknowledgment or probate shall be admissible.

The various kinds of officers, at home and abroad, who are authorized to make such certificates, vary in the different States, and their detailed enumeration is beyond the purview of the present work.[3]

§ 1676*b*. Certificate of Execution (Jurat) of Affidavit or Deposition. (1) When an affidavit is offered—i. e. a document purporting to have been sworn to by a particular person—the due taking of the oath to that document by the named person must somehow be evidenced. The jurat, or certificate of the officer administering the oath, purports to make the necessary statements for this purpose; and this certificate was at common law recognized as admis-

[3] For the requirements as to number of witnesses testifying before such officer, in lieu of a personal acknowledgment by the maker of the instrument, see post, § 2054.

sible, so far as it was made by an officer having the proper authority.[1] The admissibility of the certificate thus depends upon whether the officer has under the law an authority to administer oaths. This, however, is a matter of administrative law, and is now everywhere covered by statutes, often containing elaborate provisions, which do not fall within the present purview.

(2) In the same way, the admissibility of a certificate of the taking of a deposition depends upon the authority of certain officers to take a deposition and upon the statutory provisions enumerating them and prescribing the formalities of their proceedings. This also is a matter of administrative law and of procedure, not here to be dealt with (ante, § 1382).

(3) When the execution of an affidavit, a deposition, or a deed is certified by a purporting officer, whose certificate would be admissible for the purpose, some evidence as to the genuineness of the certificate itself must be offered, i. e. the certificate must be authentical. The purporting seal of a notary is by long tradition regarded as sufficient evidence; so also the great seal of State (post, §§ 2161–2166). But when the seal does not suffice, it remains to evidence three essential elements, namely, the authority of the officer (if a foreign one), the fact that the person named was such an officer, and the fact that the seal and signature were affixed by him and by no other. For this purpose, then, additional certificates may have to be employed. The general principle applicable is the same that governs the authentication of certified copies (post, § 1679).[2]

§ 1676*b*. [1] 1728, Ex parte Ruddock, Mosely 78 (L. C. King said "he had known an affidavit sworn before one of our consuls abroad, allowed to be read by the courts of law"); 1744, Willes, L. C. J., in Omichund v. Barker, Willes 538, 550 ("The proper and usual evidence of a fact arising beyond sea is an affidavit or deposition taken before a public notary and certified to be so under the seal of the place or the principal officer of the place; which has been admitted as evidence in some cases where it would be too expensive, considering the nature of the cause, to take out a special commission"); 1810, R. v. Benson, 2 Camp. 508 (perjury in an answer in chancery; to prove the oath, the handwriting of the master's jurat was sufficient, without calling the master); 1824, R. v. Hailey, 1 C. & P. 258 (affidavit of an illiterate, which should have been read over to her; Littledale, J.: "If in such a case the master, by the jurat, authenticates the fact of its having been read over, we give him credit"); R. v. Spencer, 1 C. & P. 260 (an answer in chancery, Abbott, C. J.: "The Courts always give credence to the signature of the magistrate or commissioner; and if his signature to the jurat is proved, that is sufficient evidence that the party was duly sworn; and if the place at which it was sworn is mentioned in the jurat, that is sufficient evidence that it was sworn at that place"); 1835, R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 148, per Alderson, B. (magistrate's jurat to an affidavit, evidence of the due swearing); 1904, Markey v. State, 47 Fla. 38, 37 So. 53.

The jurat suffices as 'prima facie' evidence of the taking of the oath, even though the witness if called to the stand cannot remember the circumstances (precisely as in the attestation of a subscribing witness, ante, § 1302): 1906, Komp v. State, 129 Wis. 20, 108 N. W. 46.

For the necessity of evidence of identity, see post, § 2529.

[2] The authorities for its application to certified copies of official and judicial records are collected post, §§ 1680, 1681, and for deed records, ante, § 1651. The authorities for thus authenticating certificates of affidavits and depositions are inextricably mingled with the administrative law above-mentioned, declaring such officers' authority, and cannot be considered here, but the statutes cited post, § 1681 (judicial records) and §§ 2161–2166 (authentication by official seal) will furnish a guide. The following illustrate the statutes and the questions which they raise.

UNITED STATES: Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5707 (Secretary of State of United States' certificate, admissible to prove the official character of an officer taking a deposition out of the State); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 30 (depositions taken out of the State "by any judge, master in chancery, notary § 1677. Certified Copies; General Principle (Scope of Authority; True Copies; Time and Manner of Certifying; Genuineness of Documents on File in the Office). It might have been supposed that, for the lawful custodian of documents in official custody, an authority could be implied (ante, § 1633), from the very nature of his office, to furnish copies that should be receivable in evidence. But the common law in England did not imply such an authority.

The reasons against the admission of certificates in general (ante, § 1674) could hardly be thought to forbid the recognition of certificates of copies of public records; for there were ample means of authenticating them, there was little risk of forgery, and the original record itself was open to all for the purpose of verifying doubt as to the copy's correctness. Moreover, the expense and the inconvenience of using a sworn copy [1] was greater, and the frequency of the need of resorting to copies of public records emphasized this consideration. It is difficult to learn the precise nature of the policy (if there was any conscious one) which sufficed to support this unenlightened doctrine. Considering the strong grasp which professional selfishness, with its deliberate multiplication of fees, had upon the methods of English law up to the middle of the 1800s,[2] and of the fixed notion (still there prevailing) as to the undesirability of making litigation less expensive, it may be surmised that these had some influence upon the professional satisfaction with that profitable rule of proof which retained the copying-fees and witness-fees chiefly in the hands of the attorney's clerks, as well as upon the favor shown by the Chancery to exemplified copies over office copies.[3] public, or justice of the peace out of this State, or other officer"; the return "shall be accompanied by a certificate of his official character, under the great seal of State, or under the seal of the proper court of record of the county or city where the deposition shall be taken"); 1900, Scott v. Bassett, 186 Ill. 98, 57 N. E. 835 (foreign deposition before a notary public; the certificate of the notary's official character need not "accompany" the deposition under R. S. c. 51, § 30, but may be produced at the trial); 1914, Tompkins v. Tompkins, 257 Ill. 562, 100 N. E. 965 (officer taking a deposition without the State of Illinois acts by virtue of Illinois authority to prepare the testimony for use in an Illinois court, and not by virtue of the foreign State's authority, hence the authority of the foreign State need not be shown; see comments on this case in Illinois Law Review, IX, 61).

Compare § 2165, post.

§ 1677. [1] The distinction between "certified" or "office" copies and "sworn" or "examined" copies has already been stated (ante, §§ 1648, 1273).

[2] Some account of this spirit and its illustrations may be seen in A Century of Law Reform, London, 1901, passim, and Charles Dickens' Bleak House.

[3] Mr. (afterwards L. C. J.) Denman, on coming in 1826 to preside at the Old Bailey Criminal Court, found that in certain indictments for larceny the punishment was capital on certain facts, but these facts though alleged in the indictment were in mercy never proved; "on inquiring into the reason for thus charging in the indictment a graver crime than is intended to be established in proof, I find that there is a higher fee for drawing an indictment for a capital offence!" (Arnould's Life of Denman, I, 212). "A striking illustration of the brevity which lawyers could attain, there being no interest to be verbose, is the judgment of death upon a felon, which, as there was no fee according to the number of words contained in it, was thus recorded: 'Sus. per coll.'" (Campbell, Lives of the Chancellors, VI, 118).

"As the costs were in proportion to the length of the pleadings, it will readily be seen that the solicitors had every temptation to prolixity. Thus, a witness testified before the Chancery Commission of 1852 (First Report of the Commission, App. A, p. 180): 'If I draw a document of 120 folios, I get £6, and if I compress that into 30 folios I get only 30 shillings. In fact, the worse the business is done, the better it is paid for';

Whatever the policy, the theory of the rule was perfectly clear: it was merely the general one, already noticed (ante, § 1674), that an authority to certify copies would not be implied from the nature of the office of a custodian of documents,[4] and therefore that an express authority was necessary, either by means of a special order in each instance or by a general order or statute. This theory is expounded in the following passages:

1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 229: "Here a difference is to be taken between a copy authenticated by a person trusted for that purpose, for there that copy is evidence without proof; and a copy given out by an officer of the court who is not trusted for that purpose, which is not evidence without proving it actually examined. The reason of the difference is, that where the law has appointed any person for any purpose, the law must trust him as far as he acts under its authority; therefore the chirograph of a fine is evidence of such fine, because the chirographer is appointed to give out copies of the agreements between the parties that are lodged of record. So where the deed is inrolled, the indorsement of the inrolment is evidence without further proof of the deed, because the officer is intrusted to authenticate such a deed by inrolment; [5] but if the officer of the court make out a copy, when he is not intrusted to that purpose, they ought to prove it examined, because being no part of his office, he is but a private man, and a private man's mere writing ought not to be credited without an oath. Therefore it is not enough to give in evidence a copy of a judgment, though it be examined by the clerk of the Treasury, because it is no part of the necessary office of clerk, for he is only intrusted to keep the records for the benefit of all men's perusal, and not to make out copies of them. So if the deed inrolled be lost, and the clerk of the peace make out a copy of the inrolment, that is no evidence without proving it examined; because the clerk is intrusted to authenticate the deed itself by inrolment, and not to give out copies of the inrolment. The office copies of depositions are evidence in chancery, but not at common law without examination with the roll; for though that Court have, for their own convenience, impowered their officers to make out such copies as should be evidence; yet the particular rules of their Courts are not taken notice of by the Courts of common law, and therefore they are not evidence in those courts. Where the fine is to be proved with proclamations (as it must be to bar a stranger) the proclamations must be examined with the roll, for though the chirographer is authorized by the common law to make out copies to the parties of the fine itself, yet he is not appointed by the statutes to copy the proclamations, and therefore his indorsement on the back of the fine is not binding." [6]

1816, BAYLEY, J., in Black v. Braybrook, 2 Stark. 8; Appleton v. Braybrook, 6 M. &. S. 37 (a copy of a Jamaica judgment by a clerk of court, without the seal of the Island or of the court, was rejected): "Mr. Erskine [of counsel] has put the question on the proper ground, that it is the act of an officer appointed to authenticate copies. But the facts do not support the position. There are some officers whose duty it is to deliver out copies, and who have not discharged their duty until they have delivered out copies to persons whose title is concerned. The chirographer of a fine, till this is done, has not performed his duty. There is a distinction between such acts and the making copies of a folio being, as I believe, 15 lines of 6 words each. . . . Then again, every party had to take office copies of every paper filed, or at least pay for them, on penalty of incurring the displeasure of the officials" (John Marshall Gest, The Lawyer in Literature, 1913, p. 23). Illustrative details of the unconscionable and intolerable conditions are given in Holdsworth's History of English Law, vol. I, 3d ed. 1922, p. 441; also post, § 1845, par. (B).

[4] Except for the ancient instance of the chirographer of a fine, which was perhaps not an exception.

[5] See ante, § 1650.

[6] This passage was founded closely upon Gilbert, Evidence, 24 (1726), and served to phrase the law for a century after its original framing; for it reappears also in substance in Peake, Phillipps, and Starkie.

records by an officer who has the custody of them. . . . Therefore the receiving authenticated copies in evidence must be confined to cases where the officer would not have performed his duty until he had delivered out a copy of the record." HOLROYD, J.: "'The distinction is plain between that which proceeds from the officer in the course of his duty in the office, and that which he is not specially authorized by his office to do. . . . An exemplification is under the seal of the court, which shows it to be the act of the Court, and it is equivalent when the act is done by an officer who has a duty cast on him for the express purpose."

This was for England the settled theory of the common law; and it naturally was found persisting, in some jurisdictions at least, in this country.[7] But in the United States the Federal Supreme Court early broke away from this tradition. It is not necessary to suppose that there was a professional inclination any the less strong to prefer the orthodox rule; it is probable that the conditions of the newer country, less fixed by tradition, merely made it easier for the enlightened proposition of Chief Justice Marshall to find acceptance. Under him was laid down by the Court the general principle that the lawful custodian of a public record has, by implication of his office, and without express order, an authority to certify copies:

1804, MARSHALL, C. J., in Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cr. 186, 236: "The sanction of an oath is required for their establishment [foreign laws], unless they can be verified by some other such high authority that the law respects it not less than the oath of an individual. In this case the edicts produced are not verified by oath. The consul has not sworn; he has only certified that they are truly copied from the originals. To give to this certificate the force of testimony it will be necessary to show that this is one of those consular functions to which, to use its own language, the laws of this country attach full faith and credit. Consuls, it is said, are officers known to the law of nations and are entrusted with high powers. This is very true; but they do not appear to be entrusted with the power of authenticating the laws of foreign nations. They are not the keepers of those laws. They can grant no official copies of them. There appears no reason for assigning to their certificate respecting a foreign law any higher or different degree of credit than would be assigned to their certificates of any other fact."

1833, MARSHALL, C. J., in U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. 51, 86: "The counsel for the claimant offered in evidence a copy, from the office of the keeper of public archives, of the original grant on which the claim is founded. . . . We think that on general principles of law a copy given by a public officer whose duty it is to keep the original ought to be given in evidence."

With the influence of the Federal Supreme Court thus early enlisted in support of this innovation, it soon found favor. The occasion for invoking a common-law principle arose comparatively seldom, for statutes early began to correct the English rule, and to deal in multiplicity with specific kinds of records; and subsequently in many jurisdictions a statute sanctioned the principle in general form. But the principle laid down by Chief Justice Marshall may be said to have become the orthodox common law of the United States; [8] and it still occasionally serves in practice where no statute has anticipated its need.

[7] 1852, Stewart v. Swanzey, 23 Miss. 505, semble; 1839, New Jersey R. & T. Co. v. Suydam, 17 N. J. L. 25, 60; 1854, State v. Cake, 24 N. J. L. 516 ("Where an officer is merely entrusted with the custody of records or papers, and is not authorized by statute to make copies, he has no more authority for that purpose than any other person"); 1894, West Jersey Traction Co. v. Board, 57 id. 313, 316, 30 Atl. 581. See also under New York and North Carolina, post, § 1680, for other indications of the same sort.

Certain deductions from the general principle may now be examined:

(1) Existence and scope of the authority. The certifier must be the lawful official custodian of the particular document; his authority, then, is to be sought in the administrative law which declares the duties of the various officers; the application of this principle to specific kinds of documents, under statute and precedent, is later examined (post, §§ 1680–1682). (a) It is this lawful custody which implies the authority to certify, and therefore the certificate need on principle merely state that the paper bearing it is a copy of a specified document existing in the certifier's custody. But where a statute has expressly made certain certified copies admissible, some Courts are found treating this statute as supplanting the common-law principle and as furnishing a definite rule which must be formally and precisely followed. Whether, for example, the certificate must predicate a "correct" or "complete" or "true" copy, is a question frequently considered, depending much on the wording of local statutes.[9] The technical treatment of the subject shown by some Courts is unjustifiable. Whether a single certificate suffices to cover copies of several documents is a mere matter of the mechanical unity of the papers

[8] 1850, New York Dry Dock v. Hicks, 5 McLean 111, 113; 1827, Thomas v. Tanner, 6 T. B. Monr. Ky. 52, 53; 1879, Board v. Hernandez, 31 La. An. 158, 159; 1882, Shutesbury v. Hadley, 133 Mass. 242, 247; 1827, Bettis v. Logan, 2 Mo. 2; 1852, Childress v. Cutler, 16 Mo. 24, 44; 1853, Soulard v. Allen, 18 Mo. 590, 595; 1855, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 21 Mo. 590, 596; 1897, Banking House v. Durr, 139 Mo. 660, 41 S. W. 227; 1858, Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 85, 95 ("the weight of authority seems to have established the rule"); 1896, Barcello v. Hapgood, 118 N. C. 712, 24 S. E. 124 (and here that official custody was allowed to be shown from the fact of deposit with the officer as a record, without proof of the statute prescribing his duty); 1847, Bryant v. Kelton, 1 Tex. 436.

[9] A few may be noted as illustrations: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1923 (when certified copies of writings are used, "the certificate must state in substance that the copy is a correct copy of the original, or of a specified part thereof, as the case may be"); 1881, Painter v. Hall, 75 Ind. 208, 214; 1883, Anderson v. Ackerman, 88 Ind. 481, 490; 1887, Yeager v. Wright, 112 Ind. 230, 234, 13 N. E. 707; 1896, Naanes v. State, 143 Ind. 299, 42 N. E. 609 (the statute authorized the custodian of a public record to certify that the copy was "true and complete," and he certified only to "a true copy"; excluded); 1839, Doe v. King, 3 How. Miss. 125, 136 (certificate that "the above is a correct representation," etc., not sufficient as a copy of a map); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10573 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); Or. Laws 1920, § 771 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); 1915, Evans v. Marvin, 76 Or. 540, 148 Pac. 1119 (certified copy of Justice's judgment, excluded because Lords Or. L. § 771 provides that a certificate of copy must recite a comparison with the original and this certificate did not; unsound, for the provision should have been treated as directory only; the Courts are so meek in wearing their self shackled intellectual chains); 1825, Edmiston v. Schwartz, 13 S. & R. Pa. 135 (a certificate that a record is "truly copied" imports a copying of the whole); 1883, Bonesteel v. Sullivan, 104 Pa. 9, 13 (copy of a record of a domestic State, certified as true, will be assumed to be complete); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 318 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1439 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); 1843, Treasurers v. Witsall, 1 Speer S. C. 220, 222 (under a statute admitting an "exact copy," a certificate of a balance struck in Treasury books is not a copy of entries therein); 1830, Burton v. Pettibone, 5 Yerg. Tenn. 443 ("truly copied from the records" is not equivalent to a full transcript); 1871, Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 303, 304 (adjutant-general's copy of a general order certified merely "official," not sufficient to show a "true copy").

Compare the citations post, § 1678 (certifying the effect of the document), and § 2108 (proving the whole of a document).

bearing the copies, and thus depends upon the circumstances of each case; [10] for there is no reason why the certificate should be formally repeated for every copy forming a part of a series of papers inherently apparent to be one legal whole. (b) The authority must of course exist at the time of certifying; a certificate, for example, from one whose office had expired would have no standing.[11] The office and authority existing, it is immaterial that the act of certifying is done after trial begun.[12] (c) That a deputy officer may properly certify for the chief officer nominally having custody has already been noticed (ante, § 1633, par. 8).

(2) Genuineness of the original. The officer's authority rests on his custody of the original; this custody, however, enables him to speak, not merely to the correctness of the copy, but also to the existence and genuineness of the original. The great obstacle, as already noticed (ante, § 1648), to the use of a register as evidence of a recorded private deed, was the registrar's inability to speak to the genuineness of the deed; and special means to qualify him in this respect had to be provided. This obstacle does not exist for an official record; for it is both originally prepared and thereafter preserved in the office; and although it may not have been prepared by the chief officer or custodian himself, still his knowledge of the affairs of the office as transacted by his subordinates is sufficiently direct to suffice as personal knowledge (ante, § 1635, par. 2):

1840, CATRON, J., in U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. 334, 346: "[A certified copy of an original in a public office] proves 'prima facie' the original to have been of file in the public office when it was made; and for this plain reason, the officer's certificate has accorded to it the sanctity of a deposition; he certifies 'that the preceding copy is faithfully drawn from the original, which exists in the secretary's office, under my charge.'"

This result is clear enough for documents actually having their inception within the office, such as a book of accounts, a court roll, or an ordinary official register. But many kinds of documents, preserved in official custody, are prepared without the premises of the office by private persons and are then filed or deposited in the office under a requirement of law, — such as bonds or affidavits of various sorts. In some of these instances, no doubt, the document is customarily acknowledged before the officer or otherwise verified by him before filing; in others — affidavits, for example — there has been already a due verification certified by some other officer (ante, § 1676).

[10] 1855, Pike v. Crehore, 40 Me. 503, 513 (copies of papers of record in a bankruptcy case; most of the papers, offered in a mass but separate, were not certified; on one of them was a proper certificate; all were held properly excluded); 1860, Com. v. Ford, 14 Gray Mass. 399 (one attestation at the end of all the documents on one paper, sufficient).

[11] 1850, Brown v. Scott, 2 Greene Ia. 454 (certificate of a justice of the peace after office expired, excluded).

Whether the second certificate of the officer authenticating the copying officer's certificate need state that his term exists, is a different question, considered post, § 1679.

[12] 1870, Rogers v. Stevenson, 16 Minn. 68, 70.

The mere fact of an erasure in the copy is not fatal: 1864, Johnston v. Ewing Female University, 35 Ill. 518, 528 (certificate of incorporation); 1864, Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161, 164 (power of attorney).

Nevertheless, many instances remain, e. g. chattel mortgages, in which the document, though required to be filed, has no means provided for the authentication of its genuineness before filing. Is the custodian's certified copy evidence of the genuineness of such documents? Singularly enough, no clear distinction on this point seems to have been generally taken by the Courts. They have definitely put on one side the case of a recorded deed (including under that term mortgages, powers of attorney, and the like), and have established the principle (ante, § 1648) that the registrar's certified copy shall not suffice where no means was provided for the registrar to inform himself of the deed's genuineness before recording. But, instead of classing with recorded deeds all other documents of private extra-official origin which were not authenticated before the filing, they have inclined rather to include all such documents indiscriminately with public or official records generally, as capable of being proved by a certified copy, in respect to genuineness as well as to contents. The question has rather been ignored than settled. In the few instances in which it has been dealt with, the rulings have been divided.[13]

[13] With the following cases compare those cited post, §§ 2158, 2159 (official custody as sufficient evidence of the genuineness of original documents produced from that custody); compare also the statutes cited post, §§ 1680, 1681, which often cover the point, and the statutes and cases cited ante, § 1651 (recorded conveyances).

ENGLAND: 1807, Duncan v. Scott, 1 Camp. 100, 102 (certified copy of a deposition of G., admitted, with no further evidence; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "If it is suspected that some one personated G., and that his signature is forgery, I will send to Chambers for the original examination; otherwise, the copy so attested and delivered [by the clerk] must be received and relied on").

CANADA: 1877, R. v. Wright, 17 N. Br. 363, 369 (under a statute making admissible certified copies of documents filed in a foreign court, a duly certified copy of an affidavit so filed is evidence of the affidavit's execution).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1806, U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. 412, 415 (cited post, § 1680); Alabama: 1869, Monts v. Stephens, 43 Ala. 217, 222 (constable's bond; a probate judge's certified copy is evidence only of the bond's being in his office, not of its execution, approval, or due filing); 1882, Martin v. Hall, 72 Ala. 587 (cited post, § 1680); 1887, Stevenson v. Moody, 85 Ala. 33, 4 So. 595 (cited post, § 1681); Connecticut: 1901, Barber v. International Co., 73 Conn. 587, 48 Atl. 758 (certified copy of a judicial record containing an assignment of a judgment, admitted as proving the purporting paper's presence in the court files; the effect left undecided); Georgia: 1881, Jackson v. Johnson, 67 Ga. 167, 180 (cited post, § 1680); 1897, Reppard v. Warren, 103 Ga. 198, 29 S. E. 817 (certified copy of State plat and grant, receivable to show execution, but semble only as preliminary to accounting for the absence of the State seal from the original, when, as here, in court); Indiana: 1842, Steel v. Pope, 6 Blackf. 176 (justice's certificate that a warrant is on file in his office, sufficient to authenticate); Kentucky: 1903, Burkhardt v. Loughridge, 116 Ky. 604, 76 S. W. 397 (a title-bond recorded; the record held not evidence of its execution); Maine: 1847, Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 308, 337 (copy of a document on file in court, sufficient if its signature is otherwise evidenced); Massachusetts: 1886, Com. v. Richardson, 142 Mass. 71, 73, 7 N. E. 26 (if a duly certified copy, made evidence by statute, of a lease in official custody, had been offered, "it may be that no proof would have been necessary of the signatures or handwriting of those commissioners who had executed the original lease or of the town officers [signing it]; such a duly authenticated copy of a public document showing an official act done by commissioners in discharge of a lawful duty and produced from proper custody having been made competent evidence, proof of handwriting or signatures is necessarily dispensed with; such proof would indeed be impossible in relation to a copy"); 1900, Smith v. Paul Boyton Co., 176 Mass. 217, 57 N. E. 367 (certified copies of a filed certificate of corporate organization, etc.; "the fact that they purported to be made and filed in pursuance of the law made it right to infer, from the copies themselves, that they were genuine"; no authorities cited); Michigan: 1878, Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82, 87 (bond filed in court; certified copy suffices); New Mexico: 1897, Field v. Cain, 9 N. M. 283, 50 Pac. 327 (an assignment of a judgment filed nearly seven years later; certified copy not evidence of genuineness); New York: 1803, Miller v. Livingston, 1 Cai. 349, 356 (letters deposited in a foreign Admiralty Court; whether assumed

But the general tendency is illustrated in the statutes dealing with certified copies of official documents (post, §§ 1680, 1681), which often declared the certified copy admissible, "without further proof," for "all records, papers, and documents lawfully on file" in the office, and thus apparently authorize the certified copy to evidence the genuineness of documents filed with the custodian without any guarantee of their genuineness; although by some statutes (as in Kentucky) this consequence is avoided and other evidence of execution is expressly declared to be necessary.

(3) The question is closely connected with another one, namely, the presumption of identity of person from identity of name (post, § 2529), and yet it is different; for the present difficulty is that the custodian filing a document bearing J. S. as signature cannot ordinarily know that any J. S. at all actually signed it; but, even supposing him to know that a J. S. did sign it, the question still remains whether that J. S. is the same person as the J. S. in the suit at bar. Thus this question of the presumption of identity arises equally for an adequate certified copy as well as for an inadequate one. The necessity of offering evidence of identity for affidavits, answers in chancery, marriage certificates, and other kinds of documents is considered under the presumption of identity of person (post, § 2529).

(4) Merely satisfying the rule of producing the original, by showing the original lost or otherwise unavailable, will not justify the use of a certified copy not made under due authority.[14] But where the certified copy is thus not usable as such because of lack of authority in the certifier, the defective copy may of course be proved in the ordinary way (ante, §§ 1277–1281) by a competent witness making it a sworn copy.[15] Obviously, however, no certified copy whatever may be used where the original record itself is not admissible under the rules of evidence for the purpose in hand.[16] genuine on production of copies deposed to by a registrar of court, undecided); North Carolina: 1845, Butler v. Durham, 3 Ired. Eq. 589 (certified copy of a bond filed in court; the bond's execution required to be shown); 1860, Short v. Currie, 8 Jones 42, semble (certified copy of a clerk's bond, registered after due probate, sufficient to prove execution, at common law and under statute); Pennsylvania: 1856, Hartz v. Com., 1 Grant Pa. 359 (bond of a justice, certified by the clerk of Court where approved, receivable); Tennessee: 1879, Amis v. Marks, 3 Lea 568, 570 (cited post, § 1680); Vermont: 1831, Robinson v. Gillman, 3 Vt. 163, 165 (attested copy of a land-warrant proves "the existence of the original," while it is "a part of the files"); 1836, Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463, 467 (certified copy of a 'habeas corpus' writ, admissible; the rule applying to copies "not only of records, technically so called, but also of all papers, files, rolls, etc., legally deposited in his office and there required to remain"); 1870, Benedict v. Heineberg, 43 Vt. 231, 235 (certified copy of a county-clerk's record of execution, showing the return of the officer and the certificate of the town-clerk as to the fact of record with the town-clerk, is evidence of that fact).

Distinguish the following: 1877, Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 Mich. 350, 362, 364 (part of a record in one court introduced in evidence in another; whether a transcript of the latter record authenticates the former, undecided); 1897, Stanhilber v. Graves, 97 Wis. 515, 73 N. W. 48 (a copy of a recorded attachment does not prove due issuance of it).

For the question whether the certified copy must show or state the existence of a seal on the original, see post, § 2105.

[14] 1872, Musick v. Barney, 49 Mo. 458, 461. Compare § 1188, ante (that proof of loss does not dispense with proof of execution).

[15] 1877, Post v. Rich, 36 Mich. 16; 1872, Groff v. Ramsey, 19 Minn. 44, 60; 1872, Musick v. Barney, 49 Mo. 458, 460.

Compare § 1226, ante. Note that a certified copy is not preferred to a sworn copy (ante, § 1273).

[16] 1842, State v. Wells, 11 Oh. 261; 1871, Armstrong v. State, 21 Oh. St. 357, 360;

(5) Of course, the original itself always suffices; the statutory permission for copies is not meant to be exclusive (ante, § 1186).

§ 1678. Same: Certificate as to Effect or Non-Existence of Original; Certificate of Search. The authority to certify a copy implies that the terms set forth by the officer as representing the original in his custody must be a literal copy, not merely the substance or the effect, of the original's terms:

1833, MORTON, J., in Oakes v. Hill, 14 Pick. 448: "Clerks of religious and other corporations, and other recording officers, may make and verify copies of their records, and in so doing act under the obligation of their oath of office. Of the verity of such copies their certificates are evidence. But it is no part of their duty to certify facts, nor can their certificates be received as evidence of such facts."

1850, METCALF, J., in Greene v. Durfee, 6 Cush. 362, 363: "As a general rule an official certificate of what is contained in a record, deed, or other instrument is not admissible in evidence, any further than it is made so by statute."

1872, WELLS, J., in Wayland v. Ware, 109 Mass. 251: "The certificate . . . that it so 'appears from the records of this office' was improperly admitted. To prove a fact of record by a record not produced requires a duly authenticated copy of the record itself or of so much thereof as relates to the fact in question."

1885, RUGER, C. J., in Wood v. Knapp, 100 N. Y. 114, 2 N. E. 632: "[The officer] has power to certify to the correctness of official papers . . . , but beyond that his certificate has no more effect than the opinion of any other person."

The policy of conceding to a custodian of documents no further authority than this rests on the common-law doctrine of Completeness (post, § 2108), which requires that the whole of a document be shown forth, in proving any part of it, so that the tribunal may judge better of the significance of the whole and the precise interpretation of any part. At common law, therefore, it was entirely settled that no custodian had authority to certify any less than the entire and literal terms of the original, — in short, a copy in the strict sense of the word; and the rule was applied to all varieties of documents.[1]

1899, Heintz v. Thayer, 92 Tex. 658, 50 S. W. 929 (overruling Ammons v. Dwyer, 78 Tex. 639).

Compare § 1226, ante. The statutes making certified copies admissible have sometimes expressly conditioned them as usable "equally with the original," to avoid this doubt. But no such doubt need ever have been suggested.

§ 1678. [1] Compare the cross-reference given in note 2, infra, and the cases cited ante, § 1677, note 9; and distinguish the question treated in § 1244, ante (testimony on the stand, summarizing the tenor of a series of documents): Federal: 1832, Leland v. Wilkinson, 6 Pet. 317 (Secretary of State's certificate as to the effect and tenor of certain laws, excluded); 1917, U. S. Slicing Machine Co. v. Wolf Sayer & Heller Co., D. C. N. D. Ill., 243 Fed. 412 (English official certificate of change of corporate name, excluded; the opinion admits that the ruling is "largely technical"; a pity that the judiciary binds but cannot loose itself!); Alabama: 1884, Bonner v. Phillips, 77 Ala. 427, 428 (a certificate that the land-office "records . . . show that," etc., excluded); Arizona: 1901, Brill v. Christy, 7 Ariz. 217, 63 Pac. 757; Arkansas: 1842, Taylor v. Auditor, 4 Ark. 574 (auditor's certificate that his books showed a sheriff indebted in certain sums, excluded); 1842, Mays v. Johnson, 4 Ark. 613, 616 (land-officer's certificate that certain land-claims had been rejected by his office, inadmissible); 1848, Johnson v. Mays, 8 Ark. 386, 388 (same); 1905, Kelley v. Laconia, L. Dist., 74 Ark. 202, 85 S. W. 249 (U. S. land office commissioner's letter as to entries in the office, excluded); Columbia (Dist.): 1902, U. S. v. Lew Poy Dew, D. C., 119 Fed. 786 (U. S. Commissioner's certificate of adjudication of a Chinese immigrant's status, excluded as not being a copy); Connecticut: 1851, New Milford v. Sherman, 21 Conn. 101, 112; 1896, Enfield v. Ellington, 67 Conn. 459, 34 Atl. 818 (a certificate by a State adjutant-general that a certain name was on a regiment muster-roll, etc., excluded); Georgia: 1855, Miller v. Reinhart, 18 Ga. 239,

But here the rigid logic of the Courts was inconsistent with good sense. The result was a rule too strict for practical convenience. In a vast number of cases, the tenor of a record or an entry is quickly ascertainable, is open to no difference of opinion, and can be summarily stated without a literal transcription; the possibilities of harm are further diminished by the publicity of the record and its easy access for the detection of error. Accordingly, by statute, the use of certificates of the effect or substance of a document has been widely sanctioned.[2] Some of these statutes deal with specific classes

245 (clerk's certificate of the import of a naturalization record, excluded); 1857, Dillon v. Mattox, 21 Ga. 113, 116; 1892, Lamar v. Pearre, 90 Ga. 377, 381, 17 S. E. 92 (clerk's certificate that a cause was dismissed; excluded); 1901, Daniel v. Braswell, 113 Ga. 372, 38 S. E. 829; Illinois: 1840, Greenwood v. Spiller, 3 Ill. 503 (certificate of heirship by a judge of probate, excluded); 1859, Morgan Co. Bank v. People, 21 Ill. 304 (bank report filed with a State auditor; letter of the auditor summarizing the contents, excluded); 1883, Golder v. Bressler, 105 Ill. 419, 424 (certificate by a Secretary of State, of the fact of an officer's appointment, excluded); 1905, Glos v. Dyche, 214 Ill. 417, 73 N. E. 757 (tax judgment; the clerk's certified copy of the proceedings "so far as relates to the premises described" held sufficient, where the only material part was in fact included; the clerk's conclusion being thus immaterial); Iowa: 1868, Goodrich v. Conrad, 24 Ia. 254, 256; Kentucky: 1828, Bowlin v. Polock, 7 T. B. Monr. 26, 43 (register's certificate of dates, quantities, etc., of recorded warrants, excluded); 1848, Cornelison v. Browning, 9 B. Monr. 50, 51 (clerk's certificate of the fact of proof of a foreign will, not received instead of copy of record); Louisiana: 1812, Kersham v. Collins, 2 Mart. 245; 1823, Smoot v. Russell, 1 Mart. N. S. 522, 526; 1827, Balfour v. Chew, 5 Mart. N. S. 517, 520; 1841, Taylor v. Jeffries, 1 Rob. 1; 1841, Briggs v. Campbell, 19 La. 524, 526; 1842, Judice v. Chretien, 3 Rob. 15; 1858, Wiggins v. Guier, 13 La. An. 356, 357; Maine: 1838, Owen v. Boyle, 15 Me. 147; 1842, McGuire v. Sayward, 9 Shepl. 230, 233 (certificate that a militia company "is designated in the records of this office as the B company," excluded); 1851, English v. Sprague, 53 Me. 440, 442 (a justice's certificate as to a particular fact in a record, excluded); Massachusetts: 1833, Oakes v. Hill, 14 Pick. 442, 448; 1838, Robbins v. Townsend, 20 Pick. 351; 1850, Greene v. Durfee, 6 Cush. 362; 1872, Wayland v. Ware, 109 Mass. 251; 1874, Hanson v. S. Scituate, 115 Mass. 340; Michigan: 1894, Tessman v. United Friends, 103 Mich. 185, 61 N. W. 261; 1911, General Conference Ass'n v. Michigan S. & B. Ass'n, 166 Mich. 504, 132 N. W. 94 (probate register's certificate to an administrator's appointment "as appears by the records," held inadmissible); Mississippi: 1839, Doe v. King, 3 How. 125, 135; 1849, Cockerel v. Wynn, 12 Sm. & M. 117, 123 (land-officer's certificate that a patent for C. was in his office, etc., excluded); Missouri: 1840, Gurno v. Janis, 6 Mo. 330, 333 (certificate of confirmation of land-title, received, though not a copy, because expressly authorized by statute); 1853, Soulard v. Allen, 18 Mo. 596, 595, semble (same); 1862, Cutter v. Waddingham, 33 Mo. 269, 282 (certificate of official surveyor as to the identity of a lot, excluded); 1874, Washington Co. v. R. Co., 58 Mo. 372, 377 (State auditor's certificate of valuation of property by Board of Equalization, excluded); 1878, Wilhite v. Barr, 67 Mo. 284 (certified "abstract" of land-office records, received as a copy); Nebraska: 1909, Sampson v. Northwestern Nat'l L. Ins. Co., 85 Nebr. 319, 123 N. W. 302 (State auditor's certificate of securities on file, etc., excluded); New Jersey: 1896, Francis v. Mayor, 58 N. J. L. 522, 33 Atl. 853 (certificate of the adjutant-general summarizing a soldier's record, excluded); New York: 1885, Wood v. Knapp, 100 N. Y. 114, 2 N. E. 632; North Carolina: 1796, Wilcox v. Ray, 1 Hayw. 410 (certificate that a judgment had been entered for so much and execution had issued; excluded); 1895, State v. Champion, 116 N. C. 987, 21 S. E. 700 (certificate of a record of property listed with the tax-register, excluded); North Dakota: 1903, Sykes v. Beck, 12 N. D. 242, 96 N. W. 844 (certificate of a true copy of "all that pertains to the county tax levy," etc., excluded); Ohio: 1832, Bank of U. S. v. White, Wright 51 (clerk's certificate that a sale order had issued on a judgment, excluded); 1867, Davis v. Gray, 17 Oh. St. 330, 345 (certificate that a patent was issued, excluded); Pennsylvania: 1795, Talbot v. Jansen, 3 Dall. 133, 137 (certificate of a collector of port that his book-entry showed payment, excluded); 1823, Jones v. Hollopeter, 10 S. & R. 328; 1826, Vickroy v. Skelley, 14 S. & R. 372, 374 (certificate by a surveyor-general of a "connected draft of eleven tracts of land," though not a copy of any particular draft, received for convenience' sake, where not used to show title); Rhode Island: 1868, Hopkins v. Millard, 9 R. I. 41; Tennessee: 1808, Barry v. Rhea, 1 Overt. 345 (historical statement of judicial proceedings by a clerk, excluded); 1834, Simmons v. Wood, 6 Yerg. 518, 522 (clerk's certified statement that writs recorded were served, insufficient); 1849, Harris v. Anderson, 9 Humph. 779 (clerk's certificate of probate of a foreign will, not copying the probate, excluded); Texas: 1877, State v. Cuellar, 47 Tex. 295, 302; 1882, Buford v. Bostick, 58 Tex. 63, 67; 1886, Allen v. Read, 66 Tex. 13, 19, 17 S. W. 115 (recorder's certificate of the existence of a lost deed, admitted, but not to prove execution or contents); Vermont: 1867, Barnet v. Woodbury, 40 Vt. 266, 268 (clerk's certificate of extracts from grand lists of assessment, insufficient); West Virginia: 1874, Hubbard v. Kelley, 8 W. Va. 46, 53; 1899, Roe v. Philippi, 45 W. Va. 785, 32 S. E. 224; Wisconsin: 1853, Gates v. Winslow, 1 Wis. 650, 657; 1881, Cornelius v. Kessel, 53 Wis. 395, 401, 10 N. W. 520; 1864, Bigelow v.

Blake, 18 Wis. 520 (land-office receiver's certificate that A. B. appeared as purchaser, excluded); 1867, Farrand v. R. Co., 21 Wis. 435, 438 (similar); 1879, Culbertson v. Coleman, 47 Wis. 193, 2 N. W. 124 (similar certificate admitted, under a statute cited infra, note 2); 1888, Reed v. R. Co., 71 Wis. 399, 402, 37 N. W. 225 (similar certificate by a clerk of land-commissioners, excluded as not covered by statute).

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 2109, 2110.

[2] Besides the following statutes, compare those cited ante, under § 1674 (Sundry Certificates), § 1659 (Land-Office Registers), § 1675 (Notaries' Certificates), § 1676 (Certificates of Execution), § 1238 (Letters of Administration), and post, § 1705 (Abstracts of Title); the ambiguity of nomenclature renders it difficult to classify some of them: Alabama: 1901, First National Bank v. Lippman, — Ala. —, 29 So. 18 (certificate of clerk of Supreme Court, admitted under Code § 3860, cited ante, § 1674); Arizona: § 1742 (delinquent official accounts; official custodian's transcript showing statement of accounts, admissible); Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1752 (clerk's certificate under official seal that letters have issued to executor, administrator or guardian, admissible); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6540 (official certificate of the U. S. land-office register or receiver "to any act or matter on record in his office," admissible); § 6551 (certificate of the head, etc. of any executive department of this State "as to the contents of or any fact or matter shown by the records in his department as well as to facts not shown by the records," etc., admissible); Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 1036 (State comptroller's certificate of balance due, admissible in suit against persons delinquent in payments to State treasury); § 5480 (liquor offenses: U. S. internal revenue collector's certificate that records show a revenue license issued, admissible); Georgia: 1854, Henderson v. Hackney, 16 Ga. 521 (certificate of data in records, admitted, though not a copy, under St. 1830, Code § 5211, cited post, § 1680); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7539 (appointment of executor or administrator is provable by the clerk's certificate under court seal, that he has given bond and is qualified, and that letters unrevoked have issued, together with a copy of the minute of appointment); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 20 ("the official certificate of any register or receiver of any land-office of the U. S., to any fact or matter on record in his office," is admissible, in particular, "of the entry and purchase of any tract of land within his district"; the Secretary of State's certificate under seal is receivable to prove the genuineness of the signature of the register or receiver); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4641, Comp. Code § 7348 (land-office receiver's certificate that the books show a sale, is proof of title against all but a holder of an actual patent); § 4642 Rev. Code § 7349 (land-office receiver's or register's certificate of entry of land, admissible); Louisiana: St. 1908, No. 40 (U. S. internal revenue collector's certificate showing that a permit for liquor-sale was issued to a person, admissible as 'prima facie' evidence); 1917, State v. Wilson, 141 La. 404, 75 So. 95 (certificate of U. S. internal revenue collector showing issuance of liquor license, under La. St. 1908, No. 40; held admissible, but not 'prima facie' evidence in a criminal case, on the principle of § 1398, ante); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 134 (adjutant-general's certificate as to the facts of service of a person from Maine enlisting in the Federal service, as found upon his records, admissible); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. § 20, § 16 (Court clerk's certificate of the securities on constable's bond and the time of becoming such, admissible); Art. 93, § 48 (court clerk's certificate that letters testamentary have been granted to a party, admissible); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1914, § 8452 (certificate of an officer or acting officer of any department of the U. S. government, "to any fact appearing of record in his department," authenticated by official seal, if any, admissible); § 8455 (certificate by the register of a land-office of a survey, etc., "or other facts in relation to such lands, taken from the books of such land-office," or from a certificate indorsed on the original filed plat, admissible); 1867, Dorman v. Ames, 12 Minn. 451, 454 (land-office register's certificate of the filing of a declaration, admitted under statute); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 13026 (State board of equalization's proceedings in assessment of railroads; State auditor's certificate of board's action, to be evidence, without producing the record, etc.); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 390 (State comptroller's certificate of extract from records, stating that it contains all relating to a certain piece of land, admissible); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5363, 5364 (clerk's certificate of the effect of a record, in certain actions against public officers, admissible); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3696 of documents only, while others (not so numerous as they should be) are broadly inclusive in their terms. The policy of this innovation, when judiciously applied, cannot be doubted (ante, § 1636).

(7) Upon the common-law principle closely related to that just stated, a custodian of documents equally lacked authority to certify that a specific document did not exist in his office or that a particular entry was not to be found in a register. Whether a Court would go so far in a given instance as to require a copy of the entire group of entries or integral series of documents was not entirely settled; but it was certain that the only evidence receivable would be the testimony on the stand of one who had made a search (usually of the custodian himself), and that the custodian's certificate of due search and inability to find was not receivable under the present Exception.[3] But this rule, too, partook of an excess of formality, and imposed inconvenience (certificate under official seal "to any fact or facts contained in the papers, documents, or records of their offices," by the officers enumerated post, § 1680, admissible); § 3711 (appointment and qualification of an executor, administrator, or guardian, provable by the proper clerk's certificate under official seal; so also id. § 3327, for an executor or administrator); § 1132 (Secretary of State's certificate of filing of a charter, admissible); 1906, Smithers v. Lowrance, 100 Tex. 77, 93 S. W. 1064 (State land commissioner's certificates of contents of his records, admitted under the statute; but the precise distinctions taken are not clear); Virginia: Code 1919, § 1612 (State board of medical examiners; clerks of court's certificate of lack of record of license, to be evidence); Washington: 1911, State v. Polk, 66 Wash. 411, 119 Pac. 846 (certificate of result of local option election, admitted under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6297); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, §§ 4166-6168 (provision made for certificates by the Secretary of State, register of a land-office, etc., to the title to lands as appearing from their books); § 4170 (adjutant-general's certificate as to "any facts which appear from the books, files and records in his office," admissible); § 4171 (certificate of transcript, by a county clerk or treasurer, of tax records, admissible).

Compare the citations post, §§ 2109, 2110 (completeness of documents).

[3] Compare with the following the cases cited ante, § 1244 (testimony to the non-existence of a record or entry, without producing the entire book or files); Arkansas: 1878, Hendry v. Willis, 33 Ark. 833, 834, 838 (letter from a U. S. land-office commissioner, stating that a location was not among the records, excluded); Florida: 1896, Parker v. Cleaveland, 37 Fla. 39, 19 So. 344 (statement that no record existed, excluded); Georgia: 1857, Martin v. Anderson, 21 Ga. 301, 308 (certificate that no entry of a name appears, excluded); 1898, Greer v. Fergerson, 104 Ga. 552, 30 S. E. 943 (certificate that no commission of a judge was on record, excluded); Illinois: 1855, Cross v. Pinckneyville M. Co., 17 Ill. 54 (certificate by the Secretary of State that no organization-papers had been filed, excluded); 1876, Beardstown v. Virginia, 81 Ill. 541, 544 (certificate of a clerk that no record of naturalization existed, excluded); Indiana: 1855, Stoner v. Ellis, 6 Ind. 152, 161 (certificate of the patent-commissioner that no such patent had issued, excluded; deposition required); 1858, Wright v. Bundy, 11 Ind. 398, 407 (certificate of the Secretary of State that there was no other notary named S. S. but one, excluded); 1871, Lacey v. Marnan, 37 Ind. 168, 171 (Stoner v. Ellis, approved); Iowa: 1906, Colton's Estate, 129 Ia. 542, 105 N. W. 1008 (a certificate of the lack of a record of a particular document is inadmissible without statute); Kentucky: 1913, Com. v. O'Bryan, U. & Co., 153 Ky. 406, 155 S. W. 1126 (official certificate that a document is not on file, excluded); Louisiana: 1842, Exchange & B. Co. v. Boyce, 3 Rob. La. 308 (Morphy, J.: "Notaries can only legally certify copies of proceedings in their offices; any other fact within their knowledge must be disclosed on oath"; rejecting a notary's certificate that no protest had been filed); Porto Rico: 1919, Cerecede v. Medina, 27 P. R. 750 (tax deed; treasurer's certificate of non-entries in records, excluded); Tennessee: 1796, Wilcox v. Ray, 1 Hayw. 410 (certificate of loss, excluded, "the clerk not being appointed by law to certify the loss of a record"); 1806, Ayres v. Stewart, 1 Overt. 221 (certificate of a grant-custodian that no record could be found, excluded); Vermont: 1843, Hill v. Bellows, 15 Vt. 727, 734 (clerk's certificate that no conveyance was on record, excluded).

Contra: 1826, Vickroy v. Skelley, 14 S. & R. Pa. 372, 374 (certificate from a surveyor-general, etc., that a document was not in his office, receivable); 1848, Apperson v. Ingram, 12 Mo. 59, semble (certificate by a justice of the loss of his predecessor's records, sufficient).

and expense where it was unnecessary. The certificate of a custodian that he has diligently searched for a document or an entry of a specified tenor and has been unable to find it ought to be usually as satisfactory for evidencing its non-existence in his office as his testimony on the stand to this effect would be; and accordingly by statute in a few jurisdictions custodians' certificates of this sort have been expressly made admissible.[4]

§ 1679. Same: Authentication of the Copy. Suppose the law, in a given case, clearly to permit the use of a certified copy; it remains for the offeror to establish that the paper offered by him is indeed the certified copy allowed by the law, — in short, to authenticate it. For example, let it be settled that a custodian's certified copy is admissible, and let the public document whose contents are to be proved to be an order of survey by the county commissioners of highways; and let a paper be offered purporting to be a certified copy, by J. S. the county clerk, of the original warrant lawfully in his custody. Here it still remains to be ascertained that the county clerk is in fact the lawful custodian of that class of documents, that the person J. S. is in fact the county clerk, and that the signature J. S. was in truth placed there by the genuine J. S. (or, if there is a seal, that the seal was genuinely his seal placed there by him).

These three elements are necessarily involved in the admission of the paper offered, — the authority of the county clerk, the incumbency of J. S. as clerk, and the genuineness of the signature or seal. The establishment of these three elements is commonly spoken of as Authentication. Perhaps they may be assumed without evidence; or perhaps slight evidence will suffice, or perhaps definite kinds of evidence may be formally prescribed; but their establishment in some manner is inevitable. These elements are logically involved in the offer of evidence. Doubtless many who meet in practice the formalities of authentication, and do not attempt to analyze the principles involved, are apt to regard them as merely encrusted traditions or obnoxious technicalities having no reason for existence. But it is not so. Whatever the variety of mode or the seeming technicality of detail, these rules exist because there is an inherent element of fact that must somehow be met and disposed of.

[4] Compare the statutes cited ante, § 1674 (sundry certificates); and § 1633, n. 6 (absence of an entry in an official record, as evidence of the facts not having occurred); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 6551 (quoted supra, n. 2); 1921, Lamping v. Lamping, — Colo. —, 199 Pac. 418 (chattel mortgage); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4640, Comp. Code § 7347 (like Nebr. Rev. St. § 8916); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12510 (legal custodian's certificate that a paper, etc., after diligent examination cannot be found, admissible); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8429 (certificate under official seal by the legal custodian of a document that "he has made diligent search in his office for such instrument, and that it cannot be found," admissible); Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1972, Hem. § 1632 (certificate under official seal by an officer having legal custody of a record or paper "that he has made diligent search in his office for the record or paper, and that it cannot be found therein," admissible "as if the officer personally testified"); 1882, Tigner v. McGehee, 60 Miss. 185, 192 (chancery clerk's certificate of inability to find a document, admitted under statute); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8916 (public officer's certificate of "diligent and ineffectual search" for a paper in his office, admissible); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 366 (official custodian's certificate that a paper cannot be found after diligent search, admissible); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 513 (cited ante, § 1674, n. 7); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 12694 (practicing medicine without a license; certificate by secretary of State medical board that the records show "no such certificate to practice. . . has been issued," admissible); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 178, § 4 (pharmacy-board secretary's certificate as to a matter of record or the "non-existence of any matter in the record," admissible); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 7749 (State board of dental examiner's records; secretary's certificate under official seal "that any person is or is not a legally licensed or registered dentist," admissible); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5578 (certificate of "diligent and ineffectual search" for a paper in his office, by a public officer, receivable); Texas: Rev. St. 1911 § 1321 (foreign corporation's permit to do business; State secretary's certificate that none has been filed, admissible); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, §§ 1050, 1051, 1061 (secretary of State's certificate of no record of a corporate organization, admissible to show expiration of charter for non-payment of license tax); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4163 (legal custodian's certificate, under official seal, if any, "that he has made diligent examination in his office for such paper, instrument, or document, and that it cannot be found," admissible; so, also for a certificate by a chief of the commissioners of public lands under their official seal); 1905, State v. Rosenthal, 123 Wis. 102, 442 N. W. 49 (the foregoing statute is not exclusive of the method of proof noted in § 1244, ante).

(1) Authentication by seal or by a second official certificate. It is of course possible to meet this triple element of fact in the ordinary way, namely, by summoning competent witnesses to the stand, who will testify (in the above example) that the county clerk is the lawful custodian of the county commissioners' highway warrants, that J. S. is county clerk, and that this is J. S.'s signature or seal. But this summoning of witnesses is precisely the inconvenience which the use of officially certified copies is designed to avoid; and accordingly the policy of the principle would be in danger of substantial defeat if there were not other more convenient means of meeting the requirements of these elements involved in authenticating the copy itself. These other means are furnished by three well-established doctrines, which combine in various ways every expedient that is resorted to for the purpose, — the doctrine of authentication (post, §§ 2161–2169), the doctrine of judicial notice (post, § 2576), and some additional applications of the present Exception for official statements. By the doctrine of authentication, the existence, upon the document, of a purporting impression of a certain seal or signature is taken as sufficient evidence that the seal or signature is genuinely all that it purports to be. By the doctrine of judicial notice, no evidence need be offered that the local law prescribing the authority is as alleged, nor that certain persons are the officers they are alleged to be; these facts, being in theory known to the Court, may be assumed without evidence. By the doctrine of the present Exception, the hearsay statement of a higher officer, made in the shape of an official certificate, may be receivable to evidence the authority and the incumbency and the seal or signature of a lower officer; at common law, the Executive (represented by the great seal of State), as the source of all lower offices, was alone recognized as having authority to make such a certificate; but by statutes the certificate of numerous other kinds of superior officers have been expressly recognized for specific purposes. By combining these three doctrines, then, the authentication of a certified copy can be easily accomplished. This may be illustrated by following out the application of these doctrines to the instance taken above, tracing it first as a domestic certificate, and then as a foreign one.

(a) Suppose a paper purporting to be a certified copy by J. S., as clerk of a domestic county, of a highway warrant lawfully within his custody. The three elements to be supplied are the authority of such clerks to be custodians of such documents, the incumbency of J. S. as clerk, and the genuineness of the signature and seal. Here, (a') by the doctrine of judicial notice, the domestic law fixing the custody need not be evidenced, for the Court knows it; (a'') the incumbency of J. S. as clerk need not be evidenced, for the Court knows and therefore notices judicially the incumbencies of the principal domestic officers, and this would probably include the case of a county clerk (post, § 2576); (a''') the genuineness of the seal is presumed without other evidence (post, § 2166), though whether this would be done for the signature alone, lacking a seal, would be doubtful. The three elements are thus disposed of. For certified copies by other officers the result might or might not be the same; but the same processes and doctrines would be involved. The statutes often make express provision; yet they all involve some mode of employing the same processes. But for domestic certificates there has been little real need for express statutes.

(b) Suppose now a similar certificate purporting to come from the clerk of a county in a foreign State. Here the foreign law regulating the custody of such documents cannot be judicially noticed without evidence, for the Court in theory does not know it (post, § 2573). For the same reason the incumbency of J. S. as clerk cannot be judicially noticed; the Court in theory not knowing who are officers of a foreign State. So also, finally, the genuineness of the seal or signature of a foreign subordinate officer cannot be presumed; of foreign officers not representing the State (post, § 2163), the notary (post, § 2165), and perhaps the Supreme Court (post, §§ 1681, 2164), are the only ones whose seals may be presumed genuine. There is thus a halt in the process. Yet if possible a way must be found to authenticate the document without calling witnesses. Is there no other application of the doctrines in question which can be invoked to answer the purpose? Does the Court know nothing and can it presume nothing that will suffice? The Court knows at least that the Executive (represented, in the English theory of the common law, by the King) is the source of office, the appointive and supervising functionary for all other officers; the symbol of this supreme executive authority is the great seal of State, the affixing of which is itself always an act of State; therefore, the statement of the King, or other supreme Executive, as to the proper custody of official documents, and as to the incumbent of a particular office, would be admissible testimony under any conditions; and the official certificate of this supreme Executive (unattainable in person) would be properly receivable under the present Exception as an official statement fulfilling its requirements. If such a certificate can be obtained, it will suffice. Now the affixing of the great seal of State has always been regarded as equivalent to such a certificate, whether words of certifying are expressly set forth or not; the act of affixing it is itself an Executive act, having such an import.[1] Moreover, the genuineness of a foreign seal of State is always assumed (post, § 2163); i. e. the fact of the presence upon a document of an impression purporting to be that of the seal of State is sufficient without other evidence. With these two doctrines in combination, then, the purpose is attained. The impression of the foreign great seal of State is presumed genuine; being genuine, it is equivalent to a certificate by the Executive that the custody of the document in question is lawfully with the officer in question, that J. S. is that officer, and that the seal or signature of that officer (which must of course in theory be sufficiently known to the Executive or appointing power) is genuinely upon the certified copy. — Such is the mode in which a certified copy by a foreign officer can be adequately authenticated, without calling witnesses and merely by resort to doctrines of law otherwise well accepted.

Suppose, however, that the certifying officer is a clerk of court, not an ordinary administrative officer; here, working through the same process, the result can be obtained with slightly different formalities. The clerk of court, by the English common law (post, § 1681), is not authorized, merely as custodian, to certify copies, but must receive a special order in each instance; the seal of his court (presumably affixed by the judge) is equivalent to such an order; consequently his authority is sufficiently shown by the affixing of the court seal. Now if the seal of a foreign court can be presumed genuine, the end is gained; for if the seal is genuine, then we have an order by the Court, borne upon the certified copy itself, authorizing him to make out this very paper, and in effect stating that this copy was genuinely made out by a person having authority to do so. Whether the seal of a foreign court would be presumed genuine was perhaps doubtful at common law (post, §§ 1681, 2164), but if it would be so presumed, the purpose of authentication, for that class of documents, was accomplished in this special way.

The numerous varieties of statutes, then, which sanction some form of authentication, all have the common purpose of meeting these unavoidable elements and of furnishing a definite, simple, and convenient method of authentication. The statutes aim sometimes merely to declare the common law and to make certain that which was unsettled. Sometimes they go further, and endeavor to lessen the supposed inconveniences of the common-law requirements; for example, they may accept the certificate of a foreign city mayor or of a county clerk as to the authority, incumbency, and genuineness of seal or signature of a subordinate official, and may presume the genuineness of the seal of the mayor or county clerk, instead of requiring the certificate of the supreme Executive under the seal of State and of presuming this seal genuine; the object being to forestall the inconvenience of going a long distance from a local district to a central office of government to obtain the affixing of the seal of State. There was certainly room for reform in this respect in the rules of the common law; and experience seems not to have indicated that the reforms were too radical. But, however these statutory modes may differ in detail from the common-law rules, the process involved is the same, and rests upon the inherent necessity of dealing in some manner with the logical elements of the proof. These statutory provisions, it may be remarked, though dealing thus in effect with the widely separated doctrines of judicial notice, presumed genuineness, and hearsay official statement, are nevertheless usually associated in enactment with the statutory provisions authorizing certain kinds of officers, or custodian-officers in general, to furnish certified copies to be admissible. It was natural, when declaring certified copies admissible, to provide in the same place for a definite mode of authenticating them; and hence the two sets of rules — the admissibility of certified copies, and the proper modes of authenticating such copies — are customarily provided for at the same time by the same statutory act.[2]

§ 1679. [1] The authority for this can be sufficiently seen in §§ 1680, 1681, post.

(2) Authentication by other testimony. The whole purpose of the process of authentication by presumed genuineness, judicial notice, and certificates of authority, is to avoid the inconvenience and expense of calling witnesses in the ordinary way to prove that which is seldom fairly disputable. The formalities so available by the common law or by statute are thus clearly not prescribed for their own sake, as being a necessary accompaniment of the process of authentication, but merely as substitutes for a more tedious and undesirable method. If, then, a party wished to resort to the more cumbrous method which would otherwise be necessary, the law will interpose no obstacle. It has merely endeavored to facilitate his proof; if he chooses to repudiate this assistance and proceed by the other method, he is at liberty to do so. It follows that if he attempts to avail himself of the more convenient method specially furnished, and fails to employ it properly, he may then nevertheless fall back upon the more cumbrous method which would have been open to him in the beginning had he chosen. In other words, he may supply by other testimony the defects of a certificate of authentication. This as a general principle of evidence is clear enough; it is a corollary of common sense, for no doctrine of evidence penalizes the failure to use properly one kind of evidence by forbidding the unfortunate party thereafter to use any other kind of evidence for the same purpose. The party may not be ready with any other sort; but if he happens to be, he cannot be prevented from availing himself of it. This is illustrated (ante, § 1677, par. 3) by the principle that a party offering a certified copy which is inadmissible because made by an unauthorized officer may nevertheless employ it by calling a witness to prove it an examined copy; by the principle (ante, § 1226) that a party not able to exempt himself from producing a recorded deed, because the record was unlawful, may nevertheless account for it by proving it lost or destroyed; by the practice under the Hearsay Exceptions, in which a statement offered under one Exception, but not fulfilling its requirements, may be received under any other exception whose rules it satisfies; and by many other unquestioned instances.[3] The doctrine in its present application, that the defects of a certificate of authentication may be supplied by other testimony, seems equally unquestioned as a general rule.[4]

[2] Such statutes are therefore placed in the ensuing §§ 1680–1682; while statutes and decisions dealing solely with the presumed genuineness of seals and signatures in general and with the judicial notice of officers in general are considered under the appropriate heads, post, §§ 2163–2168 (authentication), §§ 2174–2178 (judicial notice).

There are, however, instances in which this rule of Evidence may give way to some mandatory policy of substantive law involved in the use of the document. For example, where a statute provides that a deed, in order to be recorded, must be authenticated in a specific way, and a deed is recorded without fulfilling the required forms of probate, the evidential permissibility of supplying the defects of the register-proof may be made to yield to a policy of substantive law which denies to a record of such a deed any validity by way of notice or the like.[5] The general rule, and the reason for this apparent exception to it, are well set forth in the following passage:

1895, HOLT, P., in Lockhead v. Berkeley Springs W. & I. Co., 40 W. Va. 553, 21 S. E. 1031 (refusing to allow other proof of the official character and signature of a foreign officer certifying a jurat of an affidavit of a mechanic's lien required to be recorded, the jurat not being itself authenticated, as provided by statute, by a certificate from a clerk of court under seal): "[The Courts of this State would take judicial notice that the class of officers here concerned had authority to administer an oath.] But they would still need to be certified in some way that the officer in question belonged to such class, and that his signature was genuine. . . . [The counsel, however, argues as follows:] 'To authenticate a writing is to perform certain acts upon it for the purpose of rendering it admissible as being what it purports to be, without proof by witnesses that it is such; authentication is, then, merely a convenient method of furnishing proof of certain things. When, therefore, the section in question says an affidavit will be sufficiently authenticated in a certain form, verifying the genuineness of the signature and the authority of the person administering the oath, it simply means [that] this is one method of making the affidavit admissible in evidence without other proof of such genuineness and such authority; it does not purport to be the only or an exclusive method. Nor does it follow that, if the oath was in fact lawfully administered, if the affidavit was in fact duly made, it shall be of no effect because the officer has neglected to avail himself of the most convenient method of making it admissible in evidence without other proof. Consequently, parol evidence might be introduced at the hearing both as to the genuineness of the signature of the clerk (or the assistant clerk), and of his authority to administer the oath.' . . . Such contention rests, I think, upon a misconception of the purpose of authentication, the persons it is intended to satisfy, and the reason of the selection of the method which requires it to appear written upon the face of the claim authorized to be made a lien on being admitted to record. It is intended as a notice of a lien — a creature of the statute — to all whom it may concern. . . . Where the statute prescribes no method of verification of the signature of the officer before whom the affidavit is made, or if, when a method is mentioned, it does not appear to be restrictive or exclusive, the common-law method must be, in the one case, may be, in the other, resorted to. . . . [But here] the party whom it may concern, to whom the

[3] Compare the general principle of multiple admissibility (ante, § 13).

[4] 1838, Bennet v. Payne, 7 Watts 334; 1839, Van Ness v. Bank of U. S., 13 Pet. 17, 21; see also precedents in § 1681, post, about proving a foreign judge's seal, and in § 2165, concerning authentication of a notary's seal.

[5] Compare what is said ante, § 1649, note, and ante, § 1653, par. (4), § 1635, n. 4.

The precedents on this subject are so involved with doctrines of substantive law that it is impossible to give them here.

statute requires the notice to be given, wishes to know now the present actual fact of lien or no lien, as already accomplished; and the lawmaker . . . prescribed a method of authentication which he was to look for, and must find admitted to record if it exist at all; and he is required to look there, and nowhere else, for all the essential, determining factors of ascertainment. . . . Here the statute prescribes a method of giving notice to all whom it may concern, by requiring it to be in writing and made matter of record, so that the lien created may not be secret; and the inherent nature of the transaction necessarily implies that such method is intended to be exclusive."

(3) So far as the question is involved of the presumed genuineness of a certified copy not purporting to be authenticated by another certificate, or of the other modes of proving its genuineness, — for example, whether a clerk's certified copy not signed by him may be authenticated by proving his handwriting in the certificate, — the rules are considered under the general principle of Authentication (post, §§ 2161–2168).

§ 1680. Certified Copies of Miscellaneous Public Documents. The application of the foregoing principles to certified copies of the various kinds of documents is to-day a composite matter of common-law precedent and of statute. Any more detailed generalizations are impossible. The authorities may, however, be grouped under three heads, — miscellaneous administrative documents, judicial records, and registered deeds.

In dealing with the first group, miscellaneous documents,[1] it is to be kept § 1680. [1] In the following list both statutes and common-law precedents are collected; where a ruling appears to have been made under a statute, it is so noted; but statutory changes have outlawed many of the earlier rulings; a detailed analysis of the statutory history is here impossible. The statutes affecting the use of documents of the government land-office have been given ante, § 1239, for the reason stated there and in § 1659, but they are noted here, together with such rulings as seem to involve the present principle; the table of cross-references in § 1659 should also be consulted for authorities on special kinds of land-office documents; for notarial copies of deeds under the continental system, see ante, § 1681, notes; for judicial records, the authorities are given in the next section, § 1681; for registered deeds, they have been given ante, § 1651, with which should be compared those cited in § 1225 (concerning the rule for producing the original); for telegraphic copies, see post, § 2154; for quasi-official copies, see post, § 1683; for copies of other kinds of documents, the preceding sections of this Chapter may be found to contain material, though the effort has been made to place here all that properly involves the present principle; for the use of copies as secondary to the originals, see ante, §§ 1192–1230, and as affected by other principles, see in general, ante, §§ 1231–1241, 1264–1280; for authentication by seal and signature, see post, §§ 2161–2168; no attempt is made in the following list to collect fully the rulings interpreting the local statutes:

ENGLAND: 1799, Moises v. Thornton, 8 T. R. 303 (a diploma of medicine at a foreign university; if treated as a copy of the corporation records, the legal authority in the Faculty to certify copies must be shown); 1838, St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94 (certified copy of records in custody of the master of the rolls, by one of his officers under seal of the office, admissible); 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 7, Lord Brougham's Act (acts of State in a foreign State or a British colony, provable by copy under seal of the State or colony); § 14 ("Whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom shall be admissible in evidence in any court of justice . . ., provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purport to be signed or certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted"); 1865, St. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 63, § 6 (certified copy of a colonial law, by the clerk or other proper officer of the legislative body, admissible); 1868, St. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 37, § 2, Documentary Evidence Act ("any proclamation, order, or regulation" issued by Her Majesty or the Privy Council, or by authority of any Government department or officer as specified in the schedule, is provable by certified copy by the clerk of the Privy Council or one of its members, or by the departmental officers specified in the schedule, without proof of the handwriting or official position of the person certifying); British N. Amer. Act, 1867, § 143 (records of the old province of Canada, delivered to Ontario or Quebec, provable by the custodian's certified copy); St. 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, § 24; Municipal Corporations Act (a written copy of a by-law of a municipal council "authenticated by the corporate seal" is admissible); 1905, Robinson v. Gregory, 1 K. B. 534 (statute applied); St. 1905, 5 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 50 (trade-marks; the registrar's certified printed or written copies of the register, under seal of the patent-office, to be admissible "without further proof of production of the originals"); ib. § 51 (the registrar's purporting certificate of an entry, admissible); St. 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 29, § 79, Patents and Designs Act (certified copies of registers, patents, etc., kept under this Act, under seal of the patent office and certified by the comptroller, admissible); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, § 88 (reform school certificate, and rules; certified copy by chief inspector, admissible); there are also scores of minor acts affecting various classes of public documents; the provisions of the Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, were extended to cover various war departments of Government in the following Acts: St. 1917, 7 & 8 Geo. V, c. 44, § 4 (Ministry of Reconstruction); c. 51, § 10 (Air Council).

CANADA: Dominion: St. 1893, c. 31, § 8, Evidence Act, R. S. 1906, c. 145, § 21 (proclamations, etc., of the Governor-General or Governor in council or a minister or head of department of the government of Canada are provable by certified copy as in Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 23); § 22 (proclamations, etc., of a Lieutenant-Governor or Lieutenant-Governor in Council or head of department of a Provincial government are provable by certified copy by the clerk or assistant clerk of the Council or head of department or his deputy or acting clerk or deputy); § 20 (Imperial records, documents, etc., are provable as in England); § 24 ("any official or public document of Canada or any province" is provable by certified copy by the custodian; and any document or book-entry of a corporation in Canada or a province is provable by certified copy of the presiding officer or clerk under corporate seal, without proof of seal or signature or official character); § 25 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 29, where no other statute "renders its contents provable by means of a copy"); § 31 (no proof of handwriting or official position of any person certifying a copy under this statute shall be required, and the copy may be written or printed); § 26 (any entry in a book kept in a department of the government of Canada is provable by copy under oath or affidavit of an officer of the department); § 28 (reasonable notice, not less than 7 days, required for copies under §§ 24, 25, 26, 31); c. 37, §§ 68, 69 (railway act; regulations, documents, etc., provable by certified copy); c. 85, § 64 (certified copy, by the deputy minister of commerce or by a justice of the peace, of the oath of a grain inspection officer, admissible); c. 113, § 112 (certain certified copies of certificates of shipmasters, etc., to be admissible and to be presumed genuine); c. 48, § 162 (certified copies of official customs papers, under seal of "any of the principal officers in the United Kingdom" or a colonial collector or a British consul or vice-consul, admissible); c. 77, §§ 40–44 (certified copies of naturalization documents, provided for).

Alberta: St. 1906, c. 3, § 7, par. 55 (a regulation or order in council is provable by copy attested by "the signature of the clerk of the executive council; an order in writing signed by the council member acting as provincial secretary and purporting to be by command of the Lieutenant-Governor shall be received as his order"); ib. § 9 (acts of the Legislative assembly are provable by clerk's certified copy under seal of the Province, etc., as in Yukon Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 1, § 10); St. 1906, c. 57, § 535 (certificate of registration of veterinary surgeon, "purporting to be signed and issued by the registrar and under the seal of the association," admissible); c. 28, §§ 64, 65 (provision for proof of registration as a medical practitioner, by certificate); St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 24 ("Letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom" or any British dominion, provable by "exemplification thereof, or of the enrolment thereof, under the Great Seal under which the same may have issued"); ib. § 26 (substantially like Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 76, § 23); ib. § 29 (like Dom. Evid. Act § 24, but restricted to documents in Alberta and corporation, chartered in Alberta and carrying on business therein); ib. § 32 (like Eng. St. 1851, c. 99, § 14, omitting the clause "and no statute exists," etc.); ib. § 34 (like Dom. Evid. Act § 31).

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 28 (like Dom. Evidence Act, § 21); § 29 (like ib. § 22); § 31 (like ib. § 23); § 32 (like ib. § 24); § 33 (like ib. § 25); § 34 (like ib. § 31); § 35 (like ib. § 26); § 39 (like ib. § 28; but applying only to Quebec notarial acts); c. 22, § 11 (register of births, etc., provable by certified copy); c. 151, § 22 (same for marriage-certificates by a clergyman or registrar); St. 1912, 2 Geo. V, c. 17, § 93 (certificate of timber mark registration, by Minister of Lands Department, to be evidence, without proof of signature).

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 9 (substantially like Dom. Evidence Act, § 21, but omitting departmental documents); § 10 (like ib. § 22, but limited to the province of Manitoba); § 11 (substantially like ib. § 22, but applying to other provinces than Manitoba); § 12 (proclamations, orders, regulations, or appointments, by a minister or head of department of Canada or Manitoba or any other province are provable by certified copy of the minister or deputy or acting deputy or chief clerk); § 14 (like Dom. Evidence Act, § 20); § 15 (substantially like ib. § 24); § 16 (documents, etc., belonging to or deposited in any department of the government of Canada or Manitoba, are provable by attested copy of the head or deputy head or chief clerk of the department; and documents, etc., in any Dominion lands or surveys office in Manitoba, by attested copy of the agent, inspector, or other officer in charge); § 17 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26, applying also to any province of Canada); § 25 (like ib. § 31); § 20 (like ib. § 31); § 22 (like ib. § 28, applying to §§ 15, 17, 19, 20, supra); c. 133, § 371 (municipal by-law, provable by certified copy, under corporate seal, of the clerk or acting clerk or secretary-treasurer, without proof of seal or signature, unless forgery of the seal or signature is specially pleaded); c. 163, § 36 (park board by-law, provable by the secretary's certified copy, without proof of signature, unless forgery of the signature to the original is specially pleaded); c. 71, § 7 (farmers' benefit association declaration, provable by county clerk's certified copy); c. 35, § 129 (provincial Secretary's or deputy's certificate of issuance of license of foreign corporation, admissible); c. 89, § 2 (certain survey-plans of Hudson's Bay Co.; certified copy under Lieutenant-Governor's signature and Manitoba great seal, admissible); c. 89, § 6 (so for a copy of the register-book of surveys, with the addition of the affidavit of the clerk or other person examining the original); c. 117, § 196 (like Ont. R. S. c. 215, § 96); § 197 (liquor commissioners' regulation, provable by certified copy by one of them, without proof of signature, unless forgery of the signature to the original is specially pleaded); c. 126, § 51 (official medical register, provable by registrar's certified copy); c. 153, § 23 (same for pharmaceutical register); c. 143, §§ 12, 14 (certified copy of newspaper publisher's affidavit of ownership, admissible); c. 170, § 61 (certain railway plans, provable by certified copy of commissioner or registrar); c. 155, § 55 (documents belonging to or deposited in the lands department, provable by the commissioner's attested copy); c. 157, § 10 (any copy, signed by the provincial Secretary, "of any document, shall be equivalent to the original instrument itself," without proof of signature); c. 162, § 18 (public officer's bond, provable by certified copy); c. 167, § 29 (documents, etc., in the public works department, provable by certified copy of the minister); c. 198, § 10 (in part repeats c. 65, § 10); c. 203, § 53 (certain religious bodies' records deposited in the department of vital statistics, provable by certified copy); c. 194, § 22 (telephones and telegraphs; certified copy of documents in the Department, by the Minister, to be evidence); c. 121, § 12 (magistrate's oath, provable by provincial Secretary's attested copy).

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 28 (any record or document recorded or deposited "in any public office in this Province" is provable by examined copy, or by certified copy of the custodian "without proof of the official character or handwriting of such officer or deputy"); § 58 ("All proclamations, treaties, and acts or statutes of any legislature or other governing body of any foreign State, Canadian province, or British colony, and all written enactments or laws of the same, and all other acts of state" of the same, are provable by examined copy, or by copy under seal of State, province, or colony, without any proof of the seal, signature, or truth of the attestation); § 39 (British ship register and appurtenant documents are provable by custodian's certified copy); § 46 (British bankruptcy proceedings are provable by office copies purporting to be by the commissioners and registrar under court seal) § 51 (proclamations, etc., of the Province like Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 76, § 23); § 52 (proclamations, etc., of the Dominion; like ib. § 23); § 53 ("no proof shall be required of the handwriting or official position of any person" thus certifying; and the copy may be printed or written); § 40 (registered marriage-certificate, provable by certified copy of the clerk of the peace or the registrar); § 41 (letters patent, certificate of incorporation, or other document "purporting to incorporate any joint-stock company under any law" of the United Kingdom or a British colony or the Dominion or a province of Canada, or a State of the United States, is probable by a certified copy by a notary public under official seal, certifying to a comparison with the original, verified by affidavit, provided a copy of the certified copy and affidavit is served on the opponent six days before offering; the notary to certify, for a certificate of incorporation, that the copy is of a certificate duly filed or of a certificate "purporting to be that of the Secretary of State" "under what purports to be the seal of office"); § 61 (letters patent of any of British Dominions, provable by exemplification under the great seal); § 72 (municipal by-law, provable by the secretary-treasurer's certified copy, without proof of official character or handwriting); § 73 (municipal record-book, provable by the secretary-treasurer's certified copy); § 76 (by-law of provincial board of health, provable by the secretary's certified copy); c. 166, § 65 (similar, for town clerk's copy of by-law); c. 54, § 19 (register of marriage, etc., provable by the registrar's certified copy); c. 144, § 29 (county registrar's certified copy of the registry of a certificate of partnership, admissible); c. 159, § 14 (county secretary's certified copy under official seal of a certificate of return of election of sewer commissioners, admissible); 1917, Ex parte Thomas, 38 D. L. R. 716, N. B. (extradition; Massachusetts statute held sufficiently evidenced by copy under the great seal of the State certified by the State secretary under N. B. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 58).

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 16 ("all proclamations, treaties, and other acts of State of any foreign State or British colony" are provable as in N. Br. Consol. St. c. 1271, § 58); § 18 (like ib. § 39); § 19 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 25); c. 127, § 17 (filed certificate of incorporation, provable by registrar's certified copy); c. 3, § 131 (similar, for lists of voters, etc., except counterfoils, in election inquiries); c. 69, § 6 (certain documents concerning newspaper publication, provable by the colonial secretary's certified copy); c. 121, § 5 (celebrant's register, provable by his attested copy, "the handwriting of the attesting minister being duly proved"); c. 121, § 9 (marriage registers, provable by the colonial secretary's certified copy of entry, "the handwriting of the said secretary being duly proved"); c. 13, § 22 (maps, etc., in custody of secretary of department of public works; provable by certified copy); c. 22, § 170 ("certificates and copies of official papers" under seal of any principal customs officer in the United Kingdom or possessions, or of any British consul, or made pursuant to this chapter in this colony, admissible); St. 1919, c. 21, Evidence Act, § 1 (re-enacts substantially the provisions of Cons. St. 1916, c. 91, § 19); § 2 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26).

Northwest Territory: Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 9, § 3 (documents belonging to or deposited in the department of public works are provable by attested copy of the commissioner or his deputy); c. 23, § 25 (Territorial secretary's certified copy of sheriff's bond, admissible); c. 14, § 20 (registry of births, etc., provable by the registrar's certified copy); c. 70, § 100 (municipal by-law, provable by certified copy of the secretary-treasurer and any member of the council under corporate seal); c. 76, § 11 (recorder's certificate of record of stock-brand shall be evidence of ownership of the brand).

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 19, § 51 (inspector's certified copy of mining rules to be admissible); c. 73, § 63 (clerk's certified copy of assessment roll of municipal corporation, under corporate seal, admissible, without proof of seal or signature); c. 99, § 127 (registrar of deeds' certified copy of railway plans, etc., filed, to be admissible); c. 100, § 155 (council resolution concerning intoxicating liquors is provable by clerk's certified copy, without proof of signature's authenticity, unless the original is expressly denied as a forgery); c. 163, § 4 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 20); § 5 (like ib. § 21); § 6 (like ib. § 22, especially mentioning the province of Nova Scotia, and including also any territory of Canada); § 9 ("proclamations, treaties, and other acts of State of any foreign State, or of any British colony," are provable by copy under the seal of the State or colony); § 11 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 24, applying the first portion to any "grant, map, plan, report, letter, or official or public document belonging to or deposited in any department," etc.); § 13 (like ib. § 26, including also the books of a department of Nova Scotia); § 14 (like ib. § 25); § 17 (substantially like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 39); § 19 (certain filed or registered township plans and allotments, provable by certified copy, after notice in certain cases); § 31 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 31).

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 28, § 30 (documents in the public lands department are provable by copy certified by the Minister, agent, etc.); c. 76, § 23 (proclamations, orders, regulations, or appointments by any chief executive officer or head of department of the Government of Canada are provable by copy purporting to be certified by a clerk of the Council or by the minister or deputy or head of the department, or by such acting officer; similar, for copies of such documents, from an Executive Council or department of a province or territory of Canada); § 26 (whenever the original record is admissible, "any official or public document in this province" is provable by a copy "purporting to be certified under the hand of the proper officer, or person in whose custody such official or public document is placed," without further proof); § 28 (entry in a regular book kept in a government department is provable by copy under oath or affidavit of an officer of the department); § 29 ("whenever a book or other document is of so public a nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody today," a copy "purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the office to whose custody the original has been entrusted" is admissible); c. 192, § 258 (municipal by-law may be proved by certified copy by the clerk under corporate seal, "without proof of the seal or signature,"); § 357 (by-laws of board of police commissioners may be proved by copy certified by any member, "without proof of such signature," unless it is specially alleged that the signature to the original is forged); c. 215, § 97 (resolution of board of liquor-license commissioners); § 96 (inspector's certificate of a liquor license to be evidence of the facts stated and of the authority of the inspector "without proof of his appointment or signature"); c. 76, § 21 (letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom or any other of the British Dominions are provable "by exemplification thereof, or of the inrolment thereof," under the Great Seal under which the same may have issued); c. 192, § 258 (original by-law of a municipal corporation, when produced by the clerk or any officer, shall be received "without proof of the seal or signatures" unless one or more of them is specially alleged to be forged).

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, c. 9, § 21 (like Newf. Consol. St. c. 91, § 16, but including acts in Great Britain, Ireland, the Dominion and the provinces of Canada); § 22 (register of marriages, etc., out of the Province is provable by the legal custodian's certified copy); § 27 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 25; public documents in general); § 26 (like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 39; ship's registers); § 28 (record of a vote, etc., of the Executive Council concerning land titles is provable by certified copy purporting to be by the clerk of the Council); § 30 (proclamations, etc.; like Dom. Evid. Act, § 21); § 31 (like ib. § 31; limited to the foregoing P. E. I. § 30); St. 1898, 61 Vict. c. 3, § 1 (Provincial treasurer's certificate of a commercial traveller's license, admissible); St. 1906, 6 Edw. VII, c. 6, §§ 25, 30 (certified copies, by the registrar-general or his assistant, of the records of birth, marriage, and death, admissible); St. 1909, 9 Edw. VII, c. 6, § 1 (repeals St. 1898, c. 3).

Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 18, § 40 (records, documents, etc., in the department of public works, are provable by copy attested by the signature of the minister or deputy); c. 135, §§ 62, 63 (provision for certified copies of the official register of the medical profession); c. 44, Evidence Act, § 11 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 24); ib. § 17 (like Eng. St. 1851, 14–15 Vict. c. 99, § 14); ib. § 12 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26); c. 1, § 54 (orders in council; like c. 44, § 7); c. 1, § 59 (acts of the Legislature Assembly provable by the clerk's certified copy); c. 76, § 21 (registrar's certified copy of certificate of incorporation, under seal of office, admissible); 1913, R. v. Hutchins, Sask. S. C., 12 D. L. R. 648 (certified copy of clerk's records of marriage license, etc., in Minneapolis, admitted under Can. Evidence Act, § 23).

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 1, § 8, par. 54 (Commissioner's regulation or order, provable by written copy attested by the Territorial secretary); ib. § 10 (Territorial secretary's certified copies of ordinances, under Territorial seal, "shall be held to be duplicate originals and also to be evidence, as if printed by lawful authority, of such ordinances and of their contents"); c. 6, § 20 (registry of vital statistics, provable by certified extract); c. 64, §§ 10, 20 (provision for certified copies of the official registry of medical practitioners); c. 84, § 11 (certified copy, by the clerk of the territorial court or his deputy, of a filed declaration of benevolent incorporation, etc., admissible); c. 56, § 103 (provision for chief inspector's certificate of a license, in liquor cases); ib. § 104 (provision for certificate of a regulation, in liquor cases); c. 30, § 5 (proclamation, etc., of Governor-General; like Dom. Evid. Act, § 21); ib. § 6 (proclamation, etc., of a Lieutenant-Governor, etc., or of the Yukon Commissioner; like Dom. Evid. Act, § 22); ib. § 9 ("Proclamations, treaties, and other acts of state of any foreign State or of any British colony may be proved by the production of a copy purporting to be sealed with the seal of the foreign State or British colony to which the original document belongs"); ib. § 11 (like Dom. Evid. Act § 24, inserting "grant, map, plan, report, letter" and "belonging to or deposited in" for the first class, and "or of this Territory or of any province or Territory of Canada" for the second class); ib. § 13 (official books; like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26; adding "or of this Territory"); ib. § 14 (like ib. § 25); ib. § 31 (like ib. § 31, inserting "grant, map, plan, will, deed"); ib. § 17 (shipping register; like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 39).

UNITED STATES: FEDERAL: Rev. St. 1878, § 882, Code 1919, § 1385 (books, papers, etc., "in any of the executive departments," provable by copy under seal of department); R. S. § 883, Code § 1386 (books, papers, etc., in the office of the solicitor of the treasury, provable by certified copy under official seal by himself or the acting solicitor); R. S. § 884, Code § 1387 (papers in the office of the comptroller of the currency, provable by his certified copy under official seal); R. S. § 885, Code §1388 (organization certificate of a national banking association, provable by the comptroller of currency's certified copy under official seal); R. S. § 886, Code § 1389 (in suits for delinquency of money officials, transcripts of books, etc., of the treasury department, certified by the secretary or assistant secretary under department seal, are admissible; bonds, etc., relating to an account between the U. S. and an individual, provable by certified copy by such officer under department seal; if execution is denied by verified plea or motion, the Court, "if it appears to be necessary for the attainment of justice," may require the production of the original); R. S. § 888, Code § 1397 (contract returned to returns-office of the interior department, provable by clerk's certified copy under department seal, in a prosecution for false swearing to a return); R. S. § 889, Code § 1391 (copies of quarterly returns of postmasters and of account-papers in the Treasury auditor's office, and of money-order account-books of the post-office department, admissible, when certified by the auditor under official seal); R. S. § 890, Code § 1392 (certified copy, under the Treasury auditor's seal, of a certificate of demand upon a delinquent postmaster, admissible); R. S. § 891, Code § 691 (books, papers, etc., in the general land-office, provable by certified copies by the commissioner under official seal); R. S. § 893, Code §1394 (such certified copies of "the specifications and drawings of foreign letters-patent," to be evidence of their granting, date, and contents); R. S. § 894, Code § 1395 (printed copies of specifications and drawings, distributed by the patent-commissioner by law and deposited in State capitols, etc., admissible when certified by him under official seal); R. S. § 895, Code § 1398 (House journal and Senate journal and executive journal, provable by copies certified by the House clerk or Senate secretary); R. S. § 896, Code § 1399 (official documents and records in the office of a U. S. consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer, provable by his certified copy under seal); R. S. § 905, Code § 1409 (St. 1790, May 26; "The acts of the Legislature of any State or Territory, or of any country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be authenticated by having the seals of such State, Territory, or country affixed thereto"); R. S. § 906, Code § 1410 (St. 1804, March 27; "All records and exemplifications of books which may be kept in any public office of any State or Territory or of any country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any court or office in any other State or Territory or in any such country, by the attestation of the keeper of the said records or books, and the seal of his office annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county, parish, or district in which such office may be kept, or of the Governor, or Secretary of State, the Chancellor or keeper of the great seal, of the State or Territory or country, that the said attestation is in due form and by the proper officers. If the said certificate is given by the presiding justice of a court, it shall be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify, under his hand and the seal of his office, that the said presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or, if given by such governor, secretary, chancellor, or keeper of the great seal, it shall be under the great seal of the State, Territory, or country aforesaid in which it is made"; compare the Federal statute post, § 1681, and see the citations in notes of § 1680*a*, post); R. S. § 907, Code § 1408 ("It shall be lawful for any keeper or person having the custody of laws, judgments, orders, decrees, journals, correspondence, or other public documents of any foreign government or its agent, relating to the title to lands claimed by or under the U. S., on the application of the head of one of the departments, the solicitor of the treasury, or the commissioner of the general land-office, to authenticate copies thereof under his hand and seal"; these, on being certified under official seal, by an American minister or consul, shall be sent to the solicitor of the treasury and recorded by him; "a copy" of this record is admissible "equally with the originals"); Code § 659 ("any official books, records, papers, documents, maps, plats, or diagrams," in custody of any officer of the Interior Department, provable by "authenticated copies" under the officer's official seal); § 683 (original application for entry of land, etc., in general land-office, when called for by subpœna duces tecum, is to be forwarded under seal of "general land-office commissioner, and "shall be received in evidence"); § 700 (public documents, records, books, maps, or papers, in office of commissioner of Indian affairs, provable by copy authenticated by the commissioner under official seal); § 1393 ("official books, records, or papers, documents, maps, plats, diagrams, drawings, specifications, or letters patent," in Interior Department or any bureau, etc., thereof, provable by copy authenticated by seal of department, bureau, office, or institution, and certified by the head of such department, etc., or "by any officer thereof authorized by law to certify thereto"; § 1396 (public documents, etc.; in office of commissioner of Indian affairs, provable by copies "authenticated by the seal of such office and certified by the commissioner" or by an officer acting "as or for such commissioner"); § 4528 (certified transcripts, by registers and receivers of U. S. land-offices, of "records in their offices," admissible); § 6187 ("written or printed copies of any records, books, papers, or drawings relating to trademarks belonging to the patent office, and of certificates of registration," certified by the commissioner, under patent office seal, admissible); § 8145 (U. S. collector of the port's certified copy of list of ship's crew, admissible); St. 1906, June 29, § 5, c. 3591, Code § 7039 (contracts, reports, schedules, etc., of common carriers, preserved as public records by the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be "received as 'prima facie' evidence of what they purport to be"; and a copy certified by the secretary of the Commission under its seal is receivable); St. Mar. 19, 1920, § 7 (written or printed copies of records of the Patent office relating to international registered trademarks, admissible wherever the originals could be, when certified by the commissioner of patents under seal of office); 1795, Talbot v. Jansen, 3 Dall. 133, 137 (collector of the port cannot certify copies of his book-entries); 1804, Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cr. 186, 236 (quoted ante, § 1677); 1806, U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. 412, 415 (certified and sworn copy of a custom-house record of a ship's manifest, admitted without other evidence of the shipmaster's signature); 1833, U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. 51, 85 (quoted ante, § 1677); 1840, U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 id. 334, 346 (certified copy of a Spanish land-grant, by the custodian, received); 1896, Smith v. U. S., — Ariz. —, 45 Pac. 341 (Treasurer's transcript, admitted under Rev. St. § 886); 1873, First Nat'l Bank v. Kidd, 20 Minn. 234, 237 (comptroller's certified copy under seal of a bank's organization certificate, admitted under Rev. St. § 885); 1905, Howard v. Perrin, 200 U. S. 71, 26 Sup. 195 (certified copy of land-office papers, admitted under Rev. St. § 891); 1906, U. S. v. Pierson, 145 Fed. 814, C. C. A. (effect of a certified transcript of Treasury department records, in an action for official delinquency, under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 886); 1915, Hanish v. M. S., 7th C. C. A., 227 Fed. 584 (incorporation of an express company, proved by Interstate Commerce Commission records, under St. 1887, Feb. 4, c. 104, § 16, as amended by St. 1906, June 29, c. 3591, § 5).

For the rulings interpreting Rev. St. § 906, see note to § 1680*a*, post.

ALABAMA: Code 1907, § 3978 (custodian's certificate of register of marriage, etc., kept by law or church rule, received as "presumptive evidence" of the law or rule for keeping and of the authority to certify); §§ 3980, 3981 (certified copies, by the register of a land-office in the State, of "any official book, official entry, or other document pertaining to" such an office, admissible; also of a deed or written instrument of conveyance in such land-office, either by register's copy or by copy of transcript in probate office); § 3982 (U. S. surveyor-general for the State; certified copies, by the Secretary of State, of his books, maps, and field-notes deposited in the Secretary's office, receivable); § 3983 (books or papers "required by law to be kept in the office of any public officer," including a book which is a copy of U. S. office-books, provable by certified copy by "the proper custodian thereof"); § 3984 (field-notes of original government-surveys, furnished by Secretary of State or by the U. S. to a judge of probate, provable by the latter's certified copy); § 3985 (certificate of "the head of any bureau or department of the general government is sufficient authentication of any paper or document appertaining to his office"); § 3986 ("official bonds or other instruments or papers required to be kept by any officer of this State," and "books and proceedings required to be kept by any sworn officer of this State," provable by certified copy or transcript by the custodian, with the "same effect as if the original were produced"); § 3988 (Federal, State, or Territorial statute; transcript certified by the Secretary of this State as deposited in his office or the Supreme Court library, receivable); § 3989 (certified book of ordinances, etc., or copy of a specific ordinance, of a municipal corporation in the State, by the clerk or recording officer, receivable as evidence of "due adoption and continued existence" of the ordinances, etc.); § 5170 (certified copy of deceased notary's acts by probate judge or other notary the depositary of the registers, receivable); §§ 4886, 4887 (certified copies of the probate judge's record of marriage licenses and certificates, admissible); § 2310 (books and records of tax-collector or probate judge, in an issue of sale of realty for taxes provable by certified copy); § 573 (Secretary of State's certified copy of books, etc., of late U. S. surveyor-general, admissible); § 26 (certified copy of commissioner's record of fertilizer-license, admissible); § 2731 (recorded refunding bonds, provable by certified copy); § 48 (official analysis of fertilizer or chemical, provable by copy under seal of department of agriculture); § 5943 (certified copy of books of auditor or of superintendent of education, admissible in action for default against county superintendent); § 2546 (recorded bond of executor or administrator, provable by certified transcript); § 5987 (clerk of Supreme Court's certified copy of its opinion, to be "legal evidence"); § 2310 (tax records, provable by certified copy); § 2358 (papers, etc. the office of the State "auditor or treasurer, provable by certified copy under seal," in suits against sundry tax officials, unless the defendant denies the execution on oath); 1830, Hamner v. Eddins, 3 Stew. 192, 197 (certified copies of field-notes in the surveyor-general's office, excluded, as not authorized); 1840, Johnson v. McGehee, 1 Ala. 186, 192 (certified copy of assignment of Indian land, the original being kept in the War Department, admissible); 1851, Phillips v. Poindexter, 18 Ala. 579, 582 (notary's certified copy of his entry of protest, receivable); 1854, Stephens v. Westwood, 25 Ala. 716, 719 (certified copy of land-patents, etc., from the U. S. land-office and U. S. Indian bureau, certified by an "acting commissioner," sufficient); 1882, Martin v. Hall, 72 Ala. 587 (certified copy of the record of an official bond, required to be filed but not to be recorded, excluded); 1888, Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ala. 436, 437 (same, for copy of U. S. land-patent); 1889, Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 69, 7 So. 302 (the statute as to marriage registers applies to registers kept out of the State; certificate of such a custodian is evidence of his authority to certify copies); 1890, Robinson v. Cahalan, 91 Ala. 479, 481, 8 So. 415 (U. S. "patent," admitted without proof of its execution); 1904, Burton v. Dangerfield, 141 Ala. 285, 37 So. 350 (certified transcript of a constable's bond recorded with the probate judge, admitted under Code § 1816); 1917, Windham v. Newton, 200 Ala. 258, 76 So. 24 (personal injury; to evidence the defendant's ownership of an automobile, a certified copy of an application for a State license, admitted under Code § 3983, even though the application was not verified as required by law).

ALASKA: Comp. L. 1913, § 1871 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 739); § 1872 ("a judicial, legislative, or executive record of said district [of Alaska], or of any State or Territory of the United States, or of any foreign country, or of any political subdivision of either, may be proved by the production of the original, or by a copy thereof, certified by the clerk or other person having the legal custody thereof, with the seal of the court or the official seal of such person affixed thereto, if it or he have a seal, or otherwise authenticated as required by §§ 905, 906, and 907 of the Revised Statutes of the United States").

ARIZONA: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. 1732 (Secretary of the Territory's certified copy, under seal, of an act in "any of such printed statute books deposited in his office, or of any law or bill, public or private, deposited in his office in accordance with law," admissible); § 1739 (records of "all public officers" of the Territory, provable by certified copy, under seal, by the "lawful possessor of such records"; so also § 1870); § 1740 (certified copies of "records and official papers" of notaries public, admissible); § 1742 (in suits by the State against a delinquent officer or agent, a transcript under official seal of the lawful possessor's books, etc., containing statements of accounts, and certified copies annexed thereto, under official seal of the lawful possessor, of "bonds, contracts, or other papers relating to" the account and filed in the office, are admissible; but in such suit on a bond or other written instrument, whose execution is denied by sworn plea, production of the original shall be required); § 1745 (certified copy by a State or county officer under official seal of "all notes, bonds, mortgages, bills, accounts or other documents, properly on file with such officers," admissible); § 1761 (certified copy of a duly recorded domestic marriage certificate, receivable); § 3764 (certified copy of the official record of live-stock brands is admissible); §§ 187, 192 (official bonds provable by certified copy of State secretary or other officer with whom filed); § 2332 (State corporation commission; all official documents in its office provable by certified copy by commissioner or secretary under commission seal); § 1735 (municipal ordinances, etc., provable by certified copy by mayor or president of council and clerk under city or town seal); § 1738 (State librarian's certified copy of any papers or documents in State library, admissible); § 1748 (documents or records belonging and being in "any of the governmental departments of the U. S." are provable by copy authenticated so as to be receivable in U. S. court).

ARKANSAS: Dig. 1919, § 4117 (Secretary of State's certified copy under seal of an act, etc., in a printed statute book of a U. S. State or Territory, purporting to be printed by authority and deposited and required by law to be kept in his office, admissible); § 4121 (Secretary of State's certified copy under official seal of an act, etc., of the General Assembly, official acts of Governor, and "of all rolls, records, documents, papers, bonds, and recognizances" deposited and required by law to be kept in his office, admissible); § 4122 (certified copy under official seal by the State treasurer or auditor of documents legally deposited in his office, admissible); § 4123 (public auditing officer's certified copy of a balance of debt due to the State, admissible); § 4124 (superintendent of public instruction's certified copy under official seal of a document deposited or filed in his office, admissible); § 4127 (records of auditor and of commissioner of State lands, provable by certified transcript); § 4129 (city or incorporated town ordinance, etc., provable by certified copy of "the proper officer" under corporate seal); § 4130 (official bonds of all officers, provable by the legal custodian's certified copy); § 4132 (official bond of an executor, administrator, guardian, or commissioner, or of principal and security as required in a judicial proceeding, provable by the legal custodian's certified copy under official seal); § 4131 (contracts with the State or an officer or with a county or for a county's benefit, made under legal authority, and kept in official custody, provable by the custodian's certified copy under official seal, or, if he has no seal, by affidavit-copy); § 4133 (production may be required, in cases of the three preceding sections, if defendant in an action on such a bond, etc., denies under oath the execution); § 1692 (State corporation commission; clerk's certified copies of its recorded determinations, admissible); § 1711 (State secretary's certified copy of business corporation's articles of incorporation, admissible); § 1748 (similar for navigation company, adding "or his deputy"); § 1897 (county surveyor's record, provable by certified copy); § 4746 (U. S. survey records, on file in State land office, provable by certified transcript); § 7497 (municipal corporation records, provable by clerk's certified transcript); § 8421 (State secretary's certified copy of railroad company's articles of association admissible); § 8817 (documents in office of State superintendent of public instruction, provable by his copy authenticated by official seal); § 10297 (State secretary's copy under official seal, of registered trademark, admissible); St. 1921, No. 238 ("Copies of any record, book, report, paper or other document on file with, or of record in, the office of any public officer or commission of the State, or of any county officer, or any excerpts from such record, book, report, paper or other document, when duly certified by the officer or the secretary of the commission in whose custody such record, book, paper or other document is found, shall be received in evidence in any court of this State with like effect as the originals thereof").

CALIFORNIA: C. C. P. 1872, § 1893 (certified copy by "every public officer having custody of a public writing which a citizen has a right to inspect," admissible "with like effect as the original writing"); § 1901 (certified copy of a "written law or other public writing of any State or country," by "the officer having charge of the original," under the public seal of the State or country, receivable); § 1918 ("Other official documents may be proved as follows: 1, Acts of the Executive of this State, by the records of the State department of the State; and of the United States, by the records of the State department of the United States, certified by the heads of those departments respectively. . . . 2, The proceedings of the Legislature of this State, or of Congress, by the journals of those bodies respectively, or either House thereof, or by published statutes or resolutions, or by copies certified by the clerk. . . . 3, The acts of the Executive, or the proceedings of the Legislature of a sister State, in the same manner; 4, The acts of the Executive, or the proceedings of the Legislature of a foreign country, . . . by a copy certified under the seal of the country or sovereign, or by a recognition thereof in some public act of the Executive of the United States; 5, Acts of a municipal corporation of this State, or of a board or department thereof, by a copy, certified by the legal keeper thereof. . . . 6, Documents of any other class in this State, by the original, or by a copy, certified by the legal keeper thereof; 7, Documents of any other class in a sister State, by the original, or by a copy certified by the legal keeper thereof, together with a certificate of the Secretary of state, judge of the supreme, superior, or county court, or mayor of a city of such State, that the copy is duly certified by the officer having the legal custody of the original; 8, Documents of any other class in a foreign country, by the original, or by a copy certified by the legal keeper thereof, with a certificate, under seal of the country or sovereign, that the document is a valid and subsisting document of such country, and that the copy is duly certified by the officer having the legal custody; 9, Documents in the departments of the United States government, by the certificate of the legal custodian thereof"); § 1919 ("A public record of a private writing may be proved by the original record, or by a copy thereof, certified by the legal keeper of the record"); § 1923 (certificate with a copy must state "that the copy is a correct copy of the original, or of a specified part thereof, as the case may be. The certificate must be under the official seal of the certifying officer, if there be any, or if he be the clerk of a court having a seal, under the seal of such court"); § 2011 (county clerk's or judge's certified copy of filed affidavit of publication of notice, etc., admissible); Civ. C. 1872, § 297 (Secretary of State's or county clerk's certified copy of articles of incorporation, admissible); § 2471 (county clerk's certified copies of entries of a partnership register, admissible); § 2472 (Secretary of State's certified copy of foreign partnership's designation of agent to accept service, admissible); Pol. C. 1872, § 1117 (entry in the great register of elections, provable by certified copy); § 3083 (State registrar's record of marriage or death, provable by certified copy); § 2984 (same provision applied to record of death); § 3789 (same for assessment books and delinquent list); 1857, McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 626, 635 (notary's certified copy of his record, receivable); 1866, Doherty v. Thayer, 31 Cal. 140, 143 (certified copy of official survey, excluded as not conformable to statute); 1872, Himmelman v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213, 225 (municipal officer's record, authenticated by certificate of the officer having the duty to make it); 1886, Alameda M. Co. v. Williams, 70 Cal. 534, 538 (same, under statute; applied to a city assessment-book); 1896, Galvin v. Palmer, 113 Cal. 46, 45 Pac. 172 (certificate of correctness of a copy of a map by a colonel of engineers, the legal custodian, admitted).

COLORADO: Comp. Laws 1921, § 6541 (Secretary of State's exemplification of "the laws of the several States and Territories which may be transmitted by order of the Executives or Legislatures of such States to the Governor of this State and by him deposited" in the Secretary's office, admissible); § 6542 (papers, etc., "appertaining to transactions in their corporate capacity of any town or city" incorporated provable by the clerk's or keeper's certified copy under corporate seal, or, if no public seal, under the certifier's private seal, the certifier also stating that he is intrusted with the original's safe keeping); § 5562 (recorder's certified copy under official seal of an entry in a register of marriages, admissible); § 2323 (charter, etc., of a foreign corporation filed in the office of the Secretary of State, provable by his certified copy under official seal); § 2246 (articles of incorporation, provable by certified copy under great seal of State); § 8741 (recorder of deeds' certified copy of "all papers filed" and of records, admissible); § 8834 (all papers duly filed or deposited with a county judge, clerk or treasurer, and all record-books there kept, provable by certified copy under official seal); § 5042 (county clerk's certified copy of recorded field-notes, etc., of the general government survey, admissible); § 9105 (recorded municipal plats, provable by certified copy of county recorder); § 9167 (municipal ordinances etc., "may be proven by the seal of the corporation"); § 4015 (Secretary of State's certified copy of a recorded trademark, admissible); § 1762 (recorded certificate of irrigation-decree, provable by certified copy); § 1649 (irrigation claim; certified copy of map and statement filed with State engineer, admissible); § 3303 (recorded survey-plat of mining claim, provable by county recorder's certified copy); § 2245 (corporations formed to do business without the State, certificate provable by State secretary's certified copy under State seal); § 2721 (State bank commissioner's reports and records, provable by his certified copy); § 4331 (State industrial Commission; records provable by certified copy under seal); § 990 (State register, certified copy of register of birth or death, admissible); §§ 3117, 3125, 3126 (record of stock-brand, provable by copy certified by State board of stock inspection commissioners) C. C. P. § 391 (a copy is allowable, "when the original is a record or other document in the custody of a public officer"); § 459 ("any record, or document, or paper, in the custody of a public officer of this State, or of the United States, within this State," is provable by officer's copy certified under official seal or verified by his oath).

COLUMBIA (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1295 (marriage license and certificate, provable by the Supreme Court clerk's certified copy of record under court seal); § 1575 (District surveyor's records, provable by his certified transcript); § 1070 ("An exemplification of the record under the hand of the keeper of the same, and the seal of the court or office where such record may be made, shall be good and sufficient evidence to prove any record made or entered in any of the States or Territories of the United States; and the certificate of the party purporting to be the keeper of such record, accompanied by such seal, shall be 'prima facie' evidence of that fact").

CONNECTICUT: Gen. St. 1918, § 126 (Secretary of State's certified copies, under seal of State, of records, etc., in his custody, admissible); § 5725 (Secretary of State's exemplified copy of a law of another of the United States officially deposited with the Secretary or in the State library, admissible); § 5728 ("entries or records of all corporations and all public offices" "made of their acts, votes, and proceedings, by some officer appointed for that purpose," provable by certified copy under hand and official seal); § 3510 (Secretary of State's certified copy under seal of a stock corporation's certificate of organization, admissible); § 5731 (recording officer's certified copy of a memorandum of revenue stamps affixed to a recorded document, admissible); § 5733 (clerk's certified copy of records of proceedings of town boards of health, common proprietors, ecclesiastical society, or religious corporation, admissible); § 5124 (town clerk's certified copies of common proprietors' records, admissible); § 4811 (Secretary of State's certified copy, under seal of State, of a recorded certificate of trademark, admissible); § 2826 (State chemist's certified copies of his official analyses, admissible); § 2916 (same, for pharmacy commissioners' certified copies of proceedings); § 3991 (certified copy of a lost bond of the treasurer of a savings bank, recorded with the Secretary of State, admissible); § 4194 (State insurance commissioner's certified copy of recorded certificate of fraternal benefit society, admissible); § 5729 ("any order or regulation made by a State official in the performance of his duties," provable by copy certified by legal custodian); § 5730 (State secretary's certified copy under seal of any certificate filed by any corporation pursuant to law, admissible); 1876, Wilson v. School District, 44 Conn. 160 (rejecting a town-clerk's certified copy of a vote passed at a meeting the legality of which was in question); 1901, Barber v. International Co., 73 Conn. 587, 48 Atl. 758 (cited ante, § 1676).

DELAWARE: Rev. St. 1915, §§ 4223, 4224 ("all records, surveys, patents, deeds, or other instruments of writing" kept in a Maryland public office and affecting lands in Delaware, provable by attested copies of custodian under seal; also by the record of the same or a certified copy when recorded in any Delaware county); § 4229 ("any record or paper belonging to a public office or legally in the custody of a public officer," provable by custodian's certified copy under seal); § 1388 (county recorder's record, or a certified copy, of any instrument "authorized by law to be recorded," admissible); § 100 (State secretary's certificate under official seal of filing of charter of foreign corporations, to be 'prima facie' evidence); § 384 (certified copy of State treasurer's bond, or record thereof, admissible); § 427 (State secretary's copies of records, etc., authenticated by his seal of office or the great seal of State, admissible); § 579 (State insurance commissioner's copies of records, etc., under his official seal, admissible); § 1920 (corporation charter; county recorder's certified copy under seal, or State secretary's certified copy under seal with recorder's certificate of record, admissible); § 1988 (similar for renewal of charter).

FLORIDA: Rev. G. St. 1919, § 1036 (in suits for moneys owed by officers to State, certified copies by State comptroller of "bonds, contracts, or other papers," admissible; but in suits on bonds or other sealed instrument, with plea of non est factum, etc., the Court may require production of original, "if it shall appear necessary for the attainment of justice"); § 2720 (any instrument of writing, lawfully filed or recorded in a public office of this State or a county, is provable by the custodian's certified copy, under seal of office, but if none exists, under private seal; but this shall not prevent the Court from requiring the original to be produced or accounted for, "if the same shall be deemed necessary or proper for the administration of justice"); § 3675 (county judge's certified copy under court seal of a bond of an executor or administrator, admissible); § 4053 (letters patent of a corporation, provable by the Secretary of State's certified copy under the great seal; a charter, by his certified copy of record); § 4997 (State secretary's certificate of record of trade-mark, etc., admissible); 1896, Ropes v. Kemps, 38 Fla. 233, 20 So. 992 (exemplification of a patent-record by the land-commissioner under seal, admissible); 1902, Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Seymour, 44 Fla. 557, 33 So. 424 (a municipal ordinance is provable by the clerk's certified copy, apart from statute).

GEORGIA: Rev. C. 1910, § 206 (State governor's bond, provable by certified copy by "one of the Governor's secretaries under the seal of the executive department"; a singular method); § 220 (State treasurer's bond, provable in the same way, or by certified copy from the State secretary's office); § 1747 (records of State board of dentistry, provable by certified copy); § 5798, P. C. § 1041 (certificate of any public officer of the State or county "shall give sufficient validity or authenticity to any copy or transcript of any record, document, paper of file, or other matter or thing in the respective offices, or pertaining thereto, to admit the same in evidence"); Rev. C. § 5799 (this certificate is to be "primary evidence" of documents, etc., required by law to remain in the office, but "secondary evidence" of those which by law properly remain in the party's possession); § 5803 (municipal corporation's records, provable by the keeper's certified copy under seal, like judicial records); § 5819 ("foreign laws and judgments must be authenticated under the great seal" of State); § 5824 (laws of State, etc., of the U. S. are proved by copy under seal of State, etc.); § 5827 (records in a public office of a State, etc., of the U. S., not appertaining to a court, are provable by the keeper's attested copy under official seal, certified by the presiding justice, Governor, Secretary of State, Chancellor, or keeper of the great seal; if by the first named, then to be authenticated by the clerk under official seal; if by one of the last four, then to be under the great seal); 1869, Brakehill v. Leonard, 40 Ga. 60, 62 (Confederate military orders, proved by certified copy); 1881, Jackson v. Johnson, 67 Ga. 167, 180 (certified copy of a bond filed in the Probate Court of Alabama, admitted, under Ala. Code, § 2695, giving a certified copy the same force "as if proved," and though execution is specially denied); 1900, Central of G. R. Co. v. Bond, 111 Ga. 13, 36 S. E. 299 (certified copy, not under municipal seal, of town records, excluded); 1903, McLanahan v. Blackwell, 119 Ga. 64, 45 S. E. 785 (U. S. bankruptcy referee's certified copy of proceedings, admissible).

HAWAII: Rev. L. 1915, § 261 (Territorial instruction department's records, provable by superintendent's certified copy, attested by secretary under department seal); § 1161 (Territorial treasurer's certified copies of under department seal of documents deposited, admissible); § 2593 ("All proclamations, treaties, and other acts of state of this Republic or of any foreign State, and all judgments, decrees, orders, and other judicial proceedings of any court of justice in any part of this Territory, or in any foreign State, and all affidavits, pleadings, and other legal documents, wills, and codicils filed or deposited in any such court, may be proved, . . . either by examined copies or by copies authenticated as hereinafter mentioned (that is to say), if the document sought to be proved be a proclamation, treaty, or other act of State, the authenticated copy to be admissible in evidence must purport to be sealed with the great seal of this Territory, or of the foreign State to which the original document belongs; and if the document sought to be proved be a judgment, decree, order, or other judicial proceeding of any court in this Territory, or in any foreign State, or an affidavit, pleading, or other legal document, will, or codicil filed or deposited in any such court, the authenticated copy to be admissible in evidence must purport either to be sealed with the seal of such court or (in the event of such court having no seal) to be signed by the judge or (if there be more than one judge) by any one of the judges of the said court, and such judge shall attach to his signature a statement in writing on the said copy that the court whereof he is judge has no seal. But if any of the aforesaid authenticated copies shall purport to be signed or sealed as hereinbefore respectively directed, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence in every case in which the original document could have been received in evidence without any proof of the seal, where a seal is necessary, or of the signature, or of the truth of the statement attached thereto, where such signature and statement are necessary, or of the judicial character of the person appearing to have made such signature and statement; and every such copy shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the original thereof, in like manner as if such original were produced and proved in due course of law"); § 2595 ("Whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no law exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom shall be admissible in any court, . . . provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purport to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted"); § 1140 (certified copy of records of birth, etc., kept by Board of Health, furnished by its secretary, admissible); § 2596 (any book or document "deposited in the building set apart for public archives," provable by certified copy by Secretary of Territory or by Librarian); St. 1921, No. 132 (adding § 2593*a* to Rev. L. 1915; ordinance of any city or city and county is provable by clerk's certified copy under seal).

IDAHO: Comp. St. 1919, § 7941 (certified copy by "every public officer having the custody of a public writing, which a citizen has the right to inspect," admissible like the original); § 7945 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1901, inserting "Territory"); § 7952 (like id. § 1918, substituting "another State or Territory" for "a sister State," and inserting "District [Court]" in cl. 7); § 7953 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 7957 (like id. § 1923); § 7970 (the writing itself must be produced, except "when the original is a record or other document in the custody of a public officer," or when it is recorded and a certified copy is made evidence); § 4703 (certified copy of articles of incorporation by the Secretary of State or a county recorder, admissible); § 3671 (county surveyor's certified copy of recorded plats and field-notes of the U. S. surveyor-general, admissible); § 4617 (certified copy, under the county recorder's official seal, of county books of marriages, admissible); § 175 (State treasurer's certified copy under official seal of all papers "lawfully deposited in his office," admissible); § 2227 (State secretary's certified copy of architect's license or revocation thereof, admissible); § 2484 (State public utilities commission; commissioner's or secretary's certified copy under commission seal of "official documents and orders filed or deposited according to law," admissible); § 3757 (new county records transferred from old county, admissible like the others); § 3793 (first class city's existence provable by city clerk's or State secretary's certified copy of Governor's proclamation); § 3859 (second class city's existence provable by copy of county commissioners' order, etc.); § 4608 (county recorder's record of marriage certificate, provable by his certified copy).

ILLINOIS: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 11 (Secretary of State's exemplification of laws of other States and Territories, transmitted to the Governor by order of their Executive or Legislature, and deposited in Secretary's office, admissible); § 14 (papers, ordinances, etc., of "any city, village, town, or county," are provable by the clerk's or keeper's certified copy, under corporate seal, or, if none, under the certifier's private seal); c. 24, § 65 (municipal ordinances, provable by the clerk's certificate under corporate seal); c. 79, § 15 (county clerk's certified copy of a record of swearing, etc., of justices and constables, admissible); c. 130, § 5 (State treasurer's certified copy under official seal of records, documents, etc., legally in his keeping, admissible); c. 133, § 7 (county recorder's or surveyor's certified copy of a survey-record, admissible); § 10 (State auditor's certified copy under official seal of the U. S. surveyor-general's field-notes, admissible); c. 99, § 14 (notary's record, provable by certified copy under official seal of the notary or of a county clerk having custody); c. 139, § 112 (town-clerk's certified copies of papers duly filed in his office and of town record admissible); c. 125, § 5 (county clerk's certified copy of sheriff's bond, and county court clerk's certified copy of its record, admissible); c. 31, § 5 (same for coroner's bond); c. 89, § 12 (county clerk's certified copy under county seal of a marriage certificate or register, admissible); c. 19, § 11 (books, etc., of sale of land by trustees of Illinois and Michigan canal, or canal commissioners, provable by the secretary's certified copy under official seal); c. 121, § 172 (district clerk's certified copy of papers duly filed in his office and of district records, admissible); c. 32, § 128 (certified copy of articles of incorporation and changes thereof, under the great seal of Illinois, admissible); c. 124, § 7 (documents legally deposited in the office of the Governor or Secretary of State, provable by the Secretary's certified copy under official seal); c. 15, § 6 (records and documents, legally in the keeping of the State auditor, provable by his certified copy under official seal); 1843, Morrison v. Hinton, 5 Ill. 457, 459 (a certificate to official character must assert it as of the time of the official act); 1844, Frazier v. Laughlin, 6 Ill. 347, 359 (certified copy of an illegally recorded school commissioner's bond, excluded); 1864, Waterman v. Raymond, 34 Ill. 42 (certified copy of an official survey, admitted under statute); 1870, Seely v. Wells, 53 Ill. 120 (certified copies of records of the U. S. land-office, admitted); 1885, Lindsay v. Chicago, 115 Ill. 120, 123, 3 N. E. 443 (certified copy of a city ordinance is evidence not only of contents but of passage and publication, under statute); 1894, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 373, 37 N. E. 247 (railroad commissioners' schedule of rates, certified by the commissioners admissible as genuine); 1904, Tifft v. Greene, 211 Ill. 389, 71 N. E. 1030 (copies of records of tax-sales, etc., held inadmissible because certified by the clerk of the county court, instead of by the proper custodian the county clerk, though the same person filled both offices); 1910, Prairie du Rocher v. Schoening K. M. Co., 248 Ill. 57, 93 N. E. 425 (the certified copy under the statute is evidence that the ordinance has been duly passed); 1913, Decatur v. Barteau, 260 Ill. 612, 103 N. E. 601 (city ordinance provable by the city clerk's certified copy under seal, under Rev. St. c.24, § 65, supra).

INDIANA: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 470 (legislative acts of any State, etc., of the U. S., to be "authenticated by having the seals" thereof affixed); § 471 (records and books, not judicial, "in any public office" of any State, etc., of the U. S., are provable by the keeper's attestation under official seal, if there be one, with a certificate of due attestation by the presiding justice of the court of the county, or of the Governor, Secretary of State, Chancellor or keeper of the great seal; if certified by a presiding justice, the clerk of the court shall also certify under official seal that the justice is qualified; if certified by one of the others, the great seal shall be annexed); § 473 (copy of a statute certified under the State seal by the Secretary of State to be taken from a statute-book deposited in his office or the State library and "by him believed to have been received under the authority" of another State or Territory, admissible); § 478 (records, office books, and official bonds kept in a public office in the State provable by the keeper's attestation under official seal, and, if no seal exists, certified by the clerk of court of the county under official seal); §§ 482, 484, 491 (records of the U. S. land-office and office for sale of canal or Michigan road lands, provable by the keeper's or State auditor's or Secretary's certified copies); § 490 (legislative act of a U. S. State or Territory, provable by the Secretary of State's certified copy under seal); § 493 (record of a land-patent, certificate, etc., provable by certified copy); § 5633 (street-railway corporation's articles of association, provable by certified copy by the Secretary of State or deputy); § 5817 (same for water-works company); §§ 10443, 10455 (recorded trade-mark, etc., provable by certified copy); § 5177 (railroad corporation's articles of association, provable by Secretary of State's or deputy's certified copy); § 8314 (affidavit of lien of a mechanic, etc., provable by the county clerk's attested copy under seal); § 3331 (banking corporation's articles of association, provable by the Secretary of State's certified copy under seal); § 9115 (official bond, prova-ble by certified copy); § 8902 (recorded plat of city, provable by certified copy); § 8570 (official mine-map, provable by the mine inspector's certified copy under seal); § 5983 (county commissioner's records, provable by the auditor's certified copies under seal); § 9193 (records, paper, etc., lawfully in the office of the Secretary of State, provable by his certified copy under State seal); § 4174 (detective association's articles, provable by the county recorder's certified copy); § 3907 (same for an express company); § 4591 (same for consolidated hydraulic companies); § 8374 (recorded marriage certificate, provable by the county clerk's certified copy); § 8654 (municipal ordinance provable, by certified copy); § 10347 (tax-payment entry on the book of a treasurer, receivable when the treasurer's receipt is lost or destroyed); § 5549 (railroad commission's certified or printed copies or rates, regulations, etc., admissible); § 4469 (religious corporation's articles, provable by certified copy by State secretary or corporate secretary); St. 1917, May 31, p. 82, § 3 (certified copy of record of trademark, etc., to be evidence of various items recorded); 1876, Nelson v. Blakey, 54 Ind. 29, 36 (certified copy, by the Secretary of State, of articles of association, excluded on the facts); 1881, Ansley v. Meikle, 81 Ind. 260, 262 (the statutory proof by certified copy of a printed statute book is not exclusive; a certified copy from the original here admitted).

Iowa: Comp. C. 1919, § 7342 ("duly certified copies of all records and entries or papers belonging to any public office or by authority of law required to be filed therein," admissible); § 7346 ("maps, official letters, and other documents" in the office of the U. S. surveyor-general, provable by his certified copy); § 7357 (legislative journals, provable by an "officially certified" copy by the clerk of the appropriate House); § 7359 (like Nebr. Rev. St. § 8927); § 7360 (ordinances, acts, etc., of a municipal corporation, provable by the clerk's certified copy); § 107 (Secretary of State's certified copy, under official seal of land office documents and records, admissible); § 3389 (survey field-notes and plat, provable by certified copy of the surveyor or of the county auditor under seal); § 4686 (certified copies of records in the offices of the county auditor and treasurer, admissible); § 6448 (certified copy of a recorded notice and return of service as to terminating an easement, admissible); § 7331 (notary's certified copy of protest-record, admissible).

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7273 (papers required or authorized to be filed or recorded in "any public office," or a record required to be made or kept there, provable by certified copy of the legal custodian under seal, when such "original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same"); § 7286 (books or filed papers in "any of the departments of the government of the United States," provable by attested exemplification of official custodian); § 5160 (Indian census-roll and allotment-roll, provable by certified copy); § 7275 (Secretary of State's certified copy under official seal of the statute-book of a U. S. State or Territory purporting to be printed by authority and lawfully deposited in his office, admissible); § 7280 (ordinances, etc., of a city or town, provable by certified copy under corporate seal by the "proper officer"); § 6005 (transcript of county records, lost, stolen, or destroyed, made from documents of the State Historical Society and certified by the secretary under its seal, to be admissible); § 1414 (ordinances of first class city, provable by city clerk's certificate, under city seal); § 1681 (ordinances of second class city, similar); § 1893 (similar for third class city); § 2109 (State secretary's certified copy under official seal, of corporate charter, admissible); § 2708 (county register of deed's certified copy of U. S. field notes, etc., admissible); § 2705 (county surveyor's field-notes, etc., provable by his certified copy); § 6152 (probate judge's certified copy, under official seal, of "books of record of marriage licenses," admissible); § 8404 (State railroad board's records, provable by secretary's certified copy under board seal); § 10553 (document or record in custody of State historical society, provable by the secretary's certified copy under the society's seal); § 11649 (State secretary's certified copy of recorded trademark, etc., admissible); § 10772 (records and files of State superintendent of public instruction, provable by his certified copy).

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1627 (record or paper properly in the office of the Secretary of State, treasurer, register or auditor, county surveyor, or assessor, provable by the custodian's attested copy, "upon proof of the execution of the original"); § 1629 (official book or ordinance of a mayor, town, or religious society, provable by the custodian's attested copy); § 1636 (books of "any public office of the U. S. or of a sister State," not appertaining to a court, provable by the keeper's attested copy under official seal); § 1637 (books or papers of an executive department of U. S. provable by the President's or department-chief's attested copy; of "any State or Territory," by the Governor's or Secretary of State's attested copy under official seal); § 1638 (a law or ordinance of any State, nation, province, colony, city, or town out of the U. S., a register of births and marriages, or a duly registered instrument, is provable by the keeper's attested copy certified under official seal by a U. S. consul, charge, or minister); § 1642 (a law of the U. S. or a State or Territory thereof is provable by the Secretary of State's certified copy of an authoritative printed volume received by him); § 3723 (notary's protest-book, provable by his certified copy under seal, or, after his decease, by the custodian's certified copy); § 4545 (Secretary of State; "copies of records and papers in his office, certified by him, shall in all cases be evidence equally with the originals," and when presented, "the same shall be 'prima facie' evidence of their contents, and the personal presence of the Secretary of State as a witness in such case shall be dispensed with, provided that such records shall be mailed under seal to the circuit court clerk" like depositions); § 540 (articles of incorporation; State secretary's or county clerk's certified copy, admissible in action by or against such corporation); § 579 (same, for banking company); § 604 (same, for trust company); § 619 (same, for insurance company; the State insurance commissioner also may certify); § 727 (same, for real estate title insurance company); § 749 (State insurance commissioner's certified copy under department seal of all papers in the office, admissible): § 766 (railroad corporation; articles provable by State secretary's certified copy, for or against the corporation); § 2775 (all "official papers," etc. of municipal corporations, provable by "official copies thereof"; city ordinances, until biennial publication in print, provable by comptroller's certified copy); 1827, Dudley v. Grayson, 6 T. B. Monr. 259, 262 (clerk of town trustees, not authorized to give copies of minutes); 1910, Henderson M. & M. Co. v. Nicholson, — Ky. —, 126 S. W. 139 (assistant mine-inspector's report, under Stats. § 2739, admitted).

LOUISIANA: R. S. 1915, § 1457 (State secretary's certified copy of register of laws, to be "evidence of the publication of the laws"); St. 1914, No. 254, § 2 (articles of incorporation provable by copy duly certified by officer where recorded); for other statutes, see under this State, note 5, § 1651, ante; the French system of documentary evidence here obtains: 1836, Montreuil v. Pierre, 9 La. 356, 371 (notary's certified copy of Spanish public "acts," admitted); 1843, Rosine v. Bonnabel, 5 Rob. 163 (certified copy, dealt with under statute); 1841, Millaudon v. McDonough, 18 La. 102, 115 (certified copy by the register of the land-office of plats there filed, excluded); 1842, Boatner v. Scott, 1 Rob. La. 546, 552 (survey-copy certified by the register of the land-office, admitted); 1857, Lawrence v. Grout, 12 La. An. 835, 836 (same, excluded); 1847, White v. Kearney, 2 La. An. 639 (certified copy of a ship's clearance by the deputy-collector under custom-house seal, admitted); 1879, Board v. Hernandez, 31 La. An. 158, 159 (school-board treasurer's certified copy of their records, admitted).

MAINE: Rev. St. 1916, c. 53, § 63 (Secretary of State's certified copy of an insurance company's certificate of organization, admissible); c. 87, § 133 (certified copies under seal of documents or books of a consular officer or custom-house including register of vessels, admissible); c. 44, § 19 (State Secretary's certified copy under seal of State of registered trademark or assignment thereof, admissible); c. 49, § 39 (union trade-label recorded with State secretary, provable by secretary's "attested certificate"); c. 55, § 61 (State public utilities commission; copies of its orders, certified by the secretary under commission seal, admissible); c. 58, § 5 (State secretary's certified copy of record of organization of street railroad corporation, admissible); c. 64, §§ 12, 15, 37 (town marriage records, etc., provable by certified copy; cited more fully ante, § 1644); c. 85, § 18 (State treasurer's attested copy of sheriff's bond, admissible, but if execution is disputed, Court may order production of original).

MARYLAND: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 42 (any instrument "lodged for safe keeping in any office or court" by the law of a State or country, provable by certified copy of the keeper under seal of the court or office); § 55 (clerk of Court of Appeals' certified copy of extracts from proceedings of conventions and the General Assembly in his custody, admissible); § 59 (Secretary of State's copy under seal of books, papers, etc., in his custody or office, admissible); § 60 (treasurer's attested copy of books, papers, entries, and proceedings, admissible); § 61 (same for comptroller); § 62 (tobacco inspector's sworn copy of manifest or entry in his possession, and certified to be complete, admissible); § 65 (State tax commissioner, books, etc. belonging to his office, provable by his attested copy); Art. 18, § 6 (Governor's certificate under seal of State of a record of appointment of a commissioner to take acknowledgments, admissible); Art. 33, § 29 (clerk's certified copy of entries in a registry of voters or a poll-book, admissible); § 43 (incorporation of a foreign corporation, provable by a copy, certified in a specified manner, of its record or register recorded agreeably to law); §§ 141, 142, 172 (election contests; certain certified copies of records admissible); Art. 19, § 5 (State comptroller's bond, provable by certified copy under court seal by clerk of court of appeals); Art. 23, §§ 5, 25 (certificate of incorporation, provable by certified copy by State tax commissioner or clerk of circuit or superior court).

MASSACHUSETTS: Gen. L. 1920, c. 3, § 22 (certified copies of legislative journals and papers, by the clerk of the Senate or House or the secretary of the Commonwealth, admissible); c. 9, § 11 (State Secretary's certified copy under State seal of records and papers in his department, admissible); c. 37, § 10 (sheriff's bond, provable by the treasurer's certified copy "in a case relating to the bond," unless the Court requires production of the original, when execution is disputed); c. 159, § 5 (State Secretary's certified copy of a power of attorney of a foreign express carrier, admissible); c. 156, § 12 (State Secretary's certified copy of a record of an incorporation certificate, admissible); c. 160, § 24, c. 161, § 11 (same for a railroad corporation); c. 168, § 10 (certified copy of a savings-bank incorporation certificate, by the register of deeds or the State Secretary, admissible); c. 233, § 76 (books, papers, documents, and records in "any department of the Commonwealth," or of any city or town, provable by attested copy of the officer in charge; but certain records of public utilities department must be attested by the State secretary under its seal or by the clerk of the city or town); c. 181, § 3 (certified copy of a foreign corporation's appointment of an attorney for service, filed with the corporation commissioner, admissible); c. 175, § 151 (same for a foreign insurance corporation, filing an appointment with the insurance commissioner); c. 176, § 42 (same for a foreign fraternal beneficiary association, filing with the insurance commissioner); c. 233, § 75 (clerk's attested copy of ordinances of a city, by-laws of a town, or regulations of a board of aldermen, admissible); c. 46, § 19 (certificate signed by a town clerk or assistant clerk, admissible to prove the record of marriages, etc.); c. 138, § 43 (liquor license bond, filed with city or town clerk, provable by certified copy); c. 158, § 9 (same, for miscellaneous corporations); c. 170, § 5 (same, for coöperative bank); c. 172, § 10 (same, for trust company); 1850, Com. v. Chase, 6 Cush. 248 (clerk of a city or town may certify copies of votes, ordinances, or by-laws); 1895, Com. v. Hayden, 163 Mass. 453, 40 N. E. 846 (certified copy of a town-clerk's marriage-record, admitted under statute); 1900, Com. v. Corkery, 175 Mass. 460, 56 N. E. 711 (corporation commissioner's certified copy of a copy of foreign articles of incorporation filed with commissioner, admitted under statutes); 1913, Com. v. Merrill, 215 Mass. 204, 102 N. E. 446 (copy of a constitution of the Order of Owls, signed by the Supreme Secretary, not admitted as a certified copy of the charter of a foreign beneficiary insurance corporation, under the statutes in force at the time).

MICHIGAN: The statutes in this jurisdiction reach the culmination of crude superfluity: Comp. L. 1915, § 12527 (certified copies must be attested by the custodian's official seal, and if a clerk of the county, by the court seal, except for use in the same court, or for use in a circuit court of the Supreme Court's order); § 12525 (affidavit of newspaper notice, provable by the custodian's certified copy); § 12507 (papers, records, etc., lawfully filed or recorded in a public office, provable by the custodian's certified copy); § 12514 (municipal ordinances, provable by the clerk's or recorder's certified copy); § 12521 (documents filed or recorded with the board of control of St. Mary's Falls ship canal, provable by the auditor-general's certified copy); § 12522 (U. S. signal-service record of weather conditions, provable by the custodian's certified copy, in civil causes); § 468 (certified copies of State land-office field-notes, surveys, etc., by the commissioner under seal or by the register of deeds, admissible); § 93 (records, etc., in the office of the Secretary of State, provable, etc., by his certified copy under the great seal of State); § 12712 (register of deed's certified copy of a recorded bill affecting realty, admissible); § 1078 (soldier's discharge, provable by certified copy under seal of the circuit court of county); § 2112 (township supervisor's records, provable by certified copy or abstract); § 2145 (constable's bond provable by certified copy by the township clerk); § 2151 (same for the county clerk's certified copy, under official seal, of a justice's bond); § 2329 (county supervisors' record of boundaries perpetuated, provable by the county surveyor's record); § 2500 (county clerk's certified copy, under seal, of a notary's records deposited with him, admissible); § 2563 (order of village incorporation, provable by a certified copy of the county clerk or Secretary of State); § 2630 (village ordinance, provable by the clerk's certified copy under village seal); § 3004 (same for city ordinance); § 2813 (same for a clerk's certified copy of a judgment in village condemnation proceedings); § 3158 (same for a city); § 2879 (city declaration of incorporation, provable by certified copy of the county clerk or Secretary of State); § 3350 (municipal survey-plat, provable by certified copy of the register of deeds or auditor-general); §§ 3364, 3365 (county supervisors' resurvey of a municipal plat, provable by the register of deeds' certified copy); § 3378 (public-improvement resolution of a municipal council, etc., provable by certified copy); § 3412 (water-introduction proceedings, provable by certified copy); § 4052 (tax-roll, provable by certified copy); § 4760 (separation of grades of highway and railroad: resolution of a board, etc., provable by certified copy); §§ 4349, 4364 (affidavit of notice of election for a county road system, or of laying out of road, provable by the county clerk's certified copy); § 4362 (court certificate of road-proceedings, provable by the register of deeds' certified copy); § 5245 (record of a pauper-settlement decision, provable by certified copy); § 5607 (record or certificate of death, provable by certified copy); § 9090 (papers, etc., in the office of the insurance commissioner, provable by his certified copy under official seal); § 9200 (insurance documents deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, provable by his certified copy); § 6717 (certificate of business of a banker, broker, or exchange dealer, provable by the county clerk's certified copy under circuit court's seal); § 6763 (pharmacy board's records, provable by the secretary's certified copy under seal of the board); § 6980 (township clerk's certified copy of a township resolution licensing peddlers, etc., and of affidavit of notice, admissible); §§ 7092, 7095 (board of supervisors' prohibition, etc., of liquor traffic, provable by certified copy); §§ 8019, 8068 (records, etc., in the office of the banking commissioner, provable by certified copy under official seal); § 8243 (railroad company's bond filed with the judge of probate, provable by certified copy); § 8566 (street railway and electric light companies' consolidation agreement, provable by the Secretary of State's certified copy); § 8977 (mining company's record of alienation of land, etc., provable by the register of deeds' certified copy); § 10052 (plat, etc., of a summer-resort association, provable by the register of deeds' certified copy); § 9427 (foreign fraternal beneficiary association's power of attorney to accept service, provable by the insurance commissioner's certified copy); §§ 11375, 11385 (county clerk's record of marriage or of license, provable by his certified copy); § 12910 (sheriff's certificate of sale, provable by the register of deeds' certified copy); § 13931 (same for decree of partition, semble); § 14042 (same for decree of sale by executor, etc.); § 9284 (foreign insurance company's power of attorney to accept service, provable by certified copy of the insurance commissioner or his deputy); § 15458 (Secretary of State's certificate of recording of a trademark, etc., admissible); § 6351 (certificate of partnership, etc., county clerk's certified copy, admissible); § 2440 (county clerk's certified copy of recorded official bond, admissible; by numerous other sections, a certified copy by the custodian, usually the Secretary of State, is made admissible to prove recorded articles of association of corporations of various sorts; in numerous sections, from § 7617 to § 8139, the same is provided in private acts for specifically named associations); 1869, Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145, 158 (certification of U. S. land-office documents depends on U. S. laws, not local laws); 1869, Clark v. Hall, 19 Mich. 356 (assignment of a land-office certificate, customarily filed, but not by law, may be proved by certified copy); 1879, Doyle v. Mizner, 42 Mich. 332, 338, 3 N. W. 968 (certified copy of defectively acknowledged articles of incorporation, excluded); 1884, Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246, 247, 20 N. W. 37 (certificate of the land-office, excluded on the facts); 1906, Murphy v. Cady, 145 Mich. 33, 108 N. W. 493 (exemplified copy of U. S. pension-vouchers, admitted, under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 882, cited supra); 1921, Vanderberg v. Detroit & C. Nav. Co., — Mich. —, 186 N. W. 477 (carrier's loss of a trunk; to show a rate-tariff schedule filed as required by Federal law, a purporting copy was held insufficient on the facts).

MINNESOTA: Gen. St. 1913, § 8419 (State librarian's certified copy under official seal of any judicial decision or proceeding in any law or equity reports in his office or under his charge, or of "any other papers or documents contained in such library," admissible); § 8421 (certified copy by the official custodian of an affidavit of publication by printer, etc., admissible); § 8423 ("The original record made by any public officer in the performance of his official duty shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the facts required or permitted by law to be by him recorded. A copy of such record, or of any document which is made evidence by law and is preserved in the office or place where the same was required or is permitted to be filed or kept, or a copy of any authorized record of such document so preserved, when certified by the person entitled to the official custody thereof to have been compared by him with the original and to be a correct transcript therefrom, shall be received in evidence in all cases, with the same force and effect given to such original document or record; but if such officer have, by law, an official seal, his certificate shall be authenticated thereby: Provided, that no part of this section relating to the form of certification shall apply to documents or records kept in the departments or offices of the United States government"); § 8424 ("Section 8423 shall not be construed to require the affixing of the seal of the court to any certified copy of a rule or order made by such court, or to any paper filed therein, when such copy is used in the same court or before any officer thereof"); § 8430 (copies of records or documents "belonging to and being in any of the governmental departments of the U. S., authenticated as such, and in accordance with the laws of the U. S. to entitle" them to admission in U. S. courts, admissible); § 8453 (certified copies of Federal census reports filed in the office of the Secretary of State, admissible); § 8458 (clerk of a district court's record, or certified copy, of certificates and records of marriage, admissible); § 8138 (certified copies of recorded affidavits of foreclosure sales, admissible); § 689 (copies of county commissioners' proceedings, "authenticated as required by law," admissible); § 2536 (town clerk's certified copy of a highway order, admissible); §§ 5574, 5670 (certified copy of certain orders laying out county or town drains, admissible); §§ 5457, 5461 (record or a certified copy of the record of the surveyor-general's scale-bills of logs, etc., admissible); § 5468 (certified copy by the surveyor-general or deputy of a record in his office, admissible); § 5470 (certificate by the surveyor-general of record of log-marks, admissible); § 5718 (certified copy of a notary's register, admissible); § 2714 (clerk's certified copy of a board of education's records and papers, admissible); § 6110 (certified copy, by clerk of district court, of recorded commercial name, admissible); § 6206 (State secretary's certified copy of foreign corporation's appointment of agent, admissible); § 6951 (recorded trade-mark etc. provable by State secretary's certificate); § 8456 ("all original instruments" authorized by law to be recorded, provable by the record or a "duly certified transcript," without further proof); 1863, Walsh v. Kattenburgh, 8 Minn. 127, 132 (certified copy of township plats by the register of a U. S. land-office, not receivable without express statutory authority); 1873, First Nat'l Bank v. Kidd, 20 Minn. 234, 237(U. S. comptroller's certified copy of an organization certificate of a bank, admitted).

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1954, Hem. § 1654 ("foreign registers of births, marriages, and deaths," provable by certified copy under official seal "of the officer having custody of the record, and authenticated by the certificate of any public minister, secretary of legation, or consul of the U. S.." but if its execution is disputed under oath, the original must be "produced or its absence accounted for"); § 1960, Hem. § 1620 (copies of "records, books, and files belonging to the offices of the U. S.," certified by the officer having charge, admissible); § 1962, Hem. § 1622 (copies of field-notes of surveys and of certain maps, deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, land-commissioner, "or other public office," certified by the officer having the custody, admissible); § 1966, Hem. § 1626 (copy, under official seal of the clerk having custody, of a certificate of marriage transmitted to a circuit clerk, or of the record thereof, admissible); § 1968, Hem. § 1628 ("all public officers in this State having the charge or custody of any public books, records, papers, or writings, are authorized to certify copies of the same," to be admissible "in all cases where the original or a sworn copy would be evidence"); § 1970, Hem. § 1630 (in an action on bond given under law by an officer, collector, administrator, executor, or guardian, a certified copy by the officer in whose office it is recorded or filed is admissible; but the original must be produced by the custodian if issue is joined on a plea denying execution); § 1979, Hem. § 1639 (copy of record of an officer protesting a bill or note, verified by his oath, admissible); 1848, Wray v. Doe, 10 Sm. & M. 452, 460 (certified copy of a land-office location, admitted); 1854, Hardin v. Ho-yo-po-nubby, 27 Miss. 567, 580 (same); 1856, Davis v. Freeland, 32 Miss. 645, 649 (land-officer's letter filed; certified copy admitted); 1900, State v. Oliver, 78 Miss. 5, 27 So. 988 (board of supervisors' book of entries of duplicate receipts of convict-contractor, admitted under C. § 1791).

Missouri: This State vies with Michigan in cumbering the statute-book: Rev. St. 1919, § 5337 (the law of a U. S. State or Territory is provable by "any printed statute-book" certified as correct under official seal by the Secretary of that State or Territory or of this State, the certificate setting out "in full the title-page of such printed book"); § 5339 (Secretary of State's certified copy under official seal of a law, etc., contained in a book, deposited in his office, and purporting to contain acts of the U. S. Congress and to be published by authority of Congress or the U. S., admissible); § 5344 (certified copies under official seal of papers on file or matters recorded in the office of the State secretary, treasurer, auditor, and register of lands, admissible); § 5345 (entries, etc., in books of a register or receiver, of "any U. S. land-office," provable by his certified copy); § 5346 (so also for any letter received by him by any superior in the U. S. land department); § 5347 (documents lawfully deposited in the office of the State, Treasurer or auditor, provable by his certified copy under official seal); § 5348 ("all records and exemplifications of office books, kept in any public office of the U. S., or of a sister State, not appertaining to a court," admissible if attested by the keeper under official seal if any); § 5349 ("exemplifications from the books of the executive department of the U. S., or any papers filed therein," admissible when attested by the President, or a department chief, and "from any State or Territory, of like books or papers," when attested by the Governor or Secretary of State under official seal); § 5350 (ordinances, etc., of a city or incorporated town in this State, provable by the lawful custodian's certified copy under corporate seal); § 5361 (all papers lawfully kept by a surveyor of U. S. lands in this State, provable by his certified copy); § 5375 (official bond of all State officers required by law to give a bond, provable by certified copy by lawful custodian under official seal); § 5376 (contracts with the State or any officer or with any county or for its benefit, by authority of law or court order, lawfully kept in the officer's custody, provable by custodian's certified copy under official seal, or, if no seal exists, verified by affidavit); § 5377 (bond required by law of executors, administrators, guardians, curators, and commissioners, or taken of principal and surety in judicial proceedings, provable by the lawful custodian's certified copy under official seal); § 5378 (in a suit brought upon a bond or contract of the three preceding sorts, or defendant's sworn denial of execution, the Court may require production of the original "if necessary to the attainment of justice"); § 5392 (recorder's certified copy under official seal of a marriage register, admissible); § 5395 (steamboat enrolment in the office of a custom-house or surveyor and inspector of customs, provable by certified copy "by the proper officer"); § 5508 (certified copies of recorded surveys 'in perpetuam memoriam' admissible); § 293 (public administrator's bond, etc., provable by certified copy under probate court seal); § 9878 (certified copy of corporate articles of consolidation filed with the Secretary of State, admissible); § 6414 (superintendent of insurance's certified copy of a foreign fraternal beneficiary association's power of attorney to accept service, admissible); § 10128 (certified copy under seal of State, by the Secretary of State or deputy, of articles of association of a telegraph or telephone company, admissible); § 9853 (Secretary of State's certified copy of articles of association of a railroad company, admissible); § 13194 (township clerk's certified copy of a constable's bond, admissible); § 11613

(Secretary of State's certified copy under official seal of the General Assembly's acts, Governor's acts, and documents lawfully deposited in his office, admissible); § 13210 (township clerk's certified copies of papers duly filed in his office, admissible); § 7672 (city clerk's certified copy under corporate seal of papers filed in his office, admissible); § 7957 (city ordinances provable "by the seal of the corporation attested by the officer having charge thereof"); § 7984 (cities of the second class; ordinances provable by city clerk's certificate under city seal); § 7807 (city park-commissioners' proceedings, etc., provable by the secretary's certified copy under corporate seal); § 9285 (county recorder's certified copy of highway plats, etc., admissible); § 4720 (State board of pharmacy's books, provable by secretary's certified copy under board seal); § 10265 (State secretary's certified copy of articles of agreement of benevolent, religious, etc. association, admissible); § 10429 (State public service commission; official documents and orders, provable by copy certified by commissioner or secretary under commission seal); § 11922 (State secretary's certified copy of appointment of foreign investment company's attorney, admissible); §§ 12721, 12730 (county-surveyor's records, provable by his certified copy); § 13650 (State workmen's compensation commission; records, files, etc., provable by certified copy under commission seal); 1823, Rector v. Welch, 1 Mo. 334 (State surveyor-general's certified copy of a land-warrant, inadmissible apart from statute); 1835, Bryan v. Wear, 4 Mo. 106, 110 (land-certificate in a U. S. surveyor's office, proved by certified copy); 1875, Phillips v. Robbins, 59 Mo. 107 (auditor's copy of a collector's bond filed, admitted); 1893, Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph, 113 Mo. 395, 21 S. W. 8 (the city seal on an ordinance raises a presumption of the latter's genuineness, by statute); 1897, Banking House v. Darr, 139 Mo. 660, 41 S. W. 227 (sworn tax list; custodian's certified copy, admitted); 1905, Florscheim v. Fry, 109 Mo. App. 487, 84 S. W. 1023 (under Rev. St. 1899, § 3098, a certified copy of articles of incorporation in Illinois was excluded because the Illinois law authorizing the Secretary of State to keep or record was not proved; unsound, because the seal of State is of itself an authority for the purpose, ante, § 1679, par. b, post, § 2163); 1906, Stewart v. L. B. Land Co., 200 Mo. 281, 98 S. W. 767 (properly certified copies of platbooks admissible under Rev. St. 1899, § 3094, supra).

MONTANA: Rev. C. 1921, § 10551 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1901); § 10568 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1918, substituting "District" for "Superior" in par. 7); § 10638 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2011); Civ. C. § 5913 (Secretary of State's certified copy of filed articles of incorporation, admissible); § 8023 (county clerk's certified copies of entries of partnership names, etc., admissible); § 2216 (county assessment books, etc., provable by county clerk's certified copy); § 5909 (county clerk's certified copy of recorded articles of incorporation, admissible); § 6327 (fraternal benefit society; printed copy of constitution, etc., certified by secretary or corresponding officer, admissible); § 10543 (public records; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1893); St. 1921, Sp. Sess., c. 9, § 33 (intoxicating liquors; "all records and reports kept or filed" under this act, provable by the custodian's certified copy).

NEBRASKA: Rev. St. 1922, § 8913 ("duly certified copies of all records or entries belonging to any public office or by authority of law filed to be kept therein," admissible); § 8923 (legislative journals, provable by certified copy by the appropriate clerk); § 8927 ("public seal of the State or county affixed to a copy of a written law or other public writing," makes it admissible); § 1504 (probate judge's marriage record, provable by certified copy); §§ 3525, 3897, 4064, 4330 (municipal ordinance, provable by the clerk's certified copy under city or village seal); §§ 4860, 4882 (same for State treasurer's and auditor's copies of papers lawfully filed); 1905, Rieck v. Griffin, 74 Nebr. 102, 103 N. W. 1061 (copy of sections of the Arkansas statutes, under seal of the Secretary of State, admitted).

NEW HAMPSHIRE: Pub. St. 1891, c. 173, § 10 (town-clerk's copy of his records of birth, marriage, and death, or of the officiating person's certificate of marriage, admissible); c. 224, § 23 (certified copy by the proper officer of any document required to be filed in a public office, and the adjutant-general's certified copy of documents in his office, admissible); c. 15, § 5 (Secretary of State's certified copies, under seal of State, of records and papers in his office, admissible); c. 26, § 8 (Supreme Court clerk's certified copy of a sheriff's bond, to be evidence in actions thereon); c. 143, § 4 (copy of fence-viewers' division, recorded in town records, admissible); c. 154, § 23 (Secretary of State's or town-clerk's certified copies of records of common proprietors, admissible); c. 61, § 7 (town-clerk's certified copy of proceedings of sale for taxes, admissible); c. 61, § 7 (same for a copy by the local clerk of the Supreme Court in certain cases); St. 1899, c. 57 (a certified copy under oath of a town-clerk or of the secretary of the State board of health, admissible to prove the existence of the regulations of that board); St. 1899, c. 63, § 3 (province records, provable by State secretary's or deputy's certified copy under seal of State); St. 1911, c. 133, § 24 (Secretary of State's certified copy of motor vehicle registration certificate or license, to have the same effect as the original); 1831, State v. Carr, 5 N. H. 367, 369 (the seal of another State suffices for a copy of a statute, just as the English great seal does); 1843, Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101, 109 (the copyist must have "the right to the custody of the records" and be "the person who had the authority to furnish authenticated copies"); 1852, Bowman v. Sanborn, 25 N. H. 112 (notary's copy of his records, admissible when made under a duty).

NEVADA: Rev. L. 1912, § 5417 (original need not be produced when it is "a record or other document in the custody of a public officer"); § 2234 (certified copy by recorder under official seal, of recorded mark and brand, admissible); § 1636 (certified copies of mining records deposited with a county recorder, admissible); § 3213 (copy of a paper, plat, etc., "emanating from" the State land-office under its seal, admissible); § 2340 (county recorder's certified copy of a record of a marriage certificate, admissible); §§ 1110, 1221 (certified copy, by the county clerk or deputy or the Secretary of State, of a filed certificate of incorporation, admissible); § 3658 (county auditor's certified copy of a delinquent tax-list, admissible); § 4163 (State comptroller's certified copy of his account, admissible in an action for a debt due to the State); § 2755 (notary's certificate of protest "drawn from his record," admissible); § 793 (city ordinances recorded with city clerk; provable by certified copy under city seal "without further proof"); § 1346 (foreign certificate recorded, provable by county recorder's certified copy); § 1384 (literary society, etc.; certificate of incorporation, provable by certified copy by State secretary or county recorder); § 1437 (W. C. T. U. of Nevada; articles of incorporation provable, by State secretary's certified copy under State seal); § 2754 (notary's certified copy of record; quoted ante, § 1675); § 2914 (county clerk's certified copies of record of partnerships, admissible); § 3513 (railroads; articles of association, provable by State secretary's certified copy); § 4565 (State railroad commission; certified copies under commission seal of any order, admissible); § 4699 (State engineer; certified copies under seal of office of "all papers or records," admissible); § 5409 ("the original or a copy of any record, other than a judicial record, document, or paper in the custody of a public officer of this State or of the United States, certified under the official seal or verified by the oath of such officer," is admissible with like effect as the original; "a public record or document in the custody of a public officer of this State in a public office," is provable by the legal keeper's certificate of genuineness under seal); St. 1913, Mar. 22, p. 192, § 15 (State engineer's water-records, provable by certified copy); St. 1915, Mar. 15, p. 72 (articles of incorporation of a corporation sole, provable by State secretary's certified copy).

NEW JERSEY: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 27 (a public record in a foreign State, territory, province, county, or city, there admissible, is provable by a copy exemplified according to the laws of the U. S.); § 28 (board of health clerk's certified copy of a recorded return of birth, etc., admissible); Neg. Instruments § 207 (same for a county clerk's copy of the register of a domestic notary dead, removed from State, or not found); Banking and Insurance Dept. § 6 (certified copies under seal of official papers in the commissioner's office, admissible); Corporations § 12 (county clerk's certified copy of a certificate of corporate organization, admissible); Banking § 3 (commissioner's certified copy of a bank's certificate of incorporation, admissible); Benef. Soc. § 15 (banking and insurance commissioners' certified copies of a foreign fraternal society's power to accept service, admissible); Cities §§ 1932, 2065, 2647 (city or city board ordinance, provable by the city clerk's certified copy under seal); Clerks of Courts, etc., § 16 (clerk's certified copy of a sheriff's bond, admissible); Munic. Corpor. § 52 (county clerk's certified copy under seal of the recorded bond of a municipal officer, admissible); Secretary of State § 8 (his certified copies, under seal, of a law, admissible); Railroads, etc., § 2 (certificate of railroad incorporation provable by State secretary's certified copy); Secretary of State § 17 (his certified copy of recorded sale, etc. of corporate franchise, admissible); Statutes, § 25 (State secretary's certified copy of records of "every proof that relates to any such bill as has become a law," admissible); Villages § 38 b (village ordinance book, provable by clerk's certified copy under village seal); Motor Vehicles, § 13 (certified copies of acts, etc. of State motor commissioner, or of papers filed in his office, admissible when authenticated under seal of office); in this State the failure to accept the American doctrine as to custodian's authority (ante, § 1677, where New Jersey rulings are given) explains the following rulings: 1854, State v. Cake, 24 N. J. L. 516 (clerk's copies of surveyors' oaths filed with him, excluded); 1871, Hawthorne v. Hoboken, 35 N. J. L. 247, 251 (certified copy of an enlistment record in U. S. War Department, admitted); 1894, West Jersey Traction Co. v. Board, 57 N. J. L. 313, 314, 30 Atl. 581 (Secretary of State's certified copy of a railroad route-map lawfully deposited with him, excluded); 1896, State v. Mayor, 58 N. J. L. 522, 33 Atl. 853 (an adjutant-general said not to have authority to issue copies of military records).

NEW MEXICO: Annot. St. 1915, §§ 2183, 2184 (records, maps, plats, etc., in the offices of the surveyor-general or Territorial secretary, provable by copy or tracing certified by the secretary under official seal or by the surveyor-general and attested by the secretary under official seal; but the Court for good cause may require production of the original); § 2185 (records, plats, or other writings on file in the U. S. surveyor-general's office in N. M., provable in civil causes by his certified copy); § 520 (certified copy of an officer's bond, in an action at law against the officer, admissible when the bond cannct be produced); § 73 (certified copy of cattle sanitary board's records by the secretary under his seal, admissible); § 2024 (certified copies of an election certificate, admissible); § 5511 (certified copy of records, lists, etc., of a revenue assessor, clerk, or collector, admissible); § 1294 (certified copy of a county surveyor's survey, etc., admissible); § 4828 (superintendent of public instruction's certified copies of his "official acts," admissible); § 5663 (State engineer's records, provable by certified copy); § 5728 (water-right records; county clerk's certified copies, admissible); § 5647 (State Corp. commission's or county clerk's certified copy of certificate of organization of water user's association, admissible); § 5254 (State land office; commissioner's certified copies of records, admissible); § 122 (certified copy of brand-book entry of brand, by the secretary of the State cattle sanitary board, under the board seal, admissible); § 892 (certificate of incorporation, provable by certified copy from State corporation commission or from county clerk where recorded); § 1028 (similar for public utility companies); § 1050 (articles of association of corporation not for profit, provable by certified copy from county clerk where recorded); § 1621 (certified copy of recorded partido contract i. e. for animals held on shares, admissible, on an issue of notice); § 1868 (in prosecutions of defaulting public officers, State auditor's certified copy under seal of the officer's account and other documents, admissible); § 2064 (political committee's accounts; certified copy by secretary of State or county clerk, admissible); § 2963 (Board of County Commissioner's order designating an irrigation district, provable by certified copy); § 5458 (surveyor-general's certified copies of field notes and surveys, furnished to county commissioners, admissible); § 5556 (certified copy, under State great seal, of application for trade-name, trade-mark, or label, admissible as "'prima facie' evidence of the facts therein stated"); St. 1915, c. 67, § 78 (State bank examiner's office; reports and records there filed, provable by his certified copy under official seal); St. 1915, c. 71, § 4 (duly acknowledged and filed chattel mortgage; county clerk's certified copy admissible in evidence "only of the fact that such instrument on copy was received and filed").

NEW YORK: C. P. A. 1920, § 367 (official certificate or affidavit filed, provable by exemplified copy); § 372 (marriage certificate or entry, provable by certified copy); § 382 (papers or records legally in a public office having a seal, or the Legislature, or "any other public body or public board" having a seal, are provable by copy certified by the official custodian or the board's presiding officer or secretary under official seal; but the seal is not necessary in the case of the Legislature); § 383 (paper or record legally in a town-clerk's office, provable by certified copy); § 388 (proceedings, etc., of a local city council, village trustees, board of health or of supervisors, provable by the clerk's certified copy); § 400 (record or paper in a Federal government office, provable by certified copy of the head of the office or of the legal custodian or of the officer federally authorized to certify); § 398 (document in a public office of a foreign country, provable by certified copy under seal of a deeds-commissioner appointed for that country, authenticated by the Secretary of State or by a U. S. consular officer under official seal); § 329 (where no form is otherwise prescribed, the certifier of a copy must state "that it has been compared by him with the original, and that it is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of the original"); § 377 (exemplified copy of designation of person for service on a corporation, etc.); Cons. L. 1909, Gen. Corp. § 9 (exemplified copy of a certificate of organization of a corporation in another State, etc., made evidence by that State's laws, admissible); Canal, § 80 (county clerk's certified copy of a notice of a public-works appropriation of land, etc., admissible); Canal, § 5 (custodian's certified copy of a filed canal-survey map or field-notes, admissible); Pub. Serv. Com. § 17 (public service commissioners' certified copy under seal of official papers, admissible); Laws Exec. § 108 (commissioner of deeds in another State or country his certified copy under seal of a document there officially filed or recorded, admissible when authenticated by the Secretary of State's certificate); Pub. Health, § 5 (certified copies of records of the State board of health, admissible); Education § 32 (State superintendent of school's certified copies under seal of official papers, admissible); Pub. Health, § 294 (certified copies of licenses, for undertaking and embalming); Sec. Class Cities, § 39 (like C. P. A. § 388); 1816, Mauri v. Hefferman, 13 Johns. 73 (foreign notary's copies admissible where a duty exists to certify; see the same case ante, § 1676, n. 9); 1817, Coolidge v. Ins. Co., 14 Johns. 308, 314 (certified copy of a ship's register, made by a collector of the port of registry, excluded because the collector is authorized to furnish only a copy to go with the vessel, "not to grant copies generally"); 1828, Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Wend. 561, 578 (certified copy of a ship's register by the register of the U. S. Treasury, where after condemnation the register is filed, received); 1897, People v. Tobey, 153 N. Y. 381, 47 N. E. 800 (certificate by a clerk of a commission, failing to state as required by C. C. P. § 957 that the copier has compared the original, admissible under id. § 933, authorizing clerks of public boards generally to certify to copies of records).

NORTH CAROLINA: Con. St. 1919, § 1749 (Secretary of State's certified copy of a law of another State, Territory, or foreign country, from a printed volume filed in his or the Governor's office or the State or Supreme Court library, admissible); § 1747 (Secretary of State's certified copy of a General Assembly's act, admissible); § 1751 (Secretary of State's certified copy of plots, surveys, and abstracts of grant, admissible); § 1779 (keeper's certified copy under official seal, if any, of official bonds or writings recorded or filed in any "public office" or in the office of the Governor, treasurer, auditor, Secretary of State, attorney-general, or adjutant-general, admissible, unless the Court orders the original produced; county board clerk's certified copies under county seal of the records, admissible); § 1017 (register's certified copy of a coroner's bond, admissible); § 973 (constable's bond, provable by register of deed's certified copy); § 1115 (certificate of incorporation, provable by certified copy by State secretary or by clerk of superior court of county where recorded); § 1131 (amendment to such certificate of incorporation, provable by State secretary's certified copy); § 1750 (town ordinance, provable by mayor's certified copy, on appeal from mayor's court); § 1780 (copies of "bonds, contracts, or other papers" concerning the "settlement of any account" between the U. S. and an individual, or "extracts therefrom when complete on any one subject," or copies of "books or papers on file or records of any public office of the State or the U. S.," are receivable when certified under official seal by "the chief officer in said office or department"); § 6272 (papers in the office of the insurance commissioner may be proved by his certified copy under official seal, and conveyances, etc., executed by him under seal may be recorded with like effect as deeds); § 6575 (State librarian's certificate, under his and the official seal, "to the authenticity and genuineness of any document, paper, or extract from any document, paper, or book or other writing which may be on file in his office," is admissible); § 5408 (U. S. liquor license may be proved by "any witness who has personally examined the records," etc.); § 3422 (railroad company's articles of association, provable by State secretary's certified copy); § 3974 (registered trademark; State secretary's certified copy, admissible); 1796, Ellmore v. Mills, 1 Hayw. 359 (proving a statute of Virginia; the secretary of the Commonwealth, not the clerk of the House of Delegates, is the proper officer to certify a statute); 1817, Denton v. Foute, 4 Hayw. 72 (custodian's copy of enlistment contract kept at the adjutant-general's or treasury, not receivable); 1896, State v. Baird, 118 N. C. 854, 24 S. E. 669 (certified copy by a registrar authorized to preserve a clerk's bond, admitted); 1896, Barcello v. Hapgood, 118 N. C. 712, 24 S. E. 124 (certified copy of a corporate certificate of organization, by the Secretary of State of Maine asserting his custody of the original as a record, admitted); 1907, State v. Dowdy, 145 N. C. 432, 58 S. E. 1002 (illegal sale of liquor; U. S. revenue collector's certified copy of a Federal liquor license admitted, the license being part of a record kept under U. S. Rev. St. § 3240, and the copy being admissible under N. C. Rev. Code 1905, §§ 1616, 1617).

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7920 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); §§ 842, 843 (certified copy of a notary's record by the notary under seal or by the clerk of the district court having custody, admissible); § 2596 (commissioner of agriculture or labor's certificate of a recorded stock-brand, admissible); § 3624 (city auditor's certified copy under corporate seal of papers filed in his office and of city council records, admissible); § 4514 (articles of incorporation, provable by the Secretary of State's certified copy); § 5158 (so also for banking articles); § 4839 (insurance commissioner's certified copy of an insurance company's articles, etc., admissible); § 513 (certified copy of the records of the State board of dental examiners, by the secretary under the board's seal, admissible); § 8093 (certified copy of a publication-affidavit recorded with the register of deeds, admissible); § 3931 (village ordinances, provable by "the ordinance-book or the certificate of the clerk of the village under the seal of the village"); § 4367 (county judge's marriage record-book, provable by his certified copy under court seal); § 3373 (county auditor's certified copy under seal of vouchers, etc., filed in his office, admissible); § 6432 (certified copies by the clerk of the district court of a register of partnerships, admissible); § 3596 (city auditor's record of ordinances, or a certified copy, admissible); § 3738 (city auditor's certified transcript of records concerning city improvements, admissible); § 3781 (Secretary of State's certified copy of record of city adopting commission government, to be conclusive); § 7919 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P.; § 1918, but substituting for par. 8, the following: "8, documents in the departments of the U. S. government, by the certificate of the legal custodian thereof"); § 8245 (certified copies of records or papers on file in office of State engineer, admissible); 1912, Peterson's Estate, 22 N. D. 480, 134 N. W. 751 (Norwegian parish records, verified by the keeper, the district judge, the royal minister of religion, and the U. S. consul-general, not admitted; in the absence of statute, the great seal of State alone suffices); 1915, State v. Kilmer, 31 N. D. 442, 153 N. W. 1089 (liquor offence; certified copy of U. S. internal revenue license, admitted under Comp. L. 1913, § 7919 and § 7917).

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11500 (papers, books, and records lawfully in the office of the Governor or Secretary of State, provable by certified copy of the Secretary under the great seal; in the office of the board of public works, by the board's president; in the auditor's office, by auditor under seal; in office of the surveyor of lands of the Virginia military district, by the surveyor's sworn copy; in the office of the county-recorder and being entries, etc., of above lands, by the recorder's certified copy; in office of the Union County auditor, being such entries, etc., by the auditor's copy [semble]; in the office of any Federal executive department, by copy under the department seal); § 10068 (Secretary of State's certified copy of the record of organization of an anti-cruelty society, admissible); § 8629 (Secretary of State's certified copy of articles of incorporation, admissible); § 9162 (same for union-depot corporation); §§ 2801, 2816 (certified copy of a county surveyor's book of plats, etc., admissible); § 4235 (same for the clerk's certified copy of a municipal ordinance); § 3613 (same for the county recorder's certified copy of a re-survey); § 3306 (same for a township clerk's certified copy of a township-officer's bond); § 145 (same for a certified copy under State seal, by the Governor's private secretary, executive clerk, or commission clerk, of the records of the Governor's office as to pardons, extraditions, etc.); § 624 (same for the insurance superintendent's certified copy under seal of official papers); § 4 (certified copy of a recorded official bond, admissible); § 99 (pardon-documents, provable by copy certified by the warden and attested by the clerk of the penitentiary or Court); § 553 (State utilities commission; certified copy of its order under seal, admissible); § 677-6 (same, for State inspector of building and loan associations); § 710-16 (State superintendent of banks; records, papers, etc., provable by certified copies under seal of office); § 2770 (soldier's discharge, recorded by county recorder, provable by certified copy); § 6222 (State secretary's certificate of record of union label, admissible); § 6240-3 (registered trade-mark, etc.; certified copy by State secretary or clerk of court of common pleas, admissible); § 9032 (consolidated railroad companies; State secretary's certified copy of agreement, admissible); § 10044 (benevolent association, etc.; certificate provable by certified copy by county recorder or State secretary).

OKLAHOMA: Comp. St. 1921, § 638 (copies of "all papers authorized or required by law to be filed or recorded in any public office, or of any record required by law to be made or kept in any such office," duly certified by the legal custodian, under official seal if any, are admissible "when such original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same"); § 640 (State Secretary's certified copy under official seal of a law, etc., contained in "printed statute books of the States and Territories of the U. S., purporting to be printed by authority," and deposited and required by law to be kept in Secretary's office, admissible); § 645 (certified copy by "the proper officer," under corporate seal, of ordinances, etc., of a city or incorporated town in the States, admissible); § 651 (official custodian's exemplification of books or papers in any department of the U. S. government, admissible); § 4028 (recorded brand of stock, provable by the county clerk's certified copy under official seal); § 5784 (county clerk's certified copy under seal of the proceedings of a board of county commissioners, admissible); § 5310 (State Secretary's certified copy of filed articles of incorporation, admissible); § 8145 (certified copies, by the clerk of the district court, of an entry of partnership names, admissible); § 5765 (duly certified copies of a county clerk's road record, admissible).

OREGON: Laws 1920, § 739 ("every public officer having the custody of a public writing which a citizen has a right to inspect" must give a certified copy on demand, which "is primary evidence of the original writing"); § 748 (a law of one of the U. S. or a foreign country, provable by copy under the public seal); § 766 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1918; but par. 2 adds "or other legal keeper of the originals"; par. 6 inserts "or the U. S."; par. 7 substitutes "judge of a court of record"; par. 8 adds for the certificates, "or under the hand and seal of the American consul" residing nearest; par. 9 is omitted); § 767 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 834 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2011, substituting "duly certified"); § 2752 (State treasurer's certified copies of deeds, papers, etc., filed and records kept in his office, admissible); § 753 (U. S. internal revenue license, etc., provable by collector's certified copy); § 767-1 ("any paper or the record of any instrument filed or recorded" in the office of any U. S. officer or agent or department or bureau admissible, or a copy certified by the legal custodian); § 771 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); § 6857 (articles of incorporation, provable by State secretary's or county clerk's certified copy); 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 (certified copy of New Zealand official registry of death, held properly authenticated under B. & C. Comp. § 755, subd. 8); 1915, State v. Locke, 77 Or. 492, 151 Pac. 717 (Indiana marriage record certified by the clerk of the circuit court under seal of court, admitted, under Lord's Or. L. § 766).

PENNSYLVANIA: St. 1823, Mar. 31, § 1 Dig. 1920, § 10333, Evidence (documents in the offices of the secretaries of the Commonwealth and of the land-office, of the surveyor-general, auditor-general, and State treasurer; certified copies receivable); St. 1828, Apr. 15, § 1, Dig. § 10335, Evidence (treasurers' bonds duly recorded, provable by exemplification); St. 1837, Mar. 11, § 20, Dig. § 10351, Evidence (certified copy of an extract from a burial-register of a religious society or corporate town out of the U. S., receivable; the certificate to be authenticated by the U. S. consul); St. 1840, Apr. 11, § 4, Dig. § 10311, Evidence (certified copy of the recorded bond of a justice, receivable); St. 1840, Apr. 11, § 5, Dig. § 10312, Evidence (same for the commission of a justice or alderman); St. 1843, Apr. 19, § 2, Dig. § 10339, Evidence (certified extract from assessment books, receivable); St. 1847, Mar. 9, § 1, Dig. § 8802, Deeds (record or certified copy of a duly recorded tax-receipt, receivable); St. 1857, Apr. 21, Dig. § 829, Attorney-General (Secretary of Commonwealth's certified copy under seal of an attorney-general's bond, admissible); St. 1859, Jan. 25, § 2, Dig. § 10340, Evidence (certified copies of papers on file and books in the canal commissioners' office, etc. receivable); St. 1907, May 29, § 1, Dig. § 10332, Evidence (certified copy by the health commissioner under seal of all office records, etc., receivable); St. 1866, Mar. 21, § 1, Dig. § 10341, Evidence (certified copies or ordinances, etc., of the Philadelphia Council, receivable); St. 1867, Apr. 11, §1, Dig. § 10342, Evidence (certified copies of provost-marshal's documents at certain places, receivable); St. 1868, Feb. 21, § 1, Dig. § 7619, Court Records (certified copies of official bonds recorded with the Secretary of the Commonwealth, receivable); St. 1840, Apr. 11, § 4, Dig. § 12995, Just. Peace (certified copy by the recorder of the bond of a justice or alderman, receivable); St. 1870, Apr. 14, § 1, Dig. §§ 10321–10323, Evidence (powers of attorney from U. S. residents to obtain payment of money at a government office in Great Britain, receipts there given for money so paid, reports awarding the money; provable by certified copy by special officers under seal); St. 1876, May 13, § 2, Dig. § 1181, Banking Comp. (auditor-general's certified copy under seal of a banking company's certificate of incorporation, admissible); St. 1876, Apr. 27, § 1, Dig. § 10355, Evidence (acts of foreign notaries, to be verified by the appropriate U. S. consul under seal, the consular seal and signature to be presumed genuine, etc.); St. 1889, Mar. 7, § 1, Dig. § 10346, Evidence (certified copies of documents in the office of the insurance department, receivable); St. 1874, May 9, § 4, Dig. § 20158, State Treasurer (State treasurer's office; copies of accounts and documents, under his seal, admissible); ib. § 1 Dig. § 20152 (State treasurer's bond; copy under seal of State secretary, admissible); St. 1913, July 26, Art. VI, § 46, Dig. § 18207, Public Service Com. (public service commission; records, etc., provable by secretary's certified copy under seal of the commission); St. 1917, June 7, Dig. § 18915, Register of Wills (bond of register of wills, recorded with Commonwealth secretary, provable by recorder of deeds' certified copy); St. 1919, May 21, § 11, Dig. 1920, § 1253, Banks (State banking department; all books, etc., filed in office, provable by certified copy under Commissioner's hand and seal, unless Court directs production of original); St. 1921, May 25, No. 422, § 14 (State board of engineers, etc.; records provable by certified copy); St. 1921, May 25, No. 425, § 38 (State board of public welfare; records provable by certified copy); 1811, Young v. Com., 4 Binn. 113 (certified copy by the Secretary of the Commonwealth of a coroner's bond not duly recorded, excluded); 1811, Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 325 (certified copy of a land-office entry by one not the proper custodian, excluded); 1832, Oliphant v. Ferrant, 1 Watts 57 (St. 1823 applied to admit copies of land-office blotters); 1852, Strimpfler v. Roberts, 18 Pa. 283, 297 (same); 1841, Hockenbury v. Carlisle, 1 W. & S. 282 ("exemplified copy from the proper office" is the correct mode; here, for tax-books); 1845, Farr v. Swan, 2 Pa. St. 245, 255 (maps filed in the land-office, provable by certified copy).

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS: Civ. C. §§ 1216–1224, 1225–1230 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 4290–4298, 4299–4304; based on the Spanish documentary system); the following are borrowed from the California Code: C. C. P. 1901, § 313 (pars. 3 to 9; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1918, pars. 3 to 9; pars. 1, 2, as follows: "Official documents may be proved, as follows: 1. Acts of the Chief Executive of the Philippine Islands, by the record of his office, certified by his secretary under the seal thereof, if there be one; acts of the Executive of the United States, by the records of the Departments of the United States Government wherein are contained the records of such acts, certified by the heads of such departments. They also may be proved by public documents, printed by the order of the Chief Executive of the Philippine Islands, or the President of the United States, or by order of Congress, or either House thereof, or by the order of the Philippine Commission, or by the order of any legislative assembly which may be provided for the Philippine Islands. Acts of the Executive of the Philippine Islands under Spanish administration may be proved by the records thereof in the custody of the United States officials, or officials of the Government of the Philippine Islands, certified by the legal keeper of the records. They may also be proved by public documents printed by the order of the Chief Executive of the Philippine Islands. Acts of the Chief Executive of Spain may be proved by the records of any department of that Executive, certified by the head of the department in which the record is; 2. The proceedings of the Philippine Commission or of any legislative body [that] may be provided for the Philippine Islands, or of Congress, by the Journals of those bodies or of either House thereof, or by published statutes or resolutions, or by copies certified by the clerk or secretary or printed by their order: Provided, That in the case of Acts of the Philippine Commission or the Philippine Legislature when there is in existence a copy signed by the presiding officers and the secretaries of said bodies, it shall be conclusive proof of the provisions of such Act and of the due enactment thereof. The proceedings of the legislative branch of the Government of Spain, prior to the eighteenth day of August, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, may be proved by public documents or statutes or resolutions printed by the order of the executive or legislative departments of the Government of Spain or commonly received in that country as such, or by copy certified under the seal of either the executive or the legislative branch of the Government of Spain, or by a recognition thereof in some public Act of the Executive of the United States"); C. C. P. 1901, § 299 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1893); § 301 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1901); § 314 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); § 318 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); 1916, U. S. v. Zapanto, 33 P. I. 567 (purporting copy of a pardon, bearing executive seal, but unsigned and uncertified, excluded on the facts).

PORTO RICO: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 4290–4298 (public instruments); §§ 4299–4304 (private instruments); these provisions, quoted ante, § 1225, being a translation of the Spanish law, Civ. C. §§ 1184–1198, are based on principles different from the Anglo-American law, and their interpretation would not be dependent on the latter's precedents; the following are taken from the California Code of Civil Procedure; § 1416 (like Cal. C. C. P., § 1893); § 1422 (like ib. § 1901); § 1437 (like ib. § 1918); § 1438 (like ib. § 1919); § 1442 (like ib. § 1923); § 1462 (like ib. § 1951).

RHODE ISLAND: Gen. L. 1909, c. 121, § 16 (municipal clerk's record of a birth, etc., provable by certified copy); c. 213, § 15 (Secretary of State's certified copy of documents of organization of corporation, admissible); c. 189, § 3 and c. 300, § 44 (same for a foreign corporation's power of attorney to accept service); c. 225, § 2 (foreign surety company; the insurance commissioner's certified copy of power of attorney to accept service, admissible).

SOUTH CAROLINA: St. 1731, C. C. P. 1922, §§ 716, 717 (exemplifications of records attested under the seal of a mayor, Governor, or notary of a domestic or foreign State, receivable conditionally); St. 1856, C. C. P. § 711 (copy of any entry in the official books of a sheriff, certified by him under oath before a clerk of court, receivable conditionally, on ten days' notice); St. 1866, C. C. P. § 709 (certified copy, "by the officer having the custody," of certain kinds of bonds, and "all other instruments in writing which by law are required or permitted to be in writing, and kept in a public office," receivable, on thirty days' notice); St. 1868, C. C. P. § 705 (attested copy of an act of General Assembly, by the Secretary of State, receivable; so of "all records, signed by the keeper of such records respectively"); St. 1871, C. C. P. § 710 (certified copies of "all papers filed in the office of the State Superintendent of Education, and his official acts," receivable); Civ. C. 1922, § 740 (custodian's certified copy of a public officer's bond, admissible in an action thereon); § 859 (Treasurer's certified copy of an entry from his books, admissible); § 706 (certified copy of an ordinance, resolution, or records of a town or city of the State, by the custodian under corporate seal, admissible on ten days' notice to the opponent); 1906, Montgomery v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co., 73 S. C. 503, 53 S. E. 987 (under Code 1902, §§ 2051, 2888, the Secretary of State's certified copy of a charter of consolidated railroads is not admissible).

SOUTH DAKOTA: Rev. C. 1919, § 2728 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); § 5872 (county auditor's certified copy under seal of the proceedings of county commissioners, admissible); § 8765 (Secretary of State's certified copy of articles of incorporation filed, admissible); § 1339 (certified copies by the clerk of court of a partnership register, admissible); §§ 5241, 5242 (certified copy of a notary's record by the notary under seal or by the clerk of a circuit court having the custody, admissible); § 127 (clerk of court's certified copy of entry in marriage register, admissible); § 5124 (legislative journals provable by copies certified by secretary of Senate and chief clerk of House); § 5241 (notary's certified copy of record of protest, admissible); § 5338 (Secretary of State's certified copies must be countersigned by State treasurer, showing fee charged); § 5389 (State board of charities and correction; certified copies of papers in its possession, sealed and signed by president and secretary, admissible); § 6247 (certified copy of municipal ordinance, admissible); § 6448 (city board of park supervisors; secretary's certified copy of records, admissible); § 7668 (State board of health's regulation, provable by superintendent's certified copy); § 7671 (State board of health's register of licenses to physicians, provable by certified copy); § 7760 (State board of optometry examiner's records of licenses, etc., provable by certified copy); § 7749 (State board of dental examiner's records, provable by transcript under board seal certified by the secretary); § 8080 (State livestock sanitary board's records, provable by superintendent's transcript under board seal); § 8135 (recorded livestock brand, provable by copy certified by State livestock commission's secretary, or prior to Mar. 9, 1897, by county register of deeds); § 8942 (State superintendent of banks; records and papers in his office provable by his certified copy under official seal); § 9913 (record in office of State superintendent of vital statistics, provable by his certified copy under seal of department of history); § 10324 (illegal sale of liquor; "all written or printed papers, orders, statements, prescriptions, affidavits, reports, or records provided for in this article, and certified copies of the same," are admissible).

TENNESSEE: Shannon's Code, 1916, § 5573 (papers "belonging to any public office" or lawfully "filed to be kept therein," provable by certified copies); § 5574 (records, books, and papers of a "county entry-taker's office," provable by certified copies); § 5584 (copy of a legislative journal, domestic or foreign provable by the legal custodian's certified copy); §§ 5587–88 (written law or "other public writing" of any State, provable by copy under the great seal; document belonging in the office of a department of the general government, provable by certified copy by the head of the department); § 5590 (certified copy by the Secretary of State from statute-books, etc., described in id. §§ 5584–85, in the State library, receivable); § 265 (documents in the comptroller's office, provable by his certified copy under seal); § 1045 (delinquent tax-collector's bond, provable by copy from the comptroller's office, unless the Court requires the original); § 2065 (incorporation-articles, provable by the county register's certified copy); § 7357 (existence of a corporation in a criminal case, provable by the charter's "legally authenticated copy"); § 5588*a*1 (records of U. S. internal revenue collector, showing payment of liquor tax, etc., provable by certified copy); § 3059*a*19 (copy of proceedings or of documents filed with State railroad commission, certified by chairman and secretary, admissible); § 3079*a*329 (U. S. internal revenue collector's certified copy of liquor tax receipt, admissible); § 3369*a*95 (State insurance commissioner's certified copy of recorded certificate of organization of fraternal benefit society, admissible); § 3369*a*104 (similar, for appointment of attorney by foreign society); § 3473*a*18 (registered trademark, provable by State secretary's certificate of record); § 5583 (acts of the Executive "of the U. S. or of this or any other State of the Union, or of a foreign government," provable by "the records of the State department"); 1879, Amis v. Marks, 3 Lea 568, 570 (certified copy of a filed constable's bond, received); 1899, State v. Cooper, — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 391 (entry-taker of Carter Co., authorized to certify a copy of the survey).

TEXAS: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3693 (Secretary of State's certified copy under seal of an act in printed statute-book as described post § 1684, deposited in his office, or of a law or bill there lawfully deposited, admissible); § 3694 ("copies of the records of all public officers and courts of this State, certified to under the hand and seal, if there be one, of the lawful possessor of such records," admissible; "translated copies of all records in the land-office, certified to under the hand of the translator, and the commissioner of the general land-office, attested with the seal of said office," admissible); § 3695 (certified copies, under a county surveyor's "official signature," of his records of surveys and plats, admissible); § 3696 ("any paper, document, or record" in the offices of the "Secretary of State, attorney-general, commissioner of general land office, comptroller, treasurer, adjutant-general and commissioners of agriculture, and of insurance, and banking, and State librarian," provable by their certified copies); § 3697 (certified copies of notaries' "records and official papers," admissible); § 3698 (in State suits for official money default, the records of the comptroller of public accounts are provable by his transcript under official seal; and bonds, contracts, etc., connected with the account, are provable similarly when annexed to such a transcript, except that when the suit is on the bond, etc., and execution is denied on oath, the Court "shall require the production and proof thereof"); § 3707 ("certified copies, under the hands and official seals of the heads of departments, of all notes, bonds, mortgages, bills, accounts, or other documents, properly on file in any of the departments of this State," admissible); § 1131 (Secretary of State's certified copy, under the great seal of State, of a corporate charter, admissible); § 1321 (foreign corporation's permit to do business, provable by State secretary's certified copy); 1847, Bryant v. Kelton, 1 Tex. 436, semble (certified copy of a record of a bill of sale, excluded because the certifier was not shown to be required by law to keep the records); 1862, Patrick v. Nance, 26 Tex. 298, 301 (certified copy of field-notes, not properly returned to the survey-office, excluded); 1887, Harvey v. Cummings, 68 Tex. 599, 603, 5 S. W. 513 (certified copy by the Alabama Secretary of State, from the printed statute-book in his office, admitted); 1906, Smithers v. Lowrance, 100 Tex. 77, 93 S. W. 1064 (State land commissioner's records; certified copy admitted).

UTAH: Comp. L. 1917, § 7084 ("A copy of the written law or other public writing of any other State, or of a Territory, or a foreign country, attested by the certificate of the officer having charge of the original under the public seal of the State, Territory, or country, or attested by the certificate of the keeper thereof and the seal of his office annexed, if there be a seal, together with the certificate of the presiding justice of the county, parish, or district, in which such office may be kept, or of the Governor, Secretary of State, or chancellor, or, if of a foreign country, the certificate of the minister or ambassador, or a consul, vice-consul, or consular agent of the U. S. in such foreign country," is admissible); § 7091 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1918, except as follows; in par. 1, omitting the first "of the State department" and changing the second to "the departments"; in pars. 3 and 7, reading "of another State or of a Territory"; in par. 7, inserting "circuit, district"; in par. 8, inserting "or with the certificate of the minister or ambassador, or a consul, vice-consul, or consular agent of the U. S. in such foreign country"); § 7092 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1919); §§ 7076, 7097 (like id. § 1923); § 7117 (like id. § 1855, par. 3); § 7156 (certified copy, by the judge or official custodian, of an affidavit of publication of notice, admissible); §§ 3895–3899 (certified copy of an affidavit of mining improvements, mining regulations and records, and mining location-notices, admissible); § 866 (certified copy of the Secretary of State's certificate of incorporation, admissible); § 867 (certified copy of corporation papers recorded or filed with a county clerk or the Secretary of State, admissible); § 5719 (State auditor's account of money due to the State, provable by copy); § 556 (city recorder's certified copy, under city seal, of record of city ordinance, admissible); § 786, par. 18 (similar to § 556, for towns); § 617 (city recorder's certified transcripts, under corporate seal, of city council records, admissible); § 5058 (State Registrar's record of births and deaths, provable by his copy properly certified); § 3417 (State engineer's maps and records provable by certified copies); § 3356 (liquor offences; U. S. internal revenue collector's certified copy of payment of tax, to be evidence); § 4823 (State public utilities commission; "all official documents or orders" filed therewith, provable by certified copy of a commissioner, secretary, etc., under commission seal).

VERMONT: Gen. L. 1917, § 542 (Secretary of State's certified copy of the State treasurer's bond, admissible); § 557 (State treasurer's certified copy of documents in his office, "belonging to his department" or "lodged there by law," admissible in civil suits); § 1902 (copy of the U. S. weather record, certified under oath by the officer in charge, receivable); § 3839 (county clerk's certified copy of a sheriff's bond, admissible); § 3875 (county clerk's certified copy of a lost or destroyed sheriff's commission, or an accused recognizance, admissible); § 3882 (county clerk's certified copy of a treasurer's bond, admissible); § 3978 (town-clerk's certified copy of the record of a constable's appointment, etc., admissible); § 3958 (town-clerk's certified copies of documents legally filed recorded in his office, admissible); § 375 (Secretary of State's certified copies of township-charters, admissible); § 5096 (Secretary of State's or county clerk's certified copy of a railroad's articles of association, admissible); § 5321 (same for a reorganized corporation); §§ 6032, 6034 (adjutant-general's and inspector-general's certified copies of official papers, admissible); § 3944 (town-clerk's certified copy of the recorded bond of town officer, admissible); § 376 (surveyor-general's books, papers, and records, in possession of the Secretary of State, provable by his certified copy); § 364 (secretary of civil and military affairs, copies, attested under his seal, of records in his office; "full faith and credit shall be given to such copies"); § 368 ("full credit shall be given to certified copies and attestations" under seal of Secretary of State); § 588 (State auditor's certified copy of a "record or paper belonging to his department" or "lodged there by law," admissible); § 969 (tax commissioner's certified copy of papers "belonging to" or "lodged by law" in his department, admissible); § 1903 (certified copy of a record of births, marriages, or deaths, required by law to be kept, admissible); § 3798 (marriage-records; cited more fully ante, § 1644); § 3876 (county clerk's certified copy of appointment and bond of chief of police, admissible); § 4968 (corporation law; Secretary of State's certified copy of documents lawfully filed with him, admissible); § 5010 (same for foreign corporations); § 5962 (secretary of State's certified copy of recorded trademark or tradename, admissible to evidence its adoption); St. 1919, Mar. 27, No. 72 (recorded deeds and public records in "another State or foreign county," provable by certified copy; quoted post, § 1681); 1867, Barnet v. Woodbury, 40 Vt. 266, 268 (town-clerk's copy of a grand list of assessment excluded, because his duty is to certify copies of instruments recorded only, and not merely deposited with him); 1906, Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 Atl. 146 (St. 1904, No. 24, p. 27, concerning the State auditor's certified copies, considered).

VIRGINIA: Code 1919, § 307 (House clerk's certified copy of the General Assembly's acts and the House's record and proceedings, admissible); § 6193 (clerk's or secretary's certified copy of an ordinance, etc., of a municipal corporation in the State, receivable); §§ 6197–8 (attested copy of "any record or paper in" the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, treasurer, register, either auditor, corporation commission, fisheries board, railroad commissioner, agriculture commissioner, State assayer and chemist, board of education or of public works, county supervisors, or county surveyor, receivable "in lieu of the original"; but "for good cause shown" the original records of a county surveyor "may be required to be produced"; attested copy of "any record or paper in" the office of the Secretary of State, treasurer, auditor, or a county surveyor, of West Virginia, receivable); § 6206 (records and office-books, not of a court, "kept in any public office" of the U. S. or a State, provable by attestation by the keeper, under seal of office, if there is one, certified by a judge of an appropriate court of record or by the Governor, Secretary of State, Chancellor, or keeper of the great seal; if by a judge, certified also by the clerk of the court under seal; if otherwise, given under the seal of State); § 6207 (birth-and-marriage register "in any place out of the U. S.,"; attested copy by a notary under seal of office, certified by a court of record or mayor or other chief magistrate or under seal of State of the kingdom, province, etc., receivable); § 1611 (license to practice medicine; certified copy by secretary of State board of medical examiners, admissible); § 1645 (custodian's transcript of State board of dental examiner's record of licenses, admissible); § 3845 (Commonwealth secretary's certified copy of foreign corporation's power of attorney to accept service of process, admissible); § 3868 (similar, for certain charter alterations); 1817, Warner v.

Com., 2 Va. Cas. 95, 98 (certificate of the Secretary of State, attested by the Governor of the State, received to show the statute of a domestic State).

WASHINGTON: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1257 ("Copies of all records and documents on record or on file in the offices of the various departments of the United States and of this State, when duly certified by the respective officers having by law the custody thereof, under their respective seals, where such officers have seals," admissible); § 7079 (certified copy, by the State log-scaler or his deputy, of records in his office, admissible); § 9025 (State auditor's certified copy under official seal of documents lawfully deposited in his office, admissible); § 3158 (county auditor's certified copy under official seal of a recorded stock-brand, admissible); § 9030 (copies, authenticated by the State Treasurer's official seal, of documents lawfully deposited in his office, admissible); § 8796 (county auditor's certified copy, under official seal, of instruments, etc., lawfully filed or recorded in his office, and of records of a board of county commissioners, admissible); § 3002 (copies of records of county commissioners, signed and sealed by them and attested by their clerk, admissible); § 8300 (certified copy of a notary's record, by the notary under seal, or by a county clerk having the custody, admissible); § 7356 (certified copies of records of the mining-district recorder, to have the same effect as "similar papers certified by other officers of this State"); § 2153 (certified copy of a recorded marriage-certificate, on a trial for adultery, etc., admissible); § 7364 (certified copy of a recorded affidavit of labor on mining claim, admissible); § 4307 (certified copy of all papers filed and official acts of the superintendent of public instruction, attested by his official seal, admissible); § 3319 (banking corporation articles; "authenticated" copy of record by county auditor, State examiner, or State secretary, admissible, for or against the bank); § 3682 (certificate of incorporation; copy certified by county auditor or deputy or by State secretary, admissible); 1904, James v. James, 35 Wash. 650, 77 Pac. 1080 (a public record from another State, is not provided for under the above statutes); 1906, State v. Kniffen, 44 Wash. 485, 87 Pac. 837 (deputy county clerk's certified copy of a marriage record in Michigan, excluded, because not certified according to U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 906).

WEST VIRGINIA: Code 1914, c. 63, § 27 (county court clerk's register of marriages, etc., provable by copy "certified by said clerk lawfully having the custody thereof"); c. 130, § 5 (custodian's attested copy of documents in the office of the Secretary of State, treasurer, auditor, or county surveyor, admissible); § 7 (same for the above officers and the land-register and court clerks of Virginia); § 20 (office books kept in a public office of the U. S. or a State, provable by the custodian's attested copy under official seal, certified by the presiding justice of the county or the judge of a court of record of the county or the Governor or Secretary of State or Chancellor or keeper of the great seal; this to be authenticated by the clerk of court under official seal, in case of a presiding justice, or by the great seal of State, if by one of the last four); § 21 (register of births and marriages out of the U. S., provable by a notary's certified copy under seal, authenticated by a court of record, or chief magistrate of a county or city, or by the great seal of State); c. 54, § 19 (Secretary of State's certified copy of a certificate of incorporation, etc., and a printed copy as provided, to be "as evidence, equivalent to the original"); c. 10, § 4 (recorded official bond, provable by lawful custodian's certified copy, but the Court may require "production of the original bond, unless the same be lost or destroyed"); c. 12, § 13 (house of legislature; journals, etc. provable by clerk's certified copy); c. 12, § 14 (enrolled act or resolution, provable by certified copy by clerk of house of delegates); c. 51, § 8 (notary's records deposited with county clerk, provable by clerk's certified copy); c. 150, § 29 b (State board of pharmacy books and register, provable by secretary's certified copy under board seal); St. 1921, c. 112, § 18 (road law; map, etc., required to be filed or recorded, provable by copy certified by clerk of county court or member of State road commission).

WISCONSIN: Stats. 1919, § 4148 (any document "filed, deposited, entered, kept, or recorded," or any lawful record, "in any public office or with any public officer of the U. S. or of this State or of any town, school district, county or municipality herein, or any public body or board created under any statute of the State," provable by certified copy); § 4149 (certified copy must be under the custodian's "official seal, or under the official seal of the court, public body, or board, in his custody," when required by law to have a seal; "any certificate purporting to be signed, or signed and sealed as authorized by law, shall be presumptive evidence that it was signed by the proper officer, and, if sealed, that it has the proper seal affixed, except when the law requires an additional certificate of genuineness"); § 4151 a (copy of any record, document, etc., lawfully kept in the office of the public lands commissioners of this State, and certified as in id. § 23.04, admissible); § 23.04 (commissioners of public lands, preserving all records, books, and other papers pertaining to public lands; a certified copy, by the chief clerk under official seal, of injured or lost documents, shall have the same effect as the original and a certified copy from any record required to be kept in the office, by State land-office chief clerk or commissioner under official seal, is admissible with the same effect as the original); § 4176 (certified copy of a recorded in mind (according to the foregoing principles) that the American common-law rule recognizes the official custodian of documents as having an implied authority to certify copies (so that the decision depends chiefly on the administrative law as to the proper custody of the original); that the certified copy is itself authenticable, for many or most domestic officers, by the seal of his office, and for foreign officers by the seal of State appended to the copy; and that in both of these respects numerous statutes in every jurisdiction now provide specially for certain classes of documents.

These statutes, with their tedious multiplicity of repetition, are for the most part vain and harmful, — a printed monument to the folly of excessive and thoughtless legislation. They are vain, because either they merely state what would by the American common law have been conceded or might have been made certain by a general clause, or they profusely repeat in scores of acts, with culpable forgetfulness, what is already the law by express general statute. They are harmful, because they not only add to the impedimenta of the profession and make necessary the mastery of multifarious petty learning, but they also provide, in many instances, inconsistent formalities of authentication for evidence which could equally well be subjected to a uniform simple rule. Add to this that the tendency of so many and so varying statutory peculiarities of detail is to impress the profession (both on the bench and at the bar) with the false notion that obedience to the precise statutory formalities is the sole means of evidential salvation; and to obscure the simple affidavit of publication, admissible); § 4181 (corporate charter, certificate of organization, articles of association, and amendments thereof provable by certified copy); § 4202 ("In every action upon any official bond, the original bond, or a certified copy," is evidence of execution); § 14.43 (records of the board of deposit, provable by the secretary's certified copy); § 4474 (certified copy of books, etc., made by court order, usable on a trial for perjury); § 1096 (certified copy of a tax-stub-book, admissible); § 1298 (certified copy of the record of a highway order, admissible); § 1388 (certified copy of the record of a drain order, admissible); St. § 4136 (State librarian's certified copy of any judicial opinion or any statute of a State or Territory or foreign country, "contained in any book in the State library," shall be receivable); 1892, Lally v. Rossman, 82 Wis. 147, 150, 51 N. W. 1132 (certified copy of a government plat, etc., by the chief clerk of the land-office, admitted under statute); 1906, Rohloff v. Aid Ass'n, 130 Wis. 61, 109 N. W. 989 (certified copy of a death certificate filed in the register's office under Rev. St. 1898, §§ 1024, 1024 a, excluded, as "not the best evidence").

WYOMING: Comp. St. 1919, § 4642 (certified copies of recorded foreclosure-affidavits, admissible); §§ 5048, 5060 (certificate of incorporation, provable by State secretary's certified copy under great seal); § 5075 company's road survey, filed with the State secretary, provable by certified copy under State seal); § 5451 (foreign corporation's charter, etc., provable by certified copy by the register of deeds under official seal); § 4970 (certified copy of a marriage record, admissible); § 4378 (copy of mining-district records, filed with the register of deeds, "shall be taken as evidence"; such records heretofore filed, and transcripts thereof, "shall have the like effect in evidence"); § 1383 (documents duly filed in the office of a county clerk or treasurer, and records kept by him, provable by certified copy under seal of office); § 5811 (like Oh. Gen. C. 1921, § 11500, omitting all between "great seal" and "shall be"); § 2893 (certified copy of the records of a clerk of a board of county commissioners and county treasurer, admissible); § 109 (certified copies under official seal, by the Secretary of State, of all records, documents, etc., deposited in his office by law, admissible); § 1495 (county clerk's certified copies under official seal of papers filed and of books of record, admissible); § 1763 (town ordinances provable by clerk's certificate under town seal); § 1827 (first class city ordinances, provable as in § 1763); § 4356 (State secretary's certificate of record of trademark, admissible); § 5249 (State insurance commissioner's certified copy of certificate of incorporation of insurance company, admissible).

general principles which once sufficed and will always remain inherent in the use of this class of evidence. In a few jurisdictions this evil has been avoided; but in most jurisdictions the law has still to be sought in a confused mass of statute and precedent. It is difficult to say which is the more to be lamented, — the unpractical narrowness of the English common-law rule which led to this legislation, or the cumbrous crudeness of the enactments which attempted to remedy the common-law shortcomings. A measure of the scope proposed ante, § 1636, would be a boon to our law.

§ 1680*a*. Same: Federal Statute for 'Documents in any Public Office.' The Federal statute of 1804 (Rev. St. § 906) is of special importance, because it provides a uniform mode which may be availed of in the court of any State or Territory for using certified copies of public documents (not being judicial records) existing in another State or Territory. The principle of a custodian's authority to certify copies is sanctioned, and the authentication of his custody, incumbency, and signature or seal is made by either a judge or an officer representing the supreme Executive, — the former alternative being a practical measure relieving from the inconvenience of resorting to the headquarters of government. The double certificate (of judge and of clerk), required for this form of authentication, seems intended merely to give that additional security which would come from the danger of forging a signature more familiar to the bar.[1]

This Federal statute is not exclusive of other rules for certifying copies of public documents in another State or Territory;[2] i. e. the offering party may follow either a common-law mode, or the Federal mode, or the local statutory mode, and a certified copy fulfilling the provisions of the one is not excluded for failure to answer the more onerous requirements of another.

Distinguish this statute from the one dealing with judicial records (post, § 1681*a*).

§ 1680*a*. [1] As to the rulings interpreting this statute the remarks prefacing note 12, § 1681, post, are here also applicable. The following are some of the rulings in State courts: 1828, Huff v. Campbell, 1 Stew. 543; 1834, Tatum v. Young, 1 Port. Ala. 298, 310; 1849, Geron v. Felder, 15 Ala. 304; 1851, Smith v. Redden, 5 Harringt. Del. 321; 1838, King v. Dale, 2 Ill. 513; 1885, Hudson v. Green H. & S. Co., 113 Ill. 618, 630; 1822, Henthorn v. Doe, 1 Blackf. Ind. 157, 159; 1828, Johnson v. Rannels, 6 Mart. N. s. 621; 1869, Rice's Succession, 21 La. An. 614; 1921, Reed v. Stevens, 120 Me. 290, 113 Atl. 712 (crim. con.; a purporting certificate of marriage signed only by the city clerk of Dover, N. H., held not sufficient under U. S. Rev. St. § 906); 1849, Routh v. Rank, 12 Sm. & M. Miss. 161, 186; 1854, Kidd v. Manly, 28 Miss. 156, 159; 1855, James v. Kirk, 29 Miss. 206, 210; 1836, Paca v. Dutton, 4 Mo. 371; 1841, Rennick v. Chloe, 7 Mo. 197, 202; 1805, Richards v. Hicks, 1 Overt. Tenn. 207.

[2] 1857, Parke v. Williams, 7 Cal. 247, 249; 1889, Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 69, 7 So. 302; 1859, Karr v. Jackson, 28 Mo. 316, 318; 1921, Reed v. Stevens, 120 Me. 290, 113 Atl. 712 (crim. con.; New Hampshire certificate of marriage); and the more numerous rulings cited in note 2, § 1681*a*, post, dealing with the statute about judicial records.

Contra: 1838, Pennel v. Weyant, 2 Harringt. Del. 501, 505; 1851, Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435, 447 (repudiating Ingersol v. Van Gilder, D. Chipm. 59).

Compare the rule for Federal and State jurisdiction (ante, § 6).

Yet where the local State has not provided for proof of copies of records in other States, the Federal statute may have to be relied on: 1905, Wilcox v. Bergman, 96 Minn. 219, 104 N. W. 955 (North Dakota deed-records, admitted under the Federal statute, though the local statute made no provision for certified copies from other States); 1904, James v. James, 35 Wash. 650, 77 Pac. 1080.

This doctrine, however, should not lead us to ignore the common-law propriety of using a copy duly certified according to the laws of the other State (ante, § 1633, n. 1, § 1652, n. 4).

§ 1681. Certified Copies of Judicial Records (including Probated Wills). Upon the general principle of the common law as recognized in England (ante, § 1677) the custodian of records had, as custodian, no implied authority to certify copies. Thus the certified copies of a clerk or other custodian of judicial records were not admissible apart from an express authority appearing. The application of this principle may be considered, first, at common law, as to domestic records, next, as to foreign records, and, finally, under the statutes.

(1) A clerk's certified copy — or office-copy [1] — of a domestic judicial record was at common law in England not admissible, without an express order shown. Such an order could be either a general one or a special one for each instance. A special order was implied in the affixing of the great (or broad) seal, kept in Chancery, or of the court seal in any other court; because the judicial affixing of the seal was in effect a sanctioning of the specific copy to which it was affixed. Of general orders, there seem to have been three, — by the Chancery court, authorizing office copies of depositions for use in Chancery; by the other courts, authorizing office-copies of documents in the same court and the same cause; [2] and to the clerk of the rules, in general to certify rules (i. e. orders, judgments, and the like) to inferior courts.

The result of these rules, summarized, was practically this: An office-copy (i. e. certified merely by the clerk-custodian) was not admissible, except in an inferior court [3] or in the same superior court in the same cause; [4] while an exemplified copy (representing a special court-order) was admissible without limitation. This rule, and the theory upon which it was founded, was simple enough in essence, and was unquestioned. In the following passages its various aspects are expounded; the passage from Chief Baron Gilbert's book was the earliest systematic exposition of the theory, and for a century it served as the foundation for the text of every English writer on Evidence:

1611, Sir EDWARD COKE, Note to Dr. Leyfield's Case, 10 Rep. 93 a: "A copy of a record, being testified to be true, is permitted to be given in evidence; but the sure way is to exemplify it under the great seal, or at least under the seal of the court."

Ante 1726, GILBERT, C. B., Evidence, 11: "The next thing is the copies of all other records [than statutes] and they are twofold: under seal, and not under seal. First, under seal; and these are called by a particular name, Exemplifications, and are of better credence than any sworn copy; for the courts of justice that put their seals to the copy § 1681. [1] "Office-copy" is the original English term for what is with us termed usually "certified copy"; see the definitions ante, § 1648; an "exemplification" is a copy under the court seal or great seal.

[2] There probably was no express order; the thing was allowed as a matter of convenience, and explained on the theory of a general authority.

[3] 1699, Selby v. Harris, 1 Ld. Raym. 745 (at nisi prius, a rule of the C. P. or K. B. signed "by the proper officer," admissible; because, says Peake, Evidence, 33, "the clerk of the Rules is appointed to make out the rules of the court and authenticate them").

[4] 1838, Barron v. Daniel, Crawf. & D. Abr. 283 (office-copy from another court, excluded); 1840, Jack v. Kiernan, 2 Jebb & S. 231, 237 (office-copy in the same cause and the same court, received); 1844, Pitcher v. King, 1 C. & K. 655 (action for a sheriff's false return, in the same court as the original suit; office-copy excluded).

The limitation as to the same cause did not obtain in Chancery.

are supposed more capable to examine and more critical and exact in their examinations than any other person is or can be; and besides there is more credit to be given to their seal than to the testimony of any private person. . . . Exemplifications are twofold: under the broad seal, or under the seal of the court. . . . When a record is exemplified under the great seal, it must either be a record of the court of Chancery, or be sent for by a 'certiorari' into the Chancery (which is the center of all courts), and from thence the subjects receive a copy under the attestation of the great seal; for in the first distribution of the Courts, the Chancery held the broad seal, from whence the authority issued to all proceedings, and those proceedings cannot be copied under the great seal unless they come into the court where that seal is lodged. . . . The second sort of copies under seal are the exemplifications under the seal of the court, and these are of higher credit than a sworn copy. . . . Seals of public credit are the seals of the King and of the public courts of justice, time out of mind. . . . But the seals of private courts or of private persons are not full evidence by themselves without an oath concurring to their credibility. . . . The second sort of copies are those that are not under seal, and these are of two sorts, sworn copies, and office-copies. . . . A copy given out by the officer of the court that is not trusted to the purpose . . . is not evidence without proving it actually examined."

1761, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., in Denn v. Fulford, 2 Burr. 1177, 1179 (admitting an examined copy of a Chancery bill, and interpreting the stamp law): "How does it appear that it is necessary that a copy of a proceeding in Chancery, given in evidence, must be an office-copy? . . . An office-copy is, in the same court and in the same cause, equivalent to a record; but in another court or in another cause in the same court the copy must be proved."

1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 229: "Here a difference is to be taken between a copy authenticated by a person trusted for that purpose, for there that copy is evidence without proof, and a copy given out by an officer of the court, who is not trusted for that purpose, which is not evidence without proving it actually examined. . . . Therefore it is not enough to give in evidence a copy of a judgment, though it be examined by the clerk of the treasury, because it is no part of the necessary office of clerk; for he is only intrusted to keep the records for all men's perusal, and not to make out copies of them."

1801, Mr. T. Peake, Evidence, 31: "Something similar to exemplifications under the seal of a court are what are denominated office-copies of its proceedings granted out and authenticated by an officer appointed by the law for that purpose. There are, however, but few instances in which an officer is so entrusted, and though, in cases where he is, the law on account of the confidence reposed in him receives his copy without further evidence, yet where that trust does not form part of the duty of his office, his certificate is no more than that of any other private person, and gives the copy certified no credit whatsoever. Thus, though in every instance where any copy of a proceeding is granted out by an officer of the court, as copies of proceedings in chancery, in the crown-office, etc., it is popularly called an office-copy, and though such copy is for the sake of convenience permitted to be read in any part of the same cause, it is not legally evidence before another court."

1816, HOLROYD, J., in Appleton v. Braybrook, 2 Stark. 8, 6 M. & S. 37: "An exemplification is under the seal of the Court; which shows it to be the act of the Court, and it is equivalent when the act is done by an officer who has a duty cast on him for the express purpose."

In the United States, the more liberal principle, that a lawful custodian had implied authority to certify documents, was widely accepted (ante, § 1677) for public documents in general; and a logical application of it would have sufficed to admit a clerk's certified copy of a domestic judicial record. But this application seems to have been rarely made.[5] Probably some difficulty was felt about taking judicial notice of the clerk's office and presuming his signature genuine (ante, § 1679) for the purpose of authenticating the copy; at any rate, the English rule, requiring the affixing of the court seal, seems to have been generally kept up, apart from statutory modification.[6]

(2) Where the copy was of a foreign judicial record, the common-law theory and rule in England was no different from that for a domestic record. There must be an express order of court, and this was indicated by the judicial affixing of the court seal, making an exemplification. It is true that the question might be raised as to the possibility of presuming or judicially noticing the genuineness of the foreign court's seal, and a doubt and uncertainty of practice did exist on this point. But the proper course, if this doubt was sanctioned, was to call a witness and prove the seal genuine, and such was the practice (post, § 2164). The inability to notice the seal without proof did not alter the general theory and rule that the seal must be there as embodying an express judicial authority to the clerk to make the copy. This rule and the practice, then, were simple enough (though decidedly inconvenient). The practice probably would never have suffered confusion had not Mr. Peake, in the second edition of his treatise on Evidence, in 1804, made the inappropriate suggestion that the copy should bear the broad or great seal of State:

> 1804, Mr. T. Peake, Evidence, 2d ed., 72: "The proof of these proceedings [of a foreign court] has generally been by copies under the seal of the court where they were. There seems no objection to the seal of a court acting on the law of nations [i. e. a court of admiralty] being received as evidence of itself. But in my first edition [of 1801] I hazarded an opinion that to prove the seal of a mere municipal court [i. e. not of admiralty], some evidence should be given of its authenticity; and a case [Henry v. Adey, infra] which has since been determined in the King's Bench [in 1803] has confirmed that opinion. . . . It may be observed that the public seal of one State is matter of notoriety, and may be taken notice of by another, as part of the law of nations acknowledged by all; but when only the seal of a foreign court is put to the copy, it should seem that some evidence should be given of that seal being what it purports to be, for the courts of England cannot judicially take notice of the laws of other countries."

If it was here meant that the great seal should be substituted for the court seal, this might leave the copy unauthorized by court order, and still inadmissible; if it was meant that the great seal should be added to the court seal, merely to authenticate the latter, this would be theoretically correct, though practically a cumbering of formalities.[7] The suggestion of Mr. Peake seems not to have been in harmony with the English practice before his time; and it is perfectly clear that thereafter also an exemplification under the [5] Massachusetts furnishes an instance; but here it was a matter of old tradition.

[6] See the citations in note 12, infra.

[7] As in Spaulding v. Vincent, 24 Vt. 501, cited infra, note 12; see the cases cited post, § 2164. In a foreign State not having the peculiar English custom of keeping judicial records in the custody of the holder of the seal of State, or of sending them there to be copied, that seal could hardly of itself import an authority to make a copy.

foreign court seal was treated as the orthodox form of copy, even though occasionally the seal of some obscure court was required to be specially evidenced as genuine.[8]

But Mr. Peake's suggestion, however fruitless in England, is for us noteworthy; for it seems to have had some influence in establishing for the United States a common-law rule differing widely from the English one. Three years after the first publication of Mr. Peake's book, Chief Justice Marshall enunciated the proposition that a copy of a foreign judicial record must properly bear the foreign great seal of State, not the court seal:[9]

1804 (February), MARSHALL, C. J., in Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cr. 186, 238 (rejecting a copy of a Portuguese judgment of sequestration, "certified under the seal of his arms by D. Jono de Almeida de Mello de Castro, who states himself to be the secretary of State for foreign affairs"): "Foreign judgments are authenticated, [either] 1, by an exemplification under the great seal, [or] 2, by a copy proved to be a true copy, [or], 3, by the

[8] 1658, Olive v. Gwin, 2 Sid. 145, semble (copy of a record exemplified by a Welsh Court of Sessions, received); 1713, Stennil v. Brown, 10 Mod. 108 ("A copy of a rule [order] of court, signed by the officer of the court, is no evidence in any other court, unless the judge of the court set his hand to it himself"; requiring an exemplification of a French decree under the court seal); 1724, Anon., 9 Mod. 66 (exemplification of a decree in Holland, under the seal of the States, received); 1803, Henry v. Adey, 3 East 221 (copy of a judgment in the Island of Grenada, certified by the judge under a seal; excluded, because the Court could not judicially notice that the seal was that of the Island, "which was necessary to be shown in order to prove the judgment which it purported to authenticate"); 1807, Buchanan v. Rucker, 1 Camp. 63 (copy of a judgment from the court of common pleas in the Island of Tobago, under the chief justice's hand and a seal; the copy authenticated by a witness sworn to the handwriting and to the seal as that of the Island; Ellenborough, L. C. J.); 1811, Flint v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 215 (copy of a sentence of condemnation in a foreign court of admiralty; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "If you would prove the sentence, you must produce it under the seal of the court in the usual way"); 1814, Alves v. Bunbury, 4 Camp. 28 (copy of a judgment in the K. B. and C. P. of the Island of St. Vincent, signed by the chief justice and certified under the governor's private seal; Ellenborough, L. C. J., said "it ought either to be proved under the seal of the court, or distinct evidence should be given that the court had no seal and verified its judgments by the signature of the chief justice"; if it were a judgment in a foreign State, he should "require the same evidence"); 1816, Cavan v. Stewart, 1 Stark. 525 (if there is a seal of the court, the authentication must be under it, and not by mere certificate with signature and private seal; here the seal of the court of Jamaica had become so worn that it was seldom used, but its absence was held fatal); 1816, Appleton v. Lord Braybrook, Black v. Lord Braybrook, 2 Stark. 6; 6 M. & S. 34 (copies of a judgment in the supreme court of the Island of Jamaica, the first by the chief clerk, with a certificate of the Island secretary to the clerk's office, and another of the governor under the Island seal to the secretary's office; the second by the clerk of the court under private seal, with similar certificates; both excluded; Ellenborough, L. C. J., said that "an exemplification under the seal of the court is certainly admissible," but he held that the court's lack of such a seal did not justify the use of this paper; Holroyd, J.: "There is nothing equivalent to the seal of the court, and consequently the evidence is inadmissible"; Bayley, J., pointed out that the Island seal would probably have sufficed, had it been appended directly to the copy); 1824, Starkie, Evidence I, 190 ("If a foreign court has an official seal, it ought to be used for the purpose of authenticating its judgments"); 1850, Warener v. Kingsmill, 7 U. C. Q. B. 409 (exemplification of a New York judgment, under court seal, received; Robinson, C. J.: "The mere exemplification, without any evidence of examination, would of course be sufficient, if properly proved to be under the seal of the court; that is the common proof given of foreign judgments"; here the witness testified to seeing the seal affixed).

