A TREATISE

ON THE

ANGLO-AMERICAN SYSTEM OF

EVIDENCE

IN

TRIALS AT COMMON LAW

INCLUDING

THE STATUTES AND JUDICIAL DECISIONS OF ALL JURISDICTIONS OF
THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

BY

JOHN HENRY WIGMORE

PROFESSOR OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE IN THE LAW SCHOOL OF NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

IN FIVE VOLUMES

VOLUME III

SECOND EDITION

BOSTON
LITTLE, BROWN, AND COMPANY
1923

Printed in the United States of America

CONTENTS

VOLUME THREE

CONTENTS

CHAPTER XLVII

TOPIC I. — DYING DECLARATIONS

CHAPTER XLVIII

TOPIC II. — STATEMENTS OF FACTS AGAINST INTEREST

CONTENTS

CHAPTER XLIX

TOPIC III. — DECLARATIONS ABOUT FAMILY HISTORY (PEDIGREE)

CHAPTER L

TOPIC IV. — ATTESTATION OF A SUBSCRIBING WITNESS

CHAPTER LI

TOPIC V. — REGULAR ENTRIES

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CHAPTER LV

Topic IX. — Learned Treatises

CONTENTS

CHAPTER LVII

TOPIC XIV. — SPONTANEOUS EXCLAMATIONS

1. General Form of the Exception

2. Special Forms of the Exception

CHAPTER LVIII

SUB-TITLE III. — HEARSAY RULE NOT APPLICABLE (VERBAL ACTS, RES GESTÆ, ETC.)

1. Utterances forming a Part of the Issue

2. Utterances forming a Verbal Part of an Act

3. Utterances used as Circumstantial Evidence

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CHAPTER LXII

SUB-TITLE V. — PRIOR NOTICE, OR DISCOVERY, OF EVIDENCE TO THE OPPONENT

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

THE following Tables show the dates of latest sources examined, and the editions of legislative sources used.

TABLE I

Table I shows in Col. 2 the code or compilation of legislation used.

Col. 3 shows the latest year-laws (session laws) examined.

Col. 4 shows the latest official report of judicial decisions cited. For England and Ireland, only the official reports were examined. For Canada, only the unofficial reports (Dominion Law Reports) were examined; as no table of parallel citations is available, the official reports are not cited in this book for cases reported since 1912 (the date of beginning of the D. L. R.); hence, the official report here shown in Col. 4 is merely the latest volume that had appeared at the time of going to press; indicating that the citations of cases in this work will include at least the cases down to those official numbers of volumes, as well as a few later ones. For the United States, only the unofficial reports (National Reporter System) were examined; except for Alaska, Hawaii, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, and for District of Columbia down to 1919, — these not being included in the National Reporter System. Parallel citations of the official reports are invariably given, so far as these had appeared at the date of going to press. The official report shown in Col. 4 is merely the latest volume cited; the cases examined come down to a later date in the unofficial citations (Table II).

Col. 5 shows, by jurisdictions, the latest unofficial report examined and cited, — for Canada, the Dominion Law Reports; for the United States, the National Reporter System.

The decisions of the Appellate (intermediate) Courts which exist in some States have been cited only on interesting matters for which there is scanty authority; partly because their rulings are not final (except in Texas and in Oklahoma, for criminal cases), and partly because in some jurisdictions they are expressly made not binding as precedents. The rulings of Federal District Courts have also been left unnoticed to a similar extent.

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

TABLE I. JUDICIAL AND LEGISLATIVE SOURCES USED

Jurisdiction	Statutes		Reported Decisions
	Revision or Code Edition Used	Latest Annual Laws Examined	Latest Official Report Cited	Latest Unofficial Report Examined
England:	Rules of Court, ed. 1922	1921	1922 K. B. 1 1922 Ch. 1 1922 P. to June 1 1922 A. C. to June 1
Ireland:		1921	1921 L. R. Ire.
Canada:
Dominion	Revised Statutes of C. 1906	1921	62 Can. Sup.	65 D. L. R.
Alberta	[see Northwest Territories] Rules of Court 1914	1921	16 Alta.	65 D. L. R.
British Columbia	Revised Statutes 1911 Supreme Court Rules 1912	1921	28 B. C.	65 D. L. R.
Manitoba	Revised Statutes 1913 Rules of Court 1913	1921	30 Man.	65 D. L. R.
New Brunswick	Consolidated Statutes 1903 Rules of Court 1909	1921	47 N. B.	65 D. L. R.
Newfoundland	Consolidated Statutes 1916	1921	9 Newf.
Northwest Terr.[1]	Consolidated Ordinances 1898	1904	7 N. W.Terr.
Nova Scotia	Revised Statutes 1900 Rules of the Supreme Court 1919	1921	53 N. S.	65 D. L. R.
Ontario	Revised Statutes 1914 Rules of Practice and Procedure 1913	1921	49 Ont.	65 D. L. R.
Prince Edward Island[2]		1920	2 P. E. I.	65 D. L. R.
Saskatchewan	Revised Statutes 1920	1921–2	14 Sask.	65 D. L. R.
Yukon	Consolidated Ordinances 1914	1920		65 D. L. R.
United States:
Federal	Revised Statutes 1878 U. S. Code 1919[3]	1922 to June 1	258 U. S.	42 Sup. 279 Fed. 10 Porto Rico Fed. 1 Extra-terr. Cas.
Alabama	Code 1907	1919	206 Ala. 17 Ala. App.	91 So. 91 So.

[1] The legislation and decisions of this region are now continued by those of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Yukon.

[2] There being no Compilation here, and the Evidence Act of 1889 having codified most of the rules, no search was made for statutes prior to 1889, except that those of 1873 and 1887, dealing with Evidence, were collated.

[3] At the time of going to press, still pending in the Senate; passed in the House of Representatives, May 16, 1921.

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

TABLE I. JUDICIAL AND LEGISLATIVE SOURCES USED—Continued

Jurisdiction	Statutes		Reported Decisions
	Revision or Code Edition Used	Latest Annual Laws Examined	Latest Official Report Cited	Latest Unofficial Report Examined
Alaska	Compiled Laws 1913	1921	4 Alaska	279 Fed.
Arizona	Revised Statutes 1913	1921	22 Ariz.	206 Pac.
Arkansas	Digest of the Statutes 1919	1921	150 Ark.	240 S. W.
California	Codes 1872		187 Cal.	206 Pac.
	General Laws ed. 1915	1921	45 Cal. App.	206 Pac.
Colorado	Compiled Laws 1921	1921	70 Colo.	206 Pac.
Columbia (Dist.)	Code of Law 1919	1921	50 D. C. App.	279 Fed.
Connecticut	General Statutes, Revision of 1918	1921	96 Conn.	116 Atl.
Delaware	Revised Statutes 1915	1921	11 Del. Ch.	116 Atl.
			7 Boyce	116 Atl.
Florida	Revised General Statutes 1919	1921	82 Fla.	91 So.
Georgia	Code 1910	1921	152 Ga.	111 S. E.
	Park's Annotated Code ed. 1918		27 Ga. App.	111 S. E.
Hawaii	Revised Laws 1915	1921	25 Haw.
Idaho	Compiled Statutes 1919	1921	34 Ida.	206 Pac.
Illinois	Revised Statutes 1874	1921	303 Ill.	135 N. E.
Indiana	Burns' Annotated Statutes 1914	1921	189 Ind.	135 N. E.
			125 Ind. App.	135 N. E.
Iowa	Code 1897	1921	192 Ia.	187 N. W.
	Compiled Code 1919
Kansas	General Statutes 1915	1921	110 Kan.	206 Pac.
Kentucky	Civil and Criminal Codes, Carroll's 3d ed., 1900	1922	194 Ky.	240 S. W.
	Kentucky Statutes, Carroll's 5th ed., 1915, 1918
Louisiana	Revised Civil Code, ed. Marr, 1920	1922	150 La.	91 So.
	Code of Practice, ed. Garland and Wolff, 1900
	Annotated Revision of the Statutes, ed. Marr, 1915
Maine	Revised Statutes 1916	1921	120 Me.	116 Atl.
Maryland	Annotated Code of Public Civil Laws, ed. Bagby, 1911, 1914	1922	139 Md.	116 Atl.
Massachusetts	General Laws 1921	1921	237 Mass.	135 N. E.
Michigan	Compiled Laws 1915	1921	216 Mich.	187 N. W.
Minnesota	General Statutes 1913	1921	150 Minn.	187 N. W.
Mississippi	Annotated Code 1906, ed. Hemingway, 1917	1920	126 Miss.	91 So.
Missouri	Revised Statutes 1919	1921	288 Mo.	240 S. W.
			207 Mo. App.	240 S. W.
Montana	Revised Codes 1921	1921	60 Mont.	206 Pac.
Nebraska	Revised Statutes 1921	1921	106 Nebr.	187 N. W.
Nevada	Revised Laws 1912	1921	44 Nev.	206 Pac.
New Hampshire	Public Statutes 1901	1921	79 N. H.	116 Atl.
New Jersey	Compiled Statutes 1910	1921	95 N. J. L.	116 Atl.
			92 N. J. Eq.	116 Atl.

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

TABLE I. JUDICIAL AND LEGISLATIVE SOURCES USED—Continued

Jurisdiction	Statutes		Reported Decisions
	Revision or Code Edition Used	Latest Annual Laws Examined	Latest Official Report Cited	Latest Unofficial Report Examined
New Mexico	N. M. Statutes Annotated 1915	1921	26 N. M.	206 Pac.
New York	Consolidated Laws 1909	1922	233 N. Y.	135 N. E.
	Code of Criminal Procedure 1881		196 App. Div.	194 N. Y. Suppl.
	Civil Practice Act 1920
	Surrogate Court Act 1920
	Justice Court Act 1920
	City Court Act 1920
	Court of Claims Act 1920
	N. Y. City Municipal Court Code 1920
North Carolina	Consolidated Statutes 1919	1921	182 N. C.	111 S. E.
North Dakota	Compiled Laws 1913	1921	45 N. D.	187 N. W.
Ohio	General Code Annotated 1921	1921	100 Oh.	135 N. E.
Oklahoma	Compiled Statutes 1921	1921	82 Okl.	206 Pac.
			16 Okl. Cr.	206 Pac.
Oregon	Or. Laws 1920	1921	102 Or.	206 Pac.
Pennsylvania	Digest of Statute Law 1920	1921	272 Pa.	116 Atl.
Philippine Isl.	Code of Civil Procedure, ed. 1920	1920 to Apr. 6 No. 2931 vol. 15	40 P. I.
	Administrative Code 1917
	Civil Code, ed. 1918
	Penal Code, Penal Laws, and General Order 58, ed. 1911
Porto Rico	Revised Statutes and Codes 1911	1921	28 P. R.
Rhode Island	General Laws, Revision of 1909	1921	43 R. I.	116 Atl.
South Carolina	Code of Laws 1922	1921	116 S. C.	111 S. E.
South Dakota	Revised Code 1919	1921	44 S. D.	187 N. W.
Tennessee	Shannon's Code 1917	1921	145 Tenn.	240 S. W.
Texas	Revised Civil Statutes 1911	1921	110 Tex.	240 S. W.
	Revised Criminal Statutes 1911, Vernon ed. 1919		90 Tex. Cr.	240 S. W.
Utah	Compiled Laws 1917	1921	57 Utah	206 Pac.
Vermont	General Laws 1917	1921	93 Vt.	116 Atl.
Virginia	Code 1919	1922	130 Va.	111 S. E.
Washington	Remington & Ballinger's Annotated Codes and Statutes 1909	1921	117 Wash.	206 Pac.
West Virginia	Hogg's W. Va. Code Annotated 1914	1921	89 W. Va.	111 S. E.
Wisconsin	Statutes 1919	1921	174 Wis.	187 N. W.
Wyoming	Compiled Statutes Annotated 1920	1921	27 Wyo.	206 Pac.

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

TABLE II

The printing of this treatise began in August, 1922, and occupied many months; it was therefore desirable to set a definite point of time for the ending of citations (instead of inserting current late cases in the latter portions of the book only), in order that those who use the book may know where to begin in examining later sources appearing since its publication. The point of stoppage taken was therefore that volume of the several National Reporters which ended nearest to July 1, 1922; this ranged (dating by the weekly issues) between May, 1922, and August, 1922. The latest volumes of Reporters consulted were as follows:

TABLE II. LATEST NATIONAL REPORTERS EXAMINED

	VOLUME
Atlantic Reporter	116
Federal Reporter	279
New York Supplement[1]	194
Northeastern Reporter	135
Northwestern Reporter	187
Pacific Reporter	206
Southern Reporter	91
Southeastern Reporter	111
Southwestern Reporter	240
Supreme Court Reporter	42

[1] This Series was not examined prior to Vol. 178.

LIST OF CHANGED SECTION NUMBERS IN THIS EDITION

(Where the number given for the Second Edition is the same as that for the First, but is followed by others or by italic letters, the material in the original section has been expanded into several sections.)

1st Ed.	2d Ed.	1st Ed.	2d Ed.	1st Ed.	2d Ed.
6	6, 6 a, 6 b	936	937	1856	1856, 1856 a–e
68	68, 68 a	938	939	1859	1859, 1859 a–g
150	150, 150 a	990	989	1862	1862, 1863
164	163	1031	1032	1863	1864
165	164	1032	1033	2090	2091
208	208, 208 a	1056	1057	2091	2093
318	309	1057	1058	2129	2128
321	320	1058	1059	2130	2129
367	367–370	1232	1233	2183	2183, 2184
370	371	1345	1344	2184	2185
371	372	1346	1345	2213	2212
372	373	1347	1346, 1347	2214	2213
414	416	1354	1354, 1355,	2215	2214
415	417		1356	2259	2259, 2259 a–d
416	418	1633	1633, 1633 a	2281 a	2282
464	464, 465	1662	1662, 1663	2282	2283
562	562, 563	1676	1676, 1676 a,	2374	2376
617	618		1676 b	2375	2378
785	785, 767	1768	1766	2376	2379
787	787, 787 a	1795	1767	2461	2466
875	874	1796	1768	2462	2461, 2462
934	934, 938	1797	1769	2511	2511, 2511 a
935	936	1855	1855, 1855 a

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO THE POCKET CODE OF EVIDENCE