The general question of presuming the genuineness of a foreign court seal is examined post, § 2163; some of these cases are there again considered from that point of view.

[9] In the argument of the successful counsel, Peake's Evidence was cited; moreover there was no English authority which clearly supported that argument; this seems significant.

certificate of an officer authorized by law, which certificate must itself be properly authenticated. These are the usual, and appear to be the most proper, if not the only, modes of verifying foreign judgments. . . . If it be true that the decrees of the colonies are transmitted to the seat of government and registered in the department of State, a certificate of that fact under the great seal, with a copy of the decree authenticated in the same manner, would be sufficient evidence of the verity of what was so certified, but the certificate offered to the Court is under the private seal of the person giving it, which cannot be known to this Court, and of consequence can authenticate nothing. The paper, therefore, purporting to be a sequestration of the Aurora and her cargo in Para ought not to have been laid before the jury."

This rule of the great Chief Justice, repeated within the same year by the Court of New York,[10] was widely copied; and served as a model for many of our Courts. Its employment in practice has now been superseded in most jurisdictions by statutory provisions, which in many instances return to the English rule of requiring only the court seal and in some instances are satisfied with even less; but the rule of Chief Justice Marshall may be regarded as distinctively the common-law rule in the United States. Yet it must be noted that the rule as laid down by him for this country was a perfectly logical one, free from Mr. Peake's error; for, by the theory maintained for this country by Chief Justice Marshall (ante, § 1677), the custodian of documents had an implied authority of office to certify copies, and thus no express order of court (by court seal) was needed; the only necessity was to authenticate the custodian's authority, incumbency, and signature, and for this purpose the affixing of the great seal of State was the sole appropriate means.[11] The rule of the Chief Justice was therefore a logically correct one under the common-law doctrine of certified copies as maintained by him.

(3) The statutes which have since dealt with this subject in almost every jurisdiction present a great variety of provisions. In general, for domestic records, they accept a clerk's certified copy under his seal; for foreign records, they proceed upon the theory that the custodian of the judicial records is the proper officer to certify copies, and that his certificate must be authenticated by another certificate (stating the authority, incumbency, and signature-genuineness) given by some appropriate superior officer sufficiently high to allow the presumption that his seal is genuine. Other States of the United States are treated as foreign States; yet a distinction is usually introduced, as to modes of authentication, between those States and foreign nations. The great seal of State is in general not required, and the court seal (usually required) serves merely as a mode of authentication and not (by the English rule) as an order of court. The practical difference in the latter respect is that a certified copy by the lawful custodian, but lacking a court seal, could upon the American theory be sufficiently authenticated by calling witnesses to the signature, but by the English common-law rule would be incurably defective.[12] The theory of these various modes of authentication has already been examined (ante, § 1679).

[10] 1804 (August), Vandervoort v. Thompson, 2 Cai. 155, 163 (copy of a judgment of a ship's condemnation at Para; Thompson, J.: "This document cannot be considered an exemplification of a judgment; that should be under the great seal; this is only under the seal of arms of the Secretary of State").

The passage on this subject by Chief Justice Swift, of Connecticut, written in 1810 (Evidence, 7), shows the two rules, the old and the new one, stated somewhat confusedly as equally valid, and indicates the then novelty of the Federal rule.

[11] As already explained ante, § 1679; the rule and the authorities are considered in detail post, § 2163.

[12] In the following list are included both statutes and judicial rulings, but only a few of the latter are given, the earlier ones being for the most part now of no force and the others dealing chiefly with the verbal interpretation of local statutes: unless otherwise noted, the ruling concerns a domestic record, and where the terms of a decision are not given, it interprets a local statute. The statute list includes provisions as to copies of probated wills and letters testamentary, but the judicial rulings on that subject are placed ante, § 1658, under Records of Wills; compare also § 1238, for the rule as to producing the original. The statute-list also includes provisions as to copies of documents filed in a court and of depositions filed anywhere; but statutes dealing with ordinary registered deeds, wherever filed, are placed ante, § 1651, under Registers of Deeds; the statutes under Miscellaneous Public Documents, ante, § 1680, should also be consulted. Provisions dealing with the rule about producing the original as a condition of using a certified copy have already been given ante, §§ 1215–1217. Provisions concerning judicial notice of officers in general will be found post, § 2578, and concerned the presumed genuineness of seals in general, post, §§ 2163, 2164. Distinguish the principles as to what constitutes a record (minute-book, judgment-roll, original writ, justice's docket, etc.), briefly noticed post, § 2450.

Compare also the rule against merely certifying to the effect or non-existence of the record (ante, § 1678), and the rule requiring the copy to include the whole of the record (ante, § 1664, and post, §§ 2109, 2110). Note also that in a few jurisdictions (as in England and Delaware) judicial records may be provable without special statute under the general terms of the public-document statute given ante, § 1680.

ENGLAND: 1838, St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94 (cited ante, § 1680); 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 7 (judicial records of a foreign State or a British colony are provable by copy purporting to bear the seal of the court, or if none, to be signed by any judge of the court with a recital that no seal exists; no proof being necessary of the genuineness of seal or signature or the truth of the recital or of official character); § 14 (cited ante, § 1680); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, § 88 (Children Act: clerk's certified copy of court order, admissible); St. 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 59, Bankruptcy, § 139 (certified copies of documents in bankruptcy proceedings, admissible); Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Order XXXVII, Rule 4 ("Office copies of all writs, records, pleadings, and documents filed in the High Court of Justice shall be admissible in evidence in all causes and matters and between all persons or parties, to the same extent as the original would be admissible"); 1918, Permanent Trustee Co. v. Fels, A. C. 879 (marriage in Warsaw, Poland, with a marriage settlement; to prove the settlement was offered (1) a notary's copy of the original as prepared and kept by him in his records, this copy was obtained by the wife from the father-in-law to replace the one delivered to the wife by the notary, which she had lost; (2) a copy bearing the seal of the register of the Warsaw Circuit Court and also the certificate of the President of the Court with his seal, and the certificate of the chancery of the Warsaw Governor-General, the notary being dead and his records having been by law deposited in the court; held (1) that the first copy could not be received at common law, the custodian not being authorized to furnish copies, nor could it be received under New South Wales, St. 1898, Evidence, § 21, substantially like Eng. St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99; (2) that the second copy was admissible under that statute, being a "legal document deposited in a court," and duly authenticated pursuant to that statute).

CANADA: Dominion: St. 1893, c. 31, § 10 Evidence Act, R. S. 1906, c. 145, § 23 (records of any court in the United Kingdom or of Canada, or any court or justice of the peace or coroner of a province of Canada, or any court in a British colony or possession or in the United States or a State thereof or any other foreign country, are provable by exemplification or certified copy under seal of the court or of the justice or coroner, without proof of seal or signature "or other proof whatever"; and if the Court "has no seal or so certifies," then under signature of a judge without proof thereof "or other proof whatsoever"); § 28, as amended by St. 1921, c. 18 (reasonable notice, not less than seven days, required for using such copies); c. 146, Crim. C. § 794 (certified or sworn copy of conviction or dismissal by magistrate, admissible); 1910, Musgrave v. Anglin, 43 Can. Sup. 484 (certified copy by a Quebec notary, of a will in his custody held admissible under N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 22, and not under § 27; the will had not been probated; affirming N. Sc. decision; the opinions are interesting, but show how the modern judge has lost understanding of the general principles of the law of evidence, and yields intellectual slavery to the statutes on the subject).

Alberta: St. 1910, 2d Sess., c. 3, § 35 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 32); ib. § 43 (like P. E. I. St. 1880, c. 9, §§ 55, 56); ib. § 44 (probate of a will or a copy under seal of the District or Supreme Court, to be evidence); ib. § 45 (like B. C. Rev. St. c. 78, § 42, but substituting "unless the Court otherwise orders" for the proviso); ib. § 46 (like ib. § 43); Rules of Court 1914, No. 390 (custodians' certified copy of any pleading, etc., filed in the court, admissible).

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 30 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 23); § 20 (depositions provable by certified copy of the officer taking, without proof of his signature); c. 192, § 29 (judicial declaration quieting title, provable by registrar's certified copy "without accounting for the non-production of the original"); c. 78, § 40 (will of real estate is provable by the probate or letters, or a copy thereof, under seal of the court, on at least ten days' notice to the opponent; the same to suffice unless the opponent within four days after receipt gives notice of intention to dispute the will's validity); § 42 (for wills of persons dying in British possessions out of British Columbia, but affecting real estate within it, the probate or a judge's or clerk's certificate of the execution and of the filing of the original in a court of such possessions, suffices, on similar notice; but the probate or certificate "shall not be used" if the Court doubts as to the sufficiency of execution); § 43 (the certificate need not be proved as to the officer's appointment, authority, or signature).

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 13 (substantially like Dom. Evid. Act. § 25); § 22 (like ib. § 28); c. 150, § 25 (office-copy of a judgment of partition, admissible); c. 47, § 77 (official administrator's bond, provable by the provincial Secretary's certified copy under the Great Seal of Manitoba, without proof of seal or signature); c. 65, § 23 (on ten days' notice, the probate or letters c. t. a. under seal of the Surrogate Court may be admitted, and shall be sufficient evidence "of such will [of real estate] and of its validity and contents," even though not granted in solemn form, unless within four days after receipt of notice the opponent gives notice of intention to dispute its validity); § 25 (the will of a person dying in British possessions without Manitoba and leaving real estate within it is provable, without the original, on one month's notice, by the probate, or a certificate of the judge, registrar, or clerk, that the original is there filed and purports to be executed before two witnesses; this to be "'prima facie' evidence of the will and the contents thereof and of the same having been executed so as to pass real estate"; but the probate or certificate shall not be used if the judge "finds reason to doubt" the sufficiency of execution and so orders); § 26 (for the above certificate no proof of the official's appointment, authority, or signature is needed); c. 46, Rule 494 (certified copies of pleadings, etc., "filed in any office of the court," admissible without proof of the signature or official character of the officer); 1916, Re Goodman, 28 D. L. R. 197, 29 id. 725, Man. (extradition; certified copy of indictment under seal of clerk of U. S. District Court in Massachusetts; admissible under Can. Evid. Act, § 23).

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 58 (all judicial proceedings of "any court" in the United Kingdom or any foreign State or Canadian province or British colony, and all "legal documents filed or deposited in any such court," are provable by copy under seal of Court, or if there is no seal, under signature of a judge, with a statement of the lack of a seal; and no proof of the seal or signature or the truth of the statement is necessary); c. 151, § 31 (the probate or administration letters of a will deposited in a court out of the province, but affecting lands within it, when purporting to be under the hand of the custodian and the seal of the court, or an exemplification similarly authenticated, when proved before a person authorized to take acknowledgments and authenticated like deeds, shall be evidence "of the said original will being deposited" as above, and may be registered with like effect as the original); § 32 (will affecting land in the province but probated in British dominions out of the province; a copy by any court officer and under court seal, with a certificate of a judge of the court, shall be evidence of the original having been "proved and registered" there, and may be registered here like an original, and a certified copy will be evidence); c. 127, § 65 (registrar's certified copy of a registered will is evidence of its contents and execution, on six days' notice with a copy of the copy); 1890, Doe v. Savoy, 30 N. Br. 227, 232 (admissibility of a certified copy of an unprobated will from the registry of deeds, considered; Consol. St. 1877, c. 77, §§ 14, 15, and St. 1892, c. 11, § 2, construed); 1895, Murray v. Duff, 33 N. Br. 351, 362 (St. 1892, applied).

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 16 (all "judicial proceedings of any court of justice in Great Britain or Ireland or in any foreign State or in any British colony" and all "legal documents filed or deposited in any such court" are provable as in N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 58; nor need the judicial character of the signer be proved); c. 83, Rules of Court, Ord. 33, Rule 3 (documents filed in the Supreme Court are provable by office-copies).

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 15 (certified copy, under seal of court or the proper officer's hand, of any document "filed in any court in this Province" is admissible; certified copy of any order or entry of judgment suffices, without producing the record or other proceeding); § 16 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 23); § 21 (the probate or the registrar's certified copy of a will, or an examined copy of the original will, "when such will has been recorded," is admissible; but the Court may order production of the original, or direct such other proof of it "as under the circumstances appears necessary or reasonable for testing the authenticity of the alleged will and its unaltered condition, and the correctness of the prepared copy"; this section to apply to wills proved "elsewhere than in this Province," provided the original has been deposited and probate granted in a court having jurisdiction); § 22 (for such copies, ten days' notice and a schedule of documents must be given, unless the Court dispenses); Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 3 ("certified copies of all writs, records, pleadings, and documents filed in the Supreme Court" are admissible like the originals); 1909, Angle v. Musgrave, 44 N. Sc. 38 (Quebec notary's certified copy of a will on record in his office, admitted without further proof, under Rev. St. c. 163, § 27, though the will had not been probated in Nova Scotia; Townshend, C. J., diss.).

Northwest Territories: 1903, Beebe v. Tanner, 6 N. W. Terr. 13 (copy of judgment of circuit court in South Dakota, under seal of the clerk, admitted under Dom. Evid. Act, 1903, § 10); 1904, Stevens v. Olson, 6 N. W. Terr. 106 (copy of judgment of district court in Minnesota, semble, held admissible upon notice to the opponent, under Dom. Evid. Act, 1903, §§ 10, 19).

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 32 (exemplification under seal of court is admissible for any judicial proceeding in the Supreme Court of Judicature in England or Ireland or the Superior Courts in Scotland or any court of record in Canada or any British possession or "of the United States or of any State of the United States of America," "without any proof of the authenticity of such seal or other proof whatever," in the same manner as a proceeding of the Supreme Court of Ontario may be proved by exemplification in that court); § 42 (will may be proved by probate or letters of administration c. t. a., or a copy, under seal of the Surrogate Court, etc.); § 43 (for wills or real estate probated and filed in any court of the British possessions out of Ontario, of a person there dying, one month's notice is to be given, and the probate or a certificate or prescribed tenor may be used; but the Court may refuse to admit the probate or certificate); 1889, Barber v. McKay, 17 Ont. 562 (certified probate copy from the registry office, excluded, no notice having been given).

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, c. 9, § 21 (like Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 16, including the Dominion and provinces of Canada); § 23 (execution and contents of a will are provable by exemplification under seal of court where recorded, or of the judge or registrar thereof, or of "the custodian of such will," whether in this province or elsewhere in British dominions or in any foreign country; also its probate under seal of "any court of competent jurisdiction"; the seal, signature, and authority of the officer need not be proved); §§ 55, 56 (certified copies of depositions, without proof of the officer's signature, admissible); St. 1915, c. 11, §§ 1, 2 (proof of wills executed in Quebec before a notary).

Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, § 25 Evidence Act (will is provable by the probate of a certified copy by the clerk of court; but the Court "may order the original will to be produced in evidence or may direct such other proof" as is needed to authenticate it, etc.; this to apply also to wills probated out of the province, if the original will was deposited and the court had jurisdiction); § 20 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 23, but including the superior courts of Scotland and the railway commissioners of Canada); § 19 (document filed in any court, provable by the clerk's certified copy); 1909, In re Cheshire, 2 Sask. 218 (exemplification of letters probate in England under the seal of the High Court of England, sufficient).

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 15 (par. (1): "a copy of any document, writing, or proceeding, filed in any court in this Territory, shall be received as evidence to the same extent as the original, if it is certified under the seal of the court, or by the proper officer under his hand"; par. (2): "a copy of any order for judgment, or of the entry of the judgment in the docket of judgments, certified under the hand of the proper officer, suffices to prove the judgment without producing other part of the record"); ib. § 16 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 23, inserting "or territory" of Canada); ib. §§ 22, 23 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, §§ 21, 22, substituting as certifier the clerk of the Territorial court, and the word "probated" for "recorded," and requiring only five days' notice); c. 48, Rule 275 (like N. Sc. Ord. 35, R. 3, applying to any court).

UNITED STATES: FEDERAL. Constitution 1789, Art. IV, § 1 ("Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof"); Rev. St. 1878, § 905, Code 1919, § 1409 (St. 1790, May 26: "The records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State or Territory, or of any such country [subject to the jurisdiction of the U. S.], shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, that the said attestation is in due form"; for rulings under this statute, see post, § 1681*a*; compare Rev. St. § 906, Code § 1410, in note 1, § 1680, ante); § 1276 (U. S. marshal's bond, provable by certified copy by clerk of the district court under seal of the court); § 1289 (similar, for bonds of clerks of district courts); § 6323 (U. S. marshal's bond in consular courts, provable by certified copy by the secretary of the treasury or the minister; unless the judge, on sworn denial of execution or for other good cause, requires production of original); § 8804 (bankruptcy proceedings; various documents provable by certified copy); 1804, Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cr. 237 (quoted supra in the text); 1809, Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cr. 335, 343 (proceedings in the vice-admiralty court of Jamaica, under certain seals, received); 1826, Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Paine C. C. 594, 613 (consular certificate of an officer attesting a foreign judgment, excluded); 1899, Wagner v. County Com'rs, 34 C. C. A. 147, 91 Fed. 969 (Maryland secretary of State or court clerk, not authorized to certify to the genuineness of a justice's signature to a judgment); 1909, Pineland Club v. Robert, 4th C. C. A., 170 Fed. 341 (an exemplification of a will under S. C. Civ. Code 1892, § 2494, must be under seal of the Court and hand of the judge); 1917, Werlick's Will, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extra-terr. Cas. 668 (certificate of probate of will in "His Majesty's High Court of Justice," with purporting registrar's signature and seal of court, admitted, under U. S. St. 1900, June 6, § 1040, being Alaska Comp. L. 1913, § 1872, quoted ante, § 1680); 1922, Collins v. Loisel, 257 U. S. —, 42 Sup. 469 (extradition for cheating; a warrant of arrest, etc., from Bombay, India, certified by the U. S. consul-general at Calcutta, admitted).

ALABAMA: Code 1907, § 6180 (will duly probated and recorded, receivable "without further proof thereof," or a certified copy); § 6191 (admitting a certified copy of a will probated in another State, by the clerk of court, with certificate of a judge, or by the judge only, if no separate clerk; out of the U. S., by the clerk of court, with certificate of a judge, or by the judge only, if no separate clerk, with attestation of a judge of a court of record, mayor, or U. S. consular, etc., officer); § 4658 (justice's judgment, provable by certified statement by him or by his successor in possession of docket); § 2546 (letters testamentary and of administration, provable by certified copy); § 3996 (certified copies of letters testamentary, etc., to be admissible); § 3998 (certified transcript of records of justice of the peace, admissible, but without the county only when attested by the county probate judge); 1831, Torbet v. Wilson, 1 Stew. & P. 200, 204 (certified copy by a clerk under private seal, there being no official court seal, sufficient); 1874, Powell v. Young, 51 Ala. 518, 520; 1880, Holly v. Bass, 68 Ala. 206, 208 (affidavit-certificate of a judge of a Florida court, not properly authenticated); 1882, Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271, 294 (justice's record, not provable by certified copy, but by sworn copy); 1887, Stevenson v. Moody, 85 Ala. 33, 4 So. 595 (affidavit of exemption, and a record of it in probate court, provable by the certified copy without more; explaining the contrary intimation in s. c., 83 Ala. 4, 418, 3 So. 695); 1910, Pearce v. Fisher, 170 Ala. 456, 54 So. 164 (bankrupt court record, certified by clerk of court under seal of court, admitted).

ALASKA: Comp. L. 1913, § 577 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 10109); § 1872 (judicial records; quoted ante, § 1680).

ARIZONA: Rev. St. 1913, § 1739 (records of all "courts of this State," provable by certified copy under seal of "the lawful possessor of such records"); §1223 (probated will, provable by certified copy); § 1744 (in a suit on any instrument in writing filed in a suit in another court of the State, a certified copy by the clerk of court under seal is admissible; but the clerk of court shall be subpœnaed to bring it, if the opponent denies execution in a plea and affidavit); § 1745 (certified copy under official seal, by State or county officers, of all notes, bonds, etc., "or other documents, properly on file with such officers," admissible); § 1666 (claim of title by a third person to personalty levied upon; copy of the writ of levy, admissible in trial in another county); § 1733 (records of a court of "any other State or of the U. S. or of any foreign country," provable by "attestation of the clerk" or other custodian under court seal); § 1738 (State librarian's certified copy of judicial decision in "any of the law or equity reports in the State library," admissible); § 1754 (judgment of justice of peace in any State, provable by exemplification by the justice or his successor, and certificate of magistracy by clerk of court of record in the county under court seal).

ARKANSAS: Dig. 1919, § 4118 (justice's certified copy of proceedings before him, admissible); § 4119 (clerk of the circuit court's certified copy of justice's records delivered to him by law, admissible); § 4246 (certified copy of a deposition in perpetuam, admissible on a trial elsewhere than in the circuit court of the county where filed); § 10537 (probated will, provable by exemplification of record by the clerk having custody); 1904, Ramsey v. Flowers, 72 Ark. 316, 80 S. W. 147 (certified transcript of proceedings before a commissioner for U. S. Courts, admitted).

CALIFORNIA: C. C. P. 1872, § 1905 ("A judicial record of this State or of the United States, may be proved by the production of the original, or by a copy thereof, certified by the clerk or other person having the legal custody thereof. That of a sister State may be approved by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a clerk and seal, together with a certificate of the chief judge or presiding magistrate that the attestation is in due form"); § 1906 ("A judicial record of a foreign country may be proved by the attestation of the clerk, with the seal of the court annexed, if there be a clerk and a seal, or of the legal keeper of the record, with the seal of his office annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the chief judge or presiding magistrate that the person making the attestation is the clerk of the court or the legal keeper of the record, and in either case, that the signature of such person is genuine, and that the attestation is in due form. The signature of the chief judge or presiding magistrate must be authenticated by the certificate of the minister or ambassador, or a consul, vice-consul, or consular agent of the United States in such foreign country"); § 1907 (judicial record of a foreign country; quoted post, § 2158); § 1921 (justice's record in a sister State, provable by the justice's certified transcript); § 1922 (such transcript may be authenticated by a certificate of the clerk or prothonotary of the county of justice's residence under seal of the county or of the common pleas or county court); § 1323 ("duly authenticated" copy of foreign probated will, receivable for probate); § 1923 (see the quotation ante, § 1680).

COLORADO: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 393 ("A judicial record of this State or of the United States may be proved by the production of the original, or a copy thereof, certified by the clerk or other person having the legal custody thereof under the seal of the court to be a true copy of such record"); § 394 (from any other U. S. State or Territory, "by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form"); § 395 (from a foreign country, "certified by the clerk, with the seal of the court annexed if there be a clerk and seal, or by the legal keeper of the record," with official seal, if any; and with a certificate by a judge of the court attesting the clerk's certificate; and also a certificate of the U. S. minister or ambassador or consul as to the court's jurisdiction and official signatures); § 405 (certified copy of deposition 'in perpetuam,' admissible); Gen. St. § 8834 (all papers duly filed or deposited with a county judge and all record-books there kept, provable by certified copy under official seal); § 6539 (justice's proceedings, etc., provable by the justice's certified copy under seal; if offered in another county, then also attested by the county clerk's certificate); § 5213 (exemplified copy of a record of a probated will, admissible); § 5235 (judgment of insanity by a foreign court, provable by certified copy by the court or a judge under court seal, attested by the U. S. minister, ambassador, consul, or vice-consul); § 5390 (copies of probate "records and entries or of any papers or exhibits on file in such court," certified by the clerk or judge under seal of the court, are admissible); § 5375 ("authenticated copies" of probate inventories, etc., are admissible); 1889, Thalheimer v. Crow, 13 Colo. 397, 405, 22 Pac. 779 (clerk of U. S. circuit court's certified copy of tax-bill admitted); 1909, Henry Investment Co. v. Semonian, 45 Colo. 260, 100 Pac. 425 (copy of Nebraska judgment lacking both attestation and certificate, excluded).

COLUMBIA (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1070 (quoted ante, § 1680); § 1071 (certified copy of a will and decree of probate under court seal, admissible to prove execution); 1906, Scott v. Herrell, 27 D. C. App. 395, 398 (certified copy of a will, admitted under Code 1901, § 1071).

CONNECTICUT: Gen. St. 1918, § 4840 (judge or clerk's certified copies, with or without court seal, of probate records, admissible); § 4857 (same for a lost bond filed in probate court); § 5431 (ex-justice's certified copies of his records, admissible); § 2772 (superior court clerk's certificate as to the fact of a liquor license, admissible); § 5433 (town-clerk's attested copy, under town seal, of recorded justice's judgment, admissible); 1795, Spegail v. Perkins, 2 Root 274 (certificate of a clerk of court in another country, excluded); 1857, Dibble v. Morris, 26 Conn. 416, 424 (clerk of probate alone, and not the judge, is authorized to certify copies of records).

DELAWARE: Rev. St. 1915, §§ 3246–48 (provisions for proof by copy of a foreign probated will); §4229 ("any record or paper belonging to a public office or legally in the custody of a public officer," provable by the custodian's certified copy under seal); § 1369 (coroner's certified copy of inquest record, admissible); § 3887 (chancery bonds, recorded, provable by certified copy); §§ 3093, 3096 (certified copy of record of guardians' accounts, etc., in orphans' court, admissible); § 3299 (record of partition in orphans' court, provable by certified copy under court seal); § 3987 (justice's certified transcript of proceedings, admissible); § 3334 (record of will probated before county register of wills, provable by office copy); § 3409 (county register of will's certified copy of recorded executor's accounts, etc., admissible); St. 1921, c. 224 (foreign wills; amending Rev. C. c. 93, § 3246, par. 8); 1918, Burris v. Taylor, 7 Boyce Del. 87, 102 Atl. 984 (justice's certified transcript of document without signature, not admissible under Code 1915, § 3987).

FLORIDA: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2718 (judicial records of this State, or the U. S., or a State or Territory thereof, provable by copy attested by the officer having charge, under court seal; a recital by the attester that he has such charge, to be 'prima facie' evidence); § 2719 (wills and administration-letters recorded in a public office of this State, provable by the keeper's certified copy; probated wills in a U. S. State or Territory or foreign State, provable if certified according to the law of the place of probate granted); § 2763 (certified copy of a recorded deposition 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 2722 (certified copies of "all final judgments and decrees . . . in the circuit courts of this State," admissible); § 3363 (justice's docket, provable by certified copy); §§ 4500, 4520 (circuit court clerk's certified copy of recorded charter of corporation not for profit, admissible); 1906, Mansfield v. Johnson, 51 Fla. 239, 40 So. 196 (execution returned and on file, proved by the clerk's certified copy); 1906, Thomas v. Williamson, 51 Fla. 332, 40 So. 831 (statutory rule for certified copies of probated wills, construed).

GEORGIA: Rev. C. 1910, § 5798 (record in a public office, provable by certified copy); § 5800 (same for letters testamentary, of administration, and of guardianship); § 5801 (justice's records, provable by certified transcript, authenticated when out of the county by the county ordinary); § 3864 (probated will, provable by certified copy); §§ 3865, 3875-6, 3877 (foreign probated will, provable according to the Federal statute); § 5753 (judicial records and probated wills, provable by copy); § 5824 (judicial records of a State, etc., of the U. S., provable by the clerk's attested copy under court seal, certified by the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate); § 5819 (a "foreign judgment" must be authenticated by copy under great seal of State); §§ 3196, 3197 (certified copy of sundry papers of limited partnership organization, filed in office of clerk of superior court, admissible); § 5825 (justice of the peace's records in any U. S. State, provable by his certificate, attested by the certificate under court seal of any court of record in the county); § 5826 (similar, for records of any justice formerly in office, certified by his successor); 1879, Buck v. Grimes, 62 Ga. 605; 1899, Bell v. Bowdoin, 109 Ga. 209, 34 S. E. 339 (certified copies of copies of lost justice's papers established under C. §§ 5213, 5214, admissible without proving loss of original); 1900, Sloan v. Wolfsfeld, 110 Ga. 70, 35 S. E. 344 (copy of a record in another U. S. State must bear the great seal); 1905, Conrad v. Kennedy, 123 Ga. 242, 51 S. E. 299 (under Code § 5237, a certified copy of a will probate in another State must be attested as in due form by the judge, etc.); 1906, Patterson v. Drake, 126 Ga. 478, 55 S. E. 175 (Code 1895, § 5214, supra, applied); 1907, Sellers v. Page, 127 Ga. 633, S. E. 1011 (transcript of a court of ordinary; Code § 4250 applied).

HAWAII: Rev. L. 1915, § 2593 ("all judgments, orders, and other judicial proceedings of any court of justice in any part of this Territory or in any foreign State, and all affidavits, pleadings, and other legal documents, wills, and codicils filed or deposited in any such court," are provable by examined or certified copy); § 2602 (probate of a will, or letters of administration c. t. a. "shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the original will or codicil"); § 2600 (record of a court of record or a judge thereof at chambers is provable by transcript "authenticated by the attestation of the clerk of such court with the seal of such court annexed," or of the judge at chambers with the court seal); § 2601 (docket of any circuit judge at chambers or any district magistrate; transcript of the judgment, execution, and return, "when subscribed by said judge or magistrate," shall be admissible); § 2319 (record of a case in office of clerk of a Supreme Court may be proved by clerk's certified copy).

IDAHO: Comp. St. 1919, § 7949 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1905, substituting "another State or Territory" in the second sentence); § 7950 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1906); §§ 7955-56 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1921, 1922, substituting "another State or Territory" and adding in § 7956 "or court of general jurisdiction"); § 7957 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); § 7970 (writing itself must be produced, except "when the original is a record or other document in the hands of a public officer"); § 7133 (justice's docket, provable by certified copy of clerk or justice or his successor); §9388 (certified copy of the sentence of a convict, delivered by the officer to the warden, to be "evidence of the fact therein contained").

ILLINOIS: Rev. St. 1874, c. 3, § 56 (authenticated copy of an inventory or bill of appraisement of a decedent's estate, admissible); c. 30, § 33 (certified copies of deed-registry's record of probated wills and exemplified foreign wills, admissible); c. 38, § 474, St. 1883, June 23 ("duly authenticated copy of the record of a former conviction," admissible in proving a prior conviction of habitual criminals); c. 51, § 13 ("The papers, entries, and records of courts may be proved by a copy thereof certified under the hand of the clerk of the court having the custody thereof, and the seal of the court, or by the judge of the court if there be no clerk"); § 17 (justice's proceedings provable by certified copy by the justice under private seal or his successor having custody, and, if offered out of the county of justice's residence, attested by the county clerk's certificate); § 46 (certified copy of a recorded deposition 'in perpetuam,' admissible); c. 148, § 9 ("authenticated copies," with a certificate of probate by "the proper officer or officers," of a will of land in this State proved according to the laws of "any of the U. S., or the Territories thereof, or of any country out of the limits of the U. S.," may be recorded and be "as good and available in law" as wills executed here); § 10 ("all original wills, or copies thereof, duly certified according to law, or exemplifications from the records in pursuance of the law of Congress in relation to records in foreign States," may be recorded and be good and available in law); § 11 (certified copies of a record of wills in the county court by the clerk under court seal, admissible); 1872, Brackett v. People, 64 Ill. 170 (certified copy of a record of naturalization in Missouri, by the clerk under court seal, excluded); 1895, Garden City S. Co. v. Miller, 157 Ill. 225, 41 N. E. 753 (Rev. St. c. 51, § 13, making judicial records provable by the clerk's certified copy under court seal, includes records out of the State, because such a copy was already admissible at common law for records within the State; the act of 1872, Rev. St. c. 51, § 13 simply repeats that rule for domestic records, and extends it to foreign records); 1902, People v. Miller, 195 Ill. 621, 63 N. E. 504 (approving the preceding case); 1917 Teter v. Spooner, 279 Ill. 39, 116 N. E. 673 (bill in chancery to set aside a will; transcript of attesting witnesses' testimony in the probate court, certified by the probate judge, but not by the clerk of the probate court, held admissible); 1918, Barnett v. Barnett, 284 Ill. 580, 120 N. E. 532 (will executed in Illinois but probated in Colorado to lands in Illinois; whether a certified copy of the will and probate, recorded in the Illinois county, is sufficient evidence of title, under Rev. St. c. 30, § 33, and c. 148, § 9).

INDIANA: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 470 (judicial records of a State, etc., of the U. S., provable "by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, that the said attestation is in due form"); § 474 (records of a justice of the peace in the U. S., provable by certified copy under seal of the justice or his successor or the justice having legal custody, with the certificate of the clerk of a court of record of the county or district); § 475 (records of a local justice, provable by certified copy under seal by him or by the justice having legal custody); § 494 (records of a U. S. State or Territorial court, provable by the clerk's attestation under court seal, with the seal of the chief justice or other judge or presiding magistrate certifying due attestation); § 461 (recorded depositions 'in perpetuam memoriam,' provable by certified copy); § 2758 (letters testamentary and of administration, provable by certified transcript); § 2816 (same for foreign representative's appointment); § 1039 (decree of court changing a name, provable by the clerk's certified copy under court seal); § 1986 (indictment "lost, mislaid, stolen, or destroyed," provable by court clerk's certified copy of the record); § 3147 (probated will, provable by the court clerk's certified copy under official seal); 1857, Draggoo v. Graham, 9 Ind. 212 (foreign judgment of justice of the peace); 1861, Vaughn v. Griffeth, 16 Ind. 353 (same); 1861, Phelps v. Tilton, 17 Ind. 423, 426 (same); 1871, Ault v. Zehering, 38 Ind. 429, 431 (same); 1881, Bradford v. Russell, 79 Ind. 64, 70 (foreign judgment).

IOWA: Comp. C. 1919, §§ 7351–7353 (like Nebr. Comp. St. 1922, §§ 8919–8921); § 7808 (record, or properly authenticated transcript, of a probated will, admissible); § 7354 ("Copies of records and proceedings in the courts of a foreign country may be admitted in evidence upon being authenticated as follows: 1. By the official attestation of the clerk or officer in whose custody such records are legally kept. 2. By the certificate of one of the judges or magistrates of such court, that the person so attesting is the clerk or officer legally intrusted with the custody of such records, and that the signature to his attestation is genuine. 3. By the official certificate of the officer who has the custody of the principal seal of the government under whose authority the court is held, attested by said seal, stating that such court is duly constituted, specifying the general nature of its jurisdiction, and verifying the seal of the court"); 1855, Lattourett v. Cook, 1 Ia. 15; 1860, Guesdorf v. Gleason, 10 Ia. 495; 1871, Railroad Bank v. Evans, 32 Ia. 202, 205; 1872, Darrah v. Watson, 36 Ia. 117, 118; 1897, Rowe v. Barnes, 101 Ia. 302, 70 N. W. 197 (excluding a certificate of a foreign record in the name of the judge instead of the clerk); 1904, Tomlin v. Woods, 125 Ia. 367, 101 N. W. 135 (Code § 4646 applied to a California justice's record).

KANSAS: Gen. St. 1915, § 7273 (record lawfully kept in "any public office," or a paper lawfully filed or recorded there, provable by the legal custodian's certified copy under official seal); § 7279 (ex-justice's records, provable by certified copy of the justice in possession); § 7272 (foreign country's judicial records, provable by the legal custodian's "official attestation," with a certificate of one of the judges or magistrates of such court as to due attestation, and the "official certificate" of the custodian of the "principal seal of the government," under that seal, "stating that such court is duly constituted, specifying the general nature of its jurisdiction, and verifying the seal of the court"); § 11772 (recorded probated will, provable by the probate judge's certified copy under court seal); § 11779 (will probated in a State or Territory of U. S., recorded in a local probate court, provable like a local will); § 11782 (same for a foreign probated will, after local hearing and re-probate); § 7260 (depositions to be authenticated by officer's certificate and signature, under seal of court or office, if he has any; except that if the officer is out of the State and has no seal, there must be an attestation by the keeper of the great seal or by the clerk of a court having a seal, unless either parol proof is made or the deposition was taken by commission); § 7278 (justice's record, provable by his certified copy); § 7894 (similar); 1900, Drumm v. Cessnum, 61 Kan. 467, 59 Pac. 1078 (c. 97, § 4, applied); 1921, Muir v. Campbell, — Kan. —, 202 Pac. 844 (inheritance; certified copy of docket entries of justice of the peace admitted on the facts).

KENTUCKY: Stats. 1915, § 1627 (record of paper properly in the clerk's office of any court, provable by the custodian's attested copy, "upon proof of the execution of the original"); § 1630 (entry of date of execution, etc., from a clerk's or justice's book, admissible in a proceeding against the officer and sureties); § 1635 (records of a court of "any State," provable with the same effect as in such State by the clerk's attested copy under seal of court, certified by the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate; records of any court of U. S., provable with the same effect as in U. S. courts by the clerk's attested copy under court seal); § 1638 (record-books of any court out of the U. S. provable by the keeper's attested copy certified under official seal by a U. S. consul, chargé, or minister); § 1643 (lost papers in a judicial proceeding; "attested copies" may be used under certain conditions); 1827, Thomas v. Tanner, 6 T. B. Monr. 52, 53 (authority of a clerk of another State court to give copies, presumed).

LOUISIANA: Code Pr. 1900, § 752 (judgments in "the different courts of the U. S.," provable by certified copy of the clerk under his seal, attested by the "judge, chief justice, or magistrate who presides in the court"); § 753 (judgments in foreign countries, provable by copy "clothed with all the forms required to prove their authenticity in the countries" where rendered); Ann. Rev. St. 1915, § 1439 (certified copy by the recorder or justice, of testimony at a fire inquest, admissible); St. 1888, No. 140 ("duly certified copies of inventories of a succession" in New Orleans, when returned into court, admissible); St. 1870, No. 43 (in any trial in a district or parish court, "any record, paper, or document belonging to the files or records of either the district or parish court of the parish in which the trial is proceeding" is provable by the document itself produced by the clerk of the district court, without making a copy, unless the case is appealed to the Supreme Court); 1822, Hanna v. His Creditors, 12 Mart. 32, 52 (mortgage register's certificate of copy of a judgment, excluded); 1904, State v. Allen, 113 La. 705, 37 So. 614 (bigamy; certified copy of an official Indiana marriage certificate, recorded in a circuit court held properly authenticated).

MAINE: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 128 (records of a Federal or other State court, provable by the clerk's attested copy under court seal); c. 84, § 7 (clerk of court's certified copy of record of list of magistrates, and of certificates of discharge from army and navy, admissible); c. 88, §§ 26, 28 (records of justice of the peace deceased or removed, provable by copy certified by another justice or clerk of court in county).

MARYLAND: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 40 (debt of record in another of the U. S., provable by exemplification of the keeper under seal of the court or office); § 63 (court of chancery; keeper's certified copy under official seal of books, papers, etc., in his custody, admissible); § 64 (certified copy under official seal by the clerk of any court or register of wills, of any record in his custody, admissible, including any paper required to be recorded); § 66 (same for judicial proceedings, not required to be recorded, copied from papers, docket, and minutes); Art. 54, § 6 (land-office commissioner's transcript of a docket of proceedings, admissible); Art. 93, §§ 54, 56 (to prove a named executor to be infamous or insane, a transcript of a court-record of adjudication is admissible); § 112 (register of wills' certified copy of a record-certificate of an administrator's notice to creditors, admissible); §§ 351, 352 (custodian's certified copy under seal of court or office of a foreign will required to be recorded or lawfully lodged for safekeeping or authorized to be recorded, admissible; details specified); § 354 (authenticated copy of a foreign probated will recorded by a domestic wills-register; register's certified copy under official seal, admissible); § 355 (will probated in a domestic court may be required by the Court to be produced for proof, in custody of the register or deputy); Art. 17, § 56 (circuit court clerk's certified copy under official seal of any bond filed, is 'prima facie' evidence of "such bond and the execution and delivery thereof"); Art. 20, § 2 (constable's bond, provable by certified copy under court seal by clerk of circuit or superior court); Art. 79, §§ 1, 2 (recorded release given to executor, trustee, etc., provable by certified copy under seal by the county register of wills or clerk of court); Art. 93, § 38 (certified copy under seal of administrator's bond, admissible).

MASSACHUSETTS: Gen. L. 1920, c. 216, § 10 (register's certified copies of insolvency courts' proceedings, admissible); c. 233, § 69 (judicial records of other States or the U. S. provable by copy under attestation of the officer having charge of the records, with the court seal); 1831, Com. v. Phillips, 10 Pick. 28, 30 (record of a court in the State, provable by certificate of the clerk, under the court seal); 1860, Chamberlin v. Ball, 15 Gray 352 (for a record of a court in the State, "it is not necessary that it should be an exemplified copy under the seal of the court; . . . in Massachusetts it is sufficient if the copy is attested by the clerk; this rule of evidence is founded on immemorial usage"); 1901, Willock v. Wilson, 178 Mass. 68, 59 N. E. 757 (deputy clerk's certified copy from another State, held defective in not stating that the certifier was custodian of the records).

MICHIGAN: Comp. L. 1915, § 12503 (records of a court in a U. S. State or Territory or foreign country, provable by attestation of the clerk under court seal, or of the legal custodian under official seal); § 12505 (any common-law mode, to be still proper); § 12511 (records of a justice of the peace in another State of the U. S., provable by the justice's certified copy, attested by the clerk of a court of record in the county or district under official seal); § 11777 (recorded letters testamentary or of administration or guardianship, provable by certified copy of the registry of deeds); § 12517 (judgments recorded in a deed-registry, provable by certified copy); § 959 (justice's record, provable by his certified copy); § 12518 (record of condemnation proceedings, provable by certified copy of the clerk or the register of deeds;] see also id. §§ 2813, 3158); § 1748 (certified copy of a convict's sentence, admissible); § 13785 (recorded probated will, provable by the probate judge's certified copy under seal); § 13939 (probate court's adjudication of heirs, provable by certified copy); § 14922 (decree of sale of watercraft, provable by the clerk's certified copy); § 13387 (same for proceedings under a creditor's bill); § 1821 (State prison warden's register of convictions of convict, admissible, by certified copy); § 12506 (order, etc. of "any court of record in this State," provable by copy authenticated by certificate of judge, clerk, or register, under court seal); § 13802 (probated will record, provable by probate judge's certified transcript attested by his seal); 1865, Facey v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 527 (justice's transcript); 1871, Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410 (same); 1871, Goodsell v. Leonard, 23 Mich. 374 (same); 1876, Wilber v. Goodrich, 34 Mich. 84 (same); 1881, Campbell v. Wallace, 46 Mich. 320, 9 N. W. 432 (same); 1882, Wisner v. Wirth, 48 Mich. 291, 12 N. W. 194 (assignment in bankruptcy); 1884, Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 647, 20 N. W. 627 (justice's transcript); 1892, Howard v. Coon, 93 Mich. 442, 444, 53 N. W. 513 (same); 1911, General Conference Ass'n v. Michigan S. & B. Ass'n, 166 Mich. 504, 132 N. W. 94 (certified copy of a Canadian will probate, admitted).

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8412 (records of "any court of any other State or of the U. S.," admissible "when authenticated by the attestation of the clerk or other officer having charge," under court seal); § 8441 (clerk's certified copy under official seal of minutes of conviction and judgment, with a copy of the indictment, sufficient without producing the judgment-roll); § 8442 (justice of the peace's certified copy of his docket, admissible in any court in the county); § 8443 (the same when read in another county must be authenticated by certificate of the clerk of the district court of the county of the justice's residence under court seal); § 8445 (certified copy of a justice's certificate of conviction, admissible); § 8446 (judgment of a justice "in any State of the U. S.," provable by an exemplification by him or his successor, with a certificate of magistracy authenticated by the clerk of a court of record in that county under court seal); § 7272 (probated will, or its record, or a transcript of the record certified by the probate judge under court seal, admissible "without further proof"); § 8444 ("The proceedings in any case had before a justice, not reduced to writing by him, nor being the contents of any paper produced before him, unless such paper be lost or destroyed, may be proved by the oath of such justice, or, in case of his death or absence, by producing the original minutes entered in a book kept by him, with proof of his handwriting; or they may be proved by producing copies of such minutes, sworn by a competent witness to have been compared by him with the original entries, with proof that such entries were in the handwriting of the justice"); St. 1921, c. 455, § 2 (record of conviction of former offense, provable by certified copy of record in this State); 1872, Bryan v. Farnsworth, 19 Minn. 239; 1884, Herrick v. Ammerman, 32 Minn. 544, 21 N. W. 836; 1886, Gunn v. Peakes, 36 Minn. 177, 179, 30 N. W. 466 (certified copy by a clerk of court, authenticated by the great seal of Nova Scotia, appended to a certificate of the keeper of the seal, admitted).

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1952, Hem. § 1612 (certified copy of a recorded deposition 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 1954, Hem. § 1614 ("copies of all judgments, decrees and specialties of record rendered in any foreign country," admissible if certified under official seal by the "officer having custody of the record, and authenticated by the certificate of any public minister, secretary of legation, or consul of the U. S."; but if execution is disputed under oath, the original "shall be produced or its absence accounted for"); § 1957, Hem. § 1617 (copies of the record of a land-conveyance under a justice's judgment and of the record of a certified transcript of proceedings and of the record of an execution and return, certified by the clerk under official seal, admissible); § 1958, Hem. § 1618 (certified copy, under official seal, by the clerk, of wills and of their record when lawfully recorded, admitted); § 1960, Hem. § 1620 (copies of "records, books, and files belonging to the offices of the U. S.," certified by the officer having charge, admissible); § 1964, Hem. § 1624 (duly certified copy of a record of appointment and qualification of an executor, administrator, or guardian, in other States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, or foreign countries, and a certificate that he is liable to account by the office to whom he is accountable, admissible; also a certified copy thereof by the clerk of the chancery court where filed); § 1967, Hem. § 1627 (duly certified copy of a taxed bill of costs, admissible); § 1969, Hem. § 1629 (copy of an entry on the judgment-roll, with the caption at the top of the page of entry, certified by the clerk under seal of court, to be "competent evidence of such enrollment"); § 1971, Hem. § 1631 (in a suit on a writing filed in a suit brought thereon in another court, a copy attested by the clerk of the latter court is admissible); 1837, Strong v. Runnels, 2 How. 667 (copy of a Tennessee record, admitted on the facts); 1904, Wise v. Kerr Thread Co., 84 Miss. 200, 36 So. 244 (certified copy of a justice's judgment, admitted, under St. 1866, c. 101, Code 1892, § 2413).

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5387 (judicial records of the U. S. or any State, attested by the clerk under court seal if any, and certified by the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, "shall have such faith and credit" as in their own jurisdiction; records in this State are provable by copy attested by the clerk under court seal, or, if no seal, under his private seal); § 5389 (proceedings of a justice of the peace, provable by certified copy by the justice or the lawful custodian); § 5390 (justice's records lawfully in custody of the clerk of a county court, provable by the clerk's certified copy); § 5391 (ex-justice's proceedings, provable by certified copy by his successor in possession, or by the lawful custodian); § 5491 (certified copies of depositions 'in perpetuam' admissible); § 4191 (clerk's certified copy of a fee-bill, admissible); § 35 (letters testamentary and of administration, provable by certified copy under court seal); § 389 (certified copy, under probate court seal, of the appointment of a guardian or curator, admissible); § 5508 (certified copies of recorded depositions to establish land-corners, admissible); § 1979 (certified copy of a recorded land-title decree, admissible); §§ 535, 539 (probate clerk's exemplification of the record of a probated will, admissible); § 13642 (workmen's compensation; coroner's inquest proceedings, provable by certified copy); 1838, Wineland v. Coonce, 5 Mo. 296; 1850, Halsted v. Rice, 13 Mo. 171 (certified transcript of a justice's record must be by one legally possessed of his papers); 1853, McDermott v. Barnum, 19 Mo. 204; 1906, Stevens v. Oliver, 200 Mo. 492, 98 S. W. 492 (certified copy of a recorded probate of an Ohio will, admitted under Rev. St. 1899, § 4635).

MONTANA: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10555, 10556 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1905, 1906); §§ 10571, 10572 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1921, 1922); § 10067 (transcript of minutes of probate court, certified by the clerk under court seal, to be evidence of appointment of executor, etc.); 1922, Henderson v. Daniels, — Mont. —, 205 Pac. 964 (probate proceedings from Illinois, held not sufficiently authenticated under Rev. C. 1921, § 10040).

NEBRASKA: Rev. St. 1922, § 8919 (judicial record of this State or a Federal court, provable by certified copy of the clerk or legal custodian under seal of office); § 8920 (of a sister State, by attestation of the clerk under court seal, certified by the "judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate" to be in due form); § 8921 (proceedings before a justice of peace in any of the U. S., by the justice's certificate, "supported by the official certificate" of the clerk of any court of record in the county); § 8922 (judicial records, provable as in Kan. Gen. St. § 7272); § 5619 (will established after contest, and recorded, provable like a recorded deed); § 5620 (recorded exemplification of a chancery decree affecting realty, provable by the record or an exemplification thereof); § 1157 (certain county court records, provable by the judge's certificate, without calling the judge); § 1278 (probated will provable by the judge's certificate of proof under seal, or a transcript thereof as recorded in the registry of deeds); 1901, Linton v. Baker, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 251 (statute applied to admit a copy of a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division of the English High Court of Justice); 1903, Martin v. Martin, 70 Nebr. 207, 97 N. W. 289 (statute applied to admit a certified copy of a probate of a will in Pennsylvania); 1906, Gordon Bros. v. Wageman, 77 Nebr. 185, 108 N. W. 1067 (transcript of Missouri justice's judgment, held properly authenticated under the above statute); 1908, Koltermann v. Chilvers, 82 Nebr. 216, 117 N. W. 405 (a will-probate, admitted under the curative provisions of Cobbey's Annot. St. 1903, §§ 4817, 5008, 5025, 5026).

NEVADA: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5469, 5470 (certified copies of depositions 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 5408 (judicial record of this State, or of the U. S., provable by certified copy by the clerk or other legal custodian under court seal); § 5410 (judicial record of any other State of U. S. or any Territory, provable by the clerk's attestation, under court seal if any, with a certificate by the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate); § 5411 (judicial record of a foreign country, provable by certified copy of the clerk under court seal, if there be a clerk and seal, or by the legal keeper under official seal if any, with a certificate of attestation by a judge of the court, and a certificate of signatures and jurisdiction by a U. S. minister or ambassador or consul); § 5877 (copy of record of a probated will, with clerk's exemplification, admissible); § 5910 (certified copies of letters testamentary and of administration, etc., admissible).

NEW HAMPSHIRE: 1834, Mahurin v. Bickford, 6 N. H. 567 (certified copy of a Vermont justice's judgment, by the county clerk, excluded).

NEW JERSEY: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 27 (record in a foreign State, etc., there admissible, provable by copy exemplified according to U. S. law); Orphans' Courts §§ 23, 24, 25 (provides for admission of copies of a foreign probated will); Courts § 83 (same for the register's certified copy of a local probated will); Orphans' Courts §§ 5, 20, 21, 158 (similar, for a county surrogate's copies and register's copies); Partition § 9 (orphans' court clerk's certified copy under court seal of the commissioner's appointment and report, admissible); Poor § 27 (court clerk's certified copy under seal of a pauper-support award, admissible); Practice § 51 (certified transcript of a sheriff's return, by the sheriff or court clerk, admissible); Orphans' Courts § 163 (receipts to an executor, etc., recorded with the surrogate on proof or acknowledgment like a deed, provable by the record or a certified copy under seal, if the original is lost or not in the power of the offeror to produce); Evid. § 27*a* (certified copy, under seal of court, of "any pleading . . . or of judgments, orders, decrees or writs of any kind," in the courts of the State, to be admissible); Justices Courts §§ 112, 117 (justice's docket, provable by certified copy); Orphans' Courts § 162 (surrogate's transcript of records under official seal, admissible); St. 1911, May 1, c. 309 (exemplified copy of probate of foreign will need not contain proofs of execution); 1912, McDevitt v. Deacon, 83 N. J. L. 712, 85 Atl. 186 (certified copy of a will admitted, under Gen. St. Orphans' Courts, § 20, supra).

NEW MEXICO: Annot. St. 1915, § 2156 (duly certified copies of recorded depositions 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 5888 (probated will, certified by the clerk under court seal, or a duly authenticated transcript of record, admissible).

NEW YORK: C. P. A. 1920, § 382 (judicial records in the State, provable by the clerk of court's certified copy under seal of court); J. C. A. 1920, § 471 (local justice's docket, provable by his certified transcript); C. P. A. § 387 (justice's transcript of a docket-book, authenticated by the county clerk's certificate under seal, admissible; deceased or absent justice's minutes, provable by an examined copy); C. P. A. § 399 (record of a court of the United States, provable by certified copy of the clerk or custodian); C. P. A. § 394 (judgment, proceedings, etc., in the docket-book of a justice in an "adjoining State," provable by the justice's certified transcript, authenticated by the clerk of the county under the county court seal); C. P. A. § 395 (foreign country's judicial record, provable by copy attested by the clerk of court under court seal or by the custodian under official seal, certified by the chief judge or presiding magistrate of the Court, and certified also by the custodian of the great or principal seal of government under that seal); §§ 151, 153 (same as Con. L. Dec. Est. § 42); Cons. L. 1909, Decedent Est. § 42 (mode of proving a probated will by copy, prescribed); Decedent Est. §§ 44, 45 (foreign probated will; mode of proof prescribed); C. Cr. P. § 482 a (clerk's certified copy of minute of conviction, with indictment, to be evidence where no record of judgment was signed and filed); 1862, Lazier v. Westcott, 26 N. Y. 146, 148 (copy of a record of a Canadian court, held duly authenticated).

NORTH CAROLINA: Con. St. 1919, § 1779 (writings "recorded or filed as records in any court," provable by the keeper's certified copy under official seal, unless the Court orders production of the original); § 1781 (letters testamentary, inventory, etc., in another State, provable by certified copy according to Federal law or by "the proper officer of the said State or Territory"); § 1777 (will by an inhabitant of another State or Territory, of property in this State, provable, if the original cannot be obtained, by copy certified under Federal law or by the proper officer, etc.; so also § 4149); §§ 1773, 1774, 1775 (certified copies of locally probated wills, admissible; details prescribed); § 368 (when record and original of a will is destroyed or lost, clerk of court's certified copy is admissible, in probate proceedings); § 1115 (certificate of incorporation; noted ante, § 1680); § 3289 (partnership assumed name; certified copy of certificate by clerk of superior court, admissible).

NORTH DAKOTA: Comp. L. 1913, § 7911 (judicial records of a court of the U. S. or any U. S. State or Territory, provable by the clerk's certified copy under court seal if any, with a certificate of "the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate"); § 7912 (judicial records of a foreign country; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1906); §§ 7914, 7915 (justice's docket record, provable in the same county or subdivision by certified copy by himself or his successor; in another county or subdivision, the certificate of the clerk of the district court must be added); § 7920 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); § 7931 (certified copies of depositions 'in perpetuam,' admissible); 1907, Strecker v. Railson, 16 N. D. 68, 111 N. W. 612 (justice of the peace's record in another State, held not to be within the statutes).

OHIO: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 10519 (certified copy of a recorded will with probate, admissible); § 125 (notary's commission recorded with clerk of court, provable by certified copy under seal of court); § 8598 (certified copy of designation of heir made in court, admissible); § 11541 (mode of authenticating deposition, prescribed).

OKLAHOMA: Comp. Stats. 1921, § 637 (judicial records in a foreign country, provable by copy officially attested by the clerk or other lawful custodian, with certificate of attestation by "one of the judges or magistrate[s] of such court," and the official certificate, as to the court's jurisdiction and seal, of the officer having custody of the principal seal of government); §§ 643, 1066, 4836 (justice's certified copy of proceedings before him, admissible); §§ 644, 1066 (proceedings before a former justice, provable by certified copy by the justice in possession of the records); § 659 (certified copies of depositions 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 2851 (same for deposition taken for the accused); § 1191 (letters testamentary or of administration, provable by transcript of the minutes of court, with the judge's certificate under court seal of his qualification and the non-revocation of letters); § 1208 (letters issued in any of the U. S. or Territories, provable by certified copy "under seal of the authority granting the same"); § 2951 (clerk of a district court's certified copy of indictments, informations, and bonds filed, admissible when the original is "lost, destroyed, or stolen, or for any other reason cannot be produced at the trial"); § 8346 (sheriff's certified copy of process of commitment and returns thereon, admissible).

OREGON: Laws 1920, § 752 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1905, but requiring court seal for local or U. S. records); § 754 (judicial record of a foreign country provable by copy "certified by the clerk, or other person having the legal custody of the record, with the seal of the Court affixed thereto, if there be a seal, together with the certificate of the chief judge, or presiding magistrate, that the certificate is in due form and made by the clerk or other person having the legal custody of the original"); §§ 769, 770 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1921, 1922, substituting "under the seal of his office" in § 770); §§ 885, 886 (certified copy of proceedings and deposition 'in perpetuam,' admissible);, § 1146 (record, or duly certified copy, of a probated will recorded in a deed-registry, admissible in all controversies relating to real property situate in the county of record); § 10109 (foreign probated will, recorded like a domestic probated will, provable in the same manner); § 755 (judicial record of a foreign country; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907; quoted post, § 2158); § 771 (contents of certificate, like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923).

PENNSYLVANIA: St. 1856, Apr. 19, § 2, Dig. § 7613, Court Records (exemplifications of court records of Phila. Co. and of Supreme Court eastern district, admissible); St. 1911, June 1, Dig. § 54, Adoption (court decree of adoption, provable by exemplified copy); St. 1917, June 7, §§ 11, 15, Dig. 1920, §§ 18929, 18934, Reg. of Wills (copies of recorded probated wills and of the probate, receivable; also copies of wills, after probate is conclusive, recorded in another county where the land is); St. 1911, May 11, Dig. 1920, §§ 10347, 10348, Evidence (certificate of a court prothonotary in this State, under seal of office, of an acknowledgment of a sheriff's or treasurer's deed, receivable); St. 1860, Mar. 29, Dig. § 10319, Evidence (record of proceedings before a justice or alderman in any other State; certified copy by the justice, etc., verified by certificate of the clerk of the appropriate Court of record under seal, receivable); 1859, Magee v. Scott, 32 Pa. 539 (a justice's docket is not a record; hence, his certificate of a copy is inadmissible, except by statute).

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS: C. C. P. 1901, § 303 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1905, but assimilating the rule for courts both within and without the Islands to the California rule for a "sister State"); § 304 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907): §§ 316, 317 (justice's record; substantially like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1921, 1922, but applying the rule also to local justices); § 318 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); 1908, Ya Cheng Co. v. Tiaoqui, 11 P. I. 600.

PORTO RICO: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1424 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1905); § 1425 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1906, but omitting the intermediate certificate of the judge); §§ 1440, 1441 (courts not of record; like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1921, 1922); § 1442 (like ib. § 1923).

RHODE ISLAND: Gen. L. 1909, c. 312, § 32 (certified copies of executor's or guardian's discharge, etc., recorded in a probate court, admissible); c. 320, § 9 (same for lost bond filed in probate court); c. 281, § 39 (district court clerk's or judge's certified copies under seal of a justice's transferred records, admissible).

SOUTH CAROLINA: St. 1800, C. C. P. 1922, § 708 (certified transcript of minute-books of a domestic Court of record, by the clerk or lawful custodian, receivable); St. 1865, Civ. C. 1922, § 5572 (exemplification of a probated will, under hand of the probate judge and court seal, or the hand and seal of any other officer having legal possession, receivable after ten days' notice); § 5753 (exemplification and certificate, by the judge, of a foreign probated will, receivable); C. C. P. 1922, § 343 (probate judge's certified copy of order appointing executor or administrator, admissible).

SOUTH DAKOTA: Rev. C. 1919, § 2719 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 7911); §§ 2722–3 (justice's docket, provable by his certified copy; but in any other county or subdivision, a certificate of the clerk of the circuit court under court seal must be added); § 2728 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1923); § 2779 (certified copies of depositions 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 2720 (foreign judicial records; like Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1906); § 2767 (mode of authenticating depositions, prescribed).

TENNESSEE: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5579–82 (certified copy of a judicial record in (1) this State, (2) a U. S. State or Federal court, or (3) a foreign country, receivable; to be authenticated (1) by the clerk or legal custodian under seal of office; (2) by the clerk under seal of office, with the judge's certificate of due attestation, or by a justice of the peace for his own record, with the certificate of a clerk of a court of record in the county; (3) by the clerk or a legal custodian, with certificate of the judge of court, and certificate of the custodian of the great seal of government under that seal; the provision for justices of the peace applies to justices' records both within and without the State); §§ 3913, 3915, 3920, 3924*a*–10, 3929–32 (certified copies of probated wills, domestic and foreign, receivable; but the original of a will of real estate may be required to be produced, upon a suggestion of "fraud committed in the drawing or obtaining" or "any irregularity in the executing or attestation"; further details prescribed); 1871, Coffee v. Neely, 2 Heisk. 304, 307 (foreign clerk's certificate under Code § 5580, formerly § 3795; seal of office, without seal of court, sufficient).

TEXAS: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3694 (copies of all records of "courts of this State, certified to under the hand and seal, if there be one, of the lawful possessor," admissible); § 3706 (in a suit on an instrument filed in another court of this State, the clerk's certified copy under court seal is admissible, but upon affidavit denying execution, the clerk shall attend with the original); § 3275 (certified copy of testimony at a will-probate, admissible).

UTAH: Comp. L. 1917, § 7088 (for a record of this State or of the United States, like Cal. C. C. P. § 1905, first part; for a record of another State or a Territory, like the same section, second part); § 7089 (for a record of a foreign country, like Cal. C. C. P. § 1906, except that only one certificate is needed, and that from any one of the seven officers named); § 7094 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1921, reading "of another State or of a Territory"); § 7095 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1922, inserting "or court of general jurisdiction").

VERMONT: Gen. L. 1917, § 1671 (county clerk's certified copy of records of a former justice deposited with him, admissible); § 1932 (certified copies by the county clerk of recorded depositions 'in perpetuam,' receivable); § 3187 (attested copies of probate decrees, receivable, and certificates of probate, administration, and guardianship, receivable like the probate, etc.); § 3225 (so for a copy of a foreign will and probate thereof); § 3502 (probate court's certified copy of bond approved and filed in probate court, admissible as if the original); St. 1919, Mar. 27, No. 72 ("record of a deed mortgage, judgment, or other public record of another State or foreign country," provable by certified copy under oath by legal custodian, reciting that "the laws of such State or foreign country require such instrument or judgment to be recorded"; if a judgment, clerk must certify under court seal); 1852, Spaulding v. Vincent, 24 Vt. 501 (copy of a foreign record must be "certified by the clerk and the presiding judge and the seal of the court, with the broad seal of the province or kingdom to the appointment of the judge, with the proper certificate from the office of appointment"); 1855, Parish v. Pearsons, 27 Vt. 621 (copy of a domestic judgment must be authenticated by court seal); 1917, Humphrey v. Wheeler, 92 Vt. 47, 101 Atl. 1018 (certified copy of writ filed in town clerk's office, admitted).

VIRGINIA: Code 1919, §§ 6197–8 (attested copy of "any record or paper in the clerk's office of any court" in the State or in West Virginia, receivable); § 6205 (attested copy of the records of a U. S. or State court, by the clerk of court under court seal, if there is one, certified by the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate as attested in due form, receivable); § 6207 (notarial copy of record "in any foreign court," receivable, if under seal of office and certified by a court of record or mayor or other chief magistrate or seal of State of kingdom, province, etc.); § 5251 (authenticated copy of a foreign probated will and probate-certificate of property in the State, admissible); 1811, Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munf. 53, 71, 77 (certified copy of a judgment from the British governor of Hispaniola, under the Governor's seal, not the colonial seal, received); 1817, Gibson v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 111, 120 (a copy of the General Court's judgment, certified by its clerk, is evidence in the Superior Court); 1826, Dickinson v. M'Craw, 4 Rand. 158, 160 (statute applied).

WASHINGTON: R. & B. 1909, § 1254 (records of any court of the United States, or any State or Territory, admissible "when duly authenticated by the attestation of the clerk, prothonotary, or other officer having charge of the records of such court, with the seal of such court annexed"); § 1253 (certified copy of a deposition 'in perpetuam', admissible); § 1304 (a duly probated and recorded will, "certified by the judge of the superior court and attested by the seal of said court, may be read as evidence without any further proof"); § 1305 (record of the foregoing, and exemplification thereof by the clerk having custody, admissible); § 1317 (foreign probated wills; copy to be authenticated by attestation of the clerk of court, or if no clerk, of the judge, and "by the seal of office of such officers, if they have a seal"); § 1386 (copy of letters testamentary or of administration, or of the record thereof, certified by the clerk under seal of the superior court, admissible); St. 1917, Mar. 16, c. 156 (Probate Code; clerk's exemplified copy of recorded probated will, admissible like the original).

WEST VIRGINIA: Code 1914, c. 130, § 5 (clerk of court's attested copy of a document in his office, admissible); § 7 (same for a Virginia clerk); § 19 (records of a court of the U. S. or of any State, Territory, or District, provable by the clerk's attested copy under court seal, certified by the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate to be attested in due form); § 21 (record of a foreign court, provable by a notary's certified copy under seal, authenticated by a court of record or the chief magistrate of a county or city or the great seal of State); c. 50, § 182 (justice's docket entry, provable by a transcript by him or his successor or its lawful custodian).

WISCONSIN: Stats. 1919, § 4140 (domestic courts; record provable by certified copy by "the clerk, judge, or justice having legal custody of the original," under seal "of the court or of such officer"); §§ 4121, 4134 (certified copy of a recorded deposition 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 4142 (justice of the peace's certified transcript of his proceedings, admissible before him); § 4143 (justice of the peace's proceedings, provable in any court in the same county by a copy certified by him or his successor or other legal custodian; in any other county, by the same, with a certificate of the clerk of the circuit court of the county under court seal); § 4144 (record of an absent or deceased justice, authenticated by proving his handwriting to the produced record, or by proving a sworn copy and the handwriting of the original entries); § 4145 (record of any court of the U. S. or of any State or Territory or District thereof, provable "when authenticated in the manner directed in § 4140, by the attestation of the clerk, prothonotary, or other officer having charge of the records of such court, with the seal of the court affixed, or in the manner provided by Acts of Congress for the authentication of judicial proceedings"); § 4146 (records of a justice or other court not of record in any U. S. State or Territory, provable by certified copy by the justice or his successor, with a certificate by the clerk of a court of record in § 1681*a*. Same: Federal Statute for Judicial Records. The Federal statute (Rev. St. § 905), passed in 1790, has been of particular importance, not only as furnishing a model for State legislation, but also as providing under the Constitution a rule which is available in any State or Territorial court, for using certified copies of judicial records from another State or Territory.[1] It has been generally conceded that this Federal provision is not exclusive of other rules, but is merely additional to them.[2] Thus there are now usually three sets of rules, by any of which such a certified copy may be prepared and admitted, — the common-law rule, the local State statutory rule, and the Federal rule; one of them being often more liberal or simple than the others. It is worth noting that, although another of the the county under court seal); § 4147 (records in a foreign country, admissible "when authenticated in the manner required in the two preceding sections"; proof of genuineness of signatures of the authenticating officers and of seal of court of record is "not to be required in the first instance"); § 4149 (certified copy when made admissible must have the official seal of the custodian or of the court; the signature and seal will be presumed genuine, except when an additional certificate is required); § 4150 (but the seal of court is not necessary for a copy to be used before the same court); § 2295 (certified copy of a recorded foreign probated will, admissible); § 2464*b* (registers in probate; certified copies by them are receivable like those of clerks of court).

WYOMING: Comp. St. 1920, § 6311 (certified copy of a deposition 'in perpetuam,' admissible); § 4673 (making admissible certified copies of "duly certified copies" of "proceeding in foreign courts mentioned and referred to in §§ 4666, 4667, and 4670," "when recorded in the office of the county clerk of the county where the land involved is situated"); § 6753 (probate clerk's certified transcript, under court seal, of minutes showing appointment of administrator, etc., admissible).

§ 1681*a*. [1] As between the Federal courts themselves, the statute lays down no rule; consequently (ante, § 6), the ordinary rule for courts within the same jurisdiction is applicable, namely a clerk's copy under court seal suffices, without the statutory certificate of the judge; 1877, Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418, 424 (even where the record is from another circuit or district); 1899, National Accid. Soc'y v. Spiro, 37 C. C. A. 388, 94 Fed. 750 (and a deputy clerk's certificate will be presumed to have been made during the clerk's absence).

The same is true of a Federal record-copy offered in a State court: 1877, Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418, 424 (even where the record is from a Federal court sitting without the State); 1903, Allison v. Robinson, 136 Ala. 434, 34 So. 966 (a Federal record need not be certified by the judge when offered within the State in which the Federal court is); 1800, Pepoon v. Jenkins, 2 John. Cas. 119 (a copy under the court seal certified by the clerk, sufficient); 1850, Williams v. Wilkes, 14 Pa. St. 228, 230 (U. S. Circuit Court is not within the statute, but is to be treated as a domestic court of the State).

[2] 1897, Droop v. Ridenhour, 11 D. C. App. 224, 244; 1900, Sloan v. Wolfsfeld, 110 Ga. 70, 35 S. E. 344; 1895, Garden City S. Co. v. Miller, 157 Ill. 225, 41 N. E. 753; 1855, Lattourett v. Cook, 1 Ia. 1; 1904, Tomlin v. Woods, 125 Ia. 367, 101 N. W. 135; 1828, Taylor v. Bank, 7 T. B. Monr. Ky. 576, 585; 1858, Landry v. Klopman, 13 La. An. 345; 1869, Kingman v. Cowles, 103 Mass. 283; 1901, Willock v. Wilson, 178 Mass. 68, 59 N. E. 757; 1871, Dean v. Chapin, 22 Mich. 275; 1893, Ellis' Appeal, 55 Minn. 401, 408, 56 N. W. 1056; 1893, Ellis v. Ellis, 55 Minn. 401, 56 N. W. 1056; 1800, Olden v. Field, 2 Yeates Pa. 532; 1824, Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. Pa. 203, 207; 1856, Ohio v. Hinchman, 27 Pa. 479, 485; 1871, Coffee v. Neely, 2 Heisk. 304, 307; 1796, Ellmore v. Mills, 1 Hayw. Tenn. 359; 1883, Pickett v. Boyd, 11 Lea Va. 498, 501; 1831, Ex parte Povall, 2 Leigh Va. 816, 817; 1889, Thrasher v. Ballard, 33 W. Va. 285, 287, 10 S. E. 411.

Contra: 1892, Tharpe v. Pearce, 89 Ga. 194, 15 S. E. 46 (since the Code, a judgment in a sister State must be authenticated under the Federal statute if applicable, or if not, under the Code section applicable; but compare the later decision supra); 1903, Lehmann v. Rivers, 110 La. 1079, 35 So. 296, semble (for a Federal judgment in bankruptcy); 1881, Hope v. Hurt, 59 Miss. 174, 178 (where no domestic statute provides for authentication of judicial records in other States, the Federal statutory mode must be followed). Compare the analogous rulings as to Rev. St. § 906, cited ante, § 1680*a*, note 2.

Conversely, the Federal mode suffices, even though the local statute requires more: 1903, Dusenberry v. Abbott, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 466, or though the local statute provides nothing. Compare the cases as to records of foreign deeds, cited ante, § 1652, n. 4, § 1680, n. 2.

United States is in a State court in theory generally a foreign state, yet the rule adopted in the Federal statute is not the one prescribed by Chief Justice Marshall for foreign records, but corresponds in form to the orthodox English common-law rule, with the addition of a formal certificate of the clerk's authority by the judge. The fact that this statute was passed fourteen years before the decision in Church v. Hubbart [3] suggests that it represented the traditional rule as then familiar to the profession; and yet it foreshadows, with its judge's certificate, the American theory of custodian's authority.

The interpretation of this statute, simple as it is, has given rise to many rulings, concerned chiefly with the literal application of its words to copies of various sorts.[4] The number of these rulings, when compared with the

[3] Quoted supra.

[4] These rulings in the Federal courts are already carefully collected and fully stated by various editors in their Annotations to the Revised Statutes, and it seems unnecessary to repeat them here. But in the following list will be found (not in completeness) rulings of the State courts on the same statute; they are also important (though more so before local statutes had become so numerous), but they are not elsewhere collected; space does not suffice to set forth the tenor of each, for much quotation of reasoning would be needed for accuracy: Alabama: 1848, Hudson v. Daily, 13 Ala. 722, 727; 1850, Elliott v. McClelland, 17 Ala. 206, 208; 1858, Thrasher v. Ingrad, 32 Ala. 645, 657; Arizona: 1920, Ford v. State, 21 Ariz. 567, 192 Pac. 1117 (marriage certificate authenticated by Mexican chief judge with seal, by governor of Federal district, by foreign affairs department, and by American vice-consul, admitted); Arkansas: 1847, Butler v. Owen, 7 Ark. 369; 1854, Central Bank v. Veasey, 14 Ark. 671, 674; 1884, Blackwell v. Glass, 43 Ark. 209, 211; California: 1859, Low v. Burrows, 12 Cal. 181, 188; Connecticut: 1812, Russell v. Edwards, 5 Day 363; 1866, Adams v. Way, 33 Conn. 419, 429; 1897, Smith v. Brockett, 69 Conn. 492, 38 Atl. 57; Delaware: 1845, Regan v. McCormick, 4 Harringt. 435; Georgia: 1850, Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201, 205; 1858, Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 25 Ga. 203; 1874, Cox v. Jones, 52 Ga. 438; 1880, McAllister v. Mfg. Co., 64 Ga. 623, 624; 1903, Taylor v. McKee, 118 Ga. 874, 45 S. E. 672; 1914, Hope v. First National Bank, 142 Ga. 310, 82 S. E. 929; Illinois: 1839, Trader v. McKee, 2 Ill. 558; 1853, Ducommun v. Hysinger, 14 Ill. 249; 1859, Spencer v. Langdon, 21 Ill. 192; 1869, Newman v. Willetts, 52 Ill. 98; 1872, Brackett v. People, 64 Ill. 170; 1875, Horner v. Spelman, 78 Ill. 206; Indiana: 1833, Adams v. Lisher, 3 Blackf. 241, 243; 1845, Redman v. Gould, 7 Blackf. 361; 1857, Draggoo v. Graham, 9 Ind. 212; 1861, Vaughn v. Griffith, 16 Ind. 353; 1881, Bradford v. Russell, 79 Ind. 64, 70; 1881, Ansley v. Meikle, 81 Ind. 260, 262; Iowa: 1847, Gay v. Lloyd, 1 Greene 78; 1847, Young v. Thayer, 1 Greene 196; 1849, Lewis v. Sutliff, 2 Greene 186; 1854, Roop v. Clark, 4 Greene 294; 1855, Lattourett v. Cook, 1 Ia. 1; 1859, Greasons v. Davis, 9 Ia. 219, 224; 1870, Simons v. Cook, 29 Ia. 324; Kentucky: 1814, Stephenson v. Bannister, 3 Bibb 369; 1822, Strode v. Churchill, 2 Litt. 75, 76; 1831, Helm v. Shackleford, 5 J. J. M. 390, 393; 1847, Waller v. Cralle, 8 B. Monr. 11, 15; 1848, Moore v. Ann, 9 B. Monr. 36; 1852, Young v. Chandler, 13 B. Monr. 252; Louisiana: 1824, Kirkland v. Smith, 2 Mart. N. S. 497; 1827, Balfour v. Chew, 5 Mart. N. S. 517; 1829, Scott v. Blanchard, 8 Mart. N. S. 30, 306; 1842, Jordan v. Black, 1 Rob. La. 575, 578; 1842, Goodman v. James, 2 Rob. La. 297; 1842, Bowles' Succession, 3 Rob. La. 33; 1845, U. S. v. Bank of U. S., 11 Rob. La. 418, 429; 1855, Fitzpatrick v. Williams, 10 La. An. 517; 1879, State v. Barrow, 31 La. An. 691; Maryland: 1855, Case v. McGee, 8 Md. 9, 14; Massachusetts: 1824, Warren v. Flagg, 2 Pick. 448, 450; 1901, Willock v. Wilson, 178 Mass. 68, 59 N. E. 757; Michigan: 1878, Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 189, 198; Mississippi: 1848, Melvin v. Lyons, 10 Sm. & M. 78; 1849, Stuart v. Swanzy, 12 Sm. & M. 684, 689; 1852, Stewart v. Swanzy, 23 Miss. 502, 505; 1854, Bates v. McCully, 27 Miss. 584; 1856, Jordan v. Thomas, 31 Miss. 557; 1866, Sherwood v. Houston, 41 Miss. 59, 64; Missouri: 1823, Hays v. Bouthalier, 1 Mo. 346; 1831, Hutchison v. Partick, 3 Mo. 65; 1834, Posey v. Buckner, 3 Mo. 604; 1834, Blair v. Caldwell, 3 Mo. 353; 1835, McQueen v. Farrow, 4 Mo. 212; 1844, Bright v. White, 8 Mo. 421, 426; 1850, Duvall v. Ellis, 13 Mo. 203; 1852, Wilburn v. Hall, 16 Mo. 426, 430; 1852 McLain v. Winchester, 17 Mo. 49, 54; 1858, Manning v. Hogan, 26 Mo. 570; 1860, Grover v. Grover, 30 Mo. 400, 403; Nebraska: 1898, Comstock v. Kerwin, 57 Nebr. 1, 77 N. W. 387; 1905, Chapman v. Chapman, 74 Nebr. 388, 104 N. W. 880; New Hampshire: 1828, Robinson v. Prescott, 4 N. H. 450, 454; 1834, Mahurin v. Bickford, 6 N. H. 567; New Jersey: 1901, Steele v. Queen, 67 N. J. L. 99, 50 Atl. 668; New York: 1800, Smith v. Blagge, scanty English rulings on the same subject, is a suggestive illustration of the inherent obstinacy with which our system of litigation refuses to suffer the final settlement of a principle by any concise codified statement, however skilful and correct.

It is worth noting that the peculiar double certificate prescribed by R. S. § 906 (a judge certifying the copyist's office, and then his clerk certifying the judge's office) concerns only documents "not appertaining to a court," so that there are ordinarily three distinct officers involved (copyist-custodian, judge, and judge's clerk). It is applicable only to official records in general, as noted in § 1680*a*, ante, and not to the specific class of judicial records. For judicial records, U. S. Rev. St. § 905 is intended. U. S. Rev. St. § 906 was not intended for judicial records. If it did apply to judicial records, the meaningless and ineffectual formality would be prescribed for the clerk to certify the judge, and then the judge to certify the clerk; and yet that form is sometimes employed by attorneys in proving judicial records, under the belief that the statute of our forefathers countenances such a singularity.[5]

§ 1682. Same: Copies of Registered Deeds; Judicially established Copies of Lost Documents. (1) The use of certified copies of registered deeds involves no special variation from the general principle already considered for copies of official documents in general (ante, §§ 1677, 1680).

(a) So far as concerns the implied authority to certify copies, we find in England the general principle here also negativing this authority; for although the register (or "inrolment") was there apparently regarded as

1 Johns. Cas. 238; 1846, Coit v. Millikin, 1 Den. 376; 1858, Hatcher v. Rocheleau, 18 N. Y. 87, 89; 1862, Morris v. Patchin, 24 N. Y. 394 (general commentary on the statute); 1879, Burnell v. Weld, 76 N. Y. 103; North Dakota: 1907, Strecker v. Railson, 16 N. D. 68, 111 N. W. 612 (justice of the peace); Ohio: 1832, Silver Lake Bank v. Harding, 5 Oh. 545; Oregon: 1853, Pratt v. King, 1 Oreg. 49; 1886, Keyes v. Mooney, 13 Or. 179, 181, 9 Pac. 400; Pennsylvania: 1846, Lothrop v. Blake, 3 Pa. St. 483, 495; 1848, Snyder v. Wise, 10 Pa. 157; South Dakota: 1913, Ganow v. Ashton, 32 S. D. 458, 143 N. W. 383 (for a Federal District Court within the State, the judge's certificate, certifying to the clerk's, is not necessary); Texas: 1856, Houze v. Houze, 16 Tex. 598; 1856, Patrick v. Gibbs, 17 Tex. 275, 277; Vermont: 1834, Blodget v. Jordan, 6 Vt. 580, 585; Wisconsin: 1855, Ordway v. Conroe, 4 Wis. 45, 48; 1859, Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140, 145; 1863, Hackett v. Bonnell, 16 Wis. 471, 477.

[5] The following cases seem to countenance this error; 1908, Britton v. Chamberlain, 234 Ill. 246, 84 N. E. 895 (decree of Supreme Court of New York; the clerk certified under court seal the correctness of the copy, the justice J. S. L. certified that the attestation was in due form and the clerk certified that J. S. L. was justice; "we think the decree was properly certified"); 1908, Light v. Reed, 234 Ill. 626, 85 N. E. 282 (the opinion refers to such an erroneous triple certificate of a judicial record as being "in strict accord with the act of Congress"). But when this error is committed, the clerk's superfluous certificate may be disregarded, and the copy used under the present R. S. § 905: 1856, Gavit v. Snowhill, 26 N. J. L. 76.

It is therefore not quite correct to say (as in Ganow v. Ashton, 32 S. D. 458, 143 N. W. 383, following certain annotators) that in U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 905, the reason for requiring a judge's certificate to the clerk's certificate is that "the [local] Court is not presumed to know or to take judicial notice of the laws in force or what is 'due form' in another State or foreign jurisdiction." The reason is (ante, § 1679) that the local court (where the document is offered) does not know, and the foreign judge does know, (1) whether his clerk was genuinely the signer and sealer, (2) whether J. S. was the clerk, and (3) whether the clerk was by law the custodian; but of these three things, only (3) is a point of law. The "due form" of the Federal statute is merely a technical phrase covering those three elements; there is no peculiarity of "form" involved in the certificate; (1) and (2) are pure fact and (3) is pure law.

receivable to prove the deed's contents and execution,[1] yet the clerk of inrolments could not certify copies.[2] In the United States, on the other hand, no doubt seems ever to have been entertained that the registrar as custodian, even where statute did not expressly make his copies admissible, was impliedly authorized to give them. (b) The authentication of the registrar's copy would, on general principles, have been sufficiently made, for domestic officers, by his seal of office, and, for foreign officers, by the great seal of State with a certificate of due attestation (ante, § 1679). But the local statutes providing for registration and for the use of certified copies now almost universally contain express provisions for authentication; where these are lacking,[3] the Federal statute (Rev. St. § 906; quoted ante, § 1680) is available for the purpose. (c) But the certified copy merely furnished the contents of the register, and thus brought up ultimately the fundamental question of the admissibility of the register to prove the contents and execution of the deed. This question, as already noticed (ante, §§ 1648–1656), involves its own peculiar principles.

(2) Statute has in many jurisdictions provided for the establishment of lost documents — records, deeds, and the like — by judicial proceedings based on copies. These copies become official copies, and are usually by statute expressly made admissible; they become parts of an official register, however, and thus come under the general principle.[4]

§ 1683. Quasi-Official Copies certified by Private Persons. No person not an official can upon any principle have an authority to certify copies which shall be admissible,[1] unless at least a duty is expressly cast upon him by statute. Even then it is doubtful whether this statutory duty upon a private person would suffice to render his copies admissible.[2] But in a few jurisdictions, on grounds of public convenience, statutes have expressly declared admissible, without calling the copyist, certified copies made by sundry kinds of custodians of private documents having frequent use for evidential purposes; the chief instances are the registers of churches and the records of corporations.[3]

§ 1682. [1] See the cases cited in § 1650, ante.

[2] See the quotation from Buller's Nisi Prius, ante, § 1677.

[3] The authorities on all the points concerning certified copies of registered conveyances have been placed ante, §§ 1648–1656.

[4] The authorities are placed ante, § 1660. For the rule against a copy of a copy, see ante, § 1275; for the conclusiveness of such a copy, see ante, § 1347.

§ 1683. [1] 1814, Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. 416 (copy of church register certified under corporate seal, excluded; Tilghman, C. J.: "It might be convenient if such certificates were received in evidence; but that alone will not authorize courts of justice to receive them. The party against whom a fact is to be proved has a right to call for the oath of a witness, except in those cases where it is otherwise ordered by Act of Assembly").

[2] The general principle has already been examined ante, § 1633*a*, § 1674, sub fine.

[3] Compare the statutes and cases cited ante, § 1223, exempting the rule for production of the original; the two series of statutes do not always coincide; compare also the statutes permitting proof by affidavit (post, § 1710):

ENGLAND: 1911, Albutt's and Screen's Case, 6 Cr. App. 55 (under St. 1879, 42 Vict. c. 11, § 4, a copy of a banker's book need not be by an officer of the bank; here by a chartered accountant).

CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1906, c. 79, § 174 (certified copy of a company by-law, under the company's seal and officer's signature, to be evidence); §109 (same, as against a shareholder); Evid. Act, c. 145, § 24 (corporation documents and book-entries; cited ante, § 1680); British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 32 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 24); Manitoba:

§ 1684. Officially Printed Copies (of Decisions, Statutes, and Miscellaneous Documents). There is no reason why an officer may not be authorized to

Rev. St. 1913, c. 21, § 35 (building-society's by-laws, etc., provable by the certified copy of the secretary or manager, without proof of the society's seal); c. 35, § 87 (joint-stock company's by-law, provable by its officer's certified copy under company seal); c. 168, § 100 (railway corporation's proceedings, provable by the secretary's certified copy); c. 65, § 15 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 24); § 28 (like ib. § 28); c. 168, §§ 98, 100 (by-laws, etc., of railway companies, provable by certified copy of the president or secretary); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 92, §§ 3, 4 (affidavit-copy of bankers' books, admissible); Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 11 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 24); c. 128, § 79 (certified copy of a corporate resolution, by an officer under corporate seal or by a registrar under his seal, admissible); c. 99, § 204 (secretary's certified copy of a railway corporation's minutes of meeting, admissible); § 214 (so for by-laws, etc., certified by president or secretary); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 26 (any "document, by-law, rule, regulation, or proceeding," and any "entry in any register or other book of any corporation created by charter or statute in this province" is provable by copy "purporting to be certified under the seal of the corporation and the hand of the presiding officer or secretary thereof," without further proof); § 49 (commercial documents provable by copy; cited ante, § 1223); Saskatchewan: St. 1906, c. 30, § 194 (regulation etc., of a railway company, provable by copy certified "by the president, secretary, or other executive officer," under company seal); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 11 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 24; quoted ante, § 1680).

UNITED STATES: Federal: U. S. St. 1917, Feb. 14, c. 53, § 7 (intoxicating liquor in Alaska; carriers required to keep a record of shipments; the carrier's agent's certified copy of the record to be admissible); Alabama: Code 1907, § 3978 (registers of marriage, births, and deaths, kept by law or church rule; custodian's certification admits them); 1889, Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 69, 7 So. 302 (the statute applies to registers kept out of the State; certificate of a purporting custodian sufficiently authenticates a copy of the register); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5728 (corporations; quoted ante, § 1680); § 5733 (churches, common proprietors, etc.; quoted ante, § 1680); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 2171 (religious society's register of a birth, death, marriage, or burial, provable by the chairman's copy under corporate seal); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5823 (domestic corporation's books, provable by copy certified by the chief officer in charge); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 15 (papers and records of "any corporation or incorporated association," provable by certified copy by the "secretary, clerk, cashier, or other keeper," under corporate seal, if any); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 5771, 5794 (records of telegraph and telephone companies, provable by the secretary's attested copy, "when the interests of said corporation are concerned"); 1873, King v. Ins. Co., 45 Ind. 43, 60 (copies not in terms of the statute, excluded); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7282 (religious society's register of marriages, etc., provable by affidavit-copy); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1629 (official books or ordinances of a religious society, provable by the custodian's certified copy); Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 694 (secretary of a railroad company's certified copy under corporate seal of the company's books, admissible); § 3488 (harboring a deserting seaman; copy of shipping articles, authenticated by captain's affidavit, to be evidence that the seaman "actually signed said articles"); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 23, § 13 (certified copy of a corporation by-law under corporate seal, by the president and secretary, or treasurer, admissible); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 155, § 22 (attested copy of corporate articles of organization, admissible); c. 176, § 35 (fraternal benefit society; printed copy of constitution and by-laws, certified by secretary or corresponding officer, admissible); c. 233, § 77 (bank's records; cited ante, § 1710); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 6289 (certified copy of a record of deeds, etc., of cemetery lots, by the secretary of a cemetery association, admissible); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5351 (domestic corporation's records and papers on file, provable by certified copy of the secretary or president under corporate seal); § 5353 (church register of marriages, etc., kept in the State, provable by affidavit copy); § 9773 (same as § 5351, but reading "and" for "or" before "president"); § 11849 (certified copy, by secretaries, of proceedings of consolidated trust companies, admissible); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 6824 (documents in the custody of the Nebraska State Historical Society are provable by certified copy of its secretary or curator "under seal and oath"); New Jersey: 1902, Hancock v. Supreme Council, 67 N. J. L. 614, 52 Atl. 301 (whether a certified copy of a foreign parish register, by a priest or clerk, is admissible, not decided); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 412 (records of a "public hospital" showing condition or treatment of patient, provable by transcript certified by superintendent or his assistant); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 5065 (fraternal benefit society's articles of association, etc., provable by copy "certified by the secretary of the society or corresponding officer"); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 9496 (fraternal benefit societies; printed copy of constitution give printed copies as well as to give written copies; nor has there been any doubt that such authorized copies were admissible. Yet it cannot be said that such an authority has ever been implied from the nature of an office (ante, § 1674). An official printer's copies have been usually regarded as admissible; but the official printer's authority, though a general one, is express rather than implied. The objections that have been made in connection with the use of printed copies have chiefly had their source, not so much in a doubt of any of these principles, as in the difficulty of presuming the authenticity (post, § 2151) of a printed copy purporting to be an official one. The doctrine of presuming the genuineness of an official seal has served to furnish a mode of authenticating certified copies (ante, § 1679, post, § 2163); but there has naturally been a hesitation about extending this doctrine to impressions of type purporting to represent an official seal or certificate. Thus, it is with the authentication of the copy rather than the authority to furnish it that the difficulties have arisen.

In general, then, where an official printer is appointed, his printed copies of official documents are admissible. It is not necessary that the printer should be an officer in the strictest sense, nor that he should be exclusively concerned with official work; it is enough that he is appointed by the Executive to print official documents. As for authentication of his copies, it is enough that the copy offered purports to be printed by authority of the government; its genuineness is assumed without further evidence.

Such seem to be the general principles of the common law, to be drawn from a variety of passages:

Ante 1726, GILBERT, C. B., Evidence, 11: "My Lord Chief Justice Parker allowed the printed statute to be evidence, in the case of the College of Physicians and Dr. West, of etc., certified by the secretary or corresponding officer, admissible); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 647 (religious society's register of marriages, etc., in this Territory, provable by certified copy by the pastor "or other head of any such society or congregation, or by the clerk or other keeper of such register"); § 5267 (instruments affecting real estate but not requiring record may be proved by copy "duly verified by oath or affidavit of any person knowing the same to be a true copy"); Pennsylvania: St. 1837, Mar. 31, § 20, Dig. 1920, § 10351, Evid. (church registers; cited ante, § 1680); St. 1897, May 25, Dig. § 18557 (employee's sworn copy of books of account of a common carrier, etc., "or other public corporation," admissible; cited ante, §§ 1223, 1519); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 48 (custodian's certified copy of a newspaper deposited with the Rhode Island Historical Society, admissible); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 8812 (recorded affidavits of notice of sale of corporation shares, provable by secretary's certified copies under corporate seal); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3369 a 112 (printed copies of constitution, etc., of fraternal benefit society, certified by secretary or corresponding officer, admissible); § 5569 (in actions between corporations and their stock holders, corporate books are provable by secretary's certified copy under corporate seal); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3713 (domestic corporation's records, provable by copy authenticated by president and secretary under corporate seal); Utah: Comp. L. 1917 § 918 (corporation secretary's certified copy of filed affidavit of notice of sale of corporate stock, admissible); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4181 a (corporate clerk's certified copy of an affidavit of notice, admissible); § 4182 (certificate of assessment and notice, by the secretary of a mutual insurance company, admissible); § 4182 a ("verified copies" of the books of a life or mutual benefit association "doing business on the level premium or assessment plan," admissible, when served on the opponent six days before term, with an opportunity given for inspection of books); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5345 (fraternal benefit society; printed copy of constitution and laws, certified by secretary or corresponding officer, admissible).

the truth of a private act of Parliament touching the institution of the College of Physicians, because the printed statute-book is printed by the Queen's authority, and therefore, though it be not so good evidence as an exemplification under seal, yet it must be supposed as good an evidence of the truth of a copy as a copy compared with the rolls and sworn to by the testimony of any witness, which is allowed daily as a good proof of the copy of a record; for a copy printed by the public authority derives more credit from that authority than it would from the testimony of any living witness that had compared it."

Ante 1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 225: "Not that the printed statutes are perfect and authentic copies of the records themselves; but every person is supposed to know the law, and therefore the printed statutes are allowed to be evidence, because they are the hints of what is supposed to be lodged in every man's mind already. But in private acts of Parliament the printed statute-book is not evidence, . . . for they are not considered as already lodged in the minds of the people. However, a private act of Parliament in print that concerns a whole country, as the act of Bedford Levels, for rebuilding Tiverton, etc., may be given in evidence without comparing it with the record. And these things are the rather admitted because they gain some authority from being printed by the King's printer, and besides from the notoriety of the subject of them they are supposed not to be wholly unknown."

1814, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Biddis v. James, 6 Binn. 326: "Confidential persons have been selected to compare the copies with the original rolls and superintend the printing. The object of this provision was to furnish the people with authentic copies; and from their nature, printed copies of this kind, either of public or private laws, are as much to be depended on as the exemplification verified by an officer who is the keeper of the record. . . . I am for admitting the printed copies authorized by the Legislature, either of this or any other State, whether the laws be public or private."

1820, DUNCAN, J., in Jones v. Maffet, 5 S. & R. 532: "Such authorized authentic publication would be more satisfactory evidence than a sworn copy; less danger of mistake or corruption or fabrication. . . . It is not the being in a statute book which gives them authenticity, but the publication by the King's printer."

1854, EASTMAN, J., in Emery v. Berry, 28 N. H. 473, 487 (admitting a printed copy of the Maine Statutes, purporting to be official): "Such a course seems called for by the great convenience and saving of expense that it will afford to all parties, and by that confidential relation which exists between the States. The rule, too, would seem to be almost entirely free from any danger of abuse, and error or imposition could easily be detected."

1878, MARSTON, J., in Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 196: "The distinct authority for printing and publishing the laws need not appear in any case where they purport to be published under the authority of the government."

(1) This principle has been broadly applied to admit printed copies of miscellaneous public documents.[1]

Compare also the cases cited ante, § 1674, notes 10, 11 (certificates by private persons).

§ 1684. [1] ENGLAND: 1698, Dupays v. Shepherd, 12 Mod. 216 (printed proclamation of peace; "such things as these in print as are of a public nature, as a public act of parliament, . . . may be given in evidence without comparing it with the record"); 1704, Captain Quelch's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 1084 (Boston; piracy upon Portuguese vessels; to prove the treaty of alliance of 1703 between Portugal and England, the London Gazette of May 24 and July 14, 1703, were received, reciting the signing of the treaty; Newton, answering the objection made to them: "The Gazette is published by authority, and has been often allowed as good evidence"); 1793, R. v. Holt, 6 T. R. 436 (Ashhurst, J.: "The Gazette is an authoritative means of proving all acts relating to the King and the State"; Buller, J.: "The Gazette, which is published by royal authority," is admissible to prove "anything done by his Majesty in his character of King or which has passed

(2) Upon this principle, also, a copy purporting to be officially printed, of a decision of a court is admissible.[2] The few instances of exclusion rest on other grounds, — for example, the failure to account for the original of a document,[3] or the preference for a certified copy over a printed copy.[4] There is little authority on the precise point, for the reason that, by another Exception to the Hearsay rule, all printed copies of judicial decisions, whether by official authority or by private enterprise, are generally treated as admissible.[5] But there can be no doubt of the general principle. Statutes sometimes expressly declare printed volumes of reports admissible.[6] through his Majesty's hands"; here received to show certain addresses presented to the King and the fact of their presentation; Kenyon, L. C. J.: "That the Gazette is evidence of many acts of State is not doubted. . . . These documents are addresses of different bodies of subjects . . . received by the King in his public capacity. They then become acts of State, and of such acts, announced to the public in the Gazette, it is admitted that the Gazette is evidence"); 1805, Kirwan v. Cockburn, 5 Esp. 234 (official gazette received to prove an army appointment; compare §§ 1228, 1242, ante, which are involved in this ruling); 1809, Van Omeron v. Dowick, 2 Camp. 44 (official gazette, admitted); 1811, R. v. Gardner, 2 Camp. 513 (contra to Kirwan v. Cockburn. supra); 1820, Att'y-Gen'l v. Theakstone, 8 Price 92 (official gazette, admitted); 1825, Bradley v. Arthur, 4 B. & C. 304 (official printed copy of army regulations, excluded); for the learning about the privileges of the King's printer, see Basket v. Univ. of Cambridge, 1 W. Bl. 106; Universities v. Richardson, 6 Ves. Jr. 689.

(3) The most frequent application of the principle, however, is to the

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1842, Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 55 ("American State Papers" admitted); 1856, Bryan v. Forsyth, 19 How. 334, 338 (report printed in "American State Papers," admitted); 1860, Gregg v. Forsyth, 24 How. 179, 180 (similar); 1881, Post v. Supervisors, 105 U. S. 667 (printed copies of legislative journals, published by law, are evidence of the contents, in Illinois); 1919, Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Co. v. U. S. 250 U. S. 123, 39 Sup. 407 (records of the U. S. Treasury Department, printed by authority of law and produced from the custody of the Department, admitted without the certification of copy mentioned in U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 882); Delaware: 1844, Houston v. Spruance, 4 Harringt. 117, 119 (printed official pamphlet showing mail routes, admitted); Florida: 1870, Doe v. Roe, 13 Fla. 602 ("American State Papers" admitted); Illinois: 1839, Lurton v. Gilliam, 2 Ill. 577, 579 (State Register, received to prove the Governor's proclamation); Indiana: 1889, Marks v. Orth, 121 Ind. 10, 13, 22 N. E. 668 (printed document purporting to be congressional, excluded on the facts); Louisiana: 1859, Dutillet v. Blanchard, 14 La. An. 97 ("American State Papers" received); Massachusetts: 1871, Whiton v. Ins. Co., 109 Mass. 30 (official volume of the U. S. "Foreign Relations" admitted); 1886, Cushing v. R. Co., 143 Mass. 77, 78, 9 N. E. 22 (printed copy of a purporting U. S. Senate document; not decided); Mississippi: 1858, Nixon v. Porter, 34 Miss. 697, 707 ("American State Papers," admitted); Missouri: 1872, Callaway v. Fash, 50 Mo. 420, 423 ("Patent-Book of the State of Illinois," excluded on the facts); New Jersey: 1844, Brundred v. Del Hoyo, 20 N. J. L. 334 (government gazette, not received to show a patent-application published); New York: 1810, Radcliff v. Ins. Co., 7 Johns. 50 (officially printed diplomatic correspondence, admitted); 1827, Root v. King, 7 Cow. 636 (officially printed edition of legislative journals received); Vermont: 1888, Fulham v. Howe, 60 Vt. 351, 357 (official printed copy of the Federal census-compendium, received).

For statutes covering this part of the subject, see infra, note 15.

[2] 1877, Ely v. James, 123 Mass. 44. In R. v. Raudnitz (1869), 11 Cox Cr. 360, a copy of bankruptcy adjudication in a journal purporting to be the London Gazette was admitted under special statute.

[3] 1873, Hoyt v. Shipherd, 70 Ill. 309, 310 (report of a contract in an official volume of local decisions, excluded, because the original was not accounted for).

[4] 1877, Donellan v. Hardy, 57 Ind. 393, 402 (official printed report of an opinion of the Supreme Court, not received to prove the contents of a judgment, a certified copy being available).

For this general subject of the preference of one kind of copy over another kind, see ante, § 1273.

[5] See post, § 1703.

[6] For the statutes dealing expressly with official reports, see infra, note 15; for the statutes dealing with all other printed reports, see post, § 1703.

evidencing of the statute law, domestic and foreign. Upon the theory of judicial notice, no evidence of a domestic law need be offered (post, § 2572). Nevertheless, it may be offered; and the present Exception is employed whenever an officially printed copy of a statute is received.

(a) For domestic general statutes, no doubt seems to have existed, — at least since the middle of the 1700s; [7] copies purporting to be the officially printed ones are unquestionably admissible.

(b) For domestic private acts, there was at one time [8] apparently no recognition of copies purporting to be officially printed. Yet there was no real ground, either in principle or in policy, for the distinction. It came to be the custom in England to insert in private acts a clause providing expressly that they should be printed by the King's printer and that a copy so printed should be admissible.[9] But in the United States the same result was generally reached on common-law principles; [10] and legislation has now almost everywhere sanctioned this rule.[11]

(c) For foreign statutes, no difficulty seems ever to have been felt as to the admissibility of a copy proved actually to have been printed by official authority. But there was with some Courts a hesitation about assuming the genuineness of a copy purporting to have been thus printed. In New York and New Jersey, it was perhaps once the law that no officially printed copy, however proven, could be received.[12] In England, and in a few of our own courts, some sort of authentication, by testimony on the stand, was additionally required; testimony that the copy or edition offered was "commonly accepted" in the foreign court being usually the form of this authentication.[12] In still other courts (represented by the last two quotations above), the mere purporting to be officially printed was taken as sufficient; [12] precisely in the same

[7] 1649, Lilburne's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1269, 1347 (a printed statute, on objection, was proved as an examined copy); 1700, Anon., 2 Salk. 566 (on a plea of 'nul tiel record,' the official printed copy of a statute will not suffice; an exemplification under the great seal is necessary; because this is equivalent to the original; see ante, § 1216); 1735, Edwards v. Vasey, cited 1 W. Bl. 110 (king's printer's copy of a statute, admissible).

Whether the authority must be that of the central government, or whether that of a municipality would equally suffice, seems not to have been settled; but statutes (infra, note 15) have almost everywhere covered the subject; on the general principle, a municipal authority would suffice; 1900, Boston v. Coon, 175 Mass. 283, 56 N. E. 287 (Revised Ordinances of Boston, admitted on the facts).

[8] As indicated in the quotations supra.

[9] Park, J., cited in Phillipps on Evidence, II, 342; 1841, Greswold v. Kemp, Car. & M. 127; 1842, R. v. Milton, 1 C. & K. 58, note.

[10] 1808, Young v. Bank, 4 Cr. 387; 1838, Owen v. Boyle, 15 Me. 149 (here the foreign government was accustomed to use the edition); 1814, Biddis v. James, 6 Binn. Pa. 326 (quoted supra); 1824, Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. 207; for Missouri, see the singular ruling cited in note 15, infra.

[11] See them infra, note 15.

[12] For the rulings in the different jurisdictions, see infra, note 15.

Certain other principles affecting the mode of evidencing foreign law may here be discriminated. (a) Whether an expert witness to the foreign law may state its terms, if it lies in statute, without producing a copy either printed, certified, or examined; this involves the question of a rule of preference for copy-testimony over recollection testimony, and is discussed ante, § 1271. (b) Whether a witness to foreign common law is sufficiently an expert, is dealt with ante, § 564; and, similarly, whether a witness, sufficiently expert, has had adequate sources of observation of the law, is considered ante, § 690. (c) The use of ordinary private compilations of foreign law, whether in treatises or in reports of decisions, forms the subject of special and different Exceptions to the Hearsay rule, treated post, §§ 1697, 1703. (d) Whether the terms of a foreign way that the purporting impression of the foreign great seal of State was taken to be genuine (post, § 2163). But before any full and detailed development of principle had taken place in the courts, statutes intervened, in almost every jurisdiction, to provide a definite and liberal rule.

These statutes commonly state, in the alternative, two conditions of admissibility: the volume must either purport to be printed by authority of the foreign government, or it must be proved to be commonly admitted in the courts of that country as evidence of the law. (1) The first alternative properly sanctions the liberal rule of authentication which had already been accepted by some Courts. But the source of the authority by which the printing must purport to have been sanctioned is seldom specifically named in these enabling statutes; owing to this, and to lack of foresight on the part of the editors, statutory collections have sometimes been excluded because the title-page or printed certificate does not convey the proper purport of authority. To satisfy, by a single formula, the demands of all the jurisdictions would perhaps be impossible. The uniform provision approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws should receive general adoption.[13] (2) The second alternative practically allows the use of a volume "commonly admitted" in the courts of the foreign country, even though it was not, and does not purport to have been, printed by official sanction. The curious result here is that the resort to testimony of such common acceptance in foreign courts seems to have been originally intended merely to authenticate the official character of a volume whose purporting official character would not be assumed without other evidence;[14] while under these statutes (as commonly phrased) the operation of this expedient has now become much wider, and serves to admit even private compilations provided they are "commonly admitted" in the foreign courts.[15] (3) It may be added that, by many statutes, still a third method is provided, namely, the Secretary of State's certified copy of the printed statute-book officially sent to him by the foreign government and kept in his office. This, however, being in form at least a certified and not a printed copy, comes within the general principle of certified copies (ante, § 1680).

law may be judicially noticed, or may be the subject of a presumption, falls under those respective heads, post, §§ 2536, 2573. (e) Whether the opinion rule affects testimony to foreign law is examined post, § 1953.

[13] A Federal rule would presumably be constitutional; compare the Federal clause cited ante, § 1681, note 12.

[14] See Lacon v. Higgins, Eng., infra.

[15] The statutes are as follows:

ENGLAND: Besides the following, there are also a few minor special statutes: 1845, St. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, § 3 (copies of non-public acts of Parliament, "if purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers," and of parliamentary journals and royal proclamations, "purporting to be printed by the printers to the Crown or by the printers to either House of Parliament, or by any or either of them," are admissible "without any proof being given that such copies were so printed"); 1865, St. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 63, § 6 (Governor's proclamation of royal assent or veto to a colonial law, provable by a copy purporting to be published by authority of the Governor in any newspaper in the colony); 1868, St. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 37 Documentary Evidence Act, § 2 (any proclamation, etc., as cited supra, § 1680, is provable by a copy of "the Gazette purporting to contain such proclamation," etc., or by production "of a copy purporting to be printed by the Government printer, or, where the question arises in a court in any British colony or possession, of a copy purporting to be printed under the authority of the legislature of such British colony or possession"); 1882, St. 45 Vict. c. 9, § 2 (preceding statutes extended to copies purporting to be printed under superintendence or authority of Her Majesty's Stationery Office); St. 1907, 8 Edw. VII, c. 16, § 1, Evidence Colonial Statutes (Acts, etc., of the Legislature of any British possession, and orders, etc., made thereunder, provable by copy "purporting to be printed by the Government printer"); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, § 88 (reform school certificate; London Gazette to be evidence); St. 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 59, Bankruptcy, § 137 (London Gazette, to be evidence of facts stated in a notice published by law); the provisions of the Documentary Evidence Acts, 1868 and 1882, were extended to cover various new departments of Government in the following Acts: St. 1917, 7 & 8 Geo. V, c. 44, § 4 (Ministry of Re-construction); c. 51, § 10 (Air Council); 1805, Richardson v. Anderson, 1 Camp. 66, note (printed collection of U. S. treaties proved by the U. S. minister to be authorized, excluded; Ellenborough, L. C. J., required an examined copy, and "would not have admitted a book of treaties with Spain proved to have been printed by the king's printer there"); 1822, Lacon v. Higgins, 3 Stark. 178 (copy of a French Code, purporting to be printed at the royal printing-office, and proved to be commonly accepted in French courts, received); 1866, R. v. Wallace, 10 Cox Cr. 500 (copy of a proclamation in a journal entitled "Dublin Gazette, published by authority," not admitted under St. 28 & 29 Vict.).

CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1906, c. 145, Evidence Act, § 22 (proclamations, etc., concerning Northwest Territories, to be provable by printed copy of the Canada Gazette, or the official printer for Canada, Manitoba, or the Northwest Territories); § 21 (proclamations, etc., of the Governor-General or Governor in Council or of any minister or head of department of the government of Canada are provable by printed copy, as in Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 23); § 22 (proclamations, etc., of a Lieutenant-Governor or Lieutenant-Governor in Council of any Canadian province, or head of department of a provincial government, are provable by printed copy as in Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 23); § 20 (imperial "official records, acts, or documents" are provable as in England, or by the Canada Gazette or a volume of the Canadian Acts of Parliament, or by copy purporting to be by the Queen's printer for Canada); § 30 (all official documents printed in the Canada Gazette are provable thereby); § 19 ("Every copy of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, public or private, printed by the King's Printer, shall be evidence of such Act and of its contents; and every copy purporting to be printed by the King's Printer shall be deemed to be so printed, unless the contrary is shown") c. 10, § 6 (inquiries into privileges, etc., of Senate or House; journals provable by copy "printed or purporting to be printed by the order of the Senate or House"); c. 75, § 33 (animal contagious diseases; order or regulation provable by printed copy certified by the minister of agriculture); St. 1903, 3 Edw. VII, c. 61, § 11 ("copies of the said Revised Statutes [of 1906, authorized by this act to be prepared], purporting to be printed by the King's printer, from the amended roll so deposited, shall be evidence of the said Revised Statutes"); St. 1907, 6–7 Edw. VII, c. 43, § 11 (Revised Statutes 1906; copies in French or English "purporting to be printed by the King's printer, shall be evidence of the said Revised Statutes and of their contents").

Alberta: St. 1906, c. 3, § 7, par. 54 (a legislative act, public or private, is provable by a copy "printed by authority of law," and every copy so purporting shall be deemed 'prima facie' to be so printed); ib. par. 55 (the King's printer's copy of a regulation or order in council is admissible); St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 25 ("Copies of statutes, official gazettes, ordinances, regulations, proclamations, journals, orders, appointments to office, notices thereof, and other public documents, purporting to be printed by or under the authority of the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland or of the Imperial Government" or any Government or legislature of the British dominions, "shall be admitted in evidence to prove the contents thereof"); ib. § 26 (substantially like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 23); ib. § 28 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 25, including the Alberta Gazette and "the official gazette of any province or territory in Canada").

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 28 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 21); § 29 (like ib. § 22); § 31 (like ib. § 23); § 36 (like ib. § 30, including the B. C. Gazette).

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 9 (substantially like Dom. Evid. Act, § 17, but omitting departmental documents); § 10 (like ib. § 22, but limited to the province of Manitoba and the Manitoba Gazette); § 11 (like ib. § 22, but applying to other provinces than Manitoba); § 14 (like ib. § 20); § 21 (like ib. § 30, applying also to any province of Canada and its official gazette); § 32 (for ascertaining foreign or domestic law, the judge may refer to "any books of statutes, reports of cases"); c. 112, § 49 (in libel, etc., the legislative journals are provable by a copy purporting to be printed by legislative authority); c. 126, § 60 (official medical register, admissible); c. 133, § 339 (municipal by-laws, provable by printed copy purporting to be by authority); c. 153, § 23 (official pharmaceutical register, admissible); c. 164, § 15 ("publications in the Manitoba Gazette, and all copies of the statutes of this Province, the journals of the House, sessional papers, and all other documents," purporting to be by "any King's printer or Queen's printer," shall be admissible); § 16 (where the Lieutenant-Governor under a former statute authorized "any person" to print any of the foregoing documents, a copy purporting to be by a person so authorized is admissible); c. 198, § 10 (in part repeats c. 65, § 10); St. 1914, c. 1, § 12 (Revised Statutes, 1913, are provable by copies purporting to be printed by the King's printer from the official roll as deposited).

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 47 (British bankruptcy proceedings, provable by the London Gazette, purporting to be published by Royal authority); § 51 (proclamations, etc., of the Province; like Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 76, § 23); § 52 (proclamations, etc., of the Dominion; like ib. § 23); § 50 (a law of the Dominion or any province of Canada may be proved by a purporting copy of the Official Gazette or a purporting copy by the official or King's printer); St. 1918, c. 27 (adding to Consol. St. c. 127, § 58 a provision for proving laws, etc. of the United Kingdom by Official Gazette, etc., as in ib. § 50).

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 2, § 5 (purporting printed copy of House journals, admissible in inquiries touching privilege, etc.); c. 1, § 3 (acts of the Legislative Council, provable by the Royal Gazette or by copies "purporting to be published by the King's printer for the Island"); St. 1919, c. 21, Evidence Act, § 1 (similar to N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 51).

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 3, § 32 (copy of the Council or House journals purporting to be printed by its order, admissible in inquiries of privilege, etc.); c. 163, § 3 (any statute of the Parliament of the Empire or Canada or this Province or a Canadian province, colony, or territory, or any ordinance of such territory, is provable by copy purporting to be by the Queen's printer or the respective government printer); § 4 (like Dom. Evid. Act § 20, adding the King's printer for Nova Scotia); § 5 (like ib. § 21); § 6 (like ib. § 22, specially mentioning the Province of Nova Scotia and the King's printer therefor, and including also any territory of Canada); § 10 (like ib. § 30, adding the Royal Gazette).

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 21 (statutes or ordinances of any government in the Empire; like Alta. Evid. Act § 25, supra); § 23 (proclamations, orders, regulations, appointments, etc., by any chief executive officer or head of department of the Government of Canada or of any province or territory of Canada are provable by printed copy in the Canadian Gazette or respective Official Gazette or purporting to be by the respective King's or Government printer); § 25 (copies of notices, documents, etc., printed in the Canada Gazette and the Ontario Gazette are 'prima facie' evidence of the originals).

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, § 30 (proclamations, etc.; like Dom. Evid. Act § 21); § 33 (like ib. § 30); § 34 (statutes of any province of Canada are provable by copy "purporting to be printed and published by the printer authorized to print and publish the same"); St. 1918, c. 4, § 5 (amending St. 1889, c. 9, § 30, by including proclamations, etc. "of this Province" as well as Canada, and making them provable by the Royal Gazette of this province, or a volume of Acts of the Legislature purporting to contain notice of such proclamation, etc.).

Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, Evidence Act § 3 (British or Canadian statutes and ordinances, provable by copy purporting to be printed by the Queen's or King's or government printer); § 4 (like Dom. Evid. Act § 20, adding the Government printer for Saskatchewan); § 5 (like ib. § 21); § 7 (like ib. § 22, adding the government printer for Saskatchewan); ib. § 10 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 25, substituting the Saskatchewan Gazette); § 6 ("publications in the Saskatchewan Gazette" and all documents "printed or purporting to be printed by the government printer" shall be deemed to be "authentic copies of the originals" and admissible "without proof as the originals might be"); c. 1, § 54 (orders in council, provable by King's printer's copy, as in c. 44, § 7); c. 1, § 53 ("every copy of an Act, public or private, printed by authority of law shall be evidence of such Act and of its contents, and every copy purporting to be so printed shall be deemed to be so printed unless the contrary is shown"); St. 1920, c. 2, § 10 (Revised Statutes 1920 "printed by the King's printer from the said roll," to be evidence).

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 1, § 8, par. 54 (Commissioner's regulation or order, provable by printed copy in the Yukon Official Gazette); ib. par. 55 (a printed copy of an ordinance, public or private, purporting to be printed by authority of law, is admissible); c. 30, § 3 (statutes of the Imperial or Dominion Parliament, or of a province, etc., of Canada, or ordinances of this Territory or another of Canada, are provable by copy purporting to be printed and published by the King's printer or respective Government printer); § 4 (Imperial proclamations, etc.; like Dom. Evid. Act § 20, adding "Yukon Territory" under cl. c); § 5 (Dominion proclamations, etc.; like Dom. Evid. Act § 21); ib. § 6 (proclamation, etc., of a Lieutenant-Governor, etc., or of the Yukon Commissioner; like Dom. Evid. Act § 22); § 10 (like Dom. Evid. Act § 30, adding the Yukon Gazette); St. 1914, No. 5, § 9 (copies of the Consolidated ordinances of 1914, "printed under the direction of the Commissioner," to be received in evidence).

UNITED STATES: UNIFORM ACT: Uniform Proof of Statutes Act, 1920, § 1 ("Printed books or pamphlets, purporting on their face to be the session or other statutes of any of the United States, or the territories thereof, or of any foreign jurisdiction, and to have been printed and published by the authority of any such State, territory or foreign jurisdiction, or proved to be commonly recognized in its courts, shall be received in the courts of this state as 'prima facie' evidence of such statutes").

FEDERAL: Rev. St. 1878, § 908, Code 1919, § 1411 (Little & Brown's edition of the laws and treaties of the U. S., admissible); St. 1877, March 2, c. 82, § 4, Code § 1412 (second edition of the Revised Statutes, for 1878, printed under the same direction, admissible); Code 1919, §§ 1413, 5907 (supplements to the Revised Statutes "published under the authority of Congress," to be 'prima facie' evidence); § 1414 (the "pamphlet copies of the acts and resolutions of each session of Congress, and the bound copies of the acts and resolutions of each Congress, shall be legal evidence," etc.); § 6187 (printed copies of trademark papers in patent-office; quoted ante, § 1680); § 8038 (U. S. shipping board's published reports of investigations; "such authorized reports, without further proof or authentication, shall be competent evidence of such reports"); St. Mar. 19, 1920, § 2 (trademark records; cited more fully ante, § 1681); St. 1916, Sept. 7, c. 451, § 24, 39 Stats. (Shipping Board's authorized published reports "shall without further proof or authentication, be competent evidence of such reports"); St. 1920, Feb. 28, § 417 (Interstate Commerce Act revised; the Commission may publish its reports and decisions as it deems fit, and "such authorized publications shall be competent evidence . . . without any further proof or authentication thereof"); 1801, Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cr. 1, 13, 38 (pamphlet printed by congressional order, containing communications from U. S. diplomatic agents abroad giving copies of French admiralty ordinances, admitted); 1806, U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. 412, 415 (Maryland statute-book, "published by authority," admitted); 1816, Craig v. Brown, 1 Pet. C. C. 355 (printed foreign statutes must bear the State seal); 1822, Commercial & F. Bank v. Patterson, 2 Cr. C. C. 346 (Pennsylvania statute-book, purporting to be published by legislative authority and deposited in the State Department, admitted); 1831, Hinde v. Vattier, 5 Pet. 398 ("Land Laws of Ohio," received under Ohio law); 1841, U. S. v. Glassware, 4 Law Reporter 36 (printed copy of an English statute, bought of the royal printer, admitted); 1852, Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 429 (printed copy of the code of France, purporting to be official and received by the Federal Supreme Court in exchange for U. S. statutes, admitted); 1869, O'Keefe v. U. S., 5 Ct. Cl. 674, 682 (volume of English statutes, purporting to be officially printed, and testified to by an English lawyer as an authorized book, admitted); 1870, Armstrong v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 225 (printed volume of laws sent by a foreign government to the Federal Supreme Court, admitted); 1872, The Pawashick, 2 Low. 142, 147 (officially printed book of foreign statutes, admissible when "shown to the reasonable satisfaction of the Court" to be genuine; here, a purporting printed copy of the English Merchant Shipping Act was admitted without any proof by witnesses); 1903, Nashua Savings Bank v. Anglo-American L. M. & A. Co., 189 U. S. 221, 23 Sup. 517 (printed copies of a purporting act of the British Parliament, testified by an English attorney to have been "issued by authority, being printed by Her Majesty's printer," and to be there receivable without further evidence, admitted, under the law of New Hampshire); 1904, Drewson v. Hartje P. M. Co., 131 Fed. 734, 738, 65 C. C. A. 548 (patent-office printed copy of a patent, held sufficient to show the date of application on the facts); 1914, Stewart v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 211 Fed. 41 (U. S. General Land Office map, recited to be issued by authority of the Secretary of the Interior, admitted).

ALABAMA: Code 1909, § 3988 (public or private statutes or proceedings of any legislative body, "purporting on the face of the book to be printed by authority" of the government, State, or Territory, receivable); § 3989 (ordinances, etc., of a municipal corporation of this State; a copy "purporting on the face of the book to be printed by authority or to be a code of ordinances," etc., is to be evidence of the "due adoption and continued existence of" the ordinances, etc.); § 26 (printed report of commissioner, admissible to show the issuance of a fertilizer-license); § 1259 (municipal ordinances, etc., "purporting to be published by authority of the council, in book or pamphlet form," to be evidence of passage and publication, etc.); 1832, Cox v. Robinson, 2 St. & P. 91, 94 (printed copy of statute procured by the Secretary of State as required by law, received; also, when purporting to be published by State authority); 1839, Hanrick v. Andrews, 9 Port. 9, 37 (New York statute, appearing to be published by public authority, received); 1839, Smoot v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. 72, 75 (same; Virginia statutes); 1849, Geron v. Felder, 15 Ala. 304 (printed copy of statutes must be published by authority of law); 1873, Clanton v. Jones, 50 Ala. 260, 262 ("Revised Code of Mississippi," received); 1877, Bradley v. Bank, 60 Ala. 252, 259 (statutes of Louisiana, received); 1883, Johnson v. State, 73 Ala. 483, 486 (volume purporting merely to be "published by authority," rejected); 1885, Edmunds v. State, 79 Ala. 48 (preceding case approved); 1889, Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 43, 71, 7 So. 302 (purporting official printed copy of Mississippi Code, received); 1892, Falls v. Building Co., 97 Ala. 417, 13 So. 25 (publication by a private person under State authority suffices); 1916, Pensacola St. A. & G. S. S. Co. v. Brooks, 14 Ala. App. 364, 70 So. 968 (book of Florida Statutes held admissible on the facts, under Code 1907, § 3988).

ARIZONA: Rev. St. 1913, § 1731 ("printed statute-books" of this Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any U. S. State or Territory, or any foreign government, "purporting to have been printed under the authority thereof," admissible); § 1735 (municipal ordinances, etc. "printed in any newspaper, book, pamphlet, or other form, and which purport to be published by authority of the council of such city or town," are admissible); St. 1921 c. 2 (following the Uniform Proof of Statutes Act).

ARKANSAS: Dig. 1919, § 4115 ("the printed statute-books of this State," admissible to prove private acts); § 4116 ("the printed statute-books of the several States and Territories" of the U. S., "purporting to have been printed under the authority" thereof, admissible); § 4129 (city or incorporated town ordinances, etc., provable by "printed copies" "published by the authority of" the city or town); §§ 3119, 3120 (banking company's charter, in a criminal cause, provable by "the printed statute-book" of the creating State); § 4117 (printed copies of law of another State or Territory deposited with State Secretary; see ante, § 1680); § 7497 ("any municipal corporation"; like § 4129); 1850, Clarke v. Bank, 10 Ark. 516, 527 (printed statute-book, purporting to be published by authority, received); 1850, Barkman v. Hopkins, 11 Ark. 157, 168 (same); 1850, May v. Jameson, 11 Ark. 368, 377 (same); 1853, Dixon v. Thatcher, 14 Ark. 141, 146 (same; certain Louisiana volumes rejected); 1859, Yarbrough v. Arnold, 20 Ark. 592, 596 (same; book not so purporting, excluded); 1892, Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Arkadelphia, 56 Ark. 370, 372, 19 S. W. 1053 (printed copy of a municipal ordinance published by authority, received); 1901, Lanigan v. North, 69 Ark. 62, 63 S. W. 62 (Deering's edition of California Codes, rejected as not purporting to be official).

CALIFORNIA: C. C. P. 1872, § 1900 ("books printed under the authority of a sister State or foreign country, and purporting to contain the statutes, code, or other written law of such State or country, or proved to be commonly admitted in the tribunals of such State or country as evidence of the written law thereof," receivable); the thirteenth word supra, "and," should be omitted, and this improvement is made in some of the codes founded on the California Code; the latter in these sections is confusing in failing to make clear that a "purporting" authority suffices; id. § 1963, infra, attempts to cure this; § 1918 ("public documents printed by the order of the Legislature or Congress or either House thereof," receivable to prove acts of the Executive of this State, a sister State, or the United States; legislative proceedings of the same, provable "by published statutes or resolutions" or by copies "printed by their order," and for a foreign country, by "journals published by their authority or commonly received in that country as such"; acts of a municipal corporation, or its board or department, in the State, "by a printed book published by the authority of such corporation"); § 1963 (there is a presumption "that a printed and published book purporting to be printed or published by public authority was so printed or published"; and "that a printed and published book, purporting to contain reports of cases adjudged in the tribunals of the state or country where the book is published, contains correct reports of such cases").

COLORADO: C. C. P. 1921, § 396 ("printed copies in volumes, of statutes, codes, or other written law, of any Territory or any other State or foreign government, purporting or proven to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law in the courts and judicial tribunals" thereof, admissible); Comp. L. 1921, Gen. St. § 9167 (municipal ordinances, etc., provable by copy "printed in book form or pamphlet form, and purporting to be printed and published by authority of the corporation"); § 6535 ("printed statute-books of the U. S. and of the several States and Territories, printed under the authority" thereof, and "books of reports of decisions of the Supreme Courts of the U. S. and of the several States and Territories, published by authority of such Courts," admissible); § 6523 (Mills' Annotated Statutes to be evidence of Colorado statutes); § 6525 ("Revised Statutes of Colorado 1908," under Secretary of State's certificate, to be evidence); § 6524 ("Mills' Annotated Statutes of the State of Colorado, revised edition edited and annotated by John H. Gabriel, Esq." 1912, receivable in evidence); 1884, Bruckman v. Taussig, 7 Colo. 561, 5 Pac. 152 (statute applied to a volume of Missouri statutes).

COLUMBIA (Dist.): 1898, Main v. Aukam, 12 D. C. App. 375, 392 (Georgia Code, admitted; "the impress of the [public] authority by which it is published" suffices).

CONNECTICUT: Gen. St. 1918, § 5726 (U. S. State and Territorial public statutes, "printed by authority," admissible).

DELAWARE: Rev. St. 1915, §§ 4129, 4220 (printed copies of domestic laws, public or private, "published by authority of the State," admissible; also, of laws of another of the U. S. "if purporting to be published under the authority of their respective governments or if commonly admitted and read as evidence in their courts"); § 4221 ("reports of cases" in courts of another of U. S., "published by authority," admissible); § 4225 (Wilmington city ordinances, provable by printed copy "published by authority of the city council"); 1835, Bailey v. M'Dowell, 2 Harringt. 34 (printed statutes of Virginia, etc., in the Secretary of State's office, and purporting to be published by authority, excluded); 1839, Kinney v. Hosea, 3 Harringt. 77 (mere private publication of statutes, excluded); 1839, Bank of Wilmington and B. v. Wollaston, 3 Harringt. 90, 93 (official printed domestic volume containing a bank charter, admitted).

FLORIDA: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2714 ("printed copies" of domestic legislative acts, public and private, "which shall be published under authority of the government," admissible; also "such copies of private acts"); § 2715 ("printed copies of the statute laws" of the U. S. or a State or Territory thereof, "if purporting to be published under the authority of the respective governments, or if commonly admitted and read as evidence in their courts," admissible); § 2628 ("printed copies" of private acts may be given in evidence); § 4455 (fraternal benefit society; printed copy of constitution and laws, certified by secretary or corresponding officer, admissible); 1894, Rogero v. Zippel, 33 Fla. 625, 15 So. 326 (Throop's N. Y. Statutes, held not to be a publication purporting to be under authority, though certified as correct by the Secretary of State; under the statute, the fact of being "commonly admitted" must be evidenced).

GEORGIA: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5797, 5818 (laws of this State, the U. S., and other States of U. S., "as published by authority," to be recognized without proof); 1859, Stanford v. Pruet, 27 Ga. 243, 246 (a certain printed volume, excluded); 1907, Missouri S. L. Ins. Co. v. Lovelace, 1 Ga. App. 446, 58 S. E. 93 (a purporting official printed copy of Missouri insurance laws, received).

HAWAII: Rev. L. 1915, § 2598 (where the governor or head of a department is authorized to act, or to certify anything and publish it in any newspaper, "proof of the said newspaper purporting to contain a copy or notification" thereof shall be evidence of the act or certificate "having been duly done or given" and of the "purport and due making" of such law, etc.; and "the mere production of a newspaper purporting to contain public notices published by authority shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the publication thereof on the day on which the same bears date"); § 2599 (legislative proceedings, and proclamations; copies "purporting to be printed by authority" are admissible "without any proof being given that such copy were so printed").

IDAHO: Comp. St. 1919, § 7944 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1900 inserting "Territory"); § 7952 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1918, substituting "another State or Territory" for "a sister State").

ILLINOIS: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 10 ("The printed statute books of the U. S., and of this State and of the several States, Territories, and late Territories of the U. S., purporting to be printed under the authority of" the U. S., etc., admissible); § 12 ("books of reports of decisions of the Supreme Court and other court of the U. S., of this State, and of the several States and Territories thereof, purporting to be published by authority," admissible); c. 24, § 65 (municipal ordinances, "when printed in book or pamphlet form, and purporting to be published by authority of the board of trustees or the city council," admissible); c. 124, § 8 (laws and legislative resolutions and journals, provable by a volume containing a "published" certificate of Secretary of State); 1854, Charlesworth v. Williams, 16 Ill. 338 (book purporting to be Ohio statutes, read); 1864, Ewbanks v. Ashley, 36 Ill. 177, 181 (printed copy of town by-laws, admitted under statute); 1865, Block v. Jacksonville, 36 Ill. 301, 303 (municipal ordinance printed in a newspaper, received under special town charter); 1872, Hensoldt v. Petersburg, 63 Ill. 111, 113 (printed town ordinance, admitted under one of the town ordinances); 1875, Byars v. Mt. Vernon, 77 Ill. 467, 469 (printed city ordinance, received under statute); 1883, Eagan v. Connelly, 107 Ill. 458, 462 (Ohio statute-book, admitted under statute); 1885, Hudson v. Green, H. S. Co., 113 Ill. 618, 629 (Indiana statute-book, admitted under statute); 1897, Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Patchen, 167 Ill. 204, 47 N. E. 368 (city ordinance; must purport to be printed by authority); 1899, Grand Pass S. C. v. Crosby, 181 Ill. 266, 54 N. E. 913 (Indiana statute-book, admitted under the statute); 1906, McCraney v. Glos, 222 Ill. 628, 78 N. E. 921 (printed book of Iowa statutes with the title-page reading, "published by authority of the State," admitted under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 10); 1906, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wilson, 225 Ill. 50, 80 N. E. 56 (under Rev. St. c. 24, § 65, supra, the printed copy is of course not conclusive); 1907, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Warriner, 229 Ill. 91, 82 N. E. 246 (village ordinance, purporting to be published by authority, although the printed certificate on it contained an inconsistent date).

INDIANA: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 472 (printed statute-books of Indiana State, Northwest Territory, and Indiana and Illinois Territories, "purporting to be printed under the authority of said State or Territories," admissible); § 473 (printed statute book of another State in State secretary's office; quoted ante, § 1680); § 8654 (municipal ordinances "in book or pamphlet form, if the same shall purport to be printed under the authority of the common council," admissible); § 495 (domestic Supreme Court's decision, provable by reports published "as provided by the laws of this State" when properly identified); 1858, Magee v. Sanderson 10 Ind. 261, 263 (statute-book purporting to be printed by authority; purporting certificate of correctness by the Secretary of State, not sufficient); 1860, Line v. Mack, 14 Ind. 330 (similar); 1861, Vaughn v. Griffeth, 16 Ind. 353 (similar); 1862, Crake v. Crake, 18 Ind. 156, 160 (similar); 1869, Paine v. R. Co., 31 Ind. 283, 315, 353 (similar); 1878, Rothrock v. Perkinson, 61 Ind. 39, 48 (printed volume "published by authority," received); 1909, State v. Wheeler, 172 Ind. 578, 89 N. E. 1 (official book of annual Acts is 'prima facie' evidence).

IOWA: Comp. C. 1919, § 7356 (acts of the Executive, provable by "public documents purporting to have been printed by order of the Legislatures of those governments, respectively, or by either branch thereof"); § 7357 (legislative journals, provable by copy "purporting to have been printed" by order of the appropriate House); § 7358 (statutes provable as in Nebr. Rev. St. § 8925); § 7360 (ordinance of a municipal corporation, provable by "printed copies . . . published by its authority"); 1874, Greasons v. Davis, 9 Ia. 223 (private edition of statutes of another State, proved to be there current, admissible); 1867, Webster v. Rees, 23 Ia. 269 (statute applied); 1896, Goodwin v. Ass. Soc., 97 Ia. 226, 66 N. W. 157 (a copy certified in print by the Secretary of State, not sufficient under a clause "published by authority of the Legislature"); 1904, Summitt v. U. S. Life Ins. Co., 123 Ia. 681, 99 N. W. 563 (N. Y. Session Laws, held to "purport to have been published, etc.," under Code § 4651); 1920, Barrett v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 190 Ia. 509, 175 N. W. 950, 180 N. W. 670 (printed city ordinances, under Code § 687, presumed to have been adopted and published, and admitted as authentic).

KANSAS: Gen. St. 1915, § 7274 ("printed statute-books of this State or of the Territory of Kansas, printed under authority," admissible to prove private acts); § 7276 ("printed books containing the acts of the Congress of the United States, purporting to be published by authority of Congress or by authority of the United States," admissible); § 7277 ("public documents purporting to be edited and printed by authority of Congress or either House thereof," admissible); § 7271 ("printed copies in volumes of statutes, codes, or other written law enacted by any other State or Territory, or foreign government, purporting or proved to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law in the courts" of such State, etc., admissible); § 7280 ("printed copies" of ordinances, etc., of any city or town in the State, "published by authority of" such city, etc., admissible); § 1414, St. 1903, c. 122, § 194 (ordinances of second class city, provable by book "purporting to be published by authority of the city"); § 1681, St. 1913, c. 118, § 1 (similar, for second class cities); ib. § 1893 (similar, for third class cities); § 5989, G. S. 1868, c. 56 (State secretary's printed certificate prefixed "to each printed volume of the laws" and his certificate in the same as to newspaper publication of each law, to be "evidence of the facts therein contained"); § 7275 (copy certified under seal by the State secretary of any act, etc., in printed statute-books of the U. S. States and territories purporting to be printed by authority, deposited with the secretary, and required to be kept there, admissible); § 11837, G. S. 1868, c. 119, § 11 (printed copy of General Statutes deposited with State secretary, and certified by him under State seal, to be "an authentic record of such laws"); § 11840, St. 1915, c. 28, § 3 (printed copies of General Statutes of 1915, with printed authentication of attorney-general, shall be "evidence in all courts"); St. 1921, c. 207, § 3 (revision of General Statutes, when published with commission's certificate, to be evidence).

KENTUCKY: Stats. 1915, §§ 1626, 2419 (copies of Assembly journals, printed by the State, and certain specified editions of the laws, admissible); § 1642 (law of the U. S. or a State or Territory thereof, provable by copy "printed under authority" thereof and received in the Secretary of State's office, or by certified copy thereof); § 1644 (law of "any State or Territory," provable by a printed volume or pamphlet "showing on its face that it was published by authority thereof"); § 2775 (municipal corporation's ordinances, provable by "printed copy officially published by the city"); 1828, Taylor v. Bank, 7 T. B. Monr. 576, 585 (printed copy of statutes, admitted under statute); 1871, Roots v. Merriwether, 8 Bush 400 (statutes purporting to be officially printed, admissible); 1906, Graziani v. Burton, — Ky. —, 97 S. W. 800 (copy of the Ohio law, proved by the Secretary of State to have been received by him, etc., admitted under Stats. § 1642).

LOUISIANA: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 1440, § 2171 ("The published statutes and digests of other States," admissible to prove "the statute laws of the States from which they purport to emanate").

MAINE: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 129 (printed copies, "purporting to be published under authority of government," of a law of the United States or a State or Territory thereof, admissible); 1838, Owen v. Boyle, 3 Shepl. 147, 150 (book purporting to be an authorized copy of the laws of a British province, received).

MARYLAND: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, §§ 53, 54 (private laws "published by the authority of this State" may be read "from the printed statute-book"; laws of the U. S. or a State or Territory of the U. S., from "any printed volume purporting to contain" them; Baltimore city ordinances, from "the printed volume thereof published by the authority" thereof); Art. 80, § 8 (Code of Public General Laws of 1910, certified as "authentic" by commission appointed by court of appeals, to be "evidence of the law"); St. 1912, c. 21, p. 58, Mar. 13 (Bagby's Annotated Code of the Public Civil Laws of Maryland, to be evidence of the Code and Statutes to 1912 inclusive, save such as "relate exclusively to Crimes and Punishments"); St. 1914, c. 16, Feb. 24 (Bagby's Annotated Code, in three volumes, now including Art. 27 on Crimes and Punishments, legalized "to be evidence").

MASSACHUSETTS: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 70 (printed copies of the statutes of the United States, and of any other State or Territory, or of a foreign country, "which purport to be published under the authority of their respective governments, or which are commonly admitted and read as evidence in their courts," admissible); § 75 ("the printed copies of all statutes, acts and resolves of the Commonwealth, public or private, which are published under its authority," admissible); 1825, Raynham v. Canton, 3 Pick. 293, 296 (statutes of another State, in "a volume purporting on the face of it to contain the laws," admissible); 1857, Merrifield v. Robbins, 8 Gray 150 (the phrase "By Authority" on the title-page, held sufficient); 1862, Ashley v. Root, 4 All. 504 (statute applied); 1894, Bride v. Clark, 161 Mass. 130, 36 N. E. 745 (statute applied).

MICHIGAN: Comp. L. 1915, § 12512 (local constitution, laws, and resolutions, private and public, provable by "printed copies" "published under the authority of the government"); § 12513 (constitution, laws, and resolutions of another State or Territory of the U. S. or of a foreign State, provable by "printed copies," "if purporting to be published under the authority of the respective governments, or if commonly admitted and used as evidence in their courts"); § 12514 (ordinances of a city or village council, etc., provable by printed copy or volume of ordinances "purporting to have been published by authority" of the council, etc.); § 2631 (village ordinance, provable by "any volume of ordinances purporting to have been written or printed by authority of the council"); § 3004 (similar, for city ordinance); 1878, Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 189, 195 (statutes purporting to be "printed by order of the Governor," admitted); 1891, People v. McQuaid, 85 Mich. 123, 124, 48 N. W. 161 (an unofficial compilation of statutes, "commonly admitted in all courts" in Pennsylvania, received to show that law); 1896, Dawson v. Peterson, 110 Mich. 431, 68 N. W. 246 (printed copy of foreign — here Canadian — statutes, receivable, if proved by a competent witness — here a Toronto barrister — to be commonly accepted by the foreign court).

MINNESOTA: Gen. St. 1913, § 8414 ("Printed copies of all statutes, acts, and resolutions of this state published under its authority, whether of a public or private nature, the journals of the senate and house of representatives kept by the respective clerks thereof as provided by law, and deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the printed journals of said houses, respectively, published by authority of law, shall be admitted as sufficient evidence thereof in all cases whatsoever"); § 8415 ("Copies of the ordinances, by-laws, resolutions, and regulations of any city, village, or borough, certified by the mayor, or president of the council, and the clerk thereof under its seal, and copies of the same printed in any newspaper, book, pamphlet, or other form, and which purport to be published by authority of the council of such city or village, shall be 'prima facie' evidence thereof, and after three years from the compilation and publication of any such book or pamphlet, shall be conclusive proof of the regularity of their adoption and publication"); § 8416 ("Printed copies of the statute laws of any other state, or of a foreign country, which purport to be published under the authority of their respective governments, or if commonly admitted as evidence in their courts, are admissible as 'prima facie' evidence of such laws in all cases whatsoever in this state"); § 9406 (Revised Laws 1905, as published pursuant to law, admissible "without further proof or authentication"); § 9423 (General Statutes 1913, as published pursuant to law, to be evidence "without further proof or authentication"); 1891, Holly v. Bennett, 46 Minn. 386, 49 N. W. 189 (printed book purporting to contain municipal ordinances published by the city's authority, received under its charter); 1906, Clagett v. Duluth, 143 Fed. 824, C. C. A. (Young's and Wenzel's official compilation of Minnesota statutes, held not conclusive).

MISSISSIPPI: Code 1906, § 1986, Hem. § 1646 ("printed acts of the Legislature, published by authority thereof," admissible); 1835, Baughan v. Graham, 1 How. 220, 224 (foreign book must be shown to be published by authority of the State); 1852, Stewart v. Swanzy, 23 Miss. 502, 504 (a foreign book purporting to be printed by authority is presumed to have been so printed).

MISSOURI: Rev. St. 1919, § 4032 (in criminal causes, the powers, etc., of "any banking company or corporation" are provable by "the printed statute-book of the State, government, country" creating it); § 5335 ("the printed statute-books of this State, printed under its authority," to be evidence of private acts); § 5336 ("the printed statute-books of sister States and the several Territories of the U. S., purporting to be printed by the authority of such States or Territories," admissible); § 5338 ("the printed books containing the acts of the Congress of the U. S., purporting to be published by authority of Congress or by authority of the U. S.," admissible); § 5340 ("the printed volumes, purporting to contain the laws of a sister State or Territory," admissible); § 5341 ("public documents, purporting to be edited or printed by authority of Congress, or either house thereof," admissible); § 5342 ("the printed journal of the Senate and House of Representatives of this State, and all public documents or reports therein contained, and all reports or documents printed by order of this State or by either House of the General Assembly, or purporting to be printed by authority thereof," admissible); § 5350 ("printed copies" of ordinances, etc., of a city or incorporated town in this State, "purporting to be published by authority of such city," etc., "and any printed pamphlet or volume, purporting to be published by authority of any such town or city and to contain the ordinances," etc., admissible); § 5400 (copy of a certain act of Congress dealing with lands, printed with Missouri session laws 1875, to be evidence); §§ 7957, 7984 (city ordinances, "when printed and published by authority of the corporation," admissible); § 7094 (copy of Revised Statutes of 1919 in the office of the Secretary of State, containing a certificate by such Secretary and chairman of the revising committee, admissible; each copy containing such printed certificate, admissible); § 5337 ("copies of any act, law, resolution or constitution, contained in any printed statute-book of a sister State or territory," admissible if the State secretary of the State in question or of this State certifies correctness and the certificate sets out "in full the title-page of such printed book"); § 7080 (State secretary's certificate "as published in the session acts," to be 'prima facie' evidence of adoption of amendments to Constitution); § 10428 ("authorized publications" of State public service commission's reports, etc., admissible); § 13025 (State printer's published copy of records of State board of equalization, to be "evidence of the action of said board"); 1844, Bright v. White, 8 Mo. 421, 425 (certain volumes not purporting to be printed, etc., excluded); 1848, Baily v. Trustees, 12 Mo. 174, 177 (private statute must be produced, even where the law has made the printed statute-book evidence; an enigmatic ruling); 1850, Haile v. Hill, 13 Mo. 612, 616 (certain volumes allowed to be read); 1861, Cummings v. Brown, 31 Mo. 309 (under the statute, the volume need purport only to contain the laws, and not to be printed by authority); 1874, State v. Williamson, 57 Mo. 192, 200 (volume published "pursuant to law," admitted); 1893, Tarkio v. Cook, 120 Mo. 1, 12, 25 S. W. 202 (ordinances admitted under the statute); 1893, Glenn v. Hunt, 120 Mo. 330, 337, 25 S. W. 181 (the statute sanctioning copies certified by the Secretary of State does not prevent the use of a printed book otherwise admissible; under Rev. St. § 4832 the printed copy need not purport to be by authority).

MONTANA: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10550, 10568 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1900, 1918); § 11985 (printed statutes, admissible in a criminal case to prove incorporation); § 10606, par. 5 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963).

NEBRASKA: Rev. St. 1922, § 8903 ("printed copies in volumes of statutes, code, or other written law, enacted by any other Territory, or State, or foreign government, purporting or proved to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law" in the courts thereof, admissible); § 8923 (acts of the Executive, domestic or foreign, provable by "public documents purporting to have been printed by order" of the Legislature or either branch); § 8924 (legislative journals, provable by copy "purporting to have been printed by order of" the respective Houses); § 8925 ("printed copies of the statute laws of this State, or any of the United States, or of Congress, or of any foreign government," purporting, etc., as in id. § 8903, admissible); §§ 3525, 3897, 4064, 4330 (municipal ordinances, provable "in book or pamphlet form, and purporting to be published or printed by authority of the city council," or "city," or "trustees"); § 3122 ("Revised Statutes of Nebraska for 1913," with Secretary of State's certificate, to be evidence of the laws "without further authentication," but "the existing editions" of the Compiled Statutes and Cobbey's Annotated Statutes, to be evidence of "the law as therein contained"); 1902, Hewitt v. Bank, 64 Nebr. 463, 90 N. W. 250, 92 N. W. 741 (certain Oklahoma statute-books, not admitted, on the facts).

NEVADA: Rev. L. 1912, § 5413 ("Printed copies in volumes of statutes, code, or other written law, enacted by any other State, or Territory, or foreign government, purporting or proved to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law in the courts and judicial tribunals" of such State, etc., are admissible); § 793 (city ordinances, "published in book or pamphlet form, by authority of the city council," admissible); § 1016 (compilation of 1917, by the justices of the Supreme Court, "as printed, shall be legal evidence"); § 7176 (in criminal cases, incorporation, etc., may be proved by "printed statutes of the State," etc.); St. 1921, c. 77, Mar. 8 (printed laws; adopts the Uniform Proof of Statutes Act).

NEW HAMPSHIRE: 1854, Emery v. Berry, 28 N. H. 473, 485 (volume of statutes of another State, "purporting on its face to have been printed by authority," admissible; quoted supra); St. 1919, Mar. 27, c. 87 ("statutes or judicial decisions of another State"; a "volume purporting to be a printed copy of such statutes" etc. "that appear to have been printed by public authority, and appear to the trial Court to be correct copies of such statutes or judicial decisions and generally accepted as such" to be 'prima facie' evidence; this is not only awkward in its language but erroneous and unpractical in its rule).

NEW JERSEY: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 24 (statute-book and pamphlet session-law of one of the United States, "printed and published by the direction or authority of such State," admissible; the Court to determine whether it was so printed, etc.); § 25 (same for the law of a foreign country or province or subdivision); Cities §§ 1844, 1932, 2065, 2363, 2459 (municipal laws, provable by a volume "printed and published by authority of the common council"); §§ 1907, 2647 (provable by any compilation "duly authorized and recognized"; applicable also to a public board); Statutes § 14 (law "printed by the authority of this State," admissible); Statutes § 25 ("pamphlet laws published by the State," to be 'prima facie' evidence of due notice of intention to pass law); Cities § 214 (city ordinances codified, when printed in book form and certified by city counsel or attorney and approved by mayor, admissible); Food, etc., § 42 a ("the book printed and published under the authority of the U. S. pharmacopoeial convention known as the U. S. Pharmacopoeia," admissible in proceedings under the food and drug laws).

NEW YORK: C. P. A. 1920, § 380 (official newspaper copy of a law of this State, admissible till six months after the end of the session; volume "printed under the direction of the Secretary of State," with his printed certificate, admissible); § 381 (compilation of colonial statutes pursuant to St. 1891, c. 125, to be evidence of the original, if it purports to be a copy from the original); § 388 (proceedings, etc., of a local city council, village trustees, board of health or of supervisors, provable by a volume "printed by authority" of the council, etc.); § 391 (foreign statute, or executive proclamation, etc., provable by a publication "purporting or proved to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law in the judicial tribunals thereof"); Greater N. Y. Charter, 1901, § 1556 (ordinances "published by authority of the board of aldermen," to be 'prima facie' evidence); St. 1913, c. 597, § 1 (printed proceedings of public service commissions, admissible); 1829, Packard v. Hill, 2 Wend. 411 (printed copy of laws of a foreign State, never receivable; of a U. S. State, receivable if printed by authority); s. c. 5 Wend. 375, 384, semble (same); 1829, Chanoine v. Fowler, 3 Wend. 177 (printed unofficial edition of a French criminal code, excluded); 1880, Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 41, 54 (printed book purporting to contain French codes, but not purporting or shown to be official, and authenticated only by an expert who had not read them, excluded on the facts); 1899, Hecla P. Co. v. Signa I. Co., 157 N. Y. 437, 53 N. E. 650 (copy of a Spanish ordinance, admitted on the facts).

NORTH CAROLINA: Con. St. 1919, § 1749 (statute or edict, etc., of another State or Territory or a foreign country, provable by a "book or publication purporting or proved to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law in the judicial tribunals thereof"; also provable by the State Secretary's certified copy from "a printed volume . . . on file in the State or Supreme Court library or in the offices of the Governor or Assembly's Acts, provable by "the printed statute book"); § 1748 (private act, provable by Martin's collection); § 2825 (municipal code or ordinances, provable when "published in book form by authority of the governing body"); 1823, State v. Twitty, 2 Hawks 441 (printed copy of statutes of another State, inadmissible without the State seal); 1898, Copeland v. Collins, 122 N. C. 619, 30 S. E. 315 (volume purporting to be laws of S. C., admitted).

NORTH DAKOTA: Comp. L. 1913, § 7910 ("books purporting to be printed or published under the authority of any other State, Territory, or foreign country, and purporting to contain the statutes, codes or other written law of such State, Territory, or country, or proved to be commonly admitted in the tribunals of such State," etc., are admissible); § 7919 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P., § 1918); § 90 ("all laws, journals, and documents printed and published by any contractor under the provisions of this article, and duly certified by the Secretary of State as provided herein, shall be deemed to be officially printed and published," and full faith is to be given them); § 3931 (village ordinances. "when printed in a newspaper or published in book or pamphlet form and purporting to be published or printed by authority of the village," admissible); § 7936 (par. 35, it is presumed that "a printed and published book and [= of ?] statutes purporting to be printed or published by public authority was so printed or published"; par. 36, that "a printed and published book purporting to contain reports of cases adjudged in the tribunals of the State or country where the book is published contains correct reports of such cases"; the current edition of the Code prints "county" in par. 36, but this must be deemed a printer's error); § 3596 (city ordinances provable "if printed in book or pamphlet form by authority of the city council").

OHIO: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11498 (printed copy of a law of another State, Territory, or foreign government, "proved or purporting to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law," receivable); § 4235 (municipal ordinance, etc., provable by "printed copies," published under authority of the corporation).

OKLAHOMA: Comp. St. 1921, § 636 (like S. D. Rev. C. § 2718, without the added clause); § 639 ("the printed statute-books of this Territory, printed under authority," admissible to prove private acts); § 641 ("the printed books containing the acts of the Congress of the U. S., purporting to be published by authority of Congress or by authority of the U. S.," admissible to prove all laws therein); § 642 ("public documents, purporting to be edited or printed by authority of Congress or either House thereof," admissible); § 645 ("printed copies" of ordinances, etc., of a city or incorporated town of the Territory, "published by authority of" such city, etc., admissible); St. 1921, c. 125, Mar. 27, § 2 ("Compiled Statutes of Oklahoma 1921," when approved, by the Code Commission, to be "presumptive evidence of the laws therein contained").

OREGON: Laws 1920, § 747 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1900); § 766 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1918; but par. 2 reads, "or by statutes or resolutions published by their order"; par. 1 reads, "prepared or printed"; par. 5 reads, "copy" for "book," and adds "or department thereof");

§ 799 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); 1900, State v. Savage, 36 Or. 191, 60 Pac. 610 (Compiled Statutes of Nebraska, admitted under the statute); 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 (New Zealand statute book, admitted).

PENNSYLVANIA: St. 1866, Mar. 21, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10341, Evidence 37 (authorized printed copy of ordinances, etc., of the Philadelphia Council, receivable); St. 1921, May 5, No. 174 (like the Uniform Proof of Statutes Act); 1814, Biddis v. James, 6 Binn. 321, 326 (Tilghman, C. J.: "I am for admitting the printed copies authorized by the Legislature either of this or any other State, whether the laws be public or private"); 1824, Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. 203, 205 (same; applied to a U. S. State); 1820, Jones v. Maffet, 5 S. & R. 532 (quoted supra); 1845, Mullen v. Morris, 2 Pa. St. 85, 87 ("printed volumes" purporting to contain the laws, receivable for U. S. States).

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS: C. C. P. 1901, § 313 (quoted ante, § 1680); § 334, par. 33 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, par. 35); § 300 (like ib. § 1900).

PORTO RICO: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1421 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1900); § 1437 (like ib. § 1918, omitting par. 1); § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); 1914, Fernandez v. Calaf, 7 P. R. Fed. 376 (law of San Domingo, not provable by the Gazeta Oficial of San Domingo with a certificate of the American consul that it was the official organ for laws; an amusing example of the inefficiency of the common law and of judicial helplessness to do justice).

RHODE ISLAND: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 49 (statutes of the U. S. or a State, Territory, or country, "purporting to be published by authority" of such State, etc., admissible; so also municipal ordinances in this State); 1870, Barrows v. Downs, 9 R. I. 453 (admitting a Spanish Code, authenticated by an expert and used by him to refer to).

SOUTH CAROLINA: C. C. P. 1922, § 707, 1902, § 2890 ("printed copies, in volumes, of statutes, code, or written other law, enacted by any other sovereignty, State, Territory, or foreign government, purporting or proved to have been published by the authority thereof or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law" in the courts of that State, or "purporting to be an authentic publication by a reputable publisher," etc., receivable); 1834, Allen v. Watson, 2 Hill 319 (printed book of the laws of Georgia, bearing the Governor's certificate, and commonly there accepted as authority, received).

SOUTH DAKOTA: Rev. C. 1919, § 2718 (like Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5413, adding: "The term 'public document' is defined to be all the publications and maps printed by order of the Legislative Assembly, or Congress, or either House thereof; and all such documents are admissible in evidence"; also, "any map or publication printed by order of either branch" of the Legislature or of Congress); § 5125 (legislative journals provable by "the volumes wherein the same are published by authority of the State"); § 5158 (State reports published by Supreme Court reporter to be "evidence of the decisions of the Supreme Court"); § 6247 (municipal corporations; "any compilation of ordinances purporting to be printed under the authority of the municipality," admissible).

TENNESSEE: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5585 (statutes of this or another U. S. State or a foreign State, provable by printed copies "purporting or proved" to be published by authority, or "proved to be commonly admitted as evidence" in that State, receivable); § 5583 (acts of the Executive of the U. S., of this or another U. S. State, or of a foreign government, provable "by public documents purporting to have been printed by order of the Legislature of those governments respectively or by either branch thereof"); § 5584 (legislative journals, provable by copy purporting to have been printed by authority of the respective body); § 7357 (existence of a corporation in criminal cases, provable by a "book purporting to be the public statute-book" of the U. S. or a State).

TEXAS: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3692 ("The printed statute-books of this State, of the United States, of the District of Columbia, or of any State or Territory of the U. S., or of any foreign government, purporting to have been printed under the authority thereof," admissible); 1846, Burton v. Anderson, 1 Tex. 96 (admitting a book purporting to be published under State authority, with expert testimony identifying it); 1851, Martin v. Payne, 11 Tex. 292 (copy of Tennessee laws, excluded under the statute).

UTAH: Comp. L. 1917, § 7083 ("Books purporting to be printed or published under the authority of another State or a Territory or foreign country, and to contain the statutes, code, or other written law of said State, Territory, or country, or proved to be commonly admitted in the tribunals of such State, Territory, or country, as evidence of the written law thereof," admissible); § 8989 (corporate charter; like Mont. Rev. C. § 11985); § 556 (city ordinances as "printed in book or pamphlet form by authority of the board of commissioners," admissible); 1912, Stuart v. Pederson, 41 Utah 308, 125 Pac. 395 (Mills' Annotated Statutes of Colorado admitted).

VERMONT: St. 1919, Mar. 27, No. 72 (laws and decisions of another State, provable by "a printed copy thereof purporting therein to be published by the authority of such State"); 1814, State v. Stade, D. Chip. 303 (copy of a law of a U. S. State, printed under authority receivable); 1827, Danforth v. Reynolds, 1 Vt. 259, 265 (statute-book of a U. S. State, "printed by the authority of such State and used in her courts," receivable); 1847, Territt v. Woodruff, 19 Vt. 182, 184 (printed statutes of a U. S. State," "published by the authority of such state" receivable); 1852, Spaulding v. Vincent, 24 Vt. 501, 504 ("some copy of the law which the witness could swear was recognized in the Province as authoritative" is necessary; here for Canadian law); 1855, Smith v. Potter, 27 Vt. 304, 309 ("authorized statute-book" of a U. S. State, "ordinarily sufficient"); 1856, State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60, 65 (volume "purporting to be published under the authority of the State," sufficient, for a U. S. State); 1920, State v. Williams, — Vt. —, 111 Atl. 701 (printed copy of State bank examiner's report to the General Assembly, admitted).

VIRGINIA: Code 1919, §§ 6189–6193 (domestic statutes, etc., "published by the public printer for the time being," receivable; also such printed copies of domestic legislative journals; also Hening's publication of early Virginia statutes; also copies of statutes of the United States or of any U. S. State or Territory, "printed by authority," of such State, etc.; also, copies of ordinances, etc., of a municipal corporation in this State, "which purports to have been printed by the authority of the corporation"); 1834, Taylor v. Bank, 5 Leigh 471, 476 (Federal statutes, "printed under the orders of Congress by the public printer," received).

WASHINGTON: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1259 ("Printed copies of the statute laws of any State, Territory, or foreign government, if purporting to have been published under the authority of the respective governments, or if commonly admitted and read as evidence in their courts," receivable); § 1260½ ("When the ordinances of any city or town are printed by authority of such municipal corporation, the printed copies thereof " are admissible).

WEST VIRGINIA: Code 1914, c. 130, § 2 (copies of legislative journals of this State, "printed by authority of the Legislature," admissible); c. 13, § 2 (laws of Virginia, provable by "printed copies"); § 3 (acts of the Legislature of this State, provable by printed copies "published by authority thereof"); § 4 (law of another State or country or of the U. S.; the judge may consult "any printed book purporting to contain" it).

WISCONSIN: Stats. 1919, § 4135 ("The printed copies of all statutes, acts, and resolves of this State, whether of a public or private nature, which shall be published under the authority of the State," admissible; journals of the Legislature kept by clerks and deposited with the Secretary of State, "including the printed journals of previous Legislatures there deposited," admissible; "and the printed journals of said Houses, respectively, published by authority of law," are admissible); § 4136 ("Printed copies" of the statutes of the United States or a U. S. State or Territory, "if purporting to be published under the authority of their respective governments, or if commonly admitted and read as evidence in their courts," admissible); § 4137 ("Copies of the ordinances by-laws, resolutions, and regulations of any city or village in this State, printed in any newspaper, book, pamphlet, or other form, and purporting to be published by authority of the proper common council or village board," admissible); 1900, Quint v. Merrill, 105 Wis. 406, 81 N. W. 664 (printed copy of a city charter insufficient on the facts); 1901, Hollister v. McCord, 111 Wis. 538, 87 N. W. 475 (Wenzell's edition of the Minnesota General Statutes 1894, admitted under § 4136).

WYOMING: Comp. St. 1920, § 5810 (like Oh. Gen. C. 1921, § 11498); § 1763 (town ordinances provable "when printed or published in book or pamphlet form and purporting to be published by authority of the town"); § 1827 (first class city ordinances provable in same manner as in § 1763); § 4569 (Wyoming Compiled Statutes 1920, when certified and proclaimed by State secretary, to be admissible).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPICS IX, X, XI, XII: SUNDRY EXCEPTIONS

CHAPTER LV.

TOPIC IX: LEARNED TREATISES

TOPIC X: COMMERCIAL AND PROFESSIONAL LISTS, REGISTERS, AND REPORTS

TOPIC XI: AFFIDAVITS

TOPIC XII: STATEMENTS BY A VOTER

TOPIC IX: LEARNED TREATISES

§ 1690. Scope and Policy of the Exception. This Exception is usually spoken of as involving the use of "scientific books" or "medical books" or "books of science and art"; but the term "learned treatises" seems more accurate in indicating the scope of the doctrine. As an exception to the Hearsay rule, it has obtained complete recognition in only one or two jurisdictions; but it deserves a fuller acceptance, and the precise bearings of the reasons for and against recognizing it deserve careful consideration.

(1) More than one reason has been advanced for prohibiting the use of learned treatises in evidence. The only forceful one, and the one generally pointed out and relied upon in judicial opinion, is that such an offer of evidence purports to employ testimonially a statement made out of court by a person not subjected to cross-examination; i. e. purports to violate the fundamental doctrine (ante, § 1362) of the Hearsay rule. That this is the main objection is indicated in the following passages: [1]

1831, MELLEN, C. J., in Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 56: "These books do not come into court, as all other evidence must, either by consent or under the sanction of an oath. Without such consent or oath, their contents are mere declarations and hearsay. . . . The benefit of cross-examination would be lost by allowing books of such a character to be evidence."

1853, SHAW, C. J., in Ashworth v. Kittredge, 12 Cush. 194: "The substantial objection is that they are statements wanting the sanction of an oath, and the statement thus proposed is made by one not present and not liable to cross-examination."

1854, BATTLE, J., in Melvin v. Easly, 1 Jones L. 388: "The reason of the rule is obvious, that if the authors were present they could not be examined without being sworn and exposed to cross-examination."

1856, BURNS, J., in Brown v. Sheppard, 13 U. C. Q. B. 179: "The opinions which are to be received, upon which the jury is to deduce a certain fact, must be so given as to be subject to examination and cross-examination before the court and jury. Now it is obvious, if books upon skill and science are to be made evidence of themselves, the protection a person has of showing by an examination of the person advancing an opinion that it is improperly arrived at is quite destroyed."

1886, JOHNSTON, J., in State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 17, 12 Pac. 318: "The great weight of authority is that they cannot be admitted . . . , this upon the theory that the authors did not write under oath, and that their grounds of belief and processes of reasoning cannot be tested by cross-examination."

Other reasons, however, which have occasionally been suggested, usually in connection with the preceding one, must be briefly noticed.

(2) We are told that Science is shifting; that experiment and discovery are continually altering scientific theories and rendering them valueless; so that "a medical book which was a standard last year becomes obsolete this year"; that there is no general agreement among scientists, and that testimony characterized by such instability and uncertainty is untrustworthy.[2] There is ignorant exaggeration in these charges, which attribute to the entire body of scientific knowledge the instability due to casual rapid progress in certain departments of the sciences, and ignore even in those departments the small proportion which the field of possible change bears to the large area of established truth. But, leaving this aside, we find that the objection is in itself inconsistent with accepted legal practices, and would if consistently applied exclude all testimony even on the stand from scientific witnesses. For if these works are rejected because they may not embody the latest results of science, what shall be said of specialist witnesses in general? Out of the hundreds of scientific experts who are this month testifying in courts of justice, how many are speaking from a thorough acquaintance with the latest researches in their subjects? For how many of them is it possible to maintain steady pace with the daily progress of science? How many are not testifying on information obtained at a medical or other technical school a decade or more ago, in the standard books of that day? It is true, where conflicting views are advanced and an expert cannot state his views to be founded on the most recent investigations, that his views are naturally entitled to inferior weight; but could it seriously occur to any one to exclude all experts from the stand, not because this or that one has in fact no acquaintance with the recent literature of his profession, but because many among the whole body may not possess such acquaintance? Yet after all, going back to the exaggeration involved, is the objection one of appreciable magnitude? "I will not sit here," once said Chief Justice Dallas, "and hear science reviled and the recorded researches of the medical world misrepresented as leading only to uncertainty." Is there in fact such a conflict of beliefs and theories as courts must take notice of, to the exclusion of these works? It is safe to say that for practical purposes, in legal controversy, the uncertain topics are the exception and not the rule. If we can imagine a proposition to exclude a given witness to an event because possibly some other person was present, who possibly would relate a different version, which possibly would be more correct, we shall have some analogy to the true force of this objection. In short, if witnesses had never contradicted each other and experts on the stand had never differed, it might be urged with some show of reason that writers of treatises are often not agreed. It is not to be wondered at under the circumstances that a guilty feeling of inconsistency sometimes arises, and, in the words of a learned editor of Professor Greenleaf's work,[3] "Courts manifest a consciousness of the want of principle upon which the rule excluding such testimony rests."

§ 1690. [1] Accord: 1882, People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 584; 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 17, 6 Pac. 869; 1882, People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 490, 12 N. W. 665; 1884, People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 76, 18 N. W. 562; 1867, Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 219; 1882, Tucker v. McDonald, 60 Miss. 470; 1862, State v. O'Brien, 7 R. I. 338; 1860, Fowler v. Lewis, 25 Tex. (Suppl.) 381.

[2] This suggestion is found in the following opinions: 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 16, 6 Pac. 869; 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 57; 1853, Ashworth v. Kittredge, 12 Cush. Mass. 195; 1882, People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 490, 12 N. W. 665; 1877, Huffman v. Click, 77 N. C. 57.

(3) Another objection sometimes raised is the danger of confusing the jury by technical passages without oral comment and simplification.[4] A number of answers to this will suggest themselves; it is enough to point out that, so far as it is an appreciable danger, the counsel may be trusted to protect themselves, where necessary, against this danger by calling also an expert to take the stand.

[3] Croswell's Greenleaf on Evidence, 15th ed., I. § 497, note 4.
[4] 1853, Ashworth v. Kittredge, 12 Cush. 195.

(4) Another objection, once made, is that the treatises may be used unfairly, by taking passages which are explained away or contradicted in other books or in other parts of the book.[5] Here, again, so far as the possibility is appreciable, the opposing counsel may be trusted to protect his client's interests, exactly as he does, by bringing to the stand one expert to oppose another, and with much less difficulty and expense.

All these objections, appearing in the beginning as the casual thoughts of individual judges in past and less liberal generations, were elevated to the rank of accepted reasons and given vogue in one or two treatises on Evidence,[6] and thence found their way into many judicial opinions of a later generation. But for this, it is probable that the true reason for the rule of exclusion would not have been obscured.

(5) There is also to be noticed, moreover, the original reason offered for exclusion by Chief Justice Tindal, in Collier v. Simpson,[7] the starting-point of the English decisions.[8] "Physic," he said, when asked by counsel why he could not read to the jury a medical book as well as a law book, "depends more upon practice than law does"; meaning apparently that though the principles of law are chiefly obtained from books, the truths of medicine are to be sought chiefly in the personal experience of physicians. It is almost needless to say that medical treatises cannot in these days be put on the shelf with the simple statement that medicine depends more on practice than the law does. The great storehouses of medical experience are the books and journals of the profession. "Medical evidence," it has been truly said,[9] "altogether is little else than a reference to authority." The argument of Chief Justice Tindal has not reappeared.

1. The Exception as Recognized

The grounds for recognizing the Exception, and its proper limitations if recognized, may be taken up in the light of the general considerations already mentioned for the other Hearsay Exceptions (ante, §§ 1421–1424).

§ 1691. General Principle: (1) Necessity. The necessity (ante, § 1421) seems palpable enough, if we examine carefully the results of the strict enforcement of the Hearsay rule. The ordinary expert witness, in perhaps the larger proportion of the topics upon which he may be questioned, has not a knowledge derived from personal observation. He virtually reproduces, literally or in substance, conclusions of others which he accepts on the

[5] 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 16, 6 Pac. 869.

[6] Particularly by Dr. Wharton, Evidence, § 665.

[7] 5 C. & P. 73.

[8] There seems to have been no general rule before this time; though we meet with such incidents as the tilt in Cowper's Trial between Baron Hatsell and Dr. Crell (quoted post, § 1697), and the refusal of Abbott, C. J., in the Donnell poisoning trial, to listen to citations from Thenard's works, on the ground that "we cannot take the fact from a publication as related by a stranger." But even in Cowper's Trial, medical works were allowed to be quoted: 1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1163 (Dr. Crell was allowed to cite Parey on Renunciations, an eminent surgeon's work, on the indicia of drowning).

[9] Edinburgh Med. & Surg. Journal, XIX, 480.

authority of the eminent names responsible for them. If, whenever this is discovered, we are to reject the evidence absolutely,[1] then on all such matters the only resource is to search for a qualified expert, who may or may not be available within the jurisdiction.[2] Even where such a person is legally procurable (all the chances being against it except in a few centres of population), the expense is frequently disproportionate. Costly litigation is the parasite of justice; and we pay too high a price when we refuse to accept our information from a competent source ready at hand. Moreover, there are certain matters upon which the conclusions of two or three leaders in the scientific world are always preëminently desirable; and it is highly unsatisfactory that, except in the region where they may happen to live, the opinions of world-famous investigators should have no standing of their own.[3] Whether such persons are legally unavailable, or whether it is merely a question of relative expense, the principle of necessity (ante, § 1421) is equally satisfied; and we should be permitted to avail ourselves of their testimony in the printed form in which it is most convenient.

The proper rule would be for the Court to allow the use of a printed treatise, approved and read aloud by a witness expert in that subject, unless in its discretion, considering all the circumstances, the author if available should be summoned.[4] In practice, the Courts which allow the use of learned treatises apparently do not impose any such condition.

§ 1692. Same: (2) Trustworthiness. Under the second general consideration for Hearsay exceptions (ante, § 1422), the question here is whether there are any circumstances attending the publication of a learned treatise which give a fair guarantee of trustworthiness. If we consider the circumstances that have been regarded as sufficient in the foregoing and the following Exceptions to the Hearsay rule, it must be concluded that the guarantee here is at least as satisfactory. (a) There is no need of assuming a higher degree of sincerity for learned writers as a class than for other persons; but we may at least say that in the usual instance their state of mind fulfils the ordinary requirement for the Hearsay exceptions, namely, that the declarant should have "no motive to misrepresent." They may have a bias in favor of § 1691. [1] 1875, R. v. Taylor, 13 Cox Cr. 77, 78, Brett, J. ("a mere statement by a medical man of hearsay facts of cases at which he was in all probability not present"); 1888, Soquet v. State, 72 Wis. 666, 40 N. W. 391; see the principle ante, § 687, as applied to medical witnesses on the stand.

[2] 1857, Stone, J., in Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 567: "If we lay down a rule which will exclude from the jury all evidence on questions of science and art, except to the extent that the witness has himself discovered or demonstrated the correctness of what he testifies to, we certainly restrict the inquiry to very narrow limits. . . . It is the boast of this age of advancing civilization that, aided and facilitated by the printer's art, the collected learning of past ages has been transmitted to us. Shall we withhold the benefits of this heritage from the contests of the court-room? We think not."

[3] This thought was given expression in judicial language by Foster, J., in Dole v. Johnson, 50 N. H. 456 (1870): "We may have little doubt that a page from Youatt or Morrell [in this case] would be a safer guide for the jury than the opinion of such a witness as Mr. W."

[4] An example of the good sense and utility of such a rule, if it could be adopted, may be seen in Bailey v. Kreutzmann, 141 Cal. 519, 75 Pac. 104 (1904).

a theory, but it is a bias in favor of the truth as they see it; it is not a bias in favor of a lawsuit or of an individual. Their statement is made with no view to a litigation or to the interests of a litigable affair. When an expert employed by an electric company using the alternating or the single current writes an essay to show that the alternating current is or is not more dangerous to human life than a single current, the probability of his bias is plain; but this is the exceptional case, and such an essay could be excluded, just as any Hearsay statement would be if such a powerful counter-motive were shown to exist. (b) The writer of a learned treatise publishes primarily for his profession. He knows that every conclusion will be subjected to careful professional criticism, and is open ultimately to certain refutation if not well-founded; that his reputation depends on the correctness of his data and the validity of his conclusions; and that he might better not have written than put forth statements in which may be detected a lack of sincerity of method and of accuracy of results. The motive, in other words, is precisely the same in character and is more certain in its influence than that which is accepted as sufficient in some of the other Hearsay exceptions, namely, the unwelcome probability of a detection and exposure of errors (ante, § 1422). (c) Finally, the guarantees of accuracy, such as they are, at least are greater than those which accompany the testimony of so many expert witnesses on the stand. The abuses of expert testimony, arising from the fact that such witnesses are too often in effect paid to take a partisan view and are practically untrustworthy, are too well-known to repeat (ante, § 563). It must be admitted that those who write with no view to litigation are at least as trustworthy, though unsworn and unexamined, as perhaps the greater portion of those who take the stand for a fee from one of the litigants.[1]

It may be concluded, then, that there is in these cases a sufficient circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness. The Court in each instance should in its discretion exclude writings which for one reason or another do not seem to be sufficiently worthy of trust.

§ 1693. Jurisdictions in which the Exception is Recognized. (1) On the foregoing grounds, the Exception has received recognition in at least two jurisdictions as a deduction from common-law principles.[1] Furthermore, § 1692. [1] Mr. Nathaniel Moak has emphasized this (1881; 24 Albany Law Journal 268).

§ 1693. [1] Iowa: 1848, Bowman v. Woods, 1 G. Greene 445; Alabama: 1857, Stoudenmeier v. Wilson, 29 Ala. 567; 1861, Merkle v. State, 37 Ala. 41; 1879, Bales v. State, 63 Ala. 38; the latest case vacillates; 1901, Timothy v. State, 130 Ala. 68, 30 So. 339 (medical-jurisprudence book, not admitted to prove experiments as to powder marks); 1906, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Moore, 148 Ala. 115, 42 So. 1024 (two books on surgery, admitted on a question concerning appendicitis).

In Wisconsin, the exception seemed once to be established; 1849, Luning v. State, 1 Chand. 185; 1872, Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 619 (admitted "as evidence, but only as having that force and authority which the opinion of learned and scientific men may give"). But by later decisions (post, § 1696) the Exception was overthrown. In Luning v. State, 2 Pinn. 286 (1849; second trial), a medical witness' answer was excluded because it appeared that it would have been based on reading and hearsay, not on personal knowledge; there was no ruling, as has sometimes been thought, excluding medical books.

in several jurisdictions (including one of the above two) a statute has established an Exception of similar import.[2] But, unfortunately, the legislators, in the original enactment of Iowa (copied in California and elsewhere), used language partially appropriate to the Exception for Reputation on Matters of General Interest (ante, §§ 1586, 1598, 1599); and by judicial construction, in some of these States, the legislative intent to establish an Exception of the present tenor has been defeated; so that the use of learned treatises in those jurisdictions is now allowable no further than as recognized at common law under the General Interest (Reputation) Exception (ante, § 1598) or under the partial concessions of the common law later to be noted (post, §§ 1697–1700).[3]

In the Federal Courts, a disposition to recognize it has been shown; 1897, Western Assur. Co. v. Mohlman Co., 28 C. C. A. 157, 83 Fed. 811 (Lacombe, J., allowing a civil engineer, called as an expert in construction, to read excerpts from scientific books in his testimony; "The rule [of exclusion] is not of universal application. It would be a reproach to the administration of the law if it were so. Records of observations are undoubtedly secondary evidence, but, if all such records were excluded from the sources of knowledge available to a court of justice, it would frequently find itself unable to obtain information which was open to every individual in the community. It has been held repeatedly that standard life and annuity tables, showing at any age the probable duration of life, are competent evidence. . . . Under the rule contended for, that valuable information would be available for the use of a court of justice so long as the men who made the tests and prepared the tabulations were living and producible, but after their death or disappearance the information they had gathered would be lost to the court, although available for every one else in the community, and relied upon by engineers and builders whenever a new structure is in process of erection. Upon the precise point here presented the diligence of counsel has not succeeded in discovering a single authority. We feel, therefore, no hesitancy in so modifying the general rule as to hold that, where the scientific work containing them is concededly recognized as a standard authority by the profession, statistics of mechanical experiments and tabulations of the results thereof may be read in evidence by an expert witness in support of his professional opinion, when such statistics and tabulations are generally relied upon by experts in the particular field of the mechanic arts with which such statistics and tabulations are concerned").

In modern English practice there appears no disposition to enforce the Hearsay rule pedantically as in the United States; a virtual exception is allowed; examples may be seen in Crippen's Trial, 1910, presided over by the Lord Chief Justice of England (ed. Filson Young, Notable English Trials Series, 1920, pp. 71, 143, 152).

[2] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, as amended 1874, § 1944, now § 1936 ("Historical works, books of science or art, and published maps or charts, when made by persons indifferent between the parties, are 'prima facie' evidence of facts of general notoriety and interest"); the following statutes are identical with this: Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7961; Ia. Code 1897, § 4618, Rev. Code, § 7325; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10575; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8852; Or. Laws 1920, § 781; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 320 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1451 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7107. The following statute is more limited: S. Car. C. C. P. 1922, § 720 (where a question of sanity or the administration of poison or other article destructive to life is involved and expert testimony is admissible, "the medical or scientific works" shall be admissible "in addition to such expert testimony").

[3] California: 1822, People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 582 (Code § 1944 applies to matters of general interest only, and does not admit scientific books as such); 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 16, 6 Pac. 869 (similar); 1888, People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 348, 19 Pac. 170; 1891, Lilley v. Parkinson, 91 Cal. 655, 27 Pac. 1091; 1904, Bailey v. Kreutzmann, 141 Cal. 519, 75 Pac. 104; Iowa: the decisions applied the statute as intended, for more than a generation: 1872, Brodhead v. Wiltse, 35 Ia. 429; 1878, Crawford v. Williams, 48 Ia. 249; 1887, Quackenbush v. R. Co., 73 Ia. 458, 461, 35 N. W. 523, semble; 1888, Worden v. R. Co., 76 Ia. 310, 314, 41 N. W. 26; 1893, Peck v. Hutchinson, 88 Ia. 320, 325 (Wells' Treatise on the Eye, admitted); then the California heresy was adopted: 1894, Burg v. R. Co., 90 Ia. 106, 114, 57 N. W. 680 (American Mechanical Dictionary, not admitted on the facts; Railway Age, not admitted to show tests of brakes); 1897, Union R. P. Co. v. Yates, 25 C. C. A. 103, 79 Fed. 584 (Iowa Code held to apply strictly to matters of

(2) A partial recognition of the principle of the Exception, at common law, is found in the admission in all jurisdictions of a few specific kinds of treatises or tables (noted post, §§ 1697–1700).

§ 1694. Testimonial Qualifications; Production of Original. (1) The treatise-writer must, like every other witness, be shown beforehand to be properly qualified to make statements upon the subject in hand.[1] This will require, as in other Hearsay exceptions (ante, § 1424), another witness who will testify to these qualifications, — which means here the summoning of any one in the profession, art, or trade of the writer and ascertaining from him the writer's standing as an authority. This removes the danger of an ignorant use of statements by writers of no standing; but it is merely the application of the general principle as to testimonial qualifications. It is done even in those jurisdictions (post, § 1637) where the Exception is recognized only in a fragmentary form.[2] Practically, also, it guards against the supposed danger, already adverted to, of allowing the jury to be confused by book-passages offered without explanation; for the expert who indorses the book can also be used to make explanations where desirable. It also forbids, of necessity, the loose and unsafe practice (post, § 1700), followed in some jurisdictions, of permitting counsel to read indiscriminately to the jury, as a part of his argument, extracts from scientific treatises, and furnishes the real reason why this is to be condemned.

(2) The rule of production of the book itself (ante, § 1179) also applies, where it is desired to employ a specific book; but this does not forbid asking the witness a general question as to the opinion of the profession.[3]

"general notoriety or interest"; a medical book treating of nervous shock, excluded); 1898, Bixby v. Bridge Co., 105 Ia. 293, 75 N. W. 182 (declining to allow the use of medical treatises; limiting the Code words "books of science" by the later clause "facts of general notoriety and interest"; distinguishing Bowman v. Woods, and repudiating the later cases; approving Gallagher v. R. Co., Cal.); 1900, Stewart v. Equit. M. L. Ass'n, 110 Ia. 528, 81 N. W. 782 (preceding case followed); 1900 State v. Petersen, 110 Ia. 647, 82 N. W. 329 (same); 1906, State v. Wilhite, 132 Ia. 226, 109 N. W. 730 (a standard medical dictionary is admissible for definitions, as distinguished from "the symptoms and cure of disease"); 1909, Bruggeman v. Illinois C. R. Co., 147 Ia. 187, 123 N. W. 1007 (books on air brakes, to show the time required for stopping, excluded); Nebraska: The same history here ensued: 1884, Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Finlayson, 16 Nebr. 587, 20 N. W. 860 (Forney's "Catechism of a Locomotive," admitted); 1897, Van Skike v. Potter, 53 Nebr. 28, 73 N. W. 295 ("books of science or art" does not admit books of surgery, save under the exception of "general interest"); South Carolina: 1915, U. S. v. Perkins, D. C. E. D. S. C., 221 Fed. 109 (S. C. Code 1912, § 4007, permitting medical books to be read, held not available in a Federal Court).

§ 1694. [1] 1857, Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 567 (Stone, J.: "books admitted or proven to be standard works with that profession"). Accord: 1861, Merkle v. State, 37 Ala. 141; 1878, Crawford v. Williams, 48 Ia. 249 (proof required that a herd-book was recognized by cattle-breeders as correct).

[2] 1873, Rowley v. R. Co., L. R. 8 Ex. 227; 1845, Spalding v. Hedges, 2 Pa. St. 243 (gazetteer); 1886, Railroad Co. v. Ayres, 84 Tenn. 729 (mortality tables).

In the use of legal treatises and statute-books to prove foreign law a requirement that the book shall appear to be commonly accepted in the foreign jurisdiction as evidence of the law is usually made (post, § 1697).

[3] The principle was applied improperly in State v. Winter, 1887, 72 Ia. 627, 632, 34 N. W. 475, where the witness was not allowed to state the general consensus of medical authors. In Brodhead v. Wiltse, 1872, 35 Ia. 430, it was said that a physician might testify to the contents of a scientific book without producing it.

2. The Exception nominally Rejected, though in part Recognized

§ 1696. Jurisdictions rejecting a General Exception. The Exception, as already noted, is explicitly accepted in one or two jurisdictions only. In the others, the Exception, so far as it has been ruled upon, has been repudiated in general terms.[1] But even in these jurisdictions there are several forms in which it has been recognized partially; that is, a consistent application of principle would have resulted in the exclusion of certain things that are in fact received; and their reception is an implied recognition of the principle of the Exception in those classes of cases. These may now be examined.

§ 1697. Partial Recognition; (1) Legal Treatises. (a) The statements of domestic law made by writers of legal treatises have always been consulted as sources of information. In theory, to be sure, the real nature of the process has been blinked at. As the judges are supposed to know the law, the doctrines of judicial notice (post, § 2572) and of refreshing the judicial memory (post, § 2569) have served to obscure the real effect of a practice which one would hardly think of disputing.[1] The constant references, particularly in more recent times, to the statements of treatises and compilations of more or less authority indicate the inveteracy of the practice. The readiness with which the judges rely upon anonymous legal authors' statements, but reject

§ 1696. [1] Besides the cases cited ante, §§ 1690 and 1693, the following rulings repudiate it:

ENGLAND: 1844, R. v. Crouch, 1 Cox Cr. 94, Alderson, B.; 1856, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. S, 12 (rejecting histories reciting the excommunication by Popes of heretical Sovereigns and other books of ecclesiastical affairs); 1874, R. v. Taylor, 13 Cox Cr. 78, Brett, J.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1897, Davis v. U. S., 165 U. S. 373, 17 Sup. 360 ("what does medical science teach as to that?" excluded, at least in the trial Court's discretion); 1897, Union P. R. Co. v. Yates, 25 C. C. A. 103, 79 Fed. 584; Colo. 1912, Denver City T. Co. v. Gawley, 23 Colo. App. 332, 129 Pac. 258; Ga. 1895, Johnston v. R. Co., 95 Ga. 685, 687, 22 S. E. 694; Ill. 1883, North Chicago R. M. Co. v. Monka, 107 Ill. 341; 1884, Bloomington v. Schrock, 110 Ill. 221; Ind. 1885, Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 550, 1 N. E. 491; Me. 1848, Coolidge's Trial (Waterville), Me., Boston Daily Times' Rep. 32 (medical books not allowed to be read, "on the ground that the authors of those works were not under oath when they were written"; by Whitman, C. J., and Shipley and Wells, JJ.); Mass. 1873, Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 139; 1876, Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 81; 1889, Com. v. Marzynski, 149 Mass. 72, 21 N. E. 228; Mich. 1888, People v. Vanderhoof, 71 Mich. 179, 39 N. W. 28; N. H. 1870, Dole v. Johnson, 50 N. H. 456; N. J. 1896, New Jersey Z. & I. Co. v. L. Z. & I. Co., 39 N. J. L. 189, 35 Atl. 915; 1921, Lamble v. State, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 346 (quoting encyclopedia as to probability of identical finger-prints from different persons, held improper); S. Dak. 1897, State v. Sexton, 10 S. D. 127, 72 N. W. 84; 1901, Brady v. Shirley, 14 S. D. 447, 85 N. W. 1002 (works on veterinary surgery, excluded); Vt. 1917, Baldwin v. Gaines, 92 Vt. 61, 102 Atl. 338 (surgical books); Wis. 1882, Stilling v. Thorp, 54 Wis. 534, 11 N. W. 906; 1888, Kreuziger v. R. Co., 73 Wis. 160, 40 N. W. 657.

§ 1697. [1] It was disputed, but immediate rebuke was given, by Lowell, J., in The Pawashick, 1872, 2 Low. 148 ("I believe it to be the true doctrine that the unwritten law of England may be proved in this court, not by experts only, but by text-writers of authority and by printed reports of adjudged cases; and written law may be proved by the printed copies and be construed with the aid of text-books as well as of experts. . . . Evidence is competent which consists only of books of acknowledged or ascertained authority. . . . The proposition that Abbott on Shipping and the regular reports of decisions of the courts and the various books cited as authority for the law in England cannot be read for this purpose here appears to me little less than absurd").

Whether counsel may read legal treatises in argument to the jury is a question of the propriety of interfering with the proper functions of the Court, and of the duty of the jury to accept the Court's statement of the law, and does not concern the present question; see State v. Fitzgerald, 130 Mo. 407, 32 S. W. 1113.

the most distinguished authors in natural science, is of course an inconsistency which baffles the layman and brings on the law the sneers of the representatives of other sciences when called to the witness stand.

(b) But when it has come to the use of treatises by writers upon foreign law, these subterfuges fail, and the judicial conscience has been obliged to acknowledge the true nature of the process as involving the reception of evidence. The propriety of accepting such evidence, after it is shown by testimony on the stand that the authors of the treatises are recognized in the foreign jurisdiction as competent authorities, has been frequently justified in judicial opinion:

1806, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 492: "The text-writers furnish us with their statement of the [foreign] law, and that would certainly be good evidence upon the same principle which renders histories admissible. . . . I shall therefore receive any book that purports to be a history of the common law of Spain."

1811, Sir William Scott (Lord STOWELL), in Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. Cons. 81: "The authorities to which I shall have occasion to refer [for the law of Scotland] are of three classes: first, the opinions of learned professors given in the present or similar cases; secondly, the opinions of eminent writers as delivered in books of great legal credit and weight; and, thirdly, the certified tribunals of Scotland upon these subjects. I need not say that the last class stands highest in point of authority."

1844, Lord DENMAN, in the Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 113: "We have both the materials of knowledge offered to us. We have the witness, and he states the law, which he says is correctly laid down in these books. The books are produced, but the witness describes them as authoritative. . . . Proof of the law itself, in a case of foreign law, could not be taken from the book of the law, but from the witness who described the law. If the witness says: 'I know the law, and this book truly states the law,' then you have the authority of the witness and of the book."

Accordingly, the propriety of receiving treatises thus shown competent may be said to be established.[2]

It is true that in some opinions this requirement of presentation through

[2] ENGLAND: 1806, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 483, 492, 511; 1822, Lacon v. Higgins, 3 Stark. 178, Dowl. & R. N. P. 42, Abbott, C. J., semble; 1836, Breadalbane v. Chandos, 2 Myl. & Cr. 727, 741; 1844, Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 254, Lord Denman, C. J.; 1845, Nelson v. Bridport, 8 Beav. 529, Lord Langdale, M. R. (Sicilian and Roman compilations of codes and statutes and Sicilian law-treatises, certified as in use among the profession in Sicily); 1857, Bremer v. Freeman, 10 Moore P. C. 306, 363.

CANADA: 1884, Rice v. Gunn, 4 Ont. 589.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1895, Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. 139, 162 (the Court, mentioning treatises on foreign law, refers to their works "for evidence of authoritative declarations, legislative or judicial, of what the law is"); 1899, The Paquete Habana, 175 U. S. 677, 20 Sup. 290 (whether by international law coasting fishing-vessels were exempt from capture as prize; "the works of jurists and commentators who by years of labor, research, and experience have made themselves peculiarly well acquainted with the subjects of which they treat," admissible, "not for the speculations of their authors concerning what the law ought to be, but for trustworthy evidence of what the law really is"; then consulting Ortolan, Calvo, and others); Iowa: 1903, Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' M. C. Co., — Ia. —, 95 N. W. 232 (Boucier's Law Dictionary, admitted as evidence of the age of majority by the law of Mexico); 1904, Banco de Sonora v. Bankers' M. C. Co., 124 Ia. 576, 100 N. W. 532 (similar to the prior ruling in this case); New York: 1836, Devenbagh v. Devenbagh, 5 Paige Ch. 554, 556, Walworth, C.

Contra: 1844, Alderson, B., in R. v. Crouch, 1 Cox Cr. 94; 1846, Perth Peerage Case, 2 H. L. C. 874.

an expert on the stand is taken as signifying that the foreign writer's statements merely become a part of the former's testimony, and the theory is kept up that the foreign writer is as such not accepted.[3] Yet in effect the book is taken, and the rule merely requires (and very properly) that the qualifications of the writer (ante, § 1694) shall first be shown in the ordinary way. But the fiction may well be abandoned. The daily use by judges of the foreign law-books in our libraries exposes its untruth. Goldsmith's Chinese traveller would smile to see the judge refuse to listen to a foreign treatise while on the bench and then retire to his chambers and take down the same book from the shelves to refresh his judicial memory. Certainly, the practice which allows the use of legal treatises, even domestic only, confesses the principle which admits learned treatises generally:

1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1163. Dr. Crell: "Now, my lord, I will give you the opinion of several ancient authors." Baron HATSELL: "Pray, doctor, tell us your own observations." Dr. Crell: "My lord, it must be reading, as well as a man's own experience, that will make any one a physician, for without the reading of books of that art, the art itself cannot be attained to. Besides, my lord, I conceive that in such a difficult case as this we ought to have a great deference for the reports and opinions of learned men. Neither do I see why I should not quote the fathers of my profession in this case as well as you gentlemen of the long robe quote Coke upon Littleton in others."

1857, STONE, J., in Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 567: "We think that medical authors whose books are admitted or proved to be standard works with that profession ought to be received in evidence. . . . Are opinions derived from the perusal of books, and deposed to by witnesses, safer guides for the jury than the books themselves are? . . . We prove the existence of our law and its principles by reported cases and elementary writers. . . . Can that be a sound rule which in the determination of a question involved in one science allows to the trying body the light shed upon it by the writings of its standard authors and withholds such lights from controversies respecting all other sciences? We think not."

(c) The use of printed books of foreign statutes or decisions commonly accepted in the foreign jurisdiction as evidence of the statutes is referable not to the present principle, but to another (post, § 1703), because they are not learned treatises but merely copies of decisions or statutes. These are also and usually admitted under the principle of Official Statements (ante, § 1684) as being copies authorized by law to be made and given out.[4]

§ 1698. Same: (2) Life Tables, Almanacs, Sundry Scientific Tables. It has long been unquestioned that standard tables of mortality[1] (used in com-

[3] Lord Campbell, in Sussex Peerage Case, supra ("You ask the witness what the law is. He may from his recollection, or on producing and referring to books, say what it is, or that it is found correctly stated in such a book").

[4] The question whether a legal expert witness may testify to the terms of a foreign statute without producing a copy of it involves the rule of Preference for a Copy over Recollection-testimony, and has been already dealt with (ante, § 1271). The question whether a particular witness has sufficient knowledge and experience to testify to foreign unwritten law has been examined under the head of Testimonial Qualifications (ante, §§ 564, 690).

§ 1698. [1] ENGLAND: 1873, Rowley v. R. Co., L. R. 8 Exch. 226.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1886, Vicksburg R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 554, 7 Sup. 1; 1921, United Verde Ext. M. Co. v. Koso, 9th C. C. A., 273 Fed. 369 (mortality tables admitted, even where plaintiff's occupation was puting annuities, life-insurance sums, dower, and damages for the loss of life), and almanacs [2] are admissible in evidence. It is doubtful whether a general extra-hazardous); 1921, Phelps Dodge Co. v. Guerrero, 9th C. C. A., 273 Fed. 415; Alabama: 1893, Birmingham M. R. Co. v. Wilmer, 97 Ala. 165, 170, 11 So. 886 (American tables); Arkansas: 1897, Arkansas M. R. Co. v. Griffith, 63 Ark. 491, 39 S. W. 550; California: 1893, Townsend v. Briggs, 99 Cal. 481, 484, 34 Pac. 116 (standard tables); 1902, Keast v. Santa Ysabel G. M. Co., 136 Cal. 256, 68 Pac. 771 ("McCarty's Statistician and Economist," containing Farr's table, admitted; "the Court may or may not require such preliminary proof" of standard acceptance, according to its judgment of the need therefor); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6536 (mortuary table given in the statute, made admissible); Georgia: 1879, Central R. Co. v. Richards, 62 Ga. 307; 1892, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Garner, 91 Ga. 27, 16 S. E. 110 (mortality and annuity tables); 1894, Columbus v. Sims, 94 Ga. 483, 20 S. E. 332; 1896, Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Moore, 99 Ga. 229, 25 S. E. 460 (admissible, but here improperly used); 1902, Western & A. R. Co. v. Cox, 115 Ga. 715, 42 S. E. 74 (Carlisle tables are admissible without prior testimony to their recognition as standard tables); Illinois: 1895, Joliet v. Blower, 155 Ill. 414, 40 N. E. 619; 1907, Calvert v. Springfield Electric L. & P. Co., 231 Ill. 290, 83 N. E. 185 (Wigglesworth Tables); 1909, Winn v. Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co., 239 Ill. 132, 87 N. E. 954 (Wigglesworth Tables admitted); 1911, Marshall v. Marshall, 252 Ill. 568, N. E. 907 (Carlisle and other tables); Indiana: 1906, Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lightheiser, 168 Ind. 438, 78 N. E. 1033 (Carlisle Tables admitted); Iowa: 1865, Donaldson v. R. Co., 18 Ia. 291; 1868, McDonald v. R. Co., 26 Ia. 140; 1883, Coates v. R. Co., 62 Ia. 491, 17 N. W. 760; 1888, Worden v. R. Co., 76 Ia. 314, 41 N. W. 26; 1889, Gorman v. R. Co., 78 Ia. 509, 43 N. W. 303 (tables in a cyclopedia, admitted); 1891, Seagel v. R. Co., 83 Ia. 380, 49 N. W. 990 (same); 1897, Krueger v. Sylvester, 100 Ia. 647, 69 N. W. 1059; 1902, Pearl v. R. Co., 115 Ia. 535, 88 N. W. 1078 (tables "generally accepted as standard authority," receivable); 1904, Knott v. Peterson, 125 Ia. 404, 101 N. W. 173; 1907, Clark v. Van Vleck, 135 Ia. 194, 112 N. W. 648 (tables published in the Code Supplement of 1902, admitted); 1909, Peterson v. Brackey, 143 Ia. 75, 119 N. W. 967; 1913, Scott v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 160 Ia. 306, 141 N. W. 1065; Kansas: 1901, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ryan, 62 Kan. 682, 64 Pac. 603; Kentucky: 1879, Lancaster v. Lancaster's Trustees, 78 Ky. 200 (dower tables); 1897, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly, 100 Ky. 421, 38 S. W. 852; 1905, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hauchins, 121 Ky. 526, 89 S. W. 530 (American Mortality Table, admitted); 1920, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott's Adm'r, 188 Ky. 99, 220 S. W. 1066 (admissible even where the party is physically not normal); Massachusetts: 1907, Banks v. Braman, 195 Mass. 97, 80 N. E. 799 (a certain insurance table, not shown to be standard or recognized, not admitted); Michigan: 1895, Nelson v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 582, 62 N. W. 993, semble; Missouri: 1892, O'Mellia v. R. Co., 115 Mo. 205, 222; Montana: 1907, Stephens v. Elliott, 36 Mont. 92, 92 Pac. 45; Nebraska: 1894, Friend v. Ingersoll, 39 Nebr. 717, 724, 58 N. W. 281 (Carlisle tables); 1905, Horst v. Lewis, 71 Nebr. 365, 103 N. W. 460; New Jersey: 1898, Camden & A. R. Co. v. Williams, 61 N. J. L. 646, 40 Atl. 634 (Carlisle or other approved table admissible, when properly authenticated); New York: 1874, Schell v. Plumb, 55 N. Y. 598; 1876, Sauter v. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 54; 1879, People v. Life Ins. Co., 78 N. Y. 128; North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1230 (specific mortuary table adopted by statute and made admissible); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7922 (Carlisle tables of mortality, admissible to prove duration of life); Pennsylvania: 1892, Steinbrunner v. R. Co., 146 Pa. 504, 515, 23 Atl. 239 (Carlisle tables); 1896, Campbell v. York, 172 Pa. 205, 33 Atl. 879; 1901, McKenna v. Gas Co., 198 Pa. 31, 47 Atl. 990 (testimony from a table based on unspecified conditions, excluded); Rhode Island: 1904, Reynolds v. Narragansett E. L. Co., 26 R. I. 457, 59 Atl. 393 (standard annuity tables, admitted); South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 727 (mortuary table adopted by law and made admissible); 1905, Hyland v. Southern B. T. & T. Co., 70 S. C. 315, 49 S. E. 879 (statute applied); Tennessee: 1886, Railroad Co. v. Ayres, 84 Tenn. 729; Vermont: 1849, Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 107; Washington: 1912, Richardson v. Spokane, 67 Wash. 621, 122 Pac. 330; Wisconsin: 1887, McKeigne v. Janesville, 68 Wis. 58, 31 N. W. 298; 1899, Crouse v. R. Co., 102 Wis. 196, 78 N. W. 446.

Distinguish the exclusion of such tables on grounds of substantive law, — as where the expectation of life is immaterial on the issues, or where a contract of insurance has embodied a specific reckoning; the following cases illustrate this: 1880, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bratt, 55 Md. 200, 212; 1899, Kerrigan v. R. Co., 194 Pa. 98, 44 Atl. 1069; 1882, Berg v. R. Co., 50 Wis. 427, 7 N. W. 347; 1886, Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 37, 29 N. W. 565.

[2] Eng. 1703, R. v. Dyer, 6 Mod. 41; Brough v. Perkins, 6 Mod. 81; 1739, Theory of Evidence, c. II, pl. 104 ("The almanack is a sufficient evidence to prove a day Sunday"); 1860, Tutton v. Darke, 5 H. & N. 649, per Pollock, C. B.; the history of the English rule in favor of standard tables of scientific calculations of all sorts can be regarded as established; but rulings tending in that direction are found.[3]

These almanacs and mortality tables have been explained to be admissible because they are founded on "certain and constant data" and deal with the "exact sciences." [4] But the notion that every collection of figures savors of the exact sciences is sufficiently discredited at the present day. In fact, these particular tables are among the least trustworthy of scientific efforts. The first mortality table appeared about 1690,[5] and was crude in comparison with those of to-day. The errors in tables even of the 1800s have been numerous and radical.[6] The simple fact is that the admission of a certain class of statistics was demanded by custom and practical convenience, and the judicial mind relented. Thus, a system of mere probabilities and working averages is not found wanting in qualities entitling it to be placed before the jury; yet the substance of other collections of data, possessing at least equal inductive value, made with equal or greater thoroughness, sifted, arranged, and stated by trained observers, is by the same discriminating authority relegated to the limbo of hearsay and other judicial abominations. The error has lain, not in looking too leniently upon mortality tables, but in a misconception of the true qualities of other scientific work.

§ 1699. Same: (3) Dictionaries, Histories, and General Literature. Within narrow but undefined limits the use is allowable of dictionaries and works of general literature, to evidence literary usage and definitions, and of historical works, to prove facts of general history:

1856, POLLOCK, C. B., in Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1, 8: "Standard authors may be referred to for such a purpose [to show the literary significance of parodies] or as showing the opinions of eminent men on particular subjects, but not to prove facts. . . . In this usage is fully examined in Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 292.

U. S. 1857, Allman v. Owen, 31 Ala. 141 1882, People v. Chee Kee, 61 Cal. 404; 1879, State v. Morris, 47 Conn. 180; Ga. Code 1910, § 5755 (Stern's U. S. Calendar and Stafford's Office Calendar, admissible to prove dates); Acts 1897, p. 87, Van Epps' Suppl. § 6641 (Stafford's Office Calendar, to be "legal evidence, covering all dates between the years 1490 and 2000, both old and new style"); 1880, Munshower v. State, 55 Md. 24; 1887, Case v. Perew, 46 Hun N. Y. 62; 1889, Wilson v. Van Leer, 127 Pa. 378, 17 Atl. 1097.

Distinguish the judicial notice of a date, etc., (post, § 2582).

[3] 1897, Western Assur. Co. v. Mohlmann Co., 28 C. C. A. 157, 83 Fed. 811 (engineering tables; quoted ante, § 1693); 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 16, 6 Pac. 869, semble (tables of weights, currency, interest, etc., admissible); 1896, Hatcher v. Dunn, — Ia. —, 66 N. W. 905 (not put upon this ground; a thermometer used in gauging oils, admitted); 1867, Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 219 ("bank-note detectors," excluded); 1911, Lynes v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 43 Mont. 317, 117 Pac. 81 (mathematical tables showing the respective distances at which trains could be stopped by air-brakes, held admissible); 1887, Garwood v. R. Co., 45 Hun N. Y. 129 (millwrights' tables, admissible); 1901, Cherry Point Fish Co. v. Nelson, 25 Wash. 558, 66 Pac. 55 (U. S. government tide-tables, prepared for Puget Sound, admitted).

For commercial tables, price-lists, horse-pedigrees, etc., see post, §§ 1704, 1706.

For official tables of interest, etc., see ante, § 1672.

For scientific instruments used by witnesses, see ante, § 665.

[4] Wharton, Evidence, § 667.

[5] 3 Bland's Ch. 227; Scratchley, Life Assurance, 2.

[6] Scratchley, id., 3–6; Blayney, Life Assurance, 96, 98. See a notable one described in Porter's Progress of the Nation (English annuities), and others in Jevons' Philosophy of Science, I, 244.

case the defendant's counsel proposed to read certain specific [church] canons, not as matters of speculative opinion, . . . but as matters of fact."

(a) As to dictionaries and the like, a counsel's citation of passages to indicate word-usage will sometimes not involve a hearsay question, i. e. the passage is not taken for its assertive value; the usage of authors is itself the fact in issue (post, § 1770).[1] But there may well be a hearsay question, for example, if Dr. Johnson were quoted as stating the incorrectness of an etymology or the meaning of a word in his time. It cannot be said what limits Courts would draw in such cases; but it is certain that they resort freely to dictionaries for definitions of the meaning of words, even where the scope of that meaning is one of the disputed issues of the case, and clearly they thus take testimony from the learned compilers of these treatises.[2]

(b) As to historical and encyclopedic works, most questions are disposed of usually from the point of view of Judicial Notice (post, § 2565), i. e. the Court will or will not dispense with evidence of certain notorious facts; while the Exception in favor of Ancient Reputation on Matters of General

§ 1699. [1] The following instance illustrates the difficulty of drawing the line: 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Official Report, III, 993 (Mr. Beach quoted from Newman and others, in arguing for the plaintiff that a sincere belief in the righteousness of a lie on some occasions is a possible thing in professors of religion).

The most remarkable and entertaining instance of reference to scientific and general literature as evidencing the meaning of words is the case of Maurice v. Judd, N. Y. City, 1818, 3 Amer. St. Tr. 603, 613. This was an action by an official gauger for a penalty imposed under N. Y. St. Mar. 31, 1818, for dealing in "fish oil" not inspected; the defendant's oil was whale oil, and the question was whether "fish" included whales. The defendant called Dr. Samuel Mitchill, the leading American scientist of the day, a professor in Columbia College, and founder of the Lyceum of Natural History, a man of prodigious learning in the field of natural science (see E. F. Smith's "Samuel Latham Mitchill, a Father in American Chemistry," N. Y., Columbia Univ., 1922). A mighty contest of argument then ensued between Dr. Mitchill on the stand and counsel for the complainant, Mr. Sampson, in which the world's literature was ransacked, beginning with the Book of Genesis and ranging through Pliny, Newton, Linnaeus, Cuvier, Lamarck, and less known authors; such a debate, no doubt, was never listened to in a court-room before or since, and must have been both astounding and amusing.

For quotations by counsel to show literary usage, see post, § 1807. For quotation of other people's utterances to show moral or political standards of action, see ante, § 461.

[2] The following cases will suffice to illustrate the practice: ENGLAND: 1789, Answer of the Judges to the House of Lords, 22 How. St. Tr. 302 ("Judges can collect the intrinsic sense and meaning of a paper in the same manner as other readers do; and they can resort to grammars and glossaries, if they want such assistance").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1893, Nix v. Hedden, 149 U. S. 304, 13 Sup. 881 (dictionaries resorted to for defining "fruit" and "vegetables"); 1893, Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Robison, 19 U. S. App. 266, 272, 7 C. C. A. 444, 58 Fed. 723 (to determine what "spitting of blood" was, Quain's Dictionary of Medicine and the Century Dictionary were cited); 1898, Koechl v. U. S., 28 C. C. A. 458, 84 Fed. 448 (dictionaries used to define "vaccine"); 1913, Merriam Co. v. Syndicate Pub. Co., 2d C. C. A., 207 Fed. 515 (a dictionary — author's prefatory recital of the sources used by him, admitted; sensible opinion by Hand, D. J., approved in the C. C. A.); Alabama: 1892, Dantzler v. D. C. & I. Co., 101 Ala. 309, 314, 14 So. 10 (various dictionaries quoted); 1896, Cook v. State, 110 Ala. 40, 20 So. 360 (definitions taken from Webster's International Dictionary and Century Dictionary); California: 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 16, 6 Pac. 869 (meaning of words and allusions in ordinary dictionaries and authenticated books of general literary history, allowable); Connecticut: 1897, State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123 37 Atl. 80 (definitions taken from Century Dictionary and Webster's International Dictionary); Illinois: 1895, Parker v. Orr, 158 Ill. 609, 41 N. E. 1003 (Webster's Dictionary, for a definition); Virginia: 1897, Kimball v. Carter, 95 Va. 77, 27 S. E. 823 (Webster and Worcester referred to).

Interest (ante, §§ 1586, 1598) will admit many treatises. Apart from these two principles, it is doubtful where there is any general exception in favor of works of history.[3]

§ 1700. Same: (4) Sundry Instances; Quotation of Books by an Expert; Counsel's Use in Cross-Examination or in Contradiction; Counsel Reading to the Jury; Judicial Reference to Authorities. There are also to be noted sundry instances in which a few Courts have seen fit to allow further infringements of the principle.

(a) The expert witness is by a few Courts allowed to cite the writers of his profession, either specifically by quotation, or generally by referring to professional opinion as corroborating his views.[1]

(b) It has been in some Courts held that counsel on cross-examination, may, for discrediting purposes, read a passage from a professional treatise as opposing the statement of an expert on the stand, or ask whether a contradictory opinion has been laid down by others.[2] But this is generally

[3] 1856, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 12 (the fact that Popes have excommunicated sovereigns; histories resorted to); 1909, In re Najour, C. C. N. D. Ga., 174 Fed. 735 (Keane's The World's People, quoted to prove the classification of world races, in a naturalization case); 1862, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 33 Mo. 194, 201 (Garner's History of Canada read); 1892, Steinbrunner v. R. Co., 146 Pa. 504, 515, 23 Atl. 239 (Encyclopaedia Britannica quoted to show the mode of preparing life-tables); 1902, Hilton v. Roylance, 25 Utah 129, 69 Pac. 660 ("works of history and church records and journals," held admissible, under Rev. St. § 3400, cited ante, § 1693, to show the meaning of "sealing" in the Mormon church).

In Moore's Trial (N. Y. 1824), 13 Amer. St. Tr. 189, 191, being a charge of assault in an affray between Orangemen and Catholics on the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, will be found an interesting colloquy between two celebrated counsel, Thomas Addis Emmet and William Sampson, arising over an offer to read "Plowden's History of Ireland."

§ 1700. [1] 1921, Cochran v. Gritman, — Ida. —, 203 Pac. 289 (counsel allowed to read medical authorities stated by expert witnesses' answers to be standard authorities); 1851, Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 619; 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 17, 12 Pac. 318; 1882, Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 586, 12 N. W. 862, semble; 1903, Scott v. R. Co., 43 Or. 26, 72 Pac. 594 (an engineer allowed to name the authors on whom he relied; whether he could read excerpts, not decided); 1836, Earl's Trial, Pa., 36 (reading or quotation by a medical witness, allowed).

Contra: cases cited ante, § 1693, n. 3, § 1696.

Yet in Michigan direct quotation seems to be not allowed in later cases: 1884, People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 76, 18 N.W. 562; 1891, Fox v. Peninsular Works, 84 Mich. 681, 48 N. W. 203. But this must be distinguished from the question of the sufficiency of the witness' qualifications as based on books only (ante, § 687), for in theory we may refuse to let him state the effect of professional opinion, and yet may admit his own opinion though it is based solely on the reading of professional books.

So, too, must be distinguished the reading of a book as authority and the use of its expressions or its diagrams, by way of illustrations merely: 1870, Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 164. Compare § 790, ante.