Treatise §	Code §	Treatise §	Code §	Treatise §	Code §
1	1	61	134	152–153	200
3	2	62	138–140	154–155	201
2	3	63	140–145	156	202
4	8–11	64	146–147	157	203
5	17–20	65	148	158–160	205
6	27–30	66	149	163	207
6 a	21–22	67	150	164	208
7	31–34	68	151	165, 168	206
9	35	68 a	152	166	209
10	36	70–76	154–158	167	210
11	37	77	160	172–176	211
12	38–41	78	163–164	177	212
13	42–44	79	165	191	215
14	45	80	161	192–194	218–219
15	46–48	83	167	195	224
16	49–53	84–88	168	196–197	216, 222, 223
17	55–70	89	169	198	226–227
18	71–93	92	170	199	228
19	94	93–99	171	200	229
20	97–101	102–104	177	201	230
21	102–103	105–109	178–181	202	231
24	105–114	110–111	182	203	232
26	115–116	112	184	204	233
30–36	117	113	183	205	234
38	118, 119	117	185–186	206	235
39	120	118	187	207	236
40	121	130–132	188–190	208	238
41	122	133	191	208 a	237
42	123	135	192	209–213	239
43	124	136	192 a	215	219
51	125	137	193	216	220
52–54	126–130	139–142	194	218	221
55	130	143–144	195	219	240
56	136	148	196	220	241
57–58	137	149	197	221	242
59	131–133	150–150 a	198	222	245
60	135	151	199	223	246–249

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
224	243
225	250
227	251
228	252–253, 256–258
229	254–255
230	259
231	261–262
232	263
233	264
235	265
237	266
238	267
239	268
240	269
241	270
242	271–275
244	276
245	277
246	278
247	279
248	280
249	281
250	282
251	283
252	284
253	285
254	286
255	287
256	285
257	285
258	288
259	286
260	289
265–266	290
267	291–292
268–272	293
273	650
274	651
276	652
277–279	654
280	655–656
281	664
282	647–648, 653
283	649
284	657
285–290	658–661, 664
291	662–663
293	294, 665
300	297
301	298
302–303	299
304	300
305	220
309–317	302
321	303
324–327	304
329–331	305
333–338	306
340–344	307
346–349	308
351–352	309
354	310
357–360	311
363–365	312
367	314
368	313
369–370	314
371–373	315
375–376	316
377	317
378	318
379	319
382	320
383	321
385–387	322
389–391	324
392	326
394	327
395	328
396–397	329
398–402	330
402–406	331
410–417	333–334
418	336
431–432	337
434	338
435–436	339
437	340–341
438–440	342
441–449	344–349
451–456	350–351
457–458	352–353
459–465	354–357
475–480	360–361
483	362
484	363
485	364
486	365
487	366
492–496	367
497	368–369
498–500	367
505–506	370
507	371
508	372
515	373
516–518	374
519–524	375
525–531	376
555–556	378
557–559	379
560	380
561	381
564–566	383
567	386
568–569	384
570	385
571	387
576–577	388
578	390
579–580	389
581	392
583–587	393
600	395
601–620	396
608	397
650–653	400
654	401
655	402
657	405–412
658	403
659–663	404
664	413
665	406–408
666	410
667	411
669	412
672–674	414, 1416
675	1417
677	1418
679	1419

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
681	1420
682	1421–1423
687	408
688	409
689	416
690	408
691–692	417
693	418
694–697	419
699–707	420
709	420 bis
711–713	422
714	423
715	424
716	425
725	427
726–729	428
730	429
734	431
738–739	442
744	431, 443
745	432
746	433
747	434
748	435
749	436
750	437
751	438
752	439
753	440
754	441
758	444
759	446
760	447
761	448
762	449
763	450
764	451
766	454
767	461, 475
769–770	462
771–772	463
773	464
774	465
775	465
776	462
777–779	466

Treatise §	Code §
780	467
781	468
782	467–472
783	473
784	474
785	475
786–788	455–459
789	479
790–792	480
793	481
794	482
795	483
796–797	484
799	488
800–801	489
802	490
803	491
804	492
805	494–495
811	496–497
815	700
821	701
822	702
824	703
825	704
826	705
827–830	706
832	707
833	708
834	709
835–836	710
837	711
838	712
840	713
841	714, 715
842–852	716–720
853–855	721
856–859	722
860	723
861	724–727
862	728
874–881	500
884–888	501
889–892	502
894	503
896–899	504
900	505

Treatise §	Code §
901	506
902–907	507
907–908	508
909–913	509–511
914–915	512
916	513–514
917–918	515
920–921	518
922–926	519–520
927–929	521
930	522
931	523
932	524
933	525
934	526
935	527
936–937	528
939–940	529
943	532
944	533
946	534
948	535
949	536
950–952	537–538
953	539
956	540
957–959	541
960–962	542–543
963	544
964	545
966	546
967	547
968	546
969	548
977–978	549
979	550
980	551, 555
981	552
982	553, 556
983	554
984	554
986–987	550–556
988	557
989	558
990	565
991–996	561–564
1000–1002	567

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1003	568
1004	569
1005	570
1006	572
1007	571
1008–1015	573
1017–1019	574
1020	575
1021	576
1022	577
1023	578
1025–1028	579
1029	581
1030–1034	582
1035	583
1036	584, 591
1037	585
1038	578
1040	586
1041	587
1042	588
1043	589–590
1044–1045	591
1048	630
1049	631–632
1051	633
1053	634
1055	640
1057	636
1058	637
1059	638
1060	641
1061–1062	642–645
1063	680
1064	681
1065	682
1066	683
1067	684
1069–1070	667
1071	666, 668
1072	668, 670
1073	671, 673
1074	675, 676
1075	677
1076	686
1077–1079	687
1080	688
1081	689–691
1082	692–693
1083	694
1084	695
1085	696
1086	697–698
1100	595
1104	596
1105	597
1106	598
1107	599–600
1108	601
1109	602
1111	604–605
1112	606, 607
1116	608
1117	609
1119	611
1122–1124	612
1125	613
1126	615
1127	616
1128	617
1129	618
1130	619
1131	443, 614
1134	622
1135	623–624
1136	623
1137–1138	625
1139	625
1141	626
1142	627
1144	628
1150–1156	730
1157–1158	731
1159	732
1162	734
1163	735–736
1164	737
1165	738
1168	739
1171–1172	745
1173	746
1178	747
1181	748
1182	749
1183	750
1185	751–753
1186	754
1187	757
1189	758
1190	755
1191	757
1192	756
1193	759
1194	760
1195	761
1196–1197	762
1198	763
1199	764
1200	765
1201	766
1202–1203	767
1204	770
1205	768.
1206–1207	771
1208	769
1209	772
1210	773
1211	774
1212	775
1213	776
1214	777
1215–1217	778
1218–1221	779
1223	780
1224–1227	781
1230	782
1232	783
1233	784–785
1234	786–789
1235	790
1236–1240	791
1241	792
1242	793
1243	794–795
1244	796–797
1245	798
1246–1247	799
1248	800
1249–1250	801
1252–1254	806
1255–1257	807–810

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1258	811
1259–1263	812–818
1265	820, 825
1267	821, 825
1268	822, 826
1269	827
1270	828
1271	829
1273	831
1274–1275	832–835
1277–1280	823
1281	824
1285	850
1289	851
1290	852
1291	855
1292	853
1293	854
1294	857
1295	858
1296	859
1297	860
1298	861
1299	862–863
1300	864
1301	865
1302	866
1303	866
1304	868
1305	867
1306	884
1308–1310	869
1311	870–871
1312	872
1313	873
1314	874
1315	875–876
1316	877
1317	878
1318	879
1319	880
1320	881
1321	885
1326–1329	890–892
1330	893
1331	894
1335–1338	896
1339	897
1344	900
1345–1346	901
1348	900
1349	902
1350	903
1351	904
1352	905
1353–1355	906
1356	907
1360–1362	910, 912
1365	911
1371	913
1373–1376	914–915
1378–1382	916
1383	917
1384	918
1386–1388	919–920
1389	921
1390	922–923
1391	924
1392	925–926
1393–1394	927
1395	928
1396–1398	929
1402	930, 939
1403	931
1404	932
1405	933–934
1406	935
1407	936–937
1408–1410	938
1414	940
1415	941
1416	942–944
1417	945
1420	950
1424	950
1431–1433	952
1434	953
1435	952
1438–1441	954
1442	956
1443	955
1445	957–959
1446	960
1447	961
1448	962
1450	963
1451	964
1455	966
1456	967
1457	966, 968
1458–1459	969
1460	970
1461	972
1463–1465	973–974
1466	975
1469	977
1471	976
1472	978
1476	971
1480	980
1481	981–982
1482	980
1483–1484	983
1485	984
1486	984–985
1487	987
1488	1069
1489	988
1490	991
1491	989
1492	990
1493	994
1495	992
1496–1497	997
1500–1502	995
1503	996
1505	1000
1511–1512	886
1513	887
1514	1001
1517	1002
1521	1003
1523	1005
1524	1006
1525	1007
1526	1008
1528	1011
1530	1012–1015
1531	1009
1532	1016
1536–1537	1018

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1538	1019
1539	1020
1540–1543	1021
1547	1022
1548	1023
1550	1024
1551	1025
1552	1026
1554	1029–1030
1555	1028
1556	1027
1557	1031
1558	1032
1564	1035
1565	1036
1566–1567	1037
1568	1038
1570	1039
1573	1040–1043
1576	1045–1047
1580	1050
1582	1053
1584	1060
1585	1056
1586–1587	1054
1588	1055, 1058
1591	1059
1592	1060
1597	1062–1063
1598	1064
1599	1065
1602	1066
1603	1067–1068
1605	1069
1610	1071
1612	1072
1614	1073
1615	1074
1616	1075
1617	1076
1618	1077
1620	1078–1080
1621	1081–1083
1623	1085
1624	1086
1625	1087
1631–1632	1090
1633	1092–1096
1633 a	1094
1635	1097
1637	1098
1639	1100
1640	1101
1641	1102
1642–1644	1103–1105
1645	1106
1647	1107
1648–1651	1110
1652	1111
1653	1112–1115
1655	1116
1657	1117
1658	1118
1659	1119
1660	1120
1661	1121–1123
1662	1124–1125
1664	1130–1132
1665	1133
1666	1136
1667	1137
1668	1138
1669	1139
1670	1130
1671	1141–1142
1674	1144–1145
1675	1146
1676	1148
1676 a	1147
1676 b	1149
1677	1152–1154
1678	1155–1156
1679	1158
1680	1145, 1152
1681	1145, 1152, 1160
1682	1161–1162
1683	1163
1684	1164, 1181
1690	1170
1694	1171
1697	1173
1698	1174
1699	1175
1700	1177
1702	1180
1703	1181
1704	1182
1705	1183
1706	1180
1709	1186
1710	1187–1191
1712–1713	1195–1198
1714	1200
1718	1201
1719–1720	1202
1721	1205
1722	1203–1204
1725–1726	1207–1208
1727	1209
1728	1210
1729	1211
1730	1212
1732	1213–1217
1734	1218
1735	1219
1736	1220
1737	1221
1738	1222–1223
1740	1224
1747–1749	1230–1232
1750	1233–1235
1751	1236
1755	1237
1760–1761	1238
1762	1239
1768	1240
1770	1242–1244
1772–1776	1245
1777	1246
1778	1248
1779	1249
1781	1250
1782	1251
1783	1252
1784	1254
1786	1260
1788	1255
1789	1256
1790	1257
1791	1258
1792	1259

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1800	1266
1801	1267
1802	1268
1803	1269
1805	1270
1806	1271–1272
1807	1273–1275
1808	1277–1278
1810	1280–1282
1816	1286
1817	1286–1288
1818	1295–1297
1819	1298–1301
1820	1291–1293
1821	1289, 1294
1822	1290
1824	1285
1827–1828	1302–1307
1831	1310
1832	1311
1834–1836	1312
1837–1838	1314
1839	1315
1840	1316–1317
1841	1318–1320
1842	1321
1845–1847	1325
1849	1326
1850–1851	1327–1329
1852–1853	1330
1854	1328–1330
1855	1330
1856–1856 e	1332–1334
1856 d	1341
1859–1859 e	1335–1336
1859 f	1342
1861	1345
1862	1339
1863	1344
1866	1352
1867	1350–1351
1869–1870	1353–1358
1871	1360
1872	1362–1364
1873	1361
1874–1875	1366
1876–1877	1367
1878–1880	1367
1882	1369–1371
1883	1372, 1375
1884	1373–1374
1885–1890	1376
1892–1894	1378
1896	1379
1897	1380
1898–1900	1381
1904	1383–1384, 1390–1391
1906	1400
1907	1401
1908	1401–1403
1909	1404
1910	1405
1911	1406
1918	1410
1923	1413–1415
1924	1411–1412
1929	1424–1425
1934–1938	1430–1434
1940–1944	1435–1438
1946–1947	1440–1443
1949–1951	1445
1952	1446
1953	1447–1449
1954	1450
1955	1451
1956	1452
1957	1453
1958	1454
1959–1960	1455
1962	1457
1963–1968	1458
1969–1972	1459
1974	1461
1975	1462
1976	1463
1977	1464
1983	1468–1469
1984	1470
1985	1471
1997–2000	1475–1480
2004	1479
2006	1476–1477
2007	1478
2008	1480
2009	1484
2010	1485
2011	1482
2012	1481
2013	1483
2014–2015	1487
2016	1488–1490
2018	1484
2019	1485
2020	1483
2021	1483
2023–2027	1491
2034	1500
2037–2039	1503
2041–2043	1504–1505
2044	1506
2046	1528
2047	1507
2048	1509
2050	1510
2051	1511–1512
2052	1513
2054	1514
2056–2060	1516
2061–2062	1520
2063	1521, 398
2065	1522
2066	1523–1525
2067–2069	1529
2070–2071	1530
2072	1531
2073	1532–1533
2078	1534
2079	1535
2081	1536
2082–2084	1537
2085	1538–1541
2086	1542
2088	1543
2089	1544
2093	1545
2094	1547
2097	1549–1550, 1552
2098	1551
2099–2100	1553–1559
2102	1561–1562
2103	1563