[2] 1825, Gardner Peerage Case, LeMarchant's Rep. 22 ("Do you not know it was the opinion of Dr. Hunter that, etc.", allowed on cross-examination); 1890, Brownell v. Black, 31 N. Br. 594 (good opinion by Tuck, J.); 1885, Hess v. Lowery, 122 Ind. 233, 23 N. E. 156; 1896, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Howell, 147 Ind. 266, 45 N. E. 584; 1898 Williams v. Nally, — Ky. — 46 S. W. 874; 1913, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Davies, 152 Ky. 600, 153 S. W. 956 (following Williams v. Nally); 1913, Eckels & S. I. M. Co. v. Cornell E. Co., 119 Md. 107, 86 Atl. 38 (asking an expert whether he would adhere to his opinion if a writer in a certain article stated the contrary, but not showing the article, though it was at hand; held that counsel not having objected to the question, could not inspect the article; clearly unsound; the method of the cross-examiner was capable of being a mere lying insinuation that the article did contradict the expert; and the only fair course was to compel counsel to read it or to let the opposite counsel inspect it to discover the trick if there was one); 1920, Schumaker v. Murray Hospital, 58 Mont. 457, 193 Pac. 397 (on examination in chief, medical text-books cannot be read from; otherwise on cross-examination, to test knowledge or to discredit reference to the books' authority); 1921, State v. Bess, — Mont. —, 199 Pac. 426 repudiated.[3] There is here, however, a legitimate use, i. e. where a witness has been allowed to refer to a specific treatise (or to treatises generally) as corroborating him, the treatise may be read to show that it does not contain such corroboration, on the principle (ante, § 1000) of discrediting a witness by showing misstatements on a material point. This orthodox purpose, as expressly distinguished from the indirect introduction of the books on their own credit (as above noted), is fully recognized:[4]

1882, GRAVES, C. J., in Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 587, 12 N. W. 862: "It was not improper to resort to the book, not to prove the facts it contained, but to disprove the statement of the witness and enable the jury to see that the book did not contain what he had ascribed to it."

(opposing counsel having questioned an expert as to the views of a treatise, under the rule of Schumaker v. Hospital, supra, the calling counsel was allowed to read the whole of the passage and ask about it); 1909, MacDonald v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 219 Mo. 468, 118 S. W. 78 (the cross-examiner may frame questions in the language of books held in his hand, and ask the witness whether he agrees to that view); 1873, State v. Wood, 53 N. H. 495; 1914, Kerston v. Great Northern R. Co., 28 N. D. 3, 147 N. W. 787 (whether or not certain medical writers sustained the witness, the books being shown him, allowed); 1895, Byers v. R. Co., 94 Tenn. 569, 29 S. W. 128; 1900, Sale v. Eichberg, — Tenn. —, 59 S. W. 1020 (cross-examination "to test the experience of the witness and his familiarity with the leading authorities," allowable); 1901, Clukey v. Electric Co., 27 Wash. 70, 67 Pac. 379.

[3] See the cases cited in the next note.

[4] Some of the following cases merely recognize this use, others merely repudiate the above-mentioned use, and others do both:

CANADA: 1856, Brown v. Sheppard, 13 U. C. Q. B. 178; 1914, R. v. Anderson, 16 D. L. R. 203, Alta. (cross-examination to a medical text-book, allowable to ascertain the witness' agreement or disagreement with other person's opinions, but not so as "practically to give in evidence opinions of absent authors at variance with those of the witness"); 1918, R. v. Neigel, 39 D. L. R. 154 (murder, R. v. Anderson affirmed).

UNITED STATES: Colorado: 1912, Denver City T. Co. v. Gawley, 23 Colo. App. 332, 129 Pac. 258 (a physician may not on cross-examination be asked if he agrees with the view of a certain other not cited by him); Florida: 1899, Eggart v. State, 40 Fla. 527, 25 So. 144 (abortion; defendant testified to having read in U. S. Dispensatory that cotton-root extract was only an emmenagogue, not an abortifacient; U. S. Dispensatory read to contradict him); Idaho: 1915, Osborn v. Cary, 28 Ida. 89, 152 Pac. 473 (reading to an expert and asking as to his agreement or dissent, allowed); Illinois: 1878, Connecticut M. L. Inc. Co. v. Ellis, 89 Ill. 519; 1884, Bloomington v. Schrock, 110 Ill. 222; 1907, Chicago Union T. Co. v. Ertrachter, 228 Ill. 114, 81 N. E. 816 (Bloomington v. Schrock followed); 1914, Ullrich v. Chicago City R. Co. 265 Ill. 338, 106 N. E. 828 (a cross-examination which asks the expert whether he is familiar with specified books and implies that he is contradicted by the statements made in those books, held improper; Bloomington v. Schrock followed and Chicago Union T. Co. v. Ertrachter distinguished); 1917, Wilcox v. International Harvester Co., 278 Ill. 465, 116 N. E. 151 (injury by lead-poisoning; scientific books allowed to be read to contradict a witness citing them); 1918, Doyle v. Wilcockson, 184 Ia. 757, 169 N. W. 241 (cross-examination to a medical text-book, held improper); Iowa: 1904, Cronk v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Ia. 349, 98 N. W. 884; 1905, State v. Thompson, 127 Ia. 440, 103 N. W. 377; 1907, State v. Blackburn, — Ia. —, 110 N. W. 275 (cross-examination to books stated by the witness to be standard authorities, allowed); 1908, State v. Blackburn, 136 Ia. 743, 114 N. W. 531 (a cross-examination of a medical man held improper, in which the question continually assumed that universal professional opinion was contrary to his); Kentucky: 1901, Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740 ("otherwise, an ignoramus in the profession might by an assertion of learning declare the most absurd theories to be the teachings of the science"; contradiction allowable either by cross-examination or by reading the book); 1906, Harper v. Weikel, — Ky. —, 89 S. W. 1125; Maryland: 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 36; Massachusetts: 1911, Com. v. Jordan, 207 Mass. 259, 93 N. E. 809 (whether he would change his opinion if Professor B. said the contrary, not allowed); 1911, Com. v. Phelps, 210 Mass. 109, 96 N. E. 69 (reading from another expert to contradict the expert testifying, excluded on mixed grounds); 1912, Allen v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 212 Mass. 191, 98 N. E. 618 (similar); Michigan: 1883, Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 150, 15 N. W. 55; 1888, People v. Vanderhoof,

(c) That counsel may read to the jury learned treatises is regarded as allowable in one jurisdiction at least;[5] in effect, the treatise is thus used evidentially. In a few jurisdictions a hazy distinction is made between their use in "illustration" and their use as evidence, the former being sanctioned.[6] But the general opinion discountenances any such uses.[7]

(d) Finally (and apart from the use, already referred to, of literary works and dictionaries) there is often found an open and deliberate citation by the Court itself to encyclopedias, medical works, and the like, as giving a foundation of fact for subjects involved in their decisions.[8] Of course the incon-

71 Mich. 179, 39 N. W. 28; 1897, Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233, 72 N. Y. 150 (excluded, where the counsel read extensive passages, under guise of cross-examination); 1913, In re Dubois, 164 Mich. 8, 128 N. W. 1092 (like Hall v. Murdock, supra); 1916, Sykes v. Portland, 193 Mich. 86, 159 N. W. 325 (certain cross-examination to medical works in general, held improper); Montana: cases cited supra, n. 2; Nebraska: 1922, Oliverius v. Wicks, — Nebr. —, 187 N. W. 73 (appendicitis caused by assault and battery; quotation of medical books on cross-examination to contradict a witness citing medical authority in support, allowed); New Jersey: 1896, New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. L. Z. & I. Co., 59 N. J. L. 189, 35 Atl. 915; 1914, State v. MacRorie, 86 N. J. L. 401, 92 Atl. 578 (reading statements from a book on cross-examination, not allowed); North Carolina: 1902, Butler v. R. Co., 130 N. C. 15, 40 S. E. 770; 1916, Tilgham v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 171 N. C. 652, 89 S. E. 71 (cross-examination to the views of authorities not already cited by the witness, held not allowable); 1917, State v. Summers, 173 N. C. 775, 92 S. E. 328 (cross-examination by reading a contradictory book, not allowed); North Dakota: 1914, State v. Brunette, 28 N. D. 539, 150 N. W. 271 (usable only in the manner mentioned above in the text); South Carolina: 1904, Mitchell v. Leech, 69 S. C. 413, 48 S. E. 290; Vermont: 1917, Baldwin v. Gaines, 92 Vt. 61, 102 Atl. 338 (expert contradicted by producing the books cited by him); Washington: 1903, Stone v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 644, 74 Pac. 808; Wisconsin: 1872, Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 619; 1882, Knoll v. State, 55 Wis. 256, 12 N. W. 369; 1919, Bell v. Milwaukee E. R. & L. Co., 169 Wis. 408, 172 N. W. 791 (medical witness not allowed to be asked whether he has read a certain passage read aloud from a named author).

[5] 1878, State v. Hoyt, 46 Conn. 337 (conceded on local precedent only); 1899, State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007 (medical works may be read in the trial Court's discretion only).

[6] 1853, Legg v. Drake, 1 Oh. St. 288; 1857, Wade v. DeWitt, 20 Tex. 400; 1854, Cory v. Silcox, 6 Ind. 40 (Hovey, J.: "Reason is neither more nor less than reason because it happens to be read from a book"); 1872, Harvey v. State, 40 Ind. 518; 1882, Baldwin v. Bricker, 86 Ind. 223 (allowing it "only for the mere purposes of illustration and never as statements of fact or as the expressions of opinion, . . . concerning the particular case in bearing or cases of a like character"); 1893, State v. O'Neil, 51 Kan. 651, 674, 33 Pac. 287 (not allowed except to illustrate a process of reasoning).

In Illinois it has been said that they may be read as showing "theories," but not as evidence: 1868, Yoe v. People, 49 Ill. 412.

[7] 1844, R. v. Crouch, 1 Cox Cr. 94; 1875, R. v. Taylor, 13 Cox Cr. 77, 78, Brett, J.; 1882, People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 4; 1904, Quattlebaum v. State, 119 Ga. 433, 46 S. E. 677; 1853, Ashworth v. Kittredge, 12 Cush. Mass. 195; 1854, Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray Mass. 338; 1857, Washburn v. Cuddihy, 8 Gray 431; 1882, People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 490, 12 N. W. 665; 1883, Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 150, 15 N. W. 55; 1884, People v. Millard, 53 Mich. 77, 18 N. W. 562; 1854, Melvin v. Easly, 1 Jones L., N. Y. 388; 1877, Huffman v. Click, 77 N. C. 56; 1893, State v. Rogers, 112 N. C. 874, 877, 17 S. E. 297; 1895, Byers v. R. Co., 94 Tenn. 350, 29 S. W. 129, semble; 1883, Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 480, 15 N. W. 827.

Compare the general rule for counsel's argument (post, § 1806).

[8] The following are some illustrations: 1905, Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. 358 (cyclopedias quoted on the experience of foreign countries as to vaccination against smallpox); Sinnott v. Colombet, 107 Cal. 187, 40 Pac. 329 (to determine the meaning of "kindergarten," citing Compayre's History of Pedagogy, Payne's translation, and Sonnenschein's Cyclopedia of Education); 1857, Lumpkin, J., in Smith v. State, 23 Ga. 297, 306 (citing Dr. Gooch's Lectures on Midwifery); 1868, Cooley, C. J., in Garbutt v. People, 17 Mich. 9, 17 (citing works on medical jurisprudence as to the physiological effect of insanity); 1897, Steenerson v. R. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713 (in determining the reasonable income on a railway investment, the Court cited facts and doctrines from the Yale Review, the London Economist, Bradstreet's Journal, the Bankers' Magazine, the sistency is particularly palpable when the Court (as has happened more than once) has in the same case expressly declared that learned treatises cannot be resorted to for information.[9]

Topic X: COMMERCIAL AND PROFESSIONAL LISTS, REGISTERS, AND REPORTS

§ 1702. In General. In a few narrow and usually well-defined classes of cases, recognition has been given, by way of exception to the Hearsay rule, to certain commercial and professional lists, registers, and reports. Their admissibility in some instances is placed upon judicial principle, in others arises solely from statutory innovation; but in most of the classes statute has carried out hints originally given judicially.

The Necessity (ante, § 1421) in all of these cases lies in part on the usual inaccessibility of the authors, compilers, or publishers in other jurisdictions; but chiefly in the great practical inconvenience that would be caused if the law required the summoning of each individual whose personal knowledge has gone to make up the final result. The necessity therefore is of the sort that is recognized in the preceding two Exceptions, i. e. a practical inconvenience existing generally for the statements as a class; and hence it is not required that the death, insanity, absence from the jurisdiction, or the like, of the author shall be shown before the statement can be used.

The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1422) is found in the considerations that these lists, registers, reports, etc., are prepared for the use of the trade or profession, and are therefore habitually made with such care and accuracy as will lead them to be relied upon for commercial and professional purposes. There is a subjective test of trustworthiness, in that the author knows beforehand that his work will have no commercial or professional market unless it is found to have usual accuracy and that its inaccuracies will probably be discovered; and further in that there is ordinarily no motive to deceive. There is an objective test, in that the habitual use of the work by the trade or profession has tested its usual and practical accuracy and has sanctioned its trustworthiness. Thus the chief considerations which are recognized as the source of trustworthiness for the other Exceptions (ante, § 1422) are found to exist here also. Upon some such reasons works of J. S. Mill, Adam Smith, David A. Wells); 1836, Walworth, C., in Devenbagh v. Devenbagh, 5 Paige Ch. N. Y. 554, 557 (citing Beck's Medical Jurisprudence).

[9] In Washburn v. Cuddihy, 8 Gray Mass. 431 (1857), the Court first ruled out a scientific book on the question of horse-cribbing as constituting unsoundness and then proceeded to cite Oliphant's "Horses" and Stephens' "Adventures of a Gentleman in Search of a Horse" to show that it could not be ruled as a matter of law that cribbing was not unsoundness. In State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 17, 20, 12 Pac. 318 (1886), the trial Court accepted the rule excluding medical works, and then proceeded to sanction an instruction on the subject of poisons, in which a dictionary and a cyclopedia were quoted from. The Supreme Court said: "It is true the Court quoted the definitions" (but the passages were in reality descriptions and lists of poisons) "given in Webster's Dictionary and the American Cyclopedia, but there is no claim that the definitions are incorrect in any way. What cause then is there for complaint? . . . The Court approved them and made the language employed in them its own." But the fact remains that the Court accepted one anonymous scientific writer, while it excluded other well-known writers.

may easily be justified the admission of standard price-lists, of printed reports of judicial decisions, of deed-abstracts, and of sundry publications such as speed-registers, pedigree-registers, and the like, now to be considered.

§ 1703. Reports of Judicial Decisions. Printed reports of domestic decisions, as reproducing merely the law which the Court is supposed to know judicially, have not often suggested the need of a specific exception to the Hearsay rule. But their true aspect, as real instances of such an exception, has been perceived in the case of reports of decisions of foreign courts, — which include, of course, the courts of other of the United States. So far as these reports are prepared and published, according to modern practice, by official reporters appointed for the purpose, they are easily seen to be admissible as Official Statements; and under that head (ante, § 1684) the statutes and decisions dealing with them from that point of view have been considered. But in most jurisdictions, the earlier decisions (including almost all of the English precedents down to 1865) were published by reporters having no official authority to do so; and in this country decisions are also regularly reported, even since the régime of official reporters, not only in private systems of comprehensive scope, but also in special collections on certain topics and in legal journals. If these are admitted to be read and consulted as evidence of the opinions and decisions reported, it cannot be under the Exception for Official Statements, just referred to, nor can it be under the Exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1517); it must therefore be under the present Exception.

That such private reports of judicial opinions are customarily resorted to in arguments of law as correctly representing the opinions rendered, the arguments made, and the facts upon which the decision was made, is notorious. That this practice has long been sanctioned by the judges as a proper mode, for the Anglo-American common law, of proving the tenor of the precedents, is clear.[1] That the reports of decisions in courts of the § 1703. [1] ENGLAND: 1692, Stainer v. Droitwich, 1 Salk. 281, 12 Mod. 86 ("A year-book may be evidence to prove the course of the court"; the year-books were not official, so that this is perhaps a precedent); 1744, Hardwicke, L. C., in Gage v. Bulkeley Ridgw. Cas. t. Hardw. 276; see further, for English usage, the quotations of judicial comment on the various reporters, collected in Wallace's The Reporters, and Ram on Facts.

CANADA: 1916, Re Goodman, 28 D. L. R. 197, 29 id. 725, Man. (extradition; English and American reports consulted, to determine the U. S. law as to the crime charge).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1872, The Pawashick, 2 Low. 148; 1873, Mackay v. Easton, 19 Wall. 632; 1846, Inge v. Murphy, 10 Ala. 885, 895 ("accredited reports" of Georgia decisions received; Goldthwaite, J.: "We every day elucidate our own common law by referring to these reports, and it would seem a singular anomaly if they cannot be admitted as evidence to show" decisions of another State); 1859, Stanford v. Pruet, 27 Ga. 243, 247 ("We admit their reports, without questioning their authenticity"); 1858, Kingsley v. Kingsley, 20 Ill. 202 (construction of foreign statutes; "reports of such tribunals" may be looked to); 1867, McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 548; 1862, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 33 Mo. 194, 201 (printed books of English decisions, read); 1885, Kennard v. Kennard, 63 N. H. 308; 1879, State v. Moy Looke, 9 Or. 57; 1908, Latimer v. Elgin, 4 Desauss. S. C. 32.

Contra: 1819, Barbour v. Archer, 2 A. K. Marsh. 9 (printed report of a decision of this Court, containing the opinion as part of the record, excluded); 1848, Gardner v. Lewis, 7 Gill 394 (Magruder, J.: "We can only know from them that the printer said that the reporter said that the judge said that the law is as he is made to say that it is").

Continent, administering an alien system of law, would equally be included by the principle, seems also clear, provided the report offered was proved to be one in use among the profession in that jurisdiction. Statute has in most jurisdictions expressly removed all possible doubt by providing for the admission of such books of reports from any jurisdiction.[2]

In Baltimore & O. R.Co. v. Glenn, 28 Md. 323 (1867), resort to decisions was had by consent.

Undecided: 1847, Territt v. Woodruff, 19 Vt. 182, 185 (whether reported decisions are receivable "does not appear to have been determined"; but the Court then proceeds to cite Cowen's and Wendell's reports in evidence of New York law); 1856, State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60, 65 (left undecided).

[2] To the following statutes add those cited ante, § 1684, which in sanctioning an officially printed book of statutes also sometimes provide for any book "commonly admitted" in its own jurisdiction:

CANADA: Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 32 (for foreign or domestic law, the judge may refer to "reports of cases and works upon legal subjects").

UNITED STATES: Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1736 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in another State, admissible); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1902 ("printed and published books of reports of decisions of courts of such [sister] State or [foreign] country, or proved to be commonly admitted in such courts" are admissible); § 1963 (there is a presumption "that a printed and published book purporting to contain reports of cases adjudged in the tribunals of the State or country where the book is published contains correct reports of such cases"); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5727 ("the reports of the judicial decisions of other States and countries" may be judicially noticed); Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2716 ("books of reports of cases adjudged in courts of the U. S. or a State or Territory thereof, admissible); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7946 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902, omitting "or proved to be," and inserting "Territory"); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 499 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in the courts of "any other State, Territory, or foreign government, may also be admitted); Kentucky: Stats. 1915 § 1640 ("the printed books of cases adjudged in the courts of a sister State," admissible); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 130 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in another State or Territory of the United States, admissible); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 71 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in the U. S., admissible); 1858, Penobscot & K. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 12 Gray 244, 248 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in a sister State, admitted under the statute); 1863, Cragin v. Lamkin, 7 All. 395, 396 (similar); 1878, Ames v. McCamber, 124 Mass. 85, 91 (similar); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12515 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in another U. S. State or Territory or "any foreign State or country," admissible); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8417 ("the books or reports of cases adjudged" in the courts of "any other State," admissible); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5388 ("the printed books of cases adjudged in the courts of a sister State," admissible); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10552 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902); § 10606, par. 36 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); Nebraska: Rev. C. 1922, § 8903, Comp. St. 1899, § 5970 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in the courts of "any other Territory State, or foreign government," admissible); § 8927 (similar); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evid. § 26 ("reports of judicial decisions of other States and countries" may be judicially noticed; the "usual printed books of such reports" to be "plenary evidence"); New York: C. P. A. § 391 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in State, Territory, or foreign Courts, admissible); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1749 ("books of the reports of cases" of a State, Territory, or foreign country, admissible); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7910 (like Okl. Stats. § 4260); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11499 ("books of reports of cases adjudicated" in the courts of another State, Territory, or foreign government, receivable); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 636 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in a State, Territory, or foreign government, admissible); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 749 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 302 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902); § 334, par. 34 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, par. 36); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 49 ("published reports" of decisions of courts of the U. S., a State, Territory, or country, admissible); South Carolina: C. C. P. § 1922, § 707 ("the books of reports of cases adjudged" in courts of a domestic or foreign State, receivable); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2718 (like N. D. Rev. C. § 5690); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7085 ("printed and published books of reports of decisions" in another State, Territory, or foreign country, "commonly admitted in such courts," admissible); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 13, § 4 (in noticing foreign law, judge "may consult any printed book purporting to contain" the same); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4138 ("books of reports of cases adjudged" in the courts of a U. S. State or Territory, admissible); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5810 (like Oh. Rev. St. § 11499).

Reports of trial-proceedings and testimony, however, stand on a different footing. They are ordinarily not printed as a part of the business of furnishing reports for use in the profession, nor are they in fact habitually resorted to and tested by professional use. Moreover, in past generations at least, they were often printed in condensed or fragmentary form only, on behalf of a party, for the purpose of vindicating his claim before the public, and were thus often garbled and untrustworthy. It was not the custom in England as late as the 1700s to receive such private reports to prove the testimony given at a prior trial,[3] and to-day it cannot be supposed that, as a general rule, they would be received. Nevertheless, where a stenographic 'verbatim' report, or one purporting to be such, made by an indifferent person or by one employed on behalf of both parties, and accepted in the profession as trustworthy, is available, there is no reason why the principle already considered should not suffice to admit it. That the celebrated Mr. Gurney's stenographic reports of English trials, or such a trusted document as Mr. Bemis' report of Webster's Trial, should be rejected, would be an extreme instance of pedantry.[4]

§ 1704. Standard Price-Lists and Market Reports. A printed list of prices at which a class of goods is for sale to any purchaser, or a printed report of the prices obtained at actual sale in an open market, may become trustworthy so far as it is intended to be consulted by all persons who care to know the prices, and has been exposed to a test of accuracy by dealings with such persons on the faith of it, and has further been in their experience found generally reliable (ante, § 1702). A price-current list or a market report which fulfils these conditions and has thus sufficed for the correct information of persons who transact commercial operations on the faith of it may well suffice for informing a court of justice. It would not be necessary that the compiler of it should have personal observation of each dealing reported or going to make up the market price reported, because the practical equivalent of personal observation here exists; a report based on direct consultation with dealers or with the officers of an exchange or a market is in commercial circles taken as equally reliable (ante, § 719). Such standard price-lists and market reports, indorsed by trade experience, ought to be admissible on the principle of the present exception:

1866, Cooley, J., in Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 496: "Evidence of the state of the markets as derived from the market reports in the newspapers should not have been excluded. . . . The principle which supports these cases will allow the market reports of such newspapers as the commercial world rely upon to be given in evidence. As a matter of fact, such reports, which are based upon a general survey of the whole market and are constantly received and acted upon by dealers, are far more satisfactory and reliable than individual entries or individual sales or inquiries; and Courts would justly be the subject of ridicule if they should deliberately shut their eyes to the sources of information which the rest of the world relies upon, and demand evidence of a less certain and satisfactory character."

For cross-references to other rules concerning proof of foreign law, see ante, § 1684, note 15.

[3] E. g., 1685, Fernley's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 381, 434; and there are other instances.

[4] For reports of former testimony not printed, see ante, §§ 1666–1669.

1875, MILLER, J., in Whelan v. Lynch, 60 N. Y. 474: "The Court was also in error, I think, in admitting the shipping and price-current list as evidence of the value of the wool without some proof showing how or in what manner it was made up, where the information it contained was obtained, or whether the quotations of prices made were derived from actual sales or otherwise. It is not plain how a newspaper containing the price current of merchandise, of itself and aside from any explanation as to the authority from which it was obtained, can be made legitimate evidence of the facts stated. The accuracy and correctness of such publications depends entirely upon the sources from which the information is derived. Mere quotations from other newspapers, or information obtained from those who have not the means of procuring it, would be entitled to but little if any weight. The credit to be given to such testimony must be governed by extrinsic evidence and cannot be determined by the newspaper itself without some proof of knowledge of the mode in which the list was made out."

1882, SMITH, J., in Fairley v. Smith, 87 N. C. 367, 371 (rejecting a cotton-quotation in a Charlotte newspaper for Boston prices): "The evidence received in the present case has none of those essential safeguards to ensure the accuracy of the published information as to the state of a distant market, to warrant its unqualified submission to the jury. It does not appear that business men acted upon this information, as truthful and correct, in their dealings with each other; nor from what source the information itself comes. . . . [It was thus improper to admit the evidence] without any proof, outside the paper, of its trustworthiness and recognition as such by business men dealing in cotton."

Upon these principles, a number of Courts have recognized for price-lists and market reports an Exception whose limits, more or less indefinite, are suggested by the above passages.[1]

The Exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1517) must of course be distinguished; its most marked difference is (ante, § 1521) that there the entrant must specifically be shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable. Distinguish also the question whether a witness called to the stand to testify to prices is qualified if his only source of knowledge is a price-list consulted by him (ante, § 719).

§ 1704. [1] Federal: 1865, Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 114, 117, 121, 141 (printed price current given by a French firm to an inquirer, and stating the prices of their goods, admitted; "it is as little liable to that objection [of hearsay] as the entries in the books of the dealer"); 1865, Fenneretsin's Champagne, 3 Wall. 145 (preceding case approved; written letters from foreign dealers stating prices, here admitted on the principle of regular entries, ante, § 1525; three judges dissenting as to such letters); Alabama: Code 1907, § 3977 ("prices current and commercial lists, printed at any commercial mart, are presumptive evidence of the value of any article of merchandise specified therein, at that place, at the date thereof, and of the rate of exchange between that and other places; also of the rates of insurance, freights, and the times of arrival and departure of ships and other vessels"); 1898, Tyson v. Chestnut, 118 Ala. 387, 24 So. 73 (Statute applied to exclude certain postal cards); 1905, Kentucky Ref. Co. v. Conner, 145 Ala. 664, 39 So. 728 (certain letters held not to be within the statute); Colorado: 1894, Willard v. Mellor, 19 Colo. 534 (daily price-circulars by wool-buyers, excluded; but the principle of admission conceded for prices in a commercial journal); Illinois: 1896, Nash v. Classen, 163 Ill. 409, 45 N. E. 276, semble (admissible; here a trustworthy newspaper, giving in the morning the quotations of corn in the Chicago market for the day before); Maine: 1878, Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 68 Me. 463, semble (prices current admissible); Maryland: 1880, Munshower v. State, 55 Md. 24, semble (prices current, admissible); 1908, Mount Vernon B. Co. v. Teschner, 108 Md. 158, 69 Atl. 702 (newspaper accepted by the trade as trustworthy in stating market prices, admissible, without any showing of the publisher's method of obtaining the information;

§ 1705. Abstracts of Title. In the practice of conveyancing, the attorney in charge of a transfer of real property does not make anew for each client's title a search of the deed-register for the preceding documents in the chain of title, but relies upon a written book, which contains abstracts of the preceding documents and records and has been handed along to each transferee; provided at least that the abstract appears to have been kept up by competent hands and that no questions of special difficulty appear to be involved. Furthermore, the persons engaged solely in the occupation of searchers of title or abstract-makers, and particularly the corporations making a business of guaranteeing land-titles, have compiled in the course of their business comprehensive collections of such abstracts, which are used from time to time as a settled basis in keeping up abstracts of subsequent transfers. Besides this, other attorneys often possess full abstracts of particular titles, of equal trustworthiness and general use with these larger collections. Such abstracts (including copies of record-entries, notes of surveys, and the like) fulfil the requirements of trustworthiness above indicated for this Exception (ante, § 1702). They are made by persons who have professional skill and actual knowledge of the documents abstracted; they are intended for use in professional work, and are made by persons usually having no motive to deceive; they are ordinarily expected to be tested by other professional persons, not through the latter's direct perusal, but through such examination and collation as these other persons may and often do make of the same original deeds, records, and entries; and, so far as they have survived this test unquestioned, they stand approved and accepted by the profession as trustworthy. As a class, then, they seem to careful and liberal opinion by Boyd, C. J.); Massachusetts: 1900, National Bank of C. v. New Bedford, 175 Mass. 57, 56 N. E. 288 ("newspaper reports purporting to contain stock quotations furnished by named N. B. stockbrokers, who could have been called," excluded; general principle left undecided); Michigan: 1866, Sisson v. R. Co., 14 Mich. 96 (quoted supra); 1868, Cleveland & T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 296 ("such newspapers as the commercial world would rely on," admissible to show prices); 1883, Peter v. Thickstun, 51 Mich. 594, 17 N. W. 68 (similar); 1893, Aulls v. Young, 98 Mich. 231, 234, 57 N. W. 119; 1906, Tri-State Milling Co. v. Breisch, 145 Mich. 232, 108 N. W. 657 (Sisson v. R. Co., followed; market quotations in a Detroit daily newspaper, received); Missouri: 1873, Golson v. Ebert, 52 Mo. 260, 270 (price current, unverified, excluded); 1905, Fountain v. Wabash R. Co., 114 Mo. App. 676, 90 S. W. 393 (trade journals, not admitted without showing that reliable sources were used in their reports); Nebraska: 1905, Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Todd, 74 Nebr. 712, 105 N. W. 83 (Sisson v. R. Co., supra, followed; Daily Drovers' Journal-Stockman admitted to show sales of sheep on certain days); 1922, Trennt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., — Nebr. —, 186 N.W. 322 (shipment of cattle; market price evidenced by the Daily Drovers' Journal-Stockman, authenticated by the publisher); New York: 1875, Whelan v. Lynch, 60 N.Y. 474 (quoted supra); 1878, Harrison v. Glover, 72 N.Y. 454, semble (price-lists, admissible); North Carolina: 1882, Fairley v. Smith, 87 N.C. 367 (quoted supra); 1907, Moseley v. Johnson, 144 N.C. 257, 274, 56 S.E. 922 (value of Georgia corporate securities; the market reports of a newspaper admitted); North Dakota: 1922, Schnitz Bros. v. Bolles & Rogers Co., — N. D. —, 186 N. W. 96 (sale of hides; certain market reports made by a publishing company, excluded because not shown to be trustworthy, representing actual transactions, and obtained from reliable sources); Utah: 1919, Baglin v. Earl-Eagle Mining Co., 54 Utah 572, 184 Pac. 190 (to show the market price of certain stock, quotations sent from Boston by mail from the Boston Curb Association, and not shown to be customarily reliable, were excluded); Washington: 1913, Peters v. McPhadden, 75 Wash. 525, 135 Pac. 26 (newspaper advertisements of stock prices offered, here excluded).

come (so far at least as specific abstracts or collections of them may be shown to fulfil the above requirements) within the conditions of this Exception.

The principle of Producing the Original of a Writing (ante, §§ 1193, 1223) will of course ordinarily prevent the use of them until both the original deeds and the records of the deeds appear to be lost, destroyed, or otherwise unavailable. This much is always assumed. Furthermore, the principle of Completeness (post, § 2107) may forbid the use of abstracts so far as complete copies of the lost documents can be obtained; although the application of this principle might properly be less rigorous than that of the preceding one. It is partly because of the indefinite limits of this latter principle, and of the inconvenience of attempting to apply it to each document in a long chain of title before using an abstract, that has led to the necessity of enacting a simpler rule by statute. Finally, supposing the foregoing two principles to be satisfied, the Hearsay rule stands in the way; this, first of all, requires each person contributing to the abstract to be summoned if available, — a practically impossible task; or next, it requires that some established exception be found in which these abstracts may be classed, and none such appears; unless we can construe the Exception for Regular Entries in the Course of Business (ante, § 1517) as sufficing for the purpose.[1] It results, then, that if these abstracts are to be used without summoning the makers and proving regularity of entry, the use must form the subject of a separate Exception to the Hearsay rule. That it ought to be so treated, for certain classes of abstracts at least, in view of the conditions of their preparation and employment, has been already noticed.

Nevertheless, Courts do not seem anywhere to have reached this conclusion (as they did in the two preceding classes of cases under this Exception) upon common-law principles. Statutory enactment seems in every instance to have been waited for.[2] These statutes usually provide that the contents § 1705. [1] Such seems to have been the view taken in England: 1810, Ward v. Garnons, 17 Ves. Jr. 134 (L. C. Eldon; abstract of title made in the course of business by a deceased attorney, admitted to show contents and execution of lost deed). There is little direct authority in the United States: 1921, Miller v. Estabrook, 4th C. C. A., 273 Fed. 144 (West Virginia abstract of title to land in a county whose records were destroyed by fire, verified by the attorney making it, admitted); 1906, Einstein v. Holladay K. L. & L. Co., 118 Mo. App. 184, 94 S. W. 206 (lost deeds and burnt records; set of abstracts made partly by S., and partly by K., but verified by S. only, excluded).

[2] The rulings which specifically deal with the rule for producing the original (ante, § 1223) and the rule for a complete copy (post, § 2107) are placed under those heads; the remainder are placed here:

CANADA: Alberta: St. 1910, 2d Sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 48 ("an abstract of title or a general certificate under seal," by a land-title registrar, "shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the contents thereof").

UNITED STATES: California: St. 1906, Spec. Sess., c. 52, June 16, C. C. P. § 1855*a* (admitting, where conflagration or other public calamity has destroyed records, (a) abstracts of title made before such destruction by any person in the business of preparing abstracts, in the ordinary course of business, (b) abstract or other instrument made by a person engaged in insuring titles or issuing abstracts, whether before or after such destruction; no proof of loss of original need be made, but only that it is not known to be in existence; but notice of intention to offer in evidence, and an opportunity to inspect, must be given); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, §§ 5029, 5030 (where records of deeds, etc., are destroyed, abstract-books, minutes, extracts, etc., "fairly made before the destruction of the records by any person or persons in the ordinary course of business," and bought by the county, are and execution of deeds and records burnt or lost may be proved by specified kinds of abstracts, in general fulfilling requirements analogous to those admissible where the original instrument "has been lost or destroyed or is not in the power of the party"); § 5035 (such a writing shall not be received "unless the same appear upon its face, without erasure, blemish, alteration, interlineation, or interpolation in any material part, unless the same be explained to the satisfaction of the Court, and to have been fairly and honestly made in the ordinary course of business"); § 5036 (when an original instrument affecting title is "lost or destroyed or not within the power of the parties to produce," and the record is destroyed, "any abstract of title made in the ordinary course of business prior to such loss or destruction . . . that may have been made and delivered to the owners or purchasers or other parties interested," is admissible);

Florida: Rev. G. St. 1919, § 2729 (where a record of deed has been burnt, and the original cannot be produced, and no certified copy is in the party's control, "any abstract of title, or letter-press copy thereof made in the ordinary course of business prior to such loss," or "any copy, extract, or minutes from such destroyed records or from the original thereof, which were at the date of such destruction in the possession of any person or persons then engaged in the business of making abstracts of title for others for hire," shall be admissible; or a sworn copy thereof, when the opponent has been given "a reasonable opportunity to verify the correctness of such copy"; but in either case a copy must be served on the opponent ten days before the offer in evidence); §§ 2730–2732 (further provisions for the use of such materials); § 3855 (similar provision for abstracts, etc., purchased by the county);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 2263, 2264 (abstract of title, certified by a duly bonded abstracter, to be evidence "of the existence of the record of deeds, mortgages, and other instruments, conveyances, or liens affecting the real estate mentioned"; the party using it in evidence to furnish a copy to the opponent three days before trial, and a sufficient additional number of days for land out of the county of trial);

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 116, § 13 (where official records of deeds, etc., are destroyed, judges are authorized to record and to approve the purchase of originals or copies of "any abstracts, copies, minutes, or extracts from said records existing after such destruction," if they "were fairly made, before the destruction of the records, by any person or persons, in the ordinary course of business, and that they contain a material and substantial part of such records"; and on petition of any owner of such abstracts, etc., if they are found to be "fairly made in the regular course of business before such destruction of the records," they may be recorded, and taken as 'prima facie' evidence, if they purport to recite "all deeds and mortgages," etc., and to describe "the several tracts of land, etc."; and "all abstracts to separate tracts of land made by the owner of said abstracts," etc., shall be taken as 'prima facie' evidence when accompanied by an affidavit of the owner that they contain "a full, true, and perfect copy of all transfers," etc.); § 14 (when such abstracts, etc., are bought and recorded, the recorder's certified copies shall be admissible "in case the originals have been lost or destroyed, or not in the power of the party asking to use the same"); § 28 (any writings thus made admissible shall not be received "unless the same appear upon its face without erasure, blemish, alteration, interlineation, or interpolation in any material part, unless the same be explained to the satisfaction of the Court, and to have been fairly and honestly made in the ordinary course of business"); § 29 (as amended July 15, 1887; where records are destroyed and original conveyances are lost or destroyed or not within the power of the party to produce, as shown by testimony or affidavit of party or agent, "any abstract of title, or letter-press copy thereof, made in the ordinary course of business prior to such loss or destruction" is admissible, as also "any copy, extracts, or minutes from such destroyed records, or from the originals thereof, which were, at the date of such destruction or loss, in the possession of persons then engaged in the business of making abstracts of title for others for hire"; so also a sworn copy of any such writing, made by the person having possession, is admissible when the offeror has "given the opposite party a reasonable opportunity to verify the correctness of such copy"); 1873, Richley v. Farrell, 69 Ill. 264 (abstract held sufficient under the statute); 1874, Russell v. Mandell, 73 Ill. 136, 137 (abstract held sufficient); 1874, King v. Worthington, 73 Ill. 161 (letter-press copy of abstract, not admissible); 1876, Smith v. Stevens, 82 Ill. 554 (abstract admitted); 1882, Miller v. Shaw, 103 Ill. 277, 285 (similar); 1882, Compton v. Randolph, 104 Ill. 555 (letter-press copy, or a copy of it, of an abstract, not admissible); 1884, Thatcher v. Olmstead, 110 Ill. 26 (copy of lost abstract, not admissible); 1883, Heacock v. Lubuke, 107 Ill. 396, 401 (abstract admitted); 1892, Converse v. Wead, 142 Ill. 132, 136, 31 N. E. 314 (St. 1887 applied; letter-press copy of abstract, admitted; extracts and minutes admitted); 1894, Sternheim v. Burcky, 149 Ill. 241, 244, 36 N. E. 1026 (extracts and minutes admitted; notice on the day before trial, sufficient on the facts); 1894, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Keegan, 152 Ill. 413, 417, 39 N. E. 33 (abstracts admitted; testimony founded on personal knowledge of their existence before the fire, etc., not required); 1899, Kotz v. Belz, 178 Ill. 434, 53 N. E. 367 (abstracts used); 1901, Glos v. Hallowell, 190 Ill. 65, 60 N. E. 62 (abstracts not proved according to statute, excluded); St. 1903, pp. 121, 122 (amending St. 1897, May 21, §§ 7, 18, being Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 30, § 61, concerning title-registration, so as to permit the use of abstracts of title); 1903 Glos v. Cessna, 207 Ill. 69, 69 N. E. 634 (abstract rejected because it was not on file in the recorder's office and the loss of originals was not proved); 1904, Glos v. Paterson, 209 Ill. 448, 70 N. E. 911 (certain abstracts held sufficiently shown to be within the description of the statute); 1904, Glos v. Talcott, 213 Ill. 81, 72 N. E. 707 (certain abstracts held improperly admitted without proof of loss of the original, preparation in the course of business, etc.); 1906, Glos v. Holberg, 220 Ill. 167, 77 N. E. 80 (abstract excluded, for lack of statutory compliance); 1906, Messenger v. Messenger, 223 Ill. 282, 79 N. E. 27 (the above statute of 1903 held not to have been lawfully adopted in Cook Co., and certain abstracts therefore rejected); 1907, Glos v. Wheeler, 229 Ill. 272, 82 N. E. 234 (abstract rejected because the original deed or record was not accounted for); 1909, McMahon v. Rowley, 238 Ill. 31, 87 N. E. 66 (certain abstracts admitted); 1911, Culver v. Waters, 248 Ill. 163, 93 N. E. 747 (abstracts must be "made by the abstracters" in the ordinary course of business, not "ordered by the owner" in the ordinary course of his business); 1911, Hammond v. Glos, 250 Ill. 32, 95 N. E. 39 (copy of an uncertified copy not admitted); 1911, Caswell v. Glos, 251 Ill. 505, 96 N. E. 251 (abstracts admitted, the witness' personal knowledge of their mode of compilation being sufficient on the facts); 1916, Harts v. Glos, 271 Ill. 376, 111 N. E. 125 (certain abstracts, partly by private makers, and partly by the county recorder, offered in a title-registration proceeding, under St. 1903, held not authenticated according to the statute; incidentally, the opinion makes the statement that "an abstract of title is not admissible in evidence . . . except in applications to register title under the Torrens law," which is obviously erroneous); 1916, Hartz v. Glos, 272 Ill. 395, 112 N. E. 74 (abstract from the county recorder's office, excluded); 1917, Brummel v. Glos, 278 Ill. 552, 116 N. E. 216 (copy of abstract, excluded on the facts);

above-mentioned. The judicial rulings ordinarily are concerned merely with the construction of these statutes.

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 371 (condemnation of land; abstract of title, certified by county register of deeds or deputy, admissible);

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8435 (on affidavit that an instrument or court records affecting a landed interest "are lost or destroyed and not within the power of such party to produce," and that the record of it is "destroyed by fire or otherwise," the Court may receive "any abstract of title to such lands made in the ordinary course of business before such loss or destruction," and also "any copy, extract, or minutes from such destroyed records or from the original thereof, which were, at the date of such destruction or loss, in the possession of any person then engaged in the business of making abstracts of title for others for hire"); § 8436 (a sworn copy of any such writing, made by the possessor, is receivable, provided reasonable notice is given to the opponent for verifying its correctness); St. 1915, c. 283, § 1 ("any abstract of title, duly certified by any bonded abstractor or by any register of deeds," etc., admissible to prove "all instruments therein referred to");

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 3171, Hem. § 2512 (in any county where a record of deeds is destroyed, the chancellor "if he find any abstracts, copies, minutes, or extracts from said records existing after such destruction, he shall appoint two persons learned in such matters to act with him, and the three shall investigate the same; and if they find that the abstracts," etc., "were fairly made before such destruction of the records, and that they contain material and substantial parts of the destroyed records," they may so certify to board of supervisors, who may purchase them or copies); § 3172, Hem. § 2513 (such abstracts, etc., to be filed and recorded; "and in case the originals have been lost or destroyed, or are not in the power of the party asking to use the same," certified copies of such abstracts, etc., are admissible, and are 'prima facie' evidence of instruments' execution);

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5472 (where records affecting real estate are destroyed, etc., circuit judges may certify that abstracts etc. "were fairly made before such loss" etc. "in the ordinary and usual course of business," and that they "tend to show a connected chain of title," and thereupon such abstracts etc., or "authenticated copies" are to be admissible); § 5474 (any abstracts, etc. "which are fair upon their face" and "made by any person" etc. "in the usual and ordinary course of business prior to the loss" etc., are admissible, upon proof that the origiral deeds etc. "are lost, destroyed, or so injured as to be illegible or that the said originals are not within the power of the party to produce," and that the records are lost, etc.); 1909, Nall v. Conover, 223 Mo. 477, 122 S. W. 1039 (certain entries in "Carleton's Abstract Books," under St. 1901, Mar. 28, making such books admissible for Pemiscot Co.); 1909, Whitman v. Gleising, 224 Mo. 600, 614, 123 S. W. 1052 (similar);

§ 1706. Sundry Commercial and Professional Registers (Stock-Pedigree, Business Directory, Shipping List, etc.). There are many other kinds of registers, records, reports, compilations, and the like, which may in a given case fulfil the requirements already indicated (ante, § 1692) as sufficient for this exception.[1] A printed pedigree-register of blooded animals, for example,

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8926 (abstracts of title, semble usable after notice to opponent); § 5691 (abstracts of title by duly bonded persons, to be 'prima facie' evidence "of the existence of the record of deeds," etc., mentioned therein);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2188 ("Any abstract of the title to real estate, located in the State of N. M., certified to as correct by the secretary, and under the seal of the title abstract company, incorporated and doing business under the laws of this State, shall be received in all the courts of this State as evidence of the things recited therein, in the same manner and to a like extent that the public records are now admitted");
New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 385 ("searches affecting property situate in any county in which the office of county clerk or register is a salaried one," when made and certified to be domestic title insurance, etc. companies, are admissible, wherever "official searches" may be used);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 5547 (lost or destroyed records; "the abstract of a regular bonded abstractor orabstractors" of the county to be admissible);
Ohio: Gen. C. Annot. 1921, §§ 12362–12365 (certain abstracts of records, etc., made by private persons, to be admissible);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 9554 (similar to Ill. Rev. St. c. 116);
Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3705 ("All abstracts of land-titles or land abstract-books to lands in this State compiled from the records of any county in this State prior to the year 1890, which said records were partially or wholly destroyed or lost from any cause during the months of May 1874, March 1876, and January 1889," admissible for matters compiled prior to 1890; provided the compiler has made affidavit before officer authorized to take acknowledgments of deeds that the compilation is correct and was made before loss of records, and a copy of the abstract is filed with papers of the cause and notice given to opponent five days before trial; and provided the offeror makes affidavit that the original instrument "is not then on record, that he has made diligent search and inquiry for the same in places and from persons where and in whose possession it would most probably be found, and has been unable to find the same, that to his best knowledge and belief the same is lost or destroyed"; and provided the owner of the abstract has filed an application, which has been granted, to record in the county commissioners' court his contract binding him to permit the use of such abstracts by interested parties, for fees specified, to answer in damages for failure to produce on demand, etc.; provided this article shall not apply "if it can be shown by competent evidence that any such deeds were improperly recorded"; when such abstracts are used, a party may offer evidence "tending to show the compiler thereof to have been incompetent or unreliable, or competent and reliable"; other detailed conditions specified);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 1590 ("any abstract of title to any piece, parcel, or parcels of real estate or mining claim or claims, certified to by any licensed abstractor or county recorder of the State of Utah" shall be admissible; the abstractor or recorder to certify to it under hand and seal);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4151 i (substantially like Ill. R. S. c. 116, § 13, down to the provision for filing a judicial opinion, and then, for a provision of purchase, substituting, "and thereupon said abstracts, copies, minutes, and extracts, or certified copies thereof, shall be admissible as 'prima facie' evidence"); § 4151 p (substantially like Ill. R. S. c. 116, §§ 28, 29, omitting the clause about parties' testimony, and inserting, before the proviso, "and shall receive as evidence any abstract of title made in the ordinary course of business prior to such injury, loss, or destruction, showing the title to such land or any part of the title thereto"; and adding, after the clauses for penalties and fees, that all persons engaged in such business shall file an assent to these provisions within thirty days of the filing of an opinion under § 4151*i supra*, no abstract or certified copy to be received until such assent is filed, except certified copies made before June 7, 1878).

§ 1706. [1] With the following compare some of the cases cited ante, § 1698 (scientific tables) and § 665 (scientific instruments).

ENGLAND: 1800, Abel v. Potts, 3 Esp. 242 (Lloyd's register, admitted to prove a capture, in an action on a policy); 1829, Bain v. Case, 3 C. & P. 496 (Lloyd's list, admitted to prove a Chilean declaration of blockade; but here treated as an admission); 1877, St. John Gaslight Co. v. Clerke, 17 N. Br. 516 (record of a gas meter duly verified and stamped according to law is admissible; but here on the theory that the contract made the meter "the sole arbiter").

UNITED STATES: California: 1894, People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 Pac. 538 (forgery made by a person having more or less direct acquaintance with the subject-matter, intended to be publicly circulated and consulted by persons interested and informed, tested by their use, and found by their experience to be trustworthy and actually relied upon as the basis of transactions in the trade, is a typical illustration. The principle, indeed, has large possibilities, which have already been recognized, though with due caution, by the Courts and in a few statutes. The application of the principle might well be left largely in the hands of the trial Court.

§ 1707. Hospital Records. The medical records of patients at a hospital, organized on the usual modern plan, especially a hospital supported by the Government or affiliated with a university medical school, deserve to be placed under the present principle. They should be admissible, either on identification of the original by the keeper, or on offer of a certified or sworn copy. There is a Necessity (ante, § 1421); the calling of all the individual attendant physicians and nurses who have coöperated to make the record even of a single patient would be a serious interference with convenience of hospital management. There is a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1422); for the records are made and relied upon in affairs of life and death. Moreover, amidst the day-to-day details of scores of hospital cases, the physicians and nurses can ordinarily recall from in the name of "M. Howell & Co."; a city directory admitted to show "that there was no such firm as M. H. & Co."); Iowa: 1885, Kuhns v. R. Co., 65 Ia. 528, 22 N. W. 661 ("the Herd Book," admitted as "an historical work of a particular subject," under Code § 4618, quoted ante, § 1693, to show certain registered heifers to be full blood of a certain breed); 1907, Warrick v. Reinhardt, 136 Ia. 27, 111 N. W. 983 (killing of a thoroughbred sow; a certificate of registry in the Iowa Breeders' Association, admitted); Kentucky: 1901, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kice, 109 Ky. 786, 60 S. W. 705 (American stud-books, compiled by experts and universally accepted by dealers as trustworthy, admitted to show a horse's pedigree); 1903, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Frazee, — Ky. —, 71 S. W. 436 (plaintiff's "private catalogue" of a horse's pedigree, not personally known to him, excluded); Stats. 1915, § 2572 d (livery-keeper's register; cited more fully ante, § 1639, n. 2); 1904, Marks v. Hardy's Adm'r, 117 Ky. 663, 78 S. W. 864, 1105 (reports of mercantile agency, not admitted as reputation to show a partnership); Louisiana: 1886, State v. Hahn, 38 La. An. 169, 171 (a city directory, in a prosecution for forging with a fictitious drawer's name, admitted to show merely "that M.'s name was not in it"); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12533 (breeding of a horse, provable by Wallace's year-book, Wallace's American trotting register and other named registers); Minnesota: 1866, Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 137 (bank-note "detectors," excluded); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 3669 (in trials for certain kinds of false dealing at horse-racing, the "records and books of racing and fair associations" are admissible); New York: 1888, Slocovich v. Ins. Co., 108 N. Y. 62, 14 N. E. 802, semble (the American Lloyds and other shipping registers, to show the condition, capacity, age, and value of ships, admissible); N. Y. St. 1921, c. 44, amending Cons. L. c. 1, Agriculture, adding § 322 (certificates of registry and of transfer of domestic animals, by a corporation, etc., for registering pure-bred domestic animals, admissible to prove "the facts and circumstances stated therein"); North Carolina: 1921, Buchan v. King, 182 N. C. 171, 108 S. E. 635 (false representations as to age of a race-horse; a year-book of race-horses, not published by a recognized trotting association, nor accepted by the racing community, rejected); Ohio: 1897, Pittsburg C. C. & L. R. Co. v. Sheppard, 56 Oh. 68, 46 N. E. 61 (the speed record of a famous horse, allowed to be shown by the annual reports of the American Trotting Association); Tennessee: 1898, Citizens' R. T. Co. v. Dew, 100 Tenn. 317, 45 S. W. 790 (register of pedigree of dogs, accepted in the community as evidence of pedigree, admitted); Texas: 1899, Pacific Express Co. v. Lothrop, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 339, 49 S. W. 898 (American Berkshire Association's registered pedigree of a hog, admitted to show value).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1621 (reputation of an animal's character).

actual memory few or none of the specific data entered; they themselves rely upon the record of their own action; hence, to call them to the stand would ordinarily add little or nothing to the information furnished by the record alone.

Accordingly, in some States, such hospital records have by statute been made admissible.[1]

No Court seems yet to have sanctioned such an exception on common-law principles. Moreover, several Courts have so illiberally applied the exception for Official Records (ante, § 1639) and for Regular Entries in the Course of Business (ante, § 1530) that many classes of reliable hospital records have been virtually excluded from use. The situation is a reproach to the common law; and such statutes should receive universal sanction.[2]

§ 1708. Common Carrier's Records of Liquor Transported, etc. The present principle is capable of liberal expansion to include other classes of commercial and industrial records, made by persons disinterested in the particular litigation, published or kept accessible to third persons, and customarily relied upon by them in the conduct of particular occupations.

§ 1707. [1] Massachusetts: St. 1905, c. 330 (hospitals supported by State or town or offering public charitable treatment, given a duty "to keep records of the cases under their care, and the history of the same, in books kept for the purpose," and these books to be admissible "as to all matters therein contained"; St. 1908, c. 269 amending St. 1905, c. 330, by extending it to "similar records kept prior to Apr. 25, 1905"); 1909, Delaney v. Framingham G. F. & P. Co., 202 Mass. 358, 88 N. E. 776 (certain hospital records, of the kind described in St. 1905, held properly excluded, because St. 1905 was passed only after the records were made and St. 1908 was passed only after the trial took place); St. 1912, c. 442, now Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 79 (amends foregoing statutes to read "records of the treatment of the cases under their care and the medical history of the same," and to substitute for "all matters therein contained" the terms "so far as such records relate to the treatment and medical history of such cases, but nothing herein contained shall be admissible as evidence which has reference to the question of liability"; this childish way of trying to keep out things that do not suit the interest of one party — like leaving out the joker in a pack of cards, or abolishing foul balls because the pitcher's skill needs a counterpoise — is unworthy of our profession in this age); 1917, Raymond v. Flint, 225 Mass. 521, 114 N. E. 811 (records of Danvers State Hospital, for 1896, admitted under St. 1912, c. 442, which expressly covered records "kept previous to April 5, 1905"); 1920, Leonard v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 234 Mass. 480, 125 N. E. 592 (under St. 1912, c. 442, § 2, amending St. 1905, c. 330, an entry relevant to the medical history and treatment of the case on the issues, is admissible, even though incidentally it bears on the defendant's liability; here an entry recording "odor of alcohol on breath" was held admissible on the facts, in an action for personal injury by running over the plaintiff on a car-track); Minnesota: St. 1921, c. 41, § 54 (workmen's compensation; "The records kept by a hospital of the medical or surgical treatment given to an employee in such hospital shall be admissible as evidence of the medical and surgical matters stated therein, but shall not be conclusive proof of such matters"); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 13605 (workmen's compensation; records of "every hospital or other person furnishing the employee with medical aid," admissible by certified copy); New York: Cons. L. 1909, Insanity, §93 (on habeas corpus, a patient's "medical history . . . as it appears in the case-book" of a State hospital is admissible); St. 1919, c. 633, being Cons. L. 1909, c. 71, Mental Deficiency, § 35 (mentally defective person committed to custody may apply for habeas corpus; "the history of the patient as it appears in the case records shall be given in evidence"); Pennsylvania: St. 1919, June 26, § 6, Dig. § 22044, Workman's Comp. (workmen's compensation; "the records kept by a hospital of the medical or surgical treatment given to an employee in such hospital shall be admissible as evidence of the medical and surgical matters stated therein").

[2] For judicial rulings dealing with hospital records on common law principles, see ante, § 1639 (official records) and ante, § 1530 (regular entries).

For the privilege of patient and physician as here applicable, see post, § 2380.

For the privilege of non-attendance, as applied to a hospital superintendent, see post, § 2206.

For a medical expert reading his report, see ante, § 1385.

The records of transportation by common carriers would seem to fulfil these conditions. But it has been left to the ingenuity of the legislators framing the statutes against alcoholic intemperance to recognize this expansion of the principle, — though in that field only. By the modern prohibition statutes, the common carrier's records of liquor transported are admissible to evidence the fact of transportation, the name of the consignor and the consignee, and other details.[1]

On the principle of the Exception for Regular Entries in the Course of Business (ante, § 1530), it would have been necessary to call to the stand or account for the absence of all persons who contributed their knowledge to the record; but not so under the present principle; hence, a notable facilitation of proof.

Moreover, this rule may also involve a deviation from the testimonial principle of Personal Knowledge. The device amounts to evidencing no more than the consignor's admissions, when the consignor is the defendant on a criminal charge; for the consignor signs the order for carriage; thus the carrier's record testifies to no more than the agent's personal observation justifies, except that some evidence of identity (e. g. of handwriting of the consignor) is in theory requisite. But in so far as the record is admitted to evidence the actual contents of the articles transported, or the identity of a consignee not signing, or the identity of any party signing without other evidence of identity, the statutory rule is a distinct inroad on the principle of requiring personal knowledge from every witness (ante, § 657).

§ 1708. [1] CANADA: Manitoba: St. 1917, c. 92, § 122 (temperance act; express company's record of liquor delivered; verified copy given to an inspector, to be evidence "that the parcel or package contains liquor"); The Ontario provision is a peculiar one: Ontario: St. 1916, c. 50, Temperance Act, § 48 ("for the purpose of evidence," every person licensed to sell liquor shall enter the name, etc. of the vendee; the failure of "such person" to make and produce such record shall be 'prima facie' evidence of illegal sale).

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1919, Oct. 28, c. 83, 41 Stat. 305, §§ 13, 34 (liquor prohibition Act; "every carrier is to make a record of liquor carried and delivered and of the consignee and his identifying witness; all records and reports kept or filed under the provisions of this Act" are open to inspection, and certified copies are admissible "with like effect as the originals"); Alaska: U. S. St. 1917, Feb. 14, c. 53, § 7 (intoxicating liquor in Alaska; carrier's record of shipments, provable by agent's certified copy, to be "evidence of the facts stated therein"); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 3707 (liquor traffic; common-carrier's required record of liquor transported, filed monthly as "public records," to be admissible); Idaho: St. 1913, c. 27, p. 126, § 6 (carriers of liquor, the record required to be kept may be evidenced by the carrier's agent's transcript); 1917, State v. Maguire, 31 Ida. 24, 169 Pac. 175 (St. 1913, p. 126, c. 27, § 6, applied; the carrier's record is evidence of delivery to the consignee without evidencing the consignee's signature to the receipt); Louisiana: St. 1915, No. 23 (common carrier shall not deliver liquor without taking a written receipt signed by the consignee; receipt is to be sent to the local clerk of court, and to be admitted in evidence); 1917, State v. Ferris, 142 La. 198, 76 So. 608 (St. 1915, No. 23, applied to admit receipts for liquor, signed by defendant and forwarded by the carrier to the court); South Dakota: St. 1919, Feb. 21, c. 246 (intoxicating liquors; amending Rev. C. § 10282; carrier's record book of liquors transported to be admissible); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 3364 (common carrier's record of liquor carried, to be "'prima facie' evidence of the facts therein stated"); Virginia: 1917, Cochran v. Com., 122 Va. 801, 94 S. E. 329 (receiving delivery of liquor from an express company; the express record "was indeed sufficient independent evidence of the corpus delicti both by St. 1916, c. 146, § 40, and independent of statute").

Topic XI: AFFIDAVITS.

§ 1709. Affidavits inadmissible at Common Law; Exceptions Recognized. The requirement of cross-examination, or an opportunity therefor, which is the essential feature of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1362), is clearly not satisfied when an affidavit is offered; because, though under oath, it is uttered 'ex parte,' without notice to the opponent to afford him the opportunity of cross-examination. Even if notice were in fact given in a particular case and the opportunity of attendance thus afforded, the sworn statement thus made would not of itself satisfy the rule; for unless the officer before whom the oath was taken were one empowered by law to supervise and direct the procedure of taking the testimony, it could not be conceded that there was a real opportunity for a cross-examination in a true and adequate sense. So that, in order truly to furnish such an opportunity, the officer must be thus empowered, and then the sworn statement becomes in effect a deposition, which is conceded at common law to be admissible. Thus, where a statute empowering an officer taking affidavits provides for notice and cross-examination, the case is assimilated to a deposition, even though the name "affidavit" is used; and such statutes have been included in §§ 1380–1382, ante.

At common law, then, an affidavit, i. e. a mere sworn statement made out of court, is inadmissible, for lack of the opportunity of cross-examination. This rule, with the authorities, has been already examined (ante, § 1384).

The exceptions to this rule at common law were rare. There was of course a considerable recognition of affidavits in certain classes of proceedings with which the present exposition is not concerned,[1] namely, in the courts of Chancery,[2] in the Ecclesiastical courts (including admiralty matters[3] and testamentary and matrimonial matters), and in non-responsory proceedings (motions, and the like) in the Common-Law courts.[4] But in trials by jury in the Common-Law courts, there seem to have been but two excepted cases, one of which was purely local.

(1) In proving the loss of the original of a document in order to admit a copy, the party himself, though interested, was allowed to testify to the loss; the hardship of proving it otherwise being thought to justify an exception to the rule of disqualification by interest. The party thus admitted was by some Courts allowed even to take the stand as a witness, but by all it was conceded that at least his affidavit might be received.[5] Thus the result was § 1709. [1] As explained ante, § 4.

[2] Ante, §§ 1377, 1384.

[3] 1860, Dr. Lushington, in The Peerless, 1 Lush. 30, 41.

[4] 1841, R. v. Ryle, 9 M. & W. 227, 238; the statutes cited post, § 1710; and the authorities cited ante §§ 4c–4g (rules of evidence before administrative tribunals, etc.).

For the authorities on the rule for habeas corpus proceedings, see a careful opinion by Lumpkin, J., in Robertson v. Heath (1909), 132 Ga. 310, 64 S. E. 73. For the use of affidavits before commissioners of immigration, see Choy Gum v. Backus, 9th C. C. A., 223 Fed. 487.

[5] Cases cited ante, § 1196. The affidavit could not be received to prove the document's contents: 1873, McFarland v. Dey, 69 Ill. 419, 421.

reached, in most Courts, on the general principle of necessity (ante, § 1421); the party's incompetency to take the stand created a necessity for resorting to his extrajudicial statement. It would follow that, since parties have been made competent by statute, there is no longer a necessity for resorting to his affidavit. This is probably the law, for all ordinary cases (ante, § 1196) of proof of loss of a document; but the statutes which regulate the recording of deeds and the proof of a recorded deed (ante, § 1225) have in many States perpetuated for that class of documents the common-law exception and have expressly sanctioned the use of a party's affidavits.[6] But neither at common law nor in the rule's perpetuation under these statutes about recorded deeds is there any authority for giving similar sanction to a third person's affidavit to prove the document's loss; for this would fall quite without the reason of the exception.[7]

(2) In Pennsylvania, a long-standing tradition admits an affidavit from a foreign country to prove facts of family history, and particularly the copy of a parish-register or a family Bible.[8]

§ 1710. Exceptions created by Statute (Publication of Notice, Attesting Will-Witness, Accounts, Foreclosure Sale, Copies of Bank and Corporation Books, Official Analyses, Forgery of a Bond, Translations, Ex Parte Proceedings, etc.). The general principle of Necessity (ante, § 1421), underlying the Exceptions to the Hearsay rule, has been exemplified in many statutes sanctioning the use of affidavits in various classes of cases where serious and frequent inconvenience would be caused by requiring the calling of witnesses in court and where under the special circumstances (ante, § 1422) there is little reason to fear false testimony and little need for the searching process of cross-examination.

The subjects of these statutes are too casual and varied to admit of a systematic classification, and in only a few instances has there been a general

[6] Statutes and cases cited ante, § 1225.

[7] 1870, Becker v. Quigg, 54 Ill. 390, 394 (the common-law allowance of affidavits by the party, who was incompetent to testify, and the statutory continuance of this, does not admit the affidavit of a third person); 1873, McFarland v. Dey, 69 Ill. 419, 421 (same); 1829, Poignand v. Smith, 8 Pick. Miss. 272, 277 ("The affidavit of a party on the question of loss of a paper may be admitted, to exclude any presumption that he may have it in his possession or know where it is; but those who may be admitted as witnesses must testify in the usual form, in order that the advantage of cross-examination may be preserved"); 1841, Viles v. Moulton, 13 Vt. 510, 515 (third person's affidavit not admitted).

Contra, but unsound; 1852, McCann v. Beach, 2 Cal. 25, 30, semble; 1858, Bagley v. Eaton, 10 Cal. 126, 146 (affidavit of one competent to testify on the stand is receivable; though the Court may require examination on the stand); 1880, Taylor v. McIrwin, 94 Ill. 488, 491 (affidavit of search for a deed, by a recorder in another State, admitted).

[8] 1759, Hyam v. Edwards, 1 Dall. 2 (affidavit before the Mayor of London, received to prove a copy of a birth-and-death register there); 1791, Douglass v. Sanderson, 1 Yeates 15 (affidavit of authenticity of a leaf of a family Bible, made before the borough burgess and notary of Wilmington; admitted "under the special circumstances of the case in proof of pedigree"): post 1776, Fockler v. Simpson, 1 Yeates 17 ("an 'ex parte' affidavit made in England was good evidence in case of pedigree"); 1823, Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. 383, 387 (affidavit of a copy of a parish-register in the Barbadoes, sworn before the deputy-secretary there, received; "the case of Hyam v. Edwards is law," though "there is no more reason to admit 'ex parte' affidavits in cases of pedigree than in other cases").

recognition of the exception in many jurisdictions. The statutory use of affidavits to prove the loss of a recorded deed has been already examined (ante, §§ 1709, 1225); the remaining instances concern chiefly the following subjects:[1] service or publication of notice, particularly publication in a news-

§ 1710. [1] The statutes, with a few interpreting rulings, are as follows; compare the statutes ante, § 1674 (admitting certain certificates without oath).

ENGLAND: for some English statutes, see ante, § 1380 (summons for cross-examination).

CANADA: for other Canadian statutes, see ante, § 1380. British Columbia: 1918, Macdonald v. Macdonald, 18 D. L. R. 308, B. C. (Divorce Act, § 21, allowing proof of adultery by affidavit, applied);
Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 55 (affidavits of service of notice, filed or deposited in a local land titles or registry office, admissible); c. 46, Rule 476 (the judge may admit proof by affidavits, on such terms as he thinks reasonable; except where the other party "'bona fide' desires the production of a witness for cross-examination and such witness can be produced"); R. 479 (affidavits may be used by consent or by leave of Court); c. 47, § 56 (affidavits in surrogate courts);
Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Rules of Court Ord. 33, R. 1, Ord. 33, R. 1, 22 (Court may receive affidavits, but may order the witness to be produced for cross-examination);
Northwest Territories: Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21 Rules 263, 286, 293 (affidavits may on special conditions be received);
Nova Scotia: Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 1 (like Man. Rule 476); Ord. 36, R. 1 (upon motions, etc., affidavits may be used; but the Court may order attendance for cross-examination); R. 28 (regulations for cross-examination of affiants); Crown Rules 5 (applies Ord. 36, supra);
Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 63, § 119 (money actions under $25; affidavit of a person "resident without the limits of the county" may be received; but the judge may before judgment require the person to answer interrogatories); Rules of Court 1914, R. 269 (cited ante, § 1380); c. 166, § 46 (sworn documents by surveyor, and evidence taken by him, filed in registry office, to be admissible).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1907, § 2491 (plaintiff's affidavit of loss, etc., contents, and non-payment of a mercantile instrument, admissible); § 5275 (printer's affidavit of publication of newspaper notice of limited partnership, admissible); § 4431 (admissible in guardian's settlements); § 2674 (admissible in administration settlements); § 3970 (in suits upon accounts, an affidavit by a competent witness to an itemized statement of account, admissible on certain conditions); § 4667 (publisher's affidavit as to notice, etc., of deposition in perpetuam, receivable); § 2993 (publication of any notice in a newspaper is provable by affidavit of the printer, publisher, clerk, or superintendent); § 2994 (posting of any required notice is provable by affidavit with copy filed in court); St. 1915, No. 805, p. 919 (affidavits of relationship of parties to conveyances, filed for record, are admissible, if the affidavit is deceased or non-resident, or of unknown residence, or too old, sick, or infirm to attend court, or female);
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 884 (proof of service of a summons may be made by affidavit of person serving or, in case of publication, by affidavit of printer or foreman or principal clerk); §§ 1470, 1472 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 831–833); § 497 (married woman's recorded affidavit listing personalty etc. as separate property, to be 'prima facie' evidence of the facts stated);
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4199 (affidavit allowable "to verify a pleading, to prove the service of a summons, notice, or other process in an action, to obtain a provisional remedy, a stay of proceedings, or a warning order, or upon a motion"); § 4200 (affidavit sufficient to establish an account in a suit thereon, unless denied on oath);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2009 ("An affidavit may be used to verify a pleading or a paper in a special proceeding, to prove the service of a summons, notice, or other paper in an action or special proceeding, to obtain a provisional remedy, the examination of a witness, or a stay of proceedings, or upon a motion"); § 2010 (publication of a document, or notice required to be published in a newspaper, provable by affidavit of the printer or his foreman or principal clerk, annexed to a copy); § 465 (proof of service may be made by affidavit of the person serving or of the printer publishing); Pol. C. § 3769 (collector's affidavit of publication of notice of sale for taxes, admissible); § 1117 (affidavit of registration is evidence of the affiant being an elector of the county); P. C. 1872, § 1204 (when the judge considers circumstances affecting sentence, no affidavit is to be received); Civ. C. §§ 2471, 2484 (affidavit of publication of change of partnership, by the newspaper's printer, publisher, or chief clerk, admissible); § 1426 m (affidavit or county recorder's copy, of labor done on mining-claim, admissible);
Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6549 (notice required to be published in a newspaper provable by the printer's or publisher's certificate; compare the statutes ante, § 1674); §§ 1764, 1770 (publication of notice of irrigation claim; for a newspaper, provable by the "sworn paper; attesting witness' proof of a will's execution; items of an account; proceedings of a foreclosure or probate sale; copies of bank-books and corporation records; chemical analysis of foods, fertilizers, and the like; genuineness or forgery of a government bond or note; non-residence of a witness; age of an certificate of the publisher of such newspaper"; for posted copies, "by the affidavit of some credible person, certified to be such" by the officer administering the oath); § 6569 (service of subpœna, provable by server's affidavit);

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 4949 ("any or all of the attesting witnesses" may make affidavit, at request of testator or executor, which "shall be accepted" as if the oath had been taken in court); 1901, Vivian's Appeal, 54 Conn. 257, 50 Atl. 797 (affidavit of attesting-witness, admitted under the statute); § 5723 (court stenographer's notes of testimony, "verified by oath," admissible);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3937 (when a marriage certificate was not made, or is lost, or "by reason of death or other cause" cannot be obtained, "the marriage may be proved by affidavit" "made by two competent witnesses who were present and saw the marriage ceremony performed," filed and recorded like a certificate); § 6084 (in a prosecution for forging, etc., a note, etc., of the U. S. or a State or Territory, a certificate under oath of the secretary of the treasury of the respective government is admissible to prove the forged nature of the note, etc.); § 79 (publisher's or bill-poster's affidavit, admissible to prove notice of special legislation asked); § 3576 (habeas corpus; "when it shall be inconvenient [to whom?] to procure the personal attendance of a witness," his affidavit, taken on notice, may be used);
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 3200 (limited, partnership notice; affidavit of "printers publishers, or editors of the newspapers," admissible);
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3395 (newspaper printer's or publisher's affidavit of publication of partnership notice, admissible);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7994 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2009); § 7995 (like id. § 2010); § 3259 (tax-collector's affidavit of publication of notice of tax-sale, admissible); § 6680 (service of summons may be proved by affidavit; when made by publication, by affidavit of printer or his foreman or principal clerk); § 9037 (fixing sentence; like Cal. P. C. § 1204);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 100, § 1 (when a notice is required by law, court order, or contract, to be published in a newspaper, and no other mode of proof is provided, "the certificate of the publisher, by himself or his authorized agent," with copy annexed, is admissible); c. 88, § 4 (certificate of "one or more of his neighbors" of a buyer branding or marking stock, admissible to prove the time of branding, nature of brand, and previous branding, but not to prove ownership); 1869, Kettering v. Jacksonville, 50 Ill. 39, 41 (city ordinance; newspaper publisher's affidavit received under a charter);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 489 ("acts and proceedings of corporations," provable by sworn copy); § 496 (whenever notice is required to be published in a newspaper, the affidavit of the printer or his employee being clerk or printer, is admissible with a copy of the notice); § 504 (similar for published service of process or notice; ordinary service, provable by affidavit of the server); § 8314 (affidavit admissible to prove notice, etc., of lien of a mechanic, etc.);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 3536, Rev. Code § 7181 (service of notice of action, by publication in newspaper; proof allowable "by the affidavit of the publisher or his foreman"); § 4634, Rev. Code § 7341 (like Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8912); §§ 4677, 4678, Rev. Code §§ 7384, 7385 (providing for notice and cross-examination, in the officer's discretion, of an affiant); § 4680, Rev. Code § 7387 (publications "required to be made in a newspaper," provable "by the affidavit of any person having knowledge of the fact," if made within six months); § 4681, Rev. Code § 7388 (affidavit of "any competent witness," admissible to prove the "posting up or service of any notice or other paper required by law"); Rev. Code, § 7169 (proof of service of process may be made by affidavit); 1878, Farrell v. Leighton, 49 Ia. 174, 176 (Code § 4680, formerly 3697, applied; publisher's affidavit under § 3536, formerly 2620, not required); 1921, Schultz' Estate, — Ia. —, 185 N. W. 24 (proof of publication made by affidavit under Code 1897, §§ 4680–4683, is not the exclusive method of proof);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7254 (affidavit allowable to verify a pleading, to prove service of a summons, notice, or other process, "to obtain a provisional remedy, the examination of a witness, a stay of proceedings, or upon a motion"); § 7283 ("written evidence" in a language not English; a translation is provable by the translator's affidavit); § 7282 (religious society's register of marriages, etc., provable by affidavit-copy by the pastor, clerk, or other keeper); § 6972, St. 1909, c. 182, § 21 (service by publication, provable by affidavit of "the printer, or his foreman or principal clerk, or other person knowing the same");
Kentucky: C. C. P. § 547 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 2009); Stats. 1915, § 14 (publication of notice, provable by affidavit of newspaper publisher or proprietor); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 76, § 24 (affidavit of employed minor; copy of a church register; translation of testimony in a foreign language; ancillary or preliminary proceedings in general; and inventories by an executor or administrator. The wider extension of these statutory exceptions is to be approved; for in most of these instances, and others as yet notice of sale of deceased's estate, admissible); c. 87, § 127 (plaintiff's affidavit to account in action on itemized account, admissible); c. 123, § 8 (forgery of bank-bills, etc.; like Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 267, § 15);

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 48 (oath of a "disinterested credible witness" before a justice or other officer, admissible to prove goods sold, work done, money paid, and the value thereof and promise to pay; provided the party-claimant makes affidavit of 'bona fides' before the first day of the trial term); § 49 (creditor's account for money, goods, or other account-items, sworn before an officer, admissible); Art. 73, § 8 (newspaper editor's or disinterested person's affidavit of publication of notice of terms of partnership, admissible); Art. 84, § 8 (vessel-captain's affidavit giving a copy of a shipping-article, admissible to prove subscription by a seaman); Art. 93, § 8 (administrator's affidavit-list of debts of a decedent, admissible on a plea of insufficient assets); §§ 351, 353 (affidavit of a foreign will's execution by a subscribing witness, or of the hand-writing of a testator or deceased subscribing witness, admissible);

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 255, §§ 6, 8 (same for mortgagee's notice of intention to foreclose, and pledgee of personalty's notice); c. 202, § 15 (same for notice of sale by executor, administrator, or guardian); c. 60, §§ 57, 80 (same for collector's demand of payment of taxes, notice of sale, etc.); c. 267, § 15 (in charges connected with counterfeit Government securities, certificate under oath of certain appropriate Government officers is admissible to prove forgery); c. 195, § 12 (affidavit of an executor's notice of appointment, admissible in certain cases); c. 233, § 77 (copy of a domestic bank's, etc. books, under affidavit of the bank custodian, admissible on certain conditions); c. 192, § 2 (subscribing witness' affidavit, admissible in the uncontested probate of wills); c. 231, § 125 (Supreme Court on appellate proceedings may take supplementary evidence by affidavit);

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 2789 (affidavit admissible to prove notice in village condemnation proceedings); § 2822 (village or city condemnation proceedings, etc.; notice provable by affidavit of the printer of the newspaper or "some person in his employ knowing the facts," or by the person posting it); §§ 4349, 4364 (election for county road system or order to lay out road; notice provable by the affidavit of any one "knowing the facts"); § 6980 (township resolution licensing peddlers, etc.; affidavit of notice by one posting it, admissible); § 8977 (affidavit of notice of meeting of a mining company alienating lands, admissible); § 11232 (same for a corporation for treating disease); § 14007 (affidavit of an executor or administrator or "some other person having knowledge of the facts," admissible to prove notice of sale); §§ 12523–12526 (publication of a newspaper-notice, provable by affidavit of the printer or foreman or principal clerk); §§ 14963, 14965 (affidavit of notice of a foreclosure sale, by the printer of a newspaper or some one in his employ knowing the facts, or an affidavit of sale, by the auctioneer, admissible); § 14801 (affidavit of service of a lien-notice by "such person serving or posting the same," admissible); § 15442 (in prosecutions for forging, etc., bills of credit issued for U. S. or any State or Territory, the certificate under oath of the secretary of the treasury or treasurer of such government is admissible to prove "the same to be forged"); § 12536 (affidavit admissible to prove partnership); § 11738 (affidavits of identity, etc. recorded with register of deeds; quoted ante, § 1644);

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8421 (affidavit of a printer or his foreman or clerk of the publication of any notice, advertisement, etc., which by law is required or authorized to be published in such newspaper, admissible); § 8422 (affidavit by an officer of the State Historical Society, recorded with the register of deeds, of a legal notice in a newspaper purporting to be published in this State before 1900, admissible as to certain specified facts); § 8460 (in prosecutions for forging, etc., any bill, etc., issued for the U. S. or any State, a certificate under oath of the U. S. secretary of treasury or treasurer, or of the secretary or treasurer of the State, admissible to prove the forged character); § 8138 (to prove a sale on foreclosure, an affidavit of publication of notice, by the printer of the newspaper or "some person in his employ knowing the facts," admissible; and to prove the facts of sale, an affidavit by a person acting as auctioneer thereat, admissible); § 7740 (service of papers, provable by affidavit of person serving, or of printer or his foreman or clerk, or of person mailing);

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1980, Hem. § 1640 (publication of notice in a newspaper required by law or court order, provable by copy with affidavit of "the printer, publisher, clerk, or superintendent of the newspaper"); § 1981, Hem. § 1641 (posting of notice required by law or court order, provable by copy with affidavit of posting); § 1992, Hem. § 1657 (affidavit of a unrecognized, the general and uniform adoption of this simple mode of proof would bring great advantage without incurring appreciable risk.

Affidavits are of course sometimes available in evidence upon other principles than the present Exception, i. e. in cases where they are not offered as subscribing witness, before an officer in the State, admissible if no contest);

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 77 (affidavit of the editor or publisher of a newspaper, admissible to prove publication of notice by an executor or administrator); §§ 192, 197 (affidavits admissible in certain cases for claims against a deceased's estate); § 5353 (church register of marriages, etc., kept in the State, provable by copy verified by the affidavit of the pastor or other head of the society or by the clerk or other keeper of the register); § 5380 (affidavit of a "competent witness" admissible to prove "an assignment of or an indorsement on any bond, bill, or note"); § 5381 (so also to prove the existence of a partnership; the details of statement being prescribed); § 5384 (such affidavits must be filed a specified number of days before trial); § 5397 (when written evidence is in other than the English language, a competent translator's affidavit of translation may be received); § 10614 (when a marriage record is destroyed and the celebrant is dead, cannot be found, or refuses to give a certificate, the affidavits of "two credible persons who witnessed such marriage" may be recorded and admitted); § 3000 (demand in forcible entry and detainer, provable by a private person's sworn return); § 10404 (affidavit of a printer or publisher, admissible to prove publication of any notice required by law or court order, or done under a deed of trust or power of attorney);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10636–7 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2009, 2010); § 8023 (affidavit of publication of a partnership notice, by the "printer, publisher, or chief clerk of a newspaper," admissible); § 9122 (proof of service may be made by affidavit of the printer serving or by affidavit of the printer, etc., showing publication); § 12068 (affidavits not admissible on a hearing to fix sentence);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8878 (affidavits allowable as in Cal. C. C. P. § 2009); § 8908 ("publications required by law to be made in a newspaper," provable by affidavit "of any person having knowledge of the facts," if sworn within six months of the last day of publication); § 8909 (posting or service of any paper required by law, provable by affidavit of "any competent witness," made within six months); § 8912 (copy of field-notes or plat of a county surveyor, "certified under oath," admissible to prove "the shape or dimensions of a tract of land, or any other fact whose ascertainment requires only the exercise of scientific skill or calculation"); § 5652 (recorded affidavits "explaining or correcting any apparent defect in the chain of title to any real estate," admissible); § 8586 (service by publication, provable by affidavit of printer or foreman or principal clerk or "other person knowing the same"); 1903, Home Ins. Co. v. Clark, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 1056 (affidavit of the publishing company's president, received);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5904 (on application of a non-resident for administration, affidavit sufficient to prove identity on certain conditions); § 5873 (subscribing will-witness' affidavit; cited ante, § 1310); § 2914 (affidavits of publication of notice of partnership, by printer, publisher, or chief clerk of a newspaper, admissible); § 5032 (proof of service of summons; like Cal. C. C. P. § 415);
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 56, § 17 (affidavit of notice of taxation, admissible); c. 61, § 7 (affidavit of notice of sale for taxes, admissible); c. 139, § 16 ("the affidavit of the party making an entry into real estate, under the second method of foreclosure, and of the witnesses thereto," and a copy of the notice under the second and third methods, "verified by affidavit," when recorded, "shall be evidence of entry, possession, and publication"); 1861, Wendell v. Abbott, 43 N. H. 68, 73 (affidavit of entrant and witnesses in foreclosure of mortgage; the exception is to be strictly construed, and an affidavit of one witness merely, without that of the party, is sufficient);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 1601 (in prosecutions for counterfeiting, etc., a note, etc., issued on behalf of the U. S. or any State or Territory, the certificate under oath of U. S. treasurer or secretary of the Treasury, or State or Territorial secretary or treasurer, is admissible);
New York: C. P. A. § 367 ("Where a public officer is required or authorized to make a certificate or affidavit," it is admissible; see quotation in full ante, § 1674); § 370 (affidavit of newspaper publication of notice, by the printer, etc., admissible); § 371 (affidavit of service of notice, by the person serving, admissible if the person is dead or insane or his attendance is not compellable with due diligence); Cons. L. 1909, Real Property, § 551 (recorded affidavit of foreclosure-sale, admissible);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 46 (publication of notice to decedent's creditors, provable by clerk's certified copy of affidavit of proprietor, etc., of newspaper, filed with clerk of court); § 3266 (publication of notice of partnership, provable by affidavit of newspaper proprietor); 1915, Nall v. Kelly, 169 N. C.

the assertions of the affiant to prove the fact stated. These other available modes are three in number: (1) where an affidavit filed by an opponent, in the same or another litigation, is offered as his admission (ante, § 1075); (2) where the opponent's affidavit, in the present trial, that an absent witness

717, 86 S. E. 627 (applying St. 1897, c. 480, Rev. 1905, § 1625, as to verified itemized statements of account);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 6440 (like Cal. Civ. C. § 2484); § 7887 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 2009, omitting "a paper in a special proceeding," putting "process" for "paper" in the next clause, and omitting "or special proceeding"); § 7913 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2010, adding "publisher" and substituting "clerk or bookkeeper" for "principal clerk"); § 7436 (proof of service of summons, etc., may be made by affidavit); § 7887 ("An affidavit may be used to verify a pleading, to prove the service of a summons, notice or other process in any action, to obtain a provisional remedy, an examination of a witness, a stay of proceedings or upon a motion and in any other case permitted by law");
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 10713 (affidavit of publisher, admissible to prove publication of notice of appointment); § 11045 (affidavit of notice of eminent domain proceedings, admissible); § 2768 (affidavit of death of ancestor and of facts of heirship, recorded with deed of heir, to be 'prima facie' evidence "so far as competent"); § 11523 (ancillary proceedings; like Cal. C. C. P. § 2009);
Oklahoma: Comp. Stats. 1921, § 8146 (notice of dissolution of partnership, provable by affidavit of "the printer, publisher, or chief clerk of a newspaper"); § 610 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2009, omitting "or a paper in a special proceeding" and "or special proceeding"); § 648 (when written evidence is in a language other than English, a competent translator's affidavit of translation into English is admissible);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 831 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2009, omitting the first clause as to verification); § 833 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2010, but allowing use only within six months); § 2008 (in a prosecution for forging, etc., a note, bond, etc., of the U. S. or any State or Territory, "the certificate duly sworn to" of the U. S. treasurer or secretary of the treasury or of a State or Territorial secretary or treasurer, is admissible to prove the note's counterfeit character);
Pennsylvania: St. 1883, June 22, Dig. 1920, §§ 10343–10345, Evidence ("verified" copies of bank-book entries, receivable where the bank is not a party, unless against affidavit of injustice; nature of the verifying affidavit specified); 1865, Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. 332, 341 (to show that no effects of a murdered person were found, the sworn inventory of the administrator was received);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 348 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2009, 2010); § 400 (service of process; like Cal. C. C. P. § 415);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1496, 1497 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2009, 2010);
Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 173, § 10, c. 174, § 5 (sworn certificate of the analyzer of milk or of vinegar submitted for analysis by the inspector, admissible); c. 253, § 15 (affidavit of notice of sale, by a person causing a sale of an administrator, guardian, sheriff, mortgagee, etc., admissible);
South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, § 5527 (sworn return of a surveyor appointed by the parties or the Court, admissible on an issue of title or boundary); C. C. P. 1922, § 372 (proof of service of summons, etc., may be made by affidavit of person serving, and of publication, by affidavit of printer or foreman or principal clerk); Crim. L. 1922, § 712 (violation of shipping law; ship's articles, by copy authenticated by the affidavit of the captain, admissible to prove "that any seaman whose name appears subscribed thereto has signed the agreement");
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 1339, 1347 (like Cal. Civ. C. §§ 2471, 2484); § 2721 (publication of any notice, etc., required by law in any newspaper, provable by affidavit of "any printer, foreman of any printer, or publisher of any newspaper published in this State"); § 2754 (admissible to verify a pleading, prove service of process, obtain a provisional remedy, a witness' examination, a story of proceedings, or upon a motion, "and in any other case permitted by law"); § 2892 (recorded affidavits of foreclosure sale); § 3262 (administrator's appointment; nonresident's affidavit, admissible to evidence identity); § 8812 (printer's affidavits, admissible to evidence publication of notice of sale of stock-shares); § 10324 (illegal sale of liquor; quoted ante, § 1680);
Tennessee: Shannon's Code, § 7343 (affidavit of defendant in bastardy denying intercourse in the period of gestation, admissible);
Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3267 (affidavit of a subscribing witness, made "in open court," admissible to prove a will; such affidavits are also admissible for the two witnesses to handwriting of testator and subscribing witnesses); Utah: Comp. St. 1917, §§ 3442, 3443 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2009, 2010); § 3895 (affidavit of mining improvements, admissible); § 7866 (publication or posting of probate notice "required to be published or posted may be given by the affidavit respectively of the publisher or principal clerk of the newspaper in which notice was published, or of the person who would testify to a certain tenor, is judicially admitted to be true in order to prevent a continuance (post, § 2595); (3) where an affidavit furnished by the beneficiary to the insurer as a proof of loss is received as a verbal act fulfilling the conditions of the insurance contract (post, § 1770) or as an admission (ante, § 1073).

Topic XII: STATEMENTS BY A VOTER.

§ 1712. Voter's Declarations as to Qualifications, Domicil, or Bribery. In order to ascertain the qualifications of a voter, for the purpose of striking out a vote if found to have been cast by a disqualified person, resort is sometimes desired to be made to the extrajudicial declarations of the voter himself. Such declarations can be available, upon the general principles of evidence, in only one of three ways.

(1) If the qualification depends upon the voter's domicil, then his declarations, at the time of an act of residence, or removal of residence, stating his intent as to the purpose or permanency of the act, are receivable, in the same way that any person's declarations of domiciliary intent are receivable, namely, as statements of a mental condition (post, § 1727), or as verbal acts (post, § 1784). The rule here would be neither more nor less favorable for the posted the notices"); § 918 (notice of corporate stock assessment; affidavits of printer, foreman, or principal clerk of newspaper, and of secretary or auctioneer, admissible);

Virginia: Code 1919, § 6224 (affidavit that a witness or party is or resides without the State, receivable; "certificate" of an editor, or affidavit of any other person, as to publication in a newspaper as required by law, receivable); 1841, Cunningham v. Smithson, 12 Leigh 32, 38, 67, semble (the certificate under Code § 2358 must be on oath);
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 237 (like Wis. Stats. § 2642);
West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 32 (that a witness or party resides or is out of State, is provable by affidavit; that notice was published as required in a newspaper, is provable by "certificate" of the editor or publisher or by affidavit of any other person); c. 121, § 1 (return of any legal notice, provable by affidavit);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 2642 (proof of service of civil summons, etc., may be made by affidavit of the person serving or of the publisher or printer, or his foreman or principal clerk, in case of publication); § 3537 (proof of foreclosure sale may be made by affidavit of publication of notice by the newspaper printer or "some person in his employ knowing the facts," and by affidavit of sale by the auctioneer, or "in case of his death or other disability," by "any person having knowledge of the facts"); § 925 (47) (publication of a municipal ordinance, provable by the filed affidavit of the printer or his foreman); § 4164 (substantially like N. Y. C. P. A. § 367); § 4173 (notice required by law to be published, provable by affidavit of the printer or foreman of "any newspaper in the State"); § 4173 a (service of notice required, provable by affidavit of the person serving it, where no other mode is expressly prescribed); §§ 4174, 4175 (notice of application to court or of sale of realty, provable by affidavit of the printer or foreman or principal clerk of the newspaper, recorded respectively with the clerk of court or the register of deeds); § 418 a (notice required by corporate by-laws, provable by affidavit of the person giving it, filed with the corporate clerk); § 4627 (substantially like Minn. Gen. St. § 8460); Wis. St. 1921, c. 425, amending Stats. 1919, § 2238 a (admitting recorded affidavits duly witnessed and acknowledged and stating facts "as to possession of any premises, descent, heirship, date of birth, death or marriage or as to the identity of a party to any conveyance of record, or . . . that . . . any such party . . . is single or married, or as to the identification of any plats of subdivisions of any city or village");
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4642 (publication notice of foreclosure sale, etc., provable by recorded affidavit of the proprietor or manager of the newspaper or "some person in his employ knowing the facts"; sale provable by the auctioneer's recorded affidavit); § 5829 (affidavits allowable in certain ancillary proceedings); § 6180 (affidavits may be used on application for injunction).

statements of voters in election controversies than for others' statements in other controversies.

(2) If the qualification depends upon any other circumstances, or if, though it depends upon domicil, the statement is of an external fact (such as the place of residence, and not of an existing intent), then the voter's statement presents the ordinary case of an assertion of fact obnoxious to the Hearsay rule; and it can be made available only (a) as being the admission of a party or privy (ante, § 1076), or (b) as coming under a special and separate exception to the Hearsay rule. The statements ordinarily presenting this question are statements that the voter has not the requisite property-holding or is not a citizen or has been bribed.

(a) In England, the theory that such statements may be treated as a party's admissions has always been advanced as the correct one:

> 1837, Mr. Thesiger, arguing, in Nowlan's Case, Falc. & Fitzh. 70, 73: "A voter who has voted for the sitting member is always considered as a party, and it is on that ground that his declarations are admissible. The question is always considered to be between the voter and the party questioning his vote, and not merely between the sitting member and the petitioner."

It seems clear, however, that the voter is in no accurate sense a party to the proceedings; nor is he, after casting his vote, even indirectly or equitably interested in the controversy between rival claimants to the office:

> 1833, Serjt. Merewether, arguing, in Southampton Case, 2 Cockb. & R. El. C. 100, 114: "The rule of law is that no evidence can be received except upon oath. . . . The principle [as to a party's admissions] does not apply to the case in question, for the voter, having once given his vote, has no longer any interest in it; his interest has been transferred to the sitting member. He has therefore no longer such an inducement to speak the truth, arising from a sense of his own interest, as would make it safe to receive his declarations as to his own right divested of the sanction of an oath."

This theory of a party's admissions sufficed, nevertheless (though with occasional modifications), to establish the rule in English parliamentary practice; and that practice has been followed by the English courts, since electoral controversies have been placed in their jurisdiction.[1]

§ 1712. [1] 1775, Milborne Port Case, 1 Doug. El. C., 2d ed., 97, 102, 134 (declarations of intention to commit a fraud, by one apparently an agent of a candidate, were admitted; no reason stated); 1775, Petersfield Case, 3 Doug. El. C. 3, 11 (declaration by a voter of having been bribed, not admitted in order to prove the fact upon the candidate, but admitted to disqualify the declarant as voter); 1775, Ivelchester Case, 3 Doug. El. C. 151, 159 (same; the result being that the question "Whose money did the voters say they had received?" was excluded, but the question "In whose interest did they say that they were to vote in consequence of their taking this money?" was allowed); 1775, Shaftesbury Case, 2 Doug. El. C. 303, 309 (same ruling, even after a voter had taken oath denying bribery); 1776, Worcester Case, 3 Doug. El. C. 239, 276 (same ruling); 1785, Bedford Case, 2 Luders, 381, 411 (semble, declarations admissible); 1796, Leominster Case, 2 Peckw. 391, 395 (a "declaration of a voter which tends to destroy his vote, is admissible whether made before or after the election," unless it involves penal consequences); 1804, Middlesex Case, 2 Peckw. 1, 141 (declarations as to property disqualification, held inadmissible; no reason

(b) There remains the possibility of recognizing a distinct exception to the Hearsay rule, for the purpose of admitting such declarations. If we recur to the fundamental policy of the exceptions (ante, §§ 1420–1422), we find two general requirements to be fulfilled; first, there must be a necessity for the hearsay, i. e. an impossibility of obtaining 'viva voce' in court from the same source any testimony or, at least, as good testimony; and, secondly, the hearsay statement must have been uttered under circumstances rendering it fairly trustworthy. Would these requirements be fulfilled, in the case of a voter's extrajudicial statements as to his disqualifications? It would seem that they are not, and that it is undesirable to recognize such an exception. The reasons have nowhere been better set out than in the following congressional report:

1872, Mr. George F. Hoar, reporting for the House Committee on Elections, in Cessna v. Meyers, Smith's Digest Congress. El. C. 60, 65: "Another question of importance which has arisen in the discussion of the cause is the question whether evidence of the declarations of alleged voters, made not under oath, in the country [sic?], should be received to show the fact that they voted, or for whom, or that they were not legally entitled to vote. Some of the Committee think that such evidence ought in no case to be admitted; except, of course, so far as declarations, made at the time, of the party's intent or understanding as to his then present residence or his purpose in a removal, are admissible as part of the 'res gestæ.' All of the Committee are of opinion that such evidence is to be received with the greatest caution, to be resorted to only when no better is to be had, and only acted on when the declarations are clearly proved and are themselves clear and satisfactory. As this question has been quite fully considered, it may be proper briefly to discuss it here. . . . [1] The general doctrine is usually put upon the ground that the voter is a party to the proceeding, and his declarations against the validity of his vote are to be admitted against him as such. If this were true, it would be quite clear that his declarations ought not to be received until he is first shown 'aliunde,' not only to have voted, but to have voted for the party against whom he is called; otherwise it would be in the power of an illegal voter to neutralize wrongfully two of the votes cast for a political opponent, first, by voting for his own candidate, secondly, by asserting to some witness afterward that he voted the other way, and so having his vote deducted from the party against whom it was cast. But it is not true that a voter is a party in any such sense as that his declarations are admissible on that ground. His interest is not legal or personal. It is frequently of the slightest possible nature. If he were a party, then his admissions should be competent as to the whole case — as to the votes of others, the conduct of the election officers, etc.; which, it is well settled, they are not. [2] Another reason given is that the inquiry is of a public nature, and that it should not be limited to the technical rules of evidence established for private causes. This is doubtless true. It is an inquiry of a public nature, and an inquiry of the highest interest and consequence. Some rules of evidence applicable to such an inquiry must be established; it is nowhere, so far as we know, claimed that in any other particular the ordinary rules of evidence should be relaxed given); 1804, Weymouth Case, 2 Peckw. 195, 227 (similar declarations, held admissible); 1833, Southampton Case, Cockb. & R. 100, 114; Per. & Kn. 213, 222 (declarations as to illegal voting, admissible if made before the striking of the ballot); 1837, Nowlan's Case, Falcon. & Fitzh. 70, 72 (declarations as to property-disqualifications, admitted; the Committee declaring that in courts of law they had found, on inquiry, "the practice not uniform"); 1869, Windsor Case, 1 O'M. & H. 1, 5 (voter's declaration of corruption, admissible on the issue of striking out his vote); King's Lynn Case, 1 O'M. & H. 206, 208 (same; but not admissible to prove bribery against candidate).

in the determination of election cases. . . . [3] The practice of admitting this kind of evidence originated in England. So far as it has been adopted in this country, it has been without much discussion of the reasons on which it was founded. In England, as has been said, the vote was 'viva voce'; the fact that the party voted, and for whom, was susceptible of easy and indisputable proof by the record. The privilege of voting for members of Parliament was a considerable dignity, enjoyed by few. It commonly depended on the enjoyment of a freehold, the title to which did not as with us appear on public registries, but would be seriously endangered by admissions of the freeholder which disparaged it. An admission by the voter of his own want of qualification was therefore ordinarily an admission against his right to a special and rare franchise and an admission which seriously imperilled his title to his real estate; an admission so strongly against the interest of the party making it would seldom be made unless it were true. It furnishes no analogy for a people who regard voting, not as a privilege of a few, but as the right of all; where the vote, instead of being 'viva voce,' is studiously protected from publicity, and where such admissions, instead of having every probability in favor of their truth, may so easily be made the means of accomplishing great injustice and fraud without fear either of detection or of punishment. [4] It may be said that the principle of the secret ballot protects the voter from disclosing how he voted, and, in the absence of power to compel him to testify and furnish the best evidence, renders the resort to other evidence necessary. The Committee are not prepared to admit that the policy which shields the vote of the citizen from being made known without his consent is of more importance than an inquiry into the purity and result of the election itself. If it is, it cannot protect the illegal voter from disclosing how he voted. If it is, it would be doubtful whether the same policy should not prevent the use of the machinery of the law to discover and make public the fact, in whatever way it may be proved. It is the publicity of the vote, not the interrogation of the voter in regard to it, that the secret ballot is designed to prevent. There would seem to be no need to resort to hearsay evidence on this ground, unless the voter has first been called and, being interrogated, asserts his privilege and refuses to answer.[2] Even in that case a still more conclusive objection to hearsay testimony of this character is this: it is not at all likely to be either true or trustworthy. . . . [Hearsay evidence] is only admitted in cases where hearsay evidence is in the ordinary experience of mankind found to be generally correct, — as in matters of pedigree and the like. But a man who is so anxious to conceal how he voted as to refuse to disclose it on oath, even when the disclosure is demanded in the interest of public justice, and who is presumed to have voted fraudulently (for otherwise, in most cases, the inquiry is of no consequence), would be quite as likely to have made false statements on the subject, if he had made any. To permit such statements to be received to overcome the judgment of the election officers, who admit the vote publicly in the face of a challenge and with the right to scrutinize the voter, would seem to be exceedingly dangerous. . . . [But, on account of the precedents and of the preparations of both parties in this case,] we have applied the English rule to the evidence, with the limitation (of the reasonableness of which it would seem there can be no question) that evidence of the hearsay declarations of the voter can only be acted upon when the fact that he voted has been shown by evidence 'aliunde' and when the declarations have been clearly proved and are themselves clear and satisfactory."

In the United States, the Courts have naturally been much influenced by the orthodox English practice. Yet the cogent reasoning of the Congressional Committee has in more recent rulings tended to prevail.[3] The law differs

[2] For this privilege, see post, § 2215.

[3] U. S. Congress: 1836, Newland v. Graham, 1 Bartl. Cong. El. C. 5, 6 (declarations of tenor of vote, excluded); 1840, New Jersey Case, 1 Bartl. Cong. L. C. 19, 24 (declarations as to the fact of voting, excluded); 1858, Vallan-in the different States; in a few Courts the rule has been left unclear in successive precedents.

§ 1713. Voter's Declarations as to Tenor of Vote or Intent of Words. (1) Under the modern system of balloting, the ballot contains nothing to identify the ballot with a particular voter. Where a voter is found to have been disqualified, and it is desired to reject his vote, the question therefore arises whether his extrajudicial assertions as to the tenor of his ballot may be received.

Here the same considerations apply, though more forcibly. The voter's statements cannot be considered as the admissions of a party-opponent, because it does not yet appear how he has voted, and therefore it cannot be said that he is opposed in interest to the party who wishes the vote to be digham v. Campbell, 1 Bartl. Cong. El. C. 223, 230 (declarations "touching their qualifications and the candidates for whom they voted," admitted, on the theory that "each voter challenged is a party to the proceeding"); 1872, Cessna v. Meyers, Smith Dig. Congr. El. C. 60, 65 (quoted supra); Alabama: 1901, Black v. Pate, 130 Ala. 514, 30 So. 434 (declarations as to qualifications, made after the election, held inadmissible); Arizona: 1899, Providence G. M. Co. v. Burke, 6 Ariz. 323, 57 Pac. 641 (declarations as to citizenship, by a voter not found, admitted); Arkansas: 1883, Patton v. Coates, 41 Ark. 111, 130 (declarations as to voting twice, admitted, not to show the vote void, but as conduct exhibiting a conspiracy); 1891, Rucks v. Renfrow, 54 Ark. 409, 411, 16 S. W. 6 (declarations "showing their want of qualifications to vote," inadmissible); California: 1866, Norwood v. Kenfield, 30 Cal. 393, 398 (left undecided); 1898, Smith v. Thomas, 121 Cal. 533, 54 Pac. 71 (declarations as to tenor of vote, inadmissible, except to impeach by self-contradiction); 1898, Lauer v. Estes, 120 Cal. 652, 53 Pac. 262 (declaration as to tenor of vote, inadmissible); Colorado: 1883, People v. Commissioners, 7 Colo. 190, 2 Pac. 912 (declarations as to qualifications, inadmissible); 1896, Sharp v. McIntire, 23 Colo. 99, 46 Pac. 115 (declarations at time of voting, as to domicil, admitted); Illinois: 1875, Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 34, 45 ("considering the voter as a party, then it consists with legal principle to receive in evidence his declarations against himself"; but here, the ballots being lost and the tenor of the votes not appearing otherwise, the declarations were rejected because it could not be known whether they were against interest); 1876, Beardstown v. Virginia, 81 Ill. 541, 549 ("We will not commit ourselves to any absolute rule of admission or rejection," but most of the declarations were rejected on the facts); 1888, Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 196, 17 N. E. 232 ("In Beardstown v. Virginia, we . . . held that the declarations of a voter subsequent to the election were incompetent" (?); but declarations of a mental state, affecting his domicil, are admissible; see post, § 1727); 1898 Eggers v. Fox, 177 Ill. 185, 52 N. E. 269 (declaration that he had voted twice, admitted the declarant refusing to testify on the stand); Kansas: 1872, Gilleland v. Schuyler, 9 Kan. 569, 582 (declarations as to illegal multiple voting, excluded); Kentucky: 1902, Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 75 S. W. 257 semble (voter's declarations of the tenor of his vote, inadmissible); Michigan: 1868, People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 296 (People v. Pease, N. Y., disapproved, but on other grounds); New Mexico: 1892, Berry v. Hull, 6 N. M. 643, 30 Pac. 936 (declarations showing disqualifications received, after evidence of the fact and tenor of vote; Illinois rule supposed to be followed); New York: 1863, People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 59, per Davies, J. (for rejecting illegal votes, "the declarations of the person casting the vote have been admitted and received as evidence of his qualification or want of qualification"; see this case in other aspects, ante, § 581, post, § 2214); North Carolina: 1890, Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 623, 11 S. E. 665 ("the declarations of a voter as to his qualifications generally, if made at the time of voting, are competent as a part of the 'res gestae'"); North Dakota: 1900, Kadlec v. Pavik, 9 N. D. 278, 83 N. W. 5 (declarations of disqualification; not decided); Wisconsin: 1868, State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309, 319 (voters' declarations as to alienage, admitted; "the reason is" that such a person "is always considered as a party when the result of the election is in controversy"); 1868, State v. Hilmantel, 23 Wis. 422, 426 (preceding case approved); 1900, State v. Conness, 106 Wis. 425, 82 N. W. 288 (declarations as to qualifications and tenor of vote; not admitted on the facts, because the offer was not definite enough); 1905, State v. Rosenthal, 123 Wis. 442, 102 N. W. 49 (State v. Olin, supra, followed).

discarded. Furthermore, án exception to the Hearsay rule would be highly impolitic, because this would virtually license a corrupt voter to vote for the contesting candidate and yet by his declarations to furnish evidence for striking out a vote for the successful candidate. These reasons have been sufficiently expounded in the Congressional report above quoted (ante, § 1712).

(2) Whether the voter may on the stand testify to the tenor of his ballot is an entirely different question; for the Hearsay rule is then satisfied. In the first place, there is a clear privilege (subject to certain limitations) not to testify against his will; but this privilege does not apply to unqualified persons (post, § 2215); so that such testimony would still be compellable in the class of cases here in question. But, in the next place, a few judges have been inclined to make this something more than a privilege, and to erect it into an absolute prohibition, whether the voter wishes or not to testify. In this view, the policy of this prohibition would equally exclude extrajudicial voluntary statements; this aspect of the subject is elsewhere treated (post, § 2215).

(3) Whether the voter may on the stand testify to his intent or meaning in the words or initials on the ballot is still a different question. (a) In the first place, the parol-evidence rule may be thought to forbid the use of the voter's private intent for the purpose of qualifying or interpreting the terms of the ballot; this question is elsewhere dealt with (post, § 2452). (b) In the next place, supposing the parol-evidence rule not to stand in the way, the notion that a person is not competent to testify to his own intent may be invoked to prohibit such testimony. No such rule of prohibition exists (except in Alabama); but there have nevertheless been many efforts to establish it; the rulings have been already examined (ante, § 581).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC XIII: DECLARATIONS OF A MENTAL OR PHYSICAL CONDITION

CHAPTER LVI.

§ 1714. General Principle. In four of the preceding Exceptions (Topics VIII–XI), it was noticed that the Necessity principle, justifying them (ante, § 1421), is regarded as satisfied by considerations somewhat different from those applied to the first six Exceptions (Topics I–VI). The necessity, in the first six, is found to lie in the impossibility, by reason of death, insanity, absence, or the like, of producing the declarant on the stand as a witness; so that the only evidence obtainable from that person was his hearsay statement. In the other four, the notion of inconvenience is substituted for that of impossibility; i. e. under all the circumstances, the inconvenience of obtaining the person's testimony on the stand is thought to create a sufficient necessity for resorting to his hearsay statements.

In the present and the two ensuing Exceptions, this Necessity principle presents itself in still a third and different form, viz. relative value of the evidence. It rests on the consideration that, though the person's testimony on the stand may still be both actually and conveniently practicable, yet the probability of there receiving from him testimony which shall be in value equal or superior to certain hearsay statements is small; thus, while there is hardly a necessity in the strict sense, there is at least a desirability of resorting also to the hearsay statements.

Applied specifically to the present Exception, the judicial doctrine has been that there is a fair necessity, for lack of other better evidence, for resorting to a person's own contemporary statements of his mental or physical condition. It is indeed possible to obtain by circumstantial evidence (chiefly of conduct) some knowledge of a human being's internal state of pain, emotion, motive, design, and the like; but in directness, amount, and value, this source of evidence must usually be decidedly inferior to the person's own contemporary assertions of those conditions. It might be argued, however, that the person's own statements on the stand would amply satisfy the need for his testimonial evidence. The answer is that statements of this sort on the stand, where there is ample opportunity for deliberate misrepresentation and small means for checking it by other evidence or testing it by cross-examination, are comparatively inferior to statements made at times when no inducement to misrepresentation existed and the probability of trustworthiness was greater.

For the use of such statements, then, made out of court and under certain circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, there is a fair necessity, in the sense that there is no other equally satisfactory source of evidence either from the same person or elsewhere. It follows that the death, insanity, or non-residence of the declarant is not a condition precedent; and this has not been questioned.

Such has been the general attitude of the Courts in sanctioning the use of this class of statements. They recognize the bearing both of a Necessity principle (ante, § 1421) and of a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1422). The two, however, are seldom distinctly separated in judicial utterances, and sometimes one, sometimes the other, receives the sole emphasis. These two broad aspects of the principle, as applicable to mental conditions in general, did not receive judicial formulation until the middle of the 1800s. Up to that time there was merely an indefinite doctrine, not distinguishing clearly between this and the Exception for Spontaneous Declarations (post, § 1745), and resting chiefly on an opinion of Lord Ellenborough's:

1805, Aveson v. Kinnaird, 6 East 195; evidence was offered of declarations on a sick-bed by the plaintiff's wife that she was not well on the previous Tuesday, when she went to be insured. ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J.: "A witness has been received to relate that which has always been received from patients to explain, — her own account of the cause of her being in bed at an unseasonable hour with the appearance of being ill. . . . What were the complaints, what the symptoms, what the conduct of the parties themselves at the time, are always received in evidence upon such inquiries, and must be resorted to from the very nature of the thing. . . . The declaration was upon the subject of her own health at the time, which is a fact of which her own declaration is evidence; and that too made unawares before she could contrive any answer for her own advantage and that of her husband, and therefore falling within the principle of the case in Skinner which I have alluded to." [1]

From this precedent and opinion was developed during the 1800s a broad doctrine admitting contemporary declarations of a mental or emotional condition in general. The judicial reasoning is illustrated in the following passages:

1876, MELLISH, L. J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154: "Wherever it is material to prove the state of a person's mind, or what was passing in it, and what were his intentions, there you may prove what he said, because that is the only means by which you can find out what his intentions are."

1835, UPHAM, J., in Hadley v. Carter, 8 N. H. 42: "The evidence is admitted on the presumption, arising from experience, that when a man does an act his cotemporary declaration accords with his real intention, unless there be some reason for misrepresenting such intention."

1850, PEARSON, J., in Biles v. Holmes, 11 Ired. 20: "[It is] almost the only kind of evidence by which the condition of body or mind can be ascertained."

1859, REDFIELD, C. J., in State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380, 404: "The present state of health or feeling is always allowed to be proved in this way, since it is the only mode in which it can be shown."

1869, SWAYNE, J., in Insurance Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 397: "Wherever the bodily or mental feelings of an individual are material to be proved, the usual expressions of such feelings are original and competent evidence. These expressions are the natural reflexes of what it might be impossible to show by other testimony. . . . As independent explanatory or corroborative evidence, it is often indispensable to the due administration of justice. . . . Such evidence must not be extended beyond the necessity upon which the rule is founded. It must relate to the present, not to the past. Anything in the nature of narration must be excluded."

1875, BENNETT, J., in Sanders v. Reister, 1 Dak. 173: "I incline to the opinion that all that the Courts can mean by the use of the phrase under consideration ['from the necessity of the case'] is that necessity growing out of the inherent difficulties connected with an inquiry into, and the very nature of the proof required to show, the mental and physical condition of an individual. From the nature of the case, that condition can only be known as it finds its expression in external symptoms and in the common complaints of pain and distress which are the natural concomitants of illness and physical injury."

1890, HOLMES, J., in Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 359, 24 N. E. 208: "Such declarations, made with no apparent motive for misstatement, may be better evidence of the maker's state of mind at the time than the subsequent testimony of the same persons."

1892, GRAY, J., in Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. 909: "A man's state of mind or feeling can only be manifested to others by countenance, attitude, or gesture, or by sounds or words, spoken or written."

1892, FIELD, C. J., in Commonwealth v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 185, 31 N. E. 961: "The fundamental proposition is that an intention in the mind of a person can only be shown by some external manifestation, which must be some look or appearance of the face or § 1714. [1] This was Thompson v. Trevanion, quoted post, § 1747, which became the foundation of the Exception for Spontaneous Declarations.

body, or some act or speech; and that proof of either or all of these for the purpose of showing the state of mind or intention of the person is proof of a fact from which the state of mind or intention may be inferred." [2]

§ 1715. Circumstantial Evidence and Res Gestæ Rule, distinguished. (1) The condition of a person's mind may be indicated by his conduct or by his assertions. The former evidence is of an indirect or circumstantial nature, and the various uses of it have already been considered (ante, §§ 225–406). The latter evidence is of a direct or testimonial nature; the Hearsay rule therefore applies to it (ante, § 1361), and some Exception to the Hearsay rule must therefore be invoked in order to admit it. That the Hearsay rule does not apply to conduct used evidentially is elsewhere noted (post, § 1788), in discussing the applicability of the Hearsay rule in general; but, since the distinction between conduct and assertions is for the present Exception of particular importance, it may be here also briefly examined. The practical result of the difference, of course, is that, so far as the evidence is in truth conduct and not assertions, the present Exception need not be invoked to admit it. Between conduct in general and plain assertions it is easy to distinguish; but articulate or verbal utterances are often employed, like wordless conduct, as indicating circumstantially a condition of mind; and utterances so used must be distinguished from utterances used purely testimonially, i. e. as a direct assertion of the state of mind. A reference to the general distinction between circumstantial and testimonial evidence (ante, § 25, post, § 1768) will serve to make this clear; but its application to the present Exception may now be more particularly noted.

The statement "I met your friend J. S. this morning" is in one aspect testimonial, i. e. as evidence that the fact asserted is true, namely, the meeting with J. S. But in another aspect it is merely circumstantial, i. e. as indicating that the speaker is acquainted with the features of J. S. and is aware of J. S.'s friendship. Again, an anonymous picture exhibited is charged as a libel on Doe; the remarks of spectators, that "Doe ought to bring an action against the painter Roe," are admissible circumstantially as revealing that the picture was believed by them to represent Doe; [1] though as assertions of what Doe ought to do or of what Roe had done, the remarks would be inadmissible as hearsay. Again, suppose that on a trial for murder of a woman by a seducer the defence of suicide is set up, and the woman's knowledge of her pregnancy, as creating in her mind a motive for suicide, became material; then the fact "that she had said that she was pregnant would be some evidence that she knew it," though not that she was pregnant.[2] Or, in an action on an insurance policy, the insured's knowledge of the existence of a disease being material on the issue of false representations, his statements that he had the disease would indicate circumstantially that he was aware of it, though they might not be admissible as assertions of the fact.[3]

[2] For the reasons of the rule as shown in decisions on statements other than those of physical suffering, see also: Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 683; Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts Pa. 356; Jacobs v. Whitcomb, 10 Cush. Mass. 257; Day v. Stickney, 14 Ali. Mass. 258; Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. L. 5; Lake Shore R. Co. v. Herrick, 49 Oh. 25, 29 N. E. 1052; Viles v. Waltham, 157 Mass. 542, 32 N. E. 901.

§ 1715. [1] 1810, Du Bost v. Beresford, 2 Camp. 511.

[2] 1892, Field, C. J., in Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 188, 31 N. E. 961.

All such indirect uses of verbal utterances must be distinguished from direct assertions of the state of mind ("I know that I am ill," "I did not intend to injure Doe"), to which alone the Hearsay rule applies, and for which alone it is necessary to invoke the present Exception.[4]

In the same way, verbal utterances may indirectly evidence other kinds of mental condition, without being employed assertively. For example, the state of mind of a testatrix' relatives, whether affectionate or hateful, being in issue, the utterance of her sister about the testatrix, "She is too ugly to die yet," indicates indirectly her condition of feeling, and is of course not used as testimonial evidence of the fact asserted (post, § 1738); the cases dealing with a testator's statements (post, § 1734) illustrate this plentifully; and it is the commonest evidence of the bias of a witness (ante, § 950). So, too, insanity is indirectly evidenced by assertions (for example, "I am the Emperor of America") which are not offered in any way for their assertive or testimonial value (ante, § 228). In the following sections, then, it is to be understood that there is no need of resorting to the present Exception to secure the admission of verbal utterances as circumstantial evidence of a mental condition, but only so far as the utterances directly assert the existence of the condition and are offered as direct testimonial evidence of the fact asserted.

(2) The 'res gestæ' phrase, it will be noticed, is frequently invoked as the source and test of admissibility for declarations of a mental condition. It is true that at certain points the Verbal Act doctrine and the present Exception coincide practically and serve equally to admit certain sorts of statements; but they are nevertheless wholly distinct in their nature and in their right to exist. The fact, for example, of a prior accident in a highway may be admissible both to indicate the dangerous nature of the place and to indicate probable notice to the municipal officers (ante, §§ 272, 458); nevertheless the principles about showing notice admit other kinds of evidence and the principles about showing dangerous qualities admit other kinds of evidence; they merely happen to coincide at one point. So also the doctrine of verbal acts admits declarations on any subject that help to characterize the act, and not merely declarations of intent (post, § 1772); while declarations of a mental condition form an Exception to the Hearsay rule and cover broadly all kinds of mental conditions, not merely intent. These doctrines merely happen to coincide at one point. Neither is hampered nor helped by the limitations or the liberality of the other; each has an independent existence. Many Courts are inclined to treat the Hearsay Exception as though it were limited by the rule about Verbal Acts; but the passages quoted in the preceding section show this to be unnecessary and improper. It is too much to hope to see this tendency disappear; it is enough to call attention to its impropriety, and to warn against its consequences.

[3] 1875, Swift v. Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 187, ante, § 266.

[4] 1882, Bowen, L. J., in Edington v. Fitzmaurice, L. R. 29 Ch. D. 459: "The state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion"; 1901, Baldwin, J., in Vivian's Appeal, 74 Conn. 257, 261, 50 Atl. 797: "A feeling is a fact; and an ultimate fact. If one says that he loves another, he expresses a sentiment existing at the time when he speaks."

§ 1716. Order of Topics. The present Exception has been broadly formulated in only comparatively recent times. It has thus come to embrace a number of sub-varieties of hearsay statements, each involving a special form of mental condition. Moreover, the considerations affecting admissibility may be different for these different subjects of the statements, and for each class certain peculiar discriminations from other principles of Evidence must be observed. It is therefore necessary to treat separately the classes of statements thus separated in precedent and in judicial treatment.

The grouping must be somewhat arbitrary, but the most practicable seems to be the following:

A. Statements of Pain or Suffering.

B. Statements of Design, Intent, Motive, Feeling, etc., in General.

C. Statements by an Accused.

D. Statements by a Testator.

No doubt the generic phrase "mental or physical condition" is not correctly descriptive of all of these. Nevertheless, it sufficiently indicates the general nature of the class of facts stated, and for want of a better phrase must be retained.

A. Statements of Pain or Suffering

§ 1718. General Principle. It is for statements of physical pain or suffering that the exception has been longest recognized,[1] and the principle most fully and clearly reasoned out.[2] The general principle is illustrated in the following passages:

1845, Shepley, J., in Kennard v. Burton, 25 Me. 46: "If other persons could not be permitted to testify to them [complaints of suffering] when the person injured might be a witness, there might often be a defect of proof. The person injured

§ 1718. [1] 1678, Earl of Pembroke's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1309, 1325, 1327, 1331, 1336 (murder; deceased person's complaints of pain and the cause of the wound, made to bystanders and to a doctor, received; Counsel: "There are little circumstances which are always allowed for evidence in such cases, —where men receive any wounds, to ask them questions, while they are ill, about it, who hurt them"); 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 478 and 'passim'; 1805, Aveson v. Kinnaird, 6 East 195, quoted ante, § 1714.

[2] The following cases merely illustrate the ordinary application of the rule: 1851, Rowland v. Walker, 18 Ala. 751; 1789, Goodwin v. Harrison, 1 Root Conn. 80 (action on the case for giving "a dose in some toddy"; plaintiff's "complaints" the next morning "and what she said about it," admitted "as being an exception from the general rule, founded upon the necessity of the case"); 1868, Gray v. McLaughlin, 26 Ia. 279; 1895, State v. Hutchison, 95 Ia. 566, 64 N. W. 610; 1881, Hatch v. Fuller, 131 Mass. 574; 1873, Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471; 1886, Mayo v.

might be unable to recollect or state them by reason of the agitation and suffering occasioned by it."

1851, BIGELOW, J., in Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. 586: "Where the bodily or mental feelings of a party are to be proved, the usual and natural expressions of such feelings, made at the time, are considered competent and original evidence in his favor. And the rule is founded upon the consideration that such expressions are the natural and necessary language of emotion, of the existence of which, from the very nature of the case, there can be no other evidence. . . . Such evidence, however, is not to be extended beyond the necessity on which the rule is founded. Anything in the nature of narration or statement is to be carefully excluded, and the testimony is to be confined strictly to such complaints, exclamations, and expressions as usually and naturally accompany and furnish evidence of a present existing pain or malady."

1854, DENIO, J., in Caldwell v. Murphy, 11 N. Y. 419: "It is one of the natural concomitants of illness and of physical injuries for the sick or injured person to complain of pain and distress. . . . I think such evidence is admissible from the necessity of the case."

1857, RICE, C. J., in Phillips v. Kelly, 29 Ala. 628: "In cases where the existence of pain in any particular part of the body is in its very nature incapable of proof except by the declarations of the sufferer, his declarations of its existence must, from necessity, be admitted as evidence of its existence, if its existence at the time such declarations were made be a material question. . . . The law is not so inconsistent with itself and with reason as to declare that a plaintiff may prove a thing and at the same time also to declare that the only proof of which the thing is in its nature capable shall not be heard or considered."

1858, REDFIELD, C. J., in State v. Davidson, 30 Vt. 383: "The declarations of the party are received to show the extent of latent injuries upon the person, upon the general ground that such injuries are incapable of being shown in any other mode except by such declarations as to their effect."

1878, CAMPBELL, J., in Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 543: "[Declarations of present suffering] are admitted from necessity. . . . It would be impossible in most cases to know of the existence or extent or character of pain without them. . . . The unstudied expressions of daily life, or the statements on which a medical adviser is expected to act, which if feigned he should have skill enough to subject to some test of truth, stand on a footing which removes them in general from suspicion."

§ 1719. Circumstances under which the Statement is made; Statements to a Physician or Layman. The general requirement (as the preceding quotations indicate) is merely that the statements shall be the spontaneous and natural expressions of the pain or suffering. This principle has in some cases been applied with extreme liberality.[1] The main difficulty here has Wright, 63 Mich. 32, 40, 29 N. W. 832 (statements of present pain, admitted, but not that a bandage "was too tight," this being opinion from a non-expert; the latter part is unsound); 1862, Perkins v. R. Co., 44 N. H. 225; 1869, Taylor v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 309; 1879, Plummer v. Ossipee, 59 N. H. 56; 1848, Raulhac v. White, 9 Ired. N. Car. 65; 1850, Biles v. Holmes, 11 Ired. 21; 1890, Thomas v. Herrall, 18 Or. 549; 1903, Gosa v. Southern R. Co., 67 S. C. 347, 45 S. E. 810; 1903, Shearer v. Buckley, 31 Wash. 370, 72 Pac. 76 (complaints as to "the nature and extent of his injuries," admitted).

Compare conduct as evidence of physical condition (ante, §§ 220, 223).

§ 1719. [1] 1883, Com. v. Fenno, 134 Mass. 218 (exclamations on meeting a friend in the street, admitted).

In a few rulings it seems to be required that the person be otherwise in an apparent condition of bodily ailment, of which his statements are the natural product: 1884, Penn. Mutual L. I. Co. v. Wiler, 100 Ind. 103 ("I have the asthma," excluded, because not accompanying an apparent diseased condition); 1890, McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Ia. 325 (they must be "the natural result of suffering").

arisen over the question whether the rule is to be restricted to accounts of symptoms given by a patient in consultation with a physician for the cure of the illness. The origin of this supposed limitation seems to have been the language of Chief Justice Bigelow, in a much-cited Massachusetts opinion having some difficulties of interpretation:

1865, Barber v. Merriam, 11 All. 322: Declarations concerning the way in which an injury was done were admitted, because made to a physician and "for the purpose of receiving medical advice." BIGELOW, C. J.: "Its admissibility is an exception to the general rule of evidence, which has its origin in the necessity of the case. . . . To the argument against their competency founded on the danger of deception and fraud, the answer is that such representations are competent only when made to a person of science and medicai knowledge, who has the means and opportunity of observing and ascertaining whether the statements and declarations correspond with the condition and appearance of the persons making them, and the present existing symptoms which the eye of experience and skill may discover. Nor is it to be forgotten that statements made to a physician for the purpose of medical advice and treatment are less open to suspicion than the ordinary declarations of a party. They are made with a view to be acted on in a matter of grave personal concernment, in relation to which the party has a strong and direct interest to adhere to the truth."

Now this language, though it may possibly have been intended to apply generally to all statements of pain, appears on a scrutiny of the opinion to have been applied by the judge in this case merely to statements of past "condition and symptoms" of suffering (which, as will be seen, are not admitted except in Massachusetts and a few other States). Such has been the construction of the language in Massachusetts; and a general limitation to physicians is to-day not recognized in that State, nor in most jurisdictions, as having anything to do with ordinary present-pain statements.[2]

But in New York, and a few other jurisdictions following the New York rulings, the doctrine has been established (apparently by a misconstruction of the widely quoted language in Barber v. Merriam) that all pain-statements whatever are subject to the general limitation that they must have been made to a physician during consultation; yet that inarticulate exclamations are admissible without this limitation. The passages expounding this peculiar doctrine are as follows:

1871, ALLEN, J., in Reed v. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 578: "[Declarations as to pain, not made to a physician, are not admissible.] From the necessity of the case the statements of parties who could not be examined as witnesses in their own behalf as to bodily suffering

[2] Although this is undoubtedly so to-day in Massachusetts (Roosa v. Loan Co., post, § 1722), yet there are there two rulings in which the judge writing the opinion has carelessly borrowed the language of Barber v. Merriam, and limited the general rule, not to statements to a physician, but to a similar and narrow situation. This language cannot be regarded as law even in Massachusetts: 1880, Fay v. Harlan, 128 Mass. 244 (Ames, J.: "They are not to be considered as mere hear- say, if made with a view to be acted on in a matter of grave personal concernment, in relation to which the party has a strong and direct interest to adhere to the truth"); accord, semble: 1891, Fleming v. Springfield, 154 Mass. 522, 28 N. E. 910.

The following ruling stands by itself: 1922, Estes v. Babcock, — Wash. —, 205 Pac. 12 (patient's statements to a physician, excluded; misunderstanding Barber v. Merriam, Mass.).

". . . have been received in evidence. . . . But by the amendment of the Code in 1869 (§ 368) there is no longer a necessity . . . and, the reason of the rule ceasing, the rule itself . . . should cease."

1885, Per CURIAM, in Hagenlocher v. R. Co., 99 id. 136, 1 N. E. 536: "Screaming or some similar exclamation is the natural language of pain in all men, and in all animals as well. It usually and almost invariably accompanies intense pain. . . . While the necessity for the reception of such evidence is not so great since parties have been permitted to be witnesses in their own behalf as it was before, yet the rule allowing such evidence has not been abrogated and it must still have operation. . . . [Otherwise a party] would be deprived of that corroboration of his evidence to which he is justly entitled."[3]

1887, PECKHAM, J., in Roche v. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 294, 11 N. E. 630 (admitting evidence of screams, groans, and the like): "It was an involuntary and natural exhibition and proof of the existence of intense soreness of pain therefrom [when even a sheet touched the foot]. True, it might be simulated, but this possibility is not strong enough to outweigh the propriety of admitting such evidence as fair, natural, and original and corroborative evidence of the plaintiff as to his then physical condition. Its weight and propriety are not therefore now sustained upon the old idea of the necessity of the case. . . . [But an assertion of pain made, not to a physician, while walking along the street some time after the accident,] is evidence of a totally different nature, is easily stated, liable to gross exaggeration and of a most dangerous tendency, while the former necessity for its admission has wholly ceased, [since the party himself may testify to the same effect, if living, and] . . . if dead, the suffering . . . cannot be compensated for."[4]

Upon the results and reasoning of this New York doctrine the following comments may be made: (1) The limitation was never heard of until Barber v. Merriam, and even in that case the opinion almost certainly meant to enlarge and not to restrict the Exception. In particular, the limitation had in prior New York rulings never made an appearance.[5] (2) The view that, since legislation has permitted parties to testify, there is no longer a necessity for their hearsay statements, rests on a misunderstanding of the Necessity principle, which has here in view, as already noted (ante, § 1714), not the non-availability, by incompetency or decease, of the person himself, but the impracticability of getting from him on the stand better evidence than his own spontaneous and contemporary expressions.[6] Moreover, the orthodox Exception availed to admit statements of third persons, not parties, wherever their pain or suffering was material; so that the Exception never rested on the common-law incompetency of parties. (3) To maintain, as in Roche v. R. Co., that even the party's decease does not admit the ordinary statements is singular; for (a) it is inconsistent with the supposed original reason for the [4] Accord: 1891, Kennedy v. R. Co., 130 N. Y. 656, 29 N. E. 141; 1892, Davidson v. Cornell, 132 N. Y. 237, 30 N. E. 573; 1892, Link v. Sheldon, 136 N. Y. 1, 9, 32 N. E. 696.

[3] The opinion not noticing Reed v. R. Co.

[5] 1854, Caldwell v. Murphy, 11 N. Y. 419; 1863, Werely v. Persons, 28 N. Y. 345; 1865, Brown v. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 603; 1866, Matteson v. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 491; 1869, Teachout v. People, 41 N. Y. 13.

[6] 1888, Elliott, J., in Hancock Co. v. Leggett, 115 Ind. 547, 18 N. E. 53 (refusing to concede that the modern eligibility of parties affects the rule): "The change in the rule does not dissipate the reason, for latent injuries can only be fully known by declarations made at the time the injured person is suffering. But, however this may be, . . . [the Courts] have no right to abrogate it."

rule, namely, that the incompetency of the party created a necessity for these statements; and (b) the assumption which serves as its basis, namely, that no action survives for suffering followed by death, is not only incorrect for many jurisdictions, but ignores the existence of other kinds of claims for suffering for which an action may survive; moreover, it would equally exclude all testimony whatever as to suffering. (4) The distinction by which screams and other inarticulate exclamations are always admissible is utterly pedantic and impracticable.[7] Moreover the preference for them as comparatively not liable to simulation is plainly fallacious; for a little reflection shows that, if a person has determined to falsify, it is as natural and as feasible for him to lie with screams, groans, and cries, as with articulate assertions of pain.

The truth seems to be that the New York limitation is inconsistent alike with precedent, with principle, with good sense, and with itself. Unfortunately, however, its place as a local anomaly has not always been perceived, and Courts in several other jurisdictions have accepted the physician-limitation of the modern New York cases as if they represented the orthodox rule.[8] In a few other jurisdictions the limitation has been expressly or

[7] 1897, Canty, J., diss., in Williams v. R. Co., 68 Minn. 55, 70 N. W. 860: "So narrow and strict a rule is not practicable. The expression of suffering may be one-half groans and exclamations and one-half words or nine-tenths of the former and one-tenth of the latter, or vice versa. How can the law say how much of the utterance shall consist of words, and how much of groans, sighs, and exclamations, or that it may not all consist of words? Again, how can the law say with what degree of anguish the words shall be uttered? One person complains cheerfully, and even laughs and jokes, when he is suffering intense agony, while another complains most dolefully about the slightest affliction. For these reasons, I cannot agree with the majority or with the New York cases, which attempt to make a distinction between words describing present existing suffering and other exclamations indicating such suffering."

[8] In the following list are included Courts showing countenance at one time or another to the New York rule; though in some of these jurisdictions it does not yet appear which rule the Court has finally fixed upon:

Federal: 1894, Union P. R. Co. v. Novak 15 U. S. App. 400, 414, 9 C. C. A. 629, 61 Fed. 573 (declarations to a physician of present pains, etc., admissible; semble, not if made to others);
California: 1899, James' Estate, 124 Cal. 653, 57 Pac. 579 (by a deceased physician, the intestate, that he then had Bright's disease, dropsy, etc., excluded, apparently on this ground); 1900, Green v. Pacific L. Co., 130 Cal. 435, 62 Pac. 747 ("involuntary declarations and exclamations of a person's present pain and suffering" are admissible; following the Michigan and Wisconsin cases);
Connecticut: 1868, Kelsey v. Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 225, 236 (not clear); 1879, Wilson v. Granby, 47 Conn. 76, semble (admissible only when made to a physician); 1902, Martin v. Sherwood, 74 Conn. 475, 51 Atl. 526 (statements not to a physician must be "the natural and instinctive expressions of present suffering," to be admissible);
Delaware: 1898, Wilkins v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. 132, 42 Atl. 418 (the plaintiff being alive and competent, his groans, etc., are admissible, but not his assertions of injury);
Georgia: 1894, East Tennessee V. & G. R. Co. v. Smith, 94 Ga. 580, 20 S. E. 127 (undecided); 1895, Atlanta St. R. Co. v. Walker, 93 Ga. 462, 21 S. E. 48 (New York rule accepted); 1896, Broyles v. Prisock, 97 Ga. 643, 25 S. E. 389 (ordinary declarations of suffering, admissible only when made to a physician, except "involuntary and natural exhibitions of pain," e. g., as here, where the person's injured arm was being examined and moved; following Roche v. R. Co., N. Y.); 1896, Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Wainwright, 99 Ga. 255, 25 S. E. 622 (same; allowing testimony by a husband as to bruises and swellings visible); Illinois: 1896, Globe Accident Ins. Co. v. Gerisch, 163 Ill. 625, 45 N. E. 563 (no different rule for statements to a physician); 1897, West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Carr, 170 Ill. 478, 48 N. E. 992 (1) declarations made to a physician during treatment, or upon an examination not 'pro lite' unless at the opponent's instance, are receivable; (2) exclamation of pain immediately connected with the injury are receivable; (3) 'res gestæ' statements are receivable; the New York rule is in effect followed, and the scope of the orthodox rule is not understood; the rule is also obscurely stated; 1897, West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Kenelly, 170 Ill. 508, 48 N. E. 996 (declarations made to other than a physician when under treatment, not receivable, unless part of the 'res gestæ' at the time of the injury; nothing said as to class (2) in the preceding opinion; in the preceding case, the opinion says, of "a groan, a sigh, a scream," that "any competent witness . . . may certainly be allowed to testify to them"; yet in the present case, testimony that "she screamed with the ankle awfully" was held incompetent; these two opinions were written by different judges, but were filed on the same day; they are a striking instance of that judicial carelessness which tends to reduce the profession of giving legal advice to the status of a speculative occupation); 1898, Springfield C. R. Co. v. Hoeffner, 175 Ill. 634, 51 N. E. 884 (the rule of the preceding two cases said to admit declarations of pain and suffering only when made at the time of the injury as 'res gestæ' or made to a physician during treatment); 1901, Cicero & P. S. R. Co. v. Priest, 190 Ill. 592, 60 N. E. 814 ("she groaned," admitted); 1901, Salem v. Webster, 192 Ill. 369, 61 N. E. 323 (plaintiff's statements to a physician, "describing his feelings," admitted); 1903, Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Shaw, 203 Ill. 39, 67 N. E. 374 ("she complained of pain in her right hip," to a layman, excluded); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28 (Carr case approved); 1909, Fuhry v. Chicago City R. Co., 239 Ill. 548, 88 N. E. 221 (a physician called to treat the injury testified to the patient's subjective symptoms among others; the opinion cites the Donworth and Greinke cases (post, § 1721, n. 1) for the rule that "a physician who has not treated the injured person, but has made an examination to enable him to testify on a trial as to his condition, must base his opinion on objective and not subjective conditions," but then proceeds to say that "the testimony as to the pressure of her hands . . . was incompetent;" such loose judicial opinions offer a premium to gamble on a decision); 1909, Schmidt v. Chicago City R. Co., 239 Ill. 494, 88 N. E. 275 (physician's testimony to a contraction of the muscles which might have been voluntary but was not, admitted; also to a limp); 1910, Louth v. Chicago M. T. Co., 244 Ill. 244, 91 N. E. 341 (see citation post, § 1721, n. 1).

impliedly repudiated; in the remaining jurisdictions the orthodox rule, making no such limitation, would presumably be perpetuated.[9]

Kansas: 1908, Federal Betterment Co. v. Reeves, 77 Kan. 111, 93 Pac. 627, semble;
Kentucky: 1905, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 27 Ky. 257, 84 S. W. 755; 1913, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sealf, 155 Ky. 273, 159 S. W. 804;
Minnesota: 1893, Brusch v. R. Co., 52 Minn. 512, 513, 55 N. W. 57 (to a physician, admissible); 1895, Firkins v. R. Co., 61 Minn. 31, 63 N. W. 173 (rejecting the answer to the question "How badly are you hurt?" and approximating to the principle of Roche v. R. Co. (N. Y.); 1897, Williams v. R. Co., 68 Minn. , 70 N. W. 560 (distinguishes "mere descriptive statements of pain" and "spontaneous manifestations of distress"; the latter are always admissible; the former only when made to a medical attendant for the purpose of treatment and when he is called upon to give an expert opinion based in part upon them; the N. Y. cases are cited, but "we find no case which expressly and directly announces this proposition"; Canty, J., diss.);
South Dakota: 1905, Klingaman v. Fish & H. Co., 19 S. D. 139, 102 N. W. 601 (here the Court, while adopting the inferior rule, inexcusably cites the Massachusetts cases as if they supported it);
West Virginia: 1920, Wilson v. Elkins, 86 W. Va. 379, 103 S. E. 118 (personal injury; "manifestations of pain, suffering, and lameness, in his conduct, not his declarations," admitted);
Wisconsin: 1879, Quaife v. R. Co., 48 Wis. 524, 4 N. W. 668 (apparently making the physician-limitation); 1888, Bridge v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 363, 367, 37 N. W. 409 ("either to his attending physicians or to others," admissible); 1893, Hall v. Acc. Ass'n, 86 Wis. 518, 525, 57 N. W. 366 (that he was "feeling badly," said to a layman, admitted); 1896, Keller v. Gilman, 93 Wis. 9, 66 N. W. 800 ("exclamations, expressions, gestures, and complaints" of pain to anybody, admissible; but "statements of physical condition or feelings" in answer to questions or narrative in nature, admissible only when made to a physician); 1898, Curran v. Stange Co., 98 Wis. 598, 74 N. W. 377 (Keller v. Gilman approved); 1902, Bredlau v. York, 115 Wis. 554, 92 N. W. 261 ("expressions of pain," to a layman, admitted).

For an amusing parody in verse, ridiculing the two above Illinois opinions dated on the same day, see the Chicago Law Journal for June 10, 1898.

[9] Federal: 1893, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rambo, 16 U. S. App. 277, 280, 8 C. C. A. 6, 59 Fed. 75 (declarations of present pain admissible, though not made to a physician); 1894, Northern P. R. Co. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 273, 15 Sup. 840 (similar). Alabama: 1903, Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Shanks, 139 Ala. 489, 37 So. 166 (complaints and crying, admitted); 1905, Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Butler, 143 Ala. 262, 38 So. 1024; 1905, Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Matthews, 142 Ala. 298, 39 So. 207; 1905, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Rutledge, 142 Ala. 195, 39 So. 338;

§ 1720. Same: Other Principles affecting Statements to a Physician discriminated. The language in Barber v. Merriam (ante, § 1719) has also introduced some confusion between the different evidential questions raised by statements to physicians. In the opinion in that case, the admission of such statements was apparently justified in part on the ground that the reasons for the physician's opinion can always be shown. There are several aspects of such evidence:

(1) A physician testifying as to a patient's health may be asked, like any other witness, for the reasons for his conclusions, — either on direct examination, to show his opinion well founded (ante, § 655), or on cross-examination, to show it ill founded (ante, §§ 992, 994); and incidentally the fact that it is in part or entirely founded on the statements of the patient or of others may thus be brought out. Here, of course, the patient's statement has no hearsay quality; without regard to its correctness or incorrectness, it enters merely as an observed fact forming part of the physician's data. It is possible to bring it forward in a testimonial shape; nevertheless, it is also possible, up to a certain point, to treat it merely as a fact affecting the weight of the physician's opinion.

Indiana: 1888, Hancock Co. v. Leggett, 115 Ind. 547, 18 N. E. 53; 1892, Chicago St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Spilker, 134 Ind. 380, 392, 33 N. E. 280, 34 N. E. 218; 1893, Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Prewitt, 134 Ind. 557, 562, 33 N. E. 367; 1895, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Miller, 141 Ind. 533, 559, 37 N. E. 343; 1902, Indiana R. Co. v. Maurer, 160 Ind. 25, 66 N. E. 156; Iowa: 1881, Ferguson v. Davis Co., 57 Ia. 601, 605, 10 N. W. 906 (by a majority; complaints of suffering to a bystander, excluded, for a reason not stated); 1887, Armstrong v. Ackley, 71 Ia. 76, 78, 32 N. W. 180 (complaint to a physician admissible); 1888, Winter v. R. Co., 74 Ia. 448, 450, 38 N. W. 154 (complaints of pain and inability to work, excluded); 1890, Blair v. Madison Co., 81 Ia. 313, 316, 46 N. W. 1093 (complaint of pain, admitted; preceding cases ignored); 1891, Stone v. Moore, 83 Ia. 186, 189, 49 N. W. 76 ("It is competent for a physician to state the complaint made by a patient as part of the diagnosis of the case"); 1894. Aryman v. Marshalltown, 90 Ia. 350, 57 N. W. 867, semble (must be to a physician); 1899, Keyes v. Cedar Falls, 107 Ia. 509, 78 N. W. 227 (admissible "regardless of the person to whom made"; repudiating Ferguson v. Davis, supra); 1899 Crippen v. Des Moines. — Ia. —, 78 N. W. 688 (preceding case approved); 1901, Rupp v. Howard, 114 Ia. 65, 86 N. W. 38 (same); 1904, Buce v. Eldon, 122 Ia. 92, 97 N. W. 989; 1904, Battis v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 124 Ia. 623, 100 N. W. 543 (like Keyes v. Cedar Falls, supra); 1905, Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co., 127 Ia. 483, 103 N. W. 481, semble (similar; out the point decided is left obscure); 1907, Patton v. Sanborn, 133 Ia. 650, 110 N. W. 1032; 1907, State v. Blydenburg, 135 Ia. 264, 112 N. W. 634 (approving Keyes v. Cedar Falls); 1914, Langdon v. Ahrens, 166 Ia. 636, 147 N. W. 940; Kansas: 1887, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johns, 36 Kan. 769, 14 Pac. 237; 1908, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Chaney, 77 Kan. 276, 94 Pac. 126 (there must be preliminary evidence to indicate that the statements were spontaneous and not manufactured; explaining A. T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johns; no authority cited for this novel requirement); 1912, State v. Buck, 88 Kan. 114, 127 Pac. 631 (murder by poisoning; deceased's statements that the doses burned her stomach, admitted); Michigan: 1915, Loose v. Deerfield Tp., 187 Mich. 206, 153 N. W. 913; Missouri: 1905, McHugh v. St. Louis T. Co., 190 Mo. 85, 88 S. W. 853; Nebraska: 1893, Hewitt v. Eisenbart, 36 Nebr. 794, 55 N. W. 252; 1905, Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Munson, 73 Nebr. 858, 103 N. W. 688; 1907, Nixon v. Omaha & C. B. St. R. Co., 79 Nebr. 550, 113 N. W. 117; 1916, Juckett v. Brennaman, 99 Nebr. 755, 157 N. W. 925 (death of plaintiff's husband by sale of liquor; deceased's statements as to "his health and physical condition" admitted, but erroneously referred to as "spontaneous declarations"); Nevada: 1910, Sherman v. Southern Pacific Co., 33 Nev. 385, 111 Pac. 416; North Dakota: 1905, Puls v. Grand Lodge, 13 N. D. 559, 102 N. W. 165; Oregon: 1909, Smith v. Smith, 55 Or. 128, 105 Pac. 706; South Carolina: 1902, Oliver v. R. Co., 65 S. C. 1, 43 S. E. 307 (admissible, though not made to a physician); 1922, State v. Herring, — S. C. —, 110 S. E. 668 (murder of alleged paramour of wife; the paramour's statement to an attendant physician that he was impotent, admitted); Vermont: 1896, Bagley v. Mason, 69 Vt. 175, 37 Atl. 287 (admissible though not made to a physician); 1897, Brown v. Mt. Holly, 69 Vt. 364, 38 Atl. 69 (similar); 1902, Kidder v. Bacon, 74 Vt. 263, 52 Atl. 322 (statements of mental suffering, admitted; obscure on this point); West Virginia: 1905, Stevens v. Friedman, 58 W. Va. 78, 51 S. E. 132 (battery; complaints "exhibiting the natural symptoms and effects of the injury," admitted).

(2) It may be argued, further, when the physician's opinion appears to have been founded on such statements, not merely that the weight of his testimony is affected, but that it should be entirely excluded, as not founded on personal observation. This is done by many Courts, particularly where the opinion is founded entirely on the statements of attendants or even of the patient himself (ante, § 688). This, however, is purely a question of the testimonial qualifications of the physician; and the patient's statements may be inquired about to determine whether the physician's testimony should be received at all; moreover, only the fact of the patient's statement, not the tenor of it, would need to be inquired about.

(3) Finally, there is the genuine hearsay use of the patient's statements, involving the Hearsay exception now under consideration. This use is distinct from the two preceding ones. But it brings up the question whether patients' statements, not admissible under the present Hearsay exception, can be admitted, under the first head above, as showing the physician's reasons. Now so far as the statements, though not admissible under (3), have a legitimate place under (1), supra, it would seem that they should be received, on the general principle of Multiple Admissibility (ante, § 13), that evidence admissible on any single ground must be received.[1] No doubt the principle must not be wrested from its proper purpose. Where under the pretext of (1), supra, not merely the fact of a patient's statement, but the details of it, are so offered that its use for that purpose is a mere pretence, and its real use and predominating effect would be that of hearsay testimony of the patient, then it should be excluded.

§ 1721. Statements Post Litem Motam. If the analogies of other Exceptions (ante, § 1422) be followed, all statements made 'post litem motam' are to be rejected as untrustworthy. But it is questionable whether an absolute exclusion based on this distinction is either just or necessary. After corporal injuries, the thought of making a claim for compensation and perhaps of bringing suit is apt (in these days) to occur almost immediately to the injured person. A strict application of the 'post litem' limitation would practically exclude entirely this class of evidence in the majority of cases, and would thus exclude even the most unfeigned statements of pain because of a mere general possibility of falsification. On the other hand, the fictitious and untrustworthy nature of a great deal of such evidence in personal-injury litigation is a matter of common knowledge, and some power to exclude it ought to exist. Its exclusion ought to depend on the circumstances of each case, and to be left to the trial Court's discretion. A flexible rule of this sort is indicated by some Courts:

§ 1720. [1] In this view, the ruling in Hunt v. Boston, 152 Mass. 169, holding that the right to ask for reasons for an opinion does not include the right to extract facts otherwise inadmissible, seems unsound. Compare Cronin v. R. Co., Mass., post, § 1722.

1867, LAWRENCE, J., in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sutton, 42 Ill. 440: "[The physician] may state what his patient said, in describing his bodily condition, if said under circumstances which free it from all suspicion of being spoken with reference to future litigation, and give it the character of 'res gestæ.'"

1878, CAMPBELL, J., in Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 544: "We cannot think it safe to receive such statements, which are made for the very purpose of getting up testimony, and not under ordinary circumstances. The physicians here . . . were sent for merely to enable the plaintiff below to prove her case. . . . [The expressions] were therefore made under a strong temptation to feign suffering if dishonest, and a hardly less strong tendency if honest to imagine or exaggerate it. The purpose of the examination removed the ordinary safeguards which furnish the only reason for receiving declarations which bear in a party's own favor. . . . It is not necessary to consider whether there may not be properly received in some cases the natural and usual expressions of pain made under circumstances free from suspicion, even 'post litem motam.' The case must at least be a very plain one which will permit this."

By some Courts the circumstance that the declarations were 'post litem' is taken as not excluding them, but merely as affecting their weight. By still other Courts, representing the more common practice, the declarations are absolutely excluded if made to a physician at a consultation for the purpose of enabling him to testify to the injury, and otherwise may be admitted though made 'post litem.' In some jurisdictions it is difficult to say that any one of these three forms has definitely been adopted.[1]

§ 1721. [1] Add some of the cases cited ante, § 1719, note 8:

Federal: 1892, Kansas C. F. S. & M. R. Co. v. Stoner, 10 U. S. App. 209, 225, 2 C. C. A. 437, 51 Fed. 649 (the mere fact of 'post litem motam' is not decisive); 1895, Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Roalefs, 16 C. C. A. 601, 70 Fed. 22 (statements made at a consultation not with a view to medical aid, but to qualify the physician to testify, inadmissible); 1916, Chicago Railways Co. v. Kramer, 7th C. C. A., 234 Fed. 245 (the physician's testimony to complaints is admissible where the party went to him primarily for treatment, though also for qualifying him to testify);

Connecticut: 1884, Darrigan v. R. Co., 52 Conn. 291, 309 (inadmissible; in this case the statements were made during a consultation intended not to secure medical treatment but to enable the medical man to testify);

Illinois: 1867, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sutton, 42 Ill. 440 (quoted supra); 1903, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Donworth, 203 Ill. 192, 67 N. E. 797 (statements made to qualify the physician and not for treatment, excluded); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28 (during treatment, but after action begun, admitted); 1908, Greinke v. R. Co., 234 Ill. 564, 85 N. E. 327 ("declarations of the injured party made to a physician who has made an examination of such party with a view to qualify himself to testify as a witness, only, are not admissible;" semble, movements controllable by volition are equally excluded); 1908, Shaughnessy v. Holt, 236 Ill. 485, 86 N. E. 256 (patient's expressed sensations and answers made at an examination by physicians solely for the purpose of qualifying as witnesses, excluded); 1908, Casey v. Chicago City R. Co., 237 Ill. 140, 86 N. E. 606 (similar); 1910, Louth v. Chicago M. T. Co., 244 Ill. 244, 91 N. E. 431 (personal injury; laymen who have observed the plaintiff in ordinary course of life may testify to his appearance and expressions with reference to nervousness and the like; Greinke v. R. Co. and Shaughnessy v. Holt distinguished as applying only to physicians consulted to qualify them for trial testimony);

Indiana: 1885, Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 271, 3 N. E. 836 ('post litem' does not exclude); 1894, Board v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611, 38 N. E. 526 (statements up to time of action brought, admitted);

Iowa: 1909, Johnston v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co., 141 Ia. 114, 119 N. W 286 (undecided);

Maryland: 1903, Sellman v. Wheeler, 95 Md.

§ 1722. Kind of Fact narrated; Statements of Past Events and Conditions excluded. It is obvious that both of the general principles involved — that of Necessity and that of Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness — (ante, §§ 1718, 1421, 1422) require the exclusion of statements dealing with certain kinds of facts.

(a) Statements of the external circumstances causing the injury, namely, the events leading up to it, the immediate occasion of it (e. g. that the person was knocked down by a horse), or the nature of the injury (e. g. that a leg was broken), do not satisfy the Necessity principle, because they do not relate to an internal state, and thus other evidence is presumably available; moreover they have not the usual Guarantee of Trustworthiness, because they

751, 54 Atl. 512 (statements of suffering made to a physician three months after the injury, admitted);
Massachusetts: 1881, Hatch v. Fuller, 131 Mass. 574 ('post litem' does not exclude);
Michigan: 1878, Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 544 (quoted supra); 1890, Laughlin v. R. Co., 80 Mich. 154, 44 N. W. 1049 (statements after suit begun, and four years after the accident, excluded); 1891, Jones v. Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 600, 50 N. W. 731 (statements made 'post litem,' excluded); 1895, Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496, 65 N. W. 616 (not inadmissible solely because 'post litem motam'; here statements made by a child in his own home and not while examined 'pro lite' were admitted); 1896, McKormick v. West Bay City, 110 Mich. 265, 68 N. W. 148 (exclamations, and even appearances of inability to walk, at an examination made two days before the trial, excluded, the data at an examination "with reference to the trial of a pending case" being absolutely excluded, unless clearly involuntary); 1897, Heddle v. R. Co., 112 Mich. 547, 70 N. W. 1096 (inadmissible, if made to a physician called merely to examine for the purposes of the trial); 1898, Butts v. Eaton Rapids, 116 Mich. 539, 74 N. W. 872 (McKormick and Strudgeon cases approved); 1899, Mott v. R. Co., 120 Mich. 127, 79 N. W. 3 (plaintiff sent for a lawyer and a physician the day after the injury; declarations on and after that day, excluded); 1904, Comstock v. Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541, 100 N. W. 788 (testimony as to an injured person's "flinching," etc., at the touch of a doctor called a week before trial, and not for treatment, excluded); 1905, McCormick v. Detroit G. H. & M. R. Co., 141 Mich. 17, 104 N. W. 390 (Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, supra, approved and applied); 1905, O'Dea v. Michigan C. R. Co., 142 Mich. 265, 105 N. W. 746 (statements to the defendant's physician, called in expectation of his giving testimony, excluded);
New Hampshire: 1868, Towle v. Blake, 48 N. H. 96 ('post litem' does not exclude); 1888, Norris v. Haverhill, 65 N. H. 89, 18 Atl. 85 (same);
New Jersey: 1897, Traction Co. v. Lambertson, 60 N. J. L. 452, 38 Atl. 683 (declarations to a physician at an examination 'pro lite,' inadmissible; except so far as "natural expressions of present pain");
New York: 1866, Matteson v. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 491 ('post litem' does not exclude);
Ohio: 1902, Pennsylvania Co. v. Files, 65 Oh. St. 403, 62 N. E. 1047 (statements to a physician called in expressly to qualify as a witness, excluded);
Oregon: 1921, Yarbrough v. Carlson, — Or. —, 202 Pac. 739 (statements of pain, made to physician called for treatment, admitted);
Texas: 1901, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Johnson, 95 Tex. 409, 67 S. W. 768 (declarations of pain when under examination for the sole purpose of qualifying the physician to testify, said to be inadmissible by authorities "which seem to be better supported by reason"; but the question not here decided);
Vermont: 1860, Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591, 598 (statements made 'post litem' and in order to qualify the testifying physician, admitted); 1896, Bagley v. Mason, 69 Vt. 175, 37 Atl. 285 ("post litem' does not exclude);
Wisconsin: 1879, Quaife v. R. Co., 48 Wis. 526, 4 N. W. 658 (declarations 'post litem' in the presence of physicians representing both sides, admitted); 1890, Stewart v. Everts, 76 Wis. 35, 42, 44 N. W. 1092 (statements to a physician, after action commenced, "for the sole purpose of calling such expert as a witness" to the nature and cause of the injury, inadmissible); 1893, Abbot v. Heath, 84 Wis. 320, 54 N. W. 574 (statements 'pro lite', excluded); 1894, Stone v. R. Co., 88 Wis. 98, 105, 59 N. W. 457 (admissible if not made after action brought, to qualify the physician as a witness); 1895, Rebo v. Augusta, 90 Wis. 408, 63 N. W. 1045 (following Stewart v. Everts); 1896, Keller v. Gilman, 93 Wis. 9, 66 N. W. 800 (following Stone v. R. Co.); 1904, Kath v. Wisconsin C. R. Co., 121 Wis. 503, 99 N. W. 217 (not admissible when made to a physician "after action is brought or threatened").

are not naturally called forth by the present pain or suffering (though this latter reason is rarely noticed):[1]

§ 1722. [1] See also the quotations in § 1718, ante. This limitation is mentioned in almost every case on the general subject; the following citations deal with it directly:

ENGLAND: 1825, Gardner Peerage Case, LeMarchant's Rep. 170, 174 (woman's statement, to a physician attending for child-birth, of the date of conception, excluded); 1888, R. v. Gloster, 16 Cox Cr. 471, 473 ("The statements must be confined to contemporaneous symptoms, and nothing in the nature of a narrative is admissible as to who caused them or how they were caused"); 1912, Amys v. Barton, 1 K. B. 40 (injury to a workman in a field; his statement that a wasp stung him, etc., held inadmissible).

CANADA: 1912, Youlden v. London G. & A. Co., Ont. H. C. J., 4 D. L. R. 721 (by a workman injured, that "he thought he had hurt himself," admitted, to show the internal condition, but not its cause; English cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act, examined).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1913, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Williams, 108 Ark. 387, 158 S. W. 494;

Connecticut: 1860, State v. Dart, 29 Conn. 153, 155 (declaration by a deceased that she was subject to fits and had several times fallen, excluded); 1893, Rowland v. R. Co., 63 Conn. 415, 418, 28 Atl. 102 (that his ribs had been broken six months before and were healed, excluded);

Florida: 1903, Weightnovel v. State, 46 Fla. 1, 35 So. 856 (abortion; deceased's statements about the defendant's treatment of her a week before, excluded);

Illinois: 1867, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sutton, 42 Ill. 438; 1897, West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Carr, 170 Ill. 478, 48 N. E. 992 ("not to the past, nor to the manner and circumstances of receiving the injury"); 1916, Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 336, 113 N. E. 629 (employee's statement as to cause of injury, here by handling the engine, excluded); 1918, Peoria Cordage Co. v. Ind. Board, 284 Ill. 90, 119 N. E. 996 (deceased's statements as to the cause of a finger-cut, made to a physician, held inadmissible);

Indiana: 1885, Carthage Turnpike Co. v. Andrews, 102 Ind. 144, 1 N. E. 364; 1906, Indiana U. T. Co. v. Jacobs, 167 Ind. 85, 78 N. E. 325 ("She told me that she had an injured limb," admitted); 1919, Abendroth v. Fidelity & D. Co., — Ind. App. —, 124 N. E. 714 ("I fell," "I hurt myself," said some hours after the event, excluded);

Iowa: 1868, Gray v. McLaughlin, 26 Ia. 279; 1899, Keist v. R. Co., 110 Ia. 32, 81 N. W. 181; 1901, Hall v. Cedar R. & M. C. R. Co., 115 Ia. 18, 87 N. W. 739 (statements as to "how she had been hurt," excluded);

Kentucky: 1905, Shade's Adm'r v. Covington C. E. R. & T. & B. Co., 119 Ky. 592, 84 S. W. 733 (that she had fallen on the ice on the defendant's bridge, excluded);

Maine: 1921, Larrabee's Case, 120 Me. 242, 113 Atl. 268 (injured employee; on coming from the engine-room, deceased said, "The gas almost killed me"; excluded, as a "statement of the cause of the physical injury or condition");

Maryland: 1915, Commissioners v. Venables, 125 Md. 471, 94 Atl. 89 (exclamation at the time of an injury, "my thigh is broken all to pieces," admitted); 1916, Damm v. State, 128 Md. 665, 97 Atl. 645 (abortion; patient's statement to physician as to cause of the injury or the instrument used, inadmissible);

Massachusetts: 1851, Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. 568; 1857, Chapin v. Marlborough, 9 Gray 244; 1868, Ashland v. Marlborough, 99 Mass. 48, semble; 1872, Morrissey v. Ingham, 111 Mass. 66; 1882, Roosa v. Loan Co., 132 Mass. 439; 1918, Keough v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 229 Mass. 275, 118 N. E. 524;

Michigan: 1914, Reck v. Whittlesberger, 181 Mich. 463, 148 N. W. 247 (claim under the Industrial Accident act; the deceased employee's statement as to the case of his injury, viz.: by running a nail into his hand, held inadmissible); 1885, Merkle v. Bennington, 58 Mich. 156, 160, 24 N. W. 776; 1889, Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 42 N. W. 1011; 1898, People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556, 74 N. W. 730 (former vomiting);

Minnesota: 1891, Johnson v. R. Co., 47 Minn. 430, 50 N. W. 473 (not as to "past events or facts"); 1893, Cooper v. R. Co., 54 Minn. 379, 383, 56 N. W. 42 (preceding case approved.)

New Hampshire: 1919, Boulanger v. McQuestin, 79 N. H. 175, 106 Atl. 492;

New Jersey: 1921, State v. Gruich, 95 N. J. L. 263, 114 Atl. 547 (abortion; the woman's statement to a physician that "she went to a woman," excluded; following Roosa v. Loan Co.);

New York: 1901, People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286 (declarations to a physician, that the declarant had received by mail a box of powders, had taken a dose, and thought it the cause of his trouble, excluded; no authority cited);

Pennsylvania: 1917, Eby v. Traveler's Ins. Co., 258 Pa. 525, 102 Atl. 209 (deceased's statements to physician as to cause of an illness, excluded);

South Dakota: 1904, Fallon v. Rapid City, 17 S. D. 570, 97 N. W. 1009 (that a sprain was caused by a defective sidewalk, excluded);

Texas: 1867, Rogers v. Crain, 30 Tex. 284; 1884, Newman v. Dodson, 61 Tex. 95;

Vermont: 1873, Earl v. Tupper, 42 Vt. 284; 1882, Drew v. Sutton, 55 Vt. 586, 589; 1898, 1885, MITCHELL, J., in Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 269, 3 N. E. 836: "Expressions of present existing pain and of its locality . . . are admitted upon the ground of necessity as being the only means of determining whether pain or suffering is endured by another. . . . The rule is not to be extended beyond the necessity upon which it is founded," and therefore not to past events or the circumstances of the injury.

It is on this class of statements that attention has been focussed in demanding a relaxation of strict rules before State industrial commissions (ante, § 4*c*).

(b) Statements of past sufferings, pain, or symptoms are not excluded by the Necessity principle, for the necessity is equally the same for all internal conditions, whether past or present. They are, however, excluded by the principle of Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1718), for they are not naturally caused by the existing pain or other symptoms, but, being deliberate accounts of past occurrences, are no better than statements of any other past events. They are, therefore, generally excluded:[2]

1852, RUFFIN, C. J., in Lush v. McDaniel, 13 Ired. 487: "The ground of receiving those declarations is that they are reasonable and natural evidence of the true situation and Hawks v. Chester, 70 Vt. 271, 40 Atl. 727 ("I am terribly hurt," allowed); 1898, Plummer v. Ricker, 71 Vt. 114, 41 Atl. 1045 (injury by a dog's bite; plaintiff's expressions in sleep, "Take him off," etc., not admitted to show the plaintiff's mental and physical condition); Virginia: 1901, O'Boyle v. Com., 100 Va. 785, 40 S. E. 121 (deceased's declaration that her pain was due to a fall, excluded); Wisconsin: 1887, McKeigue v. Janesville, 68 Wis. 57, 31 N. W. 298; 1920, Maine v. Maryland Casualty Co., 172 Wis. 350, 178 N. W. 749 (deceased's declarations, some days later, as to being injured by the moving of an ice-box, excluded).

Contra: Ireland: 1911, Wright v. Kerrigan, 2 Ire. K. B. 301 (cause of employee's injury; deceased employee's statement to the doctor that "he met with an accident by the moving of a coffin," held admissible).

The word "narrative" is sometimes to stigmatize the class of statements excluded by this part of the rule; but of course it has no special propriety. All hearsay is narrative, i. e. assertion taken testimonially (ante, § 1361); if an utterance is not narrative, it is not covered by the Hearsay rule. A statement of present pain is just as truly "narrative" as a statement of the circumstances of the accident.

[2] Accord: Alabama: 1851, Rowland v. Walker, 18 Ala. 749; 1855, Eckles v. Bates, 26 Ala. 659; 1857, Wilkinson v. Moseley, 30 Ala. 572; 1859, Barker v. Coleman, 35 Ala. 225; 1861, Stone v. Watson, 37 Ala. 288; California: 1919, People v. Bray, 42 Cal. App. 465, 183 Pac. 712 (statements that "she had been delirious and had had fever," excluded); Georgia: 1897, Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309; Kansas: 1882, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Frazier, 27 Kan. 463; 1900, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Burrows, 62 Kan. 89, 61 Pac. 439; Massachusetts: 1904, Cashin v. N. Y. H. H. & H. R. Co., 185 Mass. 543, 70 N. E. 930; 1906, Weeks v. Boston El. R. Co., 190 Mass. 563, 77 N. E. 654 (certain complaints, held here not to state past pain); Michigan: 1878, Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 543; 1892, Girard v. Kalamazoo, 92 Mich. 610, 611, 52 N. W. 1021; 1892, Lacas v. R. Co., 92 Mich. 412, 416, 52 N. W. 745; 1896, Will v. Mendon, 108 Mich. 251, 66 N. W. 58; 1896, Burleson v. Reading, 110 Mich. 512, 68 N. W. 294 ("present pain and suffering"); Mississippi: 1904, Boyd v. State, 84 Miss. 414, 36 So. 525 (poisoning; statements of symptoms a few days before, excluded); New Hampshire: 1868, Towle v. Blake, 48 N. H. 96; Texas: 1898, Wheeler v. R. Co., 91 Tex. 876, 43 S. W. 876; Vermont: 1896, State v. Fournier, 68 Vt. 262, 35 Atl. 178; 1908, Wilkins v. Brock, 81 Vt. 332, 70 Atl. 572.

Contra: 1899, Morrison v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 473, 51 S. W. 358 (that the deceased was habitually not troubled by menstruation, admitted, though including a statement as to past conditions).

Failure to complain of pain would be receivable either as a party's admission (ante, § 1060), or under the present Exception: 1882, Warren v. Wright, 103 Ill. 298, 301 (sidewalk injury; to rebut testimony that the plaintiff had suffered from a weak back before the accident, testimony was thought admissible from persons who had never heard him complain of such an ailment). Compare the analogies of § 1556, ante.

feelings of the person for the time being. But in reference to past periods they have no such claim to confidence, as they are manifestly, to that purpose, but the narrative of one not on oath."

Expressions as to the duration of an illness are in effect statements of past feelings and symptoms, and should on principle be excluded in the same way; but they have usually been admitted without noticing this.[3]

(c) There is in Massachusetts (and a few other jurisdictions) a modification of the preceding rule where the statements are made to a physician. Statements of past facts in the shape of the circumstances of the injury are, as elsewhere, always rejected; but statements of past suffering and other symptoms in preceding stages of the illness are admitted when made to a physician. This peculiarity seems to have been the result of the suggestions in the obscure language of Bacon v. Charlton and Barber v. Merriam (quoted ante, §§ 1718, 1719); the rule finally taking this shape in Roosa v. Loan Co. The modification (which seems to rest on the peculiar strength of the Circumstantial Guarantee in such cases) is rational and practical, and has been followed in a few other jurisdictions:[4]

1882, ENDICOTT, J., in Roosa v. Loan Co., 132 Mass. 439: "While a witness not an expert can testify only to such exclamations and complaints as indicate present existing pain and suffering, a physician may testify to a statement or narrative given by his patient in relation to his condition, symptoms, sensations, and feelings, both past and present. In both these cases [physician and ordinary witness] these declarations are admitted from necessity, because in this way only can the bodily condition of the party . . . be ascertained. But the necessity does not extend to declarations by the party as to the cause of the injury . . . which may be proved by other evidence."

This modification extends only to past sufferings and symptoms, and does not include the past external events attending the injury or illness.[5]

[3] 1903, Wilkins v. Missouri Valley, — Ia. —, 96 N. W. 868 (by a physician, how long the plaintiff continued to suffer pain, allowed); 1845, Yeatman v. Armistead, 6 Humph. Tenn. 375; 1858, Looper v. Bell, 1 Head. Tenn. 373; 1867, Rogers v. Crain, 30 Tex. 284.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, — Ky. —, 84 S. W. 755 (1905), statements as to mental suffering were excluded, but improperly it would seem.

[4] Accord: Ind. 1885, Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 264, 3 N. E. 836; Ia. 1907, State v. Blydenburg, 135 Ia. 264, 112 N. W. 634 ("the clinical history of the case," allowed; following Roosa v. Loan Co., Mass.); Ky. 1897, Omberg v. U. S. Mut. Ass'n, 101 Ky. 303, 40 S. W. 909; 1905, Shade's Adm'r v. Covington C. E. R. & T. & B. Co., 119 Ky. 592, 84 S. W. 733 (perhaps qualifying the Omberg case); Mass. 1907, Com. v. Sinclair, 195 Mass. 100, 80 N. E. 799 (abortion; statements by the patient to a physician that she had been operated on for pregnancy and had had a miscarriage, not admitted under the rule of Roosa v. Loan Co.); N. J. 1881, State v. Gedicke, 43 N. J. L. 88; Okl. 1917, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 63 Okl. 32, 162 Pac. 823; Vt. 1875, Hathaway v. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335, 350 (to a physician in consultation, "that at times he felt as if he must take his [own] life," admitted on an issue of insanity); Wyo. 1912, Acme C. P. Co. v. Westman, 20 Wyo. 143, 122 Pac. 89.

Contra: 1897, Weber v. R. Co., 67 Minn. 155, 69 N. W. 716; 1897, Williams v. R. Co., 68 Minn. 55, 70 N. W. 860.

The principle of § 1720, par. 1, supra, may sometimes suffice to admit: 1895, People v. Shattuck, 109 Cal. 673, 42 Pac. 315 (admitted as necessary to explain the physician's diagnosis).

[5] 1893, Rowland v. R. Co., 63 Conn. 415, 419, 28 Atl. 102; 1870, Collins v. Waters, 54 Ill. 485, 486 (statement to a physician that the injury had been caused by a kick, excluded) 1913, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sealf, 155 Ky.

§ 1723. Other Statements about Health, discriminated. (1) A statement by a party, as to his suffering, health, injury, or the like, may be receivable as an admission (ante, §§ 1048, 1060). Such an admission may be conveyed by silence or by conduct of various sorts; that a plaintiff, for example, now suing for a serious spinal injury has never been heard to complain of it under circumstances when complaint would have been natural, is receivable as an admission. When the party takes the stand as a witness, the same conduct may also be available to discredit him as being in effect an inconsistent statement (ante, §§ 1017, 1042). Under both of those principles, the limitations of the present Hearsay Exception have of course no bearing.

(2) Whether such admissions as to health, made by an insured, are available against the beneficiary of an insurance contract, is a matter of some controversy, already considered (ante, § 1081).

(3) On an issue, upon an insurance claim, of the knowing falsity of an insured's representations as to health, the general principles governing the use of conduct as evidence of knowledge allow the insured's statements of an ailment to be used as evidence that he was aware of its existence, even though the insured's admission is on the above principle not to be taken as affecting the beneficiary (ante, § 266).

B. STATEMENTS OF DESIGN, INTENT, MOTIVE, FEELING, ETC.

§ 1725. Statements of Design or Plan. It has already been seen (ante, § 102) that the existence of a design or plan to do a specific act is relevant to show that the act was probably done as planned. The design or plan, being thus in its turn a fact to be proved, may be evidenced circumstantially by the person's conduct (ante, §§ 253, 300). But, as a condition of mind, the plan or design may also, it is clear, be evidenced under the present Exception by the person's own statements as to its existence.

The only limitations as to the use of such statements (assuming the fact of the design to be relevant) are those suggested by the general principle of this Exception (ante, § 1714), namely, the statements must be of a present existing state of mind, and must appear to have been made in a natural manner and not under circumstances of suspicion. The following passages expound and illustrate the principle:

1878, BEASLEY, C. J., in Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. L. 495 (admitting statements of the deceased at Philadelphia that he was then going to Camden with the accused on business): "In the ordinary course of things, it was the usual information that a man about leaving home would communicate, for the convenience of his family, the information of his friends, 273, 159 S. W. 804 (not clear in its limitations); 1882, Roosa v. Loan Co., Mass., supra; 1889, Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 503, 42 N. W. 1011.

Contra: 1897, Omberg v. U. S. Mut. Ass., 101 Ky. 303, 40 S. W. 909 (statement that the suffering was caused by a mosquito bite, admitted); 1919, Eggers V. S. Co. v. Ind. Com. 168 Wis. 377, 170 N. W. 280 (employee's statement to physician of cause of injury, admitted).

The principle of § 1720, par. 1, supra, may sometimes serve to admit: 1902, Cronin v. R. Co., 181 Mass. 202, 63 N. E. 335.

or the regulation of his business. At the time it was given, such declarations could, in the nature of things, mean harm to no one; he who uttered them was bent on no expedition of mischief or wrong; and the attitude of affairs at the time entirely explodes the idea that such utterances were intended to serve any purpose but that for which they were obviously designed. . . . If it was in the ordinary train of events for this man to leave word or to state where he was going, it seems to me it was equally so for him to say with whom he was going."

1892, FIELD, C. J., in Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 185, 31 N. E. 961: "The fundamental proposition is that an intention in the mind of a person can only be shown by some external manifestation, which must be some look or appearance of the face or body, or some act or speech; and that proof of either or all of these for the sole purpose of showing state of mind or intention of the person is proof of a fact from which the state of mind or intention may be inferred. . . . Although evidence of the conscious voluntary declarations of a person as indications of his state of mind has in it some of the elements of hearsay, yet it closely resembles evidence of the natural expression of feeling which has always been regarded in the law, not as hearsay, but as original evidence; and when the person making the declarations is dead, such evidence is often not only the best, but the only evidence of what was in his mind at the time. . . . It is not necessary in the present case to determine what limitations in practice, if any, must be put upon the admission of this kind of evidence, because all the limitations exist which have ever been suggested as necessary. The person making the declaration, if one was made, is dead; . . . and the declaration, if made, was made under circumstances which exclude any suspicion of an intention to make evidence to be used at the trial."

1892, GRAY, J., in Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. 909 (the whereabouts of the alleged deceased was in issue; letters of his were offered expressing an intention to leave Wichita, where he was, for Colorado): "Letters from him to his family and to his betrothed were the natural, if not the only attainable evidence of his intention. . . . A man's state of mind or feeling can only be manifested to others by countenance, attitude, or gesture, or by sounds or words, spoken or written. . . . The existence of a particular intention in a certain person at a certain time being a material fact to be proved, evidence that he expressed that intention at that time is as direct evidence of the fact as his own testimony that he then had that intention would be. After his death, there can hardly be any other way of proving it; and while he is still alive, his own memory of his state of mind at a former time is no more likely to be clear and true than a bystander's recollection of what he then said, and is less trustworthy than letters written by him at the very time and under circumstances precluding a suspicion of misrepresentation."

The use of such statements of design or plan is illustrated in a variety of precedents. The typical situation, it must be noted, involves (1) the doing of an act which is in some way part of the issue or relevant thereto, (2) the existence of a design or plan to do this act, as evidence (ante, § 102) of the probable doing of the act, and (3) the hearsay use, under the present Exception, of the person's statements of this design or plan.

In most of the precedents, the issue involves the conduct of a victim of a crime, or of an insured person, or of a sufferer from an injury.[1]

§ 1725. [1] With the following cases compare those cited ante, §§ 104, 112, 113 (design as evidence of the doing of an act):

ENGLAND: 1875, R. v. Buckley, 13 Cox Cr. 294 (to prove that a deceased constable was intending to be in the accused's vicinity on the night of his death, a report by the deceased to his superior was admitted, that the deceased "had had private intimation that the prisoner was at his old game of thieving again, and that therefore the deceased intended to watch his movements that night").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1892, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. 909 (quoted supra); this 'cause célèbre' went through more than twenty-five years of litigation; there were three inquests and six jury trials; it even affected State politics; the setting aside of the verdict in the sixth trial was ordered in 1903, Connecticut M. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 188 U. S. 208, 23 Sup. 294; the history of prior stages is found in Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Boyle, 1897, 82 Fed. 705 (application for a Kansas license); see also the report of the Texas insurance examiner for 1899, and the historical note to the case as printed in the present writer's Principles of Judicial Proof, 1913, p. 856; 1900, Sharland v. Ins. Co. 41 C. C. A. 307, 101 Fed. 206 (insured's expressions of intention to commit suicide, admitted); 1918, Chicago M. St. P. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 9th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 429 (personal injury to passenger; to evidence plaintiff's status, his expressions of intention to make a certain trip were admitted); 1921, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Slocum, 9th C. C. A., 272 Fed. 28 (death by gunshot; deceased's expressions negativing intention of suicide, held admissible); 1921, Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 8th C. C. A., 275 Fed. 757 (disappearance of insured; letters expressing intention to suicide, admitted);

Alabama: 1905, Nordan v. State, 143 Ala. 13, 39 So. 406 (murder by abortion: deceased's expression of intent to commit suicide, admitted);

California: 1903, Rogers v. Ins. Co., 138 Cal. 285, 71 Pac. 348 (letter of an insured planning suicide, admitted); 1920, People v. Northcott — Cal. App. — 189 Pac. 704 (murder by abortion; deceased's statement of intention to visit defendant to obtain an abortion, admitted);

Colorado: 1898, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Spencer, 25 Colo. 9, 52 Pac. 211 (to show that the deceased was at a place, his declarations of intention a few days previous were received); 1900, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Spencer, 27 Colo. 313, 61 Pac. 606 (plan to meet a person at a train, admitted);

Connecticut: 1881, State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 380 (murder of a chief of police; the deceased's declarations, when leaving the house, that he "was going to arrest Chip Smith," admitted; the 'res gestae' phrase resorted to); 1904, State v. Kelly, 77 Conn. 266, 58 Atl. 705 (murder by poisoning; deceased's declarations of intention to commit suicide, held admissible, but confined in the trial Court's discretion to a period of two months before; good opinion by Prentice, J., on the subject of remoteness of time; Com. v. Trefethen, Mass. approved);

Florida: 1903, Weightnovel v. State, 46 Fla. 1, 35 So. 856 (abortion; the deceased's statements of an intention to submit to an abortion by the defendant, admitted);

Illinois: the rulings in this State are inconsistent, and are placed together under § 1726, post;

Indiana: 1903, Seifert v. State, 160 Ind. 464, 67 N. E. 100 (abortion; deceased's statement of a design to get rid of her child, admitted);

Iowa: 1912, State v. Beeson, 155 Ia. 355, 136 N. W. 317 (wife-murder; her expressions of intention to commit suicide, etc., admitted; approving Com. v. Trefethen, and the text supra); 1913, Ott v. Murphy, 160 Ia. 730, 141 N. W. 463 (libel on a candidate for public office; on the issue whether he was a candidate, his declarations of intention were admitted); 1914, Nolte v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 165 Ia. 721, 147 N. W. 192 (damages for the death of a married woman; her expressions of intention to continue her occupation as nurse, admitted);

Kansas: 1919, State v. Patterson, 105 Kan. 9, 181 Pac. 609 (manslaughter by abortion; deceased's statement that she was going to defendant for an operation for abortion; not decided on principle);

Kentucky: 1896, Walling v. Com., — Ky. —, 38 S. W. 428 ("technically competent"; a declaration of intention to spend the night at a place, admitted, as showing that the night was so spent);

Massachusetts: 1873, Alley's Trial, Mass., Pamph. 38 (secret murder; that the deceased on the same day had sought to find the defendant, admitted); 1892, Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 185, 31 N. E. 961 (quoted supra); 1897, Inness v. R. Co., 168 Mass. 433, 47 N. E. 193 (a statement, when leaving the house, that he was going to take the train, admitted); 1910, Com. v. Howard, 205 Mass. 128, 91 N. E. 397 (whether a deed was suicide or murder; the deceased's statements of intention in going to the place, admitted for the prosecution);

Michigan: 1912, People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258, 136 N. W. 493 (death by abortion; the deceased's declarations, before and after visiting the defendant, held admissible only so far as involving statements of her intention to have an operation, but not posterior statements of her transaction with the defendant); 1915, People v. Atwood, 188 Mich. 36, 154 N. W. 112 (murder; the deceased's body was found hanging, but an abortion had been performed; the issue being as to suicide, and the accused being her seducer; the deceased's declarations of intention to go for a walk with him were held admissible);

Minnesota: 1895, State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63 (murder; a statement of the deceased that she had an appointment to meet the defendant, admitted); 1896, Hale v. Life Co., 65 Minn. 548, 68 N. W. 182 (declarations of intention to commit suicide, admissible "if made under circumstances precluding any suspicion of misrepresentation"; following the Hillmon and Trefethen rulings); 1900, Matthews v. R. Co., 81 Minn. 363, 84 N. W. 101 (whether a person was law-

But the principle has no narrow limitations; for example, an absence from the jurisdiction, by a party or a witness,[2] or the making of a contract or a fully on a train; his declarations of his purpose when boarding, admitted); 1915, State v. Hunter, 131 Minn. 252, 154 N. W. 1083 (manslaughter by abortion; deceased's declarations "that she was going to see Dr. H. that night, Dr. H. was coming down there, and she was going to take the last treatment"; admitted, to show deceased's intent, etc.);

Nebraska: 1918, Sutter v. State, 102 Nebr. 321, 167 N. W. 66 (murder; the deceased's letters, etc., expressing intention of suicide, admitted; liberal opinion by Cornish, J.); 1921, Fields v. State, — Nebr. —, 185 N. W. 400 (abortion; deceased's letter to her seducer stating her intention to go to defendant for an operation, admitted; "the letter is a part of the 'res gestæ'");
New Jersey: 1878, Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. L. 495 (quoted supra); 1909, State v. Kane, 77 N. J. L. 244, 72 Atl. 39 (burglary; declaration of intention, the prior day, as to a meeting at the place where arrested, admitted);
New York: 1903, People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333, 67 N. E. 624 (deceased's declaration of intention, three years before, to commit suicide, admissible);
North Dakota: 1905, Clemens v. Royal Neighbors, 14 N. D. 116, 103 N. W. 402 (note written by deceased just before death, admitted on the issue of suicide);
Ohio: 1892, Lake Shore R. Co. v. Herrick, 49 Oh. St. 25, 29 N. E. 1052 (admitting the statement of the plaintiff, made to a hotel-clerk at the time of leaving the hotel, that he was going to a place C.);
Oregon: 1919, State v. Butler, 96 Or. 219, 186 Pac. 55, 78 (murder; deceased's prior statements of intention as to his conduct, admitted; Burnett, J., diss.); 1916, State v. Farnam, 82 Or. 211, 161 Pac. 417 (homicide of a woman seduced; the woman's statement "she could not go home with the B. girls because R. [the accused] was coming that evening," admitted; liberal opinion by McBride, J.);
Pennsylvania: 1920, Com. v. Palma, 268 Pa. 434, 112 Atl. 26 (murder of S. by defendant and R.; the statements of S. to his wife, when leaving home an hour previously, that he intended to meet defendant and R., admitted);
Tennessee: 1842, Carroll v. State, 22 Tenn. 321 (statements as to destination, admitted);
Texas: 1871, Hamby v. State, 36 Tex. 523, 526 (statements of the deceased that he was looking for the defendant, who had taken his horse, admitted as indicating that he was in search of him); 1919, Porter v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. App. 23, 215 S. W. 201 (murder of a paramour; issue as to the woman meeting the defendant on the day of her disappearance; her statement on departing that she was going to meet W. P., the defendant, at the haystack, admitted, Davidson, P. J., diss.); 1922, Parker v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 238 S. W. 943 (murder; deceased's statement of intention to drive to a place, admitted);
Utah: 1903, State v. Mortensen, 26 Utah 312, 73 Pac. 562, 563 (deceased's statements, when departing, as to his destination, admitted);
Vermont: 1859, State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 404 (statements as to destination, admitted);
Virginia: 1886, Cluverius v. Com., 81 Va. 787, 810 (letter of the deceased, stating her intention to meet the defendant, admitted); 1919, Karnes v. Com., 125 Va. 758, 99 S. E. 562 (murder of a woman; the woman's expressions of fear of one A., admitted "to show motive on A.'s part"; Ins. Co. v. Hillmon followed); 1922, Mohler v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 454 (murder; deceased's statement of intention to go to accused's place that evening, admitted);
Washington: 1901, State v. Power, 24 Wash. 34, 63 Pac. 1112 (abortion; deceased's statements of intention, while preparing for a journey, admitted);
Wisconsin: 1877, State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299 (abortion; deceased's declarations that she was to go to the defendant for the purpose admitted); 1898, Rens v. Relief Ass'n, 100 Wis. 266, 75 N. W. 991 (statements of intention to commit suicide, admissible, when close in point of time and made under circumstances indicating truth).

[2] Ala. 1902, Jacobi v. State, 133 Ala. 1, 32 So. 158 (in proving a former witness' permanent absence from the State, her declarations of intention not to return were held admissible on the present principle); Cal. 1904, People v. Barker, 144 Cal. 705, 78 Pac. 266 (letters from the absent person, admitted to show his absence and intent not to return); 1919, McNamara's Estate, 181 Cal. 82, 183 Pac. 552 (legitimacy; on the issue of separation and non-access of the parents, the husband's declarations, after the wife's departure, that he was going to R., admitted, as evidence that he did go); Ind. 1851, Timmons v. Timmons, 3 Ind. 250 (absence as affecting jurisdiction; defendant's declarations of intention when leaving, admitted); Minn. 1893, King v. McCarthy, 54 Minn. 190, 194, 55 N. W. 960 (whether a witness was likely to remain without the State; his statement of intention, in a deposition taken between different parties, admitted, in connection with the fact of departure or absence); 1898, Hill v. Winston, 73 Minn. 80, 75 N. W. 1030 (absent person's declarations as to residence, and the sheriff's return of not found, admitted); Vt. 1916, Wilbur v. Calais, 90 Vt. 335, 98 Atl. 913 (support of a pauper; to evidence domicile, a postcard stating an intention to go to C. was admitted).

deed,[3] may be evidenced by plan or design, and the latter is then provable by declarations. So, too, on an issue of murder, assault, or personal injury, the deceased's threats are admissible to prove him the aggressor (ante, § 110), as also the accused's (ante, § 105).

It is obvious, yet it needs to be emphasized, that the nature of the act to be evidenced by the design has nothing whatever to do with the admissibility of declarations of design. The latter are absolutely admissible as statements of a mental condition, under the present Exception, to prove the design; what the design evidences, or whether it is relevant at all, does not affect the broad scope of this Exception.

§ 1726. Same: Contrary Rulings Explained. (1) Where on a charge of murder the defendant seeks to prove that the deceased killed himself or that a third person killed him, this hypothesis is of course properly open to proof. Yet, as a matter of precaution, Courts usually require something more than a single piece of evidence; they will not admit, for example, the mere fact that the deceased was melancholy, or that a third person fled the country.[1] But, assuming that the data as to suicide or a third person's guilt are sufficient to be considered, and that the deceased's plan of suicide, or the third person's plan of killing, is one item herein, then the declarations of the deceased or the third person are a proper mode, under the present Exception, of proving the plan.[2] To this no objection seems to have been raised for a third person's threats;[3] but in a few rulings the deceased's declarations of intention to commit suicide have been excluded.[4] These rulings are entirely without foundation.

Contra: 1907, Cuff v. Frazee S. & C. Co., 14 Ont. L. R. 263 (unsound; no authority cited on this point).

But the present principle need not be strained in admitting such evidence, for the broader principle of § 1789, post, suffices.

For other cases in which this was incidentally sanctioned in accepting proof of a deponent's absence from the jurisdiction, see ante, § 1404.

[3] Cal. 1899, Kyle v. Craig, 125 Cal. 107, 57 Pac. 791 (whether a deed was given on a certain condition in view of death; grantor's declarations showing his intentions, admitted); Conn. 1908, Dunham v. Cox, 81 Conn. 268, 70 Atl. 1033 (issue of payment; the party's statements of intention to pay, while on the way with the money, held admissible, but here not properly offered); Ill. 1899, Riggs v. Powell, 142 Ill. 453, 456, 32 N. E. 482 (whether a note bearing the husband's disputed indorsement was a gift to his wife; his declarations of intention to provide well for her, admitted); 1921, Waters v. Lawler, 297 Ill. 63, 130 N. E. 335 (grantor's declarations of intent to deed land to son, admissible on issue of delivery); Ky. 1827, Smith v. Montgomery, 5 T. B. Monr. 502 (father's declaration, after giving slaves to two daughters, not to give during life to any other daughters, admitted, to show his intent in the transfer of a slave afterwards to another daughter); and some of the cases cited post, § 1777 (verbal acts), might be decided on this ground; Minn. 1919, Kessler v. Von Bank, 144 Minn. 220, 174 N. W. 839 (whether a deed was delivered; grantor's prior expression of intention, admitted); S. C. 1917, Ex parte McKie, 107 S. C. 57, 91 S. E. 978 (undue influence by J.; J.'s declarations of intention to secure changes by the testatrix when mentally weak, admitted).

Contra: 1896, Mack v. Porter, 18 C. C. A. 527, 72 Fed. 236, 241, 242 (to disprove the making of a contract as alleged, prior declarations during the negotiations that he would not make such a contract, excluded; "a statement of intention respecting it is no proof of the fact itself," a remark wholly unsound).

Compare the general subject of evidencing the making of a contract by the plan to make it ante, §§ 112, 377.

§ 1726. [1] The cases are collected ante, §§ 139–144.

[2] See the citations in the preceding section.

[3] Cases cited ante, § 140.

[4] ENGLAND: 1912, Thomson's Case, 7 Cr. App. 276, 3 K. B. 19 (abortion in March, 1912; the woman's statement in February that she intended to do it herself, excluded:

(2) In a number of precedents sundry declarations of intention (to make a journey, to pay money, or the like) have been excluded, usually without any other apparent reason than the supposed application of the 'res gestæ' doctrine (post, § 1772).[5] This doctrine, indeed, has also in some of the rulings

no authority cited: it is strange that in this day and generation an English court can be so uninformed upon the principles of the law of evidence; the K. B. report is not accurate).

UNITED STATES: Illinois: 1892, Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 585, 32 N. E. 431 (murder by poison; deceased's declarations of intention to commit suicide, excluded, chiefly on the authority of Com. v. Felch, Mass., infra, later overruled by Com. v. Trefethen, cited supra, § 1725; the Trefethen ruling occurred two weeks before the Siebert ruling, and was of course then unreported and unknown to the Illinois Court; the latter, in the official report and in the bound volume of the Northeastern Reporter, inserted in the opinion a reference to the Trefethen case; but it is fair to suppose that, had the Trefethen case been originally before them, they might have decided differently); 1900, Howard v. People, 185 Ill. 552, 57 N. E 441, semble (foregoing case approved); 1904, Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042 (wife-murder by poisoning; deceased's expressions of intention to commit suicide, and of depression of mind, held admissible; Siebert v. People, supra, held to represent "undoubtedly the correct rule," but distinguished because here the declarations were "part of the 'res gestæ,'" explanatory of the acts of keeping liquor and strychnine in her room; this is a groundless distinction; the Court should have plainly abandoned the unsound ruling of Siebert v. People, instead of introducing new opportunity for confusion; Jumpertz v. People, ante, § 143, n. 1, is not cited); 1906, Clark v. People, 224 Ill. 554, 79 N. E. 941 (murder by attempted abortion; the deceased's declarations, over a year before her death, that she had committed an abortion upon herself "and would repeat it if necessary," held inadmissible, as "mere hearsay," following Siebert v. People); 1916, Greenacre v. Filby, 276 Ill. 294, 114 N. E. 536 (death on a railroad track at night; issue as to suicide; the defence offered recent statements by the deceased that "that train is apt to hit me any night," that he would like to jump in front of the train, that he was shipping his last load, and similar expressions; these were held properly excluded; but statements made by him, when going home that evening, that he intended to kiss his wife and babies goodnight and go to sleep, was admitted; the labored attempt by the Court to explain this distinction by a limitation as to words accompanying an act, has no rational force; it is a pity that the artificial rule of Siebert v. People could not have been repudiated instead of affirmed); 1917, People v. Ahrling, 279 Ill. 70, 116 N. E. 764 (murder of wife; her suicide being in issue, the defendant was held entitled to show that she shared certain morose hallucinations of his as to being suspected of crime by the neighbors; Nordgren v. People followed).

Massachusetts: 1882, Com. v. Felch, 132 Mass. 22 (murder by abortion; the deceased's statement of intention to perform the operation herself, excluded, for no intelligible reason; how valueless the opinion is may be seen in the circumstances that it seriously considers an argument to apply the pedigree exception, ante, § 1480).

Missouri: 1894, State v. Punshon, 124 Mo. 448, 457, 27 S. W. 1111 (wife-murder; threats by the deceased to kill herself, excluded, since "the State was not bound by anything she may have said"; this singular idea that the State could possibly be "bound" is without foundation).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 143.

[5] ENGLAND: 1875, R. v. Wainwright, 13 Cox Cr. 171 (murder of H. L.; on the last day when H. L. was seen alive, she made a statement, on departing from her house, declaring her intention; Cockburn, C. J., excluded the terms of the statement; a reporter's note cites R. v. Pook, 1871, before Bovill, C. J., as involving a similar ruling).

UNITED STATES: Illinois: 1897, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Chancellor, 165 Ill. 438, 46 N. E. 269 (to show that the deceased was at the station as an intending passenger, her statements were not admitted, made about an hour before, while preparing for departure, that she was getting ready to take the 9 A. M. train; the 'res gestæ' rule alone considered; R. Co. v. Herrick, Ohio, the only case cited); 1913, Foster v. Shepherd, 258 Ill. 164, 101 N. E. 411 (deceased's expressions of intention to spend the night at his mother's home, as evidence of his conduct in being later at a certain place, excluded, citing the Chancellor case; see an extended comment in 8 Illinois Law Review 203); Indiana: 1897, Hauk v. State, 148 Ind. 238, 46 N. E. 127 (abortion; a letter of the deceased, indicating an attempt to produce the abortion herself, excluded, following Com. v. Felch, and ignoring Com. v. Trefethen, Mass.); Kentucky: 1895, Com. v. Gray, — Ky. —, 30 S. W. 1015 (murder; the deceased's expressions of intention, after a prior quarrel, of giving up any further share in it, excluded); Michigan: 1897, Schultz v. Schultz, 113 Mich. 502, 71 N. W. 854 (issue of payment; the defendant's words as he took a sum of money and left his house, excluded); New Hampshire: 1873, State v. Wood, 53 N. H. 484, 494 (abortion; deceased's declarations admitting this evidence (ante, § 1725) been taken as the source of admissibility. It would be well if the invocation of the 'res gestæ' doctrine in this connection could be wholly abandoned. The simple and sufficient reason for admission is the Hearsay Exception receiving statements of an existing mental condition. Whether these accompany some conduct relevant in the litigation, or any movement or "act," is wholly immaterial. The labor shown in certain judicial opinions to discover some "act" of which the declarations "are a part" is wasted; such speculations serve only to confuse an otherwise simple situation. For example, Doe is said to have been killed on Friday at Millville; to show that he was there on Friday, a design on Thursday to go there on Friday is relevant (ante, § 102). His declaration on Thursday of such a design, if made under circumstances of naturalness, is admissible; and it cannot make any difference whether, as in the Herrick case (ante, § 1725), he uttered it in the "act" of leaving the house, or whether, as he sat reading the paper, he said to his wife, "I see that Roe in Millville has failed; I shall go down there the first thing to-morrow morning." The departure from the house is no more a material "act" in the case than the reading of the newspaper; it might as well be argued that, if he wiped his forehead and said, "It is so hot that I shall run down to the seaside to-morrow," the wiping of his forehead was an "act" which his declaration characterized. An examination of the doctrine of Verbal Acts (post, § 1772) will show that its correct application gives no sanction to its use in the present connection. The sooner this doctrine is left to its own legitimate sphere, the better. Its invocation to determine the admissibility of declarations of design or plan serves only to confuse a simple question, and to narrow a broad and useful rule. In the following passage a judicial protest against this error has been recorded:

1895, START, C. J., in State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63 (in which evidence of the murdered person's statements as to having an engagement to meet the defendant was admitted as a "verbal act"): "It was not admissible, in my opinion, on the ground of intention, excluded on the 'res gestæ' theory); North Carolina: 1913, Barker v. Massachusetts M. L. Ins. Co., 163 N. C. 175, 79 S. E. 424 (declarations of a husband, a fortnight before death, as to need of a pistol, excluded in an action on the policy with an issue of suicide; ill-considered opinion, citing a single authority); Oregon: 1882, State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 448, 454 (murder; defendant's declarations as to a plan to go hunting, not admitted for defendant on the facts); Pennsylvania: 1853, Hartman v. Ins. Co., 21 Pa. St. 466, 471, 479 (to rebut the argument that insurance was procured under a recent plan to commit suicide, the insured's declarations of intention at various times to insure when he got money enough were excluded); Texas: 1909, Clark v. State, 56 Tex. Cr. 293, 120 S. W. 179 (deceased's expressions of intention to arrest defendant, excluded, here on the ground that his intention was immaterial; unsound); Virginia: 1898, McBride v. Com., 95 Va. 818, 30 S. E. 454 (declarations of the deceased as to where he was going on the night of the murder, excluded; no authority cited); 1912, Mullins v. Com., 113 Va. 787, 75 S. E. 193 (murder; deceased's statement before leaving that accused was going with him, excluded; unsound).

Occasionally such statements are excluded merely because some other principle is alone invoked and the present one is ignored; e. g.: 1900, Jenkins v. Ins. Co., 131 Cal. 121, 63 Pac. 180 (chiefly on the narrow ground that they were not admissions usable against the beneficiary of an insurance policy; see this rule ante, § 1081).

For further distinctions as to declarations by an accused or a testator, see post, §§ 1732, 1734.

that it tended to 'characterize her subsequent acts and her departure on the fatal ride soon after she made the statement,' — that is, that it was a part of the 'res gestæ,' — for the reason that her statement neither accompanied nor characterized any act relevant to the issue. But it was relevant to the issue to show that she did meet the defendant, and evidence of her declarations of an intention and purpose to meet him was admissible as original evidence to prove that she did in fact intend to meet him. To sustain it on the ground that the statement of the deceased was a part of the 'res gestæ' is, in my judgment, to assign a wrong reason for a correct conclusion, which may lead to complications in future cases."

§ 1727. Statements of Intent, in Domicil Cases. In domicil cases the same class of facts is involved as in the preceding section, i. e. a condition of mind, here usually termed "intent." It is worth while to distinguish the two in treatment, because in the former class the state of mind is a plan, which is merely evidential (ante, § 102) towards showing that the act purposed was subsequently consummated, while here the state of mind is itself a fact in issue, a separate element of the legal situation. The principle of the Hearsay Exception is the same in both cases. But the judicial point of view, in receiving such statements, has almost always been that of the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1784), or sometimes that of the Spontaneous Declarations doctrine (post, § 1745). That the present is on principle their true place is shown by the frequent admission of expressions of an intent made some time before the act of moving; the process being thus to show by these statements the existence of a state of mind at the earlier time, and to argue therefrom to its continued existence at the later time, and thus to establish the then absence of the intent necessary for a domicil; this could not be allowed under the Verbal Act doctrine.[1]

That declarations of intent as to residence are in general admissible is nowhere questioned, and the main inquiry is merely as to the limits of time in which those declarations may be sought. Under the present Exception the scope of search, as above indicated, would be much broader than under the Verbal Act doctrine; and in a few opinions the true place of such evidence under the present Exception seems to have been accepted:

1865, Roberts, J., in Ex parte Blumer, 27 Tex. 743 (admitting declarations of an intention to return to a foreign country): "They are to be credited as the index of his intention when not unreasonable in themselves, not inconsistent with other facts in the case, and not under circumstances creating suspicion of insincerity."

1893, Knowlton, J., in Viles v. Waltham, 157 Mass. 542, 32 N. E. 901 (a notice to assessors before removing, and conversations with reference to establishing a residence after removing, were admitted): "The change in his place of abode might be temporary or permanent. It might indicate a change of domicil or not, according to the circumstances attending it. Declarations of a person accompanying a change of his abiding-place have always been held competent to explain the change as a part of the 'res gestæ'; but declarations in such cases are often admissible on a broader ground than as a part of the act of removing from one place to another. The intention of the person removing is competent to be proved as an independent fact, and anything which tends to show his intention in making the change may be shown, if it is free from objection in other particulars. . . . Declarations which indicate the state of mind of the declarant naturally have a legitimate tendency to show the intention [citing Com. v. Trefethen, supra]. . . . The danger that declarations may have been made for a purpose . . . has led to the exclusion of them . . . unless they are made under such circumstances as to give them some corroboration. In general, such corroboration is found in the fact that they accompany and explain acts which of themselves would be competent evidence on the issue involved."

§ 1727. [1] Since by most Courts such declarations are dealt with as Verbal Acts, the precedents can more conveniently be collected under that head, post, § 1784.

No doubt, as pointed out in these passages, and as required by the general principle (ante, § 1714), the declaration must appear to have been made under circumstances of naturalness and without apparent motive to deceive; and for this reason they are occasionally rejected.[2]

§ 1728. Statements of Intent, in Bankruptcy Cases. Similarly, statements of intent, where the character of an alleged act of bankruptcy depends on the intent, are also admissible on the present principle; though the question whether the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1783) is the doctrine really applicable is not free from difficulty. The Courts have almost invariably treated this evidence from the latter point of view; and the authorities are there collected (post, § 1783), though occasionally such evidence seems to be accepted under the broad principle of the present Exception, as in the following passage:

1852, JOHNSON, C. J., in Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. 806: "In the case of the bankrupt, the declaration which he makes, at the time of leaving his house, of his intention of so doing, is founded not upon his character for veracity, but on the presumption arising from experience that where a man does an act, his cotemporary declaration accords with his real intention, unless there be some reason for misrepresenting his real intention."

§ 1729. Statements of Motive, Reason, or Intent. The line between Motive and Intent is not easy to draw, and is in practice seldom carefully observed. Apart from the propriety of nomenclature, there are at any rate at least two distinct thoughts involved. When a person shoots a gun, for example, the hoped-for result may be to kill a bird or to hit a target or to empty the gun of an old charge; this result, conceived as anticipated by him to ensue from his act of pulling the trigger, may be termed Intent. But the act of shooting, and the intent, may have been induced by the craving for food for a meal or by the desire of winning a prize or by the fear that the old charge was useless; this conception by him of a specific circumstance as making it desirable to do the act of shooting the gun may be termed Motive or Reason.

[2] 1853, Watson v. Simpson, 8 La. An. 337 (Merrick, C. J.: "It is evident that in most of his conversations, and whenever he had an opportunity to manufacture evidence, S. pretended to be a resident of New Orleans. . . . Where it appears that the declarations of a party are made with a reference to making testimony in his favor, they must be rejected") 1823, Cherry v. Slade, 2 Hawks 400, 409 (A's declarations of intent as to residence, excluded, on an issue as to the defendant's false swearing as to the residence, though semble otherwise admissible; Hall, J., diss.); 1895, Davis v. Adair, L. R. 1 Ire. 379, 396, 430, 444 (a peculiar case).

So far as the present Exception is concerned, nothing turns on this distinction between motive and intent. Each is a mental condition, and each is therefore provable by contemporaneous declarations. But it is necessary, because of the Verbal Act doctrine, to consider them separately.

(1) A statement of intent, so far as made by an accused person, is considered elsewhere (post, § 1732). A statement of intent, made by other persons, does not so frequently come into question, for the reason that the intent itself is less often a material and relevant fact to be proved. Moreover, whenever it is relevant and therefore provable, it is commonly so only when attending an act otherwise ambiguous and equivocal. For example, when money is handed over, the precise nature of the act, whether a loan or a payment, will depend much upon the intent; when land is occupied, the precise effect of the occupation, whether adverse or not, will depend much upon the intent. In such cases, declarations accompanying the act will be admissible as coloring and completing its significance, under the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1772), whether they do or do not include an assertion of intent; and as this larger doctrine suffices to admit declarations of intent accompanying the act, the applicability of the present Exception (though clear enough) is a merely academic question. Moreover, since the person's intent at the time of the equivocal act is alone material, his declarations of intent made at a former or a subsequent time are declarations of an immaterial fact. His subsequent declarations of a past intent are, furthermore, of course not admissible under the present Exception; and his prior declarations, being ordinarily construable as declarations of a design or plan (ante, § 1725) are sufficiently available in that aspect. There is therefore little field for invoking the present Exception for ordinary declarations of intent. Nevertheless there are many instances in which a prior or subsequent state of mind is relevant to show the state of mind at a specific time (ante, §§ 233, 241, 395); and wherever this state of mind is an intent, prior or subsequent declarations of an existing intent would properly be admissible. Apart from the case of a testator (post, § 1734), little use seems to have been made of this application of the principle.[1]

(2) A declaration of a present existing motive or reason for action is admissible, — assuming, of course, that the declarant's motive is relevant. So far as concerns accused persons, this use is later considered (post, § 1732). In other cases,[2] the typical instances in which motive becomes material are § 1729. [1] 1821, Redford v. Birley, 1 State Tr. N. S. 1071, 1238, 1244 (exciting a seditious mob; expressions of motive or intent by persons attending the meeting, admitted to show the purpose of its various members and its quality as a seditious meeting); 1918, State v. Cook, 81 W. Va. 686, 95 S. E. 792 (murder of a sheriff holding a colored prisoner; declaration of a member of the mob, admitted). This sort of evidence was also admitted in some of the other riot cases collected ante, § 1079, note 3, and post, § 1730, note 2.

[2] With the following cases belong some of those under § 1730, post (a wife's reason for leaving her husband), and § 1732, post (accused's motive):

actions for loss of service or of custom, in which it is necessary to show that the customer's or servant's abandonment of the plaintiff was motivated by ENGLAND: 1829, Fellowes v. Williamson, Moo. & M. 307 (in an action upon a representation that D. was solvent, the plaintiff's declarations, at the time of sending, "that they had received a favorable account of him and would accordingly send them," was received as showing their reason for sending, the issue being whether they sent them in reliance on the representations); 1894, Skinner v. Shew, 2 Ch. 581, 593 (loss of a contract by defendant's illegal threats of litigation against the plaintiff's patented article; letter of a would-be customer, admitted to show his reason for not dealing with the plaintiff).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1911, Lawlor v. Loewe, C. C. A., 187 Fed. 522 (action for damage done by a boycott by a labor union; testimony of the plaintiff's salesman that customers had reported to him threats by labor union representatives of trouble from the union if he handled the plaintiff's goods, held improper since "in some of the instances testified to" the present rule "should not be extended as far as it was");

Alabama: 1872, Mobile R. Co. v. Ashcroft, 48 Ala. 31 (statements of passengers, in jumping from a train, as to their reasons, admitted, the issue being the reasonableness of the plaintiff's jumping); 1921, United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Millonas, 206 Ala. 147, 89 So. 732 (procuring breach of contract of employment; employer's statement of reason made at the time of discharge, admitted);

Connecticut: 1908, Barry v. McCollom, 81 Conn. 293, 70 Atl. 1035 (libel; defendant's declarations, showing a good motive, made a week or two before, admitted);

Georgia: 1895, Rives v. Lamar, 94 Ga. 186, 21 S. E. 294 (admitted, where motive was important in determining the validity of a gift of land);

Louisiana: 1899, Webb v. Drake, 52 La. An. 290, 26 So. 791 (reports of defendant's boycott of plaintiff, admitted as showing its effectiveness on the community);

Massachusetts: 1890, Elmer v. Fessenden, 151 Mass. 161, 24 N. E. 208 (action for loss of services of workmen caused to leave by the defendant's false statement that the plaintiff's goods on which they worked contained poison; Holmes, J.: "If, as may be assumed, the excluded testimony would have shown that the workmen, when they left, gave as their reason to the superintendent that the defendant had told them that the board of health reported arsenic in the silk, the evidence was admissible to show that their belief in the presence of poison was their reason in fact. We cannot follow the ruling at nisi prius in Tilk v. Parsons 2 C. & P. 201, that the testimony of the persons concerned is the only evidence to prove their motives. We rather agree with Mr. Starkie, that such declarations, made with no apparent motive for misstatement, may be better evidence of the maker's state of mind at the time than the subsequent testimony of the same persons"); 1900, Weston v. Barnicoat, 175 Mass. 454, 56 N. E. 619 (special damage in defamation; letters from third persons to plaintiff, refusing to deal with him because his name was on defendant's blacklist, admitted; unnecessarily treated as "an act of refusal"); 1905, Flynn v. Coolidge, 188 Mass. 214, 74 N. E. 342 (malicious prosecution, and damage by C.'s refusal to lease a building to the plaintiff; C.'s statement of his reason for refusing, excluded only because not made before action begun); 1906, Pierson v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 223, 77 N. E. 769 (damage by noise; the statements of reasons given by the plaintiff's customers when leaving his restaurant, "We can't talk here and hear ourselves," admitted); 1908, Hubbard v. Allyn, 200 Mass. 166, 86 N. E. 356 (libel; customers' statements declining to buy because of the badness of the merchandise of the plaintiff as alleged by the defendant, admitted, on the issue of damage);

Michigan: 1882, Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322, 324, 12 N. W. 177 (libel charging the sale of counterfeit oil; to show loss of business in consequence, statements by customers returning the oil and giving the defendant's publication as the reason were admitted);

New Hampshire: 1835, Hadley v. Carter, 8 N. H. 42 (declarations of a servant, at the time of leaving, as to his motives, admitted; good opinion by Upham, J.);

New York: 1885, Baker v. Baker, 16 Abb. N. C. 293, 302 (husband's declaration, at time of leaving, of the reason for leaving, admitted); 1896, Hine v. R., 149 N. Y. 154, 43 N. E. 414 (the smaller rental value of property as a result of the defendant's acts being in issue, the plaintiff's tenants' statements of the reasons for their demanding a reduction were admitted; put by the Court on the 'res gestæ' ground);

Oregon: 1917, Roberts v. Bodley, 84 Or. 637, 165 Pac. 1172 (sale of a horse, to be returned by the vendee "if unsatisfactory"; the vendee's expressions of content or not, admitted);

Vermont: 1908, State v. Ryder, 80 Vt. 422, 68 Atl. 652 (motive for destroying letters; statement made while burning them, admitted);

Virginia: 1886, Cluverius v. Com., 81 Va. 787, 801 (remarks of the deceased, about the time of leaving, stating her reason for leaving, admitted);

Wisconsin: 1893, Academy of M. Co. v. Davidson, 85 Wis. 129, 136, 55 N. W. 172 (issue as to the motive of a deceased tenant for leaving; his declarations when leaving, the defendant's persuasion or threats; and actions in which the reliance of a person on another's representations becomes a part of the issue. The use of declarations of this sort is fully recognized in numerous precedents.

§ 1730. Statements of Emotion (Bias, Fear, Malice, Affection, etc.); Wife's or Husband's Declarations. — The existence of an emotion — hatred, malice, affection, fear, and the like — is usually evidenced by conduct or by utterances indirectly indicating the feeling that inspires them (ante, §§ 1715, 250, 394). But a declaration directly asserting the existence of the emotion is admissible, under the present Exception, like a statement of any other kind of mental condition.[1] The uses of such statements to impeach a witness (ante, § 950) and to prove an accused person's malice (post, § 1732) furnish the commonest instances of the application of the principle.

Statements of a present emotion of fear, alarm, disgust, grief, or the like, are also equally admissible under the present Exception,[2] although such utterances have usually an indirect and circumstantial force (ante, § 1715) rather than a direct and assertive one.

A special application is also found in actions for alienation of affections, criminal conversation, divorce, or wife-murder, where the state of affections of the wife to the husband, or of the husband to the wife, becomes material.

as to the motive, admitted); 1903, Charley v. Potthof, 118 Wis. 258, 95 N. W. 124 (theatrical contract; breach in not furnishing adequate services; the statements of persons in the audience, when leaving the theatre, giving their reasons for so doing, admitted to show their motive; compare Ellis v. Thompson, N. Y., post, § 1770).

Contra: 1825, Tilk v. Parsons, 2 C. & P. 202 (loss of custom as the result of a slander; declarations of the customers, giving their reason for ceasing to buy, excluded); 1846, Walker v. Meetze, 2 Rich. S. C. 570 (libel in letters to G., causing breach of promise of marriage by G.; G.'s statement in conversation that "she could not marry the plaintiff after receiving and reading the letters," excluded as hearsay).

For certain cases of utterances by mobs, perhaps decided on this principle, see ante, § 1079, note 3, and post, § 1730, note 2.

For a debtor's declarations, indicating his motive in an alleged fraudulent conveyance, see ante, §§ 1083, 1086.

Distinguish the question of testifying on the stand to one's own intent (ante, § 581).

§ 1730. [1] 1867, Wells, J., in Day v. Stickney, 14 All. Mass. 258 (admitting hostile expressions to impeach a witness' credit): "His prejudices can be known only by his expressions of them; and therefore such declarations are the legitimate evidence of their existence."