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
2104	1565
2105–2107	1566
2108	1568
2109	1569–1570
2110	1571–1573
2113	1575
2115	1576
2116	1578
2117	1579
2118	1581
2119	1580
2120	1582
2121–2123	1583–1586
2124	1587–1588
2125	1589
2128	1591
2129	1592
2130	1595
2131	1596
2132–2133	1597–1603, 1605
2135	1604
2137	1608
2138	1609–1610
2139	1611
2140	1612
2141	1613
2143	1614–1616
2144	1617
2145	1618
2148	1620
2150	1620–1621
2151	1622–1623
2152	1624
2153	1625
2154	1626
2155	1594
2156	1627
2158–2159	1630–1631
2161	1633–1634
2163	1638
2164	1639
2165	1640
2166	1641
2167	1642
2168	1635–1637
2169	1643
2175	1650
2180	1652
2182	1654
2183–2184	1656
2185	1656
2191	1670
2192	1660
2193–2194	1662
2195	1671
2196	1673–1675
2197	1672
2199	1663–1666
2200	1667–1669
2201	1680
2202	1681
2203	1682
2204	1685
2205	1686
2206	1688–1691
2207	1692
2210	1694
2211	1695
2212	1696–1697
2213	1699
2214	1700
2215	1701
2217–2218	1702
2219	1703
2220	1704
2221	1705
2223	1707
2228	1710
2230–2231	1711
2232–2233	1713–1714
2234	1715
2235	1716
2236	1717
2237	1712
2239	1723
2240	1721–1722
2241	1724
2242	1725
2243	1726
2245	1719–1720
2251	1730
2252	1731
2254–2257	1732
2258	1733
2259	1734
2259 a	1735
2260–2261	1736
2263	1737
2264	1738
2265	1739
2268	1740–1741
2269	1742
2270	1743–1744
2271	1745
2272	1746–1747
2273	1748
2275	1750
2276–2277	1751–1752
2279–2280	1753
2281	1754
2282	1755
2283	1754
2285	1760
2286	1762
2287	1763
2292	1765
2294	1767
2296	1768–1769
2297	1770
2298	1771
2300	1774
2301	1775
2302	1776
2303	1777
2304	1778
2306	1780
2307	1781
2308	1782, 1784–1785
2309	1783
2310	1786
2311	1787–1789
2312	1790–1792
2313	1793
2314	1794
2315	1795
2317	1796
2318–2319	1785, 1797
2321	1799–1800
2322	1801
2323	1802
2324	1803

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
2325	1804–1806
2326	1804
2327	1805, 1808
2328–2329	1807
2334	1812
2336	1813–1815
2337	1816
2338	1817
2339	1819
2340	1822–1823
2341	1820–1821
2346	1825, 1947
2348–2356	1947
2361	1830, 1832
2362–2363	1834–1836
2368–2373	1850
2374	1833
2375	1837–1840
2378–2379	1842–1849
2380	1855
2381	1856
2382	1857
2383	1858
2384	1859
2385	1860
2386	1861–1862
2387	1863
2388	1864–1865
2389–2390	1866
2391	1867
2395	1870
2400–2401	1871–1874
2404	1877
2406	1878–1881
2407	1882
2408–2409	1883–1892
2410	1893
2411	1894
2413	1895
2414	1896
2415	1897–1898
2416	1899–1905
2417–2418	1906
2419	1907
2420	1908–1910
2421	1911–1912
2423	1913
2425	1915
2427	1917
2430	1921
2431	1922–1925
2432	1927–1928
2433	1929
2434	1930
2435	1931
2436	1932
2437	1933
2438	1934
2439	1936
2440	1937
2441	1938
2442	1935
2443–2445	1934 a
2446	1939
2447	1941
2450	1946
2451–2452	1944–1955
2454–2456	1950
2458	1953–1954
2459	1955
2460	1958–1960
2461–2463	1961
2464	1962–1965
2465	1966–1969
2466–2467	1970–1972, 1977
2470	1975
2471	1976
2472	1978
2473	1979–1980
2474	1981
2475	1982
2476–2477	1983–1984
2483–2484	1990–1992
2485–2487	1994–1998
2486	2035
2488–2494	1999–2003
2490	2012–2013
2493	2014
2495	2006–2009
2496	2010, 2015–2019
2497	2022–2026
2498	2027–2031
2500	2041–2043
2501	2045
2502	2046
2503	2047
2504	2048–2054
2505	2055–2058
2506	2059
2507	2060
2508	2061
2509	2062
2510	2063
2511	2064
2512–2513	2066
2514	2065
2515–2516	2067
2517–2518	2068
2519–2525	2069–2079
2527	2080
2528	2081
2529	2082
2530	2083
2531–2532	2084–2086
2533	2087
2534	2088
2535	2089
2536	2091–2092
2537	2093
2538	2094
2539	2095
2549	2100
2550	2101–2103
2552	2104–2106
2553–2554	2107–2109
2556	2110–2112
2557	2113–2114
2558	2115
2559	2116
2565	2120, 2130
2567	2121–2123
2568	2124
2569	2125–2128
2570	2127
2571	2130
2572	2131
2573	2132
2574–2577	2133
2578–2579	2134
2580–2582	2135
2588–2589	2140
2590	2141, 2145
2591	2143
2592	2144
2593	2146
2594	2148–2150
2596	1599

1. TABULAR ANALYSIS OF TOPICS

BOOK I. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

INTRODUCTORY: THEORY AND PROCEDURE.
I. RULES OF RELEVANCY.
II. RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY.
III. RULES OF EXTRINSIC POLICY.
IV. PAROL EVIDENCE RULES.

[See Table 2, for further analysis.]

BOOK II. BY WHOM EVIDENCE IS PRESENTED.

I. BURDEN OF PROOF, AND PRESUMPTIONS.
GENERAL PRINCIPLES.
II. BURDENS AND PRESUMPTIONS IN SPECIFIC ISSUES.

BOOK III. TO WHOM EVIDENCE IS PRESENTED.

I. JUDGE.
II. JURY.

BOOK IV. PROPOSITIONS NEEDING NO EVIDENCE.

I. JUDICIAL NOTICE.
II. JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS.

2. TABULAR ANALYSIS OF BOOK I (ADMISSIBILITY)

PART I. RULES OF RELEVANCY

I. Circumstantial Evidence

I. of Human Act
II. of Human Quality, etc.
III. of Inanimate Fact

[See Table 3]

II. Testimonial Evidence

I. Qualifications
II. Impeachment
III. Rehabilitation
IV. Admissions

[See Table 4]

III. Autoptic Proference

PART II. RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY

I. Preferential

I. Documentary Originals
II. Attesting Witness, etc.

II. Analytic

Hearsay

1. Cross-Examination
2. Confrontation

III. Prophylactic

I. Oath
II. Perjury-Penalty
III. Publicity
IV. Sequestration
V. Discovery

IV. Simplificative

I. Order of Evidence
II. Sundries
III. Opinion

V. Synthetic

I. No. of Witnesses
II. Kind of Witness
III. Verbal Completeness
IV. Authentication

PART III. RULES OF EXTRINSIC POLICY

I. Absolute Exclusion

II. Optional Exclusion (Privilege)

I. Testimonial Duty

II. Privileges of Non-Attendance

III. Privileges of Silence

A. Topics

1. Sundry
2. Ante-Marital
3. Self-Criminating

B. Communications

1. Sundries
2. Attorney
3. Marital
4. Jurors
5. Informers; Officials
6. Physician
7. Priest

PART IV. PAROL EVIDENCE RULES

I. Enaction

II. Integration

III. Formalities

IV. Interpretation

5. TABULAR ANALYSIS OF BOOK I, PART II, TITLES I–III

(§§ 1177–1863)* RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY

TITLE I. PREFERENTIAL RULES (§§ 1177–1356)

(I) Preference for Documentary Originals

- A. The Rule Itself
- B. Exceptions to the Rule
- C. Kinds of Secondary Evidence