[2] ENGLAND: 1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1165 ff. (statements of the deceased as to being melancholy, ill, and in love, admitted); 1821, Redford v. Birley, 1 State Tr. n. s. 1071, 1238, 1244 (seditious mob; expressions of alarm by persons in the neighborhood, admitted to show the feelings produced by the gathering); 1840, R. v. Vincent, 9 C. & P. 275 (complaints to policeby persons alarmed at violent Chartist meetings, admitted, the persons not being called; compare § 1790, post); Canada: 1907, Gilbert v. The King, 38 Can. Sup. 284 (by the deceased, on the approach of the defendant, "don't let him knife me," admitted); United States: 1859, Kearney v. Farrell, 28 Conn. 320 (nuisance; complaints by a deceased wife as to offensive smells, while suffering from them, received "as an expression of bodily or mental feeling"); 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 10, 12 Pac. 318 (letters of a deceased person showing cheerfulness, admitted); 1909, State v. Draughon, 151 N. C. 667, 65 S. E. 913 (father's expressions of gratitude, etc. to his son, admitted); 1909, Luckey v. Western U. Tel. Co., 151 N. C. 551, 66 S. E. 596 (non-delivery of a telegram announcing a mother's death; the mother's expressions showing affection for a son, admitted); 1920, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kilgore, Tex. Civ. App. 220 S.W. 593 (expressions of grief at a relative's grave, admitted); 1882, People v. O'Laughlin, 3 Utah 133, 1 Pac. 653 (riot; testimony to expressions of "a general feeling of insecurity and alarm" and the riotous conduct, admitted).

Contra: 1896, Gloystine v. Com., — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 824 (statements about bad smells, excluded; but here the statements were probably assertions of external facts).

Here, the declarations of the person as to her or his own state of affections are admissible under the present principle. In most instances, such expressions are chiefly useful in an indirect or circumstantial way only (ante, §§ 394, 1715); in some instances, they merely state reasons for a departure from the home and thus belong in the preceding section. But in general no discrimination is made on these points; and it is said merely that declarations made at a time when there was no motive to deceive are admissible: [3]

[3] The following list includes also a few cases which reject the declarations for one or another reason:

ENGLAND: 1825, Walton v. Green, 1 C. & P. 621 (necessaries to a wife; defence, her adultery; wife's statements admitted as "forming part of the cause of her being so turned out"); 1832, Willis v. Bernard, 8 Bing. 376 (letters of a wife to her husband or others, admitted to show her feelings towards him); 1834, Jones v. Thompson, 6 C. & P. 415 (statement of a wife, in crim. con., as to a diary kept by her, that she kept it to show to her husband, admitted to evidence her feelings towards her husband); 1835, Wilton v. Webster, 7 C. & P. 198 (letters by a wife, offered to show her happiness with her husband, not admitted because written after attempted adultery).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1901, Ash v. Prunier, 44 C. C. A. 675, 105 Fed. 722 (alienation of husband's affections; correspondence of husband and plaintiff before and after the time in issue admitted);
Alabama: 1895, Long v. Booe, 106 Ala. 570, 17 So. 716 (wife's letters, admitted);
California: 1915, Cripe v. Cripe, 170 Cal. 91, 148 Pac. 520 (father's alienation of husband-son's affections; the husband's statements to the father as to the wife's drinking-habits, admitted to show the husband's state of affections and also the father's motive); 1919, Bourne v. Bourne, 43 Cal. App. 516, 185 Pac. 489 (alienation of affections; husband's statements admitted to evidence "the state of the husband's feelings");
Colorado: 1894, Williams v. Williams, 20 Colo. 51, 37 Pac. 614 (alienation of a husband's affections by his mother; the husband's declarations as to the defendant's conduct, admitted "to determine the cause or motive which prompted his separation from his wife");
Illinois: 1896, Laurence v. Laurence, 164 Ill. 367, 45 N. E. 1071 (issue as to a marriage of the deceased; letters written to the alleged wife, admitted as showing "how the deceased regarded" her);
Indiana: 1884, Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160, 163 (crim. con.; wife's declarations of the husband's ill-treatment, made on the day of elopement, excluded; being made after the influence of the defendant had arisen, the present rule was held not satisfied); 1893, Pettit v. State, 135 Ind. 393, 416, 34 N. E. 1118 (wife-murder; the wife's letters to the husband, exhibiting her affection, held admissible); 1898, Driver v. Driver, 153 Ind. 88, 52 N. E. 401 (divorce; letters of husband and wife received to show their condition of feelings); 1919, Kraeger v. Kraeger, — Ind. App. —, 125 N. E. 484 (alienation of husband's affections; husband's declarations, admitted);
Iowa: 1895, Bailey v. Bailey, 94 Ia. 528, 63 N. W. 341 (action against a father-in-law for alienation of affections; expressions of defendant and of his son, admitted to show the state of their feelings); 1896, Puth v. Zimbleman, 99 Ind. 641, 68 N. W. 895 (crim. con.; letters to the defendant after the alleged misconduct, admitted); 1899, State v. Butts, 107 Ia. 653, 78 N. W. 687 (letter of a co-respondent on a charge of adultery, showing his feelings towards the respondent, admitted); 1906, Hardwick v. Hardwick, 130 Ia. 230, 106 N. W. 639 (alienation of a husband's affections by a father-in-law; the husband's statements to his wife, on taking leave, as to being influenced by his father, admitted; two judges dissent, citing no authority); 1916, Smith v. Rice, 178 Ia. 673, 160 N. W. 6 (here the special purpose was to show prior unhappy marital relations, in mitigation of damages);
Kansas: 1902, Roesner v. Darrah, 65 Kan. 599, 70 Pac. 597 (wife's declarations before guilty intimacy with defendant, admitted); 1904, Nevins v. Nevins, 68 Kan. 410, 75 Pac. 492 (alienation of affections; husband's statements admitted to show the source of his change of mind);
Kentucky: 1914, Willey v. Howell, 159 Ky. 805, 169 S.W. 519 (alienation of affections; wife's letter complaining of cruel conduct and expressing an intention to leave him, held admissible);
Maryland: 1881, Robinson v. State, 57 Md. 14, 19 (abduction of wife and children of M.; the wife's declarations, while riding in the wagon driven by defendant, that she was leaving M. of her own choice, admitted to show that she was not under constraint);
Massachusetts: 1852, Jacobs v. Whitcomb, 10 Cush. 257 (admitting a wife's expressions of hostile feelings; "the usual expressions of such feelings are original evidence, and often the only proof of them which can be had"); 1857, Collins v. Stephenson, 8 Gray 440, semble (by a wife when leaving her husband, as to her motive, admissible);
Michigan: 1881, White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172,

1838, Sir F. Pollock, arguing, in Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 683: "The letters of a wife written to her husband before the time of an alleged adultery are admitted, . . . [though] the wife herself is not examined. Why? Because credit is given to her for having acted with sincerity at the time; and her letters are receivable to show the state of her affections before her elopement, being written at a moment when she had no purpose to answer in writing them."

1839, ROGERS, J., in Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts 356 (the wife's declarations as to bad treatment from her husband were offered to show that she had an inclination to leave him, and was not enticed by the defendant): "The motives . . . in most cases cannot be shown except by her declarations made at the time to her relations and friends."

1851, CATRON, J., in Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 535: "The letter of D. . . . is competent to prove the state of feeling, affection, and sympathy of D. towards his wife when he wrote the letter. . . . There is no ground to suppose that the letter was written collusively. It appears to have been ingenuous and honestly intended."

In such an action, in particular for alienation of affections, the statements of the alienated spouse, exhibiting the mental condition of alienation and 10 N. W. 188 (alienation of wife's affections; wife's letters before and after marriage, excluded, where no misconduct of defendant had been otherwise shown; no precedent cited); 1883, Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529, 14 N. W. 485 (same; wife's letters admitted; the preceding case practically repudiated); 1887, Edgell v. Francis, 66 Mich. 303, 33 N. W. 501 (similar); 1894, Dalton v. Dregge, 99 Mich. 250, 252, 58 N. W. 57 (husband's remarks showing feelings, in crim. con., admitted); 1897, McKenzie v. Lautenschlager, 113 Mich. 171, 71 N. W. 489 (alienation of wife's affections; her letters and utterances, admitted);

Minnesota: 1894, Lockwood v. Lockwood, 67 Minn. 476, 70 N. W. 784 (action for loss of husband's affections; the husband's declaration that he had decided to separate from his wife, admitted);
Missouri: 1884, State v. Leabo, 84 Mo. 168, 171 (wife-murder; the wife's letter showing affection, admitted); 1900, State v. Callaway, 154 Mo. 91, 55 S. W. 444 (husband's and wife's letters to a third person, admitted); 1910, Fuller v. Robinson, 230 Mo. 22, 130 S. W. 343 (statements by the wife, admitted; semble, statements after her alleged misconduct would be inadmissible, if collusion with the husband were likely; so also the defendant's wife's conduct indicating coolness is admissible);
New York: 1909, Cochran v. Cochran, 196 N. Y. 86, 89 N. E. 470 (husband's declarations, excluded; E. T. Bartlett, J., diss.);
North Carolina: 1920, Cottle v. Johnson, 179 N. C. 426, 102 S. E. 769 (alienation of affections; conversations and letters between husband and wife, admitted);
North Dakota: 1911, Luick v. Arends, 21 N. D. 614, 132 N. W. 353 (alienation of wife's affections; her declarations of affection or the opposite, up to the time of the defendant's influence, admissible, but not to include statements of the conduct causing it);
Ohio: 1861, Preston v. Bowers, 13 Oh. St. 1, 11 (alienation of affection; the statements, "made recently prior to the alleged seduction," admitted "to show the state of her affections"; here made before the marriage);
Oregon: 1921, Noll v. Carlin, — Or. —, 199 Pac. 596 (husband's action for alienation of wife's affections against wife's parents; wife's letters admitted for defendant to show that her real motive was dislike of husband's parents' pro-German disloyal sentiments during the war); 1919, Schneider v. Tapfer, 92 Or. 520, 180 Pac. 107 (alienation of wife's affections);
Pennsylvania: 1900, Lyon v. Lyon, 197 Pa. 212, 47 Atl. 193 (alienation of affections; husband's statements after abandonment, excluded); 1913, Ickes v. Ickes, 237 Pa. 582, 85 Atl. 885 (alienation of affections; defendant's statement of his intention to leave and his motive therefor, made prior to leaving, admitted; but the Court seems incorrectly to place the ruling on the principle of § 1725, ante); 1921 Curtis v. Miller, 269 Pa. 509, 112 Atl. 747 (alienation of wife's affections; wife's letters to plaintiff, written before separation, admitted to show the "happy and affectionate relations existing between them");
Rhode Island: 1899, Rose v. Mitchell, 21 R. I. 270, 43 Atl. 67 (alienation of wife's affections; wife's utterances, after leaving, admitted);
Texas: 1914, Brown v. State, 74 Tex. Cr. 356, 169 S. W. 437 (like Pettit v. State, Ind., but decided contra; Davidson, P. J. diss.);
South Dakota: 1922, Clendennen v. Bainbridge, — S. D. —, 187 N. W. 727 (alienation of affections); Vermont: 1892, Rudd v. Rounds, 64 Vt. 432, 439, 25 Atl. 438 (crim. con.; wife's declarations while leaving, as to reasons for leaving the husband, admitted to show her feelings); 1894, Fratini v. Caslani, 66 Vt. 273, 29 Atl. 252 (crim. con. and alienation of affections; the wife's letters not admitted for the motives therefor, sometimes mention acts and utterances of the defendant as the alienating influence, e. g. when the alienated wife says to her husband, referring to the defendant, "He offered to marry me if I could get a divorce from you, and so I am ready to leave you." Here the alleged utterances of the defendant need not be taken as facts, much less as true assertions (post, § 1768); but the wife's reference to them is plainly evidential of the relation of cause and effect in her mind between her present alienation of affections and the defendant's influence, i. e. her motive (ante, § 1729); therefore, supposing that the fact of the defendant's efforts and influence is otherwise evidenced, the wife's utterances of the above sort should be received to show their result on her state of mind.[4] In this aspect, the defendant's utterances and acts as recited by her are not hearsay, but fall under the principle of § 1768, post.

the plaintiff in rebuttal, because not shown to have been written before grounds to suspect collusion, etc., existed); 1898, Wilkins v. Metcalf, 71 Vt. 103, 41 Atl. 1035 (bastardy; defendant's expressions of feeling towards plaintiff, excluded, only because his feelings at the time in question were irrelevant);
Washington: 1898, Beach v. Brown, 20 Wash. 266, 55 Pac. 46 (spouse's letters of affection, admitted); 1902, Stanley v. Stanley, 27 Wash. 570, 68 Pac. 187 (alienation of husband's affections; husband's declarations more than two years after separation, and six months after suit begun, excluded); 1921, Harringer v. Keenan, — Wash. —, 201 Pac. 306 (alienation of wife's affections; the wife's letters of affection to husband, written prior to separation, admitted on his behalf);
Wisconsin: 1896, Horner v. Yance, 93 Wis. 352, 67 N. W. 720 (crim. con.; wife's letters showing affection, admitted); 1909, White v. White, 140 Wis. 538, 122 N.W. 1051 (husband's declaration, in wife's action, admitted).

In this class of cases, as in others preceding, a Court occasionally rests the admission on the Verbal Act doctrine: 1853, Cattison v. Cattison, 22 Pa. 277 (divorce claimed for wilful desertion; declarations of the wife on the night of her flight, admitted); 1890, Glass v. Bennett 89 Tenn. 482, 14 S. W. 1085 (declarations of a wife's motive on leaving home, admitted).

In State v. Punshon, 124 Mo. 448, 27 S. W. 1101 (1894), such evidence was against all precedent rejected.

[4] Accord: Fed. 1918, McGowan v. Armour, 8th C. C. A., 248 Fed. 676 (alienation of husband's affections; the husband's narrative to wife of conversations with defendant, excluded on the facts); Cal. 1915, Cripe v. Cripe, 170 Cal. 91, 148 Pac. 520 (alienation of husband's affections; the husband's statements about the wife's conduct, admitted); 1920, Adkins v. Brett, 184 Cal. 252, 193 Pac. 251 (alienation of wife's affections; wife's statements as to her affections, including statements as to conduct with defendant, admitted, subject to proper instructions; approving Cripe v. Cripe, supra, note 3, and repudiating Barlow v. Barnes, 172 Cal. 98, 155 Pac. 457 and Humphrey v. Pope, infra); Colo. 1894, Williams v. Williams, 20 Colo. 51, 58, 37 Pac. 614; Md. 1908, Hillers v. Taylor, 108 Md. 148, 69 Atl. 715 (doctrine approved; but held not to admit an utterance which merely recited conduct of the defendant, and thus had no significance under the present doctrine); 1911, Hillers v. Taylor, 116 Md. 165, 81 Atl. 286 (husband's conversations, unspecified, here held admissible, following the rule of the prior decision); Mich. 1887, Edgell v. Francis, 66 Mich. 303, 33 N. W. 501 (cited supra, n. 2).

Contra: 1905, Humphrey v. Pope, 1 Cal. App. 374, 82 Pac. 223; 1920, Jacobs v. Jacobs, 95 Conn. 57, 110 Atl. 455 (divorce for cruelty; the wife's complaint to A., testified to by A., that the husband choked her, excluded as immaterial); 1889, Huling v. Huling, 32 Ill. App. 519, 521; 1884, Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160, 164 (cited supra, n. 2); 1908, Leucht v. Leucht, 129 Ky. 700, 112 S. W. 845 (the opinion apparently does not perceive the distinction); 1861, Preston v. Bowers, 13 Oh. St. 1, 11 (cited supra, n. 2); Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Oh. St. 621, 634; 1914, Brison v. McKellop, 41 Okl. 374, 138 Pac. 154 (alienation of husband's affections; the husband's statements to the wife as to what the defendant his mother had said to him, excluded); 1921, Pugsley v. Smyth, 98 Or. 448, 194 Pac. 686 (alienation of affections; wife's statements merely as to facts of co-respondent's conduct, here excluded); 1919, Gilmore v. Gilmore, 42 S. Dak. 236, 173 N. W. 865 (alienation of affections of husband by his parents; husband's statement to the wife, of his reason for writing her a letter, viz. that his parents had said that he was not the father of their infant child, excluded, because made prior to his abandonment of her; erroneous; Smith, C. J., and McCoy, J., diss.).

§ 1731. Statements of Opinion or Belief. Utterances of opinion or belief are usually circumstantial in their significance (ante, § 266) rather than direct assertions. But so far as the existence of an opinion or belief in a specific person is material, the person's contemporaneous assertions of its existence, made without any apparent motive to deceive, are admissible. This was always recognized, for example, as a proper mode of proving atheism to disqualify a witness;[1] other instances are naturally rare.[2]

C. Statements by an Accused

§ 1732. Sundry Statements by an Accused Person (Purpose, Motive, Good-Will, Fear, before or during or after the Deed; Political Opinions). Statements by an accused person may involve instances of almost every one of the preceding sorts, but it is convenient to consider them in one place, in order that the necessary discriminations may be made.

In the first place, any and every statement by an accused person, so far as not excluded by the doctrine of confessions (ante, § 815), or by the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2250), is usable against him as an admission (ante, § 1048). Thus, it is unnecessary for the prosecution to establish the propriety of such statements under the present Exception, because they would be in any case receivable as admissions. For this reason, since a person's own statements are not receivable in his favor as admissions, there has been a strong judicial tendency to ignore the bearings of the present Exception for statements offered in favor of the accused. It is therefore proper to inquire how far the present principles are after all available for such a purpose.

(1) Statements of design or plan, as already noticed (ante, § 1725), are in general admissible, so far as the design or plan is relevant to show the doing of the act designed. Accordingly, it has never been doubted that the threats of an accused person are admissible to show his doing of the deed threatened,[1] so also the threats of the deceased, on a charge of homicide, are by most Courts admitted to show the deceased to have been the aggressor.[2] Upon the same

§ 1731. [1] Post, § 1820.

Statements of political opinion have also been admitted as circumstantial evidence (ante, § 195 and § 369); for the accused's opinions, see post, § 1732.

[2] 1702, Hathaway's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 653 (cheating by pretending to be so bewitched by Sarah M. that he could not eat; to show that the community was imposed on by the fraud, evidence was offered of the abuse and imprecations uttered by sundry persons against Dr. M., who had procured the liberation of the supposed witch, and had held to expose the fraud; objected to as hearsay; L. C. J. Holt: "This evidence is proper; he is indicted for a cheat, for endeavoring to beget an opinion in people by his fraudulent practices that he is bewitched; . . . now is not this an evidence that his pretending himself to be bewitched begot that opinion in the people?"); 1848, McCracken v. West, 17 Oh. 16, 24 (declaration by a defendant, sued on a representation as to M.'s credit, as to what he thought M. was worth, and made prior to the representation, admitted as evidence of his belief).

§ 1732. [1] 1848, New Gloucester v. Bridgham, 28 Me. 68 ("declarations of defendants, tending to show their having formed determinations to commit crimes, are always admissible against them when accused of committing the same"; here said of the illegal sale of liquor). The cases are collected ante, § 105 principle, the expressions of plan, by the accused, not to do the thing charged, or to do a different thing, are equally admissible.[3]

[2] The cases are collected ante, §§ 110, 111.

(2) Statements before the act, asserting malice or hatred, are always received against an accused;[4] except so far as the time of feeling is so remote as to make it irrelevant (ante, § 395). Is there any reason why prior statements in favor of the accused — for example, of good feeling towards the injured party, or of fear of him as an aggressor — should not be equally admissible? Conduct offered as circumstantially evidential does not seem to be objected to.[5] But statements asserting directly the existence of such feelings are by some Courts treated as inadmissible, so far as they do not accompany the very act charged.[6]

[3] ENGLAND: 1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial 13 How. St. Tr. 1170 (murder at night; to prove an alibi at a certain lodging-house, the fact was admitted that the defendant had come to town that day and had gone to the house and engaged lodgings, promising to come there for the night).

CANADA: 1876, R. v. Chasson, 16 N. Br. 546, 582 (murder; purpose of defendant and his companions as expressed in going to a house and entering, allowed).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1827, U. S. v. Craig, 4 Wash. C. C. 729, 732 (the defendant was arrested in a compromising position; declarations made beforehand that he was going to the place to get bail for his brother-in-law, received); Alabama: 1921, Crenshaw v. State, 205 Ala. 256, 87 So. 328 (murder; in explanation of defendant's whereabouts, his prior announcement of his intention to go to the place, as referable to "an innocent plan rather than to a consciousness of guilt," admitted); Indiana: 1879, Grimes v. State, 68 Ind. 193 (larceny; the defendant borrowed a gun, declaring that he was going to B. to shoot; his intent being material, a plan with D. to go to B., made before taking the gun, was admitted to show that he actually intended to go to B.); Tennessee: 1867, Garber v. State, 4 Coldw. 161 (defendant's declarations, when starting to find deceased, of intent as an army officer to arrest him as a deserter, admitted); Texas: 1914, Brown v. State, 74 Tex. Cr. 356, 169 S. W. 437 (wife-murder; that the defendant had a short time before saved his wife from drowning, admitted, but not the defendant's statement to friends recounting the act; this distinction is unsound; the man's recital of the act must have had some apparent revelation of his sentiments and intentions toward the object of his act; as negativing either hostile intent or hostile emotion, the statement was admissible).

Contra, but wholly unsound: 1855, R. v. Petcherini, 7 Cox Cr. 82, Ire. (charge of blasphemously burning the Holy Scriptures; the defendant denied having knowingly done so; his declarations of intention some days before the act, as to the kind of books he intended to destroy, were rejected by Crampton, J., and Greene, B.); 1843, Com. v. Kent, 6 Metc. Mass. 221 (counterfeiting dies; the defendant's declaration, at the time of ordering them, as to his purpose in wanting them, excluded; no reason given); 1905, State v. Dean, 72 S. C. 74, 51 S. E. 524 (murder; the accused's prior statements of innocent purpose in going to the place, excluded).

[4] This is not questioned; illustrations will be found in the citations ante, §§ 105 ff., 394; 1908, Hill v. State, 156 Ala. 3, 46 So. 864.

[5] Ante, § 394.

[6] Cases on both sides are as follows: Alabama: 1872, Birdsong v. State, 47 Ala. 68, 71, 77 (defendant's statements, before the killing, of a desire to avoid the deceased, excluded); 1909, Maddox v. State, 159 Ala. 53, 48 So. 689 (Mayfield, J., "The writer of this opinion thinks that this Court and some trial Courts have gone too far, in certain of the cases reported, in admitting such evidence against the accused"; here admitting declarations of the accused made at and about the time of leaving home, but excluding others made later; the learned Court, instead of excluding more evidence against accused persons, should admit more evidence for them; the logic-chopping in such cases as the present seems a pitiable method of getting at the truth about a murder, — pitiable, that is, when one reflects that it is the method used by able men administering a great legal system, and fancying themselves to be doing its proper service; Florida: 1903, Fields v. State, 46 Fla. 84, 35 So. 185 (assault with intent to kill; defendant's prior application to an officer for protection, excluded); 1910, White v. State, 59 Fla. 53, 52 So. 805 (certain prior conversations, held admissible); Georgia: 1848, Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85 132 ("testimony which went to establish by the prisoner's own acts and declarations his knowledge of the threats and violent conduct of the deceased and his constant alarm and apprehension, by reason thereof, of death or

It has been argued that the party must not be allowed to "make evidence for himself." But this objection applies equally to many classes of statements under the present Exception, and is yet not thought of as fatal. Moreover, the notion of "making," that is, "manufacturing" evidence, assumes that the statements are false, which is to beg the whole question.

Then it is further suggested that at any rate the accused, if guilty, may have falsely uttered these sentiments in order to furnish in advance evidence to exonerate him from a contemplated crime. But here the singular fallacy is committed of taking the possible trickery of guilty persons as a ground for excluding evidence in favor of a person not yet proved guilty; in other words, the fundamental idea of the Presumption of Innocence is repudiated. We elaborate this presumption in painful and quibbling detail; we expend upon it pages of judicial rhetoric; we further maintain, with sentimental excess, the privilege against self-crimination; in short, we exhaust the resources of reasoning and strain the principles of common sense to protect an accused person against an assumption of guilt until the proof is irresistible; and yet, at the present point, we throw these fixed principles to the winds and make this presumption of guilt in the most violent form. Because (we say) this accused person might be guilty and therefore might have contrived these false utterances, therefore we shall exclude them, although without this assumption they indicate feelings wholly inconsistent with guilt, and although, if he is innocent, their exclusion is a cruel deprivation of a most natural and effective sort of evidence. To hold that every expression of hatred, malice, and bravado is to be received, while no expression of fear, good-will, friendship, some great bodily hurt at the hands of M."; its admissibility held to depend on whether it accompanied an act as a "part of the 'res gestæ'"); 1904, Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 348, 49 S. E. 303 (statements that he was afraid to go where the deceased was, excluded); Louisiana: 1910, State v. Kinchen, 126 La. 39, 52 So. 185 (here the Court falls back in defence, as many others have done, on the bugbear phrase, invented apparently by Mr. Wharton, "self-serving," a term which merely perpetuates the long-abandoned doctrine of interest, i. e. every person when speaking on a matter in which he is interested is presumably false in every detail; this worn-out notion should be totally discarded); Mississippi: 1859, Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383, 398 (defendant's statement, shortly before the homicide, that he "had no harm against [deceased], and would not hurt a hair of his head," excluded; because to admit it would be "to allow a party to make evidence for himself"); Missouri: 1880, State v. Van Zant, 71 Mo. 541 (assault; defendant's statements prior to and at the time of the affray, as to his physical condition excluded); 1905, State v. Atchley, 186 Mo. 174, 84 S. W. 984 (murder; defendant's application to have the deceased put under a peace-bond, excluded); Pennsylvania: 1918, Com. v. Principatti, 260 Pa. 587, 104 Atl. 53 ("a black hand" agent killed by accused; the accused's prior application to the police for protection, admitted, as evidencing his fear); Tennessee: 1901, Colquit v. State, 107 Tenn. 381, 64 S. W. 713 (defendant's prior statements that the deceased had threatened him, excluded); Texas: 1898, Red v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 414, 46 S. W. 408 (that he wished to get away from the vicinity of the deceased, excluded); 1900, Nelson v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 58 S. W. 107 (defendant's application to city marshal for protection, etc., admitted); 1903, Poole v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 348, 76 S. W. 565 (accused's statements, before the homicide, that he did not wish to have trouble, admitted); 1921, Powers v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 457, 227 S. W. 671 (murder; defendant's prior declarations, expressing fear of "trouble," admitted); 1921, Watt v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 235 S. W. 888 (murder; defendant's prior statements to the deceased protesting against deceased's aggressions, etc., excluded; unsound); Vermont: 1904, State v. Raymo, 76 Vt. 430, 57 Atl. 993 (assault on B.; plea, self-defence; defendant's declarations of fear of B., prior to the assault, excluded).

or the like, can be considered, is to exhibit ourselves the victims of a narrow whimsicality, which might be expected in the tribunal of a Jeffreys, going down from London to Taunton with his list of intended victims already in his pocket, or on a bench "condemning to order," as Zola said of Dreyfus' military judges. But it was not to have been anticipated in a legal system which makes so showy a parade of the presumption of innocence and the rights of the accused. — This question-begging fallacy about "making evidence for himself" runs through much of the judicial treatment. There is no reason why a declaration of an existing state of mind, if it would be admissible against the accused, should not also be admissible in his favor, except so far as the circumstances indicate plainly a motive to deceive.

(3) Statements of intent or motive, at the time of the act charged, are of course admissible under the present Exception. Whether in strictness the principle properly involved is the present one, or that of the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1772), is perhaps open to question. Practically there can be little difference in the result; for, under either principle, the statements must relate to the present state of mind at the time of the act. Most Courts treat the question in terms of the Verbal Act doctrine.[7] The statements, as already indicated, ought to be admissible as well in favor of the accused as against him.

(4) Statements after the act, stating the past intent or motive at the time of the act, are of course inadmissible under the present Exception; [8] though

[7] Compare with these the cases cited ante, § 396 (hostility evidenced by conduct);

ENGLAND: R. v. Petcherini, 7 Cox Cr. 81 (declarations while throwing books into a fire, admissible to prove the intention, on a charge of blasphemously burning the Holy Scripture).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1909, Huntington v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 175 Fed. 950, 956 (fraudulent entries under the homestead laws, by false representations to entrymen; true representations to other entrymen during the same period, excluded; Philips, J., diss., citing the above text); 1913, Gould v. U. S., 8th C. C. C., 209 Fed. 730 (fraudulent use of mails for irrigation lands investment; letter of one defendant to another held admissible to show good faith); Arkansas: 1852, Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. 805 (defendant's statements, at the time of killing a cow, as to his object in doing so, admitted; good opinion by Johnson, C. J., quoted ante, § 1714); Indiana: 1871, Hamilton v. State, 36 Ind. 280, 282 (robbery; defendant's declaration, while beating the person, that he was revenging himself for an assault, admitted); Maine: 1885, State v. Walker, 77 Me. 488, 490 (killing of one of a party attacking the defendant's house; defendant's statements at the time of the shooting, admitted to show "in what condition of mind the respondent was at the time"); Massachusetts: 1881, Com. v. Abbott, 130 Mass. 472 ("the intent or disposition, when it constitutes an element of crime, can only be ascertained, as all moral qualities are, from the acts and declarations of the party"); North Carolina: 1843, State v. Huntly, 3 Ired. N. C. 418, 422 (charge of going about armed to the terror of the people; declarations of defendant at the time, admitted as "characterizing the very acts charged"); 1905, Merrell v. Dudley, 139 N. C. 57, 51 S. E. 777 (malicious prosecution; defendant's statements at the time of suing out the warrant, admitted in his favor); West Virginia: 1875, State v. Abbott, 8 W. Va. 741, 751, 755 (defendant's declarations at the time of shooting, stating his reason, admitted for him; "the jury are to consider them in connection with all the other evidence in the cause; the jury must judge from all the facts and circumstances shown in evidence whether the mature purpose or intention of the accused as declared by him at the time were feigned or were a mere pretence or pretext assumed to cover up his real purpose, object, or intention in shooting").

In cases involving the doings of a mob or riotous assemblage, several principles have a bearing; these are explained, with references to the various places of treatment, post, § 1790; some of the cases have been placed ante, §§ 1729, 1730.

[8] 1880, State v. Howard, 82 N. C. 627 (murder at night; the defendant had gone on the same morning to the house of the deceased usable against the accused as admissions. But subsequent statements predicating then existing state of mind are properly admissible under the present Exception. No question is made about this when they are offered against the accused, because they are at any rate available as admissions.[9] But they should be equally admissible in his favor.[10] In both cases the object is to ascertain his subsequent state of mind, and thence to infer (ante, § 395) his state of mind at the time of the act. It is true that these declarations may not be thought to fulfil the requisite of the present Exception (ante, § 1714) that there should be no apparent motive to deceive; but this argument, as before, seems to involve the assumption of guilt.

(5) Statements of political opinion form a class difficult to place. In one aspect they are statements of opinion, admissible under the general principle (ante, § 1731). In another aspect, as expressions of a feeling or sentiment, — of antagonism, hostility, loyalty, disaffection, or the like, — they are equally admissible under that principle (ante, § 1730) in favor of as well as against the accused. In still another aspect, when offered for the accused, they are mere instances of conduct as exhibiting a good loyal character or intent, and are thus sometimes inadmissible (ante, §§ 195, 367). Whatever the more correct theory, they were at any rate long admitted without question in favor of the accused on trials for sedition and treason.[11] About the end of the 1700s and then left, going to S.'s house; his statement, while at S.'s house, of his reason for going to the house of the deceased, rejected); 1880, State v. Vann, 82 N. C. 631, 633 (Dillard, J.: "We understand the rule to be that a party charged with a crime can never put in evidence in his own behalf any declarations of his after its commission, . . . unless as a part of the 'res gestæ' to some act which is admitted in evidence"); 1900, State v. Davis, 104 Tenn. 501, 58 S. W. 122 (that "he didn't go to kill him," excluded).

[9] 1869, R. v. Dixon, 11 Cox Cr. 341 (the accused, as he shot, said, "Take that!" and immediately afterwards, "I know what I have done and am not sorry for it"; admitted to show motive); 1895, State v. Brown, 28 Or. 147, 41 Pac. 1042 (the defendant, just after the killing, ran off, saying, "I am the toughest son of a — that ever struck this town").

Contra: 1921, Sherman v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 202 Pac. 521 (murder; plea, self defence; defendant's statement, made 5 to 15 minutes after the shooting, when arrested, excluded).

[10] Accord: 1907, State v. Rutledge, 135 Ia. 581, 113 N. W. 461; 1896, Com. v. Crowley, 165 Mass. 569, 43 N. E. 509 (exclamations by a defendant after an assault, as showing his apprehension of its repetition, admitted).

Contra: 1907, Day v. State, 54 Fla. 25, 44 So. 715 (murder; statement when handing over the knife upon arrest, excluded); 1908, Lyles v. State, 130 Ga. 294, 60 S. E. 578 (wife-murder; immediately upon the sound of the shots, witnesses arrived, and the defendant said: "Gentlemen, come in here;. my God! I have shot my wife!" excluded; a flagrant instance of the dogged and needless cruelty to which our technical methods lead); 1922, State v. Brooks, — Ia. —, 186 N. W. 46 (homicide; accused's statements on coming home explaining how the affray began, etc., excluded; another ruling harshly unjust to innocent men); 1920, Richardson v. State, 123 Miss. 232, 85 So. 186 (murder; defendant's utterance, just afterwards, "S. tried to kill me, and I shot him," excluded; it seems incredible that a court of a nation regarding itself as modern and rational can consent to enforce such a rule as a part of a supposed rational system of proof; the blind bigotry of the Middle Ages, in its religious persecutions, otherwise incomprehensible to us, becomes understandable when we perceive kindly, accomplished, highly trained gentlemen applying without a tremor such a piece of cruel stifling technicality as this); 1900, State v. Moore, 156 Mo. 204, 56 S. W. 883 (explanations, at the time of arrest, of his reasons for having shot, excluded); 1849, State v. Hildreth, 9 Ired. N. C. 440, 446 (defendant's statement after a homicide to his accomplice, "You ought not to have done so," excluded).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1749.

[11] Compare, the cases cited ante, § 195, note 2, § 369, and post, § 2119; in the following cases the evidence was admitted, unless the matter came into frequent controversy, and some of Erskine's greatest arguments dealt with the admissibility of this class of evidence. The notable trials of Thomas Hardy and of Horne Tooke left it settled that such evidence was available for the accused; and, though the limits of its use are not clear, the theory seems to be in effect the first above noted.

(6) Other principles applicable are as follows: Where a confessory statement has been received, the whole said at the time in exculpation is also admissible, under the rule of Completeness (post, § 2115). But, apart from this principle, it seems highly desirable that any statement protesting innocence, otherwise noted; the quotations are merely illustrations from a larger mass of instances:

ENGLAND: 1683, Lord Russell's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 577, 622 ("I have heard him profess solemnly, he thought it would ruin the best cause in the world to take any of these irregular ways for the preserving of it"); 1684, Rosewell's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 214 ("he kept that day, and the 30th of January, as a day of fasting and prayer, and he preached from that text on the 1st Timothy, 2, 1, 'Pray for kings and all in authority'"); 1696, Freind's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 39; 1396, Cook's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 372, 391 ("I have heard him very much wish prosperity and success to our fleet"); 1710, Dammaree's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 582 ("At any time when there have been public rejoicings for any victories, how has he behaved himself?"); 1717, Francis Francia's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 975 ("It was a great surprise to me when I heard that he was taken up, for he used often to drink a health to king George"); 1780, Maskall's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 677; 1781, Lord Gordon's Trial, ib. 542, 564; 1794, Walker's Trial, 23 How. St. Tr. 1133 (Mr. Erskine, for the defence: "When a man is indicted for exciting sedition and rebellion, is it not evidence, to show that he held a language directly repugnant to any such idea? If he had said, 'God bless the king!', would not that be evidence?" Mr. J. Heath: "[Yes,] if it was at that meeting"; Mr. Law, for the prosecution: "If it goes to the whole tenor of his conduct; but a man shall not be justified by saying 'God bless the king!' in the street, when he has been damning him in his house"; Mr. J. Heath: "You should have examined to that in chief"); 1794, Thomas Hardy's Trial, 24 How. St. Tr. 1066–1094 (Eyre, L. C. J.: "If the question be, What was the political speculative opinion which this man entertained touching a reform of parliament. I believe we all think that opinion may very well be learned and discovered by the conversations which he has held at any time or in any place. . . . But if the declaration was meant to apply to a disavowal of the particular charge made against this man, that declaration could not be received, — as, for instance, if he had said to some friend of his, 'When this convention was planned I did not mean to use this convention to destroy the king and his government'"); 1794, Horne Tooke's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 344–361 (the arguments of Mr. Erskine and Mr. Scott (Lord Eldon), and the opinion of L. C. J. Eyre deal at length with this class of evidence; and the "prior sentiments and opinions of a man, very publicly declared," are held admissible to rebut the evidence or seditious intention).

(Contra: 1809, Le Blanc, J. [without argument] in Joseph Hanson's Trial, 31 id. 43, 81.)

UNITED STATES: The settled English practice seems to have escaped the attention of American Court when the question was presented at the time of the World War: 1918, U. S. v. Krafft, 3d C. C. A., 249 Fed. 919 (charge of attempting to cause insubordination in military forces under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, tit. 1, § 3; defendant's offer to show utterances at a prior time "in favor of the war with Germany," held inadmissible because irrelevant); 1919, State v. Kahn, 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107 (charge of sedition, under St. 1918, Ex. Sess., c. 11; testimony to defendant's expressions of loyal sentiments, excluded as hearsay; no precedent cited); 1919, State v. Wyman, — Or. —, 186 Pac. 1 (seditious utterances under St. 1918, c. 11, Extra Sess.; statements at other times expressing loyalty, excluded). The foregoing rulings are fundamentally unsound.

Point not involved: 1919, Wells v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 605 (charge under U. S. Criminal Code, Mar. 5, 1909, § 6, of conspiracy to prevent by force the execution of U. S. Joint Resolution, April 6, 1917, declaring war on Germany and directing the use of military forces, and also of other laws, by utterances in April and May, 1917, urging resistance by force to military conscription; defendant contended that his intent was to create a public opinion against the passage of the Selective Service Act of May 18, 1917, then pending, and not to advocate resistance by force; certain other utterances, not by the defendant, tending to influence public opinion but not urging forcible resistance, were excluded as irrelevant; the present principle was not involved nor discussed).

made upon arrest, should be receivable, upon the principle of corroborating a witness (ante, § 1144, where the cases are collected), as also conduct indicating a consciousness of innocence (ante, § 293). Statements after the act may also be receivable, for or against the accused, as spontaneous exclamations ('res gestæ'), under another principle (post, § 1749, where the cases are collected). Statements made during possession of stolen goods, naming the source of title — by purchase, finding, or the like — or claiming ownership, are receivable on the verbal-act principle (post, § 1781, where the cases are collected).

D. Statements by a Testator, in Will Cases

§ 1734. Different Classes discriminated. Statements by a testator involve principles no different from those already considered; but the superficial circumstance of unity — namely, their utterance by a testator — and the necessity of carefully discriminating the widely different principles applicable to superficially similar statements, makes it desirable to consider the various classes together.

The principles of Relevancy of Circumstantial Evidence affecting a testator's mental condition have already been examined (ante, §§ 112, 228, 233, 271); they involve chiefly the process of inference from a Mental Condition at one time to a Mental Condition at another time, and of inference from Conduct to Mental Condition. Keeping these in mind, it remains here to consider how far the testator's statements are admissible under the present Exception as assertions of a state of mind, and how far they are excluded because mere hearsay assertions of other kinds of facts.

For the purpose of distinguishing the principles involved, utterances of a testator may be classified as follows:

(1) That he does or does not intend to make a will of a particular tenor;

(2) That he has or has not made a will of a particular tenor;

(3) That he has or has not made a will, or that a particular will is or is not in existence, or is or is not genuine;

(4) That a particular will has or has not been destroyed or otherwise revoked;

(5) That a particular will was procured by fraud or undue influence;

(6) That certain persons have been or are the object of his affection or dislike; and

(7) Utterances indicating insanity, mental feebleness, or the like.

In examining the propriety of using any of these, it is essential to keep separately in mind (a) what is the fact which the utterance is offered to evidence, (b) whether this fact is relevant, and in what way, and (c) supposing it to be relevant, whether the utterance is admissible to evidence it.

§ 1735. Ante-Testamentary Statements of Design, Plan, Intention. A design or plan to do or not to do a specific act is always relevant to indicate that the act named was or was not subsequently done (ante, § 102). Accordingly, if the issue is whether a will was executed, or a will of a particular tenor, or whether at the time of execution it contained an alteration, the preëxisting testamentary design of the alleged testator is always relevant (ante, § 112). To evidence that design or plan, the person's statements of his existing design or plan are admissible, under the general principle of the present Exception (ante, § 1725).[1] These statements may be found in oral utterances, in letters, in the draft of a will or instructions to an attorney, or in any other form. The admissibility of such evidence, on the analysis just outlined, is entirely settled.[2]

§ 1736. Post-Testamentary Statements as to Execution, Contents, or Revocation. First Theory. Post-testamentary statements of the second, third, and fourth sorts above enumerated, i. e. statements affirming or denying the fact of execution, contents, or revocation of a will, are, in their first and simple aspect, to be taken as mere assertions of an external fact, offered as evidence of the truth of the assertion. They do not come within the present Exception, nor within any other of the established ones.[1] They are therefore ordinary hearsay assertions, and are inadmissible. This is the view taken by a number of Courts, represented in the following passages:[2]

§ 1735. [1] 1876, Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154 (Mellish, L. J.: "The declarations which are made before the will are not, I apprehend, to be taken as [direct] evidence of the will which is subsequently made; they obviously do not prove it; and [but?] wherever it is material to prove the state of a person's mind, or what was passing in it, and what were his intentions, there you may prove what he said, because that is the only means by which you can find out what his intentions were").

[2] The cases are collected ante, § 112 (intention, as evidence of the doing of an act).

§ 1736. [1] That they are not to be taken as assertions of a fact against interest is noted ante, § 1461.

[2] In the following cases this is the attitude taken:

ENGLAND: 1861, Staines v. Stewart, 2 Sw. & Tr. 320, 329 (declaration that he had destroyed his will, excluded); 1876, Mellish, J. in Sugden v. St. Leonards, quoted supra.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1901, Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. 474 (burnt document, sent anonymously to the probate office, after alleged testator's death; his declarations indicating a state of mind as to revocation, excluded; post-testamentary declarations of an unspecified kind, excluded, following Boylan v. Meeker; confused opinion; Harlan, White, and McKenna, JJ., diss.; Brown, J., acc. as to the result of the case only; in view of the authority of this Court, and the frequent citation of this decision, it should be noted that the opinion is only a quicksand for those who seek guidance on this subject);
Alabama: 1895, Henry v. Hall, 106 Ala. 84, 17 So. 187 (declarations as to a will's non-existence, excluded);
Arkansas: 1895, Leslie v. McMurty, 60 Ark. 301, 30 S. W. 33 (declarations that he had made no will, admissible on an issue of forgery);
Connecticut: 1905, Spencer's Appeal, 77 Conn. 638, 60 Atl. 289 (certain declarations admitted, but only because of lack of proper objection);
Iowa: 1906, Dunahugh's Will, 130 Ia. 692, 107 N. W. 925 (whether a revoking will had been made; the testatrix' statements, just before death, that she had made one, excluded; the opinion relies upon a passage in an encyclopedia "citing the following cases" which include Sugden v. St. Leonards, Eng., Lane v. Hill, N. H., and Tynan v. Paschal, Tex., infra, n. 3; the learned judge evidently was not aware that the cases cited decide precisely the opposite); 1907, Smith v. Ryan, 136 Ia. 335, 112 N. W. 8 (subsequent declarations, not admitted to show revocation); 1912, Nixon v. Snellbaker, 155 Ia. 390, 136 N. W. 223;
Kentucky: 1879, Mercer v. Mackin, 14 Bush 441 (declarations that he had made a will, no will being found, were rejected as hearsay; though the Court on the evidence confessed that "there is hardly room to doubt" that he made the will; Sugden v. St. Leonards is relied upon, but is entirely misunderstood);
Maryland: 1800, Collins v. Elliott, 1 H. & J. 1 ("that he had made a will," excluded); 1921, Courtenay v. Courtenay, — Md. —,

1851, CAMPBELL, L. C. J., in Doe v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747: "Declarations of the testator after the time when a controverted will is supposed to have been executed would not be admissible to prove that it had been duly signed and attested as the law requires."

1864, WILDE, J., in Quick v. Quick, 3 Sw. & Tr. 442 (rejecting subsequent declarations to prove contents of a will): "It is familiar enough practice to receive the unsworn declarations of the testator in evidence, for the purpose of arriving at his general intention where his competency is in dispute or where there is any imputation of fraud in the making of his will; for in such cases the state of his mind and affections is in itself a material fact, of which such statements are the fair exponents. But where those declarations are vouched to prove . . . the fact that he had declared and embodied those intentions in a certain will, they have no other title to confidence than the statements of any other person who had seen the will and could speak to its contents. In this aspect they become mere hearsay."

1876, MELLISH, L. J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 249 (a minority opinion on this point): "A declaration after he has made his will, of what the contents of the will are, is not a statement of anything which is passing in his mind at the time; it is simply a statement of a fact within his knowledge, and therefore you cannot admit it unless you can bring it within some of the exceptions to the general rule that hearsay evidence is not admissible to prove a fact which is stated in the declaration. It does not come within any of the rules which have been hitherto established, and I doubt whether it is an advisable thing to establish new exceptions."

Second Theory. But a few Courts (increasing perhaps in numbers), while facing the truth that such utterances are used distinctly as hearsay assertions, have frankly invoked a special exception to the Hearsay rule in order to 113 Atl. 717 (bequest to a child and children of a deceased child; testatrix' post-testamentary letter, not admitted to show intent);

Massachusetts: 1910, Giles v. Giles, 204 Mass. 383, 90 N. E. 595 (testator's declarations not admitted to show that a revocatory writing, executed as required by law, had been made; the Court fails to distinguish between prior declarations of intention and subsequent assertions);

Mississippi: 1909, Miller v. Miller, 96 Miss. 526, 51 So. 210 (testator's statements that he had not made and would not make a will, excluded on an issue of forgery); 1920, Moore v. Parks, 122 Miss. 301, 84 So. 230 (declarations of the contents of a lost will, excluded; Miller v. Miller followed);

Missouri: 1898, Wells v. Wells, 144 Mo. 198, 45 S. W. 1095 (declarations that he never made a will, not admissible to disprove the making);

Montana: 1904, Colbert's Estate, 31 Mont. 461, 78 Pac. 971, 80 Pac. 248 (whether a lost will had been revoked; the testator's statements that he was satisfied with it, excluded; following Throckmorton v. Holt, U. S.);

New Hampshire: 1903, Stevens v. Stevens, 72 N. H. 360, 56 Atl. 916 (will found, but alleged to have been revoked; declarations of the testator that he had revoked it, excluded; yet the opinion purports to approve Lane v. Hill, N. H., infra, n. 3, and perhaps would have admitted the evidence as corroborative);

New Jersey: 1860, Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 276 (declarations as to the non-existence of a will, excluded; see quotation post); 1892, Gordon's Will, 50 N. J. Eq. 397, 424, 26 Atl. 268 (Boylan v. Meeker approved);

New York: 1825, Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 490 (declarations as to the existence of a will and where to find it, excluded); 1826, Jackson v. Betts, 6 Cow. 382; 1844, Grant v. Grant, 1 Sand. Ch. 235, 237 (declarations as to execution, excluded following Dan v. Brown); 1901, Kennedy's Will, 167 N. Y. 163, 60 N. E. 442 (issue as to the revocation of a lost will; declarations not admitted to show its existence at the time of testatrix' death);

Tennessee: 1901, Earp v. Edgington, 107 Tenn. 23, 64 S. W. 40 (declarations, not clearly specified, as to the making of a will, excluded; following Throckmorton v. Holt, U. S.; the opinion does not make the proper distinctions);

Texas: 1885, Kennedy v. Upshaw, 64 Tex. 411, 417 (forgery of a codicil; testator's declarations that he had made no change in his will, excluded);

Virginia: 1922, Dearing v. Dearing, — Va. —, 111 S. E. 286 (forgery; certain declarations excluded);

Wisconsin: 1920, Johnson's Estate, 170 Wis. 436, 175 N. W. 917 (deceased's declarations "that he had made a will" alleged to be lost, admissible); admit them. It is not clear to what extent this Exception would be carried; apparently its recognition would depend upon the circumstances of trustworthiness appearing in each case. The bulwark of this doctrine is the opinion of the Master of the Rolls, Sir George Jessel, one of the greatest English judges of the 1800s in the qualities of directness and penetration of thought. In the following passages this doctrine is expounded:[3]

[3] This view is represented in the following cases; but it should be said that some of the American Courts merely admit the statements in supposed accord with Sugden v. St. Leonards not noting plainly which of its theories are followed; compare the comments on that case infra:

ENGLAND: 1873, Sykes' Goods, L. R. 3 P. & D. 27 (declaration of contents of will as altered, made before a codicil confirming the will, admitted); 1876, Cockburn, C. J., and Jessel, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 163, 172 (lost will; certain unspecified declarations about the will, held admissible to prove its contents; "he was in the constant habit of talking to every one with whom he came into contact . . . of the testamentary provisions he had made"). It will be noticed that Mr. Justice Hannen, in Keen v. Keen, and in Sugden v. St. Leonards in the court below (quoted supra), came to the same result as Chief Justice Cockburn and the Master of the Rolls in the latter case on appeal, but this result was reached on very different principles. For this reason, in the cases purporting to follow the ruling in Sugden v. St. Leonards, it is by no means certain which of the two principles of decision has been adopted, or whether it has been always clearly understood that a distinct choice of principles is open. Perhaps it may be assumed that the view of the majority on appeal — the second theory supra — is the one intended to be accepted. But this difference of principle in the opinions in Sugden v. St. Leonards, together with the strong dissenting opinion of Lord Justice Mellish, have deprived the case of the authority that it might otherwise have had. It is not to be taken as representing the final settlement of the law in England, as subsequent opinions have pointed out: 1890, Harris v. Knight L. R. 15 P. & D. 174 (declarations that a will had been made, admitted); 1890, Re Ball, 25 L. R. Ire. 557 (admitting declarations of contents, made after execution, on the general ground that there is no difference between declarations before and declarations after; purporting to follow Sugden v. St. Leonards); 1891, Flood v. Russell, 29 L. R. Ire. 97 (purporting to follow Sugden v. St. Leonards; admitting declarations as to execution); 1886, Woodward v. Goulstone, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 469 (Herschell, L. C.: "I do not desire to be understood as dissenting from the judgment of the majority of the Court of Appeal in Sugden v. St. Leonards, upon this point. I have expressed the doubts which I entertain; all I desire is to leave the question open should it hereafter come before your Lordships' House for decision"; similar statements were made by Lords Blackburn and Fitzgerald); 1897, Atkinson v. Morris, Prob. C. A. 40 (a will imperfectly cancelled was found; the defendants, to prove that the will had been executed in duplicate, and that the non-appearance of the duplicate raised a presumption of destruction, thus legally effecting a revocation, offered the testatrix's declarations that she had executed the will in duplicate; excluded, since, even assuming Sugden v. St. Leonards to be fully accepted, it did not authorize the use of declarations as sufficient proof that a will had been duly executed).

CANADA: 1903, Stewart v. Walker, 6 Ont. L. R. 495, 503 ("while the decision in Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards stands, it must be accepted as the law that declarations subsequent to the making of a will are admissible as secondary evidence of its contents").

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1878, Conoly v. Gayle, 61 Ala. 116, 124, semble (execution and loss having been evidenced, the testatrix's letter, speaking of having made her will, etc., was admitted);
Georgia: 1861, Patterson v. Hickey, 32 Ga. 159 (subsequent declarations of a testator indicating the non-existence of a will, admitted, apparently as an exception to the Hearsay rule);
Illinois: 1914, Burton v. Wylde, 261 Ill. 397, 103 N. E. 976 (revocation by cutting out the signature, etc.; testatrix' declarations that she had destroyed her will, admitted; sensible opinion, ignoring all the vain theoretical distinctions, and admitting virtually all post-testamentary utterances);
Indiana: 1895, McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55, 41 N. E. 345 (statements describing a will's contents, admitted to show contents and non-revocation); 1906, Inlow v. Hughes, 38 Ind. 375, 76 N. E. 763 (post-testamentary declarations as to the tenor of a lost will, held admissible only "by way of corroboration" of the testimony of two witnesses required by Rev. St. 1901, § 2779, quoted post, § 2052);
Iowa: 1898, Scott v. Hawk, 105 Ia. 467, 75 N. W. 368 (that "the deceased, upon examina-

1876, JESSEL, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 231: "[The reasons for the exceptions to the Hearsay rule] all exist in the case of a testator declaring the contents of his will. . . . Having regard to the reasons and principles which have induced the Courts of this country to admit exceptions in the other cases to which I have referred, we should be equally justified and equally bound to admit it in this case. When I say equally, perhaps I state the case a little too low, because if there is any case in the world in which it is incumbent upon a tribunal not to grant a premium for fraud or wrong, . . . it is the case of a lost will. The Court should be anxious, not narrowly to restrict the rules of evidence, which were made for the purpose of furthering truth and justice, but, guided by those great principles which have guided other tribunals in other countries in admitting this kind of evidence generally, to admit it at all events in the special case which we have under consideration."

1876, COCKBURN, C. J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 225: "Declarations of deceased persons are in several instances admitted as exceptions to the general rule; where such persons have had peculiar means of knowledge and may be supposed to have been without motive to speak otherwise than according to the truth. It is obvious that a man who has made his will stands preëminently in that position. He must be taken to know the contents of the instrument he has executed. If he speaks of its provisions, he can have no motive for misrepresenting them, except in the rare instances in which a testator may have the intention of misleading by his statements respecting his will.

tion of the instrument and the signatures thereto, declared it his will, is convincing evidence");
Kansas: 1900, Schnee v. Schnee, 61 Kan. 643, 60 Pac. 738 (declarations as to contents of a lost will, admissible);
Kentucky: 1900, Muller v. Muller, 108 Ky. 511, 56 S. W. 802 (declarations admissible to show contents; no authority cited); 1922, Atherton v. Gaslin, — Ky. —, 239 S. W. 771 (forgery of a will; "long before Sugden v. St. Leonards was decided, we had adopted the rule that post-testamentary declarations of the testator as to the contents of a lost will are admissible in corroboration of other evidence"; and the same rule was here applied; prior cases reviewed, in a careful opinion by Clay, J.);
Michigan: 1893, Lambie's Estate, 97 Mich. 49, 57, 56 N. W. 223 (after evidence of a revoking will, testatrix's declarations that she had changed her will, received in corroboration);
Missouri: 1905, Mann v. Balfour, 187 Mo. 290, 86 S. W. 103 (after evidence of execution and loss, the testator's declarations as to contents, etc., are admissible in corroboration);
New Hampshire: 1895, Lane v. Hill, 68 N. H. 275, 44 Atl. 393 (testator's declarations as to the contents of a lost will, admitted, expressly on the principle of Jessel, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, as a special exception to the Hearsay rule; declarations as to its execution, also admissible, but only in corroboration of "direct evidence");
New Jersey: 1904, Davenport v. Davenport, 67 N. J. Eq. 320, 58 Atl. 535 (lost will; the testator's declarations of contents "a few days after the alleged will was executed," admitted; purporting to follow Rusling v. Rusling, N. J., post, § 1738, which deals with a different question, and ignoring Boylan v. Meeker and Gordon's Will, N. J., supra, n. 2);
North Carolina: 1906, Shelton's Will, 143 N. C. 218, 55 S. E. 705 (exception recognized, following Jessel, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonard's, and Reel v. Reel, N. C., cited post, § 1738, n. 2; here a will bore a revocatory writing, legally sufficient, and the testator's subsequent declarations were admitted on the issue of its genuineness);
Oregon: 1907, Miller's Will, 49 Or. 452, 90 Pac. 1002 (lost will; testatrix' declarations, up to a short time before her death, that it was still on deposit in the bank and unrevoked, held admissible; following Cockburn, C. J.'s, view in Sugden v. St. Leonards; able opinion by King, C.);
South Dakota: 1920, State v. Nieuwenhuis, 43 S. D. 198, 178 N. W. 976 (forgery of a will; testator's statements at a date subsequent that he had made such a will, admitted; Whiting, J., diss.);
Tennessee: 1858, Smiley v. Gambill, 2 Head 165 (subsequent declarations of the destruction of a will, admitted); 1877, Beadles v. Alexander, 9 Baxt. 604, 606 (declarations by the testator that he had signed the will in the witnesses' presence, admissible in corroboration as "the declaration of the only party having a vested interest to declare the whole truth"; approving Reel v. Reel, quoted post, § 1738);
Texas: 1863, Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 300 (assertions received to show the execution of the will and to rebut the inference of revocation); 1903, McElroy v. Phink, — Tex. —, 76 S. W. 753 (lost will; deceased's statements that she had destroyed it, for certain reasons, held admissible, being "treated as an exception" confined to the case of a lost will last in the custody of some person other than the testator; careful opinion by Gaines, C. J.).

Generally speaking, statements of this kind are honestly made, and this class of evidence may be put on the same footing with the declarations of members of a family in matters of pedigree. . . . I am at a loss to see why, when such evidence is held to be admissible for the two purposes just referred to, it should not be equally receivable as proving the contents of the will. If the exception to the general rule of law which excludes hearsay evidence is admitted, on account of the exceptional position of a testator, for one purpose, why should it not be for another, where there is an equal degree of knowledge, and an equal absence of motive to speak untruly?"

1895, JORDAN, J., in McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55, 41 N. E. 345: "Such statements of the testator should be received as evidence with great caution, for the reason that they are sometimes made by him for the express purpose of misleading or satisfying curious friends or expectant relatives. But the declarations in the case at bar are not open to this objection. They are voluntarily made to a confidential friend, — one who apparently had no interest in the estate of the testator — and not in response to any inquiry by him made. Considering the circumstances under which they were made by the testator, — at a time when sick, but in the full control of his mental faculties, and when he seemingly recognized that his death was a near probability, — they appear to us to bear upon their face the very impress of sincerity."

Third Theory. There is, however, still a third view, agreeing with the second in so far as it admits the declarations, but reaching the result by another mode and without invoking a special exception to the Hearsay rule. The testator's declarations may be conceived as either directly asserting his belief (i. e. that he had or had not executed or revoked a will of certain contents), or as indirectly and circumstantially indicating such a belief; in the former view, they are admissible to evidence his state of mind, under the present Exception (ante, § 1731); in the latter view, they are admissible as circumstantial evidence to indicate his state of mind (ante, § 271). Having thus evidenced his belief or consciousness, we may infer from it (backwards in time) the doing of the act which produced that belief or consciousness (ante, § 176). In other words, by a double process of inference, from utterance to belief, and from belief to a preceding act, we argue that the testator did or did not execute or revoke. The propriety of the second inference is a question of Relevancy, and has been already examined (ante, §§ 176, 271); the propriety of the first inference is judicially expounded in the following passages:[4]

[4] The following cases seem to go upon this theory:

ENGLAND: 1854, Patten v. Paulton, 4 Jur. N. S. 341 (subsequent declarations of a testator admitted, asserting the existence of a will, the issue being whether, though it was lost, it had been revoked); 1864, Whiteley v. King, 10 Jur. N. S. 1079 (same); 1873, Keen v. Keen, L. R. 3 P. & D. 107 (quoted supra); 1874, R. v. Castro (Tichborne Case), Charge of C. J. Cockburn, I, 614 ("It certainly does seem strange that the man who had signed his will in London in June should imagine he had signed it in the ensuing month of November"); 1876, Hannen, J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, quoted supra; 1880, Gould v. Lakes, L. R. 6 P. D. 1 (per Hannen, J., that "the state of the testatrix's mind and intentions" after the will, as shown by her declarations, was evidence to show "what were the constituent parts of the will"; purporting to follow Sugden v. St. Leonards).

CANADA: 1882, Pike's Will, 4 Morris Newf. 445 (approving Sugden v. St. Leonards, and admitting similar evidence on the theory of Hannen, J.).

UNITED STATES: Federal: the following case perhaps belongs here: 1897, Bergere v. U. S. 168 U. S. 66, 18 Sup. 4 (a will showing that the testator was dealing with all his assets; the omission of a tract of half a million acres, held to be evidence that he did not suppose that he owned the land, and therefore that there was a defect of title);

1873, HANNEN, J., in Keen v. Keen, L. R. 3 P. & D. 107 (admitting subsequent declarations asserting and denying the existence of a will which was lost, the issue being as to whether it had been revoked): "A statement by the testator that he has altered his mind as to the disposition of his property, and that he has therefore destroyed his will, although it may not be evidence of the fact of the destruction of the will, is evidence of intention, from which the fact of destruction may be inferred, there being other circumstances leading to the same conclusion."

1876, HANNEN, J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 203: "Believing, as I do, the testator made these statements [alluding to the existence of the will] showing a belief in his mind that the will was in existence at a time subsequently to that at which he could have revoked it, I am led to the conclusion that he had not in fact revoked it at any time when he had the opportunity of getting access to it. . . . I come to the conclusion that his declarations down to the latest period of his life show that he died under the belief that that will was still in existence, and rebut the presumption that he had revoked it."

Alabama: 1847, McBeth v. McBeth, 11 Ala. 602;

Arkansas: 1913, Longer v. Beakley, 106 Ark. 213, 153 S. W. 811 (whether an insurance-policy request for change of beneficiary had been authorized: the insured's subsequent reference to the original persons as beneficiaries, and his affection for them, admitted; McCulloch, C. J., diss.; the dissenting opinion correctly points out that the issue is analogous to that of execution of a will, and that the majority opinion seems to go upon the principle of capacity; nevertheless, the result of the decision is sound);

Columbia (Dist.): 1898, Throckmorton v. Holt, 12 D. C. App. 552, 574, 581 (on an issue of forgery of a will, "the feelings of the testator towards all the parties and his relations with them and apparent intentions as disclosed by his conduct and declarations," admissible, as "suppletory proof," "tending to show the state of mind of the testator"; good opinion by Shepard, J.);

Connecticut: 1873, Johnson's Will, 40 Conn. 587 (a will having disappeared and the testator becoming insane, later declarations indicating his belief that the will still existed were admitted, and the Court thence argued back to the conclusion that he did not destroy the will 'animo revocandi');

Georgia: 1884, Burge v. Hamilton, 72 Ga. 568, 619, semble (statement of the testator to the scrivener of a codicil, admitted "to show that ten pages fastened together are the will and the whole will of the testator");

Illinois: 1886, Re Page, 118 Ill. 581, 8 N. E. 852 (the issue being the revocation of a lost will, subsequent declarations recognizing the existence of the will were admitted, as pointing to a non-revocation; Scholfield, J.: "Why should he have spoken falsely in this respect, and this, too, in the face of impending death realized by him? Not the shadow of an excuse is shown");

Kentucky: 1844, Steele v. Price, 5 B. Monr. 63 (admitting the testator's declarations showing a subsequent disinclination to revoke a will that has been lost);

Maryland: 1883, Hoppe v. Byers, 60 Md. 393 (subsequent belief of a testator that he had made a will of the tenor of a document offered, held admissible to show the genuineness of the document, other evidence of genuineness being also offered; following Sugden v. St. Leonards and Gould v. Lakes);

Ohio: 1890, Behrens v. Behrens, 47 Oh. St. 332, 25 N. E. 209 (purporting to follow Keen v. Keen, yet apparently using the declarations — that a will had been destroyed — directly as hearsay assertions of the past act);

Pennsylvania: 1878, Foster's Appeal, 87 Pa. 75 (the testator's reliance upon the existence of a will, used to infer back to the non-revocation of a lost will); 1905, Lappe v. Gfeller, 211 Pa. 462, 60 Atl. 1049 (destroyed will, said to have been forged; declarations of the deceased, for some months prior to his death, "inconsistent with the existence and validity of the alleged will," admitted, "as throwing some light on the question of fraud and forgery");

Tennessee: 1858, Smiley v. Gambill, 2 Head 165 (subsequent belief of a testatrix, as shown by acts, that she had destroyed a will, admitted to show the fact of destruction and the intent);

Virginia: 1913, Jackson v. Hewlett, 114 Va. 573, 77 S. E. 518 (facts similar to Sugden v. St. Leonards; declarations admitted to rebut intention to revoke);

Wisconsin: 1896, Valentine's Will, 93 Wis. 45, 67 N. W. 12 (a will shown to have been executed, but now not found; to show whether the will had been destroyed and revoked by the testatrix, declarations of hers, as to such destruction and also as to her still possessing the will, were received, not as "evidence of the fact so declared," but as showing "that she died in the belief that she left no will, and thus support the presumption of revocation"; purporting to follow Sugden v. St. Leonards); 1897, Steinke's Will, 95 Wis. 121, 70 N. W. 61 (like Sugden v. St. Leonards; declarations that "H. has the will," admitted, as indicating "that she died in the belief that the will was still in existence").

So far as this result rests on the propriety of the second inference above named — i. e. from the person's belief or consciousness to his preceding act inducing that consciousness (ante, § 176), it seems unassailable; if a person in fact has a fixed belief that he has made or revoked a will of a certain tenor, either he has done so, or he is insane or feeble-minded, in all probability; the evidence is at least strong. But it is the first inference that is weak. Are his utterances trustworthy? Do not testators constantly make such statements deliberately in order to deceive designing or annoying relatives? Perhaps here the matter should be left to depend on the circumstances of each case. The possibilities of error in this part of the process of inference have been pointed out in the following passage:

1860, WHELPLEY, J., in Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 276: "The plaintiffs relied on the declarations and conduct of Meeker, both before and after the day of execution, to show that while living he never knew of the existence of such a will and that therefore he had never knowingly executed the paper. . . . The admissibility of this evidence on the issue of fraud and forgery has been argued on two grounds, first, that they were exterior manifestations of an inward condition of mind, that is to say, ignorance of the existence of the will. It is argued . . . that sanity and ignorance are both states of mind, that exterior manifestations must be relied upon to prove both. If this were so, there might be some force in the argument. But . . . the exterior manifestations of insanity are involuntary, those of knowledge purely voluntary. . . . The devisor may to secure his own peace and comfort during life . . . conceal the nature of his testamentary dispositions and make statements calculated and intended to deceive those with whom he is conversing. He has neither the sanctity of an oath nor the strong bond of self-interest to secure his adherence to the truth."

§ 1737. Statements Indicating Intent to Revoke. (1) In the precedents of the foregoing section, where a will cannot be found, and an issue arises as to its revocation, the object of using the testator's declarations was to show the very act of revocation (or the opposite); that is, to use the declarations either as assertions of the past act, or as evidence of a belief from which in turn the past act could be inferred.

(2) But the case may arise where the act of destruction or cancellation by the testator is conceded, and the inquiry is merely as to the accompanying intent, whether it was revocatory or not:

(a) Declarations of intent at the time of the act are of course admissible, not only under the present Exception, but also (as usually treated) under the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1782).[1]

(b) But since the question is here merely one of the existence of a state of mind, may we not infer the testator's then state of mind from his state of mind at a prior or subsequent time not too remote? The principle of Relevancy already examined (ante, §§ 241, 242) certainly justifies this; hence, as evidence of this prior or subsequent state of mind, utterances at the prior or subsequent time are admissible. The propriety of this is generally conceded

§ 1737. [1] The cases are there collected. Compare also the case cited post, § 1777 (declarations of a testator accompanying a delivery of money or chattels).

(where the point has been explicitly raised); but some rulings distinctly reach the result by the above analysis;[2] while others ignore the double process of inference, and admit the utterances either without specific reasons, or (incorrectly) as a result of the Verbal Act doctrine, or by way of a special Hearsay exception.[3] It will be noticed that Courts refusing to accept the theory of Mr. Justice Hannen (ante, § 1736), may nevertheless accept the present doctrine where the act of destruction is conceded; because there, when post-testamentary utterances were employed, an inference was required from the subsequent state of mind to the prior act, while here the inference is merely from the subsequent to the prior state of mind.

§ 1738. Statements as to Undue Influence or Fraud. Utterances of the fifth and sixth classes already enumerated (ante, § 1734) may be regarded

[2] As in Massachusetts.

[3] Compare the cases cited ante, § 112, and post, § 1782: Alabama: 1848, Weeks v. McBeth, 14 Ala. 474 (a will being not found, the testator's declarations of having burned it were admitted, on the verbal-act theory); 1914, Allen v. Scruggs, 190 Ala. 654, 67 So. 301 (Weeks v. McBeth, approved); California: 1921, Sweetman's Est., Griffiths v. Johnson, 185 Cal. 27, 195 Pac. 918 (revocation of a lost will; testatrix' declarations 3 days before death, that the will was in existence, admitted, without dispute); Georgia: 1861, Patterson v. Hickey, 32 Ga. 159 (a will having been torn, subsequent language of the testator indicating indirectly the nonexistence of a will at the time was held admissible to show the intent with which the will was torn); Illinois: 1921, Holler v. Holler, 298 Ill. 418, 131 N. E. 663 (post testamentary declarations, admissible to show that a lost will had been destroyed by testator); Maine: 1867, Collagan v. Burns, 57 Me. 458 (a will was found torn, and the testator's declarations while re-pasting it were admitted to show his belief and intention at the time as to revocation; four judges dissented on the ground that the declarations were purely hearsay narrative of past facts); Massachusetts: 1875, Whitney v. Wheeler, 116 Mass. 492 (the controversy was whether a gift had been made 'causa mortis'; "when there is any ground for doubt as to the intent with which a delivery of property was made, . . . evidence tending to show a continuous and apparently fixed state of mind and purpose, inconsistent with such alleged gift, existing previously thereto, may have a legitimate bearing upon the case"); 1883, Whitwell v. Winslow, 132 Mass. 307; 1883, Pickens v. Davis, 133 Mass. 257 ("The state of mind of a testatrix before and after cancellation of a will being relevant in inferring the intent at the time of cancellation, the testator's declarations before and after revocation are evidence of his state of mind at those times"); 1883, Lane v. Moore, 151 Mass. 90, 23 N. E. 828 (following Pickens v. Davis); 1901, Stewart v. Stewart, 177 Mass. 493, 59 N. E. 116 (whether an instrument was intended as a codicil or a power of attorney; decedent's declarations and conduct after as well as before execution, admitted); 1913, Aldrich v. Aldrich, 215 Mass. 164, 102 N. E. 487 (statements to counsel in regard to a will, indicative of intent to revoke, held admissible; following Pickens v. Davis); Michigan: 1860, Lawyer v. Smith, 8 Mich. 860 (a will having been torn up, declarations of the testatrix, made subsequently, that she had destroyed her will, were admitted on the question whether the tearing was "done by the testatrix or some other person, and if by her, whether accidentally or intentionally and for the purpose of revoking her will"); Mississippi: 1882, Tucker v. Whitehead, 59 Miss. 594 (the destruction being presumably by the testator, declarations up to the time of death were admitted to show his state of mind); New York: 1830, Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 175 (Walworth, C.: "Where the question is as to the intent present in an equivocal act possibly a revocation, the possible motives for revocation may be offered in evidence").

Contra: 1901, Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. 474 (cited ante, § 1736, note 2).

A declaration concerning revocation may be in truth an attempt at a present verbal revocation. In this view it is usually, under the substantive law of wills, ineffective and therefore immaterial to be proved; a few early cases to this effect, not dealing with the present evidential question, have sometimes been misunderstood: 1776, Bibb v. Thomas, 2 Wm. Bl. 1043 (no rulings on evidence; the effect of an attempted and partial destruction considered; declarations at the time and subsequently admitted without question); 1820, Doe v. Perkes, 3 B. & Ald. 489 (similar to Bibb v. Thomas); 1829, Provis v. Read, 5 Bing. 435 (declarations of the testator that his will was not valid, rejected); 1866, Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 389 (similar).

in several aspects. The chief distinction is between their use as direct assertion of the external fact of fraud or undue influence — for here they are met immediately by the Hearsay rule — and their use as indicating (directly or indirectly) a condition of mind relevant to the issue — for here they are admissible either as circumstantial evidence or as statements of a mental condition under the present Exception.

(1) The testator's assertion that a person, named or unnamed, has procured him by fraud or by pressure to execute a will or to insert a provision, is plainly obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, if offered as evidence that the fact asserted did occur:

1868, COLT, J., in Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 122: "When used for such purpose, they are mere hearsay, which by reason of the death of the party whose statements are so offered, can never be explained or contradicted by him. Obtained, it may be, by deception or persuasion, and always liable to the infirmities of human recollection, their admission for such purpose would go far to destroy the security which it is essential to preserve"; they are thus inadmissible so far as they form "a declaration or narrative to show the fact of fraud or undue influence at a previous period."

For this reason such declarations of a testator are by most Courts regarded as inadmissible.[1]

§ 1738. [1] California: 1896, Calkins' Estate v. Calkins, 112 Cal. 296, 44 Pac. 577; 1897, Kaufman's Estate, 117 Cal. 288, 49 Pac. 192; 1903, Donovan's Estate, 140 Cal. 390, 73 Pac. 1081; 1913, Gleason's Estate, Corbin v. Gleason, 164 Cal. 756, 130 Pac. 872 (Calkin's Estate followed); 1913, Jones' Estate, Baker v. Jones, 166 Cal. 108, 135 Pac. 288 ("I was talked into making the will," etc., excluded); Columbia (Dist.): 1897, Towson v. Moore, 11 D. C. App. 377, 385 (declarations held not admissible "to show such undue influence; although they may be admitted to show mental condition"); 1898, Manogue v. Herrell, 13 id. 455, 458 (testator's declarations, excluded, because here there was no other evidence of undue influence); 1903, Utermehle v. Norment, 22 D. C. App. 31 (testator's declarations of intent to leave a share to the caveatee, excluded on the facts; principle obscure); Connecticut: 1830, Comstock v. Hadlyme, 8 Conn. 263; 1901, Vivian's Appeal, 74 Conn. 257, 261, 50 Atl. 797 (Comstock v. Hadlyme followed; good opinion, by Baldwin, J.); Georgia: 1894, Mallery v. Young, 94 Ga. 804, 22 S. E. 142; 1900, Underwood v. Thurman, 111 Ga. 325, 36 S. E. 788; Idaho: 1897, Gwin v. Gwin, 5 Ida. 271, 48 Pac. 295; Illinois: 1878, Reynolds v. Adams, 90 Ill. 147; 1912, Norton v. Clark, 253 Ill. 557, 97 N. E. 1079; Indiana: 1858, Runkle v. Gates, 11 Ind. 94 (here, declarations six or eight days after execution were held to be not "so near as to be part of the 'res gestæ'"); 1871, Hayes v. West, 35 Ind. 21, 24 (if "not made contemporaneously with the execution," inadmissible); 1879, Todd v. Fenton, 66 Ind. 25, 31 (similar to Hayes v. West); 1883, Vanvalkenberg v. Vanvalkenberg, 90 Ind. 433, 438 (similar); 1918, Ramseyer v. Dennis, 187 Ind. 420, 119 N. E. 716 (testator's mental incapacity; testator's utterances as to his stepson being a snake in the grass, etc., received, on the principle of § 233, ante; distinguishing Runkle v. Gates, supra, and the present principle); Kentucky: 1896, Kirkpatrick v. Jenkins, — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 830, semble; 1857, Gibson v. Gibson, 24 Mo. 236 (that he was drunk at the time of execution); 1885, Bush v. Bush, 87 Ky. 480, 485; 1896, Doherty v. Gilmore, 136 Ky. 414, 37 S. W. 1127; 1900, Schierbaum v. Schemme, 157 Ky. 1, 57 S. W. 526 (statements that he had "mistreated" a daughter in his will, implying that a son had practised imposition on him, excluded); Missouri: 1909, Jones v. Thomas, 218 Mo. 508, 117 S. W. 1177; Nebraska: 1901, Davidson v. Davidson, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 409 (statements that "it was a will on paper but it was not his intention; it was not his heart's desire," excluded); New Jersey: 1874, Lynch v. Coements, 24 N. J. Eq. 431, 437; 1882, Kitchell v. Beach, 35 N. J. Eq. 446, 454; 1883, Rusling v. Rusling, 36 N. J. Eq. 603, 607 (statements, before and after execution, of the legatees' conduct to the testator, not admitted "as evidence of the facts" they were offered to prove; quoted supra; Boylan v. Meeker, N. J., ante, § 1736, approved); 1885, Pemberton's Case, 40 N. J. Eq. 520, 528, 4 Atl. 770; 1889, Middleditch v. Williams, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 736, 17 Atl. 826; New York: 1806, Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. 33 (dec-

Yet it has been argued that where the declarations appear in fact to have been made under circumstances of trustworthiness, they should be considered; a special Exception, in effect, being established for them, analogous to that which has been recognized (ante, § 1736), by certain opinions in Sugden v. St. Leonards, for declarations as to the fact of execution, revocation, or contents.[2] The propriety of such an exception has been defended in the following opinion:

1821, HENDERSON, J., in Reel v. Reel, 1 Hawks 268 (the claim being that a will had been secured by fraud from the testator when drunk, subsequent declarations by the testator as to the contents of the will, showing them to be different from its actual contents, were admitted): "To our minds, to reject the declarations of the only person having a vested interest and who was interested to declare the truth, whose fiat gave existence to the will, and whose fiat could destroy, and in doing the one or the other could interfere with the rights of no one, involves almost an absurdity. . . . The tribunal which is to try the fact is to decide whether the declarations contain the truth. or are deceptive in order to delude expectants and procure peace."

(2) But these utterances may be nevertheless availed of as evidence of the testator's mental condition (ante, § 1714), if the latter fact is relevant. Though the issue is as to his mental condition with regard to deception or duress at the time of execution, yet his mental state both before and afterwards is admissible as evidence of his state at that time (on the principles of §§ 230, 242, 394, 395, ante). Thus the question is reduced to a simple one, namely, What particular mental conditions of the testator, thus evidenced, are material as being involved in the broader issue of deception or undue influence? There are here recognized by the Courts two distinct sorts of mental condition:

(a) The existence of undue influence or deception involves incidentally a consideration of the testator's incapacity to resist pressure and his susceptibility to deceit, whether in general or by a particular person. This requires larations of a testator that a will had been extorted from him by compulsion were rejected, as being hearsay and not exempt from the rule); 1854, Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157; 1877, Cudeny v. Cudeny, 68 N. Y. 148, 150; 1882, Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 374; Pennsylvania: 1827, Moritz v. Brough, 16 S. & R. 403; 1856, Hoshauer v. Hoshauer, 26 Pa. 404; South Carolina: 1897, Kaufman v. Caughman, 49 S. C. 159, 27 S. E. 16; Texas: 1885, Kennedy v. Upshaw, 64 Tex. 417; Vermont: 1853, Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 47; 1885, Crocker v. Chase's Estate, 57 Vt. 413; Wisconsin: 1901, Loennecker's Will, 112 Wis. 461, 88 N. W. 215 (declarations that she has been ill-treated and had made the will from fear, excluded); 1906, Mueller v. Pew, 127 Wis. 288, 105 N. W. 840 (Loennecker's Will approved).

The same rule would be applicable to a deed on an issue of undue influence: 1866, Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 376, 389; 1886, Massey v. Huntington, 118 Ill. 80, 88, 7 N. E. 269; 1889, Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523, 532, 20 N. E. 665; 1893, Francis v. Wilkinson, 147 Ill. 370, 384, 35 N. E. 150.

[2] Accord: N. C. 1821, Reel v. Reel, 1 Hawks 268 (quoted supra); 1832, Howell v. Barden, 3 Dev. 442 (declarations by a testator, that a will had been obtained by fraud and undue influence, admitted; treated as assertions, and in effect held to be exceptions to the hearsay rule; approving Reel v. Reel); 1907, Shelton's Will, 143 N. C. 218, 55 S. E. 705 (approving Reel v. Reel); 1906, Linebarger v. Linebarger, 143 N. C. 229, 55 S. E. 709 (an opinion filed on the same day as the preceding but by a different judge, refers to the rule of Reel v. Reel as a "much vexed question"); 1912, Fowler's Will, 159 N. C. 203, 74 S. E. 117 (approving Howell v. Barden); Tenn. 1877, Beadles v. Alexander, 9 Baxt. 604 (following Reel v. Reel); 1878, Linch v. Linch, 1 Lea 529.

a consideration of many circumstances, including his state of affections or dislike for particular persons, benefited or not benefited by the will; of his inclinations to obey or to resist these persons; and, in general, of his mental and emotional condition with reference to its being affected by any of the persons concerned. All utterances and conduct, therefore, affording any indication of this sort of mental condition, are admissible, in order that from these the condition at various times (not too remote) may be used as the basis for inferring his condition at the time in issue. This use of such data is universally conceded to be proper:[3]

[3] The cases in note 1, supra, also refer usually to the propriety of this use:

ENGLAND: 1864, Quick v. Quick, 3 Sw. & Tr. 442 (Sir J. P. Wilde: "It is a familiar enough practice to receive the unsworn declarations of the testator in evidence, for the purpose of arriving at his general intention, where his competency is in dispute, or where there is any imputation of fraud in the making of his will; for in such cases the state of his mind and affections is in itself a material fact, of which such statements are the fair exponents").

CANADA: 1908, Rose v. Bouck, 2 Alta. 263 (subsequent statements of the testator considered; distinguishing the improper use as confirming a will admittedly void for undue influence, etc.).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1891, Knox v. Knox, 95 Ala. 495, 503, 11 So. 125 ("all the facts and circumstances which tend to elucidate its [the testator's mental] condition, or to show the freedom of the will, or that it was unduly coerced and influenced at the particular time, although such facts and circumstances may have existed or occurred previous to the time of the execution of the will, are admissible"); 1898, Coghill v. Kennedy, 119 Ala. 641, 24 So. 459 ("Put them out of the house," and other expressions, admitted);

California: 1896, Calkins' Estate, 112 Cal. 296, 44 Pac. 577; 1905, Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252; 1910, Snowball's Estate, 157 Cal. 301, 107 Pac. 590 (following Arnold's Estate); 1912, Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal. App. 751, 124 Pac. 561; 1920, Re Carson's Est., Walker v. Carson, 184 Cal. 437, 194 Pac. 5 (undue influence in a bequest by wife to husband; her expressions revealing her belief in the legality of her marriage, admitted); 1921, Anderson's Estate, 185 Cal. 700, 198 Pac. 407 (undue influence; testatrix's declarations as to changing her mind, and as to making the will at an aunt's request, held inadmissible; declarations as to fear of the aunt's cruelty, admissible);

Columbia (Dist.): 1907, Kultz v. Jaeger, 29 D. C. 300 (undue influence by husband over wife; wife's statements as to relations with husband exhibiting fear of husband, excluded; following Throckmorton v. Holt, infra, n. 4);

Georgia: 1874, Dennis v. Weekes, 51 Ga. 24, 32 (admitting the following: "I have done something I ought not to have done; I have made my will and did not make it as I wanted; I know I did wrong, but I could not help it; Lord God Almighty, who ever heard of such a will?"; on the ground that "they tended to show that he was in a condition to be easily influenced"); 1896, Jones v. Grogan, 98 Ga. 552, 25 S. E. 590 (declarations "tending to show" that the testator was "satisfied with" the will, admissible; but not "declarations to the contrary"); 1905, Credille v. Credille, 123 Ga. 673, 51 S. E. 628 (declarations, the day after signing, that he had never made a will, and that if he had signed a certain will, he did not know what he was doing, admitted, with the above discriminations);

Illinois: 1895, Hill v. Bahrns, 158 Ill. 314, 318 41 N. E. 912; 1903, Dowie v. Driscoll, 203 Ill. 480, 68 N. E. 56; 1911, Wilkinson v. Service, 249 Ill. 146, 94 N. E. 50, semble; 1913, Kellan v. Kellan, 258 Ill. 256, 101 N. E. 614 (undue influence, exercised by L. K., a legatee; a postcard, written by L. K. to his sister, and reading, "Had aunt fix things somewhat Monday; cut Ed and Ellen off for one dollar, but they don't know it," was excluded; this shows how the rule suppresses good evidence); 1920, Blackhurst v. James, 293 Ill. 11, 127 N. E. 226 (proceedings for appointment of a conservator, admitted on the issue of undue influence, to explain the testator's discrimination in his bequests);

Iowa: 1869, Bates v. Bates, 27 Ia. 113; 1882, Re Hollingsworth's Will, 58 Ia. 527, 12 N. W. 590; 1883, Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62 Ia. 165, 17 N. W. 456; 1885, Parsons v. Parsons, 66 Ia. 757, 21 N. W. 570, 24 N. W. 564; 1887, Muir v. Miller, 72 Ia. 590, 34 N. W. 429; 1895, Goldthorp's Estate, 94 Ia. 336, 62 N. W. 845; 1905, Townsend's Estate, 128 Ia. 621, 105 N. W. 110 (that "the boys would not hear to his giving E. anything," held, "if competent of slight value"; the opinion might have made a more explicit ruling); 1904, Wiltsey's Will, 122 Ia. 422, 98 N. W. 294 (Muir v. Miller followed); 1907, Vannest v. Murphy, 135 Ia. 123, 112 N. W. 236; 1907, Kah's Estate, 136 Ia. 116, 113 N. W. 563; 1916, Crissick's

Will, 174 Ia. 397, 156 N. W. 415 (ruling obscure);
Kentucky: 1896, Kirkpatrick v. Jenkins, — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 830 (when accompanied by independent evidence); 1903, Wall v. Dimitt, 114 Ky. 923, 72 S. W. 300; 1904, Powers' Ex'r v. Powers, — Ky. —, 78 S. W. 152 (Wall v. Dimitt followed); 1910, Gillispie's Ex'r v. Gillispie, — Ky. —, 128 S. W. 1064;
Massachusetts: 1820, Somes v. Skinner, 16 Mass. 348, 360 (deed said to have been obtained by undue influence; transactions of the grantor with the grantee, before and after the time, admitted to show the existence of that influence and its probable continuance); 1885, Batchelder v. Batchelder, 139 Mass. 1, 29 N. E. 61 (undue influence by the testator's wife; their relations many years before, excluded in the trial Court's discretion);
Michigan: 1893, Haines v. Hayden, 95 Mich. 332, 346, 54 N. W. 911 (declarations after execution, as to the supposed illegitimacy of a child, admitted to show the state of mind as to that child then and at execution; "such declarations are admissible in any case where the fair inference from all the circumstances is that they truly represent the testator's state of mind at the time"); 1902, Zibble v. Zibble, 131 Mich. 655, 92 N. W. 348 ("she dingdongs at me from morning till night," held admissible to show "the effect of the alleged influence," but not to "establish such fact" of influence); 1908, O'Dell v. Goff, 153 Mich. 643, 117 N. W. 59; 1917, Fay's Estate, 197 Mich. 675, 164 N. W. 523;
Mississippi: 1921, Sanders v. Sanders, 126 Miss. 610, 89 So. 261 (undue influence; declarations that "he had not made the will he wanted to, but had been forced by his wife and his son Joe," etc., held admissible to evidence the testator's state of mind, but not to evidence the fact of force);
Missouri: 1897, Gordon v. Burris, 141 Mo. 602, 43 S. W. 642 (declarations that the devisees had worked upon the testatrix, excluded; but her weeping at the time of the declarations, admitted); 1903, Crowson v. Crowson, 172 Mo. 691, 72 S. W. 1065; 1908, Teckenbroeck v. McLaughlin, 209 Mo. 533, 108 S. W. 46 (prior cases examined; liberal and sensible opinion by Lamm, J.); 1916, Thomas v. Thomas, — Mo. —, 186 S. W. 993 (undue influence by creating false beliefs of the conduct of relatives);
Nebraska: 1897, Clark v. Turner, 50 Nebr. 290, 69 N. W. 843 (apparently sanctioning the indirect use to show the existence of a will; but not allowing them to suffice as sole evidence of contents);
New Jersey: 1883, Rusling v. Rusling, 36 N. J. Eq. 603 (quoted supra in the text);
New York: 1854, Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157 (Selden, J.: "The difference is certainly very obvious between receiving the declarations of the testator to prove a distinct external fact, such as duress or fraud, for instance, and as evidence merely of the mental condition of the testator"); 1912, Gick v. Sturnpf, 204 N. Y. 413, 97 N. E. 865 (undue influence; certain subsequent writings of the testatrix, excluded, as not illustrative of mental condition); 1912, Smith v. Keller, 205 N. Y. 39, 98 N. E. 214 (inadmissible "as affirmative statements of fraud"); 1922, Eno's Will, Surr. Ct., 192 N. Y. Suppl. 840 (testamentary capacity; range of conduct of testator held "improper," as bearing mainly upon undue influence, which was not in issue);
North Carolina: 1885, Macrae v. Malloy, 93 N. C. 159; 1920, Hinton's Will, 180 N. C. 206, 104 S. E. 341 (testimony to mental capacity, admissible, though involving testator's conversations on sundry matters);
Pennsylvania: 1821, Rambler v. Tryon, 7 S. & R. 93; 1889, Herster v. Herster, 122 Pa. 239, 16 Atl. 342; 1902, Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400, 53 Atl. 253 (declarations admitted to show "the mental weakness of the testatrix and that the will was procured by the undue influence of her son");
Tennessee: 1905, Hobson v. Moorman, 115 Tenn. 73, 90 S. W. 152 (cited infra, n. 4);
Texas: 1879, Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 80 (the issue was the genuineness of an offered will; Bonner, J.: "The declarations of [the testator], before and after the date of the proposed will, expressive of feelings of ill-will toward the beneficiaries, as were his feelings of kindness towards them, were properly admitted in evidence, . . . not so much as declarations disparaging a duly executed will, as evidence of an independent collateral fact — the state of feeling between the parties — and which would in some degree tend to prove the issue before the court"); 1914, Scott v. Townsend, 106 Tex. 322, 166 S. W. 1138 (that testator said his wife "had been after him to make a will," and "had always wanted him to make a will," excluded; but it seems strange that we can endure a system of trials which sets aside a verdict and remands a case for the exclusion of such evidence);
Vermont: 1853, Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 46;
West Virginia: 1869, Thompson v. Updegraff, 3 W. Va. 629, 636 (testator's declarations that devisees T. did not want him to give anything to certain grandchildren, admitted to show his condition of mind); 1918, Beamer v. Clayton, 82 W. Va. 580, 96 S. E. 969;
Wisconsin: 1897, Bryant v. Pierce, 95 Wis. 331, 70 N. W. 297 ("not evidence that extraneous and undue influence was actually exerted, but to prove or disprove the capacity of the testator to discover and resist importunities, flatteries, or other acts tending to undue influence").

Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. Fed. 171 (1812), a case often cited but of obscure import and little value, seems to belong here.

1883, DIXON, J., in Rusling v. Rusling, 36 N. J. Eq. 603, 607: "When undue influence is set up in impeachment of a will, the ground of invalidity to be established is that the conduct of others has so operated upon the testator's mind as to constrain him to execute an instrument to which of his free will he would not have assented. This involves two things: first, the conduct of those by whom the influence is said to have been exerted; second, the mental state of the testator, as produced by such conduct, which may require a disclosure of the strength of mind of the decedent and his testamentary purposes, both immediately before the conduct complained of and while subjected to its influence. In order to show the testator's mental state at any given time, his declarations at that time are competent, because the conditions of the mind are revealed to us only by its external manifestations, of which speech is one. Likewise, the state of mind at one time is competent evidence of its state at other times not too remote, because mental conditions have some degree of permanency. Hence in an inquiry respecting the testator's state of mind, before or pending the exertion of the alleged influence, his words, as well as his other behavior, may be shown for the purpose of bringing into view the mental condition which produced them, and, through that, the antecedent and subsequent conditions. To this extent his declarations have legal value. But for the purpose of proving matters not related to his existing mental state, the assertions of the testator are mere hearsay. They cannot be regarded as evidence of previous occurrences, unless they come within one of the recognized exceptions to the rule excluding hearsay testimony."

It is no doubt often difficult to distinguish between this legitimate use and the improper one noted in par. (1), supra; for example, when the utterance offered is "The will that I made was signed only to keep the peace with James." Such utterances will probably be received or rejected according to the kind of use of which they seem to the Court in the case in hand to be most susceptible:

1912, CHASE, J., in Smith v. Keller, 205 N. Y. 39, 98 N. E. 214: "Evidence of acts and conversations of a deceased, bearing upon her mental strength, is not incompetent simply because it bears upon some question other than that of the mental strength of the deceased. The difficulty in this case is that counsel for the plaintiff, taking advantage of a rule correctly stated by the Court, proceeded to call many witnesses, and from them to elicit testimony bearing in a very slight degree, if at all, on the question of the mental strength of the testatrix; but in that way he obtained a large number of declarations by her, subsequent to the date of the will, which were well calculated to influence the jury, and which doubtless did influence the jury, in determining the question submitted to it, as to whether the will was the free and voluntary act of the testatrix. . . . Questions to elicit the mental strength of a testator should be asked for that purpose and not for an incompetent and improper purpose. . . . Is it not perfectly clear that counsel for the plaintiff asked questions calling for particular conversations for the express purpose of getting before the jury statements of fact that might affect them in determining whether the will was the result of coercion and duress? Efforts to obtain from witnesses conversations, including improper and incompetent statements of fact, under the guise of showing the mental strength of a testatrix, should be and are condemned; and where, as in this case, such effort has been repeated and continuous, and the evidence so obtained is to a large extent relied upon to show undue influence, and is not a mere incident in the receipt of evidence for a proper purpose, it requires that the judgment should be reversed."

(b) Furthermore, the normality of the will's dispositions, with reference to the natural and uninfluenced desires of the testator, must be investigated.

That influence is "undue" implies in part that the testamentary disposition in controversy deviates from that which the testator under the influence of his ordinary inclinations would have made. If the tribunal can ascertain his normal tendencies and plans, a standard is found by which to test the dispositions in issue. If these harmonize with this normal standard, the charge of undue influence can have little or no support; if they diverge abnormally, there is then some inducement to examine further into the nature of the influence producing this divergence. Accordingly, to establish this normal tendency or inclination, the testator's condition of mind before and after the time in issue not only may be but must be examined; his state of affection or dislike to specific persons, and his general testamentary attitude towards them, will help to form the standard of his normal dispositions. For this purpose, his utterances indicating the state of his affections and intentions, and in particular his other testamentary acts or expressions, if any, whether prior or subsequent, may all be considered; the evidential principles already noted (par. (a), supra) sufficing equally for this purpose. This use of such evidence is also universally sanctioned: [4]

[4] Accord: ENGLAND: 1864, Quick v. Quick, 3 Sw. & Tr. 442, semble.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1901, Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. 474, semble (declarations indicating the testator's affections, admissible on an issue of capacity, when not too remote; opinion confused and useless; three judges dissenting);
Alabama: 1845, Couch v. Couch, 7 Ala. 524 (Ormond, J.: "The will itself being made in conformity to a fixed determination, entertained and expressed for years, is the strongest proof of her capacity"); 1849, Roberts v. Trawick, 17 Ala. 58 (quoted supra; this case, however, excluded facts showing the normal intentions to be different from the will; but this untenable distinction was repudiated in Hughes v. Hughes' Ex'r, quoted supra); 1853, Gilbert v. Gilbert, 22 Ala. 529, 533 (before and at the time of execution); 1859, Seale v. Chambliss, 35 Ala. 19, 22; 1900, Schieffelin v. Schieffelin, 127 Ala. 14, 28 So. 687;
Arkansas: 1905, Flowers v. Flowers, 74 Ark. 212, 85 S. W. (the provisions of an alleged will may be compared with his "fixed purposes and intentions," including declarations that he had made no will; but the opinion erroneously admits this on an issue of "mental capacity");
California: 1892, McDevitt's Estate, 95 Cal. 11, 30 Pac. 101 (the declarations must be fairly near the time of examination of the will); 1896, Calkins' Estate v. Calkins, 112 Cal. 396, 44 Pac. 577; 1904, McKenna's Estate, 143 Cal. 580, 77 Pac. 461 (conversations, on the issue of insanity, distinguished from the present question);
Delaware: 1838, Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harringt. 448, 457; 1838, Duffield v. Morris' Ex'r, 2 Harringt. 375, 381 (a former will, admitted on an issue of sanity, to show the normal state of purposes and affections);
Georgia: 1853, Williamson v. Nebers, 14 Ga. 311; 1900, Cato v. Hunt, 112 Ga. 139, 37 S. E. 183; Illinois: 1867, Roe v. Taylor, 45 Ill. 485, 488, semble; 1875, Rutherford v. Morris, 77 Ill. 421, semble; 1894, Taylor v. Pegram, 151 Ill. 106, 115, 37 N. E. 837 (declarations as to contents of former wills, admitted); 1895, Hill v. Bahrns, 158 Ill. 314, 318, 41 N. E. 912 (other testamentary intentions admissible, "where it appears that such disposition of his property by such prior will is approximately the same"); 1897, Harp v. Parr, 168 Ill. 459, 48 N. E. 113 (declarations as to an intention of disposition before execution, receivable to show normal intentions); 1899, Kaenders v. Montague, 180 Ill. 300, 54 N. E. 321 (prior statements, including revoked wills, as to testamentary plans, admitted to show normal intent and disprove undue influence, provided they are in harmony with the will in question; a distinction made to reconcile the cases before Harp v. Parr, but unsound in principle; compare Hughes v. Hughes' Ex'r, Ala.); 1894, Bevelot v. Lestrade, 153 Ill. 625, 631, 38 N. E. 1056 (declarations conflicting with the provisions of the will, not admitted); 1906, Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678 (declarations of testamentary plans, admitted so far as harmonious with the will, i. e. in rebuttal of the alleged undue influence; but not so far as they conflict with the will's provisions; like Kaenders v. Montague, but not citing it); 1906, Waters v. Waters, 222 Ill. 26, 78 N. E. 1 (rule of Kaenders v. Montague followed); 1907, Cheney v. Goldy, 225 Ill. 394, 80 N. E. 289 (rule of Compher v. Browning applied); 1908, Floto v. Floto, 233 Ill. 605, 84 N. E. 712 (same); 1908, Freund v. Becker, 235 Ill. 513, 85 N. E. 610 (rule of Kaenders v. Montague followed); 1910, Hurley v. Caldwell, 244 Ill. 448, 91 N. E. 654 (opinion unclear; Dowie v. Driscoll and Compher v. Browning cited); 1916, Lyman v. Kaul, 275 Ill. 11, 113 N. E. 944 (testator's declarations as to his intentions to dispose of his property, held admissible for the proponent, but not for the contestant following Kaenders v. Montague and Cheney v. Goldy); 1916, Pilstrand v. Swedish Methodist Church, 275 Ill. 46, 113 N. E. 958 (undue influence; that a former will did not make the contestant a beneficiary, held "not improper or at least not reversible error"; but there is no sound reason for regarding it as improper); 1919, McCune v. Reynolds, 288 Ill. 188, 123 N. E. 317 (undue influence; contents of a former variant will excluded, purporting to follow Roe v. Taylor); 1921, Noone v. Olchy, 297 Ill. 160, 130 N. E. 476 (unsound mind; testatrix' expression at former times, as to a devisee, of her "intention to see that she was taken care of," admitted);

Indiana: 1889, Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207, 216, 21 N. E. 911, 22 N. E. 990 (conduct of the testator showing his normal affections, admitted); 1893, Goodbar v. Lidikay, 136 Ind. 1, 8, 35 N. E. 691; 1905, Westfall v. Wait, 165 Ind. 353, 73 N. E. 1089 (Goodyear v. Lidikay, approved);
Iowa: 1880, Dye v. Young, 44 Ia. 435; 1899, Perkins' Est., 109 Ia. 216, 80 N. W. 335 (declarations of affection, etc., admitted; also statements as to advancements to omitted children, as showing the state of his mind); 1904, Selleck's Will, 125 Ia. 678, 101 N. W. 453 (terms of a prior will, admitted); 1905, Glass' Estate, 127 Ia. 646, 103 N. W. 1013 (a trust deed of three years before, admitted, on an issue of undue influence, as a "written declaration");
Kentucky: 1894, Barlow v. Waters, — Ky. —, 28 S. W. 785; 1896, Kirkpatrick v. Jenkins, — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 830;
Maryland: 1878, Griffith v. Diffenderffer, 50 Md. 482; 1920, Hutchins v. Hutchins, 135 Md. 401, 109 Atl. 121 (testamentary intentions, admitted to show "settled convictions of the testator");
Massachusetts: 1868, Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112, 122 (admissible "in proof of long cherished purposes, settled convictions, deeply rooted feelings, opinions, affections, or prejudices, or other intrinsic or enduring peculiarities of mind inconsistent with the dispositions made in the instrument attempted to be set up as the formal and deliberate expression of the testatrix's will"); 1905, Hagar v. Norton, 188 Mass. 47, 73 N. E. 1073 (transfer of stock, etc., under undue influence; the deceased transferor's declarations of intent as to the devolution of her property, admitted, following Shailer v. Bumstead);
Michigan: 1864, Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 488; 1894, Renaud v. Pageot, 102 Mich. 568, 61 N. W. 3; 1897, Bush v. Delano, 113 Mich. 321, 71 N. W. 628; 1904, Roberts v. Bidwell, 136 Mich. 191, 98 N. W. 1000 (Bush v. Delano followed); 1909, Loree's Estate, 158 Mich. 372, 122 N. W. 623 (former wills, etc.);
Mississippi: 1896, Sheehan v. Kearney, 82 Miss. 694, 21 So. 41 (to show the normality of his testamentary plans, declarations of intent to make a will and of having made a will were admitted; quoted supra); 1920, Moore v. Parks, 122 Miss. 301, 84 So. 230 (testatrix' statements as to leaving all her property to two grandchildren, etc., admitted on the issue of mental capacity);
Missouri: 1910, Lindsey v. Stephens, 229 Mo. 600, 129 S. W. 641 (former will, admitted); 1920, Yant v. Charles, — Mo. —, 219 S. W. 572 (undue influence and mental incapacity; a prior will, admitted); 1921, Kuehn v. Ritter, — Mo. —, 233 S. W. 5 (testator's memorandum prior to will, admitted to show the "state of his natural affections");
New Jersey: 1858, Pancoast v. Graham, 15 N. J. Eq. 309;
Pennsylvania: 1822, Irish v. Smith, 8 S. & R. 579 (former wills); 1854, Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Pa. 119 (former plans); 1861, Neel v. Potter, 40 Pa. 483 (previous declarations of a purpose to dispose as in the will were admitted; Thompson, J.: "It would strongly rebut the idea of any such influence on the mind of the testator when making his will, if it were shown that he made it in accordance with a long-cherished purpose"); 1867, Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. 216, 221 (similar; yet not consistently); 1898, Perret v. Perret, 184 Pa. 131, 39 Atl. 33 (former intentions, receivable to show normal wishes);
Rhode Island: 1889, Gardner v. Frieze, 16 R. I. 641, 19 Atl. 113 (declarations of a testatrix as to an intention to dispose in accordance with the will's terms were admitted; Durfee, C. J.: "When the will corresponds to the declarations, it excites much less apprehension of improper practices than when it differs from them");
South Carolina: 1897, Kaufman v. Caughman, 49 S. C. 159, 27 S. E. 16;
Tennessee: 1895, Peery v. Peery, 94 Tenn. 328, 29 S. W. 1; 1905, Hobson v. Moorman, 115 Tenn. 73, 90 S. W. 152 (declarations admissible to "illustrate the mental capacity of the testator and his susceptibility to extraneous influence, and also to show his feelings, intentions, and relations to his kindred and friends," but not "as substantive evidence of undue influence"; the opinion specially denies that ante-testamentary declarations are usable for the last-named purpose, i.e. that noticed supra, n. 1);
Texas: 1895, Brown v. Mitchell, 88 Tex. 350, 31 S. W. 621;
Utah: 1908, Young's Estate, 33 Utah 382, 94 Pac. 731 (former will, admitted); Vermont: 1862, Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398, 417 (affection for brothers and sisters,

1849, CHILTON, J., in Roberts v. Trawick, 17 Ala. 58: "This proof conduced to establish that the testator, many years previous to the execution of the will in controversy, had a fixed and settled purpose to make a will similar to the one he is alleged to have executed. It was then proper . . . [as tending to disprove that] the will was not the deliberate act of the deceased."

1858, STONE, J., in Hughes v. Hughes' Ex'r, 31 id. 524: "Is it not equally true, if a will be made which is variant from the testator's determination entertained and expressed for years, that this fact is admissible evidence against the capacity of the testator? If the conformity tend to establish the will, does not the non-comformity tend to impair its validity?"

1860, HINMAN, J., in Denison's Appeal, 29 Conn. 402: "Declarations and acts of kindness and affection towards a legatee . . . go to show that a legacy, otherwise inexplicable upon the ordinary motives of human conduct, is a natural and probable act and therefore a free and reasonable one. Of course it would seem to follow that contrary declarations and acts must have a contrary effect. . . . That such declarations might be made at so remote a period as to be entitled to little if any weight, unless succeeded by other acts or declarations, showing that the state of feeling that called them forth continued up to the time the will was executed, is undoubtedly true."

1879, BREWER, J., in Mooney v. Olsen, 22 Kan. 78: "Where, as in a case like this, the circumstances attending the execution raise a doubt as to the mental strength of the testatrix, evidence that the disposition of the property runs along the line of her established friendships and previously expressed intentions tends strongly against the idea of any undue influence, while evidence that it is contrary to such friendships and intentions makes in favor of improper influences."

1896, WHITFIELD, J., in Sheehan v. Kearney, 82 Miss. 694, 21 So. 41: "It may be that the true solution of the apparent confusion is this: That what such declarations are evidence of is, not in themselves alone that the testator did have the testamentary intentions he declared he had, for he may have wished to conceal his intentions, but that he did say he had the testamentary intentions testified to; and the jury are then to draw such inference as the whole evidence warrants, that they were or were not his real testamentary intentions at the time of making the declarations, from these declarations, as compared with those set forth in the will, and looking to the change or absence of change in his condition, family, property, state of feelings, affections, etc., between the time of making them and the will. . . . And if, from the whole evidence, they believe they were really as declared, at that time, an inference might legitimately be drawn that, when the subsequent will conformed to them, they had continued down to the making of the will, and, when the subsequent will did not conform to them, the testator had purposely misstated his intentions for some reason, or that he had changed his intentions, or that the will was not his will, but the product of undue influence."

In surveying these three distinctions, together with those already noticed for other kinds of post-testamentary declarations (ante, § 1736), one is impressed with the practical futility of attempting to enforce them strictly. It knowledge of a brother-legatee's intemperance, etc., admitted); 1866, Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122, 158 (prior wills drawn up but not executed, admitted);

West Virginia: 1881, McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 714, semble; 1888, Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493; 1907, Wallen v. Wallen, 107 W. Va. [131, 57 S. E. 596 (the several uses obscurely merged); Wisconsin: 1870, Jackman's Will, 26 Wis. 104, 122, 130 (declarations before and after making, receivable to show the state of his feelings and intentions in regard to a will).

Contra: in two early cases, not well considered, the evidence was rejected: 1819, Den v. Vancleve, 2 South. N. J. 589, 657; 1822, Stevens v. Vancleve, 4 Wash. C. C. 263; also in Muir v. Miller, 72 Ia. 585, 590, 34 N. W. 429 (1887), overlooking Dye v. Young, supra.

For the admissibility in general of a prior or subsequent condition, to evidence undue influence or insanity, see ante, § 233.

is doubtful if often they amount to anything more than quibbles which a Supreme Court may lay hold of for ordering a new trial where justice on the whole seems to demand it. It would seem more sensible to listen to all the utterances of a testator, without discrimination as to admissibility, and then to leave them to the jury with careful instructions how to use them. The doctrine of multiple admissibility (ante, § 13) almost always would justify this. If the jury are plainly acting upon their prejudices only, when the verdict is returned, the Court's control of new trials affords an ample safeguard.

§ 1739. Statements Showing Intelligent Execution. Where the question is raised whether the testator signed the will understandingly (usually in cases of alleged undue influence), the fact of a previous or subsequent understanding of its terms or of a satisfaction with them is relevant (ante, §§ 233, 242, 266) to show a comprehension of its terms at the time of execution; and subsequent ignorance or dissatisfaction could be used in the same way. The argument is equally applicable to the execution of deeds and other documents:[1]

1846, GREEN, J., in Patton v. Allison, 7 Humph. 335: "Previous declarations of a testator, in conformity to the will, often repeated and continuing up to near the time of its execution, all indicating the purpose which the contents of the will develope, is certainly in reason, as well as in authority, satisfactory evidence that the testator knew the contents of the will."

§ 1740. Statements as to Insanity. The utterances of a testator indicating circumstantially his present sanity or insanity are governed by no different principles from those applicable to evidence of insanity in other cases; and these principles have already been considered (ante, §§ 227–233). But a direct assertion by a testator that he was at a past time sane or insane stands on no better footing than any other hearsay assertion; it is not admissible under the present Exception, because it does not assert a present mental condition.[1]

§ 1739. [1] 1909, Thomas' Estate, 155 Cal. 488, 101 Pac. 798 (forged will; decedent's declarations as to his age and relationships, variant with the recitals of the will, admitted as evidence that the will was a forgery); 1868, Howe v. Howe, 99 Mass. 98 (subsequent mention and approval of a deed, admitted to show that it was understood at the time); 1894, Nelson's Will, 141 N. Y. 152, 157, 36 N. E. 3 (declarations after execution of a will, admitted to disprove ignorance of its terms); 1890, Maxwell v. Hill, 89 Tenn. 595, 15 S. W. 253 (the issue being whether the testatrix, an illiterate person, fully understood the will she signed, declarations at other times showing intentions similar to the terms of the will were admitted); 1898, Barney's Will, 70 Vt. 352, 40 Atl. 1027 (subsequent ignorance of the terms of the will, admitted to indicate undue influence); 1904, Wheelock's Will, 76 Vt. 235, 56 Atl. 1013 (testator's letters, showing knowledge of the will, admitted).

Contra: 1906, Lipphard v. Humphrey, 28 D. C. App. 355, 361 (the opinion oddly asserts that "the proposition is without any foundation either on principle or authority"); 1920, McFarland v. Bishop, 282 Mo. 534, 222 S. W. 143 (action by trustees under a second trust deed by G. revoking a prior trust deed of his made to defendants; issue as to G.'s mental capacity; declarations of G. before and after the first deed, concerning its contents, not admitted to show his understanding of its contents; ignoring the present principle).

§ 1740. [1] 1839, Norwood v. Marrow, 4 Dev. & B. 451. Contra: 1876, Ross v. McQuiston, 45 Ia. 147 (the declaration of a testator, when sane, that he had for 20 years been insane, was admitted, no special principle being named).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC XIV: SPONTANEOUS EXCLAMATIONS[1] (RES GESTÆ)

CHAPTER LVII.

A. GENERAL FORM OF THE EXCEPTION

§ 1745. Introductory; Res Gestæ; Discrimination between the Verbal Act Doctrine and the Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations. The exposition of this Exception is to be approached with a feeling akin to despair. There has been such a confounding of ideas, and such a profuse and indiscriminate use of the shibboleth 'res gestæ,' that it is perhaps impossible to disentangle the real basis of principle involved. On the one hand, to repeat without comment the often meaningless and unhelpful language of the Courts is to shirk the duty of the expositor of the law as it is, and to delay the day of clear notions that must inevitably come. On the other hand, to discriminate between the principles genuinely involved is to risk the reproach of representing as law that which the Courts do not concede. The expositor of the law can only endeavor to avoid impalement upon either horn of the dilemma; relying, in any event, upon the plain language of those Courts which have sought to recognize the Exception in its real character, and calling to mind

§ 1745. [1] The term "Spontaneous Exclamations," as a name for this Exception, has been employed in default of a better one. It has been judicially used in Lander v. People, 104 Ill. 256; Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 621; Dismukes v. State, 83 Ala. 289.

the frank concession of Chief Justice Beasley:[2] "I think I may safely say that there are few problems in the law of evidence more unsolved than what things are to be embraced in those occurrences that are designated in the law as the 'res gestæ.'"

To begin with, then, there are two distinct and legitimate principles; each in some situations applied to its proper material without doubt or confusion, but both occasionally confused, interchanged, and made to overlap in certain classes of cases. One of these principles establishes a real Exception to the Hearsay rule and sets certain limitations to the kinds of statements admissible under this Exception. The other principle does not establish an exception to the Hearsay rule, but merely defines those classes of utterances to which the rule is in its nature not applicable. The former principle admits certain statements because, though hearsay, they form a genuine Exception to the rule; the latter principle admits certain other utterances because they never came within the prohibition of the rule at all, and therefore do not need any Exception to sanction them. The confusion consists in applying the limitations of the one principle to cases calling only for the application of the other. The result has been partly to narrow needlessly the scope of certain kinds of evidence, partly to broaden loosely certain other kinds, and in general to deprive important distinctions of their true significance.

In this place, we are concerned only with the former principle, the genuine Exception to the Hearsay rule; and the explanation of the second principle, i. e. Verbal Acts, including the various senses of the term 'res gestæ,' may be reserved (post, §§ 1767–1797); the history of the term is there explained (post, § 1767). Some of the limitations of the present Exception are based upon a mistaken borrowing of the Verbal Act doctrine (post, §§ 1772–1786), and therefore an acquaintance with those limitations will be assumed; but it is necessary to expound the Exception separately here in its proper place.

§ 1746. The Present Cases a Genuine Exception to the Hearsay Rule. The problem is this: Certain kinds of statements are admissible, by universal concession, and without the help of the preceding Exceptions. If, then, these admissible statements cannot be accounted for as being without the prohibition of the Hearsay rule (i. e. under the principle of the next Chapter), they must plainly constitute a separate and additional Exception to the rule. It cannot matter what names or phrases the Courts chance to use,—whether they disguise the ruling under the phrase 'res gestæ' or otherwise. The material thing is what the Courts actually do, not what names they use; and if they actually do admit a class of assertions to which the Hearsay rule is applicable, then the truth is that a distinct Exception to it is recognized.

[2] In Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. L. 536. But the best thing ever said of the problem is one of Chief Justice Bleckley's, in Cox v. State, 64 Ga. 374, 410 (1879): "The difficulty of formulating a description of the 'res gestæ' which will serve for all cases seems insurmountable. To make the attempt is something like trying to execute a portrait which shall enable the possessor to recognize every member of a numerous family."

The typical case presented is a statement or exclamation, by a participant, immediately after an injury, declaring the circumstances of the injury, or by a person present at an affray, a railroad collision, or other exciting occasion, asserting the circumstances of it as observed by him. Now this kind of statement cannot ordinarily be accounted for as one to which the prohibition of the Hearsay rule is not applicable. The Hearsay rule, as already noted (ante, §§ 1361, 1362), forbids the use of an assertion, made out of court, as testimony to the truth of the fact asserted. It follows that utterances not thus used testimonially as assertions to prove the truth of the fact asserted are without the scope of the prohibition and are receivable in spite of the Hearsay rule. Such utterances may be of three different sorts (more fully examined in the next chapter): (1) words the utterance of which is a fact forming part of the issue (e. g. the words of a contract or a slander); (2) words uttered at the time of doing a material equivocal act, and forming part of the total conduct which determines the legal significance of the act (e. g. words of ownership-claim accompanying the occupation of land); and (3) words used circumstantially as indirect evidence (e. g. words of notification, as evidence that the person notified received knowledge). In all these three classes the utterances are offered, not as assertions to prove the truth of the fact asserted, but irrespective of their truth. Whenever, therefore, an utterance is used as testimony that the fact asserted in it did occur as asserted, i. e. on the credit of the speaker as a credible person, it is being used testimonially, and is within the prohibition of the Hearsay rule.

Now this testimonial use is precisely the use that is made of the present class of statements. On the one hand, they cannot be accounted for under any of the three classes above mentioned to which the Hearsay rule does not apply. They clearly do not fall within either the first or the third class. They do not fall within the second class, because in that class there is by hypothesis a material equivocal act which needs to be colored and completed in legal significance by the words of the actor accompanying it — for example, the occupation of land, the handing over of money, the tearing of a will. That fundamental requisite is lacking in this class of cases. On the other hand, they clearly do involve the testimonial use of the assertion to prove the truth of the fact asserted,— for example, when the injured person declares who assaulted him or whether the locomotive bell was rung, or when the bystander at an affray exclaims that the defendant shot first. Such statements are genuine instances of using a hearsay assertion testimonially; i. e. we believe that Doe shot the pistol, or that the bell was rung, because the declarant so asserts,—which is essentially the feature of all human testimony (ante, § 25).[1]

There was a time when the state of the judicial precedents was such that no established Exception of this tenor could yet be said to exist. But now, and for two generations past, it does exist, under one or another guise of phraseology. Since in the law, then, it does exist — since the Courts actually do admit a class of statements to which the prohibition of the Hearsay rule applies — since we must shape our treatment of the law of Evidence by what the Courts do, and not by what they say, the time seems to have come to call these doings by their true name, — in other words, to recognize the existence of this Exception to the Hearsay rule. The limits of the Exception may be elusive and the practice in different courts may vary. But that the core and substance of such an Exception is universally accepted cannot be open to doubt.

§ 1746. [1] This aspect is pointed out lucidly by Cullen, J., in Patterson v. Hochster (1899), 38 N. Y. App. Div. 398, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 467. So also: 1908, People v. Del Vermo, 192 N. Y. 470, 85 N. E. 690 (approving the above theory of the exception).

Historically, this conscious recognition appears in England before the end of the 1700s, beginning with Thompson v. Trevanion and Aveson v. Kinnaird; though it is only within the last two generations that it is firmly and unquestionably established. Such is, however, the inherent congruity of the doctrine that we are still able to resort to the earliest precedent for a succinct and accurate statement of the principle.

§ 1747. (I) General Principle of the Exception. This general principle is based on the experience that, under certain external circumstances of physical shock, a stress of nervous excitement may be produced which stills the reflective faculties and removes their control, so that the utterance which then occurs is a spontaneous and sincere response to the actual sensations and perceptions already produced by the external shock. Since this utterance is made under the immediate and uncontrolled domination of the senses, and during the brief period when considerations of self-interest could not have been brought fully to bear by reasoned reflection, the utterance may be taken as particularly trustworthy (or, at least, as lacking the usual grounds of untrustworthiness), and thus as expressing the real tenor of the speaker's belief as to the facts just observed by him; and may therefore be received as testimony to those facts.[1] The ordinary situation presenting these conditions is an affray or a railroad accident. But the principle itself is a broad one.

Its phrasings differ widely in different Courts; but there is in the judicial opinion of to-day something of an approach to uniformity. In essence, the language of Lord Holt, in Thompson v. Trevanion, still serves to indicate clearly and concisely the principle of the Exception. In the following passages, the most satisfactory expositions are those of Mr. Justice Barrows, in State v. Wagner, Mr. Justice Lacombe, in U. S. v. King, and Chief Justice Bleckley, in Insurance Co. v. Sheppard:

1693, Thompson v. Trevanion, Skinner 402; action for assault and battery upon the wife of the plaintiff. Lord HOLT "allowed that what the wife said immediate upon the § 1747. [1] Accord: 1916, Monroe, C. J., in State v. McLaughlin, 138 La. 958, 70 So. 925 (citing the above text with approval).

The theory is thus somewhat analogous to that of dying declarations, as pointed out in State v. Wagner, quoted post.

For the point of view of psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), especially § 235.

hurt received, and before that she had time to devise or contrive anything for her own advantage, might be given in evidence."

1805, Aveson v. Kinnaird, 6 East 193. Counsel: "Declarations by the wife upon her elopement from her husband, accusing him of misconduct, could not be given in evidence against him in an action against the adulterer." ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J.: "It is not so clear that her declarations made at the time would not be evidence under any circumstances. If she declared at the time that she fled from immediate terror of personal violence from the husband, I should admit the evidence; though not if it were a collateral declaration of some matter which happened at another time"; citing Thompson v. Trevanion.

1834, R. v. Foster, 6 C. & P. 325; manslaughter by driving a cabriolet over a person; a statement made by the deceased, to one who did not see the accident but immediately afterward heard the deceased groan and went up and asked what was the matter, was admitted. PARK, J.: "It was the best possible testimony that under the circumstances can be adduced to show what it was that had knocked the deceased down"; citing Aveson v. Kinnaird.

1839, GIBSON, C. J., in Reed v. Dick, 8 Watts 481 (admitting the remarks of a crew as to the soundness of a cable while paying it out in a storm): "The objection to the opinion of the crew in consultation with the master was not for its supposed incompetence in the abstract, but for the want of an attestation of it by the oaths of those who had expressed it. . . . Seamen are expert in nautical affairs, and their judgment in matters of opinion, touching the working and preservation of a ship, may be as satisfactorily attested by their acts when impelled by motives of duty and self-preservation as if it were given under the sanction of an oath. . . . Certainly their opinions cannot be better manifested by their oaths than they are by their acts, which go to make up the usages of the port."

1852, NISBET, J., in Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 621: "They derive their credibility not from his veracity, but from their relation to the transaction out of which they spring. Made at the same time with the main fact, evoked by it without premeditation, and for that reason explanatory of the mind and purpose of the actor as it is involved in that fact, they are presumed to be as veritable, as reliable, as the fact itself, and would derive no enhancement of their credibility from the oath of the declarant. Such I take to be the philosophy of 'res gestæ,' so far as constituted of declarations. . . . [In this case] his coming to where the witness was seems to have been voluntary and the exclamation spontaneous. . . . The short period of time that had intervened, and the agitated manner of the prisoner, forbid the idea of deliberate design. . . . His distressed and agitated appearance when he reached the witness exhibit a state of mind incompatible with such a belief."

1855, LUMPKIN, J., in Hart v. Powell, 18 Ga. 639 (the declarations here related to a conflict between the declarant and a slave, and were made after the affray): "If the declarations derive a degree of credit from their connection with the surrounding circumstances, and independently of any credit to be attached to the speaker, they should, in such cases, be admitted. . . . Were not the jury authorized to believe that they were made without premeditation or artifice, and without a view to the consequences? We think so unquestionably. . . . To preclude this proof would be to shut out the party's only defence."

1869, SWAYNE, J., in Insurance Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 397 (here the deceased described his alleged injury shortly after its occurrence): "The 'res gestæ' are statements of the cause made by the assured almost contemporaneously with its occurrence and those relating to the consequences made while the latter subsisted and were in progress. . . . Rightly guarded in its practical application, there is no principle in the law of evidence more safe in its results. . . . In the ordinary concerns of life, no one would doubt the truth of these declarations, or hesitate to regard them, uncontradicted, as conclusive. Their probative force would not be questioned." [2]

1873, BARROWS, J., in State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 195: "We think that the precise ground upon which their admission [evidence of outcries naming an assailant] should be placed in a case like this is substantially the same as that upon which dying declarations are admissible [i. e. necessity and sincerity.] . . . No one can doubt that the exclamations of these two women embodied the truth as it appeared to each, and that the cries of alarm and supplication uttered by any and all human beings under similar circumstances would express their perceptions of existing facts as truly as if backed by the sanction of all the oaths known in Christendom. . . . We merely say that, whatever force is given to dying declarations as the utterances of those who on account of their peculiar situation may be relied on to tell the exact truth as it appears to them, must needs be accorded also to the exclamations of mortal terror caused by a deadly assault. . . . To reject the evidence afforded by the agonized entreaties of one standing face to face with death in the person of a murderer with an uplifted weapon, when we would accept the account of the affair afterwards given by the enfeebled victim, with perceptions and recollections darkened and dimmed by the mists and shadows of approaching dissolution, would be, we think, but a bad sample of 'the perfection of human reason.'"

1882, HARGIS, C. J., in McLeod v. Ginther's Adm'r, 80 Ky. 405: "The declarations of Fish were made within a few seconds after the casualty. . . . He had no time to contrive or devise a falsehood by which to exonerate himself from blame, and his declaration was so connected with the circumstances which form a part of this case, as to give it importance in determining the fact that he and his engineer had run the engine in the honest belief that they had until 10.10 o'clock to reach Beard's Station. . . . It was made prior to any knowledge that he . . . had misconstrued the dispatch. . . . Therefore, if we ignore the credit to which Fish may have been entitled as a truthful man, his declaration, made under the circumstances, impresses the mind with confidence in its truth, and is entitled to be given its weight as any other fact going to make up the whole transaction."

1886, BATTLE, J., in Little Rock R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 343, 3 S. W. 50: "The statement of Leverett was made immediately after he was run over. . . . It was an emanation of the act in question and so connected with the cause of his injuries as to preclude any idea that it was the product of calculated policy. Aside from any credit due Leverett for veracity, the circumstances immediately preceding and connected with his statement impress the mind with confidence in its truth."

1887, SOMERVILLE, J., in Dismukes v. State, 83 Ala. 289, 3 So. 671: "The exclamation of Miss Harris, [on running from her room in her night-clothes, that she saw some one at the window,] . . . being uttered so near the scene of the transaction, and being apparently spontaneous in its nature, . . . was free from all suspicion of device, premeditation, or afterthought," and was therefore properly admitted.

1888, LACOMBE, J., in U. S. v. King, 34 Fed. 314 (charging the jury): "There is a principle in the law of evidence which is known as 'res gestæ'; that is, the declarations of an individual made at the moment of a particular occurrence, when the circumstances are such that we may assume that his mind is controlled by the event, may be received in evidence, because they are supposed to be expressions involuntarily forced out of him by the particular event, and thus have an element of truthfulness they might otherwise not have. . . . But you are not to give any more weight to a declaration thus made, or any weight at all, unless you are satisfied that it was made at a time when it was forced out as the utterance of a truth, forced out against his will or without his will, and at a period of time so closely connected with the transaction that there has been no opportunity for subsequent reflection or determination as to what it might or might not be wise for him to say."

[2] This language has been in substance adopted in Brownell v. R. Co., 47 Mo. 246, Wagner, J. (1871), and in Harriman v. Stowe, 57 id. 93, Wagner, J. (1874), two cases much cited and perhaps to be termed leading cases.

1890, BLECKLEY, C. J., in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 776, 12 S. E. 18: "There must be no fair opportunity for the will of the speaker to mould or modify them. His will must have become and remained dormant, so far as any deliberation in concocting matter for speech or selecting words is concerned. Moreover, his speech, besides being in the present time of the transaction, must be in the presence of it in respect to space. He must be on or near the scene of action or of some material part of the action. His declarations must be the utterance of human nature, of the 'genus homo,' rather than of the individual. Only an oath can guarantee individual veracity. But spontaneous impulse may be sufficient sanction for the speech of man as such, — man, distinguished from this or that particular man. True, the verbal deliverance in each instance is that of an individual person. But if the state of his mind be such that his individuality is for the time being suppressed and silenced, so that he utters the voice of humanity rather than of himself, what he says is regarded by the law as in some degree trustworthy."

§ 1748. The Necessity Principle; Death, Absence, etc., need not be shown. It has already been noticed (ante, § 1421) that through the Exceptions to the Hearsay rule run two general principles, one of which is that some necessity shall exist for resorting to hearsay statements. This Necessity, for the first six Exceptions, consists in the impossibility of obtaining from that person testimony on the stand; for the seventh it consists in the general scantiness of other evidence on the same subject; for the eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh, in the practical inconvenience of requiring the person's attendance upon the stand; and, for the thirteenth, in the superior trustworthiness of his extrajudicial statements as creating a necessity or at least a desirability of resorting to them for unbiassed testimony. It is this last reason that suffices equally for the present Exception. The extrajudicial assertion being better than is likely to be obtained from the same person upon the stand, a necessity or expediency arises for resorting to it. This reason, though rarely noted by the Courts, appears clearly to be the sufficient one.[1] The rarity of its mention may be ascribed to the influence of the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1772), which has concealed the analogy of the other exceptions and has thus usually obviated argument as to the propriety of showing a specific necessity for the hearsay.

It follows that the death, absence, or other unavailability of the declarant need never be shown under this Exception, — a proposition never disputed.

§ 1749. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness: Spontaneousness. The second principle (ante, § 1422) running through all the Exceptions is that the statement must have been made under circumstances calculated to give some special trustworthiness to it, and thus to justify us in exempting

§ 1748. [1] The following passages illustrate its recognition: Scates, C. J., in Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 Ill. 568 ("It is impossible for a witness to convey such scenes to the mind and their effect and influence upon it"); Lumpkin, J., in Hart v. Powell, 18 Ga. 639, supra ("To preclude this proof would be to shut out the party's only defence"); Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Ashcraft, 48 Ala. 31 ("more convincing than the testimony of the persons themselves some time after the occurrence"); and particularly the opinion of Barrows, J., quoted supra, in State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 195; so also Staples, J., in Jordan Case, Gratt. Va. 945.

it from the ordinary test of cross-examination on the stand. This principle is represented, in the present Exception, by the phrase, often repeated,[1] that the statement must from the circumstances "derive a degree of credit independently of the declaration," i. e. other than the faith to be given to an ordinary extrajudicial assertion. This circumstantial guarantee here consists in the consideration, already noted (ante, § 1747), that in the stress of nervous excitement the reflective faculties may be stilled and the utterance may become the unreflecting and sincere expression of one's actual impressions and belief. The utterance, it is commonly said, must be "spontaneous," "natural," "impulsive," "instinctive," "generated by an excited feeling which extends without let or break-down from the moment of the event they illustrate." [2]

What practical limitations does this principle place upon the conditions under which such statements become admissible? Before attempting to generalize, typical passages applying the principle may be compared:

1693, Thompson v. Trevanion, Skinner 402; assault and battery upon a wife; Lord HOLT admitted what the wife said "immediate upon the hurt received, and before that she had time to devise or contrive anything for her own advantage."

1845, DUNCAN, J., in Hill's Case, 2 Gratt. 604: "And why are not [the decedent's] declarations as to the commission of the act [a part of the 'res gesta']? The [supposed] reason is that he may have fabricated or made up a story. But on the one hand, if under the circumstances of the case he could not have had time to make up a story, and the declarations were made when the 'lis mota' did not exist, then they may be received as part of the 'res gesta.' On the other hand, if made after time sufficient had been allowed to fabricate a story, or 'lis mota' may be supposed to exist, they are not to be considered as part of the 'res gesta.' . . . 'A priori' a stab in the heart would instantaneously suspend the powers of reflection. . . . All the time, then, from receiving the stab until he revived from his fit of fainting he was clearly not in a condition to arrange his ideas and fabricate a story. . . . All that is necessary . . . to make the declaration part of the 'res gesta' is that it should be made recently after the injury and before he had time to make up a story 'or devise anything for his own advantage.'"

1847, THACHER, J., in Scaggs v. State, 8 Sm. & M. 724: "Declarations are admitted . . . only upon the presumption that they elucidate the facts with which they are connected, having been made without premeditation or artifice and without a view to the consequences. . . . It was reasonable to presume that he had premeditated his explanation of its cause [blood upon his hands] when it was also shown that he was half a mile from the spot where the crime was alleged to have been committed and had sufficient time to determine upon the explanation he would give concerning the circumstance. The explanation . . . was not of that impulsive character which distinguishes declarations at the time of the transaction."

1869, LEWIS, C. J., in State v. Ah Loi, 5 Nev. 101: "Undoubtedly such statements should be received with great caution, and only when they are made so recently after the injury is received and under such circumstances as to place it beyond all doubt that they are not made from design or for the purpose of manufacturing evidence. Hence, from the very nature of the thing, very much must be left to the discretion of the presiding judge."

1884, EARL, J., in Waldele v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 274: "This [present piece of] evidence cannot be received upon the theory that there is a very strong probability that the declarations made by the intestate were true. . . . Declarations which are received as part of § 1749. [1] Apparently first used by Upham, J., in Hadley v. Carter, 8 N. H. 42 (1835).

[2] For these phrasings, see the ensuing quotations.

the 'res gesta' are to some extent a departure from or an exception to the general rule [requiring confrontation, cross-examination, and oath]; and when they are so far separated from the act which they alleged to characterize that they are not part of that act or interwoven into it by the surrounding circumstances so as to receive credit from it and from the surrounding circumstances, they are no better than any other unsworn statements made under any other circumstances. . . . [In this case, made thirty minutes after the injury,] they are purely narrative, giving an account of a transaction not partly past, but wholly past and completed. They depend for their truth wholly upon the accuracy and reliability of the deceased and the veracity of the witness who testified to them."

1884, STAYTON, J., in Galveston v. Barbour, 62 Tex. 176 (declarations being offered of a child interrogated by the father on the day after being injured): "Too great a time elapsed; the statements and acts of the son were not the natural utterances of a simple, truthful child prompted by the suffering endured at the time through the injury; there was too much calculation and method on the part of the father. . . . It was simply hearsay, with no feature to relieve it from the operation of the rule. . . . [Then, of other declarations,] the declarations made to the mother, by the child, were of a different character; he came home immediately after he had received the injury, crying, and smarting with the pain resulting from it, and, childlike and naturally, made known to her how he had been hurt."

1885, COOLEY, C. J., in Merkle v. Bennington, 58 Mich. 163, 24 N. W. 776: "These declarations were not made on the spot and spontaneously. . . . One very good reason for excluding such narratives is that the party has had time to deliberate and shape them in his own interest and may be under strong temptation to do so. . . . In this case . . . it was for his interest, if he could do so, to fix the responsibility for the injury upon the township. . . . The longer the time allowed for deliberation, the greater would be the danger that his utterances would be unreliable. But after such lapse of time as appeared in this case the declarations cannot with any propriety be considered part of the 'res gestæ.'"

1886, FIELD, J., in Vicksburg R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 7 Sup. 118, 172: "As the declaration was made between ten and thirty minutes after the accident, we may well conclude that it was made in sight of the wrecked train, and in presence of the injured parties, and whilst surrounded by excited passengers. . . . The modern doctrine has relaxed the ancient rule that declarations, to be admissible as part of the 'res gestæ,' must be strictly contemporaneous with the main transaction. It now allows evidence of them, when they appear to have been made under the immediate influence of the principal transaction, and are so connected with it as to characterize or explain it. . . . An accident happening to a railway train, by which a car is wrecked, would naturally lead to a great deal of excitement among the passengers on the train, and the character and cause of the accident would be the subject of the explanation for a considerable time afterwards by persons connected with the train. . . . The admissibility of a declaration, in connection with evidence of the principal fact, . . . must be determined by the judge according to the degree of its relation to that fact, and in the exercise of a sound discretion; it being extremely difficult, if not impossible, to bring this class of cases within the limits of a more particular description."

1888, BLACK, J., in Leahy v. R. Co., 97 Mo. 172, 10 S. W. 58: "The better reasoning is that the declaration, to be a part of the 'res gestæ,' need not be coincident in point of time with the main fact to be proved. It is enough that the two are so clearly connected that the declaration can, in the ordinary course of affairs, be said to be the spontaneous explanation of the real cause." [3]

[3] Compare also the following, in which the idea of spontaneity is emphasized: 1893, Ryan, C., in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Baier, 37 Nebr. 235, 245, 55 N. W. 913 (the declaration must be "a spontaneous explanation of the real cause"); 1900, Baker, C. J., in Green v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637 (the declarant must "appear to be the spontaneous spokesman of the act and not the deliberate utterer of an afterthought").

§ 1750. Same: Requirements: (a) a Startling Occasion; (b) a Statement made before Time to fabricate; (c) Relating to the Circumstances of the Occurrence. From the judicial expositions the following limitations, and these only, may legitimately be deduced:

(a) Nature of the occasion. There must be some shock, startling enough to produce this nervous excitement and render the utterance spontaneous and unreflecting. Such a limitation does not appear to be in terms expressly required in the judicial definitions; but it is a necessary implication from their language. Moreover, in practically all of the instances — involving statements after corporal injury by violence — such conditions are in fact present, and this requirement is fulfilled.

There is, however, in some Courts, a limitation which practically takes the place of the present one, — the limitation that there must be a "main" or "principal fact." This limitation (noticed post, § 1753) is mistakenly borrowed from the Verbal Act doctrine, and improperly enlarges the scope of the present Exception.

(b) Time of the utterance. The utterance must have been before there has been time to contrive and misrepresent, i. e. while the nervous excitement may be supposed still to dominate and the reflective powers to be yet in abeyance. This limitation is in practice the subject of most of the rulings.

It is to be observed that the statements need not be strictly contemporaneous with the exciting cause; they may be subsequent to it, provided there has not been time for the exciting influence to lose its sway and to be dissipated. The fallacy, formerly entertained by a few Courts, that the utterance must be strictly contemporaneous (post, § 1756), owes its origin to a mistaken application of the Verbal Act doctrine:

1852, NISBET, J., in Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 626: "Where the books say, when this Court has said, that the declarations must be contemporaneous with the act, . . . [it is a question] which must depend upon the application of the principle upon which the rule is founded. . . . If the declarations appear to spring out of the transaction, if they elucidate it, if they are voluntary and spontaneous, and if they are made at a time so near to it as reasonably to preclude the idea of deliberate design, then they are to be regarded as contemporaneous." [1]

1884, SMITH, J., in Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 104: "Nor need any such declarations be strictly coincident as to time, if they are generated by an excited feeling which extends without break or let-down from the moment of the event they illustrate."

1889, STINESS, J., in State v. Murphy, 16 R. I. 528, 17 Atl. 998: "The second statement . . . was later in time by several minutes; but we do not think this is decisive, since the controlling element of admissibility is not the interval of time, but the real and illustrative connection with the thing done, in which the interval of time is a factor. . . . That which is recognized by common experience as the instinctive outcome of an act is for this reason deemed to be a part of it, whether the time of expression be five or fifteen minutes after."

1890, BLECKLEY, C. J., in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 775, 776, 12 S. E.

§ 1750. [1] The language of this opinion has been often reproduced, in one form or another; examples of almost exact reproductions are found in Landy v. Humphries, 35 Ala. 624 (1860); People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 49 (1868).

18: "What the law altogether distrusts is not after-speech but after-thought. . . . That the declarations shall be or appear to be spontaneous is indispensable, and it is for this reason alone that they are required to be speedy." [2]

Furthermore, there can be no definite and fixed limit of time. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances:

1891, PARKER, J., in Kennedy v. R. Co., 130 N. Y. 656, 29 N. E. 141: "There is no imaginary line somewhere between a few hours and a few days or a few weeks, on one side of which declarations in favor of a party are admissible in evidence, while on the other they are inadmissible. Unless such complaints form a part of the 'res gestæ' they are inadmissible; and if they are so far detached from the occurrence as to admit of the deliberate design and be the product of a calculating policy on the part of the actors, then they cannot be regarded as a part of the 'res gestæ.'"

1902, SHELBY, J., in Jack v. Mutual R. F. Life Ass'n, 51 C. C. A. 36, 113 Fed. 49 (admitting statements made by an insured after being poisoned and just before his death): "While it is said that the declarations must be contemporaneous with the main fact, no rule can be formulated by which to determine how near, in point of time, they must be. No two cases are exactly alike, and the determination of this question is always inseparable from the circumstances of the case at bar. The transaction in question may be such that the 'res gestæ' would extend over a day, or a week, or a month. In this case the fatal capsule was handed to the victim in the afternoon, but not taken till bedtime. If Lipscomb, instead of giving him the capsule and prescription on the streets in the afternoon, had called at his house, and given it to him, and left a minute before it was swallowed, the declarations would have been brought nearer in point of time to the moment that Lipscomb had handed Stewart the medicine; but we cannot see that the rule as to the admissibility of Stewart's declarations would have been different. If one threw a bomb, which immediately exploded, and killed another, the declaration of the dying man as to who threw it would be a part of the 'res gestæ.' If the assailant, instead of throwing the bomb, had placed it concealed, and fixed to explode in an hour or in ten hours, when it exploded, the involuntary exclamation of the fatally wounded man, naming the person who had placed the bomb near him, would be, we think, a part of the 'res gestæ.' So we do not think that these objections gain any weight from the length of time which elapsed between Lipscomb's act of handing the capsule to Stewart and his declarations."

1920, BAKER, J., in Solice v. State, 21 Ariz. 592, 193 Pac. 19 (quoting with approval the text below): "Were the statements a part of the 'res gestæ'? We have examined a large number of authorities upon the abstract propositions involved in the rules on which testimony is received or not received as part of the 'res gestæ.' These authorities satisfy us that the close connection in time between the statements or declaration and the act of which it is said to be a part is an element for consideration; that being close in point of time is not, however, all of the basis for receiving such evidence, and that the ultimate test is spontaneity or instinctiveness and logical relation to the main event; that the tendency of the modern cases is to be liberal in the reception of such testimony."

Since the application of the principle thus depends entirely on the circumstances of each case,[3] it is therefore impossible to regard

[2] See similar passages quoted supra, and ante, § 1749, from Vicksburg R. Co. v. O'Brien, State v. Ah Loi, Mitchum v. State, and Hill's Case; State v. Ramsey, 48 La. An. 1407, 20 So. 904; 1906, Christopherson v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 135 Ia. 409, 109 N. W. 1077; 1904, State v. Foley, 113 La. 52, 36 So. 885; 1908, People v. Del Vermo, 192 N. Y. 470, 85 N.E. 690 (approving the above theory of the exception).

[3] No attempt will here be made to state in detail the rulings of the various Courts upon cases wholly unavailable as precedents. To the cases quoted supra, add the following:

ENGLAND: 1859, The Schwalbe, Swab. 521

rulings upon this limitation as having in strictness the force of precedents. To argue from one case to another on this question of

(in a collision, evidence was admitted that, as the defendant steamer was backing clear of the plaintiff brig, the pilot of the steamer, who was on the bridge, stamped his foot and said: "The damned helm is still a-starboard"); 1912, Thomson's Case, 7 Cr. App. 276 (abortion on Mar. 21; the woman's statement on Mar. 28 that she had done it herself, excluded).

IRELAND: 1854, R. v. Lundy, 6 Cox Cr. 477 (deceased's statements on the arrival of help, admitted).

CANADA: Dom. 1907, Gilbert v. The King, 38 Can. Sup. 284 (murder; deceased's statement when fleeing from the defendant); N. Br. 1883, Small v. Belyea, 24 N. Br. 16 (master of a vessel, at the time of grounding); 1891, Rainnie v. St. John C. R. Co., 31 N. Br. 553 (street car driver); N. W. Terr. 1905, R. v. Gilbert, 6 N. W. Terr. 396 (murder); N. Sc. 1920, R. v. Peel, No. 1, 60 D. L. R. 469, N. Sc. (arson); Ont. 1901, Armstrong v. Canada, A. R. Co., 2 Ont. L. R. 219 (railway injury); 1903, Garner v. Stamford, 7 Ont. L. R. 50 (highway injury).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1873, Newton v. Ins. Co., 2 Dill. 154; 1894, Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Ashley, 14 C. C. A. 368, 67 Fed. 209; 1895, North American Acc. Ass'n v. Woodson, 12 C. C. A. 392, 64 Fed. 689; 1896, National Masonic Acc. Ass'n v. Shryock, 20 C. C. A. 3, 73 Fed. 774, 776 (by the deceased, after falling on the sidewalk); 1896, Gowen v. Bush, 22 C. C. A. 196, 76 Fed. 349 (by one injured in a mine, when taken out, three-quarters of an hour afterwards); 1896, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Greenthal, 23 C. C. A. 100, 77 Fed. 150 (conductor of a train); 1897, Cross L. L. Co. v. Joyce, 28 C. C. A. 250, 83 Fed. 989 (injured person's remark, immediately after the injury); 1900, Travelers' Protective Ass'n v. West, 42 C. C. A. 284, 102 Fed. 226 (statements after an injury); 1902, Westall v. Osborne, 53 C. C. A. 74, 115 Fed. 282 (fellow-employees on a vessel); 1903, Marande v. R. Co., 59 C. C. A. 562, 124 Fed. 42 (fire); 1904, Guild v. Pringle, 64 C. C. A. 621, 130 Fed. 419, 422 (person injured in the highway); 1911, American Mfg. Co. v. Bigelow, 110 C. C. A. 77, 188 Fed. 34 (superintendent's statement to injured employee); 1918, Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 2d C. C. A. 255 Fed. 483 (accident insurance);

Alabama: 1867, Hall v. State, 40 Ala. 698, 700, 706 (accused's statements after a homicide); 1875, Wesley v. State, 52 Ala. 187; 1882, Alabama, G. S. R. Co. v. Hawk, 72 Ala. 112; 1890, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hammond, 93 Ala. 185, 9 So. 577; 1898, Burton v. State, 118 Ala. 109, 23 So. 729; 1899, Bankhead v. State, 124 Ala. 14, 26 So. 979 (affray); 1901, Hall v. State, 130 Ala. 45, 30 So. 422; 1901, Nelson v. State, 130 Ala. 83, 30 So. 728 (deceased's declarations when assaulted); 1902, Campbell v. State, 133 Ala. 81, 31 So. 802 (accused's statements during a quarrel); 1903, Collins v. State, 137 Ala. 50, 34 So. 403 (third person at a murder); 1903, Jones v. State, 137 Ala. 12, 34 So. 681 (by the deceased); 1904, Pitts v. State, 140 Ala. 70, 37 So. 101 (accused); 1904, Harbour v. State, 140 Ala. 103, 37 So. 330 (murder; exclamation of the defendant's daughter, an eye-witness, admitted); 1905, State v. Stallings, 142 Ala. 112, 38 So. 261 (accused); 1905, Nordan v. State, 143 Ala. 13, 39 So. 406 (deceased); 1912, Alabama C. G. & A. R. Co. v. Heald, 178 Ala. 636, 59 So. 461 (injury by a street-car); 1912, Bessierdre v. Alabama C. G. & A. R. Co., 179 Ala. 317, 60 So. 82 (motorman); 1916, Southern R. Co. v. Fricks, 196 Ala. 61, 71 So. 701 (engineer of the train); 1920, Jones v. Central of Ga. R. Co., 204 Ala. 148, 85 So. 428 (injury upon entering a car); 1921, Birmingham Macaroni Co. v. Tadrick, 205 Ala. 540, 88 So. 858 (affray in a factory);

Arizona: 1908, Soto v. Terr., 12 Ariz. 36, 94 Pac. 1104 (boy's complaint after an assault); 1920, Solice v. State, 21 Ariz. 592, 193 Pac. 19 (quoted supra);

Arkansas: 1884, Flynn v. State, 43 Ark. 293; 1886, Little Rock M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Leverett, 48 Ark. 333, 338, 3 S. W. 50 (by a person injured in a railroad accident); 1893, Fort Smith Oil Co. v. Slover, 58 Ark. 168, 179, 24 S. W. 106 (by a person injured in an explosion); 1899, Little Rock T. & E. Co. v. Nelson, 66 Ark. 494, 52 S. W. 7 (by a motorman after an injury); 1901, Blair v. State, 69 Ark. 558, 64 S. W. 948 (by defendant, after a killing); 1901, Elder v. State, 69 Ark. 648, 65 S. W. 938 (by a participant, after an affray); 1906, Kansas C. S. R. Co. v. Morris, 80 Ark. 528 98 S. W. 363 (person killed at a railroad); 1908, Beal-Doyle D. G. Co. v. Carr, 85 Ark. 479, 108 S. W. 1053 (elevator accident); 1919, Walker v. State, 138 Ark. 517, 212 S. W. 319 (homicide);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1850 ("Where, also, the declaration, act, or omission forms part of a transaction which is itself the fact in dispute, or evidence of that fact, such declaration, act, or omission is evidence, as part of the transaction"); 1868, People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 49; 1882, People v. Ah Lee, 60 Cal. 85; 1886, Durkee v. R. Co., 69 Cal. 533, 11 Pac. 130; 1897, Lissak v. Crocker Est. Co., 119 Cal. 442, 51 Pac. 688 (fall of an elevator; statement of the servant in charge, made after the fall); 1899, Heckle v. R. Co., 123 Cal. 441, 56 Pac. 56 (railroad injury); 1901, Williams v. Southern P. Co., 133 Cal. 550, 65 Pac. 1100 (railroad collision); 1903, Boone v. Oakland T. Co., 139 Cal. 490, 73 Pac. 243 (street-car

"time to devise or contrive" is to trifle with principle and to cumber the records with unnecessary and unprofitable quibbles. There is a injury); 1905, Murphy v. Board, 2 Cal. App. 468, 83 Pac. 577 (injured person; a glaring instance of illiberal ruling); Colorado: 1873, Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48, 63 (abortion); 1911, Salas v. People, 51 Colo. 461, 118 Pac. 992 (murder);

Columbia: (Dist.): 1897, Washington & G. R. Co. v. McLane, 11 D. C. App. 220 (railroad accident); 1904, District of Columbia v. Dietrich, 23 D. C. App. 577 (sidewalk injury); 1905, Patterson v. Ocean A. & G. Co., 25 D. C. App. 46, 66 (injured person); 1906, Grant v. U. S., 28 D. C. App. 169 (deceased in homicide); 1912, Washington R. & E. Co. v. Wright, 38 D. C. App. 268 (street-car accident); 1915, Traver v. Smolik, 43 D. C. App. 150 (assault and battery);
Connecticut: 1897, State v. Bradneck, 69 Conn. 212, 37 Atl. 492 (statements by an adulterer, running away); 1898, McCarrick v. Kealy, 70 Conn. 642, 40 Atl. 603; 1901, State v. Yanz, 54 Conn. 177, 50 Atl. 37 (murder);
Delaware: 1904, Di Prisco v. Wilmington C. R. Co., 4 Del. 527, 57 Atl. 906 (child run over);
Florida: 1895, Lambright v. State, 34 Fla. 564, 16 So. 582;
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5766, P. C. § 1024 (admitting statements "accompanying an act, or so nearly connected therewith in time as to be free from all suspicion of device or after-thought"); 1873, Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 607; 1878, Burns v. State, 61 Ga. 194; 1880, Johnson v. State, 65 Ga. 99; 1884, Augusta Factory v. Barnes, 72 Ga. 226; 1887, State v. Driscoll, 72 Ga. 584; 1887, State v. Schmidt, 73 Ga. 473; 1887, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 79 Ga. 311, 4 S. E. 674; 1888, Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Holland, 82 Ga. 267, 10 S. E. 200; 1890, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 769, 776, 12 S. E. 18 (whether S. accidentally fell overboard or committed suicide by shooting or was alive; declarations of a companion, after hearing a shot, and upon meeting a second companion, admitted; quoted supra); 1893, Von Pollnitz v. State, 92 Ga. 16, 17, 18 S. E. 301 (by the deceased, at the door of the room where assaulted); 1894, Boston v. State, 94 Ga. 590, 21 S. E. 603 (accused's explanations that he shot by accident, made after arrest, excluded; but similar statements made on voluntarily surrendering himself shortly after the shooting, admitted); 1896, Electric R. Co. v. Carson, 98 Ga. 652, 27 S. E. 156; 1897, Sullivan v. State, 101 Ga. 800, 29 S. E. 16 (defendant's declarations to a policeman, a few minutes after a homicide); 1899, Dill v. State, 106 Ga. 683, 32 S. E. 660 (deceased in an affray); 1899, Thornton v. State, 107 Ga. 683, 33 S. E. 673 (by defendant, after killing his wife); 1899, Weinkle v. R. Co., 107 Ga. 367, 33 S. E. 471 (by the engineer of a train, after killing mules); 1899, Milam v. State, 108 Ga. 29, 33 S. E. 818 (by deceased, after being shot); 1899, Caines v. State, 108 Ga. 772, 33 S. E. 632 (by a wounded person, made immediately after); 1901, Western & A. R. Co. v. Beason, 112 Ga. 553, 37 S. E. 863; 1905, Goodman v. State, 122 Ga. 111, 49 S. E. 922 (deceased); 1905, Kemp v. Central of Ga. R. Co., 122 Ga. 559, 50 S. E. 465 (engineer); 1905, Pool v. Warren Co., 123 Ga. 205, 51 S. E. 328 (injury at a bridge); 1905, White v. Southern R. Co., 123 Ga. 353, 51 S. E. 411 (railroad injury); 1906, Warrick v. State, 125 Ga. 133, 53 S. E. 1027 (accused); 1906, McBride v. Georgia R. & E. Co., 125 Ga. 515, 54 S. E. 674 (injured person); 1906, Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 126 Ga. 1, 54 S. E. 911; 1908, Herrington v. State, 130 Ga. 307, 60 S. E. 572 (deceased in homicide); 1908, Lyles v. State, 130 Ga. 294, 60 S. E. 578 (defendant in homicide); 1911, Walker v. State, 137 Ga. 398, 73 S. E. 368 (murder; deceased's statements); 1915, Gibbs v. State, 144 Ga. 166, 86 S. E. 543 (murder); 1916, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Brinson, 18 Ga. App. 113, 88 S. E. 1003 (engineer and conductor);
Hawaii: 1913, Nawelo v. Hamm-Young Co., 21 Haw. 644 (injury by automobile);
Idaho: 1908, Anderson v. Great Northern R. Co., 15 Ida. 513, 99 Pac. 91 (engineer after an injury); 1909, Wheeler v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 16 Ida. 375, 102 Pac. 347 (here excluded as opinion); 1920, Erickson v. Rutledge Timber Co., 33 Ida. 179, 191 Pac. 212 (injury in a lumber yard); 1921, Wilson v. St. Joe Boom Co., — Ida. —, 200 Pac. 884 (injury on a steamboat; the captain's remark soon afterward, admitted on the facts);
Illinois: 1841, Gardner v. People, 4 Ill. 90 (a statement made after a killing was rejected, because "the length of time which must have elapsed in travelling the three-quarters of a mile was sufficient to enable the prisoner to become cool and deliberate and even to invent an ingenious account of the hurried transaction"); 1855, Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 Ill. 568; 1889, Chicago W. D. R. Co. v. Becker, 128 Ill. 548, 21 N. E. 524; 1891, Quincy Horse R. & C. Co. v. Gnuse, 137 Ill. 264, 269, 27 N. E. 190 (by a car-driver, after an accident); 1895, Springfield Con. R. Co. v. Welch, 155 Ill. 511, 40 N. E. 1034 (by a motorman just after the car had stopped); 1896, Globe Accident Ins. Co. v. Gerisch, 163 Ill. 625, 45 N. E. 563 (statements from several hours to three days later, excluded); 1902, Springfield C. R. Co. v. Puntenney, 200 Ill. 9, 65 N. E. 442; 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Uhter, 212 Ill. 174, 72 N. E. 195 (arrest of train employees after an accident, excluded); 1910, Belskis v. Dering Coal Co., 246 Ill. 62, 92 N. E. 575 (mine injury); lamentable waste of time by Supreme Courts in here attempting either to create or to respect precedents. Instead of struggling

Indiana: 1851, Bland v. State, 2 Ind. 608, 610 (accused's statement after a homicide); 1880, Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 83; 1894, Parker v. State, 136 Ind. 284, 290, 35 N. E. 1105 (by the deceased, shortly after a shooting); 1900, Green v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637 (murdered person); 1903, Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Whitaker, 160 Ind. 125, 66 N. E. 433; 1907, Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Haislup, 39 Ind. App. 394, 79 N. E. 1035 (passenger ejected); 1908, O'Connor Co. v. Gilaspy, 170 Ind. 428, 83 N. E. 738 (elevator); 1909 Fort Wayne & W. V. T. Co. v. Roudebush, 173 Ind. 57, 88 N. E. 676 (motorman); 1917, Cincinnati H. & D. R. Co. v. Gross, 186 Ind. 471, 114 N. E. 962 (trial Court's discretion);
Iowa: 1871, State v. Porter, 34 Ia. 137; 1886, Armil v. R. Co., 70 Ia. 131, 30 N. W. 42; 1894, Smith v. Dawley, 92 Ia. 312, 60 N. W. 625; 1899, Keyes v. Cedar Falls, 107 Ia. 509, 78 N. W. 227 (injured person after a fall); 1902, Alsever v. Minneapolis & S. L. R. Co., 115 Ia. 338, 88 N. W. 841 (engineer's statement after an injury); 1903, Sutcliffe v. Iowa, S. F. M. Ass'n, 119 Ia. 220, 93 N. W. 90 (suicide); 1905, Rothrock v. Cedar Rapids, 128 Ia. 252, 103 N. W. 475 (injured person's statement after a fall); 1905, Hutcheis v. Cedar R. & M. C. R. Co., 128 Ia. 279, 103 N. W. 779 (passenger falling from a car; model opinion, by McClain, J.); 1906, Christopherson v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 135 Ia. 409, 109 N. W. 1077 (injured person); 1907, Clark v. Van Vleck, 135 Ia. 1904, 112 N. W. 648; 1908, Kern v. Des Moines C. R. Co., 141 Ia. 620, 118 N. W. 451 (street-car injury); 1915, Westcott v. Waterloo C. F. & N. R. Co., 173 Ia. 355, 155 N. W. 255 (collision with street-car); 1916, Peterson v. Phillips Coal Co., 175 Ia. 223, 157 N.W. 194 (employee killed in a coal mine); 1919, Stukas v. Warfield P.H.Co., 188 Ia. 878, 175 N.W. 81 (elevator accident); 1920, Barrett v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 190 Ia. 509, 175 N. W. 950, 180 N.W. 670 (engineer after a collision);
Kansas: 1871, State v. Montgomery, 8 Kan. 360; 1881, State v. Pomeroy, 25 Kan. 350; 1891, Tennis v. R. Co., 45 Kan. 509, 25 Pac. 876; 1898, Walker v. O'Connell, 59 Kan. 306, 52 Pac. 894 (by an engineer, two or three hours after an accident); 1902, State v. Morrison, 64 Kan. 669, 68 Pac. 48 (deceased's declaration after a stabbing); 1902, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Logan, 65 Kan. 748, 70 Pac. 878 (railroad injury to employee); 1910, Campbell v. Brown, 81 Kan. 480, 106 Pac. 37 (death by wood alcohol; the deceased's remarks while drinking, as to where he got it, not admitted); 1914, State v. Powers, 92 Kan. 220, 139 Pac. 1166 (assault with intent to kill); 1920, State v. Pack, 106 Kan. 188, 186 Pac. 742; 1920, Mayeur v. Crowe C. & M. Co., 106 Kan. 123, 186 Pac. 1035 (death in a mine);
Kentucky: 1896, Norfleet v. Com., — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 938 (by a person shot, immediately after the shooting); 1896, Jackson v. Com., — Ky. —, 37 S. W. 847; 1897, Hughes v. Com., — Ky. —, 41 S. W. 294; 1898, Hughes v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 48 S. W. 671 (brakeman's injury); 1899, Brown v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 53 S. W. 1041 (injured person falling off a street-car); 1899, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Shaw, — Ky. —, 53 S. W. 1048 (injured person put off a steam-car); 1900, Louisville & C. P. Co. v. Samuels, — Ky. —, 59 S. W. 3; 1901, Johnson v. Com., — Ky. —, 61 S. W. 1005 (assaulted woman's complaint); 1901, Floyd v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 64 S. W. 653 (by a motorman after an accident); 1904, Selby v. Com., — Ky. —, 80 S. W. 221 (accused, after a homicide); 1905, Lexington St. R. Co. v. Strader, — Ky. —, 89 S. W. 158 (motorman); 1906, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Molloy's Adm'x, 122 Ky. 219, 91 S. W. 685 (railroad injury); 1912, Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Martin, 146 Ky. 260, 142 S. W. 410 (engineer's statement after accident); 1914, Rogers v. Com., 161 Ky. 754, 171 S. W. 464 (manslaughter); 1916, McCandless v. Com., 170 Ky. 301, 185 S. W. 1100 (accused in homicide); 1918, Barrett's Adm'r v. Brand, 179 Ky. 740, 201 S. W. 331 (malpractice); 1920, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Horton, 187 Ky. 617, 219 S. W. 1084 (engineer, after running over a trespasser); 1921, Valentine v. Weaver, 191 Ky. 37, 228 S. W. 1036 (employee's death; statement made on return from work and after sleeping, as to receiving an injury, excluded);
Louisiana: 1885, State v. Melton, 37 La. An. 77, 79; 1886, State v. Molisse, 38 La. An. 381, 384; 1887, State v. Estoup, 39 La. An. 219, 1 So. 448 (by a murdered person); 1896, State v. Ramsey, 48 La. An. 1407, 20 So. 904; 1899, State v. Sadler, 51 La. An. 1397, 26 So. 390 (by a person shot); 1900, State v. Robinson, 52 La. An. 541, 27 So. 129 (by the deceased, in an affray); 1900, Marler v. R. Co., 52 La. An. 727, 27 So. 176 (railway injury); 1902, State v. Maxey, 107 La. 799, 32 So. 206 (injured person); 1902, State v. Blanchard, 108 La. 110, 32 So. 397 (accused); 1904, State v. Charles, 111 La. 933, 36 So. 29 (deceased in homicide); 1904, State v. Foley, 113 La. 52, 36 So. 885 (murder; prior cases cited and construed); 1916, State v. McLaughlin, 138 La. 958, 70 So. 925 (murder; the woman, with her throat cut, exclaimed, "George did it," having just been awakened by the assault; admitted; careful opinion by Monroe, C. J.);
Maine: 1899, State v. Maddox, 92 Me. 348, 42 Atl. 788 (assault); 1902, Barnes v. Rumford, 96 Me. 315, 52 Atl. 844 (highway accident);
Maryland: 1898, Wright v. State, 88 Md. 705, 41 Atl. 1060 (statements by the accused after an affray); 1900, Baltimore City P. R. Co. v.

weakly for the impossible, they should decisively insist that every case be treated upon its own circumstances. They should, if they are

Tanner, 90 Md. 315, 45 Atl. 188 (by an injured person while having his injuries dressed); Massachusetts: 1896, Eastman v. R. C., 165 Mass. 342, 43 N. E. 115 (injured person);
Michigan: 1877, Mobley v. Kittleberger, 37 Mich. 362; 1901, Edwards v. Foote, 129 Mich. 121, 88 N. W. 404 (street-car collision); 1903, Ensley v. R. Co., 134 Mich. 195, 96 N. W. 34 (railroad passenger); 1915, Rogers v. Saginaw B. C. R. Co., 187 Mich. 490, 153 N. W. 784; 1917, Hyatt v. Leonard Storage Co., 196 Mich. 337, 162 N. W. 951 (collision);
Minnesota: 1895, Firkins v. R. Co., 61 Minn. 31, 63 N. W. 173; 1903, State v. Gallehugh, 89 Minn. 212, 94 N. W. 723 (murder); 1905, State v. Williams, 96 Minn. 351, 105 N. W. 265 (deceased in a murder); 1913, State v. Findling, 123 Minn. 413, 144 N. W. 142 (murder); 1915, Lambrecht v. Schreyer, 129 Minn. 271, 152 N. W. 645 (collision of wagons);
Mississippi: 1883, Kramer v. State, 61 Miss. 161; 1896, Mobile & C. R. Co. v. Stinson, 74 Miss. 453, 21 So. 14 (statements while extinguishing a fire);
Missouri: 1860, State v. Dominique, 30 Mo. 586; 1871, State v. Sloan, 47 Mo. 610 (deceased's remarks while his wound was being dressed); 1877, State v. Brown, 64 Mo. 370; 1883, State v. Walker, 78 Mo. 386; 1894, State v. Martin, 124 Mo. 514, 28 S. W. 12; 1896, State v. Thompson, 132 Mo. 301, 34 S. W. 31 (statements by the deceased while eating a poisoned lunch); 1897, State v. Thompson, 141 Mo. 408, 42 S. W. 949; 1898, State v. Sexton, 147 Mo. 89, 48 S. W. 452 (murder); 1900, State v. Hudspeth, 159 Mo. 178, 60 S. W. 136 (injured person); 1900, Ruschenberg v. So. Electric Co., 161 Mo. 70, 61 S. W. 626 (motorman after an accident); 1902, State v. Lockett, 168 Mo. 480, 68 S. W. 563; 1903, State v. Hendricks, 172 Mo. 654, 73 S. W. 194 (victim of an assault); 1903, State v. Pollard, 174 Mo. 607, 74 S. W. 969 (rape); 1912, Jewell v. Excelsior P. M. Co., 166 Mo. App. 555, 149 S. W. 1045 (injured person fleeing from an explosion); 1921, State v. Dougherty, 287 Mo. 82, 228 S. W. 786 (deceased in a shooting affray); 1922, State v. Harlan, — Mo. —, 240 S. W. 197 (murder);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10511 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1850); 1895, State v. Pugh, 16 Mont. 343, 40 Pac. 861; 1903, State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3;
Nebraska: 1893, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Baier, 37 Nebr. 235, 241, 55 N. W. 913 (injured person); 1895, Collins v. State, 46 Nebr. 37, 64 N. W. 432 (by a person found wounded and unconscious and carried to a hotel; statement, made more than two hours after regaining consciousness, excluded); 1898, Friend v. Burleigh, 53 Nebr. 674, 74 N. W. 60 (injured person); 1898, Union P. R. Co. v. Elliott, 54 Nebr. 299, 74 N. W. 627 (by an engineer and the injured person, just after the injury); 1899, Sullivan v. State, 58 Nebr. 796, 79 N. W. 721 (defendant's remarks after an affray); 1903, Pledger v. R. Co., 69 Nebr. 456, 95 N. W. 1057 (railroad injury); 1905, Lexington v. Fleharty, 74 Nebr. 626, 104 N. W. 1056 (injured person);
Nevada: 1915, State v. Pappas, 39 Nev. 40 152 Pac. 571 (assault);
New Hampshire: 1903, Murray v. R. Co., 72 N. H. 32, 54 Atl. 289; 1911, Dorr v. Atlantic S. L. R. Co., 76 N. H. 160, 80 Atl. 336 (no fixed period of time if recognized); 1914, Nawn v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 77 N. H. 299, 91 Alt. 181 (statement of an injured person who was unconscious in the interval; doctrine of the trial Court's discretion examined); 1917, Hansen v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 78 N. H. 518, 102 Alt. 625 (carrier's erroneous transportation; a telegram from the plaintiff to her sister, "The Grand Trunk conductor has put me on a wrong train," not admitted);
New Jersey: 1889, Estell v. State, 51 N. J. L. 182, 17 Atl. 118 (apparently refusing to recognize any time-allowance at all); 1897, Trenton P. R. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. L. 219, 221, 37 Atl. 730 (a driver's exclamations when his horse was hurt); 1905, State v. Laster, 71 N. J. L. 586, 60 Atl. 361 (deceased); 1919, Rathbun v. Brancatello, 93 N. J. L. 222, 107 Atl. 279 (automobile injury; the exclamation of M., a bystander, identifying the vehicle number, admitted; stated more fully ante, § 751, n. 2, where the ruling really belongs); 1918, Murphy v. Brown & Co., 91 N. J. L. 412, 103 Atl. 28 (statements as to cause of an accident while being bandaged, admitted);
New Mexico: 1916, State v. Chesher, 22 N. M. 319, 161 Pac. 1108 (homicide);
New York: 1874, People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 102; 1904, Austin v. Bartlett, 178 N. Y. 310, 70 N. E. 855 (statements after a runaway accident); 1908, People v. Del Vermo, 192 N. Y. 470, 85 N. E. 690 (murder; deceased's exclamations); 1913, Greener v. General Electric Co., 209 N. Y. 135, 102 N. E. 527 (injured person after a fall; here excluded; but the opinion misunderstands the theory and ignores the element of time);
North Carolina: 1843, State v. Tilly, 3 Ired. 424, 435 (defendant's declarations after a homicide, as to the mode of its occurrence); 1903, Bumgardner v. R. Co., 132 N. C. 438, 43 S. E. 948 (brakeman, at a railroad accident); 1915, State v. Peoples, 170 N. C. 763, 87 S. E. 328 (homicide); 1919, State v. Davis, 177 N. C. 573, 98 S. E. 785 (murder); North Dakota: 1903, Balding v. Andreas, 12 N. D. 267, 96 N. W. 305; 1905, Puls v. Grand Lodge, 13 N. D. 559, 102 N. W. 165 (by one who was ill, as to having taken horse medicine, able, lift themselves sensibly to the even greater height of leaving the application of the principle absolutely to the determination of the trial admitted); 1911, Gebus v. Minneapolis St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 22 N. D. 29, 132 N. W. 227; Ohio: 1852, Wetmore v. Mell, 1 Oh. St. 26; 1871, Forrest v. State, 21 Oh. St. 641 (accused after a homicide); 1875, Cleveland C. & C. R. Co. v. Mara, 26 Oh. St. 185, 190; 1914, State v. Lasecki, 90 Oh. 10, 106 N. E. 660 (murder; elaborate and liberal opinion by Wanamaker, J.);

Oklahoma: 1902, Smith v. Terr. 11 Okl. 669, 69 Pac. 805 (accused, after a homicide); 1905, Regnier v. Terr., 15 Okl. 652, 82 Pac. 509 (victim of a shooting); 1908, Price v. State, 1 Okl. Cr. 358, 98 Pac. 447 (homicide); 1910, Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 651, 108 Pac. 561 (deceased, after a shooting); 1915, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Fick, 47 Okl. 530, 149 Pac. 1126 (passenger); 1916, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Foltz, 54 Okl. 556, 154 Pac. 519 (death of an employee); 1916, Herring v. Hood, 55 Okl. 737, 155 Pac. 253 (injury in a store); 1916, Prickett v. Sulzberger & S. Co., 57 Okl. 567, 157 Pac. 356 (elevator accident); 1917, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 63 Okl. 32, 162 Pac. 823 (railroad employee's death while at work); 1918, Lail v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 596, 174 Pac. 1099 (murder);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 707 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1850); 1903, State v. McCann, 43 Or. 155, 72 Pac. 137 (assault);
Pennsylvania: 1867, Hanover R. Co. v. Coyle, 55 Pa. 402; 1875, Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 493, 501 (by deceased, after an explosion); 1889, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lyons, 129 Pa. 121, 18 Atl. 759; 1898, Com. v. Van Horn, 188 Pa. 143, 41 Atl. 469 (murder); 1902, Keefer v. Pacific M. L. Ins. Co. 201 Pa. 448, 51 Atl. 366 (declarations 15 or 30 minutes after a fall, excluded; Mitchell, J., diss.); 1918, Wegganet v. Bartle, 88 Or. 310, 171 Pac. 587 (automobile injury); 1917, Eby v. Traveler's Ins. Co., 258 Pa. 525, 102 Atl. 209 (deceased's statements made while strangling, admitted); 1922, Com. v. Puntario, — Pa. —, 115 Atl. 831(injured person losing speech-power when shot and making a statement immediately on its restoration);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 279 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1850);
Porto Rico: 1912, Rosado v. Ponce R. &. L. Co. 18 P. R. 593 (death by electric wire); 1914, People v. Crespo, 21 P. R. 285, 294 (murder);
Rhode Island: 1889, State v. Murphy, 16 R. I. 528, 17 Atl. 998 (deceased); 1903, State v. Epstein, 25 R. I. 131, 55 Atl. 204 (injured person); 1912, Champlin v. Pawcatuck V. St. R. Co., 33 R. I. 572, 82 Atl. 481;
South Carolina: 1880, State v. Belcher, 13 S. C. 459, 463; 1894, State v. Talbert, 41 S. C. 526, 530, 19 S. E. 852 (by the deceased, on crawling into a store after being shot); 1896, State v. Arnold, 47 S. C. 9, 24 S. E. 926 (a deceased person, a few minutes after being shot); 1903, Gosa v. Southern R. Co., 67 S. C. 347, 45 S. E. 810 (railroad accident); 1904, State v. McDaniel, 68 S. C. 304, 47 S. E. 384 (defendant in homicide); 1904, State v. Lindsey, 68 S. C. 276, 47 S. E. 389 (wife of the assaulted person); 1904, Williams v. Southern R. Co., 68 S. C. 369, 47 S. E. 706 (person injured on a railroad track); 1904, Nelson v. Georgia C. & N. R. Co., 68 S. C. 462, 47 S. E. 722 (conductor); 1907, State v. Way, 76 S. C. 91, 56 S. E. 653 (defendant in homicide);
South Dakota: 1904, Fallon v. Rapid City, 17 S. D. 570, 97 N. W. 1009 (sidewalk injury); 1909, Jungworth v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 24 S. D. 342, 123 N. W. 695 (cattle injured on track; conductor's conversation with the stock-tender, excluded; careful opinion, by McCoy, J.); Tennessee: 1851, Denton v. State, 1 Swan 281; 1852, Nelson v. State, 2 Swan 237, 260 (statements by an accused, about the blood on him, made shortly after the affray); 1869, Riggs v. State, 6 Coldw. 518 (declarations after a homicide);
Texas: 1870, Colquitt v. State, 34 Tex. 550 (statements of the assaulted person); 1888, Railway v. Crowder, 70 Tex. 226, 7 S. W. 709; 1891, International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson, 82 Tex. 519, 17 S. W. 1039; 1891, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Robertson, 82 Tex. 660, 17 S. W. 1041; 1898, Freeman v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 545, 46 S. W. 641 (murdered person); 1902, San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Gray, 95 Tex. 424, 67 S. W. 763 (railroad accident); 1920, Panhandle & S. F. R. Co. v. Laird, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 224 S. W. 305 (railroad and automobile collision); 1922, Freeman v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 239 S. W. 969 (homicide);
Utah: 1896, People v. Kessler, 13 Utah 69, 44 Pac. 97 (statements of the deceased, 45 minutes after being shot, excluded; disapproving Linderberg v. Mining Co., 9 Utah 163, 33 Pac. 692); 1896, Wilson v. S. P. Co., 13 Utah 352, 44 Pac. 1040 (switchman after an accident); 1905, Leach v. Oregon S. L. Co., 29 Utah 285, 8 Pac. 90 (brakeman knocked off a car);
Vermont: 1825, Ross v. Bank, 1 Aik. 43, 52 (issue as to the loss of bank bills said to have been delivered in a package to a steamboat captain; the shipper's declarations, before delivery, as to the contents of the package, admitted as trustworthy); 1896, State v. Badger, 69 Vt. 216, 37 Atl. 293 (affray);
Virginia: 1874, Com. v. Little, 25 Gratt. 926; 1883, Kirby v. Com., 77 Va. 689; 1902, Andrews v. Com., 100 Va. 801, 40 S. E. 935 (injured person's cries); 1904, Bowles v. Com., 103 Va. 816, 48 S. E. 527 (deceased);

Court.[4] Until such a beneficent result is reached, the lucubrations of Supreme Courts over the details of each case will continue to multiply the tedious reading of the profession:

1916, DIBELL, J., in Roach v. Great Northern R. Co., 133 Minn. 257, 158 N. W. 232: "There is some element of discretion in the trial Court in determining whether a statement is a part of the 'res gestæ.' . . . In passing upon the admissibility of testimony claimed to constitute a part of the 'res gestæ,' the trial Court determines whether unsworn statements are so accredited that they may go to the jury and be weighed and valued by it, and in determining this it considers whether the statements are spontaneous; whether there was an opportunity for fabrication or a likelihood of it; the lapse of time between the act and the declaration relating to it; the attendant excitement; the mental and physical condition of the declarant, and other circumstances important in determining whether the trustworthiness of the unsworn statements is such that they may safely go to the jury. In reviewing the trial Court's ruling, this Court defers to its determination of the preliminary facts bearing upon the propriety of receiving the testimony. To this extent its admissibility is within the sound discretion of the trial Court."

(c) Subject of the utterance. The utterance must relate to the circumstances of the occurrence preceding it. This is perhaps a cautionary rather than a logically necessary restriction. If, for example, after an assault, the injured person exclaims that in the previous week the attacking party had tried to shoot him, there is perhaps no less reason for trusting that part of his utterance than any other part. Nevertheless, it is possible to argue that such utterances imply to some extent a process of reflection or deliberate reason-

1908, Blue Ridge L. & P. Co. v. Price, 108 Va. 652, 62 S. E. 938 (motorman after an accident); 1919, Washington-Virginia R. Co. v. Deahl, 126 Va. 141, 100 S. E. 840 (railroad and vehicle collision);

Washington: 1902, Roberts v. Port Blakeley Mill Co., 30 Wash. 25, 70 Pac. 111 (railroad accident); 1903, State v. Ripley, 32 Wash. 182, 72 Pac. 1036 (statements just after regaining consciousness, admitted); 1905, Dixon v. Northern P. R. Co., 37 Wash. 310, 79 Pac. 943 (trespasser ejected from car); 1905, Starr v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 41 Wash. 199, 83 Pac. 113 (person injured on a railroad track); 1909, Henry v. Seattle Electric Co., 55 Wash. 444, 104 Pac. 776 (conductor, after a collision); 1910, Swanson v. Pacific Shipping Co., 60 Wash. 87, 110 Pac. 795 (injury in a shipyard); 1913, State v. Hazzard, 75 Wash. 5, 134 Pac. 514 (murder by starvation; the deceased's statements as to the food she was receiving, admitted); 1918, Singer v. Metz Co., 101 Wash. 67, 171 Pac. 1032 (motor car collision); 1922, State v. Goodwin, — Wash. —, 204 Pac. 769 (injury at an explosion; citing the above text with approval);

West Virginia: 1871, Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510; 1901, Sample v. Consol. L. & R. Co., 50 W. Va. 472, 40 S. E. 597 (child run over by a car; motorman's declaration, immediately after, while the body was under the car, as to his having seen the child, admitted); 1904, Williams v. Belmont C. & C. Co., 55 W. Va. 84, 46 S. E. 802 (motorman); 1905, State v. Woodrow, 58 W. Va. 527, 52 S. E. 545 (murder; accused's statement); 1921, State v. McKinney, 88 W. Va. 400, 106 S. E. 894 (malicious shooting of a brother-in-law; defendant's sister's statement of physical injury by her husband the same day, admitted);

Wisconsin: 1877, Felt v. Amidon, 43 Wis. 470; 1890, Hooker v. R. Co., 76 Wis. 542, 547, 44 N. W. 1085 (by an engineer, after an accident); 1891, Hermes v. R. Co., 80 Wis. 590, 50 N. W. 584 (similar); 1893, Reed v. Madison, 85 Wis. 667, 674, 56 N. W. 182 (pointing out the place of an accident); 1894, Schillinger v. Verona, 88 Wis. 317, 60 N. W. 272; 1896, Steinhofel v. R. Co., 92 Wis. 123, 65 N. W. 852 (injured person); 1896, Christianson v. Furniture Co., 92 Wis. 649, 66 N. W. 699 (person injured in a factory); 1903, Bliss v. State, 117 Wis. 596, 94 N. W. 325; 1903, Hupfer v. National D. Co., 119 Wis. 417, 96 N. W. 809 (death in a vat); 1905, Tiborsky v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 124 Wis. 243, 102 N. W. 549 (telegraph operator's reply to the injured person); 1906, Johnson v. State, 129 Wis. 146, 108 N. W. 55 (defendant after a homicide);

Wyoming: 1899, Johnson v. State, 8 Wyo. 494, 58 Pac. 761 (by deceased, after being shot).

[4] 1907, Pittsburg C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Haislup, 39 Ind. App. 394, 79 N. E. 1035 (the above passage quoted with approval).

ing; and practically there is not the same necessity for employing them. It seems clear, on the precedents, that utterances thus relating to some distinct prior circumstance would not be received. But this result is usually reached by invoking the language of 'res gestæ'; and the authorities are more conveniently considered under that head (post, § 1754).

§ 1751. Knowledge Qualifications (Observation), Infancy, Infamy, etc. (a) Upon the ordinary principle applicable to all testimonial evidence (ante, § 656), and therefore to Hearsay statements offered under these Exceptions (ante, § 1424), the declarant must appear to have had an opportunity to observe personally the matter of which he speaks. This requirement is in practice usually fulfilled in the case of all declarations otherwise admissible; for they are made by injured persons or others present and concern the circumstances of the injury as observed by them; and thus no occasion arises for calling attention to the requirement. Nevertheless, in an appropriate case, it would without doubt be enforced; for example, if a passenger in a railroad collision should exclaim, "The engineer did not reverse the lever," or "The conductor did not read the train-despatcher's orders."

(b) Any one possessing such qualifications would be a competent speaker. In particular, a bystander's declarations would be admissible. In a few Courts, such declarations are excluded (post, § 1755) upon a mistaken application of the Verbal Act doctrine.

(c) By the general principle applicable to these Exceptions to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1424), the declarant must at least not lack the usual testimonial qualifications (ante, § 480) that would be required of him if testifying on the stand. Which of those qualifications are here to be treated applicable and indispensable?

(1) Does the disqualification of infancy (ante, §§ 505–509) exclude declarations otherwise admissible? It would seem not;[1] because the principle of the present Exception obviates the usual sources of untrustworthiness (ante, § 506) in children's testimony; because, furthermore, the orthodox rules for children's testimony are not in themselves meritorious (ante, § 509); and, finally, because the oath-test, which usually underlies the objection to children's testimony, is wholly inapplicable to them (post, § 1821, § 1828, notes 3–5).

(2) Does the disqualification of infamy by conviction of crime (ante, §§ 519–524) here exclude spontaneous exclamations uttered under the influence of the 'res gestæ'? Considering the peculiar nature of the present exception, and the now conceded anachronism of the disqualification by infamy, it ought not to be extended to apply here.[2]

§ 1751. [1] Accord: 1908, Soto v. Terr., 12 Ariz. 36, 94 Pac. 1104 (child of four years; complaint after an assault, admitted); 1908, Beal-Doyle D. G. Co. v. Carr, 85 Ark. 479, 108 S. W. 1053 (approving the text above); 1904, Kenney v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 500, 79 S. W. 570, 817 (good opinion by Henderson, J., Davidson, P. J., diss.).

For the cases as to a child's complaint of rape, see post, § 1761, n. 2.

Distinguish the rule for dying declarations, which may well be different (ante, § 1445, n. 1).

[2] Accord: 1900, Neeley v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 56 S. W. 625; 1904, Flores v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 79 S. W. 808; 1904, Kenney v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 79 S. W. 817 (approving

(3) For similar reasons, the marital disqualification should not exclude utterances of husband or wife otherwise receivable for each other;[3] for the present principle is assumed to override any considerations of interest in the declarant, and moreover the marital disqualification (ante, § 601) is now an anachronism; though the marital privilege rests on different grounds, and would equally exclude extrajudicial utterances.[4]

(4) The disqualification of insanity (ante, § 492) should probably be treated for the present purpose like that of infancy.[5]

(5) The oath-capacity is a purely artificial one (post, §§ 1820–1829), and has no inherent relation to testimonial capacity. It has no place in excluding extrajudicial declarations forming exceptions to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1362). The close resemblance of its requirements to those of the Exception for dying declarations (ante, § 1443) and for children's testimony (ante, § 1595) will account for the supposition, occasionally found, that those requirements have some general application to extrajudicial declarations of the present sort.[6]

§ 1752. (II) Certain Spurious Limitations borrowed from the Verbal Act Doctrine. Owing to the mistaken application of the Verbal Act doctrine to cases falling properly under the present Exception, certain limitations have by some Courts been added to the foregoing legitimate ones. These may now be considered. Yet it is to be noted, once for all, that none of these have legitimately any place in the present Exception; they are improperly borrowed, by reason of a failure to perceive that the present Exception, and the Verbal Act doctrine (as already noticed in §§ 1747, 1746) are distinct domains in the law of Evidence. Before examining these limitations, a summary survey of the scope of the Verbal Act doctrine (post, §§ 1772–1786) is desirable:

The Verbal Act doctrine presupposes that there is an act, relevant in some way under the issue, which needs for its full purport to be construed together with the words of the actor. For example, in cases of acquisition of title by adverse possession, the mere fact of occupation is in itself colorless and indecisive, and the other conduct and the words accompanying the occupation must be considered. Thus, if Roe has said, during his occupation, "This is my own land, not Doe's; I have a deed to it," the complexion of the act of occupation appears to be adverse. The utterance is not offered testimonially, i. e. as an assertion evidencing the existence of the deed asserted, but as a verbal part of the act of occupation, giving definite significance to it irrespective of the assertion's truth. Thus, certain limitations are to be deduced the foregoing cases, and distinguishing Long v. State, 10 Tex. App. 186).

By an analogous principle a slave's declarations of this sort were not excluded by his disqualifications to testify: 1845, Yeatman v. Hart, 6 Humph. 375; 1867, Rogers v. Crain, 30 Tex. 284, 288.

[3] Cases cited ante, § 604, n. 3.

[4] Cases cited post, § 2233.

[5] 1905, Wilson v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 50, 90 S. W. 312.

Distinguish, however, the rule for dying declarations (ante, § 1445, n. 2).

[6] E. g. the dissenting opinion of Davidson, P. J., in Kenney v. State, Tex., supra, n. 1, and the treatises therein quoted.

in using such verbal parts of acts: (1) There must be a main or principal act, relevant under the issue, the significance of which needs to be made definite; (2) The words must genuinely elucidate or give character to this act; (3) The words must be by the actor himself, not by another person; and (4) the words must be precisely contemporaneous with the act. Now all four of these limitations, though entirely peculiar to the Verbal Act doctrine, have been by some Courts misapplied more or less extensively to the present Exception for Spontaneous Explanations. That it is a case of misapplication is clear; for here the concern is with a hearsay or testimonial use of the words, while there no such function is attributed to them. The history of this transfer of language and of ideas is obscure, in so far as no precise case or point of time can be fixed upon as exhibiting it. But it is easily accounted for by the superficial resemblance of the two doctrines in some instances and by their undeveloped forms at the time of the confusion. The practical effect of this misapplication of the above four limitations may now be considered.

§ 1753. Same: (1) There must be a Main or Principal Act. The limitation is sometimes mentioned, for cases under the Exception, that there must be a "main" or "principal act," already relevant in the case to which the declarations relate:

1867, O'BRIEN, J., in Gresham v. Manning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 125 (action for obscuring lights; guests of the hotel had objected, in leaving, to take the rooms alleged to be darkened, and asserted the darkness as their reason): "The act which they [the declarations] accompany should be one that would be evidence in the cause without any such declarations. . . . The statements and declarations of opinion received in evidence in this case were made by parties not examined upon oath or subject to cross-examination; and though they were accompanied by acts tending to show that those parties really entertained the opinion they so expressed, still their statements would not on that account be exempted from the general rule excluding hearsay evidence, where the acts which they accompanied would not be evidence 'per se.'"[1]

This form of expression is frequent enough. But there seems to be in the United States no ruling turning directly upon the supposed limitation, and it is perhaps not too much to hope that the language hitherto employed with only nominal effect may yet be discarded. Practically the requirement is satisfied in every case where declarations are offered under this Exception, i. e. in cases of affrays and accidents; and where it would be in strictness not satisfied, a loose interpretation of the phrase seems to hold it satisfied. But such a limitation has no place in this Exception. What is required here is merely that there shall be some startling occurrence calculated to produce nervous excitement and spontaneous utterance (ante, § 1749). It is immaterial whether or not that startling occurrence is itself relevant under the issue; though in the ordinary case it does happen to be relevant.

§ 1753. [1] In the following case, however, no attention was paid to this rule: 1872, R. v. Edwards, 12 Cox Cr. 230 (Quain, J., admitted remarks of the deceased wife, a week before being killed, and upon taking an axe and a knife to her neighbor, that her husband often threatened her with them and "she wished to get them out of the way"). It may be added that the declarations in Gresham v. Manning, supra, so far as evidencing the mental effect produced upon the guests, were admissible under § 1729, ante.

§ 1754. Same: (2) Declaration must elucidate the Act. In the genuine Verbal Act doctrine, the admissibility of the actor's utterances is based on the assumption that the main act itself was colorless, and required to be made more definite in one respect or another; the test is whether the act was "equivocal," and whether the utterance tends to remove this equivocality and give definite effect. Now the language of this limitation is also found borrowed for the present Exception. But in this spurious use of it there is found no requirement that the act itself shall have been equivocal, but merely the requirement that the declaration shall tend to "illustrate" it, to "elucidate" it, to "throw light" upon it, to "explain" it, or to "characterize" or "give character to" it.[1] In other words, merely the general phrases from the Verbal Act doctrine are used without the fundamental reason for them. Practically, this language amounts usually to little or nothing as a limitation; declarations which do not in some way or other "elucidate" or "explain" the occurrence are naturally not likely to be offered, and it is therefore easy enough to find that they do furnish this required elucidation.[2]

There is, however, one aspect in which the limitation becomes a real one; for the matter to be "elucidated" is, by hypothesis, the occurrence or act which has led to the utterance, and not some distinctly separate and prior matter. Suppose, for example, an injured passenger in a railway collision, thinking of his family's condition, exclaims, "I hope that my insurance-premium, which I mailed yesterday, has reached the company," referring to premium-money alleged by the insurance-company not to have been received. Such an utterance would by the present spurious limitation clearly be inadmissible. On principle, however, it would seem also inadmissible under the legitimate principles of the Exception, as already noted (ante, § 1749, par. c.). Apparently the Courts are disposed, on one theory or another, to enforce this restriction:[3]

1805, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Aveson v. Kinnaird, 6 East 193 (admitting declarations of a wife upon elopement, charging the husband with misconduct causing it): "[I should not admit it] if it were a collateral declaration of some matter which happened at another time."

§ 1754. [1] The instances are innumerable; illustrations are found in Chicago W. D. R. Co. v. Becker, 128 Ill. 545, 21 N. E. 524; Baker v. Gausin, 71 Ind. 319; 1908, Hyvonen v. Hector Iron Co., 103 Minn. 331, 115 N. W. 167 (mining accident); Castner v. Slicker, 33 N. J. L. 97; State v. Belcher, 13 N. C. 463; 1914, State v. Hosmer, 72 Or. 57, 142 Pac. 581 (statements by a nun alleged to have been kidnapped); 1914, Ferance v. Forestdale Mfg. Co., 36 R. I. 154, 89 Atl. 339 (factory injury).

[2] For illustrations of this mode of using such language, see Scaggs v. State, Mitchum v. State, quoted ante, §§ 1747, 1749.

[3] Nevertheless, here too may be found extremely liberal interpretations of this limitation: 1902, Jack v. Mutual R. F. Life Ass'n, 51 C. C. A. 36, 113 Fed. 49 (statements by the deceased insured, that "J. had his life insured, that he had hired L. to kill him," admitted; quoted ante, § 1750); 1882, Lander v. People, 104 Ill. 256 (admitting evidence of exclamations recognizing an alleged violator on the day after; "The spontaneous exclamation, 'There goes the man,' with the response, 'Yes, there he goes,' is highly characteristic of the fact of their recognition").

1873, Agassiz v. Tramway Co., 21 W. R. 199 (after an accident the conductor mentioned that the driver "has been off the line five or six times to-day"). KELLEY, C. B.: "The conductor's remark had no relation to the accident in question, but referred to the conduct of the driver at another time or times." BRAMWELL, B.: "It tends to criminate the driver on account of conduct displayed on a perfectly different occasion."

§ 1755. Same: (3) Declaration must be that of the Actor himself; Bystander's Utterances. Under the genuine Verbal Act doctrine, the object being to give definite legal effect to a certain act, by means of ascertaining its total purport as intended by the actor (post, § 1775), it is obvious that the conduct and the verbal utterances must be by the same person. For example, in ascertaining adverse possession, it is only the occupant's utterances that can give significance to the quality of his occupation as adverse. But, under the present Exception, that nervous excitement which renders an utterance admissible may exist equally for a mere bystander as well as for the [illegible]d or injuring person, and therefore the utterances of either, concerning [illegible]hey observed, are equally admissible:

1862, POLLOCK, C. B., in Milne v. Leisler, 7 H. & N. 786, 796: "Courts, so far as they can, are disposed to receive in evidence whatever can throw any light on the matter in issue and advance the search after truth. No doubt, for that reason, in the case of an exclamation by any one in a crowd, when an accident occurs, and the conduct of a particular person is in question, it may be asked whether some one did not call out 'shame!'; for it is part of the 'res gestæ.'"

Fortunately, there has been little inclination towards the error of fixing upon the present Exception the inappropriate limitation of the Verbal Act doctrine. In a few courts, the declarations of a mere bystander have been excluded.[1] But, in the greater number, no such discrimination is made,[2] —

§ 1755. [1] Note that in Louisiana these later cases deviate from the original orthodox rule as found in the cases in the next note:

ENGLAND: 1887, R. v. Gibson, L. R. 18 Q. B. D. 537, 541 (assault; immediately after the stone was thrown, "a lady going past, pointing to the prisoner's door, said, 'The person who threw the stone went in there'"; excluded).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1911, American Mfg. Co. v. Bigelow, C. C. A., 188 Fed. 34 (superintendent's statement to injured employee); Alabama: 1911, Pope v. State, 174 Ala. 63, 57 So. 245; Arkansas: 1884, Flynn v. State, 43 Ark. 293; Indiana: 1905, Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor, 164 Ind. 155, 72 N. E. 1045 (railroad injury; excluded on the facts); Kentucky: 1892, Stroud v. Com., — Ky. —, 19 S. W. 976; 1916, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sinclair, 171 Ky. 562, 188 S. W. 648 (railroad collision); Louisiana: 1887, State v. Oliver, 39 La. An. 470, 472, 2 So. 194 (citing only the Moore case, infra, note 2, and that erroneously); 1890, State v. Riley, 42 La. An. 995, 8 So. 469 (citing the Oliver case only); 1896, State v. Ramsey, 48 La. An. 1407, 20 So. 904 (expressing no opinion as to actual participants or parties present; but here excluding the statement of a mere "observer," who expressed an opinion only, "R. shot M. and shot him down for nothing"); 1898, State v. Bellard, 50 La. An. 594, 23 So. 504 (murder; exclamations of bystanders, excluded); New York: 1907, State v. Howard, 120 La. 311, 45 So. 260 (like State v. Bellard); 1894, Butler v. R. Co., 143 N. Y. 417, 422, 38 N. E. 454 (brakeman's remark after an injury, not admitted; "declarations of third persons not in their nature a part of the fact," inadmissible); 1897, Felska v. R. Co., 152 N. Y. 339, 46 N. E. 613 (remark by one of a crowd assembling after an accident); Utah: 1898, Ganaway v. Dramatic Ass'n, 17 Utah 37, 53 Pac. 830 (battery).

[2] ENGLAND: 1862, Milne v. Leisler, 7 H. & N. 786, 796 (quoted supra).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1872, Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Ashcraft, 48 Ala. 31; 1918, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Whitman, 202 Ala. 388, 80 So. 470 (fall on a pavement); Ark. 1896, Appleton v. State, 61 Ark. 590, 33 S. W. 1066 (admitting exclamations by the defendant's wife during assuming, of course (ante, § 1750), that the bystander's declarations relate only to that which has come under his observation.

§ 1756. Same: (4) Declaration must be Contemporaneous. Under the genuine Verbal Act doctrine, it is necessary that the actor's utterance accompany the act, and thus be precisely contemporaneous with it (post, § 1776); otherwise it does not make a part of the act itself, but is merely an ordinary testimonial assertion of a past fact. Thus, if after the occupation of land has ceased, the former occupant declares "The land was mine, for I had a deed of it," this utterance, not having been made during occupation, leaves the act of occupation as equivocal and indefinite as before, and has therefore no significance as a verbal act; its only possible use could be as an ordinary hearsay assertion, and as such it is inadmissible. But under the present Exception an utterance is, by hypothesis, offered as an assertion to evidence the fact asserted (for example, that a car-brake was set or not set), and the only condition is that it shall have been made spontaneously, i. e. as the natural effusion of a state of excitement (ante, § 1749). Now this state of excitement may well continue to exist after the exciting fact has ended. The declaration, therefore, may be admissible even though subsequent to the occurrence, provided it is near enough in time to allow the assumption that the exciting influence continued.

It is therefore an error to apply to the present Exception the Verbal Act rule that the utterance must be precisely contemporaneous with the act or occurrence. There was in the beginning a tendency to commit this error. But at the present day this error seems to have been almost everywhere the affray); D. C. 1893, Metropolitan R. Co. v. Collins, 1 D. C. App. 383, 386 (bystander, at a railroad accident); Fla. 1907, Atlantic C. L. R. Co. v. Crosby, 53 Fla. 400, 43 So. 318; Ky. 1902, Louisville and N. R. Co. v. Carothers, — Ky. —, 65 S. W. 833, 66 S. W. 385 (the fact of outcries by other passengers in a collision, but not the details of them, held admissible; the opinion in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Simpson, 111 Ky. 754, 64 S. W. 733, qualified); 1907, Kennedy v. Com., — Ky. —, 100 S. W. 242 (child of murdered man); La. 1881, State v. Horton, 33 La. An. 289; 1886, State v. Moore, 38 La. An. 66; 1886, State v. Corcoran, La. An. 949; 1896, State v. Desroches, 48 La. An. 428, 19 So. 250 (utterance of a bystander during a robbery, identifying the defendant, admitted); Mass. 1897, Hartnett v. McMahan, 168 Mass. 3, 46 N. E. 392 (remarks of a bystander during an affray, telling the plaintiff to let the defendant alone, admitted as "a kind of sidelight without which the picture would be incomplete"); Mich. 1878, Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 505; Mo. 1883, State v. Walker, 78 Mo. 386; 1886, State v. Gabriel, 88 Mo. 631, 639; 1893, State v. Duncan, 116 Mo. 288, 292, 310, 22 S. W. 699 (by a bystander to an arresting officer, "There is the man that did it," admitted); 1894, State v. Kaiser, 124 Mo. 651, 28 S. W. 182; Mont. 1896, State v. Biggerstaff, 17 Mont. 510, 43 Pac. 709 (deceased and others exclaimed as the defendant approached, "There he comes with a gun"; admitted); N. J. 1868, Castner v. Sliker, 33 N. J. L. 97; N. C. 1901, State v. McCourry, 128 N. C. 594, 38 S. E. 883; 1903, Seawell v. R. Co., 133 N. C. 515, 45 S. E. 850 (mob at a railroad station); 1921, State v. Carraway, 181 N. C. 561, 107 S. E. 142 (manslaughter; bystander's exclamation, admitted); Oh. 1914, State v. Lasecki, 90 Oh. 10, 106 N. E. 660 (murder); Okl. 1905, Baysinger v. Terr., 15 Okl. 428, 82 Pac. 728 (murder); Or. 1922, Hornschuch v. Southern Pac. R. Co., — Or. —, 203 Pac. 886 (personal injury; statement of a passenger in the destroyed automobile, admitted); Pa. 1897, Coll v. Transit Co., 180 Pa. 618, 37 Atl. 89 (admitting declarations of a bystander, who had run up to help the plaintiff); Tenn. 1911, Cooper v. State, 123 Tenn. 37, 138 S. W. 826 (homicide); Tex. 1884, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Collier, 62 Tex. 320; Ut. 1910, Cromeenes v. San Pedro L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 37 Utah 475, 109 Pac. 10 (passenger on a train running over a boy; one judge diss.); Wis. 1893, Reed v. Madison, 85 Wis. 667, 673.

repudiated. This is sufficiently shown in the quotations already set forth (ante, § 1749, par. b).[1] It remains here to note a few persisting traces of this early and spurious limitation to strict contemporaneity.

(a) First, in the quotations already set forth (ante, § 1749), a constant effort is noticeable to answer the argument that the utterance must be exactly contemporaneous. This is merely the result of the earlier prevalence of the spurious doctrine, which had to be met and disposed of.

(b) Secondly, the early Massachusetts cases of Com. v. McPike[2] and Com. v. Hackett,[3] which were in this country the landmarks of the borrowed doctrine, are still occasionally quoted or cited, even in opinions accepting the modern and correct doctrine; and these cases are still capable of misleading. It is to be noted that they are unsound and obsolete. They and their followers are distinguishable by the fact that they borrow almost literally the language of the Verbal Act doctrine (post, §§ 1770, 1776).

(c) Thirdly, in the Courts where this borrowed doctrine of strict contemporaneity still appears, the inclination is to stigmatize an excluded declaration as "narrative;" this term being used as meaning an assertion of a past fact.[4] This test for exclusion is of course unsound, because practically all the utterances offered under the present Exception are "narrative," in the sense of an assertion of a past fact. The statements, constantly admitted, of the circumstances of a homicidal quarrel or of a railroad collision, are commonly of facts occurring prior in time to the utterance; and wherever such are admitted, it must be in spite of their being "narrative." Moreover, a "narrative" may in strictness be of events occurring at the moment of speaking (as, "I am bleeding"), and its application to past events alone is a misuse of words. The term "narrative" serves merely to mislead, and should be discarded.

(d) Fourthly, the confusion between the Verbal Act doctrine of strict contemporaneity and the liberal time-allowance of the present Exception (ante, § 1756. [1] The authorities cited in § 1750 show the general state of the law to-day.

Distinguish also the application of the phrase 'res gestæ' to the declarations of an agent or conspirator, during the agency or conspiracy; e. g.: 1903, Koenig v. Union D. R. Co., 173 Mo. 698, 73 S. W. 637; 1903, Balding v. Andrews, 12 N. D. 267, 96 N. W. 305; 1902, Lambert v. La Conner T. & T. Co., 30 Wash. 346, 70 Pac. 960; and cases cited ante, §§ 1078, 1079.

[2] 1849, 3 Cush. 184.

[3] 1861, 2 All. 136 (Bigelow, C. J., treats the words "I'm stabbed — I'm gone — Dan Hackett has stabbed me," as "not an abstract or narrative statement of a past occurrence, . . . but an exclamation or statement contemporaneous with the main transaction, forming a natural and material part of it, and competent as being original evidence in the nature of 'res gestæ'"); so also the following: 1857, Lane v. Bryant, 9 Gray Mass. 245; 1871, Brownell v. R. Co., 47 Mo. 239; 1874, Rockwell v. Taylor, 41 Conn. 59.

The hybrid effect of the two principles blended is seen in the language of the Georgia Code (Rev. C. 1910, § 5766) on this subject, which admits declarations accompanying an act (the Verbal Act doctrine) or so nearly connected therewith in time as to be free from all suspicion of device or afterthought (the present Spontaneous Declarations exception).

[4] See Com. v. Hackett, quoted supra; Williamson v. R. Co., 144 Mass. 150, 10 N. E. 790; McKinnon v. Norcross, 148 Mass. 538, 22 N. E. 183. In the following case this logic was carried to extremes: 1880, Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 83 (Warden, J.: "The deceased is supposed to have said a few minutes after the shooting, 'Prince Jones shot me.' This is as clearly narrative as if a greater length of time had elapsed").

§ 1749, par. b) left its mark, in England, in the shape of a long and somewhat acrimonious controversy over the ruling in R. v. Bedingfield.[5] This ruling was as follows:

1879, R. v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox Cr. 341: "The prisoner had relations with the deceased, . . . and had distinctly threatened to kill her by cutting her throat. She carried on the business of a laundress, with two women as assistants, the prisoner living a little distance from her. . . . They were together in a room [in her house] some time. He went out, and she was found by one of the assistants lying senseless on the floor, her head resting on a foot-stool. He went to a spirit-shop and bought some spirits, which he took to the house, and went again into the room where she was, both the assistants being at that time in the yard. In a minute or two the deceased came suddenly out of the house towards the women with her throat cut, and on meeting one of them she said something, pointing backwards towards the house. In a few minutes she was dead. In the course of the opening speech on the part of the prosecution it was proposed to state what she said. It was objected to on the part of the prisoner that it was not admissible, and COCKBURN, C. J., said: He had carefully considered the question and was clear that it could not be admitted. . . . Could it be admissible, having been made in the absence of the prisoner, as part of the 'res gestæ'? But it is not so admissible, for it was not part of anything done, or something said while something was being done, but something said after something done. It was not as if, while being in the room, and while the act was being done, she had said something which was heard. . . . When the witness was called, . . . she was first asked as to the circumstances, and stated that the deceased came out of the house bleeding very much at the throat, and seeming very much frightened, and then said something, and died in ten minutes. It was then proposed to prove what she said, but COCKBURN, C. J., said it was not admissible. Anything, he said, uttered by the deceased at the time the act was being done would be admissible, as for instance if she had been heard to say something, as 'Don't, Harry.' But here it was something stated by her after it was all over, whatever it was, and after the act was completed."[6]

[5] The controversy will be found abbreviated by Professor Thayer in his article on Bedingfield's Case, in 14 Amer. L. Rev. 817, continued in 15 id. 1. The controversial articles appeared in full in pamphlets by the eminent Chief Justice and by the learned Mr. (later Justice) Wm. Pitt Taylor, author of Taylor on Evidence. Chief Justice Cockburn's article was printed in the Law Journal, 1880, p. 5.

[6] Of this ruling it may be said: (1) From the Verbal Act point of view, the declaration did not accompany the fatal deed, was not contemporaneous, and therefore was rightly excluded; from the same point of view, moreover, a declaration by one person about the deed of another could not possibly be received; (2) as involving a question under the present Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations, the ruling in Bedingfield's Case is plainly erroneous, and would almost certainly not be followed in this country; the facts of the case, in respect to the controlling influence of the woman's situation and the recency of the shock, make it one of the strongest in judicial annals. The arguments of the ensuing controversy between Chief Justice Cockburn and Mr. Taylor dealt indiscriminately with the Verbal Act precedents, as well as with others more germane; but, without attempting to examine the merits of these arguments, it is sufficient to say that the general practice in England up to that time — the practice which did not lead to rulings published in the law-reports — seems to have been as liberal as that which has since obtained in this country. In the Palmer poisoning trial (1856; Notable British Trials Ser.), some of the most damaging evidence, admitted without question by any one, is supportable only on the liberal principle of Spontaneous Declarations; for example, when the deceased was asked, after recovering from one of his attacks of convulsions: "What do you think was the cause of that, Mr. Cook?" he replied, "The pills that Palmer gave me at half-past ten o'clock."

It may be thought that the case of R. v. Bedingfield will not be observed in England as a precedent; 1902, Phipson, Evidence, 3d ed., London, p. 49: "In R. v. Bedingfield, it has generally been thought that Cockburn, C. J., applied the rule too strictly"; 1914, Christie's Case, 10 Cr. App. 141 (indecent assault on a boy; R. v. Bedingfield commented on).

§ 1757. (III) Certain Spurious Enlargements, borrowed from the 'Res Gestæ' phrase; all Declarations which are "Part of the Transaction" are admissible. The true scope and application (so far as there can be any) of the 'res gestæ' phrase is later examined in detail (§§ 1666–1770). It is proper here, however, to endeavor to ascertain what influence it has had practically in shaping the rules for the present Exception.

The phrase 'res gestæ,' so far as it has a legitimate use, implies that when we are disputing about a particular occurrence, evidence relating to any part of the occurrence is admissible. This is a mere truism; it is the converse of the fundamental proposition that evidence can be offered only of facts in issue or relevant to the issue (ante, § 9). Thus nothing is added in the way either of limitation or of enlightenment. We are told merely that evidence may be offered on a certain point because that point is part of the matter we are disputing about.

(1) Origin of the phrase. How then did the phrase come to be applied in the present class of cases? First, it had already been much used in expressing the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1767); the declaration accompanying and making definite an equivocal act was seen to be not really testimonial in effect and therefore not subject to the Hearsay rule, and this distinction was expressed by saying that it was admissible as "a part of the 'res gestæ,'" i. e. a part of the act in question, — as it undoubtedly was. Next, this phrase, "a part of the 'res gestæ,'" in itself conveniently and enticingly obscure, was given an independent and self-sufficient force, and all sorts of spoken words, not genuinely verbal parts of the act, were admitted as "part of the 'res gestæ'" or details of the affair. Thus the phrase "part of the 'res gestæ'" came to be the shibboleth for admitting anything in the shape of words which could not be brought under one of the standard exceptions to the Hearsay rule. This loose usage was materially assisted, if not originally propagated, by a paragraph of Professor Greenleaf's (as well as by his indiscriminate use of 'res gestæ' for sundry kinds of hearsay evidence):

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 108: "There are other declarations which are admitted as original evidence, being distinguished from hearsay by their connection with the principal fact under investigation. The affairs of men consist of a complication of circumstances so intimately interwoven as to be hardly separable from each other. Each owes its birth to some preceding circumstance, and in its turn becomes the prolific parent of others; and each, during its existence, has its inseparable attributes and its kindred facts, materially affecting its character, and essential to be known in order to a right understanding of its nature. These surrounding circumstances, constituting parts of the 'res gestæ,' may always be shown to the jury along with the principal fact, and their admissibility is determined by the judge according to the degree of their relation to that fact, and in the exercise of his sound discretion; it being extremely difficult, if not impossible, to bring this class of cases within the limits of a more particular description."

This passage, and the structure of decisions resting on it, have no basis of principle. They commit the fallacy of confusing the details of an occurrence with human assertions about those details. No doubt, in genuine cases of Verbal Acts — such as claims of ownership by one in possession — where the words are not taker assertively or testimonially, they may be properly described as verbal parts of the act, of the "principal fact," of the 'res gestæ.' But where (for example) in a marine collision the pilot exclaims, "The helm is hard a-starboard, and the steering-gear does not work," or in a railway accident a passenger exclaims, "The cars are off the track and the coupling is broken," we are using these utterances in a purely assertive and testimonial manner. The fact (if a fact) that the cars were off the track, or that the helm was hard a-starboard, is one of the external items of the tortious act, — a "part of the 'res gestæ,'" if the phrase pleases us. But the statement of the pilot or the passenger that this was what happened is just as plainly a human assertion and testimony as if it were said on the stand, and is therefore clear hearsay, and must be brought under some definite Hearsay Exception before it can be received. Calling an assertion "a part of the transaction" cannot make it any the less hearsay testimony, when it is used assertively and testimonially, no matter how "inseparable from" or "intimately interwoven with" the affair it may be:

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 11th, 13th, 17th, 18th days, Times' Rep. pt. 3, pp. 154, 170, pt. 4, p. 3, pt. 5, pp. 103, 179; the Irish Land League and its leaders being charged with a conspiracy to encourage outrage and agrarian violence, and the general state of the country as to disquiet and apprehension being a part of the issue, it was conceded that the fact of repeated complaints being made to the police and to employers by tenants and others was provable; in this process, testimony was proposed of employers as to reports made to them by herdsmen and others of injuries to cattle, etc., the reports being offered in verbal detail. To this Sir Charles Russell objected, for Mr. Parnell, as hearsay. The Attorney-General, in reply: "I would respectfully submit that my learned friend has forgotten the rule that the 'res gestæ' may be proved, and if in the course of the proof of the facts it is shown that servants have made inquiries with regard to them and reported the result, those reports form part of the 'res gestæ' for the purpose of ascertaining under what circumstances the occurrences took place." Sir C. Russell: "As regards the 'res gestæ,' what is the 'res'? That certain cattle were injured. How can it be part of the 'res gestæ' that a man who was present, and saw the injury, afterwards made a statement to a third person of what he had seen? To say that this is part of the 'res gestæ' is an entire misapprehension of the rule." . . . President Hannen: "The fact that a particular report had been made by a person in discharge of his duty was admissible in evidence, — not that the contents of that report should be taken as evidence of the facts to which it related. If the matter rested there, without there being any other evidence of the facts except that contained in the report, that could not be regarded as evidence of the facts by the Court. . . . There is a broad distinction between a thing being merely admissible in evidence and its being taken as proof of the facts alleged." [1]

It is important to observe this vital distinction between the testimonial and the non-testimonial use of language, for its neglect has been the root of the fallacy and the source of the whole confusion. To admit hearsay testimony simply because it was uttered at the time something else was going on is to introduce an arbitrary and unreasoned test, and to remove all limits of principle; and this has been the result.

§ 1757. [1] See another good illustration in Milne v. Leisler, quoted post, § 1768.