(II) Preferences for Sundry Testimonial Evidence

I. Provisional Preferences

- A. Attesting Witnesses
- B. Reports of Former Testimony
- C. Sundry Preferences

II. Absolute Preferences

- A. Reports of Testimony
- B. Enrolled Statutes
- C. Sundry Official Records

TITLE II. ANALYTIC RULES (§§ 1360–1810): THE HEARSAY RULE

(I) The Rule Satisfied

I. By Cross-Examination

1. Kind of Tribunal
2. Notice and Opportunity to Cross-Examine
3. Issues and Parties
4. Conduct of Cross-Examination

II. By Confrontation

1. Constitutional Principle
2. Circumstances dispensing with Witness' Personal Presence
3. Rule not Applicable

(II) Exceptions to the Rule

1. Dying Declarations
2. Facts Against Interest
3. Family History
4. Attesting Witness
5. Regular Entries
6. Sundry Decedents' Statements
7. Reputation
8. Official Statements
9. Learned Treatises
10. Commercial Lists, etc.
11. Affidavits
12. Voter's Statements
13. Mental or Physical Condition
14. Spontaneous Exclamations

(III) Rule not Applicable (Res Gestæ)

I. Utterances Forming Part of the Issue

II. Verbal Parts of an Act

1. Payment Sale, Gift, Loan, etc.
2. Possession of Land
3. Stolen Goods
4. Sundries

III. Utterances used Circumstantially

(IV) Rule Applied to Court Officers

I. Juror

II. Judge

III. Counsel

IV. Interpreter

TITLE III. PROPHYLACTIC RULES (§§ 1813–1863)

(I) Oath

(II) Perjury Penalty

(III) Publicity

(IV) Sequestering Witnesses

(V) Discovery Before Trial

* For Tabular analysis of Book I, Part I, see Tables 3, 4, prefixed to Vol. I.
For tabular analysis of Part II, remainder, and Part III, see Table 6, prefixed to Vols. IV and V.

EVIDENCE

IN

TRIALS AT COMMON LAW

Book I (continued): ADMISSIBILITY

Part II (continued): RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY

Title II: ANALYTIC RULES (THE HEARSAY RULE)

INTRODUCTORY: THEORY AND HISTORY OF THE HEARSAY RULE

CHAPTER XLIII.

§ 1360. Nature of the Analytic Rules. Of the Auxiliary Rules (ante, § 1171) aiming at the amelioration of probative value, the second type is the Analytic Rule, i.e. a rule which accomplishes the desired aim by subjecting the offered evidence to a scrutiny or analysis calculated to discover and expose in detail its possible weaknesses, and thus to enable the tribunal to estimate it at no more than its actual value. Such a rule differs from a Preferential rule (ante, §§ 1171, 1286) in that it does not purport to require one kind of testimony before another can be resorted to. It differs from a Prophylactic rule (post, § 1813) in that the latter operates preventing or eliminating beforehand the possible defects of the evidence; while the present type of rule operates by exposing at the trial those not otherwise thus forestalled or eliminated. That it differs from the Synthetic or Quantitative rules (post, § 2030) is clear enough. Finally, it differs from the Simplificative rules (post, § 1863) in that it does not rigidly strike out and exclude the evidence as undesirable, but merely insists on accompanying its admission by tests calculated to expose possible defects.

There is but one rule of the Analytic type, — the Hearsay rule; though this rule involves two branches or processes, Cross-examination and Confrontation. The details of these two branches can be later examined (post, §§ 1367–1418). At this point it is desirable first to examine the theory and the history of the Hearsay rule in general.

§ 1361. Nature of Hearsay, as an Extra-judicial Testimonial Assertion. When a witness A on the stand testifies, "B told me that event X occurred", his testimony may be regarded in two ways: (1) He may be regarded as asserting the event upon his own credit, i.e. as a fact to be believed because he asserts that he knows it. But when it thus appears that his assertion is not based on personal observation of event X, his testimony to that event is rejected, because he is not qualified by proper sources of knowledge to speak to it. This involves a general principle of Testimonial Knowledge, already examined (ante, §§ 657, 665), and does not involve the Hearsay rule proper.

(2) But suppose, in order to obviate that objection, that we regard A as not making any assertion about event X (of which he has no personal knowledge), but as testifying to the utterance in his hearing of B's statement as to event X. To this, A is clearly qualified to testify, so that no objection can arise on that score.

The only question, then, can be whether this assertion of B, reported by A, is admissible as evidence of the event X, asserted by B to have occurred. It is clear that what we are now attempting to do is to prove event X by B's assertion; the utterance of B's assertion being itself proved by A's testimony to it. In other words, merely the making of B's assertion is properly proved by A; but the occurrence of event X is also sought to be proved, by this assertion of B, which was uttered out of court, but is offered testimonially for the same purpose as if it were being made presently by B on the stand. This, the true significance of hearsay testimony, is brought out in the following passages:

1743, Craig v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1162: "If declarations of persons dead were to be admitted, they would in effect have the force of original testimony."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. IV: "It is of the essence of hearsay evidence to present to the notice of the judge two distinct persons in the character of witnesses: (1) a supposed percipient and extrajudicial narrating witness, stating at some antecedent point of time, in the hearing of any person not on that occasion invested with the authority of a judge, some matter of fact as having had place; and (2) a deposing, or say judicially narrating witness, who bears testimony not to the truth of that matter of fact, but to its having actually been asserted on the extrajudicial occasion in question by the extrajudicially stating or narrating witness."

1860, Chief Justice APPLETON, Evidence, 174: "In all cases of hearsay the effective witness is the individual, whether party or not, whose supposed statements the narrating witness relates. The individual testifying is merely the conduit or pipe through whose agency the impressions of some one else are conveyed to the Court. The real proof is the hearsay statement." [1]

It is these extra-judicial testimonial assertions which the Hearsay rule prohibits. The Hearsay rule points out that B's assertion, offered testimonially, is not made on the stand and presently, but out of court anteriorly, and challenges it upon that ground. The Hearsay rule tells us that B's assertion (even assuming B to have been qualified, by knowledge and otherwise, as witness) cannot be accepted because it has not been made at a time and place where it could be subjected to certain essential tests or investigations calculated to demonstrate its real value by exposing such latent sources of error. The Hearsay rule predicates a contrast between assertions untested and assertions tested; it insists upon having the latter.

§ 1361. [1] So also Sir J. F. Stephen, in his Report on the Indian Evidence Act (quoted in Syed Ali and Woodroffe's edition of the Act, 1898, Appendix).

What is the nature of the test thus required by the Hearsay rule?

§ 1362. Theory of the Hearsay Rule. The fundamental test, shown by experience to be invaluable, is the test of Cross-examination. The rule, to be sure, calls for two elements, Cross-examination proper, and Confrontation; but the former is the essential and indispensable feature, the latter is only subordinate and dispensable (post, § 1395).