(2) Enlargement of the rule. The effect of the employment of this phrase, "part of the 'res gestæ,'" "part of the transaction," on the present Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations has been the opposite of that of the Verbal Act doctrine just noticed (ante, §§ 1752–1756). It has enlarged rather than limited the rule, though the effect has been none the less confusing. Instead of narrow restrictions, excluding that which ought to be admitted, we have here broad and almost meaningless phrases, admitting testimonial utterances pell-mell, and making havoc with principle. What specific effects may be detected in the present Exception?

First, there are a few cases, typified by State v. Wagner and U. S. v. King (quoted ante, § 1747), in which the Spontaneous Exclamations exception is found practically unadulterated by this 'res gestæ' phrasing.

Secondly, there are many cases, typically Hill's Case and Merkle v. Bennington (quoted ante, 1749), in which the 'res gestæ' language appears, but as a mere flavoring. The words are used ("part of the transaction," and the like), but they have no force and no practical significance, and the genuine principle of Spontaneous Exclamations is the essential doctrine.[2]

Thirdly, there are numerous cases in which the 'res gestæ' phrasing is given a more than nominal force. There is an effort to work it out in application, and, while the Spontaneous Exclamations principle actually controls and the result is the same as in the preceding class, it appears in the form of a development of the 'res gestæ' doctrine. There is said to be a "causal connection" between the accident or the affray and the declaration; the latter is an "emanation" of the former, or "springs from" it; there are "connecting circumstances"; and thus the declaration is construed as "a part of the transaction."[3]

Fourthly, there are cases, mainly earlier ones, in which the two doctrines are applied side by side, the 'res gestæ' language expressing the main principle, and the Spontaneous Exclamations doctrine (in the form of a pointing out that the statements are apparently sincere and natural) appearing subordinately, rather as corroborating and justifying the other than as an independent or self-sufficient principle.[4]

[2] Another example: 1855, Scates, C. J., in Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 Ill. 568 ("The conduct and exclamations of passengers in the cars were not improperly admitted . . . Such general conduct, with the exclamations involuntarily thrown out by appearances of imminent peril, may be regarded as a part of the 'res gestæ' for this purpose").

[3] No doubt these phrases also, to some extent, serve to express (unconsciously on the part of the judges) the same idea described in § 1749, par. a, ante, — the idea that the declaration must have been caused by some exciting influence startling enough to produce it and make it natural. The thought that the declaration must "spring from" or be "an emanation of" the occasion is the same in practical effect as the thought that there must be an occasion startling enough to cause them naturally; but the former and correct notion is veiled in the borrowed and meaningless phraseology of 'res gestæ.' Clear examples of this attitude are found in Little Rock R. Co. v. Leverett and Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Buck, quoted ante, § 1747. The following passage illustrates a more elusive form: 1875, Brickell, C. J., in Wesley v. State, 52 Ala. 187: "The exclamation of the deceased, 'Jake, what are you doing here?' was coincident in point of time with the main fact, — the violence producing his death. . . . It sprung from the very character of the facts,—was natural, voluntary, spontaneous, and was not the result of design."

[4] The following passages illustrate this,

Fifthly, there are many cases in which the 'res gestæ' phraseology is applied in its pure and arbitrary form; i. e. there is no attempt to discover a circumstantial guarantee of sincerity (whether there was time to concoct a story, whether the excitement of the moment dominated), and the decision turns merely upon the question whether the declaration can be regarded as "a part of the transaction," or "a part of the 'res gestæ.'" This sort of case is common. Probably in recent times, however, its numbers are greatly in the minority. It may be said to have two varieties, one representing a tendency to stricter construction, the other a tendency to liberal and looser construction. Of the former, R. v. Bedingfield (quoted supra) is typical; in a mixed phraseology of Verbal Act and 'res gestæ' language, the Court argue out the arbitrary and insoluble question whether the declaration is "a part of the transaction" and "contemporaneous with it," adopting the strictest view of what constitutes the "transaction" and of what may be said to be "contemporaneous." Of the latter sort are dozens of American cases in which the Courts stretch the idea of a "transaction" to the most liberal and unjustifiable extent." [5]

The important line to be drawn is between the first four and the fifth sorts. In the first four classes, we are dealing with a genuine Hearsay Exception of Spontaneous Exclamations, more or less tainted by spurious phraseology and ideas from the 'res gestæ' doctrine. But in the fifth sort we are not dealing with any doctrine of Spontaneous Exclamations at all; we have simply an unmeaning and useless form of words — possibly not a Hearsay Exception, certainly not anything definite— usurping the place of the principle truly applicable.

Sixthly, it must be added, a few rulings show a hopeless conglomeration of ideas, invoking the 'res gestæ' phrase for various kinds of utterances not akin either to Spontaneous Exclamations or to Verbal Acts, and even applying Pool v. Bridges being often cited: 1826, Parsons, C. J., in Pool v. Bridges, 4 Pick. Mass. 378 (declarations were offered of an absconded debtor, to show the ownership of goods; the declarations being made while the debtor was sorting the goods of different creditors; they were held admissible "as a part of the transaction"; "It gives some importance to such declarations that they are made in the ordinary course of transactions, without reference to any controversy or any counter claim of property, and also that the declarations are against the interest of the party. Now the declarations of Scholfield have these circumstantial interwoven or connected with the principal fact or event which it characterizes as to be regarded as a part of the transaction itself, and also to clearly negative any premeditation or purpose to manufacture testimony").

[5] The following passages will serve as an instance: 1890, Avery, J., in Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 623, 11 S. E. 665: ("The declarations of a voter as to his qualifications generally, if made at the time of voting, are competent as a part of the 'res gestæ'"); 1882, Niblack, J., in Dyer v. Dyer, 87 Ind. 20 ("As regards the execution of the will, . . . everything which occurred the day before, in connection with the execution of the first will, was under the circumstances part of the 'res gestæ'").

It must be added that it is possible in this view to use previous decisions to some extent as precedents determining what shall be taken as "a part of the transaction"; while, as already pointed out (ante, § 1749, par. b) under the pure Spontaneous Exclamations doctrine each case would rest upon its own circumstances.

1882, Mulkey, J., in Lander v. People, 104 Ill. 256 (the fact of recognition of a violator on the day after was admitted, with an accompanying declaration: "The spontaneous exclamation, 'There goes the man,' with the response, 'Yes, there he goes,' is highly characteristic of the fact of their recognition. The true test . . . is, the act, declaration, or exclamation must be so intimately it to evidence not consisting in verbal utterances; this and other uses of the phrase, not affecting cases coming under the present Exception, are elsewhere analyzed (post, §§ 1796, 1797).

B. SPECIAL FORMS OF THE EXCEPTION

§ 1760. Woman's Complaint of Rape; (1) Doctrine in England and Canada. The use in evidence of a woman's complaint of rape, either as a simple fact or in its detailed statements, to corroborate her testimony on the stand or to rebut the inference from her supposed failure to complain, has already been treated in dealing with the Corroboration of Witnesses (ante, §§ 1134–1140). It has, however, by some Courts been believed that such utterances, including their details of statement, could be received on the footing of genuine hearsay assertions, apparently under the present Exception. The practical difference would be that the limitations necessary in using such evidence merely in testimonial corroboration [1] would not apply, and the evidence could be more freely received. It remains, therefore, to ascertain how far such a complaint is receivable as a direct Exception to the Hearsay rule. If it is so receivable, its proper place would seem to be under the present head.

In England, the evidential use of those outcries and explanations came down to us in the 1700s as a traditional relic of the old law of hue and cry. Not only in such cases, but in all charges of violence, the accuser must show, to sustain his charge, that he made hue and cry, alarming the neighborhood, freshly after the occurrence.[2] The application of this principle to rape cases is seen in the following passage:

> 12— (?), H. de Bracton, f. 147: "When therefore a virgin has been so deflowered and overpowered, against the peace of the lord the king, forthwith and while the act is fresh she ought to repair with hue and cry to the neighboring vills and there display to honest men the injury done to her, the blood and her dress stained with blood, and the tearing of her dress; and so she ought to go to the provost of the hundred and to the serjeant of the lord the king and to the coroners and to the viscount and make her appeal at the first county court." [3]

This practice seems not to have been seriously questioned until towards the end of the 1700s. Then, in Brazier's Case, the use of these complaints, not merely as a formal prerequisite nor yet as corroborative, but assertively as evidence of the details related, was perceived; and it was seen to be necessary to use them, if at all, as a Hearsay exception. If the female was an infant and incompetent to testify, there would be some reason for doing this, on the principle of necessity (ante, § 1421). But the judges in this case finally decided that the infant would have been competent, and therefore that the extrajudicial evidence could not be used:

§ 1760. [1] As noted ante, §§ 1134–1140.
[2] Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, II, 576.
[3] See also Bracton, f. 121; Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 634, II, 279, 284.

1779, Brazier's Case, East's Pleas of the Crown, I, 433; a child of five years, after the rape, made statements to the mother on reaching home; and on the next day identified the prisoner; "All the judges, except Gould and Willes, Js., held that this evidence of the information of the child ought not to have been received, as she herself was not heard on oath. . . . Gould and Willes, Js., held that, it being recently after the fact, so that it excluded a possibility of practising on her, it was a part of the fact or transaction itself and therefore admissible; and Buller, J., held the same, if by law the child could not be examined on oath. But as to what happened the next day, Gould, J., thought it not admissible, by reason of the danger of her being influenced in the interval. But on the 29th April all the judges, being assembled, unanimously agreed that a child of any age, if she were capable of distinguishing between good and evil, might be examined upon oath, and consequently that evidence of what she had said ought not to have been received."

This laid the foundation for a subsequent course of rulings in England by which it was settled that the details of the woman's statement could not be received, i. e. that the statement could not be used testimonially and as a hearsay exception. The settlement was reached only through a series of Nisi Prius rulings, and the matter may be said to have remained long in doubt. The doubt apparently came chiefly from a failure to appreciate clearly why the Courts should be willing to receive the fact of the complaint, i. e. corroboratively (ante, § 1134), but should reject the details stated; and the judges seemed singularly unwilling or unable to elucidate the reason (as it has been elucidated in later times in this country). But the rule of thumb was settled,[4] though not without some misgivings, as the following language of Baron Parke shows:

1839, PARKE, B., in R. v. Walker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 212: "The sense of the thing certainly is that the jury should in the first instance know the nature of the complaint made by the prosecutrix and all that she then said. But, for reasons which I never could understand, the usage has obtained that the prosecutrix's counsel should only inquire generally whether a complaint was made by the prosecutrix of the prisoner's conduct towards her, leaving the counsel of the latter to bring before the jury the particulars of that complaint by cross-examination."

Finally, a series of rulings, beginning with the close of the 1800s, repudiated the original practice and declared the statement admissible; though with limitations borrowed from the principle of corroboration (ante, § 1134).[5]

[4] 1817, R. v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 242; 1839, R. v. Walker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 212; 1840, R. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 420; 1841, R. v. Alexander, 2 Craw. & D. 126, semble; 1842, R. v. Osborne, 1 Car. & M. 622; 1846, R. v. Nicholas, 2 C. & K. 246; 1860, R. v. Eyre, 2 F. & F. 579; 1877, R. v. Wood, 14 Cox Cr. 46.

[5] 1896, R. v. Lillyman, 2 Q. B. 167, 170, 177, 18 Cox Cr. 345 (but here the peculiar distinction is taken that "we are bound by no authority to support the existing usage of limiting evidence of the complaint to the bare fact that a complaint was made; . . . when the whole statement is laid before the jury, they are less likely to draw wrong and adverse inferences, and may sometimes come to the conclusion that what the woman said amounted to no real complaint of any offence committed by the accused"; yet "it is the duty of the judge to impress upon the jury in every case that they are not entitled to make use of the complaint as any evidence whatever of those facts, or for any other purpose than that we have stated," i. e. "to judge for themselves whether the conduct of the woman was consistent with her testimony on oath given in the witness-box negativing her consent"); 1898, R. v. Kiddle, 19 Cox Cr. 77 (cited ante, § 1136, n. 2; R. v. Lillyman followed); 1900, R. v. Merry, 19 Cox Cr. 442 (indecent assault upon a child; a complaint not volunteered, but elicited by a question from the mother,

The modern English doctrine is accepted in Canada.[6]

§ 1761. Same: American Doctrine. In the United States, the general consensus of decision has accepted the original and orthodox result, and does not receive the complaints as testimony under a hearsay exception; although practically the effect of this exclusion has been undermined in some instances by a liberal employment of the complaint-details as corroborative of the woman's testimony.[1]

But by a few Courts the complaints have been received testimonially, on the case in chief, to prove the facts asserted, and thus as an exception to the Hearsay rule. There is some use of the 'res gestæ' phraseology; but the clear idea of the Spontaneous Exclamations exception seems to have dominated the result:[2] held not admissible under R. v. Lillyman); 1905, R. v. Osborne, 1 K. B. 551 (indecent assault upon a child of twelve; a complaint made in answer to a question by a companion, held admissible on the facts; but "questions of a suggestive or leading nature will indeed . . . render it inadmissible"); 1907, Chesney v. Newsholme, [1908] P. 301 (immoral acts by a clergyman with a boy; the boy's statement to his mother on the same evening, admitted, but not his statement made the next evening); 1909, Hedges' Case, 3 Cr. App. 262 (complaint 8 days afterwards, received); 1910, Graham's Case, 4 Cr. App. 218 (complaint a month later, received); 1914, Christie's Case, 10 Cr. App. 141, A. C. 45 (indecent assault upon a little boy; the boy's identification of the accused within a few minutes, held inadmissible, per Lord Atkinson, on the ground that "complaint is only admissible to negative assent," following R. v. Lillyman; Osborne's Case was cited in argument, but the other judges did not pass upon the point; the above-quoted statement is of course unsound, on the present theory of the hearsay exception); 1916, R. v. Norcott, 1 K. B. 347 (indecent assault; a statement made in answer to an imperative question, here admitted; R. v. Osborne explained).

[6] 1906, R. v. Spuzzum, 12 Br. C. 291 (complaint made on the next day, admitted, in discretion); 1907, R. v. Clarke, 38 N. Br. 11 (certain complaint details here admitted on other grounds); 1909, R. v. Bowes, 20 Ont. L. R. 111 (carnal knowledge of a child of 7 or 8; statement to the mother, admitted); 1908, R. v. Dunning, 1 Sask. 391 (complaints made in answer to leading questions, excluded; following R. v. Osborne, Eng.); 1914, R. v. McGivney, 15 D. L. R. 550, B. C. (indecent assault on a child of 6 years; the complaint made to the grandmother, in answer to leading questions, and not until 10 days or 2 weeks later, held admissible, in the trial Court's discretion, following R. v. Osborne, Eng.; two judges diss.); 1918, Shorten v. The King, 42 D. L. R. 591, Can. I. C. (carnal knowledge of a female child; the child's statement to the mother, admitted, though made after a threat by the mother to spank her if she did not tell the whole truth; R. v. Norcott and R. v. Osborne, Eng., followed); 1921, R. v. Schiraba, 62 D. L. R. 308, Man. (R. v. Lillyman, Eng., followed).

For the question whether the complaint is receivable on charges where the woman's consent is immaterial, see ante, § 1135.

§ 1761. [1] The cases are collected ante, §§ 1134–1140, under that rule.

[2] Accord: Alabama: 1871, Lacy v. State, 45 Ala. 80 (conceding the application of the theory, where "the accounts were so connected in point of time with the injuries inflicted on the victim as to constitute a part of the 'res gestæ'"); 1884, Griffin v. State, 76 id. 29, 31 (hinting at the same); Columbia (Dist.): 1893, Snowden v. U. S., 2 D. C. App. 89 (the girl's statements on the same day, when found by her grandmother, admitted on the 'res gestæ' theory); Connecticut: 1876, State v. Kinney, 44 Conn. 156 (quoted supra); Georgia: 1875, McMath v. State, 55 Ga. 303, 307; Hawaii: 1906, Terr. v. Schilling, 17 Haw. 249, 265 ("the entire conversation" admitted); Illinois: 1904, Cunningham v. People, 210 Ill. 410, 71 N. E. 389 ("such complaint is admitted upon the theory that the statement of the prosecutrix represents the spontaneous expression of her outraged feelings"; hence a statement made "in response to questions put to her" — here, three weeks after the alleged offence — may be excluded); 1916, People v. Moore, 276 Ill. 392, 114 N. E. 906 (complaint made in answer to a question, "What is the matter?" by another girl, who met the complainant and noticed that she had been crying, held inadmissible; this is an unsound limitation on the rule; in Cunningham v. People, the complaint was three weeks later, here it was the very same evening; moreover, the weeping was in effect a complaint which led to the question); Iowa: 1890, McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Ia. 325, 45 N. W. 877 (quoted supra); 1905, State v. Andrews, 130 Ia. 609,

1876, PARK, C. J., in State v. Kinney, 44 Conn. 156: "Her natural impulses would prompt her to tell all the details of the transaction. Why, on the same principle, ought not her statement of the details to be evidence?"

1890, ROBINSON, J., in McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Ia. 325, 45 N. W. 877 (citing Ins. Co. v. Mosley, supra, § 1747): "Moreover, we think the declaration was admissible as a part of the 'res gestæ.' It was made but a few moments after the alleged ravishment had been accomplished, and while declarant was under the influence of the mental excitement which it produced. It was made within such time after the act to which it referred and under such circumstances as to preclude the element of premeditation."

This heterodox result seems in policy a satisfactory one. If there is any situation in which the Spontaneous Exclamations principle finds typical application, it is to be found in the circumstances evoking these outcries and complaints. Why not discard the indirect method of securing their use and freely accept them under the present hearsay exception?

There is, however, an apparent flaw in this argument, which seems to nullify it. For example, in a railroad collision, we have the exciting causes known by other evidence; and under other Exceptions to the Hearsay rule — for example, regular entries, we first prove the regularity of the entries by other evidence. Now in the present case, if we accept the complaint testimonially, do we not admit it in advance as evidence of these very circumstances which should first be proved to make it admissible?

The solution seems to be as follows: If there is no other evidence of an assault, or where there is evidence merely of intercourse but not necessarily against the woman's consent, we are in truth committing the error of accepting her statement as itself evidence of the very facts which should first be otherwise shown in order to make the declarations spontaneous. But if there is already other evidence of a violent assault, and the statement is useful as disclosing the identity of the assailant or the further circumstances of the assault, we are not reasoning in a circle, and there is no objection to admitting the statement.

105 N. W. 215 (admissible; but not citing McMurrin v. Rigby, and making a distinction between the complaints of a "very young child" and others); 1911, State v. Novak, 151 Ia. 536 N. W. 26; 1917, State v. Powers, 181 Ia. 452, 164 N. W. 856; 1920, State v. John, 188 Ia. 494, 176 N. W. 280 (excluded here because of lapse of time); Louisiana: 1919, State v. Cole, 145 La. 900, 83 So. 184 (statement made immediately after the alleged act, admitted, but not statements made in subsequent conversations; no authorities cited); Michigan: 1874, People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 279; 1884, People v. Brown, 53 Mich. 531, 534, 19 N. W. 172 (suggesting obiter the application of the present principle); 1886, People v. Gage, 62 Mich. 271, 273, 28 N. W. 835 (allowing it exceptionally; but confusing this principle with that of § 1134, ante, and therefore admitting a complaint made long after, because the silence has been accounted for); 1888, People v. Glover, 71 Mich. 303, 306, 38 N. W. 874 (approving the preceding); 1893, People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86, 89, 56 N. W. 1102 (treating the Gage case as going to the extreme, and refusing to apply its principle here under the circumstances); 1895, People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460, 62 N. W. 556 (same); 1906, People v. Harris, 144 Mich. 12, 107 N. W. 715 (not decided); North Dakota: 1907, State v. Werner, 16 N. D. 83, 112 N. W. 60 (when made immediately after the crime; but sanctioning also the use under § 1138, n. 2, ante, where the limitations would be different); 1913, State v. Apley, 25 N. D. 298, 141 N. W. 740; Porto Rico: 1914, People v. Anglada, 20 P. R. 11 (citing with approval the text above); Rhode Island: 1893, State v. Fitzsimon, 18 R. I. 236, 241, 27 Atl. 446 ("what the prosecutrix said," admitted); Texas: 1904, Kenney v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 79 S. W. 817 (collecting prior cases); 1905, Wiggins v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 538, 84 S. W. 821.

For the cases in other jurisdictions, excluding the details of the complaint, and thus repudiating the Exception, see ante, §§ 1134–1140.

Where the prosecutrix is a child too young to be a witness, the statements should nevertheless be receivable;[3] because, although in general a hearsay declarant must not lack the qualifications of an ordinary witness (ante, § 1424), yet the peculiar nature of the present Exception (ante, § 1747) renders this principle substantially inapplicable to children; furthermore, the orthodox common-law limitations as to children's testimonial capacity are inherently unsound and impractical (ante, § 509) and should not be extended by analogy.

§ 1762. Owner's Complaint after Robbery or Larceny. The complaint of an owner or possessor of goods, made speedily after an alleged robbery or larceny, is by some Courts regarded as receivable upon the present theory. It may, however, also be treated as a prior consistent statement, receivable to repel the suggestion of recent contrivance, upon a general principle applicable to all witnesses (ante, § 1142).

§ 1763. Charge made in Travail by Mother in Bastardy Case. The charge uttered by the mother of a bastard in her travail, naming the defendant as the father, is by long tradition regarded as admissible, in some of the older States. Such a situation would seem to present genuinely and completely the circumstances which render a spontaneous exclamation admissible under the present principle. Nevertheless, the Courts have seemed to treat the subject wholly from the point of view of consistent statements corroborating a witness (ante, § 1141).

§ 1764. Statements as to Private Boundary. The Massachusetts doctrine admitting declarations about private boundary, by the owner in possession, made while on the land and pointing them out (ante, § 1567), is in the judicial language applied with some invocation of the 'res gestæ' phraseology. The circumstantial guarantee of its trustworthiness (ante, § 1422) resembles to some extent that required by the principle of the present Exception. But there is a vital distinction, namely, that under that doctrine the declarant must be shown to be deceased, — a requirement never made for the present Exception. The Massachusetts doctrine seems therefore to be widely separated from the present Exception.

§ 1765. "Self-Serving" Statements by an Accused Person. There is no principle of Evidence especially excluding "self-serving" statements by an accused or by any one else. The Hearsay rule excludes all extrajudicial

[3] Accord: 1779, Brazier's Case, semble (quoted ante, § 1760; so understood by Parke, B., in R. v. Guttridges, 1840, 9 C. & P. 471); 1900, People v. Marrs, 125 Mich. 376, 84 N. W. 284 (cited ante, § 1136, n. 1); 1899, Croomes v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 672, 51 S. W. 924, 53 S. W. 882; 1904, Kenney v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 79 S. W. 817 (repudiating Smith v. State, 41 Tex. 352; Davidson, P. J., diss.); 1905, Wiggins v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 538, 84 S. W. 821; 1888, Hannon v. State, 70 Wis. 448, 452, 36 N. W. 1 (cited ante, § 1136, n. 1).

Contra: 1905, State v. Andrews, Ia., semble (cited supra, n. 2); 1869, Weldon v. State, 32 Ind. 81; 1845, People v. McGee, 1 Denio 19, 22.

But these last two cases, cited ante, § 1138, n. 2, are attributable to the different theory of rape-complaint there applied. In England, R. v. Nicholas, 2 C. & K. 246 (1846), is contra, but in England even an adult's statement was inadmissible (ante, § 1750); so that the Court there merely refused to do more for a child's statement than for an adult's.

assertions; and therefore the only inquiry need be whether such assertions are covered by some Exception to that rule, or whether utterances amenable to it are evidential in any indirect way apart from their assertive value. There are one or two instances in which such a use of an accused's utterances partakes somewhat of the reasons for the present exception (ante, § 1732, post, § 1781).

SUB-TITLE III: HEARSAY RULE NOT APPLICABLE (VERBAL ACTS, RES GESTÆ, ETC.).

CHAPTER LVIII.

§ 1766. General Principle; Limits of the Hearsay Rule and 'Res Gestæ.' The true nature of the Hearsay rule is nowhere better illustrated and emphasized than in those cases which fall without the scope of its prohibition. The essence of the Hearsay rule is the distinction between the testimonial (or assertive) use of human utterances and their non-testimonial use.

The theory of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1361) is that, when a human utterance is offered as evidence of the truth of the fact asserted in it, the credit of the assertor becomes the basis of our inference, and therefore the assertion can be received only when made upon the stand, subject to the test of cross-examination. If, therefore, an extrajudicial utterance is offered, not as an assertion to evidence the matter asserted, but without reference to the truth of the matter asserted, the Hearsay rule does not apply. The utterance is then merely not obnoxious to that rule. It may or may not be received, according as it has any relevancy in the case; but if it is not received, this is in no way due to the Hearsay rule.

For example, in a prosecution against a defaulting embezzler Doe, it is desired to show that, after leaving his employment, he concealed himself and passed under a false name; here his statement, "My name is Roe," is not offered to evidence that his name was in truth Roe; on the contrary, it will be shown that his name was Doe; and the statement is not used as hearsay. Or, on an issue of insanity, it is offered to show that the party said, "I am the Emperor of Africa"; here the utterance is not offered as evidence that he was in truth the Emperor, but, on the contrary, as circumstantially indicating his mental aberration. Again, in an action upon a warranty of a horse, it is offered to show that the defendant at the time of the bargain asserted that the horse was only four years old; here the plaintiff will immediately proceed to prove that the horse is nevertheless twelve years old; he has not offered the defendant's statement with any view to using as evidence of its truth, but with just the contrary purpose. Or (to take an illustration of Lord Abinger's [1]) suppose, on an issue of mitigation of damages in an action for battery, the defendant offers to prove that the plaintiff, just before the assault, provoked the defendant by asserting that he was a liar; here the defendant by no means desires the jury to take this utterance as evidence of the truth of the fact asserted; he would be much disappointed if they should accept it in that aspect; his purpose is merely by this utterance to evidence the anger which he naturally felt upon hearing it.

The prohibition of the Hearsay rule, then, does not apply to all words or utterances merely as such. If this fundamental principle is clearly realized, its application is a comparatively simple matter. The Hearsay rule excludes extrajudicial utterances only when offered for a special purpose, namely, as assertions to evidence the truth of the matter asserted:

1808, WASHINGTON, J., in Blight v. Ashley, 1 Pet. C. C. 15, 21: "There are certainly some cases where the declarations or letters of an agent are proper evidence; and others where he must be examined and his letters are not evidence, if he be alive. . . . If the object is to prove a fact, the agent is the proper person to prove it, and his evidence [in court] is better than his declarations. . . . But if the object is to prove what were the motives or inducements for a man to contract with the agent, what were the statements made by him, his letters or conversations are proper evidence, — not of the facts stated in them, but that such statements and inducements were made. . . . Upon this principle, many letters from Peter Blight to the defendant were read, not as evidence of a single fact mentioned in them, but that they communicated certain information to the defendants; [the truth of] which, however, if important to be established, it would have been incumbent on the plaintiff to establish by other evidence."

1823, Mr. Gaston (afterwards Judge), in Cherry v. Slade, 2 Hawks 400, 404, arguing § 1766. [1] In Fraser v. Berkeley, 7 C. & P. 625.

'pro querente' against declarations of residence: "It is sometimes said that there is an exception when words are the 'res gestæ' or part of the 'res gestæ.' But this seems not to be accurate. The words are then received, not as evidence of the truth of what was declared, but because the speaking of the words is the fact, or part of the fact, to be investigated. There may be a controversy whether A. B. at a certain time spoke certain words, and those who heard him are of course received to prove the fact. The words spoken concurrently with an act done are often a part of the act, and give it a precise and peculiar character, and therefore must be testified, — not to show that the words spoken are true, but to show that they were in fact spoken. For example: Did A commit an assault on B? What he said when he laid his hands on B will show whether it was an angry or friendly act. Did the agent of defendant make a certain representation in the course of a bargain? If so, that representation was an ingredient in the bargain."

1858, EASTMAN, J., in State v. Wentworth, 37 N. H. 217: "It does not follow that, because the words in question are those of a third person, they are necessarily hearsay. On the contrary, it happens in many cases that the very fact in controversy is whether such things were spoken, and not whether they are true."

1858, ERLE, J., in Shilling v. Ins. Co., 1 F. & F. 116, 120 (admitting statements of T., on an issue whether the insurance of J. was in reality J.'s act for his own benefit or T.'s act in J.'s name): "Everything is admissible which was done by T.; and words are often acts. The question is not open to the objection against hearsay. It is not hearsay. It is a question as to an act done. One asks another to attest a document or to advance a sum of money; those are not merely words, but acts."

1862, Milne v. Leisler, 7 H. & N. 786, 796; the defendant having applied for and purchased goods from the plaintiff, and referred the plaintiff to a third person, the plaintiff, to show on whose credit the goods were sold, was allowed to put in a letter of inquiry to the party referred to, stating the sale to the defendant. POLLOCK, C. B.: "If a man on leaving his counting-house said to his servant 'I have just sold so and so,' that would not be evidence of the sale. Here, however, . . . this letter, being part of the transaction of a reference made in pursuance of the direction of the party purchasing, was admissible." WILDE, B.: "If the evidence were admissible on that ground, [namely, as a trustworthy assertion,] everything a man said on the day when he made a bargain, and still more, everything he did, would be admissible. It seems to me that would be very dangerous ground. . . . The real ground is that this was an inquiry made by the direction of the plaintiff in pursuance of an authority from Atkin [the defendant's agent], and therefore was part of the 'res gestæ.'"

1892, HARRISON, J., in Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 293, 30 Pac. 529 (admitting the directions given to an elevator-owner for the proper mode of using it, as showing his knowledge): "Whether in fact such information was or was not correct is immaterial for the purpose of determining its admissibility; and hence it is no objection to its admission that it was not given under the sanction of an oath or that the opposite party had no opportunity of cross-examining the informant. The truth of the information is a distinct issue, and must be established by competent evidence; but, upon the theory that the information was correct, the plaintiff in the present instance had the right to show that the defendant had received such information. . . . Such evidence is admitted for the purpose of establishing merely the utterance of the words, and not their truth."

1900, DOSTER, C. J., in State Bank v. Hutchinson, 62 Kan. 9, 61 Pac. 443 (action on a homestead mortgage; defence, duress of the wife by threats to prosecute the husband, communicated by the latter to the former): "A daughter of the Hutchinsons testified that she overheard the conversation between her father and mother, in which the former disclosed to the latter the threats which Morris had made. Counsel for plaintiff in error also contend against the admissibility of this testimony, upon the ground that it was hearsay in character. . . . Neither of these contentions is sound. There were three substantive litigated questions in the case — First, were threats made? And, if so, secondly, were they communicated to Mrs. Hutchinson? And, if so, thirdly, did they produce the claimed effect? As to the second of these as well as the first, the meritorious question was, had a verbal act been done? That is, had a communication been made? That act, if done, was not incidental or collateral in nature. It was one of the three principal litigated matters in the case, and, being such, the performance of the act was provable by the testimony of any one who, if competent, was a witness to it. The question was not whether Hutchinson's communication to his wife was truthful, but it was whether the communication had been in fact made. The rule is general that, where a substantive litigated fact is the speech of a person, one who heard the utterance is admitted to testify to it, and the testimony so received is not hearsay."

What here remains, then, is to distinguish and mark off the various classes of utterances which legally pass the gauntlet of the Hearsay rule because it does not apply to them. The classes of utterances thus exempt may be grouped under three heads:

1. Utterances material to the case as a part of the issue;
2. Utterances accompanying an ambiguous or equivocal act, itself material, and serving to complete the act and give it definite legal significance; i. e. verbal parts of an act;
3. Utterances used circumstantially, as giving rise to indirect inferences, but not as assertions to prove the matter asserted.[2]

But before examining these several branches of the principle, it is necessary to turn aside for a moment and inquire into the origin and scope of the term 'res gestæ', which finds here its main and least inappropriate application.

§ 1767. History and Meaning of the Phrase 'Res Gestæ.' The discussion of several doctrines is commonly carried on, in judicial opinion, with more or less use of the phrase 'res gestæ' as the name of a doctrine under which certain kinds of evidence receive sanction. This phrase, as conceded on all hands, is inexact and indefinite in its scope, and is ambiguous in its suggestion of reasons for the doctrine. If it were possible to say that it is properly applicable, in etymology or in usage, to any particular doctrine, it would be simple enough to ascertain this doctrine and to urge the restriction of the phrase to the one meaning. Or if the phrase genuinely indicated some independent principle of Evidence, existing in its own right and not otherwise named or namable, nor attributable to any other place in our system of Evidence, it would be allowable to preserve the name for that principle.

But neither of these things is true. The phrase has nothing to entitle itself on either ground to preservation. It has had various uses. But it is ambiguous and unmanageable in all of them. The doctrines to which it has been applied possess, all of them, a right to existence under well-recognized preëxisting principles and can be explained without a resort to this phrase. No more can be said for it than that it has been much used in the course of the development of some important aspects of two of these doctrines. The elusive history of its usage has been set forth in the following passage:

[2] For another analysis of the several kinds of utterance, see the following article: Professor E. M. Morgan, "A Suggested Classification of Utterances Admissible as Res Gestæ" (1922; Yale Law J., XXXI, 229).

1881, Professor James Bradley Thayer, American Law Review, XV, 5, 81: "This phrase in one or another form, — 'res gesta,' 'res acta,' 'res gestæ,' — was familiar in classical Latin literature, as one may see by any dictionary. It is found, also, in the 'Corpus Juris.' . . . The meaning of the term seems to have been quite untechnical; it imported simply 'a fact,' 'a transaction,' 'an event.' The plural sometimes indicated not so much the plural of the English equivalent — facts, transactions — as the details or particulars of which a single fact or transaction might be composed. It would seem that either form was quite legitimately used as meaning what we should express by the singular form, — an occurrence, a transaction. Now, how came this term into our law?

"The first instance of the use of it, which the writer has observed, is in a brief discussion over a point of evidence in Horne Tooke's trial for high treason, 25 Howell's State Trials, 440 (1794).[1] A letter from a certain society had been sent to an association with which Tooke was connected, declining a previous proposal from the latter, . . . [and Mr. Garrow alluded to its admission as probably upon the ground that] 'it is fit to be received as a part of the "res gesta" upon the subject.' . . . The phrase is not found again until 1801, Hoare v. Allen, 3 Esp. 276, where in an action for seduction of the plaintiff's wife [her statement of her reason for leaving him was admitted by Lord Kenyon as "a part of the 'res gesta'"]. This was one of Lord Kenyon's latest rulings. In one of the early cases of his successor we find the same phrase; in Robson v. Kemp, 4 Esp. 233 (1802), . . . Lord Ellenborough said, 'Where the declaration of the bankrupt is part of the "res gesta," . . . it may be Evidence.' In 1801 Peake's 'Law of Evidence' was published; the phrase does not occur in that, nor is it in Buller, or Gilbert, or any of the other few books, before this century, in which the subject of evidence is dealt with. The first treatise in which it is found, so far as the writer has observed, is Evans' Appendix to Pothier on Obligations, printed in 1806; in vol. II, p. 217, Evans says: 'In questions of fraud or "bona fides," an adequate judgment can, in general, only be formed by having a perfect view of the whole transaction, which of course includes the conversation which forms a part of it; and, according to the phrase usually applied to this subject, the language which is used on any occasion forms a part of the "res gesta."' This passage is interesting as indicating that the phrase was in common use in 1806. . . . [The case of Aveson v. Kinnaird] decided in February, 1805, is found in 6 East 188, and here the phrase, in the plural form, 'res gestæ,' is freely used by counsel; Lord Ellenborough also, in addressing counsel, uses it once. It was not long before this case had crossed the water and appeared in our courts, bringing with it the Latin term, in Bartlett v. Delprat, 4 Mass. 702 (1808). . . . This is the first appearance of it in Massachusetts. In Swift's 'Digest of the Law of Evidence in Civil and Criminal Cases,' — the earliest American treatise, — printed in 1810, the phrase occurs, at p. 127, in stating when the admission of an agent is receivable as against his principal: 'What is said by the agent relating to such transaction, while acting under such authority, will be received as evidence against the principal, as part of the "res gestæ."'

"The phrase, then, was fairly afloat in the law of Evidence soon after the beginning of this century; but there are signs that it was not altogether regarded with favor. Phillipps' excellent treatise on evidence — so great an advance on anything that had preceded it — was published in 1814; in it (vol. I, p. 202) he said: 'Hearsay is often admitted in evidence as part of the "res gesta."' . . . But, having thus introduced the phrase, he struck it out in the fourth edition (1819), and substituted for it the English word 'transaction'; this word he retained through three other editions, and until he associated Mr. Amos with himself in getting out the eighth edition, in 1838. . . . Starkie published his book in 1824, § 1767. [1] An earlier instance than this has been found: 1637, Ship Money Case, 3 How. St. Tr. 988 (Mr. Holborne, arguing, refers to the truth of an historian "for 'res gestæ' as this").

and then and always used the phrase 'res gestæ.' As to the later leading treatises of Greenleaf, Taylor, and Wharton, it is unnecessary to say that they faithfully reflect the cases in using this term. . . .

"If it be true, as it seems to be, that the phrase first came into use in Evidence near the end of the last century, one would like to know what started the use of it just then. That is matter for conjecture rather than opinion. It would seem probable that it was called into use mainly on account of its 'convenient obscurity.' . . . The law of hearsay at that time was quite unsettled; lawyers and judges seem to have caught at the term 'res gesta,' — . . . which was a foreign term, a little vague in its application, and yet in some applications of it precise,—they seem to have caught at this expression as one that gave them relief at a pinch. They could not, in the stress of business, stop to analyze minutely; this valuable phrase did for them what the limbo of the theologians did for them, what a 'catch-all' does for a busy housekeeper or an untidy one, — some things belonged there, other things might for purposes of present convenience be put there. We have seen that the singular form of phrase soon began to give place to the plural; this made it considerably more convenient; whatever multiplied its ambiguity, multiplied its capacity; it was a larger 'catch-all.' To be sure, this was a dangerous way of finding relief, and judges, text-writers, and students have found themselves sadly embarrassed by the growing and intolerable vagueness of the expression."

The phrase 'res gestæ' is, in the present state of the law, not only entirely useless, but even positively harmful. It is useless, because every rule of Evidence to which it has ever been applied exists as a part of some other well-established principle and can be explained in the terms of that principle. It is harmful, because by its ambiguity it invites the confusion of one rule with another and thus creates uncertainty as to the limitations of both. It ought therefore wholly to be repudiated, as a vicious element in our legal phraseology. It should never be mentioned. No rule of Evidence can be created or applied by the mere muttering of a shibboleth. There are words enough to describe the rules of Evidence. Even if there were no accepted name for one or another doctrine, any name would be preferable to an empty phrase so encouraging to looseness of thinking and uncertainty of decision.

It therefore remains only to note here the various doctrines with which the phrase 'res gestæ' has been with any frequency associated, and, so far as they are doctrines of evidence, to refer to the heads under which they are properly determined.

§ 1768. Doctrines of Evidence to which the Phrase is applied. (1) A frequent application of the phrase is to the Hearsay Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations (ante, §§ 1747, 1757), i. e. statements made during or after an affray, a collision, or the like, used to prove the facts asserted in the statement.

This Exception has its earliest illustration in Lord Holt's ruling in Thompson v. Trevanion, in 1693; so that the doctrine may be said to have been recognized before the phrase 'res gestæ' came into use. Nevertheless, the development of this doctrine did not begin until after Aveson v. Kinnaird, in 1805, when the phrase in question had begun to be freely used in connection with it; and only since the middle of the 1800s has it been possible to say that this Exception was firmly established. Its application has almost invariably been made in terms of 'res gestæ'; but this does not mean that there is any anomalous doctrine which must be recognized by that name. What is actually done by the Courts, and not what name they use, is always the important consideration in dealing with a rule of Evidence; and since what they do in this instance is to admit extrajudicial assertions as testimony to the fact asserted, the plain truth is that they have recognized a separate Exception to the Hearsay rule.

(2) An equally frequent subject for the application of the phrase, and a more plausible and nearly legitimate one, is the Verbal Act doctrine (post, §§ 1772–1786). Here the utterance is admitted as a verbal part of an act, i. e. of a 'res gesta.' Had there been no other and confusing associations of the phrase, it might suffice as a name for this Verbal Act doctrine. In the development of that doctrine, the phrase has been constantly used. But here, again, the rule of Evidence exists (and in some of its aspects was actually evolved) without any help from the phrase 'res gesta.' It follows from the very nature of the Hearsay rule that utterances used not assertively but as a part of some otherwise relevant act are receivable as not obnoxious to the rule; this is inevitably true on principles otherwise fixed, and would have been equally true had no mention of the Latin words ever been made in our courts or our books.

(3) The phrase is also found sometimes employed for utterances admissible as a part of the issue under the pleadings (post, § 1770). This use also is not inappropriate, so far as the mere translation of the words is concerned. But the material feature here is that the utterance of the words is a fact in issue. To speak of them as 'res gestæ' is at least half correct, for all matters in issue are things done. But not all things done are things in issue. The admitting circumstance is that the utterance is part of the issue, and the 'res gestæ' phrase, in omitting this element, condemns itself as inaccurate in its suggestion and misleading in its name.

(4) The phrase has also been much used in dealing with the Hearsay Exception for Statements of a Mental Condition (ante, § 1714). This is historically due to its use in Aveson v. Kinnaird, which in part concerned such declarations. Here there is least plausibility in its employment. A statement of a mental condition is not received because it is part of a "thing done," but because there is a degree of trustworthiness in such assertions and a necessity for resorting to them. Some Courts, for some classes of cases, require the statement to accompany an act by the declarant; but, as this feature would not necessarily contribute to the trustworthiness of the assertion (which is the real objective), it can be only an arbitrary limitation.

(5) There is, besides, an occasional employment of the phrase in sundry cases where utterances are relevant under any principle of Evidence whatever.[1] It then serves merely to aid, in the case in hand, the judicial disinclination to ascertain and state specifically the reason for admission.

§ 1768. [1] For one example only, the use of a certificate of marriage is treated under this name in State v. Isenhart, 32 Or. 170, 52 Pac. 569.

§ 1769. Other Applications of the Phrase; Agent's and Conspirator's Admissions. The phrase 'res gestæ' has been so convenient a term for judicial conjuring that it is even found applied to matters outside the domain of the rules of Evidence proper, whether or not the facts involve the utterance of words. In an action, for example, for injuries received by driving into a defect in the highway, the gentleness of the horse has been allowed to be proved as "part of the 'res gestæ.'" [1] Or, in an action for injuries received at a defective street-crossing, the absence of street-lamps at the place is "part of the 'res gestæ.'" [2] Or, in a prosecution for homicide, a quarrel occurring long before is not to be considered as provocation reducing the degree of homicide, because it is "not part of the 'res gestæ.'" [3] When the phrase is put to such uses, nothing can be done but ignore them. The law declared in such decisions is to be treated wherever it belongs by its own nature. It cannot be forced, in procrustean fashion, into the law of Evidence merely through the improper invocation of the term 'res gestæ.'

In two departments of substantive law this use of 'res gestæ' has been very common, namely, in the law determining liability for the acts of an agent and for the acts of a co-conspirator. The acts and admissions of an agent are available to charge the principal when they occurred in the course of his employment; and of a co-conspirator, when they occurred in the duration of the conspiracy. It is often attempted to designate this course of action, which thus limits the range of chargeable acts, as 'res gestæ.' But the scope of it is to be ascertained wholly from the substantive law on those topics, not from any rule of evidence. So far as any reference to these doctrines is necessary in dealing with the law of Evidence, it has been already made in dealing with Admissions (ante, §§ 1078, 1079). It is enough here to note the fallacy, and to quote the following plain exposition of it:

> 1881, Professor James Bradley Thayer, American Law Review, XV, 80: "The term 'res gesta' is freely used in another class of cases where the specific question is whether a party to the suit shall be affected with responsibility for the declaration of another; not merely whether it may be used as evidence against him, but whether it shall be so used as having been brought home to him, and whether he shall be chargeable with it as if it were his own. When the inquiry is whether the utterance of an agent, or a co-conspirator, is receivable against a party, and it is said, in the case of the agent, that it must have been made in and about the business on which the agent was employed, and while actually engaged in that business; and, of a co-conspirator, that he must have made his declaration while engaged in the common enterprise and regarding that, — in such cases it is common to express this idea by saying that the declaration must be made as a part of the 'res gesta'; and if it is not so made, it is deemed to be 'res inter alios gesta.' Now it is obvious, on a little reflection, that to settle this question adversely to the admissibility of that which is offered in evidence, is really to settle a question in the law of agency or in the law regulating conspiracy, — a question in substantive law. . . . Observe, then, that the rule which says that a man shall be chargeable with the acts and declarations of his agent or § 1769. [1] Smith v. Taggart, 21 Ill. App. 538.

[2] Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 20 N. E. 33.
[3] Rosenbaum v. State, 33 Ala. 361.

fellow-conspirator is not a rule of evidence; and when in stating and applying this rule it is said that the agent's declaration must have been made in and about his principal's business, while actually engaged in it, and as a part of the 'res gesta'; or, again, when it is said of a conspirator's declaration, offered against his fellow-conspirator, that it must have been made while he was actually engaged in the common enterprise, about the affairs of it, and as a part of the 'res gesta'; the Latin phrase adds nothing; it is used as a compact expression for the business, as regards which the law for certain purposes identifies the two conspirators or the principal and agent. In such cases, evidently, the declaration may be about a past fact as well as a present one, so long as it comes up to the above-named requirements."

The limits of the Hearsay rule, as above analyzed (ante, § 1766), are now to be examined.

1. Utterances constituting a Part of the Issue

§ 1770. Utterances of Contract, Marriage-Promise, Notice, Insurance "Proofs," Defamation, etc. Where the utterance of specific words is itself a part of the details of the issue under the substantive law and the pleadings, their utterance may be proved without violation of the Hearsay rule, because they are not offered to evidence the truth of the matter that may be asserted therein.

(1) In issues of contract in general, this use of utterances is of course common. In particular:

(a) The making of a contract necessarily involves utterances by conversation, letter, telegram, and the like; and these are admissible under the issue.[1]

(b) The consent which in Scotland and in the United States generally suffices to constitute the marriage-contract is thus to be learned from the utterances of the cohabiting persons. Utterances during the time of cohabitation would be receivable, so far as the present doctrine is concerned, only when they are in effect acts of consent forming a contract; yet in fact they are further admissible, though not 'per se' acts of consent, being construable as conduct ("habit") evidencing circumstantially the fact of past marriage consent (ante, § 268, post, § 2083). Utterances made after cohabita-

§ 1770. [1] The following will serve as illustrations: Ala. 1857, Stoudenmeier v. Wilson, 29 Ala. 564; Ind. 1880, Nave v. Tucker, 70 Ind. 17 (the action involved a contract employing the defendant as attorney, and the plaintiff called a witness to the conversation in which the plaintiff engaged the defendant; Worden, J.: "The evidence of the witness did not go to prove a mere declaration or statement of the plaintiff, but a fact, viz. that the plaintiff employed the witness to bring the action mentioned and authorized him to employ assistance"); Ind. Ter. 1897, Long-Bell L. Co. v. Thomas, 1 I. T. 225, 40 S. W. 773; Ky. 1911, Zinsmeister v. Rock Island C. Co., 145 Ky. 25, 139 S. W. 1068 (agent's letters, excluded); Minn. 1896, Fredin v. Richards, 66 Minn. 46, 68 N. W. 401 (defendant's ownership of notes in issue; correspondence between the defendant and a third person, the payee, admitted, as constituting the transaction determining the defendant's title); N. Y. 1847, Howard v. Ins. Co., 4 Den. 508 (the affidavit of an insured, read by the insurer as a foundation for showing its falsity and thus proving the right to forfeit the policy); N. C. 1905, King v. Bynum, 137 N. C. 491, 49 S. E. 955 (distinguishing testimony directly to the expressions of negotiation at a sale and testimony to subsequent hearsay statements of what occurred at the sale).

tion ended would ordinarily be inadmissible, because they cannot be construed as circumstantial conduct of marriage, nor yet as acts of consent, and their only service therefore can be as hearsay assertions of past marriage.[2] Nevertheless, such statements, if the person making them is a party-opponent, would be receivable as admissions (ante, § 1055, post, § 2086), or, if the person is deceased, as assertions of family history admissible under that Exception (ante, § 1500). Moreover, a letter by one to the other, expressly consenting to be husband or wife, would apparently be receivable under the present principle as an act of consent, even though written before or after cohabitation.

(c) A promise to marry is to be ascertained similarly from utterances of consent.[3] Nevertheless, to render them admissible under the present prin-

[2] 1898, Moore v. Heineke, 119 Ala. 627, 24 So. 374 (declarations after separation, not admissible); 1918, Coleman v. James, — Okl. —, 169 Pac. 1064 (claim of widow's share; on the issue whether a cohabitation "is matrimonial or meretricious, the declaration of the parties during such intercourse in relation to the nature thereof are admissible in evidence as part of the 'res gestæ'").

[3] ENGLAND: 1706, Hutton v. Mansell, 6 Mod. 172 (Holt, C. J.: "If there be an express promise by the man, and that it appear the woman countenanced it, and by her actions at the time behaved herself so as if she agreed to the matter, tho' there be no actual promise, yet that shall be sufficient evidence of a promise on her side").

UNITED STATES: California: 1873, Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 194, 198 (plaintiff's public announcement of the engagement, admissible as an element of damages); 1901, Leibrandt v. Sorg, 133 Cal. 571, 65 Pac. 1098 (woman's declarations to third persons, as to a promise inadmissible; distinguishing Reed v. Clark); 1904, People v. Tibbs, 143 Cal. 100, 76 Pac. 904 (the woman's preparations, unknown to the defendant, excluded); Illinois: 1872, Walmsley v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 41 (plaintiff's preparations, the family's reception, etc., not admissible to show the promise); Indiana: 1850, King v. Kersey, 2 Ind. 402 (woman's declarations of the contract to a sister, during the alleged engagement, admissible as "explanatory of her conduct and intention in receiving those visits," and "as tending to show a promise on her part, not upon his"); 1874, Cates v. McKinney, 48 Ind. 562, 566 (the woman's "declaration while receiving his visits," admissible as "evidence of a promise on her part," but not upon the defendant's; declarations to other persons in the absence of the defendant, not admissible); 1878, Graham v. Martin, 64 Ind. 567, 573 (plaintiff's preparations, not admitted to show the plaintiff's assent); 1889, Jones v. Layman, 123 Ind. 569, 575, 34 N. E. 363 (declarations two days after estrangement, excluded; "such evidence is only allowed to prove her consent to the alleged marriage contract, and must relate to [i. e. be made] at a time prior to the alleged estrangement, or to the time when first informed that her anticipated husband will not marry her"); 1895, Wilson v. Smelser, 13 Ind. App. 31, 41 N. E. 76 (declarations to parents, etc., of the fact of contract, during the alleged engagement, excluded); 1912, Hay v. State, 178 Ind. 478, 98 N. E. 712 (seduction; the woman's preparations for marriage, not admissible as corroboration); Iowa: 1859, Thurston v. Cavenor, 8 Ia. 155, 161 ("where the defendant's promise is once shown," then the plaintiff's demeanor of approval, to "establish the promise on her part" is admissible, "and this whether the defendant is present or not at the time of her conduct"); Kansas: 1908, Cooper v. Bower, 78 Kan. 156, 164, 96 Pac. 794 (the woman's statements that they were engaged to be married, admissible); Kentucky: 1855, Burnham v. Cornwell, 16 B. Monr. 284 (statements of plaintiff to a third person as to her willingness to marry defendant, excluded, apparently because no sufficient evidence of defendant's offer was given); Massachusetts: 1860, Russell v. Cowles, 15 Gray 582 (plaintiff's conduct in buying goods for the wedding and for housekeeping, held admissible, after evidence of a "contract to marry," as "an act done by the plaintiff toward the execution of the contract"; yet, since the plaintiff's assent to the offer must on general principles of contract "have been communicated to the party by whom the offer was made," the plaintiff's conduct "in the absence of the defendant, and not in any way connected with him," was held not to be admissible as evidence "that the plaintiff assented"; "the cases from Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New Jersey" are said to have gone too far through ignoring this distinction; yet the learned judge here himself ignores the principle upon which the plaintiff's subsequent assenting state of mind could be used for inferring a prior act of assent to the defendant himself; see ante, §§ 267, ciple, it would seem (a) that they can in any case be regarded only as unilateral acts of consent, and thus are mere hearsay assertions so far as they state a promise by the other party; (b) that therefore they must be made before negotiations or courtship broken off; and (c) that they must be made to the promisor himself, or, if to a third person, that they can be received only on the theory that they state a present mental condition (ante, § 1714), which itself is evidence (ante, §§ 242, 267, 272) of a past act of consent expressed to the promisor; upon this principle most Courts seem to proceed. The precedents are in an uncertain condition.

(d) The performance of a contract may involve an utterance, written or oral, which therefore becomes receivable under the present principle;[4] in particular, the documents known as "proofs of loss," commonly required in insurance-contracts as a condition precedent to the accruing of the insurer's liability, are receivable, because the fact that they were duly furnished must be shown.[5]

272); Michigan: 1886, McPherson v. Ryan, 59 Mich. 33, 37 (plaintiff's announcement of her engagement, and preparations for marriage, excluded, following Russell v. Cowles, Mass.; good opinion by Morse, J.); New Jersey: 1797, Peppinger v. Low, 1 Halst. 384 (declarations of the plaintiff to third persons, as to her willingness to marry the defendant, admitted, on the theory that it is difficult "to make out by direct evidence the assent of the woman," and that expressions to other persons of her willingness to marry him "would be 'prima facie' evidence that she had assented to his proposals"); Ohio: 1852, Wetmore v. Mell, 1 Oh. St. 26 (plaintiff's declarations to her sister in defendant's absence, admitted as declarations of her state of mind as to acceptance of the defendant's promise); Oregon: 1894, Osmun v. Winters, 25 Or. 260, 35 Pac. 250 (plaintiff's announcement of her engagement, made to relatives the day after, excluded; good opinion by Bean, J.); Pennsylvania: 1850, M'Night v. Biesecker, 13 Pa. 331, 334 (plaintiff's request to her brother to take her to buy wedding clothes and to a sister to be bridesmaid, admitted, on the theory that "her assent, however proved, is by her own act and her own declarations," "solely for the purpose of showing the readiness of the plaintiff to comply with her engagement"); 1855, Leckey v. Bloser, 24 Pa. 401, 406 (plaintiff's declarations to third person that she was engaged to be married to defendant, admitted); Vermont: 1920, Dyer v. Lalor, — Vt. —, 109 Atl. 30 ("all the facts and circumstances that took place between them from the time when they first became acquainted with each other in 1900 to the time of the alleged breach, were admissible"; the plaintiff's acts of preparation, admissible when "made with defendant's knowledge").

But a seduction should not be evidence of a prior promise of marriage; the principle of § 268, ante, is here out of place; 1906, Wrynn v. Downey, 27 R. I. 454, 63 Atl. 401 (citing other authorities).

[4] 1886, Ross v. Brusie, 70 Cal. 446, 11 Pac. 760 (an entry in an account-book, used simply to show that a credit had been given as agreed); 1904, Parke & L. Co. v. S. F. Bridge Co., 145 Cal. 534, 78 Pac. 1065, 79 Pac. 71 (certain letters admitted, as constituting performance); 1896, Ellis v. Thompson, 1 App. Div. 606, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 468 (breach of a contract to produce a play and "to play it continuously if there was a reasonable success attending its production"; as a part of the issue of "reasonable success," i. e. favorable treatment by the public, the audiences' applause or silence, the critics' comment, and the like, were allowed to be shown).

[5] The theory of this is generally conceded, but Courts differ as to allowing the documents to be read or made known to the jury; considering the purposes of entrapment to which these documents are sometimes put by the insurer, there is no need of judicial scruple in excluding them: Georgia: 1890, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 761, 765, 12 S. E. 18 (admissible only as a fact of performance, and not admissible to prove bad faith in the insurer in not paying; good faith not being in issue); Illinois: 1893, Railway P. & F. C. Ass. v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 138, 157, 35 N. E. 168 (doctor's certificate among proofs of death, admitted not to prove the facts asserted therein, but as an act of compliance with rules as to proof of death); Kansas: 1905, Order of U. C. Travellers v. Barnes, 72 Kan. 293, 82 Pac. 1099 (admissible for the plaintiff, but only with instruction limiting their use to their effect as performance of the condition precedent); Massachusetts: 1906, Paquette v. Prudential Ins. Co., 193 Mass. 215, 79 N. E. 250 ("Having been put in evidence generally,

(2) In defamation, the utterance charged as a libel or a slander is admissible, naturally, under the present principle. Whether a repetition of it is relevant as evidence of malice involves additional considerations (ante, § 403); as does also the question whether like rumors or reports against the plaintiff are admissible to mitigate damages (ante, § 74).[6]

(3) The fact of sending a notice is often essential as a part of the issue, — for example, a notice to an indorser, a notice of rescission, a notice of rejection of defective goods, a notice of injury by municipal negligence. In such cases the terms of the notice are receivable under the present principle, without regard to the truth of any assertion that may be contained in it.[7]

(4) Reputation may be in issue,[8] either in a civil case or as part of a criminal offence (ante, §§ 70–79). But it is also receivable evidentially, under a special Exception to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1580).

(5) In sundry other instances, not presenting any misleading or complicated features, a variety of issues may involve the fact and terms of an utterance as a part of the case, and the present principle declares all such utterances not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, so long as they are not sought to be used as assertions evidencing the matter asserted.[9]

2. Utterances constituting a Verbal Part of an Act

§ 1772. General Principle. A second kind of situation in which utterances are not offered testimonially arises when the utterance accompanies it was within the discretion of the presiding judge either to submit or to withhold them from the consideration of the jury"); Pennsylvania: 1811, Thurston v. Murray, 3 Binn. 326, 328 (excluded; "the distinction of being evidence for one purpose and not for another is too subtle for the jury"; yet compare the citations ante, § 13, which dispose of this reasoning); 1863, Lycoming Co. M. I. Co. v. Schreffler 44 Pa. 269, 273 (similar); 1885, Kittanning Ins. Co. v. O'Neill, 110 id. 548, 553, 1 Atl. 592; 1899, Cummins v. Ins. Co., 192 id. 359, 43 Atl. 1016; Wisconsin: 1898, Foster v. F. & C. Co., 99 Wis. 447, 75 N. W. 69 (letters and affidavits admitted to show that sufficient proofs of death had been furnished to an insurer, but not as testimony to the fact of death).

For the use of "proofs of loss" as admissions by the beneficiary, see ante, § 1073.

For the use of a coroner's verdict in "proofs of loss," as an official statement admissible under the Hearsay Exception, see ante, § 1671.

[6] Distinguish the report by a third person of such utterances of the defendant, which is of course mere extrá-judicial assertion: 1909, Sheppard v. Austin, 159 Ala. 361, 48 So. 696.

[7] 1830, Whitehead v. Scott, 1 Moo. & Rob. 2 (a letter sent to notify the defendant to produce a document); 1896, Com. v. Robinson, 165 Mass. 426, 43 N. E. 121 (the statement of a policeman to the arrested person, naming the charge against him, as required by statute).

For notice, as evidence that knowledge was received by the person notified, see post, § 1789.

[8] For reputation as evidence of knowledge or belief by a person acquainted with the reputation, see post, § 1789.

[9] E. g.: 1840, Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. U. S. 462 (Story, J.: "The conversations and declarations of a patentee merely affirming that at some former period he invented that particular machine, might well be objected to. But his conversations and declarations . . . are properly to be deemed an assertion of his right at that time . . . and legitimate evidence that the invention was then known to and claimed by him, and thus its origin may be fixed at least as early as that period"); 1922, Tyree v. Tudor, N. C., 111 S. E. 714 (death, while riding in an automobile driven at reckless speed; the plaintiff intestate's assumption of risk being in issue, the intestate's conversation before starting, as to the speed desired, was in part excluded; Stacy, J., diss., and rightly).

In bankruptcy, the answer "not at home," given by a servant or other person to a creditor inquiring at the house of the debtor, may under the substantive law constitute a refusal or denial to his creditors and thus amount to an act of bankruptcy.

But whether the bankrupt's statements after absconding may be used involves the Verbal Act doctrine, treated post, § 1783.

conduct to which it is desired to attach some legal effect. The conduct or act has intrinsically no definite significance, or only an ambiguous one, and its whole legal purport or tenor is to be more precisely ascertained by considering the words accompanying it. The utterance thus enters merely as a verbal part of the act, or, in the common phrase, a "verbal act." [1]

Perhaps most of our acts to which legal effect is to be attached in creating, transferring, modifying, or extinguishing rights, consist in part of words. There are some legal acts which consist solely of words, — as, a notice to an indorser.[2] There are others in which it consists solely of wordless conduct, — as, where title is acquired by the confusion of goods. But, in the vast majority of instances, whether of contract, property, or torts, words uttered may play a part, along with conduct, in determining the total significance of any legal act. For example, the consideration for a promise of a reward may be furnished in part by a search for the criminal and in part by communicating his identity to the promisor; the delivery of goods sold may consist in part of a manual transfer and in part of words stating its purpose; the revocation of a will may consist in part of a tearing of it, in part of the words then used; the eviction from premises may consist in part of the corporal expulsion, in part of the words stating the reason for it; the making of an arrest may consist in part of a manual touching, in part of utterances then made. In these, and countless other instances, the uttered words are a verbal part of the act. Without the words, the act as a whole may be incomplete; and, until the words are taken into consideration, the desired significance cannot be attributed to the wordless conduct.

Thus the words are used in no sense testimonially, i. e. as assertions to evidence the truth of a fact asserted in them. On the one hand, therefore, the Hearsay rule interposes no objection to the use of such utterances, because they are not offered as assertions (ante, § 1766). On the other hand, so far as they may contain assertions, these are not to be used or argued about testimonially, nor believed by the jury; for this would be to use them in violation of the Hearsay rule. In short, the utterances enter irrespective of the truth of any assertion they may contain; and they neither profit nor suffer by virtue thereof. For example, when an act of adverse possession is to be proved as the foundation of title, and the adverseness consists in a claim of ownership, the occupier's statement, "This land is mine; for I have a deed from Doe," is admissible as giving his occupation the significance of an adverse claim, but not as evidence that he has, as asserted, a deed from Doe.

§ 1772. [1] Perhaps first used by Mr. J. Clifford, in the opinion quoted post, § 1775.

Of course the conduct which the words accompany is not properly "the act." The total of words plus other conduct is "the act" to which the law affixes or refuses to affix legal consequences. The words are as much a part of "the act" as is the delivery or occupation or other conduct. Nevertheless, in common usage the word "act" is usually appropriated to the other conduct which the words accompany. This loose usage may be followed, provided one keeps in mind the true nature of the situation.

[2] These form the subject of § 1770, ante.

These considerations point out the four simple limitations which attend this use of utterances as verbal acts; namely:

(1) The conduct to be characterized by the words must be independently material to the issue;

(2) The conduct must be equivocal;

(3) The words must aid in giving legal significance to the conduct;

(4) The words must accompany the conduct.

These limitations may now be considered in general, and afterwards, the chief specific classes of cases calling for their application.[3]

§ 1773. (1) Conduct to be characterized by the Words must be Independently Material in the Case. As a necessary deduction from the above principle, the conduct that is to be made definite must be independently material and provable under the issues, either as a fact directly in issue or as incidentally or evidentially relevant to the issue. The use of the words is wholly subsidiary and appurtenant to the use of the conduct. The former without the latter have no place in the case, and could only serve as a hearsay assertion in direct violation of the rule: [1]

1837, COLTMAN, J., in Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 361: "Where an act done is evidence 'per se,' a declaration accompanying that act may well be evidence, if it reflects light upon or qualifies the act. But I am not aware of any case where the act done is in its own nature irrelevant to the issue and where the declaration 'per se' is inadmissible, in which it has been held that the union of the two has rendered them admissible."

1847, PARKER, C. J., in Patten v. Ferguson, 18 N. H. 528: "Here it is admitted that neither the fact nor the declaration, standing alone, are evidence; and when put together it is the declaration which is significant, and not the fact. The fact was of no importance standing alone; and the declaration, standing alone, was incompetent. When they are united, the unimportant fact is [improperly desired to be] used as a vehicle to introduce the important declaration."

This limitation is a distinguishing mark for utterances used under this Verbal Act doctrine, as differing from utterances used assertively under the Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations; the improper use of the limitation in that Exception has been already noted (ante, § 1753).

[3] A few Codes attempt to cover this general principle in a section; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1850 (quoted ante, § 1750); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5766 (quoted ante, § 1750); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10511 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1850); Or. Laws 1920, § 707 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1850); P.I. C. C. P. 1901, § 279 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1850).

§ 1773. [1] Accord: 1838, Coleridge, J., in Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 689; 1894, Pinney v. Jones, 64 Conn. 545, 550, 30 Atl. 762 (on an issue of payment, to prove that the defendant had the means of payment, her declarations, while showing a place in her cellar, that she had money concealed there, excluded, because "the act of Mrs. J., irrespective of the accompanying statement, was not in itself admissible"); 1847, Patten v. Ferguson, 18 N. H. 528 (declaration, by one burning wood on disputed land, that he was doing it for P., not admitted; because the wood-burning was itself not in issue or material to be illustrated).

The following ruling is therefore erroneous: 1888, Card v. Foot, 56 Conn. 369, 371, 15 Atl. 371 (action for the price of bonds said to have been given to the defendant to sell for the plaintiff; in proving that the plaintiff had deposited a package with one L. for safe keeping, the plaintiff's declaration at the time that "they were my bonds" was admitted, "not as a declaration purporting to be truthful, but as a natural act in the circumstances"; this is unsound; the deposit with L. was immaterial; her statement was a mere hearsay assertion that she had bonds, and directly introduced her credit).

§ 1774. (2) Conduct must be Equivocal. The utterance serves merely to assist in completing and giving legal significance to the conduct. Hence it is not needed when the conduct is already complete and definite in itself. The conduct must be equivocal or incomplete as a legal act, before the utterances can be admissible:

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 242: "Speech is a mode of action; . . . and I conceive that the distinction between the cases in which the immediate action of speech furnishes a material indication with respect to the object of the inquiry, and those in which it is a mere act of narration, will in most cases furnish the proper principle. . . . Many acts are in themselves of an equivocal nature, and the effect of them depends upon the intention or disposition from which they proceed, which is in general best determined by the expressions accompanying them. Wherever, therefore, the demeanor of a person at a given time becomes the object of inquiry, his expressions, as constituting a part of that demeanor, and as indicating his present intent and disposition, cannot properly be rejected in evidence as irrelevant. . . . This proposition [that a declaration accompanied by an act is admissible] is only correct where the expressions are demonstrative of the nature of the act itself."

1854, HALL, J., in Shuck v. Vanderventer, 4 Ia. 264 (action for suing out an attachment without cause; the defendant's declarations, made when applying for the attachment, were not admitted for him): "How can he by his words give character to his acts, the propriety or impropriety of which depends upon facts that have transpired and exist independent of anything that he can say or do? . . . The defendant could say nothing that could give it character or qualify in his favor the true force of facts."

1879, MANNING, J., in Cooper v. State, 63 Ala. 80: "What a person says that is explanatory of an equivocal or ambiguous act which he is then doing or situation which he is then occupying — as that of a person in possession of property — may be proved as 'res gestæ,' a part of the thing then going on, to elucidate and define the character of such equivocal act or situation. Words so connected with and illustrative of it are considered as appertaining to the act or situation, and, like expression on the human face, as indicating character, — the character of the act or situation which they are related to and are blended with. This is the central idea of the doctrine respecting what is called 'res gestæ.'"

1884, ELLIOTT, C. J., in Creighton v. Hoppis, 99 Ind. 369, 370: "Possession by the person who has executed an instrument purporting on its face to be an absolute conveyance of title is in its nature equivocal; for it may be that he was in possession as tenant or as mortgagor or by the mere sufferance of the grantee. As the possession may be equivocal, it becomes material to show its true character; and, in order to show this, what was done by the person in possession may be proved. The character of the possession may be determined in part from the acts of the person in possession."

1895, SEARLS, C., in Lewis v. Burns, 106 Cal. 381, 39 Pac. 778: "'The declarations of a party while engaged in the performance of an act, and illustrating the object and intent of its performance, are admissible in evidence.' It would be more accurate to say that, where the act may have been prompted by one of two or more motives or objects, the declarations of the actor made at the time, and illustrative of the motive or object, are admissible in evidence."

1899, HOLMES, C. J., in Com. v. Chance, 174 Mass. 245, 250, 54 N. E. 551 (murder of R.; the fact that one Mrs. O'B. during a quarrel with her husband took two bullets from a closet and said, "The third one killed R.," was excluded): "The act of taking out the bullets needed no explanation; it is not the law that any and all conversation which happens to be going on at the time of an act can be proved if the act can be proved."

In the great majority of accepted instances of the principle (as illustrated in the ensuing sections), this limitation is satisfied, and thus no special mention of it is called for in the judicial opinions. But if it is not attended to, the utterance comes in with the practical effect of a hearsay assertion, and the present principle becomes merely a pretext for using hearsay. Such a misuse of the principle is often found in the rulings; and this result is to be attributed to certain judicial expressions, often quoted in this connection, which omit to notice the present limitation:

1837, 1838, COLTMAN, J., in Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 361: "When an act done is evidence 'per se,' a declaration accompanying that act may well be evidence if it reflects light upon or qualifies that act." COLERIDGE, J., in s. c., 5 Cl. & F. 670, 693: "The act itself being admissible, whatever accompanies it and serves to explain its character is relevant and admissible also."

1851, FLETCHER, J., in Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 42: "If a declaration has its force by itself, as an abstract statement, detached from any particular fact in question, depending for its effect on the credit of the person making it, it is not admissible in evidence. . . . But when the act of a party may be given in evidence, his declarations made at the time, and calculated to elucidate and explain the character and quality of the act, and so connected with it as to constitute one transaction, and so as to derive credit from the act itself, are admissible in evidence. . . . Such a declaration derives credit and importance as forming a part of the transaction itself." [1]

In these passages the requirement that the act shall be an equivocal one, or shall in some respect be incomplete and indefinite in legal significance, is ignored; though it was probably not intended to be denied by the authors of these opinions. The result has been a frequent looseness in the application of the principle. This tendency may be noted here and there in the rulings of every Court; it is sufficient to observe that it is unsound. It has in one way, to be sure, led to good results; for it has served gradually to allow the building up of the Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations (ante, § 1745); the absence of any such limitation for that Exception is a marked feature of distinction for utterances thereunder admissible.

§ 1775. (3) Words must merely Aid in Completing the Conduct. It follows also, as a necessary deduction, that the utterances must be such as serve the assumed purpose, namely, give more definite significance to the equivocal or indefinite conduct, by adding a missing part. They must be such as do merely this, and not more. The common phraseology, however, is here so loose and inclusive that utterances may be held admissible which do not merely complete and define the very act by serving as a part of it, but make assertions about its preceding facts, and are in effect given credit as hearsay testimony of any other matter that may happen to be connected with the act in time and place. This phraseology goes back to the broad language of certain earlier opinions, chiefly that in Lund v. Tyngsborough,[1] and the following:

1820, HOSMER, C. J., in Enos v. Tuttle, 3 Conn. 250 (referring to declarations as to the purpose of giving a note): "[They were] well calculated to unfold the nature and quality of the facts they were intended to explain, and so to harmonize with them as obviously to constitute one transaction." [2]

§ 1774. [1] This case has furnished the language for many later opinions. This and Enos v. Tuttle, in the next section, may be called leading cases on the subject.

§ 1775. [1] Quoted supra, § 1774.

1869, CLIFFORD, J., in Insurance Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 411: "Declarations of a party to a transaction, though he was not under oath, if they were made at the time any act was done which is material as evidence in any issue before the court, and if they were made to explain the act or to unfold its nature and quality, and were of a character to have that effect, are treated, in the law of evidence, as verbal acts, and, as such, are not hearsay, but may be introduced, with the principal act which they accompany and to which they relate, as original evidence, because they are regarded as a part of the principal act, and their introduction in evidence is deemed necessary to define that act and unfold its true nature and quality."

These phrases about "unfolding," "elucidating," and "explaining" the nature of the act, while not inaccurate in themselves, have served, in the hands of many later judges, as an open sesame for utterances used purely in an assertive or testimonial way. "Elucidation" and "explanation," taken literally, are broad enough to include mere narrations of preceding matters; and such has been the service to which these classical terms have frequently been put. It must be noted that this application of them is unsound on principle. "It is not the law that any and all conversation which happens to be going on at the time of an act can be proved if the act can be proved." [3]

In the following colloquy the correct application of the principle is illustrated:

1875, Tilton v. Beecher, Abbott's Rep., I, 800; with reference to the plaintiff's having made inconsistent statements or admissions of the falsity of his claim, by stifling the matter when first publicly investigated, it was desired to show the true significance of his conduct in handing to his agent, Mr. Moulton, a statement to be given by the agent to the investigating committee. Mr. Fullerton, for the plaintiff, to the witness, Mr. Moulton: "What did he say in regard to it at the time he gave it to you? [Objected to.] . . . If I hand your Honor a certain paper, with a request to do a certain thing with it, for a certain purpose, is not that direction evidence?" Mr. Beach, for the plaintiff: "Let me put an illustration to your Honor. . . . Suppose Mr. Evarts comes to me and delivers a blow in my face, and at the instant of delivering that blow he accuses me of having injured him in some form; he gives the motives and the purpose with which he delivers that act; can that act be proved against Mr. Evarts, without permitting him to give the declaration accompanying the act?" Mr. Evarts, for the defendant: "That is a spoken act. That is not hearsay. It is a part of the blow; it is a spoken act. Some confusion, no doubt, arises in lawyers' discussions about hearsay evidence that comes by word of mouth in connection with that act; but your Honor is familiar with the distinction that our learned friend has given. . . . Now if he [Mr. Tilton] gave instructions to take that paper and lay it before the council, or carry it to Mr. Beecher, that is a part of the act of delivering it to him. But this question is large enough to draw out, and so I suppose is intended to draw out, a larger line of hearsay evidence, to wit, conversations between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Tilton with which Mr. Beecher cannot be affected." Judge NEILSON: "That distinction must be observed."

§ 1776. (4) Words must Accompany the Conduct in Time. Since the words are used only as verbal parts of the whole act, filling out and giving legal significance to the conduct, it is obvious that the words must be contemporaneous with the conduct, or, in the usual phrase, must accompany the act. This requirement does not allow any flexibility or extension of time such as is allowable in using statements under the Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations (ante, § 1749, par. b, § 1756); for the principle is an entirely different one. Here the utterance is used irrespective of its trustworthiness as an assertion, and only as a verbal part of an entire act. The utterance must therefore accompany the other conduct, for otherwise it is no part of the act and can serve merely as an ordinary hearsay assertion of what has been already done. It is true that the conduct which the words must accompany may itself extend over a long period of time — as in the case of prescriptive occupation — and therefore an utterance at any moment during that period does in fact accompany the conduct. Nevertheless, even then, the utterance is in strictness still contemporaneous with the conduct; and whenever that conduct has come to an end, any subsequent utterance, however near in time, is inadmissible.

[2] This is perhaps the most widely quoted passage in the precedents upon this general topic.

[3] Holmes, C. J., in Com. v. Chance, quoted supra, § 1774.

Courts are more or less liberal in applying this requirement, and the duration of the main conduct is often generously interpreted; but no Court seems to question in theory the existence of the limitation. The following passage illustrates it:

1865, PARK, J., in Ford v. Haskell, 32 Conn. 489 (excluding declarations by the defendant's intestate, while buying clothing for the plaintiff, as to the terms of an existing contract with the plaintiff): "The term 'res gestæ' includes a declaration that explains or characterizes some act that is then being performed by the declarant. . . . The defendant's intestate is purchasing an article of clothing. She says she is doing it in fulfilment of her contract with him in relation to carrying on her farm. This fully explains her act. The other terms of the contract [mentioned by her] could give no additional explanation. Her contract required her to furnish clothing. She is fulfilling that part of it." [1]

§ 1777. Sundry Applications of the General Principle, in Acts of Payment, Sale, Loan, Gift, Advancement, Consideration, Dedication of Land, Entry on Land, Conversion, Larceny, etc. The application of the Verbal Act doctrine is illustrated in a great variety of instances. Some of these, presenting special complications, may be taken up separately. In this place may be noticed sundry classes of cases not usually complicated by other questions.

(1) The act of handing over or of receiving money may have a varied legal significance, and words accompanying the receipt or delivery may therefore serve to make definite the effect of the act:

1780, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Principles of Morals and Legislation, c. XVIII, par. xxxv. note: "What is meant by payment is always an act of investitive power, as above explained, — an expression of an act of the will, and not a physical act; it is an act exercised with relation indeed to the thing said to be paid, but not in a physical sense exercised upon § 1776. [1] Accord: 1844, Noonan v. State, 1 Sm. & M. 562, 571 (the statement must be "by one connected with the act in question and during its progress").

Other cases applying this limitation will be found under the various rulings classed according to subject-matter, post, §§ 1777–1785.

it. A man who owes you ten pounds takes up a handful of silver to that amount and lays it down on a table at which you are sitting. If then, by words or gestures or any means whatever, addressing himself to you, he intimates it to be his will that you should take up the money and do with it as you please, he is said to have paid you. But if the case was that he laid it down, not for that purpose but for some other—for instance, to count and examine it, meaning to take it up again himself or leave it for somebody else—he has not paid you. Yet the physical acts exercised upon the pieces of money in question are in both cases the same. Till he does express a will to that purport, . . . [there is no payment]."

1810, Chief Justice SWIFT, Evidence, 130: "The declarations of a party . . . when they tend to explain the fact and are necessary for that purpose, they may be given in evidence. . . . As in the case of a tender, the declaration of the party of the purpose for which the money is offered is part of the 'res gestæ' and must be proved; otherwise the transaction cannot be understood."

1853, ROACHE, J., in Strange v. Donohue, 4 Ind. 328 (payment was made to a sheriff holding an execution, the payor stating that he paid "not in satisfaction of the judgment, but merely to prevent a sale" by staying execution): "It frequently becomes material, as in the present case, to ascertain with what motive an act was done. The declarations made by the party himself, while doing the act, and explanatory of it, are admitted as being a part of the transaction and as serving to explain its real character."

Declarations accompanying a delivery of money may therefore be admissible,[1] in order to determine whether a loan or a payment was made, whether one debt or another was paid, whether it was accepted in full or in part payment, or whether any other specific significance is to be attributed to the act. Declarations by either party are receivable, except so far as a declaration by one could not legally affect the significance of the act done by the other.

(2) In the same way, when money is loaned or goods sold or services rendered, and issue is whether the other party acted as agent or for himself, declarations of the transactors at the time are admissible to make clear the meaning § 1777. [1] ENGLAND: 1873, Clewser v. Samuel, 15 N. Br. 58 (instructions how to apply money sent therewith, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1863, Beaver v. Taylor, 1 Wall. 637, 642 ((issue as to payment of taxes; receipts being admitted, letters accompanying them and entries made on their arrival were also admitted); Alabama: 1853, Mims v. Sturtevant, 23 Ala. 664 (issue whether B. or J. owned a slave; B.'s declarations, when counting out money, that it was intended for the slave's purchase, not admitted in his favor); 1860, Dillard v. Scruggs, 36 Ala. 372; Connecticut: 1863, North Stonington v. Stonington, 31 Conn. 412, 416 (pauper settlement; the pauper's statement when refusing to pay taxes to the plaintiff, that a selectman had told him they did not want him to pay, excluded, because the motive of refusal was immaterial and the fact that the selectman had not demanded in good faith was the real issue, of which the declaration was merely hearsay evidence); Florida: 1896, Hood v. French 37 Fla. 117, 19 So. 165 (statements when making a payment, admitted); Illinois: 1840, McFarland v. Lewis, 3 Ill. 344, 347 (debtor's application of a payment, admitted); 1847, Rigg v. Cook, 9 Ill. 336; 1872, Richerson v. Sternburg, 65 Ill. 272, 274 (like McFarland v. Lewis); Indiana: 1886, Brown v. Kenyon, 108 Ind. 283, 9 N. E. 283; 1917, Citizen's Bank v. Opperman, — Ind. —, 115 N. E. 55 (whether a wife pledged bank-stock as security for her husband's debt; her conversation and his, at the time of delivery, admitted); Iowa: 1901, Golden v. Vyse, 115 Ia. 726, 87 N. W. 691 (delivery of a note to plaintiff; deliverer's declaration admitted); Louisiana: 1920, Garlick v. Dalbey, 147 La. 18, 84 So. 441 (community property; letters written by the husband enclosing money for payments, admissible as verbal acts); Pennsylvania: 1917, Kvist's Estate, 256 Pa. 30, 100 Atl. 523 (husband's failure to support his wife; the deceased wife's statements as to the amount of money given him by her, etc., excluded); Vermont: 1853, Bank v. Clark, 25 Vt. 310; 1886, Barber v. Bennett, 58 Vt. 476, 484, 4 Atl. 231 (declarations as to the purpose of payment, admitted); 1895, Wheeler v. Campbell, 68 Vt. 98, 34 Atl. 35 (the remark of parties when paying money, "That makes up the $600," admitted as showing that a bona fide transaction was occurring).

of the act and determine to whom credit was given or by whom liability was undertaken:[2]

1831, SHAW, C. J., in Allen v. Duncan, 11 Pick. 310: "It became a material question whether the goods were procured from G. by A. in his individual or partnership capacity. . . . It is therefore left uncertain in which capacity he acted. . . . It was undoubtedly competent for A. to declare, at the time of making the contract, whether he did it on the one or the other account, and such declaration would have been conclusive."

1870, PAINE, J., in Roebke v. Andrews, 26 Wis. 311, 321: "[The evidence was properly admitted] that S. and S., in negotiating the purchase, professed to act as agents of the defendant. Such statements by them were not proof of the fact of agency. It would be necessary to prove that fact in some other way, or to connect the defendant with the consummation of the bargain. But it is still true that whatever bargain was made, if any, was negotiated by those parties. What that bargain was, with whom and by whom it was made, could only be proved by showing what was done and said in its actual nego-

[2] The rulings are not harmonious: Federal: 1872, Bank v. Kennedy, 17 Wall. 20, 25 (whether a loan was made to a bank or to the cashier personally; statements made when advancing the money, admitted); Alabama: 1849, Tomkies v. Reynolds, 17 Ala. 118 (declarations made by H., when handing notes of the plaintiff to the witness, showing that H. was merely agent for his partner in handing the notes over for collection; the issue being whether H. and his partner had originally received the note as a loan from the plaintiff, or merely as agents to collect; held inadmissible; but if the issue had involved the purpose of H. in handing the notes to the witness, apparently the declarations would have been admitted); 1862, Gordon v. Clapp, 38 Ala. 357 (labor performed; laborer's declaration that he would work for A. not for B. not admitted against A.); 1872, Marx v. Bell, 48 Ala. 497, 506 (money advanced by plaintiff to H., but on defendant's credit; plaintiff's entry, in his books at the time, that defendant was responsible, excluded); California: 1895, Lewis v. Burns, 106 Cal. 381, 39 Pac. 778 (declarations as to a purchase as agent, admitted); Illinois: 1843, Frink v. Phelps, 5 Ill. 556, 558 (daughters' declarations, when buying, whether they bought for the father, admitted); 1860, Hurd v. Haggerty, 24 Ill. 171, 174 (partnership note; declarations of the executing partner, as entries upon the books, admitted to show to whom credit was given); Iowa: 1916, Butler v. Farmers' Nat'l Bank, 173 Ia. 659, 155 N. W. 999 (whether a sum received for hogs and deposited by the wife was to be hers or the husband's; her conversation with the husband at the time of his direction to sell the hogs, admitted); Massachusetts: 1890, Jefferds v. Alvard, 151 Mass. 94, 23 N. E. 734 (husband's declarations when purchasing, admitted; "his state of mind at the moment of buying determined whether the purchase was made for his wife or not"); Michigan: 1891, Tolbert v. Burke, 89 Mich. 132, 141, 50 N. W. 803 (declarations as to whom credit was given on an order for goods, not admitted on the facts); New Hampshire: 1844, Simonds v. Clapp, 16 N. H. 222, 233 (action for a reward earned by the plaintiff in the capture of an escaped prisoner; the issue being whether his acts had been done on his own behalf or only as H.'s agent, his declarations while acting were received); New York: 1905, Gearty v. City of New York, 183 N. Y. 233, 76 N. E. 12 (contract; a certain letter from the defendant's agent, not admitted for the defendant); North Carolina: 1915, McKinnon Carrie & Co. v. Caulk, 170 N. C. 54, 86 S. E. 809 (declaration that "he had made the deed to Sarah," etc., excluded, as merely narrative of a past occurrence); North Dakota: 1909, Johnston v. Spoonheim, 19 N. D. 191, 123 N. W. 830 (conveyance by insolvent parents to son; the parents' statement to the notary, at the time of drafting the deed, that the son had demanded pay for his labor and that this conveyance was made to satisfy him, excluded; Morgan, C. J., diss.); Vermont: 1848, Elkins v. Hamilton, 20 Vt. 630; Wisconsin: 1857, Eastman v. Bennett, 6 Wis. 237.

It would seem that declarations by the payor or vendor are here admissible no less than those of the alleged agent receiving the money or goods; because the act could not have effect as (for example) a sale to an agent unless the seller as well as the buyer willed to treat it so; the tenor of the seller's act in that respect must equally be made definite; and his declarations should be received for that purpose, though of course not as evidence of the existence of the agent's conduct nor of his authority from the alleged principal. Some Courts, in actions against the alleged principal, seem to suppose that the seller's declarations can only be considered as hearsay offered to prove the agent's authority; and therefore, ignoring the above considerations, improperly exclude such declarations.

Compare the cases on agent's admissions (ante, § 1078).

tiation. If they professed to act for the defendant, that fact entered into and formed a part of the negotiation itself, and gave it character. It was a part of the 'res gestæ,' and was admissible as such; though without something further it would have no binding effect upon the defendant."

(3) Declarations accompanying the delivery of a chattel or a deed may help to show whether it is an act of gift, advancement, or otherwise; here the Courts seem to interpret liberally the rule of contemporaneousness:[3]

[3] Accompanying declarations were admitted, except as otherwise noted: Alabama: 1845, Olds v. Powell, 7 Ala. 652; 1846, Powell v. Olds, 9 Ala. 864; 1856, Gillespie v. Burleson, 28 Ala. 551, 563 (whether a gift was to a wife during coverture only); 1861, Bragg v. Massie, 38 Ala. 89, 106 (whether a delivery was a gift); 1906, Napier v. Elliott, 146 Ala. 213, 40 So. 752 (grantor's declaration when signing and acknowledging a deed, admitted on the question of delivery); 1916, Bank of Phoenix City v. Taylor, 196 Ala. 665, 72 So. 264 (money left on deposit; M's statements when depositing it, excluded on the facts); California: 1916, Smith v. Smith, 173 Cal. 725, 161 Pac. 495; Columbia (Dist.): 1904, Dawson v. Waggaman, 23 D. C. App. 428 (donatio causa mortis); Connecticut: 1898, Guinan's Appeal, 70 Conn. 342, 39 Atl. 482 (declarations at the time of delivering bank-book, received to show intent of gift); Georgia: 1847, Carter v. Buchannon, 3 Kelly 513 (declarations made by B. as to a gift by him of a negro slave, excluded; the declarations not being made at the time of an act of gift so that they "would serve to characterize it, would be expressive of the motive or object of the donor"); Illinois: 1901, Scott v. Scott, 191 Ill. 628, 61 N. E. 415 (advancement to a son; testator's declarations, at the time of executing the will, that he had a note of the son, not admitted, no possession of the note appearing otherwise; nor could they be used to interpret the will-clause "whatever notes I may hold at the time of my death against my son W."); 1910, Elliott v Western Coal & M. Co., 243 Ill. 614, 90 N. E. 1104 (gift in 1889, not allowed to be qualified as an advancement by the testator's written statement in 1892); Indiana: 1868, Woolery v. Woolery, 29 Ind. 249, 254 (declarations by a father, a few days prior and twenty or thirty days subsequent to the conveyance, admitted); 1888, Durham v. Shannon, 116 Ind. 403, 407, 19 N. E. 190 (alleged gift to the plaintiff of a horse bought by S.; S.'s declarations of intent to buy for the plaintiff, made "a day or two before he purchased," admitted as contemporaneous); 1892, Thistlewaite v. Thistlewaite, 132 Ind. 355, 31 N. E. 946 (whether sums were advancements; subsequent statements excluded); Iowa: 1870, Middleton v. Middleton, 31 Ia. 151, 153 (father's declarations at the time of a sale to the son, that the latter had paid in full, held receivable, either as admissions or as a deceased's statements against interest); 1903, Ellis v. Newell, 120 Ia. 71, 94 N. W. 463 (by a father, after a transfer to his son, that it was a gift and not an advancement, excluded); 1905, Renshaw v. Dignan, 128 Ia. 722, 105 N. W. 209 (delivery of a deed); Kentucky: 1901, Bailey v. Barclay, 109 Ky. 636, 60 S. W. 377 (subsequent declarations of the alleged donor, excluded); 1906, Hill's Guardian v. Hill, 122 Ky. 681, 92 S. W. 924 (advancements); Massachusetts: 1870, Kingsford v. Hood, 105 Mass. 495, 497 (declarations of a grantor, not at time of delivery, but at time of drafting, not admitted to show which person was meant by a grantee's name equally describing two persons); 1885, Scott v. Bank, 140 Mass. 165, 2 N. E. 925 (quoted supra); 1889, Brooks v. Duggan, 149 Mass. 306, 21 N. E. 381; Mississippi: 1866, Young v. Power, 41 Miss. 197, 204 (testatrix's declarations of intention to collect a claim against the defendant, alleged to have been forgiven to him by her, admitted as declarations of intent consummating the gift); Missouri: 1920, Peterman v. Crowley, — Mo. —, 226 S. W. 944 (deed deposited with a bank, to take effect after death; grantor's subsequent statements, admitted because made in the opponent's presence); 1915, Gill v. Newhouse, — Mo. —, 178 S. W. 495 (statements that a deed was in part payment of a debt, admitted); New Jersey: 1897, Parret v. Craig, 56 N. J. Eq. 280, 38 Atl. 305 (declarations accompanying a delivery, admitted); 1916, Veader v. Veader, 89 N. J. L. 399, 99 Atl. 133 (subsequent statements by a father as to intent in indorsing a pension-check to his son, excluded); North Carolina: 1827, Collier v. Poe, 1 Dev. Eq. 55 (declarations of a father, just before sending slaves to a married daughter, as to his intent to give or lend them, admitted); 1844, Moore v. Gwyn, 4 Ired. 275, 278 (similar; "the declaration was made with a view of qualifying the act . . . whenever it should be done"); Tennessee: 1832, Stewart v. Cheatham, 3 Yerg. 60 (owner's declaration preceding a delivery of negroes, admitted as negativing an intent to give); 1900, Garner v. Taylor, — Tenn. —, 58 S. W. 758 (note given by son to father for money; subsequent declarations, excluded); Texas: 1902, Lord v. Ins. Co., 95 Tex. 216, 66 S. W. 290 (gift of an insurance policy; declarations accompanying, admitted); West Virginia: 1921, De Pue v. Steber, 89 W. Va. 78, 108 S. E.

1885, W. ALLEN, J., in Scott v. Bank, 140 Mass. 165, 2 N. E. 925: "Mrs. F., the claimant's intestate, deposited her money in a savings bank in the names of the plaintiffs. . . . The intention of the donor to make a gift is open to inquiry. . . . Upon the question of Mrs. F.'s intention in holding the book before the gift was perfected — whether she held it as owner or as the agent or depositary for the plaintiff — her declarations and acts while holding it, showing the character of the act, are competent. . . . The declarations of the donor, in relation to making her will, were after the gift was completed, if it ever was completed, and were either incompetent or immaterial."

In the same way, declarations accompanying the delivery of money, notes, or chattels, may indicate whether it was delivered as a consideration.[4]

(4) Declarations accompanying the erection or removal of a fence, or the like, may disclose the total effect of the act as amounting to a dedication of the land for highway purposes:[5]

1883, SHELDON, C. J., in Quinn v. Eagleston, 108 Ill. 254: "The planting the hedge in from the line of the land was an equivocal act. It might be interpreted as a dedication to the public or as setting the hedge on the true line. The declarations of E. [as to his reason for doing it] when he was the owner and in possession of the land, explanatory of his intention in leaving the strip of land open, we think were properly admitted as a part of the 'res gestæ,' as accompanying the acts of throwing the land open and keeping it open."

(5) The act of entering upon land is open to a variety of legal effects, and the accompanying declarations will frequently serve to determine its significance; so also the declarations of a grantee may serve to indicate whether his conduct amounts to an acceptance of the grant.[6]

590 (certain declarations both of donor and donee, excluded).

When the declarations are subsequent to a deed, they may still be receivable, if made in possession, as affecting the presumption of ownership (post, § 1779).

Compare also the cases cited post, § 1782 (testator's declarations).

But for an alleged advancement to a child (in the usual case, on a note from the child to the parent), the parent's declarations, even though made after the delivery of the money, may be nevertheless receivable as admissions (ante, § 1081), offered against his estate; this distinction is emphasized in Missouri; 1904, Strode v. Beall, 105 Mo. App. 495, 79 S. W. 1019 (citing cases).

[4] 1847, Blood v. Rideout, 13 Metc. Mass. 241 (controversy as to the existence of a consideration; the fact was admitted of the giving of a note and of declarations accompanying it; Shaw, C. J.: "The occasion was the one at which the note was completed as the parties intended to have it, and the declarations . . . showing the purpose for which it was given, qualified the act of executing and delivering it"); 1838, Sessions v. Little, 9 N. H. 276.

[5] 1886, Tait v. Hall, 71 Cal. 152, 12 Pac. 391; 1892, Chicago v. Drexel, 141 Ill. 89, 105, 30 N. E. 774; 1900, Woodburn v. Sterling, 184 Ill. 208, 56 N. E. 378; 1897, Pittsburg C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noftsger, 148 Ind. 101, 47 N. E. 332 (words accompanying the removal of a fence, admitted to show a dedication); 1904, Quick v. Cotman, 124 Ia. 102, 99 N. W. 301.

[6] ENGLAND: 1628, Co. Litt. 45, b ("To a livery of seisin of land, words are necessary, as taking in his hand the deed and the ring of the doore (if it be of an house) or a turffe or twigge (if it be of land), and the feoffee laying his hand on it, the feoffer says to the feoffee, Here I deliver to you seisin of this house, or of this land").

UNITED STATES: Illinois: 1856, Croff v. Ballinger, 18 Ill. 201, 203 (forcible entry; the occupant B.'s declarations at the time of the entry, admitted to show "whether the entry was made against the will of B."); 1866, Rowley v. Hughes, 40 Ill. 316, 319 (forcible entry; declarations of defendant's predecessor, when entering, admitted to show the character of his occupation as constituting possession); Kentucky: 1824, Thompson v. Stewart, 5 Litt. 5 (forcible entry; on the issue of possession, the plaintiff's declarations, after temporary removal from the land, were admitted as indicating his continuing intent to possess it); Massachusetts: 1870, Kings-

(6) Whether a taking of personalty was made with such claim of title or intent to exercise dominion as amounted to a conversion may depend upon the accompanying declarations.[7] So, also, the declarations, while in possession, of one charged with larceny or the like, may indicate whether he exercised dominion by appropriation to himself, or dealt only as a borrower, in recognition of the true owner's title; for in the latter case the act would not be criminal. There should be no doubt as to the admissibility of such declarations; but they are often affected by the rule for explanations by one found in possession of stolen goods, and the distinction is examined elsewhere (post, § 1781).

(7) In sundry other instances, not calling for further generalizations, the Verbal Act doctrine finds frequent exemplification." [8] ford v. Hood, 105 Mass. 495, 497 (grantee described by a name equally applicable to two persons; declarations of claim by one of them, admitted to show the nature of his occupation); 1886, Stevens v. Miles, 142 Mass. 572, 8 N. E. 426 (Gardner, J.: "It became material to determine whether the defendant accepted the lease. . . . This act of taking and reading the instrument . . . was relied on by the plaintiff in support of her case. What the defendant said may have given character to the act and given it a different meaning from that claimed by the plaintiff. . . . It was a part of the act of taking and reading it"); 1901, O'Connell v. Cox, 179 Mass. 250, 60 N. E. 580 (declarations of a grantor while in occupation, admitted to show seisin); 1907, Goyette v. Keenan, 196 Mass. 416, 82 N. E. 427 (a deed described "land formerly belonging to H. B., now or lately of one W."; declarations of W., "to show the character of his occupation" etc., the dispute being whether the description covered the land in question, were held not improperly excluded because their tenor did not appear); Pennsylvania: 1864, Duffey v. Presbyterian Congregation, 48 Pa. 46, 51 (whether a wife went into possession under a certain deed or a certain will; her declarations in possession admitted).

For adverse possession, see post, § 1778.

[7] 1888, Dunbar v. McGill, 69 Mich. 297, 37 N. W. 285; 1883, Frome v. Dennis, 45 N. J. L. 520; 1888, Ross v. White, 60 Vt. 560.

[8] California: 1903, Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 74 Pac. 35 (action on a contract by defendant to adopt and support plaintiff; defendant's declarations that he was only guardian, excluded, the 'res gestæ' not including the whole time of living together); Connecticut: 1848, Russell v. Frisbie, 19 Conn. 209 (declarations made at the time of depositing ship's papers with the witness, indicating a revocation of the authority of F., then in possession of the ship, admitted); 1905, Engel v. Conti, 78 Conn. 351, 62 Atl. 210 (separation of wife and husband; their conversation while in the same room, admitted in explanation of his acts); Illinois: 1898, Lambe v. Manning, 171 Ill. 612, 49 N. E. 509 (unsigned license-paper wafered to a deed; declarations of the grantor in attaching it, received to show whether it was executed as a part of the deed); 1906, Fitzgerald v. Benner, 219 Ill. 485, 76 N. E. 709 (delay in performance of a contract; the contractor's agent's expressions of readiness to perform, admitted); Massachusetts: 1874, Nourse v. Nourse, 116 Mass. 101, 104 (declarations by a mortgagor, two months after making it, as to his purpose in doing so, excluded); New Hampshire: 1839, Buswell v. Davis, 10 N. H. 413, 422 (attachment in fraud of creditors; declarations of the attachor at the time of obtaining the writ, as to past facts forming his reason, excluded); Philippine Isl. 1919, Dusepee v. Torres, 39 P. I. 760, 771 (inheritance, sworn declaration of T., on bringing plaintiff to the Islands as immigrant, that plaintiff was his legitimate child, admitted); Rhode Island: 1905, Chapman v. Pendleton, 26 R. I. 573, 59 Atl. 928 (surety's agreement; subsequent declarations excluded); South Dakota: 1917, Schanzenbach v. Stoller, 38 S. D. 303, 161 N. W. 329 (purchase of land; statements made at the time of delivering the contract, held admissible; Whiting, J., diss.; both opinions citing the text above with approval); Vermont: 1848, Holbrook v. Murray, 20 Vt. 525, 528 (declarations as to notes, before taking possession under a mortgage, excluded); 1915, Comstock's Admr. v. Jacobs, 89 Vt. 133, 94 Atl. 497 (action against a foster son-in-law to recover the intestate's property; plea, that the intestate transferred it to defendant as consideration for a contract of support; replication, that the intestate lived with the defendant under a contract of boarding and had not transferred the property; declarations of the intestate, made while living with the defendant, that intestate had not given away the property but was living there under a contract for board, excluded).

§ 1778. Possessor's Declarations on an Issue of Prescription by Adverse Possession. Where a title is rested on a prescriptive possession for a period of years sufficient to extinguish former rights and create title in the possessor, it is essential, under the rule of substantive law, that the occupation thus relied upon shall have been "adverse" to other claimants, i.e. the occupation must have purported to be hostile to and exclusive of other claimants. This adverseness of occupation most commonly appears when the occupation is under a claim of title by the occupant himself, for this by implication denies and opposes other titles.

Accordingly, it has never been doubted that all declarations by the occupant, importing a claim of title in himself, are admissible as verbal parts of his act of occupation, serving to give it an adverse color; while his declarations of disclaim, conceding another's title, are equally receivable as giving it the contrary color. Such declarations of claim are in no sense testimony to the deed or other source of title that may be thus asserted; for in that aspect they would clearly violate the Hearsay rule. They are merely verbal parts going to make up the whole act of occupation, and are not given any testimonial force as credible assertions:

1845, Collier, C. J., in McBride v. Thompson, 8 Ala. 650, 653: "It is not to be understood that such declarations are admissible to every conceivable extent. True, the affirmation of the party in possession that he held in his own right or under another is proper evidence as part of the 'res gestæ,' which 'res gestæ' is his continuous possession. But his declarations beyond this are no part of the subject-matter, or 'thing done,' and cannot be received as such. While it is allowable to prove statements of one in possession and explanatory thereof, it is not permissible to show everything that may have been said by him in respect to the title, — as, that it was acquired by him 'bona fide' and for a valuable consideration, was paid for by the money of a third person or his own, etc. This, we have seen, instead of being a part of the 'res gestæ,' would be something beyond and independent of it."

1869, Peck, J., in Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465, 472: "The Court properly admitted proof of the declarations of Reuben Hawkins, made while working on lot sixty-four, to the effect that he called it his 'possession lot,' and that he was claiming and getting it by possession. But the Court was in error in excluding 'evidence to show that at other times, prior to 1822, the said Hawkins said the same things when not on lot sixty-four, but at his house and in sight of it, and pointing it out.' To constitute a continuous possession it is not necessary that the occupant should be actually upon the premises continually. The mere fact that time intervenes between successive acts of occupancy does not necessarily destroy the continuity of the possession. The kind and frequency of the acts of occupancy, necessary to constitute a continuous possession, depend somewhat on the condition of the property, and the uses to which it is adapted in reference to the circumstances and situation of the possessor, and partly on his intention. If, in the intermediate time between the different acts of occupancy, there is no existing intention to continue the possession, or to return to the enjoyment of the premises, the possession, if it has not ripened into a title, terminates, and cannot afterwards be connected with a subsequent occupation so as to be made available toward gaining title; while such continual intention might, and generally would, preserve the possession unbroken. This principle is tersely stated in the civil law, thus: a man may retain possession by intention alone, yet this is not sufficient for the acquisition of possession. . . . If the admissibility of such declarations is put on the ground of declarations constituting part of the 'res gestæ,' they are admissible, as the 'res gestæ' is not confined to a particular act of occupancy done upon the premises, but is the continual possession, which includes the successive acts of occupancy. Since a party who has once commenced a possession of land, by actual entry and acts of occupancy upon it, may continue to possess it during intervals when not upon it, he may claim it during such intervals as well as when actually upon the land doing acts of possession; and the fact of his making such claim is provable by evidence of his declarations made at the time, in the same manner and to the same effect as if made while on the land, doing an act of possession. Such declarations to show the adverse character of the possession are quite as much in the nature of facts as in the nature of a medium of proof."

1873, DAY, J., in Stephens v. McCloy, 36 Ia. 661: "It is the intent [to possess] with which the acts are done that gives them their character. . . . The question rejected seeks to elicit the declarations made by the plaintiffs, at the time of making the survey, respecting the object for which the survey was being made. . . . Such declarations are those made at the time of the act done and which are calculated to unfold its nature and quality."

The limitations of this doctrine must, however, be observed. It assumes that adverse possession is in some way material under the issues of the case [1] (forcible entry, prescriptive title, or otherwise), and that the declarations were made when in possession,[2] and that they are not offered except as coloring the occupation.[3] Subject to these limitations, the use of such declarations for this purpose is never disputed.[4] It is apparent, moreover, that they may be § 1778. [1] 1896, McCleod v. Bishop, 110 Ala. 640, 20 So. 130. For cases of forcible entry, see also ante, § 1777.

[2] 1851, Comins v. Comins, 21 Conn. 413, 418 (declarations "made while he was absent from the premises and which accompanied no act" were held inadmissible; this seems unsound; compare Webb v. Richardson, quoted supra); 1823, May v. Jones, 4 Litt. Ky. 21, 24 (declarations after possession ended, excluded); 1897, Ward v. Edge, 100 Ky. 757, 39 S. W. 440; 1869, Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465, 472 (quoted supra); 1897, High v. Pancake, 42 W. Va. 602, 26 S. E. 536.

The practical distinction between this and other rules is more particularly examined later (post, § 1780). But note here that the present rule may be sometimes more, sometimes less favorable than the rule for a party's admissions. For example, the declarations, if made after possession ended, might be excluded under this rule, but still receivable against the claimant as a party's admissions: 1829, Church v. Burghardt, 8 Pick. 327. Conversely, the declarations made during possession might be receivable against him under the present rule, though not receivable under the rule for admissions: 1901, Todd v. Weed, 84 Minn. 4, 86 N. W. 756 (statements of disclaim, made after expiration of the statutory period, receivable as affecting the intent of occupation, but not as oral admissions divesting title).

[3] 1910, Makekau v. Kane, 20 Haw. 203, 209 (above requirement applied); 1847, Rigg v. Cook, 9 Ill. 336, 343, 350 (defendant claimed under R.; plaintiff claimed under a mortgage foreclosed against R.; for the defendant, R.'s statements when paying rent for the land, while in possession after foreclosure, admitted to color his claim of adverse possession; but not his statements as to having paid the mortgage and as to the former owners' title).

[4] In the following list, when not otherwise noted, the case is one of prescriptive possession; some of these declarations might have been excluded or admitted on other grounds (summarized post, § 1780); in particular, distinguish the rules for a party's consistent claims in corroboration (ante, § 1133), for a party's admissions (ante, § 1082), for a deceased's declarations against proprietary interest (ante, § 1458), and for a deceased's boundary-declarations (ante, § 1563); Federal: 1822, Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59, 105; Alabama: 1842, Oden v. Stubblefield, 4 Ala. 40, 42 (slave); 1845, McBride v. Thompson, 8 Ala. 650, 652 (slave); 1843, Nelson v. Sverson, 24 Ala. 9, 16 (slave); 1855, Johnson v. Boyles, 26 Ala. 576, 581 (slave); 1856, Gillespie v. Burleson, 28 Ala. 551, 563 (slave); 1905, Henry v. Brown, 143 Ala. 446, 39 So. 325; Arkansas: 1905, Seawell v. Young, 77 Ark. 309, 91 S. W. 544 (ancestor's declarations of claim in possession, admitted, following Knight v. Knight, Ill., infra); 1912, Butler v. Hines, 101 Ark. 409, 142 S. W. 509 (declarations after seven years' occupation, admitted, as evidencing lack of adverseness in prior occupation); California: 1863, Draper v. Douglass, 23 Cal. 347 (location of a mining-claim; the miner's used either for or against the prescriptive claimant, according as they give to the occupation one or the other purport, and irrespective of the rule for admis-declarations, while working in the vicinity, admitted in his favor); 1866, Sneed v. Woodward, 30 Cal. 430, 434 (issue as to the plaintiff's acquiescence in an erroneous location so as to be estopped; their declarations at the time, received in their favor); 1871, Phelps v. McGloan, 42 Cal. 298, 302; Connecticut: 1828, Reading v. Weston, 7 Conn. 143, 148 (pauper settlement; on an issue whether D. occupied premises in her own right and as a whole, her declarations during occupancy were admitted); Georgia: 1896, Ogden v. Dodge Co., 97 Ga. 461, 25 S. E. 321 (the ordinary of the county, in official possession); 1903, Perkins v. Brinkley, — Ga. —, 45 S. E. 652 (declarations of an agent in possession, excluded; here, of a husband); 1909, Bowman v. Owens, 133 Ga. 49, 65 S. E. 156 (admitted, under Code 1895, § 5180); Rev. C. 1910, § 5767 (general principle; quoted ante, § 1082); Hawaii: 1915, Oahu R. & L. Co. v. Kaili, 22 Haw. 673 (adverse possession; declarations of defendant's ancestor as to having obtained the land by exchange from plaintiff's lessor, excluded as "narrative of past occurrences"); Illinois: 1879, James v. R. Co., 91 Ill. 554, 557 (operation of a railroad over land claimed); 1884, Grim v. Murphy, 110 Ill. 271, 277 (declarations as to a disputed boundary); 1888, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Houghton, 126 Ill. 233, 239, 18 N. E. 301 (disputed boundary); 1889, Shaw v. Schoonover, 130 Ill. 448, 453, 22 N. E. 589 (declarations by a married woman claiming her father's land by adverse possession); 1899, Knight v. Knight, 178 Ill. 553, 53 N. E. 306 (declarations of ancestor during general time of possession); 1899, Kotz v. Belz, 178 Ill. 434, 53 N. E. 367 (similar); 1911, Rich v. Naffziger, 248 Ill. 455, 94 N. E. 1; Kansas: 1898, Rand v. Huff, 59 Kan. 777, 53 Pac. 483 (predecessor in claim); 1899, Crawford v. Crawford, 60 Kan. 126, 55 Pac. 842 (excluded on the facts); Kentucky: 1828, Smith v. Morrow, 7 T. B. Monr. 234, 237; Maine: 1905, Emmet v. Perry, 100 Me. 139, 60 Atl. 872 (defendant's grantor's declarations of claim, admitted); Massachusetts: 1859, Niles v. Patch, 13 Gray 254, 256; Michigan: 1869, Bower v. Earl, 18 Mich. 367, 378 (extent of possession); Missouri: 1876, Martin v. Bonsack, 61 Mo. 556, 559; 1890, Mississippi Co. v. Vowels, 101 Mo. 225, 228, 14 S. W. 282; 1891, Meier v. Meier, 105 Mo. 411, 422, 430, 16 S. W. 223; 1903, Whitaker v. Whitaker, 175 Mo. 1, 74 S.W. 1029; 1905, Swope v. Ward, 185 Mo. 316, 84 S. W. 895 (but declarations naming the source of an alleged title are excluded; this seems erroneous); 1906, Farmers' Bank v. Barbee, 198 Mo. 465, 95 S. W. 225 (Martin v. Bonsack followed); 1914, Heynbrock v. Hormann, 256 Mo. 21, 164 S. W. 547 (Bank v. Barbee followed); New Hampshire: 1821, Claremont v. Carlton, 2 N. H. 369, 372 (declarations to show the bounds of an occupation, held admissible; distinguishing the improper attempt to contradict a deed's description of boundaries, forbidden by the parol evidence rule, post, § 2442); 1826, Downs v. Lyman, 3 N. H. 486 (plaintiff claimed a locus M. under a grant to H., and to identify it showed an occupation of a certain locus by H.'s grantees; to rebut this, defendant was allowed to show declarations of H.'s grantees, when abandoning this locus, indicating that they did not claim it under H.'s grant); 1849, Cilley v. Bartlett, 19 N. H. 312, 322 (general principle applied); 1863, Hodgdon v. Shannon, 44 N. H. 572, 577 (same); 1882, Smith v. Putnam, 62 N. H. 369, 373 (same); New Jersey: 1887, Miller v. Feenane, 50 N. J. L. 32, 11 Atl. 136; New York: 1806, Jackson v. Vredenburgh, 1 John. 159 (plaintiff claimed as heir of C. Y.; defendant claimed by deed from the wife of D. Y., elder brother of C. Y.; the wife having been in possession, her declarations were admitted for the defendant to show the possession to be adverse and under claim of title, and not as guardian for her son); 1867, Abeel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513, 515; 1872, Morss v. Salisbury, 48 N. Y. 636, 642; North Carolina: 1841, Davis v. Campbell, 1 Ired. 482; 1858, State v. Emory, 6 Jones L. 133 (forcible ouster; the tenant's declaration, after leaving, that he had consented, excluded); 1868, Hedrick v. Gobble, 63 N. C. 48 (issue as to boundary; plaintiff's ancestor's statements while in possession pointing out the boundary, excluded, as not explanatory of possession); Oklahoma: 1897, Meyers v. U. S., 5 Okl. 173, 48 Pac. 186 (a declaration of possession and claim, not admitted where the declarant was charged with perjury in falsely swearing to possession); Pennsylvania: 1845, Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Pa. St. 182 (plaintiff claimed under S.; defendant claimed under L.'s title by adverse possession; L.'s declarations in possession, conceding S.'s title and possession, admitted against defendant); South Carolina: 1825, Turpin v. Brannon, 3 McCord 261 (predecessor's declarations, apparently admitted on this principle); 1827, Martin v. Simpson, 4 id. 262 (predecessor's declarations of claim while in possession, admitted expressly on this principle); 1881, Ellen v. Ellen, 16 S. C. 132, 135 (similar; good opinion); s. c., 18 S. C. 489, 494 (prior rulings approved); 1887, Boozer v. Teague, 27 S. C. 348, 367, 3 S. E. 551 (similar); 1891, Wingo v. Caldwell, 36 S. C. 598, 15 S. E. 382 (similar); 1897, Metz v. Metz, 48 S. C. 472, 26 S. E. 787 (received; but here the Court laboriously justified the use of declarations of claim by a predecessor as admissible in rebuttal of admissions, under the principle of § 1133, ante; the claim being by adverse possession, they were receivable in any case); 1915, Holsions (post, § 1780). Finally, it does not matter whether the property be real or personal, provided only it is of a sort to which title may be gained by prescription.

Certain varieties in the application of the rule may now be noted:

(a) Suppose that the occupier of the land was not the present claimant, nor a predecessor under whose adverse possession he claims, but was a third person concededly only a lessee; may the declarations of this lessee-occupier, professing to hold as tenant under the present claimant or his predecessor, be received? It seems clear that they may. Such declarations signify that the declarant's acts of occupation were done on behalf of his alleged landlord, and such acts will therefore be acts of possession for that landlord, provided only that the latter adopted them, and his then claim of title would suffice as such an adoption. It is generally conceded that such declarations of a lessee are as admissible, for the now claimant, as his own would have been;[5] den v. Cantrell, 100 S. C. 265, 84 S. E. 826; Tennessee: 1852, Carnahan v. Wood, 2 Swan 500, 502; Texas: 1921, Smith v. Robertson, — Tex. —, 235 S. W. 847 (letter of claimant prior to termination of statutory period, recognizing opponent's title, admitted on the issue of adverse possession); Vermont: 1863, Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 273, 282 (on an issue of abandonment); 1869, Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403, 407; 1869, Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465, 472 (quoted supra); 1870, Kimball v. Ladd, 42 Vt. 747, 755.

Contra: Mass. 1861, Osgood v. Coates, 1 All. 77, 79 (no authority cited); 1864, Morrill v. Titcomb, 8 All. 100 (evidently confusing the rule about boundary declarations, ante, § 1563).

[5] ENGLAND: 1772, Holloway v. Rakes, cited in 2 T. R. 55 (possession by a devisor being in issue, the "declarations of the tenant in possession at that time that he held as tenant to the devisor" were admitted); 1777, Doe v. Williams, Cowp. 621 (to prove the defendant's predecessor G. in possession at the time of levying a fine, a conversation was admitted in which the actual possessor-tenant P. stated the payment of rent to G. as landlord and the latter stated its receipt from P. as tenant; "the possession of the tenant was connected with that of the landlord, which was adverse"; here P. was living, but disqualified); 1787, Davies v. Pierce, 2 T. R. 53 (the issue being whether a locus, where cattle had been impounded, "had been immemorially part and parcel of a certain tenement of land called B.," as claimed by the defendant in replevin, evidence was admitted for the plaintiff of the declarations of various occupiers of the locus that they held under one E. and paid rent to him; E. being otherwise shown not to be owner of the tenement B.; the preceding two cases cited by Buller, J., as precedents; in the present case two of the declarants were deceased, but no mention of this was made in the opinion); 1811, Peaceable v. Watson, 4 Taunt. 16 (to prove seisin in the plaintiff's ancestor, the declarations of a deceased tenant in possession, as to holding under the ancestor, were held admissible for the plaintiff; but apparently not on the present principle); 1820, Doe v. Green, Gow 228 (similar ruling, but made on the authority of Davies v. Pierce); 1835, Carne v. Nicoll, 1 Bing. N. C. 430 (like Peaceable v. Watson).

CANADA: 1859, White v. Smita, 4 All. N. Br. 335 (Peaceable v. Watson cited; but here the declarations of claim of one not in possession were excluded).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1920, Richmond Cedar Works v. Foreman B. L. Co., 4th C. C. A., 267 Fed. 363 (adverse possession by defendant's predecessor P.; M.'s statement about 1850, while in possession, that he was there under P., admitted); Ala. 1840, Bliss v. Winston, 1 Ala. 344, 348 (forcible entry; here the declarant was deceased); 1919, Fuller v. Fair, 202 Ala. 430, 80 So. 814 (line fence treated as boundary); Ky. 1829, West v. Price, 2 J. J. Marsh, 380, 383 (admitted, so far as they affected the nature and extent of possession); N. H. 1847, Spence v. Smith, 18 N. H. 587 (plaintiff in a writ of entry relief on a descent from T.; defendant disputed T.'s title; but plaintiff relied on T.'s possession claiming a fee; declarations of a former tenant admitting T.'s title were received for the plaintiff); N. Car. 1906, Bivings v. Gosnell, 141 N. C. 341, 53 S. E. 861 (declarations of M., at the time of renting, assented to by the tenant, that he was acting for the plaintiff, admitted); Pa. 1785, Andrew v. Fleming, 2 Dall. 93 (plaintiff allowed to show declarations by defendant's lessor of a tenancy under plaintiff's lessor, to prove the latter's possession); S. Dak. 1904, Murphy v. Dafoe, 18 S. D. 42, 99 N. W. 86 (declarations of an agent in possession for M., admitted); W. Va. 1906, Wade v. McDougle, 59 W. Va. 113, 52 S. E. 1026 (declarations of C. and L., while cutting, etc., but they would seem to be also receivable against him.[6] Some of the rulings, however, in admitting them for the former purpose, have mistakenly proceeded upon precedents dealing with a wholly distinct principle, namely, the Exception for Statements of Facts Against Interest (ante, § 1458). It is obvious that if the lessee were deceased, his statements of tenancy would be admissible under that Exception, and a few earlier English cases, which apparently proceed under the Exception,[7] have commonly been cited as precedents for the present doctrine; the practical distinctions between the two are elsewhere noted (post, § 1780).

(b) When an act of possession has been shown for the above purpose, the accompanying declarations of claim are also admissible to fix the extent in area of the land constructively in possession. Upon this principle the deeds, tax-lists, and other documents under which the occupier holds are admissible as representing the area and boundaries claimed.[8] It is merely the tenor of the document that is thus significant; and therefore it is unnecessary to prove their execution,[9] and it is immaterial that they are void as sources of title by grant.[10] The principle here involved is that of the substantive law which within certain limits allows the physical occupation of a small space of land to serve as constructive possession of a much larger area. For example, the cultivation of one acre in a group of six hundred and forty acres of farm-land might be treated as constructive possession of the whole; while that they were doing so under N. the plaintiff, admitted).

Contra: 1821, Calvert v. Fitzgerald, Litt. Sel. Cas. 388; 1860, Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray Mass. 504.

[6] 1867, Meade v. Black, 22 Wis. 241 (plaintiff claimed by possession of O. as his tenant; O.'s answer, claiming title, in an action of ejectment by the plaintiff, admitted as tending "to illustrate and explain the character of O.'s possession").

Distinguish the rule about disputing a landlord's title: 1868, Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351, 372 (tenant's declarations of claim, not made to the landlord, excluded, because, having entered as lessee, his "mere words" could not make his occupation adverse).

[7] Notably the following: 1811, Peaceable v. Watson, 4 Taunt. 16 (to show seisin in the plaintiff's ancestor, declarations were held admissible of C., a deceased lessee of the premises, naming the ancestor as his lessor; Mansfield, C. J.: "Possession is 'prima facie' evidence of seisin in fee simple; the declaration of the possessor [i. e. the lessee], that he is tenant to another, makes most strongly therefore against his own interest, and consequently is admissible"); 1833, Doe v. Arkwright, 5 C. & P. 575, 577 (plaintiff claimed as tenant in tail under the will of S.; to prove S. seised, evidence was offered for the plaintiff of the declaration of B., now deceased, made while cutting timber on the land; Parke, J.: "He exercised an act of ownership, and he is therefore 'prima facie' owner; and what he says as to any one else being the owner is a declaration to cut down his title"; Counsel: "Your lordship will only hear what he said at the time"; Parke, J.: "Yes, what he said at any time").

Compare the rule for presumption of ownership, post, § 1779.

[8] The rule of evidence is not doubted; the controversies arise under the substantive law; and multiplication of citations is unnecessary: 1895, Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Brantley, 107 Ala. 683, 18 So. 320 (deeds); 1863, Hardisty v. Glenn, 32 Ill. 62, 64; 1899, Burr v. Smith, 152 Ind. 469, 53 N. E. 468 (declarations as to boundaries); 1896, Pasley v. Richardson, 119 N. C. 449, 26 S. E. 32 (tax-lists of the land in the name of the possessor); 1811, Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. Pa. 314, 329 (recitals in an old deed of another old deed, receivable to show "the 'quo animo' the land was held"); 1893, Dunn v. Eaton, 92 Tenn. 743, 751, 23 S. W. 163 (deeds); 1909, Hassam v. Safford Lumber Co., 82 Vt. 444, 74 Atl. 197; 1897, Sulphur Mines Co. v. Thompson, 93 Va. 293, 25 S. E. 232.

[9] Post, § 2132 (authentication of documents); ante, §§ 1653, 1655 (record of deeds).

[10] 1828, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 371, 375 (deed void); 1872, Bounds v. Bounds, 11 Heisk. Tenn. 318, 324 (deed unrecorded). Contra, but erroneous: 1804, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. Md. 527, 533 (a will of 1737, excluded because not attested by three witnesses).

the occupation of a city block on one side of a street might not be allowed to serve as constructive possession of a block on the other side of the street. But within these limits set by the substantive law the occupation of a small part may serve as constructive possession of as much more as the occupant may by his acts express the will to control; and thus the deeds and other documents by which he has "color of title" may, as representing the extent of his claim, serve to fix the extent of his constructive possession.[11]

(c) It is also a necessary feature of the possession which establishes a prescriptive title that it shall have been uninterrupted. Hence, if another person has during the time been upon the land, the latter's presence may or may not constitute an interruption of the former's possession according as it has or has not been hostile to the former's. Accordingly, declarations of the other claimant, while on the land, may serve, as verbal parts of his act, to indicate his presence or occupation to be hostile to the former's claim, and not subordinate to it, and may thus constitute an interruption:[12]

1870, CARPENTER, J., in Sears v. Hoyt, 37 Conn. 406 (admitting declarations of the titular owner, when plowing up the place over which the defendant claimed a right of way, that the defendant had no right of way there): "The act of plowing and cultivating the ground over which the alleged way passed was an important fact in the case. Unexplained it constituted an interruption of the use, and was evidence tending to prevent the acquisition of a right [by the defendant]. It was . . . impliedly a denial of the right of the defendant. . . . The declaration as received only tended to give effect to that act, and to that extent only did it characterize or qualify it."

In the same way, such an interrupting occupation may be in turn negatived by the occupation of a third person; and thus the third person's declarations in possession, repelling the opponent's claim and acquiescing in the proponent's claim, may become admissible;[13] though this is usually merely another aspect of an application of the rule already noted (par. a, supra).

(d) By an analogous application of the same rule, the party engaged in repelling a claim of adverse possession (though himself not resting on such a title) may rely upon a possession by his own lessee as interrupting or negativing the claimant's possession; and for this purpose the declarations of [11] 1920, Philbin v. Carr, — Ind. App. —, 129 N. E. 19 (lucid explanation of "color of title," by Dausman, P. J.).

From this doctrine, distinguish the principle of relevancy (ante, § 378) by which actual occupation of a part of a tract of land may be evidence of the actual occupation of the whole of it.

[12] 1866, Leport v. Todd, 32 N. J. L. 124, 128; 1867, Outcolt v. Ludlow, 32 N. J. L. 239, 244 (analogous); 1867, Meade v. Black, 22 Wis. 241, 243; 1887, Lamoreux v. Huntley, 68 Wis. 24, 33, 31 N. W. 331.

[13] Eng. 1811, Stanley v. White, 14 East, 332, 334, 339, 341 (adverse occupation of timber-land; declarations of the defendant's predecessor's tenant in possession, acquiescing in the plaintiff's claim to the timber-land in issue, admitted for the plaintiff, as "declarations accompanying acts of forbearance of the owners in not cutting trees within the belt"); 1821, Doe v. Pettett, 5 B. & Ald. 223 (defendant claimed through a widow's adverse possession, and plaintiff claimed as heir of the husband; the widow's declarations that she held as life-tenant only were received for the plaintiff, "not to show the quantum of her estate, but only to explain the nature of her possession"); U. S 1820, Betts v. Davenport, 3 Conn. 486 (defendant's predecessor's agreement negativing adverse possession, admitted for plaintiff); 1861, Hale v. Silloway, 1 All. Mass. 21.

a lessee in possession that he held as lessee for the proponent of the evidence are admissible against the claimant by prescription.[14]

§ 1779. Possessor's Declarations as aiding the Presumption of Ownership from Possession. One in possession of property is presumed to be the owner of it (post, § 2515). As making more definite and significant the nature of the person's custody or occupation, and as giving it the significance of an exclusive control and of a possession in the fullest sense, the acts and declarations of claim of title by the occupant may be decisive, and should therefore be considered for that purpose; without, however, conceding to them any force as hearsay assertions.

Such is the simple and plausible theory of a rule now firmly established in many jurisdictions. The result has often been reached, especially in some early rulings, without any apparent working-out of this theory, but merely by a loose and inaccurate reading of the precedents applying the doctrine of the foregoing section and that of the Exception for Statements Against Proprietary Interest (ante, § 1455). Of the opposing rulings, also, some have taken no notice of the present theory, and have merely pointed out that neither of the two doctrines just mentioned can serve to admit declarations of claim by a living person, especially a party, in his own interest, where the title is not founded upon adverse possession. In a few of the opposing rulings the present theory is distinctly faced, and is rejected as both incorrect in principle and dangerous in practice.

In the following passages the theory is well expounded:

1847, STORRS, J., in Avery v. Clemons, 18 Conn. 306, 309 (admitting declarations of S., in an action of trover between S.'s creditor and A., claiming as bailor of S.): "The possession of personal property is, unexplained, 'prima facie' evidence of ownership in the possessor; but, as it is consistent with ownership in another, it is not conclusive; and whether the person in possession is the owner, depends, not upon the mere fact that he is in possession of it, but upon the nature and character of that possession. These are properly evinced by his conduct with regard to it; and the nature of that conduct can only be understood by the declarations accompanying it. Declarations in such cases are not, as claimed by the plaintiff, obnoxious to the objection which ordinarily applies to hearsay testimony. They are not received as declarations of third persons, to prove the truth of what is asserted; but as being of themselves acts or things done by them, and which explain or characterize the acts which they accompany, and show their true character."

1870, PAINE, J., in Roebke v. Andrews, 26 Wis. 311, 317 (dealing with the trial Court's refusal to rule for the defendant that "mere statements of the plaintiff as to the ownership of those cattle is no evidence of title"): "The law gives to the possession of either real or personal property under a claim of title the effect of being 'prima facie' evidence of title. It is sometimes briefly stated that 'expression is "prima facie" evidence of title.' But, when so stated, it is always implied that the possession is under a claim of title. It is that fact which gives to it its character and legal effect. . . . It is thus seen that, wherever title is sought to be proved by possession, the claim of title accompanying that possession is not only proper but material and necessary to be known. And inasmuch as every person whose title is in issue is permitted to make out a 'prima facie' case by proving what title he claimed in connection with it. The immediate point of inquiry is, what title was claimed, and not what really existed; and, that being so, inasmuch as what a man claims consists of what he asserts and declares in respect to his rights, his declarations are original evidence of the fact. And to allow him to prove them for that purpose is no more liable to the objection of allowing him to manufacture evidence for himself by his own statements than it would be, where it became material to prove a particular demand or notice, to allow him to prove his own declarations containing such notice or demand. The very nature and object of the inquiry establish the limit to the effect of his declarations as evidence. They are evidence only to show to what extent he claimed title; and, so far as they go beyond that and assert any facts in regard to the title, they are not evidence of any such facts. . . . It may be that, on proof of possession merely, the law in the absence of any further proof would presume that the party claimed a perfect title; . . . [but] if there is any such legal presumption, it would seem to furnish a sufficient answer to any apprehended danger from allowing a party to prove [expressly] that he claimed title; for such proof would show nothing more than the law would presume without it. . . . [The defendant was thus not entitled to the instruction that the plaintiff's] assertions of ownership were not 'evidence of title.' It is true they were not direct evidence. His statements that he had bought the cattle were not evidence of that fact. But it was in its nature explanatory of his possession and of the title which he claimed. It was equivalent to a direct assertion of ownership; and such assertion the law allows to be given in evidence accompanied with evidence of possession, and to both [together] it gives the effect of 'prima facie' evidence of title. I think, therefore, the Court were not bound to say that the plaintiff's assertions of ownership were no evidence of title. They were evidence to prove the fact of such assertion; which fact, in connection with another, warranted an inference of title. They had therefore an ultimate bearing upon that question; and were proper to be considered by the jury to prove the fact of a claim of title."

[14] 1823, Williams v. Ensign, 4 Conn. 456 (plaintiff claimed by adverse possession, and defendant by record title; to disprove the adverse possession, defendant offered declarations of C. while in occupation, as to his holding under the record owner, C. being deceased; Hosmer, C. J., held them admissible as "part of the 'res gestæ,'" "to ascertain the character of an act or the intention with which it was done"; adding, "I have cautiously abstained from citing cases in which the declarations were against the interest of the person making them, or where the party to be affected by the testimony claimed title under the person who made the declarations"); 1867, Sheaffer v. Eakman, 56 Pa. 144, 151.

The following seems analogous, though the offer was for another purpose: 1885, Jacobs v. Callaghan, 57 Mich. 11, 23 N. W. 454 (use and occupation as tenant; defence, surrender and re-lease to M. as tenant; M.'s declarations in possession that he held under defendant were admitted for plaintiff).

1873, BREESE, C. J., in Amick v. Young, 69 Ill. 542, 544: "It has always been held that one strong indication of ownership of personal property . . . is exercising acts of ownership over it, having it in actual possession, making and paying for repairs upon it, offering to sell it, etc., which furnish presumptive evidence of actual ownership; subject, however, to be rebutted by an adverse claimant. Acts and declarations of a party in actual possession are not admitted on the theory that any peculiar credit is due to such party, but because they give character to the facts to be investigated."

All that can be said in opposition to the theory is found in the following forceful dissenting opinion:

1870, DIXON, C. J., in Roebke v. Andrews, 26 Wis. 311, 324: "[In the first place,] it is something new to me in the law of Evidence, if a party can thus make title to property in himself by first declaring to third persons that he owns it and then bringing such third persons into court to testify to his declarations. . . . If I lend another my horse for a month or three months, and he takes him and keeps him, and in the meantime he tells his family and neighbors and acquaintances that the horse is his, that he has bought, paid for, and owns him, or that I have given him the horse, and if at the end of the time he refuses to surrender the horse and I bring suit, as I am compelled to, all those declarations become evidence of title in his favor against me, and the jury may find that the horse is not mine after all, but is his. He and I, being the only witnesses to the transaction, may testify, I to the lending and he to the purchase; or the number of witnesses may be otherwise equally divided; and he brings in the declarations to turn the scale in his favor. He being in possession of the horse, his declarations that he bought and owned him are admitted; but, I not being in possession, my declarations to the contrary, and that I only lent the horse, though never so frequently made, are excluded. The advantage which he has over me is very manifest, and the great injustice of such advantage equally so. . . . [2] In saying this, I do not, of course, mean to say that there may not be circumstances under which the declarations of the party should be received. . . . Such are cases where the nature of the possession [as adverse] becomes a material point of inquiry and the declarations are admitted in explanation of it. . . . But the present is not a case of that kind, and not one falling within any of the exceptions. The nature of the plaintiff's possession . . . was wholly immaterial. There was no question under the statute of limitations and no legal right or proposition of law dependent upon it. The sole question in issue was the question of title, and that was a direct one, wholly disconnected with any collateral fact or circumstance growing out of the nature of the plaintiff's possession or what he may have said or claimed with respect to it. In such a case, the possession, or 'prima facie' evidence of title afforded by possession, is a circumstance of no weight; it signifies nothing at all as against the direct evidence of title by which the rights of the parties must be tested. . . . [3] As to the opinion intimated [by the majority of this Court] that possession is not 'prima facie' evidence of title, and that to become such a claim of title evidenced by the declarations of the party that the property is his [is needed,] . . . if this be so, then what is to become of the possession of the party who is so unfortunate as never to have made any such declarations? . . . It is something entirely new to me if the possession of such persons is to be regarded as less evidence of the title than the same kind of possession by the noisy, garrulous individual who can bring many witnesses to testify to his declarations. . . . [The rule is in truth] that upon bare possession being shown, with nothing to qualify or rebut its effect, the law presumes that the person having it holds under claim of title, and is the owner, until something to the contrary be shown. . . . [4] But it may be said, after all, that the difference between myself and my brethren is more imaginary than real, inasmuch as they hold that the declarations were admissible only to show that title was claimed. . . . [But,] in affirming the refusal to instruct, my brethren necessarily affirm this proposition, not merely that the statements of a person in possession of property are evidence of the claim of title made by him, but also some evidence of the title itself; and the question as to how much or what evidence of title they shall be, or what weight or influence they shall have in determining the fact of title, is also necessarily left to the uncontrolled discretion of the jury. It being determined that the statements are admissible and that they are some evidence of title in favor of the party making them, it will be found quite impossible, I think, by any instruction which can be given, to guard against the dangerous tendency of such testimony or to restrain or prevent the improper and injurious influence which it may have upon the minds of the jury. . . . The mischiefs which must result from this course of decision to my mind are manifest."

As to these opposing arguments, perhaps all that need be said is this: In the first place, the theoretical soundness of Mr. Justice Paine's exposition remains untouched. In the second place, the danger in practice of using such declarations is overestimated; it is not likely that a jury would allow an opposing claimant's direct evidence of title to be overthrown by the possessor's mere assertions; and, if there is no such direct evidence, then no great harm is likely to be done in allowing the possessor to strengthen the conceded presumption in his favor by exhibiting the positiveness and completeness of his claim. Both in theory and in policy the admission of such declarations seems proper.

The state of the precedents is as follows:

(1) In miscellaneous instances, involving sundry disputes of title, the use of such declarations has by some Courts been sanctioned.[1] In others, such declarations have been excluded; some Courts (as usually in the earlier rulings) not noticing the present theory,[2] others distinctly repudiating

§ 1779. [1] Alabama: (cases cited infra, notes 5, 6, 8); Ark. 1859, Yarbrough v. Arnold, 20 Ark. 592, 597 (issue as to the identity of a slave claimed by plaintiff under a deed of trust; grantor's declarations, while in possession after the grant, identifying the slave, admitted for the plaintiff); Georgia: 1861, Gill v. Strozier, 32 Ga. 688, 693 (issue whether slaves in the plaintiff's intestate's possession were loaned or given to him by his father-in-law; the intestate's declarations of claim, admitted as assisting the "presumption of ownership arising from possession"); Illinois: 1898, Martin v. Martin, 174 Ill. 371, 51 N. E. 691 (notes of testator in possession of defendant; defendant's claims of ownership, admissible to show the nature of the possession raising a presumption of ownership); Indiana: 1882, Bunnell v. Studebaker, 88 Ind. 338 (trover for a horse; issue as to H.'s ownership; H.'s declarations while in possession, admitted); 1883, Kuhns v. Gates, 92 Ind. 66 (replevin; declarations of claimant's grantor in possession, admitted); 1884, McConnell v. Hannah, 96 Ind. 102, 104 (admitted for possessor's administrator against his daughter, claiming under a purchase at a sheriff's sale); 1884, Creighton v. Hoppis, 99 Ind. 369 (whether a deed was intended as a mortgage only; the grantor's acts and declarations, while remaining in possession, admissible to strengthen the presumption of ownership); Iowa: 1872, Wilson v. Patrick, 34 Ia. 362, 371 (admissible only where the declarant was in possession); Missouri: 1866, Darrett v. Donnelly, 38 Mo. 492, 494 (declarations of a possessor "explanatory of his possession, as that he held in his own right or as a tenant or trustee of another," held admissible; but not declarations as to the terms of a contract of sale already made); 1878, Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Clark, 68 Mo. 371, 374 (issue as to title between plaintiff and defendant's intestate; the intestate's claim of title while in possession, admitted, but not his statement as to having got a certificate, etc.); 1883, Lemmon v. Hartsook, 80 Mo. 13, 22 (similar, the issue being as to boundary; preceding case ignored; the opinion confuses this question and the rule as to boundary statements by deceased persons, ante, § 1563); 1906, Farmers' Bank v. Barbee, 198 Mo. 465, 95 S. W. 225 (plaintiff claiming under A. one of three children and heirs of B.; A.'s assertions of a grant to himself from the other children, not admitted in favor of plaintiff claiming under A.; following Turner v. Belden, Mo., infra); Montana: 1922, Williams v. Gray, — Mont. —, 203 Pac. 524 (conversion of wheat; Roebke v. Andrews, Wis. followed); Pennsylvania: 1818, Sampson v. Sampson, 4 S. & R. 329, 330 (whether a land-warrant, paid for by the father J. but taken in his son's name, was intended as an advancement; the father's declarations, accompanying acts of ownership, admitted); Vermont: 1827, Moon v. Hawks, 2 Aik. 390 (issue whether a mare was the property of plaintiff or of R., as his donee; R.'s long possession of the mare, and his acts and claim of ownership, held admissible; "with respect to personal chattels, possession alone is presumptive evidence of property"); 1827, Bullard v. Billings, 2 Vt. 309, 313 (similar ruling as to the ownership of a wagon, the issue being whether the delivery of it was by pledge or by sale); Washington: 1921, Percy v. Miller, 115 Wash. 440, 197 Pac. 638 (action by an administrator to recover personalty belonging to the testator; the testator's declarations of ownership, while in possession, admitted to show title); Wisconsin: 1870, Roebke v. Andrews, 26 Wis. 311 (action for price of cattle sold, the defendant alleging that the plaintiff's father was the owner; plaintiff's declarations of title while in possession, admitted, Dixon, C. J., diss.; quoted supra); 1900, Cuddy v. Foreman, 107 Wis. 519, 83 N. W. 1103 (approving Roebke v. Andrews).

[2] California: 1874, Fischer v. Bergson, 49 Cal. 294, 297 (declarations by K. in possession, that a deed by him to B. was made as a mortgage only, not admitted for K.'s administrator); Georgia: 1903, Dozier v. McWhorter, 117 Ga. 786, 45 S. E. 61 (whether an execution-lien was the property of D. personally or as executor; his declarations of claim, not received on behalf of his estate, partly because he was not in possession of the fi. fa.); Indiana: 1853, Travis v. Barkhurst, 4 Ind. 171, 172; Massachusetts: 1856, Ware v. Brookhouse, 7 Gray 454, semble; Missouri: 1846, Turner v. Belden, 9 Mo. 787, 790 (T. sent a slave to his daughter;

it.[3] Wherever such declarations of claim are regarded as admissible, declarations of disclaim would also be admissible in favor of the opponent, as repelling the presumption; but as these would usually also be receivable as admissions (ante, § 1082) the question is not often a practical one.[4]

(2) A special situation arises where the parties opposed are, on the one side, creditors levying upon property, as that of their debtor Doe, and, on the other

P. married the daughter; plaintiff claimed under P., the issue being whether the gift to the daughter by T. was absolute or conditional; P.'s declarations of absolute title while in possession were not admitted for the plaintiff; Napton, J., found no authority for "the position that the squatter or trespasser can by his own declarations elevate his title into a fee simple, or that the bailee or trespasser of personal chattels can by his own declarations convert his bailment into an absolute interest"); 1905, Swope v. Ward, 185 Mo. 316, 84 S. W. 895 (Turner v. Belden approved; Darrett v. Donnelly, supra, n. 1, said not to be in conflict); New York: 1806, Waring v. Warren, 1 Johns. 340 (woman's declarations, after marriage to defendant, and while in possession, not admitted for defendant against a purchaser from the woman's first husband before present marriage); North Carolina: 1869, Devries v. Phillips, 63 N. C. 207 (the issue being as to J.'s title, J.'s claim of ownership while storing the goods was excluded).

[3] Federal: 1920, Dolbear v. Gulf Prod. Co., Penn v. Phoenix Devel. Co., 5th C. C. A., 268 Fed. 737 (title based on lost deeds, but without possession; declarations without possession or act of control, not admissible under the present principle); Kansas: 1921, Churches v. Western Union Tel. Co., 108 Kan. 431, 195 Pac. 610 (alleged trust agreement between predecessors of defendant and plaintiff to divide property between heirs of each on death of survivor of the two; declarations of defendant's predecessor, while in possession, in favor of defendant, held inadmissible); Maine: 1865, Holmes v. Sawtelle, 53 Me. 179 (plaintiff's testator's declarations of claim, while in possession, not admitted for the plaintiff against one claiming under a donee by an alleged prior gift from the testator); Missouri: 1855, Criddle v. Criddle, 21 Mo. 522 (similar ruling to Turner v. Belden, supra; Scott, J.: "When a person is in possession of property, whether real or personal, and nothing more appears, the law presumes that he is the owner of it; he cannot, whilst thus possessed, make a title for himself by his own declarations or assertions"); 1858, Watson v. Bissell, 27 Mo. 220, 233 (similar); 1866, Darrett v. Quimby, 38 Mo. 492, 494 (confused statements); 1918, Weller v. Collier, — Mo. —, 199 S. W. 974 (conveyance to a daughter in fraud of creditors; Criddle v. Criddle followed); Ohio: 1864, Kyle v. Kyle, 15 Oh. St. 15, 20 (issue as to K.'s being bailee or donee of a mare from the defendant; K.'s declarations of claim, while in possession, not admitted for his representative); Wisconsin: 1905, Vagts v. Utman, 125 Wis. 265, 104 N. W. 88 (title to a horse; rule held not applicable on the facts).

[4] Fed. 1909, State ex rel. Dykes v. Hencken, 8th C. C. A., 174 Fed. 624 (property seized by creditors of M., T. being in possession; T.'s declarations of disclaim, not admitted in M.'s favor because T., though plaintiff's agent, was not agent to make admissions; no authority cited); Ark. 1921, Jefferson v. Souter, — Ark. —, 233 S. W. 804 (husband's admissions that he was tenant only, received as against wife seeking to redeem from grantee holding under a deed absolute in form); Ind. 1862, Boone Co. Bank v. Wallace, 18 Ind. 82, 86 (declarations disclaiming title, offered by a robbed person against one claiming under a thief; not decided); 1888, Durham v. Shannon, 116 Ind. 403, 407, 19 N. E. 190 (admitted against purchaser under administrator's sale, in favor of declarant's prior donee); Ia. 1859, Taylor v. Lusk, 9 Ia. 440, semble; Minn. 1897, Elword v. Saterlie, 68 Minn. 173, 71 N. W. 13 (action by indorsee of note given to G. to pay for horses sold; defence, fraudulent representations, G. being not the owner of the horses, but agent for the plaintiff; G.'s declarations, while in possession, of plaintiff's ownership admitted); Mo. 1865, State v. Schneider, 35 Mo. 533, 536 (issue as to title to timber between B. and C.; B.'s declarations of title in C., while cutting the timber, admitted for C. to show that B. obtained possession as agent and not as vendee); 1866, Darrett v. Donnelly, 38 Mo. 492 (see citation supra, note 1); 1885, Anderson v. McPike, 86 Mo. 293, 299 (declarations, disclaiming title, by a stranger in possession, admitted; opinion confused, and no precedents cited); 1891, Meier v. Meier, 105 Mo. 411, 422, 430 (preceding case approved, in a confused opinion); N. C. 1903, Gross v. Smith, 132 N. C. 604, 44 S. E. 111 (the plaintiff's daughter lived with her father, and a cow was kept in her father's pasture; the father's declarations, while the cow was there, that it was hers by gift from him, admitted, in an action against a purchaser from the father's administrator); Or. 1922, Tracy v. Juanto, — Or. —, 205 Pac. 822 (trespass by sheep; declarations by the herder that defendant was owner, admitted for the plaintiff).

side, a party claiming the property as belonging to him and not to Doe. Here the possessor making the offered declarations of claim may have been either the now claimant himself or the debtor Doe; and the two cases must be considered separately:

(a) When the possessor-declarant was the now claimant against Doe's creditor, his declarations of claim, under the present principle, ought to be admissible for himself.[5] His declarations of disclaim would equally be receivable for the creditor (as in par. 1, supra); but they would also always be usable to this end as admissions, and thus the question does not seem to have arisen.

(b) When the possessor-declarant was the debtor Doe, his declarations of claim will of course favor the creditor's case, as against the now claimant's, and upon the present principle ought to be admitted for the creditor. In the case where the claimant sets up a title prior and superior to that of the debtor Doe, the situation is simple; for on no other principle than the present could such declarations by Doe be receivable.[6] But where the now claim-

[5] Ala. 1850, Thompson v. Mawhinney, 17 Ala. 362, 366 (admissible; here excluding assertions as to the contract by which title was claimed); 1895, Larkin v. Baty, 111 Ala. 303, 18 So. 666 (wife's declarations while in possession of a cow, admitted for her against husband's creditor; in this case the doctrine is loosely dated back to McBride v. Thompson, cited supra, § 1778, note 4; but that case seems not to have proceeded on the present theory, though the facts would have admitted of it); Ill. 1867, Whitaker v. Wheeler, 44 Ill. 440, 442 (trover against a sheriff levying; possessor's declarations admitted for himself); Mass. 1831, Boyden v. Moore, 11 Pick. 362, 365 (vendee's declarations, directing the goods to be cared for at his expense, held admissible "to show that the possession and acts of the son [vendor] were those of an agent" and "to repel the suggestion of secrecy"); Wis. 1905, Griswold v. Nichols, 126 Wis. 401, 105 N.W. 815 (sale by a son to a father in fraud of creditors; the father's declarations in possession, admitted in his favor, following Roebke v. Andrews, supra, n. 1).

Contra: 1906, Samaha v. Mason, 27 D. C. App. 470, 477 (replevin for rugs claimed by the defendant by purchase from H. who purchased from plaintiff; the defendant's statements as to the ownership of the rugs at the time of their seizure by replevin writ, excluded, not being merely explanatory of possession); 1868, Murray v. Cone, 26 Ia. 276; 1860, Swindell v. Warden, 7 Jones L. N. C. 575 (possessor's declarations, not admitted against the vendor's creditors; Manly, J.: "If he claim in his own right, no declaration of his can rightfully be used to prove more than the presumption arising from possession; and if that be a party's position, it would seem that his declaration can not be used for any legitimate object; . . . [otherwise, it] would be introducing the party as a witness at large, under shelter of explaining a possession").

[6] The rulings are not harmonious: Federal: 1904, McKnight v. U. S., 130 Fed. 659, 667, 65 C. C. A. 37 (action for cattle of Josephine H., wife of John H., seized by defendant on attachment against John H.; the latter's declarations of claim in possession, not admitted for the defendant; reasons obscure); Alabama: 1842, Oden v. Stubblefield, 4 Ala. 40 (see citation infra, note 8); 1846, Gary v. Terrill, 9 Ala. 206 (see citation infra, note 8); 1906, Baker v. Drake, 148 Ala. 513, 41 So. 845, semble (excluded); 1909, Cohn & Goldberg L. Co. v. Robbins, 159 Ala. 289, 48 So. 853 (injury caused by defendant's wagon driven by H.; H.'s statement, after the accident, replying to the plaintiff's inquiry whose wagon it was, that it was the defendant's, not admitted as evidence of ownership; McClellan, J., diss.; the opinion leaves undissipated the confusion in the decisions of this State); Arkansas: 1905, Terry v. Clark, 76 Ark. 435, 88 S. W. 987 (creditor claiming furniture against the debtor's wife; the debtor's declarations of ownership, not admitted for the creditor); Connecticut: 1847, Avery v. Clemons, 18 Conn. 306, 309 (trover for a wagon attached by defendant as the property of S.; plaintiff claimed the wagon as bailor to S.; defendant alleged that S. had obtained it by exchange from B.; S.'s declarations in possession, claiming it as his own, were admitted for the defendant; quoted supra); Georgia: 1905, Smiley v. Padgett, 123 Ga. 39, 50 S. E. 927 (execution under a lien by P. on goods possessed by H., but now claimed by S.; H.'s declarations of ownership, in possession, admitted for P.); Massachusetts: 1862, McGough v. Wellington, 4 All. 502 (excluded); 1881, Fellows v. Smith, 130 Mass. 378 (same); ant derives title by purchase (or attachment) under the debtor Doe, and Doe (by hypothesis) has retained possession after the sale, Doe is in the position of an assignor to the claimant; hence, although the present principle would suffice to admit Doe's declarations, yet the further question arises whether, as admissions of an assignor or grantor, Doe's declarations can be used to effect his assignee. His declarations, it must be remembered, are made in possession, after transfer; they claim title in himself, and are offered by the creditor; and they practically amount to a statement that the transfer was made in form only, without intent to pass title. Now as admissions, several possible theories may be invoked for these declarations: either they may be absolutely rejected as admissions made after formal divestment of title; or they may be received as declarations of intent, showing the debtor's fraudulent intent; or they may be received provided there appears a conspiracy to defraud creditors, so as to charge the purchaser with the admissions of his co-conspirators; the judicial conflict upon these theories has been already examined (ante, § 1086). The important thing to notice in this place is that, upon the present theory of verbal acts corroborating the presumption from possession, none of the above limitations stand in the way; by abandoning the use of these declarations as admissions, and by using them as verbal acts, we leave ourselves with only one restriction, namely, that the declarations must have been made by one in possession. Such is the important difference in practical effect between treating them as admissions and treating them as verbal acts to aid the presumption from possession.

This theory, in its present application, is well expounded in the following passage: [7]

1920, Koski v. Haskins, 236 Mass. 346, 128 N. E. 427 (trover against a deputy sheriff, attaching goods as those of P. but claimed by plaintiff; P.'s declarations that the goods were his, excluded); Michigan: 1913, Freda v. Tishbein, 174 Mich. 391, 140 N. W. 502 (creditor replevying goods in T.'s possession, as against T.'s widow; T.'s declarations not admitted for plaintiff, ownership and not possession being the sole issue); Minnesota: 1881, King v. Frost, 28 Minn. 417, 10 N. W. 423 (issue whether H. was owner or plaintiff's bailee; H.'s declarations of claim in possession, not admitted for H.'s creditor); 1890, Dailey v. Linnehan, 42 Minn. 277, 44 N. W. 59 (similar; declarations admitted; preceding case not cited); 1893, Olson v. Swenson, 53 Minn. 516, 519, 55 N. W. 596 (similar; King v. Frost followed); 1901, Whitney v. Wagener, 84 Minn. 211, 87 N. W. 602 (creditor's suit to recover assets of S.; plea alleging them to be corporate assets; S.'s declarations, as agent of a corporation, as to his ownership of a note, held not receivable unless the note was in his individual possession); Missouri: 1904, Vermillion v. Parsons, 101 Mo. App. 602, 73 S. W. 994, 107 Mo. App. 192, 80 S. W. 916 (husband's declarations of claim, not admitted for the creditor against the wife claiming by prior title); Montana: 1905, Chan v. Slater, 33 Mont. 155, 82 Pac. 657 (attachment on property of the husband, claimed by the plaintiff wife; the husband's declarations of claim in possession, admitted for the creditor); North Dakota: 1912, Wipperman Merc. Co. v. Robbins, 23 N. D. 208, 135 N. W. 785 (vendor suing for goods attached by the creditor of the vendee F.; declarations by B., assented to by F. in possession, admitted for the defendant; citing the above text); Oregon: 1902, Noblitt v. Durbin, 41 Or. 555, 69 Pac. 685 (whether N. or his wife was owner of personalty; his declarations of claim, in possession and while hiring out the property, held admissible for his creditor against the wife; but here the declarations in fact offered were not assertions of claim and were excluded); Utah: 1919, Androvitch v. Fowler, 54 Utah 506, 182 Pac. 222 (plaintiff claimed a popcorn stand leased to K., but attached by defendant under a judgment against K.; K.'s declarations of claim in possession, excluded).

[7] Another exposition will be found in Askew v. Reynolds, 1 Dev. & B. 367, quoted ante, § 1086.

1875, SHERWOOD, J., in Burgert v. Borchert, 59 Mo. 80, 86 (admitting a debtor's declarations, while in possession, against the vendee): "In investigations of the character involved in the case at bar, there are two prominent questions presented: First, were the parties to the transaction actuated by a motive to hinder, delay, or defraud the creditors of the vendor? Second, was possession of the goods alleged to have been sold, accompanied by delivery in a reasonable time (regard being had to situation of the property) and was the alleged sale followed by an actual and continued change of the possession of the things said to have been sold? Any evidence, therefore, tending to shed light, even remotely, on the subject of these inquiries, is admissible. And if the first question is answered in the affirmative, or the second in the negative, the result must be in favor of those attacking the sale. For this reason testimony must be elicited, as to the possession of the goods; as to the character of that possession; as to whether it and the delivery of the articles sold was open, notorious, and unequivocal; as to the declarations of the party in, or apparently in, possession, as to the quantity and value, or apparent quantity and value of the goods at or about the time the alleged sale was effected; as to whether the sale was secretly and knowingly made, or made in the usual and ordinary course of business upon an adequate consideration. . . . Testimony of the kind mentioned, or of a like nature, is always receivable to establish or to overthrow thereon the 'bona fides' or the validity of the given transaction. The rule is familiar, that the declarations of a party in possession of property are verbal acts, and are admitted as explanatory of the nature of that possession." [8]

[8] The extent to which the present principle is favored by the different Courts may be seen by comparing the cases below with those collected ante, § 1086 (fraudulent assignor's admissions); but for Alabama, Missouri, and North Carolina, all the rulings are placed here, because in the first State they are hopelessly confused, and in the other two there has been a shifting of theories; note also that the declarations may sometimes (as in Foster v. Nowlin, Wilson v. Woodruff, Mo.) come in as self-contradictions discrediting a party-witness:

ENGLAND: 1828, Willies v. Farley, 3 C. & P. 395 (plaintiff had bought W.'s goods on execution for his own claim; W. remained in possession; defendant seized the goods on another creditor's execution; W.'s statements in possession were offered by the defendant to prove "the plaintiff's execution was merely colorable"; Vaughan, B.: "What J. W. said as to whose the goods were, he being then in possession of the goods, is evidence"; no theory stated).

CANADA: 1896, Linton v. Sutherland, 40 N. Sc. 149 (judgment debtor's admissions, after date of a deed to defendant, that the deed was meant as a mortgage only, not admitted against defendant).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1842, Oden v. Stubblefield, 4 Ala. 40 (issue whether S. or his son was owner, the son's vendee claiming by gift from plaintiff to the son; the son's declarations of claim while in possession, admitted for the vendee); 1845, Borland v. Mayo, 8 Ala. 105, 112, 114 ("the declarations of the vendor were only admissible upon the hypothesis that he retained the possession, or himself and vendees were co-workers in the purpose to defraud," i. e. the theory of conspiracy); 1846, Gary v. Terrill, 9 Ala. 206 (issue as to the title of a slave in possession of T., claimed by defendant as T.'s bailor; T.'s claim of title while in possession, admitted for his vendee at a sheriff's sale); 1846, Webster v. Smith, 10 Ala. 429 ("while it is allowable to prove the statements of one in possession, in explanation of the possession, it is not permissible to show everything that may have been said by him in respect to the title, as, that it was acquired bona fide and for a valuable consideration"); 1846, Abney v. Kingsland, 10 Ala. 355, 360 (debtor's declarations of intent to defraud, after sale and during possession, held admissible for the creditor if there is other evidence of a combination to defraud; such declarations distinguished from mere declarations of claim "explanatory of possession"); 1848, Beall v. Ledlow, 14 Ala. 523, 526 (debtor's declarations in possession, admitting that his father was owner, received against the son's creditor); 1848, Degraffenreid v. Thomas, 14 Ala. 681, 684 (like Thomas v. Degraffenreid, infra, with other declarations; opinion not clear); 1849, Parker v. Goldsmith, 16 Ala. 526 (declarations of a defendant who had taken goods from the plaintiff's possession, claiming as his own when called upon for surrender, not admitted for himself); 1849, Darling v. Bryant, 17 Ala. 10 (issue as to the plaintiffs' joint ownership of a boat; the statement of B., the captain and joint owner, while in possession, that W. was also owner, admitted; "as they qualify the possession they constitute the 'res gestæ', and tend to establish the possession of both B. and W.; this being established, the legal pre-

(bb) Here also (on the same principle as in par. a, supra) the debtor's declarations of disclaim are receivable. Who will wish to use them? Where the sumption of ownership arising from such joint possession attaches, and 'prima facie' entitles them to a joint action"); 1850, Nelson v. Iverson, 17 Ala. 216, 222 (declarations of plaintiff's donor, made after the date of the alleged gift, but while still in possession, admitted against the plaintiff so far as they merely claimed possession as owner, but not so far as they recited past occurrences); 1850, Thompson v. Mawhinney, 17 Ala. 362, 366 (issue as to the title to a cotton crop; the plaintiff's declarations while in possession of the land, admitted in their favor so far as they claimed an interest, but not so far as they recited the terms of the contract between the plaintiffs and the owner of the land); 1850, Thomas v. Degraffenreid, 17 Ala. 602, 608, 27 Ala. 651, 656, 659 (declarations of the claimant's vendor's donor, after the alleged gift and while still in possession, conceding the title to be in the donee, admitted for the claimant); 1850, Strong v. Brewer, 17 Ala. 706, 713 (debtor's declarations after title and possession gone, excluded); 1850, Mobley v. Bilberry, 17 Ala. 428 (debtor's declarations of ownership while in possession after the sale, admitted for the creditor "as explanatory of his possession"); 1851, Foote v. Cobb, 18 Ala. 585, 588 (declarations of a debtor, after title and possession gone, excluded); 1851, Perry v. Graham, 18 Ala. 822, 825 (declarations of the plaintiff's wife, the alleged donee, while in possession, claiming title, admitted for the plaintiff; but not her declaration of the past fact of the gift); 1850, Hadden v. Powell, 18 Ala. 314 (declarations of a debtor in possession that he had sold to the claimant, not admitted for the claimant, because reciting a past fact); 1851, Nelson v. Iverson, 19 Ala. 95, 99, 24 Ala. 9, 16 (declarations of a mother, said to be in possession as bailee for her infant son, admitted on the facts); 1851, Fontaine v. Beers, 19 Ala. 722, 728 (debtor's agent's declarations of claim, while in possession, admitted for the creditor against an alleged prior purchaser); 1855, Martin v. Hardesty, 27 Ala. 458 (like Mobley v. Bilberry); 1856, Upson v. Raiford, 29 Ala. 188, 194 (declarations by a debtor in possession that the property belonged to him, admitted on the authority of Darling v. Bryant and ensuing cases); 1880, Kirkland v. Trott, 66 Ala. 417, 420 (defendant's tenant's declaration, when taking possession, that he did so for defendant, admitted against defendant on an issue as to his wrongful possession); 1905, Ard v. Crittenden, — Ala. —, 39 So. 675 (mortgagor's statements to third persons, at unspecified times, not admitted); 1915, Murphy v. Pipkin, 191 Ala. 111, 67 So. 675 (deposition of grantor remaining in possession, received); 1915, Pelham Sitz & Co. v. Herzberg-Loveman D. G. Co., 194 Ala. 237, 69 So. 881 (rival claimants under husband and wife; the children's statements, while acting as agents to deposit the cotton, admitted to show father's title);

Florida: 1903, Volusia Co. Bank v. Bigelow, 45 Fla. 638, 33 So. 704 (declarations of a husband-debtor in possession admitted for the creditors against the wife-mortgagee);

Illinois: 1873, Amick v. Young, 69 Ill. 542, 544 (debtor-possessor's declarations, admitted for the attaching creditor);

Indiana: 1889, Maus v. Bome, 123 Ind. 522, 24 N. E. 345 (debtor-possessor's declarations, admitted for the attachment creditor against a creditor against a purchaser);

Iowa: admitted, except as otherwise noted: 1851, Ross v. Hayne, 3 G. Gr. 211, 214 (cattle); 1865, Blake v. Graves, 18 Ia. 312, 314 (horse); 1877, Stephens v. Williams, 46 Ia. 540, 543 (piano); 1881, Sweet v. Spencer, 57 Ia. 510, 512, 10 N. W. 870 (stock of goods; here narratives of the terms of a contract were excluded); 1883, Hardy v. Moore, 62 Ia. 65, 69, 17 N. W. 200 (stock of goods); 1899, Nodle v. Hawthorne, 107 Ia. 380, 77 N. W. 1062 (declarations by A. in possession of personalty, as to his ownership, admitted for a creditor of A. claiming against B.); 1899, Walkley v. Clarke, 107 Ia. 451, 78 N. W. 70 (obscure);

Kansas: 1921, St. John Nat'l Bank v. Leslie, — Kan. —, 199 Pac. 468 (creditor's bill for property conveyed by insolvent husband to wife; husband's declarations of ownership, made in possession, admitted for plaintiff);

Massachusetts: 1882, Roberts v. Medberry, 130 Mass. 100 (possession being presumptive evidence of title to a chattel, the declarations of a debtor, while in possession, even after the time of an alleged fraudulent sale, are receivable in favor of the creditor); 1896, Parry v. Libbey, 166 Mass. 112, 44 N. E. 124 (similar); 1900, Produce Exchange T. Co. v. Bieberbach, 176 Mass. 577, 586, 58 N. E. 162 (ownership of notes by a bank; entries in the bank's books admissible as "acts of ownership competent to prove title in the bank");

Minnesota: 1899, Rollofson v. Nash, 75 Minn. 237, 77 N. W. 954 (title to personalty; the predecessor's possession being shown to raise a presumption of title, his declarations, while in possession, as to its character were admitted; here for the father's creditors against sons claiming title);

Montana: 1899, Gallick v. Bordeaux, 22 Mont. 470, 56 Pac. 961 (declarations of debtor in possession, admissible as "explaining the character of his possession");

Missouri: here compare the cases cited ante, §§ 1778, 1779; 1830, Foster v. Wallace, 2 Mo. 231, 238 (debtor's declaration of ownership, denying the alleged vendee's title, made after the date of the alleged conveyance and while claimant alleges a title prior and superior to that of the debtor, the latter's declarations of disclaim will be useful to the claimant against the creditor; yet, since they could always be used against the creditor as admissions of his debtor, to whom he is privy in title, there is no necessity of resorting to the present theory. Where, on the other hand, the now claimant derives title under the debtor, the latter's declarations of disclaim would be desirable for neither party, if they disclosed some original defect of title (e. g. that he had stolen the property); while if they disclaimed merely by asserting the sale to still in possession, held inadmissible "unless the privity of the F. [vendees] had been proved"); 1835, Foster v. Nowlin, 4 Mo. 18, 22 (same general litigation, debtor's declarations, now received, "as going to show the nature of the possession he had"; preceding ruling not referred to); 1837, Wilson v. Woodruff, 5 Mo. 40 (preceding case repudiated on that point; declarations held inadmissible); 1865, Langsdorf v. Field, 36 Mo. 440, 445 (declarations excluded; no authority cited); 1865, Howell v. Howell, 37 Mo. 125 (obscure as to the facts); 1871, Weinrich v. Porter, 47 Mo. 293, 294 (debtor's declarations after delivering possession to the vendee, excluded); 1875, Burgert v. Borchert, 59 Mo. 80, 86 (debtor's declarations held admissible as explanatory of possession; quoted supra); 1875, Boyd v. Jones, 60 Mo. 454, 470 (declarations held admissible on the theory of conspiracy only (ante, § 1086); "in such case, the common object and purpose having been clearly made out, the declarations of one while engaged in the prosecution of the common object may be received against another"; Burgert v. Borchert wholly ignored); 1898, Dunlap v. Griffith, 146 Mo. 283, 47 S. W. 917 (Burgert v. Borchert approved and followed, on an issue of title to realty); 1901, Wall v. Beedy, 161 Mo. 625, 61 S. W. 864 (admissible only on the theory of conspiracy);

North Carolina: 1796, Arnold v. Bell, 1 Hayw. 396, 397 (debtor's declarations, after the sale, tending to show it fraudulent, excluded; "a man's confession may be given in evidence to affect himself, but not to affect any other person"); 1801, Robinson v. Devone, 2 Hayw. 154 (declarations after an alleged gift, excluded; "after declarations of the party shall not be taken to explain his former transactions"); 1804, Gray v. Harrison, 2 Hayw. 292 (similar, for a sale); 1804, Eelbank v. Burt, 2 Hayw. 330 (similar, for a gift; but declarations at the time of the property being taken away would have been received); 1831, Den v. Pickett, 3 Dev. 6 (declarations excluded, because the declarant's possession was not shown); 1835, Askew v. Reynolds, 1 Dev. & B. 367 (declarations after the sale and during possession, claiming the goods as his own, admitted on the 'res gestæ' theory; quoted ante, § 1086); 1850, Patton v. Dyke, 11 Ired. 237, 239 (preceding case cited with approval); 1850, Foster v. Woodfin, 11 Ired. 339 (Askew v. Reynolds followed on similar facts); 1874, Kirby v. Masten, 70 N. C. 540 (debtor's declarations after assignment during possession with vendee's assent, received "to qualify the extent and purpose of the possession"; Askew v. Reynolds not cited); 1878, Gidney v. Logan, 79 N. C. 214 (like Askew v. Reynolds; Kirby v. Masten approved); 1895, Blair v. Brown, 116 N. C. 631, 638, 21 N. E. 434 (debtor's declarations after assignment, excluded, the conspiracy-theory being applied; the Court wholly ignores all its own foregoing precedents and culpably contents itself with citing a treatise on Assignments); 1901, City National Bank v. Bridgers, 128 N. C. 322, 38 S. E. 888 (preceding case followed); 1905, Piedmont Sav. Bank v. Levy, 138 N. C. 274, 50 S. E. 657 (trustee in bankruptcy, allowed to prove declarations of the debtor in possession but after assignment, to evidence the buyer's knowledge and the character of the debtor's possession; following Askew v. Reynolds, supra);

Pennsylvania: 1814, Johnson v. Kerr, 1 S. & R. 25 (admitted; but here the debtor-grantor was the nominal plaintiff, and thus the declarations were a party's admissions); 1823, Babb v. Clemson, 10 S. & R. 419, 426, 12 S. & R. 328 (declarations of debtor-grantor, as to a hiring of the custodian, and the custodian's declarations, admitted as affecting the "character of the possession" after transfer of title, no apparent change of custody having occurred);

Tennessee: 1895, Brooks v. Lowenstein, 95 Tenn. 262, 35 S. W. 89 (debtor in possession before and after the plaintiff's attachment, the defendant being a later attaching creditor, alleging that goods had been secretly removed before the first attachment; the debtor's declarations, admitted for defendant to prove the fact of removal; unsound, for here they had merely testimonial force; but they were admissible under § 1086, ante).

It may be added that in the present class of cases it would be possible to receive the declarations while rejecting them for the foregoing cases (pars. a and b, supra); since here the creditor may lay hold not only of the presumption of ownership from possession, but also of the presumption of fraud from continued possession by the assignor.

the claimant, they would of course be always receivable as admissions against the creditor; so that no occasion would arise for resorting to the present principle of verbal acts. Nevertheless, it is logically applicable, and has received some recognition for the present purpose.[9]

§ 1780. Same: Distinction between the Foregoing and Other Declarations about Land-Title or Land-Possession. Declarations about land-title or land-possession form the subject of numerous rules, resting on distinct principles. It is worth while, at this point, to compare them and to summarize the practical points of contrast:

(1) Possessor's declarations as verbal acts of adverse possession (ante, 1778). Here the question is whether they violate the Hearsay rule; it has been noticed that they do not. The conditions are merely that there shall be an issue of adverse possession, and that the declarant shall have been in occupation at the time. Thus it is immaterial whether he is deceased or not, whether he is a party or not, and whether the fact stated was at the time against interest or not.

(2) Possessor's declarations to support the presumption of title from possession (ante, § 1779). Here the question is also whether they violate the Hearsay rule; it has been seen that by the better opinion they do not. They differ from the foregoing sort in that no issue of adverse possession is necessary.

[9] Ala.: 1846, Webster v. Smith, 10 Ala. 429 (see citation supra); 1848, Beall v. Ledlow, 14 Ala. 523 (see citation supra); 1850, Thomas v. De Graffenreid, 17 Ala. 602 (see citation supra); 1906, Holman v. Clark, 148 Ala. 286, 41 So. 765 (defendant claiming under a mortgage prior to plaintiff's; debtor's declarations of claim in possession, admitted for defendant); Ga.: 1897, Myers v. Bernstein, 102 Ga. 579, 27 S. E. 681 (declarations on delivery of cotton to a warehouseman, that it was the declarant's wife's, admitted, in an issue between the wife and the declarant's creditors); Mich.: 1898, Coldwater N. Bank v. Buggie, 117 Mich. 416, 75 N. W. 1057 (declarations by the husband of the defendant as to her ownership of goods in his possession, excluded, the title or possession not being directly involved); Minn.: 1897, Lehmann v. Chapel, 70 Minn. 496, 73 N. W. 402 (wife claiming as owner of property bought by her and put in possession of husband as agent; the husband's declarations while in possession, received, on the theory of 'res gestæ', though the wife did not claim title through him; the two principles are confused in the opinion); Mo.: compare the cases supra, note 8: 1835, Foster v. Nowlin, 4 Mo. 18, 22 (declarations held admissible); 1837, Wilson v. Woodruff, 5 Mo. 40, 45 (declarations "in affirmance of the vendee's title," held inadmissible, "unless indeed" the possession by the debtor "forms a just reason"); 1871, Thomas v. Wheeler, 47 Mo. 363 (declarations of J., in possession, admitting the property to be held of C. as bailor, received for C. against J.'s creditor); N. H.: 1850, Walcott v. Keith, 22 N. H. 196, 212 (debtor's declarations, after a sale but during possession, held admissible for the buyer, as "calculated to characterize C.'s [the debtor's] possession and to rebut the presumption of ownership in him arising out of the fact of possession, and indirectly to show the right of the plaintiff [buyer]"); 1851, Bradley v. Spofford, 23 N. H. 444 (declarations of the debtor that he was only bailee for the plaintiff, admitted against the creditor, as rebutting the presumption from possession); N. D.: 1909, Johnston v. Spoonheim, 19 N. D. 191, 123 N. W. 830 (cited more fully ante, § 1777, n. 2); Vt.: 1903, Fletcher v. Wakefield, 75 Vt. 257, 54 Atl. 1012 (wife's action for a piano, acquired by gift from her husband, against her husband's creditors; the fact of its insurance in her name with his assent, admitted).

Contra: 1867, Earnshaw v. Tomlinson, 26 U. C. Q. B. 610 (a debtor's statement, while in possession, that property claimed by the plaintiff against the creditors belonged to a third person, not the plaintiff, excluded); 1803, Gruder v. Bowles, 1 Brev. 266 (debtor's declarations at the time of the transfer, not admitted for the donee).

Compare with the foregoing cases those cited ante, § 1086, n. 3.

(3) Statements of facts against proprietary interest (ante, § 1458). For these an Exception to the Hearsay rule is conceded. The marked limitations are that the declarant must be deceased or otherwise unavailable, and that the declaration must be in disparagement of title. On the other hand, whether the declarant was at the time in possession or not, and whether he is a party or privy or not, is immaterial.

(4) Statements concerning private boundaries (ante, §§ 1563–1570). In these is involved another Exception to the Hearsay rule, having two forms. By the one are received statements as to private boundaries by a deceased person having no interest to misrepresent. By the other are received similar statements made by a deceased owner in possession while on the land pointing out the boundaries. The marked differences between the foregoing Exception and this one are that in the latter the fact need not be against interest, but it must be solely a boundary-fact.

(5) Admissions as to title-defects (ante, §§ 1082–1087). Here there is no requirement of the decease of the declarant; nor need the fact stated have been against interest; nor is possession at the time a necessary circumstance. But the declarant must be a party-opponent or a predecessor of his in title, and the statement must have been made during the continuance of title. Whether this principle admits statements made after title divested but while keeping possession is a question; and whether a vendor is a predecessor whose admissions are usable is a question. Moreover, the rule about producing the original title-documents may apply (ante, §§ 1255–1257) to exclude these admissions of an opposing documentary title.

(6) Recitals in old deeds (ante, § 1573). An Exception to the Hearsay rule allows recitals in old deeds to be used as hearsay assertions for limited purposes. No limitations as to parties, possession, or disparagement of title, here obtain.

(7) Old leases and deeds as circumstantial evidence of possession (ante, § 157). Under the principle of verbal acts, a lease or a deed by one in possession is an act of claim showing the adverse character of his occupation. But suppose that such a lease is offered, by one claiming under the lessor, without direct testimony to the accompanying possession; may not the execution of such a document be itself sufficient circumstantial evidence of such possession by the maker? With certain limitations this is conceded, when the deed is ancient; the inference being one of circumstantial evidence.

(8) Authentication of ancient deeds (post, § 2137). Even without direct evidence of execution, the age and custody of a deed may suffice to authenticate it as genuine. But a main question is, whether possession of the land, by the grantee in the deed, is also an essential circumstance. This differs from the foregoing question, first, in that the objects of the proof are just the reverse of each other, and, secondly, in that the possession involved is in the one case that of the grantor, but in the other case that of the grantee.

All these principles are simple enough in themselves, and distinct enough from each other as general principles; but it is easy to see, in a comparative survey of them, how it has happened that Courts in applying them to superficially similar pieces of evidence have sometimes interchanged and misapplied the respective limitations of principle.

§ 1781. Declarations by Accused found with Stolen Goods. On a charge of larceny or robbery, when the accused is found in possession of the stolen goods, and this circumstance is offered against him, the accused's use of his own declarations in exoneration, may be treated from the point of view of several principles. Some uncertainty in the precedents has thus naturally resulted.[1]

§ 1781. [1] The cases are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1848, R. v. Abraham, 3 Cox Cr. 430 (burglary; the defendant had said, before suspicion excited, that he had found them in a field; Alderson, B., said that if he "had given such an account of his possession of the stolen property to his neighbors, before suspicion existed or search made, he had not the slightest doubt" of its admissibility); 1844, R. v. Crowhurst, I. C. & K. 370 (larceny; statement, on being found in possession by a constable, as to buying the article, admitted without question); 1845, R. v. Smith, 2 id. 207 (same principle recognized); 1847, R. v. Evans, 2 Cox Cr. 270 (same); 1862, R. v. Wilson, 2 F. & F. 183 (an explanation volunteered by an accused on arrest for stealing, admitted); 1866, R. v. Exall, 4 F. & F. 922, 929 (same as R. v. Evans).

CANADA: 1876, R. v. Ferguson, 16 N. Br. 612 (defendant's statement, on the night of the larceny, before being charged with stealing, as to where he got the goods, admitted); 1902, R. v. Higgins, 35 N. Br. 18, 28 (R. v. Ferguson cited with approval).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1827, U. S. v. Craig, 4 Wash. C. C. 729, 730 (declarations when found in a room with counterfeiting tools, explaining his presence, admitted "not to prove the truth of these declarations, but to repel any unfavorable conclusion from the silence of the prisoner and his declining to give some explanation of the situation in which he was found"); 1901, Kansas City Star Co. v. Carlisle, 113 C. C. A. 384, 108 Fed. 344, 360 (accused's explanations at the time of cattle being found in his possession, admitted);
Alabama: 1839, State v. Wisdom, 8 Port. 511 513, 517 (claim of title and production of bill of sale, when arrested with the goods, excluded, on "the general rule that one shall not be permitted to make evidence for himself"; "it must be asserted before or at the taking"); 1855, Spivey v. State, 26 Ala. 90, 93, 103 (larceny; defendant's open offers for sale, statements of his sources of title, and conversation with the supposed vendor's agent, excluded); 1868, Taylor v. State, 42 Ala. 529 (larceny; statement, when arrested, of purchase from V., excluded); 1870, Crawford v. State, 44 Ala. 45, 47 (burglary; statements of purchase, when found with the goods, admitted); 1871, Maynard v. State, 46 Ala. 85 (larceny; defendant's "explanation as to his possession," excluded); 1879, Atwell v. State, 63 Ala. 61, 65 (fraudulently removing mortgaged oxen; declarations at the time of removing and selling, that the mortgagee had permitted it, excluded); 1879, Cooper v. State, 63 Ala. 80 (larceny; allegations of gift from S., made some time after arrest, excluded); 1881, Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 25 (burglary; "if the party, at the time he is found in possession of the stolen property, and before he has had the opportunity to concoct evidence exculpatory of himself, give a reasonable and probable account" of his possession, it is admissible; some of the preceding cases, but not Crawford's and Cooper's, repudiated); 1881, Allen v. State, 72 Ala. 5 (larceny; defendant's statements as to title while openly possessing the goods, excluded); 1882, Allen v. State, 73 Ala. 23 (larceny; declarations "explanatory of possession," admissible, but not "respecting the source of title, or the contract under which he claims"); 1893, Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 40, 43, 16 So. 12 (larceny; statements while in possession, as to finding the article, admitted); 1898, Bryant v. State, 116 Ala. 445, 23 So. 40 (declarations, while in possession before arrest, as to the article being loaned to defendant by S., admitted as "explanatory of her possession");
Arkansas: 1858, Golden v. State, 19 Ark. 590, 600 (horse-stealing; declaration, when arrested, that "it was strange, for he had swapped a mule for a horse on the morning before," excluded; following State v. Wisdom, Ala.);
Georgia: 1906, Lanier v. State, 126 Ga. 586, 55 S. E. 496 (accused's explanatory statement while in possession, admitted);
Illinois: 1870, Comfort v. People, 54 Ill. 406 (remarks of the accused when pledging X's watch, admitted to indicate whether or not he was exercising ownership at the time); 1880, Bennett v. People, 96 Ill. 602, 607 ("what explanation a person makes while in possession of stolen property, at the time of the finding it in his possession, is admissible in evidence as explanatory of the character of his possession");

(1) The silence of the accused, or his failure to repel the charge and make explanation, when found with goods and charged, would be a circumstance of conduct available against him, either as an indication of consciousness of guilt (ante, § 273) or as an admission (ante, § 1071). Hence, this inference may properly be avoided in advance by showing that he was not silent but did repel the charge and claim his innocence. But, upon this principle, as

Indiana: 1908, Mason v. State, 171 Ind. 78, 85 N. E. 776 (accused's efforts to restore the missing property for identification by the owner, excluded);
Iowa: 1905, State v. Conroy, 126 Ia. 472, 102 N. W. 417 (statements explaining the possession of a stolen revolver, made before accusation, admitted);
Kentucky: 1858, Tipper v. Com., 2 Metc. 6, 11, semble (approving R. v. Abraham);
Louisiana: 1878, State v. Thomas, 30 La. An. 602 (in a charge of larceny, the defence being a taking under claim of ownership, previous claims of ownership were held admissible); 1915, State v. Lebleu, 137 La. 1007, 69 So. 808 (declarations of purchaser of stolen cattle that he had bought them from defendant, excluded on the facts);
Maine: 1873, State v. Pettis, 63 Me. 124 (larceny; declarations while in possession, that he had found the article in the street, not admitted; Appleton, C. J., and Barrows, J., diss., thought them admissible "as tending to disprove any felonious intent");
Massachusetts: 1870, Com. v. Rowe, 105 Mass. 590 (larceny; defendant's declarations to the shop-clerk, while holding the goods, that they had dropped out of a shawl which another woman had just given her to hold, admitted "to explain and qualify that possession and to disprove the inference of guilt");
Mississippi: 1879, Payne v. State, 57 Miss. 348 (larceny of a cow; defendant's statements, after selling it, to the buyer from him, that he had taken it by mistake for one of his own, and his warning not to slaughter it; "explanations offered by the party to account for his possession, if contemporaneous with it, or offered at a time when he is first called upon by the circumstances of the case to make such explanation," are admissible to rebut the presumption);
Missouri: 1897, State v. Waters, 139 Mo. 539, 41 S. W. 221 (declarations during possession disclaiming ownership and stating a borrowing only, excluded);
New Jersey: 1904, State v. Simon, 70 N. J. L. 407, 57 Atl. 1016 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; defendant's conversation with the seller, admitted);
North Carolina: 1838, State v. Jones, 3 Dev. & B. 122 (larceny of pigs; declarations as to losing pigs and going in search of them, made before the owner's claim advanced, admitted without dispute); 1870, State v. Worthington, 64 N. C. 594 (statement when charged with stealing, admitted; quoted ante, § 1144, note 2);
Ohio: 1846, Leggett v. State, 15 Oh. 283 (larceny of a horse; defendant's conversations when buying the horse from one D., admitted to "explain the inference of guilt the law raises from possession of the goods");
Oklahoma: 1898, Mitchell v. Terr., 7 Okl. 527, 54 Pac. 782 (explanations at the time of arrest, admissible); 1904, Smith v. Terr., 14 Okl. 518, 79 Pac. 214 (statements on arrest when not in possession, excluded);
Pennsylvania: 1864, Rhodes v. Com., 48 Pa. 396, 400 (murder and robbery; defendant's statements, when money was found upon him, as to its source, admitted; "had he refused to explain, it would have been evidence against him");
Texas: 1879, Hampton v. State, 5 Tex. App. 463, 467 (larceny; declarations when "his right to the ownership of said property is first questioned by some one else," admissible, but not declarations "before any adverse claim to the property is set up and before any suspicion rests upon him"; a singular confusion of rules; no authority cited); 1880, McPhail v. State, 9 Tex. 164 (larceny of cattle by shooting; declarations at the time, indicating an intent to prevent trespass, not an intent to appropriate, admitted); 1883, Sitterlee v. State, 13 Tex. 587, 592 ("any explanation which the party in whose possession the property is found may give at the time," admissible); 1893, Martin v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 441, 443, 24 S. W. 512 (the explanation must be made when first called upon to explain); 1895, Goens v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 73, 31 S. W. 656 (similar to Sitterlee's case);
Vermont: 1881, State v. Daley, 53 Vt. 442 (larceny of a heifer; defendant's declarations, when taking it, as to believing it to be one lost by him, admitted both as verbal acts and as rebutting the inference otherwise to be drawn from his failure to search for his own); 1905, State v. White, 77 Vt. 241, 59 Atl. 829 (larceny of a team; the defendant's declarations, before knowledge of suspicion or search that the team was not his own but hired, admitted); in the case of rape (ante, § 1136), merely the fact of making such a claim would be receivable, for this would suffice to dispose of the argument that he was silent. The details of his statement would thus not be admissible.
West Virginia: 1919, State v. Goldstrohm, 84 W. Va. 129, 99 S. E. 248 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; defendant's conversation with a police officer on seeking the latter to hand him the property, admitted; citing the above text with approval).

(2) On the theory of using prior consistent statements to corroborate a witness by repelling the suggestion of recent contrivance (ante, § 1129), the accused's consistent explanations, made before or upon arrest or charge made or goods found in his possession, would be receivable, provided he were a witness. The foundation of this theory has already been examined (ante, § 1143). It is enough here to note that it satisfies most of the cases, though it does not seem to be explicitly employed by the Courts (supra, n. 1).

(3) The Hearsay Exception for Spontaneous Exclamations (ante, § 1747) might perhaps be sufficient to admit statements made directly upon arrest, but the Courts seem not to invoke it. The Hearsay Exception for Statements of Intent (ante, § 1732) may also be applicable.

(4) Recent possession of stolen goods raises a presumption (post, § 2513) that the possessor is the thief or robber or knowing receiver (as the charge may be). Even though the strict effect of this fact as raising a presumption and casting on the defendant the duty of producing evidence (post, § 2490) may be removed by his producing some evidence to the contrary, still the fact of possession remains for the jury's consideration as capable of the inference of guilt. Now the inference from the fact of possession will be stronger or weaker, according as the possession was not or was in good faith; if a possession in good faith can be made to appear, the inference that the possessor was himself the robber or the thief or the knowing receiver can hardly be strong. Thus, the total significance of the act of possession becomes material; and upon the principle of verbal acts (ante, § 1772), the utterances of the person while in possession may be received as verbal acts (or, in the common judicial phrase, as "explanatory of possession"); though not as hearsay assertions to evidence the fact asserted.

On this principle, it would be immaterial what the tenor of the utterance was, — whether a claim or a disclaimer of ownership, or an explanation of finding or of purchase or of borrowing, provided only it indicated the intent of the possession. It would also be immaterial that it was made before arrest, or discovery of the goods, or claim made, or suspicion raised, or that it was made after arrest or discovery or claim or suspicion, provided only that it was made during possession. On the latter point, this theory might seem to allow greater latitude of time than the second principle (par. 2, supra); but since possession is seldom retained after claim by the owner or after arrest, the rules would in practice coincide. Still, if the defendant does retain possession, repeating his own claim of ownership, after claim made by another, it seems proper enough to consider his utterances upon the issue of good faith. Most of the precedents proceed upon this Verbal Act theory, yet decline to receive declarations made more than a short time after arrest or discovery, on the theory that the opportunity to fabricate had intervened; and they thus seem to proceed in part upon the other principle (par. 2, supra), in part upon this one (par. 4); yet, in the ordinary case, the practical result, as above noted, would not differ under either principle. Of these two theories, in general, it would seem that both are sound, and that declarations conforming to either the one or the other should be received.

(5) A narrow class of declarations of this sort are unquestionably receivable in another aspect of the same principle of verbal acts (ante, § 1777). When merely the intent to appropriate is in issue, and the defendant is said not to have exercised dominion at all over the goods (i. e. irrespective of his good faith in the possession), his utterances at the time of having them (for example, when taking a borrowed article to a pawnshop) will indicate the nature of his act. This use (which is rare enough) is a proper one, whatever the theory or the limitations may be in the ordinary case, where the act of appropriation is clear and the only question is as to good faith.[2]

Few Courts have laid down any principle with sufficient definiteness. All that can be said, as regards the state of the precedents, is that to-day in apparently all Courts declarations of the present sort are received on certain conditions, and that the rulings are altogether too strict for exclusion.[3]

§ 1782. Declarations affecting a Revocation of a Will. The equivocal act of tearing, burning, or cancelling a testamentary paper may or may not be in legal effect a revocation; just as the handing over of money may or may not be a loan, a payment, or a deposit for safe-keeping. The total effect of the act can be ascertained only by considering its intent as expressed in the accompanying words or other conduct. Such accompanying utterances are therefore plainly receivable (ante, § 1772) as verbal parts of the act:[1]

1866, WILDE, J., in Powell v. Powell, L. R. 1 P. & D. 212: "All acts by which a testator may physically destroy or mutilate a testamentary instrument are in their nature equivocal. They may be the result of accident, or, if intentional, of various intentions. It is therefore necessary in each case to study the act done by the light of the circumstances in which it occurred, and the declarations of the testator with which it may have been accompanied; for unless it be done 'animo revocandi' it is no revocation."

1825, WOODWORTH, J., in Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 490: "The declarations of the testator are in such cases [as where, by mistake, the will is torn or thrown into the fire] evidence, where they show the 'quo animo.' The act of cancelling is, in itself, equivocal, and will be governed by the intent."

1883, C. ALLEN, J., in Pickens v. Davis, 134 Mass. 257 (declarations being offered to show that a testatrix, by cancellation of a second will, did not intend to revive the first):

[2] Of this sort are the following cases in the above note: Comfort v. People, Ill.; State v. Waters, Mo.; McPhail v. State, Tex.

Distinguish (1) the use of statements by a vendor to the defendant, as evidence of the latter's good faith in purchasing stolen goods (ante, §§ 254, 259), and (2) the use of exculpatory statements in general by accused persons (ante, §§ 293, 1144, 1732, post, § 2115).

[3] As to this strictness, compare what is said ante, § 1732, par. 3.

§ 1782. [1] 1911, Blackett v. Ziegler, 153 Ia. 344, 133 N. W. 901; 1869, Thompson v. Updegraff, 3 W. Va. 629, 639.

The following ruling seems to fall under this principle: 1897, Smith v. Holden, 58 Kan. 535, 50 Pac. 447 (circumstances at the time of executing a paper not called a will, admitted, the question being whether it was to go into effect upon death or was a gift inter vivos).

"Such declarations were admissible for the purpose of showing the intent with which the act was done. The act itself was consistent with an intention to revive or not to revive the earlier will. Whether it had the one effect or the other depended upon what was in the mind of the testatrix."

It follows that declarations of intent made after the act of tearing or the like are not verbal parts of the act, and are mere hearsay assertions:

1854, SELDEN, J., in Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157: "[Statutes concerning revocation] require . . . some act amounting to a virtual destruction of the will. . . . Mere words alone will in no case amount to a revocation. Under these statutes, therefore, the only possible purpose for which evidence of the declarations of the testator can be given upon a question of revocation is to establish the 'animo revocandi,' in other words, to show the intent with which the act relied upon as a revocation was done. . . . The fact to be proved in such cases is the act claimed as a revocation, together with the intent with which it is done; and all declarations of the testator which do not accompany the act are to be regarded as mere hearsay."

If, then, such declarations after the act are to be receivable at all, it cannot be under the present principle as verbal parts of the act, but under some other principle. By some Courts their admission is thus sanctioned.[2]

§ 1783. Declarations of a Bankrupt. Perhaps the earliest, and in England the chief field, for the application of the Verbal Act doctrine has been the declarations of a debtor in connection with an alleged act of bankruptcy. Whether or not such conduct as departure from the jurisdiction, refusal to appear when a creditor calls to demand payment, or the like, amounts to an attempt to evade creditors and thus to an act justifying the judicial pronouncement of bankruptcy, depends for its total significance more or less on all the circumstances of the debtor's behavior. His declarations, therefore, at the time of this other conduct may go to define the general nature of the conduct, and thus become verbal parts of the act. There is, to be sure, some ground for arguing that an essential ingredient of the act of bankruptcy, as defined by the statutes, is a fraudulent intent, an intent to evade creditors, and that therefore the declaration is of a state of mind (as in the case of criminal intent), and is admissible (ante, § 1728) as a genuine Exception to the Hearsay rule. The effect, however, would be practically the same; because this intent would always accompany some alleged act of bankruptcy, and hence the declaration of intent would equally accompany the act. But, apart from the wording of the statutes, it seems legitimate to treat the declarations as "elucidating" and giving significance to an otherwise equivocal act (ante, § 1774). This has been the attitude of the Courts, uniformly in England, generally in the United States.[1] The following classical cases illustrate the judicial mode of treatment:

[2] The cases are considered ante, §§ 1736–1737. Compare also the cases cited ante, § 1777 (declarations of gift), where a testator's declarations as to an advancement are sometimes involved.

§ 1783. [1] Accord: 1835, Smith v. Cramer, 1 Bing. N. C. 586; 1838, Thomas v. Connell, 4 M. & W. 267; 1881, Brady v. Parker, 67 Ga. 637.

1802, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Robson v. Kemp, 4 Esp. 233: "Where the declaration of the bankrupt is part of the 'res gesta,' though it may show the intention of the act and thereby constitute an act of bankruptcy, it may be evidence."

1824, BEST, C. J., in Rawson v. Haigh, 9 Moore, 217 (letters of the bankrupt were offered, including some from Calais and Paris): "Wilkinson's going abroad was of itself an equivocal act, and requiring explanation, and, if so, we must endeavor to discover the motive with which it was accompanied, and this is generally, if not always, effected by the declarations of the party himself."

1832, TINDAL, C. J., in Ridley v. Gyde, 9 Bing. 349: "When a bankrupt has done an equivocal act, his declarations accompanying that act are admissible to explain his intentions; as where he has left his dwelling-house, which he may have done either in furtherance of his business or to avoid payment of a debt." BOSANQUET, J.: "The question here is whether the security in question was given by way of fraudulent preference. . . . To establish this, the declarations of the bankrupt must be admitted, not so much as declarations, but as a part of his conduct from which the inference is to be drawn that the security was given without pressure."

1841, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Rouch v. R. Co., 1 Q. B. 51: "The act and the intention were both necessary to be proved. . . . The substantive act proved 'aliunde' is the departure from home; that is equivocal; the declaration made during the continuance of that act shows the intention with which it was done."

1829, PARKER, C. J., in Carter v. Gregory, 8 Pick. 168: "'The exception to this rule [of hearsay] is that when declarations accompany an act and have a tendency to show the motive and intention of the act, they are sometimes admissible. Such was the case cited of the bankrupt, who having committed an act equivocal in its nature, his declaration made at the time showing his intention was admitted."

Since the declaration is received as a verbal part of the act, it must of course be contemporaneous with the alleged act of bankruptcy. Anything said before or after that conduct could have a purely assertive force only and could not be receivable on the present principle. This limitation has caused some apparent judicial uncertainty, — for example, in cases where the declaration was made after the debtor had absconded and while he was staying in a foreign country. There is, however, no difficulty of principle in receiving such declarations; the difficulty is merely one of fact, in determining the duration of the conduct constituting the alleged act of bankruptcy. The limitation is strict and inflexible, that the declaration must be contemporaneous with the alleged act (ante, § 1776). But as the conduct constituting the alleged act of bankruptcy may extend over a considerable period of time — as where a debtor absconds and stays abroad and then returns — there may be a considerable interval between the mere beginning of the conduct, i. e. the original departure or closing of the house, and the actual time of the declaration. Thus, though the declarations, as always under the present principle, must be contemporaneous with the alleged act of bankruptcy, the conduct constituting that act may allow for them a wide range of time. This result, after some temporary misunderstanding, was finally reached and solidly established in the English cases, and may be taken as sound and accepted:

1812, Mr. Christian, Bankruptcy, I, 379, 380: "What a bankrupt declares at the time of committing an act of bankruptcy is always received in evidence, when proved by another person. . . . But these declarations have been greatly, I conceive, misunderstood or misrepresented. They must accompany the act; for where words and actions are contemporaneous, they constitute one transaction, they are together one 'res gesta,' and the words are evidence of the reason of the act or the intention of the actor. . . . What Lord Kenyon and the Court said in the case of Bateman v. Bailey [2] has, I conceive, led many into error on this subject. . . . If the Court intended to say that what he declared after his return was complete, and when he was doing no act connected with it [is admissible], it is presumed the decision cannot be supported. Whilst he is preparing to go, or in the act of going, and during his absence from home, and whilst he is returning or unpacking his portmanteau, etc., what he says is part of the act of bankruptcy; but when he is only meditating a future act, or speaking of a past one completely finished, his words surely can have no more legal operation than those of any other man."

1824, BEST, C. J., in Rawson v. Haigh, 9 Moore, 327, 2 Bing. 99: "In order to render such declarations or letters admissible, they must be made or written at the time, or during the continuance of the act or urgency of the circumstances under which they are elicited, or sent; and here, as the act of bankruptcy was a continuous act from the time of Wilkinson's departure from this country for France, . . . they may be considered as forming part of one and the same continuing act." PARK, J.: "It is impossible to tie down to time the rule as to the declarations. . . . If, as in the present case, there are connecting circumstances, it may, even at that time [a month after] form part of the whole 'res gestæ.'"

1832, PARK, J., in Ridley v. Gyde, 9 Bing. 349: "I adhere therefore to what I said in Rawson v. Haigh. It is not necessary to lay down the precise time within which such declarations shall be admissible or excluded; but . . . it must always be considered whether there are any and what connecting circumstances between the declaration and the act. Here . . . those circumstances are all connected together as part of the same transaction."

§ 1784. Declarations as to Domicil. In Massachusetts, declarations of intention of residence, made by one removing to another place, were originally, and in a long line of decisions, regarded as governed by a principle representing in its main aspects the Verbal Act doctrine. That such declarations in the ordinary case (that is, when made not prior to removal, but during removal or resettling) cannot conceivably be governed by the Verbal Act doctrine, is more than ought to be asserted. But, having regard to the element of intent as treated in the law of domicil, it may better be regarded as a separate and independent element, material for its own sake and not merely as appurtenant to an act, and therefore may be shown by declarations admissible under the Exception for Statements of a Mental Condition (ante, § 1727). Certainly this is the only aspect in which declarations made prior to removal can legitimately be received; for they would be inadmissible as verbal parts of the act. In the case of Viles v. Waltham, in 1893,[1] the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts apparently gave up its former view and transferred its adherence to the Exception for Statements of a Mental Condition, as being the true governing principle. Nevertheless, its former line of decisions has served to furnish precedents and phrasings for other Courts; and the fact that these declarations are often treated under the Verbal Act doctrine therefore cannot be ignored. There is of course a strictness more or less unsatisfactory in applying the limitation of contempo-

[2] 5 T. R. 512.

§ 1784. [1] Quoted ante, § 1727.

raneousness (ante, § 1776); and this contributes to show that the Verbal Act doctrine is here really out of place. Its application is exhibited in the following passages: [2]

1841, WILDE, J., in Kilburn v. Bennett, 3 Metc. 199 (admitting declarations as to a contemplated moving): "They were made in the ordinary course of business, and in relation to the defendant's removal; and they were made to the owner of the house in which he was at the time residing. This giving notice of his intended removal is to be considered an act which he might prove in any case in which it became material; and, if so, all that he said explanatory of his intention in relation to his removal, seems to us to be admissible in evidence."

1854, THOMAS, J., in Cole v. Cheshire, 1 Gray 444: "It was not difficult to prove that he was in Lanesborough before the first of May, that he came there with his horse and trunks, and made a contract for board and lodging. But the effect of these acts depended upon the intent and purpose with which they were done. . . . Qualified by such intent and purpose, they were perfectly consistent with the intention of retaining his domicil in Cheshire. . . . That intent is manifested by what he does and by what he says when doing, and sometimes as significantly by what he omits to do or to say."

§ 1785. Declarations of Intent or Motive by an Accused. Where in a criminal charge the intent with which the act was done becomes material, declarations accompanying the act may perhaps be thought of as admissible under the present principle. But, since the criminal intent is itself an independent ingredient of the crime, and is not merely a subordinate means of ascertaining the total complexion of the outward conduct, the present principle seems hardly to be applicable. It seems more correct in such cases to use declarations of intent or motive as receivable under the Hearsay Exception for Statements of a Mental Condition (ante, § 1732, par. 4). Practically

[2] The following cases in Massachusetts and Maine proceed on this principle:

Massachusetts: Thorndike v. Boston, 1 Metc. 242; 1847, Salem v. Lynn, 13 Metc. 544 (statements after a return, rejected); 1864, Wilson v. Terry, 11 All. 214; 1864, Monson v. Palmer, 8 All. 552; 1870, Reeder v. Holcomb, 105 Mass. 94; 1879, Wright v. Boston, 126 Mass. 164 (statements made during a steady residence, and not on removal, rejected); 1879, Weld v. Boston, 126 Mass. 166; 1880, Brookfield v. Warren, 128 Mass. 288; 1887, Pickering v. Cambridge, 144 Mass. 248, 10 N. E. 827 (directions for work to be done on the place removed to, rejected).

Maine: 1828, Gorham v. Canton, 5 Greenl. 267; 1854, Richmond v. Thomaston, 28 Me. 234 (made before moving; rejected); 1865, Cornville v. Brighton, 39 Me. 334; 1886, Etna v. Brewer, 78 Me. 377, 5 Atl. 884; 1890, Belmont v. Vinalhaven, 82 Me. 524, 20 Atl. 9; 1904, Knox v. Montville, 98 Me. 493, 57 Atl. 792 (pauper settlement; declarations, while living in M., as to an intent to return to B., excluded; the declarations must "accompany acts which they explain"); 1913, Holyoke v. Holyoke's Estate, 110 Me. 469, 87 Atl. 40 (examining prior cases).

Rulings in other jurisdictions are as follows: 1896, Chambers v. Prince, 75 Fed. 176; 1908, Barnard v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 162 Fed. 618 (perjury in homestead land entries; the issue being whether W. resided on the homestead from 1898 to 1904, W.'s declarations of intent while elsewhere in 1901 and 1903 were admitted); 1911, Madison v. Guilford, 85 Conn. 55, 81 Atl. 1046; 1888, Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 196, 17 N. E. 232 (admissible "although not accompanying acts"); 1902, Matzenbaugh v. People, 194 id. 108, 62 N. E. 546 (declarations of intent, "so connected with the act of going from Illinois to Texas that they should have been regarded as qualifying or characterizing the act," are receivable); 1902, Bigelow v. Bear, 64 Kan. 887, 68 Pac. 73; 1868, Baker v. Kelly, 41 Miss. 696, 702 (attachment against a debtor about to remove from the State; the debtor's declarations of intent before attachment sued out, admitted for the debtor); 1891, Chase v. Chase, 66 N. H. 588, 591, 29 Atl. 553; 1916, Wilbur v. Calais, 90 Vt. 335, 98 Atl. 913.

Compare the following statute: N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Real Property § 12 (resident declarant alien's recorded deposition of intention to remain in U. S., admissible).

the result is the same under either principle, for declarations at the time of the act. But under the above Exception declarations after the act, asserting an existing state of mind, would also be receivable, and in that respect the two principles lead to different results.

§ 1786. Complementary Utterances; Putting in the Whole of a Conversation, Correspondence, etc. Upon the principle of Completeness (post, § 2094) a party for or against whom a statement, oral or written, has been properly introduced, is entitled to introduce complementary statements, i. e. the remainder of a conversation, letter, or other utterance, of which the former was but a part. This use of the remainder of the utterance is not prevented by the Hearsay rule, for the complementary utterance is received not as an assertion to prove a fact asserted in it, but is making plain the correct tenor of the first and fragmentary utterance. For example, where a statement by the opponent was received as an admission, "I have lied to you about this," the postal-card to which he referred when speaking was received, though written by a third person, because it formed a part of the defendant's admission;[1] i. e. not on the credit of the writer, but as complementing the defendant's oral statement. This class of cases is closely analogous to those already noticed (ante, § 1770) in which verbal parts of acts are received; here another part of the same entire utterance is received, solely in order to ascertain the exact tenor of another fragment. The application of this principle of Completeness is elsewhere examined in detail (post, §§ 2113–2124); here it is only to be noted that the employment of such complementary utterances does not violate the Hearsay rule.

3. Utterances used as Circumstantial Evidence

§ 1788. General Principle. The Hearsay rule forbids merely the use of an extrajudicial utterance as an assertion to evidence the fact asserted (ante, § 1766). Such a use would be testimonial, i. e. we should be asked to believe the fact because Doe asserted it to be true, precisely as we should be asked to believe Doe's similar assertion if made on the stand. What the Hearsay rule forbids (ante, § 1361) is the use of testimonial evidence — i. e. assertions — uttered not under cross-examination. If, then, an utterance can be used as circumstantial evidence, i. e. without inferring from it as an assertion to the fact asserted (ante, §§ 25, 245), the Hearsay rule does not oppose any barrier, because it is not applicable. For example, when it is material to show that Doe knew of a sale by Roe, the letter of notification by Roe to Doe, "Take notice that I have this day sold a carload of wheat to J. S.," is receivable, not as a testimonial assertion by Roe to prove the fact of sale, but as indicating circumstantially (i. e. indirectly) that Doe obtained knowledge of the sale; the fact of sale being proved by other evidence.

It now remains to survey the various ways in which utterances may thus be indirectly evidential. As some definite principle of Relevancy usually governs their use as circumstantial evidence, the precedents for the various classes of utterances can in most instances best be collected under the appropriate heads of Relevancy; but it is proper here to examine the manner in which they escape the ban of the Hearsay rule, and to summarize the different varieties.

§ 1786. [1] Amos v. State, 123 Ala. 50, 26 So. 524.

§ 1789. Knowledge, Belief, Good Faith, Reasonableness, Diligence, Motive, Sanity, etc., as evidenced by Receipt of Information or by Reputation. Wherever an utterance is offered to evidence the state of mind which ensued in another person in consequence of the utterance, it is obvious that no assertive or testimonial use is sought to be made of it, and the utterance is therefore admissible, so far as the Hearsay rule is concerned. In the following passages this distinction is expounded:

1773, Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 20 How. St. Tr. 137; action for false imprisonment by the Governor of Minorca; defence, that the plaintiff excited sedition and riot; the reasonableness of the governor's apprehension of riot came into issue; the aide-de-camp to the governor testified that a native magistrate came to him to report that "Fabrigas said he would come with a mob . . . and they would see better days to-morrow." Mr. Peckham, for the defence: "You need not mention what the mustastaph told you; that is not regular." Mr. J. GOULD: "I should be glad to know how the Governor can be apprised of any danger unless it is by one or other of his officers informing him there is likely to be such and such a thing happen?" Mr. Peckham: "Hearsay is no evidence." Mr. J. GOULD: "We do not take it for granted that it is really so; only that this gentleman, hearing of this, tells the Governor." Mr. Lee, for the defence: "It is no evidence of the fact: if you mean it only as a report, we do not object."

1836, ABINGER, L. C. B., in Fraser v. Berkeley, 7 C. & P. 625: "If a man called another a liar, and was knocked down, the plaintiff [suing for this battery] would not be allowed to prove, on the trial of the assault, that the defendant [as asserted by the plaintiff] was really and in point of fact a liar, because evidence of provocation is admitted for the purpose of showing that the feelings of the party [thus charged] were excited, and a man is not stung the less by a libel because it happens to be true."

1849, ERLE, J., in R. v. Wilkins, 4 Cox Cr. 92 (the constable, who apprehended the accused, spoke of "tracing" them from place to place; it was objected that this involved the hearsay statements of others as to the accused's doings); "Half the transactions of life are done by means of words. There is a distinction, which it appears to me is not sufficiently attended to, between mere statements made by and to witnesses, that are not receivable in evidence, and directions given and acts done by words, which are evidence. The witness, in this case, may say that he made inquiries, and, in consequence of directions given to him in answer to those inquiries, he followed the prisoners from place to place until he apprehended them."

1870, MILLER, J., in Friend v. Hamill, 34 Md. 298, 308: "Where the question is whether a party has acted prudently, wisely, or in good faith, the information on which he acted, whether true or false, is original and material evidence, and not hearsay."

1892, HARRISON, J., in Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 293, 30 Pac. 529 (a witness who ran an elevator, which had caused the injury in issue, testified that he had been told that harm would come if he did not follow certain instructions, which he described): "Whenever the knowledge or information of the party charged to have been negligent is a factor in determining such question [of negligence], it is proper, for the purpose of showing such knowledge or information, to show that notice was given to him, and that he was informed of the facts which would constitute negligence. . . . Whether in fact such information was or was not correct is immaterial for the purpose of determining its admissibility; and hence it is no objection to its admission that it was not given under the sanction of an oath or that the opposite party had not the opportunity of cross-examining the informant. The truth of the information is a distinct issue, and must be established by competent evidence; but upon the theory that the information was correct, the plaintiff in the present instance had the right to show that the defendant had received such information. . . . Such evidence is admitted for the purpose of establishing merely the utterance of the words and not their truth." [1]

On this principle, the Hearsay rule interposes no obstacle to the use of letters, notices, oral informations, reputation, or any other form of verbal utterances by one person, as circumstantial evidence that another person had knowledge or belief as to the violent character or intentions of the deceased in a homicide case (ante, §§ 247, 248), the incompetence of an employee (§ 249), the vicious nature of an animal (§ 251), the dangerous condition of a place or a machine (§ 252), the insolvency or lunacy of a vendor (§ 253), the character of stolen goods bought (§§ 255, 259), the falsity of representations made (§ 256), the guilt of an arrested person or the dangerous intentions of a mob or riotous assemblage (§ 258). In the same way, when a person's failure to complain of a robbery (ante, § 1142) or of a rape (ante, § 1134) is taken as evidence of a false claim, the motives for the silence may serve to explain it away, and thus it may become proper to learn whatever direction or information was relied upon as inducing the silence. So also where silence, when a denial would be natural, is treated as equivalent to an admission (ante, § 1071), the reason for the silence may serve to explain away its import, and thus the information giving rise to the silence may become admissible. Departure after a charge made may evidence consciousness of guilt, but the prior receipt of a pressing telegram may repel this inference (ante, § 281). An emotion of anger or malice may be caused by information received (ante, § 389), and thus the communicated utterances may become admissible. Insanity may be indicated by the mode of conduct upon information received (ante, § 228), and the communication thus becomes admissible. Good faith and diligence in a search, either for a document said to be lost (ante, § 1196) or for a witness said to be absent (ante, §§ 1313, 1404, 1725), may be evidenced by the replies made to inquiries which thus appear to be fruitless; and the information thus given becomes admissible for its circumstantial value. So also good faith in destroying a document may excuse its non-production § 1789. [1] The following cases further illustrate the distinction: 1912, Hurst v. State, 101 Miss. 402, 58 So. 206 (threats as an excuse for carrying a concealed weapon; is the belief of defendant that M. had threatened defendant's life the material thing under the law? Or the fact that M. had so threatened? In the former solution, the report as made to defendant becomes admissible on the present principle; but not in the latter solution); 1858, State v. Wentworth, 37 N. H. 217 (the fact that on inquiry no one in a certain neighborhood knew of a man whose existence was material); 1919, State v. Perretta, 93 Conn. 328, 105 Atl. 690 (telephoning to the police; principle approved, per Gager, J.).

The present principle underlies the following statute: Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5763, P. C. § 1023 ("information, conversations, letters, and replies," when they "explain conduct and ascertain motives," are receivable as "original evidence").

(ante, § 1198), and the information which induced the destruction may thus be receivable. Whether the fact that a person alleged to be dead has or has not been heard from, as affecting the presumption of death from absence is a different question, so far as the principle of Relevancy is concerned (ante, § 158, post, § 2531); but the fact of receiving or not receiving a letter or other news is here also a circumstantial, not a testimonial use of the evidence, which thus becomes admissible.

There may be other instances of a similar use of one person's utterances to show another's mental condition; but all are left equally scathless so far as the Hearsay rule is concerned.

§ 1790. Utterances as indicating Circumstantially the Speaker's Own State of Mind. The condition of a speaker's mind, as to knowledge, belief, rationality, emotion, or the like, may be evidenced by his utterances, either used testimonially as assertions to be believed, or used circumstantially as affording indirect inferences. Utterances of the former sort may be received under the Exception for Statements of a Mental Condition (ante, § 1714). Yet such direct assertions of a mental condition as, "I know that Doe is insolvent," or "I dislike Roe," are relatively less common as a source of proof. The usual resort is to utterances which circumstantially indicate a specific state of mind causing them.

To such a use, then, the Hearsay rule makes no opposition, because the utterance is not used for the sake of inducing belief in any assertion it may contain. The assertion, if in form there is one, is to be disregarded, and the indirect inference alone regarded. This discrimination, though well accepted in the law, is easy to be ignored, and it needs perhaps to be emphasized.

Suppose, for example, a witness J. S. to have testified to seeing Doe in January in a house on Cedar Street, Doe's presence at the time being material. The opponent wishes to show that J. S. is mistaken and that the person seen was not Doe. He offers the testimony of one who in February met J. S. and asked him if he had seen Doe lately, J. S. then replying, "Yes, I talked with him this morning at the bank"; the opponent being ready to prove that the person whom J. S. talked with at the bank was Roe and not Doe. Now J. S.'s utterance is here not offered assertively, to prove that J. S. did talk with Doe; on the contrary, the opponent even desires it to be understood that the assertion is incorrect; and he offers the utterance for its indirect value as indicating that J. S. believed the person Roe to be the person Doe; in other words, as evidencing J. S.'s ignorance of Doe's personality. Here, then, J. S.'s utterance has two possible uses, — its testimonial and its circumstantial use; so far as the former is concerned, the Hearsay rule applies, but to the latter the Hearsay rule has no application. Again, in evidencing sanity or insanity, a testator's statement, "I am the King of Dahomey," or "I have a million dollars in the bank," may be treated either testimonially or circumstantially; so far as it is offered circumstantially, as indicating a delusion in the testator's mind, it is not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule. It is immaterial whether or not, in the case in hand, the assertive or testimonial use might be improperly made by the jury; the judge's instructions are the corrective against this. On the principle of multiple admissibility (ante, § 13), if there is any relevant circumstantial use, the utterance is admissible for that purpose.