1. The theory of the Hearsay rule is that the many possible deficiencies, suppressions, sources of error and untrustworthiness, which lie underneath the bare untested assertion of a witness may be best brought to light and exposed by the test of Cross-examination. Of its workings and its value, more is to be seen in detail (post, §§ 1367–1394). It is here sufficient to note that the Hearsay rule, as accepted in our law, signifies a rule rejecting assertions, offered testimonially, which have not been in some way subjected to the test of Cross-examination:

1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1160: the legitimacy of the plaintiff as heir was in issue; the declarations of Mrs. Piggot, a deceased intimate friend of his alleged mother, were offered. "This was objected to by defendant's counsel, who insisted that hearsay was not evidence; . . . that Mrs. Piggot is dead, and where persons are dead, the law hath not provided for their testimony, nor will it substitute a mere declaration in the place of an oath; . . . that the admitting hearsay evidence in the present affair would introduce a dangerous precedent, in regard the other side could not have the benefit of cross-examining; in some cases, it is true, hearsay evidence is admitted from the necessity of the thing; . . . that in civil cases there is not the same necessity because a bill in equity may be filed to perpetuate the testimony of ancient witnesses, and then the evidence may be cross-examined; but Mrs. Piggot being dead, no declaration of hers can be evidence, because the defendant has no opportunity to cross-examine her. . . . The COURT would not admit the hearsay of Mrs. Piggot's declaration to deponent to be made use of as evidence, on the principal reason that hearsay evidence ought not to be admitted, because of the adverse party's having no opportunity of cross-examining."

1806, Mr. (later V. C.) Plumer, arguing in Lord Melville's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 747: "It is a universal principle of the law of evidence (subject to certain exceptions) that what one man says, does, or writes, behind the back of another, cannot be received in any criminal court to affect anybody but himself. . . . Every individual who stands upon his trial in a British court of justice has a clear right to have the witness brought in the front of the Court, to be submitted to his cross-examination, that he may have an opportunity of interrogating him respecting all the particulars of the fact."

1881, Lord BLACKBURN, in Dysart Peerage Case, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 503: "In England, hearsay evidence, that is to say, the evidence of a man who is not produced in court and who therefore cannot be cross-examined, as a general rule is not admissible at all."

1812, KENT, C. J., in Coleman v. Southwick, 9 John. 50: "Why not produce S. to testify what he told the defendant, instead of resorting to a bystander who heard what he said. . . . Hearsay testimony is from the very nature of it attended with all such doubts and difficulties, and it cannot clear them up. 'A person who relates a hearsay is not obliged to enter into any particulars, to answer any questions, to solve any difficulties, to reconcile any contradictions, to explain any obscurities, to remove any ambiguities; he entrenches himself in the simple assertion that he was told so, and leaves the burden entirely on his dead or absent author.' . . . The plaintiff by means of this species of evidence would be taken by surprise and be precluded from the benefit of a cross-examination of S. as to all those material points which have been suggested as necessary to throw full light on his information."

1827, Duncan, J., in Farmers' Bank v. Whitehill, 16 S. & R. 89: "The general objection to the deposition of John Buck is that it is in the nature of hearsay evidence and that the defendant had no opportunity of cross-examination."

1851, Drummond, J., in U. S. v. Macomb, 5 McLean 286: "The ground upon which we proceed in each case is the presumption of the truth of the declarations, they being subjected to the tests which the law recognizes, — the presence of the accused and the right of cross-examination. . . . Of course it is clear that such testimony [as a mere sworn statement before a magistrate] could not be admitted in a court of law; for, first, the witness was living; and, secondly, the defendant had no opportunity of cross-examining him; and, however the authorities may differ as to the first, they all agree as to the second point, that being an indispensable prerequisite to the introduction of testimony."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. I, § 2: "In every instance that inferiority in respect of probative force, in consideration of which the term Makeshift [i.e. Hearsay] was found applicable with equal propriety to them all, will be seen to have for its cause the absence of one of the principal securities for correctness and completeness, viz. interrogation 'ex adverso' at the hands of a party whose interest, in the event of its being incorrect or incomplete, may in proportion to that incorrectness or incompleteness be made to suffer by it."

2. In the foregoing passages, Cross-examination alone is mentioned as the test required by and involved in the Hearsay rule. In most instances, however, we find the Oath coupled with Cross-examination in the definition of the rule. That this coupling is merely accidental may easily be shown; but the following passages, naming both oath and cross-examination, serve at least to exhibit the general notion that has commonly been conceded to characterize the Hearsay rule:

1716, Serjeant Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, b. II, c. 46, § 44: "How far hearsay shall be admitted. It seems agreed that what a stranger has been heard to say is in strictness no manner of evidence either for or against a prisoner, not only because it is not upon oath, but also because the other side hath no opportunity of a cross-examination."

1773, Mr. Peckham, objecting, in Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 20 How. St. Tr. 135, to testimony about a statement of a native magistrate (or mustastaph) in Minorca: "Hearsay is no evidence. . . . Now can what he has said in Minorca to this witness be admitted as evidence here? The mustastaph is living, why don't they produce him? If they had brought him here, we could have his evidence on oath and could cross-examine him to the facts."

1837, Wright v. Tatham, 7 Ad. & E. 313, 5 Cl. & F. 689; letters were offered from absent persons, treating the testator as a competent person. Mr. Cresswell, objecting: "All the letters were inadmissible, because they presented statements which could not be verified by oath, and subjected to the test of cross-examination. . . . In a particular case the assertion, without oath, of a respectable man might influence a reasonable mind; but the rule established for the safe administration of justice in general is that evidence unconfirmed by oath and not subject to cross-examination shall not be received." Mr. Starkie, on the same side: "The witness from whom it comes ought to be cross-examined as to the means he had of forming a judgment and the diligence and good faith with which they were applied. Here that test is wanting. . . . It may well be suggested [that the writers had other motives]. Suggestions of that kind are to be excluded only by submitting to those tests of knowledge and sincerity which the law requires. . . . The admission of evidence not on oath will be found in all cases to depend upon its being subject to tests which guarantee knowledge and sincerity." The letters were excluded as hearsay, on the following grounds. COLTMAN, J.: "The administering of an oath furnishes some guarantee for the sincerity of the opinion, and the power of cross-examination gives an opportunity of testing the foundation and the value of it." BOSANQUET, J.: "If the writers of these letters were produced as witnesses and examined upon oath, their opinion would be receivable in evidence, because the ground of their knowledge and the credibility of their testimony might be ascertained by cross-examination." WILLIAMS, J.: "It is opinion presented in such a shape as makes it inadmissible for want of the sanction of an oath, under which evidence of opinion is always given; which sanction is required for this weighty reason, — that opinion, however imposing from the real or supposed respectability of the person expressing it, may, after diligent and patient inquiry and examination before those to whose judgment all evidence is addressed, be deemed by them to rest upon a precarious foundation or upon none at all." ALDERSON, B.: "The general rule is that facts are to be proved by testimony of persons on oath and subjected to cross-examination. . . . If, therefore, the letters are to be used as proofs of the opinion of the writers respecting Mr. Marsden's capacity, the objection to their admissibility is that this opinion is not upon oath, nor is it possible for the opposite party to test by cross-examination the foundation on which it rests."

1867, O'BRIEN, J., in Gresham Hotel Co. v. Manning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 125: "The statements and declarations of opinion received in evidence in this case were made by parties not examined upon oath or subject to cross-examination, and would not . . . be exempted from the general rule excluding hearsay evidence."

1817, SWIFT, C. J., in Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 348: "It is a general principle in the law of evidence that hearsay from a person not a party to the suit is not admissible; because such person was not under oath and the opposite party had no opportunity to cross-examine."