The discrimination between the two is pointed out in the following passages:

1854, SELDEN, J., in Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157: "The difference is certainly very obvious between receiving declarations of a testator to prove a distinct external fact, such as duress or fraud, for instance, and as evidence merely of the mental condition of the testator. In the former case, it is mere hearsay, . . . while in the latter it is the most direct and appropriate species of evidence, . . . and the same evidence is admissible in every such case as in cases where insanity or absolute incompetency of the testator is alleged. . . . The difference between the two cases consists in the different nature of the inquiries involved. One relates to a voluntary and conscious act of the mind; the other to its involuntary state or condition."

1868, COLT, J., in Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112: "The previous declarations of the testator, offered to prove the mental facts involved [competency to will], are competent. Intention, purpose, mental peculiarity and condition, are mainly ascertainable through the medium afforded by the power of language. Statements and declarations, when the state of mind is the fact to be shown, are therefore received as mental acts or conduct. The truth or falsity of the statement is of no consequence. As a narration, it is not received as evidence of the fact stated. It is only to be used as showing what manner of man he is who makes it."

It is worth while to emphasize the legitimacy of this circumstantial aspect of such evidence, because it incurs the risk of being ignored, through a judicial disposition in part to account for it by the unmeaning shibboleth of 'res gestæ' (ante, § 1767), or by the Exception for Statements of a Mental Condition (ante, § 1715). The evidence is circumstantial, not testimonial; and it is therefore not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, nor needs for its admission any Exception to that rule. No doubt, in given instances, it may be difficult to distinguish a genuine circumstantial use of utterances for this purpose; and this difficulty has already been considered (ante, § 267); but isolated instances of difficulty need not prevent us from recognizing the plain principle in its ordinary unquestioned uses.

These various circumstantial uses have already been examined in dealing with the different kinds of circumstantial evidence; and the precedents are collected under those respective heads. It remains here merely to note briefly the chief kinds:

(1) Utterances are receivable as evidencing indirectly insanity or other organic mental condition (ante, § 228) or as evidencing physical condition as to illness or the like (ante, § 223).

(2) Utterances indirectly evidencing knowledge, belief, consciousness, and the like, are equally admissible (ante, § 266). Some difficulty may here arise when the fact of belief or consciousness is itself of doubtful relevancy.

The question of the propriety of such an inference arises for a parent's declarations of legitimacy (ante, § 269), a husband's or wife's declarations of marriage (ante, § 268), a testator's declarations as to the execution or contents of an existing will (ante, §§ 271, 1739), and a few other instances (ante, § 272).

(3) Utterances indirectly indicating fear, ill-will, excitement, or other emotion on the part of the speaker are also admissible, whether the person be one whose state of mind is in issue (ante, § 394), or be a witness whose bias is to be ascertained (ante, § 950). A peculiar case is that of a testator's utterances as indicating undue influence (ante, § 1738). Utterances connected with a mob or riotous assemblage have several aspects: (a) As indicating the reasonable apprehensions of the magistrate or other officer, defending himself on a charge of unlawful arrest or battery, the information given to him of the mob's doings is admissible (ante, § 248). (b) As indicating whether there was in fact an alarm and fear of danger in the community, this alarm being not only in a civil case a justification for the magistrate but also on a criminal charge a part of the notion of the crime of creating a riot, the expressions of alarm of various persons in the community are admissible to show their fear, either as circumstantial evidence (ante, § 394), or as hearsay assertions of a mental state (ante, § 1730). (c) As indicating the intent of the mob, whether seditious, violent, or otherwise, the expressions of intention by the persons composing it are clearly receivable, either as indirect evidence (ante, § 254), or as assertions of a mental state (ante, § 1729). But usually the only question of difficulty here is whether the accused may be made responsible for the doings of the mob as a joint actor with them (ante, § 1079).

§ 1791. Utterances serving to Identify Time, Place, or Person. Utterances serving to identify are admissible as any other circumstance of identification would be (ante, §§ 410–415). Utterances serving to mark a time or a place are the commonest instances of this sort, and are admissible so far as they have a real service for that purpose and are not used merely as a pretext for introducing a hearsay assertion (ante, § 416). Utterances by a person as to his name, birthplace, family, or the like, are available for this purpose; but their more common use is to furnish an inference that the person was born or related as he claimed to be (ante, §§ 270, 1494). Utterances that have served to induce the observation of a particular fact (ante, § 655), or to fix the recollection of it (ante, § 730), are also receivable, without regard to their assertive value, as not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule.

§ 1792. Witness' Statements used in Impeachment. The utterances of a witness indicating bias are receivable to impeach him (ante, § 950) on the principles noted in the preceding section. Statements offered as self-contradictions are admitted not as assertions to be credited, but merely as constituting an inconsistency which indicates the witness to be in error in one or the other statement; their use as hearsay assertions is uniformly prohibited by the Courts (ante, § 1018). Such an apparently inconsistent statement may be explained away by other utterances (ante, § 1044). Consistent statements to corroborate a witness are admitted in certain cases only, but are never conceded to have any testimonial force (ante, § 1132). In all of the foregoing instances the utterance is used otherwise than as an assertion to be credited, and therefore the Hearsay rule is not applicable.

SUB-TITLE IV: HEARSAY RULE AS APPLICABLE TO COURT OFFICERS

(JUROR, JUDGE, COUNSEL, INTERPRETER)

CHAPTER LIX.

The Hearsay Rule's requirement is that no assertion used testimonially be admitted without prior subjection to the test of cross-examination; thus, it naturally applies to the various officers and agencies of the trial itself, as well as to other persons in general. But in its application to the court officers and agencies there has been a different history, and its application takes special forms. Here must be considered:

(1) The Juror;
(2) The Judge;
(3) The Counsel;
(4) The Interpreter.

1. Juror

§ 1800. Juror having Previous Private Knowledge must testify as Witness. The jury, in its original function, was a body of witnesses drawn from the vicinage. They were assumed to have knowledge of their own upon the subject of the cause, and were allowed and expected to apply it in reaching a verdict. This function persisted for centuries, and its scope is seen as late as the 1600s:

1670, VAUGHAN, V. J., in Bushel's Case, 6 How. St. Tr. 999, 1010, Vaughan 135: "It is true, if the jury were to have no other evidence for the fact but what is deposed in court, the judge might know their evidence. . . . But the evidence which the jury have of the fact is much other than that, for, 1, Being returned of the vicinage whence the cause of action ariseth, the law supposeth them thence to have sufficient knowledge to try the matter in issue (and so they must), though no evidence were given on either side in court, but to this evidence the judge is a stranger; 2, They may have evidence from their own personal knowledge, by which they may be assured and sometimes are that what is deposed in court is absolutely false; . . . 3, The jury may know the witnesses to be stigmatized and infamous."

In the meantime, however, the function of the jury as mere triers, upon evidence furnished by others, had become more and more emphasized, and ended by becoming the sole one. The course of this development has been once for all described in the following passage:

1898, Professor James Bradley Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 137, 168: "We have seen how the ways of adding to their knowledge were gradually increased, until at last witnesses called in by the parties were regularly admitted to testify publicly to these other witnesses, summoned by the sheriff, whom we call the jury. This mounting witnesses upon witnesses was a remarkable result and teemed with great consequences. The contrast between the functions of these two classes became always greater and more marked. The peculiar function of the jury — as being triers — grew to be their chief, and finally, as centuries passed, their only one; while that of the other witnesses was more and more defined, refined upon, and hedged about with rules. It is surprising to see how slowly these results came about. . . . Two things stand out prominently in Vaughan's opinion in Bushel's Case: 1. The jury are judges of evidence. 2. They act upon evidence of which the Court knows nothing ; and may rightfully decide a case without any evidence publicly given for or against either party. It was now two hundred years since Fortescue wrote his book and showed witnesses testifying in open court to the jury; and as we see, not yet has the jury lost its old character, as being in itself a body of witnesses. . . . As things stood after Bushel's Case, how should the jury be controlled? The attaint was obsolete, and fining and imprisonment were no longer possible. In no way could they be punished for giving verdicts against law or evidence. The Courts found a remedy by a simple extension of their very ancient jurisdiction of granting new trials in case of misconduct. . . . [This] was going beyond anything that had formerly been done. Moreover, how should the Court know that the jury's verdict was against evidence? And how should they know what the law was until they knew what the facts were, since the law, as applicable to the case, was inextricably bound up with some definite supposition of fact? . . . In order to make it effective it was necessary to accompany this practice by an endeavor to make the jury declare publicly their private knowledge about the cause. This effort prospered but slowly. The old function of the jury was too deeply ingrained to give way in any short time; the judges long contented themselves with advice, with laying it down as a moral duty that the jury should publicly declare what they knew. . . . In 1598, we see it recognized that a juryman may communicate to his associates privately any oral or written information that he has, if not induced thereto by either of the parties. But in 1650, in Bennett v. Hartford, it was laid down that a juror ought to state publicly in court on oath any such information, and not to give it in private to his companions. . . . Half a century later, in 1702, the same duty is reported to have been laid down in general terms for the whole jury: 'If a jury give a verdict on their own knowledge, they ought to tell the Court so, that they may be sworn as witnesses. And the fair way is to tell the Court before they are sworn that they have evidence to give.' And so our modern doctrine grew up."

This result seems to have become a settled maxim of the law not before the middle of the 1700s.[1] But since that time it has never been doubted.

§ 1800. [1] 1719, Lilly's Practical Register, I, 552; 1791, Smith v. Hollings, 6 How. St. Tr. 1012, note, per Buller, J. (a juror should not give his knowledge privily, but "be examined and subjected to cross-examination as a witness"); 1840, Manley v. Shaw, Car. & M. 361.

This comparative recency in its acceptance accounts perhaps for the frequent statutory declaration of the principle in the legislation of the 1800s in this country.[2]

The case of R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532 (1816), sometimes referred to as marking the recognition of this doctrine, seems not to concern it. Compare the history of the Hearsay rule in general (ante, § 1364).

[2] Alabama: Code 1907, § 7896 (substantially like Ia. Code 1897, § 5381); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1062 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); California: P. C. 1872, § 1120 ("If a juror has any personal knowledge respecting a fact in controversy in a cause, he must declare the same in open court during the trial. If during the retirement of the jury, a juror declare a fact which could be evidence in the cause, as of his own knowledge, the jury must return into court. In either of these cases, the juror making the statement must be sworn as a witness and examined in the presence of the parties"); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5932 (a juror is not to "act on private knowledge," "unless sworn and examined as a witness in the case"); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8965 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2138 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1120; "if the Court deem any such evidence material to the cause," a new jury may be summoned); Iowa: Code 1897, § 5381, Rev. Code, § 9439 ("If a juror have personal knowledge respecting a fact in controversy in a cause, he must declare the same in open court during the trial; and if, during the retirement of the jury, a juror declares any fact which could be evidence in the cause, as of his own knowledge, the jury must return into court, and the juror must be sworn as a witness and examined in the presence of the parties, if his evidence be admissible"); 1904, Douglass v. Agne, 125 Ia. 67, 99 N. W. 550; Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 8118 (in criminal cases, "if any juror shall know anything relative to the matter in issue, he shall disclose the same in open court"); § 8155 ("if a juror has personal knowledge of any fact material to the cause, he must declare it to the court, and not to his fellow-jurors out of court"); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 2255 ("Jurors knowing any fact material to the issue shall disclose the same in open court, upon oath, as evidence"); Massachusetts: 1834, Parks v. Boston, 15 Pick. 198, 209; 1839, Murdock v. Sumner, 22 Mass. 156 (quoted supra); 1854, Schmidt v. Ins. Co., 1 Gray Mass. 529, 535; Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 9204 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 4013 (in criminal cases, "if any juror shall know anything relative to the matter in issue, he shall disclose the same in open court"); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11997 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); Nebraska: 1903, Falls City v. Sperry, 68 Nebr. 420, 94 N. W. 529; Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 7190 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); New Hampshire: 1916, Curtis v. Boston & M. R. Co., 78 N. H. 116, 97 Atl. 743 (fire set by locomotive; whether the jury could use their knowledge that a barn could be seen from the postoffice, not decided); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Practice § 158 (jurors who "know anything" relevant must be called as witnesses and disclose in open court); 1920, State v. Langhans, 95 N. J. L. 213, 110 Atl. 566 (juror's name challenged in the drawing, on the ground that he was under subpoena by the State in the case; objection held invalid, under St. 1797, § 19, now Practice Act, § 183, as to jurors' testifying in open court); New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 413 (substantially like Cal. P. C. § 1120); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10856 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 2715, (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1120); Oregon: Comp. L. 1913, § 10856, Laws 1920, § 140 (a juror, if not examined, "shall not communicate any private knowledge or information that he may have of the matter in controversy to his fellow-jurors, nor be governed by the same in giving his verdict"); Pennsylvania: St. 1834, Apr. 14, § 160, Dig. 1920, § 12950, § 160 (a juror "who shall know anything relative to the matter in controversy" shall disclose the same in open court before retiring); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6291 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120) South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4896 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); Tennessee: 1833, Booby v. State, 4 Yerg. 111, 114 (receiving stolen goods; one of the jurors stated to the others, "which they regarded as evidence, that the defendant had stolen a hog in the county"); 1845, Douston v. State, 6 Humph. 275 (statements as to a witness); 1851, Sam v. State, 1 Swan 61, 62 (statement as to a county line); 1872, Wade v. Ordway, 1 Baxt. 229, 238; 1878, Morton v. State, 1 Lea 498; 1882, Whitmore v. Ball, 9 Lea 35; 1883, Nile v. State, 11 Lea 694; 1896, Ryan v. State, 97 Tenn. 206, 36 S. W. 930; 1897, Citizens' R. Co. v. Burke, 98 Tenn. 650, 40 S. W. 1085; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8999 (like Cal. P. C. § 1120); Virginia: Code 1919, § 6014 (a juror "knowing anything relative to a fact in issue" must disclose it in open court); Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 348 (a juror, unless examined as a witness, "shall not communicate any private knowledge or information that he may have of the matter in controversy to his fellow-jurors, nor be governed by the same in giving his verdict"); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 116, § 31 (a juror "knowing anything relative to a fact in issue shall disclose the same in open court, but not to the jury out of court").

Though historically the motives leading to this result in the 1600s rested on the necessity of controlling the jury in some further way under the changed conditions, yet, in theory and as a part of our system of evidential principles, the rule is sufficiently accounted for to-day as a necessary deduction from the Hearsay rule. To allow the juror to contribute his private knowledge to the other jurymen would be to allow testimony to go to them unsubjected to the searching analysis of cross-examination. This reason was early perceived, and has been repeatedly laid down:

1824, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Allen v. Rostain, 11 S. & R. 362, 374: "Although it was once held that a juror might determine upon facts within his own knowledge, not proved by his oath, yet that opinion has been long reprobated, in consequence of the confusion and injustice that would result from it. The parties have a right to hear the evidence, that they may have an opportunity of cross-examining the witness, and contradicting him, if necessary, by other evidence."

1839, SHAW, C. J., in Murdock v. Sumner, 22 Pick. 156: "If any juror knew any fact bearing upon the subject, such as the state and condition of the particular parcel of goods [here alleged to have been converted], especially if it differed from the facts testified, he should have stated it and testified to it in open court, that the Court may judge of the competency of the evidence, that the parties might fully examine the witness, and that the counsel and Court might have under their consideration the whole of the evidence upon which the verdict is formed."

1884, LYON, J., in Washburn v. R. Co., 59 Wis. 364, 370, 18 N. W. 328: "To allow jurors to make up their verdict on their individual knowledge of disputed facts material to the case, not testified to by them in court, or upon their private opinions, would be most dangerous and unjust. It would deprive the losing party of the right of cross-examination and the benefit of all the tests of credibility which the law affords."

The rule is now universally accepted, in statute and precedent; though its phrasings differ in minor details.

§ 1801. Same: Other Principles Discriminated; (1) Judicial Notice; (2) Juror's Incompetency. (1) Where a matter is too notorious to need evidence of it, the judge may "notice" it; and, upon this principle, certain things are assumed, for jurors also, to be so well known and undoubted that the jurors may take them into consideration without evidence of them. Thus a line has to be drawn between these matters of judicial notice as applied to jurors and the matters of mere private interest; for the latter there must be evidence, and if a juror can give evidence, he must (under the present principle) present it as a witness in court. This distinction between matters of private knowledge and public knowledge is dealt with under the head of judicial notice (post, § 2570). The relative bearing of the two principles is this: (a) By the doctrine of Judicial Notice, the jurors cannot assume to be true any matters of mere private interest, not publicly notorious and unquestioned; they must require evidence; (b) By the Hearsay rule, they cannot take that evidence from the lips of a fellow-juror informing them privately after retirement; they must listen to him only as a witness upon the stand.

(2) Is there a rule of policy forbidding a juror publicly to testify before his own fellow-jurors, by reason of the danger of prejudicing him as a juror in his criticism of testimony? This involves a different principle, and is elsewhere considered (post, § 1910).

(3) Whether a juror may be an interpreter has already been considered (ante, § 811).

§ 1802. Jurors not to receive Evidence out of Court; Witnesses at a View. (1) If a juror listen to the statements of a person made to him not in the open court-room and not on the witness-stand, the Hearsay rule is clearly violated:

1680, HALE, L. C. J., Pleas of the Crown, II, 307: "If after the jury sworn and gone from the bar, they send for a witness to repeat his evidence that he gave openly in court, who doth it accordingly, this, appearing by examination in court and indorsed upon the record or 'postea,' will avoid the verdict; because not done openly in court nor in the presence of the parties concerned."

1845, TURLEY, J., in Douston v. State, 6 Humph. 275, 276: "It has always been held that testimony given to a jury after it had left the presence of the court vitiates a verdict, because it is not given on oath, and is given without the knowledge of those to be affected by it and who have therefore no opportunity of meeting and repelling it."

This application of the rule has never been doubted.[1] The only matter of controversy is whether a violation of the rule in this manner is sufficient ground for setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial — a subject not within the present purview.[2]

(2) Upon the same principle, the making of statements by a witness at a view, or even the pointing out of the places by a witness or other unauthorized person at a view (which amounts to giving testimony), is a violation of the rule. Here, also, the only question can be whether the impropriety is upon the circumstances sufficient ground for setting aside the verdict.[3]

§ 1802. [1] At least, since the Hearsay rule existed: ante, § 1364.

[2] The following cases may serve as a few illustrations: 1860, State v. Andrews, 29 Conn. 100, 104 (one juror listening to private statements, held improper); 1896, Conrad v. State, 144 Ind. 290, 43 N. E. 221 (the jurors went to a jail-chamber, where the defendant was said to have attempted suicide, examined it, tested the wire said to have been used, and talked with the witnesses; judgment reversed since "it was the privilege of the accused to meet the witnesses face to face"; cases cited); 1867, Heffron v. Gallupe, 55 Me. 563 (a juryman obtained from defendant a pamphlet containing the evidence at the former trial; held improper); 1873, Bowler v. Washington, 62 Me. 302 (one juror receiving private testimony, held improper).

But the testimony may be read over to the jurors in open court, on their request: 1900, State v. Hunt, 112 Ia. 509, 84 N. W. 525.

[3] The following cases may serve as illustrations: Eng. 1872, R. v. Martin, 12 Cox Cr. 204, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378 (pointing out by a witness; undecided); U. S.: Ind. 1867, Erwin v. Bulla, 29 Ind. 95 (statute enforced forbidding testimony at a view); Ia. 1876, Stockwell v. R. Co., 43 Ia. 470, 473 (fire attributed to a locomotive; by consent a view of the place was taken; the plaintiff's counsel was absent, and a witness present spoke to a juror as to a fact undisputed in the testimony; held, no substantial prejudice); Mich. 1891, People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449, 465, 49 N. W. 288; 1913, People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23, 141 N. W. 869 (following People v. Hull; in the defendant's absence, no testimony can be given); Minn. 1875, Hayward v. Knapp, 22 Minn. 5 (new trial granted, for reception of testimony at the view); Mont. 1903, State v. Landry, 29 Mont. 218, 74 Pac. 418 (verdict set aside because certain spectators laughed and demonstrated their opinion of the success of an experiment; this is absurd); Nev. 1880, State v. Lopez, 15 Nev. 407, 411 (pointing out places by a person neither officer nor witness, held improper); N. H. 1863, Sanderson v. Nashua, 44 N. H. 492, 494; N. Y. 1888, People v. Johnson, 110 N. Y. 134, 143, 17 N. E.

(3) But the pointing out by judicially appointed showers is no violation of the rule. The theory of showers is that they are agents of each party, familiar with the issues of the case, and appointed by the Court (or by consent of parties) to identify provisionally beforehand the places to which the testimony will relate. They are sworn to do this properly, and to say nothing more.[4] Thus their position is analogous to that of a witness; their oath is the oath of a witness so far as their functions make them such; and by examination it can be ascertained in court whether they have truly fulfilled it. There is therefore that opportunity of testing by cross-examination which is required by the Hearsay rule. The presence at the view of a shower representing each side affords a further opportunity of ascertaining the propriety of each other's doings. The employment of duly appointed showers, therefore, is in no sense an exception to the ordinary rule of Evidence; and this has long been recognized:

1747, Goodtille v. Clark, Barnes 457; motion to set aside a verdict because "the plaintiff's shower at a view . . . had misbehaved himself by telling the viewers, 'This place is called Abraham's Yat, and this Conygree Hill,' which were not the places in question, and saying, 'These cottages pay Mr. Symons 5d. or 6d. a year rent;' defendant insisting that nothing more than the place in question, which was one single cottage, should have been shown to the viewers." "The Court discharged the rule, being of opinion, that on a view the showers may show marks, boundaries, etc., to enlighten the viewers, and may say to them, 'These are the places which on the trial we shall adapt our evidence to.' The 684 (trial Court's ruling refusing a new trial for alleged reception of testimony, sustained); 1896, People v. Gallo, 149 N. Y. 106, 115, 43 N. E. 529 (the jury visited the premises with two sworn officers and one person unsworn but appointed by the Court and a witness explained the premises; neither defendant nor his attorney was present; held improper); N. Car. 1897, State v. Perry, 121 N. C. 533, 27 S. E. 997 (a passer-by was interrogated by the jury as to the identity of a house, materially in question, held improper); Okl. 1898, Hays v. Terr., 7 Okl. 15, 54 Pac. 300 (no testimony to be taken at a view; under C. Cr. P. §§ 5222, 5269); Wis. 1887, Sasse v. State, 68 Wis. 530, 536, 32 N. W. 849 (that accompanying counsel should call attention to various spots by identifying them, held improper).

For the statutes, which sometimes expressly declare this rule, see the citations already given ante, § 1162.

But distinguish an adjournment of trial to an exterior place: 1902, Board v. Moore, — Ky. —, 66 S. W. 417 (jury allowed to see a horse and phaeton in the court-house yard, and to listen to testimony, not as if taking a view, but as if adjourning the place of trial); 1905, Underwood v. Com., 119 Ky. 384, 84 S. W. 310.

Of course the present principle does not apply where it is the defendant himself who voluntarily testifies and afterwards objects: Underwood v. Com., supra.

[4] The customary order for a view ran (1 Burr. 252, 258): "And that R. R. on the part of the plaintiff and T. W. on the part of the defendant shall attend on the same day and show the matters in question to the said, etc., . . . and no evidence shall be given on either side at the time of taking thereof." A modern case shows the traditional form of oath: 1847, R. v. Whalley, 2 Cox Cr. 231 (the sheriff, "having a knowledge of the locality," was appointed to show the places referred to by the witnesses, and took the plans produced for the prosecution and the defence, to assist in the view; the oath administered to the shower was: "You swear you will attend this jury and well and truly point out to them the place in which the offence for which the prisoner T. W. stands charged is alleged to have been committed; you shall not speak to them touching the supposed offence whereof the said T. W. is so charged, only so far as relates to describing the place aforesaid"; and to the bailiffs: "You shall [etc., as above . . .] committed; you shall not allow any one to speak to them touching the offence whereof the said T. W. is so charged, except the person sworn and appointed to show the said jury the place aforesaid; neither shall you speak to them yourselves [unless it be to request them to return with you into court], without leave of the Court").

For the statutes governing views, which usually mention expressly the appointment of showers, see ante, § 1162.

jury could have no light from looking at the cottage only; the question to be tried was, whether it stood within Mr. Symons's manor or not. Had an ancient man been produced to the viewers, and he had acquainted them that he had known the place many years, and had given an account of the boundary, etc., this would have been improper, because it is giving evidence before the trial."

It follows that the same practice is proper in criminal cases,[5] because the constitutional provision requiring confrontation of witnesses is nothing more than the common-law rule requiring an opportunity of cross-examination (ante, § 1398). It is, moreover, immaterial that the shower is a party or one who will be an ordinary witness; indeed his familiarity with the place is assumed to be a special qualification;[6] it is only the pointing out by an unauthorized witness that is improper (supra, par. 2).

(4) The obtaining by the jury of evidence of any other sort, out of court and without authority — either of the evidence furnished by an unauthorized view of premises[7] or of other objects in issue,[8] or of circumstantial evidence[9] — is also improper. The reason is partly that the procedure of jury trial is violated, partly that the juror thus becomes a witness having personal knowledge and should therefore (ante, § 1800) take the stand as a witness.

(5) Distinguish (a) the rules relating to the taking of documents into the jury-room; here it is assumed that the documents are relevant and have been admitted in evidence, and the question is whether their further perusal is to be allowed, — a question of the procedure of jury trial;[10] (b) the question whether it is a jury's duty not to repudiate the testimony given in court by allowing their knowledge obtained from a view to override it; this also is a question of the sworn duty of the jury, not of the law of Evidence;[11]

[5] 1887, People v. Bush, 71 Cal. 602, 606, 12 Pac. 781 (pointing out by the official shower, held proper); 1898, People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833 (same); 1894, Garcia v. State, 34 Fla. 311, 332, 16 So. 223 (testimony is not to be taken, even by order of Court, at a view; but some person, agreed upon or appointed, may be sent to point out the premises); 1903, State v. Mortensen, 26 Utah 310, 73 Pac. 562, 633 (shower pointing out the places mentioned in the evidence; the dissenting opinion exhibits a morbid regard for petty technicalities irrespective of justice).

[6] 1614, Gage v. Smith, Godb. 209 ("Although the place wasted be showed to the jury by the plaintiff's servants, yet if it be by the commandment of the sheriffe, it is as sufficient as if the same had been showed unto them by the sheriffe himself"); Accord: 1904, Wilson v. Harnette, 32 Colo. 172, 175 Pac. 395 (good opinion by Steele, J.).

Contra, semble: 1878, People v. Green, 53 Cal. 60 (the sending of witness to a view, to point out places, held improper); 1904, O'Berry v. State, 47 Fla. 75, 36 So. 440 (larceny of cattle; a view of the cattle was ordered and witnesses allowed to identify them on the view as the cattle referred to in their testimony; the Court on appeal doubted the propriety of this; but the doubt is ill-founded, for the witnesses acted virtually as showers, and their pointing out was indispensable to the efficiency of the view).

The following rulings belong here; 1847, Doe v. Murray, 3 Kerr N. Br. 335, 339 (the shower should not read writings to the jury); 1901, Colorado F. & I. Co. v. R. Co., 29 Colo. 90, 66 Pac. 902 (eminent domain; statute enforced as to placing a sworn bailiff in charge).

[7] Ante, § 1160.

[8] Ante, § 1163.

[9] 1896, People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 616, 44 Pac. 314 (two jurors had experimented with rifles, out of court and by themselves, to see how near powder-stains were produced; held improper); for analogous instances see ante, § 1160. But it was certainly a culpable scrupulosity which led the Court, in State v. Sanders, 68 Mo. 202, 206 (1878), to set aside a verdict for such experimentation by the jury (with shoe-tracks) where the defendant's counsel had himself in his address invited and urged the jury to do this and see for themselves, informing them that they had a right to do so.

[10] Post, § 1913.

[11] This is dealt with in some of the cases cited ante, § 1168.

(c) the question whether the jury may take into consideration the knowledge derived from a view; this involves the theory of Real Evidence; [12] (d) the reception of testimony by a jury of inquest for damages caused by taking under eminent domain; this involves the procedure of a special tribunal not within the present purview.

§ 1803. Defendant's Presence at a View in a Criminal Case. A view is allowable in criminal as well as in civil cases (ante, § 1163). But is it necessary, under the Hearsay rule and the constitutional provision sanctioning it for criminal cases (ante, § 1397), that the accused be present at the view?

This question has been answered by some Courts in the affirmative, chiefly on the theory that otherwise the accused is deprived of the right to be confronted by the witnesses against him:

1875, ENGLISH, C. J., in Benton v. State, 30 Ark. 329, 346: "[1] By the bill of rights the accused must be confronted with the witnesses against him; but the statute authorizing a view does not contemplate or permit the examination of witnesses at the view. . . . But, though no witnesses are examined at the view, yet the jurors, from their observation of the place and its surroundings, may receive a kind of evidence from mute things, which cannot be brought into court to confront the accused and are in their nature incapable of cross-examination. [2] But [furthermore] in prosecutions for felony the defendant must be present during the trial. . . . The view of the place where the crime is alleged to have been committed, by the jury, is part of the trial, and may be an important step in the trial; and the presence of the prisoner at the view, in a case involving life or liberty, that he may have an opportunity to observe the conduct of the jury and whatever occurs there, might be of the utmost consequence to him."

1893, WOODS, J., in Foster v. State, 70 Miss. 755, 765, 12 So. 822: "[1] Was it the right of the accused to be present when the jury visited and inspected the car? The answer to this inquiry will be found in ascertaining and determining what the purpose and object of this view was. . . . [The jury's visit] becomes proper in one of two views: the jury may be better able to understand and apply the evidence by examining the ground or scene of the offence, or the jury may receive from inanimate witnesses which otherwise it would not have. . . . The reported cases in which some Courts of last resort have held that the prisoner was not entitled to be present at a view of the premises on which the offence was alleged to have been committed, for the reason that in such inspection the jury is not taking or receiving evidence in the absence of the accused, but is during a suspension of the trial and while absent and separated from the court merely receiving impressions from silent inanimate objects that will enable it better to comprehend and apply the testimony in the case, are inconsistent and beg the question. They assume that the Court is composed of the judge, the clerk, the sheriff, and overlook the fact that the jury is the right arm of the law in the administration of law. They assert that the jury is not receiving evidence, because it is absent from the Court and cannot take testimony in the absence of the accused; overlooking the painful fact that illegal evidence may be taken and unlawful methods may be employed for its introduction. They declare that only impressions are received by jurors on such inspections which will enable them to understand and apply the testimony offered. But this concedes the proposition in dispute. Impressions are made on the mind of jurors by dumb witnesses. They do have evidence of inanimate things. They are receiving impressions, evidence, enlightenment, from voiceless things, call it by whatever name you will; and they are themselves being thus made silent witnesses for or against the accused. They return to the court-room with impressions formed by an examination of dumb inanimate witnesses; and if erroneous impressions and opinions have been made and formed, their hurt is beyond all cure; for the jurors may not speak out what may weigh on their minds, but are become themselves dumb passive witnesses. To say the jury cannot receive evidence by simply viewing the scene is to insult common sense. The most convincing evidence is made by the sense of sight. The juror on the view sees, and thinks he knows what he thus sees, with all the conclusions flowing therefrom. He sees, or may see, more than a mere railway car or a naked room or a piece of senseless earth; and no matter what he sees, or falsely sees, he cannot speak and have his mistaken conclusions corrected or removed. . . . The constitutional right guaranteed to every person charged with crime to be confronted by the witnesses against him will require the production of all evidence from all witnesses, animate and inanimate, in his presence. [2] But not alone must all evidence be had in the presence of the accused, but it must likewise be had and taken in the presence of the Court trying the case. . . . A trial conducted in part away from the place appointed for the holding of the Court, in the absence of the judge and of the accused, is not that trial to which every man accused is constitutionally entitled."

[12] Treated ante, § 1168.

These arguments are specious, but unsound: (1) As to the argument that the jury are receiving evidence, it is in substance sound; to view the thing itself in issue — i. e. the premises — is undoubtedly to consult a source of proof (ante, § 1168). But it by no means follows that the right of cross-examination is infringed. That rule applies solely to testimonial evidence only (ante, §§ 1362, 1395), and no testimony is taken at a view. The premises themselves are not witnesses; to term them "dumb witnesses" (as in the passage above quoted) is merely to misuse words. The function of Cross-Examination, as a requirement for testimonial evidence, is to ascertain in detail the elements of weakness that detract from the trustworthiness of a person's statement. Where human credit is not involved, cross-examination has no place. The constitutional sanction of that principle applies solely to testimonial evidence, to "witnesses"; no one supposes that it applies to circumstantial evidence; and no one should suppose that it applies to that third source of proof, namely, autoptic proference, real evidence, or the tribunal's observation of the thing itself (ante, § 1150). How could the place viewed be cross-examined? What human credit does it have, that makes cross-examination necessary? The Hearsay rule simply has no application to that source of proof. (2) As to the argument that the jury's view is a part of the trial and that the accused is entitled to be present at every part of the trial, the answer is that the accused might equally well claim to be present at the jury's deliberations over their verdict, for that is equally a part of the trial; if there is no inherent and invariable necessity for that part, neither is there for this. As for the related suggestion that the holding of a view in the absence of the defendant is the holding of a part of the trial "away from the place appointed for the holding of the court," it would follow from this that the judge and other court officers should be present also; but no one has ever supposed this necessary. It would be, on the contrary, much easier to question the propriety of the Court's adjourning and travelling in a body to the place of a view, for such a proceeding would be more open to the criticism that it took the trial "away from the place appointed for the holding of the Court." It is impossible to argue in the same moment both that the Court must be held at the place appointed and that it must be held in part somewhere else. (3) As to the suggestion, based on mere general considerations of fairness and policy, that the defendant's presence is necessary because "the jurors may receive erroneous impressions" which "cannot be corrected or removed" and therefore the defendant should have "an opportunity to observe the conduct of the jury and whatever occurs there," there are two answers. First, the defendant, though present, could not lawfully ask questions or make statements;[1] so that the sole value of his presence would lie in the opportunity to see that nothing irregular was done and to obtain such a knowledge of what was done as would assist him in the subsequent conduct of the trial. Secondly, this very opportunity he already fully possesses; for he is represented at the view by a shower, selected by himself and formally approved by the Court; this shower points out such parts as the accused has directed, and does so with reference to the forthcoming testimony for that party; and this shower is in a position not only to observe all that is done but to make all of his observations useful later to his party as may be needed. Every practical advantage to be gained from the accused's presence is already his, by virtue of the ordinary proceedings at a view; and if, in any Court's practice to-day, the defendant is not allowed to have one shower appointed as his representative, then the unfairness and disadvantage in such a Court arises from the improper procedure observed in the view, and not from inherent defects in the orthodox method of view. There is therefore no ground, either upon legal principle or upon practical fairness, for holding the presence of the accused himself to be essential. (4) There remains only, as a reason for allowing it, the natural desire which any accused person might have to attend the proceeding. Ordinarily, no judge (it must be supposed) could wish to disappoint such a desire, if duly expressed to him; but conceivably he might refuse to satisfy it for prudence' sake; perhaps because of the danger of escape or of mob violence. Certainly no legal rule granting the right of attendance can be founded on such a consideration.

In some jurisdictions, it is properly maintained that the defendant is not entitled to be present at the view; but the opposite rule has been accepted in other jurisdictions.[2]

§ 1803. [1] As pointed out by Baldwin, J., in People v. Bonney, cited infra.

[2] The cases on both sides are as follows:

CANADA: 1890, R. v. Petrie, 20 Ont. 317, 323 (view by the magistrate, sitting without a jury, in the absence of the accused or his representative, held improper).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1900, Chicago v. Baker, 39 C. C. A. 318, 98 Fed. 830 (refusal to permit party's presence, proper in trial Court's discretion); 1917, Valdez v. U. S., 244 U. S. 432, 37 Sup. 725 (murder; not clear whether the opinion holds that the defendant is entitled to attend the view; here, his counsel attending but the defendant refraining, held that the right at any rate was waivable; Clarke, J., diss. in an opinion which he protests is "not idiosyncratic," though the protestation availeth nought); Arkansas: 1875, Benton v. State, 30 Ark. 328, 345 (defendant must be present; quoted supra); 1921, Shinn v. State, — Ark. — 234 S. W.

636 (murder; the jury were allowed at defendant's request to go to the spot and fire the gun at a target, as testified to, the Court order directing that the defendant be present; held now to be no error, the defendant having requested the experiment and having voluntarily absented himself; Hart, J., diss.; it is incredible that such a point could be even seriously considered); Arizona: 1904, Elias v. Terr., 9 Ariz. 1, 76 Pac. 605 (view had on motion of defendant, without a claim of his desire to be present, held proper); California: 1861, People v. Bonney, 19 Cal. 426, 445 ("We do not see what good the presence of the prisoner would do, as he could neither ask nor answer questions, nor in any way interfere with the acts, observations, or conclusions of the jury"; defendant's presence not necessary); 1886, People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 623, 630, 10 Pac. 169 (view without defendant's presence and against his consent, held improper; "it is often most important for the defendant and his counsel to be able to perceive exactly what impression is being made upon the jury by any portion of the evidence given in on his trial"; Myrick and McKee, JJ., diss.); 1903, People v. Mathews (Edwards), 139 Cal. 527, 73 Pac. 416 (defendant's voluntary absence is a waiver); Columbia (Dist.): 1899, Price v. U. S., 14 D. C. App. 391, 405 (not decided; but doubting); Florida: 1916, Haynes v. State, 71 Fla. 585, 72 So. 180 (defendant asked for the view and then stayed away, held not error); 1917, Kersey v. State, 73 Fla. 832, 74 So. 983 (defendant's absence for part of the time, not error); Idaho: 1894, State v. Reed, 3 Ida. 754, 35 Pac. 706 ("No such right as is contended for by defendant is guarantied by the constitution of Idaho"; though it is "advisable" to permit his presence on request; here it did not appear that he had made a request); 1885, Shular v. State, 105 Ind. 289, 293, 4 N. E. 870 (defendant need not be present at a view, because it is not the "taking of evidence"; a statute allowing views by consent of parties is constitutional); Kansas: 1878, State v. Adams, 29 Kan. 311, 323 (view without defendant's presence, defendant making no request to attend; not improper under either statute or constitution); 1880, Rutherford v. Com., 78 Ky. 639, 640 (defendant must be present; "the simple act of pointing out to the jury the place . . . is the giving of evidence in the absence of the accused"); Kentucky: C. Cr. P. 1900, § 236 (prisoner and both counsel are to accompany jury to view); Louisiana: 1872, State v. Bertin, 24 La. An. 46 (view at which a State witness was allowed to explain a diagram and the defendant not allowed to be present; held improper, since the defendant did not enjoy the right of confronting his witnesses); Maine: 1919, State v. Slorah, 118 Me. 203, 106 Atl. 768 (murder; ambiguous opinion; "we further hold that at a view there is no such confrontation of witnesses as requires the presence of the accused," "whatever his rights are, to attend if he demands it, and we think it should not be denied him in capital cases, he may in all cases waive them"; what authority has this opinion for confining the constitutional clause to "capital cases"; the opinion also takes the erroneous view of the principle of § 1168, ante); Michigan: 1891, People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449, 465, 48 N. W. 869 (defendant's absence, held not fatal); Minnesota: 1920, State v. Rogers, 145 Minn. 303, 177 N. W. 358 (keeping a house of ill-fame, attorneys for both sides having been assigned to attend the view, the defendant was held not entitled as of right to attend); Mississippi: 1893, Foster v. State, 70 Miss. 755, 765, 12 So. 822 (defendant is entitled in a criminal case to be present at a view; see quotation supra); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11996 (defendant is to be present); 1903, State v. Landry, 29 Mont. 218, 74 Pac. 418 (view at defendant's request; "the defendant must be present"); Nebraska: 1876, Carroll v. State, 5 Nebr. 31, 35 (defendant should be present, "unless he decline the privilege"); Nevada: 1895, State v. Hartley, 22 Nev. 358, 40 Pac. 375 (the right if any, "is statutory, and not constitutional, and may be waived"); New York: 1898, People v. Thorn, 156 N. Y. 286, 50 N. E. 947 (view is not the taking of evidence in the sense that the accused must be present or cannot waive attendance; compare People v. Gallo, cited supra, § 1802, which rests on another principle); Ohio: 1890, Blythe v. State, 47 Oh. St. 234, 24 N. E. 268 (defendant's voluntary refusal to attend, held a waiver); Oklahoma: 1898, Hays v. Terr., 7 Okl. 15, 54 Pac. 300 (defendant should accompany, on general principles, but by C. Cr. P. § 5222, Comp. St. 1921, § 2714, he is forbidden); 1911, Starr v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 440, 115 Pac. 356 (defendant's request for a view is a waiver of the right to be present; whether he has such a right in other cases, not decided, but "the safe practice is to permit it"; the right may be waived); Oregon: 1880, State v. Ah Lee, 8 Or. 214, 217 ("The failure of the accused to be present" is no ground of error; here he failed to ask it); 1887, State v. Moran, 15 Or. 262, 276, 14 Pac. 419 (same; here the defendant consented to the view); 1889, State v. Chee Gong, 17 Or. 635, 636, 21 Pac. 882 (defendant has no right to be present); Pennsylvania: 1893, Com. v. Salyards, 158 Pa. 501, 507, 27 Atl. 993 (defendant's presence not necessary); 1898, Com. v. Van Horn, 188 Pa. 143, 41 Atl. 469 (same); Utah: 1903, State v. Mortensen, 26 Utah 312, 73 Pac. 562 (defendant need not be present; on the theory that a view does not involve the taking of testimony; careful opinion by Bartch, J.); 1903, State v. Mortensen, 27 Utah 16, 74 Pac. 120, 350 (supplementary opinions on motion for new trial); Washington: 1893, State v. Lee Doon, 7 Wash. 308, 34 Pac. 1103, semble (it is not a "constitutional right" to be present; here there was no request); West

2. Judge

§ 1805. Judge having Personal Knowledge must take the Stand. It is equally clear for the case of the judge, as for that of the juryman (ante, § 1800), and upon the same principle, that the judge may not lawfully contribute any information for the jury's consideration unless he take the stand as a witness;[1] otherwise the opportunity of cross-examination is lost and the Hearsay rule is violated. This seems not to be questioned.

The chief doubt that arises for this case of personal knowledge by the judge involves usually other principles. On distinct grounds of policy noticed under another head (post, § 1909), it is generally held in modern times that a trial judge cannot properly become a witness without abandoning the bench for the remainder of the trial. Consequently, his testimony would ordinarily not be available for the jury, — not from his lips on the bench, because of the present rule, and not from the witness-stand, because of the other rule just mentioned.

It would remain, then, to ask whether he can as judge make use of it to direct an acquittal or in any other way. This involves the doctrine of judicial notice (post, § 2565).

3. Counsel

§ 1806. Improper Statements of Fact in Argument to the Jury; in General. A counsel's argument is in its purpose a connected presentation of the facts supposed to have been proved by the evidence tending in favor of his client. He re-states the evidence, and he reasons from the evidence. He is not a witness. He may have testified as a witness; but in his argument he has solely the functions and rights of counsel. Any representation of fact, therefore, which is made by him in the argument, must not be an assertion made upon his own credit; it must be based solely upon those matters of fact of which evidence has already been introduced or of which no evidence need ever be introduced because of their notoriety as judicially noticed facts. To bring forward in argument an assertion of fact not of these two sorts is to become a witness; and to be a witness without being subjected to cross-examination is to violate the fundamental principle of the Hearsay rule.

This much is, then, never doubted. The difficulty arises in applying the Virginia: Code 1914, c. 116, § 30 (in a "felony case," accused "shall be taken with the jury"); 1918, State v. McCausland, 82 W. Va. 525, 96 S. E. 938 (murder; the accused's premature departure from the view, held not a waiver; unsound; this is the kind of decision that coddles crime);[3] Wisconsin: 1887, Sasse v. State, 68 Wis. 530, 536, 538, 32 N. W. 849 (defendant absent, but his counsel present; held "questionable," unless he expressly waived).

§ 1805. [1] 1680, Anderson's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 811, 874 (Recorder: "It is not the business nor the duty of the Court to give any evidence of any fact that they know of their own knowledge, unless they will be sworn for the purpose; for, though they do know it in their own private consciences to be true, yet they are obliged to conceal their own knowledge, unless they will be sworn as witnesses"); 1876, Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal, L. R. 3 Ind. App. 259, 286 ("It ought to be known . . . that a judge cannot, without giving evidence as a witness, import into a case his own knowledge of particular facts").

principle to various kinds of assertions. Before attempting to distinguish these, it is desirable to notice, in some of the most approved passages, the reason for the rule as enunciated by various judges and their different phrasings of the general principle, so difficult and elusive in its concrete application:

1851, LUMPKIN, J., in Berry v. State, 10 Ga. 511 (commenting on an assertion that the defendant's negro slave had confessed to his master's guilt): "That the practice complained of is highly reprehensible, no one can doubt. It ought in every instance to be promptly repressed. For counsel to undertake by a side wind to get that in as proof which is merely conjecture, and thus to work a prejudice in the mind of the jury cannot be tolerated.[1] . . . I would be the last man living to seek to abridge freedom of speech; and no one witnesses with more unfeigned pride and pleasure than myself the effusions of forensic eloquence daily exhibited in our courts of justice. For the display of intellectual power our bar's speeches are equalled by few, surpassed by none. Why, then, resort to such a subterfuge? Does not history, ancient and modern, nature, art, science, and philosophy, the moral, political, financial, commercial, and legal, — all open to counsel their rich and inexhaustible themes for illustration? Here, under the fullest inspiration of excited genius, they may give vent to their glowing conceptions, in thoughts that breathe and words that burn. Nay more, giving reins to their imagination, they may permit the spirit of their heated enthusiasm to swing and sweep beyond the flaming bounds of space and time — 'extra flammantia mœnia mundi.' But let nothing tempt them to pervert the testimony, or surreptitiously array before the jury facts which, whether true or not, have not been proven."

1852, NISBET, J., in Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615, 630: "It is contrary to law for counsel to comment upon facts not proven. He represents his client; he is the substitute of his client; whatever the client may do in the conduct of his cause, therefore, his counsel may do. In relation to the liberty of speech, the largest and most liberal freedom is allowed, and the law protects him in it. The right of discussing the merits of his cause, both as to the law and the facts, is indispensable to every party; the same right appertains to his counsel. The range of discussion is wide, very wide. . . . His illustrations may be as various as are the resources of his genius, his argumentation as full and profound as his learning can make it; and he may, if he will, give play to his wit or wing to his imagination. To his freedom of speech, however, there are some limitations. . . . When counsel are permitted to state [unevidenced] facts in argument and to comment upon them, the usage of courts in regulating trials is departed from, the laws of evidence are violated, and the full benefit of trial by jury is therefore denied. It may be said, in answer to these views, that the statements of counsel are not evidence, that the Court is bound so to instruct the jury, and that they are sworn to render a verdict only according to the evidence. Whilst all this is true, yet the effect is to bring the statements of counsel to bear upon the verdict with more or less force according to circumstances. . . . It is not reasonable to believe that the jury will disregard them. They may struggle to disregard them, they may think that they do disregard them, and still be led involuntarily to shape their verdict under their influence. That influence will be greater or less according to the character of counsel, his skill and adroitness in argument, and the naturalness with which the statements stand connected with other facts and circumstances in the case. To an extent not definable, yet to a dangerous extent, they are evidence, not given under oath, without cross-examination, and irrespective of all those precautionary rules by which competency is tested."

§ 1806. [1] In the passage omitted here, the opinion points out that the judge must interfere, and cannot expect the opposing counsel to do so; because the latter's objection is likely enough to be met by the offending counsel with the sarcastic turn, "Yes, gentlemen, I have touched a tender spot, the galled jade will wince." It is a little odd that just forty years later, in California, in People v. Ah Len, cited infra, the interrupted counsel did use precisely this proverb in retort. That it was a mere coincidence is an explanation not more interesting than the only other possible explanation, namely, that the counsel, in planning his trick, had read Judge Lumpkin's opinion beforehand and had there received the hint.

1877, VIRGIN, J., in Rolfe v. Rumford, 66 Me. 564, 566: "[The rules of evidence require,] among other things, that the facts shall be material and pertinent to the issue, and that, when not contained in documents, they shall be delivered under the sanctions of an oath and their truthfulness tested by cross-examination. Even a juror's own personal knowledge of pertinent facts cannot be considered by himself and his fellows in making up their verdict, unless it take on the form of testimony by being delivered from the stand by the juror under oath as a witness; otherwise testimony which might influence a verdict would escape the ordeal of cross-examination and discussion. . . . Statements [by counsel] of alleged facts not adduced in evidence, and comments thereon, are irrelevant, not pertinent, and are therefore clearly not within the privilege of counsel."

1878, RYAN, C. J., in Brown v. Swineford, 44 Wis. 283, 291 (commenting on counsel's allusion to the defendant's ability as an officer of a railroad company to pay liberally for the assault in issue): "Enough appears to show not only that the learned counsel commented on facts not in evidence, but in effect testified to the facts himself. It was in effect telling the jury that the appellant's position with the corporation gave him the ability to pay large damages. . . . Amongst other evidence of the appellant's ability to pay, it might undoubtedly have been shown that he received large emoluments from his position in the railroad company, and possibly that the railroad company had assumed the appellant's tort and the payment of the judgment. And it was not the duty or the right of counsel, was not within the proper scope of professional discussion, to assume the facts as proven or state them to the jury as existing, founding his argument 'pro tanto' upon them. . . . Doubtless the Circuit Court can, as it did in this case, charge the jury to disregard all statements of facts not in evidence. But it is not so certain that a jury will do so. Verdicts are too often found against evidence and without evidence, to warrant so great a reliance on the discrimination of juries; and, without notes of the evidence, it may often be difficult for juries to discriminate between the statements of fact by counsel following the evidence and outside of it. . . . Forensic strife is but a method, and a mighty one, to ascertain the truth and the law governing the truth. It is the duty of counsel to make the most of the case which his client is able to give him; but counsel is out of his duty and his right, and outside the principle and object of his profession when he travels out of his client's case and assumes to supply its deficiencies. . . . The very fullest freedom of speech within the duty of his profession should be accorded to counsel; but it is license, not freedom of speech, to travel out of the record, basing his argument on facts not appearing, and appealing to prejudices irrelevant to the case and outside of the proof. It may sometimes be a very difficult and delicate duty to confine counsel to a legitimate course of argument; but, like other difficult and delicate duties, it must be performed by those upon whom the law imposes it. . . . For all that appears in this case, the appellant may be as poor as Job in his downfall. His wealth, if he had it, was legitimate subject of evidence, not legitimate subject of argument without evidence."

1881, STONE, J., in Cross v. State, 68 Ala. 476, 482: "Every fact the testimony tends to prove, every inference counsel may think arises out of the testimony, the credibility of the witnesses as shown by their manner, the reasonableness of their story, their intelligence, means of knowledge, and many other considerations, are legitimate subjects of criticism and discussion. So the conduct of the accused, his conversation (if in evidence), demeanor may be made the predicate of inferences favorable or unfavorable. Analogies and illustrations may also be drawn, based on the testimony, on public history, on science, or anything else, provided it does not invade the prohibited domain hereafter considered. The presiding judge, as a rule, will best determine when discussion is legitimate and when it degenerates into abuse and undue license. . . . [What is improper is an assertion of facts not already in evidence.] The statement must be made as of fact; the fact stated must be unsupported by any evidence; must be pertinent to the issue, or its natural tendency must be to influence the finding of the jury; or the case is not brought within the influence of this rule. . . . We would not embarrass free discussion, or regard the many hasty or exaggerated statements counsel often make in the heat of debate, which cannot and are not expected to become factors in the formation of the verdict. Such statements are usually valued at their true worth, and have no tendency to mislead. It is only when the statement is of a substantive, outside fact, stated as a fact, and which manifestly bears on a material inquiry before the jury, that the Court can interfere and arrest discussion."

1886, ARNOLD, J., in Martin v. State, 63 Miss. 505, 508: "Being counsel and witness in the same cause is not prohibited by law, if counsel chooses to testify; but such a union of offices is permissible and tolerable only where counsel is sworn and examined like other witnesses."

1893, MCGRATH, J., in Rutter v. Collins, 96 Mich. 510, 514, 56 N. W. 93: "The jury must get the evidence from the lips of sworn witnesses, and not from the unsworn statements of lawyers in the argument of the case."

§ 1807. Same: Application of the Principle to Various Kinds of Assertions. (1) For one class of matters of assertion, the application of the principle is comparatively simple; namely, counsel must not make assertions as to facts of which evidence must have been introduced but has not been or will not be introduced. This class includes the great mass of relevant facts; though its boundaries are best defined in considering the next class. The following celebrated passage-at-arms illustrates the procedure:

1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Abbott's Rep. II, 902; criminal conversation; at an early stage of the controversy, before litigation, Mr. Benjamin F. Tracy had been called into consultation, as a friend, between the parties; in the plaintiff's case on the trial, some testimony had reflected on Mr. Tracy's share in the negotiations; and in his opening address for the defendant, Mr. Tracy at a certain point in his speech said: "My name has been dragged into this trial by the plaintiff and his counsel and his main witness, in a manner that leads me to make you a personal statement of my relations to this scandal;" and was proceeding to do so, when the following colloquy ensued: Mr. Beach: "Mr. Tracy, do you propose to be a witness to what you are about to state?" Mr. Tracy: "If necessary I do, sir." Mr. Beach: "I submit to your Honor, that the gentleman has no right to make a long written personal statement in his opening to the jury, which he does not propose to verify as a witness. It is not the office of an opening." Judge NEILSON: "I presume that the counsel proposes to prove what he states in his opening. . . . At the same time he would be at liberty to prove it otherwise." Mr. Porter: "We propose to prove it, sir, as we choose, and by what evidence we will. The counsel cannot call upon us to specify the particular witness by which we propose to prove it; nor can he interrogate the counsel who is engaged in the opening of this case as to whether he is the party by whom the proof is to be made. That will depend upon subsequent developments in the case." Mr. Beach: "My point, sir, cannot be evaded or changed. I have made no objection to the counsel stating any fact which they propose to prove in this case, whether that fact, when proved, will go to his exculpation from the grave imputation which has been cast upon him in the course of this trial or not; if it is announced as a fact that he expects to prove upon the trial, I have no more to say. . . . What I do say is, sir, that when this gentleman, thus situated in this case, departs from the ordinary course of an opening and commences a part of his address with the preface that he will now make a personal explanation to this jury, that it is not in sense or in purpose a statement of facts which he expects to prove; it is the assumption of a right separate from the character of counsel to make a personal explanation and appeal to the jury, which, I submit to your Honor, is improper. That is all I object to, sir; and if this counsel, or any other counsel, will avow that Mr. Tracy or this defence intends to prove the facts or the circumstances which he now proposes to state, of course my voice is silenced, sir." Judge NEILSON: "If it is a personal explanation, not to be followed up by proof — perhaps not in its nature susceptible of proof — then it should be omitted. I think we agree about that; the rule is very clear. . . ." Mr. Porter: "I evidently misunderstood my friend, from his last explanation. I unhesitatingly avow that the facts which Gen. Tracy proposes to present are facts which we do propose to prove." Mr. Tracy: "I shall endeavor, gentlemen, to state no fact in what I am about to say which will not be made plain to you by evidence which we shall introduce, or which will not be made sufficiently plain to you without further evidence, by the comments I may make upon the facts already in evidence."

Upon any matter, then, which ought to be evidenced in order to be properly considered at all by the jury, no honorable counsel will knowingly make an assertion in his argument, unless evidence about it has already been introduced or is pledged for future introduction.[1]

§ 1807. [1] In the following list will be found instances of the application of the principle. Most of the rulings depend so much upon the issues and the detailed evidence in each case that they are useless as precedents:

ENGLAND: 1683, Mr. Williams' Instructions to his Client, Sidney's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 817, 826 ("Watch the king's counsel in summing or argueing the evidence against you, that they do not offer anything that was not proved, and stop them if they do"); 1835, Stevens v. Webb, 7 C. & P. 60; 1837, Duncombe v. Daniell, 8 C. & P. 222, 227; 1837, R. v. Beard, 8 C. & P. 142.

UNITED STATES: Uniform Acts: Canons of Professional Ethics, American Bar Association, 1908, No. 22 ("It is not candid or fair for the lawyer . . in argument to assert as a fact that which has not been proved"); Federal: 1860, Wightman v. Providence, 1 Cliff. 524, 531; 1905, Union Pacific R. Co. v. Field, 137 Fed. 14, 69 C. C. A. 536 (here the rule is pushed to a ludicrous extreme of technicality); 1915, Latham v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 226 Fed. 420 (an over-rigorous enforcement of the rule);
Alabama: 1878, McAdory v. State, 62 Ala. 154, 157, 162; 1880, Sullivan v. State, 66 Ala. 51; 1883, Wolffe v. Minnis, 74 Ala. 386, 389; 1897, Dunmore v. State, 115 Ala. 69, 22 So. 541; 1903, Dennis v. State, 139 Ala. 109, 35 So. 651;
Arkansas: 1910, Gaston v. State, 95 Ark. 233, 128 S. W. 1033; 1920, Brown v. State, 143 Ark. 523, 222 S. W. 377 (witness' character);
California: 1889, People v. Bowers, 79 Cal. 415, 21 Pac. 752, 1891; People v. Ah Len, 92 Cal. 282, 28 Pac. 286; 1899, People v. Valliere, 127 Cal. 65, 59 Pac. 295;
Colorado: 1884, Denver S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Moynahan, 8 Colo. 56, 59, 5 Pac. 81;
Florida: 1884, Newton v. State, 21 Fla. 53, 94;
Georgia: 1858, Dickerson v. Burke, 25 Ga. 225, 227; 1878, Forsyth v. Cothran, 61 Ga. 278; 1890, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 297, 317, 11 S. E. 706; 1897, Bell v. State, 100 Ga. 78, 27 S. E. 669; 1902, Western & A. R. Co. v. Cox, 115 Ga. 715, 42 S. E. 74; 1912, Pelham & H. R. Co. v. Elliott, 11 Ga. App. 621, 75 S. E. 1062 (quoting and emphasizing the opinion of Nisbet, J., in Mitchum v. State, quoted supra, § 1806);
Illinois: 1868, Yoe v. People, 49 Ill. 410, 412; 1910, People v. McMahon, 224 Ill. 45, 91 N. E. 104 (explanation of the lack of certain testimony); 1913, Appel v. Chicago City R. Co., 259 Ill. 561, 102 N. E. 1021;
Indiana: 1871, Cluck v. State, 40 Ind. 263, 271 (assertions about the defendant's good character); 1888, Nelson v. Welch, 115 Ind. 270, 272, 16 N. E. 634, 17 N. E. 569; 1888, Troyer v. State, 115 Ind. 331, 17 N. E. 569; 1890, Schlotter v. State, 127 Ind. 493, 496, 27 N. E. 149; 1905, Smith v. State, 165 Ind. 180, 74 N. E. 983;
Iowa: 1867, Martin v. Orndorff, 22 Ia. 504, 505; 1913, State v. Wilson, 157 Ia. 698, 141 N. W. 337, 347; 1916, State v. Pierce, 178 Ia. 417, 159 N. W. 1050;
Kentucky: 1896, Davis v. Brown, 98 Ky. 475, 32 S. W. 614, 36 S. W. 534 (the reason why suit had been brought sooner); 1899, Rhodes v. Com., 107 Ky. 354, 54 S. W. 170; 1901, Strutton v. Com., — Ky. —, 62 S. W. 875; 1910, Turpin v. Com., 140 Ky. 294, 130 S. W. 1086 (counsel's statement that "one man on this jury has been fixed," held improper); 1920, Johnson v. Com., 188 Ky. 391, 222 S. W. 106 (murder; counsel argued that defendant was a "bootlegger");
Louisiana: 1901, State v. Thompson, 106 La. 362, 30 So. 895; 1920, State v. Guagliardo, 146 La. 949, 84 So. 216 (announcement of evidence, not made good); Michigan: 1885, Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234, 238, 23 N. W. 792; 1886, Donovan v.

Yet, since misunderstandings constantly arise as to the tenor and effect of evidence, and since in the strain and fervor of argument honest errors

Richmond, 61 Mich. 467, 470, 28 N. W. 516; 1887, Amperse v. Fleckenstein, 67 Mich. 247, 34 N. W. 564; 1888, Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112, 116, 37 N. W. 914; 1894, Rutter v. Collins, 103 Mich. 143, 149, 61 N. W. 267; 1897, Pringle v. Miller, 111 Mich. 663, 70 N. W. 345 (stating what he could have proved by a witness not called); 1898, Britton v. R. Co., 118 Mich. 491, 76 N. W. 1043; 1909, People v. Nichols, 159 Mich. 355, 124 N.W. 25;
Mississippi: 1877, Perkins v. Guy, 55 Miss. 153, 183; 1879, Cavanah v. State, 56 Miss. 299, 309;
Missouri: 1892, Evans v. Trenton, 112 Mo. 390, 20 S. W. 614; 1895, State v. Lingle, 128 Mo. 528, 31 S. W. 20; 1906, State v. Wigger, 196 Mo. 90, 93 S. W. 390; 1922, State v. Burns, — Mo. —, 237 S. W. 505 (larceny);
Nebraska: 1883, Cleveland Paper Co. v. Banks, 15 Nebr. 20, 22, 16 N. W. 833;
New Hampshire: 1860, Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 317, 322 (reproducing without quotation-marks the language of Nisbet, J., quoted supra); 1886, Bullard v. R. Co., 64 N. H. 27, 31, 5 Atl. 838 (in an opinion by Smith, J., the doctrine is well expounded and the opinion in Brown v. Swineford, Wis., is approved); 1899, Heald v. R. Co., 68 N. H. 49, 44 Atl. 77; 1899, Greenfield v. Kennett, 69 N. H. 419, 45 Atl. 233; 1900, Concord L. & W. P. Co. v. Clough, 70 N. H. 627, 47 Atl. 704 (assertion as to the reason for not producing evidence); 1900, Story v. R. Co., 70 N. H. 364, 48 Atl. 288; 1902, Walker v. R. Co., 71 N. H. 271, 51 Atl. 918; 1902, State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 54 Atl. 38; 1913, Kambour v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 77 N. H. 34, 86 Atl. 624; 1918, Knapp v. Stone, 79 N. H. 32, 103 Atl. 1005 ("The unsworn statement to the jury of a material fact as within the personal knowledge of counsel vitiates the verdict"); 1922, Tuttle v. Dodge, — N. H. —, 116 Atl. 627 (habit of automobile drivers);
New Jersey: 1902, Blackman v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 68 N. J. L. 1, 52 Atl. 370; 1918, State v. Terry, 91 N. J. L. 539, 103 Atl. 238 (where counsel makes statements unsupported by testimony, the opponent must take advantage by a motion to strike out);
New York: 1899, People v. Fielding, 158 N. Y. 542, 53 N. E. 497 (fraudulent claim against the city; that it cost $10,000 a year to live as the defendant did, etc., held improper; good opinions for the majority by Vann, J., and for the minority by Haight, J.; the dissent being only as to the materiality of the error);
North Carolina: 1847, State v. O'Neal, 7 Ired. 251, 252; 1858, State v. Whit, 5 Jones 224, 230; 1871, State v. Williams, 65 N. C. 505; Jenkins v. N. C. O. Dressing Co., 65 N. C. 563; 1876, State v. Smith, 75 N. C. 306; 1878, Coble v. Coble, 79 N. C. 589 (assertions as to the defendant's character, which had not been impeached, that "he was like the upas tree, shedding pestilence and corruption all around him," held improper); 1902, State v. Tuten, 131 N. C. 701, 42 S. E. 442; 1903, State v. Goode, 132 N. C. 982, 43 S. E. 502 (that witnesses had been summoned and were present); 1903, Hopkins v. Hopkins, 132 N. C. 25, 43 S. E. 506 (that witnesses had been bribed);
North Dakota: 1893, State v. McGahey, 3 N. D. 293, 306, 55 N. W. 753; 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052; Ohio: 1880, Union Central L. I. Co. v. Cheever, 36 Oh. St. 201, 208; 1900, Hayes v. Smith, 62 Oh. St. 161, 56 N. E. 879; 1907, Burns v. State, 75 Oh. 407, 79 N. E. 929;
Oklahoma: 1909, O'Barr v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 319, 105 Pac. 988; 1921, Jones v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 665 (statements in opening the case);
Pennsylvania: 1897, Mullen v. Ins. Co., 182 Pa. 150, 37 Atl. 988 (reading an affidavit of the opponent not offered in evidence);
South Carolina: 1886, State v. Robertson, 26 S.C. 117, 118, 1 S. E. 443 (discretion of trial court);
Texas: 1891, Missouri P. R. Co. v. White, 80 Tex. 202, 15 S. W. 808; 1904, Robbins v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 312, 83 S. W. 690; 1916, Marshall v. State, 78 Tex. Cr. 451, 182 I. W. 1106 (rehearsal in the closing argument of evidence excluded when offered; elaborate examination of the topic in separate opinions by Prendergast, P. J., and Harper, J.);
Vermont: 1897, Cutler v. Skeels, 69 Vt. 154, 37 Atl. 228; 1898, Re McCabe, 70 Vt. 155, 40 Atl. 52; 1914, Fadden v. McKinney, 87 Vt. 316, 89 Atl. 351;
Washington: 1896, State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889;
Wisconsin: 1901, McCarthy v. Whitcomb, 110 Wis. 113, 85 N. W. 707.

One or two situations only need to be specially noted as not infringing the rule. Where the testimony of an absent witness has been admitted by affidavit to prevent a continuance (post, § 2596), it is of course in evidence and may be referred to. Where the existence of a material document or witness has appeared in the course of the testimony and yet the opponent has not produced the witness or document, the failure to produce is in evidence from the very nature of the situation, and therefore, when relevant (ante, §§ 285–291, post, § 2272), may be referred to. When other pleadings are used as admissions, they must be formally offered, like other evidence, if counsel desire to comment on them in argument (ante, §§ 1064, 1067). Scientific treatises are usually held inadmissible, but a few courts anomalously allow them to be read in argument (ante, § 1700).

As to the opening statement by counsel, see further post, § 1808, n. 1.

of memory may easily occur, improper assertions may come to be made unwittingly. For such contingencies, on the one hand, judicial charity should be shown in excusing the counsel from the guilt of knowing misconduct; and due judicial caution should be exercised in interrupting an argument where the supposed error might be the result of no more than a mere difference of honest opinion between judge and counsel; because the opposing counsel may be trusted to set forth the opposite contention when the time comes for his own argument. But, on the other hand, such charity and caution should not induce the judge to refrain from correcting, as soon as made, a clear and unmistakable error of the present sort, or from duly rebuking it if made palpably with knowledge of its lack of foundation. The occasions for interfering may best be left, as all agree, to the discretion of the trial judge. Moreover (as Mr. J. Lumpkin has pointed out), in a clear case of this sort, the judge is bound himself to interfere; for to leave the burden upon the opposing counsel not only exposes his action to misconstruction, but also tends to unseemly and distracting altercations between counsel.

(2) Where the matter is one of which no evidence need ever be introduced because of its notoriety as a subject open to judicial notice (post, § 2572), there is obviously no impropriety in a reference to it in argument. The matter is assumed to be known to Court and jury, and hence the assertion of it is not the giving of testimonial evidence but only a reference to that which is already known without testimony.

The difficulty lies in discriminating between this and the preceding class of assertions. General and accepted data of morality, history, and natural science may thus be assumed and referred to. But a general truth is sometimes best illustrated and enforced by a concrete instance; and thus the allowable resort to concrete facts for this purpose tends to degenerate into the improper assertion of specific facts which are put forward as indirectly bearing on the case and therefore ought to have been evidenced before being referred to. For example, a reference to celebrated cases of erroneous conviction for murder, where the supposed murdered person has afterwards appeared in life, may properly be made to illustrate the general truth of the possibility of convicting an innocent person where the body of the deceased has not been found; yet a reference to the recent conviction of one of a band of ruffians with whom the defendant has associated, intended to inspire the jury to reach the same result in the present instance, would in effect be urging them to consider the defendant's prior misconduct and bad character, and therefore would be improper unless there had been evidence on this point, which presumably there could not have been. Again, the counsel might refer to the fictitious case of Robinson Crusoe's discovery of the footprint, to illustrate the general truth that circumstantial evidence may produce absolute persuasion in the mind; but a reference to the discovery, near the scene of a homicide charged, of a hat bearing the defendant's initials, no evidence of this having been offered, would be obviously improper.

It seems difficult to frame a definition which will accurately draw the line of distinction for such cases. One suggestion, however, may be useful; namely, that a test may often be made by asking if it is immaterial for the case in hand whether the specific fact asserted be true or not; if its truth is thus immaterial, then its force will lie merely in symbolizing or illustrating a general truth, and its employment will be proper.[2] Courts have tried in various phrasings to express the necessary distinction, though not with the clearest success.[3] In the following passages are useful attempts at its exposition:

[2] Or, to reach the result in another way, place the word "suppose" before the assertion of the fact stated, and notice whether it equally serves the purpose. For example, counsel asserts, in arguing about the convincing force of circumstantial evidence, that when Robinson Crusoe saw the footprint on the sand he was justly sure that some one else had been there. Alter this by merely prefixing a word, and let it read: "Suppose a man on a desert island found a human footprint, not his own, on the sand; he would be justified in believing that another human being had been there." Here it is seen that the force of the fact as merely an illustration is in no way diminished by making the assertion hypothetical.

[3] The rulings of the various Courts are often too dependent upon the particular facts to serve as precedents; and no generally accepted canon of definition seems to be discernible in them:

ENGLAND: 1846, Smith v. Earl Ferrers, Cherer's Rep. 300 (breach of marriage-promise; the plaintiff relied on a long series of letters clearly professing the promise; the defendant claimed that the letters were forged by the plaintiff herself; in arguing for this hypothesis — which the evidence fully substantiated — the defendant's counsel, Sir F. Thesiger, cited the notorious cases of Elizabeth Canning and Maria Glenn to illustrate the possibility of a woman plausibly maintaining a serious charge by persisting in a story purely the fabric of her own imagination).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1881, Cross v. State, 68 Ala. 476, 482 (sanctioning a statement that juries are frequently too apt to be merciful but disapproving a statement of a recent case in the neighborhood in which the defendant had as here shown sympathy for the victim, but had after conviction confessed his guilt); 1888, Childress v. State, 86 Ala. 77, 87, 5 So. 778; Connecticut: 1899, Cunningham v. R. Co., 72 Conn. 244, 43 Atl. 1047 (reading reports of similar cases, forbidden); 1902, State v. Gannon, 75 Conn. 206, 52 Atl. 727; Florida: 1884, Newton v. State, 21 Fla. 53, 91; Illinois: 1888, McDonald v. People, 126 Ill. 150, 155, 18 N. E. 817 ("They say there is a fabled tree, which grows in some torrid clime; that the birds of the air which fly near its branches, influenced by the aroma of it, fall beneath it and die. That is the influence of M. C. McDonald in this and all matters connected with the administration of justice," the person named not being concerned in the case; this passage was held improper; compare Coble v. Coble, N. C., cited supra, note 1); Georgia: 1914, Frank v. State, 141 Ga. 243, 80 S. E. 1016 (a curious case, in which the question arose over the citation in argument of the Durrant and the Oscar Wilde cases); Indiana: 1874, Ferguson v. State, 49 Ind. 33 (references to the formation of local vigilance committees, etc., held improper); Iowa: 1900, Mackrall v. R. Co., 111 Ia. 547, 82 N. W. 975 (assertion that railroad employers discharged employees who did not testify as desired, held improper); Kansas: 1893, State v. O'Neil, 51 Kan. 651, 657, 674, 33 Pac. 287 ("newspaper items," "to be used as argument in exhibiting processes of reasoning," not admitted on the facts); Massachusetts: 1913, In re Boston Elevated R. Co., — Mass. —, 101 N. E. 365 (counsel allowed to argue as to possible explanations of a conviction of crime used to discredit a witness); Mississippi: 1900, Oden v. State, — Miss. —, 27 So. 992 (reference to other prosecutions); Missouri: 1895, State v. Lingle, 128 Mo. 528, 31 S. W. 20 ("a scientific fact, known and recognized by the consent of all nations and the experience of common life," "facts within the daily experience and cognizance of all men," may be referred to in argument); 1900, State v. Jones, 153 Mo. 457, 55 S. W. 80 (limits stated of resort to a book's authority for illustrative instances); New York: 1872, Fanny Hyde's Trial, N. Y., Hemstreet's Rep. 108 ff. (murder of George Watson; Mr. Samuel D. Morris, for the defence, stated the details of many cases of homicidal insanity to illustrate its subtle phases); 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Official Report, III, 932, 934, 944, 1017 (Mr. Beach, for the plaintiff, quoted from Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," to illustrate his argument as to the defendant's meaning of the interviews between the defendant and Mrs. Moulton; from Byron's "Giaour," and David's Psalms and the story of Uriah, to illustrate his argument as to the meaning of the remorseful letters of the defendant; from Burns' "Epistle to a Young Friend," to illustrate his

1881, ELLIOTT, J., in Combs v. State, 49 Ind. 215, 219: "One of the attorneys for the prosecution, in addressing the jury, said: 'Three or four men have been recently executed at Indianapolis, most of whom set up the plea of insanity;' and of this statement appellant earnestly and bitterly complains. We do not regard such a statement as of sufficient materiality to warrant a reversal. Courts ought not to reverse cases because counsel, in the heat of argument, sometimes make extravagant statements, or wander a little way outside of the record. If a matter of great materiality is brought into the record as a matter of extended comment, then there would be reason for setting aside the verdict. If every immaterial assertion or statement which creeps into an argument were to be held ground for reversal, Courts would be so much occupied in criticising the addresses of advocates as to have little time for anything else. Common fairness requires that Courts should ascribe to jurors ordinary intelligence, and not disregard their verdicts because counsel during the argument may have made some general statements not supported by evidence. . . . It is the duty of the judge who presides at the trial to restrict the argument upon the facts to such as are established by or inferable from the evidence; but, in doing this, it is not his duty to ab idge the freedom of debate by preventing counsel from enforcing his argument by illustration or example. It is not always easy to correctly draw the line between what is proper and what is improper. Matters of common, general public information may sometimes be properly referred to, and matters of known and settled history may often be commented upon with entire propriety; but matters of a local nature, or matters not of common and public notoriety, are not properly the subject of comment. To rigidly require counsel to confine themselves directly to the evidence would be a delicate task, both for the trial and the appellate Courts; and it is far better to commit something to the discretion of the trial Court than to attempt to lay down or enforce a gene[illegible] defining the precise limits of argument. If counsel make material statements o[illegible] the evidence which are likely to do the accused injury, it should be deemed a[illegible] discretion and a cause for reversal; but where the statement is a general one, and[illegible] character not likely to prejudice the cause of the accused in the minds of honest men of fair intelligence, the failure of the Court to check counsel should not be deemed such an abuse of discretion as to require a reversal."

1892, MCGOWAN, J., in State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 540, 15 S. E. 602: "It is plain that upon a trial there are certain general rules and regulations which should be observed; as, for instance, that in argument counsel should keep themselves within the record, and in commenting upon the testimony, which they have a right to do, they should scrupulously avoid anything like giving testimony themselves. But beyond such general rules, cases are so different and varying in character that each must depend somewhat upon its own circumstances; and in the conduct of the cause, some freedom in argument, as argument as to the moral effect of adultery in impairing the veracity; from Whittier's "Ichabod," to illustrate his argument as to the defendant's fall from greatness); ib. 844 (to answer the argument from the defendant's character and clerical standing, he cited a dozen instances of the licentious misdeeds of eminent divines); 1891, Williams v. B. E. R. Co., 126 N. Y. 96, 102, 26 N. E. 1048 (damage by an elevated road; the reading of a newspaper account of a poor boy killed by an electric wire, held improper; good opinion by Andrews, J.); Oregon: 1907, State v. Blodgett, 50 Or. 329, 92 Pac. 820 (allusions to other recent murders); South Carolina: 1910, State v. Duncan, 86 S. C. 370, 68 S. E. 684 (prevalence of homicide in the neighborhood); South Dakota: 1908, State v. Pirkey, 22 S. D. 550, 118 N. W. 1042; Tennessee: 1871, Saunders v. Baxter, 6 Heisk. 369, 377; 1879, Turner v. State, 4 Lea 206, 208; 1884, Northington v. State, 14 Lea 424, 428 (these three cases are good illustrations; in the last, it was held not improper to cite the supposed facts of Guiteau's case, since they were "only matters of current history, used by way of enforcing an argument").

For the use of dictionaries and literature as authorities, see ante, § 1699. For the use of other political utterances as evidence of a standard of conduct, see ante, § 465.

For instances of the legitimate use of published works of other authors, in the citation of passages illustrating by comparison the non-libellous nature of a defendant's utterance, see the speeches of Brougham, in his Works, vol. IX, p. 18 (trial of Hunt), p. 230 (trial of Williams).

in suggesting inferences, analogies, probabilities, illustrations, and so forth, must be allowed. As no rigid rule can be fixed in advance as to such matters, it would seem that they have been left largely to the sense of propriety and justice of an honorable profession, under the absolute direction and control of the trial judge."

Some notion of the proper limits of illustration and explanation by this mode of argument may be gathered from the models to be found in the addresses of counsel eminent in their place and generation; their methods may show us both what they were allowed to do and what they thought themselves professionally entitled to do; and in the following passages will be found a few such useful examples:

1875, Mr. Benjamin F. Tracy, for the defendant, in Tilton v. Beecher, Abbott's Rep. II, 945 (arguing for the defendant, the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, sued for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife): "Gentlemen, the charge of incontinence which is brought against this defendant is not a new or unfamiliar charge against clergymen. It is the common method of warfare. There is no accusation to which a clergyman is so much exposed; an enemy that desires to do him a deadly injury has no point from which to strike with such deadly effect as the charge of infidelity in marital relations. That charge, whether there is guilt or not, is almost sufficient to blast the usefulness of any clergyman, however respected and however beloved. But Mr. Beecher is not the first eminent clergyman that has been called upon to face such a persecution as this. It was by means of such an accusation that the enemies of St. Athanasius sought to destroy the great champion of the orthodox faith. It was by such means that the name of St. Francis de Sales was kept under a cloud for four years, during which he maintained the same silence for which my client is so sharply criticised. It was upon such a charge that the ruin of the illustrious Fénelon, Archbishop of Cambray, was attempted. It was under such an imputation that the 'judicious Hooker,' one of the brightest lights in the English Church, remained 'dumb as the dead,' though innocent as a babe, for six years of bitter anguish. It was such a charge, spread broadcast over England, that John Wesley, the man who of all Protestants most nearly approached to the spirit and labors of the Apostle Paul, suffered to pass without any public reply for twenty years."

1889, Sir Charles Russell, arguing for the defence in the Parnell Commission's Proceedings, Macmillan's ed. of the Opening Speech, 215 (the charge against the Irish Land League was of conspiring to encourage agrarian outrage; the League admitted that it had encouraged boycotting in the simple sense; and claimed a distinction between lawful boycotting and unlawful violence): "My lords, in this matter of boycotting, may I be forgiven for using the celebrated exclamation of Dr. Johnson, and say: 'Let us clear our minds of cant.' Boycotting has existed from the earliest times that human society existed. It is only a question of degree. Up to a certain point, boycotting is not only not criminal, but I say is justifiable and is right. For what does boycotting mean? It means the focussing of the opinion of the community in condemnation of the conduct of an individual of that community who offends the general sense of propriety, or offends against its general interests. Is there no boycotting at the bar? Is there no boycotting in the other professions? Is there no boycotting in the Church? Is there no boycotting in politics? Is there no boycotting of tradesmen in election times? What is the meaning of 'Sending a man to Coventry?' I say that boycotting, — I am not justifying intimidation, I am not justifying force, I am not justifying violence in connection with it; those are different things — I am talking of an act of moral reprehension called boycotting, and I say it always has existed and always will exist. My lords, if I were to search ancient records, historical, sacred records, I could point to many instances of boycotting; but I need not go far back. We have had in our days very remarkable instances, not only of boycotting, but of effective and useful boycotting. What was the action of our great colonies when the ill-judged policy of this country sent them the criminal population, the offscouring of the old world, as the rotten seed from which their fresh population was to spring? What did they do? Why, they simply boycotted the Government officials in Australia. The most notable instance of all was in the Cape Colony, where they boycotted the governor, declined to serve him, declined to serve him with horses, declined to supply him with provisions until the objectionable ship which was importing and seeking to land the offscouring of this nation, took its wretched burthen to another place."

1893, Mr. (later Justice) H. M. Knowlton, arguing for the prosecution, in Commonwealth v. Borden, Mass., 27 American Law Review, 837: "What is sometimes called circumstantial evidence is nothing in the world but a presumption of circumstances. It may be one or fifty. There is no chain about it. The word 'chain' is a misnomer, as applied to it. Talk about a chain of circumstances! When that solitary man had lived on this island for twenty years, and believed that he was the only human being there, and that the cannibals and savages that lived around him had not found him and had not come to his island, he walked out one day on the beach, and there he saw the fresh print of a naked foot on the sand. He had no lawyer, to tell him that was nothing but a circumstance! He had no distinguished counsel, to urge upon his fears that there was no chain about that thing which led him to a conclusion! His heart beat fast; his knees shook beneath him; he fell to the ground in fright, — because Robinson Crusoe knew, when he saw that circumstance, that a man had been there that was not himself! It was circumstantial evidence. It was nothing but circumstantial evidence! But it satisfied him!"

(3) The mere maintenance of the propriety of a logical inference from facts in evidence is not the offering of evidence, and is therefore always proper. When proposition A is to be proved, and fact B is introduced as evidence thereof, what remains is the mental process of inference, i. e. persuasion of fact A as following from fact B (ante, § 1). Whether that persuasion should follow is the question for the jury, and it is the counsel's function in argument to ask the jury to make or (if opposing) not to make the inference. But the act of producing evidence ends when fact A is introduced; what remains is a mere logical process of belief. Consequently, nothing that the counsel may say as to the desired inference can be the giving of evidence by him; for the evidence is by hypothesis already there. His suggestions are logical, not evidential. Now in this domain of logic, it is conceded, the counsel is free from restraint during argument. His desired inferences may be forced, unnatural, and untenable; but as to this the jury are to judge: that is precisely their function. To declare the desired inference irrational is to beg the question, by prejudging what the jury may believe. If the evidence was irrelevant, in the eye of the law of Evidence (i.e. if it was totally destitute of probative value for the purpose in hand), this would have been determined by the judge's ruling when it was offered; the very admission of it at all signifies that it has at least some probative value (ante, §§ 9, 28). Hence, the counsel's exposition of its probative potency must be left free for the jury's consideration; subject, no doubt, to judicial correction in case of palpable bad faith or in case of the misuse for one purpose of evidence admissible only for another purpose:[4]

1881, ELLIOTT, J., in Combs v. State, 75 Ind. 216, 218 (commenting on counsel's request to the jury to infer from the defendant's going to the town of residence of a witness that therefore the defendant had hired the witness): "The counsel for the State asked the jury to draw their own inferences from certain facts disclosed by the evidence; and, in so doing, the counsel may have asked the jury to violate all logical rules and do violence to all the laws of legitimate inference. But we cannot undertake to correct their logic. If there were any facts at all before the jury, the question as to what conclusions should be drawn was one for argument; and it was not for the Court to determine whether the inference of counsel was a correct or an erroneous one."

1897, MOORE, C. J., in State v. Moore, 32 Or. 65, 48 Pac. 468: "A Court cannot well supervise the reasoning powers of an attorney in the argument of a cause before it in which he is interested; for to do so would require it constantly to interrupt counsel, and be tantamount to instructing the jury by piecemeal, thereby destroying the force of the argument, and rendering it of but little use in aiding the jury to reach a proper conclusion. An attorney may comment on the testimony given in evidence, and has the right to draw such inferences and conclusions therefrom as his reason may dictate that the facts warrant; but, if he make a wrong deduction, the Court will, upon request therefor, correct it by giving a proper instruction."

(4) The firm and healthy tradition of our Bar which forbids counsel in argument to express his personal belief of the innocence of his client involves an application of the present principle. But it also rests on wider considerations of the advocate's function, and is beyond the present purview.[5]

§ 1808. Improper Statements in Offering Evidence to the Judge or Putting Questions to a Witness. The general principle that a counsel may not make

[4] Accord: Ala. 1880, Sullivan v. State, 66 Ala. 51 ("Presiding officers should not be severe in arresting such argument on the ground that to their minds the analogy or inference is forced or unnatural or that the argument employed is illogical"); 1902, Lide v. State, 133 Ala. 43, 31 So. 953; 1916, Fulton v. U. S., 45 D. C. App. 27 (a good example of drawing the line between counsel's insistence upon an inference and his assertion of a certainty based on his own knowledge); Fla. 1901, Mitchell v. State, 43 Fla. 584, 31 So. 242; 1903, Sylvester v. State, 35 Fla. 142, 35 So. 142; Ill. 1902, Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162, 65 N. E. 120; 1905, Chicago Union T. Co. v. O'Brien, 219 Ill. 303, 76 N. E. 341; Ind. 1882, Proctor v. DeCamp, 83 Ind. 559; 1890, Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 29, 26 N. E. 667; 1905, Osburn v. State, 164 Ind. 262, 73 N. E. 601; 1911, Wilson v. State, 175 Ind. 458, 93 N. E. 609; Ia. 1890, State v. Toombs, 79 Ia. 741, 45 N. W. 300; N. H. 1905, Seely v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 73 N. H. 339, 61 Atl. 585, 587.

Distinguish from this the question how far counsel may by emotional language excite the prejudices of the jury; this may, no doubt, be restrained, but only in extreme cases: 1903, Weaver, J., in State v. Burns, 119 Ia. 663, 94 N. W. 238: "It is his time-honored privilege to "'Drown the stage in tears,

Make mad the guilty and appal the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze, indeed
The very faculties of eyes and ears.'

"Stored away in the property room of the profession are moving pictures in infinite variety, from which every lawyer is expected to freely draw on all proper occasions. They give zest and point to the declamation, relieve the tediousness of the juror's duties, and please the audience, but are not often effective in securing unjust verdicts. The 'sorrowing, gray-haired parents,' upon the one hand, and the 'broken-hearted victim of man's duplicity,' upon the other, have adorned the climax and peroration of legal oratory from a time 'whence the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,' and for us at this late day to brand their use as misconduct would expose us to just censure for interference with ancient landmarks."

[5] Canons of Professional Ethics, American Bar Association, 1908, No. 15; Professor Geo. P. Costigan's Cases on Legal Ethics, 1917; 1921, Parroccini v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 234 S. W. 671 ("I believe this defendant is guilty," commented on). Compare the citations post, § 1911 (counsel as witness).

assertions of fact concerning matters not otherwise properly put in evidence (ante, § 1806) may be sought to be violated by indirection; but the prohibition applies with equal strictness. There are two chief ways in which this may occur: first, in a preliminary statement to the judge as to the tenor of evidence which the counsel desires to offer; and, secondly, in the putting of questions to witnesses.

(1) Stating an offer of evidence. Where a certain class of evidence is desired to be offered, and the offering counsel knows (either from the very nature of the evidence or from objection made by the opponent at the inception of the offer or upon a previous analogous offer) that its admission will be disputed, and therefore that a judicial ruling will be necessary, a sense of professional honor will tell him that in the ordinary case the details of the offer should not be stated in the jury's hearing; because of the possibility that the statement may be taken by them as true and relevant, even though it be excluded by the judge. In this respect the rule of law enforces the standard of honor, and requires the offering counsel either to present the offer in writing, without reading it aloud, to the Court and the opposing counsel, or, if argument is expected, to afford an opportunity for the jury's retirement before orally stating the offer:

1776, Mr. Sylvester Douglas, Election Cases, 2d ed., III, 232: "In truth, almost all the inconvenience which may be apprehended from an improper impression and prejudice occasioned by illegal evidence is in such case already incurred by its being stated as what is to be proved, before it is actually produced and sworn to in the regular form. . . . It has often occurred to me that in trials at 'nisi prius,' when evidence is objected to, there is an impropriety in allowing the counsel who offers it to state what he means to prove in the hearing of the jury, and this for the reason already mentioned; especially as jurymen are too apt to infer that evidence so offered must be both true, and fatal to the party who objects to it, merely because it is objected to. Perhaps it would be an improvement, when questions of admissibility are raised, that the jury, as well as the witnesses, should withdraw till the point was argued and determined."

1878, MARSTON, J., in Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10, 15: "In this case, after counsel had obtained a clear and distinct ruling of the Court as to the inadmissibility of a certain class of [newspaper] articles, a large number of the same class were offered, and in making each separate offer counsel stated the purport of the article or read the headings. This course was objected to, but permitted by the Court, and the articles offered were all excluded, the objection to their admissibility having been sustained. We think the course adopted was not correct. . . . Everything having a tendency to prejudice or influence a jury in their deliberations, which is not legally admissible in evidence on the trial of the cause, should be so far as possible kept from coming to their knowledge during the trial. An impression once made upon the mind of a juror, no matter how, will have more or less influence upon him when he retires to deliberate upon the verdict to be given; and no matter how honest or conscientious he may be, or how carefully he may have been instructed by the Court not to permit such incompetent matters to influence him or have any bearing in the case, it will be very difficult, if not impossible, for him to separate the competent from the incompetent, or to say to what extent his impressions or convictions may be attributed to that which properly should not have been permitted to come to his knowledge. . . . [Rules of exclusion] would be but slight protection if counsel or witnesses could be permitted to make a statement, but not under oath, of incompetent testimony, or counsel state the same fully to the jury in their argument or otherwise. . . . Where the offer is likely to be of such a character that it would have a tendency to prejudice or influence the jury, the correct practice would be to present the article, if in writing, to the Court and counsel for examination, without stating either the purport or substance of it. The cases are but few where such objectionable articles are likely to come up on the trial; and, when such a case arises, the good sense of Court and counsel will not only see the necessity, but will readily discover and adopt the means requisite to keep them from the reach of the jury."

No doubt much must depend upon the circumstances of each case; and the discretion of the trial Court should control. But it is clear that the judge should interfere 'ex mero motu,' and that, so far as feasible, no statement of proposed evidence should be allowed to be made in such a way as to allow the jury to obtain an impression of its truth and relevancy and to place the opposing counsel at the disadvantage of objecting to proposals whose known tenor may be misused against his party.[1]

(2) The same general principle governs the putting of questions to witnesses. The jury may under certain circumstances obtain an impression, from the mere putting of illegal questions which are either answered in the negative or are not answered because illegal and excluded, that there is some basis of truth for the question. When a counsel puts such a question, believing that it will be excluded for illegality or will be negatived, and also having no reason to believe that there is a foundation of truth for it, he violates professional honor. It is generally agreed that where the counsel has been warned, by a prior successful objection of the opponent to similar evidence, that it is illegal, he will be prevented from again putting questions dealing with the class of facts affected by the same illegality:[2]

§ 1808. [1] The following cases illustrate the application of this principle: Uniform Acts: Canons of Professional Ethics, American Bar Association, 1908, No. 22 ("A lawyer should not offer evidence, which he knows the Court should reject, in order to get the same before the jury by argument for its admissibility"); Ala. 1860, Mose v. State, 36 Ala. 211, 221 (trial Court may remove the jury during evidence as to the admissibility of a confession; compare the citations ante, § 861, n. 6); Ga. 1906, Holland v. Williams, 126 Ga. 617, 55 S. E. 1023; 1909, Gossett v. State, 6 Ga. App. 439, 65 S. E. 162 (opening address). Ill.: 1899, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Treat, 179 Ill. 576, 54 N. E. 290; 1904, Henrietta Coal Co. v. Campbell, 211 Ill. 216, 71 N. E. 863 (the jury's withdrawal is in the trial Court's discretion); 1906, Chicago & S. L. R. Co. v. Mines, 221 Ill. 448, 77 N. E. 898; 1906 Chicago C. R. Co. v. Gregory, 221 Ill. 591, 77 N. E. 1112; Mass. 1910, Com. v. Howard, 205 Mass. 128, 91 N. E. 397; Mich. 1878, Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10 (quoted supra; 1882, Porter v. Throop, 47 Mich. 313, 320, 11 N. W. 174 (approving the principle of Scripps v. Reilly; good opinion by Cooley, J.); 1897, People v. Abell, 113 Mich. 80, 71 N. W. 509; Mo. 1903, State v. Rose, 178 Mo. 25, 76 S. W. 1003 (offering a prior conviction of crime); Nebr. 1891, Leahy v. State, 31 Nebr. 566, 569, 48 N. W. 390; N. Car. 1889, State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 744, 745, 10 S. E. 183 (trial Court has discretion to send the jury out while a proffer of evidence is being stated).

For the proper limits as to detailed rehearsals of evidence in an opening statement of the case, with reference to the contingency of not evidencing it afterwards, see the remarks of Mr. J. Graves, in Scripps v. Reilly, supra; and compare the rule of conditional relevancy (post, § 1871).

In this part of a counsel's address, the rule of § 1807, ante, has little application; the situation should rather be treated from the point of view of the rule for conditional relevancy (post, § 1871).

In the following case the dissenting opinion of Haight, J., expresses a just indignation at the over-strict application of the present rule to such a case, and exposes the abuses to which it leads: 1906, People v. Wolf, 183 N. Y. 464, 76 N. E. 592.

[2] Fed. 1908, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Rankin, 8th C. C. A., 162 Fed. 103, 109; Ala. 1895, Birmingham Nat'l Bank v. Bradley, 108 Ala. 205, 208, 19 So. 791; Ark. 1904, 1872, COOLEY, J., in Gale v. People, 26 Mich. 157, 161 (commenting on the repeated putting of questions as to the defendant's past misconduct): "[Had the defendant declined to answer them,] an unfavorable influence upon the minds of the jury must inevitably have been produced, which in this case would have been increased by the exhibition of letters, brought out before the jury for no purpose that we can conceive, unless to convey an impression that they contained damaging disclosures regarding the prisoner, which he must either admit or falsify the facts. If therefore the questions were improper in themselves, the error was a serious one; and we have no doubt of their impropriety. . . . A review of the evidence in this case suggests very forcibly that, however full may be the explanation, a list of questions which assume the existence of damaging facts may be put in such a manner, and with such persistency and show of proof, as to impress a jury that there must be something wrong, even though the prisoner fully denies it and there is no other evidence."

1893, MCFARLAND, J., in People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 462, 34 Pac. 1078 (commenting on repeated questions asked of the defendant as a witness and concerning prior misconduct of various sorts): "It would be an impeachment of the legal learning of the counsel for the People to intimate that he did not know the question to be improper and wholly unjustifiable. Its only purpose, therefore, was to get before the jury a statement, in the guise of a question, that would prejudice them against appellant. If counsel had no reason to believe the truth of the matter insinuated by the question, then the artifice was most flagrant; but if he had any reason to believe in its truth, still he knew that it was a matter which the jury had no right to consider. The prosecuting attorney may well be assumed to be a man of fair standing before the jury; and they may well have thought that he would not have asked the question unless he could have proved what it intimated if he had been allowed to do so. He said plainly to the jury what Hamlet did not want his friends to say: 'As, "Well we know"; or "We could, an if we would"; or "If we list to speak"; or "There be, an if there might."' This was an entirely unfair way to try the case; and the mischief was not averted because the Court properly sustained the objection (though we think it should have warned counsel against the course which he was taking) and instructed the jury specially on the subject. The wrong and the harm was in the asking of the question. Of course, in trials of criminal cases, questions as to the admissibility of evidence will frequently arise about which lawyers and judges may fairly differ in opinion; and in such cases defendants must be satisfied when Courts sus-tain their objections. But where the prosecuting attorney asks a defendant questions which he knows and every judge and lawyer knows to be wholly inadmissible and wrong, and where the questions are asked without the expectation of answers, and where the clear purpose is to prejudice the jury against the defendant in a vital matter by the mere asking of the questions, then a judgment against the defendant will be reversed, although objections to the questions were sustained, unless it appears that the questions could not have influenced the verdict."

Burks v. State, 72 Ark. 461, 82 S. W. 490; Cal. 1890, People v. Mullings, 83 Cal. 138, 139, 143, 23 Pac. 229 (repeated questions to defendant as to inadmissible conversations with his wife); 1904, People v. Wright, 144 Cal. 161, 77 Pac. 877; 1904, People v. Perry, 144 Cal. 748, 78 Pac. 284; Ia. 1904, Streeter v. Marshalltown, 123 Ia. 449, 99 N. W. 114; Ky. 1909, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Payne, 133 Ky. 539, 118 S. W. 352; Mass. 1920, Com. v. Homer, 235 Mass. 526, 127 N. E. 517; Mich. 1912, Thomas v. Byron Tp., 168 Mich. 593, 134 N. W. 1021; Minn. 1920, State v. Morgan, 146 Minn. 197, 178 N. W. 489 (larceny-questions to a witness about other misdeeds); 1921, State v. Nelson, 148 Minn. 285, 181 N. W. 850 (cross-examination to character by "sneers and innuendo," disapproved); Mont. 1909, State v. Rhys, 40 Mont. 131, 105 Pac. 494; Neb. 1905, Nickoliznck v. State, 75 Nebr. 27, 105 N. W. 895; N. H. 1903, Batchelder v. Manchester R. Co., 72 N. H. 329, 56 Atl. 752 (good opinion, by Chase, J.); 1909, Connecticut Power Co. v. Dickinson, 75 N. H. 353, 74 Atl. 585 (careful opinion, by Walker, J., drawing the line); N. Y. 1904, People v. Davey, 179 N. Y. 345, 72 N. E. 244; 1921, People v. Slover, 232 N. Y. 264, 133 N. E. 633 (murder; repeated questions to prior criminal acts of accused, denied by him, held improper; quoted supra); Okl. 1922, Freeman v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 203 Pac. 1052 (inadmissible evidence offered and argued about in the jury's presence, known as "badgering in" evidence; held improper); Wis. 1908, Dungan v. State, 135 Wis. 151, 115 N. W. 350 (good opinion by Dodge, J.).

Compare the cases cited ante, §§ 983, 987, 988, where an indirect effect of this principle is seen in the rule of some jurisdictions that all cross-examination of a witness to specific acts of misconduct is forbidden; see also § 780 (misleading questions on cross-examination).

Distinguish the rule ante, § 782, as to the propriety of repeating the same lawful question in order to compel a dishonest witness to retract.

1920, RAILEY, J., in State v. Burns, 286 Mo. 665, 228 S. W. 766: "We are driven to the unevitable conclusion, from reading the record herein, that the prosecuting attorney proceeded, in respect to above matter, in utter disregard and contempt of our former ruling; that he deliberately and intentionally sought to get before the jury the improper evidence aforesaid, in order to create in the minds of the jurors the unwarranted impression that defendant had sustained improper relations with the wife of deceased, and that he had desecrated the home of the latter, etc. It is true that the prosecuting attorney did not receive any answer to the questions propounded. It is manifest that he did not expect the court to permit the witness to answer these questions. He knew, however, that such an inquiry was improper, and condemned by this Court. He evidently knew, regardless of the mild rulings of the [trial] Court, the questions propounded would indicate to the jury that defendant and the wife of deceased sustained some sort of improper relations with each other, even if overruled. This conclusion is irresistible, when we come to consider the astounding speech, afterwards delivered along the same line by Judge Gossom, in the closing argument for the state, where he dwelt at great length upon the alleged conduct of defendant in destroying the sanctity of deceased's home, without any evidence to support said contention, and without any such issue being lodged in the case. The trial Court has a good deal of latitude in dealing with this subject. But in cases like the one before us, where the attorneys for the State deliberately overstep the rules of propriety, ignore the positive rulings of this Court, and attempt to get before the jury matters which they know are improper, for the undoubted purpose of creating in the minds of the jurors an unwarranted prejudice against defendant, in a close case like this the ends of justice require that a new trial should be granted defendant, although the Court below may have formally sustained an objection to the proffered evidence."

1921, Per CURIAM, in People v. Slover, 232 N. Y. 264, 133 N. E. 633 (murder): "Defendant on cross-examination was interrogated, solely for the purpose of discrediting him as a witness, as to many particular criminal acts. His record was not flawless, but for the most part he denied that he had done the things as to which he was interrogated, and no attempt was made to show that he had been convicted of other crimes. Within proper bounds, such a cross-examination is not objectionable. But a limit must be placed on the range of such questions. They may not be asked for the improper purpose of planting in the minds of the jury suspicion and distrust by insinuations that the defendant has falsely denied his guilt as to collateral matters. Although his denials may not be contradicted by extrinsic testimony, the jury is not bound to take as true the word of any witness on such matters; and the district attorney may not in fairness multiply questions as to acts of collateral misconduct when no purpose is served, except to prejudice the jurors. The discretion which Courts possess to permit questions as to collateral acts to be put to a defendant in a criminal case for the purpose of impairing his credibility should be exercised with caution. The discretion of the Court was strained to the utmost in this regard."

4. Interpreter

§ 1810. Hearsay Rule applicable to Interpreter. The necessity for resorting to an interpreter, and the mode of interpretation, for witnesses who speak in a foreign language, or speak inaudibly, or are dumb, have been already considered (ante, § 811). It has also been noticed that the right to cross-examination implies a right to have an interpretation of the testimony for the purpose of intelligent cross-examination (ante, § 1393). It remains here to examine the applicability of the Hearsay rule to this process.

(1) Where the testimony is that of a witness now speaking through an interpreter in court, the Hearsay rule is satisfied as to both, because there is an opportunity for the cross-examination of both (ante, § 1393). But where the testimony is that of a witness at a former trial, there given through an interpreter, then, though there has been for both an opportunity of cross-examination, the rule of confrontation applies, and before the witness' testimony may be received, he must be shown to be deceased, out of the jurisdiction, or otherwise unavailable (ante, § 1402). The same requirement, however, applies to the interpreter, for he is also a witness, i. e. to the words of the principal witness; and hence, either the interpreter must be called to repeat the former witness' words or he must be accounted for as deceased or otherwise unavailable.[1]

§ 1810. [1] California: 1880, People v. Lee Fat, 54 Cal. 529 (where neither the official reporter nor the interpreter was called, but the former's notes were offered; under the statute — ante, § 1669 — sanctioning their use, the reporter's presence was apparently not necessary, but the Court held that the interpreter's absence was fatal; implying that if accounted for it would have been enough); 1880, People v. Ah Yute, 56 Cal. 120 (the same facts, except that the reporter read his notes; the Court declared the absence of the interpreter fatal); 1897, People v. Sierp, 116 Cal. 249, 48 Pac. 88 (approving the preceding cases); 1902, People v. John, 137 Cal. 220, 69 Pac. 1063 (both interpreter and stenographer being called to prove former testimony, the one swearing to his correct translation and the other to his correct transcription, the Court nevertheless excluded the testimony as "hearsay"; unsound, because ignoring the direct applicability to such a case of the principle of § 751, ante); 1904, People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 Pac. 467 (official certified transcript of testimony delivered through an interpreter, and taken according to P. C. § 686, cited ante, § 1411, admitted); 1904, People v. Jan John, 144 Cal. 284, 77 Pac. 950 (former ruling supra in this case affirmed); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5778 ("statements of an interpreter, where from any cause he cannot be sworn," are admissible); Hawaii: 1909, Ching Lum v. Lam Man Ben, 19 Haw. 363 (interpreter out of the jurisdiction; held not admissible without a showing that no other person qualified to report the testimony was available; is the learned Court correct in stating that there is at the first trial no opportunity to cross-examine the interpreter as to the correctness of his translation? In Terr. v. Kawano, 20 Haw. 469, cited ante, § 1393, the same Court declared that the right is equally applicable to the interpreter when on the stand); 1911, Terr. v. Kawano, 20 Haw. 469 (transcript of former interpreted testimony, excluded, the interpreter being available); Indiana: 1871, Schearer v. Harber, 36 Ind. 541 (the interpreter must be accounted for as "dead or insane, or out of the jurisdiction, or unable to testify, or, having been summoned, appears to have been kept away by the adverse party"); Massachusetts: 1809, Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 219, 225 (deposition through an interpreter rejected, because the interpreter was not sworn as such by the commissioners ignorant of the witness' language); 1901, Com. v. Storti, 177 Mass. 339, 58 N. E. 1021 (interpreter translated a confession orally, and stenographer wrote down the translation, both testifying on the trial; held sufficient); Nevada: 1905, State v. Williams, 28 Nev. 395, 82 Pac. 353; New Jersey: 1906, State v. Banusik, — N. J. L. —, 64 Atl. 994 (interpreter called to state the correctness of his interpretation of a confession written out and signed before a magistrate: held sufficient); 1918, State v. Agnesi, 92 N. J. L. 53, 104 Atl. 299 (murder; the magistrate wrote out a dying declaration, part of which was given to him through an interpreter; the magistrate testified but not the interpreter; admitted); Rhode Island: 1902, State v. Terline, 23 R. I. 530, 51 Atl. 204 (witnesses to the translation by an official interpreter, of a former witness' testimony, excluded, the interpreter not being called; following People v. Ah Yute, Cal.); 1903, State v. Epstein, 25 R. I. 131, 55 Atl. 204 (police officers' testimony to a Russian injured person's statements, translated to them by an interpreter, excluded).

By statute in a few jurisdictions an official translation of testimony or documents is receivable as an official statement (ante, § 1672).

(2) Where a witness on the stand is asked to testify to the words of A uttered out of court, as translated to him by M interpreting between them, the witness is not qualified by personal knowledge of A's utterances (ante, § 668), and may not testify; the interpreter M is the only qualified witness. But if A, whose utterances are to be testified to, is a party opponent, then he may be regarded as having made M his agent to translate, and thus M's translations are admissions (ante, § 1078), usable against A.[2]

[2] Conn. 1869, State v. Noyes, 36 Conn. 80 (witness not allowed to be contradicted by L., who had had a conversation with him through an interpreter, without calling the interpreter, who was here the agent of L. only); Ida. 1916, State v. Fong Loon, 29 Ida. 248, 158 Pac. 233 (dying declaration recorded through an interpreter not called, excluded); Ky. 1908, Spencer v. Com., — Ky. —, 107 S. W. 342; Mass. 1892, Com. v. Vose, 157 Mass. 394, 32 N. E. 355; Mich. 1919, In re Coburn, 207 Mich. 350, 174 N. W. 134 (disbarment, conversation between respondent and two clients, conducted through an interpreter, on the proposal of respondent; the clients allowed to testify to the interpreted conversation, on the theory that the interpreter had been made the agent to translate); Mont. 1904, State v. Rogers, 31 Mont. 1, 77 Pac. 293; Pa. 1920, Com. v. Pava, 268 Pa. 520, 112 Atl. 103 (witness' testimony to accused's statements made through an interpreter, the interpreter also testifying to them, held erroneously received, but the error not harmful; unsound); P. I. 1907, U. S. v. Chu Chio, 8 P. I. 269 (confession made to an officer through an interpreter not called; the officer's testimony rejected); Wis. 1856, Diener v. Dicer, 5 Wis. 483, 496, 521, 527 ("The circumstances may be such as to make the interpreter an agent so as to bind the parties; but we think he is not necessarily an agent," i. e. to bind them).

On the same principle, an interpreted statement may be used against a witness (not a party-opponent) as a self-contradiction, without calling the interpreter, where the witness, by selecting his interpreter, virtually made him his agent to speak, or otherwise adopted the interpreter's statement: 1905, Davis v. First Nat'l Bank, 6 Ind. T. 124, 89 S. W. 1015 (affidavit made though an interpreter out of court, used to contradict the witness without calling the interpreter).

Conversely, if the interpreter himself testifies on the stand, it is immaterial whether the party made him agent to interpret: 1909, People v. Randazzio, 194 N. Y. 147, 87 N. E. 112.

Whether an interpreter is sufficiently expert to testify involves a different principle (ante, § 571).

TITLE III: PROPHYLACTIC RULES

CHAPTER LX.

SUB-TITLE I: OATH

SUB-TITLE II: PERJURY-PENALTY

SUB-TITLE III: PUBLICITY

§ 1813. General Nature of these Rules. Among the different sorts of rules of Auxiliary Probative Policy (ante, § 1171), this second class is marked out by the special feature that it operates by applying to the evidence, in advance of its admission, some expedient calculated to supply an antidote or prophylactic for the supposed weakness or danger inherent in the evidence.

The several rules of this sort thus are united by this common feature, in contrast with the four other classes of auxiliary rules. This common feature furnishes a just ground for grouping them together, because the proper basis of classification for all these auxiliary rules, as noted already (ante, § 1171), is their practical operation or form of application, i. e. the thing actually done by the Court in using them, and not the motive or reason which makes it desirable to do so.

These Prophylactic Rules operate in one or both of two slightly different ways. The expedient which they apply serves either to remove the supposed danger by counteracting its influence in advance, or to furnish a means by which it can be discovered and other measures can be taken to counteract it at the trial. The Oath (post, § 1816) operates in the first way only, by setting against the witness' motives to falsify his fear of divine punishment and thus nullifying in advance the influence of the former. The Perjury-Penalty (post, 1831) operates in the same way, substituting the fear of temporal punishment for the fear of divine punishment. The Publicity rule (post, 1834) operates in both of the above ways; first, by subjecting the witness to the fear of the later consequences of public opinion and of a present exposure by interested bystanders, and, next, by providing the means of counteracting his possible falsities through the presence of those who can contradict him. The Sequestration of Witnesses (post, § 1838) operates partly in the first way, by preventing collusion, but chiefly in the second way, by furnishing a means of exposing that collusion if it has already taken place. The Notice of Evidence to the Opponent (post, § 1845) operates mainly in the second way, by furnishing the opponent, in advance of the trial, with knowledge of the proposed evidence, and by thus enabling him to prepare to expose false evidence; and there is also involved an effect of the first sort, in subjectively deterring the opponent from offering that which he knows can be shown false.

Sub-title I: OATH

§ 1815. History. The employment of oaths takes our history back to the origins of Germanic law and custom, where, as in all primitive civilizations, the appeal to the supernatural plays an important part in the administration of justice. But the use of oaths for witnesses appears as only a single and subordinate phase of the general resort to oaths. The early Germanic modes of trial consisted largely in a reference, in one form or another, to the 'judicium Dei.' By oaths formally taken one might even establish his claim or his plea beyond attack. It was not a matter of weighing the credibility of a sworn statement; the thought was rather that such an appeal could not be falsely made with impunity. To such an invocation a judicial and determinative effect was attributed by the religious notions of the time.[1]

The progress from this notion of the oath at large (which left its traces as late as the 1800s in some of the common modes of procedure) to the second stage of a test or security for credibility was slow and gradual.[2]

§ 1815. [1] Its history and practice in this earliest stage may be studied in the following works: 1892, Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, II, §§ 103 ff.; 1898, Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 24, and The Development of Trial by Jury, Harv. Law Rev., V, 45, 245, 295, 357; 1897, Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, II, 598, 631; 1903, T. R. White, Oaths in Judicial Proceedings, American Law Register, New Series, XLII, 372; Bateson, Borough Customs, II, Introduction, pp. 32–34 (Selden Society's Pub., XXI, 1908); 1878, Lea, Superstition and Force, cc. 2 ff. In Tyler on Oaths (1834) the treatment is not modern. Junkin on Oaths has not been accessible.

In the 1700s came the beginning of a third stage of development, in which legislation sanctioned what the community had come finally to believe, namely, that the inexorable requirement of an oath worked injustice, and that theological belief should not obstruct the admission of competent witnesses. In this stage the tendency has been either to make the application of the oath optional with the witness, or to abandon its essential feature by rendering theological belief unnecessary.[3]

It is with the second stage that the common law had to deal; the ideas of the first stage having practically disappeared entirely from the common law of the last three centuries. The changes constituting the third stage of abandonment or election have everywhere been made by legislation, and will be later considered (post, §§ 1827–1829).

The common-law questions are: (1) What was the nature and what the form of a testimonial oath? (2) What was the capacity necessary in order to be able to take the oath? (3) What testimony is required to be subjected to it?

A. The Oath at Common Law

1. Nature, Form, and Mode of Administration

§ 1816. Theory of the Oath. The theory of the oath, in modern common law, may be termed a subjective one, in contrast to the earlier one, which may be termed objective. The oath is not a summoning of Divine vengeance upon false swearing, whereby when the spectators see the witness standing unharmed they know that the Divine judgment has pronounced him to be a truth-teller.[1] But it is a method of reminding the witness strongly of the

[2] Remnants of the compurgatory oath of the party were found in the 1800s in the statutes of some Southern States dealing with proof of accounts (ante, § 1519). On the Continent, the 'serment décisoire' is still recognized in France and in Germany: 1899, Garsonnet, Traité de Procédure, III, § 878; 1901, Sydow v. Busch, Deutsche Civilprozessordnung, §§ 670, 1035; E. Bonnier, Traité théorique et pratique des preuves, 5th ed. by Larnaude, 1888, §§ 409–431; A. Esmein, History of Continental Criminal Procedure, pp. 57–61, 251–271 (1913, vol. V of the Modern Continental Legal History Series); Engelmann, History of Continental Civil Procedure, passim (1923, vol. VII of the above series, translated by Robert W. Millar); Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano (1902, Book III, Part II, Sect. I, ch. I, § 1; ch. II, § 2); Green's Encyclopedia of Scots Law (tit. "Oaths on Reference"). The decisory oath is also in force in Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 4311, 4312.

An example of the survival of this conclusive purgatorial oath of the party is probably seen in the traditional rule, observed still by some Courts, for making the respondent's sworn answers conclusive in contempt proceedings; this rule has been repudiated by the Federal Supreme Court: 1906, U. S. v. Shipp, 203 U. S. 563, 27 Sup. 165 (interesting opinion by Holmes, J.); 1906, Municipal Court of Chicago, Memorandum of Cottrell, J. (privately printed; collecting the authorities); Editorial note in Harvard Law Rev., XXII, 379.

Wager of law had an influence in the history of parties' disqualification as witnesses (ante, § 575).

[3] A full examination of this period is made in Professor White's learned article, cited supra, note 1.

§ 1816. [1] 1628–1634, Coke, 1 Inst. 16, 4 Inst. 79; 1680, Hale, Pl. Cr., II, 279; Anon., 1684, 1 Vern. 263.

Divine punishment somewhere in store for false swearing, and thus of putting him in a frame of mind calculated to speak only the truth as he saw it. This essentially subjective nature of the security had by the 1800s come to be thoroughly appreciated and established. It would have been undoubted, had it not been for an occasional expression [2] which tended to obscure the real nature of the security.

This modern theory of the oath is set forth in the following passages:

1809, Per Curiam, in Curtiss v. Strong, 4 Day 56: "There can be no doubt but that the law intended that the fear of offending God should have its influence upon a witness to induce him to speak the truth. But no such influence can be expected from the man who disregards an oath. He is therefore excluded from being a witness."

1825, Christopher North, Noctes Ambrosianæ, XXII: English Opium-Eater: "Mr. Hogg, I never could see any sufficient reason why, in a civilized and Christian country, an oath should be administered even to a witness in a court of justice. Without any formula, Truth is felt to be sacred; nor will any words weigh." The Ettrick Shepherd: "You 're for upsettin' the haill frame o' ceevil society, sir, and bringing back on this kintra a' the horrors o' the French Revolution. The power o' an oath lies, no in the Reason, but in the Imagination. Reason tells that simple affirmation or denial should be eneuch atween man and man. But Reason canna bind; or, if she do, Passion snaps the chain. But Imagination can bind; for she calls on her Flamin' Ministers — the Fears; — they palsy-strike the arm that would disobey the pledged lips; — and thus oaths are as dreadfu' as Erebus and the gates o' hell."

1849, Mr. W. M. Best, Evidence, §§ 58, 161: "Some eminent authorities in our own law have used language calculated to convey the notion that oaths are necessarily imprecatory. . . . Imprecation is however no part of the essence of an oath, but is a mere adjunct of questionable propriety. . . . The object of the law in requiring an oath is to get at the truth by obtaining a hold on the conscience of the witness."

1877, Ashburn, J., in Clinton v. State, 33 Oh. St. 33: "The purpose of the oath is not to call the attention of God to the witness, but the attention of the witness to God; not to call upon Him to punish the false-swearer, but on the witness to remember that He will surely do so. By thus laying hold of the conscience of the witness and appealing to his sense of accountability, the law best insures the utterance of truth."

1882, Somerville, J., in Blackburn v. State, 71 Ala. 319: "[The object is] to purge the conscience, and impress the witness with a due sense of religious obligation, so as to secure the purity and truth of his testimony under the influence of its sanctity."

This being the function of the oath, it must, to fulfil its function, involve the calling to mind of some superhuman moral retribution which according to the witness' belief is calculated to induce him to refrain from false statements and thus to avoid the retribution. This fundamental idea determines logically the rules of law to be observed as to the nature of the belief, the form of the oath, and the capacity to take it. The sanction acts preventively by holding out the fear of certain retribution; its efficacy presupposes a belief in this retribution, and therefore a capacity to be influenced thereby; and the influence is to be exerted at the time when the witness is about to testify.

The supposed mental process may be concretely seen in the following

[2] 1786, R. v. White, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 430 ("He has imprecated the divine vengeance upon his head if what he shall afterwards say is false"); 1820, Abbott, C. J., in The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 285 ("A person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven if he do not speak the truth").

exhortation, by a judge whose reputation for brutality need not induce us to doubt the soundness of his law:

1685, JEFFERIES, C. J., in Lady Lisle's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 325 (threatening a refractory witness): "Now mark what I say to you, friend. . . . Thou hast a precious immortal soul, and there is nothing in the world equal to it in value. . . . Consider that the Great God of Heaven and Earth, before whose tribunal thou and we and all persons are to stand at the last day, will call thee to an account for the rescinding his truth, and take vengeance of thee for every falsehood thou tellest. I charge thee, therefore, as thou will answer it to the Great God, the judge of all the earth, that thou do not dare to waver one tittle from the truth, upon any account or pretence whatsoever; . . . for that God of Heaven may justly strike thee into eternal flames and make thee drop into the bottomless lake of fire and brimstone, if thou offer to deviate the least from the truth and nothing but the truth."

§ 1817. Nature of the Belief. (a) The nature of the belief which alone is susceptible to the influence of this stimulus to truth is on principle simple enough. It is a belief in a superhuman (and therefore inevitable) retribution to follow false swearing. The language of the judges in Omichund v. Barker [1] (in which the future Lord Mansfield was a leading counsel) has become classical:

1744, Omichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 45. L. C. J. WILLES: "Though I am of opinion that infidels who believe a God and future rewards and punishments in the other world may be witnesses, yet I am as clearly of opinion that if they do not believe a God or future rewards and punishments, they ought not to be admitted as witnesses"; [in the other report:] "Nothing but the belief in a God, and that he will reward and punish us according to our deserts, is necessary to qualify a man to take an oath." L. C. J. LEE: "An oath is a religious sanction that mankind have universally established. . . . I agree that where the witness. . . . is of a religion, it is sufficient; for the foundation of all religion is the belief of a God." HARDWICKE, L. C. (approving a passage from Bishop Sanderson): "'Juramentum,' saith he, 'est affirmatio religiosa.' All that is necessary to an oath is an appeal to the Supreme Being, as thinking him the rewarder of truth and the avenger of falsehood."

1852, MARTIN, B., in Miller v. Salomons, 7 Exch. 535: "The doctrine laid down [in Omichund v. Barker] was that the essence of an oath was an appeal to the Supreme Being in whose existence the person taking the oath believed, and whom he also believed to be a rewarder of truth and an avenger of falsehood."

1824, WALWORTH, J., in People v. Matteson, 2 Cow. 433: "I apprehend the true test of the competency of a witness to be this: Has the obligation of an oath any binding tie upon his conscience? Or in other words, does the witness believe in the existence of a God who will punish his perjury? If he swears falsely, does he believe he will be punished by an overruling Providence, either in this world or in the world to come?"

1871, FREEMAN, J., in Odell v. Koppee, 5 Heisk. 91: "[The test of incompetency is] not to believe in a God or any responsibility for his conduct beyond such penalties as human laws may inflict." [2]

§ 1817. [1] A case of which Burke said in 1794 (Works, Little & Brown's ed., XI, 77): "one of the cases the most solemnly argued that has been in man's memory, with the aid of the greatest learning at the bar, and with the aid of all the learning on the bench, both bench and bar being then supplied with men of the first form." The case is also reported fully in Willes 538, and shortly in 1 Wils. 84.

[2] Accord: 1897, State v. Washington, 49 La. An. 1602, 22 So. 841 ("the appreciation of a Supreme Being to punish sin and reward virtue"); 1909, Pumphrey v. State, 84 Nebr. 636, 122 N. W. 19.

It might have been expected that difficulty would arise over the nature of the punishing power, — whether the belief should relate to a personal God or not; whether any notion of supernatural force was essential; and so on. But, strangely enough, no such doubt seems to have presented itself, and any more definite interpretation of the idea of God, or Supreme Being, than the above passages indicate has been ignored by the judges.

(b) A difficulty did arise, however, as to the place and time of punishment. Would a belief in a punishment in the present life suffice, or must the apprehension be of a punishment in a future life? The language of Lord Chief Justice Willes, in Omichund v. Barker, looked both ways, being differently reproduced by the different reports. On principle, no doubt could seem to exist; for a belief, if genuine, of a sure punishment, whether material or spiritual, in the present existence, would be no less efficacious a preventive of falsehood than a belief in a punishment after death. The very nearness of the former sort would be a more vivid and forceful reminder than the distant indefiniteness of the latter; moreover, the deliberate thought necessary to bring one to the former and less usual belief would perhaps indicate a mind more keenly susceptible to conscientious sanctions than that of a person professing the customary and perhaps only half-realized tenets of the unquestioning multitude.

After an interval of more or less uncertainty, the English Courts declared the distinction to be immaterial, — i.e. whether the punishment is believed to impend in a future existence or in the present one; and the American courts, particularly in later rulings, have generally reached the same result:[3]

1885, Brett, M. R., in Attorney-General v. Bradlaugh, L. R. 14 Q. B. D. 697: "There is no necessity that the person taking the oath should believe that he will be liable to be punished in a future state. If there be any belief in a religion according to which it is supposed that a Supreme Being would punish a man in this world for doing wrong, that is enough."

1856, Pearson, J., in Shaw v. Moore, 4 Jones L. 26: "There is no ground for making a distinction between the fear of punishment by the Supreme Being in this world and the fear of punishment in the world to come. Both are based upon the sense of religion. . . .

[3] Accord: 1841, Blocker v. Burness, 2 Ala. 355; 1902, Beeson v. Moore, 132 Ala. 391, 31 So. 456; 1822, Noble v. People, 1 Ill. 56 (but here the witness believed in a future state of existence); 1856, Central M. T. R. Co. v. Rockafellow, 17 Ill. 553, semble; 1881, Searcy v. Miller, 57 Ia. 613, 10 N. W. 912; 1818, Hunscom v. Hunscom, 15 Mass. 184, semble; 1829, Com. v. Bachelder, Thacher's Cr. C. 198, Thacher, J.; 1914, State v. Pitt, 166 N. C. 268, 80 S. E. 1060; 1879, Free v. Buckingham, 59 N. H. 225; 1824, People v. Matteson, 2 Cow. N. Y. 433, Walworth, J.; 1840, Brock v. Milligan, 10 Oh. 121; 1877, Clinton v. State, 33 Oh. St. 33; 1841, Cubbison v. M'Creary, 2 W. & S. Pa. 263; 1856, Blair v. Seaver, 26 Pa. 276; 1846, Jones v. Harris, 1 Strobh. L. S. C. 160; 1852, Bennett v. State, 1 Swan Tenn. 411; 1841, Arnold v. Arnold's Estate, 13 Vt. 362.

Contra (declaring belief in future world punishment essential): Can. 1899, Bell v. Bell, 34 N. Br. 615, 624; U. S. Fed. 1827, Wakefield v. Ross, 5 Mason 19, Story, J., semble; 1828, Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 70 (Peters, J., diss.); 1820, Jackson v. Gridley, 18 Johns. N. Y. 103, Spencer, C. J.; 1823, Butts v. Swartwood, 2 Cow. N. Y. 432, Sutherland, J.; 1829, M'Clure v. Tennessee, 1 Yerg. Tenn. 206, semble; 1871, Anderson v. Maberry, 2 Heisk. Tenn. 658, semble.

Uncertain: 1897, State v. Washington, 49 La. An. 1602, 22 So. 841.

The efficacy of the fear of punishment in either case depends upon the degree of belief as to the certainty of that punishment, so that there can be upon reason no ground for making a distinction. The rule of law which requires a religious sanction is satisfied in either case."

In addition to formulating this general definition, the Courts have also frequently been called on to rule upon the sufficiency of sundry individual beliefs, expressed in language more or less inexact and variant. These decisions merely apply the above principles to the facts of each case, and can hardly be treated as precedents.[4]

In regard to children, there has always been a proper inclination to avoid ascertaining the test-belief in formal and abstract language.[5]

§ 1818. Form of the Oath. Such being the essentials of the belief regarded as a security for trustworthiness, it follows that the form of the administration of the oath is immaterial, provided that it involves, in the mind of the witness, the bringing to bear of this apprehension of punishment. The oath's efficacy may depend upon both the general name and nature of the witness' faith and the formula of words or ceremonies which he considers as binding, i. e. as subjecting him to the risk of punishment. But it cannot matter what tenets of theological belief or what ecclesiastical organization he adheres to, provided the above essentials are fulfilled,[1] and it cannot matter what words or ceremonies are used in imposing the oath, provided he recognizes them as binding by his belief. Therefore any form suffices which actually binds the particular witness' conscience, even if it varies from the orthodox form.

This was long ago settled (after some earlier suggestions to the contrary, in favor of the exclusive efficacy of Christian forms) in the great case of Omichund v. Barker, and has never since been doubted:[2]

1744, Omichund v. Barker, 1 Ark. 45, L. C. J. WILLES: "The form of oaths varies in countries according to different laws and constitutions, but the substance is the same in all. . . . It would be absurd for him to swear according to the Christian oath, which he

[4] 1786, R. v. White, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 430 (rejected); 1845, R. v. Serva, 2 C. & K. 56, Platt, B. (that the witness was a Christian, accepted); 1916, U. S. v. Miller, D. C. W. D. Wash., 236 Fed. 798 (a person believing that "all his punishment in this world, while he is here; I don't think it comes from God," held incompetent to take oath; opinion obscure); 1842, Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 538 (belief in no God; rejected).

[5] The cases are placed post, § 1821.

§ 1818. [1] See Dr. William Paley's Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy, 1785, Book III, Part I, Chapter XVI, "Oaths."

[2] 1913, R. v. Curry, N. Sc. S. C., 12 D. L. R. 13 (perjury; the defendant had been sworn "by holding up his right hand without being asked whether he had any objection to being sworn in the regular way," and no Bible was used; held by two judges, that "a good and valid oath could only be taken by the witness touching or kissing the Book," that no statute had changed this, and that for a Christian the form actually used was not valid; Graham, E. J., in an elaborate opinion learnedly examines the history of oaths; it is a pity that neither of these opinions offers any words of criticism for the effete and nonsensical law which punishes judicial perjury only when it is committed according to narrow formalities; herein our law remains grossly and disgracefully inept for its purposes; Russell, J., dissenting, mildly terms the result "the extreme of drollery"; Drysdale, J., also dissenting, the Court was equally divided, and the perjurer was punished after all); 1809, Curtiss v. Strong, 4 Day 55; 1871, Odell v. Koppee, 5 Heisk. 91; 1841, Arnold v. Arnold's Estate, 13 Vt. 362. This doctrine is often re-declared by statute: post, § 1828.

does not believe, and therefore, out of necessity, he must be allowed to swear according to his own notion of an oath." HARDWICKE, L. C.: "The next thing . . . is the form of the oath. It is laid down by all writers that the outward act is not essential to the oath. . . . It has been the wisdom of all nations to administer such oaths as are agreeable to the notion of the person taking."

1776, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., in Atcheson v. Everitt, Cowp. 389: "I there argued [in Omichund v. Barker], and the judges in delivering their opinions agreed, that upon the principles of the common law there is no particular form essential to an oath to be taken by a witness; but as the purpose of it is to bind his conscience, every man of every religion should be bound by that form which he himself thinks will bind his own conscience most."

1852, ALDERSON, B., in Miller v. Salomons, 7 Exch. 535, 558, 615: "Omichund v. Barker has settled that it ought to be taken in that form and upon that sanction which most effectually binds the conscience of the party swearing. Thus, a Jew is to be sworn on the Book of the Law and with his head covered, a Brahmin by the mode prescribed by his peculiar faith, a Chinese by his special ceremonies, and the like." POLLOCK, C. B.: "It appears to me to have decided merely this, — that the common law of England agrees with the law of nations, that the form of an oath is to be accommodated to the religious persuasion which the swearer entertains."

1822, REYNOLDS, C. J., in Gill v. Caldwell, 1 Ill. 53: "The pure principle of the common law is that oaths are to be administered to all persons according to their own opinions, and as it most affects their consciences."

The recognition of sundry unusual forms of oath as being suitable for peculiar variants of theological beliefs is copiously illustrated in judicial annals.[3]

The usual form of oath at common law in criminal cases was as follows:

1841, Mr. Joseph Chitty, Criminal Law, 4th Amer. ed., I, 616: "The form at the assizes or sessions is, for the clerk of arraigns or of the peace to desire the witness to take the book in his hand, and, when that is done, to say to him, 'The evidence you shall give between our sovereign lord the king and the prisoner at the bar shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, So help you God!'; upon which the witness kisses the book."

[3] Eng. 1738, Fachina v. Sabine, 2 Stra. 1104 (Mahometan); 1764, R. v. Morgan, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 54 (same); 1786, Mildrone's Case, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 412 (local custom of holding up the hand, without touching or kissing the Book); 1788, Walker's Case, 1 Leach Cr. L. 498 (using the Old Testament, by the rite of the Kirk of Scotland); 1791, Mee v. Reid, Peake N. P. Cas. 23 (same form); 1824, Edmonds v. Rowe, Ry. & Moo. 77 (a Methodist, who preferred swearing on the Old Testament); 1842, R. v. Entrehman, C. & M. 248 (Chinese); Can. 1904, R. v. Lai Ping, 11 Br. C. 102 (oath to Chinese by burning a piece of paper on which the witness had written his name, etc., held to be the established practice); U. S. 1822, Gill v. Caldwell, 1 Ill. 53 (swearing without Bible and with uplifted hand); 1810, Vail v. Nickerson, 6 Mass. 262 (French); 1834, Com. v. Buzzell, 16 Pick. Mass. 156 (Roman Catholics, on the Holy Evangelists); 1905, State v. Davis, 186 Mo. 533, 85 S. W. 354 (Chinese); 1847, Newman v. Newman, 7 N. J. Eq. 26 (Hebrew); 1897, State v. Gin Pon, 16 Wash. 425, 47 Pac. 961 (blowing out a candle and praying to be snuffed out likewise if perjured; used for Chinese).

No special form of swearing is necessary, if according to the witness' religion none exists: 1860, R. v. Pah-Mah-Gay, 20 U. C. Q. B. 196.

It may be noted that, of the forms of oath hitherto usually reported to our Courts as appropriate for Chinese, namely, breaking the saucer or killing the cock, neither is in strictness a legal form of oath in that nation; in Chinese courts there is no oath; and the forms above noted are merely those employed in certain of the powerful secret societies: 1882, Giles, Historic China, 354, 397. No doubt the ceremonies may have some efficacy upon the witness (though obviously he must at least come from the district and the society where the particular form is used); but their true place in Chinese practice need not be misunderstood.

For early Filipino forms, see Judge N. Romualdez' article on "Prehistoric Legislation of the Philippines" (Phill. L. Journal, 1914, I. 149).

For specific forms sanctioned by statute, see post, § 1828.

The usual form of words in civil cases differed slightly:

"The evidence that you shall give to the Court and jury, touching the matters in question, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; So help you God!" [4]

In most jurisdictions a modern statute (post, § 1828) prescribes the usual form.

For an interpreter, the form is adapted to his specific function.[5]

The form of oath is to be that one which binds the particular witness; in other words, its force is to be tested subjectively.[6] It would seem to follow that, if the witness recognizes degrees of bindingness in different forms, the highest efficacy should be secured by administering that which in his opinion is most binding: [7]

1820, Lord ERSKINE, in Queen Caroline's Trial, 2 Hans. Parl. Deb., 2d ser., 911: "When I was counsel in a cause tried in the court of King's Bench, an important witness called against me . . . stated that he would hold up his hand and would swear, but that he would not kiss the Book. . . . He gave a reason, which seemed to me a very absurd one, 'because it is written in the Revelations that the angel standing upon the sea held up his hand.' I said, 'This does not apply to your case; for, in the first place, you are no angel; secondly, you cannot tell how the angel would have sworn if he had stood on dry ground, as you do.' Lord Kenyon sent into the Common Pleas, to consult Lord Chief Justice Eyre, who expressed himself of opinion that, although the witness was not of any particular sect, yet if he stated (whether his reason was a good or a bad one) that there was a particular mode of swearing which was most consistent with his feelings of the obligation of an oath, this mode ought to be adopted. So the witness was sworn in his own fashion."

§ 1819. Time of Administration and of Objection; Omission; Waiver of Error. (a) The desire to save the time required to repeat the oath to each

[4] The following are earlier variants: 1660, Mass. Revised Laws and Liberties, "Presidents and Forms," p. 86 ("You swear by the Living God that the evidence you shall give to this Court concerning the cause now in question shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, So help you God, etc."); 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, before the House of Lords, Jardine's Crim. Tr., I, 176 (a witness was sworn in the following formula: "The evidence that you shall give before the peers and noblemen here assembled shall be the truth and the whole truth").

The orthodox custom of kissing the Book has come to be generally recognized as both repulsive and unsanitary; celluloid covers are sometimes provided (20 Montreal Legal News 274). But it should be clearly understood that the ceremony of kissing is for most persons a wholly unessential feature. England has by statute abolished the practice (Oaths Act, 1909, quoted post, § 1828).

[5] 1786, Ruston's Case, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 408 (an interpreter for a deaf and dumb person was sworn "well and truly to interpret" to the witness "the questions and demands made by the Court to the said J. R. and his answers made to them"). Statutes prescribing a form for interpreters are noted post, § 1828.

[6] The witness therefore must not be forced to take an inapplicable form of oath after the propriety of another form appears; here his own declaration as to his belief and the binding form will usually suffice, but the trial judge should determine: 1912, R. v. Lee Tuck, 4 Alta. 388 (the witness, a Chinese, declared that he was a Christian and wished to be sworn upon the Bible; but the trial judge ordered the ceremony of burning the paper to be used; held, error, on the facts).

[7] Accord: 1903, Birmingham R. & E. Co. v. Mason, 137 Ala. 342, 34 So. 207 (question on cross-examination whether a Jewish witness considered an oath binding when taken without the hat on, allowed).

Contra: 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 284; s. c., Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's ed., I, 142 (holding irrelevant a question whether he considered another form more binding); 1911, State v. Browning, 153 Ia. 37, 133 N. W. 330 (Jew). And this rule has been repudiated by statute in many jurisdictions: post, § 1828.

Compare the doctrines of § 1820, par. c, post.

witness has led to a custom of administering it at once to all the witnesses in a group at the opening of the testimony.[1] This practice is not in violation of principle. But it is objectionable; first, because its hurried practicality lessens the solemnity of the occasion; secondly, because the influence upon the witness' mind has somewhat diminished by the time he is called to the stand; and thirdly, because it leads to errors and confusion. There is much skepticism in modern times about the effect and value of the oath. No doubt the abatement of theological interest, and the rationalization of popular theology, have tended to diminish the subjective potency of the oath (post, § 1827). But whatever value it still has is frittered away in modern times by the irreverent and perfunctory administration of it. Before its abandonment is considered, we should at least seek to restore its efficacy to the maximum degree nowadays conceivable, by reforming the practice of administering it. Judges are censurable for having allowed clerks of courts to fall into the thoughtless, trivial, and degenerate modern practice.

(b) This modern practice does not abate the ordinary rule that the failure to make an objection to competency at the proper time is a waiver (ante, §§ 18, 486). Hence, if a witness who has not taken the oath is by inadvertence put on the stand, the opponent's subsequent discovery and objection should not avail; [2]

§ 1819. [1] 1897, Com. v. Jongrass, 181 Pa. 172, 37 Atl. 207 (the clerk need not repeat the oath each time that a foreign witness is called; here the interpreter administered it). The following ruling is of course correct: 1897, State v. Thompson, 141 Mo. 408, 42 S. W. 949 (administration to an expert witness before his extrajudicial study of the material is not necessary).

[2] CANADA: 1882, Richards v. Hugh, 51 L. J. Q. B. 361 (witness deposing on affirmation, without oath; a party not objecting at the time, held to have waived).

IRELAND: 1852, Birch v. Somerville, 2 Ir. C. L. R. 243 (a peer having testified without a legal oath, the party calling him and not objecting was held to have waived).

UNITED STATES: 1888, Smith v. State, 81 Ga. 480, 8 S. E. 187; 1905, Rhodes v. State, 122 Ga. 568, 50 S. E. 361 (after verdict); 1905, Southern R. Co. v. Ellis, 123 Ga. 614, 51 S. E. 594; 1859, Slauter v. Whitelock, 12 Ind. 338 ("If it was known before the jury retired, the mistake could have been corrected by swearing the witness and rehearing the evidence"; failure to make a motion on discovery "would amount to an acquiescence"); 1904, State v. Smith, 124 Ia. 334, 100 N. W. 40, semble (a failure to object to an inadvertent omission of the oath is a waiver); 1833, Cady v. Norton, 14 Pick. Mass. 236 ("The defendant, knowing that the witness had not been sworn, before the cause went to the jury, without giving notice thereof to the Court or taking an exception, has waived his right to except, after a verdict"); 1889, State v. Hope, 100 Mo. 347, 13 S. W. 490 ("An oath may be waived . . . either expressly, or by going forward in the matter without inquiry or objection"); 1906, People v. McAdoo, 184 N. Y. 304, 77 N. E. 260 (police-commissioner's hearing, upon three charges; a witness having inadvertently failed to take oath on a recall to speak to one of the charges, the defendant's knowing failure to object, and his cross-examination of the witness, held a waiver); 1909, U. S. v. Perez, 13 P. I. 287; 1912, People v. Coll, 18 P. R. 355, 364; 1895, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (after counsel has cross-examined, "having thus gone forward without inquiry or objection," there is an implied waiver); 1893, Goldsmith v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 112, 22 S. W. 405 (on a motion for new trial it is too late to raise the question).

Contra: 1904, Lo Toon v. Terr., 16 Haw. 351, 356, semble (but here the presumption of an interpreter having been duly sworn was applied); 1829, Hawks v. Baker, 6 Greenl. Me. 72 (omission not discovered till after verdict; held, no waiver, and a new trial granted; leading opinion, by Mellen, C. J.; its fallacy lies in the assumption that in administering the oath "the counsel for the opposite party has no concern with the transaction"; this is contrary to the fundamental principle, ante, § 18, by which the opponent must watch for all violations of the rules of evidence if he cares to take advantage of them); 1898, Barr v. State, — Miss. —, 23 So. 628 (following the preceding case).

nor should the opponent, after a witness has taken the oath, be allowed to inquire as to its binding effect upon him.[3]

(c) Whether the omission of the oath, without fault of the objector, is an error material to require a new trial (ante, § 21) is a larger question.[4]

2. Capacity to take the Oath

§ 1820. Mode of ascertaining Capacity. The process of ascertaining the capacity of taking the oath raises two classes of questions: first, the sources to be consulted in ascertaining the capacity; next, the rules, if any, which determine for certain kinds of persons the existence of such capacity.

In ascertaining the capacity to take the oath, the inquiry resolves itself into this objective: Does this proffered witness hold the necessary belief?

(a) In the first place, this inquiry falls to the party objecting, i.e. the burden is on the objector to show the witness' lack of the necessary belief.[1] The examination of a child, however, is made usually by the judge; though either counsel has of course the right to supplement it by questions tending to bring out whatever may be in favor of his contention.[2]

[3] Accord: Can. 1915, Shajoo Ram v. Rex, 26 D. L. R. 267, Can. Sup. (perjury by a Hindoo when testifying through an interpreter; failure to object that the form of oath was not binding, held not to exonerate him); U. S. 1905, Curtis v. Lehmann, 115 La. 40, 38 So. 887 (where the oath is taken in the usual form without objection, that form will be presumed to be the binding one); 1921, Brown v. State, — Nebr. —, 185 N. W. 344 (Mexican; alleged error, pointed out on appeal, that the most binding form was not used, held unavailable for one who did not at the time of the testimony object specifically or interrogate the witness for the purpose); 1916, State v. Riddell, 38 R. I. 506, 96 Atl. 531 (fraudulent arson; the witness' answers showed him to be an atheist; but as defendant did not object nor examine him until after he was sworn, nor after disclosure of his atheism ask for an affirmation under G. L. 1909, c. 32, § 10, the objection was held ineffectual). Contra: 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 284; s. c., Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's ed., I. 142. This ruling has apparently been repudiated by the English statute of 1888: post, § 1828. Not decided: 1922, Foy v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 269.

A different rule should perhaps obtain where the idiocy of one sworn is discovered after his testimony is begun; here he may be examined and rejected if incapable: 1866, R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 38.

[4] Eng. 1824, R. v. Kiddy, 4 Dowl. & R. 734 ("Swearing him after his examination is taken is a very incorrect mode of proceeding"; U. S. 1920, Sears v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 264 Fed. 257 (failure to administer the oath to two witnesses, held immaterial, partly because of counsel's knowledge of it, and partly because of defendant's admission of the facts testified to); 1903, Langford v. U. S., 4 Ind. T. 567, 76 S. W. 111 (citing the precedents); 1898, People v. Board of Police Com'rs, 155 N. Y. 40, 49 N. E. 257 (hearing before a police commissioner; the commissioner intentionally omitted to swear any of the witnesses, erroneously believing that his power to act needed not to be based on sworn testimony; the omission was held to invalidate the decision); 1918, People v. Fisher, 223 N. Y. 459, 119 N. E. 845 (oath of official interpreter at a former hearing, presumed); 1872, Thompson v. State, 37 Tex. 121; 1900, Ogden v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 58 S. W. 1018; 1901, State v. Williams, 49 W. Va. 220, 38 S. E. 495; 1916, Karakutza v. State, 163 Wis. 293, 156 N. W. 965 (murder).

Swearing the witness, and causing him to re-testify before close of testimony, cures the irregularity: 1905, Southern R. Co. v. Ellis, 123 Ga. 614, 51 S. E. 594 (on being sworn, to cure the error, the witness may merely state that what he had testified was true); 1905, State v. Exum, 138 N. C. 599, 50 S. E. 283.

§ 1820. [1] 1892, Gray v. Macallum, 2 Br. C. 104 (the trial judge held not bound to examine the witness; the objecting counsel must do so); 1854, Com. v. Smith, 2 Gray Mass. 516, Shaw, C. J.; 1909, Pumphrey v. State, 84 Nebr. 636, 122 N. W. 19 (a Japanese).

Compare §§ 486, 497, ante.

[2] 1921, People v. Delaney, — Cal. App. —, 199 Pac. 896 (lewd conduct with a child: held that in the particular case the trial court should have allowed 'voir dire' examination by defendant's counsel; whether counsel has an absolute right, not decided; careful opinion by Finlayson, P. J.).

It has been ruled that the judge may not

(b) As to the evidence to be used in showing this, more or less doubt has prevailed. There are three possible methods, — either exclusively the witness' own answers to interrogations; or, exclusively other persons' testimony about his former expressions of opinion; or, both of these.

The first of these methods, for adults, seems to have been generally discredited; i. e. the witness' own answers are not conclusive as to his belief.[3]

The second seems to be a purely American doctrine,[4] growing up early in the 1800s, at a time when, on the one hand, the rules of witness-privilege were not clearly settled, and, on the other, the emphasis of current thought was upon freedom of faith and action, supposed in this country to be peculiarly guaranteed. A tendency thus arose to extend the privilege of witnesses to interrogations about theological belief. The argument was also put forward that it was illogical to receive testimony, even on 'voir dire,' from a person whose very capacity to respect the sanctions of all testimony was in issue.[5]

It is enough to say, of the privilege argument, that no such privilege was known to the orthodox common law, and that it is inconsistent to hold that an infidel is presumably a falsifier, and, in the next moment, to accept a possible falsifier provided he can succeed in concealing his moral deficiency; as to the logical argument, it must be taken to be in theory unanswerable, but practically of little force in view of the artificial nature of the general principle.

It thus became a widely accepted doctrine that the proffered witness could not be interrogated as to his theological belief, and that the reliance must be upon other sources of evidence, i. e. upon testimony from those who were familiar with his expressed opinions. There was, however, no agreement as examine the child in private: 1841, State v. Morea, 2 Ala. 278. But this seems unsound, provided counsel are allowed to attend; for in the public court-room it may be impossible to prevent the child from being overcome by fear or diffidence; accord: 1880, McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286, 287, 6 N. W. 669, and the statutes for juvenile courts, cited post, § 1835.

In Hughes v. R. Co., 65 Mich. 10, 31 N. W. 603 (1887), it was said that the trial judge must himself make the examination, and not leave it to counsel; but this seems unsound.

In Young v. State, 122 Ga. 725, 50 S. E. 946 (1905), it is held that the judge cannot decline to examine a child, on demand by the party objecting; but this seems a pedantic interference with the trial Court's discretion; contra: 1909, Simmons v. State, 158 Ala. 8, 48 So. 606 (the trial judge's discretion controls, as to conducting the examination himself, or letting counsel conduct it).

Should the examination take place necessarily on 'voir dire'? Yes, of course: 1907, People v. Rivera, 12 P. R. 386, 391 (murder; child of five years, required to be examined before testifying, not afterwards).

For statutes as to examination of a child, see post, § 1828; also ante, § 508, in regard to examination to learn general testimonial capacity. For instructing the child, see post, § 1821.

[3] 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 284.

[4] 1861, Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360 (interrogation held proper; Bramwell, B.: "The invariable practice is to take the evidence of the witness himself"; here on the 'voir dire').

[5] 1861, Bramwell, B., in Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360 ("By hypothesis, he is made incredible by a statement which is not to be believed"); 1846, Scott, J., in Perry v. Com., 3 Gratt. 632, 642 ("If, as the objection supposes, he is incapable of telling the truth, he will deny his opinions, and what is the test worth? If he is honest enough to subject himself to the disability rather than tell a lie, why exclude him?"). Compare Bentham's arguments, post, 1827.

to the reasons for this. Some Courts preferred the argument from privilege.[6] Others, and the majority, preferred the argument from logic.[7] Still others laid down the rule with a mention of both reasons or of neither.[8]

A number of Courts, and these mostly of later date, have abandoned the doctrine entirely, and employ the third method [9] (the natural and convenient one) of consulting both sources — the witness' own answers, as well as the testimony of others.

(c) Finally, when such questioning is allowed, it must of course not extend beyond the queries necessary to elicit the essentials of belief; additional inquiries directed to bringing out minor points of belief are not to be allowed.[10] There is here again, perhaps, something of the notion of privilege, and yet on the ground of irrelevancy such evidence should equally be rejected.

§ 1821. Capacity of Children. (a) It was formerly thought that for children there was an age below which the incapacity to take the oath was beyond doubt and was to be regarded as always wanting.[1] This notion was probably due to the unwarranted transfer into the law of Evidence of some principles of substantive law, by which certain ages, especially that of seven years, were thought to mark the beginnings of capacity for various purposes. But this view was finally repudiated in a case of much deliberation:

> 1779, R. v. Brasier, East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 443: "An infant, though under the age of seven years, may be sworn in a criminal prosecution, provided such infant appears on strict examination by the Court to possess a sufficient knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath. For there is no precise or fixed rule as to the time within which infants are excluded from giving evidence; but their admissibility depends upon the sense and reason they entertain of the danger and impiety of falsehood, which is to be collected from their answers to questions propounded to them by the Court; but if they are found incompetent to take an oath, their testimony cannot be received."

[6] 1914, Fernandez v. State, 16 Ariz. 269, 144 Pac. 640; 1829, Com. v. Bachelder, Thacher's Cr. C. 197; 1854, Com. v. Smith, 2 Gray Mass. 516; 1879, Free v. Buckingham, 59 N. H. 225, semble.

For a further examination of the privilege not to disclose theological belief, see post, § 2213. For theological belief as discrediting a witness, see ante, § 935. For statutes on the present point, see post, § 1828.

[7] 1809, Curtiss v. Strong, 4 Day Conn. 55; 1810, Swift, Evidence, 49; 1836, Com. v. Wyman, Thacher's Cr. C. Mass. 436; 1841, Smith v. York, 18 Me. 159; 1820, Jackson v. Gridley, 18 Johns. N. Y. 220; 1841, Cubbison v. M'Creary 2 W. & S. Pa. 263.

[8] 1828, Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 70; 1881, Searcy v. Miller, 57 Ia. 613, 10 N. W. 912; 1819, Den v. Vancleve, 2 South. N. J. 653.

[9] 1856, Central M. T. R. Co. v. Rockafellow, 17 Ill. 553 (but the extrinsic testimony is better); 1890, Hronek v. People, 134 Ill. 139, 150, 24 N. E. 861 (not decided; but "the better practice" forbids questioning the witness); 1879, Arnd v. Amling, 53 Md. 197, semble; 1858, Harrel v. State, 38 Tenn. 126; 1871, Odell v. Koppee, 5 Heisk. 91, and the cases in the next note.

[10] 1790, R. v. Taylor, Peake, N. P. Cas. 11; 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 284; 1796, Beardsley v. Foot, 2 Root 399; 1871, Donkle v. Kohn, 44 Ga. 271, semble; 1879, Free v. Buckingham, 59 N. H. 225.

Compare the doctrine of § 1818, note 7, ante, and of § 935, ante (discrediting by theological belief); also § 2213, post (privilege as to theological belief).

For the mode of examining a child, see the next section.

§ 1821. [1] 1628, Co. Litt. 6 b, 247 b; 1680, Hale, Pl. Cr., I, 302, 634, II, 279, 283; 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 293; 1704, Young v. Slaughterford, 11 Mod. 228; 1726, R. v. Travers, 1 Stra. 700.

Since this decision, the natural rule has been clearly accepted, that there is no specific age below which capacity will always be deemed wanting.[2] The capacity of the infant, therefore, depending upon the circumstances of its understanding as exhibited in each instance, is to be determined by the trial Court.[3] In a few jurisdictions, however, a trace of the old notion is still preserved in a rule that children under a certain age — usually ten or fourteen years — will not be assumed to be capable, so that their capacity must first be shown.[4]

(b) The nature of the child's belief is in theory to be judged by the same theological tests ordinarily applicable (ante, § 1817). For children, however, it is customary to employ simpler language and more concrete tests than are usual with adults. The practice traditionally followed is illustrated in the following colloquies:[5]

[2] Accord: 1769, Blackstone, Comm., IV, 214; 1840, R. v. Perkins, 2 Moo. Cr. C. 139, per Alderson, B.; s. c., 9 C. & P. 395, 399, per Parke, B.; U. S. 1889, McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 150, 7 So. 35; 1867, Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 96; 1869, Warner v. State, 25 Ark. 447; 1858, People v. Bernal, 10 Cal. 66; 1902, Featherstone v. People, 194 Ill. 325, 62 N. E. 684 ("The requirement is not one of age, but of understanding"); 1889, State v. Severson, 78 Ia. 653, 43 N. W. 533, semble; 1876, State v. Richie, 28 La. An. 327; 1891, Davis v. State, 31 Nebr. 247, 47 N. W. 855; 1905, Freasier v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 84 S. W. 360; and the cases in the ensuing notes usually declare the rule also.

For the same principle, as applied to a child's capacity irrespective of the oath, see ante, § 507.

[3] Statutes have often attempted to deal with the question; see post, § 1828, where the statutes expressly dealing with the oath are collected, and ante, § 488, where those defining the general capacity of children are placed. With the following decisions illustrating the general principle should be compared those cited infra, note 5, dealing with the sufficiency of the child's belief, and ante, § 507, dealing with the child's general capacity as a witness: Ala. 1874, Wade v. State, 50 Ala. 164; 1903, White v. State, 136 Ala. 58, 34 So. 177 (child under twelve, excluded on the facts); 1904, Landthrift v. State, 140 Ala. 114, 37 So. 287 (rape; a child of eleven held qualified on the facts); Ariz. 1898, Donnelley v. Terr., 5 Ariz. 291, 52 Pac. 368 (child of nearly seven held incompetent on the facts); Fla. 1912, Lassiter v. State, 64 Fla. 337, 59 So. 894; Ga. 1873, Peterson v. State, 47 Ga. 524, 527 (trial Court's discretion in admitting a child of seven or eight, held proper); 1878, Johnson v. State, 61 Ga. 35 (similar); 1885, Johnson v. State, 76 Ga. 76 (child of ten, held incompetent on the facts); 1887, Moore v. State, 79 Ga. 498, 5 S. E. 51; 1898, Mills v. State, 104 Ga. 502, 30 S. E. 778 (child of ten, held competent on the facts); 1900, Miller v. State, 109 Ga. 512, 35 S. E. 152 (child of eight, excluded on the facts); Ia. 1889, State v. Severson, 78 Ia. 653, 655, 43 N. W. 533 (child of twelve, held competent on the facts); 1917, State v. Yates, 181 Ia. 539, 164 N. W. 798; Mass. 1852, Com. v. Hills, 10 Cush. 532; 1861, Com. v. Mullins, 2 All. 296; 1886, Com. v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 580, 8 N. E. 408; 1896, Com. v. Robinson, 165 Mass. 426, 43 N. E. 121 (child of five years and nine months, admitted); N. H. 1876, Day v. Day, 56 N. H. 316; N. J. 1907, State v. Labriola, 75 N. J. L. 483, 67 Atl. 386; N. Y. 1917, Nowakowski v. New York & N. S. Tr. Co., 220 N. Y. 51, 114 N. E. 1042 (child of eight to nine years, excluded); N. C. 1878, State v. Edwards, 79 N. C. 650; Pa. 1898, Com. v. Wilson, 186 Pa. 1, 40 Atl. 283 (boy of thirteen, presumed competent).

[4] Besides the following decisions, compare also the statutes post, § 1828, and those collected ante, § 507, which deal with the child's general capacity, but sometimes cover also the present subject: 1907, R. v. Armstrong, 15 Ont. L. R. 47 (child of twelve); 1867, Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 96; 1858, People v. Bernal, 10 Cal. 66; 1876, State v. Richie, 28 La. An. 327.

[5] In the following cases will be found other examples: ENGLAND: 1861, R. v. Holmes, 2 F. & F. 788 (the child said its prayers and believed it was bad to tell a lie; accepted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1920, Oliver v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 267 Fed. 544 (a child of thirteen need not be able to define the meaning of an oath); Alabama: 1879, Carter v. State, 63 Ala. 53; 1882, Beason v. State, 72 Ala. 191; 1895, Grimes v. State, 105 Ala. 86, 17 So. 184 ("if she knew where she would go when she died, if she swore a lie and did bad," etc.; accepted); 1896, Williams v. State, 109 Ala. 64, 19 So. 530 (a statement that she would "go to hell"; admitted); 1906, Jones v. State, 145 Ala. 51, 40 So. 947 (a girl who had been to

1684, Braddon's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1127, 1148. Attorney-General: "What age are you of?" Witness: "I am thirteen, my lord." A.-G.: "Do you know what an oath is?" W.: "No." L. C. J. Jefferies: "Suppose you should tell a lie; do you know who is the father of liars?" W.: "Yes." L. C. J.: "Who is it?" W.: "The devil." L. C. J.: "And if you should tell a lie, do you know what will become of you?" W.: "Yes." L. C. J.: "If you should call God to witness to a lie, what would become of you then?" W.: "I should go to hell-fire." L. C. J.: "That is a terrible thing;" and the child was admitted.[6]

1857, Spollen's Trial, p. 44 (Ire.). Lucy Spollen, the defendant's daughter, ten years old, was produced and questioned by C. J. LEFROY: "Do you know the nature of an oath?" "Yes, sir." "And the consequence of taking a false oath?" "Yes, sir." "What punishment?" "Going to hell." "Were you ever taught to say that?" "No, sir." "How did you learn it?" "I was told, sir." "When were you told?" "When I first took an oath." "And were you never told until you first took an oath?" "No, sir." "And when did you first take an oath?" "After my father was arrested." "Would you ever know that yourself unless you were told by the person who administered the oath?" "No, sir." Then, upon questions by the counsel for the prosecution, she told of regular church-going and of daily prayers, and further said: "It is a bad thing to tell a lie. I learned that people who told lies would be punished by God in the next world. I never knew before what an oath was, but I knew that God would punish people who told lies." Mr. J. MONAGHAN: "Administer the oath."

1885, SIMPSON, C. J., in State v. Belton, 24 S. C. 185, 186, 188: "This witness was a [colored] boy about twelve years of age; he seems to have been a boy of at least ordinary intelligence; and, although he had learned from his mother, since dead, the Lord's Prayer when he was five years old, and according to his statement had repeated it every day since, yet he said he had never heard of a God or the devil or of heaven or hell or of the Bible, church and Sunday school, and thought that, if she lied, God could put her in jail, excluded); 1906, Gordon v. State, 147 Ala. 42, 41 So. 847 (child of twelve, admitted, though she did not "know the nature of a judicial oath"); Arkansas: 1910, Hart v. State, — Ark. —, 124 S. W. 781 ("Do you know what you mean when you hold up your hand and take the oath?" "Yes, sir; tell the truth." "If you was not to tell the truth, what would be done to you?" "I don't know, sir." "Would it be wrong?" "Yes, sir"; this was held not to have enough theology in it; McCulloch, J., diss., justly terms the decision "a backward step"); Georgia: 1875, McMath v. State, 55 Ga. 307; 1906, Young v. State, 125 Ga. 584, 54 S. E. 82 (a child of twelve, who did not know what is the "sanctity of an oath," but otherwise was theologically fit, admitted). 1911, Berry v. State, 9 Ga. App. 868, 72 S. E. 433 (sensible opinion by Russell, J.); Illinois: 1873, Draper v. Draper, 68 Ill. 17 (the witness would go to hell if she did not tell the truth; accepted); Indiana: 1858, Blackwell v. State, 11 Ind. 196; 1869, Weldon v. State, 32 Ind. 82; Iowa: 1907, State v. Meyer, 135 Ia. 507, 113 N. W. 322; 1917, State v. Yates, 181 Ia. 539, 164 N. W. 798; Massachusetts: 1921, Com. v. Tatisos, — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 495 ("The ultimate test cannot be the amount of moral training and religious understanding, but must depend upon the existence of understanding sufficient to comprehend the difference between truth and falsehood, the wickedness of the latter and the obligation and duty to tell the truth, and, in a general way, belief that failure to perform the obligation will result in punishment. The child need not and probably will not understand this in all its fullness; it is unnecessary for her to do so."); Oklahoma: 1915, Walker v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 179, 153 Pac. 209; Pennsylvania: 1905, Com. v. Furman, 211 Pa. 549, 60 Atl. 1089 (good example of a liberal ruling); Tennessee: 1871, Vincent v. State, 3 Heisk. 121 ("if she swore to a lie, she would go to the bad world"; accepted); Texas: 1873, Davidson v. State, 39 Tex. 129; 1920, Williams v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 214, 225 S. W. 173; 1922, Rodriguez v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 236 S. W. 726; Washington: 1917, State v. Smith, 95 Wash. 271, 163 Pac. 759 (girl of eight); West Virginia: 1893, State v. Michael, 37 W.Va. 568, 16 S. E. 803.

The following case seems to stand alone: 1894, Williams v. U. S., 3 D. C. App. 335, 340 ("A child that has an adequate sense of the impropriety of falsehood does understand the nature of an oath in the proper sense of the term, even though she may not know the meaning of the word 'oath' and may never have heard that word used").

Compare the cases cited post, § 1828, dealing with the effect of constitutional removal of theological incapacity.

[6] Other early examples: 1679, Atkin's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 231, 241; 1680, Giles' Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1129, 1147.

and that 'he had never heard and had no idea what became of the good or of the bad after death.' He said, however, that he had heard it said that the bad man caught those who lied, cursed, etc., and upon being examined he repeated the Lord's Prayer. The presiding judge, in his report of the case as to this matter, states as follows: 'As for the colored youth, he manifested an unusual sense of the efficacy of prayer and the future torments by the bad man awaiting those who speak falsely, though his answers as to a God, heaven, etc., were singular.' . . . Did he believe in a God and his providence? He stated to the Court he had never heard of a God or of a heaven or of a hell or of a devil. How then could he have a belief in the existence and providence of a Great Being, of whom up to the time when he was offered as a witness he had never heard even? Such a belief under such circumstances seems impossible. In the absence of such a belief he was incompetent, under the authorities cited."

1900, Fort, J., in State v. Cracker, 65 N. J. L. 410, 47 Atl. 643: "The boy under examination, to ascertain whether he should be sworn, was asked and answered the following questions: 'Q. Do you know what it is to take an oath? A. No, sir. Q. Do you go to Sunday school? A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you know what will happen to you if you do not tell the truth? A. Yes, sir. Q. What will happen? A. It is a sin. Q. Have you any idea as to the punishment which will follow if you do not tell the truth? A. Yes, sir. Q. What? A. They will put me in the reform school. Q. After you die, do you know what happens? Do you expect to live forever? A. No, sir. Q. After you have done living, what becomes of you then? A. Then I shall go to Heaven. Q. Suppose you have not been entirely good; what becomes of you then? A. Then I shall go to Hell.' It seems to me that this youth, judged by what is ordinarily considered orthodox, had a comprehensive idea of the rewards and punishments incident to honest and dishonest living, and in addition knew clearly what punishment the law inflicted for perjury, viz. confinement in the reform school."

But it may be doubted whether this analysis of a child's belief, which sometimes becomes a far from edifying proceeding, is ever of any real profit. A child's inclination to tell the truth or the opposite is apt to be more a matter of instinct and of previous training and surroundings than of a conscious reflection upon the prospects of a future state. It has already been suggested (ante, § 509, post, § 1828) that, for any purpose whatever, the preferable course is to accept a child's story for what it seems to be worth, as ascertainable upon testifying, and not to impose any fixed limitations. For the same reasons, any theological tests, especially when applied in crude form by laymen in court, must be more or less inappropriate.[7] So long as they continue to be employed, the practice will exhibit from time to time an artificiality and incongruousness meriting the celebrated satire of that novelist whose pen so often chastised the law's abuses:

1852, Charles Dickens, Bleak House, Chap. XI; Little Jo, the crossing-sweeper, is called to the coroner's inquest, to say what he knows of the dead lodger, and these are his answers: "'Name, Jo. Nothing else that he knows on . . . No father, no mother, no friends. Never been to school. What's "home"? Knows a broom's a broom, and knows it's wicked to tell a lie. Don't recollect who told him about the broom, or about the lie, but knows both. Can't exactly say what'll be done to him after he's dead if he tells a lie to the gentlemen here, but believes it'll be something wery bad to punish him, and serve him right, and so he'll tell the truth.' 'This won't do, gentlemen!' says the coroner, with a melancholy shake of the head. 'Don't you think you can receive his evidence, sir?' asks an attentive juryman. 'Out of the question,' says the coroner. 'You have heard the boy. "Can't exactly say," won't do, you know. We can't take that, in a court of justice, gentlemen! It's terrible depravity! Put the boy aside.' Boy put aside; to the great edification of the audience; especially of Little Swills, the comic vocalist."

[7] How coarse and irreverent the spectacle of examination into infantile theology often becomes is seen in the following current anecdote (New York letter to the Chicago Tribune, June 7, 1901): "Emma Gaukof, eight years old, of West Hoboken, answered readily in court at Jersey City to-day a question that has puzzled the profoundest theologians. Questioning her understanding of the value of an oath, Lawyer Max Salinger asked what became of little girls who did not tell the truth. 'Why, sir, they go to hell,' replied Emma. 'And where is hell?' questioned the lawyer. 'I don't think the counsellor could answer that question himself,' remarked Judge John A. Blair. 'I know where it is, sir,' said the girl. 'It's up somewhere near Schuetzen Park, Union Hill. I know it's there, — 'cause I heard a man say once that he was going there to raise it!' The child was permitted to give testimony."

An example of the sound and sensible way to ascertain a child's capacity is found in the following judicial anecdote:

1908, Hon. E. J. SHERMAN, Justice of the Superior Court of Massachusetts, in "Recollections of a Long Life," p. 160: "A case was being tried before me against the Boston Elevated Railroad, and a little boy, perhaps seven years old, was called as a witness. The counsel for the defence objected to his being used as a witness, as he was too young to understand and appreciate an oath, and asked the court to examine him and ascertain that fact. The boy looked frightened and as if he was about to cry. He took the witness stand close beside the bench. His name was John ——. I said to him in a low voice, as if talking confidentially, 'John, do you play base-ball?' He replied, 'Yes, Judge.' He was a little short fellow, and I said, 'I guess you play short stop.' 'You are right, Judge,' replied Johnnie.

"By this time all disposition to be frightened or cry had disappeared. I then asked him about his school, etc., and he showed unusual brightness. I remarked, 'This boy will do, he is all right.'

"He made one of the best witnesses called in the case. If I had said to him in a stern voice, 'Do you understand the nature of an oath? What will happen to you if you tell a lie?' as is sometimes asked in like cases, the boy would have broken down in a crying spell."

(c) But suppose that the youthful witness is shown upon examination not to have at the time the required belief. Does exclusion follow necessarily and absolutely? Or is there some way of putting the child's mind into a condition fit to be properly influenced by the oath. If there were any real vitality in the test, if an indispensable element were the active and ingrained sense of responsibility to superhuman power, then it might well be said that the witness was absolutely incompetent. Only a long course of training could produce the proper appreciation of the oath? But if the test is after all only a formal one, if practically the necessary belief is only an acceptance, on authority, of certain theological propositions unprovable by personal knowledge, then it is perhaps not inconsistent to allow its content to be explained and accepted in five minutes or some longer time proportionate to the child's intelligence; in other words, the judge may instruct the child what this belief is, and the child may accept it on this authority and be as well prepared to take the oath on the spot as it would have been after receiving the same dictation from parental authority.

This, then, has been a point of grave judicial discussion — whether the child-witness may become competent to take the oath after an interlocutory instruction by the court. It is settled, in this country at least, and notwithstanding a protest by Mr. Justice Patteson,[8] that a previous general religious education is not necessary, and that the judge may then and there impart theological instruction and produce the necessary belief; [9] and that for this purpose a temporary postponement of the trial is allowable.[10] Of course, if between the intervals of successive trials, a child at first incompetent grows in intelligence and receives proper parental instruction, no objection can be made to its taking the oath at the second trial.[11]

§ 1822. Capacity of Persons Mentally Defective or Deranged. There was in earlier legal annals some difference of opinion whether persons of weak or unsound mind were capable of taking the oath.[1] But in modern times the more rational principle has been accepted (as in the case of infants) that it must depend upon the mental condition of each witness: [2]

1851, CAMPBELL, L. C. J., in R. v. Hill, 2 Den. & P. C. C. 254: "It is for the judge to say whether the insane person has the sense of religion in his mind and whether he understands the nature and sanction of an oath. . . . A man may in one sense be 'non compos mentis,' and yet be aware of the nature and sanction of an oath."

The upholders of the propriety of judicial instruction of infants do not seem willing to admit that this principle is applicable to adults who are mentally capable though theologically uninformed; [3] yet the same process seems here also available.

§ 1823. Distinction between Oath-Capacity and Testimonial Qualifications. The distinction is clear between the capacity to take an oath and the moral qualifications to testify.

The oath is a special test or security, superadded and applied to persons assumed to be otherwise qualified as witnesses; and because the oath cannot have efficacy without the existence of a certain belief, the lack of that belief

[8] 1838, R. v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 320.

[9] Ante 1795, Anon., 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 430, n. (by all the judges); 1849, R. v. Baylis, 4 Cox Cr. 23; U. S. 1879, Carter v. State, 63 Ala. 53; 1900, State v. Todd, 110 Ia. 631, 82 N. W. 322 (instruction by the county attorney); 1886, Com. v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 578, 8 N. E. 408 ("provided she was of sufficient age and intellect to receive instruction"); 1921, Com. v. Tatisos, — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 495 (instructed by a priest); 1876, Day v. Day, 56 N. H. 316; 1839, People v. McNair, 21 Wend. N. Y. 608; 1878, State v. Edwards, 79 N. C. 650; 1904, North Texas C. Co. v. Bostick, 98 Tex. 239, 83 S. W. 12 (a boy nine years old was instructed by counsel; but this the Court disparaged; moreover, "it ought to appear that the answers . . . are not a parrot-like repetition of what he has been told to say").

[10] Anon., supra; Day v. Day, supra; 1846, R. v. Nicholas, 2 Cox Cr. 136, 2 C. & K. 246 (postponement refused, where the child was six years old; "where the defect is the result of immaturity," postponement is generally not desirable; otherwise, perhaps, for a child nine or ten years old).

[11] 1883, Kelly v. State, 75 Ala. 21.

§ 1822. [1] Comyn's Digest, "Testmoigne," A, 1; 1628, Coke upon Littleton, 6 b; 1801, Peake, Evidence, 122.

[2] Accord: Holcomb v. Holcomb, 28 Conn. 179; 1909, People v. Washor, 196 N. Y. 164, 89 N. E. 441 (trial Court's discretion).

Compare the learning as to mental capacity of such persons (irrespective of the oath), ante, §§ 492–501.

[3] 1824, 1 Moo. Cr. C. 86 (doubted); 1866, R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 33 (an idiot; adjournment refused, but the question left undecided).

Distinguish the following: 1903, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Reid, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 74 S. W. 99 (a deaf witness, who could not hear the words of the oath, admitted).

excludes the witness. So long, therefore, as the oath remained an indispensable requirement, there was a natural tendency to confuse the theological belief which it presupposes and that moral sense which underlies all truth-telling. With the dispensation of the oath, however, the latter element is forced into prominence, and the question arises whether a sense of moral responsibility is not necessary, as an ordinary testimonial qualification, especially likely to be wanting in infants and lunatics. This requirement has already been considered in its place, under the head of Testimonial Qualifications (ante, §§ 495, 506).

It should here be noticed that the earlier rulings, before the statutory dispensation of oaths (post, § 1828), are often ambiguous, in that it is often difficult to be certain whether they mean to deal solely with oath-capacity or to prescribe some independent moral qualifications. The statutes, moreover, which concern the latter topic (collected ante, § 488) are also sometimes in terms concerned with the oath-capacity.

3. Persons subjected to the Oath

§ 1824. Oath required for all Testimony delivered in Court; Interpreters. The oath, as a special additional security for credibility, belongs by its very nature to that class of securities which are capable of being applied only to testimonial statements made in court or before some judicial officer.

(1) It follows, then, that wherever the law sanctions the reception of testimonial statements not made in court or before a judicial officer, i.e. wherever exceptions to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1420) are allowed, the oath is dispensed with. Thus, the oath is required for statements made in depositions, but not for entries made in the regular course of business nor for statements of family history, nor for the other excepted classes of statements; except that for statutory affidavits (ante, § 1710) the very nature of the Exception presupposes an oath. That in these excepted classes an oath was not required has never been doubted. Yet, inconsistently, the theological capacity to take an oath has sometimes been predicated as a requirement, so that, if its lack appeared, the statement would be excluded. This notion is found in a few rulings dealing with dying declarations (ante, § 1443). It is of course unsound; for, if the oath is not required, the capacity to take it must be immaterial; the efficacy of the oath consists in the formal reminder of retribution at the moment of testifying, and not in the mere capacity to appreciate a reminder which is in fact not made; and not even the soundest believer could testify in court without the formality of the reminder.

(2) Conversely, for all testimonial statements made in court the oath is a requisite. Here comes into consideration the distinction between circumstantial and testimonial evidence (ante, § 25). This distinction is of considerable consequence in the application of the Hearsay rule, and the principles already examined (ante, § 1790) will suffice equally for the present situation. Instances, however, are comparatively rare. It is enough to note that unless there is offered, in some form or other, a testimonial statement (i.e. an assertion used for inferring the truth of the fact asserted) made in court, the oath is not an applicable requirement.[1]

It may be added that an interpreter,[2] and also a shower at a view,[3] is a kind of witness, and must be sworn.

§ 1825. Children, Peers, Accused Persons. (1) There was a time when it was doubted whether an infant was in all cases to be rejected when incapable of understanding the oath. But in R. v. Brasier [1] it was settled that there should be no exception.[2] Enlightened modern statutes (post, § 1828) have in a few jurisdictions relaxed this rule.

(2) It was at one time disputed whether a peer of the realm could not give his testimony in a court of justice with the same formality only as in the House of Lords, namely, by testifying "upon his honor"; but here too the oath-requirement was held inexorable.[3]

(3) Originally, an accused person was allowed to produce no witnesses; later, he might produce them, but they testified without oath; and finally they were allowed to be sworn.[4] Here, however, the exception, in the transition stage, was regarded not as an exception in his favor, but as the refusal of a privilege. So, also, in many jurisdictions, the concession of an accused person's right to testify was preceded by a stage in which he was allowed to make a "statement," but not under oath. Here, again, the practice was looked upon as a refusal to concede the ordinary guarantee of credibility, and not as a favored exemption.[5]

§ 1824. [1] 1886, Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36 (to show the extent of the plaintiff's paralysis, a doctor who had not been sworn thrust a pin into her body in the jury's presence during the trial; held, not improper because performed by a person unsworn; "so far as we are aware, the law recognizes no oaths to be administered upon the witness-stand except the ordinary oath to tell the truth or to interpret correctly from one language to another"; this seems erroneous; the doctor helped in bringing out the evidence, and should have been treated as a witness); Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 224, 234 (defendant, not being sworn, was not allowed to utter words for the purpose of testing a witness who spoke to the identity of his voice).

[2] 1848, R. v. Douglas, 13 Q. B. 42, 59, 66, 72, semble (the standing oath of an official interpreter for depositions suffices); 1911, People v. Kelly, 17 Cal. App. 447, 120 Pac. 46 (under P. C. §§ 686, 869, the transcript of a deposition taken through an interpreter need not show that the interpreter was sworn); 1908, People v. Western, 236 Ill. 104, 86 N. E. 188 (the oath need not be administered during the questions necessary for ascertaining his competency; but the jury should be removed at that time, on demand); 1809, Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 219, 226 (oath of an interpreter to a deposition must expressly appear to have been taken); and cases cited, ante, § 1810.

For the form of oath, see ante, § 1818.

[3] Ante, § 1802, where the form of oath is given.

§ 1825. [1] 1779, R. v. Brasier, East, Cr. Pl., I, 443, quoted ante, § 1821.

[2] Accord: 1921, State v. Brewer, — Del. —, 114 Atl. 604 (child of eight); 1861, Com. v. Mullins, 2 All. Mass. 296; 1845, People v. McGee, 1 Den. N. Y. 21 (including idiots); 1874, Smith v. State, 41 Tex. 352 (idiot); 1907, Hodd v. Tacoma, 45 Wash. 436, 88 Pac. 842. Compare the statutes cited post, § 1828.

[3] 1701, R. v. Preston, 1 Salk. 278; 1711, Meers v. Stoughton, 1 P. Wms. 146; 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 323, 470; 1725, L. C. Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 767, 1252.

Whether the King could without oath be a witness was also argued. In L. C. J. Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, III, 215, 4th ed., the learned author expresses an opinion against the exemption of the King, and examines the precedents. But as the King was privileged not to testify (post, § 2370), and if he did testify could probably do so by certificate (ante, § 1674), the question remained an academic one.

[4] 1702, St. 1 Anne, c. 9, § 3, and cases cited ante, § 575.

[5] Cases cited ante, § 579.

B. The Oath under Statutes

§ 1827. Abolition or Optional Dispensation of the Oath; Policy thereof. There is a clear distinction between the total abolition of the oath-security and the making it optional with the witness. The two rest on very different grounds of policy.

(1) It can hardly be denied that the moral efficacy of the oath has long since ceased to be what it once was. In the days when the 'judicium Dei' was no empty phrase, and the community believed in the serious possibility of the manifestation of truth by the Divine hand in striking down the perjurer before the multitude, the oath's efficacy was at its highest. It may be assumed that no appreciable part of the community now regard the oath in this light. What may be claimed for it to-day is merely the effect presupposed in the common-law theory already examined (ante, § 1816), namely, a solemn reminder of inevitable Divine punishment at some future time. This, then, being the mode of its efficacy, is there any reason why it should be abolished as a security designed to increase the probabilities of truthfulness?

It is impossible, in this place, to examine all that has been advanced for and against this proposal to abolish totally the oath-formality.[1] Observe, however, that the question is not whether persons not having a certain theological belief shall be excluded as witnesses; nor whether it shall be made optional for persons of various sorts; but whether persons having the sufficient belief shall be required to take it. Eliminating all argument as to the injustice of exclusion, by assuming that persons of atheistic belief, and persons having scruples of conscience, and infants, are allowed to dispense with it, there remains this class of persons who would be unquestionably capable of taking it; and the inquiry therefore reduces itself to this, Whether for such persons it should be required or abandoned? The determination of this is seen to depend upon three considerations: (a) Is this class of persons an inappreciable portion of the community? (b) Are they actually so little influenced by the solemnity that it adds nothing appreciably to their determination to speak truly? (c) Are there any extrinsic disadvantages overcoming the testimonial benefit thus secured? If either of these three questions can be answered in the affirmative, then, and only then, should the oath be abolished.

§ 1827. [1] The arguments on both sides may be found in the following places: 1823, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. II, c. VI, Bowring's ed., vol. 6, p. 308; 1823, Livingston, Introductory Report to the Code of Criminal Procedure, Works, ed. 1872, I, 399; 1828, Whately, Elements of Rhetoric, ed. 1858, pt. I, c. II, § 4; 1849, Denman, Speech in Parliament, Hans. Parl. Deb. June 22, vol. 106, 3d ser.; 1857, Reilly, Judicial Oaths, Jurid. Soc. Pap., I, 435; 1864, Maurice, Ought any person to be excluded from giving evidence on the ground of religious unbelief? Jurid. Soc. Pap., III, 95; 1868, T. C. Anstey, Judicial Oaths as Administered to Heathen Witnesses, Jurid. Soc. Pap., III, 371; 1860, Appleton, Evidence, c. XVI, 262; 1882, Thomas, Oaths in Legal Proceedings, North Amer. Rev. No. 310, Sept. 1882; 1895, M. D. Chalmers, Petty Perjury, Law Quarterly Rev., XI, 219; 1903, T. R. White, Oaths in Judicial Proceedings, American Law Register, N. s., XLII, 372 (the best consideration of the subject).

Now the answers to these questions must depend entirely upon experience; and experience must be chiefly a matter of locality, since the local conditions in all three respects may vary widely. No doubt in different localities the answers to these questions would differ. Yet, on the whole, it seems to be true that the answers have thus far been in the negative upon all three points. The class of persons whose belief makes them capable of being influenced by the prospect implied in an oath is decidedly the immense mass of the community. Furthermore, in practice these persons are apparently, for the most part, actually influenced for the better, in their mental operations on the witness-stand, by the imposition of the oath;[2] and, where experience looks to the contrary, the result has been due to the deplorable irreverence and triviality shown in the administration of the formality (ante, § 1819) rather than to the inherent inefficacy of the oath itself. Finally, there seem to be no real disadvantages (in spite of Mr. Bentham's ingenious suggestions) outweighing the gain in truthfulness produced by the oath.

There appears, therefore, in the present conditions, looked at as a whole, no reason to call for the abandonment of the oath for those persons whose belief makes them susceptible to its sanction.

(2) But the question of its invariable requirement from all persons whatever is an entirely different one. The true purpose of the oath is not to exclude any competent witness, but merely to add a stimulus to truthfulness wherever such a stimulus is feasible. Until the 1800s, however, this advanced notion of its purpose had not been reached. The requirement was inexorable; with the result that three classes of persons were absolutely excluded from testifying, namely, adults having an atheistical belief, infants lacking any theological belief, and adults having the requisite belief but forbidden by conscience[3] to take an oath. It came gradually to be perceived that the use of the oath, not to increase testimonial efficiency, but to exclude qualified witnesses, was not only an abuse of its true principle, but also a practical injustice to suitors who needed such testimony. This injustice is clearly enough seen to-day; but its perception was naturally slow in coming, so long as in the community at large the profession of belief in deism or atheism was associated closely with the notion of moral defects. This association hardly passed away in any degree until the middle of the 1800s, — an era marked, at the same time, by the indirectly related movements of literary romanticism, political liberalism, industrial invention, legal free speech, and theological free thought.

[2] "Uncle Rastus, testifying in a certain lawsuit, refused to be sworn. 'Ah will affirm,' he said. 'But, Uncle Rastus,' said the judge, 'how is this? Last week, in the Calhoun case, you swore readily enough.' 'Yo' honah,' said Uncle Rastus solemnly, 'Ah was mo' suah o' mah facks in dat case dan Ah is in dis one.'" (Minneapolis Journal).

The occasional inefficiency of the oath recalls the anecdote of Lord Eldon (in Twiss' Life, I, 133): "There were, when I was not much advanced in professional business, two attorneys, father and son, of the name of Priddle. In point of character they stood low. Old Lord Mansfield used to say to the father, 'Don't read your affidavit, Mr. Priddle; we give the same credit to what you say as we do to what you swear.'"

[3] According to the Scripture, "Swear not at all" (Matthew v, 34).

The first statutory efforts in England to relieve from this injustice are found at the end of the first quarter of the 1800s. To-day, practically everywhere, the injustice is remedied. Arguments are no longer needed to prove the impropriety of the old inexorable rule.[4] It is conceded that the oath should be dispensed with for appropriate classes of witnesses. We are to-day at the end of that stage of the question.[5] What is to be noted (but is sometimes forgotten [6]) is that the demand for the dispensation of the oath for witnesses for whom it is inappropriate differs entirely from the proposal to abolish the oath for persons theologically capable of taking it. One is a question of the past; the other is a question for the future.

§ 1828. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. In almost every jurisdiction there has been some legislation dealing with the subject of oaths.[1] The provisions sometimes are inconsistent, sometimes duplicate

[4] See the authorities cited ante, note 1, especially Bentham.

[5] The history of the legislation is fully given in Professor White's article, cited supra, note 1.

[6] It was long ago emphasized in the Second Report of the Common Law Practice Commissioners of 1853, at p. 14.

§ 1828. [1] The earliest statute making optional the oath is said by Professor Thayer to have been that of Rhode Island Colony (1 R. I. Col. Records, 181, cited in Thayer's Cases on Evid., 2d ed., 1067), "that a solemn profession or testimony . . . shall be accounted throughout the whole colony as of full force as an oath; and because many in giving engagement or testimony are usually more overawed with the penalty which is known than with the Most High who is little known in the kingdoms of men," the penalties of perjury are attached. This provision, however, does not appear in the volume of statutes now in force.

The modern legislation is as follows; but with these enactments should be compared those quoted ante, § 488, which are sometimes very broad:

England: 1833, St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 49 ("every person of the persuasion called Quakers and of Moravians" may affirm instead of swearing); c. 82 ("every person for the time being belonging to the said sect called Separatists" may affirm; the form being prescribed); 1838, St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 77 (St. 1833 extended to persons formerly belonging to those sects); 1838, St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105 (whenever an oath may be administered, it is binding "provided the same shall have been administered in such form and with such ceremonies as such person may declare to be binding"); 1861, St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 66 (a person who "shall refuse, or be unwilling, from conscientious motives, to be sworn," may make affirmation); 1861, Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360 ("defect of religious faith," held to be still "an absolute bar" to competency, for persons in general); 1869, St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 4 (a witness objecting to take an oath, or objected to as incapable thereof, "shall, if the presiding judge is satisfied that the taking of an oath would have no binding effect on his conscience," make affirmation); 1885, St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, § 4 (on a charge of carnally knowing a girl under the age of consent, where the girl concerned "or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not, in the opinion of the Court or justices, understand the nature of an oath," the child's testimony may be received without oath, if the Court believes that it "is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understands the duty of speaking the truth"); 1887, R. v. Pruntey, 16 Cox Cr. 344 (preceding statute applied); 1888, R. v. Wealand, 16 Cox Cr. 402 (applied to admit the statement upon a conviction under § 9 of the statute); 1888, St. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46, § 1 ("Every person, upon objecting to being sworn, and stating, as the ground of such objection, either that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation"); § 3 (where an oath has been duly administered the fact the witness "had no religious belief" shall not affect its validity); § 5 (if any witness desires to "swear with uplifted hand," after the Scotch manner, he may do so); 1889, St. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, § 8 (similar to St. 1885, c. 69; oath unnecessary, if the child "does not understand the nature of an oath"); 1889, St. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, § 8 (similar to St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, § 4, for offences of cruelty to children; oath unnecessary, if the child "does not understand the nature of an oath"); 1904, St. 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 15 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act; similar to St. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, supra, for offences under this act); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, § 30 (Children Act; like St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, § 4, for offences against children; corroboration required; see post, § 2066); St. 1909, 9 Edw. VII, c. 39, Oaths Act, § 2 ("Any oath may be administered and taken in the form and manner following: The person taking the oath shall hold the New Testament, or, in the case of a Jew, the Old Testament, in his uplifted hand, and shall say or repeat after the officer administering the oath the words: 'I swear by Almighty God that . . . ' followed by the words prescribed by law. The officer shall [unless the person about to take the oath voluntarily objects thereto or is physically incapable of so taking the oath] administer the oath in the form and manner aforesaid without question"; provided that a person neither Christian nor Jew may take oath in any other now lawful manner); St. 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 58, Criminal Justice Administration, § 28 (Children Act 1908 made applicable to "offences not mentioned in that section").

CANADA: Dominion: 1843, Eng. St. 6 & 7 Vict. 22 (reciting the doubt whether colonial laws, making admissible the testimony of various uncivilized tribes "being destitute of the knowledge of God and of any religious belief," would be void for repugnancy to English law, it provides that every such law shall be valid, subject to the usual royal veto rights); R. S. 1906, Crim. C. § 1003 (rape under age, and indecent assault; same); c. 145, Evid. Act, § 14 ("if a person called or desiring to give evidence objects on grounds of conscientious scruples to take an oath, or is objected to as incompetent to take an oath," he may affirm); § 15 ("If a person required or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition . . . refuses or is unwilling to be sworn, on grounds of conscientious scruples," the judge shall permit him to affirm); § 16 ("in any legal proceeding" the rule of Eng. St. 1885, c. 69, § 4, is adopted);
Alberta: St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, Evidence Act, § 14 (par. (1), like Eng. St. 1838, c. 105; par. (2), like Eng. St. 1888, c. 46, § 3); § 15 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 14, but adding the proviso "and if the presiding judge . . . is satisfied that such person objects to be sworn from conscientious scruples, or on the ground of his religious belief or on the ground that the taking of an oath would have no binding effect on his conscience"); § 16 (like Eng. St. 1888, c. 46, § 5); § 17 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16);
British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 24 (like Eng. St. 1869, c. 68, § 4); § 6 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16); § 12 (affirmation may be received of any "aboriginal native, or native of mixed blood, of the continent of North America or the islands adjacent thereto, being an uncivilized person, destitute of the knowledge of God and of any fixed and clear belief in religion or in a future state of rewards and punishments"); §§ 13–15 (provided that in preliminary inquiries the substance of such person's testimony shall be reduced to writing and signed by a mark, etc.); c. 78, § 25 (if any person desires to swear "with uplifted hand" as in Scotland, the oath shall be so administered "without further question"); c. 78, § 63 (if a person making affidavit or deposition is unwilling "from alleged conscientious motives, to be sworn," an affirmation may be made); c. 107, § 100 (contributing to a child's delinquency; like c. 78, § 6);
Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 57, § 25 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16); §§ 37, 38 (like Dom. Evid. Act, §§ 15, 16); c. 46, Rule 511 (witness on commission may be examined "on oath, affirmation, or otherwise, in accordance with his religion");
New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 14 (if a person "shall refuse or be unwilling from alleged conscientious motives to be sworn," and the judge is "satisfied of the sincerity of such objection," he may permit an affirmation; the affirmation reciting that "the taking of an oath is according to my religious belief unlawful");
Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 102, § 2 (a person, "upon objecting to be sworn, and stating as the ground of such objection either that he has no religious belief or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief," may affirm);
Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 46 (like Eng. St. 1888, c. 46, § 1);
Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 14 (an oath binds if administered "in such form and with such ceremonies as such person may declare to be binding"); § 15 (when a person objects to take oath or is objected to as incompetent to do so, the judge may permit an "affirmation and declaration" if satisfied that such person objects "from conscientious scruples, or on the ground of religious belief or on the ground that the taking of an oath would have no binding effect on his conscience"); Rules of Court 1914, R. 282 (witnesses under a commission "shall be examined on oath, affirmation, or otherwise in accordance with the law of the country where the commission is executed"); St. 1916, c. 24, § 11 (amending Evidence Act, § 14, by inserting after "administered" the words "while such witness or deponent holds in his hand a copy of the Old or New Testament, or");
Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, c. 9, § 13 (like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 14);
Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, Evidence Act, § 36 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16); § 40 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 15); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 44 (like Eng. St. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46, § 1).

UNITED STATES: Federal: Code § 3074 (Navy Articles of War 41; oath or affirmation); § 7033 (interstate commerce commission; witness shall be "cautioned and sworn [or affirmed, if he so request] to testify the whole truth"; a singular mutilation of the oath); § 8803 (bankruptcy; "any person conscientiously opposed to taking an oath may in lieu thereof affirm"); Rev. St. 1878, § 4117, Code 1919, § 6325 (in consular courts, the U. S. minister may prescribe "the form of oaths for Christian witnesses and the mode of examining all other witnesses"); St. 1911, Mar. 3, Code § 1139

(oath or affirmation of witnesses in the Court of Claims); St. 1916, Aug. 29, c. 418, § 3 (Articles of War; amending Rev. St. § 1342; Art. 19 prescribes the form of oath for witnesses and interpreters in courts-martial); St. 1920, June 4, ch. V, subchapter II, Articles of War, Art. 19 (oaths of witness and interpreter); Equity Rules 1912, No. 78 ("Whenever under these rules an oath is or may be required to be taken, the party may, if conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath, in lieu thereof make solemn affirmation to the truth of the facts stated by him").

Alabama: Code 1909, § 3959 ("The sanction of an oath, or affirmation equivalent thereto, is necessary to the reception of any oral testimony. The court may frame such affirmation according to the religious faith of the witness").

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 1526, 1527 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 891, 892); § 1528 (substantially like Or. Laws 1920, § 731).

Arizona: Const. 1910, Art. II, § 7 ("The mode of administering an oath, or affirmation, shall be such as shall be most consistent with and binding upon the conscience of the person to whom such oath, or affirmation, may be administered"); § 12 (" . . . nor shall any person be incompetent as a witness or juror in consequence of his opinion on matters of religion, nor be questioned touching his religious belief in any court of justice to affect the weight of his testimony"); Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1676 ("no person shall be incompetent to testify on account of his religious opinions, or for want of any religious belief"); § 1688 ("When an infant, or a person apparently of weak intellect, is produced as a witness, the Court may examine him to ascertain his capacity, and whether he understands the nature and obligation of an oath, and the Court may inquire of any person what peculiar ceremonies he deems most obligatory in taking an oath"); § 1763 ("Oaths and affirmations must be administered in such a manner as will best awaken the conscience and impress the mind of the one taking the same").

Arkansas: Const. 1874, Art. II, § 26 ("Nor shall any person be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations"); Art. XIX, § 1 ("No person who denies the being of a God shall . . . be competent to testify as a witness in any court"); Dig. 1919, § 4177 ("Every person who shall declare that he has conscientious scruples against taking an oath or swearing in any form shall be permitted to make his solemn declaration or affirmation in the following form: 'You do solemnly and truly declare and affirm'"); § 4175 ("The usual mode" "by the person who swears laying his hand on and kissing the Gospels," to be observed except as otherwise provided); § 4176 ("Every person who shall desire it shall be permitted to swear with an uplifted hand in the following form, 'You do solemnly swear etc.'"); § 4178 ("Whenever the Court or magistrate . . . shall be satisfied that such person has any peculiar mode of swearing, connected with or in addition to either of the forms mentioned, which is more solemn and obligatory in the opinion of such person, the Court or magistrate may adopt such mode of swearing"); § 4179 ("Every person believing in any other than the Christian religion shall be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of his religion, if there be any such ceremonies, instead of the modes heretofore prescribed").

California: Const. 1879, Art. I, § 4 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief"); C. C. P. 1872, § 1879 ("persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief" are not to be excluded); § 2094, as amended in 1874 (the form of administration may be: "You do solemnly swear [or affirm, as the case may be] that the evidence you shall give in this issue [or matter], pending between —— and ——, shall be truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God"); 1903, People v. Parent, 139 Cal. 600, 73 Pac. 423 (§ 2094 was amended in 1901 by the Commissioners, by striking out the concluding clause, "So help you God"; though the amendment was unconstitutional, the omission of the above clause is not material); § 2095 ("Whenever the Court . . . is satisfied that he [the witness] has a peculiar mode of swearing, connected with or in addition to the usual form of administration, which in his opinion is more solemn or obligatory, the Court may in its discretion adopt that mode"); § 2096 ("When a person is sworn who believes in any other than the Christian religion, he may be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of his religion, if there be any such"); § 2097 ("any person who desires it may at his option, instead of taking an oath, make his solemn affirmation or declaration").

Colorado: Const. 1876, Art. II, § 4 ("No person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity, on account of his opinions concerning religion; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations"); Comp. L. 1921, § 6561 ("No person shall be deemed incompetent to testify as a witness on account of his or her opinion in relation to the Supreme Being or a future state of rewards and punishments; nor shall any witness be questioned in regard to his or her religious opinions"); § 6555 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879); § 7900 (in all cases where an oath is to be administered, "and such person shall have conscientious scruples against taking an oath, he or she shall be permitted, instead of taking an oath, to make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration"); § 7958 (on any occasion of administering an oath, "it shall be lawful . . . to administer it in the following form, to wit, The person swearing shall, with his or her hand uplifted, swear 'by the ever living God'") § 7102 ("The solemn affirmation of witnesses shall be deemed sufficient"); § 8779 (form of oath at coroner's inquest); C. C. P. § 371 ("A witness who desires it may, at his option instead of taking an oath, make his solemn affirmation, or declaration").

Columbia (District): Code 1919, § 1056 ("All evidence shall be given under oath according to the forms of the common law, except that where a witness has conscientious scruples against taking an oath, he may in lieu thereof solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm").

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5705 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any action by reason of . . . his disbelief in the existence of a Supreme Being"); § 2201 (form of oath for interpreter, prescribed); § 2198 ("The ceremony to be used, by persons to whom an oath is administered, shall be the holding up of the right hand; but when any person, by reason of scruples of conscience, shall object to such ceremony; or when the court, or authority by whom the oath is to be administered, shall have reason to believe that any other ceremony will be more binding upon the conscience of the witness, such court or authority may permit or require any other ceremony to be used"); § 2199 ("When any person, required to take an oath, shall, from scruples of conscience, decline to take it in the usual form, or when the court is satisfied that any person called as a witness does not believe in the existence of a Supreme Being, a solemn affirmation may be administered to him in the form of the oath prescribed, except that instead of the word 'swear' the words 'solemnly and sincerely affirm and declare' shall be used; and instead of the words 'so help you God' the words 'upon the pains and penalties of perjury' shall be used"); § 2201 ("The forms of oaths shall be as follows, to wit: . . . For witnesses: You solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give concerning the case now in question, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; so help you God. For an interpreter in a criminal case: You solemnly swear that you will make a true interpretation of the information (or indictment) upon which the accused stands charged, in the language which he understands and can speak, and of all questions which may be propounded to him under the direction of the court; and that you will make a like true interpretation of his plea to said information (or indictment) and of his answers to such questions to this court (or to this court and jury), in the English language, according to your best skill and judgment; so help you God. For an interpreter in court: You solemnly swear that you will make a true interpretation of the oath to be administered to the witness, in the language which he understands and can speak, and of all questions which may be propounded to him under the direction of the court; and that you will make a like true interpretation of his answers to such questions to this court (or to this court and jury), in the English language, according to your best skill and judgment; so help you God").

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 4245 ("The usual oath in this State shall be by swearing upon the Holy Evangels of Almighty God; the person to whom it is administered laying his right hand upon the Book and kissing it"); § 4247 ("A person may be permitted to swear with the uplifted hand; that is to say, he shall lift up his right hand and swear by the ever-living God, the searcher of all hearts, that, etc., and at the end of the oath shall say, 'As I shall answer to God at the Great Day'"); § 4248 ("A person conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath may be permitted, instead of swearing, solemnly, sincerely, and truly to declare and affirm to the truth of the matters to be testified"); § 4249 ("A person believing in any other than the Christian religion may be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of his religion, if there be any such"); § 4246 ("Whenever the oath shall be administered by swearing upon the Holy Evangels of Almighty God," the witness "shall not be required to kiss the book, if he does not desire to do so, but may in lieu thereof swear with his hand upon the book").

Florida: Const. 1887, Declaration of Rights, § 5 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness on account of his religious opinions"); Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 3399, par. 14 (for an oath before justices in civil cases, "if the witnesses desire, the word 'affirm' may be used instead of 'swear,' and the words 'so help you God' may be omitted"); § 2703 ("Atheists, agnostics, and all persons who do not believe in the doctrine of future rewards and punishments, shall be permitted to testify in any of the Courts in this State; they may solemnly affirm instead of taking an oath"); § 2946 (affirmation may be substituted for oath, whenever required by law).

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5857 ("Religious belief goes only to the credit"); § 5868 ("The sanction of an oath, or affirmation equivalent thereto, is necessary to the reception of any oral evidence. The Court may frame such affirmation according to the religious faith of the witness"); § 6317 (civil cases; traditional form of oath, set out); P. C. 1910, § 106 (criminal cases; form of oath set forth).

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2608 ("If any person called as a witness, or required or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition, shall refuse or be unwilling from alleged conscientious motives to be sworn, it shall be lawful for the Court, . . . upon being satisfied of the sincerity of such objection, to permit such person instead of being sworn, to make his solemn affirmation or declaration in the words following, that is to say: I . . . do solemnly, sincerely, and truly affirm and declare, that the taking of any oath is according to my religious belief, unlawful, and I do now also solemnly, sincerely, and truly affirm and declare that the evidence, etc."); § 2611 (infants; quoted ante, § 488).

Idaho: Const. 1899, Art. I, § 4 ("No person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity, on account of his religious opinions; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations"); Comp. St. 1919, § 7935 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879); §§ 8065–8068 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2094–2097).

Illinois: Const. 1870, Art. II, § 3, draft Const. 1922, Art. I, § 3 ("No person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity, on account of his religious opinions; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations"); Rev. St. 1874, c. 101, § 3 (an oath may lawfully be administered "in the following form, to wit: The person swearing shall, with his hand uplifted, swear by the ever-living God, and shall not be compelled to lay the hand on or kiss the Gospels"); § 4 (when "such person shall have conscientious scruples against taking an oath, he shall be admitted, instead of taking an oath, to make his solemn affirmation or declaration in the following form, to-wit: You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm").

Indiana: Const. 1851, Art. I, § 7 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness in consequence of his opinions on matters of religion"); § 8 ("The mode of administering an oath or affirmation shall be such as may be most consistent with and binding upon the person to whom such oath or affirmation may be administered"); Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 529 ("No want of belief in a Supreme Being or in the Christian religion shall render a witness incompetent; but the want of such religious belief may be shown upon the trial"); § 517 (Before testifying, every witness shall be sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. "The mode of administering an oath shall be such as may be most consistent with and binding upon the conscience" of the witness).

Iowa: Const. 1857, Art. I, § 4 ("No person shall be . . . rendered incompetent to give evidence in any Court of law or equity, in consequence of his opinions on the subject of religion").

Kansas: Const. 1859, Bill of Rights, § 7 ("Nor shall any person be incompetent to testify on account of religious belief"); Gen. St. 1915, § 7249 ("The mode of administering an oath shall be such as is most binding on the conscience of the witness"); Gen. St. 1915, § 6745, Gen. St. 1868, c. 72, § 2 ("All oaths shall be administered by laying the right hand upon the Holy Bible, or by the uplifted right hand"); Gen. St. 1915, § 6746 ("Any person having conscientious scruples against taking an oath may affirm with like effect").

Kentucky: Const. 1891, § 5 ("The civil rights, privileges, or capacities of no person shall be taken away, or in any wise diminished or enlarged, on account of his belief or disbelief of any religious tenet, dogma, or teaching"); § 232 ("The manner of administering an oath or affirmation shall be such as is most consistent with the conscience of the deponent, and shall be esteemed by the General Assembly the most solemn appeal to God"); C. C. P. 1895, § 680 ("An oath required by this Code may be substituted by the affirmation of a person who is conscientiously opposed to taking an oath").

Louisiana: C. Pr. 1900, § 479 ("If the religious opinions of a witness are opposed to his taking an oath, his affirmation of the truth of his testimony shall suffice"); § 478 ("Previous to their being examined, the witnesses in a cause must be sworn on the Bible, in open court, and in presence of the parties, to speak the truth, all the truth, and nothing but the truth, in the testimony which they shall give in the cause"); R. S. 1870, § 1369 (form of witness' oath before a coroner).

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 111 ("No person is an incompetent witness on account of his religious belief; but he is subject to the test of credibility; and a person who does not believe in the existence of a Supreme Being may testify under solemn affirmation and is subject to the pains and penalties of perjury"); § 122 ("A person to whom an oath is administered shall hold up his hand, unless he believes than an oath administered in that form is not binding, and then it may be administered in a form believed by him to be binding. One believing in any other than the Christian religion may be sworn according to the ceremonies of his religion"); § 123 ("Persons conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath may affirm as follows: 'I affirm under the pains and penalties of perjury,' which affirmation is of the same force and effect as an oath").

Maryland: Const. 1867, Declar. of Rights, Art. 36 ("Nor shall any person, otherwise competent, be deemed incompetent as a witness or juror on account of his religious belief; provided he believes in the existence of God, and that under His dispensation such person will be held morally accountable for his acts and be rewarded or punished therefor either in this world or the world to come"); Art. 39 ("That the manner of administering an oath or affirmation to any person ought to be such as those of the religious persuasion, profession, or denomination of which he is a member, generally esteem the most effectual confirmation by the attestation of the Divine Being"); Ann. Code 1914, Art. I, § 8 ("Wherever an oath is required by this Code an affirmation shall be sufficient, if made by a person conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath"); § 9 ("The form of judicial and all other oaths to be taken or administered in this State, and not prescribed by the Constitution, shall be as follows: 'In the presence of Almighty God I do solemnly promise or declare,' etc. And it shall not be lawful to add to any oath the words 'So help me God,' or any imprecatory words whatever"); § 10 ("The manner of administering oaths shall be by requiring the person making the same to hold up his hand in token of his recognition of the solemnity of the act, except in those cases wherein this form is not practicable, or when it shall appear that some other mode is more binding upon the conscience of the swearer").

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 15 ("The usual mode of administering oaths now practised in the Commonwealth, with the ceremony of holding up the hand, shall be observed in all cases in which an oath may be administered by law," except as provided in §§ 16–19); § 16 ("If a person to be sworn declares that a different mode of taking the oath is in his opinion more solemn and obligatory than the upholding of the hand, the oath may be administered in such mode"); § 17 ("A Friend or Quaker when called on to take an oath may solemnly and sincerely affirm, under the penalties of perjury"); § 18 ("A person who declares that he has conscientious scruples against taking any oath shall, when called upon for that purpose, be permitted to affirm in the manner prescribed for Quakers, if the Court or magistrate on inquiry is satisfied of the truth of such declaration"); § 19 ("A person believing in any other than the Christian religion may be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of his religion. A person not a believer in any religion shall be required to testify truly under the penalties of perjury; and the evidence of his disbelief in the existence of God may be received to affect his credibility as a witness").

Michigan: Const. 1908, Art. II, § 3 ("The civil and political rights, privileges, and capacities of no person shall be diminished or enlarged on account of his religious belief"); § 17 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief"); Comp. L. 1915, § 12556 (for children under ten, the oath may be dispensed with; quoted ante, § 488); § 12568 ("The usual mode of administering oaths now practised in this State, by the person who swears holding up the right hand, shall be observed in all cases in which an oath may be administered by law, except in the cases herein otherwise provided"); § 12569 ("Every person conscientiously opposed to taking an oath shall, when called on to take an oath, be permitted, instead of swearing, solemnly and sincerely to affirm, under the pains and penalties of perjury"); § 12570 ("No person shall be deemed incompetent as a witness in any court, matter, or proceeding, on account of his opinions on the subject of religion; nor shall any witness be questioned in relation to his opinions thereon, either before or after he shall be sworn"); 1858, People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 319 (since the statute, no inquiry at all can be made as to theological belief).

Minnesota: Const. 1857, § 17 ("Nor shall any person be rendered incompetent to give evidence in any Court of law or equity in consequence of his opinion upon the subject of religion"); Gen. St. 1913, § 5735 (form of oath of witnesses: "You do solemnly swear. . . . So help you God"; also form of oath of interpreters); § 8379 ("Whenever the Court before which any person is offered as witness is satisfied that such person has any peculiar mode of swearing, which is more solemn and obligatory, in the opinion of such person, than the usual mode, the Court may, in its discretion, adopt such mode of swearing such person; and every person believing in any other than the Christian religion shall be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of his religion, if any there are"); § 8380 ("When an infant, or a person apparently of weak intellect, is produced as a witness, the Court may examine him to ascertain his capacity, and whether he understands the nature and obligations of an oath; and the Court may inquire of any person what are the peculiar ceremonies he deems most obligatory in taking an oath"); § 5736 ("If any person of whom an oath is required shall declare that he has religious scruples against taking the same, the word 'swear' and the words 'so help you God' may be omitted from the foregoing forms and the word 'affirm' and the words 'and this you do under the penalties of perjury' shall be substituted therefor, respectively, and such person shall be considered, for all purposes, as having been duly sworn"); § 999 (form of oath for witnesses before coroner).

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1919, Hem. § 1579 ("A person shall not be incompetent as a witness because of his religious belief or the want of it"); Code § 1921, Hem. § 1581 ("Any witness, being scrupulous of taking an oath, may give testimony upon his solemn affirmation, which shall be as good and effectual as an oath. The form of affirmation shall be, in substance, as follows, to wit: 'You do solemnly and truly declare and affirm,' etc. In all cases where an oath or affidavit is required by law, it shall be sufficient if the same be made or given on the solemn affirmation of the party").

Missouri: Const. 1875, Art. II, § 5 ("No person can, on account of his religious opinions, . . . be disqualified from testifying"); Rev. St. 1919, § 5404 ("Every person who shall declare that he has conscientious scruples against taking an oath or swearing in any form shall be permitted to make his solemn declaration or affirmation in the following form, 'You do solemnly declare and affirm,' etc., concluding with the words 'under the pains and penalties of perjury'"); § 5405 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 2095); § 5406 ("Every person believing in any other than the Christian religion shall be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of his religion, if there be any such ceremonies"); § 3891 (grand jury interpreter shall be sworn "to correctly interpret all questions to the witness into his language and all the witnesses' answers into English").

Montana: Const. 1889, Art. III, § 4 ("No person shall be denied any civil or political right or privilege on account of his opinions concerning religion; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations"); Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10694–10697 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2094–2097); § 10881 (form of oath for witness before legislature).

Nebraska: Const. 1875, Art. I, § IV ("No person shall . . . be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths and affirmations"); Rev. St. 1922, § 8871 ("The mode of administering an oath shall be such as is most binding upon the conscience of the witness"); § 8835 (Indians and negroes; cited ante, § 516); 1909, Pumphrey v. State, 84 Nebr. 636, 122 N. W. 19 (a Japanese presumed competent).

Nevada: Const. 1864, Art. I, § 4 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of his religious belief"); Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5447, 5448 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2096, 2097); § 5420 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879); § 7453 ("The solemn affirmation of witnesses shall be deemed sufficient" in criminal cases).

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, § 10 ("No other ceremony shall be necessary in swearing than holding up the right hand, but any other form or ceremony may be used which the person to whom the oath is administered professes to believe more binding upon the conscience"); § 11 ("Persons scrupulous of swearing may affirm; the word 'affirm' being used in administering the oath, instead of the word 'swear,' and the words 'this you do under the pains and penalties of perjury,' instead of the words 'so help you God'"); § 12 ("No person conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath, in lieu thereof make solemn affirmation to the truth of the facts stated by him").

New Jersey: Const. 1844, Art. I, § 4 ("No person shall be denied the enjoyment of any civil right merely on account of his religious principles"); Comp. St. 1910, Oaths & Affidavits, § 24 ("In all cases where, by any act of the legislature of this State now in force or hereafter to be made, an oath is or shall be allowed or required, the same shall, on the request of the party to be sworn, be taken with the ceremony of holding up the hand and swearing by the ever-living God, instead of that of touching and kissing the book of the gospels, although no provision for that purpose is or shall be made in such act"); § 26 ("Every person, who shall be permitted or required to take an oath in any case, where by law an oath is allowed or required, and who shall allege that he or she is conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath, shall, instead of the form of an oath, be permitted to make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration; and if such person shall choose to affirm, it shall be in words following, to wit: I, . . . , do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm: But if such person shall choose to declare, it shall be in the words following, to wit: I, . . . , do declare, in the presence of Almighty God, the witness of the truth of what I say: Either of which forms shall be as good and effectual in law, as an oath taken in the usual form in which affirmation or declaration, the words 'so help me God,' at the close of the usual oath, shall be omitted"); § 39 ("It shall not be necessary to the solemnity nor obligation of any oath administered in any court of justice or any legal proceeding, civil or criminal, in this state, for the person taking the oath to kiss the holy scriptures; but the taking of such oath, while the hand shall be held upon the book, shall answer all the purposes and requirements of the law, any usage or custom to the contrary heretofore notwithstanding"); coroners, § 12 (form of oath at inquests); St. 1911, Apr. 24, c. 207 (amending Rev. 1898, District Courts, § 158; form of witness' oath).

New Mexico: Const. 1911, Art. II, § 11 ("No person shall ever be molested or denied any civil or political right or privilege on account of his religious opinion or mode of religious worship"); Annot. St. 1915, § 2165 (every witness offered "shall be admitted to give evidence on oath or solemn affirmation"); § 3933 (the oath is to be taken "in the following form, viz.: The person swearing shall, with his right hand uplifted, follow the words required in the oath as administered, beginning: I do solemnly swear, and closing: So help me God"); § 3934 (when a person "shall have conscientious scruples against taking the same, he shall be permitted, instead of such oath, to make a solemn affirmation, with uplifted right hand, in the following form, viz.: You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm, and close with: And this I do under the pains and penalties of perjury"); § 2165 ("Hereafter, in the courts of this State no person offered as a witness shall be disqualified to give evidence on account of any disqualification known to the common law, but all such common-law disqualifications may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of any such witness and for no other purpose; provided, however, that the presiding judge, in his discretion, may refuse to permit a child of tender years to be sworn, if, in the opinion of the judge, such child has not sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and obligation of an oath").

New York: Const. 1895, Art. I, § 3 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief"); St. 1899, c. 340, now C. P. A. 1920, § 360, and J. C. A. 1920, § 243 ("Except as otherwise specially prescribed in this article, when an oath is administered, the witness shall lay his hand on the Gospels and express assent to the oath, and it shall be according to the present practice, except that the witness need not kiss the Gospels"); C. P. A. 1920, § 361, and J. C. A. 1920, § 244 ("The oath must be administered in the following form, to a person who so desires, the laying of the hand upon the Gospels being omitted: 'You do swear, in the presence of the ever-living God.' While so swearing, he may or may not hold up his right hand, at his option"); C. P. A. § 362, and J. C. A. § 245 ("A solemn declaration or affirmation, in the following form, must be administered to a person who declares that he has conscientious scruples against taking an oath, or swearing in any form: 'You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm'"); C. P. A. § 363, and J. C. A. § 246 ("If the Court or the officer, before which or whom a person is offered as a witness, is satisfied that any peculiar mode of swearing, in lieu of, or in addition to, laying the hand upon the Gospels, is, in his opinion, more solemn and obligatory, the Court or officer may, in its or his discretion, adopt that mode of swearing the witness"); C. P. A. § 364, and J. C. A. § 247 ("A person believing in a religion, other than the Christian, may be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies, if any, of his religion, instead of as prescribed herein"); C. P. A. § 365, and J. C. A. § 248 (the Court "may inquire of a person, produced as a witness, what peculiar ceremonies in swearing he deems most obligatory"); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 392, as amended by St. 1892, c. 279 (in criminal proceedings, when a child "actually or apparently" under twelve "does not in the opinion of the Court or magistrate understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such child may be received though not given under oath, if in the opinion of the Court or magistrate such child is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence. But no person shall be held or convicted of an offence upon such testimony unsupported by other evidence"); S. C. A. 1920, § 24 (interpreter's oath of office in Kings County Surrogate Court); 1906, People v. Johnson, 185 N. Y. 219, 77 N. E. 1164 (St. 1892, c. 279, applied; the presumption is that a child thus admitted without oath was duly found by the trial Court not to understand its nature); 1907, People v. Sexton, 187 N. Y. 495, 80 N. E. 396 (C. Cr. P. § 392, is constitutional).

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 3189 (officers administering an oath shall require the party "to lay his hand upon the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, in token of his engagement to speak the truth, as he hopes to be saved in the way and method of salvation pointed out in that blessed volume; and in further token that, if he should swerve from the truth he may be justly deprived of all the blessings of the Gospel and made liable to that vengeance which he has imprecated on his own head; and he shall kiss the holy Gospel, as a seal of confirmation to the said engagements"); § 3190 ("When a person to be sworn shall be conscientiously scrupulous of taking a book oath in manner aforesaid, he shall be excused from laying hands upon, or touching, the holy Gospels; and the oath required shall be administered in the following manner, namely: he shall stand with his right hand lifted up towards heaven, in token of his solemn appeal to the Supreme God, and also, in token, that if he should swerve from the truth, he would draw down the vengeance of heaven upon his head, and shall introduce the intended oath with these words, namely: 'I, A. B., do appeal to God, as a witness of the truth and the avenger of falsehood, as I shall answer the same at the great day of judgment, when the secrets of all hearts shall be known,' etc., as the words of the oath may be"); § 3191 ("The solemn affirmation of Quakers, Moravians, Dunkers, and Mennonists, made in the manner heretofore used and accustomed, shall be admitted as evidence in all civil and criminal actions"); § 3199 (under "Oaths of Office" are given forms of oath for witnesses, which are in the usual phrases of the common-law custom, and not in those of the foregoing sections); § 1535, No. 29 (form of oath of witness in justice court); 1898, Pearre v. Folb, 123 N. C. 239, 31 S. E. 475 (oath not on a Bible, held void under the statute).

North Dakota: Const. 1889, Art. I, § 4 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinion on matters of religious belief"); Comp. L. 1913, § 7882 ("Before testifying the witness must be sworn to testify as follows: 'You do solemnly swear [etc.] . . . so help you God.' Any witness who is conscientiously scrupulous of taking the oath above described shall be allowed to make affirmation, substituting for the words 'so help you God' at the end of the oath the following: 'This you do affirm under the pains and penalties of perjury'"); § 7926 (so also for interpreters).

Ohio: Const. 1851, Art. I, § 1 ("When an oath is required or authorized by law, an affirmation in lieu thereof may be taken by a person having conscientious scruples to taking an oath"); § 7 ("Nor shall any person be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths and affirmations"); Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 10215 ("A person may be sworn in any form he deems binding on his conscience"); § 11520 ("Before testifying, the witness shall be sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth").

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 605 ("Before testifying, the witness shall be sworn to testify to the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. The mode of administering an oath shall be such as is most binding on the conscience of the witness").

Oregon: Const. 1859, Art. I, § 6 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness or juror in consequence of his opinions on matters of religion, nor be questioned in any court of justice, touching his religious belief, to affect the weight of his testimony"); § 7 ("The mode of administering an oath or affirmation shall be such as may be most consistent with and binding upon the conscience of the person to whom such oath or affirmation may be administered"); Laws 1920, §§ 890–893 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2094–2097, substituting in § 2097, after "any person," "who has conscientious scruples against taking an oath," instead of "who desires it"); § 731 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879).

Pennsylvania: St. 1718, May 31, § 4, Dig. 1920, § 16254, Oaths and Affirmations (capital crimes; witnesses for accused shall "take an oath or affirmation to say the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in such manner as the witnesses for the King are by the law of this province obliged to do"); ib. § 3, Dig. § 16253 (witnesses in "all manner of crimes and offenses, matters and causes whatsoever, shall qualify themselves "according to their conscientious persuasion, respectively, either by taking a corporal oath or by the solemn affirmation allowed by act of parliament to those called Quakers in Great Britain"); St. 1772, Mar. 21, as amended by St. 1895, Apr. 3, Dig. § 16251 (in all "crimes, offenses, matters, causes, and things whatsoever," witnesses shall qualify themselves "according to their conscientious persuasions, respectively, either by taking the solemn affirmation or any oath in the usual and common form, by laying the hand upon an open copy of the Holy Bible, or by lifting up the right hand and pronouncing or assenting to the following words: 'I, A. B., do swear by Almighty God, the searcher of all hearts, that I will . . . , and that as I shall answer to God at the last great day'"; this oath to have the same effect as "an oath taken in common form"); St. 1909, Apr. 23, Dig. 1920, § 21833, Witnesses ("The capacity of any person who shall testify in any judicial proceeding shall be in no wise affected by his opinions on matters of religion"; "no witness shall be questioned in any judicial proceeding concerning his religious belief, nor shall any evidence be heard upon the subject for the purpose of affecting either his competency or credibility"; affirmation may be used by "any witness who desires to affirm").

Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 382 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879); P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 55 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879).

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 12 (all oaths and affirmations "shall be administered in the mode most binding upon the conscience of the person taking the same"); § 1406 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879).

Rhode Island: Const. 1842, Art. I, § 3 ("[One's opinion in matters of religion] shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or affect his civil capacity").

South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 274 (any witness "may make solemn and conscientious affirmation and declaration, according to the form of his religious belief or profession, as to any matter or thing whereof an oath is required," to be as valid as if taken "on the Holy Evangelists"); C. Cr. P. 1922, § 1034 (form of oath for witnesses at a coroner's inquest).

South Dakota: Const. 1889, Art. III, § 3 ("No person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or position, on account of his religious opinions"); Rev. C. 1919, § 2733 (interpreters; like N. D. Comp. L. § 7926); § 2749 (form for civil cases; "You do solemnly swear . . . so help you God"; but "any person having conscientious scruples against taking an oath" may substitute "affirm" and "under the pains and penalties of perjury"); § 10183 (coroner's inquest; oath to testify "concerning the death of the person here lying dead").

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5593 ("Persons who do not believe in a God and a future state of rewards and punishments may be witnesses in any cause pending in any of the courts of this State. Said unbelievers may solemnly affirm instead of taking an oath, and false testifying by such persons shall be punished as perjury, as [provided] by law under such circumstances. Such unbelief in God and a future state of rewards and punishments shall go only to the credibility of the witness"); § 5551 (the witness shall "lay his hand upon the New Testament and solemnly swear upon the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, or other oath prescribed in the particular case, and kiss the Book as a seal of confirmation of the engagement"); § 5552 ("If the person to be sworn is conscientiously scrupulous of taking the book oath, he may be sworn with the right hand uplifted in the following form: 'I (or you) do solemnly appeal to God, as a witness of the truth and avenger of falsehood, as I shall answer for the same at the great day of judgment, when the secrets of all hearts shall be known,' etc., as the nature of the case may be"); § 5553 ("All persons conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath may make solemn affirmation in the words of the oath required"); § 5554 ("Persons may also be sworn according to the forms of their own country, or particular religious creed, when required").

Texas: Const. 1876, Art. I, § 5 ("No person shall be disqualified to give evidence in any of the courts of this State on account of his religious opinions or for want of any religious belief, but all oaths or affirmations shall be administered in the mode most binding upon the conscience, and shall be taken subject to the pains and penalties of perjury"); Rev. P. C. 1911, § 796, Rev. C. Cr. P. § 12 ("No person is incompetent to testify on account of his religious opinion or for the want of any religious each other without need, sometimes are merely declaratory of the common law; and it would be profitless here to attempt to analyze the precise state of the law in each jurisdiction.

With reference to the abolition or dispensation of the oath, the condition in general may be summarized as follows:

(1) In no jurisdiction has the use of the oath been abolished.

(2) In almost every jurisdiction the rigor and injustice of the common-law rule has been removed, for persons having an incompatible theological belief, in one of two ways:

belief"); Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3691 (substantially the same); § 9 (like Const. I, 5, second sentence).

Utah: Const. 1895, Art. I, § 4 ("Nor shall any person be incompetent as a witness or juror on account of religious belief or the absence thereof"); Comp. L. 1917, § 7122 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879); §§ 7148–7151 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2094–2097).

Vermont: Const. 1793, c. I, Art. 3 ("Nor can any man be justly deprived or abridged of any civil right as a citizen, on account of his religious sentiments or peculia[r] mode of religious worship"); Gen. L. 1917, § 1895 ("A person shall not be incompetent as a witness in any Court, matter, or proceeding, on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; nor shall a witness be questioned, nor testimony taken or received, in relation thereto"); § 7473, Form 9 (form of oath for witnesses); Form 10 (form of oath for interpreters).

Virginia: Const. 1869, Art. V, § 14 ("[Men's opinions in matters of religion] shall in no wise affect, diminish, or enlarge their civil capacities"); this article is omitted in Const. 1902; Code 1919, § 35 (reënacts the words of Const. 1869, Art. V, § 14); St. 1920, Feb. 17, c. 63 (no person making oath shall be required "to kiss the Holy Bible or any book or books thereof," but may be required "to place their hand on the Holy Bible").

Washington: Const. 1889, Art. I, § 6 ("The mode of administering an oath or affirmation shall be such as may be most consistent with and binding upon the conscience of the person to whom such oath or affirmation may be administered"); § 11 ("Nor shall any person be incompetent as a witness or juror in consequence of his opinion on matters of religion, nor be questioned in any court of justice touching his religious belief to affect the weight of his testimony"); R. & B. Code 1909, § 1266 ("Whenever the Court or officer before which a person is offered as a witness is satisfied that he has a peculiar mode of swearing connected with or additional to the usual form of administration, which, in witness' opinion, is more solemn and obligatory, the Court or other officer may, in its discretion, adopt that mode"); § 1267 ("When a person is sworn who believes in any other than the Christian religion, he may be sworn according to the ceremonies of his religion, if there be any such"); § 1268 ("Any person who has conscientious scruples against taking an oath may make his solemn affirmation, by assenting, when addressed, in the following manner: 'You do solemnly affirm that,' etc., as in section 1265"); § 1265 ("An oath or affirmation may be administered as follows: The person who swears holds up his hand, while the person administering the oath thus addresses him: 'You do solemnly swear . . . so help you God'").

West Virginia: Const. 1872, Art. III, § 15 ("[Men's opinions in matters of religion] shall in no wise affect, diminish, or enlarge their civil capacities"); c. 13, § 11 ("A solemn affirmation shall be equivalent to an oath in all cases, unless otherwise expressly provided").

Wisconsin: Const. 1848, Art. I, § 19 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to give evidence in any Court of law or equity in consequence of his opinions on the subject of religion"); Stats. 1919, § 3637 (prescribes a form for justice courts, and allows an affirmation for one having conscientious scruples); § 4081 ("In all cases in which an oath or affidavit is required or authorized by law, the same may be taken in any of the usual forms"); § 4084 ("Every person who shall declare that he has conscientious scruples against taking any oath or swearing in the usual form shall be permitted to make his solemn declaration or affirmation"); § 4871 (form of oath at coroner's inquest).

Wyoming: Const. 1889, Art. I, § 18 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent . . . to serve as a witness . . . because of his opinion on any matter of religious belief whatever"); Comp. St. 1920, § 5534 ("A person may be sworn in any form he deems binding on his conscience"); § 6433 ("Persons conscientiously opposed to swearing or to taking any oath may affirm"; when an oath is required, it shall be lawful to use this form: "The person swearing shall with his or her right hand uplifted swear, concluding with the words 'So help me God'"); § 5334 (oath-form for witnesses at a coroner's inquest); § 5826 ("Before testifying, the witness shall be sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth").

(a) In all but a few jurisdictions (e. g. Oklahoma, Virginia) a statute allows the witness to choose to make affirmation instead of oath. This choice is usually provided for those who lack the requisite belief, and for those who may have the belief but are forbidden by conscientious scruples.[2] Sometimes the option is even wider and is given to all who prefer to affirm, whether or not they could in belief or conscience take the oath. This option is broader than would seem necessary, and can be excused only upon the policy that to force an exposure of theological belief is undesirable.

(b) Another way of relief has commonly been found under constitutional (rarely statutory) provisions guaranteeing that theological belief shall not affect one's civil capacities (or, specifically, one's competency as a witness). These provisions are almost universal; in only three jurisdictions (Arkansas, Maryland, North Carolina) is a theological belief expressly declared necessary.[3] By usual construction, the result of this legislation has been to allow the administration of the oath to persons, both adults and children, lacking the common-law belief.[4] The singular result is that relief is afforded, not in

[2] Under such statutes the witness must first explicitly state that the scruple exists: 1892, R. v. Moore, 17 Cox. Cr. 458 (under St. 1869, 32–33 Vict. c. 68, § 4); 1911, R. v. Deakin, 16 Br. C. 271 (under Can. Evid. Act, § 14).

[3] A similar provision formerly existed in Maine: 1841, Smith v. Coffin, 18 Me. 157, 166 (a statute providing that "no person who believes in the existence of a Supreme Being" shall be excluded applies to exclude from the oath a person not having that belief, even though he might have affirmed if he had scruples).

[4] Notice that the result is sometimes reached under the broad testimonial statutes quoted ante, § 488: Arizona: 1914, Fernandez v. State, 16 Ariz. 269, 144 Pac. 640 (an aged Indian woman, admitted, under Const. Art. 2, § 12, though not understanding "the full technical meaning of the common-law oath"); California: 1861, Fuller v. Fuller, 17 Cal. 612 (a statute that "no person offered as a witness shall be excluded on account of his opinion on matters of religious belief" was held to make "religious sentiments or convictions" immaterial; here, a Chileno who understood "the meaning of the word 'obligation' as applied to an oath" was admitted); 1921, People v. Delaney, — Cal. App. —, 199 Pac. 896 (lewd conduct with a boy not quite four years old; held that the child need not understand the religious sanction or nature of an oath, under Const. Art. I, § 4, and C. C. P. § 1879, but need only be qualified by intelligence under C. C. P. § 1880; enlightened opinion by Finlayson, P. J.); Florida: 1907, Clinton v. State, 53 Fla. 98, 43 So. 312 ("Neither belief in a Supreme Being nor in divine punishment is requisite to the competency of a witness" under the statute and Constitution; here applied to a child); 1917, Thomas v. State, 73 Fla. 115, 74 So. 1 (a witness who "did not know what would happen to him if he told a lie and died, or where he would go," admitted: "the common law rule has been changed in this State"); Georgia: 1878, Johnson v. State, 61 Ga. 36, semble (theological test not required for children; nor, perhaps, for imbeciles; but probably for adults of sound mind possessing the proper belief, the oath under that sanction is required; capacity to take an oath now means, "perhaps," the child's intelligence "that she ought to tell the truth on a solemn occasion rather than a lie"); 1916, Gantz v. State, 18 Ga. App. 154, 88 S. E. 993 ("religious belief or the lack of it" does not in this State disqualify a witness; here applied to a Chinese); Idaho: 1918, State v. Harp, 31 Ida. 597, 173 Pac. 1148 (rape under age; whether a child understood the nature of an oath, held "not the exclusive test" under Rev. C. §§ 5956, 5957); Illinois: 1889, Ewing v. Bailey, 36 Ill. App. 191, 193 (similar to the next case); 1890, Hronek v. People, 134 Ill. 139, 152, 24 N. E. 861 ("There is no longer any test or qualification in respect to religious opinion or belief"; and the oath may be taken irrespective of it); Indiana: 1840, Snyder v. Nations, 5 Blackf. 295 (statute removes the necessity of religious faith; here a deaf-and-dumb person who "had no conception of the religious obligation of an oath" was admitted); Iowa: 1902, State v. King, 117 Ia. 484, 91 N. W. 768 (under Code § 4601, quoted ante, § 488, a child's "intelligence, and not belief, nor the power of moral perception, is the test"); 1905, Clark v. Finnegan, 127 Ia. 644, 103 N. W. 970 ("If a child has the necessary intelligence, and appreciates the moral duty to tell the truth, he need not fully understand the nature of an oath, or have any particular religious belief or training"; here, a child of seven, who "un-

the natural way, by substituting affirmation for oath, but in an evasive way, by preserving an invocation which has no meaning for the witness and by thus reducing the oath to an empty formula. It would be equally consonant with the words of the Constitution to interpret them merely as allowing persons to affirm instead of swearing; it is unnecessary to suppose that the Constitution intended to devitalize the oath without abolishing it.

In the few jurisdictions where the Constitution, in such an article, expressly saves all oaths and affirmations, it is clear that the oath ought to remain, as to the requisite belief, precisely what it was at common law;[5] but under such Constitutions, nevertheless, the witness' right to make affirmation instead of oath should be with equal certainty guaranteed.[6]

(3) The special class of persons (ante, § 1827, par. 2) of whom an oath ought not to be required, nor even the exercise of an option to affirm be expected, namely, children qualified to testify but lacking in theological under- derstood that he was to tell the truth," was admitted); 1917, State v. Yates, 181 Ia. 539, 164 N. W. 798 (child); Kentucky: 1882, Bush v. Com., 80 Ky. 244, 249 (the constitutional clause alters the common law and "permits persons to testify without regard to religious belief or disbelief"; here an atheist witness was allowed to be sworn; the ruling is irrespective of the Civil Code provision allowing affirmation and making all persons competent); 1894, White v. Com., 96 Ky. 180, 28 S. W. 340 (preceding case approved, and applied to a child); 1905, Bright v. Com., 120 Ky. 298, 86 S. W. 527 (like White v. Com., which however is not cited; the judge being new in office); Louisiana: 1903, State v. Williams, 111 La. 179, 35 So. 505 (a child, otherwise sufficiently intelligent, is admissible without regard to theological belief; Act No. 29, of 1886, quoted ante, § 488, abolishes all other grounds of disqualification; State v. Washington, 49 La. An. 1602, 22 So. 841, repudiated); New Mexico: 1918, State v. Ybarra, 24 N. M. 413, 174 Pac. 212 (murder; a child "of tender years," allowed to testify, under Code § 2165, leaving it to the trial Court's discretion; "the fact that a child states in express terms that he does not understand the nature of an oath is not of itself sufficient ground for his exclusion"); North Carolina: 1914, State v. Pitt, 166 N. C. 268, 80 S. E. 1060 (a witness who "did n't know what would happen to a liar except be put in the lockup," held competent under Revisal, §§ 1496, 2360); South Dakota: 1895, State v. Reddington, 7 S. D. 368, 64 N. W. 170 (Kellam, J.: "No witness, whether child or adult, is required to be able or willing to discuss with the Court or counsel either the fact or condition of a future state. He may even have no established views of general theology. He is only required to be able to distinguish the moral difference between right and wrong; and, when the law or the Court says he must understand the obligation of an oath, it means only that, possessing such ability to discriminate, he understands that his position as a witness imposes upon him the moral and legal duty to tell only what is true. Whether a witness is so qualified is left in the first instance to the discretionary judgment of the trial Court"; here a child was admitted); Texas: 1905, Freasier v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 84 S. W. 360 (to know that "it is wrong to tell a lie" suffices, for a child); Virginia: 1846, Perry v. Com., 3 Gratt. 632, 641 (the Bill of Rights abrogates all incapacity by reason of religious belief; eloquent opinion by Scott, J.; the leading case on the subject).

Distinguish the following, which goes rather on the principle of § 506, ante: 1903, Lee v. Missouri P. R. Co., 67 Kan. 402, 73 Pac. 110 (a boy of eleven, excluded because he did not know that it was wrong to lie under oath; though the Constitution made theological belief unnecessary).

The following case merely refuses to reach the result of the above cases under the testimonial statutes quoted ante, § 488: 1880, Priest v. State, 10 Nebr. 393, 399 (a statute making competent "every human being of sufficient capacity to understand the obligation of an oath," held still to require "an immediate sense of responsibility to God," and not to have "changed the character of an oath"; here an Indian was excluded).

[5] 1877, Clinton v. State, 33 Oh. St. 31 (a provision that "no person shall be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief, but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths and affirmations," held to preserve all the common-law requirements of religious belief as a part of the capacity to take oaths). Contra, Hronek v. People, Ill., supra, note 4.

[6] This latter question seems not to have arisen for decision; probably because a statute usually gives the option of affirmation.

standing, remain unfortunately in most jurisdictions unprovided for. A statute similar to that of England,[7] and applicable to all trials whatever, is a desirable enactment,[8] and its absence was long ago forcibly criticised by an eminent judge of great experience.[9] The ill effect of the error is sometimes indirectly removed by the legislation above mentioned.

§ 1829. Statutory Changes as to Nature, Form, Capacity, Proof, Persons. A summary survey may now be taken of the effect of statutes upon the remaining detailed rules laid down at common law:

(1) The nature of the oath (ante, § 1817) is changed in two types of provisions: (a) those which allow mere belief in a Supreme Being (irrespective of punishment) to suffice; (b) those which declare theological belief immaterial and yet, by judicial construction, permit the oath to be taken (ante, § 1828).

(2) For the form of the oath (ante, § 1818), the common-law doctrine is usually found preserved in the statutes, sometimes with specific sanction for certain forms. There is often a provision allowing or requiring the most obligatory form to be used, — a stricter rule than was usually recognized at common law.

(3) The capacity to take the oath has in some jurisdictions been expressly changed for children, and in others for adults also by implication of certain constitutional provisions (ante, § 1828). The proof of capacity is often affected by statutory prohibition of questions to the witness. Certain statutes have also regulated the mode of examination of a child as to general competency (ante, §§ 488, 508). The practice of discrediting a witness by his religious belief has also been altered (ante, §§ 935, 1820).

(4) The persons by statute excepted from the necessity of taking oaths are the three classes already noted (ante, § 1828).

Sub-title II: Perjury-Penalty

§ 1831. Nature of the Security. The two expedients of the oath and the perjury-penalty are similar in their operation; that is, they influence the witness subjectively against conscious falsification, the one by reminding of ultimate punishment by a supernatural power, the other by reminding of speedy punishment by a temporal power. The reminder, in the case of the perjury-penalty, is rarely found expressly uttered in the formula of words for administering an oath or an affirmation; it seems to be taken for granted as known to the witness. Nevertheless, it is a real and powerful security for truth-telling, and its function has been only the more emphasized since the general recognition of the dispensability of the oath:

[7] St. 1885, 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69.

[8] Canadian jurisdictions already have it, as well as Michigan and New York (supra, § 1828, n. 1).

[9] 1876, Stephen, Digest of Evidence, Art. 107, Appendix, Note XL.

In Pennsylvania such an exception has been virtually read into the law, without statute: 1905, Com. v. Furman, 211 Pa. 549, 60 Atl. 1089.

Compare the passages quoted ante, § 509.

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 91: "The testimony must be sanctioned, not merely by an oath, but by a judicial oath, in the course of a regular proceeding, by an authorized person. For if the oath were extrajudicial, the witness could not be punished for committing perjury under that oath, and therefore one of the securities for truth which the law has provided would be wanting."

1871, MAULSBY, J., in Hayes v. Wells, 34 Md. 518: "Liability of a witness to the penalties of perjury if he corruptly misstate facts is one of the securities for truth." [1]

§ 1832. Rules of Exclusion depending on this Requirement. No special rules of exclusion deducible from the theory of this security have found their way into the common law. Singular as this may seem, it appears to be due merely to the overshadowing importance of the oath, during the formative period of the law, when the oath's rigid requirements received so much attention that the perjury-penalty became a mere auxiliary to the oath, and no effort was made to develop independently any rules for securing amenability to the perjury-penalty. The only rules, therefore, seem to be such as are preserved as surviving parts of the oath-requirement even where the oath has been dispensed with.

(1) On the one hand, as no one doubts, the imposition of the perjury-penalty is allowable only for testimonial statements delivered in court or before a judicial officer, like the oath (ante, § 1824), and is therefore never exacted for extrajudicial statements admissible under the Exceptions to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1420). On the other hand, it is exacted of all such infrajudicial testimonial statements; so that, supposing the oath to be dispensable, still no person could be admitted to the stand without at least making affirmation, i.e. subjecting himself to the perjury-penalty.

(2) But the requirement goes no further; that is to say, looking at the nature and operation of the perjury-penalty, there is no exclusion of a witness because circumstances exist which make him legally or practically not amenable to the influence of the penalty. This absence of rules deduced from the theory of the security is observable in several classes of cases:

(a) When a deposition is taken under a commission in another country, the deponent ordinarily could not be punished for perjury, either because the crime was committed out of the jurisdiction, or because the oath was given by a foreign officer, or because the deponent does not come within the jurisdiction; nevertheless, the deposition is admissible: [1]

1744, WILLES, C. J., in Omichund v. Barker, Willes 538, 553: "When the depositions of witnesses are taken in another country, it frequently happens that they never come over hither, or if [they do] they cannot be indicted for perjury because the fact was committed in another country. Those therefore who are plainly not liable to be indicted for § 1831. [1] Mr. Wm. A. Purrington has forcefully commented on the practical inefficiency of the modern perjury-penalty ("The Frequency of Perjury," Columbia Law Review, VIII, 67, 1908); as also Judge Chalmers (in his article cited ante, § 1827, n. 1).

§ 1832. [1] In Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. 475, 481 (1831), a deposition sworn abroad before the foreign Court and not before the commission, the foreign law prohibiting the commission to exact an oath, was held admissible, for if the witness swore before the commission, and were perjured, "he would probably escape punishment."

perjury have often been, and for the sake of justice must be, admitted as witnesses. And so there is an end of this objection."

(b) When a deposition 'in perpetuam memoriam' is taken, it usually will not (and under the early Chancery rule it could not) be used until after the deponent's death (ante, §§ 1403, 1412); so that the risk of temporal punishment for perjury is mainly or entirely wanting; nevertheless, such a deposition is receivable:

1822, LEACH, V. C., in Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & Stu. 88: "Inasmuch as those written depositions can never be used until after the death of the witnesses, and are not indeed published until after the death of the witnesses, it follows, whatever may have been the perjury committed in these depositions, it must necessarily go unpunished. And this testimony, therefore, has this infirmity, that it is not given under the sanction of those penalties which the general policy of the law imposes upon the crime of perjury."

(c) Where a child is competent as a witness, but is not old enough under the criminal law to be guilty of the crime of perjury, its testimony would nevertheless be received.[2]

(d) Where the testimony is not on a material point, the witness is not guilty of the crime of perjury and therefore is not amenable to punishment; nevertheless, testimony is never excluded on this ground.[3] In general, moreover, an informality of proceedings, such as would render a prosecution for perjury impossible, is not treated as ground for exclusion; for example, informalities in taking a deposition prevent its acceptance because the testimony is not taken before one lawfully authorized or lawfully acting as a judicial officer (ante, § 1376), but not because the perjury-penalty is inapplicable. A contrary view has indeed been advanced in the ecclesiastical courts, but it rests on an unfounded belief as to the common-law practice and is out of harmony with the analogies already cited:

1840, Dr. LUSHINGTON, in Woods v. Woods, 2 Curt. Eccl. 516, 523 (rejecting depositions stated to have been taken improperly on questions submitted by the wrong person): "Nothing, in my judgment, can be more dangerous to the credit of these Courts than that it should be considered that they would decide questions affecting the rights and interests of the parties upon evidence the individuals giving which, if they depose falsely and corruptly, might not be liable to an indictment for perjury. Nothing, indeed, could be more fatal to the due administration of justice than that evidence should be received under such

[2] 1878, Johnson v. State, 61 Ga. 36; 1896, Com. v. Robinson, 165 Mass. 426, 43 N. E. 121; 1901, Com. v. Ramage, 177 Mass. 349, 58 N. E. 1078.

Contra: 1905, Freasier v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 84 S. W. 360 (here proceeding on the words of the Constitution that oaths "shall be taken subject to the pains and penalties of perjury," and upon a statute making children of under nine years incapable of perjury; none of the above cases are cited; Brooks, J., dissenting, forcibly points out "the monstrosity of the result"). But a Texas statute of 1905 (c. 59, § 1), P. C. 1911, § 34, doubtless passed in response to the recommendation in this case, has made an infant below nine years capable of perjury "when it shall appear by proof that he had sufficient discretion to understand the nature and obligation of an oath"; so that the foregoing decision is presumably no longer law.

Point raised but not decided: 1920, Williams v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 214, 225 S. W. 173.

[3] So also at one time it was thought that no prosecution for perjury would lie for a statement "I believe" by a witness, but this objection was not allowed to prevail: ante, § 728, note 1, at the end.

circumstances. . . . If a prosecution for perjury could not be sustained against witnesses, I should be bound to reject their evidence. Such is the established rule of other Courts; . . . and I think the rule is founded in justice, — otherwise persons giving evidence would be liberated from a consideration of great weight, the fear of punishment for false swearing."

Thus the establishment of the perjury-penalty, while a real and useful security for truth, has not carried with it any group of exclusionary rules; and there appears no reason for regretting this failure to add more complications to our system of Evidence.

Sub-title III: PUBLICITY

§ 1834. General Nature of the Security. The publicity of a judicial proceeding is a requirement of much broader bearing than its mere effect upon the quality of testimony; it would be essentially desirable and demandable on additional grounds. Nevertheless, it plays an important part as a security for testimonial trustworthiness, and would exist as an independent requirement for that reason only, even were other grounds wanting. The reasons for its existence therefore fall under two heads, first, those which make it a security for trustworthiness and completeness of testimony, and, secondly, those which have other advantages in view.

(1) Its operation in tending to improve the quality of testimony is twofold. Subjectively, it produces in the witness' mind a disinclination to falsify; first, by stimulating the instinctive responsibility to public opinion, symbolized in the audience, and ready to scorn a demonstrated liar; and next, by inducing the fear of exposure of subsequent falsities through disclosure by informed persons who may chance to be present or to hear of the testimony from others present. Objectively, it secures the presence of those who by possibility may be able to furnish testimony in chief or to contradict falsifiers and yet may not have been known beforehand to the parties to possess any information. The operation of this latter reason was not uncommonly exemplified in earlier days in England, when attendance at court was a common mode of passing the time for all classes of persons:

1797, Lord ELDON, in Twiss' Life, I, 300: "I prosecuted a ship at Bristol to condemnation for having on board smuggled goods to a great amount. George Rous, who was a good-natured friendly man, but violent in court, and particularly as counsel for smugglers, raved in this case and swore that I had contrived to have these goods put on board in order to condemn the ship, whilst the captain had gone ashore to see a wife whom he tenderly loved and his children whom he was extremely fond of, at the end of a very long voyage in which he had been absent from them. This was all coinage.[1] But it was put a stop to by a sailor in court starting up and exclaiming, 'Well, that's a good one! That's a good fetch! Why, my mistress and her children were aboard ship with our captain during the whole of the voyage!'"

§ 1834. [1] In those days, as the accused could not testify, his counsel was by sufferance accustomed to embody the supposed explanations of the accused in his address, and this license was of course sometimes abused.

The same advantage is gained, and much relied on, in more modern times, when the publicity given by newspaper reports of trials is often the means of securing useful testimony.[2]

These two sets of reasons have often been expounded as justifying and demanding the traditional common-law practice of holding trial with open doors:

1690 (?), Sir John Hawles, Solicitor-General, commenting on Cornish's Trial, in 11 How. St. Tr. 460: "The reason that all matters of law are, or ought to be, transacted publicly is that any person, unconcerned as well as concerned, may as 'amicus curiæ' inform the Court better, if he thinks they are in error, that justice may be done; and the reason that all trials are public is that any person may inform in point of fact, though not subpœna'd, that truth may be discovered, in civil as well as in criminal cases. There is an invitation, to all persons who can inform the Court concerning the matter to be tried, to come into the court, and they shall be heard." [3]

1768, Sir William Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 373: "This open examination of the witnesses, 'viva voce,' in the presence of all mankind, is much more conducive to the clearing up of truth than the private and secret examination taken down before an officer or his clerk, in the ecclesiastical courts and all others that have borrowed their practice from the civil law; where a witness may frequently depose that in private which he will be ashamed to testify in a public and solemn tribunal."

1823, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. II, c. X, § 2 (Bowring's ed., vol. VI, p. 355): "The advantages of publicity are neither inconsiderable nor unobvious. In the character of a security it operates in the first place upon the deponent. . . . In many cases, say rather in most (in all except those in which a witness bent upon mendacity can make sure of being apprized with perfect certainty of every person to whom it can by any possibility have happened to be able to give contradiction to any of his proposed statements), the publicity of the examination or deposition operates as a check upon mendacity and incorrectness. However sure he may think himself of not being contradicted by the deposition of any percipient witnesses, yet if the circumstances of the case have but afforded a single such witness, the prudence or imprudence, the probity or improbity, of that one original witness may have given birth to derivative and extrajudicial testimonies in any number. Environed as he sees himself by a thousand eyes, contradiction, should he hazard a false tale, will seem ready to rise up in opposition to it from a thousand mouths. Many a known face, and every unknown countenance, presents to him a possible source of detection, from whence the truth he is struggling to suppress may through some unsuspected channel burst forth to his confusion. . . . [§ 6.] Another advantage of this publicity [by printing the proceedings] . . . is the chance it affords to justice of receiving, from hands individually unknown, ulterior evidence, for the supply of any deficiency or confutation of any falsehood, which inadvertency or mendacity may have left or introduced."

(2) The other reasons, independent of evidential service, for requiring publicity are of three distinct sorts. (a) Subjectively, a wholesome effect is produced, analogous to that secured for witnesses, upon all the officers of the court, in particular, upon judge, jury, and counsel. In acting under the

[2] One notable instance occurred in the trial of Smyth v. Smyth, in 1853 (Woodley's Celebrated Trials, I, 115, 140, 144) where a jeweller, reading the report of the first day's proceedings, saw that perjury was committed as to the date of engraving a ring and brooch left with him; and his information enabled the defence to expose the falsity of the entire claim, in which an estate of $20,000 yearly income was at stake.

A good instance is dramatically told in Mr. Ashton Hilliers' romance, "Fanshawe of the Fifth" (1907, p. 336), a story laid in England in the early 1880s.

[3] In Lilburne's Trial (1649), 4 How. St. Tr. 1269, 1273, he claims the right of a public trial.

public gaze, they are more strongly moved to a strict conscientiousness in the performance of duty. In all experience, secret tribunals have exhibited abuses which have been wanting in courts whose procedure was public.[4] (b) Persons not called as parties to the suits before the court may nevertheless be affected, or think themselves likely to be affected, by pending litigation. They should have the opportunity of learning whether they are thus affected, and of protecting themselves accordingly; they have "a right to be present for the purpose of hearing what is going on."[5] (c) The educative effect of public attendance is a material advantage. Not only is respect for the law increased and intelligent acquaintance acquired with the methods of government, but a strong confidence in judicial remedies is secured which could never be inspired by a system of secrecy.[6]

In general, therefore, and as a rule, a trial must be conducted in such a way as to allow the access of the general public.[7]

§ 1835. Exceptions to the Rule of Publicity: (1) Excluding Persons from the Court-Room; Juvenile Court Procedure. All the reasons for requiring publicity are of a contingent and abstract nature. In the long run certain general advantages are secured by a usual practice. No tangible and positive advantage is gained for a party in a given case by publicity or lost by privacy. Moreover, since the whole community cannot enter, the exclusion of some only who might have entered does no definite harm. Finally, in certain conditions, the advantages may be overbalanced by disadvantages. The rule therefore need not be absolute and invariable. Exceptions may properly be recognized. It is an excess of sentimental obstinacy to deny the propriety of allowing exceptions.

(1) At common law, the propriety of exclusion of mere spectators in a given instance should depend upon the facts of each case. Both as to the classes of persons excluded and as to the grounds for exclusion, all that can be required is that the measure be a reasonable one under the circumstances. The danger of overcrowding, the risk of violence or brawls, the moral harm of satisfying pruriency in trials of certain crimes, — these are the ordinary

[4] See Bentham, ubi supra.

[5] Daubney v. Cooper, 10 B. & C. 237, 240.

[6] See Bentham, ubi supra. The whole of his Chapter X well repays perusal. A conception of the advantages of publicity may be gained by perusing the contrasting history of French procedure (Esmein, Histoire de la procedure criminelle en France, passim, translated as History of Continental Criminal Procedure, vol. V of the Continental Legal History Series); described also in Raoul de la Grasserie's "De la preuve au civil et au criminel en droit français et dans les législations étrangères," 1912, Vol. II, pp. 341, 477. Compare also Mr. (afterwards L. C. J.) Denman's praise of this security in 40 Edinb. Rev. 195 (1824), and Charles Reade's Readiana, "Our Dark Places," II.

[7] 1829, Daubney v. Cooper, 10 B. & C. 237, 240 ("We are all of opinion that it is one of the essential qualities of a court of justice that its proceedings should be public, and that all parties who may be desirous of hearing what is going on, if there be room in the place for that purpose, provided they do not interrupt the proceedings and provided there is no specific reason why they should be removed, have a right to be present for the purpose of hearing what is going on"); 1831, Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Ad. 663, 668 (at a trial before magistrates in an open court, "the public had a right to be present, as in other courts," per Tenterden, L. C. J.); Cooley, Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed. c. 10, p. 379; 1887, State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 573 (the passage in Mr. J. Cooley's work quoted with approval).

A coroner's inquest is not a trial: 1827, Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 611, 626.

grounds for exclusion. It cannot be doubted that such exceptions are within the judicial power to allow.[1] By statute, they are in most States expressly sanctioned, either in general terms, or for special classes of cases, such as divorce, rape, and the like, or for special classes of persons, such as minors.[2]

§ 1835. [1] 1917, Davis v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 247 Fed. 394 (train robbery; exclusion of all spectators except defendant's relatives, members of the bar, and reporters, held improper on the facts); 1917, Re Emigh, D. C. N. D. N. Y., 243 Fed. 988 (whether in certain bankruptcy proceedings the examination of witnesses may be private); 1884, People v. Swafford, 65 Cal. 223, 3 Pac. 809 (a judicial order excluding all except judge, jurors, witnesses, and persons connected with the case, does not violate the requirement of publicity); 1887, People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 14 Pac. 849 (so also for an order, to prevent disorder by the spectators, excluding all but court officers, reporters, and "friends of the defendant and persons necessary for her to have"); 1917, People v. Tugwell, 32 Cal. App. 520, 163 Pac. 508 (murder; exclusion of spectators because of disorder, held not improper on the facts); 1917, People v. Stanley, 33 Cal. App. 624, 166 Pac. 596 (failure to support an illegitimate child; the exclusion of "all except persons who have any legitimate interest here," held proper on the facts); 1908, Tilton v. State, 5 Ga. App. 59, 62 S. E. 651 (with limitations; collecting the cases); 1840, Stone v. People, 3 Ill. 326, 338; 1904, State v. Worthen, 124 Ia. 408, 100 N. W. 330; 1897, People v. Yeager, 113 Mich. 228, 71 N. W. 491 (under Const. Art. VI, § 28; following People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276, 50 N. W. 95, and holding invalid Act 408, § 18, of 1893: "Whenever it shall appear that, upon the trial of any cause, evidence of licentious, lascivious, degrading or peculiarly immoral acts or conduct, will probably be given, the judge presiding at such trial may, in his discretion, require and cause every person, except those necessarily in attendance thereof, to retire and absent himself or herself from the court-room during such trial, or any portion thereof"; in the trial here, for assault with intent to rape, the Court had admitted the friends of both sides; this decision is deplorable); 1907, State v. Callahan, 100 Minn. 63, 110 N. W. 342 (assault of rape; exclusion of spectators held proper on the facts; Elliott, J., diss.); 1918, Rhoades v. State, 102 Nebr. 750, 169 N. W. 433 (rape under age; order excluding "those present merely as listeners," held improper; unsound; the trial Court knew best; why not give trial Courts an opportunity to exercise their powers and be man-size Judges, instead of constantly twitching wires upon them as if they were marionettes?); 1909, State v. Nyhus, 19 N. D. 326, 124 N. W. 71 (rape; exclusion of general public, held proper on the facts); 1906, State v. Hensley, 75 Oh. 255, 79 N. E. 462 (rape under age; order of exclusion of the public held too general in its terms; here the ruling is reprehensible, because it gave no effect to the defendant's practical waiver of objection; it is an indignity to the Constitution to enforce its rights for a party who does not care enough about them to claim them at its trial); 1909, State v. Osborne, 54 Or. 289, 103 Pac. 62 (rape; order of exclusion held improper; good opinion by King, J.).

[2] ENGLAND: 1848, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, § 19 (the justices have power "in their discretion to order that no person shall have access to or remain in the room or building, if it appear to them that the ends of justice will be best answered by so doing"); commented on, with reference to later statutes of 1896, in 100 Law Times, pp. 234, 267, 291; Eng. St. 1920, c. 75, Official Secrets Act, § 8 (at any trial for an offence of disclosing official secrets, the Court may order that "all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the proceeding").

CANADA: Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule 50 (trials for seduction or criminal conversation; the judge "may order that the public, or any particular class or classes of the public," be excluded; also in any other case where he deems it to be, "in the interest of public morals").

UNITED STATES: Federal: Code 1919, § 7112 (trusts and monopolies; at hearings "the proceedings shall be open to the public as freely as are trials in open court; and no order excluding the public from attendance on any such proceedings shall be valid or enforceable"); Alabama: Const. 1901, Art. VI, § 169 ("In all prosecutions for rape and assault with intent to ravish the Court may in its discretion exclude from the court-room all persons except such as may be necessary in the conduct of the trial"); Code 1907, § 4019 ("During the trials in all courts in this state, of any case of seduction or divorce, or other case where the evidence is vulgar or obscene, or relates to the improper acts of the sexes, and tends to debauch the morals of the young, the presiding judge shall have the right, in his discretion and on his own motion, or on motion of plaintiffs or defendants, or their attorneys, to hear and try the said case after clearing the court-room of all or any portion of the audience whose presence is not necessary"); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 694 (when a cause is of a "scandalous or obscene nature," the Court may exclude "all minors whose presence is not necessary as parties or witnesses");

(2) The modern juvenile court rightly relies upon kindly paternal spirit in its procedure, as a necessary means to reach the emotions of the delinquent and to secure candid avowals and ready amenability to treatment.

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 1995 (committing magistrate; quoted post, § 1837, n. 10); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, C. C. P. § 463 (it shall be the Court's duty to exclude persons not officers or connected with the case, on counsel's suggestion that the evidence "will be of such character that unnecessary publicity would operate injuriously on public morals"); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3021 ("divorce hearings may be held privately in chambers"); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5885 (in trials for "seduction or divorce or other case where the evidence is vulgar and obscene, or relates to the improper acts of the sexes, and tends to debauch the morals of the young," the trial Court has discretion to exclude "all or any portion of the audience"); 1921, McClelland v. State, — Ga. App. —, 110 S. E. 245 (unspecified offense; order to exclude women and minors, not passed upon); 1921, Moore v. State, 151 Ga. 648, 108 S. E. 47 (rape; the trial Court on motion of the State excluded all persons except officers of the court, defendant's relatives, prosecutrix' relatives, members of the bar, and newspaper reporters, during the taking of the prosecutrix' testimony, under Civ. C. 1910, § 5885; held (1) that the statute was constitutional, (2) that the order was reasonable and valid); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 6476 (in actions for "divorce, criminal conversation, seduction, or breach of promise of marriage," the Court may exclude "all persons except the officers of the court, the parties, their witnesses, and counsel"); Iowa: Code 1919, § 2101; Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 6367, St. 1885, c. 144 (minors may be excluded during a proceeding "in which vulgar, obscene, or immoral evidence is elicited or produced"); C. Cr. P. 1895, § 63 (committing magistrate may exclude "all persons" from the room, except the attorneys, etc.); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 979 (infants under 16, not witnesses nor kin to the parties, shall be excluded from the court-room during trials for rape, seduction, etc., and in civil trials for slander, seduction, and breach of promise of marriage); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 26 (Court may exclude minors during any trial, "when their presence is not necessary as witnesses or parties"); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 55, § 40 (at election inquests, the judge "may exclude all persons whose presence is not necessary at such inquest"); c. 220, § 13 (any court "may exclude minors as spectators," if their presence "is not necessary as witnesses or parties"); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 15700 (on a charge of rape, seduction, etc., a committing magistrate may exclude all persons not officers of the court or required to attend); § 15679 (committing magistrate may exclude minors during the examination of witnesses); § 12253 (on any trial "which involves scandal or immorality," the Court may exclude "all minors, as a matter of public policy, unless such minor or minors are parties or witnesses"); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 9203 (no person under seventeen, not a party, etc., shall be present at a criminal trial); Mississippi: Const. 1890, III, § 26 (accused is entitled to a public trial; but "in prosecutions for rape, adultery, fornication, sodomy, or the crime against nature, the Court may in its discretion exclude from the court-room all persons except such as are necessary in the conduct of the trial"); Code 1906, § 268, Hem. § 217 (bastardy proceedings; justice may exclude all persons except parties, counsel, officers, and witnesses); § 1679, Hem. § 1421 (in divorce proceedings, the Court may exclude all persons except officers, parties' attorneys, parties, and witnesses); New York: Cons. L. 1909, Judiciary, § 4 (Court sittings shall be public, except as in Utah Rev. St. § 1789); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4636 (in rape trials, during prosecutrix' testimony, the judge or the justice may "exclude from the court-room all persons except the officers of the court, the defendant, and those engaged in the trial of the case"); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7337 (the judge may in his discretion "on the trial of cases of a scandalous or obscene nature" exclude "all persons not necessarily present as parties or witnesses"); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 10 ("The sitting of every court of justice shall be public, but any court may, in its discretion, exclude the public when the testimony to be adduced is of so indecent a nature as to require such exclusion in the interests of morality"); Texas: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 23 ("The proceedings and trials in all courts shall be public"); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 1789 ("In an action for divorce, criminal conversation, seduction, abortion, rape, or assault with intent to commit rape, the Court may in its discretion exclude all persons who are not directly interested therein, except jurors, witnesses, and officers of the court"); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3574 (divorce trials; Court may exclude all but officials and parties); Virginia: Code 1919, § 4906 (in all criminal cases, "the Court may in its discretion exclude from the trial any or all persons whose presence is not deemed necessary"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4789 (magistrate may exclude all bystanders and others not officers or otherwise required to be present, on examination for rape, assault with intent to rape, seduction, adultery, bastardy, "or other offense against chastity, morality, or decency").

With this purpose, it seeks to eliminate the usual incidents of a criminal court, particularly the strict formality and the tense combativeness. Privacy of examination of the delinquent and his family is therefore regarded as generally useful and occasionally essential; and statutes usually provide for this.[3]

But in so far as such statutes make privacy compulsory, or so far as practice habitually exercises the power, it has its dangers. No court of justice can afford habitually to conduct its proceedings strictly in private. The reasons above given are as applicable to juvenile courts as to others. The tendency to undue privacy should be checked.

An eminent judge of long experience in the juvenile court thus comments on the subject:

1921, Hon. EDWARD F. WAITE (Judge of the Juvenile Court, Minneapolis), "How far can court procedure be socialized without impairing individual rights?" (Journal of Criminal

[3] CANADA: Newf. St. 1919, 9 Geo. V, c. 6, § 22, Protection of Children Act ("the room in which the examination takes place shall not be deemed a public court, and no person shall be permitted to be present other than the officers of the law," etc., etc.); Saskatchewan: R. S. 1920, c. 192, § 25 (children's court; the judge shall exclude from the room all persons except counsel, witnesses, etc.).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1907, § 6453, as amended by St. 1915, No. 510, p. 577, § 4 (juvenile court; "no person shall be admitted to hear the trial of any juvenile delinquent" except officers, attorneys in the cause, parents or guardians, etc.); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 1856 (juvenile delinquents; Court shall ordinarily "hear complaints . . . in chambers"); St. 1921, c. 336, § 11 (juvenile courts; judges shall exclude "any person whose presence is in the court's opinion not necessary"); Georgia: St. 1915, Aug. 16, No. 210, § 11 (juvenile court may "exclude the general public from the room" admitting only those who "have a direct interest in the case"); P. C. § 889 (juvenile court; "the hearing shall be, as far as practicable, private"); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2286 (trial of juveniles; judge may exclude any person not interested "whose presence he deems prejudicial to the interests of the child"); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7910 (on disposal of dependent child, the Court may "exclude the general public," admitting only those who have a "direct interest in the case"); Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 1633 (juvenile court; judge may exclude all persons "not necessary for the trial of the case"); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 10084 (boys under sixteen entitled to "a private examination and trial, to which only the parties to the case shall be admitted," unless parent, etc., demands public trial); § 6385, St. 1901, c. 106 (dependent children; the Court may exclude "all persons other than the counsel and witnesses in the case, officers of the law or of any children's aid society or institution, and the immediate friends or relatives of the child or parent"); Maine: St. 1919, c. 58, amending R. S. c. 144, § 3 (juveniie delinquents; the Court may "exclude the general public other than persons having a direct interest in the case"); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 2013 (juvenile delinquents; judge may exclude "any person whose presence is deemed prejudicial to the interests of the child or the public, when such person does not have a recognized personal interest in the case"); Minnesota: St. 1917, c. 397, § 24 (juvenile court; general public may be excluded, admitting only those interested, etc.); Mississippi: St. 1916, c. 11, § 14 (juvenile offenders; judge "may exclude the public from the room"); New Hampshire: St. 1915, Apr. 7, c. 96, amending St. 1907, c. 125, § 3 (juvenile court; minors shall be excluded, unless the Court deems their presence necessary); New Mexico: St. 1917, Feb. 19, note 7 (juvenile court may, and on application of juvenile or his custodian, shall, "order the hearing to be private"); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919 (juvenile court; "the general public may be excluded," admitting only those who "have a direct interest in the case"); Porto Rico: St. 1915, March 11, No. 37, § 16 (juvenile court; the judge may conduct the case as in Kan. Gen. St. § 10084); Rhode Island: St. 1915, c. 1185 (juvenile court and superior court; like Me. St. 1919, c. 58); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4801 (juvenile court, "the hearing . . . shall be private, and all persons, except the officers of the court, the parties, their witnesses, and counsel, shall be excluded therefrom; and the record thereof shall not be open to the public except upon order of the judge").

See "The Socialization of Juvenile Court Procedure," by Miriam Van Waters (Journal of Crim. L. and Criminology, 1922, XIII, 61).

Law and Criminology, XII, 339): "One who is accused of crime has a constitutional right to a public trial. As to what a public trial is, the courts have differed. If a juvenile court is organized as a criminal court for children, any child who comes before it charged with an offense is entitled to a public trial. If the court that deals with him is exercising chancery jurisdiction, no such constitutional right exists; and for the purposes of this discussion non-criminal courts with purely statutory jurisdiction over children will be classed, though not with technical exactness, as courts of chancery jurisdiction. To a mind 'not warped,' as somebody has said, 'by study and practice of the law,' it may seem absurd that the hearing in the case of Johnny Jones must be public if he is charged in a criminal court with stealing, and need not be so if he is charged in a non-criminal court with being delinquent because he stole. I shall not now defend this seeming inconsistency. If it is constitutional law, it is binding on the courts and legislatures, and can be changed only by constitutional amendments. There is no constitutional right to a public hearing when dependency or neglect is the issue; and the court has no right to deny it in cases of 'contributing,' since here it acts always as a criminal court, whether or not it has also chancery jurisdiction. Even when the right to a public trial exists, much discretion is allowed the judge in the matter of excluding idle onlookers in the interest of public decency or the good order of the court proceedings. Probably no reasonable exercise of this discretion would ever be questioned by or on behalf of a juvenile delinquent, for the protection of whose sensibilities and reputation it is commonly exercised. Indeed, all doubtful questions that have arisen in my own experience have had reference to *in*clusion rather than *ex*clusion. I have sometimes found it puzzling to know how far it was just to children and their parents to permit their troubles to be heard even by qualified social observers who wished to use the clinical opportunities afforded by court sessions."

(3) An adjournment of the court to another place than the regular court-room could not in itself result in preventing publicity, even though the Court were held in a lawyer's office or the like, unless during the session there an actual prohibition of the public's attendance were issued. Such adjournments might, however, involve irregularities of procedure on grounds independent of the present principle; and, as they have generally been treated from that point of view, no definition of the exceptional justifying causes, as allowable under the present principle, seems to have been made.[4] It would seem that exceptions could be recognized.

§ 1836. Same: (2) Preventing Publication of Proceedings. Does the policy of publicity justify and demand, as a necessary deduction, the opportunity for the general public of ascertaining the tenor of the proceedings through contemporaneous printed reports, no less than through personal attendance in the court-room?

[4] Since the subject is one rather of trial procedure than of evidence, no attempt has been made to collect all the precedents. Rulings dealing with the subject are as follows: 1921, Ex parte Liggett, — Cal. —, 202 Pac. 660 (committal to State hospital for dipsomaniacs; C. C. P. § 2185*c* held to authorize holding of the hearing elsewhere than at the court-house); 1897, Reed v. State, 147 Ind. 41, 46 N. E. 135 (in a room other than the usual one); 1877, Mohon v. Harkreader, 18 Kan. 383 (at a private law office); 1916, State v. Tracy, 34 N. D. 498, 158 N. W. 1069 (assault with intent to rape; adjournment to a hospital to take the victim's testimony, held proper); 1842, Le Grange v. Ward, 11 Oh. 257 (not at the county seat); 1915, U. S. v. Lim Tin, 31 P. I. 504; 1892, Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 514, 24 Atl. 1013 (at the judge's house); 1895, Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 39 Pac. 293 (adjourning to the house of a witness on account of his illness, to take his testimony); 1898, Selleck v. Janesville, 100 Wis. 157, 75 N. W. 975 (adjourning to the plaintiff's house, on account of her illness, to take her testimony).

Of the advantages gained by publicity, as enumerated above (ante, § 1634), it will be observed that the first sort (the tendency to improve the quality of testimony) is here equally to be expected, though not in the same degree, and that the second sort is also to be expected, though again hardly in the same degree. Publicity by contemporaneous reports, furthermore, is, on the one hand, the more effective sort, first in that an absolutely larger number of persons are certain to be reached, and secondly in that at the present day the attendance of representatives of all classes of the community at court sessions is (in cities at least) not so common as it formerly was. On the other hand, this mode of publicity is nowadays in our own country much less effective than in England, because ordinarily the newspapers (in cities at least) are so neglectful of the civic duties of their occupation that they give only scanty space to reports of legal proceedings, and are satisfied with fragmentary and misleading accounts. It is also less necessary because the exploitation of the news of crime usually occurs at the time of its commission and of its investigation by the police, so that its use in inducing informed persons to bring forward evidence has been mainly exhausted before the time of the trial. Finally, it is less necessary, because the absence of this mode of publicity would still leave all the advantages and guarantees of the other mode in as ample a manner as they existed at common law before daily newspapers existed or followed this practice. There are thus balancing considerations; so that the sum of the case seems to be on the whole as it was first stated, namely, that this mode of securing publicity is calculated to secure the same kinds of advantages as publicity by personal attendance, though not to secure them in the same degree. It may be assumed, then, that the requirement of publicity calls also for the preservation of this mode of securing it, though not with the same urgency.

There may, then, properly be exceptions, i.e. situations in which the Court may forbid the printed publication of the proceedings pending the progress of the trial. It is usually assumed that such a publication is lawful unless a specific order of the Court has prohibited it. The question then is, For what reasons may a Court properly prohibit it?

Of palpably just grounds, there are at least two: first that the proceeding is only a preliminary or 'ex parte' one, and that a publication would therefore give an erroneous impression of the conduct of the parties; secondly, that conditions of popular emotion exist, amid which the publication before verdict rendered would tend to excite the public mind, to cause pressure upon the minds of the witnesses, the judge, and the jury, and thus to do injustice to one of the parties by preventing a fair and unbiassed investigation of the facts. The whole question, however, has not been and cannot be developed in judicial precedent solely with reference to its evidential bearings; for it is commonly complicated with two other matters of law, — on the one hand, the law of libel by privileged reports, and, on the other hand, the law of contempt of court (i.e. obstruction of justice) by comment on a pending trial. For this reason, and for the reason that publicity has also an independent utility (supra, § 1834), it is hardly possible to say that there is upon this subject any rule having reference purely to the evidential bearings of the policy of publicity,[1] and it is unlikely that there ever will be.

§ 1836. [1] Some of the earlier precedents are as follows: England: 1811, R. v. Fisher, 2 Camp. 563 (preliminary examination); 1817, Watson's Trial, 32 How. St. Tr. 80, 109, 111, 538 (order not to publish the proceedings till the close of the trial; here the prosecution's opening address was so published); 1817, Brandreth's Trial, 32 How. St. Tr. 776, 779, (order only); 1817, Turner's Trial, 32 How. St. Tr. 957 (same as in Watson's case); 1820, Brunt's and Thistlewood's Trials, 33 How. St. Tr. 1182, 1335, 1563 (publication presumably in aid of the accused); s. c., R. v. Clement, 4 B. & Ald. 218; see an examination of the earlier English cases by Mr. (afterwards L. C. J.) Denman, in 40 Edinb. Rev., 197 ff. (1824).

United States: 1842, U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Wall. Jr. 1, 11 (reporters of newspapers were by order refused admission within the bar, except on condition of not publishing the proceedings pending trial; the Court construed the Act of March 2, 1831, Rev. St. § 725, as preventing them from prohibiting the publication); 1858, Dunham v. State, 6 Ia. 245; 1851, Tenney's Case, 23 N. H. 162 (bill in equity); 1896, Re Hughes, 8 N. M. 225, 43 Pac. 692; 1884, State v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416.

SUB-TITLE IV: SEQUESTRATION[1] OF WITNESSES

CHAPTER LXI.

§ 1837. History; Statutes. The expedient of separating a party's witnesses, in order to detect falsehood by exposing inconsistencies, seems to have been early discovered and long practised in various communities. Though probably not in itself older or more widespread than some other fundamental notions of proof, nevertheless its age and universality have come to be more emphasized in our own legal annals because of the instance recorded and handed down in the apocryphal Scriptures. The story of Daniel's judgment in Susanna's case has given to this expedient a unique and classical place in our law as well as in our literature:

The History of Susanna: "[Two elders coveted Susanna, a very fair woman and pure, the wife of Joacim; they tempted her, but she resisted; then they plotted, and charged her with adultery; and she was brought before the assembly;] and the elders said: 'As we walked in the garden [of Joacim] alone, this woman came in with two maids, and shut the garden doors, and sent the maids away. Then a young man, who there was hid, came unto her, and lay with her. Then we that stood in the corner of the garden, seeing this wickedness, ran unto them. And when we saw them together, the man we could not hold, for he was stronger than we and opened the door and leaped out. But having taken this woman, we asked who the young man was, but she would not tell us. These things do we testify.' Then the assembly believed them, as those that were the elders and judges of the people. . . . But [Daniel,] standing in the midst of them, said: . . . 'Are ye such fools, ye sons of Israel, that without examination or knowledge of the truth ye have condemned a daughter of Israel?' . . . Then Daniel said unto them, 'Put these two aside, one far from another, and I will examine them.' So when they were put asunder one from another, he called one of them, and said unto him:[2] 'Now then, if thou hast seen her, tell me, under what tree sawest thou them companying together?' who answered, 'Under a mastick tree.' And Daniel said, 'Very well; thou hast lied against thine own head.' . . . So he put him aside, and commanded to bring the other, and said unto him,[3] . . . 'Now therefore tell me, under what tree didst thou take them companying together?' who answered, 'Under an holm tree.' Then said Daniel unto him, 'Well; thou hast also lied against thine own head.' . . . With that, all the assembly cried out with a loud voice, and praised God who saveth them that trust in him. And they arose against the two elders, for Daniel had convicted them of false witness, by their own mouth. . . . From that day forth was Daniel had in great reputation in the sight of the people."

§ 1837. [1] This term for the process of placing prospective witnesses out of the hearing of a testifying witness has precedent in the usage of Louisiana (37 La. An. 463), of Texas (3 S. W. 539), and of Georgia (Code Index, s. v. "Witness"), and seems preferable to any other; there is indeed no other single term in acceptance. In the Southern States, by an early usage of obscure origin, it is termed (e. g. in 2 Swan 257) "putting under the rule," the word "rule" being merely the original English term for "order of court."

[2] Here Daniel, in several lines of vituperation, prophesies the elder's downfall; it would seem that this indicates a desire to anger and confuse the witness, preventing him from recollecting the details of his story if he had invented one.

[3] Here again came disconcerting anathema.

The story of Susanna's vindication, sanctioned as it was by its place in the Scriptures, came to serve as a powerful argument in English courts, after the spread of printing and the popularization of the Bible made the people at large familiar with it. From almost the beginning of our recorded trials, the story is found repeatedly cited, and was a favorite text of invocation for those who hoped in the same way to prove their innocence.[4]

Meantime, however, it is clear that the expedient already had in English practice an independent and continuous existence, even in the time of those earlier modes of trial which preceded the jury and were a part of our inheritance of the common Germanic law. It appears to have been customary to examine separately the secta-witnesses[5] and the transaction- and document-witnesses,[6] as well as other persons from whom a consistent story was expected in order to obtain legal action;[7] and the process seems to have had

[4] Circa 1460, Sir John Fortescue, L. C., in his De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, c. 21, dilates on the marvel of its success. Other examples: 1603, Sir Walter Raleigh's Trial, Jardine Crim. Tr., I, 419 ("My lords, for the matter I desire, remember too the story of Susannah; she was falsely accused, and Daniel called the judges 'fools, because without examination of the truth they had condemned a daughter of Israel,' and he discovered the false witnesses by asking them questions"); 1683, Sidney's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 817, 861 (cited by Sidney, arguing for himself); 1684, Rosewell's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 147, 190; 1696, Cook's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 311, 348, note; Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 537, 722; 1725, Braddon, Observations on the Earl of Essex's Murder, 9 How St. Tr. 1229, 1278, 1283, 1294.

There appears to be no mention of it in the recorded trials about the time of the great dramatist's earlier life in London. Yet one likes to imagine that his "Daniel come to judgment" was inspired by the tale of some trial known to him in which an appeal to this story had furnished a theme for popular discussion; it could not have been Raleigh's trial, for the lines in the "Merchant of Venice" had already been printed some three years.

[5] See instances from Bracton's Note-Book, cited in Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 14; from the Norwich Custumal (ante 1340), quoted in Bateson's Borough Customs, 1904, I, 203, Selden Society, vol. XVIII.

[6] See instances collected by Professor Thayer, Prelim. Treatise, 20, 22, 98; Pollock and Maitland, Hist. Eng. Law, II, 635, 637. To these add the following: 1158 (?), Wallingford and Oxford v. Abbott Walkelin, Bigelow's Plac. Ang. Norm. 198, 201 (controversy over a right of market; a number of men of the county were chosen in order by their oaths to decide the claim, but "segregati, qui jurarent, diversis opinionibus causam suam confundebant," and their diversities are then stated in detail).

[7] The expedient was used in examining the summoners in a writ of mortdancester: Britton, b. III, c. 10, § 9 (Nichols, II, 92) (as to resummons in mortdancester, where the tenant denies that he was first summoned, "let the summoners be examined, and if upon examination they are found to disagree in the circumstances of the summoning, let the tenant be adjudged quit as to the default, and the summoners in mercy. And if they are found to agree, then he may defend the summons by his law"). See also, for this, Fleta, b. V, c. 3, § 7; b. VII, c. 6, §§ 12, 13, 20.

A good example of this practice with the summoners occurs in Bracton's Note-Book, pl. 10, where "omnes discordant adinvicem." Compare also the proceeding with the grand jury, quoted in Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, I, 248; 1300+, MS. Lex Mercatoria, cited by Mr. A. T. Carter, in 17 L. Q. Rev. 247 (sequestration shown to be a part of the procedure in the early market-courts); 1630 (?), Hudson's Treatise on the Star Chamber, p. 204, quoted in Leadam's Select Cases in the Star Chamber, Seld. Soc. Pub., vol. XVI, p. xxxiv. In short, it would seem that the value of the practice was well understood on all hands, and that it was resorted to in any sort of proceeding in which it was appropriate.

substantially the same object and probative operation that we find in it to-day:

1318, Anon., Pl. Ab. 351, col. 1, London:[8] "The justices immediately called the four witnesses before them and examined each of them separately as to the making, sealing, and place and time, how and when [an alleged deed of release was made,] and other necessary circumstances touching the deed. . . . [Three of the four had said that] on a certain Thursday they all came together to the manor . . . and found there this said Richard, who showed them the said writing and said it was his deed. Each of them was asked, separately and by himself, at what hour they came there, and in what building in the manor Richard showed them the writing, and how he was dressed. One of them said that they came there in the morning before sunrise, and that the writing was shown to the four witnesses in the queen's chamber in the manor, and Richard was dressed in a German tunic 'de medleto,' and was shod in white shoes. The second said that they came at six o'clock, and the writing was shown to the four witnesses at this hour in the hall of the manor. The third said that they came, all at the same time, at nine o'clock, and Richard showed them the writing in the stable of the manor and he had on a black cloak. The fourth witness, William de Codinton, said that he never came to the manor with the said three witnesses, and never knew or heard of the making of the writing" except from the others' report. And judgment was given against the deed.

It was natural enough, when trial by jury had developed and the jurors had come to rely much upon the testimony of witnesses brought into court before them (that is, perhaps, after the 1400s), that the ancient expedient should continue to be applied in these new conditions. From the beginning of this epoch, and onwards, it is clear that the practice was well known and often used.[9] There is perhaps no testimonial expedient which, with as long a history, has persisted in this manner without essential change.

The practice of course crossed the water with the common law. To-day, in many jurisdictions of the United States and Canada, statutes have expressly (though unnecessarily) made provision for sequestration, usually concerning its employment before committing magistrates.[10] Occasionally

[8] As quoted in Thayer, ubi supra, 99.

[9] Examples: Circa 1460, Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum, c. 26; 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, Jardine's Crim. Tr., I, 191; 1600, Earl of Essex's Trial, Jardine's Crim. Tr., I, 349; 1665, Guilliams v. Hulie, 1 Sid. 131; 1684, Rosewell's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 147, 160; 1696, Charnock's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 1396; 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 330; 1775, Trial of Maharajah Nundocomar, 20 How. St. Tr. 934; 1793, Hudson's Trial, How. St. Tr. 1021.

[10] CANADA: Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, R. 190 (like Ont. Rule 254); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule 584 (the judge may order "some or all of the witnesses" to be removed, including "any party to the cause or his solicitor, intending or subpœnaed to give evidence"; or he may require the party to be examined before his other witnesses; and he may punish any witness who disobeys, and may "exclude the testimony of any witness who returns to or remains in the Court without leave of the judge"); Ontario: Rules of Court 1914, § 254 ("The judge shall at the request of either party order a witness to be excluded," and also "if the judge deems it expedient, a party intending to give evidence; or he may require such party to be examined before the other witnesses in his behalf"; in discretion the judge may exclude the testimony of "any witness or party" who disobeys).

UNITED STATES: Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 2423, 1492 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 1788, 854, 1601, 831); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 882 (committing magistrate may exclude all witnesses while one is examined, and may also cause them to be kept separate); § 883 (he may also on defendant's request exclude all persons except prosecutor, counsel, officers having defendant in custody, and clerk); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 2928 (on accused's request, committing magistrate may exclude all persons except clerk, peace officer, prosecutor, accused, parties' attorneys, and witness under examination); § 2929 (he may also cause the witnesses to be kept separate from each other and out of hearing of the witness deposing); § 4191 (civil cases; "If either party require it, the judge may exclude from the court-room any witness of the adverse party not at the time under examination, so that he may not hear the testimony of the other witness"); California: P. C. 1872, § 867 (committing magistrate "may exclude all witnesses who have not been examined; he may also cause the witnesses to be kept separate, and to be prevented from conversing with each other until they are all examined"); § 868 (he "must also, upon the request of the defendant, exclude from the examination every person except his clerk, the prosecutor and his counsel, the attorney-general, the district attorney of the county, the defendant and his counsel, and the officers having the defendant in custody"); C. C. P. 1872, § 2043 ("If either party requires it, the judge may exclude from the court-room any witness of the adverse party not at the time under examination, so that he may not hear the testimony of the other witnesses; but a party to the action or proceeding cannot be so excluded, and if a corporation is a party thereto, it is entitled to the presence of one of its officers, to be designated by its attorney"): Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 239 (coroner may sequestrate witnesses); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5869, P. C. § 1043 ("In all cases, either party has the right to have the witnesses of the other party examined out of the hearing of each other; the Court will take proper care to effect this object as far as practicable and convenient; but any mere irregularity shall not exclude the witness"); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8030 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2043); § 6476 (in any case the Court may in discretion "exclude any and all witnesses in the cause"); §§ 8752–8753 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 867, 868); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 361 (committing magistrate may exclude, during a witness' examination, other witnesses, or separate the witnesses so that they cannot converse with each other until they have been examined); Iowa: Code 1897, § 5225, Rev. Code, § 9179 (committing magistrate may exclude all witnesses except the one testifying, and may cause witnesses to be kept separate); § 5226, Rev. Code § 9180 (he must also exclude on defendant's request all persons except the attorneys and certain officers); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7959 (committing magistrate may in discretion exclude all witnesses not being examined, and, "may direct the witnesses for or against the prisoner to be kept separate so that they cannot converse with each other until they shall have been examined"); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 601 (judge may order separation, not to include parties or court officers); C. Cr. P. §§ 62, 63 (committing magistrate may order separation, and must do so on request of either party; but not so as to exclude the defendant, his counsel, the peace officer, the Commonwealth's attorney, or the prosecutor); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 135, § 12 (committing magistrate may separate witnesses for accused from witnesses against him, and may examine "each one separately from all the others"); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 248, § 38 (separate examination authorized, in proceeding to free a person under restraint, of the person and of witnesses); c. 148, § 4 (same for fire marshal's inquest); c. 38, § 8 (at inquests of death, the witnesses may be kept separate); c. 55, § 10 (same for election inquest); c. 276, § 39 (committing magistrate may exclude all other witnesses during the examination of one, and may separate "the witnesses for or against the prisoner," so as not to converse); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 15679 (committing magistrate may separate the witnesses, etc.); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 9082 (committing magistrate may in discretion exclude all witnesses not testifying, and may direct "the witnesses for or against the prisoner to be kept separate" until examined); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 3823 (committing magistrate; like Cal. P. C. § 867); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 2750 (fire marshal's investigation; witnesses may be separated, etc.); §§ 11781, 11782 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 867, 868); § 10660 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2043); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 9980 (committing magistrate, "if requested, or if he sees good cause," shall order separate examination, and separation of witnesses on one side from those on the other); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 6984 (during defendant's examination before committing magistrate, witnesses on either side shall not be present; and the magistrate may exclude all unexamined witnesses during the examination of one, and may cause witnesses to be kept separate and be prevented from conversing with each other until all are examined); § 6985 (he shall on defendant's request exclude all persons except the clerk, prosecutor and counsel, attorney-general, district attorney of county, defendant and his counsel, and officer having him in custody); § 5449 (civil cases; like Cal. C. C. P. § 2043); New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 252, § 11 (sequestration allowable on preliminary examination by magistrate); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 3211 (committing magistrate may exclude all unexamined witnesses during another's examination, and may keep witnesses apart and prevent them from conversing until all have been examined); New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 202 (committing magistrate may sequestrate witnesses while others are examined, and must do so while defendant is examined); Con. St. 1919, § 4562

the statute serves to determine one of the mooted points hereafter to be noticed.

§ 1838. Probative Purpose and Operation. The process of sequestration consists merely in preventing one prospective witness from being taught by hearing another's testimony:

Circa 1460, Chief Justice FORTESCUE, De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, c. 26: "And if necessity requires, the witnesses may be separated, until they have testified to whatever they intended, so that what one says shall not instruct or warn another how to testify consistently."

1824, KIRKPATRICK, C. J., in State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. L. 226: "The less a witness hears of another's testimony, the more likely he is to declare his own knowledge simply and unbiassed."

1872, FREEMAN, J., in Wisener v. Maupin, 2 Baxt. 342, 357: "The object being to prevent the witnesses with feelings interested from being prepared to meet the statements of witnesses already made, and to compel them to rely on their own memory for the accuracy of their statements without being warped or influenced in their statements by what they have already heard deposed."

1902, MCCLELLAN, C. J., in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. York, 128 Ala. 305, 30 So. 676: "The purpose to be subserved in putting witnesses under the rule is that they may not be able to strengthen or color their own testimony, or to testify to greater advantage in line with their bias, or to have their memories refreshed, sometimes unduly, by hearing the testimony of other witnesses; and it is legitimate argument against the veracity or fairness of a witness to say that his testimony has been developed along the lines of his inclination in the case by the opportunities he has had, from hearing the other witnesses, to refute them or to amplify his own statements to meet the exigencies of the trial."

But the probative service thereby rendered is somewhat different according as the witnesses separated are called for opposing parties or for the same parties.

(1) If the hearing of an opposing witness were permitted, the listening witness could thus ascertain the precise points of difference between their testi-

(before a committing magistrate, no witnesses are to be present during accused's examination; during any witness' examination, others may be sequestrated); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 10603, 10604 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 867, 868, adding, "and such other person as he may designate" after "defendant and his counsel"); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 13512 (committing magistrate may "if requested, or if there is good cause therefor," order separation of witnesses); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 854 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2043); § 1788 (committing magistrate "may exclude the witnesses who have not been examined during the examination of the defendant or during the examination of a witness for the State or the defendant"); Philippine Isl. P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, §§ 39, 40 (similar to Cal. P. C. §§ 867, 868); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1518 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2043); Tennessee: Shannon's Code, 1916, § 5599 (party is not to be put under the rule when he is a witness); § 7020 (committing magistrate may sequestrate witnesses); Texas: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 719 (at either party's request, witnesses on both sides may be removed so as not to hear testimony of any other witness); § 720 (those on one side may or may not be separated from those on the other, as the Court directs); § 721 (party requesting separation may designate some or all for the purpose); § 723 (witnesses thus sequestrated are to be instructed not to converse about the case nor to read reports of testimony); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7207 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2043); §§ 8748–8749 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 867, 868); § 1789 (exclusion of spectators in trials involving indecencies; "provided that in any cause the Court may in its discretion, during the examination of a witness, exclude any and all other witnesses in the cause"); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1888 (separation allowable in discretion, on demand of either party, in a county court); § 1982 (separate examination of witnesses demandable by either party in criminal cases); Virginia: Code 1919, § 4843 (witnesses may be sequestrated by committing magistrate); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 155, § 13 (committing justice may sequestrate witnesses); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4788 (committing magistrate may in discretion exclude witnesses other than the one examined, and may cause the separation of "the witnesses for or against the prisoner"); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 7357 (like Oh. Gen. Code Ann., § 13512).

monies, and could shape his own testimony to better advantage for his cause. The process of separation, then, is here purely preventive; i. e. it is designed, like the rule against leading questions, to deprive the witness of suggestions as to the false shaping of his testimony.

(2) But the separation of witnesses on the same side may do something more than this. It is equally preventive, in that it deprives the later witness of the opportunity of shaping his testimony to correspond with that of the earlier one. But it is, additionally, detective in its effects; i. e. it exposes their difference of statement on points on which, had they truly spoken, they must have made identical statements. This variance of statements is the significant achievement of the witnesses' separation, and seems to rest for its probative cogency on two salient circumstances, namely, (a) that the witnesses speak upon the same side, and (b) that the subject of their statements is the details of a single occurrence.

(a) The first circumstance serves to remove uncertainty, by fixing unmistakably upon one party's case the whole burden of error. Where two persons, claiming to have been present on the same occasion with equal opportunities of observation, are called upon opposite sides and contradict each other, the contradiction does not of itself establish anything; it may indicate that one of the two is falsifying, but it does not indicate one rather than the other as the falsifier; it is still open to either side to claim its witness as the truthful one, so that neither side is clearly fixed with the error or falsity. But where both speak for the same party, contradicting each other, it is manifest without anything further that the error is upon that particular side; the result is achieved by mere comparison of statements, without the necessity of first granting credit to an opposing witness and without any of the troublesome uncertainty which arises from being forced to weigh their respective credits.[1]

(b) The second circumstance, mentioned above, emphasizes the probability of a downright manufacture of testimony. The truth of the main fact is put forward by the party as confirmatively established by the harmony of their joint testimony; and, where two persons come purporting to have observed the same event in the same way, the details of that fact, necessarily and equally open to their observation at the same time, ought to produce the same harmony of impression, and therefore of testimony. If, then, that harmony disappears upon further questioning as to these details, one of two inferences follows: Either (b) there is an honest mistake, in observation or in memory on the part of one; but the former is less likely to the extent that the one fact was necessarily connected in observation with the other, and the latter is almost impossible where (as is usual) the statements are positive, § 1838. [1] Compare the theory of 'inconsistent statements of the same witness (ante, § 1017).

From the point of view of the logic and psychology of testimony, see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), especially §§ 234–243, 324–333.

and therefore mere failure of memory does not serve to explain; moreover, even an honest mistake as to details shows the probability of a mistake on the main fact. Or, (bb) there is a collusive arrangement, or a deliberate intention by one, to testify falsely; for, if on connected matters of detail, which by the operation of the senses ought equally to have produced identical impressions and therefore identical statements, there is no harmony, then the apparent harmony of statement on the principal fact can be explained only as artificial (i. e.) as the result of an individual plan or a combination to manufacture false testimony. This not only discredits one or both of the witnesses in all their testimony, but also throws suspicion on the entire mass of evidence of that party, if this fabrication by the witnesses may seem to have been known to him. More concisely and less accurately: If matters A, B, C, and D must have happened together, then a disagreement as to the tenor of matters B, C, and D, by witnesses called on the same side to prove A, indicates probable perjury by one or more as to A, and possible subornation of perjury by the party.

The weight of this exposure of contrary statements is of course diminished according to the degree of possibility of honest mistake, which in turn depends upon the necessariness of connection between the facts testified to and upon the extent to which one or more of the witnesses venture positive statements as to details. Moreover, the expedient is not invariably successful even where perjury does exist, because either a concerted working out of false details, or a cautious failure of memory, beyond the circle of the main fact, may sometimes baffle all efforts at detection. But when all allowances are made, it remains true that the expedient of sequestration is (next to cross-examination) one of the greatest engines that the skill of man has ever invented for the detection of liars in a court of justice. Its supreme excellence consists in its simplicity and (so to speak) its automatism; for, while cross-examination, to be successful, often needs the rarest skill, and is always full of risk to its very employers, sequestration does its service with but little aid from the examiner, and can never, even when unsuccessful, do serious harm to those who have invoked it.

From the following passages some illustrations of its working may be gathered:

1679, Kerne's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 707, 709; charge of being a priest; two women, Edwards and Jones, were offered to testify to hearing him say mass. Defendant: "I desire to ask her what discourse she had with Mary Jones, the other witness, for she has been instructing her what to say, and that they may be examined asunder"; which was granted. L. C. J. Scroggs: "Did she [Jones] tell you what she could say?" Edwards: "She did." L. C. J.: "What?" Edwards: "She went once to hearken, and she heard Mr. Kerne say something in Latin, which she said was mass." L. C. J.: "Call the other woman; you shall now see how these women agree." Clerk: "Call Mary Jones." L. C. J.: "Let the other woman [Edwards] go out. . . . What did you tell her you could say?" Jones: "I told her . . . he said somewhat aloud that I did not understand." L. C. J.: "Did you not tell Margaret Edwards that you heard him say mass?" Jones: "No, my lord." L. C. J.:

"Call Margaret Edwards again. Margaret Edwards, did Mary Jones tell you that she heard Mr. Kerne say mass?" Edwards: "Yes, my lord." Jones: "No, I am sure I did not, for I never heard the word before, nor do not know what it means." L. C. J.: "So they contradict one another in that."

1683–1725, Braddon's Observations on the Earl of Essex's Murder, 9 How. St. Tr. 1229, 1276; the Earl of Essex, in 1683, suspected of plotting with Protestants against Charles II, had been found dead in the Tower with his throat cut; it was given out as a suicide; but Braddon collected much evidence to prove that a band of ruffians, hired by the Papist Duke of York, who succeeded in 1685 as James II, had murdered the Earl; three of the guards had deposed, however, to giving the Earl a razor at his request just before his death. Braddon, who was convicted of seditious libel, afterwards published a defence, in which the guards' story is thus dealt with: "That this story, of the delivering the razor to my lord a little before his death, is the forgery of those who were privy to my lord's murder, appears very plain from the notorious contradictions as to the time of delivering this razor to my lord [for one said he delivered it the day previous, another put it at the early morning of the same day, and the third at a few moments before his death]. . . . If any gentleman shall say that all these three attendants upon my lord at the time of his death agree in this, viz. that there was a razor delivered to my lord when prisoner in the Tower, and that their contradictions are only in the point of time when this razor was delivered to his lordship — it is true they are [only] circumstantial contradictions in the time of delivering this razor to my lord of Essex. And the contradiction of the two elders, in their charge of adultery against Susanna, was only in point of the place where they took Susanna in adultery. For the first of those elders swore that they took Susanna in adultery under a mastick-tree; but the second swore it was under a holm-tree; but both these conspiring accusers agreed in the main, viz. that they took her in adultery. Yet nevertheless, by their contradictions as to the tree under which they pretended to have taken her in adultery, Daniel convinced the whole Court, which before had rashly condemned Susanna, that those two conspiring accusers had falsely sworn against Susanna. . . . And I never yet heard any person deny Daniel's wisdom and justice in this detection. . . . [Had the coroner, in the Earl's case, caused the three guards to be separately examined and their contradictions been exposed, then the jury must have believed] that they were all three preëngaged falsely to swear what might influence the coroner and his jury to believe that my lord himself cut his own throat. . . . That those warders and servant, who would have proved my lord 'felo de se,' have for that purpose sworn what is false in every material part of their evidence, doth plainly appear from this one consideration or maxim relating to proofs, viz.: When two or more who pretend to be co-witnesses to a fact shall contradict one another in some material circumstance relating to that fact, those contradictions strongly conclude that they have sworn falsely."

1685, Oates' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 1079, 1158; in this trial the notorious perjurer was at last brought to book; the case turning upon the truth of Oates' statement that he was in London on a certain day, and his witnesses having differed widely in their description of his dress when he was seen by them, Oates complained: "What does it signify, my lord, whether the wig were long or short, black or brown?" L. C. J. JEFFREYS replied: "We have no other way to detect perjuries but by these circumstances, . . . as in a controversy about words, were they spoken in Latin or in English, and so to all places and postures of sitting, riding, or the like; as you know the perjury of the elders in the case of Susanna was by their different testimony in particular circumstances discovered."

1915, John Adye Curran, K. C., Reminiscences, p. 13: "On one occasion I defended a prisoner before Chief Justice Whiteside. My defence was that the case for the prosecution was grounded on the concocted story of the two Crown witnesses; and I relied on contradiction, one by the other, in their evidence on facts not material to the issue. In my address to the jury I called their attention to the case of Susannah and the Elders, which, though not admitted by all to be part of the Scripture, was at all events very ancient history. There the witnesses had, as here, been ordered out of court, with the result that, though agreeing in their concocted story, the Elders differed upon an apparently immaterial fact, the name of the tree under which the alleged offence had been committed, the result being the acquittal of the woman.

"The Chief Justice, in charging the jury, said that such an argument could not apply in every case, as otherwise one might argue that the history of the crucifixion of Our Lord was false, because the Gospels apparently differed as to whether both thieves were impenitent.

"At all events, the jury considered the case of Susannah was good enough for them, and acquitted the prisoner."

§ 1839. Demandable as of Right. A difference of judicial opinion exists as to whether sequestration is demandable as of right, or is grantable only in the trial Court's discretion.

It seems properly to be demandable as of right, precisely as is cross-examination. In the first place, it is simple and feasible. In the next place, it is so powerful and practical a weapon of defence that no contingency can justify its denial as being a mere formality or an empty sentimentality. In the third place, in the case when it is most useful (namely, a combination to perjure), it is almost the only hope of an innocent opponent. After all is said and done, the fact remains (as Sir James Stephen has declared,[1] out of a lengthy experience as a criminal judge) that successful perjury is always a possible feature of human justice. No rule, therefore, should ever be laid down which will by possibility deprive an opponent of the chance of exposing perjury. Finally, it cannot be left with the judge to say whether the resort to this expedient is needed; not even the claimant himself can know that it will do him service; he can merely hope for its success. He must be allowed to have the benefit of the chance, if he thinks that there is such a chance. To require him to show some probable need to the judge, and to leave to the latter the estimation of the need, is to misunderstand the whole virtue of the expedient, and to deny it in perhaps that very situation of forlorn hope and desperate extreme when it is most valuable and most demandable:

1870, SNEED, J., in Rainwater v. Elmore, I Heisk. 363, 365: "The lawyer who has practised long in jury cases cannot have failed to observe that the practice of permitting witnesses to hear each other's testimony has often resulted in a great and gross abuse of public justice. Human nature is frail, and that frailty is as often illustrated in the witness box as elsewhere. The witness in an excited litigation often becomes the mere partisan of the litigant whose cause he represents. . . . [He often] lapses into the conviction that the scene before him is a mere tilt and tourney, in which he enters to overturn and countervail the testimony of the adverse party. He has heard the evidence of his own party in regard to the transaction, and perhaps he remembers it somewhat differently; but a conflict would be fatal, and he often reasons his flexible conscience into the opinion that his own memory is at fault and the statement of his confederate is the true version; and he therefore corroborates it. He has heard the testimony of the adverse party, and his ingenuity is taxed at once to strike it where it is vulnerable and to destroy it; a brief and whispered conference behind the bar, and he finds one of his own party who saw the transaction as he saw it; and the thing is done. Of what value is cross-examination — that most efficacious test of truth — under such circumstances? The witness who is disposed to ignore the truth may now defy the onset of the most skilful cross-examination; and even he who would fain lean towards an honest story finds himself confounded, and often yields his own conviction, to adopt the strong, emphatic statements of another. The object of the trial is to elicit the truth; but under such circumstances and in an excited controversy the truth is as often smothered as disclosed. . . . This doctrine, that upon the mere motion or suggestion of a party it does not seem a matter of right [to order the witnesses' separation], appears to be traceable to the darker ages of English jurisprudence. . . . We have no hesitation in declaring that such a doctrine cannot stand the test of principle, and that it is utterly incompatible with the perfect enjoyment of the right of a fair trial guaranteed by the laws to the citizens of this country."

§ 1839. [1] Hist. Crim. Law, I, 403 ("Under particular circumstances, no really effectual protection against perjury ever has been or ever can be devised").

The most that ought to be conceded to the judge is to refuse an order of sequestration where it does not appear to be asked in good faith, i. e. not in the honest hope of exposing false testimony, but merely to obstruct the trial or to embarrass the opponent's management of his case.

A few Courts concede that sequestration is demandable as of right.[2] But the remainder, following the early English doctrine,[3] hold it grantable only in the trial Court's discretion;[4] declaring usually, however, that in practice

[2] Eng. 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 307 ("almost a right for the opposite party"); 1852, R. v. Newman, 3 C. & K. 260 (ordered if the opponent insists, even where the witness is also the prosecutor); U. S. 1874, Meeks v. State, 51 Ga. 429, 432, semble; 1897, Shaw v. State, 102 Ga. 660, 29 S. E. 477; 1871, Walker v. Com., 8 Bush. Ky. 86, 89, 96, semble; 1881, Salisbury v. Com., 79 Ky. 425, 432; 1824, State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. L. 224 ("the strict rule is that they [defendant's witnesses] should be out of court [during the prosecution's testimony]"); 1852, Nelson v. State, 2 Swan Tenn. 237, 257; 1870, Rainwater v. Elmore, 1 Heisk. Tenn. 363 (see quotation supra; but the motion must be supported by affidavit); 1917, Bishop v. State, 81 Tex. Cr. 96, 194 S. W. 389 (murder; held, that "the statute guarantees a substantial right"; quoting the above language with approval); 1869, Gregg v. State, 3 W. Va. 707, 709.

More than a dozen other jurisdictions reach the same result by statute (ante, § 1837).

[3] 1696, Cook's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 311, 348 (L. C. J. Treby: "It is not necessary to be granted for the asking; for we are not to discourage or cast any suspicion upon the witnesses, when there is nothing made out against them; but it is a favour that the Court may grant, and does grant sometimes, and now does it to you; though it be not of necessity"); 1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 485, 494 (L. C. J. Holt: "You cannot insist upon it as your right, but only a favour that we may grant"); 1741, Goodere's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 1003, 1015. It was said, however, to be granted as of right to the crown: yet this is doubtful.

That it should be treated as a mere favor to the accused was natural enough in the 1600s, when the accused (ante, § 575) could not as of right have his own witnesses sworn or even called.

In the taking of evidence before the Houses of Parliament there was sequestration as a matter of course for all cases: 1811, Berkeley Peerage Trial, Sherwood's Abstract, 151; 1828, Taylor v. Lawson, 3 C. & P. 543.

[4] Besides the following rulings, the statutes cited ante, § 1837, have often a bearing: Federal: 1904, Bromberger v. U. S., 128 Fed. 346, C. C. A. (one witness); Alabama: 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 673; 1867, Wilson v. State, 52 Ala. 299, 303 (but "should rarely if ever be withheld"); 1898, McClellan v. State, 117 Ala. 140, 23 So. 653; 1904, Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012; California: 1897, People v. McCarty, 117 Cal. 65, 48 Pac. 984; Georgia: 1853, Johnson v. State, 14 Ga. 55, 62 (but intimating that it is the right of the prosecution); Illinois: 1860, Errissman v. Errissman, 25 Ill. 136; Indiana: 1850, Porter v. State, 2 Ind. 435 ("a favor, it is true, rarely refused"); 1904, Coolman v. State, 163 Ind. 503, 72 N. E. 568; Indian Terr.: 1898, Parker v. U. S., 1 Ind. Terr. 592, 43 S. W. 858; Iowa: 1871, Hubbell v. Ream, 31 Ia. 289, 290 (but it is "rarely withheld"); 1900, State v. Davis, 110 Ia. 746, 82 N. W. 328; 1904, State v. Worthen, 124 Ia. 408, 100 N. W. 330, semble; Kansas: 1917, State v. Sweet, 101 Kan. 746, 168 Pac. 1112 ("In a murder trial [the request] if timely made is seldom denied"); Kentucky: 1895, Kentucky Lumber Co. v. Abney, — Ky. —, 31 S. W. 179; 1899, Baker v. Com., 106 Ky. 212, 50 S. W. 54; 1919, Music v. Com., 186 Ky. 45, 216 S. W. 116; Louisiana: 1893, State v.

it is never denied, at any rate for an accused in a criminal case. There is no reason for a distinction between civil and criminal cases; successful perjury is an equally deplorable result, in whatever form it overwhelms its victims.

§ 1840. Mode of Procedure. (1) The time for sequestration begins with the delivery of testimony upon the stand and ends with the close of testimony.

It is therefore not appropriate during the reading of the pleadings or the opening address of counsel;[1] any danger of improper suggestions at such times is to be dealt with in other ways (ante, § 786). It continues for each witness after he has left the stand,[2] because it is frequently necessary to recall a witness in consequence of a later witness' testimony. It need not be demanded at the very opening of the testimony,[3] at any time later, when the supposed exigency arises, the order may be requested.

(2) The sequestration may be asked for by either party.[4] But even though the party sees no exigency or does not care to incur the enmity of some opposing witness, or for other reasons fails to ask, the order may be made at the request of the jury,[5] or by the judge of his own motion.[6]

(3) The notification of withdrawal is accomplished either by furnishing a list to the sheriff specifying the witnesses on either side and obtaining an order from the Court directing him to take them apart; or, more simply, by obtaining an order notifying all prospective witnesses to withdraw from the court-room:

1833, GANTT, J., in Anon., 1 Hill S. C. 251, 254: "It is usual and proper, as was done in this case, to furnish a list so as to enable the sheriff to see that they withdraw. But the Hagan, 45 La. An. 839, 840, 12 So. 929; 1903, State v. Forbes, 111 La. 473, 35 So. 710; Massachusetts: 1892, Com. v. Follansbee, 155 Mass. 274, 277, 29 N. E. 471; 1893, Com. v. Thompson, 159 Mass. 56, 58, 38 N. E. 1111; Michigan: 1882, People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482, 487, 12 N. W. 665, semble; 1887, People v. Burns, 67 Mich. 537, 35 N. W. 154; 1894, People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 400, 59 N. W. 664; 1895, People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196; 1895, Johnston v. Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5; Missouri: 1860, State v. Fitzsimmons, 30 Mo. 236, 239; 1895, State v. Duffey, 128 Mo. 549, 31 S. W. 98; 1916, State v. Sloan, — Mo. —, 186 S. W. 1002 (murder); Nebraska: 1884, Binfield v. State, 15 Nebr. 484, 487, 19 N. W. 607; 1896, Halbert v. Rosenbalm, 49 Nebr. 498, 506, 68 N. W. 622; 1894, Murphy v. State, 43 Nebr. 34, 61 N. W. 491; 1898, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 54 Nebr. 138, 74 N. W. 403; 1910, Johns v. State, 88 Nebr. 145, 129 N. W. 247; North Carolina: 1819, State v. Sparrow, 3 Murph. 487, semble (neither defendant nor prosecution may claim it as a right); Texas: 1870, Cavasos v. Gonzales, 33 Tex. 133; 1902, De Lucenay v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 68 S. W. 796; Utah: 1881, People v. O'Loughlin, 3 Utah 133, 144, 1 Pac. 653; Washington: 1906, State v. Dalton, 43 Wash. 278, 86 Pac. 590 (murder); Wisconsin: 1903, Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526.

§ 1840. [1] 1851, Benaway v. Coyne, 3 Chandl. Wis. 214, 219. The following ruling seems unsound: 1876, Penniman v. Hill, 24 W. R. 245, Hall, V. C. (not granted during the reading of affidavits).

[2] 1907, Joseph v. Com., — Ky. —, 99 S. W. 311 (in the trial Court's discretion; but not as of rule under Civ. C. Pr. § 601; 1874, Roach v. State, 41 Tex. 261, 263.

[3] 1837, Southey v. Nash, 7 C. & P. 632 (here, after the demandant's own witnesses had testified); 1918, Com. v. Principatti, 260 Pa. 587, 104 Atl. 53 ("black hand" agent killed by accused; trial judge's refusal on request to remove all Italians from the room during a witness' testimony who was afraid of revenge, held error; but this situation really involves the principle of § 786 or § 1399, ante).

[4] This is assumed on all hands; the statutes cited ante, § 1837, usually mention it.

[5] 1681, Earl of Shaftesbury's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 759, 778.

[6] 1867, Wilson v. State, 52 Ala. 299, 303; 1880, Ryan v. Couch, 66 Ala. 244, 248.

parties may, if they choose, decline making out lists, and by doing so they would be under the obligation of keeping their respective witnesses out of court. . . . But there is no necessity to put down the names of witnesses who are not in attendance; when they do attend, the party intending to swear them must either put their names on the list or see that they do not come into court before they are called to testify."

1858, HANLY, J., in Golden v. State, 19 Ark. 590, 598: "The course in such cases is either to require the names of the witnesses to be stated by the counsel of the respective parties by whom they were summoned, and to direct the sheriff to keep them in a separate room until they are called for; or, more usually, to cause them to withdraw by an order from the bench accompanied with notice that if they remain they will not be examined."

(4) The process itself involves three parts: (a) preventing the prospective witnesses from consulting each other; (b) preventing them from hearing a testifying witness; (c) preventing them from consulting a witness who has left the stand; the last including consultation between witnesses who have left the stand, since they are still prospective witnesses.[7]

The first element is possibly not of great importance, because before trial there has been already unrestrained opportunity for consultation; the second element is the vital one; the third is scarcely less important. The prevention applies equally as between opposing witnesses and between witnesses for the same party; though, as noted already (ante, § 1838), it is the collusion of the latter that is mainly to be prevented. The prevention is accomplished usually by placing all the witnesses in a room separate from the trial-room, under charge of an officer, who is to restrain their departure and prohibit their conversation. This simple machinery enforces the rule in all three parts of its operation.

Under varying conditions, the rigor of the rule in these details may no doubt be relaxed in the trial Court's discretion.[8] But nothing should sanction any indirect method of conveying to the prospective witnesses information of the testimony already given. For example, it would seem obvious to good sense that the perusal of journals reporting the testimony should be forbidden.[9] On the other hand, repeating hypothetically upon examination the possible words of a former witness without suggesting whether he actually used them may be allowable.[10]

[7] These three parts are sometimes set forth in the statutes cited ante, § 1837, though commonly only the first two are in terms stated; but the first, as ordinarily stated, includes the third. In judicial decisions these elements of the process are rarely stated in detail, but there can be no doubt that the common-law rule implies all three.

[8] 1896, Broyles v. Prisock, 97 Ga. 643, 25 S. E. 389 (the trial Court has discretion as to the instructions to be given to witnesses as to not communicating during adjournment); 1852, Nelson v. State, 2 Swan 237, 256 (whether they shall be locked up continuously, or be ordered to keep out of the court-house, or be allowed to disperse for meals, depends upon the trial Court's discretion).

[9] Contra: 1861, Com. v. Hersey, 2 All. 173, 176. The Texas statute provides against this.

A similar expedient is used in patent-interference proceedings, by requiring separate preliminary statements: 1912, Thomas v. Weintraub, 38 D. C. App. 281.

[10] 1900, State v. Taylor, 56 S. C. 360, 34 S. E. 939 (witnesses may be told, "either correctly or incorrectly, what another witness on the same side has testified to, with a view to test the correctness of the memory or the honesty of the witness"; here the question was allowed, "If your husband says . . . is he telling the truth or a falsehood?"). Compare § 787, ante, § 1963, post, where other cases are collected.

Whether an attorney in the cause may consult with a sequestered witness has been the subject of some difference of opinion;[11] the possibilities of abuse by unscrupulous persons (and by hypothesis there is about to be perjury, i. e. the rule is most needed for unscrupulous persons) are certainly great; and it seems clear, first, that it may not be done without leave of Court, and, secondly, that it may be done only aloud and in the presence of a court-officer; an honest attorney can hardly object to such regulations.

§ 1841. Persons to be included in the Order. (1) The party demanding the sequestration may not as of right insist upon the Court's inclusion of all persons, without exception, in the rule. No doubt the inclusion of all may sometimes be vital to his plan; but no doubt also it usually is not; and the possibilities of abuse, by indiscriminate exclusion, would be so great that the omission of individuals from the rule may properly be left to its trial Court's discretion, without doing violence to the doctrine (ante, § 1839) that sequestration, as a general principle, is demandable of right. It seems to be universally conceded that the trial Court may authorize individual omissions.[1] [11] Ga. 1890, Travelers Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 814, 12 S. E. 18 (whether an agent assisting in the cause may not for some purposes consult with the witnesses without leave, not decided); La. 1906, State v. Goodson, 116 La. 388, 40 So. 771 (co-defendants not allowed as of right to consult a co-indictee in jail and about to be used as a witness for the State); 1906, State v. James Co., 117 La. 419, 41 So. 702 (prosecuting attorney may consult the witnesses in the trial Court's discretion); Miss. 1876, White v. State, 52 Miss. 216, 224 (counsel may consult with witness); 1884, Allen v. State, 62 Miss. 627, 629 (same); 1901, Shaw v. State, 79 Miss. 21, 30 So. 42 (the party may still consult with his witness); Tex. 1871, Williams v. State, 35 Tex. 255 (attorney may confer with the witness, while under the rule, "in a proper manner"); 1877, Brown v. State, 3 Tex. App. 294, 310 (conference is allowable only when held in the presence of an officer of the court); Jones v. State, 3 Tex. 150, 153 ("the better practice" is to confer only in the presence "or at least by permission of the Court"); 1879, Davis v. State, 6 Tex. 196 (conference allowable in trial Court's discretion); 1880, Holt v. State, 9 Tex. 571, 580 (same for conference by defendant); 1883, Dubose v. State, 13 Tex. 418, 426 (trial Court's discretion); 1883, Creswell v. State, 14 Tex. 1, 16 (same); 1885, Kennedy v. State, 19 Tex. 618, 631 (same).

§ 1841. [1] Besides the following rulings, the statutes cited ante, § 1837, frequently deal with this point: Alabama: 1889, Riley v. State, 88 Ala. 193, 196, 7 So. 149; Barnes v. State, 88 Ala. 204, 208, 7 So. 38; 1893, Webb v. State, 100 Ala. 47, 52, 14 So. 865 (sheriff); 1899, Roberts v. State, 122 Ala. 47, 25 So. 238; 1903, Hall v. State, 137 Ala. 44, 34 So. 681; Arkansas: 1892, Vance v. State, 56 Ark. 402, 19 S. W. 1066 (expert witnesses to sanity); 1921, Benson v. State, 149 Ark. 633, 233 S. W. 758 (officer aiding prosecution); California: 1866, People v. Garnett, 29 Cal. 622 (excepting the chief of police); 1882, People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387, 394; 1886, People v. Sam Lung, 70 Cal. 515, 11 Pac. 673 (Garnett case approved); Florida: 1920, Robinson v. State, 80 Fla. 736, 87 So. 61 (witness assisting the counsel); Georgia: 1859, Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287, 296; 1876, City Bank v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283; 1877, Turbaville v. State, 58 Ga. 545; 1891, Dale v. State, 88 Ga. 552, 557, 15 S. E. 287; 1893, Central R. Co. v. Phillips, 91 Ga. 526, 527, 17 S. E. 952; 1897, Shaw v. State, 102 Ga. 660, 29 S. E. 477 (though the exclusion is a right, the trial Court has a discretion; here the remaining of two witnesses to assist in the prosecution was held not improper); 1898, Keller v. State, 102 Ga. 506, 31 S. E. 92; 1903, Kelly v. State, 118 Ga. 329, 45 S. E. 413; 1905, City Electric R. Co. v. Smith, 121 Ga. 663, 49 S. E. 724; 1921, Davis v. State, — Ga. App. —, 107 S. E. 883; Hawaii: 1898, Republic v. Tsunikichi, 11 Haw. 341, 344; Indiana: 1851, Johnson v. State, 2 Ind. 652; 1904, Coolman v. State, 163 Ind. 503, 72 N. E. 568 (prosecuting witness allowed to remain to aid the State's attorney); Iowa: 1909, State v. Pell, 140 Ia. 655, 119 N. W. 154 (family of murdered man); 1920, State v. Smith, — Ia. —, 128 N. W. 4 (rape; prosecutrix' father allowed to remain); Kentucky: 1910, Druin v. Com., — Ky. —, 124 S. W. 856 (rape under age; father of prosecutrix allowed to remain); Louisiana: 1874, State v. Baptiste, 26 La. An. 134, 136 (physicians); 1882, State v. Revells, 34 La. An. 381, 383; 1885, State v. Ford, 37 La. An. 443, 463; Missouri: 1880, State v. Hughes, 71 Mo. 633, 636; 1895, State v.

(2) The party against whom the demand is made may not as of right insist on the omission of any specific person, other than himself and his counsel, from the order of exclusion; the trial Court's discretion here also must control. For example, it cannot be insisted that members of the party's family[2] or expert witnesses[3] remain in court. Frequently, however, trial Courts sanction the omission of a prospective witness whose assistance in the management of the cause is under the circumstances indispensable.[4]

Under the English practice, where the attorney has no official status in the trial, his case was no different from that of other witnesses, and the trial Court's discretion might include him in the order of exclusion;[5] on the other hand, it seems clear that a counsel would never have been excluded, though the question seems not to have arisen there, since a counsel would hardly ever be a witness (post, § 1911). But in the United States, where the functions of attorney and counsel are not separated, the rule for counsel would of course apply, and a counsel of record in the cause should be permitted as of right to remain.[6]

The case of the party himself is more difficult. It is apparent that the danger of an attempt to falsify testimony and the utility of sequestration to Whitworth, 126 Mo. 573, 29 S. W. 595 (father of the prosecutrix in a rape case); North Dakota: 1904, King v. Hanson, 13 N. D. 85, 99 N. W. 1085; Tennessee: 1904, Smartt v. State, 112 Tenn. 539, 80 S. W. 586 (prosecutor); 1912, Hughes v. State, 126 Tenn. 40, 148 S. W. 543 (detective assisting in preparing the case for trial); Texas: 1879, McMillan v. State, 7 Tex. App. 142, 144; 1881, Johnson v. State, 10 Tex. App. 571, 577 (medical experts); 1884, Spear v. State, 16 Tex. App. 98, 114 (same); 1886, Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 3 S. W. 539; 1898, Dement v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 271, 45 S. W. 917; 1898, Johnican v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 48 S. W. 181 (clerk of court); 1899, Buchanan v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 127, 52 S. W. 769; Utah: 1881, People v. O'Loughlin, 3 Utah 133, 1 Pac. 653; Vermont: 1877, State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316, 322, 332 (here, the sheriff); 1886, State v. Lockwood, 58 Vt. 378, 3 Atl. 539 (deputy sheriff); 1886, State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 179, 17 Atl. 483 (attorney not employed in the case); Virginia: 1898, Jackson v. Com., 96 Va. 107, 30 S. E. 452; West Virginia: 1915, State v. Hoke, 76 W. Va. 36, 84 S. E. 1054 (special agent of defendant).

[2] 1889, McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 150, 7 So. 35; 1879, People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 491; 1894, May v. State, 94 Ga. 76, 20 S. E. 251; Hinkle v. State, 94 Ga. 595, 21 S. E. 595; 1920, People v. Martin, 210 Mich. 139, 177 N. W. 193 (party's witnesses in general); 1886, Bond v. State, 20 Tex. App. 421, 437.

[3] 1899, Roberts v. State, 122 Ala. 47, 25 So. 238; 1907, Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Johnson, 127 Ga. 392, 56 S. E. 482 (physician).

In State v. Forbes, 1903, 111 La. 473, 35 So. 720, experts were excepted by consent.

[4] Eng. 1848, R. v. O'Brien, 7 State Tr. N. S. 1, 45 (reporter to seditious speeches; being also engaged to report the evidence for the prosecution at the trial, he was not obliged to leave the court with the other witnesses; Blackburne, C. L.: "There is no stern rule of the kind; they are all subject to be modified by reasonable construction"); U. S. 1880, Ryan v. Couch, 66 Ala. 244, 248 (a witness who has "acquired such an intimate knowledge of the facts, by reason of having acted as the authorized agent of either of the parties, that his services are required by counsel," should not be excluded; here, the father of the absent plaintiff); 1893, Central R. Co. v. Phillips, 91 Ga. 526, 527, 17 S. E. 952; 1908, State v. High, 122 La. 521, 47 So. 878 (police officer); 1900, Jacobs v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 353, 59 S. W. 1111 (interpreter excepted); 1921, Freddy v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 53, 229 S. W. 533 (murder; trial Court's discretion here held improperly exercised); 1867, The Bark Havre, 1 Ben. Fed. 295, 308 (master of vessel, being both owner's agent and witness, held improperly excluded by the commissioner taking testimony; "unless his contumacy compelled that course").

[5] 1826, Pomeroy v. Baddeley, Ry. & Mo. 430 (Littledale, J., allowed an attorney to remain, "his assistance being in most cases necessary"); 1831, Everett v. Lowdham, 5 C. & P. 91 (Bosanquet, J., allowed him "under the circumstances" to remain).

[6] 1841, State v. Brookshire, 2 Ala. 303; 1872, Wisener v. Maupin, 2 Baxt. 342, 357. Contra: 1882, Powell v. State, 13 Tex. App. 244, 252 (depends on discretion). The statutes cited ante, § 1837, often expressly provide for this point.

expose it are most emphatic for a party who is a prospective witness.[7] On the other hand, the party's aid in the conduct of the cause may be indispensable, and his absence is in any case hardly consistent with his general right to protect his interests by watching the conduct of the trial; in the United States, or in most parts of it, these considerations (looking to the ordinary relations of client and counsel) are probably more forcible than in England, where the counsel has full independence and professional authority. The simple solution, avoiding both horns of the dilemma, would be to exempt the party from the order of exclusion, but to require him to take the stand first of the witnesses on his side; on the principle that, though he has the right to be present, yet he has also the duty to do all that is feasible towards preventing suspicion and subserving the opponent's right to sequestration. This particular solution, however, seems not yet to have been reached by any Court.[8] A few Courts treat the party upon the footing of other witnesses;[9] but others declare him entitled of right to remain, ordinarily or invariably,[10] and the latter view has been generally preferred in legislation.

[7] 1872, Freeman, J., in Wisener v. Maupin, 2 Baxt. 342, 357 ("The reason of the rule applies with equal, if not more, force to their case than to the disinterested witness"); 1881, Hargis, J., in Salisbury v. Com., 79 Ky. 425, 432 ("He of all others, except the wilfully corrupt, is most obnoxious to the rule").

[8] But it has been suggested: 1874, Trippe, J., in Tift v. Jones, 52 Ga. 538, 542 ("It would be a proper rule that such party should be first examined, unless there be reasons to the contrary, in the absence of his other witnesses; this would preserve his right to be present in the court during the whole trial of his case"); and it has once been so decided: 1904, Smartt v. State, 112 Tenn. 539, 80 S. W. 586.

Compare the rule of some States that a party must take the stand before his other witnesses (post, § 1869). This aims at the same end.

[9] Besides the rulings in this note and the next, the statutes cited ante, § 1837, often make express provision: 1876, Penniman v. Hill, 24 W. R. 245 (Hall, V. C., said that parties may equally be excluded); 1879, Randolph v. McCain, 34 Ark. 696 (Eakin, J.: "It would be dangerous to give him, as a matter of right, exceptional advantages, when he of all others, if assailable at all by the temptation to concoct evidence, would have the greatest interest in doing so"); 1874, Tift v. Jones, 52 Ga. 538, 540, 542; 1881, Salisbury v. Com., 79 Ky. 425, 432 (prosecuting witness); 1905, Greer v. Com., — Ky. —, 85 S. W. 166 (the trial Court may in discretion allow one witness to remain, here a prosecuting witness); 1872, Wisener v. Maupin, 2 Baxt. 342, 356 (the Tennessee statute cited ante, § 1837, was passed to override this decision; see the citation in the next note).

[10] Eng. 1853, Charnock v. Dewings, 3 C. & K. 378 (Talfourd, J., held "that on constitutional grounds he had no authority to order the defendants to leave the court so long as they behaved with propriety"); 1856, Constance v. Brain, 2 Jur. N. S. 1145; 1858, Selfe v. Isaacson, 1 F. & F. 194.

Can. 1899, Bird v. Veith, 7 Br. C. 31 (parties are not to be excluded, "unless some good reason is shown"); 1879, Sivewright v. Sivewright, 8 Ont. Pr. 81 (examiner at chambers; exclusion held improper on the facts); 1885, Culverwell v. Birney, 10 Ont. Pr. 575 (exclusion held proper on the facts).

U. S. 1880, Ryan v. Couch, 66 Ala. 244, 248; 1880, Chester v. Bowen, 55 Cal. 46, 48, semble; 1895, Kentucky Lumber Co. v. Abney, — Ky. —, 31 S. W. 279 (but the chief officer of a corporation-party is not a party); 1892, Richards v. State, 91 Tenn. 723, 724, 20 S. W. 533 (exclusion of one co-defendant during testimony of another, improper); 1897, Lenoir Car Co. v. Smith, 100 Tenn. 127, 42 S. W. 879 (an officer of a corporation "charged with the duty of looking after its interests in a pending trial" is within the statute giving parties the right to remain; otherwise "corporations will be excluded from its benefits altogether"); 1899, Heaton v. Dennis, 103 Tenn. 155, 52 S. W. 175 (principal beneficiary under a will is a party, under the statute); add the statutes cited ante, § 1837.

The party's obedience to an improper order of exclusion does not prevent him from taking advantage of his objection: Heaton v. Dennis, supra.

§ 1842. Disqualification as a Consequence of Disobedience. If the order of exclusion is knowingly disobeyed, the Court unquestionably has the power to refuse to admit the disobedient person to testify; and it ought to exercise this power, in its discretion, whenever there appears any reason to believe that the proposed testimony was important, that the witness had heard the other testimony, and that he wished to know its tenor. It may be assumed that the power should not be exercised unless the witness, as above said, was aware of the order of exclusion;[1] for the burden of causing every witness to be notified, and thus of preventing inadvertent violation, may fairly be placed upon the party demanding the sequestration. But granting this much, it follows that the most appropriate and only effective means of enforcing an order of Court and of securing the right of sequestration is to have it clearly understood that disqualification as a witness may follow disobedience:

1874, TRIPPE, J., in Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585, 589 (the counsel for defendant stated when the rule for separation was made that he had no witnesses, and was warned by the Court that if he later brought any they would be excluded; later, he brought two, whom he admitted were known to him when the order was made): "It was said a fine might have been imposed. That would not have vindicated the rule of law involved. . . . Either party would think it but poor compensation for the loss of an important right in a trial to have the other party or counsel fined. Courts should have summary power to enforce the rules of law in such cases, so that by their practical working they may be vindicated in all their integrity. If any right were lost, it was wilfully and defiantly thrown away."

There is, no doubt, something to be said against this rigorous doctrine, at least where the disobedience has occurred without any connivance of the opposing party and solely through the witness' own contumacy:

1840, NAPTON, J., in Keith v. Wilson, 6 Mo. 435, 441: "Will it be contended that a party is bound to watch his witnesses to prevent their misconduct? . . . If a witness' contumacy be a sufficient ground to warrant the Court in excluding him altogether, notwithstanding it appears that it was through no connivance or default of the party to the suit, an unavailing and reluctant witness might, by wilful and intentional disobedience to the order, at any time deprive the party of the benefit of his testimony."

1849, CALDWELL, J., in Laughlin v. State, 18 Oh. 99, 102: "When we consider the little control that a party can have over his witnesses; the little attention he is likely to be able to give to their movements; the crowds and the confusion that generally exist during exciting trials; the questions that may arise on the trial that could not be anticipated, and which may require bystanders to be called in as witnesses, who have been present and heard the other witnesses testify, — these, and other considerations which might be presented, render it difficult and we think impossible to establish any general rule of exclusion that would not in many cases deprive parties of important and necessary testimony for the fair presentation of their cause."

1880, CRAWFORD, J., in Rooks v. State, 65 Ga. 330: "To exclude him might deny the party of the testimony of the only person in the world by whom he could prove his innocence."

But there are several answers to these arguments. In the first place, the fact that the opposing party would be deprived of valuable testimony is in itself no wrong, provided he himself has by connivance invited it. In the next place, it is usually difficult to prove this connivance, and to require it proved might entirely nullify the rule. Again, if the witness is in fact open to the charge of fraudulent evasion, he is an unsafe and untrustworthy witness; a party has no absolute right to the testimony of a trickster, and he cannot complain, even though himself innocent, at the loss of tainted testimony; the argument of some of the judges above quoted assumes erroneously that the party could certainly prove something in his favor by a witness whose conduct has already suggested the strong probability that he will falsify. Furthermore, of two innocent parties, the contingency of suffering should clearly be for him whose witness has been in fault; and this is particularly so where it was also that party's duty, at whatever inconvenience, to secure the obedience of his own witnesses to a plain and simple order of Court. The refusal to admit to testify need of course not be an absolute and peremptory consequence of disobedience. No one has ever contended for this; the trial Court, on all the circumstances, is to determine whether this measure should be taken. But it seems clear that the Court may properly take the measure in its discretion, even where no connivance by the party is made to appear.

§ 1842. [1] And there must of course have been an express order of sequestration; 1883, R. v. Furley, 3 State Tr. N. S. 543, 564.

The difference of judicial opinion in the precedents arises chiefly over the case of a witness' wilful disobedience without the party's connivance. The English and Canadian rulings have fluctuated, and the question seems there not to be settled.[2] In the United States, the great majority of Courts hold in general that the Court may in discretion disqualify the witness; some of these Courts, however, making the proviso that the party must have connived.[3] The other Courts seem to forbid in general terms the disqualification

[2] England: 1775, Cardigan Case, 3 Doug. El. C., 2d ed., 174, 229 (may be excluded); 1776, Worcester Case, 3 Doug. El. C. 239, 265 (same); 1790, Doe v. Cox, Cliff. El. C. 114 (Gould, J., refused to admit the witness, but the Court in banc held this erroneous); 1819, R. v. Webb, per Best, J., cited in 3 Stark. Evid. 1733 (may be excluded); 1821, Attorney-General v. Bulpit, 9 Price 4 (Exchequer: "It is a sacred and inflexible rule" that the witness shall be rejected); 1829, R. v. Boyle, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 325, Bayley, J., and others (must be admitted); 1829, R. v. Colley, M. & M. 329 (Littledale & Gaselee, J., held it discretional); 1830, Parker v. W. William, 4 Moo. & P. 480, 6 Bing. 683, C. P. (exclusion rests with the judge's discretion; the Exchequer rule being conceded to require exclusion); 1831, Beamon v. Ellice, 4 C. & P. 585 (Taunton, J., admitted the witness, with hesitation); 1835, Cook v. Nethercote, 6 C. & P. 741 (Alderson, B., refused to exclude the witness); 1836, Thomas v. David, 7 C. & P. 350 (Coleridge, J., said that it was "entirely in the discretion of the judge"); 1842, Chandler v. Horne, 2 Moo. & Rob. 423 (Erskine, J., said that the rule of discretion formerly prevailed, but now it was settled that the witness could not be excluded); 1852, Cobbett v. Hudson, 1 E. & B. 11 (Campbell, L. C. J., said that "the better opinion" was that the judge could not exclude the witness).

Canada: Ont. 1853, Strachan v. Jones, 3 U. C. C. P. 253 (a party held improperly excluded); 1853, McFarlane v. Martin, 3 U. C. C. P. 64 (party held properly admitted); 1853, Winter v. Mixer, 10 U. C. Q. B. 110 (trial Court has discretion); 1885, Mahoney v. Macdonnell, 9 Ont. 137 (exclusion held improper; here the witness was a co-party); 1886, Black v. Besse, 12 Ont. 522 (exclusion held improper); P. E. I. 1854, Young v. Young, 1 P. E. I. 98 (the judge has the power to exclude for disobedience; here, a party).

[3] In the following citations the rule is understood to be laid down generally, except where the proviso is expressly noted; but in some of the rulings probably the proviso would have been stated if the facts had called for it; Federal: 1893, Holder v. U. S., 150 U. S. 91, 14 Sup. 10 (may be excluded in discretion, but not merely and always for violation); Ala-

of the witness; though in some of them it can hardly be doubted that a proviso as to the party's connivance would be enforced.[4] bama: 1841, State v. Brookshire, 2 Ala. 303; 1853, Sidgreaves v. Wyatt, 22 Ala. 617; 1867, Montgomery v. State, 40 Ala. 684, 687; 1870, Bell v. State, 44 Ala. 393, 395; 1875, Wilson v. State, 52 Ala. 299, 303; 1892, Thorn v. Kemp, 98 Ala. 417, 423, 13 So. 749; 1895, Sanders v. State, 105 Ala. 4, 16 So. 935; 1903, Hall v. State, 137 Ala. 44, 34 So. 681; 1903, Jarvis v. State, 138 Ala. 17, 34 So. 1025; 1905, Braham v. State, 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919; Arkansas: 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624; 1858, Golden v. State, 19 Ark. 590, 597 ("the right of excluding witnesses for disobedience, though well established, is rarely exercised"; here, not exercised against one who was not known to be needed); Colorado: 1903, Behrman v. Terry, 31 Colo. 155, 71 Pac. 1118 (in the absence of connivance by the party, the witness cannot be excluded); 1903, Vickers v. People, 31 Colo. 491, 73 Pac. 845 (exclusion held improper, where the rule was violated without connivance of the party calling); Columbia (District): 1914, District v. Flagg, 42 D. C. App. 73 (following Holder v. U. S., supra); Georgia: 1874, Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585, 588; 1881, Butts v. State, 66 Ga. 508, 513, semble; 1881, Lassiter v. State, 67 Ga. 739, semble (see the construction of this case in Grant v. State, infra); 1886, Etheridge v. Hobbs, 77 Ga. 531, 534, 3 S. E. 251; 1887, Carson v. State, 80 Ga. 170, 5 S. E. 295, semble; 1890, Bone v. State, 86 Ga. 108, 121, 12 S. E. 205; 1892, Grant v. State, 89 Ga. 636, 12 S. E. 1065; 1893, Pergason v. Etcherson, 91 Ga. 785, 787, 18 S. E. 29; 1904, Davis v. State, 120 Ga. 843, 48 S. E. 305; 1904, Phillips v. State, 121 Ga. 358, 49 S. E. 290; 1905, Sharpton v. Augusta & A. R. Co., — Ga. —, 51 S. E. 553; 1906, Green v. State, 125 Ga. 742, 54 S. E. 724; Illinois: 1880, Bulliner v. People, 95 Ill. 394, 399; 1896, Goon Bow v. People, 160 Ill. 438, 43 N. E. 593; Indiana: 1850, Porter v. State, 2 Ind. 435; 1860, Jackson v. State, 14 Ind. 327; Iowa: 1904, State v. Pray, 126 Ia. 249, 99 N. W. 1065; Kansas: 1875, Davenport v. Ogg, 15 Kan. 366 (may be excluded if the party abets the disobedience); Kentucky: 1886, Haskins v. Com., — Ky. —, 1 S. W. 730; 1901, Gilbert v. Com., 111 Ky. 793, 64 S. W. 846; 1903, Crenshaw v. Gardner, — Ky. —, 76 S. W. 26 (exclusion of a witness knowingly and without excuse omitted from the order by the party calling him, held proper in discretion); Louisiana: 1860, State v. Gore, 15 La. An. 79; 1884, State v. Watson, 36 La. An. 148; 1886, State v. Cole, 38 La. An. 843, 845; 1893, State v. Hagan, 45 La. An. 839, 841, 12 So. 929; 1895, State v. Jones, 47 La. An. 1524, 18 So. 515; 1906, State v. Hogan, 117 La. 863, 42 So. 352; 1908, State v. High, 122 La. 521, 47 So. 878 (discretion); Massachusetts: 1897, Com. v. Crowley, 168 Mass. 121, 46 N. E. 415 (excluded, in the trial Court's discretion, where the counsel was in fault in knowingly allowing the witness to stay); Michigan: 1897, People v. Piper, 112 Mich. 644, 71 N. W. 175 (not excluded, if party is not conniving); 1904, People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316, 99 N. W. 147; Mississippi: 1852, Sartorious v. State, 24 Miss. 602, 608; 1901, Taylor v. State, — Miss. —, 30 So. 657 (in discretion); Missouri: 1835, Dyer v. Morris, 4 Mo. 214, 213; 1840, Keith v. Wilson, 6 Mo. 435, 441 (except where the party is not in fault by laches or connivance); 1860, State v. Fitzsimmons, 30 Mo. 236, 239; 1888, O'Bryan v. Allen, 95 Mo. 68, 74, 8 S. W. 225 (like Keith v. Wilson); 1894, State v. Gesell, 124 Mo. 531, 536, 27 S. W. 1101 (same); 1895, State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28; 1900, State v. Sumpter, 153 Mo. 436, 55 S. W. 76 (inadvertent violation without party's connivance, no ground for exclusion); 1900, State v. Fannon, 158 Mo. 149, 59 S. W. 75 (exclusion where the party was not conniving, held improper); Nebraska: 1901, Mangold v. Oft, 63 Nebr. 397, 88 N. W. 507 (exclusion is proper, unless the witness' conduct was "without the knowledge, consent, or connivance" of the party); 1901, Clemmons v. Clemmons, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 404 (inadvertent disobedience; exclusion held improper on the facts); North Carolina: 1915, State v. Lowry, 170 N. C. 730, 87 S. E. 62; Ohio: 1849, Laughlin v. State, 18 Oh. 99, 101; 1883, Dickson v. State, 39 Oh. St. 73, 77 (except where there has been no procurement or connivance of the party); Oregon: 1879, Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Or. 42, 47 (unless there is complicity by the party); Pennsylvania: 1836, Earls' Trial, pamph., 10; South Carolina: 1833, Anon., 1 Hill 251, 255 (except where there is no fault in the party); Tennessee: 1880, Smith v. State, 4 Lea 428, 430 (the discretion was held improperly exercised to exclude a witness unknown to the party at the time of the order); Texas: 1874, Goins v. State, 41 Tex. 334, 336, semble; 1875, Sherwood v. State, 42 Tex. 498, 501; 1878, Ham v. State, 4 Tex. App. 645, 673; 1880, Walling v. State, 7 Tex. App. 625; Estep v. State, 9 Tex. App. 366, 370; 1881, Avery v. State, 10 Tex. App. 199, 213; 1886, Hill v. State, 22 Tex. App. 579, 3 S. W. 764, semble; 1901, Caviness v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 420, 60 S. W. 555 (witness held improperly excluded on the facts, the party not conniving); 1906, Luck v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 98 S. W. 1059; 1921, Shamblin v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 589, 228 S. W. 241 (trial Court's discretion); Wisconsin: 1903, Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526.

[4] Ala. 1907, Degg v. State, 150 Ala. 3, 43 So. 484 (for an accused's witness); Cal. 1862,

On the whole, then, the Courts occupy a common ground where there has been fault in the party; at one extreme stand a few Courts denying disqualification even in that case; at the other extreme stand probably the majority of Courts, permitting disqualification even without the party's fault.

People v. Boscovitch, 20 Cal. 436; Ga. 1853, Johnson v. State, 14 Ga. 55, 61, semble; 1880, Rooks v. State, 65 Ga. 330; 1895, Cunningham v. State, 97 Ga. 214, 22 S. E. 954 (distinguishing Pergason v. Etcherson, 91 Ga. 785, 18 S. E. 29); 1903, McWhorter v. State, 118 Ga. 55, 44 S. E. 873 (not excluded, on the facts); Ind. 1859, Horne v. Williams, 12 Ind. 326 (undecided); 1883, Davis v. Byrd, 94 Ind. 525 (at least where the party himself is not in fault; repudiating prior intimations to the contrary); 1884, Burk v. Andis, 98 Ind. 59, 64 (same); 1887, State v. Thomas, 111 Ind. 515, 13 N. E. 35 (same); Ia. 1860, Grimes v. Martin, 10 Ia. 347, 349; 1900, State v. Kissock, 111 Ia. 690, 83 N. W. 724 (mere disobedience of witness, not of itself sufficient); Ky. 1899, Parker v. Com., — Ky. —, 51 S. W. 573 (a co-indictee remained, the defendant not explaining that he wished to use the other as a witness; disqualification of co-defendant held erroneous on the facts); Md. 1887, Parker v. State, 67 Md. 329, 331, 10 Atl. 219; Miss. 1897, Ferguson v. Brown, 75 Miss. 214, 21 So. 603; 1898, Timberlake v. Thayer, 76 Miss. 76, 23 So. 767; 1904, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ely, 83 Miss. 519, 35 So. 873 (exclusion for disobedience, held improper); Mo. 1916, State v. Sloan, — Mo. —, 186 S. W. 1002; Mont. 1915, State v. McDonald, 51 Mont. 1, 149 Pac. 279 (kidnapping); 1922, State v. Johnson, — Mont. —, 205 Pac. 661; Nev. 1866, State v. Salge, 2 Nev. 321, 326; N. C. 1819, State v. Sparrow, 3 Murph. 487; Tenn. 1824, Woods v. M'Pheran, Peck 371, semble; 1901, Pile v. State, 107 Tenn. 532, 64 S. W. 476 (witness inadvertently violating the rule, held improperly excluded); 1916, Pennington v. State, 136 Tenn. 533, 190 S. W. 546 (murder); Va. 1849, Hopper v. Com., 6 Gratt. 684 (obscure); 1879, Hey's Case, 32 Gratt. 946, 948, semble; 1894, Com. v. Brown, 90 Va. 671, 675, 19 S. E. 447; 1922, Jarrell v. Com., — Va. —, 110 S. E. 430; Wash. 1893, State v. Lee Doon, 7 Wash. 308, 34 Pac. 1103 (it is erroneous to exclude the witness, unless the party is in fault); 1905, State v. Ilomaki, 40 Wash. 629, 82 Pac. 873 (State v. Lee Doon followed); 1908, Hendelman v. Kahan, 50 Wash. 247, 97 Pac. 109 (may be excluded in discretion, if the party is in fault); W. Va. 1869, Gregg v. State, 3 W. Va. 705, semble; 1919, State v. Goldstrohm, 84 W. Va. 129, 99 S. E. 248.

SUB-TITLE V: PRELIMINARY NOTICE, OR DISCOVERY, TO THE OPPONENT

CHAPTER LXII.

A. GENERAL POLICY AND PRINCIPLE

§ 1845. Notice or Discovery of Evidence to the Opponent before Trial; (1) At Common Law. We are here concerned with the question whether the danger of unfair surprise is a ground for excluding unexpected evidence or for furnishing the means of ascertaining before trial the tenor of the opponent's evidence. The question may be considered from two points of view, first, that of Evidence in general, i.e. the ascertaining of the whole truth at the time of trial, and, secondly, that of litigation in general, i.e. the just settlement of controversies by the most efficacious and expeditious methods of procedure of all sorts.

(A) So far as concerns the process of ascertaining truth at the time of the trial itself, one thing seems clear, namely, that surprise is in itself no just ground for showing consideration to the party surprised.

On the supposition that the intended evidence is true, and that its force is all that is claimed for it, the opponent cannot be said to suffer any real harm. The truth can produce no harm.[1] It may overthrow the opponent's claim; but, from the point of view of the administrators of justice, it is no more than right that this should result. The opponent may indeed be surprised to find that the truth has been discovered, or that a truth, unknown to him, bears against his case; but he cannot complain, when the truth has been brought to light, merely on the score that this was unexpected by him. If it was not, then so much the worse for his untrue and unjust claim and so much the better for truth and justice.

It is apparent, then, that surprise can be no just ground for objection, unless we abandon the supposition that the surprising evidence is true. Assume, then, that it is false. It may be false in two ways, — either in the sense that it is totally untrue, or in the sense that as a bare fact it exists but yet would appear to have a less or different inferential force if other facts could be known (ante, § 34). For example, it is proposed to show that the opponent sent a letter, now lost, admitting the correctness of the present claim against him; assume that no such letter was written. Or, it is proposed to show that the accused, shortly after the homicide, left the town at night; assume that this is true, but that in fact he was called away suddenly to the bedside of his dying mother. Of this latter sort of facts are all testimonial statements of witnesses regarded as impeachable by the witness' character (ante, § 875); for it is an unquestionable fact that the tribunal has before it on the stand a competent person making assertions which tend to show that certain events took place; but if the mendacious disposition of the witness could be made to appear, the inference that the events occurred as he states would be materially weakened or even totally destroyed.

Let us assume, then, that the data offered in evidence against the opponent are (if the tribunal could only know it) false in one of these two senses. The opponent's situation is now vitally changed. On the former assumption, it would have done him no good to be notified in advance; he could not have altered the truth, and if he had wished to, the law could not lend him aid to that end. But now it is not the truth that he struggles against, but falsity. Had he but known in season that these fabricated facts were to be offered in evidence against him, he could have exposed the fabrication. He could have secured witnesses to show (in the above examples) that no letter of that date and place could have been written, because he was at the time absent or ill; that his mother was dying and the family had telegraphed for him; that the witness telling such a plausible story was mendacious in character or was seduced by a bribe. All this he was in truth and justice entitled to show: yet for all this some notice of the evidence, obtained in advance, was perhaps essential. Notice might have saved him, through the truth; without notice, he may be overcome by falsities.

§ 1845. [1] "How can a man be catched in the truth?" asked the Earl of Castlemaine (quoted ante, § 1002).

It is apparent, then, that any rule requiring notice in order to avoid unfair surprise must rest on the assumption that it is to serve as a prophylactic or protection against possible falsities, and not merely as a warning of evidential verities. It follows, therefore, that notice cannot in itself and always be required for the purposes of doing justice, but that on principle it need be required only when there is a danger, more or less probable according to the showings of experience, of falsities whose details could not otherwise have been anticipated and prepared against.

Can any precise and practical definition be made of the situations in which this danger can be predicated? It seems to be difficult, if not impossible. Perhaps a few specific and extreme situations can be discovered (post, § 1847); but not much more. For evidence of any form or quality whatever, testimonial or circumstantial, documentary or oral, recent or ancient, consisting in human conduct or in material objects, lying in the knowledge of a few persons or of many, situated within the jurisdiction or without it, — for all sorts, it remains equally possible that the specific piece of evidence offered may be absolutely true, or completely or partly fabricated. It is not easy, by any analysis or classification, by experience or by deduction, to enumerate, and to say that this or that class of evidence is in general attended by the feasibility of falsification, while another is not. We seem to be not far from this difficult dilemma, i. e. we must either require prior notice as a general rule, or we must decline to require it at all. We must either regard the dangers of falsification as indicating the dominant policy, and require notice (because of our inability to discriminate) even where it might not be needed, in order to do justice in the cases where it would be needed; or, we must regard the danger to innocent opponents as comparatively small and as overbalanced by counter-considerations, and must therefore decline to require notice at all.

Now the common law, in this dilemma, never had any hesitation. It accepted the second alternative, and declined to require notice at all. This is so fundamental an assumption in our law of Evidence that express judicial statements of it have rarely been made, even in passing. The following passages will illustrate it:

1826, GARROW, B., in Preston v. Carr, 1 Y. & J. 175, 179: "It is a very common thing at Nisi Prius to ask 'if such a witness is here'; the answer given on the other side is, 'You will know in good time, when he is called.'"

1850, Lord BROUGHAM, in Bain v. R. Co., 3 H. L. C. 1, 16: "The ground of exception stated [for a certain witness] is surprise, and surprise only, — not that the evidence was in itself inadmissible, but that it was inadmissible because the intention to adduce it had not been notified on the record. . . . Surprise is no ground of objection."

1858, CLIFFORD, J., in U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 108, 112, answering an argument of surprisal: "Surprise may often arise out of the offer of evidence strictly competent, and yet that circumstance has never been considered as affecting the question of its admissibility. Embarrassments of that sort, which are more or less incident to every trial, are usually remedied by motion to the Court for a postponement of the trial to a future day in the term or for a continuance." [2]

The common law, however, certainly did not fail to consider the need of protecting innocent opponents; for a keen perception of these possibilities is easily to be seen in other rules of evidence. But it believed that there were counter-considerations which overbalanced this danger. That this was its motive is to be seen with clearness in the circumstance that as soon as a moral change occurred in the community, diminishing the force of these counter-considerations, the balance was tipped in the opposite direction and a change took place in the law, corresponding roughly to the change of opinion towards these considerations. What were, then, these powerful counter-considerations?

(a) In the first place, the common law, originating in a community of sports and games, was permeated essentially by the instincts of sportsmanship. This has had both its higher aspect and its lower aspect. On the one hand, it has contributed a sense of fairness, of chivalrous behavior to a worthy adversary, of carrying out a contest on equal and honorable terms. The presumption of innocence, the character rule, the privilege against self-crimination, and other specific rules (to name those of Evidence alone), show the effect of this instinct against taking undue advantage of an adversary. The minor rules of professional etiquette (now surviving much more markedly in England than in the United States) illustrate the same tendency even more clearly. On the other hand, it has contributed to lower the system of administering justice, and in particular of ascertaining truth in litigation, to the level of a mere game of skill or chance. Some of the effects of this unfortunate tendency have been noted in other places (ante, §§ 57, 194, post, § 2251). It may be seen also in the rule allowing a new trial for an immaterial error in a ruling upon evidence (ante, § 21), and in the general attitude towards rules of procedure as expedients for winning the game of litigation irrespective of the ascertainment of truth. The right to use a rule of procedure or evidence precisely as one plays a trump card, or draws to three aces, or holds back a good horse till the home stretch, is a distinctive result of the common-law moral attitude toward parties in litigation:

1874, Sir J. Arnould, Life of Lord Denman, II, 92 (commenting on the failure of justice in Lord Cardigan's Case in 1840): "The only answer . . . is that English criminal procedure does not so much seek the discovery of truth pure and simple, as the discovery of truth according to certain artificial rules. . . . The prisoner must be convicted according to the strict rules of the legal game, or not convicted at all, and that, too, however clear his guilt may be."

[2] 1921, Dundovich v. State, — Ind. — , 131 N. E. 377 (the proper way to meet a case of surprise is to move for a continuance).

1895, Sir F. Pollock and Professor F. W. Maitland, History of English Law, II, 667: "At one of these [poles or extremes] the model is the conduct of the man of science, who is making researches and will use all appropriate methods for the solution of problems and the discovery of truth. At the other stands the umpire of our English games, who is there, not in order that he may invent tests for the powers of the two sides, but merely to see that the rules of the game are observed. It is towards the second of these ideals that our English mediæval procedure is strongly inclined. We are often reminded of the cricket match. The judges sit in court, not in order that they may discover the truth, but in order that they may answer the question, 'How's that?' This passive habit seems to grow upon them as time goes on. . . . Even in a criminal cause, even when the king is prosecuting, the English judge will, if he can, play the umpire rather than the inquisitor."[3]

Now one of the cardinal moral assumptions in a contest of skill or chance is that a player need not betray beforehand his strength of resource, and that the opponent cannot complain of being surprised. The accepted laws and moral standards of whist protect the player from exposing his cards before playing them; the owner of the racing-stable keeps as a valuable secret the time made by his horse in the last private trial before the race; and a chess-player's skill consists largely in concealing from his opponent the far-seeing sequence of moves which he has planned.

It is this feature of games and sports that has influenced powerfully the policy of the common law in the present aspect. 'Nemo tenetur armare adversarium suum contra se.'[4] To require the disclosure to an adversary of the evidence that is to be produced, would be repugnant to all sportsmanlike instincts. Rather permit you to preserve the secret of your tactics, to lock up your documents in the vault, to send your witness to board in some obscure village, and then, reserving your evidential resources until the final moment, to marshal them at the trial before your surprised and dismayed antagonist, and thus overwhelm him. Such was the spirit of the common law; and such in part it still is. It did not defend or condone trickery and deception; but it did regard the concealment of one's evidential resources and the preservation of the opponent's defenceless ignorance as a fair and irreproachable accompaniment of the game of litigation. There is no accounting for this except as in part a product of a characteristic instinct of the Anglo-Norman community in which our law grew up.

[3] The orthodox attitude even among the most radical reformers may be seen in the following passage of Mr. (afterwards L. C. J.) Denman, in 40 Edinb. Rev. 186 (1824), arguing for the privilege against self-crimination: "The accused's guilt he still has a right to see distinctly proved upon him by legal evidence. . . . Human beings are never to be run down like beasts of prey, without respect to the laws of the chase. If society must make a sacrifice of any one of its members, let it proceed according to general rules, upon known principles, and with clear proof of necessity; 'let us carve him as a feast fit for the gods, not hew him as a carcase for the hounds.'" So also, surprisingly, in a modern Irish judge's deliverance, quoted ante, § 21.

[4] 1628, Co. Litt. 36 a; 1658, Wingate's Maxims, No. 171, p. 665; 1702, Anon., 3 Salk. 362.

(b) A second counter-consideration is found in the possibilities of abuse by unscrupulous opponents, if prior notice were required to be given. We have assumed that the innocent opponent must often need such notice, to protect himself against falsities. But reverse the situation, and suppose an honest claimant and a guilty and unscrupulous opponent. If prior notice were to be given in all cases (and there can be, as above noticed, no easy discrimination), the honest claimant would then be exposed to the danger of fraud and chicanery by his opponent. Advised of the prospective witnesses, he would try, perhaps with success, to tamper with them. Warned of the evidential facts to be offered, he would prepare false evidence in denial or in explanation. This danger, then, must equally be reckoned with in fixing upon a general policy. Though experience may vary or its teachings may be difficult to interpret, at least one cannot say that to fear this danger more than the other is to be irrational. The common law may not have attempted to analyze with sufficient care and deliberateness the relative weight of these dangers, and it may have been too ready to emphasize the one here involved. Yet this danger undoubtedly exists, and its existence goes in part to justify the result reached by the common law. Moreover, the later abandonment of the radical common-law doctrine appears to have come about, in the main, only to the extent that this danger has been seen to disappear or has been ignored.

(B) So far as concerns the interests of litigation in general, the policy of requiring discovery or notice of evidence before trial is equally urgent, though on larger grounds. Its propriety, moreover, is independent of the truth or falsity of the opponent's evidence; it is, in fact, strongest where the opponent's evidence is assumed to be true. That policy rests on the fact of experience that the parties to controversies are prone to proceed either with a blind faith in the strength of their cause and the truth of its essential propositions of fact, or with the misguided assumption that the facts forming its defects and weaknesses are unknown to the adversaries and that their concealment to the last moment will heighten the chances of success. If these two states of mind could be prevented, a large proportion of litigation would be cut short at the beginning, with advantage to justice; because parties entertaining either belief without foundation would be disabused of it at an early moment, would perceive the uselessness of further contest in court, and would act accordingly. Any requirements of preliminary discovery, designed to lead to such a saving of time and expense, would be well worth imposing in the interests of expeditious litigation and of justice at large.[5]

The objections to the expedient, from this point of view, are of a twofold sort: (a) The reduction of litigation to a small compass, in time and expense, would diminish the emoluments of the professional men at law, — whether as attorneys or counsellors, or as other officers of court depending upon the number and amount of fees. This is not a consideration which honorable men could entertain as in the least hindering a measure otherwise desirable. But it was in fact undoubtedly a powerful though silent motive, in the resistance, active and inert, with which the efforts towards reform in this respect were met in England in the closing days of Lord Eldon's domination, — and indeed everywhere else, whenever such a reform was needed. The incumbents under a system which gave in perquisites to the Chancellor some eighty-five thousand dollars a year,[6] and to the Chief Justice of the King's Bench some eighty thousand a year,[7] and to the minor officers in proportion, were not likely to be zealous for any expedients which reduced the length and expense of litigation. In particular, the officers of the Chancery (the factory of fees, and the hospital of incurable controversies) would have inclined to oppose any measure by which their own monopolied expedient, the process of discovery before trial, should be made freely available in common-law courts. This objection, then — the reduction of fees — has been historically, though not rightfully, a serious obstacle in carrying out all proposals to minimize litigation by requiring the mutual disclosure of evidence before trial.

[5] See the remarks of L. C. J. Best, quoted post, § 1847. This was a favorite theme of Bentham's, as noticed post, § 1856, note 1. The most powerful modern statement is that of Sherman L. Whipple, Esq., of the Boston Bar, in addresses before the Florida Bar Association (1913) and the Connecticut Bar Association (1914).

(b) The second objection is the same as the one already noticed from the point of view of evidence alone, namely, the possibilities of abuse by unscrupulous opponents, if discovery of evidence before trial were required. This danger is always involved in such an expedient; and it would remain for experience to show whether the harm thereby caused in one class of cases would be more than balanced by the advantage gained in other cases in the way of speedy and costless settlement of controversies.

The result is, then, that the common law (in general, and apart from the few specific exceptions to be noted) recognized no rule requiring prior notice

[6] Twiss' Life of Lord Eldon, III, 315, Campbell's Lives, X, 68; reduced in 1832 to £10,000 in fixed salary: Arnould's Life of Lord Denman, I, 300. "Lord Eldon, in the returns which he himself made to the House of Commons, admits that in 1810 he received, as Lord Chancellor, a gross income of £22,730, from which sum, after deduction of all expenses, there remained a net income of £17,000 per annum. . . . So long as judges or subordinate officers were paid by casual perquisites and fees, paid directly to them by suitors, a taint of corruption lingered in the practice of our courts. Long after judges ceased to sell injustice, they delayed justice from interested motives; and when questions concerning their perquisites were raised, they would sometimes strain a point for the sake of their own private advantage. . . . Until the reign of Geo. IV, [in 1826,] judges continued to take fees and perquisites": 1867, Jeaffreson, A Book about Lawyers, I, 344, 349; see further details in Holdsworth's Hist. of English Law, vol. I, 3d ed., 1922, p. 441. Lord Eldon's patronage was additionally worth £35,000 annually (Bentham, Works, V, 539). Lord Eldon openly opposed, while Chancellor, in 1809, the bill to prohibit the sale of offices connected with the administration of justice, and defended the existing practice as a source of profit to the Chancellor (14 Hans. Parl. Deb., 1st ser., 1016; Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, 5th ed., X, 290).

Compare the instances cited ante, § 1677, note 3.

[7] Arnould's Life of Lord Denman, I, 185; reduced in 1825 to £10,000, and in 1830 to £8,000, in fixed salary: Ib. 186. The iniquities of the fee system were Bentham's constant thesis; in his Rationale of Judicial Evidence (vol. VII, p. 199, Bowring's ed.) he has some special comments on it in the present connection.

of intended evidence to be given to the opponent or furnishing legal process for obtaining such information; that, nevertheless, the investigation of truth at trials is in decided need of such information for opponents who are in danger of being attacked by false evidence, and that the general process of justly ending controversies is hampered by the lack of such information even where the evidence is assumed to be true; that, on the other hand, a general requirement of such discovery or notice before trial would introduce a new danger of fraud and thus imperil the ascertainment of truth; and that therefore the correct policy to be followed depends upon whether the former or the latter consideration is found in experience to be more weighty, and whether the latter danger can be obviated or reduced in any specific class of cases.

§ 1846. Same: (2) in Chancery. It might be supposed that, in the court of Chancery, a bill for discovery served as a means of evading the strict common-law rule, and that thereby a notice could be compulsorily obtained of the evidence intended to be produced by the opponent. But there was here no radical departure from the established doctrine of the common law; it was a policy, not of one Court rather than another Court, but of the whole legal system indigenous to the soil. So marked, indeed, is its feature as a racial product that where a conflict came, as it did in the Chancery court, between the imported procedure of the Roman and ecclesiastical law (which furnished to chancery procedure most of its important characteristics) and the native instincts of the British gentlemen who sat as chancellors and clerks, the racial influence prevailed, and the sportsmanlike rule that no notice need be given competed with marked success against the ecclesiastical and inquisitorial requirement of almost complete disclosure. The former, by virtue of its English birthright, took its natural place in the chancery practice also, as a persistent element in the larger common-law system of justice.

That the recognized objects of a bill for discovery in Chancery did not, on strict principle, include the obtaining of notice of the opponent's intended evidence, sufficiently appears in the following authoritative passages:[1]

1836, Sir James Wigram, V. C., Discovery, § 148: "If it were now for the first time to be determined whether in the investigation of disputed facts truth would be best elicited by allowing each of the contending parties to know before the trial in what manner and by what evidence his adversary proposed to establish his own case, arguments of some weight might 'a priori' be adduced in support of the affirmative of this important question. Experience, however, has shown — or, at least, Courts of justice in this country act upon the principle — that the possible mischiefs of surprise at a trial are more than counterbalanced by the danger of perjury which must inevitably be incurred when either party is permitted before a trial to know the precise evidence against which he has to contend. And accordingly, by the settled rules of Courts of justice in this country (approved as well as acknowledged) each party in a cause has thrown upon him the onus of supporting his own case and meeting that of his adversary without knowing beforehand by what evidence the case of his adversary is to be supported or his own opposed."

§ 1846. [1] It has already been noted (§ 4) that no attempt is made in this treatise to deal in detail with the rules of evidence in Chancery; they are referred to here merely as illustrative.

1840, L. C. B. ABINGER, in Combe v. London, 4 Y. & C. 139, 155: "A party has a right to file a bill of discovery for the purpose of obtaining such facts as may tend to prove his case; and if those facts are either in possession of the other party, or, if they consist of documents in possession of the other party, in which he either has an interest, or which tend to prove his case, and have no relation to the case of the other party, he has a right to have them produced, and he may file a bill of discovery, in order to aid him in law or in equity, to exhibit those documents in evidence, or compel a statement of those facts. But does it not rest there? Has he a right, as against the defendant, to discover the defendant's case? Does any case go the length of that? Sometimes the cases trench very much on those limits; but if you take the question as a matter of principle, has a man a right, or is it consistent with common justice, that he should file a bill to discover the defendant's case? The ground on which he files his bill, is to make the defendant discover what is material to his (the plaintiff's) case; but he has no right to say to the defendant, 'Tell me what your title is — tell me what your case is — tell me how you mean to prove it — tell me the evidence you have to support it — disclose the documents you mean to make use of in support of it — tell me all these things, that I may find a flaw in your title.' Surely that is not the principle of a bill of discovery. And if you look at the cases, you will find, however they may occasionally trench on the line of distinction — you will find that is the great line of distinction."

1877, Professor C. C. Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, §§ 56, 59, 161, 171, 172: "Whatever the plaintiff does not succeed in proving in this way, i. e. by compelling the defendant to admit it, he must prove by the testimony of witnesses or by documents. The witnesses are examined in writing, and secretly, and none of the testimony is published until all the witnesses have been examined on both sides. The only information, therefore, that is given to the defendant to enable him either to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses, or to meet the plaintiff's evidence by examining witnesses on his own behalf, is what is contained in the bill; except that the defendant is also entitled to be informed of the names and addresses of the witnesses examined by the plaintiff.[2] It seems clear, therefore, that the bill ought to set forth all the evidence in detail which is to be proved by witnesses, as is done in the articles of a libel [in ecclesiastical courts]. . . . Precisely the contrary of this, however, has taken place; for the plaintiff . . . is not required to state specifically what any of his witnesses will swear to, but is permitted to state the facts which he intends to prove by witnesses, as distinguished from the evidence by which they are to be proved; and, as this makes it impossible for him to examine them upon the allegations in the bill, he is permitted to examine them upon written interrogatories, and yet the defendant is not entitled to a copy of the interrogatories. . . . In the ecclesiastical courts, as has been seen, all documentary evidence has to be annexed to the pleadings, so that the adverse party is not only furnished with a copy, but has the fullest opportunity to inspect the originals; and this seems to be correct upon principle; for it is not the policy of the civil law to keep the parties in ignorance of each other's evidence until it is read at the hearing; and it is only to prevent perjury and subornation of perjury that the testimony of witnesses is kept secret until all the witnesses have been examined, — a reason which seems to have little, if any, application to documentary evidence. In equity, however, the parties are never entitled to inspect each other's documents, nor to have copies of them, nor in any way to know their precise contents until they are read upon the hearing. . . . [It is true, that] a plaintiff in equity is entitled to the benefit of all the evidence in the defendant's possession which will aid him in proving the allegations of the bill, whether such evidence consist of the defendant's personal knowledge or be contained in documents or writings; . . . [and] as equity furnishes no direct means by which a suitor can obtain an inspection of his adversary's documentary evidence before trial or hearing, attempts have often been made to accomplish the object indirectly and illegitimately, by means of discovery; and sometimes such attempts have been attended with success. . . . Not only have suitors in equity endeavored to avail themselves of discovery as a means of obtaining an inspection of their adversary's documentary evidence, but they have attempted by the same means to obtain information generally as to their adversary's case or defence, beyond what was disclosed by his pleadings; and these attempts have sometimes received countenance from the Courts, and especially from a much-cited passage in Mitford: 'The plaintiff has a right to a discovery of the case on which the defendant relies, and of the manner in which he means to support it.' But Wigram has shown conclusively that any such right is wholly foreign to the principles of discovery; and his view has been adopted by Lord Romilly in a well-considered judgment."

[2] This partial exception to the general rule was almost nullified by the circumstance that the examination of the witnesses was held in secret by an officer upon written interrogatories prepared beforehand by the parties (ante, § 1367).

It is true that, to a limited extent (noticed post, § 1856), the result of a bill of discovery would usually be the revelation of some portion of information not before known to the applicant. But the general theory remained, and the rule was strictly enforced, that the adversary's own evidence was not to be revealed on a bill for discovery.

In short, equitable discovery involved no more than the negation of the party's privilege at common-law trials not to testify against his own cause, and was not intended to give relief against the common-law principle which refused to exact before trial a disclosure of the tenor of the evidence intended to be given for his cause. Moreover, the tediousness of a bill in chancery came ultimately to nullify in great part whatever of effectiveness belongs to it in theory.

§ 1847. Policy of the Exceptions to the Rule (Accused Persons; Civil Parties; Documents; Circumstantial Evidence of Character, etc.). It has been seen above (§ 1845) that the common-law doctrine was open to subsequent modification on one of two grounds, namely, either when the overbalancing danger of furnishing an unscrupulous opponent with the opportunity of fraud could be flatly ignored, or when this danger could be found to be of comparatively trifling magnitude. The first ground, it is true, could come to be accepted only by force of some powerful moral sentiment or impulse, which would induce us to act irrespective of immediate experience or of reasoning; while the second ground would be reached in direct experience, with reference to the actual operation of the rule. In both of these ways, then, a change has come about.[1]

(1) Accused persons. In the first place, since the close of the 1700s, a general revulsion of sentiment towards accused persons in criminal cases has occurred. This modern attitude, already noticed in other aspects (ante, §§ 579, 865), has indeed run its legitimate course, and is now an anachronism. But its marks remain in the inherited law of this present generation. In its present bearings, the effect is to induce us to help at any cost the

§ 1847. [1] 1901, Pound, C., in Ulrich v. McConaughey, 63 Nebr. 10, 88 N. W. 150: "The common law originally was very strict in confining each party to his own means of proof, and, as it has been expressed, regarded a trial as a cock fight, wherein he won whose advocate was the gamest bird with the longest spurs. But we have come to take a more liberal view, and have done away with most of those features which gave rise to that reproach."

accused person, who in theory of law is innocent.[2] The danger that, if guilty, he may be disposed and enabled to tamper with witnesses, to manufacture false evidence in defence, and otherwise to misuse the aid thus furnished, — this danger (unquestionably a real one) we ignore, or at least deliberately risk. The determination to protect the innocent accused has induced us to aid him, at any cost of accompanying dangers, by giving him fair notice of the persons to be called against him as witnesses:

1883, Sir James F. Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, I, 225, 398: "I do not think any part of the old procedure operated more harshly upon prisoners than the summary and secret way in which justices of the peace, acting frequently the part of detective officers, took their examinations and committed them for trial. It was a constant and most natural and reasonable topic of complaint by the prisoners who were tried for the Popish Plot that they had been taken without warrant, kept close prisoners from the time of their arrest, and kept in ignorance of the evidence against them till the very moment when they were brought into Court to be tried. This is set in a strong light by the provisions of [1709, St. 7 Anne, c. 21, § 14, quoted post, allowing a list of witnesses in treason]. . . . This was considered as an extraordinary effort of liberality. It proves, in fact, that even at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and after the experience of the State trials held under the Stuarts, it did not occur to the Legislature that, if a man is to be tried for his life, he ought to know beforehand what the evidence against him is, and that it did appear to them that to let him know even what were the names of the witnesses was so great a favor that it ought to be reserved for people accused of a crime for which legislators themselves or their friends and connections were likely to be prosecuted. It was a matter of direct personal interest to many members of Parliament that trials for political offences should not be grossly unfair; but they were comparatively indifferent as to the fate of people accused of sheep-stealing or burglary or murder. . . . [The prisoner] was not allowed as a matter of right, but only as an occasional exceptional favor, . . . to see his [own] witnesses or put their evidence in order. When he came into Court, he was set to fight for his life with absolutely no knowledge of the evidence to be produced against him."[3]

All this early attitude has changed, with the spirit of the times; the extent to which the change has affected the law, by establishing an exception to the common-law principle, is later examined in detail (post, §§ 1850–1855). That the modern tenderness for accused persons has been the effective motive for the change, and that no disposition has yet appeared to abandon the common-law attitude where this motive does not operate, may be clearly enough seen in two circumstances, namely, that no such aid, by requiring notice of the names of witnesses, has been extended either to the prosecuting officer in criminal cases or to the respective parties in civil cases.

(2) Civil parties. In the next place, it has come to be clearly perceived

[2] No doubt, in ultimate analysis, it may be justified on broad grounds of social and political welfare; but in its immediate operation it is an emotion or sentiment only.

[3] This was equally a characteristic of Continental criminal procedure, though it lingered there much later (Esmein, Histoire de la procédure criminelle en France, 153, 163, translated as A History of Continental Criminal Procedure, being vol. V of the Continental Legal History Series; de la Grasserie, La Preuve, cited ante, § 1834). In all the history of political oppression, from the English Star Chamber to the Venetian Council of Ten, this seems to be the favorite and powerful weapon. Compare Rev. Sydney Smith's reference to this rule in his scathing denunciation of a related one ("Letter on the Bill to allow Counsel for Prisoners in Felony," Edinburgh Review, 1826, Works, ed. 1869, p. 539).

that the danger of improper tampering with witnesses is totally lacking where the desired witness is the party himself. By requiring him to state in advance his testimonial knowledge to the opponent, we do not expose his testimony to danger, — simply because he is himself not open to tampering as a witness, and because the risk of a manufacturing of counter-evidence is no greater than would otherwise exist in any case. There is therefore no objection to a prior disclosure of his testimony to the opponent.

This much was indeed conceded from the very beginning in the Court of Chancery, by the allowance of bills of discovery; and to that extent the law may be said to have recognized always this exception to the general rule. But this exception failed of recognition in courts of common law, by reason of a distinct principle there obtaining, namely, the privilege of a civil party not to testify against his own cause (post, § 2217). When the time came that this principle was abolished and an opponent could be compelled to testify on trial, it was easy to perceive that his intended testimony should also be made available before trial (as it always had been by bill of discovery in chancery). Accordingly the one change was everywhere found accompanying or closely following the other (post, § 1856*a*). The desirability, and at the same time the safety, of making this requirement was well expounded by a liberal judge, some twenty years before the change was actually made by legislation in England; his reasoning rests on both of the considerations already noted (ante, § 1845, par. a and b), but especially upon the second of the two:

1830, L. C. J. Best, Second Report of the Common Law Practice Commissioners, 46, 50: "I propose that as soon as any action be brought, even before appearance, either party to the cause may examine on oath the other. . . . After such examinations, in a great number of cases very few if any witnesses will be required. The whole of the cases of each party will be fully disclosed, and nothing will remain for juries to do but to assess damages. In cases which depend on circumstances of which the parties have no positive knowledge and which are to be proved by witnesses, the parties will from these examinations discover the nature of these circumstances, and each side will come prepared to make the best of their respective cases. There will remain no pretence for complaining of surprise. Some persons think that parties should not know each other's cases. Parties know each other's cases in the trial of issues from chancery; and when causes are tried a second time these cases are more easily and satisfactorily tried than any other. Much more mischief is to be apprehended from surprise than from the fullest knowledge of a cause. . . . There are parties who, ignorant of the answer their opponents have to give, think they have good cases; there are some who know that if the whole truth can be got at they have no chance of success, but persevere in litigation in the hope that their adversaries will not discover their weakness or will not be able to take advantage of it for want of proof; others are misled by their attornies, who afterwards excuse themselves from advising their clients to proceed by protesting that their clients deceived them. These are the ways in which parties deceive themselves or are deceived to their own ruin and sometimes the ruin of their unfortunate opponents. The examination of the parties will dispel these delusions. . . . I am persuaded that these examinations will stop many cases and prevent much misery."

1828, Feb. 7, Mr. Henry Brougham, Speech on the Courts of Common Law (Hans. Parl. Deb., 2d ser., XVIII, 188): "Whatever brings the parties to their senses as soon as possible, especially by giving each a clear view of his chance of success or failure, and, above all things, making him well acquainted with his adversary's case at the earliest possible moment, will always be for the interests of justice, of the parties themselves, and indeed, of all but the practitioners. It is the practitioners generally, that determine how the matter shall proceed, and it may be imagined that their own interests are not the last attended to. The seeming interest of two parties disposed to be litigious, in many cases appears to be different from the interests of justice, although their real interest, if strictly examined, will not unfrequently be found to be the same. Now, justice is embarrassed by the disingenuousness of conflicting parties; justice wants the cases of both to be fully and early stated; but both parties take care to inform each other as little as possible, and as late as possible, of their respective merits. One tells as much of his case as he thinks good for the furtherance of his claim and the frustration of the enemy's; so does the other, only as much of his answer as may help him, without aiding his adversary; and the judge is oftentimes left to guess at the truth in the trick and conflict of the two. The interest of the Court of Justice being to make both parties come out with the whole of their case as early as possible, the law should never lend itself to their concealments. This remark extends to the proof as well as the statement of the case; an intimation of what the evidence is may often stop a cause at once. In Scotland, the law in this respect is better than ours, for no man can produce a written instrument on trial without having previously shown it to his adversary. For want of this salutary rule I have often seen the most useless litigation protracted for the sole benefit of practitioners. I was myself lately engaged in a cause, the circumstances of which will give the House an idea of the mischief. I was instructed not to show a certain receipt to the opposite party, as my client, the defendant, meant to nonsuit his adversary in great style, as he would call it. Well, the plaintiff (an executor) stated his case, and called his witnesses to prove the debt. I did not take the trouble to cross-examine, which would have been quite unnecessary. Equally so was it to address the jury. I acknowledged the truth of all that had been sworn on the other side, but added that it was all useless, as I happened to have a receipt for the money, which had been paid to the testator. This, of course, put an end to the case. The sum sought to be recovered did not exceed twenty pounds, and the expenses could not have been less than a hundred."

1853, Common Law Practice Commissioners, Second Report, 35: "As to facts within the knowledge of an adverse party, the Courts of law possess no power of compelling discovery; except, indeed, that by the recent change [of 1851] in the law each party may be called as a witness by his opponent; but it is obvious that this course will only be resorted to in the most desperate emergency. It cannot reasonably be expected that a party ignorant of what his adversary may be prepared to swear, shall put so adverse and interested a witness into the box, without having had any opportunity of previous interrogation. For the purpose of discovery, previous to the trial, whether of facts or of documents, the party desiring it has now no alternative but to resort to a court of equity. We have no hesitation in saying that this is altogether wrong. We assert as an indisputable proposition, that every Court ought to possess within itself [4] the means of administering complete justice within the scope of its jurisdiction. . . . This opportunity for examination prior to the trial will be useful, not only for the purpose of discovering facts exclusively in the knowledge of the opposite party, but as the means of sparing the trouble and expense of producing evidence of facts which he may be prepared to admit; while, on the other hand, it will tend to make more clearly manifest the matters which are alone in contest between the parties. In some cases, such a preliminary discovery may even altogether obviate the necessity of any trial, by compelling the one party or the other to admit facts decisive of the case upon the merits, so as to show that proceeding to trial would be a mere abuse of the forms of justice. A power of preliminary discovery would likewise tend to expose the motives of groundless actions brought for vexation, and of unfounded defences set up and persisted in for delay. It would, moreover, have a most wholesome effect in preventing false pleas from being put on the record; for as soon as the examination of the party had made manifest the falsehood of the plea, a judge might be applied to to disallow the pleading at the expense of the party pleading it. If the very existence of such a power had not the effect of preventing the necessity of its exercise, it would at least aid the Court in extirpating frivolous and improper litigation. We propose that either party in a cause shall be at liberty to deliver to the opposite party, provided such party would be liable to be called as a witness, or his attorney, written questions on the subjects on which discovery is sought; and to require such party, within a time to be fixed, to answer the questions in writing upon oath, sworn and filed in the same manner and under the same sanction, in case of falsehood, as an affidavit; and that the party omitting to answer within the prescribed time shall be subject to the consequences of a contempt of the Court. But we by no means propose to confine the power of interrogating such adverse party to the written questions above referred to. We think that in many cases an opportunity should be afforded for oral examination. At the same time, care must be taken that the power of personal examination be not abused by being made a means of vexation and oppression, when used against weak or timid persons. We propose, therefore, not to leave it at the option of a party to demand an oral examination, but to give the Court, or a judge, discretion, on the application of either party, in case of an insufficient answer to the written questions before referred to, or in any other case in which it may be made to appear essential to justice, to direct an oral examination of the other party before either a judge or a master of the court."

[4] This measure had already been recommended by the Common Law Practice Commissioners of 1830, Second Report, 30, 70.

(3) Documents, chattels, premises. In the next place, it has come to be acknowledged that the danger of improper tampering with evidence by an unscrupulous opponent is of comparatively small probability where the evidence in question consists of documents, chattels, or premises, in the first party's own possession. To allow the opponent, under proper safeguards, to have prior inspection of these, and even to take a copy of documents, cannot endanger the integrity of the object. Nor can the warning thus given create any substantial danger of procuring perjured testimony against the execution of the document or other facts. All the justice of assisting an innocent opponent may be attained, without any appreciable risk of furnishing the means of fraud to an unprincipled one:

1831, Common Law Practice Commissioners, Third Report, 45: "The present practice of profert and oyer, though in its present form chargeable with many defects, is in its principle of the highest importance. It is manifestly essential to the interests of justice that a party against whom his own written instrument or the instrument of another person is pleaded should have the means of inspection, and, if necessary, of procuring a copy before he is called upon to answer. He may wish to ascertain its genuineness, and, if genuine, whether it has sustained any material alteration since it was executed. He may wish to know the names of the subscribing witnesses and to ascertain from them what testimony they are prepared to give as to the circumstances under which it was executed. He may propose to found his defence upon some parts of the instrument which his adversary has not chosen to set forth and which may either show its invalidity in point of law or provide him with an answer in point of fact. . . . We can see no good reason why, in every case in which profert would be required of a bond or other deed, it should not also be made of any other instrument of whatever description, which is either alleged to be or which may be presumed to be in writing. Such an alteration of the law would prevent the delay, expense, and uncertainty which attends an application to the Court or a judge, and would place the whole practice on this subject on a more simple and uniform as well as a more equitable footing."

The germ of this exception for documentary evidence already existed in the common-law rule of profert and oyer (post, § 1857). Not until the general change of attitude towards the common-law doctrine of concealment of evidence was the rule of oyer allowed to be extended to its proper scope. Since the middle of the 1800s, legislation has almost universally provided, in some form or other (post, §§ 1859, 1862), that where the opponent has requested this opportunity of protecting himself against unfair surprise, it is to be granted him; and such an inspection is usually made the indispensable condition to the possessor's subsequent use of the document in evidence on the trial. This result seems to have come about through a distinct perception of the true balance of danger; but it also signifies (in spite of the frequent judicial emasculation of these statutes) that to a certain extent our communities have deliberately abandoned the sportsman's theory of litigation.

Two further modifications of the general common-law rule remain to be noticed, both already existing in the original common-law period and before the changes of opinion above-mentioned had come about.

(4) Documents at the trial. One of these rests, as does the statutory rule (3) just mentioned, on an appreciation that in a certain condition there is practically no danger of abuse by an unscrupulous opponent, and that furthermore the first party, even on the sportsman's theory, is losing no real advantage. Where a document is brought by the first party to the trial, and is about to be used before its close, he may attempt to use it without allowing the opponent to inspect it. This might easily lead to abuse by the party using the document; moreover, to require it to be shown neither gives the opponent any opportunity for fraud, nor compels the first party to lose any advantage of concealment, since it is to be used in any event before the close of the trial. Accordingly, the opponent's right to inspection is conceded. The details of the rule are later examined (post, § 1861).

(5) Circumstantial evidence of conduct. It has been noticed already (§ 1845) that a necessary assumption, in the common-law principle declining to require notice, is that no discrimination is easily feasible and that the rule must ordinarily be invariable, i.e. that, though there is just ground for notice where the intended evidence is false, yet the situations in which the evidence is probably false cannot be well discriminated by any definition from the situations in which it is probably true, and therefore the requirement must be either for notice in all cases or for notice in none; and the common law chose the latter alternative. If this assumption is erroneous, and if any such situation can be definitely ascertained and marked off, then there is sufficient reason for making an exception to the general rule and for requiring notice. Now there is at least one such situation, namely, where evidence to impeach a witness consists of particular acts of misconduct or particular falsities. Here it is obvious that there is the fullest opportunity of falsification, with an absolute impotence for the opponent to expose it. For example, if a witness' character could be attacked in this way, the witnesses might on the trial falsely place the misconduct in New York or Texas; they might falsely date it in the past month or five years ago, and they might falsely specify it as forgery or murder or larceny; and against these fabrications of place, date, and conduct the opponent is totally defenceless, because he cannot even guess beforehand, in the wide range of space, time, and criminality, what the tenor of these falsities will be. Such an absolute immunity for falsehood would not fail to be availed of by unscrupulous parties, and the consequences would be monstrous. This was long ago perceived by the common-law judges. That is the way, said Chief Justice Scroggs, "to accuse whom you please, and that may make a man a liar that cannot imagine this will be put to him; and so no man's testimony that comes to be a witness shall leave himself safe." [5]

It might have been supposed that the consequence of this policy would be a rule permitting such misconduct to be offered in evidence when notice of time, place, and conduct had been given beforehand; and such a rule would probably be more desirable. But, instead of this, the simpler measure of absolute prohibition was adopted, — a result due clearly enough to the fact that other reasons had also a bearing on the impropriety of receiving such evidence.[6]

§ 1848. Distinction between a Rule of Evidence and a Rule of Procedure or Pleading. The sole question here for the law of Evidence is whether, because of surprise or lack of notice, certain evidence will be excluded. If no such effect is given, then it is to be said that the rules of evidence are no longer involved. But the policy of guarding against unfair surprise may lead to other rules, not of Evidence; and such rules are without the present purview. These are of two general sorts:

(1) Where evidence unfairly surprises the opponent, the Court may in its discretion grant a continuance and postpone the trial.[1] It may also, after verdict, grant a new trial, though this ground alone will rarely suffice.

(2) To avoid unfair surprise, the claimant's pleadings may be required to state with greater particularity the facts upon which his claim is based. For example, in many jurisdictions, by statute, the plaintiff, in an action for a sum of money made up of several items incurred on an account, is required to deliver before trial to the defendant or to annex to the declaration an itemized statement of the particulars, on penalty of being forbidden to prove the account.[2] But this is no more than a rule of Pleading; the distinction being that by a rule of Evidence he could have proved his case by other evidence

[5] 1680, Castlemaine's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1067, 1081, 1107; quoted ante, § 1102.

[6] This class of rules is further examined post, § 1849.

§ 1848. [1] See Clifford, J., quoted ante, § 1845, for the rule in jury trials; for Chancery, see Langdell, ubi supra, § 60.

[2] The following are merely examples: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 454 (account stated; a copy must be delivered to the opponent five days after demand in writing, in order to be admissible); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 6709 (a party, on failure to deliver to the opponent a copy of an alleged account within ten days after demand in writing, will "be precluded from giving evidence thereof"); Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 7777 (similar); Miss. Code 1906, § 734; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 1258; N. M. Annot. St. 1915, § 4149 (similar); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6598.

if he failed to give the notice, while by this rule of pleading he is confined to the particulars stated, which thus become virtually allegations of his declaration. The same expedient is sometimes resorted to for other kinds of claims.[3] Occasionally, also, a statute requires a copy of a contract, or other document forming the basis of the claim, to be filed with the declaration;[4] and it would seem that such a rule produces a similar effect, i. e. makes the terms of the copy a part of the allegations, and thus does something more than the statutes later noted (post, § 1859), which either require the filing of the original, or require the prior delivery of a copy in order to use the original in evidence, but leave the party at liberty to refuse and to prove his case otherwise.

B. SPECIFIC RULES

1. Circumstantial Evidence

§ 1849. Notice of Evidential Facts, in general; Particular Acts to evidence Character, etc. (1) To the general rule allowing the use of all circumstantial facts without giving prior notice, and refusing to recognize unfair surprise as a ground for the exclusion of evidence, there seems to be but one generally recognized exception, at common law. There is, as already noticed (ante, § 1847), a special and palpable danger of undetectible fraud in allowing the moral character of an opposing party or witness to be evidenced by particular acts of misconduct, or particular falsities, when attempted to be proved otherwise than by cross-examination of the party or witness himself or by record of conviction for crime. Other reasons of policy, however, combined to oppose such evidence; and accordingly it was not merely prohibited unless after notice given, but prohibited unconditionally.

The reasoning by which this result was reached has been already fully set

[3] Ala. Code 1907, § 227 (contract made by an unlicensed dentist is void; but two days' notice must be given if proof of authority is to be required); § 461 (certain contested elections; "no testimony must be received of any illegal votes," etc., unless prior notice is filed of "the number of illegal votes and by whom given and for given," etc.); § 486 (analogous provisions for other elections); Cal. Civ. C. 1872, § 1115 (on trial of an election contested on the ground of illegal votes received, "no testimony can be received of any illegal votes," unless the contestant deliver to the opponent, "at least three days before such trial, a written list of the number of illegal votes, and by whom given, which he intends to prove on such trial; and no testimony can be received of any illegal votes except such as are specified in such list"); Colo. Comp. St. 1921, C. C. P. § 170 (on a hearing for an injunction, only testimony of the character stated in a prior notice is to be admitted, with certain modifications); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 1270; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 40 (election contests; notice of illegal votes to be proved must be given beforehand by list of voters); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, §§ 7743–7746 (in trespass to try title, an abstract of title must be given to the opponent on written demand, etc., and the documentary evidence of title shall be confined to the matters therein specified).

The following seems to be of this sort: Fla. Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 2740 (no claim for credit is to be allowed in actions between the State and individuals, unless previously exhibited to the comptroller and disallowed; unless the defendant is at trial in possession of vouchers "not before in his power to produce," and was prevented by unavoidable accident from prior exhibition).

[4] Ark. Dig. 1919, § 1223 (original or copy of any document upon which a party "shall rely," must be filed with his pleading); Fla. Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 2647; Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 1368; Miss. Code 1906, § 734; Pa. St. 1887, Pub. L. 271, May 25; 1893, Malone v. R. Co., 157 Pa. 430, 443, 27 Atl. 756.

forth in judicial utterances quoted ante, §§ 194, 979, 1002, and need not be rehearsed here. The rules that depended upon it prohibited the proof, by the above mode, of particular acts of misconduct of a witness (§ 979), or of a party (§ 194) except when the party's character was a part of the issue (§ 202), or of a witness' collateral errors (ante, § 1002). But the influence of those rules has been so powerful that they have often been extended, by analogy, to prohibit such a mode of proof of other qualities than moral character (§ 225 ff., 992 ff.).

(2) In a few specific classes of litigation, experience has shown special need, and statute has in some jurisdictions provided, for a rule of prior notice of the particular instances to be offered; e. g. in patent-infringement [1] and in election contests.[2] For criminal cases in general no such rule has been adopted (ante, §§ 300–367).

2. Testimonial Evidence

§ 1850. Criminal Cases; Listing or Indorsing the Prosecution's Witnesses; (I) Common-law Rule. In the orthodox common-law practice, no notice was required to be given to the accused, in any criminal prosecution, of the name or testimony of any witness intended to be produced on behalf of the prosecution.[1] This absence of any requirement was complete, i. e. (A) it neither required the notice as a rule of preliminary procedure irrespective of any evidential effect; (B) nor did it impose a rule of evidence excluding witnesses whose names had not been furnished. The operation of this practice led unquestionably to great injustice; but the law was plain and unquestioned:

1873, CHRISTIANCY, C. J., in Hill v. People, 26 Mich. 496, 497: "The common law did not require the names of any of the witnesses to be indorsed upon the indictment for any purpose connected with the trial. But, as the witnesses who were to testify before the grand jury were sworn in open court before they were sent to the grand jury, a list of the witnesses intended to be examined before that jury was required to be indorsed on the back of the bill as drawn up to be laid before them. This was required for two purposes, first, that the crier or other officer whose duty it was to swear the witness might know who were to be called and sworn and that he might certify to their being sworn, which he did by adding after their names 'sworn in court'; and, second, that the grand jury might know what witness to call and who had been sworn. In this mode, it is true, a defendant indicted for a misdemeanor incidentally got the benefit of a list of the witnesses who had testified before the grand jury, because in cases of misdemeanor he was entitled to a copy of the indictment. But in cases of felony he failed to receive even this incidental benefit, as in such cases he was not entitled to a copy of the indictment." [2]

§ 1849. [1] Cases cited post, § 1856c.

[2] Cases cited ante, § 1848, n. 3.

§ 1850. [1] Except so far as a deposition was taken and thus the accused was necessarily notified in order to permit an opportunity of cross-examination (ante, § 1378). This was secured afterwards in England, by statute, independently of those provisions: 1836, St. 6 & 7 W. IV, c. 114, § 4 (accused allowed to inspect depositions at the trial); 1849, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, § 27 (accused allowed a copy of depositions before trial); so also in some of the American statutes cited post, § 1851. But under these American statutes the accused (except perhaps in New York) obtains no right to inspect before trial the contents of the testimony given before the grand jury. Cases cited infra, note 5.

[2] Compare also the passage from Sir J. Stephen, quoted ante, § 1847, and Lord Erskine's speech, in Queen Caroline's Trial, in 1820, favoring a motion to furnish the accused

It follows that, apart from the express or implied requirement of some statute, there was at common law no rule of evidence excluding witnesses whose names have not been furnished to the accused;[3] nor was there any rule of preliminary procedure permitting the accused to obtain such a list by motion before trial.[4]

Much less might the accused obtain before trial an inspection of the notes of testimony taken before the grand jury;[5] or the disclosure of any other evidence.[6] Often, however, statutes have so provided (post, § 1855*a*).

with a list of the prosecution's witnesses (2 Hansard Parl. Deb., 2d ser., 304–318. 428–436, 470, 472, 574; quoted in part in Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, 5th ed., X, 52).

[3] Eng. 1825, R. v. Hollingberry, 6 Dowl. & R. 345, 348 (conspiracy; witness not produced before grand jury may be used); U. S. 1895, Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 515, 16 Sup. 62 (murder; quoted post, § 1852, n. 4); 1904, Balliet v. U. S., 129 Fed. 689, 692, 64 C. C. A. 201 (fraud in the mails); 1906, Ball v. U. S., 147 Fed. 32, 36, C. C. A.; 1901, State v. Robinson, 61 S. C. 108, 39 S. E. 247; 1895, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837.

This rule therefore equally applied to witnesses not on the grand jury list, where (as in Massachusetts, note 4, infra) this list was exceptionally given without statutory enactment: 1858, Com. v. Phelps, 11 Gray 73 (illegal sale of liquor; evidence is not restricted to sales testified to before the grand jury; Shaw, C. J.: "Suppose his shop is in a large street, and a hundred people go in and each buys liquor; must the Government call the whole hundred before the grand jury, in order to call them before the jury of trials?").

In South Carolina, a statute expressly denies any list: S. C. St. 1731, C. Cr. P. 1922, § 938 (the accused in a capital offence "shall have a true copy of the whole indictment, but not the names of the witnesses," three days before trial).

The Irish practice seems to have varied: 1855, R. v. Petcherini, 7 Cox Cr. 79, 82 (Ireland; O'Hagan, Q. C., objected to a witness who had been examined by the committing magistrate: "There is a rule on the Munster Circuit that, unless a witness appears unexpectedly, . . . it is not fair to an accused person that a witness should lie by or be kept back without making an information, and thus deprive a prisoner of means of cross-examination or of making inquiries"; Crampton, J.: "I have been acting on a contrary rule for twenty-one years").

[4] Eng. 1792, R. v. Holland, 4 T. R. 690 (information against an officer of the East India Company; inspection not allowed of the report of a board of inquiry, examining witnesses in India, on which the information was founded; "if we were to grant this motion, it would subvert the whole system of criminal law"); 1820, The Queen's Case, cited supra, note 2; U. S. Fed. 1907, Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. 582 ("The right of the accused to the indorsement of names of witnesses does not rest on the common law, but is statutory"); Fla. 1906, Baker v. State, 51 Fla. 1, 40 So. 673 (neither under Rev. St. 1892, § 2901, allowing a copy of the indictment, nor otherwise, is the accused entitled to a list of witnesses before trial); Ind. 1910, Porter v. State, 173 Ind. 694, 91 N. E. 340.

But in Massachusetts, exceptionally, the practice changed without statute: 1830, Com. v. Knapp, 9 Pick. 496, 498; 1833, Com. v. Locke, 14 Pick. 485 (motion for a list of grand-jury witnesses, granted, "on the general principles of justice and sound policy"); yet this allowance did not extend to any but grand-jury witnesses: 1835, Com. v. Walton, 17 Pick. 403.

[5] 1910, Porter v. State, 173 Ind. 694, 91 N. E. 340; 1898, Franklin v. Com., 105 Ky. 237, 48 S. W. 986; 1904, Howard v. Com., 118 Ky. 1, 80 S. W. 211, 81 S. W. 704; 1910, State v. Rhoads, 81 Oh. 397, 91 N. E. 186 (accused held not entitled to inspect minutes of evidence taken before the grand jury and in possession of prosecutor; cases collected); 1920, Taylor v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 330, 221 S. W. 611 (signed testimony of witnesses before the grand jury; inspection not demandable); 1922, Mohler v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 454 (murder; but here the attorneys for prosecution and for accused were held mutually bound to give access at the trial to the transcript of that part of evidence at prior proceedings possessed by each); 1905, Havenor v. State, 125 Wis. 444, 104 N. W. 116 (here applied to a defendant desiring to peruse the grand jury's record of testimony in order to plead immunity for testimony there given by him).

This would also perhaps be a consequence of the privilege rule (post, § 2363, n. 8). Compare the cases cited post, § 1859*g* and § 1863.

[6] 1912, State v. Steele, 117 Minn. 384, 135 N. W. 1128 (copy of the accused's preliminary examination). Contra: 1888, Daly v. Dimock, 55 Conn. 579, 12 Atl. 405 (indictment for murder; the accused held entitled to inspect the coroner's report of testimony at an inquest, required by law to be filed with the clerk of court; the argument of Mr. Case for the accused is a valuable summary of authori-

The accused's right to consult with his own witnesses before trial would seem not to be affected by the present principle, either at common law or by statute, but rather to be a corollary of his right to have compulsory process "to produce the witnesses in his favor" (post, § 2191).

The accused's right to inspect premises or chattels before trial is considered under that special head (post, § 1862).

§ 1851. Same: (II) Statutory Rule of Procedure allowing List of Witnesses. But the injustice of the common-law rule began to be corrected by statute early in the 1700s. The policy of this change has already been examined (ante, § 1847). The effect of the change upon the rules of Evidence has been important and complicated.

A. The original English statute, and all but a few of the American statutes, purport in terms to make nothing more than a rule of procedure, of the type already denominated (A) (ante, § 1850); that is, they require the proper officer to deliver to the accused, with or without demand, a list of witnesses, at a specified time before the trial begins. This requirement would ordinarily be enforced by a motion, made before trial or at the trial's opening, on behalf of the accused, demanding the list. In this aspect, the statute merely makes a rule of criminal procedure, possibly affecting the indictment's validity or the trial's postponement, but not involving the admissibility of evidence; as such, it is without the present purview, but is further noticed, in making certain discriminations (post, § 1854).

B. But the further question naturally arises, whether by implication the statute has also affected the law of Evidence by making a rule of evidence of the type already termed (B) (ante, § 1850); i. e. whether a failure to observe the rule of procedure, in not delivering the list or in omitting a name therefrom, is to result in the exclusion of witnesses not named in the list.

Now, in respect to this consequence, the statutes differ in their terms, and fall into three classes:[1] they require the delivery of a list:

ties); 1903, Jenkins v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 173, 75 S. W. 312 (murder; the accused held entitled to inspect the proceedings before the magistrate; "if these proceedings were authorized by law and the testimony taken down, it was a public document").

§ 1851. [1] ENGLAND: 1709, St. 7 Anne, c. 21, § 14 (treason; the Act was so conditioned as not to come into practical effect till 1781, at Lord Gordon's trial; it provided for a delivery to the accused, ten days before trial, and in the presence of two or more witnesses, of "a list of the witnesses that shall be produced on the trial for proving the said indictment," "mentioning the names, profession, and place of abode"; compare the later statutes cited ante, § 1850, note 1).

CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1906, c. 146, Crim. Code § 876 ("the name of every witness examined, or intended to be examined, shall be endorsed on the bill of indictment," and the foreman shall initial the name of every witness examined); §§ 894, 896 (inspection and copy of the depositions filed may be had on demand); § 897 (in treason, a list of witnesses "to be produced on the trial" must be delivered ten days before arraignment); 1896, R. v. Townshend, 28 N. Sc. 468, 474 (the provision for initialling, construed); 1902, R. v. Holmes, 9 Br. C. 294 (rule for indorsing the names of witnesses, construed).

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1790, Apr. 30, § 29, Rev. St. 1878, § 1033, Code 1919, § 1507 (a list "of the witnesses to be produced on the trial for proving the indictment, stating the place of abode," is to be delivered "at least three entire days" before trial, for treason, and "at least two entire days" before, for other capital offences);
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2139 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 1429);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 930 ("the

(1) of the witnesses examined before the grand jury (or the prosecuting attorney) either by indorsing their names and abodes on the indictment (or names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, or whose depositions may have been read before them," must be inserted or indorsed before presentment);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 3010 ("When an indictment is found, the names of all witnesses who were examined must be written at the foot of or on the indictment");
California: P. C. 1872, § 943 ("the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, or whose depositions may have been read before them, must be inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon before it is presented in court");
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 7070 (the information shall be indorsed by the district attorney with "the names of such witnesses as are known to him at the time of filing the same," and also "the names of such other witnesses as may become known to him before the trial, at such time as the Court may by rule or otherwise prescribe; but this shall not preclude the calling of witnesses whose names or the materiality of whose testimony are first learned by the district attorney upon the trial"); § 7067 (like Ill. Rev. St. c. 38, § 421, omitting "treason");
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3975 (committing magistrate shall indorse on commitment and recognizance "the names of the State's witnesses");
Georgia: Const. 1877, Art. I, par. 5, Rev. C. 1910, § 6361 ("every person charged with an offense against the laws of the State . . . shall be furnished on demand with a copy of the accusation and a list of the witnesses on whose testimony the charge against him is founded"); P. C. 1895, § 8 (same); § 970 (same; the former Code read: "the witnesses who gave testimony before the grand jury"); 1871, Dean v. State, 43 Ga. 218 (the constitutional clause "on demand" controls the statute, and a failure to deliver the list without demand is no ground for arrest of judgment); 1874, Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585, 587 (following Dean v. State); 1884, Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 269, 276 (the language of the Constitution is equivalent to that of the Code, and is not broader, as to the class of names to be listed);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8810 (like Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 2043, adding "the witnesses called by the State in rebuttal need not be indorsed upon the information"); § 8820 (like Cal. P. C. § 943);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, § 421 ("Every person charged with treason, murder, or other felonious crime shall be furnished, previous to his arraignment, with a copy of the indictment and a list of the jurors and witnesses. In all other cases he shall, at his request or the request of his counsel, be furnished with a copy of the indictment and a list of the jurors and witnesses"; note that this statute, which is reproduced in Colorado, in form belongs to this third type, but in judicial construction is dealt with as of the first type);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 1983 ("When an indictment is presented by the grand jury, the names of all the material witnesses must be indorsed upon the indictment; but other witnesses may afterward be subpœnaed by the State, but unless the names of such witnesses" were thus indorsed on presentment, no continuance can be granted the State on their account); § 1990 (on an information shall be indorsed "the names of all the material witnesses"; with a proviso for other witnesses as in the case of indictments);
Iowa: St. 1911, c. 188, Code 1919, § 9283 (the county attorney on filing an information shall indorse "the names of the witnesses whose evidence he expects to introduce and use on the trial," and also "a minute of the evidence" to be given by each; if on the trial "witnesses in addition to those whose names are so indorsed" are desired, the procedure is to be the same as for indictments); § 9339 (indictment; the names "of all witnesses on whose evidence it was found" must be indorsed);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 8013 ("When an indictment is presented by the grand jury, the names of all the material witnesses known at the time to the public prosecutor must be indorsed upon the indictment, but the names of other witnesses may afterwards be indorsed on said indictment before or during the trial, as the Court may by rule or otherwise prescribe"; but unless the names known are so indorsed before trial, the prosecution cannot have a continuance for such witnesses); § 7976 (the prosecuting attorney on filing an information shall "indorse thereon the names of the witnesses known to him at the time of filing the same. He shall also indorse thereon the names of such other witnesses as may afterwards become known to him, at such times before the trial as the Court may by rule or otherwise prescribe");
Kentucky: C. Cr. P. 1895, § 120 ("When an indictment is found, the names of all the witnesses who were examined must be written at the foot of or on the indictment");
Louisiana: Rev. St. 1870, § 992 (person indicted for a capital crime or a crime punishable with seven years' hard labor is entitled to a copy of the indictment);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 136, § 6 (grand jury foreman shall file with clerk's records a list of "all witnesses who are to testify before them");
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 27, § 498 (false pretences; the defendant before trial "shall be entitled to the names of the witnesses and a statement of the false pretences intended to be given in evidence"); information) and giving the accused a copy of the indictment (or information), or (in some jurisdictions) by filing in court the minutes of their testimony; or

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 277, § 9 (the foreman shall return "a list of all witnesses sworn before the grand jury during the sitting, which shall be filed of record with the clerk"); § 65 (on an indictment for murder, the defendant in custody shall be served with a copy of the indictment); § 67 (on an indictment for a felony, the defendant in custody or under recognizance may on demand have a copy of the indictment "and of all indorsements thereon");
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 15710 (the foreman shall return to court or deliver to the prosecuting attorney "a list of all the witnesses sworn before the grand jury," when an indictment is found); § 15720 (the indictment, "with the names of the complainant and all the witnesses indorsed on the back thereof," is to be filed); § 15761 (the prosecuting attorney, on filing an information, shall "indorse thereon the names of all the witnesses known to him at the time of filing the same, and at such time before the trial of any case as the Court may by rule or otherwise prescribe, he shall also indorse thereon the names of such other witnesses as shall then be known to him");
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 9126 (the grand jury shall return into court the testimony of the witnesses examined before them, or the minutes of the testimony); § 9127 (within two days after demand, the clerk shall furnish a copy of the depositions to the defendant); § 9132 ("the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury" shall be inserted or indorsed before presentment); § 9174 (at the arraignment, the clerk shall deliver to the defendant a copy of the indictment "and of the indorsements thereon, including the list of witnesses indorsed on it or appended thereto");
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 2711, Hem. § 2204 (the foreman shall certify and return into court "the names of all witnesses sworn before the grand jury");
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 3889 ("When an indictment is found by the grand jury, the names of all the material witnesses must be indorsed upon the indictment; other witnesses may be subpœnaed or sworn by the State," but no continuance shall be granted for their absence unless on affidavit showing cause); § 3849 ("the names of the witnesses for the prosecution must be indorsed on the information, in like manner and subject to the same restrictions as required in case of indictments");
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11836 ("When an indictment is found, the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury must be inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon before it is presented to the Court"; but no indictment may be quashed for failure to do this, "if the indorsement is made before the motion to quash is disposed of"); § 11891 (indictment may be set aside for failure to do this); § 11805 ("The county attorney must indorse upon the information at the time of filing the same, the names of the witnesses for the State, if known"; information may be set aside for failure to do this);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 10087 (like Kan. Gen. St. § 7976);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 7045 ("the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury" shall be inserted or indorsed before presentment); § 7086 (like Minn. Gen. St. § 9174); § 7090 (when the names of witnesses examined or of deponents are not inserted or indorsed, the indictment shall be set aside);
New Hampshire: St. 1901, c. 104, § 1 (every person indicted for murder "shall be entitled to a list of witnesses to be used . . . to be delivered to him twenty-four hours before the trial"); § 5 ("in the trial of murder cases, witnesses may be called in behalf of the State to rebut or explain any evidence of new matter offered by the defendant or to discredit his witnesses, though the names of such witnesses have not been furnished to the defendant; but time may be allowed the defendant to answer such evidence, if in the opinion of the Court justice requires it");
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Crim. Proc., § 54 (a person indicted for treason shall have a list of "the witnesses to be produced on the trial for proving the said indictment, mentioning the names and places of abode of such jurors and witnesses, delivered unto him at least three entire days before the trial; and in murder, misprision of treason, manslaughter, sodomy, rape, arson, burglary, robbery, forgery, perjury, or subornation of perjury . . . two entire days at least before the trial");
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 3142 ("the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury must in all cases" be inserted or indorsed on presentment); § 4453 (no subpœna shall issue "unless the name of such witness be indorsed on the indictment or the district attorney shall order the same");
New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 271 ("the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, or whose depositions may have been read before them, as provided in § 255, must be indorsed upon the indictment before it is presented to the Court. If not so indorsed, the Court must, upon the application of the defendant, at any time before trial, direct the names of such witnesses as they appear upon the minutes of the grand jury to be furnished to him forthwith");
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4608 (when a grand jury's presentment is made "upon the knowledge of any of their body or upon the testimony of witnesses, the names of such

(2) of the witnesses known to the prosecuting attorney, by filing a list in court or by delivering a copy; this provision being specially appropriate to grand jurors and witnesses shall be indorsed thereon"); § 2336 (grand jury foreman shall mark on indictment "the names of witnesses sworn and examined");

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10631 (the State's attorney shall indorse on the information "the names of all witnesses for the prosecution known to him at the time of filing the same; but other witnesses may testify on the trial of such cause in behalf of the prosecution on the trial of said action the same as if their names had been indorsed on the information"); § 10680 ("the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury must in all cases be inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon before it is presented to the Court"); § 10728 (it may be set aside for failure to do this);
Oklahoma: Const. 1907, Art. II, § 20 (the accused; "in capital cases, at least two days before the case is called for trial, he shall be furnished with a list of the witnesses that will be called in chief, to prove the allegations of the indictment or information, together with their post-office addresses"); Comp. St. 1921, § 2550 ("the names of witnesses examined before the grand jury must be indorsed thereon before the same is presented to the Court"; but a failure to do so shall not be sufficient reason for setting aside the indictment, if within a reasonable time, fixed by the Court, the indorsement of the witnesses for the prosecution is made; at any time the Court may direct the indorsement of additional witnesses); § 2511 (on all informations shall be subscribed the names of the witnesses known to the county attorney at the time of filing; and those of such others as may afterwards become known to him shall be indorsed "at such time before the trial as the Court may by rule prescribe");
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 1429 ("the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury" must be inserted or indorsed before presentment); 1902, State v. Warren, 41 Or. 348, 69 Pac. 679 (statute held not applicable to witnesses examined before a coroner's jury);
Pennsylvania: St. 1860, Mar. 31, § 35, Dig. 1920, § 8097 (like U. S. St. 1790, but limited to treason);
Porto Rico: 1906, People v. Román, 10 P. R. 532 ("There is no provision whatsoever forbidding the fiscal or the accused to present . . . such witnesses as they may deem proper"); 1912, People v. Román, 18 P. R. 217, 222 (though there is no law requiring indorsement of known witnesses, the Court may give relief in case of surprise); 1912, People v. Almestico, 18 P. R. 314, 329 (same); 1912, People v. Román, 18 P. R. 352 (U. S. Rev. St. §§ 1033, 1034, as to a list of witnesses, held not applicable in the Territories);
South Carolina: St. 1731, C. Cr. P. 1922, § 938 (the accused in a capital offence "shall have a true copy of the whole indictment, but not the names of the witnesses," three days before trial);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4712 ("When an indictment is found, the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury must in all cases be inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon before it is presented to the Court"); § 4702 (the prosecuting attorney on filing an information shall "indorse thereon the name of the witnesses known to him at the time of filing the same");
Tennessee: Shannon's Code, 1916, § 7054 (the foreman shall indorse "the names of the witnesses so sworn by him," but the omission to do so shall not invalidate the indictment or presentment); § 7057 ("When presentment is made upon the evidence of witnesses sent for by the grand jury, the names of the material witnesses for the State, examined before the grand jury, shall in all cases be indorsed thereon before it is presented to the Court");
Texas: C. Cr. P. 1895, § 444 (the State's attorney shall "indorse thereon [the indictment] the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony the same was found");
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8822 (like Cal. P. C. § 943); § 8879 (indictment may be set aside for failure to do this); § 8782 (information; "the names of the witnesses testifying for the State on such examination [before the committing magistrate] must be indorsed thereon"); § 8878 (information may be set aside for failure to do this);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 4860 ("the names of the grand jurors giving the information, or of the witnesses, shall be written at the foot of the presentment or indictment");
Washington: Const. 1889, Art. I, § 22 (the accused is entitled "to have a copy" of "the accusation against him"); R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 2043, 2050 ("When an indictment is found, the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury must be inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon," and the clerk must furnish or permit a copy "within one day after demand made"; the prosecuting attorney on filing an information shall "indorse thereon the names of the witnesses known to him at the time of filing the same; and at such time before the trial of any case as the Court may by rule or otherwise prescribe, he shall indorse thereon the names of such other witnesses as shall then be known to him");
West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 157, § 8 ("When a presentment or indictment is so made [on the information of grand jurors themselves], or on the testimony of witnesses called on by the grand jury, or sent to it by the Court, the names of the grand jurors giving the information, or of the witnesses, shall be written at a prosecution upon information, where there is no grand-jury indictment; or

(3) of all witnesses intended to be produced, — these last statutes thus being much wider in scope than the preceding two classes and not attended by their peculiar limitations; or

(4) rarely, but in addition to the foregoing, an inspection of the depositions or testimonial transcripts themselves.

The statutes of the first sort are the most numerous. The statutes of the third sort are few, but they include the earliest instances, namely, those of England and the Federal Congress. The statutes of the first and second sort often co-exist in the same jurisdiction, but obviously those of the first and third or the second and third are not needed in the same statute book.

The operation of three types of statutes may now be considered in order. But it will be noticed that under each of the first and second types, the question arises for two distinct sorts of witnesses, namely (a) the specified class of witnesses (i.e. grand-jury witnesses or witnesses known to the prosecuting officer), and (b) the remaining witnesses (i.e. not having appeared before the grand jury or not having been known to the officer).

§ 1852. Same: (1) List of Grand-Jury Witnesses. (a) Where the statute requires the names and abodes of witnesses examined before the grand jury to be indorsed upon the indictment, so that the accused can obtain them on his copy of the indictment, may a witness testify on the trial who was examined, if his name was not thus indorsed?

There is some reason for taking the statute by implication to require the exclusion of such a witness:

1848, KINNEY, J., in Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr. 316, 318: "The names of the witnesses upon the indictment will inform him [the accused] of the authors of the prosecution, and thus enable him to prepare for his defence. For his benefit, the crime charged in the indictment is required to be clearly and distinctly stated, that he may know with certainty the nature and character of the offence; and that he may not be taken by surprise on the trial, it is quite as necessary that he should know who the witnesses are by whom it is expected the indictment is to be sustained."

1853, GREENE, J., in Smith v. State, 4 id. 189, 190: "Inconvenient as this rule may at times appear, still in justice to the accused, it should perhaps be maintained. There is certainly great fairness in advising a prisoner of those witnesses who may appear against him, in time to guard against false or tainted testimony."

the foot of the presentment or indictment"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 2549 (the foreman shall return to the Court "a list under his hand of all witnesses who shall have been sworn before the grand jury during the term, and the same shall be filed by the clerk"); § 4642 (a person accused of an offence punishable by imprisonment in the State prison shall be entitled to a copy "of the indictment or information and of all indorsements thereon"); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 7426 (the prosecuting attorney shall indorse on the information the "names of the witnesses known to him at the time of filing," and afterwards of such as "may thereafter become known to him, at such times before the trial as the Court may by rule or otherwise prescribe"); § 7427 (a failure to request such indorsement to be made shall be deemed a waiver by defendant; "and such endorsement may be made before, at, or after any trial").

This result has been occasionally accepted.[1] But the majority of Courts have preferred to believe that the statute bears no such necessary implication, and that the purposes of fairness are sufficiently attained by leaving the trial judge to postpone the trial where a real and unfair surprise has in fact been caused.[2] It would seem, having regard to the possibilities of abuse which are propagated in criminal procedure by an arbitrary and unyielding rule, that this is the sound view to take.

It must be added that, of course, where the ground of objection is the failure to indorse any names at all (not merely the omission of one or more names), the proper remedy is to move before trial to quash the indictment or to postpone trial, because the failure was then plainly ascertainable by the accused.[3]

(b) Is there, furthermore, to be any exclusion of witnesses who were not examined before the grand jury and therefore were not indorsed because not required to be by the statute? To carry the implication of the statute thus far would be to do violence to its spirit as well as to its words; and no such rule of exclusion seems to be adopted by any Court, except perhaps to the extent of allowing the trial judge in discretion to prevent, by this method or by postponement, an unfair surprise:

1841, DOUGLASS, J., in Gardner v. People, 4 Ill. 83, 89: "The list of witnesses which is required to be furnished to the prisoner prior to the arraignment is to be composed of the witnesses endorsed on the indictment by the foreman of the grand jury. . . . The question

§ 1852. [1] 1848, Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr. 316, —, 231 S. W. 619 (rape; defendant must move to quash or ask for a continuance);
Neb. 1886, Ballard v. State, 19 Nebr. 609, 615, 28 N. W. 271 (see citation post, § 1853 a);
Nev. 1921, State v. Rothrock, — Nev. —, 200 Pac. 525;
Okl. 1913, Herrell v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. App. 131, 134 Pac. 1139;
Utah: 1895, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837.

But in any event an actual knowledge of the prospective witness, or such knowledge as removes unfair surprise to the accused, obviates any objection: 1900, People v. Quinn, 127 Cal. 542, 59 Pac. 986 (name not initialled); 1901, Cross v. People, 192 Ill. 291, 61 N. E. 400 (witness, not indorsed, but notified to defendant in due season, admitted); 1903, People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422, 93 N. W. 1084; 1882, State v. Anderson, 16 Or. 448, 452; 1893, State v. Townsend, 7 Wash. 462, 35 Pac. 367; 1896, State v. Everitt, 14 Wash. 574, 45 Pac. 150 (misspelling of name; "[the defendant] had really had notice that these witnesses would testify, and that . . . is the only object of the statute").

[2] 1919, Snow v. State, 140 Ark. 7, 215 S. W. 3; 1863, People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 348, 354; 1845, McKinney v. People, 7 Ill. 540, 552, semble; 1906, State v. Barrington, 198 Mo. 23, 95 S. W. 235.

Compare the same result reached under the third sort of statute, post, § 1854.

[3] Cal. 1863, People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 348, 354 (no exclusion ensues; perhaps a postponement, but this is not "a matter of right");
1864, People v. Lopez, 26 Cal. 112 (there is no exclusion because grand-jury witnesses are not indorsed; the only remedy is a motion to quash, at the arraignment);
Ida. 1907, State v. Barber, 13 Ida. 65, 88 Pac. 418 (unindorsed witness, called in rebuttal, excluded, for lack of a proper showing; but it does not here appear whether the witness had been examined before the grand jury);
Ill. 1845, McKinney v. People, 7 Ill. 540, 551;
1886, Andrews v. People, 117 Ill. 195, 199, 7 N. E. 265, semble;
Ky. 1895, Sutton v. Com., 97 Ky. 308, 30 S. W. 661 (motion to quash, not made in season); 1905, Thompkins v. Com., — Ky. —, 90 S. W. 221 (a motion to quash is the proper remedy);
Mo. 1884, State v. Roy, 83 Mo. 268 (motion to quash; point not decided); 1885, State v. Griffin, 87 Mo. 608, 612, semble; 1906, State v. Barrington, 198 Mo. 23, 95 S. W. 235 (if some names are purposely omitted, to obtain undue advantage, the remedy is quashing or postponement); 1921, State v. Lee, — Mo.

is now presented whether the prosecuting attorney is to be confined to the list of witnesses endorsed on the back of the indictment. . . . If such a construction were placed upon this statute as would exclude all witnesses whose names were not endorsed on the indictment, many offenders would go unpunished, not on account of their own innocence, nor of the negligence of the State's attorney, but by a defect in the law itself, or a narrow and illiberal construction of it not sanctioned by reason or justice. We think, therefore, that the prosecution is not confined to the list of witnesses endorsed on the indictment and furnished previous to arraignment; but that the Circuit Court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, and having a strict and impartial regard to the rights of the community and the prisoner, may permit such other witnesses to be examined as the justice of the case may seem to require."

1858, WOODWARD, J., in State v. Abrahams, 6 Ia. 117, 121: "The question is whether the prosecution is confined to the witnesses upon whose testimony the charge is founded and whose names are indorsed. We think it is not. Such a rule would greatly embarrass the administration of justice in the punishment of offences. It would make it necessary for the State to search for all possible evidence before it presented an indictment, and thus favor the escape of the guilty; or it would deprive of much evidence and even of that which is the best and the most satisfactory. There is no principle of law or of natural right which entitles a defendant to a previous knowledge of all the witnesses to be called against him. Our statute has gone sufficiently far, probably, in giving him the knowledge of those upon whose information the charge is based, by requiring their names to be indorsed upon the indictment. . . . This may be supposed to give the accused the knowledge of all the witnesses known to the prosecution, and it is difficult to consider him entitled to more than this."

Some Courts appear disposed to make this rule an absolute one, denying any force to the objection.[4] Others allow a desirable flexibility, by conceding to [4] Fed. 1895, Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 515, 16 Sup. 62 ("in the absence of some [express] statutory provision, there is no irregularity in calling a witness whose name does not appear on the back of the indictment or has not been furnished to the defendant before the trial");

Ga. 1855, Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 194, 216 (so that the State is not limited "to any particular set of witnesses"); 1884, Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 269, 276;
Ida. 1902, State v. Wilmbusse, 8 Ida. 608, 70 Pac. 849;
Ill. 1872, Scott v. People, 63 Ill. 508, 510, semble;
Ind. Ter. 1903, Binyon v. U. S., 4 Ind. T. 642, 76 S. W. 265 (defendant is not entitled, under Annot. Stats. 1899, § 1446, being § 2103 of Mansfield's Ark. Dig., to a list of witnesses who had not been examined before the grand jury); 1906, Leftridge v. U. S., 6 Ind. T. 305, 97 S. W. 1018 (Arkansas statute applied);
Ky. 1905, Underwood v. Com., 119 Ky. 384, 84 S. W. 310;
Mich. 1873, Hill v. People, 26 Mich. 496, 498 (the statute "would not prevent the calling of any other witnesses [than those sworn before the grand jury], though their names were not so indorsed");
Mo. 1879, State v. Nugent, 71 Mo. 136, 144 ("the only consequence of a failure to indorse their names [of other witnesses] upon the indictment is that no continuance will be granted the State on account of the absence of such witnesses," unless for good cause); 1881, State v. Patterson, 73 Mo. 695, 699; 1884, State v. Roy, 83 Mo. 268, semble (under a statute expressly providing that "other witnesses [than those testifying before the grand jury] may be subpœnaed and sworn by the State"); 1886, State v. O'Day, 89 Mo. 559, 1 S. W. 759; 1887, State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 310, 4 S. W. 931; 1891, State v. Steifel, 106 Mo. 129, 17 S. W. 227; 1897, State v. Shreve, 137 Mo. 1, 38 S. W. 548; 1897, State v. Smith, 137 Mo. 25, 38 S. W. 717; 1900, State v. Tate, 156 Mo. 119, 56 S. W. 1099; 1905, State v. Henderson, 186 Mo. 473, 85 S. W. 576 (but here the Court intimates an exception for cases of surprise); 1905, State v. Bailey, 190 Mo. 257, 88 S. W. 733 (similar); 1906, State v. Myers, 198 Mo. 225, 94 S. W. 242 (similar; reviewing the cases); 1906, State v. Barrington, 198 Mo. 23, 95 S. W. 235; 1912, State v. Lawson, 239 Mo. 591, 145 S. W. 92 (but here a flexibility is provided for);
Okl. 1904, Cochran v. U. S., 14 Okl. 108, 76 Pac. 672;
Or. 1903, State v. Belding, 43 Or. 95, 71 Pac. 330 (information);
Utah: 1895, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837.

the trial Court the discretion, in case of a real and unfair surprise, either to postpone the trial or to exclude the witness.[5] The result of the latter rule is in effect to create, under the statute's inspiration, a common-law doctrine of discretionary exclusion. It may be added that the accused's actual knowledge of the prospective witness negatives unfair surprise, and is thus often mentioned as a specific reason nullifying his objection.[6]

§ 1853. Same: (2) List of Witnesses Known to Prosecuting Attorney. (a) Under the statutes requiring the prosecuting attorney to indorse on the information the names and abodes of prospective witnesses then known to him, may a witness thus known but not indorsed be afterwards excluded? The statute does not expressly direct this; and it seems clear that the spirit of the statute is sufficiently preserved by leaving the exclusion of such witnesses to the trial judge's discretion in case of a real and unfair surprise; having regard, here also, for the possibilities of abuse that would be produced by a technical rule to the contrary:

[5] Cal. 1856, People v. Freeland, 6 Cal. 96, 98 ("any witness may be introduced upon the trial, by consent of the Court, notwithstanding he was not before the grand jury, subject only to the right of the prisoner to a postponement in case such evidence should operate as a surprise upon him"); 1866, People v. Jocelyn, 29 Cal. 562;
Colo. 1877, Wilson v. People, 3 Colo. 325, 329 (like the Perry case, in Illinois); 1885, Minich v. People, 8 Colo. 440, 445, 9 Pac. 4 (later Illinois cases followed); 1896, Boykin v. People, 22 Colo. 496, 45 Pac. 419 (actual notice removes any ground for objection); 1897, Askew v. People, 23 Colo. 446, 48 Pac. 524 ("the witnesses contemplated by the statute are those which have testified before the grand jury or who were known by the prosecution to be material witnesses at the time of the arraignment"; yet the prosecution, on learning of others, must notify the defendant "in time to prepare his defence"; if it does not, the defendant must show surprise and the necessity of further time to prepare);
Ill. 1841, Gardner v. People, 4 Ill. 83, 89 (see quotation supra); 1853, Gates v. People, 14 Ill. 433, 436 (Gardner case approved); 1853, Perry v. People, 14 Ill. 496, 498 (admissible where no surprise is caused or preparation made necessary); 1873, Perteel v. People, 70 Ill. 171, 175 ("This Court has repeatedly held that the People are not restricted" to the indorsed names); 1874, Smith v. People, 74 Ill. 144, 147 (allowable "in the exercise of a sound discretion"); 1879, Logg v. People, 92 Ill. 598, 600 (same); 1880, Bulliner v. People, 95 Ill. 394, 402 (same); 1891, Kota v. People, 136 Ill. 655, 658, 27 N. E. 53; 1893, Gifford v. People, 148 Ill. 173, 178, 35 N. E. 754 (same); 1894, Trask v. People, 151 Ill. 523, 529, 38 N. E. 248 (same); 1896, Gore v. People, 162 Ill. 259, 265, 44 N. E. 500 (same); 1897, Kirkham v. People, 170 Ill. 9, 48 N. E. 465 (same); 1900, Bolen v. People, 184 Ill. 338, 56 N. E. 408 (same); 1904, Hauser v. People, 210 Ill. 253, 71 N. E. 416; 1909, People v. Lutzow, 240 Ill. 612, 88 N. E. 1049 (same); 1909, People v. Williams, 240 Ill. 633, 88 N. E. 1053 (same); 1910, People v. Steinhauer, 248 Ill. 46, 93 N. E. 299 (same); 1914, People v. Strosnider, 264 Ill. 434, 106 N. E. 229 (same);
Ia. 1858, June 10, State v. Abrahams, 6 Ia. 117, 120 (but this case is no longer law, by a statute passed immediately thereafter, and quoted post, § 1855);
Ky. 1905, Thompkins v. Com., — Ky. —, 90 S. W. 221, semble;
Md. 1906, Schaumloeffel v. State, 102 Md. 470, 62 Atl. 803 (rule of Gardner v. People, Ill., supra, approved);
Mich. 1903, People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422, 93 N. W. 1084 (admissible, if there was no real surprise);
S. D. 1888, Terr. v. Godfrey, 6 Dak. 46, 50 N. W. 481, semble; 1894, State v. Boughner, 5 S. D. 461, 59 N. W. 736; 1894, State v. Church, 6 S. D. 89, 60 N. W. 143 (citing the Gardner case, in Illinois); 1895, State v. Reddington, 7 S. D. 368, 64 N. W. 170 (State v. Church said to be law; "having no statute, as some States have, [expressly] requiring notice to a defendant as a condition precedent" to the calling of unindorsed witnesses, the rejection of such witnesses "ought to be left largely to the wise discretion of the trial Court"; here the prosecution knew of the witnesses beforehand); 1895, State v. Isaacson, 8 S. D. 69, 65 N. W. 430 (witnesses admitted, of whom notice had been given in open court before trial begun); 1905, State v. Cambron, 20 S. D. 282, 105 N. W. 241 (foregoing cases approved).

[6] But the right to have a list of the names does not include the right to inspect the testimony. Cases cited ante, § 1850, note 5.

1883, HORTON, C. J., in State v. Cook, 30 Kan. 82, 84, 1 Pac. 32: "The Court, in the furtherance of justice, ought to have the power, and in our opinion does have the power, to permit the name of any witness to be indorsed upon the information at any time, even after the trial has actually commenced. Said § 67 [requiring the district attorney to indorse before trial the names of witnesses known to him] is not a condition to the qualification of a witness. As a general rule, the Court should allow the names of the witnesses of the State to be indorsed upon the information after the commencement of the trial, if it be important so to do; but of course, if the defendant is taken by surprise thereby, the Court should extend to him all possible facilities for a fair, full, and impartial trial, and, if necessary, may delay or even continue the hearing of the case until he has ample opportunity to prepare to meet the evidence of the witnesses indorsed upon the information after the commencement of the trial. . . . If the Court shall be convinced that the county attorney had purposely failed to indorse on the information the names of the witnesses known to him at the time of filing the same, to render it difficult for the defendant to prepare his defense, the Court may under such circumstances within its discretion refuse to grant the request of the county attorney to indorse on the information the names of the additional witnesses. But in all cases where the request . . . is made in good faith and to promote justice, the Court has authority to grant the same, keeping in view the just administration of the criminal laws and the right of the defendant for reasonable time to prepare to meet unexpected evidence."

Such is the rule adopted in a majority of the Courts that have considered the question.[1] One or two, however, with undue technicality, take the opposite view and require the exclusion of the witness;[2] yet even these Courts

§ 1853. [1] Ida. 1904, State v. Crea, 10 Ida. 88, 76 Pac. 1013;
Ia. 1917, State v. Nolan, 31 Ia. 71, 169 Pac. 295;
Kan. 1883, State v. Cook, 30 Kan. 82, 83, 1 Pac. 32 (quoted supra); 1883, State v. Teissedre, 30 Kan. 476, 483, 2 Pac. 650; 1884, State v. McKinney, 31 Kan. 570, 577, 3 Pac. 356; 1887, State v. Taylor, 36 Kan. 329, 336, 13 Pac. 550; 1888, State v. Dowd, 39 Kan. 412, 415, 18 Pac. 483; 1889, State v. Reno, 41 Kan. 674, 680, 21 Pac. 803; 1890, State v. Adams, 44 Kan. 135, 24 Pac. 71; 1893, State v. Sorter, 52 Kan. 531, 534, 34 Pac. 1036; 1915, State v. Roberts, 95 Kan. 280, 147 Pac. 828; 1917, State v. Howland, 100 Kan. 181, 163 Pac. 1071;
Mich. See the citations in the next note;
Mo. 1916, State v. Ferguson, — Mo. —, 183 S. W. 336; 1920, State v. Kehoe, — Mo. —, 220 S. W. 961 (collecting the cases); 1921, State v. Howerton, — Mo. —, 228 S. W. 745; 1921, State v. Dougherty, 287 Mo. 82, 228 S. W. 786; 1922, State v. Shannon, — Mo. —, 237 S. W. 466;
Mont. 1894, State v. Black, 15 Mont. 143, 151, 38 Pac. 674 (witness known but not indorsed may be admitted if no prejudice is shown); 1900, State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 903; State v. Schnepel, 23 Mont. 523, 59 Pac. 927; 1915, State v. McDonald, 51 Mont. 1, 149 Pac. 279; 1918, State v. Inich, 55 Mont. 1, 173 Pac. 230.
N. D. 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052 (admissible, where the defendant in fact knows of the witness; as here, where a former trial had been had);
Okl. See the citations in the next note;
Wash. 1903, State v. Lewis, 31 Wash. 515, 72 Pac. 121, semble.

[2] It will be noticed that in Michigan the final choice of views has probably not yet been made:
Col. 1912, Hardesty v. People, 52 Colo. 450, 121 Pac. 1023 (the opinion does not inquire at all whether the defendant was surprised, and cites no authority; why was not Askew v. People, supra. § 1852, n. 5, considered?); Mich. 1882, People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482, 487, 12 N. W. 665 (inadmissible); 1885, People v. Quick, 58 Mich. 321, 322, 25 N. W. 302 (intimating that "cases may sometimes arise" for admission; declaring however that no distinction exists, for known witnesses, between those to be used for rebuttal and others); 1889, People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37, 41, 41 N. W. 853 ("the statute is imperative; . . . it is no sufficient excuse for not doing so that the whereabouts of the witness is not known, or that the prosecutor does not know that he can secure his attendance"; the trial Court has no discretion); 1890, People v. Howes, 81 Mich. 396, 400, 45 N. W. 961 (similar); 1893, People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630, 638, 54 N. W. 488 (here admitted, there being no real surprise; no precedent cited); 1895, People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27, 30, 63 N. W. 986 (similar; no precedent cited); 1900, People v. Casey, 124 Mich. 279, 82 N. W. 883 (witness in rebuttal, excluded, because not indorsed allow in discretion the indorsement of additional witnesses before trial begun.[3]

(b) May a witness not known at the time of filing the information by the prosecuting attorney, and therefore not indorsed thereon, nor required to be, suffer exclusion because of the lack of prior indorsement? Here clearly the implication of the statute forbids such an exclusion, nor would any considerations of fairness require it under any circumstances:

1870, SAFFORD, J., in State v. Dickson, 6 Kan. 209, 219: "It is the [statutory] duty of the prosecuting attorney to indorse upon such information the names of the witnesses known to him at the filing of the same. . . . These provisions are no doubt wise and salutary in their aims and effects. But, as we understand it, there is nothing in them or in any other statute which would have the effect of prohibiting a witness from testifying whose name had become known to the prosecution after the commencement of the trial and without his name being indorsed upon the information at all. Nor do we think that such a prohibition, if it did exist, would as a rule be calculated to promote justice. Cases (as is well known to every practitioner at the bar) often occur, where during the progress of the trial a necessity arises for the introduction of certain kinds of testimony which could not have been known or anticipated on the part of the prosecution before the commencement of the trial, [for example, in the impeachment of opposing witnesses]. . . . In such a case the universal practice has been to call and examine witnesses without regard to their having been previously named and summoned or even thought of. Other instances in which the adoption of a rule such as is contended for might operate to defeat the ends of justice will readily be suggested; and it is not seen how injustice would be likely to result from allowing such witnesses to be examined in any case."

1873, CHRISTIANCY, C. J., in Hill v. People, 26 Mich. 496, 499: "We can discover no reason, founded on justice or common sense, for requiring the indorsement of such as the prosecutor during the progress of the trial shall happen to discover to be important witnesses, or for the exclusion of such witnesses upon such ground; and we think it would be exceedingly pernicious in the administration of the criminal law to recognize such an objection. Should a criminal go unpunished because all the evidence of his guilt has not come to the knowledge of the prosecuting attorney before the commencement of the trial, and no excuse given); 1920, People v. Blazenzitz, 212 Mich. 675, 180 N. W. 370 (failure to indorse two eyewitnesses of a robbery, here held material);

Nebr. 1886, Stevens v. State, 19 Nebr. 647, 649, 28 N. W. 304 (the trial Court has no discretion to permit indorsement on an information after trial begun); 1886, Ballard v. State, 19 Nebr. 609, 615, 28 N. W. 271 (same, but contra, for an indictment); 1886, Parks v. State, 20 Nebr. 515, 517, 31 N. W. 5 (like Stevens v. State); 1898, Carroll v. State, 53 Nebr. 431, 73 N. W. 939 (but a mistake of name is immaterial, if not misleading); 1899, Sweenie v. State, 59 Nebr. 269, 80 N. W. 815; 1906, Reed v. State, 75 Nebr. 509, 106 N. W. 649 (like Carroll v. State, supra);
Okl. 1910, Steen v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 309, 111 Pac. 1097; 1911, Hawkins v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 308, 118 Pac. 607 ("Steen's case is based on an arbitrary statute"); but the foregoing cases apply to misdemeanors only, under Snyder's Comp. L. 1909, § 6644; for felonies, the rule is that other witnesses may be indorsed in the trial Court's discretion under Snyder's Comp. L. 1909, § 6691; 1909, Vance v. Terr., 3 Okl. Cr. 208, 105 Pac. 307; 1911, Stockton v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 510, 114 Pac. 626; 1921, Thomas v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 662 (cattle theft); 1921, Davenport v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 202 Pac. 18;
Wash. 1896, State v. McGonigle, 14 Wash. 594, 45 Pac. 20, semble (writing them in the body of the document suffices).

[3] Colo. 1920, Bush v. People, — Colo. —, 187 Pac. 528; Mich. 1888, People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 186, 188, 40 N. W. 425 (it is not "an absolute requirement"); 1888, People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 371, 40 N. W. 473 ("some discretion is left with the Court");
Nebr. 1896, Fager v. State, 49 Nebr. 439, 68 N. W. 611; 1896, Barney v. State, 49 Nebr. 515, 68 N. W. 636.

But the Court's consent to the indorsement is necessary: 1882, People v. Moran, 48 Mich. 639.

when it is always the interest of criminals to conceal all knowledge of this kind and when the guilt of the prisoner can be proved beyond a doubt by evidence which the prosecuting attorney has discovered during the progress of the trial? This would be a new feature in the administration of the criminal law, which no court ought ever to adopt without the express requirement of the Legislature, and which we cannot suppose any intelligent Legislature will be likely to adopt with reference to an honest administration of justice."

This result is generally accepted;[4] moreover, all courts taking the view presented in (a), supra, in the passage from Chief Justice Horton, would also agree in this result.

It should be added that a witness brought in rebuttal may nevertheless be a witness originally known, and therefore does not necessarily fall within the present class.[5] Moreover, the status of a witness in rebuttal under the present type of statute may be different from his status under the variety of statute dealt with in the next section, which often applies in terms to those only who are brought "for proving the indictment."

Where no list at all is furnished, the same principle would apply as in the case of the grand-jury statutes (ante, § 1852).[6]

[4] Colo. 1922, Stone v. People, — Colo. —, 204 Pac. 896; Ida. 1902, State v. Wilmbusse, 8 Ida. 608, 70 Pac. 849; 1904, State v. Crea, 10 Ida. 88, 76 Pac. 1013 (but such an indorsement made at the time of trial, without showing any reason for the tardy indorsement, is insufficient); 1904, State v. Rooke, 10 Ida. 388, 79 Pac. 82 (indorsement before trial, held proper on the facts); Kan. 1870, State v. Dickson, 6 Kan. 209, 219 (quoted supra); 1872, State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 257, 282; Mich. 1873, Hill v. People, 26 Mich. 496, 499; 1889, People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37, 41, 41 N. W. 853 (here, however, declaring that a continuance was proper); 1894, People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 400, 404, 59 N. W. 664; 1897, People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211, 70 N. W. 431 (in discretion); 1899, People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1, 79 N. W. 944 (same; here for a witness in rebuttal); 1901, People v. Luders, 126 Mich. 440, 85 N. W. 108 (same); 1918, People v. Powers, 203 Mich. 40, 168 N. W. 938; Mo. 1921, State v. Howard, — Mo. —, 231 S. W. 255 (witnesses heard of just before trial, and no continuance asked by defendant); 1922, State v. Pinson, — Mo. —, 236 S. W. 354; Mont. 1894, State v. Black, 15 Mont. 143, 151, 38 Pac. 674; 1912, State v. Biggs, 45 Mont. 400, 123 Pac. 410; 1912, State v. Lawson, 44 Mont. 488, 120 Pac. 808 (following Kelly v. State, Nebr.; one judge diss.); Nebr. 1886, Parks v. State, 20 Nebr. 515, 517, 31 N. W. 5, semble; 1888, State v. Huckins, 23 Nebr. 309, 36 N. W. 527, semble (here, for character witnesses); 1895, Fager v. State, 49 Nebr. 439, 442, 68 N. W. 611 (allowed for certain rebutting testimony); 1897, Kelly v. State, 51 Nebr. 572, 574, 71 N. W. 299 (allowable for testimony "obviously and purely rebuttal in its nature"; but this seems to ignore that the statute applies only to "known" witnesses, and a witness used in rebuttal may still be a "known" witness, and 'vice versa'; see the distinction infra, § 1854, which is here by confusion adopted); 1899, McVey v. State, 57 Nebr. 471, 77 N. W. 1111 (same); 1899, Kastner v. State, 58 Nebr. 767, 79 N. W. 713 (same); 1901, Trimble v. State, 61 Nebr. 604, 85 N. W. 844; 1910, Ossenkop v. State, 86 Nebr. 539, 126 N. W. 72 (trial Court's discretion approved); 1910, Wilson v. State, 87 Nebr. 638, 128 N. W. 38 (on the facts, excluded); N. D. 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052; 1908, State v. Matejousky, 22 S. D. 30, 115 N. W. 96; 1915, State v. Kilmer, 31 N. D. 442, 153 N. W. 1089; Okl. 1910, Steen v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 309, 111 Pac. 1097 (the prosecutor must show that the witness was not known); S. D. 1897, State v. King, 9 S. D. 628, 70 N. W. 1046; 1920, State v. Morgan, — S. D. —, 176 N. W. 35; Wash. 1893, State v. Lee Doon, 7 Wash. 308, 34 Pac. 1103; 1894, State v. Regan, 8 Wash. 506, 36 Pac. 472 (in discretion); 1895, State v. Holmes, 12 Wash. 170, 40 Pac. 735, semble (same); 1896, State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889 (same); 1896, State v. Kelly, 14 Wash. 702, 45 Pac. 38 (same); 1900, State v. Phelps, 22 Wash. 181, 60 Pac. 134 (same); 1904, State v. Van Waters, 36 Wash. 358, 78 Pac. 897.

[5] The rulings in Nebraska, cited in the preceding note, ignore this distinction; compare the Michigan rule, in People v. Quick, supra, note 2.

[6] 1919, State v. Ferguson, — Mo. —, 212 S. W. 339 (motion to quash or to continue must be made, for invoking the rule); 1921, Davenport v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 202 Pac. 18.

§ 1854. Same: (3) List of All Prospective Witnesses. Under the third type of statute described (ante, § 1851), namely, requiring the delivery of a list of "the witnesses to be produced," there is usually but one class to be considered, under the statutory wording; i.e. the distinction already noted (ante, §§ 1852, 1853, par. a and b) between the specified class and the remaining witnesses — grand-jury witnesses and other witnesses, known and not known witnesses — disappears from the statute.

Only one question is raised, i.e. whether by implication the statutory rule of procedure creates also a rule of Evidence excluding witnesses not so listed. Most of these statutes are so narrow in regard to the classes of offences involved — being confined to prosecutions for treason or for capital offences in general [1] — that there has been but little judicial interpretation. Thus far the accepted results seem to be as follows:

1. Where a particular witness is not upon the list, or is misdescribed by name or by abode so as in effect to mislead the accused, the witness will be excluded, because the only mode of protecting the accused and enforcing the statute is to employ this measure.[2]

2. But where no list at all has been delivered, the rule of procedure could have been enforced by motion before or at the opening of the trial, and hence there is no necessity for creating a rule of Evidence and excluding the witnesses; the accused's virtual waiver of the rule of procedure prevents him from asking afterwards that it be turned into a rule of Evidence.[3]

§ 1854. [1] Of course U. S. Rev. St. § 1033 does not apply to a prosecution for a misdemeanor: 1877, U. S. v. Butler, 1 Hughes 457, 466 (conspiracy to obstruct an election; the defendant's application for the names of prosecutor and witnesses was refused); 1897, Shelp v. U. S., 26 C. C. A. 570, 81 Fed. 694; 1917, U. S. v. Pierce, D. C. E. D. N. Y., 245 Fed. (Espionage Act; names, etc., of witnesses sworn before the grand jury, not furnished, the offense not being capital).

[2] 1817, R. v. Watson, 32 How. St. Tr. 1, 69 (residence misdescribed); 1840, R. v. Frost, Gurney's Rep. 77, 188, 778, 4 St. Tr. N. S. 85, 172, 303, 9 C. & P. 129 (residence misdescribed).

U. S. Fed. 1851, U. S. v. Hanway, 2 Wall. Jr. 139, 165, 168 (here the testimony, though offered in rebuttal, was held to have been properly due in chief; the implication was that the rule did not apply to genuine rebuttal-testimony); 1891, Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 306, 12 Sup. 617 (not decided; but Lord v. State apparently approved); 1902, Bird v. U. S., 187 U. S. 118, 23 Sup. 42 (not decided; witness held properly named in the list delivered); 1895, Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 515, 16 Sup. 62 (murder; quoted ante, § 1852, n. 4); 1904, Balliet v. U. S., 129 Fed. 689, 692, 64 C. C. A. 201 (fraud in the mails; the U. S. statute held not applicable); D. C. 1899, Horton v. U. S., 15 D. C. App. 310, 319 (notice naming an incorrect abode, held not insufficient, when the accused was not in fact misled); 1904, Shaffer v. U. S., 24 D. C. App. 417, 432 (accused held not to have been misled on the facts by an ambiguous description); Ill. 1921, People v. Hobbs, 297 Ill. 399, 130 N. E. 779, semble; N. H. 1846, Lord v. State, 18 N. H. 173, 175 ("Undoubtedly it is competent to the respondent, when a witness is called in such a case to be examined against him, to except that such witness is not named in the list furnished to him, for the purpose of excluding the testimony of that witness"); 1902, State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 54 Atl. 38 (State v. Lord followed).

Contra: 1906, Schaumloeffel v. State, 102 Md. 470, 62 Atl. 603; 1906, Cairnes v. Pelton, 103 Md. 40, 63 Atl. 105 (Schaumloeffel v. State approved).

Note that in Illinois the statute of this form is treated by the Courts as one of the first sort (ante, § 1852).

[3] Eng. 1840, R. v. Frost, supra (by nine to six, it was held that an objection taken at the time of calling the first witness was not good, because, if it had been taken earlier, the trial might have been postponed and a good delivery made); U. S. 1795, U. S. v. Stewart, Wharton's St. Tr. 172, 2 Dall. 343 (trial postponed to allow reasonable time, after list furnished, for investigation; present point not decided); 1891, Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 304, 308, 12 Sup. 617 (failure to deliver a

3. Under the peculiar wording in some statutes of this type, requiring a list of the witnesses that are to be produced "for proving the indictment," a witness offered in rebuttal is wholly without its scope, and therefore need not be named on the list.[4] In the statutes which do not contain this qualifying clause, it would seem proper to construe them as meaning only the witnesses "intended to be produced," and thus a witness not known beforehand to be needed would be without their scope, and the distinctions accepted under other statutes (ante, § 1853, par. b) would become applicable. But this point seems not yet to have been judicially decided.

4. As a rule of procedure, the requirement of these statutes, and its judicial interpretation, is without the present purview.[5]

§ 1855. Same: (III) Statutory Rule of Evidence expressly excluding Unlisted Witnesses. The foregoing statutes in terms provide merely a rule of preliminary procedure; any rule of Evidence arising out of them rests solely on implication, and therefore is more or less in the hands of the Courts to form. But in one jurisdiction (Iowa), later imitated by another (Oregon), a statute has expressly laid down a rule of Evidence (additional to those of the usual type, ante, § 1851), prescribing the precise terms upon which witnesses may be excluded.[1] list under the statute, and refusal to grant postponement, held error, where objection was made when the case was called for trial; but whether the error sufficed alone to require a reversal was not decided); 1906, Cairnes v. Pelton, 103 Md. 40, 63 Atl. 105; 1846, Lord v. State, 18 N. H. 173, 176 (objection must be taken when the case is called; so also where the objection of insufficient description of residence applies in common to the whole list; but an objection to the description of residence of a single witness may be taken when he is produced); 1912, People v. Román, 18 P. R. 352 (defendant "should request a list of the witnesses in time").

[4] U. S. v. Hanway, 2 Wall. Jr. 139, 165, 168, semble (cited supra); 1895, Goldsby v. U. S., 160 U. S. 70, 16 Sup. 216 (under an Arkansas statute requiring delivery of a list of the witnesses "to be produced on the trial for proving the indictment," witnesses in rebuttal need not be indorsed; in this opinion the cases in the Courts of Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, and Michigan are cited indiscriminately, without regard to the radical differences of the statutes under which the rulings were given; such a treatment is inexcusable, and serves only to confuse).

The same conclusion is reached under the similar words of the Iowa statute dealt with in the next section.

[5] The following rulings, however, may be placed here as being of service in the present relation; they seem to be all that have hitherto been made in regard to the witness-list: Eng. 1839, R. v. Frost, supra, 4 State Tr. N. S. 85, 461 (examining at length the history of the English statute; the jury-list and witness-list must be delivered at the same time); Can. 1915, R. v. McClain, 23 D. L. R. 312, Alta. (Can. Cr. C. § 876, held not applicable to a charge signed by the Attorney-General's agent in Alberta under Cr. C. § 873A; though "as a measure of fairness and justice, the Crown ought to furnish to the accused in some form the names of the witnesses intended to be called"; the trial Court's discretion controls); U. S. Fed. 1795, U. S. v. Insurgents, 2 Dall. 335, 342 (statute applied in general); 1826, U. S. v. Curtis, 4 Mason 232, 235 (the latter limit of the period is "before the cause is tried by the jury, and not before the party is arraigned," because the arraignment is here not the beginning of the "trial"); 1840, U. S. v. Dow, Taney C. C. 34, 35 (the "two entire days" must be exclusive of the day of delivery and day of arraignment); 1906, Ball v. U. S., 147 Fed. 32, 36, C. C. A. (U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 1033, does not apply to territorial courts; here in Alaska); 1908, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 162 Fed. 417 (conspiracy to defraud); Okl. 1921, Goben v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 812 (murder; rule of Const., Art. II, § 30, applied; denial of a motion for continuance, held error).

Note that (on the principle of § 6, ante) in trials in Federal courts the Federal statute applies, and not the statute of the State where the trial is held: 1908, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 162 Fed. 417 (collecting prior cases); and Federal cases cited ante, § 1850, note 3.

§ 1855. [1] Iowa: Code 1897, § 5373, Rev. C. §§ 9435, 9436 ("The county attorney, in offering the evidence in support of the indictment in the order prescribed in the last section,

This statute, originally passed shortly after the ruling in State v. Abrahams,[2] has been radically amended in order to avoid the arbitrary operation of its original terms;[3] but it still remains an example of the evils of over-technicality in favor of an accused. Its adoption by other jurisdictions is not to be recommended. The judicial rulings in this State since 1858, resting as they do upon the express evidential commands of a unique statute, cannot be employed in other Courts. The purely local nature of the profuse rulings upon the words of this statute renders it impracticable to deal with them here; except to point out that the statute is held not to apply to witnesses offered in rebuttal[4] or to documentary evidence,[5] nor to exclude witnesses named erroneously without misleading effect[6] or witnesses not material.[7]

§ 1855*a*. Same: (IV) Statutory Rule of Procedure allowing Inspection of Witnesses' Testimony. The foregoing methods provide merely for a list of witnesses, to be furnished to the defendant. But may he obtain also the tenor of their testimony; i.e. supposing them not to tell him their story voluntarily on request, is there any legal rule enabling him to get it from them? There are two such rules, introduced by statute:

(1) In a few jurisdictions (e.g. England, Minnesota), the statute providing for a list of witnesses gives also the right to inspect the reported testimony or the depositions of the witnesses before the grand jury.[1]

(2) In jurisdictions allowing depositions to be taken unconditionally by an shall not be permitted to introduce any witness who was not examined before a committing magistrate or the grand jury, and the minutes of whose testimony were not presented with the indictment to the court, unless he shall have given to the defendant a notice in writing, stating the name, place of residence, and occupation of said witness, and the substance of what he expects to prove by him on the trial, at least four days before the commencement of such trial. Whenever the county attorney desires to introduce evidence to support the indictment, of which he shall not have given said four days' notice because of insufficient time therefor since he learned said evidence could be obtained, he may move the Court for leave to introduce such evidence, giving the same particulars as in the former case, and showing diligence such as is required in a motion for a continuance, supported by affidavit; whereupon, if the Court sustains said motion, the defendant shall elect whether said cause shall be continued on his motion, or the witness shall then testify; and if said defendant shall not elect to have said cause continued, the county attorney may examine said witness in the same manner and with the same effect as though four days' notice had been given the defendant as hereinbefore provided, except [that] the county attorney in the examination of said witness shall be strictly confined to the matters set out in his motion"); 1907, State v. Johnson, 133 Ia. 38, 110 N. W. 170.

Oregon: St. 1899, p. 100, § 5 ("the name of each witness examined on oath or affirmation by a district attorney in support of any information" shall be inserted or indorsed before filing; "otherwise the testimony of such witness cannot be heard against the defendant at the trial of such information"). But the Oregon statute no longer appears in the law.

[2] Cited supra, § 1852, par. (b), note 5.

[3] St. 1858, c. 109, Code 1860, § 4786, Code 1873, § 4421, contained substantially the enactment supra, as far as the proviso; St. 1876, c. 168, § 3, Code 1880, § 4421, added the proviso.

[4] 1859, State v. Gillick, 10 Ia. 98, 100; 1867, State v. Parish, 22 Ia. 284, 285.

[5] 1894, State v. Farrington, 90 Ia. 681, 57 N. W. 606; 1897, State v. Boomer, 103 Ia. 106, 72 N. W. 424 (clerk producing records; notice of their contents unnecessary); 1907, State v. Bennett, 137 Ia. 427, 110 N. W. 150.

[6] 1899, State v. Dale, 109 Ia. 97, 80 N. W. 208; 1902, State v. Dunn, 116 Ia. 219, 89 N. W. 984; 1904, State v. Trusty, 122 Ia. 82, 97 N. W. 989.

[7] 1903, State v. Hasty, 121 Ia. 507, 96 N. W. 1115.

§ 1855*a*. [1] Statutes cited ante, § 1851, and cases cited in notes 4, 5 to § 1850.

accused (ante, § 1401), such a deposition is virtually also a discovery before trial.[2]

§ 1856. Civil Cases: (I) Discovery from Party-Opponent; (1) in Equity. The common law in civil cases required no notice to be given in advance to the opponent as to the names of witnesses intended to be produced (ante, § 1845). Nor have the reasons that produced a change in the law for criminal prosecutions (ante, § 1847, par. 1) had any bearing on the policy applicable to civil litigation. Mr. Bentham long ago proposed some such a modification,[1] but this remains as one of the few important suggestions of his that has not had palpable results in legislation. Probably our indifference to the need of improvement and our disinclination to attempt any solution of the problem is due to two reasons, first, the extreme difficulty of framing a fair practical rule which shall not be cumbrous and merely obstructive, and, secondly, the sufficient general acquaintance ordinarily possessed by each party with the possible range of persons whose testimony might be material, by reason of which no actual hardship occurs except in occasional instances.

By statute, however, several exceptions have been created. Only one of these is expressly intended to furnish compulsory notice of the opponent's evidence; in the other instances, the notice results rather as an incident of some other purpose. As these statutes originally were designed to confer on common-law trials the benefit already possessed in chancery proceedings, it is necessary to notice first the scope of the chancery rule.

(1) Discovery in chancery. In chancery practice, a party to a suit at law has always been entitled, by a bill of discovery, to ascertain before trial the tenor of his opponent's knowledge and belief upon all the facts in issue — in other words, to obtain disclosure of his testimony before trial. The soundness of this policy rests upon reasons already examined (ante, § 1847, par. 2). But the tenor of this discovery was strictly limited to the opponent's own testimony, that is, his own admissions resting on his knowledge and belief. It is true that the bill required from the opponent an answer under oath stating all that he claimed in opposition; but to this extent what was obtained was no more than a sworn pleading, stating such material facts as would be alleged in any pleading. But of the evidence which he was to bring forth (except so far as he himself could testify) in support of those facts — the names of his witnesses and the circumstances to which they would testify — he was required to betray nothing in advance.[2] In answering as a witness

[2] 1911, Welborn v. Faulconer, 237 Mo. 297, 141 S. W. 31 (applying Rev. St. 1909, § 5173; able opinion by Blair, C.).

§ 1856. [1] 1827, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, c. 7, Bowring's ed., vol. 7, p. 368 (called an "anticipative survey of the contents of the budget of evidence").

Under the name of "settlement of issues," a similar expedient in the way of preliminary procedure was strongly urged by L. C. J. Denman, during Mr. Bentham's lifetime and as a result of his teachings (Arnould's Life of Lord Denman, I, 201); and analogous measures have since come to form part of the English procedure. The subject is elaborately examined in Mr. Samuel Rosenbaum's valuable Studies in English Civil Procedure (1915) and in his monograph on the Rule-Making Authority in the English Supreme Court.

[2] 1826, Preston v. Carr, 1 Y. & J. 175; 1863, Ingilby v. Shafto, 33 Beav. 675.

to facts, it was no excuse for him that his testimony would incidentally reveal his witnesses' names;[3] but this did not impugn the general principle that he was entitled to keep to himself all evidential data except his own testimony.

This principle, which obtained equally for documentary evidence (post, § 1858), was applied in scores of cases to a great variety of arguable situations, but as a guiding doctrine was not open to dispute:[4]

1836, Sir James WIGRAM, V. C., Discovery, §§ 31, 32: "Proposition I: It is the right, as a general rule, of a plaintiff in equity to examine the defendant as to all matters of fact which, being well pleaded in the bill, are material to the proof of the plaintiff's case and which the defendant does not by his form of pleading admit. Proposition II: Courts of equity, as a general rule, oblige a defendant to pledge his oath to the truth of his defence. With this (if a) qualification, the right of a plaintiff in equity to the benefit of the defendant's oath is limited to a discovery of such material facts as relate to the plaintiff's case, and does not extend to a discovery of the manner in which or the evidence by means of which the defendant's case is to be established, or to any discovery of the defendant's evidence."

§ 1856*a*. Same: (2) Statutory Discovery in Common Law Cases.

(a) Interrogatories to Party-Opponent. This equitable practice of requiring discovery of the opponent's own testimony before trial was, as an exception to the general rule, a doctrine of clear wisdom, open to no objection (ante,

[3] 1836, Storey v. Lord Lennox, 1 Keen 341, 357 (Lord Langdale, M. R.: "In telling the truth, as he is bound to do, the defendant may incidentally disclose to the plaintiff that which may enable the plaintiff to learn the names of the witnesses and the nature of the evidence; and if this consequence could be used as a ground for resisting a discovery, one of the most extensively useful parts of the jurisdiction of the courts of equity would be lost").

[4] Compare the quotations ante, § 1846, and the following: 1838, Story, Equity Pleading, 6th ed., § 572.

There was, to be sure, one settled exception, but apparent only, to the rule that notice of the opponent's own case could not be obtained beforehand, namely, the rule for using a party's written admissions. If A produced at the trial an admission of liability by B, not specified beforehand in the pleadings, the trial might be postponed for B's benefit. This rule, however, in its orthodox form, was not a rule excluding such evidence, but merely refusing to act upon it until time had been given to answer it: 1837, Austin v. Chambers, 6 Cl. & F. 1, 38 (admissions not put directly in issue by the pleadings, so as to give an opportunity of contradicting or explaining, are not to be given binding effect); 1838, Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232, 319, 350, 488, 516 (similar doctrine); 1838, Copland v. Toulmin, 7 Cl. & F. 349, 373; 1843, Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare 39, 63 (letters not charged in the bill; Wigram, V. C., held that "if one party should keep back evidence which the other might explain, and thereby take him by surprise, the Court will give no effect to such evidence without first giving the party to be affected by it an opportunity of controverting it"); 1846, M'Mahon v. Burchell, 1 C. P. Cooper, 457, 477 (L. C. Cottenham approved the preceding doctrine; at pages 480–509 other cases are collected). But the rule seems never to have been accepted in the United States: 1837, Smith v. Burnham, 2 Sumner 612, 623 (a learned opinion by Story, J., pointing out that the reasons for the English rule are not satisfactory, and denying its validity in the United States); 1846, Brandon v. Cabiness, 10 Ala. 155, 162 ("[From Austin v. Chambers] it would seem that the rule is founded upon the secrecy with which evidence in chancery is taken, as it is there put upon the fact that the party would be deprived of the power of cross-examining the witness, if the name of the person was not stated in the bill, to whom the admissions were made; this objection could not apply in this State, where the party must always have the power of cross-examination"; but the rule was held in any case inapplicable to admissions used in rebuttal of the defendant's own case); 1870, Story, Equity Pleading, 8th ed., by Redfield, § 265*a*.

As to that exquisite question of antique chancery porcelain, viz. whether discovery can be compelled at all when the complainant waives answer under oath, there is a collection of exhumed learning in the following modern opinion: 1918, Swann v. State, 23 Ga. App. 105, 97 S. E. 564, per Sims, J.

§ 1847, par. 2); and it was accordingly engrafted by statute upon the practice in common-law Courts, without the cumbrous appurtenances of a bill for discovery. This reform came about in England in 1854,[1] after nearly a generation of agitation, and has been since adopted by statute in most American jurisdictions.[2] These statutes provide for the submission before

1856a. [1] ENGLAND: Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Order XXXI, Rule 1 ("In any cause or matter the plaintiff or defendant by leave of the Court or a Judge may deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite parties, or any one or more of such parties, and such interrogatories when delivered shall have a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer: Provided that interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the cause or matter shall be deemed irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross-examination of a witness"); Rule 2 ("A copy of the interrogatories proposed to be delivered shall be delivered with the summons or notice of application for leave to deliver them at least two clear days before the hearing thereof (unless in any case the Court or Judge shall think fit to dispense with this requirement) and the particular interrogatories sought to be delivered shall be submitted to and considered by the Court or Judge"); Rule 5 ("If any party to a cause or matter be a body corporate or a joint-stock company, whether incorporated or not, or any other body of persons, empowered by law to sue or be sued, whether in its own name or in the name of any officer or other person, any opposite party may apply for an order allowing him to deliver interrogatories to any member or officer of such corporation, company, or body, and an order may be made accordingly"); Rule 11 ("If any person interrogated omits to answer, or answers insufficiently, the party interrogating may apply to the court or a judge for an order requiring him to answer, or to answer further, as the case may be. And an order may be made requiring him to answer or answer further, either by affidavit or by 'viva-voce' examination, as the judge may direct").

CANADA: Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, Nos. 234–250; British Columbia: Rules of Court 1912, Rules 343–370*t*; Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rules 398–423; New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 3, c. 111, § 240, c. 112, § 44; Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Order 25; Northwest Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rules 201–225; Nova Scotia: Rules of Court 1900, Order 30; Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, Rules of Court 1914, Rules 271, 275, 327–337; Prince Edward Isl. St. 1873, c. 22, §§ 244–248; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rules 211–235.

[2] The statutes vary in style, particularly as to the number of details regulated. Typical forms are given from California, Indiana, and Massachusetts. The statutes quoted ante, § 488 (parties' qualifications) and § 1382 (depositions) often include this subject, with provisions of the sort mentioned in par. (1) of the text. Federal: Equity Rules 1912, Rule 58 ("evidence material to the cause of action or defense of his adversary" is compellable); Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 4049–4057; Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 1680; Arkansas: Dig. 1919, §§ 1248–1260; California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2021 (deposition may be taken "at any time after the service of summons," etc., "1, when the witness is a party to the action," etc.); § 2032 (a deposition may be used on proving that a witness is deceased, etc., but this condition does not apply to depositions taken under sub-section 1 of § 2021, supra); § 2055, as added by St. 1917, April 5 ("A party to the record of any civil action or proceeding or a person for whose immediate benefit such action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended, or the directors, officers, superintendent or managing agent of any corporation which is a party to the record, may be examined by the adverse party as if under cross-examination, subject to the rules applicable to the examination of other witnesses. The party calling such adverse witness shall not be bound by his testimony, and the testimony given by such witness may be rebutted by the party calling him for such examination by other evidence. Such witness, when so called, may be examined by his own counsel, but only as to matters testified to on such examination"); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, §§ 5764–5769, 5741 (covers matters "material to the support or defense of the suit"); Florida: Rev. Gen. St. 1919, §§ 2734–2735; Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 4550–4553; Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 6; Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 365 ("Either party may propound interrogatories, to be filed with the pleadings, relevant to the matter in controversy, and require the opposite party to answer the same under oath. And corporations, through their proper officers, agent, or agents, shall be required to answer interrogatories as natural persons"); § 533 ("A party to an action may be examined as a witness concerning any matter stated in the pleading, at the instance of the adverse party, or of any one of several adverse parties; and for that purpose may be compelled, in the same manner, and subject to the same rules of examination as any other witness, to testify either at the trial, or conditionally, trial of interrogatories to the opponent to be answered by him, — usually in writing, but sometimes also (or alternatively) orally before an officer of Court.

The interpretation of these statutes [3] raises several important questions of or upon commission"); § 534 ("The examination, instead of being had at the trial, may be had at any time before the trial, at the option of the party claiming it, before any officer authorized to take depositions, on a previous notice to a party to be examined and any other adverse party of at least five days, unless, for good cause shown, the court order otherwise. But the party to be examined before the trial shall not be compelled to attend in any other county than that of his residence"); Iowa: Code 1919, § 7247; Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 6420 (anti-trust law); § 7241 (in civil cases, any party may take the deposition of "the adverse party, his agent or employee," or of any "officer, director, agent, or employee" of a corporation, etc., when such adverse party, etc., "is without the jurisdiction of the court or cannot be reached by the process of the trial court"); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, §§ 143, 151, § 606, par. 4; Louisiana: C. Pr. 1900, §§ 347–356; St. 1908, No. 126 (quoted ante, § 916); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 231; § 61 (Interrogatories; any party, after the entry of an action at law or the filing of a bill in equity, "may interrogate an adverse party for the discovery of facts and documents admissible in evidence at the trial of the case"; word "party" defined); § 62 (answers to be in writing, etc.); § 63 (filing, etc.; "No party interrogated shall be obliged to answer a question or produce a document tending to criminate him or to disclose his title to any property the title whereof is not material to an issue in the proceeding in the course of which he is interrogated, nor to disclose the names of witnesses, except that the court may compel the party interrogated to disclose the names of witnesses and their addresses if justice seems to require it, upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem expedient. . . ."); § 64 (refusal to answer); § 65 (examination of corporate and municipal officers or minors); § 66 (costs); § 67 (protection of immaterial matter); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12022–12028 (general power in Court); § 12552 (quoted ante, § 488); § 12560 (judgment by default, etc., on refusal); Mississippi: Code 1906, §§ 1938, 1939, Hem. §§ 1598, 1599; Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10645, 10652; Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5454, 5420, 5421; New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1901, c. 225, § 11; New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Practice, §§ 140–148; St. 1911, c. 279, p. 491 (rules for interrogatories in the district court); St. 1914, April 1, c. 96 (amending Gen. St., Practice, § 144); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2171; New York: C. P. A. 1920, §§ 288–302; St. 1920, May 21, c. 926 (amending C. P. A. §§ 288, 291); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, §§ 899–907; North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7862–7869; Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 11348–11350, §§ 11497, 11555; Oregon: Laws 1920, §§ 837, 851; Pennsylvania: St. 1887, May 23, Dig. 1920, § 10291 ("In any civil proceeding the testimony of any competent witness may be taken by commission or deposition"); Porto Rico: here discovery is obtained by the Spanish procedure: 1902, Kuinlan v. Melendez, 3 P. R. 119 (form and time of notice); South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, §§ 667–674; South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2713–2716; Tennessee: Shannon's Code, 1916, §§ 5684–5693 (either party may have such discovery as the rules of equity allow); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 3663, 3679–3684; Virginia: Code 1919, §§ 6225, 6226, 6236, 6238; Washington: R. & B. Code, 1909, §§ 1225–1230, 1903, 1906; West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 33; Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, §§ 4096–4098, 4068; Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5808, 5859, 5689.

[3] The following citations will be referred to in the ensuing notes:

ENGLAND: The practice under this statute may be seen in the following cases: 1878, Eade v. Jacobs, L. R. 3 Exch. D. 335; 1882, Attorney-General v. Gaskill, L. R. 20 Ch. D. 519; 1883, Lyell v. Kennedy, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 217; 1921, Re La Société Les Affréteurs Réunis, 3 K. B. 1 (discovery by the Crown).

CANADA: Alberta: 1916, McLean v. Canadian Pacific R. Co., 28 D. L. R. 550 (number of persons examinable under Rules 225, 234); 1916, Medicine Hat Wheat Co. v. Norris Commission Co. Ltd., 29 D. L. R. 379 (partnership parties); 1917, Lea v. Medicine Hat, 35 D. L. R. 109 (party's employee); 1918 R. v. Williams, 19 D. L. R. 706, Alta. (discovery for breach of trust in a stock syndicate agreement; Rule 571 applied);
Ontario: 1915, Menzies v. McLeod, 25 D. L. R. 777, Ont. (action to establish a will; Ont. Rules 1913, No. 327, considered, as to "party adverse in interest"; here, a legatee);
Saskatchewan: 1916, Proby v. Erratt Co., 31 D. L. R. 342 (necessity of subpœna under Rule 503).

UNITED STATES: Federal: For a valuable collection of rulings on the scope of interrogatories of discovery under the Federal Equity Rules, 1912, see the article of Mr. Wallace R. Lane, "Federal Equity Rules," Harv. L. Rev., XXXV, 276; Georgia: 1919, Creech v. Ossep, 149 Ga. 577, 101 S. E. 576 (under Civ. C. § 5910, providprinciple in respect to party's liability to interrogation (apart from the further questions considered in §§ 1856*b*, 1856*c*, 1856*d*, post):

(1) Even where no statute exists explicitly modelled upon equitable discovery by interrogatories, the same purpose is attainable by using one of two other types of statutes primarily dealing with other principles, viz.: (a) a statute declaring all parties in civil cases "competent and compellable to testify 'viva voce' or by deposition"; (b) a statute providing that "either party may take the deposition of any person as witness before trial." Under both of these types of statutes the party-opponent is assimilated into the class of ordinary witnesses, and accordingly his deposition may be compelled before trial. In some jurisdictions these statutes have been liberally interpreted as introducing discovery by interrogatories, oral or written:[4]

1874, BREWER, J., in Re Abeles, 12 Kan. 451: "The single question in this case is whether a party to an action can compel a witness, residing in the county where the action is pending, to give his deposition prior to the trial? or must he, if he desires his testimony, compel his personal attendance at the trial by subpœna and attachment? That the witness whose testimony is sought is the adverse party does not affect the question, for, by section 321 of the Civil Code, either party can compel the adverse party 'at the trial, or by deposition, to testify as a witness, in the same manner, and subject to the same rules, as other witnesses.' By section 346 of the Code the deposition of a witness may be used when the witness is absent from the county at the time of trial, or when from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, ing that either party may take the deposition of a witness before trial, a party opponent is a witness);

Idaho: 1922, Mabbett v. Mabbett, — Ida. —, 202 Pac. 1057 (mother in custody of minor children; on habeas corpus by father, the mother is examinable as an adverse party under Comp. St. § 8035);
Illinois: 1916, Schmidt v. Cooper, 274 Ill. 243, 113 N. E. 641 (under Rev. St. c. 51, § 24, a deposition may be taken before a master by a complainant in chancery before answer is filed or issue formed, regardless of the consent of the witness; here the deponent was a defendant, and the proceeding was virtually for discovery; the witness' liability before a master to answer the interrogatories in general is distinguished from his specific claim of privilege, which must be referred to the Court for a ruling); 1921, Brandenburg v. Buda Co., 299 Ill. 133, 132 N. E. 514 (discovery in aid of suit at law on a contract for services; demurrer on the ground that Rev. St. c. 51, § 9, superseded the jurisdiction to give discovery in aid of law, overruled);
Iowa: 1914, Meikle v. Hobson, 167 Ia. 666, 149 N. W. 865 (the party-opponent's deposition may not be taken before trial; Code sections construed);
Massachusetts: 1920, Cutter v. Cooper, 234 Mass. 307, 125 N. E. 634 (scope of St. 1913, c. 815, quoted supra, note 2, as removing prior limitations, expounded, in an action for alienation of affections where the defendant's interrogatories to the plaintiff had not been answered; a new trial on exceptions may be ordered, even after trial had on the issues, where the refusal to answer before trial has resulted in the non-disclosure of material facts, to the party's injury);
Nebraska: 1904, Olmsted v. Edson, 71 Nebr. 17, 98 N. W. 415 (parties compelled to give depositions before trial; "taking the deposition of a party is the only substitute we have for a bill of discovery under our practice");
New York: 1920, People ex rel. Lewis v. Fowler, 229 N. Y. 84, 127 N. E. 793 (order for examination of will-proponent before trial, held proper under C. C. P. §§ 870–886, 2770, in surrogate proceedings); 1922, Bell v. Gilbert Paper Co., N. Y. Sup., 193 N. Y. Suppl. 26 (under C. P. A. 1920, § 140, the opponent of discovery now has the burden of showing that the discovery is not necessary);
Oklahoma: 1920, Gainan v. Readdy, 79 Okl. 111, 191 Pac. 602 (discovery from plaintiff, refused where no reason for needing it was shown);
South Dakota: 1917, Niblo v. Ede, 39 S. D. 338, 164 N. W. 109 (under St. 1913, c. 162, amending C. C. P. § 480, a party-opponent's examination on discovery may be had without showing special necessity, etc.; New York and Wisconsin practice compared; McCoy, J., diss.); 1920, Milwaukee Corrugating Co. v. Flagge, 170 Wis. 492, 175 N. W. 777 (Stats. § 4096 held to be a provisional remedy, and rulings under it not to be appealable).

[4] Cases cited supra, note 3.

the witness is unable to attend court, or is dead. Giving a right to use a deposition under the contingencies named gives the right to prepare for those contingencies. It cannot, of course, have been contemplated that the contingency must exist before the deposition can be taken; for in one of the cases at least the happening of the contingency would destroy the power to obtain the testimony. If the deposition of a witness can be used in case of his death, the party must have a right to take that deposition beforehand. So of the other contingencies named in the statute. Now the giving of testimony, whether on the trial or by deposition, is not a privilege of the witness, but a right of the party. He need not solicit; he can compel. It seems to us, therefore, that under our statutes a witness may be compelled to give his deposition, although he reside in the county where the action is pending. It is said this power is liable to abuse, and that a witness may be compelled to give repeated depositions, and still be present at the trial. Courts will see that this power is not abused, or the time of a witness unnecessarily taken. It is also said that large amounts of costs will be accumulated. This will not injure the adverse party, for a party taking depositions which he does not use must himself pay their cost. It is also said that this permits one to go on a 'fishing expedition' to ascertain his adversary's testimony. This is an equal right of both parties, and justice will not be apt to suffer if each party knows fully beforehand his adversary's testimony."

Practically, however, different limitations may apply under such statutes, viz. 1, the procedure and the scope of inquiry may be different;[5] 2, the rule about impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 916), may cause obstruction, though under genuine discovery statutes (supra, n. 2) that rule is commonly declared inapplicable; 3, the rule about cross-examining to one's own case (post, § 1891) may also cause obstruction, though under genuine discovery-statutes it may not; 4, a deposition in the strict sense cannot be used on the trial unless the deponent is deceased or otherwise unavailable (ante, § 1402), whereas a genuine discovery-answer is of course free from this condition (ante, § 1416); but here the California Code and others (supra, n. 2) expressly make an exemption for the party-opponent's (so-called) deposition.

(2) In the Federal Courts, the general question whether the rules of Evidence in the State of trial should apply has been the subject of complicated statutory development and judicial interpretation, affecting both the principle of conflict of laws (ante, § 6) and the method of taking Federal depositions (ante, §§ 1381, 1411). In its bearing on the present question, viz. whether by any method a discovery before trial can be obtained from the opponent, this development has left the judicial rulings in a deplorably complicated condition.[6]

[5] Illustrated in the following: 1898, Matthews v. R. Co., 142 Mo. 645, 669, 44 S. W. 802.

[6] The statutes here cited will be found quoted in full ante, §§ 6, 1381; 1885, Ex parte Fisk, 113 U. S. 713, 5 Sup. 724 (N. Y. C. C. P. §§ 870 ff., providing for discovery before trial, is inconsistent with U. S. Rev. St. § 861, U. S. Code, § 1360, providing that "the mode of proof in the trial of actions at common law shall be by oral testimony and examination of witnesses in open court," and the latter must prevail: clearly unsound, since the process of extraction by discovery is merely a process of learning what the opponent's testimony is or will be and is in its very nature not "a mode of proof in the trial"); 1901, Flower v. MacGinniss, 50 C. C. A. 291, 112 Fed. 377 (a deposition cannot be taken, under R. S. § 863 and Sup. Ct. Rule 68, until the cause is at issue); 1903, Hanks Dental Ass'n v. Tooth Crown Co., 194 U. S. 303, 24 Sup. 700 (the defendant took the deposition of the plaintiff's president before trial, under N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, § 870; held (1) that it was inadmissible under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, §§ 861, 863, 866,

(3) Under some types of statutes, literally construed, discovery is obtainable unconditionally. But in orthodox chancery practice there were numerous restrictions. Hence, under the statutes the question is sometimes presented whether the discovery sought from the opponent is necessary, e. g. whether the facts are equally well known to the party interrogating, whether the opponent's testimony later at the trial would not answer all purposes, whether the discovery is sought merely for annoyance or delay, and the like.[7]

(4) The question is constantly presented, who is a party-opponent, the measure being essentially aimed to secure discovery from parties only, not from third persons who are mere witnesses (post, § 1856*d*).[8] With the modern development of corporations in industry and commerce, a special question is thus presented as to the liability to discovery of stockholders, officers, agents and employees, of a corporation. Modern statutes have usually amended the earlier ones so as to include such persons by express definition.[9]

867, following Ex parte Fisk, supra; (2) that under St. 1892, Mar. 9, c. 14, quoted ante, § 1381, note 3, providing that in Federal courts an additional "mode of taking the depositions of witnesses" may be "the mode prescribed by the laws of the State," etc., the deposition was equally inadmissible, since the word "mode" in St. 1892 does not have "a broader significance" than in Rev. St. § 861; yet it would seem that if the Court in Ex parte Fisk held the word "mode" in Rev. St. § 861 to include discovery before trial and thus to conflict with N. Y. C. C. P. § 870, it is inconsistent here to hold that the word "mode" in St. 1892 does not include discovery before trial); 1905, Blood v. Morrin, 140 Fed. 918, C. C. (under U. S. Rev. St. §§ 863, 876, providing for depositions 'de bene' of witnesses residing more than one hundred miles away, a party may take the deposition of his opponent, so residing, before trial; Ex parte Fisk distinguished); 1907, Smith v. International Mercantile Co., C. C. N. J., 154 Fed. 786 (Hanks Dental Ass'n v. Tooth Crown Co., followed, refusing to allow interrogatories to opponent under N. J. Pub. L. 1903, § 140, p. 537); 1909, Frost v. Barber, C. C. S. D. N. Y., 173 Fed. 847 (following Hanks Dental Ass'n v. Tooth Crown Co.); 1919, Levinstein v. Dupont de Nemours & Co., D. C. Mass., 258 Fed. 667 (commission to take testimony of an officer of the defendant; held that under U. S. Rev. St. § 863, issue must first be joined; and that under U. S. Rev. St. § 866, "to prevent a failure or delay of justice," this section "should not be invoked merely for the purpose of a preliminary examination before trial of an adverse party," and that such a commission could not issue ex parte).

[7] Cases cited supra, note 3; and the passage quoted from Mr. Justice Daly, in the text, par. (6).

[8] Cases cited supra, note 3.

As to discovery from infants and their next friends: 1907, Vano v. Canadian C. C. Mills Co., 13 Ont. L. R. 421.

[9] The following cases deal specifically with the scope of such statutes:

England: 1900, Welsbach Incand. G. L. Co. v. New Sunlight I. Co., 2 Ch. 1; for the earlier English cases, there is a good collection and a careful study of them in an article by Mr. Alex. McGregor, "What Persons in the Service of a Litigating Corporation are examinable for Discovery on its Behalf," Canadian Law Review, II, 254 (1902).

Canada: Alta. 1912, Nichols & S. Co. v. Skedanuk, 6 D. L. R. 115 (member of an agency firm, as "officer"); 1919, McDougall and Secord v. Merchants' Bank, 46 D. L. R. 672 (practice reviewed by Harvey, C. J.); Ont. 1902, Morrison v. Grand T. R. Co., 4 Ont. L. R. 43, 5 Ont. L. R. 38 (a locomotive engineer is not an officer of a corporation); 1904, Kircher v. Imperial L. & I. Co., 7 Ont. L. R. 295 (discovery granted against a manager who had resigned); 1904, Cantin v. News Pub. Co., 8 Ont. L. R. 531 (discovery against a "former servant of the defendants," not granted); 1905, Clarkson v. Bank of Hamilton, 9 Ont. L. R. 317 (the corporation should suggest the officer or agent best qualified to give the due information); 1904, McWilliams v. Dickson Co., 10 Ont. L. R. 639 (whether the answer of a party corporation may be struck out, for refusal of its officer to give discovery); 1906, Davies v. Sovereign Bank, 12 Ont. L. R. 557 (a member of a municipal council, not being its head, is not examinable as an officer or servant of the corporation); 1912, Ontario & W. C. F. Co. v. Hamilton G. & B. R. Co., Ont. H. C. J., 1 D. L. R. 485 (former employee); Sask. 1912, Toronto G. T. Co. v. Municipal C. Co., 1 D. L. R. 552 (former employee).

United States: Fed. 1903, Bock v. International Nav. Co., 124 Fed. 711 (interrogatories in admiralty to the officers of a corporation).

(5) The statutes usually provide, as against a party improperly refusing to answer interrogatories, that his pleading may be struck out, or that judgment may be taken by default, or that both measures may be resorted to. This consequence, being the same as provided for a refusal to produce documents, is considered under that head (post, § 1859*e*).

(6) Further details of this statutory interpretation are not within the present purview; but the following passage will illustrate the operation of the statute in a single State:

1900, Mr. Justice DALY, "Preparation for Trial," The Brief, II, 299: "In preparing for the trial of your action, it may be necessary to take the deposition of the adverse party with the expectation of having to use it as evidence. The Code contemplates the use of the deposition upon the trial, and the examination is not allowed for the mere purpose of enabling the applicant to prepare for trial. The examination is in every case of very great benefit to the party applying for it, and for that reason is almost invariably resisted with vigor, the conflict giving rise to a vast amount of litigation, producing decisions not always easy to reconcile and not always adhered to. In my experience no remedy has been more warmly contested, and it is hardly possible to-day to make an application for it without a fatiguing study of a vast number of cases. The reason for this is due to the resistance naturally to be expected to an assumed inquisitorial investigation, which may disclose the case of an adversary and discover its weakness, and to the disposition of the Courts to limit the privilege of examination for fear of abuse.

"The remedy first made its appearance in our practice with the Code of Procedure in the middle of the century now drawing to a close. The language of the old Code ('No action to obtain discovery under oath in aid of the prosecution or defense of another action shall be allowed; nor shall any examination of a party be had on behalf of the adverse party, except in the manner prescribed by this chapter,') led the Courts at first to consider the examination as a mere substitute for the former bill of discovery and thus, logically, in administering the remedy, to hold that parties availing themselves of it were bound to conform as near as might be to the rules and practice governing bills of discovery. Under the present Code, in which the examination of a party before trial, at the instance of his adversary, the examination of a witness 'de bene esse' and the taking of depositions for the perpetuation of testimony in anticipated litigations are all grouped in one article, it is held that the proceeding is purely statutory, to be governed by the provisions of the Code, and not to be controlled by the former practice.

"This clearing away of former restrictions did not, however, tend to diminish litigation upon the subject, and there is yet much to perplex the practitioner in the very fine distinctions which have been favored by the Courts. The tendency of the Courts is not yet toward liberality, in permitting examinations of parties at the instance of their adversaries, and a very wide discretion is exercised in determining whether the facts set forth in the applicant's affidavit show that the testimony is material and necessary. A perusal of the statute might reasonably lead to the conclusion that the Legislature intended to afford a very broad and general remedy; but a review of the great array of decisions upon the article would lead to the conviction that the Courts, in the conscientious discharge of duty, have made a deal of work and trouble for themselves which might have been avoided, without special injury, by a less conservative construction, by permitting the examination except where it is obviously intended to annoy and harass and by confining the examination strictly to the issues, or limiting it to particular matters as the statute expressly permits. . . . In favor of a liberal extension of the right to examine an adversary, may be urged the disposition which led to the invention of bills of discovery in the past, and the great progress made in substituting for them the oral examination. Pleadings themselves are but one form of extracting from an adversary in advance of the trial admissions or answers to the charge against him. . . .

"If the examination is allowed by the Court it need not be limited to the affirmative cause of action or defense of the party desiring the examination, but may be a general examination, the same as if it were had at the trial. . . . [The examination has been refused] where there is no proof that the facts are not as well known to the party seeking the examination as to the adversary whom he wishes to examine; where it is not shown that an examination of the adversary could not be had at the trial and it does not appear that an examination before trial is necessary or important; where it is made to appear that the examination is sought merely for the purpose of annoyance or delay; where the information sought can be obtained from records or documents; where it cannot be ascertained on what issue the party desires the examination or where a defendant sought to examine a plaintiff before service of a complaint in order to frame an answer; where it is not alleged that the facts exist which are sought to be proved by the examination; and, generally, where the Court is not satisfied that the examination of the adversary is either material or necessary. The instances under this head are too numerous to cite; and it may be suggested that each case will be judged upon its own facts and that the practitioner, in groping his way through the maze of adjudications on this division of the subject, will find common sense a not untrustworthy guide."

(7) From the operation of the present principle, with its corollaries (post, §§ 1856*b*, 1856*c*, 1856*d*) must be distinguished certain other rules of Evidence which constantly come into operation in resorting to statutory interrogatories of discovery to a party-opponent:

(a) The rule about impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 916) may set limits to interrogatories seeking to discredit the opponent's character.[10]

(b) The rule requiring that a deponent must be deceased or otherwise unavailable does not apply to a party offering his opponent's discovery-answers (ante, § 1416). It does apply to the opponent himself, and prevents him from using them in his own behalf. But if he is deceased or otherwise unavailable, his successor in interest should be allowed to introduce the answers (ante, § 1389).

(c) The rule permitting the whole of an utterance to be offered by an opponent, to explain a part only which the first party has introduced (post, § 2122) has a special application to a party-opponent's answers of discovery (post, § 2124).

(d) The rule privileging a client's communications to his attorney may sometimes limit discovery (post, § 2318).

§ 1856*b*. Same: (2) Statutory Discovery; (b) Opponent's Own Case not Disclosable. In the interpretation of these statutes, it seems to be generally held that their purpose was merely to extend to all Courts the expedient that formerly existed in chancery alone (ante, § 1846), that therefore the principle is not changed, and that the discovery is limited to the extraction of the party's own testimony and cannot be asked merely to ascertain his other evidence to support his own case. So that the common law in this respect (supra, par. 1) remains unchanged for civil cases: [1]

[10] N. Sc. Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 30, R. 1; B. C. 1900, Bank of British Columbia v. Trapp, 7 Br. C. 354 (on examination for discovery, the opponent may be treated as if on cross-examination, under the Rules of Court); 1903, Hopper v. Dunsmuir, 10 B. C. 23 (similar; good opinion by Hunter, C. J.).

1895, LINDLEY, L. J., in Re Strachan, 1 Ch. 439, 445: "[The applicant] wants to see how her opponent hopes to prove his case, and what she wants to see is the evidence he has procured to prove the insanity which he alleges and she disputes. In England it is considered contrary to the interests of justice to compel a litigant to disclose to his opponent before the trial the evidence to be adduced against him. It is considered that so to do would give undue advantages for cross-examination and lead to endless side-issues, and would enable witnesses to be tampered with and give unfair advantage to the unscrupulous. It is very true that an honest and fair-dealing litigant, on seeing how strong a case his opponent had, might at once withdraw from further litigation. But our rules of evidence and of discovery are not based upon the theory that it is advantageous to let each side know what the other can prove, but rather the reverse."

In a few of the statutes this limitation is preserved in express words.

But it may be questioned whether this result is a wise one. Some advances § 1856b. [1] Besides the following cases, some of the rulings cited ante, § 1856a, note 3, and post, § 1856c, deal with this topic. The ensuing citations include some adopting the more liberal rule: ENGLAND: 1914, Osram Lamp Works v. Gabriel Lamp Co., 1 Ch. 699, 2 Ch. 129 (discovery allowed of facts relevant to facts in issue).

CANADA: 1913, Carney v. Carney, 15 D. L. R. 267, Sask. (execution of a will; "all matters relevant to any issue raised in the pleading" may be covered).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1918, Marquette Mfg. Co. v. Oglesby Coal Co., D. C. N. D. Ill., 247 Fed. 351 (mining trespass; under Equity Rule 58, discovery is demandable on a matter which relates both to plaintiff's and to defendant's case); 1919, Quirk v. Quirk, D. C. S. D. Cal., 259 Fed. 597 (under Eq. Rules 1912, No. 58, the interrogatories are no longer limited to matters supporting the plaintiff's case; enlightened opinion by Trippet, J., quoted supra);
Massachusetts: 1910, Grebenstein v. Stone & Webster Eng. Co., 205 Mass. 431, 91 N. E. 411 (Rev. L. 1902, c. 173, § 57, construed to limit the discovery to matters supporting the applicant's own case); 1912, Looney v. Saltonstall, 212 Mass. 69, 98 N. E. 698 (under St. 1909, c. 225, quoted ante, § 1856a, the discovery is not limited to the party's own case);
New York: 1920, Scheff v. Lewis, Sup. App. Div., 180 N. Y. Suppl. 831 (breach of contract for sale of goods, brought by the assignee; party may not examine an opponent on matters forming only part of opponent's case); 1922, Shaw v. Samly Realty Co., Sup. App. Div., 194 N. Y. Suppl. 531 (personal injury; interrogatories to the defendant amounting to a general examination not allowed; Clarke, P. J.: "We have allowed specific or limited examinations when ownership or control has been denied. The power to permit a general examination undoubtedly exists, but the matured judgment of the court is that it should not ordinarily be exercised in this class of cases. No new situation has resulted from the passage of the Civil Practice Act [1920] and the adoption of the new rules of practice"); 1922, Re Groothaert, Sup. App. Div. 194 N. Y. Suppl. 577 (damages for breach of contract of hiring);
Wisconsin: 1884, Kelly v. R. Co., 60 Wis. 480, 19 N. W. 521 (careful opinion; "the object of our statute, as it now stands, is to elicit a full and complete disclosure of whatever may be relevant to the controversy"); 1886, Whereatt v. Ellis, 65 Wis. 639, 27 N. W. 630, 28 N. W. 333.

In England and Canada, the rule for discovery in libel seems to give special difficulty: 1905, White v. Credit Reform Ass'n, 1 K. B. 653 (libel by a mercantile agency; certain inquiries as to the source of information, etc., passed upon); 1905, Edmondson v. Birch, 2 K. B. 523 (similar); 1906, Plymouth M. C. & I. Soc'y v. Traders' P. Ass'n, 1 K. B. 403 (similar); 1906, Massey-Harris Co. v. DeLaval S. Co., 11 Ont. L. R. 227, 591 (libel; discovery of information concerning defendant's plea of privilege); 1906, McKergow v. Comstock, 11 Ont. L. R. 637 (libel; discovery of matters relevant to defendant's good faith in exercising a qualified privilege); 1918, Hays v. Weiland, 43 D. L. R. 137, Ont. (libel; question as to the names of the persons to whom copies of the libel were given, held relevant, and the answer not refusable because it would disclose the names of the party's witnesses); 1918, Fitzgerald v. Watson, 2 Ir. R. 411 (libel; to the plaintiff's interrogatory, "From whom did you obtain the information, etc.?" the defendant answered, refusing, "The information was received by me confidentially while I occupied a responsible and confidential position"; discovery was compelled, but it was conceded that the practice had been different in actions for libel by newspapers; the opinions fully collect prior rulings).

ought to be conceded (ante, § 1847) towards the abandonment of the rigid common-law doctrine of secrecy. As the matter now stands, many Courts are in their rulings exhibiting the inherent practical difficulties and inconsistencies which arise from the attempt to reconcile the antiquated limitations of the bill of discovery with the spirit of these statutes and of modern progress. The following opinion expresses a liberal attitude worthy of imitation and full of promise for the future:

1919, TRIPPET, J., in Quirk v. Quirk, U. S. D. C. S. D. Cal., 259 Fed. 597 (applying U. S. Equity Rule 58 of 1912): "Since the Equity Rules were reformed for expediting and simplifying the practice and the attainment of the ends of justice, they should have a liberal interpretation and enforcement to that end. Some of the Courts seem inclined to throw difficulties in the way of discovering the truth as provided by the rule under discussion, and oppose the evident purpose of it. The old rules are abolished. There is no reason why the procedure now should be hampered by restrictions imposed by any previous rules or procedure. The truth should always be sought after, and the Courts should eagerly enforce any method of securing the truth.

"It makes no difference whether the facts are as much within the knowledge of the plaintiff as of the defendant. The facts have to be proven, and if the plaintiff can get an admission from the defendant, it saves the necessity of proving the facts, except by such admission of the defendant. The rule expressly provides that the plaintiff may propose interrogatories to elicit facts material to the support or defense of the case. To say that the plaintiff shall not inquire about the facts that may relate to the defense is to construe the rule in plain derogation of its language and purpose.

"The provision giving the plaintiff 21 days after the joinder of issue to file interrogatories was inserted in the rule for the evident purpose of allowing the plaintiff to inquire concerning the defense. The plain object of this rule is to dispose of issues in advance of the trial by compelling the parties to make admissions. This rule, properly enforced, will compel the parties to be honest concerning their pleadings, and parties to litigation ought to be compelled to be honest by putting them on oath and requiring them to be specific concerning the facts at issue. There is no reason why the parties should wait until the day of trial, and then bring in witnesses to prove facts that the parties may be compelled to admit under oath prior to the trial. The truth is always the truth; and telling the truth will not hurt any one, except in so far as he ought to be hurt.

"The only protection that should be afforded any litigant from answering any interrogatories, which call for material facts for the plaintiff or the defendant, is to protect him in his constitutional rights, such as to be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, and in matter of public policy, where the statute prohibits disclosures, such as confidential communications, etc.

"Such a practice as here indicated would tend to shorten trials and materially aid the administration of justice and that is the very purpose of the rule under discussion."

The same conflict between orthodox rule and liberal tendencies, as to scope of discovery, appears in the practice for discovery of documents (post, § 1859*c*).

§ 1856*c*. Same: (2) Statutory Discovery; (c) Names of Witnesses not Disclosable. As a corollary of the foregoing limitation, the opponent cannot be asked to disclose the names of the witnesses to his own case.[1] This restric-

§ 1856*c*. [1] The following citations include those of a few jurisdictions which have abandoned the restriction:

ENGLAND: 1878, Eade v. Jacobs, L. R. 3 Exch. D. 335; 1886, Marriott v. Chamberlain, L. R. 17 Q. B. D. 154, 163 ("It is not

tion is open to the same doubts of policy as the foregoing. The practice can afford to be much liberalized in this aspect. Occasionally a Court or a Legislature is found definitely taking a step to remove the restriction.[2] permissible to ask the names of persons merely as being witnesses whom the other party is going to call and their names not forming any substantial part of the material facts"; but Storey v. Lord Lennox, quoted ante, § 1856, n. 3, was also approved); 1888, Humphries v. Taylor D. Co., L. R. 39 Ch. D. 693; 1895, Re Strachan, 1 Ch. 439, 445; 1895, Kennedy v. Dodson, 1 Ch. 334; 1911, Nash v. Layton, 2 Ch. 71 (Marriott v. Chamberlain approved, and its apparent contradictions explained); 1913, Wootton v. Sevier, 3 K. B. 499 (names of witnesses to be given, on the facts); 1914, Osram Lamp Works v. Gabriel Lamp Co., 2 Ch. 129 (infringement of patent; approving Marriott v. Chamberlain on the point that the scope of discovery "is not confined to the facts directly in issue, but extends to any facts the existence or non-existence of which is relevant to the existence or non-existence of the facts directly in issue"). In practice there is more or less exchange of information, voluntarily between counsel, before trial, as to names of witnesses and substance of testimony expected.

CANADA: Br. C. 1897, Jones v. Pemberton, 6 B. C. 69;
Man.: 1903, Gibbins v. Metcalfe, 14 Man. 364 (names of witnesses);
N. Sc. 1904, Wood v. Dominion L. Co., 37 N. Sc. 250;
Ont. 1899, Coyle v. Coyle, 19 Ont. Pr. 97; 1905, Garland v. Clarkson, 9 Ont. L. R. 281 (range of discovery discussed; discovery from a beneficial party; powers of a referee); 1918, Hays v. Weiland, 43 D. L. R. 137 (libel; cited ante, § 1856*b*).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1876, Storm v. U. S., 94 U. S. 76, 84 (in examining on the stand, parties "cannot complain if the Court excludes questions propounded merely to ascertain the names of persons whom they may desire to call as witnesses to disprove the case of the opposite party");
Alabama: 1916, Montgomery L. & T. Co. v. Harris, 197 Ala. 358, 72 So. 619 (personal injury);
Florida: 1903, Volusia Co. Bank v. Bigelow, 45 Fla. 638, 33 So. 704;
Maryland: 1906, Cairnes v. Pelton, 103 Md. 40, 63 Atl. 105 (a bill of particulars need not include the names of witnesses);
Massachusetts: Pub. St. 1882, c. 167, § 28 ("No party shall be required to state evidence, or to disclose the means by which he intends to prove his case"); §§ 49–56 ("no party shall be obliged to disclose the names of the witnesses by whom or the manner in which he proposes to prove his own case"); Rev. L. 1902, c. 173, §§ 35, 57–63 (same); 1901, Robbins v. R. Co., 180 Mass. 51, 61 N. E. 265; 1905, Spinney v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 188 Mass. 30, 73 N. E. 1021 (the demandant is entitled to the opponent's oath that the matters asked for are within the statute; here a report of the conductor upon a railroad accident, giving the names of persons present, etc.); 1909, Carroll v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 200 Mass. 527, 86 N. E. 793 (names not disclosable); 1912, Looney v. Saltonstall, 212 Mass. 69, 98 N. E. 698 (semble, under St. 1909, c. 225, this limitation is not abolished). But in 1911 the progressive step was taken of removing this limitation as to names of witnesses; St. 1911, c. 593 (the Court may compel either party, upon terms, to disclose the names and addresses of his witnesses "if justice seems to require it, . . . where the names of witnesses are in the exclusive possession of one party to the action"); 1913, Delaney v. Berkshire St. R. Co., 215 Mass. 591, 102 N. E. 901 (St. 1911, c. 593, incidentally referred to, in suppressing improper argument by counsel); St. 1913, c. 815, now Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, § 63, recasting the whole chapter, Rev. L. c. 173, on discovery, retained this advance; quoted in full ante, § 1856*a*. It has been interpreted as follows: 1919, McNeil v. Middlesex & B. St. R. Co., 233 Mass. 254, 123 N. E. 676 (injury to personalty; plaintiff's request for names and addresses of witnesses, left to the trial Court's discretion);
Missouri: 1912, State ex. rel. Evans v. Broaddus, 245 Mo. 123, 142, 149 S. W. 473 (personal injury; defendant's claim agent held not bound to disclose the names of persons on the car as passengers and known to him as possible witnesses; citing the above text with approval);
Nebraska: 1909, Ex parte Button, Ex parte Hammond, 83 Nebr. 636, 120 N. W. 203 (not decided);
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1901, c. 224, § 14 ("No party shall be compelled, in testifying or giving a deposition, to disclose the names of the witnesses by whom nor the manner in which he proposes to prove his case," unless in taking his own deposition); 1862, Carter v. Beals, 44 N. H. 408, 412 (statute applied); 1865, Eaton v. Farmer, 46 N. H. 200, 202 ("If it reasonably appears that the answer of the party will disclose the names of his witnesses and the manner of proving his case, and he states that it will do so, he ought not to be required to state fully how it will have that effect"; other clauses of the statute in-

[2] E. g., England and Massachusetts, cited supra, note 1.

In patent-infringement suits, an early statute leaves the subject still in the course of development.[3]

§ 1856*d*. Same: (II) Statutory Discovery from Third Persons not Parties. The principle of a bill of discovery was never considered to be applicable to third persons not parties so as to secure from them before trial a disclosure of possible evidence; just as it was not available against such persons to secure an inspection of documents (post, § 1857).

But under the modern deposition statutes (ante, § 1382) permitting parties more or less freely to take depositions before trial, may not such discovery be effectually sought? It would be a sound extension of the principle to permit it; the chancery practice was too cautious; modern policy tends to acknowledge this.[1] The obstacle, however, is that the statutes, aiming merely to preserve for the trial testimony in danger of being lost, impose usually as a condition that the witness shall be ill or about to leave the State, etc. This restricts the opportunity of getting discovery to a narrow class of witnesses.

But where the statute does not expressly impose such a condition for taking the deposition (but only for using it), may not the trial Court in discretion decline to impose these traditional limits, and grant an order to take where he deems it wise? It would seem so. The contrary has been laid terpreted and applied); 1879, Penniman v. Jones, 59 N. H. 119 (statute applied); 1906, Noyes v. Thorpe, 73 N. H. 481, 62 Atl. 786, 787 (cases collected, but the point not decided);

New Jersey: 1913, Watkins v. Cope, 84 N. J. L. 143, 86 Atl. 545;
Ohio: 1906, Ex parte Schoepf, 74 Oh. 1, 77 N. E. 279 (street-car injury);
Oregon: 1908, Armstrong v. Portland R. Co., 52 Or. 437, 97 Pac. 715 (here the Court refused to strike out the defendant's answer where its secretary had refused to obey a subpœna calling for disclosure of the names of defendant's witnesses);
Wisconsin: 1887, Meier v. Paulus, 70 Wis. 165, 35 N. W. 301; 1913, Horlick's Malted Milk Co. v. Spiegel Co., 155 Wis. 201, 144 N. W. 272; and Wisconsin cases cited ante, § 1856*b*.

Compare the rule for names and testimony of witnesses as disclosed to the attorney under a privilege (post, § 2319).

Distinguish discovery to obtain the names of other parties: Ia. Code 1919, § 7072.

[3] 1847, Wilton v. Railroads, 1 Wall. Jr. 192 (under St. July 4, 1836, 5 Stats. 123, substantially identical with Rev. St. 1878, § 4920, cl. 7, U. S. Code, § 6163, providing that a defendant in a patent-infringement suit, who pleads previous invention or use, shall give notice thirty days beforehand of the names and residences of the persons alleged to have made prior invention or use, it is held that no notice is required of the names of witnesses by whom the specified prior use or invention is to be proved; construing the ambiguous language of Mr. J. Story in Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 459, and correcting the contrary statement in Greenleaf on Evidence, II, § 501, founded on Mr. J. Story's language); 1870, Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. 516, 539 (assimilating the practice in equity, as to the names of users); 1878, Bates v. Coe, 98 U. S. 31, 33; 1879, Planing-Machine Co. v. Keith, 101 U. S. 479, 493 (like Wilton v. Railroads).

§ 1856*d. [1] In a few of the following rules and rulings a more liberal rule was applied, in the direction above noted in the text:
CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, Nos. 383, 384 (a witness may be examined as for discovery); B. C. Rules of Court 1912, No. 487 (any person may be summoned for examination); Ont. Rules of Court 1913, No. 271 (the Court may order the examination of "any person" before trial).
UNITED STATES: Fed. 1907, Kurtz v. Brown, 152 Fed. 372, C. C. A.; 1908, Brown v. Huey, C. C. E. D. Pa., 166 Fed. 483 (stockbroker purchasing for another's account, here held not a third person); 1909, Griesa v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 8th C. C. A., 169 Fed. 509 (discovery held allowable, in litigation between an insurance company and legatees, against the widow as legal custodian of the insured's body, the issue being as to suicide);
Cal. 1906, Union Coll. Co. v. Superior Court, 149 Cal. 790, 87 Pac. 1035, semble (discovery from a third person as to the whereabouts of certain defendants, so as to be enabled to serve them with process, refused; but the ruling is absurd as regards the ground stated in the opinion, that the parties' whereabouts down, in an opinion which deserves notice for the inadequacy of the reasons put forward:

1906, International Coal Mining Company v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 214 Pa. 469, 63 Atl. 877. Assumpsit to recover rebates; from the record it appeared that while an action was pending, plaintiff entered a rule to take depositions on John Lloyd on eight days' notice. At a meeting held in pursuance of the rule, Lloyd was asked whether any officer or director of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was a stockholder in the Columbia Coal Company. The witness refused to answer the question. The Court subsequently made an order directing him to answer the question propounded to him.

BROWN, J.: "For cause existing, courts of equity permit testimony to be taken for its perpetuation. . . . When, in view of the condition, circumstances or conduct of a witness, his testimony may be lost to the party needing it, if not taken in advance of the trial, it ought to be so taken, but as courts of equity have not gone beyond this, it is the limit for courts of law. By the rule in the court below, under which the appellee insists that it has a right to examine the appellant outside of court and in advance of the trial, either party to a pending action may at any time, as a matter of course, with no cause existing for doing so, proceed to examine any witness in advance of the trial, though he be neither aged, infirm nor going, and there be no reason for supposing that he will not appear in court when subpœnaed to do so. The rule is: 'A rule may in like manner be entered by either party to take the depositions of witnesses without regard to the circumstances of their being aged, infirm or going witnesses, stipulating, however, eight days' notice to the adverse party; subject, nevertheless, in all other respects to the existing rules and regulations.'

"In the regular and orderly trial of a cause witnesses appear in open court, and jurors, from seeing, as well as hearing them, pass upon their credibility. Exception to this wise rule of the common law must be based upon some necessity requiring it to be disregarded in the interest of justice. But under the rule in the court below, for no reason and with no necessity for taking the deposition of a witness in advance of a trial, either party to the action, upon a mere whim or caprice, may compel the examination of every one of his witnesses before a magistrate or notary public in advance of the trial, and require the opposite party, with his counsel, to appear as often as such an examination takes place. In this disorderly innovation upon trial before a jury, licensed by the rule below, the rights of witnesses are not to be overlooked. As a rule, it is inconvenient for anyone to be interrupted in his business or vocation in life by being compelled, in obedience to a subpœna, to appear in court to testify on the trial of a cause; but every member of society must expect at times to be subjected to this inconvenience, because the administration of justice and his duty as a citizen require him to submit to it. This, however, is not the case when he is compelled to appear before a commissioner to testify in advance of the trial upon the mere whim or caprice of a plaintiff or defendant, and in the absence of any necessity requiring him to so appear. There having been no reason shown why the appellant should have been subjected to the inconvenience and annoyance of being called before a notary public to testify as a witness for the plaintiff in advance of the trial, he has a right to complain of the unwarranted calling of him away from his business, especially as he is liable to be called into court by the very party taking his deposition, to testify on the trial of the cause. It is of this that he complains, and his complaint is just. . . . We are informed that the learned court below has indicated its own view in this regard by rescinding the rule and adopting in its place one by which, 'upon notice and cause shown,' witnesses may be examined without regard to their being aged, infirm or going."

"cannot be said to be material"; such reasoning is not fit logic for judicial officers having responsibilities to the life and property of the community; the opinion, moreover, refers to the question of compelling "the defendant or a stranger" to make discovery as if there were no distinction between the two, and it does not appear what was the precise status of the person summoned); Ky. 1914, Willis v. Bank of Hardinsburg, 160 Ky. 808, 170 S. W. 188 (allowing the witness to be made to depose, under Civ. C. §§ 554, 557, 558); Mass. 1887, Post v. R. Co., 144 Mass. 341, 348, 11 N. E. 540 ("It is clear that Courts do not compel discovery from persons who sustain no other relation to the contemplated litigation, or to the subject of the suit, than that of witnesses; and it is also clear that a bill for discovery cannot be used to enable a plaintiff to fish for information of any causes of action he may have against other persons than the defendants"); 1917, American Security & T. Co. v. Brooks, 225 Mass. 500, 114 N. E. 732 (defendant a collection agency); Oh. 1906, Ex parte Schoepf, 74 Oh. 1, 77 N. E. 276, 279 (street-car injury); Pa. 1906, International Coal M. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 214 Pa. 469, 63 Atl. 877; W. Va. 1902, Hurricane Tel. Co. v. Mohler, 51 W. Va. 1, 41 S. E. 421 (good opinion, with a full citation of cases).

The following case further illustrates this question: 1910, Boston & Maine R. Co. v. State, 75 N. H. 513, 77 Atl. 996.

In these cases the problems that arise concern often the magistrate's or notary's power to rule on the relevancy of the questions (post, §§ 2195, 2210).

Now the real ground of opposition here was the witness' dislike to disclose the fact as to the holding of stock. It was not an annoyance at being summoned from his business. It seldom is. The learned Court's labored exposition of this annoyance to witnesses puts forward a conventional ground which is not the real ground. There is no propriety in shielding thus the true controversy over the policy of this kind of discovery. Cant reasons had better be abandoned. The real issue is, Can not discovery be properly extended, leaving to the trial Court to control the possibilities of abuse?

§ 1856*e*. Sundry Rules affecting Prior Disclosure of Testimony. Apart from the foregoing statutory adoption of chancery discovery for common-law cases, a few other methods of limited scope are found:

(1) A statutory exception to the common-law rule is in fact created wherever the prior filing of affidavits is required.[1]

(2) In a few jurisdictions a party appealing case from a magistrate may not use at the second trial any testimony not produced before the magistrate.[2] A similar measure is often applied to administrative tribunals whose decisions are subjected to review by the Courts.

(3) In all cases of depositions taken by the opponent, the notice required by the rule exacting an opportunity of cross-examination (ante, § 1378) results practically in advising the other party of the evidential facts desired to be proved by the opponent, and thus amounts to an exception under the present principle.

(4) So, also, the requirement that depositions be filed with the clerk of court a specified number of days before trial [3] accomplishes the same purpose, even where the other party did not attend the taking.[4] Whether an express notice

§ 1856*e*. [1] Example: Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 5384 (affidavits as to indorsement, partnership, protest by notary, etc., must be filed a specified time before trial). Compare § 1710, ante.

[2] Md. Annot. Code 1914, Art. 75, §§ 83, 84 (in cases of disputed boundaries, documents and witnesses not used at the survey may, on certain conditions, be excluded at the trial); N. J. Gen. St. 1896, Justices' Courts, §§ 86, 137, 160 (on appeal from justice's judgment, notice required on certain conditions for evidence not produced below; apparently abolished by the last clause in 1894). But the object of this measure seems mainly to be, not to protect against unfair surprise, but to diminish lengthy litigation and increase respect for magistrates' justice by compelling parties to treat it as a real trial and not merely as an empty formality preceding the actual contest.

[3] See the statutes cited' ante, §§ 1380–1383.

[4] The following case illustrates this application of such a statute: 1885, Searle v. Richardson, 67 Ia. 170, 172, 25 N. W. 113.

must be given under the present rule, where a deposition taken for a former trial is desired to be used at a second trial, depends more or less on the wording of these statutes.[5]

In no other respect does statute seem yet to have made any inroad upon the common-law rule.

3. Documents

§ 1857. Inspection by Discovery in Equity. Just as in chancery practice the party-opponent lacked a privilege as party to withhold his testimony and was compellable to disclose all his testimonial knowledge and belief, so he was compellable at the trial or hearing to produce documents in his possession which were serviceable as evidence (post, § 2219). It was therefore not difficult for the Court of Chancery to sanction the policy of obliging the opponent to exhibit such documents to the other party before the hearing, in order that the latter might inspect and copy them. Conceding no privilege of ultimate suppression, it was easy to require an earlier disclosure. Hence in chancery practice there was an apparent exception, as already noted (ante, § 1846), to the general rule denying the right of inspection before trial. Moreover, since the auxiliary jurisdiction of chancery was available to secure such discovery in aid of an action at common law, as well as in aid of bills for relief in chancery, this right of inspection was available, through a separate proceeding in chancery, for the purposes of a suit at law.

The 'modus operandi' was as follows:

1877, Professor C. C. Langdell, Equity Pleading, § 166: "[The plaintiff applies] to the Court for an order that the defendant produce the documents described in the answer and leave them with the clerk in court, and that the plaintiff have leave to inspect the same and take copies thereof. If the order is made, the documents produced pursuant to the order are treated as part of the answer; the effect of the production being the same as if the documents produced had been set forth verbatim in the answer. Indeed, by the ancient practice, documents were thus set forth in the answer, instead of being merely described. . . . By the modern practice, when documents have been left with the defendant's clerk in court, pursuant to an order, if the plaintiff wishes to have them produced before an examiner or at the hearing of the cause or on a trial at law, he does not subpœna the defendant as formerly, but the defendant's clerk in court attends with them upon request and upon being paid his usual fees. A production of documents may be wanted for three distinct purposes, first, that they may be inspected and a copy of them taken, secondly, that they may be exhibited to witnesses for the purpose of proving their execution or any other fact connected with them, thirdly, that they may be read in evidence at the hearing or trial of the cause. All of these purposes are perfectly accomplished by the modern practice; while the ancient practice failed to accomplish perfectly the first purpose, for it gave the plaintiff no opportunity to inspect the document till after the cause was at issue."

[5] Illustrations: Notice required: 1852, Samuel v. Withers, 16 Mo. 532, 535, 541 (under an early statute for chancery practice; "notice of its intended use should be given, or it should be filed anew in the suit, so that the party against whom it was intended to be read may have knowledge thereof"); 1853, Gitt v. Watson, 18 Mo. 274 (decree in a former chancery suit, not required to be filed); 1860, Cabanné v. Walker, 31 Mo. 274, 279, 286 ("The rule . . . is not an inflexible one, and may be dispensed with when the ends of justice require it").

Contra: 1869, Shaul v. Brown, 28 Ia. 37, 50.

But this right of inspection in chancery was an exception in superficial appearance only to the general rule (ante, § 1845) that a party is not entitled to ascertain before trial the tenor of his adversary's evidence. The strict limitation of this right of inspection was that it should include only those documents which contained the evidence of the applicant, and not those which contained the adversary's own evidence. If, for example, A sued B to enforce a contract, and the instrument was in B's possession, A could obtain inspection of that instrument, but not of a release which B might also possess. It is true that A might sometimes be unaware of the precise contents or even of the existence of documents evidencing his own case but possessed by B, and to this extent the discovery and inspection would relieve him from the risk of unfair surprise and would thus in spirit be an exception to the general rule and a decided improvement over his situation under common-law procedure. But this would be merely an accidental result in a given case; in theory of law he was inspecting merely that which was in a sense already his own. The strict and invariable rule, already briefly noted (ante, § 1846), in harmony with the rule already examined for witnesses (ante, § 1856*b*), was that no inspection in advance could be demanded of those documents which were to serve merely as the adversary's own evidence.

In short, there was in chancery no exception to the broad principle of the common law that a party is not entitled to ascertain before trial the tenor of the documentary evidence which the adversary possesses to support his own case.

However difficult and inconsistent this principle might be in its detailed application, it is essential to note its unquestioned acceptance as a principle; because whatever advances have been made in a more enlightened direction will thus be seen to be a distinct derogation from the established doctrine of chancery and to be wholly the creature of statute: [1]

1833, L. C. BROUGHAM, in Bolton v. Liverpool, 1 Myl. & K. 88, 91: "I take the principle to be this: A party has a right to the production of deeds sustaining his own title affirmatively, but not of those which are not immediately connected with the support of his own title and which form part of his adversary's. He cannot call for those which, instead of supporting his title, defeat it by entitling his adversary. Those under which both claim he may have, or those under which he alone claims. . . . The plaintiff here does not claim anything positively or affirmatively under the documents in question; he only defends himself against the claims of the corporation, and suggests that the documents evidencing their title may aid his defence. How? By proving his title, he says. But how can those documents prove his title? Only by disclosing some defect in that of the corporation. . . . He rests on the right which he has in common with all mankind to be exempt from dues and customs; and he says, 'Prove me liable if you can'; the corporation have certain documents which they say prove this liability. He cannot call for § 1857. [1] The details of chancery practice, for the reason already explained (ante, § 4), are without the purview of this work; the orthodox rules as to production of documents may be found in the usual treatises, and especially in the following: 1851, Pollock, Production of Documents for Inspection, pp. 6 ff.; 1895, Sutherland, Production and Inspection of Books and Papers; 1905, Ormerod v. St. George's Ironworks, 1 Ch. 505 (earlier practice as to taking copies, considered).

these documents merely because they may upon inspection be found not to prove his liability, and so to help him and hurt his adversary whose title they are."

1852, POLLOCK, C. B., in Hunt v. Hewitt, 7 Exch. 236, 244: "The right of a plaintiff in equity is limited, first, to a discovery confined to the questions in the cause; secondly, of such material documents as relate to the proof of his, the plaintiff's, case on the trial; and does not extend to the discovery of the manner in which the defendant's case is to be established, or to evidence which relates exclusively to his case. The party applying, therefore, who is in the same situation as a plaintiff in equity, must show, first, what is the nature of the suit, and of the question to be tried in it; and it seems also, that he should depose in his affidavit to his having just ground to maintain or defend it; secondly, the affidavit ought to state with sufficient distinctness the reason of the application and the nature of the documents, in order that it may appear to the Court or judge that the documents are asked for the purpose of enabling the party applying to support his case, not to find a flaw in the case of the opponent, and also that the opponent may admit or deny the possession of them. To this affidavit the opponent may answer, by swearing that he has no such documents, or that they relate exclusively to his own case, or that he is for any sufficient reason privileged from producing them; or he may submit to show parts, covering the remainder, on affidavit that the part concealed does not in any way relate to the plaintiff's case."

1877, Professor Langdell, Equity Pleading, §§ 59, 171: "In equity the parties are never entitled to inspect each other's documents, nor to have copies of them, nor in any way to know their precise contents until they are read upon the hearing. . . . But it is not always easy to distinguish accurately between what is evidence for the defendant and what is evidence for the plaintiff. So long as each party confines himself to evidence in support of an affirmative case or defence, there is little difficulty. . . . But it is sometimes assumed that when evidence is sought in support of a merely negative case, the evidence itself (and consequently the charge) may be negative [and yet be the plaintiff's own evidence]; but this seems to be clearly erroneous. When, therefore, a plaintiff in equity alleges that the defendant founds his case or defence upon a certain document in his possession, and then charges that the document does not in fact establish any such case or defence, while he is ostensibly seeking evidence in support of his own negative case or defence, he is in truth merely seeking to pry into the defendant's evidence, either with a view to finding out its weak points or in the hope of finding something which will tell in his own favor. . . . It seems therefore that such a charge is wholly illegitimate."

§ 1858. Inspection at Common Law (Oyer and Profert; Motion to Produce; Documents of Common Interest or of Trusteeship; Corporate Records; Insurance Policies). At common law the party-opponent was absolutely privileged from producing on the trial documentary evidence in his possession (post, § 2219). It was natural, then, to find that an inspection of his documentary evidence before trial could also not be obtained. It would be conceivable that he might be compellable to produce it upon trial and yet not to exhibit it before trial, — in other words, that his privilege might be abolished (as it has been), while his duty to avoid surprise might not be granted (as it has not always been). But it was entirely unlikely to find the privilege to withhold at the trial coexisting with an obligation to allow inspection before trial. Accordingly, what we find is that the limited right of inspection which did exist ran more or less parallel with the situations in which the privilege was either not applicable or was virtually negatived in chancery practice and therefore (to avoid circuity) in common-law practice also.

In brief, there were five distinct classes of situations in which a court of common law allowed to the party the inspection before trial of documents in the adversary's possession. Of these five situations, two alone presented genuine and plain exceptions to the general rule (ante, § 1845) that a party is not entitled to ascertain before trial the tenor of his adversary's evidence; the others rested either on some independent rule of law or on an attempt to approach the chancery rule that a party was entitled to inspect his own evidence that happened to be in the adversary's hands.

(1) Profert and Oyer. By the doctrine of profert and oyer, a party pleading a deed of a limited class was obliged to set forth its contents in his pleading; the historical connection of this doctrine with the rule forbidding proof of documents except by the original has been already noticed (ante, § 1177). As a consequence of this profert, i.e. the proffer at the trial, the opponent was entitled to oyer, i.e. the hearing of the reading of the document. But these phrases had grown up in the early days of oral pleading; and, ever since the practice of written pleading, the two parts of the process had been replaced, respectively, the profert, by a statement of the tenor of the document in the pleading of the party offering it, and the oyer, by an opportunity for the opponent before trial to inspect it and be furnished with a copy. The practice in the early 1800s was thus described by the most famous pleader (next to Mr. Joseph Chitty) of his day:

1828, Mr. Wm. Tidd, Practice, 9th ed., I, 586: "Oyer of deeds, etc., is demandable by the defendant or by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff in his declaration necessarily make a 'profert in curia' of any deed, writing, letters of administration, or the like, the defendant may pray oyer of the deed, etc., and must have a copy delivered to him, if demanded, paying for the same at the rate of fourpence per sheet. And a defendant who prays oyer of a deed is entitled to a copy of the attestation and names of the witnesses, as well as of every other part of the deed. So likewise, if the defendant in his plea make a necessary 'profert in curia' of any deed, etc., the plaintiff may pray oyer, and shall have a copy at the like rate. And the party of whom oyer is demanded is bound to carry the deed to the adverse party. . . . Formerly all demands of oyer were made in court, where the deed is by intendment of law when it is pleaded with a 'profert in curia'; and therefore, when oyer is craved, it is supposed to be of the Court, and not of the party; and the words 'ei legitur in hæc verba,' etc., are the act of the Court. In practice, however, oyer is now usually demanded and granted by the attorneys."

The effect of this degenerated tradition was practically to accomplish the wholesome purpose of allowing an inspection of the adversary's own documentary evidence before trial.

Thus, to the extent that profert was required and oyer was demandable (and they were correlative), a genuine exception to the general contrary rule (ante, § 1845) was recognized. It will be seen, however, that its recognition did not depend on any radical inroad upon the usual policy; for the party pleading the deed had in effect already betrayed its general tenor, and there was little to gain by an inspection, unless the handwriting or the names of the attesting witnesses were desired to be ascertained. Moreover, the narrow scope of the requirement, and the arbitrary quibbles governing its application, reduced it to a very limited usefulness. It contained the germ of great possibilities; but it was in practice not an extensive exception:

1831, Common Law Practice Commissioners, Third Report, 45: "By law, no profert is required to be made and consequently no oyer can be demanded of any instrument, except private deeds, letters testamentary, and letters of administration. If there are other cases, they are unfrequent and obscure. The following are consequently excluded: records and public writings of whatever description, private writings under seal but not falling within the legal definition of deeds (for example, a sealed will or a sealed award), and private writings not under seal of whatever description; and even of private deeds a numerous class is excepted, viz., such as take effect either by livery of seisin or by operation of the statute of uses. . . . The whole of this practice appears to be too strict, too intricate, and too prolix, and in some parts of it obscure and unsettled. It is strongly calculated to give rise to technical difficulty and formal objection, and tends in some other respects also to produce unnecessary delay and expense. The truth is that the law of profert and oyer was originally devised in reference to a state of things that no longer exists; being altogether founded on that method, now for so many ages obsolete, of oral pleading between litigants actually confronting each other in open court."

Profert and oyer have now virtually disappeared under modern statutes (post, § 1859*a*).

(2) Corporate and Manorial Records. That a member of a corporation or a copyholder of a manor had a right to inspect the records of the corporation or the manor had been settled before the 1700s; the membership of the one depended on the entry in the records and the title of the other passed by registration upon the books of the manorial lord. But this right to inspect rested not on a rule of Procedure or Evidence, but on the substantive law; in other words, the general right to inspect for a reasonable purpose existed apart from the pendency of litigation, and the right to inspect for obtaining evidence was merely an incidental exercise of the general and independent right. It would and did follow that a party to a cause could obtain evidence by inspection of the records of a corporation of which he was a member, even though the corporation was not a party to the cause,[1] and, conversely, that a party to a cause could not obtain inspection of the records

§ 1858. [1] 1730, Attorney-General v. Coventry, Bunb. 290 (cited infra, note 5); 1745, R. v. Hostmen, 2 Stra. 1223 (mandamus to admit a person to the fraternity; "the Court said that every member of the corporation had, as such, a right to look into the books for any matter that concerned himself, though it was in a dispute with others").

There was of course much learning as to whether a person had an entitling interest though not in strictness a member; moreover, the right was in those days confined to public corporations so-called; but these details are without the present purview; the following rulings illustrate them: 1701, R. v. Worsenham, 1 Ld. Raym. 705; 1734, Warriner v. Giles, 2 Stra. 954 (city market books); 1746, Brewers' Co. v. Benson, Barnes 236 (defendant allowed inspection of plaintiff's books, though no member, because their by-laws affected his right to trade); 1773, Allan v. Tap, 2 W. Bl. 850 (inspection of records of Clement's Inn, not a public corporation, not allowed); 1819, R. v. Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chitty 476 (action for neglecting to levy a writ; inspection of books of quarter sessions held not within the rule); 1824, Harrison v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 162 (action for penalty under a city by-law; inspection by defendant of corporate books allowed, the defendant being under corporate jurisdiction, though not a member).

of an opponent-corporation if he was not as a member entitled to inspection generally.[2]

Thus, whatever right of inspection was and still is recognized in such cases depends upon the extent of the substantive right of members of corporations, under the law of private corporations,[3] or of municipal corporations,[4] and is therefore without the present purview.

(3) Documents subject to a Common Interest or a Trusteeship. Apart from the preceding class of cases (which rested on no rule of Evidence properly so called), and from the rule of oyer, the common-law Courts at the beginning of the 1700s recognized no right to obtain before trial an inspection of documents in an adversary's hands:[5]

1698, Groenvelt v. Burrell, 1 Ld. Raym. 252 (refusing to the plaintiff an inspection and copy of the records of the college of physicians, in an action against one of them for false imprisonment): "This record may be pleaded without a 'profert in curia,' and therefore no oyer can be prayed of it, and therefore the defendants shall not be bound to give a copy, for it would be in effect to discover their evidence. And the plaintiff has no right in this record, therefore this case differs from the case of the public books of a corporation, for there the party has an interest. In the same manner, where there is a dispute between a lord and a copyholder, the copyholder shall see the rolls, because he has an interest in them."

In the first half of the 1700s are to be found rulings in which not only is the inspection refused where it would certainly have been granted a century

[2] 1744, R. v. Bridgeman, 2 Stra. 1203 (dispute between Wigan corporation and defendant; inspection refused, for otherwise "one private man would have as good a right to inspect the deeds and evidences of another"); 1800, Southampton v. Graves, 8 T. R. 590 (inspection of corporate records of defendant refused to plaintiff not a member; Lord Kenyon, C. J.: "Where the dispute is between different corporators, there an inspection may be granted; but I cannot conceive why an inspection of the muniments of a corporation should be granted when a similar inspection would be denied between private persons only").

[3] For the right of a stockholder, desiring to learn of the corporate doings, to obtain inspection (usually, whether he must proceed by mandamus rather than by bill of discovery), see the following cases:

CANADA: 1903, Merritt v. Copper Crown Co., 36 N. Sc. 383.

UNITED STATES: 1905, Guthrie v. Harkness, 199 U. S. 148, 26 Sup. 4; 1922, State ex rel. Theile v. Cities Service Co., — Del. —, 115 Atl. 733; 1910, Venner v. Chicago City R. Co., 246 Ill. 170, 92 N. E. 643; 1912, White v. Manter, 109 Me. 408, 84 Atl. 890; 1918, Knox v. Coburn, 117 Me. 409, 104 Atl. 789; 1915, Klotz v. Pan-American Match Co., 221 Mass. 38, 108 N. E. 764 (foreign corporation); 1920, Shea v. Parker, 234 Mass. 592, 126 N. E. 47 (whether the stockholder may copy the names of the stockholders); 1907, Hub Construction Co. v. New England B. Club, 74 N. H. 282, 67 Atl. 574; 1900, Fuller v. Hollander, 61 N. J. Eq. 648, 47 Atl. 646; 1901, Trimble v. American Sugar-Ref. Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 340, 48 Atl. 912; 1899, Re Steinway, 159 N. Y. 250, 53 N. E. 1103; 1919, Lien v. Savings Loan & Trust Co., 43 N. D. 260, 174 N. W. 621; 1915, State v. Ice, — W. Va. —, 84 S. E. 181; 1921, State ex rel. Dempsey v. Werra A. F. Co., 173 Wis. 651, 182 N. W. 354.

[4] For the right of a citizen to inspect public records, see the following: 1921, Caldwell v. Board of Public Works, — Cal. —, 202 Pac. 870 (county engineer's plans, etc., for a reservoir project in the Hetch Hetchy valley); 1905, State v. McMillan, 49 Fla. 243, 38 So. 666 (records of deeds, etc.); 1903, Marsh v. Sanders, 110 La. 726, 34 So. 752 (poll-tax books); 1906, State v. Grimes, 29 Nev. 50, 84 Pac. 1061 (collecting the cases); 1906, Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 Atl. 146 (State auditor's vouchers); 1904, Payne v. Staunton, 55 W. Va. 202, 46 S. E. 927.

[5] Accord: 1730, Attorney-General v. Coventry, Bunb. 290 (action against trustees of a charity; inspection not compelled; "this being their private evidence, they shall not be obliged to discover it; and it is not like the case of corporation books or court rolls, which are of a public nature"; even for manorial rolls, a stranger to the manor could not obtain inspection, though otherwise for a copyholder, whether the lord of the manor is a party or not).

later, but even the very principle and distinction on which the Courts later proceeded were expressly denied a recognition.[6]

But with the accession of Lord Mansfield, in 1756, to that moral dominion in the common-law realm which he exercised throughout a generation, a decided change was noticeable. His ideas were a century in advance of his time, as subsequent events proved. But while he held sway, a broad and liberal practice prevailed — a practice whose avowed object was to afford summarily to a party at law, upon mere motion, as ample an assistance of the present sort as he could have obtained by the tedious and expensive process of a bill of discovery in chancery.[7] This advanced rule seems to have been unquestioned during Lord Mansfield's time.[8]

On the arrival of Lord Kenyon as his successor, in 1788, a halt was called. The antagonism of mental attitude between this reactionary and his brilliant predecessor, and between their respective schools of followers, is well known. The unprogressive influences of thought were now in command of the English judiciary. So far as any one man could nullify the (to him) dangerous innovations of the preceding régime, Lord Kenyon set himself to do it. Applying in decorous fashion and under the forms of law the maxim of a Kilkenny fair, he proceeded to strike wherever he saw such an innovation. That it had been introduced or developed by Lord Mansfield was enough for him; it stood condemned. The result was, in the first place, a repudiation of this general practice of granting inspection wherever it could have been obtained in chancery, and, in the next place, a mazy uncertainty as to the precise extent to which the right would still be conceded.[9] Not all the advance was lost; the tradition of Lord Mansfield's generation still lingered on in practice, in spite of his successor's unequivocal censure; and after Lord Kenyon's death in 1802, a counter-reaction set in. There was also still the [6] 1705, Ward v. Apprice, 6 Mod. 264 (inspection not compelled of a book kept by the defendant as part-owner of a ship, but intrusted to the custody of the plaintiff as another part owner; "if he has broke his trust, you must seek for remedy in equity"; yet the Court "owned it to be a mischievous case," where "one common book of their transactions" was kept thus private; and conceded that in an action on a single indenture inspection would be allowed the opponent); 1707, Hill v. Aland, 1 Salk. 215 (action on special agreement in a note; defendant not allowed to have a copy from the plaintiff; to which, in 1795, Mr. Evans, the editor, appends the significant note, "quære, whether in modern practice such a rule would not be made absolute?").

The remarks of the Court in Jevens v. Harridge, 1 Wms. Saund. 8 (1667), sometimes cited as an early recognition of the later doctrine, do not seem to bear this meaning. Mr. J. Vaughan Williams, in Pritchett v. Smart (1849), 7 C. B. 625, says: "It is difficult to say how the Court acquired the equitable jurisdiction which they exercise in compelling the production of documents."

[7] 1785, Barry v. Alexander, Tidd's Pract. I. 592, 9th Eng. ed. (Mansfield, L. C. J.: "Wherever the defendant would be entitled to a discovery, he should have it here, without going into equity").

[8] In 1800, in Southampton v. Graves, 8 T. R. 590, Mr. J. Grose remarked: "When I first came into this court, it was understood to be the constant practice to grant rules of this kind as matters of course." It seems to have been generally conceded by the judges of the ensuing generation that the common-law right of inspection came in with Lord Mansfield and was under him more liberal than afterwards; e.g. by Dallas, C. J., in Threlfall v. Webster, infra.

[9] 1823, Dallas, C. J., in Threlfall v. Webster, 1 Bing. 161: "My mind is surrounded by difficulties on the subject of these applications, although it has been usual to comply with them."

unquestionable rule, noticed above (par. 2), permitting inspection of corporate and manorial books; and it was apparently upon the analogy of this doctrine that the phrasing of the general right of inspection by parties now came to be fashioned.

It began to be said, from 1800 onwards, that a party was entitled to prior inspection whenever he had an interest in the document, or (in another phrasing, meant to be equivalent) wherever the opponent was the virtual trustee of the document. But there was for a generation afterwards no semblance of judicial agreement, either as to this formal definition, or, when it was accepted, as to its application in similar cases. It is impossible to harmonize the rulings that ensued; until, in the second quarter of the century, something like a consensus was reached for a definition of the above tenor.[10]

[10] The rulings are as follows: 1798, Chetwind v. Marnell, 1 B. & P. 271 (inspection refused for defendant of a bond on which action was brought; the suggestion of forgery disinclined the judge to order the plaintiff to do that "which might be the means of convicting him of a capital felony"; a poor reason, since the plaintiff could not recover on trial without doing the same supposed dangerous thing); 1808, Blakey v. Porter, 1 Taunt. 386 (plaintiff allowed to inspect and copy an indenture of lease, in an action on a covenant therein, plaintiff never having had a duplicate original); 1811, Bateman v. Phillips, 4 Taunt. 157 (unstamped agreement of guarantee, in which plaintiff was interested, though not technically a party to it; order for production by defendant granted, that plaintiff might stamp it and render it admissible in evidence); 1812, King v. King, 4 Taunt. 666 (similar facts to Blakey v. Porter, with similar ruling; "it must be understood that when one part only is executed of a deed, the party who holds it is trustee for the other"); 1815, Street v. Brown, 6 Taunt. 302 (inspection refused for the plaintiff, in an action on a charter-party, of the defendant's counterpart, the plaintiff's part being lost; the principle of granting is "that the party holding the deed was a trustee for the other"); 1814, Harris v. Aldrit, 2 Chitty 229 (inspection allowed of a mortgage by defendant to plaintiff; being in plaintiff's possession, it had been seized and given in custody, with the plaintiff's other papers, to a constable apprehending him on a charge of felony); 1817, Cooke v. Tanswell, 8 Taunt. 131 (order for inspection of an indenture, recognized; "these applications are themselves of novel introduction; the Court is inclined rather to confine than to enlarge the practice"); 1819, R. v. Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chitty 476 (Abbott, C. J.: "The ordinary case where the Court allows a party to inspect documents in the hands of a third person is that in which the party called upon is the trustee for the applicant, . . . where the documents came originally into the trustee's hands . . . for the benefit and advantage of the party desiring to see them"); 1819, Morrow v. Saunders, 1 B. & B. 318 (inspection allowed to plaintiff of a partnership deed, in an action on a contract to form a partnership; no counterpart of the deed having ever existed); 1823, Threlfall v. Webster, 1 Bing. 161 (inspection refused for plaintiff of bills of exchange on which action was brought, said to have come into defendant's hands by fraud; Dallas, C. J.: "How to dispose of these cases must depend upon the discretion of the judges"); 1823, Beale v. Bird, 2 Dowl. & R. 419 (inspection of agreement forming the basis of the action, not allowed for the purpose of pleading in abatement); 1823, Pickering v. Noyes, 1 B. &. C 262 ("Is there any case where a deed has been ordered to be produced, unless it has been deposited in the hands of the holder as a trustee for others only or for others jointly with himself?"; inspection refused of a deed to defendant in an action of trespass q. c. f.); 1824, Hildyard v. Smith, 1 Bing. 457 (action on a bill of exchange; inspection refused to defendant, though forgery was suggested); 1825, Ratcliffe v. Bleasey, 3 Bing.148 ("The principle established by all the cases is that a party can only be compelled to produce a deed where he holds it as trustee for another"; here inspection of a partnership deed was refused to a plaintiff in an action for breach of agreement, the plaintiff not being a party to the deed; "if the plaintiff had any interest, the defendant would not be permitted to withhold the deed"); 1827, Woodcock v. Worthington, 2 Y. & J. 4 (lease; "where one part only is executed, the inspection may be obtained against the party who has the custody of it, who is considered to be a trustee of the other party; but where two parts have been executed interchangeably between the parties, the rule is different"); 1827, Browning v. Aylwin, 7 B. & C. 204 (inspection allowed to plaintiff of defendant's brokers' books, containing the sole original of a contract in issue; here the defendant's bond to the city covenanted to allow such inspection); 1828,

The rule thus established may properly be called a common-law doctrine, although it was modelled on equitable analogy, was late in permanent acceptance, and was seldom recognized in the practice inherited by American courts.[11]

Rundle v. Beaumont, 4 Bing. 537 (action on a charter-party; inspection of plaintiff's log-book refused to defendant, no interest being shown; Ratcliffe v. Bleasey held to express the law); 1828, Rowe v. Howden, 4 Bing. 539 (action by ship-owners against broker; inspection of a letter in defendant's hands refused, plaintiff having no interest); 1829, Bousfield v. Godfrey, 5 Bing. 418 (action on a written contract; inspection allowed, for stamping and copying, of a sole original of which defendant had surreptitiously obtained possession); 1830, Blogg v. Kent, 6 Bing. 614 (inspection allowed to plaintiff of the sole original of a contract sued upon); 1830, Imperial Gas Co. v. Clarke, 7 Bing. 95 ("trustee" rule recognized; here, the inspection was sanctioned for a director against the corporation); 1831, Hewitt v. Pigott, 7 Bing. 400 (deed to trustees for creditors; order for inspection refused; Park, J.: "In general a party is not bound to exhibit his muniments to an adversary"); 1883, Cocks v. Nash, 6 C. & P. 154 (trustee of a deed for the plaintiff, held not compellable to produce it for the defendant); 1835, Edginton v. Nixon, 2 Bing. N. C. 316 (copy granted against one who had obtained the original by spoliation); 1837, Charnock v. Lumley, 5 Scott 438 (action on an agreement by defendant to publish plaintiff's book; inspection of the agreement allowed to the plaintiff); 1838, Smith v. Winter, 3 M. & W. 309 (inspection refused to defendant of a deed to A., for whom defendant was surety; defendant held not to be "such a party as entitles him to inspect the deed"); 1841, Woolner v. Devereux, 9 Dowl. Pr. 672 (inspection allowed by defendant of a note on which action was brought; "the judge has jurisdiction to make such an order, if the circumstances call for it, as, if there is any suggestion of forgery, or that the instrument has been dealt with since it was executed, or where the party swears that he has no recollection that he has made such a note"); 1843, Thomas v. Dunn, 6 M. & Gr. 274 (action on a contract; inspection ordered for defendant of the original in plaintiff's attorney's hands; deposit with the masters being refused); 1845, Goodliff v. Fuller, 14 M. & W. 4 (inspection refused to plaintiff of plaintiff's letters to defendant, in an action for breach of promise of marriage; "this is not a case where the instrument is held by one of the parties as a trustee for the other"); 1846, Steadman v. Arden, 15 M. & W. 587 (facts like the next case; Alderson, B.: "All that is material is that both parties have an interest in the documents and that an inspection of them is material to the prosecution of the action"); 1848, Ley v. Barlow, 1 Exch. 800 (parliamentary contract and subscriber's agreement of a railroad corporation, the plaintiff being an allottee of shares; Parke, B.: "All the parties to that deed have 'prima facie' a right to inspect it, as it is not private property"); 1849, Pritchett v. Smart, 7 C. B. 625 (action on bill of exchange; inspection of opponent's books not allowed, since the applicant "has no interest in the book"); 1852, Doe v. Roe, 1 E. & B. 279 (right of entry for breach of covenant in lease; inspection allowed to tenant); 1853, Second Report of Common Law Practice Commissioners, 34 ("Independently of statutory enactment, the Courts of common law have exercised the power of compelling the production of documents for the purpose of being stamped so as to be available in evidence, as also the inspection of documents upon which the action or defence is immediately founded, as well as of documents necessary for the purpose of evidence in which the applicant has a direct interest and which are held by the opposite party in a fiduciary capacity, and of certain documents of a public character such as the rolls of a manor or corporation books"); 1860, Price v. Harrison, 8 C. B. N. S. 617, 634 (Williams, J.: "About 25 or 30 years ago, the rule laid down was that inspection would only be granted where there was but one copy of the document and the party holding it held it as a quasi-trustee for the other party; but long before the late act [of 14 & 15 Vict.] the rule had been extended so as to include every case where the party seeking to inspect has an interest in the document"); 1920, O'Rourke v. Darbishire, A. C. 581 (scope of proprietary right of discovery, considered).

[11] There were early statutes in many States, and this may explain the paucity of common-law rulings.

The early New York cases are as follows: 1811, Brush v. Gibbon, 2 Cow. 18, note (inspection allowed to defendant of a note in plaintiff's possession, defendant expecting to prove it a forgery); 1813, Lawrence v. Ins. Co., 11 Johns. 245, note (inspection allowed to an insured of documents in possession of the insurer); 1822, Willis v. Bailey, 19 Johns. 268 (inspection refused of papers not shown to be the foundation of the action; the prior decision was reached "not without some hesitation," and proceeded on the principle that similar discovery in equity could have been had); 1824, Denslow v. Fowler, 2 Cow. 592 (trover for a bond; inspection not allowed the plaintiff of the bond, which had been de-

The interesting question is whether it represented in fact an exception to the general rule against allowing prior inspection of the adversary's own evidence. On the one hand, it was clearly regarded by the common-law judges as something less than could be obtained in chancery; and in chancery, as already noticed (ante, § 1857), the inspection was limited to documents sustaining the applicant's own case. Moreover, its underlying theory was that the applicant was merely inspecting his own property. On the other hand, it is plain that the documents sometimes granted for inspection were purely revelations of the adversary's own evidence; that is to say, the applicant might have an "interest" in them, and yet they might be solely his adversary's muniments of claim, — as where to a defendant is granted inspection of a note sued upon. However this might be, it would seem that the common-law Courts believed that they were doing less, and never more. than the Chancellor would have done; and the apparent anomalous instances may perhaps be explained under the ensuing principle (par. 4).

(4) Postponing Defendant's Pleading. In the time of Lord Mansfield there arose a practice of securing inspection, by indirection, in favor specially of defendants. This consisted in allowing the defendant a stated interval to plead unless the plaintiff in the meantime permitted the inspection.[12] The effect of this seems to have been distinct from the order of inspection, just examined (supra, par. 3), in that, first, it was available only for defendants, and secondly, it was unlimited as to the class of documents. Nevertheless it was sometimes spoken of as an equivalent for a bill of discovery; [13] and its precise status does not seem clear. After 1800 it probably became merged in the confused practice already noticed as to orders to produce, and it is probable that some of that confusion was due to precedents in which defendants, under the present principle, had received different treatment from plaintiffs.

(5) Insurance Documents. In actions upon insurance policies, the practice livered to defendant); 1824, People v. Vail, 2 Cow. 623 (inspection allowed of an application for a highway, as being a public document); 1824, Jackson v. Jones, 3 Cow. 17 (ejectment; inspection allowed to the plaintiff of deeds relied on by the defendant for his defence, the plaintiff expecting to prove them forgeries); 1825, Wallis v. Murray, 4 Cow. 399 (inspection allowed to plaintiff of a written contract on which the action was founded, though a counterpart, now lost, had once been in plaintiff's hands; the English limitation as to trusteeship, discarded; equitable principle of discovery adopted); 1826, Bank of Utica v. Hillard, 6 Cow. 62 (inspection not allowed to defendant of entries in plaintiff's books relating to a note declared on; "this practice is of recent origin in England"); 1832, Townsend v. Lawrence, 9 Wend. 458 (Wallis v. Murray held to represent the sound doctrine).

Occasionally a modern court notices the doctrine: 1904, Alabama G. I. School v. Reynolds, 143 Ala. 579, 42 So. 114 (books kept by a party in a fiduciary relation are subject to inspection for pending litigation, irrespective of the general limitations of discovery in equity).

[12] 1789, Witter v. Cazalets, Tidd's Practice, I, 592, 9th Eng. ed. (Buller, J., giving as a reason that the defendant within the time might in any case obtain discovery in equity); see it also recognized by Heath, J., in Bateman v. Phillips (1811), 4 Taunt. 157, 163; and by Eldon, L. C., in Princess of Wales v. Lord Liverpool (1818), 1 Swanst. 114.

[13] 1808, Clifford v. Taylor, 1 Taunt. 167 (defendant allowed to plead after delivery to him of copies of policies, etc., by plaintiff; Mansfield, C. J.: "This practice of compelling the delivery of copies is very convenient, for it saves the delay and expense of a bill in equity").

became settled, in the early 1800s, to grant inspection of all relevant documents.[14] Whether this was merely a clear instance of the principle of par. 3, above, or fell rather under the practice noted in par. 4, above, or formed a distinct arbitrary rule by itself, is not clear. In this class of cases, at any rate, the right to inspection had become settled, irrespective of whether the documents belonged to one's own case.[15]

(6) Any right of inspection before trial was available solely against the opponent, and, except for the case of corporate records (ante, § 1857, par. 2), not against a third person not a party;[16] this was upon the analogy that a bill of discovery did not lie against a third person (ante, § 1856*d*), and though open to argument as a needless restriction, it seems not to have been changed under most modern statutes (post, § 1859*f*).

§ 1859. Inspection under Statutes. By the middle of the 1800s, in England, and long before that time, in a few of the United States, professional opinion had come to be satisfied that some better methods, more summary in effect and more broad in scope, should be made available for parties seeking inspection of documents in the adversaries' hands; and legislation everywhere made changes.[1] This legislation was plainly animated by a conviction

[14] 1808, Goldschmidt v. Marryat, 1 Camp. 559, 562 (in actions on policies of insurance, orders to the plaintiff to produce all papers concerning the cause "had become extremely common, . . . as they often obviate the necessity of going into a court of equity"); 1808, Clifford v. Taylor, supra, note 13; 1866, Rayner v. Ritson, 6 B. & S. 888 (insurer is entitled to inspect all documents in insured's possession material to the issue, irrespective of whether they form a part of the insurer's case; the traditional practice is not taken away by St. 14 & 15 Vict.); 1904, Boulton v. Houlder, 1 K. B. 784 (action to recover insurance money paid in excess; the plaintiff was allowed discovery of certain ship's papers; practice in insurance cases reviewed).

[15] It was not recognized in the United States: 1813, Sage v. Ins. Co., 5 Day Conn. 409, 413 (inspection not required, for the insured, of documents in an insurer's hands; "this would be a very extraordinary and novel practice in our courts of law"); except perhaps in New York; Lawrence v. Ins. Co., supra, note 11.

[16] 1735, Crew v. Saunders, 2 Stra. 1005 (action against postmasters; plaintiff refused inspection of books of post-office authorities, not being parties; the plaintiff not having a personal interest in the books); 1833, Cocks v. Nash, 9 Bing. 723 (inspection refused to defendant, surety for N. of a deed between N. and her creditors, held by H. as trustee; the apparent reason being that the trustee on the trial might appear to be absolutely privileged from disclosure); 1825, Davenbagh v. M'Kinnie, 5 Cow. 27 (inspection not allowed of a deed in E.'s hand, constituting a link in plaintiff's title); 1888, Henry v. Ins. Co., 35 Fed. 15, semble.

§ 1859. [1] The statutes are as follows; the list includes those which in any way affect the right of inspection before trial or the compulsory production upon trial; in the latter aspect, however, they will be again considered in dealing with the Party's Privilege as to Documents, post, § 2219:

ENGLAND: 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 6 (upon action pending, any judge may on application by either party "compel the opposite party to allow the party making the application to inspect all documents in the custody or under the control of such opposite party relating to such action or other legal proceeding, and, if necessary, to take examined copies of the same or procure the same to be duly stamped, in all cases in which previous to the passing of this act a discovery might have been obtained by filing a bill or by any other proceeding in a court of equity"); 1853, Second Report of Common Law Practice Commissioners, 35 (recommended that the application for documents be accompanied by a right to discovery whether the opponent had in fact such documents in his possession, so as to make the process coextensive with that of a bill in chancery; the following statute carried this out); 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 50 ("Upon the application of either party to any cause or other civil proceeding in any of the superior courts upon an affidavit by such party of his belief that any document to the production of which he is entitled for the purpose of discovery or otherwise is in the possession or power of the opposite party, it shall be lawful for the Court or judge to that the existing principles were defective, and that, for the reasons already examined (ante, § 1847), a determined inroad should be made on the sports-order" that the opponent answer as to such custody and as to the objection if any to production; and then "the Court or judge may make such further order thereon as shall be just"); 1883, as amended to 1921, Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XXXI, Rule 12 (any party may apply for an order "directing any other party to any cause or matter to make discovery on oath of the documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question therein. On the hearing of such application the Court or judge may either refuse or adjourn the same, if satisfied that such discovery is not necessary, or not necessary at that stage of the cause or matter, or make such order, either generally or limited to certain classes of documents, as may, in their or his discretion, be thought fit. Provided that discovery shall not be ordered when and so far as the Court or judge shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the cause or matter or for saving costs"); Rule 14 (a judge may at any stage during a cause "order the production by any party thereto, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question in such cause or matter, as the Court or judge shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just"); Rule 15 (any party may give notice to any other party "in whose pleadings or affidavits reference is made to any document," to produce such document for inspection and copying by the opponent; and a party not complying shall not be allowed to put such document afterwards in evidence, "unless he shall satisfy the Court or a judge that such document relates only to his own title, he being a defendant to the cause or matter, or that he had some other cause or excuse which the Court or judge shall deem sufficient," etc.); Rule 18, par. 2 ("Any application to inspect documents, except such as are referred to in the pleadings, particulars, or affidavits of the party against whom the application is made, or disclosed in his affidavit of documents, shall be founded upon an affidavit showing of what documents inspection is sought, that the party applying is entitled to inspect them, and that they are in the possession or power of the other party. The Court or judge shall not make such order for inspection of such documents when and so far as the Court or judge shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the cause or matter or for saving costs"); Rule 19A, par. 1 ("Where inspection of any business books is applied for, the Court or a judge may, if they or he shall think fit, instead of ordering inspection of the original books, order a copy of any entries therein to be furnished and verified by the affidavit of some person who has examined the copy with the original entries, and such affidavit shall state whether or not there are in the original book any and what erasures, interlineations, or alterations. Provided that, notwithstanding that such copy has been supplied, the Court or a judge may order inspection of the book from which the copy was made"); Rule 21 ("If any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall be liable to attachment. He shall also, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his action dismissed for want of prosecution, and, if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating may apply to the court or a judge for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly").

CANADA: Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, Nos. 238–241, 364–376; British Columbia: Rules of Court 1912, Rules 343–370*t*; Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rules 424–441; New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 111, §§ 240–255, c. 112, §§ 72–80; Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 28; Northwest Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rules 191–200, 207, 208; Nova Scotia: Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 30, Rules 12–22; Ontario: Rules of Court 1914, Rules 274, 341, 348–353; Prince Edward Isl. St. 1873, c. 22, §§ 244–248; St. 1853, c. 12, §§ 1, 9; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rules 201–210.

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1789, c. 20, § 15, Rev. St. 1878, c. 12, § 724, Code 1919, § 1361 (in trials at law, the U. S. courts may on motion require the parties "to produce books or writings in their possession or power, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery"; on failure to produce, judgment of nonsuit or default may be given); St. 1874, June 22, c. 391, § 5, Code § 10104 (in civil suits under revenue-laws, on failure to produce, allegations are to be taken as confessed, unless nonproduction is explained to the Court's satisfaction); Equity Rules 1912, Rule 58 ("documents . . . containing evidence material to the cause of action or defense of his adversary"); 1920, Admiralty Rules, U. S. Sup. Ct., 268 Fed. No. 4, p. ix, Rule 32 ("documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter or question in issue"); 1909, Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. 370 (an order under the Arkansas Anti-Trust Act of 1905, striking out an answer of refusal man's theory that the adversary is entitled to keep his own evidence to himself until the trial. Nevertheless, looking merely at the words of the statutes and entering judgment by default, held not a violation of the 14th Federal Amendment);

Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 4058, 4059 (in trials at law, "on motion and due notice thereof," the Court may "require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession or power, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceedings in chancery"; on penalty, for failure to comply, of judgment of nonsuit or default);
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1322 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 533);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 1759 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000; but using "any book, document, or paper" as the description of the things to be inspected); § 1760 ("Any party to a civil action may, not less than five days before the trial, serve upon the adverse party, or his attorney, a written notice requiring such adverse party to produce at the trial such books, papers, documents or writings, in his possession, or under his control, as may be specified in such notice, and if the adverse party fails to produce the same at the trial the party giving the notice shall be entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents of such books, papers, documents or writings");
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, §§ 4137–4141 (the Court may compel "any party to a suit pending therein to produce any books, papers, and documents in his possession or under his control relating to the merits of such suit or to any defense therein," upon suitable affidavit; on failure to comply, a nonsuit may be ordered or a plea struck out or a particular defence barred); § 4143 (regulating proceedings in equity for producing documents);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1000 (the Court may, in a pending action, "upon notice, order either party to give to the other, within a specified time, an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy, of entries of accounts in any book, or of any document or paper in his possession, or under his control, containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or the defense therein"; on penalty, in case of refusal, of exclusion of the document from evidence or of direction to presume it to be as alleged, and also of punishment for contempt); 1901, San Fernando C. M. & R. Co. v. Humphrey, 111 Fed. 772 (statute applied);
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 390 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000); § 1774 (in irrigation proceedings, no party "willfully refusing to produce any book or paper, if in his or their power to do so, when rightfully demanded for examination and copying, shall be allowed the benefit of any testimony or proofs in his, her, or their behalf"); § 3350 (stolen ore; claimant may inspect the books of any person engaged in milling, shipping, etc., ores); § 5377 ("the books and accounts of any deceased person or mental incompetent shall be subject to the inspection of all persons interested therein");
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1072 ("In an action at common law the Court may, on motion, and on reasonable notice thereof, require the parties to produce books and writings in their possession or power, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, in cases and under circumstances where they might heretofore have been compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery");
Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, §§ 5764–5769 (covers documents "material to the support or defense of the suit");
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 4228 ("At any time during the pendency of actions at law, the Court, on motion and due notice thereof, may order a party to produce books or writings in his possession or control, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, under circumstances in which the production of the same might be compelled by a court of chancery"; upon failure to comply, judgment of nonsuit or default may be given, and the chancery powers of enforcement may be used);
Florida: G. S. 1919, § 2733 (on ten days' notice, the Court may require the opponent "to produce books and other writings in his possession, power or custody, which shall contain evidence pertinent to the issue"; on failure to comply without excuse, judgment of nonsuit or default may be given);
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5837–5842 (Courts of common law may on ten days' notice require "either party to produce books and other writings in his possession, power, custody or control which shall contain evidence pertinent to the cause in question, under circumstances where such party might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in equity"; detailed rules as to notice; penalty of judgment of nonsuit or default may be imposed); 1904, Branan v. Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co., 119 Ga. 738, 46 S. E. 882 (Code applied);
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2591 (the Court may "compel the opposite party to allow the party making the application to inspect all documents in the custody or under the control of such party relating to such cause or other proceeding, and if necessary to take examined copies of the same, in all cases in which previous to Sept. 19, 1876, a discovery might have been obtained in a court of equity" by the applicant);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7193 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000); concerning documentary evidence, it is not in every case apparent that they have done so. This, therefore, became a chief question in the application of Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 9 (Courts are empowered "in any action pending before them, upon motion, and good and sufficient cause shown, and reasonable notice thereof given, to require the parties or either of them to produce books or writings in their possession or power which contain evidence pertinent to the issue"); 1904, Swedish-American Tel. Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co., 208 Ill. 562, 70 N. E. 768 (provided the terms of the order require the exhibition of relevant documents and entries only, the statute is not unconstitutional; here, the books of an insured, in an action by a liability-insurer, were produced to show the date on which the premium was agreed to be based; but there is no occasion for invoking the Constitution to limit such statutes);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 502 (a Court may "upon affidavit of their necessity and materiality upon motion compel by order either party to produce at or before the trial any book paper or document in his possession or power," upon reasonable notice); § 503 (a Court may "under proper restrictions upon due notice order either party to give the other within a specified time an inspection and copy of any book, or part thereof, paper or document in his possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or the defense therein"; on refusal, the Court may "exclude such or punish the party refusing or both");

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4654, Code 1919, § 7361 (a Court "may in its discretion by rule require the production of any papers or books which are material to the just determination of any cause pending before it, for the purpose of being inspected and copied by or for the party thus calling for them"); Code 1897, §§ 4655, 4656, Code 1919, §§ 7362, 7363 (requisites of petition stated; on failure, without excuse to obey order, the same consequences prescribed as for failure to obey subpœna);

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7241 (in civil cases, any party may take the deposition of the adverse party or agent, etc., if out of the jurisdiction or cannot be reached; and if due production of documents, etc., is not made, the Court may strike from the files the pleadings of such adverse party and render judgment against him); § 7269 (either party may demand of the opponent "an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy, of a book paper or document in his possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or defense therein"; the demand to be written and to specify particulars; on refusal within four days, the Court may on motion and notice order such inspection or copy, and on failure to comply with the order, may exclude the document or direct it to be presumed to be as alleged); § 7270 (either party, if required, shall deliver to the other "a copy of any deed instrument or other writing whereon his action or defense is founded or which he intends to offer in evidence at the trial"; on refusal, the party's original shall be excluded at the trial); § 6420 (anti-trust law);

Louisiana: C. Pr. 1900, § 140 (the Court may order a party to bring into court "the books, papers and other documents which are in his possession and which are material in the cause," upon sworn petition; on refusal, unless production is shown impossible, the facts are to be taken as confessed); § 473 (on motion, a party may be ordered to produce in court on the trial day "books, papers or other documents" in his possession);

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 24 ("Where books, papers, or written instruments material to the issue" are in opponent's possession, "and access thereto is refused," production "for inspection" may be ordered upon motion; nonsuit or default may follow failure to comply);

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 75, § 99 (the Court may on motion require the parties to produce certified copies of books or writings "in their possession or power," containing evidence "pertinent to the issue," in cases where they might be compelled to give discovery in chancery; on failure to comply, judgment may be given by default);

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, §§ 7, 32 (for written instruments declared on by plaintiff or relied on in answer, a Court may on motion order the filing of a copy or the original; quoted post, § 1859*a*, n. 4); § 38 ("no party shall be required [in his pleading] to state evidence, or to disclose the means by which he intends to prove his cause"); §§ 61–67 (quoted ante, § 1856*a*); § 68 ("Every party to any cause or proceeding may inspect and take copies of any document referred to in the pleading or particulars of any other party and relied on by such other party," unless it is not in opponent's control or that he has "some other reasonable excuse," etc.);

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12025–12027;

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7529 (in justices' courts, "when a cause of action or counterclaim arises upon an account or instrument for the payment of money only, it shall be sufficient for the party to deliver the account or instrument to the Court" and state the amount due; the Court may at the time of pleading require that such writing or account be exhibited to the inspection of the adverse party with liberty to copy the same; or, if not so exhibited, may prohibit its being afterward given in evidence); § 8447 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000);

these statutes; namely, whether they had not merely furnished a more summary procedure in common-law courts (for this was usually clear), but had

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1003, Hem. § 723 ("The Court in which any action or suit is pending may on good cause shown, and after notice of the application to the opposite party, order either party to give to the other, within a specified time and on such terms as may be imposed, an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy, of any books, papers, or documents in his possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or proceeding or of the defense thereto"; on penalty, for a refusal, of having the documents excluded from evidence, or nonsuit or judgment by default); 1902, Equitable Life Ass. Soc'y v. Clark, 80 Miss. 471, 31 So. 964 (statute of 1900 applied);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 1374 (the Court shall have power "to compel any party to a suit pending therein to produce any books, papers and documents in his possession or power relating to the merits of any suit or of any defense therein"); §§ 1375–1377 (procedure regulated; on failure to obey, the Court may order nonsuit or strike out the answer or bar a particular defence or punish as for contempt); § 1378 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000, adding a provision for photographs, but omitting the clause as to directing a presumption of contents); § 5411 (in an action for recovery of a sum due on account, and where the matter is "a proper and usual subject of charge on books of account," the Court may require from either party the production of "either his ledger or original book of entries, or both; and no disputed account shall be allowed upon the oath of the party, when it shall appear that he has a book of original entries, unless such book shall be produced upon reasonable request");
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 9771 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8901 (if a party refuses to give inspection and copy, after demand in writing "specifying the book, paper, or document with sufficient particularity to enable the other party to distinguish it," followed by a judge's order to give a copy, the judge may exclude the document when offered in evidence; the rule applies to a "book, paper, or document in his possession or under his control, containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or defense therein"); § 8902 (a party refusing "if required" to give "a copy of any deed, instrument, or other writing whereon the action or defense is founded, or which he intends to offer in evidence at the trial," "shall not be permitted" to give the original in evidence); §§ 8904–8906 (the Court may by rule require "the production of any books or papers which are material to the just determination of any cause pending before it, for the purpose of being inspected and copied by or for the party thus calling for them"; procedure regulated; failure to produce, without excuse, may be treated as on failure to obey subpœna);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5416 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000);
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1901, c. 224, § 14 ("no party shall be compelled, . . . in giving a deposition, to produce any writing which is material to his own case or defense," unless on taking his own deposition); St. 1903, c. 37 (discovery of books, etc., from non-resident director of domestic corporation);
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Practice, §§ 142, 143 (the Court may, "in their discretion and upon five days' notice of the application, order either party to give to the other, within a specified time and under such terms as may be imposed, an inspection and copy or permission to take a copy of any books, papers or documents in his possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or proceeding or of the defense thereto"; on refusal, such documents shall not be given in evidence, and the Court may punish for contempt); St. 1912, c. 231 (Practice Act Supplement), Schedule A, Rules of Court No. 66 ("Any party may without affidavit apply for an order directing any other party to make discovery on oath of the books, papers, or other documents, which are or have been in his possession or under his control relating to any matter in question in the cause. The granting of the order shall be discretionary, as to the whole or any part of the discovery applied for");
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 4130 ("no party shall be required to state evidence in his pleadings, or to disclose therein the means by which he intends to prove his case"); §§ 4215–4217, 4245 (the Court may "in his discretion and upon due notice order either party to give to the other, within a specified time, an inspection and a copy, or permission to take a copy, of a paper in his possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action"; on refusal, the Court may on motion exclude the paper as evidence or punish for contempt or both; on failure to obey in prescribed time the order for production, the Court may order nonsuit or strike out answer or bar a particular defense affected or punish by contempt); § 4146 (original or copy of an instrument "upon which the action or defense is founded" must be filed with the pleadings, if in the party's "power or control," and on failure without sufficient reason, "such instrument of writing shall not be admitted in evidence upon the trial");
New York: Rev. St. 1828, pt. III, c. I, tit. III § 21 (vol. II, p. 199) ("The Supreme Court also expanded the scope of the class of documents of which inspection was demandable.

shall have power in such cases as shall be deemed proper to compel any party to a suit pending therein to produce and discover books, papers, and documents in his possession or power, relating to the merits of any such suit or of any defence therein"); § 22 (the Court "shall be governed by the principles and practice of the Court of chancery in compelling discovery"); 1830, Rules of N. Y. Supreme Court, No. 28, as quoted in Cowen & Hill's edition of Phillipps on Evidence, note 832 (application for discovery may be made, 1, by the plaintiff, to compel the discovery of papers or documents in the possession or under the control of the defendant, which may be necessary to enable the plaintiff to declare or to answer any pleading of the defendant; 2, by the defendant, to enable the defendant to answer any pleading of the plaintiff; 3, the plaintiff after declaring, and the defendant after pleading, may be compelled to produce and discover all documents on which the action or defence is founded; 4, after issue joined, either party may be compelled to discover all documents necessary to enable the other to prepare for trial); C. C. P. 1877, § 803, C. P. A. 1920, § 324 ("A court of record, other than a justice's court in a city, has power to compel a party to an action pending therein to produce and discover, or to give to the other party an inspection and copy or permission to take a copy or photograph, of a book, document or other paper, or to make discovery of any article or property, in his possession or under his control relating to the merits of the action or of the defence therein"); C. P. A. 1920, §§ 325–328, 345 (proceedings regulated; the rules of practice will regulate the procedure; upon refusal to comply, the Court may dismiss a complaint or strike out an answer, etc., or bar a particular claim or defence, or, for refusal to allow inspection and copy, exclude the document or punish for contempt or both);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1823 (like N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 7861); § 1824 (like U. S. Code, § 1361, but omitting the limitation as to rules of proceeding in chancery); 1905, Mills v. Biscoe L. Co., 139 N. C. 524, 52 S. E. 200 (procedure of inspection considered);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7861 (the Court may "in his discretion and upon due notice order either party to give to the other within a specified time an inspection and copy or permission to take a copy of any books papers and documents in his possession or under his control relating to the merits of the action or the defense therein"; on refusals, the Court may exclude the paper from evidence or punish the party or both); § 9960 (action against a violation of the laws against pools and trusts; on failure of an officer, agent, etc., to attend and testify or produce books, the Court may strike out the party's pleading and give judgment by default);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11551 (the Court may, on motion and reasonable notice, "require the parties to produce books and writings in their possession or power which contain evidence pertinent to the issue in cases and under circumstances where they might heretofore have been compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery"; on failure to comply, the Court may give judgment of nonsuit or default); §§ 11552, 11553 (either party may demand in writing, specifying "with sufficient particularity to enable the other party to distinguish it," "an inspection and copy or permission to take a copy of a book paper or document in his possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or defense"; procedure regulated; on refusal within four days, the Court may issue order for inspection and copy; on failure to obey order, the Court may exclude the document, or direct it to be presumed as alleged); § 11554 (either party "shall if required deliver to the other party" "a copy of any instrument of writing whereon the action or defense is founded or which he intends to offer in evidence at the trial"; on refusal, the original shall be excluded from evidence);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, §§ 634, 635 (substantially like Oh. Gen. Code Ann. §§ 11552, 11554);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 533 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000, omitting "upon notice," substituting "any book, document or paper" to describe the material, and substituting, "neglect or refuse" obedience for "refuse" compliance);
Pennsylvania: St. 1798, Feb. 27, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10296, Evidence (Courts are to have power, in a pending action, "on motion and upon good and sufficient cause shown by affidavit or affirmation, and due notice given, to require the parties or either of them to produce books or writings in their possession or power which contain evidence pertinent to the issue," upon penalty, on failure to comply, of judgment of nonsuit or default as to the subject to which the documents apply);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 5358 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000);
Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 212, § 50 (if a party makes affidavit "that the opposite party is in the possession or control of some document which the applicant is entitled to examine, and prays for its production," a Court may hear the petition and answer, and "if proper, compel the party having the same in his or its possession or control to allow the applicant to examine the same and if necessary

In considering the statutes for this purpose, then, it must be remembered that there were already three chief modes available; one of these was the right of oyer of documents liable to profert; the others were the equitable bill of discovery and (its related process) the motion at common law for inspection of documents held under a common interest. (I) For the first, the question now was whether oyer was still demandable. (II) For the second to take examined copies of the same or have such original documents impounded and make such further order in the premises as shall be just");

South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 665 (like N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 1823);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2196, Justice Courts ("When the cause of action or counterclaim arises upon an account or instrument for the payment of money only, the court, at any time before the trial, may by an order require the original to be exhibited for the inspection of, and a copy to be furnished to, the adverse party, at such time as may be fixed in the order; and, if such order is not obeyed, the account or instrument cannot be given in evidence"); § 7212 (like N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 7861); 1909, McGeary v. Brown, 23 S. D. 573, 122 N. W. 605 (statute applied);
Tennessee: Shannon's Code, 1916, §§ 5684–5693 (either party is entitled to discovery "in all cases where the same party would by the rules of equity be entitled to a discovery in aid of such suit");
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7204 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000; omitting reference to "inspection");
Virginia: Code 1919, §§ 6237, 6238 (a party may file an affidavit that there is "a book of accounts or other writing, in possession of an adverse party or claimant, containing material evidence for him, specifying with reasonable certainty such writing or the part of such book"; if it appears that the affiant "has no means of proving the contents" except by the desired production, and that the request is not tardy and the contents are "relevant and material," an order may issue; and judgment of nonsuit or default may be given; this method to be an optional remedy alternative with a bill of discovery in equity);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 2044 ("Supreme, county, municipal and city courts may, in the trial of actions at law, on motion and due notice thereof given, require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession or power, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue or relative to the action, where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules and proceedings in chancery, and if the party fails to comply with the order, the court may render judgment against such party by nonsuit or default. When an action is pending in court against a person, as cashier, director or other officer of a bank, for a violation of the provisions of the general banking laws of this state, or on a bond for the performance of his duties as cashier, director or other officer of a bank, such court may compel the production of the books, papers and records of the bank, upon trial, by service of a subpœna 'duces tecum' on the officers of the bank having the same in charge"); St. 1919, Apr. 3, No. 126, amending Gen. L. §§ 4951–4953 (production of documents by corporation);
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1262 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1000; but defining the material as "any book, document or paper");
West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 43 (upon affidavit by a party "that a particular book of accounts or other writing or paper is important for him to have in the trial of his cause," a subpœna d. t. may issue upon "any party to the action," to produce the document before the court to "be used as evidence on the trial"; and unless the opponent can prove that he has not control of the document or that it is "such as should not be used as evidence on the trial," he may be attached, and judgment of default or nonsuit may be given);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4182*a* (special regulations for insurance companies' records); § 4183 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 7861); Circuit Court Rule 18 under § 4183 (application may be made by either party for documents "which may be necessary to enable the applicant to frame his complaint answer or reply, as the case may be, or which shall be material to any application made by him for any provisional remedy"; or by either party, after issue joined, for documents in the opponent's "possession or control, on which his action or defense is founded or which may be necessary to enable the party applying therefor to prepare for trial"; on failure without excuse to comply, judgment may be given after striking out the complaint reply or answer);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5855–5858 (like Oh. Gen. C. Ann. §§ 11551–11554).

The rulings interpreting these statutes will not be given here (except upon some general questions ensuing), because they depend so much upon the special wording of the local statute, and because they cannot be fully understood without examining the orthodox chancery rules, which are without the present purview. The annotations to the above collections of statutes contain in most instances the relevant rulings in the respective jurisdictions.

and third, the questions were (1) whether the discovery-process of Chancery had been transferred to the common-law Courts, so as to grant or enlarge the right of inspection before trial; and (2) if it had been thus transferred, whether the discovery-process itself had been enlarged, so as to include even more than had been obtainable in equity, i. e. to include inspection of the adversary's own documentary evidence.

These questions depended in part upon the words of the statutes and in part upon the supposed objects of the reform; and upon the latter consideration it is relevant to remember that at the same time as these statutes, or just previously to them, the opponent's privilege to withhold his own testimony at the trial (post, § 2218) had almost everywhere been abolished.

§ 1859*a*. Same: Civil Opponent's Documents; (I) Oyer Extended. One of the recommendations of the Practice Commissioners in England in 1831 [1] was that the principle of oyer be extended to include all documents pleaded; and the result, though long-deferred, of this recommendation was the abolition, in 1852, of profert as a requirement and the implied retention and enlargement of oyer.[2] This implication the Courts confirmed.[3] In the United States, a few statutes have expressly made a similar enlargement.[4]

§ 1859*a*. [1] Quoted ante, § 1858, par. 1.

[2] St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, §§ 55, 56 (the terms are quoted in the next note).

[3] 1860, Penarth Harbour D. & R. Co. v. Cardiff W. Co., 7 C. B. N. S. 816 (Willes, J.: "The 55th section, which abolishes profert and oyer, is not the material one, but the 56th, which provides that 'a party pleading in answer to any pleading in which any document is mentioned or referred to shall be at liberty to set out the whole or such part thereof as may be material'; . . . that gives him the right to set out any document mentioned or referred to in his opponent's pleading, whether under seal or not, and by necessary implication it gives him a right to apply to the Court for inspection and a copy, in order to enable himself to do so"; Williams, J.: "I think we are bound to take care that a party shall not incidentally be prejudiced by a provision which has 'diverso intuitu,' by abolishing profert, deprived him of that advantage"; but the majority did not desire that the inspection could extend beyond sealed instruments; in 1852, Lord Campbell had said 'obiter' in Doe v. Roe, 1 E. & B. 279, 285, that inspection could always be obtained "where an action is brought on an instrument"); 1860, Price v. Harrison, 8 C. B. N. S. 617, 635 (Williams, J.: "It may now be considered as fully established in all the courts that the right to inspect [in analogy to oyer] extends to any writing, whether under seal or not, which is relied on by the other side as the foundation of his claim or defence").

[4] Alabama: Code 1907, § 5326 (no profert is required; but "at any time previous to trial the defendant may have inspection of the bond or other instrument sued on, upon notice to the attorney of the party"); Florida: Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 2626 (like St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 55, abolishing profert and oyer, but entitling the opponent to set out the document in his pleading); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 110, § 20 ("It shall not be necessary in any pleading to make profert of the instrument alleged; but in any action or defence upon an instrument in writing, whether under seal or not, if the same is not lost or destroyed, the opposite party may have oyer thereof and proceed thereon in the same manner as if profert had been properly made according to the common law"); 1820, Mason v. Buckmaster, Breese 27 (under the early statute, profert was not necessary for a note sued on, since the Court on plea of oyer could order production); 1894, Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 408, 417, 23 N. E. 387, 37 N. E. 1004 (the statute does not apply to documents used as evidence only); St. 1907, June 3, p. 443, § 34 (reënacts the foregoing c. 110, § 20); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, § 7 ("Written instruments" shall be declared on, except insurance policies, by setting out a copy or the part relied on, or the legal effect; "if the whole contract is not set out, a copy or the original, as the Court may require, shall be filed upon motion of the defendant," and the copy may be made a part of the record as if oyer had been granted; "no profert or excuse therefor need be inserted in a declaration"); ibid. c. 231, § 32 (similar for instruments in an answer or subsequent pleading); Virginia: Code 1919, § 6082 ("It shall not be necessary . . . to make profert of any deed, letters testamentary, or commission of administration; but a defendant may have

§ 1859*b*. Same: (II) Adoption of Chancery Rule; (1) Time of Disclosure. In England the statutes which purported to deal with these practices were passed as a result of the general agitation for reform headed by Lord Brougham and Lord Denman. They had been recommended by the Practice Commissioners in a cautious way, as early as 1830; but they were not enacted until 1851 and 1854.

In the United States the earliest statute seems to have been that of the Federal Congress in 1789, followed by Pennsylvania, in 1798, and this closely by Georgia, in 1799. But the movement for revision and codification in New York, a quarter of a century later, seems to have been the signal for a general progress, or at least to have attracted more attention and to have furnished more frequently (in the statute of 1828) a model for adaptation than the earlier statutes for which Congress and the States of Pennsylvania and Georgia are entitled to credit.

In applying these statutes, several distinct questions of principle (as already noted) are presented: (1) first, whether the Chancery process of inspection before trial was transferred to common-law Courts.

(1) In the great majority of these statutes, their express terms make it clear that in common-law proceedings a mode has been sanctioned for obtaining inspection and copy before trial.

But in those statutes of which the Federal law is the type,[1] the enactment does no more, in form, than nullify the opponent's common-law privilege (post, § 2219) of withholding in general his documentary evidence at the trial, i.e. it merely authorizes the Court to "require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession." Thus the doubt arises whether this provision was intended not only to take away the above privilege at the trial, but also to require the furnishing before trial of an opportunity of inspection and copying. The argument against the larger view of the statute's intention has been thus phrased:

1853, CURTIS, J., in Iasigi v. Brown, 1 Curt. 401: "By the common law, a notice to produce a paper merely enables the party to give parol evidence of its contents, if it be not produced. Its non-production has no other legal consequence. This act of Congress has attached to the non-production of a paper, ordered to be produced at the trial, the penalty of a nonsuit or default. This is the whole extent of the law. It does not enable parties to compel the production of papers before trial, but only at the trial, by making such a case, and obtaining such an order as the act contemplates. . . . I think the Court should not decide finally on the materiality of the paper, except during the trial; because it would occupy time unnecessarily, and it might be very difficult to decide beforehand, whether a paper was pertinent to the issue, and whether it was so connected with the case, oyer in like manner as if profert were made"); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 125, § 33 (like Va. Code, § 6082); 1905, Riley v. Yost, 58 W. Va. 213, 52 S. E. 40.

The following statute seems to belong here: Miss. Code 1906, § 735, Hem. § 518 (for "any writing of which profert is made or ought to be made," no evidence shall be admitted unless a copy is annexed to or filed with the pleading).

In Tennessee, it may be assumed that oyer survives: Shannon's Code 1916, § 4608 ("Profert shall be required as heretofore").

§ 1859*b*. [1] Including those of Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, and Pennsylvania.

that a Court of equity would compel its production. These points could ordinarily be decided without difficulty during a trial, after the nature of the case, and the posture and bearings of the evidence are seen."

That this illiberal and unprogressive view is unsound is sufficiently indicated in the following passages:

1895, SIMONTON, J., in Lucker v. Phœnix Assurance Co., 67 Fed. 18: "It seems to be a narrow construction of § 724 to limit its operation to the actual trial. Its purpose clearly is to provide a substitute for a bill of discovery and to secure at law the purposes which such a bill would subserve; all the cases recognize this. On a bill for discovery, necessarily the facts sought would be discovered before trial. Besides this, the section says that this order for the production of papers can be made 'in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery'; the proceedings in chancery require the deposit of the papers called for with the clerk, who upon notice produces them in court or before the examiner. There is another point of view of this matter. The object of a motion of this character is to enable a party, in advance of the submission of the issue, to ascertain the strength or weakness of his case. An inspection of the papers may end the case. It is better to reach this result in this short way than in the middle of a trial."

1900, BRADFORD, J., in Blocde Co. v. Bancroft Co., 98 Fed. 175, 182: "No reason is perceived why a Court of law after issue joined in an action pending therein should have greater difficulty in determining the pertinency of evidence contained in documents of which production before trial is sought than a Court of equity in deciding on the propriety of compelling discovery or production of similar documents for inspection before trial in aid of the plaintiff's or defendant's case in an action at law. To adopt the narrower construction of § 724 on the ground that a Court of law cannot well ascertain after issue joined but before trial the pertinency of the contents of books or writings would practically involve condemnation of the long established and beneficial practice in chancery of awarding discovery or production of documents in aid of an action at law. . . . It is, and was at and prior to the time of the passage of the Judiciary Act, within the settled jurisdiction of chancery and a usual practice to order production before trial of an action at law of documents containing pertinent evidence for inspection by a party having the requisite interest therein and desiring to use the same in preparing himself for trial. It must be assumed that Congress in passing the Judiciary Act was aware that the 'circumstances' under which production might be compelled in chancery embraced cases where the purpose of the party applying was to inspect, examine, and take copies of the books or writings before the trial of an action at law in order to prepare for such trial. It is reasonable, then, to conclude that the statute authorizes the Court in actions at law to order production for inspection, after issue joined, in all cases and under all circumstances where it might have been ordered in chancery in aid of parties to such actions, and that this Court sitting as a Court of law can in such actions under pain of nonsuit or default enforce the production of books or writings to the same extent and for the same purposes as when sitting as a Court of equity and compelling production in aid of such actions. Unless the terms 'in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery' are to be wrested from their natural meaning, it is difficult to perceive that production before trial is not equally with production at the trial within the scope of the provision. There is no sufficient warrant for an assumption that Congress intended that production of books and writings for inspection should be had only at the trial. Such a practice would in many instances be inconvenient, dilatory, and expensive, with nothing to justify it, leading to postponements to allow time for inspection and calculated to embarrass or defeat the due administration of justice."

Such, was the view taken in the greater number of Federal circuits;[2] but the illiberal view, after long conflict of rulings in the intermediate courts, was finally sanctioned by the Federal Supreme Court.[3]

In some of the other jurisdictions having statutes of similar form the liberal view has been judicially adopted, i.e. that a mode of obtaining inspection and copy before trial is provided in them.[4]

§ 1859c. Same: Statutory Rule; (2) Opponent's Own Case not Disclosable. Supposing the statutory process to have provided for inspection and copy before trial, the question next arises whether, as regards the class of documents obtainable, the scope of the process is merely coextensive with the equitable bill of discovery or is larger than that. Did the statute not only supply to common-law Courts a speedy mode of doing what could have been done by applying to Chancery and thus merely enlarge the scope of the common-law motion (ante, § 1858) to equal that of the chancery bill, but also enlarge the statutory process beyond that of the chancery bill? The question is one of vital principle, since the chancery bill of discovery, as already noticed (ante, § 1857), did not presume to doubt the general common-law doctrine that there is no right of inspection of the adversary's own documentary evidence. Was an advance in this respect intended to be made by the statute, and was the enlightened step (ante, § 1847) intended to be taken of conceding the right of prior inspection and copy of even the adversary's own documentary evidence?

On the one hand, some of the statutes make expressly a negative answer, in that they declare the inspection obtainable "under the circumstances

[2] 1879, Choate, J., in U. S. v. Hutton, 10 Ben. 268; 1895, Lucker v. Phœnix Assur. Co., 67 Fed. 18 (reviewing the conflict of rulings; quoted supra); 1898, Ryder v. Bateman, 93 Fed. 31, Hammond, J.: 1900, Bloede Co. v. Bancroft Co., 98 Fed. 175 (quoted supra); 1902, Gray v. Schneider, C. C., 119 Fed. 474.

[3] Accord: 1896, U. S. v. National Lead Co., 75 Fed. 94 (going upon the strict sense of the words of the statute, "on the trial"); 1907, Cassatt v. Mitchell C. & C. Co., C. C. A., 150 Fed. 32, 39 (careful but unconvincing opinion by Lanning, J.; Buffington, J., partly dissenting); 1907, Webster Coal & C. Co. v. Cassatt, 207 U. S. 181, 28 Sup. 108 (reversing Cassatt v. Mitchell C. & C. Co., supra, but on another point); 1911, Carpenter v. Winn, 221 U. S. 533, 31 Sup. 683 (commented on in Ill. L. Rev. VI, 266); 1916, General Film Co. v. Sampliner, 6th C. C. A., 232 Fed. 95 (Carpenter v. Winn followed).

[4] Ga. 1854, Faircloth v. Jordan, 15 Ga. 511, 515; Ill. 1904, Swedish-American Tel. Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co., 208 Ill. 562, 70 N. E. 768 (Lester v. People, infra, repudiated; the power is to require production, "whether before the trial, for the purpose of preparing for the same, or at the trial, to be used as evidence"; "Sect. 9 was intended in actions at law to be substitute for the bill of discovery"); N. H. 1917, Lacoss v. Lebanon, 78 N. H. 413, 101 Atl. 364 (personal injury; the power to compel disclosure of documents by a party at the trial implies also, without express statutory provision, the power to require discovery before trial; rational opinion by Young, J.); Pa. 1837, Arrott v. Pratt, 2 Whart. 565.

Contra: Ill. 1894, Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 408, 419, 23 N. E. 387, 37 N. E. 1004 (the statute does not authorize a compulsory submission to inspection by the opponent before trial in preparation therefor); Pa. 1890, Raub v. Van Horn, 133 Pa. 573, 574, 19 Atl. 704 ("uniform practice under the Act" recognizes no right to inspection before trial; such inspection is therefore confined to the common-law doctrine as to "parties having a common interest in the instrument"; the opinion does not give due consideration to the authorities); Wis. 1919, Cousins v. Schroeder, 169 Wis. 438, 172 N. W. 953 (applying Stats. § 4096, and following Carpenter v. Winn, U. S., supra).

Of course, the common-law practice (ante, § 1858) remains unless superseded by the statute: 1851, Bluck v. Gompertz, 7 Exch. 67 (action on a guarantee as to bills of exchange; inspection allowed); 1890, Raub v. Van Horn, supra.

determined by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery."[1] On the other hand, some statutes make it clear that the scope of a chancery bill was not to be the limit of the statutory process.[2] There are, however, also certain statutes which either contain no significant words of definition, or use a general phrase describing the documents as "pertinent to the issue" or "relating to the merits of the action or defence" or "relating to any matter in question." Under such statutes it is easy to see that a progressive and enlightened view (ante, § 1847), discarding the sportsman's theory of litigation and obliging the adversary in ordinary cases to disclose his documentary evidence, might justly have been taken in the application of the statutory process.[3] But it is regrettable to notice that this has rarely been done; the instincts of professional technicality and conservatism have been too strong, and the limitations of the orthodox bill of discovery have been perpetuated.[4] That this has resulted, in many instances, in doing violence to the broad language of the statutes is plain enough; whether it is also a disobedience to the § 1859c. [1] Such, for example, is the Federal statute, and such its necessary application: 1806, Hylton's Lessee v. Brown, 1 Wash. C. C. 298, 344; 1818, Bas v. Steele, 3 Wash. C. C. 381, 386; 1885, Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 631, 6 Sup. 524; 1894, Kirkpatrick v. Pope Mfg. Co., 61 Fed. 46; 1898, Ryder v. Bateman, 93 Fed. 31; 1916, Wolcott v. National Electric S. Co., D. C. Mass., 235 Fed. 224 (under new Rule 58, Federal Equity Rules, 1912, the scope of discovery is no different). But the change of 1912 has been otherwise construed for interrogatories: ante, § 1856*b*, n. 1, and rulings cited in Mr. W. R. Lane's article cited ante, § 1856*a*, note 3.

So also under the original English statute of 1851: 1852, Hunt v. Hewitt, 7 Exch. 236; 1859, Metropolitan S. O. Co. v. Hawkins, 4 H. & N. 146; 1859, Shadwell v. Shadwell, 6 C. B. N. S. 679; 1859, London Gaslight Co. v. Chelsea, 6 C. B. N. S. 411; 1868, Boyd v. Petrie, L. R. 5 Eq. 290; 1871, Wilson v. Thornbury, L. R. 17 Eq. 517; 1875, Vale v. Oppert, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 340; 1878, Taylor v. Batten, L. R. 4 Q. B. D. 85; 1881, Dauvillier v. Myers, L. R. 17 Ch. D. 346.

[2] As, for example, in California, by a provision that the adversary refusing inspection may be prohibited from using the document in evidence at the trial; this could apply only to documents in support of the adversary's own case.

[3] This has been done in New York, for example: Mr. J. Daly, in The Brief, vol. II, p. 308, quoted supra, § 1856; so, too, now in Massachusetts and elsewhere: 1912, Looney v. Saltonstall, 212 Mass. 69, 98 N. E. 698 (semble, under St. 1909, c. 225, quoted ante, § 1856*a*, the discovery is not limited to the party's own case); 1918, Fox v. Derrickson, 7 Boyce Del. 129, 104 Atl. 155 (sale of tomatoes; the discovery includes not merely papers constituting the cause of action, but "all documents relating to the merits of the case"); 1917, Lacoss v. Lebanon, 78 N. H. 413, 101 Atl. 364 (personal injury; photograph of machinery made by defendant, required to be discovered; that it evidenced facts also involved in the defendant's case, held not to prevent discovery; P. S. 1891, c. 224, §§ 13, 14, distinguishing between a deposition and a party's discovery, explained).

[4] Such has been the interpretation in England, even under the unqualified terms of the Rules of 1883: 1881, Bewicke v. Graham, L. R. 7 Q. B. D. 400; 1883, Attorney-General v. Emerson, L. R. 10 Q. B. D. 191; 1883, Kearsley v. Philips, L. R. 10 Q. B. D. 465; 1883, Re Pickering, L. R. 25 Ch. D. 247; 1893, Lewis v. Londesborough, 2 Q. B. 191; 1895, South Staff. T. Co. v. Ebbsmith, 2 Q. B. 669; 1899, Attorney-General v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Co., 2 Q. B. 478 (documents which impeach the defendant's case, though they do not support the plaintiff's case, are privileged; precedents examined); 1906, Nelson & Sons v. Nelson Line, 2 K. B. 217 (discovery from a nominal plaintiff); 1920, O'Rourke v. Darbishire, A. C. 581.

So in Canada: 1872, Stovel v. Coles, 4 Ont. Ch. C. 9; 1910, Von Ferber v. Enright, 19 Man. 383 (a party is still "not entitled to discovery of the evidence which relates exclusively to the case of the opposite party").

So also in several of the State Courts: 1894, Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 408, 418, 23 N. E. 387, 37 N. E. 1004; 1921, State v. Minneapolis Cold Storage Co., — Minn. —, 184 N. W. 854 (delinquent taxes); 1832, Townsend v. Lawrence, 9 Wend. N. Y. 458 ("the object of the statute was to substitute the rule of court in place of a bill of discovery"); 1893, Arnold v. Pawtuxet V. W. Co., 18 R. I. 189, 194, 26 Atl. 55.

intended wishes of the Legislature is a matter for mere speculation; but in any event these Courts have lost an easy opportunity to take a creditable part in effecting solid legal progress with the powerful means freely placed in their hands by the Legislature.

§ 1859*d*. Same: Statutory Rule; (3) Relevancy; Specification of Documents; Opponent's Oath; Copies; Impounding. The Chancery rule, it will be remembered, applied only to relevant documents, specifically described, and existing in the opponent's possession or control, and this limitation tends to be preserved under the statutory rule.[1] In Chancery, there was here much learning as to the conclusiveness of the opponent's oath as to the relevancy of the document and the fact of his possession.[2]

The discovery authorized by the statutes usually includes, in express words, an opportunity to make and take a copy, and not merely to inspect the original.[3]

§ 1859*d*. [1] England: 1917, The Consul Corfitzon, A. C. 550 (prize claim of condemnation of ship on the ground of contraband cargo; defining the limits of the judge's power to specify documents); Canada: 1918, Royal Bank v. Wallis, 41 D. L. R. 383, Alta. (mode of specifying contents of a ledger).

United States: 1908, Oro W. L. & P. Co. v. Oroville, C. C. N. D. Cal., 162 Fed. 975 (the relevancy of the documents shown must be as fully shown, under the statutory rule, as under the former Chancery practice); 1921, Burleson Mica Co. v. Southern Exp. Co., — N. C. —, 109 S. E. 853 (non-delivery by a bailee; plaintiff's application for inspection of papers, under Cons. St. §§ 1823, 1824, held not sufficiently specific).

But such rulings seem an unfortunate loss of an opportunity for progress; the old Chancery practice of discovery was a stench on the threshold of justice; why keep any of its nauseous elements? Compare the simple practice under a subpœna d. t. against a third person (post, § 2200).

This rule must be distinguished from the analogous questions which arise under the party's documentary privilege (post, § 2200), and the client's privilege for documents communicated to his attorney (post, § 2318).

[2] Langdell, Equity Pleading, §§ 164, 169; England: 1855, Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & N. 351, 361; 1891, O'Shea v. Wood, Prob. 237, 286; 1912, British Ass'n of Glass Bottle Mfrers. v. Nettlefold, A. C. 709; Canada: 1912, Stapley v. Canadian P. R. Co., Alta. S. C., 6 D. L. R. 97, 180; 1912, MacMahon v. Railway P. Ass. Co., Ont. H. C. J., 5 D. L. R. 423 (cross-examination of the opponent; learned opinion by Riddell, J.); United States: 1906, Nelson v. U. S., 201 U. S. 92, 26 Sup. 358; 1918, Swepston v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 251 Fed. 205 (accused's "disavowal by sworn answer or otherwise is not conclusive" in proceedings for contempt); 1916, Russell v. Bush, 196 Ala. 309, 71 So. 397 (witness who had destroyed a letter containing some irrelevant matter, held compellable to state the entire contents for the judge's decision).

Another question arising under these statutes is the burden of proof where the opponent denies possession: 1908, Schlesinger v. Ellinger, 134 Wis. 397, 114 N. W. 825.

The primitive and childish technicality with which some Courts still handle this part of procedure may be seen in the following ruling, dated not 1414, nor 1814, but 1914: State v. Trimble, 254 Mo. 542, 163 S. W. 860 (appeal from an order granting discovery to plaintiff; the action was for the death of a track-watchman, said to have been killed by train No. 6 running with no headlight; the discovery asked for covered all train sheets, etc., as to all trains on that night at that place, but the discovery conceded by defendant covered only train sheets, etc., for No. 6; held that the order of the trial judge granting the plaintiff's request was "absolutely null and void," unamendable and incurable, by reason of its excessive scope; any the slightest excess in discovery-orders beyond the exact limits of the legislative authority being a Violation of the Constitution; the opinion must be read to be appreciated; here may be noted that its doctrine not only commits the absurdity of declaring civil discovery protectible under the Constitution, but humiliates the Judiciary by announcing that the Legislature in its statute on this subject "limits the authority of the Courts of this State"; if Courts had exercised more of their legitimate authority in the machinery of justice, and less of their interference in economic matters, the Nation would be better off).

[3] 1922, Re Becker, Sup. App. Div., 192 N. Y. Suppl. 754 (mayor's records; "the right of inspection includes the right to copy").

Whether the applicant party may himself make the copy from the document at the office of the producing party, or whether he is obliged to be satisfied with a copy made and furnished by the latter, is an interesting and often im-

Whether the originals may be impounded, in the Court's discretion, is a larger question, which involves also the practice under the ordinary process of subpœna 'duces tecum' (post, § 2200).

§ 1859*e*. Same: Statutory Rule; (4) Consequences of Refusal to Disclose. The statutes usually provide, as a means of enforcement, in case of the opponent's refusal to allow inspection of copy before trial, (a) that the judge may direct the jury to presume the document to be of the tenor alleged by the demandant, or may refuse to allow the opponent to prove it as a part of his own case;[1] and (b) that a judgment of nonsuit or of default may be entered; the latter provision being not 'per se' a penalty but merely a remedial measure.[2]

§ 1859*f*. Third Persons' Documents. A bill of discovery does not lie against a third person not a party, either for his testimony or for documents in his possession (ante, § 1858, par. 6). But in a few jurisdictions a wise regard to the due flexibility of procedure has led to the statutory authorization of such documentary discovery.[1] The same considerations portant point of practice: 1905, Ormerod v. St. George's Ironworks, 1 Ch. 505 (approving the former alternative).

§ 1859*e*. [1] Kan. 1920, Stone v. Jarbalo State Bank, 107 Kan. 332, 190 Pac. 1094 (defendant's copy of a contract, demanded under C. C. P. 1915, § 7270, but not produced for inspection before trial, held properly excluded when offered by defendant at trial; informality of notice held not material; possession of document by defendant's employee held no excuse); N. J. 1884, Brown v. Farley, 38 N. J. Eq. 186, 190 (defendant refusing to produce his deed for inspection and photographing, not allowed to give it in evidence, under express statute); 1897, Flemming v. Lawless, 56 N. J. Eq. 138, 38 Atl. 864 (similar; the statute is "a mere declaration of a power which already existed in the Court").

[2] Fed. 1908, Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 342, 350, 29 Sup. 370 (anti-trust statute; constitutionality affirmed of St. 1789, § 15, Rev. St. 1878, § 724, giving power to enter judgment by default against a party refusing to obey an order to produce books or evidence; distinguishing Hovey v. Elliot, 167 U. S. 409, which dealt with punishment for contempt decreed without a hearing); Ala. 1916, Russell v. Bush, 196 Ala. 309, 71 So. 397 (party destroying purposely a letter called for); Ill. 1911, Walter Cabinet Co. v. Russell, 250 Ill. 416, 95 N. E. 462 (in the absence of express statutory authority, the trial Court cannot enter judgment against a claim, for non-production of documents); Ind. 1920, Kwiatkowski v. Putzhaven, 189 Ind. 119, 126 N. E. 3 (statute valid; but the party cannot be held in contempt until a judicial order has been made upon him to answer, with an opportunity to comply, subsequent to a refusal before a master or notary); Ia. 1907, Free v. Western U. Tel. Co., 135 Ia. 69, 110 N. W. 143 (method of penalizing a refusal by entering judgment, etc., considered); Mo. 1912, Miles v. Armour, 239 Mo. 438, 144 S. W. 424 (applying Rev. St. 1909, §§ 6361, 6389); N. Dak. 1906, Hanson v. Lindstrom, 15 N. D. 584, 108 N. W. 798 (plaintiff failed to supply on demand before trial a copy of a contract, for the defendant's use in preparing his answer; on the facts the statute, Rev. C. 1899, § 5644, was held not applicable); Wash. 1906, Lawson v. Black Diamond C. M. Co., 44 Wash. 26, 86 Pac. 1120 (Code & Stats. 1897, § 6047, construed in relation to ib. §§ 6009, 6113, providing for giving judgment against a party refusing to answer interrogatories discovering documents); Wis. 1904, Roberts v. Francis, 123 Wis. 78, 100 N. W. 1076 (penalty for non-production, not enforced on the facts).

§ 1859*f*. [1] ENGLAND: 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, §§ 47, 48 (provides for interlocutory production of writings by witnesses on terms to be imposed by the judge); 1907, L'Amie v. Wilson, 2 Ir. R. 130 (applying St. 1879, 42 Vict., Bankers' Books' Evidence Act, c. 11, § 7, as to the mode of obtaining inspection of a third person's account in a bank).

CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, No. 385 (the Court may order a witness to produce documents on examination before trial); B. C. Rules of Court 1917, No. 489 (any person may be required to produce documents at any stage); Ont. Rules of Court 1913, No. 341 (a person on examination before trial may be ordered to produce any document which "he could be required to produce at a trial"); Rules of Court 1913, No. 350 (when a non-party possesses a document liable to production at the trial, the Court may direct "the production and inspection thereof" be-which apply to interrogatories of discovery to a third person (ante, § 1856*d*) here also demand a liberal and flexible rule.

A special class of statutes, not related in origin to any of the preceding kinds, is formed by those which, in permitting the party's use of copies of documents, usually being in a third person's possession, require the party intending to use one to show the copy or the original before trial to the opponent, so that the latter may by comparison with the original protect himself against imposition. Such a provision is a genuine exception to the common-law rule against requiring disclosure of evidence before trial (ante, § 1845). This measure has been taken in many jurisdictions for certified copies of recorded deeds in general;[2] for reports of surveyors;[3] for copies of abstracts of title whose originals are in the control of some conveyancer or title-guarantor and are by statute made usable under the principle already examined,[4] and for copies of sundry documents.[5]

§ 1859*g*. Criminal Cases. At common law, no right of inspection of documents before trial was conceded to the accused;[1] and of course the privilege against self-crimination prevented any such concession to the prosecution (post, § 2264).

But the same considerations of fairness which led to the statutes providing for a list of witnesses to be furnished the accused (ante, § 1851) call also for conceding the opportunity of inspection of documents; the danger of an fore trial, and the preparation of a certified copy); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 278.

---

The following ruling holds such a statute to be constitutional: 1906, Washington Nat'l Bank v. Daily, 166 Ind. 631, 77 N. E. 53 (cited post, § 2193, n. 3).

[2] The statutes are collected ante, § 1651.

[3] The statutes are collected ante, § 1665.

[4] The statutes are collected ante, § 1705.

[5] The following statutes have already been set out elsewhere, for other principles: CANADA: Dom. Rev. St. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, § 28, as amended by St. 1921, c. 18 (reasonable notice, not less than seven days, required for using certain certified copies; cited ante, §§ 1651, 1680, 1681); Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, § 50 (cited ante, § 1223); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 39 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 28); §§ 40, 42 (notice of copy of will; cited ante, § 1681); § 45 (notice of copies of deeds, etc.; cited ante, § 1651); § 46 (notice of commercial documents; cited ante, § 1223); Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 22 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 28); §§ 27, 28 (like Ont. Rev. St., c. 76, § 49, substituting three days, for the counter-notice); N. B. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 35 (telegrams; cited post, § 2154); § 41 (incorporation-document; cited ante, § 1680); § 63 (registered conveyances in general; quoted ante, § 1225); § 69 (notice of sale under mortgage; cited ante, § 1225); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 22 (probated wills; cited ante, § 1681); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 43 (probate of wills; cited ante, § 1681); § 47 (registered documents; cited ante, § 1225); § 49 (commercial documents; cited ante, § 1223); P. E. I. St. 1889, § 43 (cited ante, § 1225); § 48 (cited ante, § 1223); Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, § 26 (cited ante, § 1223); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 23 (probated wills; cited ante, § 1681).

UNITED STATES: Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 152, § 9 (physician's report of industrial accidents).

§ 1859*g*. [1] 1792, R. v. Holland, 4 T. R. 690 ("the rule for inspection is confined to civil cases, and those where the party applying is interested in the papers"); 1911, Com. v. Jordan, 207 Mass. 259, 93 N. E. 809 (cited post, § 1863).

In Farnham v. Colman, 19 S. D. 342, 103 N. W. 161 (1905), where the defendant, charged with murder, asked mandamus against the committing magistrate to compel the State's attorney to produce a written dying declaration, which he had refused to produce on subpœna, the refusal of the writ was placed on other grounds.

Compare the practice as to inspection of chattels, etc. (post, § 1863), and inspection of testimony before the grand jury or magistrate (ante, § 1850); also the practice as to compulsory production by the prosecution at the trial (post, § 2224).

unscrupulous tampering with documents, and the possibility of manufacturing a refutation, are here far less than for witnesses:

1888, CARPENTER, J., in Daly v. Dimock, 55 Conn. 579, 589 (granting an order for the inspection of testimony at the coroner's inquest): "The argument that the writ ought not to be granted because it is the indicted party who asks for it, is not a very weighty one. The law presumes every man to be innocent until the contrary appears; and its policy is to give every man accused of crime a reasonable opportunity to prepare and present to a jury his defense. The State does not desire to procure convictions by any unfair concealment or surprise. It concerns itself quite as much in having the innocent acquitted as in having the guilty convicted. While it affords every reasonable facility for the prosecution of offenders, it is no less solicitous to give to every accused person a fair and reasonable opportunity to make his defense."

Thus far, however, this just concession has been made in only a few jurisdictions.[2]

§ 1860. Same: Other Rules affecting Production of Documents, Discriminated. These rules for compelling prior inspection and opportunity for copying or for excluding a document unless prior inspection and copying has been allowed must be distinguished from other rules, bearing upon the same situation and sometimes applied in the same statute or decision.

(1) At common law the party had a privilege not to give testimony or furnish documents, either before or during trial. The above-mentioned statutes have of course equally struck away this privilege so far as it affects the production at the trial (post, § 2219).

(2) At common law, the original of a document must be produced, or its non-production excused, by the party desiring to use it. (a) If the party, in proving his own case, notified the opponent possessing a document to produce it at the trial, and the opponent refused to do so, the party was thereupon allowed to use a copy, because the original had proved unavailable for him (ante, § 1200). (b) In that situation, if the party was thus forced to use a copy, the opponent-possessor was in consequence, by way of penalty, forbidden thereafter to use the original in contradiction of the tenor of the copy (ante, § 1210). This prohibition, it will be seen, affected only the case where at the trial production was refused and the party demanding, in proving his case, used a copy. But some of the discovery-statutes just examined equally forbid the opponent's proof of his own case by an original document which he has refused either to show before trial or to produce at the trial (ante, § 1859*d*).

(3) At common law, a party's non-production at the trial of a relevant document was always regarded as allowing the inference, under certain conditions, that its tenor was unfavorable to him and was what his opponent claimed it to be (ante, § 291). The principle has often been applied to the present situation, by the statutes noted in § 1859; i.e. in case of a refusal to allow inspection or furnish a copy before trial, the judge may direct the jury to presume it to be the tenor alleged by the party demanding; this measure being suitable for a document forming part of the demanding party's case and desired by him to be proved (ante, § 1859*d*).

[2] 1910, State v. Hinkley, 81 Kan. 838, 106 Pac. 1088 (applying Cr. C. § 209, Gen. St. 1901, § 5651); 1917, U. S. v. Riera, 10 P. R. 186 (bringing lottery-tickets into the U. S.; motion by accused to have inspection of the numbers of the tickets, so as to obtain evidence from Spain; denied, because no necessity was shown).

(4) The party-possessor's non-production or non-exhibition, on notice, whether before or at the trial, by some statutes authorizes the Court to direct a judgment of nonsuit or default respectively (ante, § 1859*d*).

(5) The party-possessor's non-production or non-exhibition, on notice, would also, after order by the Court, be a contempt, and this the statutes sometimes expressly provide.

(6) The opponent's failure by affidavit to deny the execution of a document is usually, by statute, made equivalent to an admission of its genuineness, so that he cannot at the trial dispute its genuineness. This rule (post, § 2595) is in form a rule of pleading; yet in policy it rests in part on the consideration that in fairness the opponent should give prior notice of his intention to dispute execution; it thus works in the spirit of an exception to the general common-law principle dealt with in the foregoing sections.

(7) The statutes authorizing inspection are not intended to override any of the settled privileges for withholding evidence (except the general privilege of a party-opponent as such). Hence, any order of inspection must be subject to an exception for documents falling within one of the privileges. The privileges most likely to be invoked are those for trade-secrets (post, § 2213), official secrets (post, § 2213), marital communications (post, § 2336). and client-and-attorney communications (post, § 2307).

§ 1861. Document shown to Opponent at Trial; Opponent's Inspection as making it Evidence. For the reasons of policy already considered (ante, § 1847, par. 4), the general rule suffers a virtual exception, well recognized at common law, where a party, having a document at the trial, uses it for any evidential purpose. Here it is no hardship to him, and it is a decided dictate of fairness, to require him to submit it for the opponent's inspection, even though the former has not yet technically and finally put it in evidence.

(a) In the first place, this rule applies where the party's witness employs a writing in aid of recollection, whether as a record of past recollection or merely to stimulate present recollection; in this aspect it has already been considered (ante, §§ 753, 762).

(b) In the second place, when a writing is offered to a witness for the preliminary purpose of testifying to its execution or identity, with the object of not actually offering it in evidence until a later stage in the case, fairness requires that the opponent should see it then or before the witness leaves the stand, in order that the opponent may cross-examine as to the writing; for otherwise the writing might not be actually offered until after the witness had left the court-room and become unavailable for the purpose of cross-examination. This application of the rule is in the United States generally accepted.[1]

(c) In the third place, whenever a document is finally put in evidence, it would seem that the general principle requiring the production of the original signifies a production for inspection by the opponent, and not merely by the jury.[2]

From the present question is to be distinguished the rule of some Courts (dealt with post, § 2125) that where a party has voluntarily produced at the trial his own document, at the request and for the use of the opponent, the opponent's mere inspection of the document, without using it, makes the whole of it admissible in the first party's favor. This rule is in form a rule of Completeness, and must therefore be considered under that head. But the motive for its adoption is only to be explained by remembering the general common-law rule § 1861. [1] ENGLAND: 1849, Collier v. Nokes, 2 C. & K. 1012 (the defendant, on cross-examination, having obtained from the plaintiff's witness testimony to the execution of a lease and an inventory and the handwriting of some letters, the plaintiff claimed the right to see them; Wilde, C. J., said: "My own opinion is that if the handwriting, or any of the contents of any paper shown to a witness, is deposed to, the opposite counsel is entitled to see it, otherwise he perhaps would not be able to shape his line of conduct; he would not be so entitled if the witness merely deposed to the nature of the paper, or to its having been produced on a given occasion, or any similar thing"; but he deferred to the opposite ruling of Parke, B.; the distinction taken by Wilde, C. J., seems untenable).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1916, Prdjun v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 237 Fed. 799 (here a letter in a foreign language; the failure to let the opponent hear it translated by the interpreter before it was read aloud by the interpreter, held not material); Alabama: 1890, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 218, 226, 9 So. 276 (document said to have an attesting witness, shown to another witness to prove his execution; refusal to show beforehand to opposing counsel, held improper, because it deprived him of the opportunity to require the attesting witness to be first called); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1504 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 866); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4194 ("Whenever a writing is shown to a witness, it may be inspected by the adverse party"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2054 ("Whenever a writing is shown to a witness, it may be inspected by the opposite party, and no question must be put to the witness concerning a writing until it has been so shown to him"); 1877, People v. Stevens, 52 Cal. 457 (after a witness had identified papers, they were not read nor offered in evidence; held, that the opponent had the right to inspect before cross-examination, or at least before the close of testimony); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8041 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2054, first clause only); Louisiana: 1905, State v. Rogers, 115 La. 164, 38 So. 952 (here the ruling, that the opponent is entitled to see a contradictory letter before the witness answers whether it is his, seems overstrict); Maryland: 1913, Eckels & S. I. M. Co. v. Cornell E. Co., 119 Md. 107, 86 Atl. 38 (rule held not applicable to a printed article used improperly on cross-examination of an expert under § 1700, ante); Mississippi: 1847, Anderson v. Root, 8 Sm. & M. 362; Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10671 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2054); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 866 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2054); Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 345 (like first two clauses of Cal. C. C. P. § 2054); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1529 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2054).

Contra: Eng. 1824, Sinclair v. Stevenson, 1 C. & P. 582, 583 (per Best, C. J., citing no authority); 1830, Grindall v. Grindall, K. B., Butterworth's Rep. 293 (Tenterden, L. C. J.: "When it is read is your time to look at it; I cannot tell whether it may be read or no"); 1834, Russell v. Rider, 6 C. & P. 416, semble, Bosanquet, J.; U. S. 1891, Calderon v. O'Donahue, 47 Fed. 39 (mere showing for identification does not give the right to inspection; unless the document is offered in evidence or its contents are mentioned other than for identification; this is apparently unsound); 1914, Com. v. Dorr, 216 Mass. 314, 103 N. E. 902 (in the trial Court's discretion).

For the time of reading the document to the jury, see post, §§ 1883, 1884.

In chancery practice, the documents produced at the hearing are to be available for the opponent's inspection; 1874, Hilyard v. Harrison, 37 N. J. L. 170 (for documents offered in evidence and thus under control of Court, an opportunity for inspection will be ordered in open Court or before an officer or the party-possessor; but not delivery to the opponent).

[2] Compare the rule in The Queen's Case, ante, §§ 1185, 1261.

now under consideration, namely, that the opponent was not of right entitled to any prior warning of the tenor of the first party's evidence; so that, if he requested the production of a document to aid his own case, and if he was allowed to peruse it for selecting such parts, he might request it upon that pretext and then decline to use any part, and yet would thus have obtained some information as to his opponent's documents. This appeared (to the Courts adopting the above rule) as a surreptitious evasion of the common-law principle which favored keeping him in total ignorance; and hence they strove indirectly to prevent this evasion by penalizing the opponent, i. e. by allowing him to accept inspection at the risk of making the whole of the document admissible against him, even though it would otherwise have been inadmissible. This measure, though illiberal, was thus at any rate logical; but it never obtained a general vogue.

4. Premises, Chattels, and Bodily Members

§ 1862. Inspection before Trial; (1) Civil Cases. (a) So far as concerned chattels and premises in his possession or control, the adversary in common-law actions, like the true gamester that the law encouraged him to be, held safely the trump cards of the situation, free from any legal liability of disclosure before trial; in this respect there was not recognized even the limited right of inspection (ante, § 1858) which after the days of Lord Mansfield had been conceded for documentary evidence.[1] But in chancery, under the same whole-some principle and practice by which bills of discovery were allowed for ascertaining the opponent's testimony and the documents in his possession (ante, §§ 1856, 1857), the inspection of chattels and premises in his possession or control was obtainable wherever fairness seemed to demand it. Whether the precise limitations of the bill of discovery for documents prevailed, namely, the limitation to facts supporting the applicant's own case (ante, § 1857), is not clear. But the general power to require the adversary to permit inspection was settled:

1819, Kynaston v. East India Co., 3 Swanst. 248 (bill to recover tithes; inspection of defendant's premises by plaintiff's witnesses demanded, to discover the value thereof). Messrs. Wetherell and Palmer, for the plaintiff: "The principle is that wherever, in respect of the property of one individual, a right accrues to another which cannot be measured without inspection of the subject of property, the Court is competent to compel the proprietor to permit that inspection, as indispensable to the purposes of justice." L. C. ELDON, approving this: "Though novel in circumstances, this case is not novel in principle. The purpose of inspection is to inform the conscience of the Court, and witnesses appointed by it are entitled to be considered as its officers. . . . The question is, whether in such a case § 1862. [1] 1825, Dell v. Taylor, 6 Dowl. & R. 388 (inspection not allowed to plaintiff of copper-plates, delivered to defendant by plaintiff, and forming the subject of the action; "no instance is to be found in which the Court has ordered an inspection, to either party to a suit, of anything which is not the common property of both"); 1840, Turquand v. Guardians, 8 Dowl. Pr. 201 (action for work done on the defendant's premises; a common-law judge held to have no power to order inspection by witnesses; defendant's refusal could only be the subject of comment to the jury).

the Court must not have the means of ascertaining by the inspection of witnesses the nature of the premises, in order to ascertain their value; and whether the law meant to leave it thus, that the defendants were to state in their answer their opinion, and to send their own surveyor to give his opinion of the value, but on the other hand the plaintiff was to be in such circumstances that he could examine no witnesses who knew with precision the value of the premises. . . . It is admitted that where a man has a right to receive a certain sum in the pound on the value of trees, the Court has ordered inspection of the trees; so in the case of a commission on diamonds, inspection would be ordered of the diamonds. I remember a case where, on the suggestion that a machine used by the defendant was an infringement of a patent, the Court ordered the defendant to allow an entry into his premises for the purpose of ascertaining by inspection whether the machine was an infringement. . . . If without this proceeding the Court must miscarry, and cannot attain the justice of the case without inspection, my opinion is that, on principle, it has authority to order inspection, taking care to impose as little inconvenience as possible on those on whom order is made."

1902, CHASE, J., in Reynolds v. Burgess S. F. Co., 71 N. H. 332, 51 Atl. 1075 (allowing a bill of discovery of a strap said to have caused an injury): "Unless the equitable remedy of discovery has been superseded by the provision of some plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, or is not applicable to a case of tort like that alleged in the plaintiff's action at law, — points that are hereinafter considered, — it is certain that the defendants, through their officers and agents, might be compelled in a suit like the present one to discover the form in which the strap was constructed, the character of the workmanship by which and the materials from which it was made; in short, all the facts within their knowledge, information, or belief tending to show that it was defective. If they had in their possession a plan of the strap or of the broken pieces, they might be compelled to produce it for examination by the plaintiff. Why, then, may they not be compelled to produce the broken pieces themselves? [1] Two reasons are suggested: One — positive, and, if well founded, substantial — that the defendants' right to possess and control the property, growing out of their ownership of it, cannot be infringed in this way; and the other — negative, and not applying to the merits of the question — that there is no precedent for a discovery and inspection of such property. It must be admitted that the defendants' right of property in the broken strap will be interfered with to some extent if they are required to produce it, and allow the plaintiff and others to examine it. But such interference will not differ in kind or degree from that which occurs when a party is required to produce his letters, deeds, plans, other documents, or books for inspection. The rights of the defendants arising from the ownership of the strap are no more sacred than would be their rights arising from the ownership of a plan of the strap, if they had one. The infringement of property rights in such cases is justified upon the ground that it is necessary to the administration of justice. Such necessity is alleged by the plaintiff and admitted by the defendants. It is apparent that an examination of the strap will afford a better means of ascertaining the truth in respect to its suitableness or unsuitableness for the office it was to perform than any possible description or plan of it could afford, and the necessity for an inspection of it is correspondingly greater than the necessity for an oral description or a plan. . . . [2] The defendants' second objection is because the discovery and inspection are sought for the purpose of having the broken strap examined by persons with a view of enabling them to testify as experts in the action at law. This objection must also be overruled. It is evident that expert testimony may be competent upon the issue to be tried, whether it relate to the form of the strap, the manner of its construction, or the character of the materials from which it was made. The defendants have ample opportunity to procure such testimony. Justice requires that the plaintiff shall also have an opportunity to have the strap examined by persons in whose skill and scientific knowledge she has confidence. There cannot be a fair trial of the case unless such opportunity is given to the plaintiff. Indeed, it may be that she cannot establish her right — if she have one — without having the opportunity. . . . [3] The defendants place much reliance upon their third point, viz., that the equitable remedy for discovery cannot be invoked in aid of an action at law for a personal tort. They do not question, and, in view of the authorities, cannot question, the proposition that discovery may be had in aid of actions of tort relating to property, such as trover, detinue, trespass, waste, etc. But they say that a defendant cannot be called upon to implicate himself directly or indirectly in a personal tort, because it would tend to show moral turpitude, and so is inconsistent with principles of natural justice. . . . If the absence of authorities is entitled to any weight, it is, under the circumstances, very slight. Cases for personal torts arising from the action of the defendant, — wilful torts, so to speak, — in which the defendant could make discovery without incriminating himself, must, from the nature of the case, be very rare. It is possible that there have been none excepting Macaulay v. Shackell, and cases of like nature that have been decided in accordance therewith without again raising the question. Cases for negligence were not common prior to the middle of the last century. The use of steam and electricity, and the commercial activity consequent thereon, have immensely multiplied cases of this kind. Lord Campbell's act for giving compensation to the families of persons killed by the negligence of others was enacted in 1846. Eight years later a procedure bill was passed, largely through the agency of Lord Campbell (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), by which, among other things, it was provided that either party to a civil action in the superior courts 'shall be at liberty to apply to the court or a judge for a rule or order for the inspection by the jury, or by himself, or by his witnesses of any real or personal property, the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination of the question in dispute.' . . . In passing, it may be remarked that if the act and the reason of its enactment do not show that its author understood that Courts of equity had jurisdiction to order an inspection of real or personal property when such inspection was material to the proper determination of an issue, it certainly shows that he felt there was a necessity for such inspection in the administration of justice. The act relieved parties from the necessity of resorting to equity for discovery, and reasonably accounts for the absence, in England, of bill of discovery in aid of actions at law for negligence since that time. . . . If Macaulay v. Shackell [2] and Wilmot v. Maccabe [3] are not authorities in favor of the maintenance of the plaintiff's bill, the general principles governing the remedy of discovery certainly justify its maintenance. The case may be a new case in specie, so far as discovery is concerned, but it belongs to a class to which the remedy of discovery is applicable."

This power was in England exercised in ordering inspection of mines, and in sundry other instances,[4] particularly in patent cases.[5]

[2] 1 Bligh N. s. 96.

[3] 4 Sim. 263.

[4] 1686, Marsden v. Panshall, 1 Vern. 407 (bill to discover whether cloths improperly pawned by the plaintiff's factor B. were in the defendant's hands; the defendant not ad-

[5] 1815, Bovill v. Moore, 2 C. P. Coop. 56 (patent infringement; L. C. Eldon allowed the plaintiff "to inspect the defendant's machine and see it work"); 1816, Browne v. Moore, 3 Bligh 178 (infringement; inspection of plaintiff's machine allowed; ordered "that the plaintiff should put the machine into a state to work, according to the specification enrolled, etc., and permit Mr. J. M. to see it work in that state on the succeeding morning"); 1832, Russell v. Cowley, 1 Webster Pat. Cas. 457; Brougham, L. C. (infringement; two persons on each side having been agreed to be appointed as inspectors of the works, to give evidence, an order was made for inspection by them, "it being the object and intention of this Court to enable the said plaintiff to give such evidence . . . as will enable him to make out, if the fact be so, the infringement"); 1835, Morgan v. Seaward, 1 Webster Pat. Cas. 167, 169, Shadwell, V. C. (infringement; injunction refused, but account ordered, "the plaintiffs and their witnesses to be at liberty to inspect at all seasonable times, giving reasonable notice," the machinery to be made); 1856, Jones v. Lee, 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 558, Exch. (action on a licensee's covenant; plaintiff allowed "to go to the defendant's factory and inspect any machines he has there").

Compare the rule for names of witnesses (ante, § 1856*c*).

In the United States, there seem to have been few instances of a demand for it in chancery cases;[6] nor under the simplified code-procedure has there been a disposition to adopt these transferred equitable powers.[7] But by mitting the identity of the cloths, it was ordered that the defendant "let the plaintiff, with two or more persons present, have a sight of the cloths pawned by B.," so that the plaintiff might bring an action at law); 1799, Lonsdale v. Curwen, 3 Bligh 168, note (bill to prevent the digging of coal by defendant in mines under the plaintiff's premises; to obtain "a perfect and complete report of the workings," the defendant was ordered to permit certain persons to inspect the mines"; the reporter adds, "The practice in courts of equity of granting orders for inspection of mines, machines, etc., is well settled"); 1804, Walker v. Fletcher, 3 Bligh 172 (similar to the preceding case; form of order given); 1814, Earl of Macclesfield v. Davis, 3 Ves. & B. 16 (jewels, etc., bequeathed to the plaintiff as heirlooms, and said to be in an iron chest in the possession of the defendant's banker, the defendant claiming a lien; on motion, L. C. Eldon allowed the plaintiffs an order to the defendant "to permit the said box with its contents to be inspected by the plaintiffs, or any person they may appoint, at all seasonable times, upon request"); 1815, Kynaston v. East India Co., 3 Swanst. 248 (quoted supra); 1821, East India Co. v. Kynaston, 3 Bligh 153, 157, 168 (order of the Chancellor in the preceding case affirmed by the House of Lords); 1848, Twentyman v. Barnes, 2 DeG. & Sm. 225 (fraudulent alteration of a document; order for experts' inspection, declined, on an undertaking by the opponent not to remove the document from the record-office); 1849, Attorney-General v. Chambers, 12 Beav. 159 (order of inspection of coal mines, granted); 1849, Lewis v. Morris, 8 Hare 97 (the plaintiff's inspection of his mine, leased to the defendant, allowed); 1860, Bennett v. Whitehouse, 28 Beav. 119 (trespass to a mine; the plaintiff allowed to inspect the defendant's mine); 1860, Ennor v. Barwell, 1 DeG. F. & J. 529 (an order to allow trenches to be cut, to ascertain a geological formation, held too extensive, but the power not doubted); 1861, Bennett v. Griffiths, 3 E. & E. 467, 476 (inspection of a mine; "the power to order an inspection of real or personal property has long existed in courts of equity; and we find that, as ancillary to that power, the Courts of equity have ordered the removal, where necessary, of obstructions to the inspection").

Distinguish the following: 1841, Blakesley v. Wheildon, 1 Hare 276 (specific performance decreed under a contract of sale of a mine reserving the power to inspect).

[6] Compare here the citations post, §§ 2221, 2224 (party's privilege not to disclose chattels and premises); Federal: 1867, Thornburgh v. Savage M. Co., U. S. Dist. Ct., 1 Pac. Law Mag. 267, 7 Morris Mining R. 667 (quoted post, § 2221; inspection of a mine, allowed); 1894, Montana Co. v. St. Louis M. & M. Co., 152 U. S. 160, 14 Sup. 506 (quoted infra, n. 9); 1907, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Griesa, C. C. Kansas, 156 Fed. 398 (bill in equity to cancel a policy of life insurance; the deceased was killed by falling from the roof of his house; the issue was whether he had taken morphine, just previously, with intent to suicide thereby, and had deliberately thrown himself from the roof to conceal the suicide; the insurer applied for an order to exhume the body of the deceased; granted, in a scholarly and sensible opinion by Smith McPherson, J.; the order directed the appointment of a pathologist to examine for the effect of the fall, and a chemist to examine for morphine; the opinion repudiates a privilege protecting from such disclosure); 1909, Griesa v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 8th C. C. A., 169 Fed. 509 (same case on appeal; point not decided); Massachusetts: 1869, Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Cone Iron Works, 102 Mass. 80, 82, 88 (mine trespass; order of inspection made, apparently by consent, but apparently sanctioned by the Court without regard to this); Missouri: 1917, State ex rel. American Mfg. Co. v. Anderson, 270 Mo. 533, 194 S. W. 268 (action pending for an unspecified cause; application by plaintiff for an order to permit plaintiff to enter defendant's premises, with witnesses, and to measure and to make photographs; held that the trial Court had inherent power, without statute, to make such an order; able opinion by Woodson, J.); New Hampshire: 1902, Reynolds v. Burgess S. F. Co., 71 N. H. 332, 51 Atl. 1075 (bill granted for discovery of the pieces of an engine-strap of the defendant, alleged to have caused death; inspection by plaintiff's witnesses and attorneys allowed; quoted supra); New Jersey: 1877, Thomas Iron Co. v. Allentown M. Co., 28 N. J. Eq. 77, 82 (inspection of a mine, allowed; Bennett v. Whitehouse, Eng., approved).

Compare also the cases cited ante, § 1163 (view by jury), post, § 2194 (subpœna 'duces tecum,' for chattels), and post, § 2220, (party's privilege).

[7] 1901, Sullivan v. Nicoulin, 113 Ia. 76, 84 N. W. 978 (services in plastering a house; right to obtain inspection of the house by plaintiff's witnesses on order of Court, not decided); 1883, Cooke v. Lalance G. M. Co., 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 332 (order for inspection of defendant's machine, on which plaintiff was injured, refused); 1910, Danahy v. Kellogg, 126 N. Y. Suppl. 444 (action for death in an automobile collision; the defendant asked for statute in a few jurisdictions ample express power has been given for ordering an opportunity of inspection, not only of premises and chattels but also of bodily members.[8] The commoner instances of the application of the principle an order to permit exhumation of the body and examination by the microscope to discover whether death resulted from heart disease independently existing; denied; "we base our decision squarely on the absence of any right or authority in the court to grant the inspection asked," i.e. under the Code of Civil Procedure).

See a valuable article by Charles E. Townsend, "The Possibilities of Discovery in Patent Cases; Some Recent Judicial Developments," California L. Rev., IV, 1 (1915).

[8] The following statutes apply to premises and chattels only, and should be compared with those cited ante, § 1163, post, § 2221; the statutes as to inspection of the person's body are placed post, § 2220:

ENGLAND: 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 58 ("Either party shall be at liberty to apply to the Court or a judge for a rule or order for the inspection by the jury or by himself or by his witnesses of any real or personal property the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination of the question in dispute," and the Court may make such order as seems fit); 1861, Bennett v. Griffiths, 3 E. & E. 467 (statute applied; quoted supra); 1883, Rules of the Supreme Court, Order 50, Rule 3 ("It shall be lawful for the Court or a judge, upon the application of any party to a cause or matter, and upon such terms as may be just, to make an order for the detention, preservation, or inspection of any property or thing being the subject of such cause or matter or as to which any question may arise therein; and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, to authorize any persons to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any party to such cause or matter; and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid to authorize any samples to be taken or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence"); 1893, Macalpine v. Calder, 1 Q. B. 545 (Order 50 applied); 1852, St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, § 42 (in patent cases, inspection may be ordered); 1860, Patent Type Founding Co. v. Lloyd, 5 H. & N. 192 (statute applied).

CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court, 1914, R. 196 (like Ont. Rule 266); British Columbia: 1898, Esquimalt & N. R. Co. v. New Vancouver Coal Co., 6 Br. C. 194 (inspection of a mine allowed, under Court Rule 514); 1902, Star Mining & M. Co. v. White Co., 9 Br. C. 422 (similar; inspection of the plans, and copies thereof, also allowed); 1916, Seattle Construction & D. D. Co. v. Grant Smith & Co., 26 D. L. R. 671, B. C. (samples of the hull of a floating wharf, not directed to be taken under Rule 659, in the trial Court's discretion); Manitoba: R. S. 1913, c. 46, Rules 605, 891 (like Eng. St. 1854, § 58, and Order 50, Rule 3); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 46, Rule 4 (like Eng. Ord. 50, Rule 3); Nova Scotia: Rules of Court 1919, Ord. 50, Rule 3 (like Eng. Ord. 50, Rule 3); 1896, Gray v. Hardman, 28 N. Sc. 235 (the judge's discretion controls; here, the inspection of a mine); Ontario: Rules of Court 1913, No. 266 (inspection of property before trial may be ordered for a party or his witnesses); § 370 (the judge may order the detention, inspection, etc., of property, etc., like Eng. Ord. 50, R. 3); 1899, Hills v. Union L. & S. Co., 19 Ont. Pr. 1 (rule not applied to order inspection of premises not in occupation of the opponent); Prince Edward Isl. St. 1873, c. 22, § 252 (jury's view or inspection by the party or his witnesses "of any real or personal property the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination of the question in dispute" may be ordered).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1894, Montana Co. v. St. Louis M. & M. Co., 152 U. S. 160, 14 Sup. 506 (Montana statute held constitutional; the power "has never been denied; if it exists [for a court of equity], 'a fortiori' the State has power to provide a statutory proceeding to accomplish the same result"); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1636 (ejectment; Court may allow party "to enter upon the land in controversy and make survey thereof for the purposes of the action"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 742 (in an action for "recovery of real property or for damages for an injury thereto," the judge may authorize either party to "enter upon the property and make survey and measurement thereof, and of any tunnels, shafts, or drifts therein," etc.); St. 1917, May 23, p. 831, § 19*a* (workmen's compensation, etc.; commission may direct an "inspection of the premises where the injury occurred to be made"; quoted in full ante, § 4c); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, C. C. P. § 399 (provisions for inspection of mining property in dispute); Gen. St. § 3318 (the Court may order defendant to allow the inspection of a mine, in a claim for drainage, where defendant has refused to allow plaintiff's inspection); § 3300 (same for an action involving title or right of possession of a mining claim); Florida: Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 2688 ("Either party shall be at liberty to apply to the Court for a rule or order for the inspection by himself or by his witnesses of any real or personal property the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination of the question in dispute"); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2690 (like Fla. Rev. Gen. St. § 2688); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 6965 (on an issue as to a mining claim, the Court may on 3 days' notice order to permit "examination, survey, and other privileges," including removal of loose rock, etc., and work to be done); 1910, Bacon v. Federal M. & S. Co., 19 Ida. 136, 112 Pac. 1055 (statute applied); Iowa: Code 1919, § 737 (landowner adjoining coal mine may have examination and survey to ascertain encroachments); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 13368 (actions relating to realty; on application by either party, court may direct a survey); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 9492–9494 (whenever it is "necessary for the ascertainment, enforcement, or protection" of a mining right, "that an inspection examination, or survey of such mine," etc., be had, the judge may order it, after three days' refusal of the possessor upon demand in writing); 1890, St. Louis M. & M. Co. v. Montana Co., 9 Mont. 288, 23 Pac. 510 (statute applied and held constitutional; learned opinion by Blake, C. J.); 1901, Anaconda C. M. Co. (State ex rel.) v. District Court, 25 Mont. 504, 65 Pac. 1020 (statute applied); 1902, Heinze (State ex rel.) v. District Court, 26 Mont. 416, 68 Pac. 794 (statute applied); 1902, Geyman (State ex rel.) v. District Court, 26 Mont. 483, 68 Pac. 861 (statute applied); 1903, Parrot S. & C. Co. (State ex rel.) v. District Court, 28 Mont. 528, 73 Pac. 230 (applied and held constitutional; Holloway, J., diss., on the ground that the defendant could not be compelled to use its hoists, etc., for enabling the inspection to be made); 1903, Heinze (State ex rel.) v. District Court, 29 Mont. 105, 74 Pac. 132 (Parrot S. & C. Co. v. District Court, supra, followed; Holloway, J., diss.); 1904, Mendenhall (State ex rel.) v. District Court, 29 Mont. 363, 74 Pac. 1078 (preliminary conditions for an order determined); 1904, Boston & M. C. C. & S. M. Co. (State ex rel.) v. District Court, 30 Mont. 206, 76 Pac. 206 (preliminary conditions for an order, determined); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence, § 30 (the Court may order a party to permit inspection by witnesses or the opponent of any premises or chattels in his control, where inspection would aid the ascertainment of truth); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, §§ 3467–3474 (mines and minerals; any party to a suit may enter the place, to measure or survey, after notice; on refusal of the party in possession to permit entry, the judge may exclude all his evidence or order judgment for the other party, or direct the sheriff to put the other party in possession for measuring or surveying); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 324 ("discovery of any article or property"; quoted ante, § 1859); § 982 (action for realty; when a survey is necessary or expedient to enable either party to prepare his case, court may order opponent to permit entry for survey); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, §§ 6929, 6930 (damage by adjacent mining operations; Court may order survey, i. e. examination, by a "competent disinterested surveyor or mining engineer or both"; for this purpose "there shall be given free access to the mine," and suitable transportation in the mine shall be furnished); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 969, 970 (adjacent owner alleging a need for protection of his interest may have a survey of a mine made, by entry with assistants); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 20 (in actions for personal injuries the Court may require the defendant to permit the plaintiff's attorney, with or without experts, "to view and examine the place and cause of such injury" as directed by the judge); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7251 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 742, adding in first clause, "or to quiet title or to determine adverse claims thereto"); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 2621 ("A superior judge or the attorney general may, to prevent a failure of justice, upon the petition of the state's attorney, order an autopsy to be made in the preparation of a state cause for trial in any court, and fix the compensation therefor, not to exceed twenty-five dollars"); § 2620 ("A superior judge or the attorney general may, to prevent failure of justice, order an examination to be made by an expert or experts, either within or without the State, in the investigation of a crime supposed to have been committed within the State. Such order shall be made only on the petition of the State's attorney for the county in which the crime is supposed to have been committed, setting forth the facts because of which the order is applied for, and verified by affidavit, and shall name the expert or experts by whom the examination is to be made, and limit the expense of the examination, and such expense shall be paid in the manner provided for the payment of witness fees in state causes in the county court"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 3825 (where the concealment of a deceased's property is suspected, Court may compel production of documents or writings); § 4095*a* (in any civil action a party may obtain an order "for the inspection by such party or his witnesses of any real or personal property in the possession or control of an opposing party the inspection of which may be deemed material and necessary to the trial and determination of the action or proceeding"); 1913, Horlick's Malted Milk Co. v. Spiegel Co., 155 Wis. 201, 144 N. W. 272 (action for unfair competition; the plaintiff had obtained some evidence of the defendant's methods by buying at the defendant's store bottles in which the defendant was selling its product under the defendant's name, and the defendant asked for inspection of these bottles, etc.; allowed).

are issues of mining trespass, industrial accidents, title to realty, and insurance claims (involving exhumation of a corpse).

It must be noted the present question, i. e. of the right to inspect the opponent's premises or chattels before trial, is distinct from that of the opponent's privilege to withhold them from evidence at the trial (post, §§ 2194, 2221), and from that of the propriety of ordering a jury's view during trial (ante, § 1163); the precedents are sometimes not to be discriminated.

(b) In personal injury claims, an inspection of the claimant's body, to enable the defendant to prepare for trial, is as necessary as any other aspect of discovery ever was. This measure has been conceded wherever the larger question of Privilege has been answered in the negative; the authorities are therefore considered under that head (post, § 2220).

§ 1863. Same: (2) Criminal Cases. The 'non possumus' tendency of the common-law Courts to refuse any measure of discovery before trial is seen at its extreme phase in criminal cases. The accused was conceded no right to inspect beforehand chattels (or premises) in the control of the prosecution.[1]

This attitude was consistent with the refusal to require a list of witnesses to be furnished (ante, § 1850). But the same considerations which led to the universal legislative reversal of policy in that measure should have availed to include this one also. The danger of manufacturing counter-evidence is even less in the case of chattels and premises. Moreover, that danger, however great, is not a valid reason. The possibility that a dishonest accused will misuse such an opportunity is no reason for committing the injustice of refusing the honest accused a fair means of clearing himself. That argument is outworn; it was the basis (and with equal logic) for the one-time refusal of the criminal law (ante, § 575) to allow the accused to produce any witnesses at all. Modern rationalism should extend to the accused this right of inspection.[2]

§ 1863. [1] 1921, State v. Howard, 191 Ia. 728, 183 N. W. 482 (accused is not entitled to inspect exhibits — here, a pistol, etc. — used by grand jury and filed with minutes; the statute requiring them to be filed is directory only); 1868, Com. v. Andrews, Mass., Davis' Rep. 4 (murder; a motion by defendant to require the Attorney-General to allow an inspection of parts of the deceased's body and of personalty of the defendant in the prosecution's possession, subject to restrictions as to mutilation, was rejected; subject to the Court's discretion to allow a postponement, etc., in case of surprise at the trial); 1911, Com. v. Jordan, 207 Mass. 259, 93 N. E. 809 (defendant not entitled to a copy of the autopsy report or to an opportunity to inspect weapons, etc., in the prosecutor's possession, apart from his right to a bill of particulars to enable him to prepare his defence; the rule thus announced is needlessly harsh on defendants, and should not be accepted elsewhere; to lay down such a rule at the present day shocks one's sense of reasonableness); 1887, State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 578, 5 S. W. 257, 330 (murder; whether the defendant was entitled to have expert witnesses examine the exhumed corpse, about which the prosecution had declared its intention to offer experts who had examined it; undecided).

For production or inspection at the trial, see post, § 2224.

For inspection by autopsy or by view, see ante, §§ 1152, 1162, 1862.

[2] 1917, State v. Howland, 100 Kan. 181, 163 Pac. 1071 (statutory rape; a child was born; the mother was of Indian blood, and the accused was of dark complexion; the defendant's counsel was refused access by the State's attorney to the hospital for the purpose of inspecting the child to ascertain whether its color and features would furnish evidence of paternity; held error).

END OF VOL. III