1843, SHAW, C. J., in Warren v. Nichols, 6 Mete. 261: "The general rule is that one person cannot be heard to testify as to what another person has declared in relation to a fact within his knowledge and hearing upon the issue. It is the familiar rule which excludes hearsay. The reasons are obvious, and they are two: first, because the averment of fact does not come to the jury sanctioned by the oath of the party on whose knowledge it is supposed to rest; and, secondly, because the party upon whose interests it is brought to bear has no opportunity to cross-examine him on whose supposed knowledge and veracity the truth of the facts depends."

1868, BREESE, C. J., in Marshall v. R. Co., 48 Ill. 476: "The general rule is that hearsay evidence . . . is not admissible, for the reason that such statements are not subjected to the ordinary tests required by law for ascertaining their truth, — the author of the statements not being exposed to cross-examination in the presence of a court of justice, and not speaking under the penal sanction of an oath, with no opportunity to investigate his character and motives, and his deportment not subject to observation."

1872, KINGMAN, C. J., in State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 283, 287: "These rules [as to hearsay] have been adopted to guard against the manifest danger to human life that is so liable to arise from the admission as evidence of declarations not made under the sanction of an oath and not offering to the party to be affected by them an opportunity of cross-examination, or to call attention to omitted facts that if stated might modify or completely overturn the inference drawn from the declarations made. . . . These rules have been found so essential as safeguards in the investigation of truth that they have become fundamental in our system of jurisprudence, and some of them have been placed for greater security in our constitutions. No matter how convincing the testimony may be to the intelligent mind, unless it can be presented under fixed rules it cannot be received."

1892, FIELD, C. J., in Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 185, 31 N. E. 961: "The argument, in short, is that such evidence is hearsay. It is argued that such declarations are not made under the sanction of an oath, and that there is no opportunity to examine and cross-examine the person making them, so as to test his sincerity and truthfulness or the accuracy and completeness with which the declarations describe his intention." [1]

In the preceding passages, the testing required by the Hearsay rule is spoken of as cross-examination under oath. But it is clear beyond doubt that the oath, as thus referred to, is merely an incidental feature customarily accompanying cross-examination, and that cross-examination is the essential and real test required by the rule. That this is so is seen by the perfectly well-established rule that a statement made under oath (for example, in the shape of a deposition or an affidavit or testimony before a magistrate) is nevertheless inadmissible if it has not been subjected to cross-examination (post, §§ 1373–

§ 1362. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1811, Wood, B., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 406; 1820, Abbott, C. J., in Doe v. Ridgway, 4 B. & Ald. 54; 1832, R. v. Davlin, Jebb Cr. C. 127; 1867, Lush, J., in Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326; 1869, Byles, J., in R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 193; 1876, Jessel, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154; UNITED STATES: Federal: 1823, Story, J., in Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, 333; 1869, Miller, J., in Allen v. Killinger, 8 Wall. 487; 1870, Peck, J., in Medway v. U. S., 6 Ct. of Cl. 434; 1873, Field, J., in Chaffee v. U. S., 18 Wall. 541; Alabama: 1830, White, J., in Drish v. Davenport, 2 Stew. 270; 1875, Manning, J., in Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 193; Arkansas: 1852, Johnson, C. J., in Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. 804; Connecticut: 1860, Sanford, J., in State v. Dart, 29 Conn. 153, 155; Illinois: 1855, Skinner, J., in Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 20; 1862, Walker, J., in Barnes v. Simmons, 27 Ill. 513; 1885, Craig, J., in Digby v. People, 113 Ill. 128; Indiana: 1869, Ray, J., in Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 199; Kentucky: 1800, Muter, C. J., in Cherry v. Boyd, Litt. Sel. Cas. 8; 1855, Simpson, J., in Walston v. Com., 16 B. Monr. 15, 35; 1872, Hardin, J., in Leiber v. Com., 9 Bush 13; Louisiana: 1858, Voorhies, J., in State v. Brunetto, 13 La. An. 45; Maine: 1858, Rice, J., in Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 392; Maryland: 1860, Le Grand, C. J., in Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. 572; 1874, Alvey, J., in Maitland v. Bank, 40 Md. 559; Massachusetts: 1851, Fletcher, J., in Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 40; 1852, Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Starkweather, 10 Cush. 60; 1856, Thomas, J., in Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray 176; Mississippi: 1852, Yerger, J., in Lampley v. Scott, 24 Miss. 539; Nebraska: 1886, Reese, J., in Ponca v. Crawford, 18 Nebr. 557, 26 N. W. 365; New Hampshire: 1847, Parker, C. J., in Patten v. Ferguson, 18 N. H. 529; New Jersey: 1826, Ewing, C. J., in Westfield v. Warren, 8 N. J. L. 250; 1889, Beasley, C. J., in Estell v. State, 51 N. J. L. 184, 17 Atl. 118; New York: 1818, Thompson, C. J., in Wilson v. Boerem, 15 John. 286; 1884, Earl, J., in Waldele v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 274; North Carolina: 1833, Daniel, J., in State v. May, 4 Dev. 334; 1842, Gaston, J., in State v. Patterson, 2 Ired. 353; 1855, Pearson, J., in State v. Shelton, 2 Jones L. 364; 1872, Rodman, J., in State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 14; 1887, Davis, J., in State v. Hargrave, 97 N. C. 458, 1 S. E. 774; 1894, Burwell, J., in Propst v. Mathis, 115 N. C. 526, 20 S. E. 710; Ohio: 1856, Bartley, C. J., in Simmons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 343; Pennsylvania: 1813, Tilghman, C. J., in Longenecker v. Hyde, 6 Binn. 1; 1815, Id., in Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. 344; 1823, Id., in Buchanan v. Moore, 10 S. & R. 275; 1827, Gibson, C. J., in Moritz v. Brough, 16 S. & R. 409; 1885, Green, J., in Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. 105, 1 Atl. 314; South Carolina: 1819, Cheves, J., in Drayton v. Wells, 1 Nott & McC. 248; 1844, Richardson, J., in State v. Campbell, 1 Rich. L. 126; 1846, Id., in Walker v. Meetze, 2 Rich. 571; 1851, Evans, J., in Robinson v. Blakely, 4 Rich. 588; 1880, McGowan, J., in State v. Belcher, 13 S. C. 459, 462; South Dakota: 1909, State v. Heffernan, 24 S. D. 1, 123 N. W. 87 (careful opinion by McCoy, J.); Tennessee: 1848, Green, J., in Phillips v. State, 9 Humph. 249; Texas: 1895, Brown, J., in Byers v. State, 87 Tex. 503, 28 S. W. 1056, 29 S. W. 761; Vermont: 1881, Veazey, J., in State v. Wood, 53 Vt. 564; Virginia: 1853, Allen, J., in Brogy's Case, 10 Gratt. 729.

So also in Treatises: 1801, Peake, Evidence, 10; 1802, McNally, Evidence, 360; 1806, Evans, Notes on Pothier, II, 250; 1810, Swift, Evidence, 121; 1843, Greenleaf, Evidence, § 124.

1377, 1708). In other words, a statement made under oath is, merely as such, equally obnoxious to the Hearsay rule.[2] Owing to the practice of requiring an oath (or its modern substitute, an affirmation) before proceeding to examination and cross-examination, the case does not happen to arise of testimony which has been tested by cross-examination and yet lacks the oath, so that the tenor of the rule as above stated cannot be tested by that situation. But it is sufficiently and clearly demonstrated (as above noted) by the fact that, even though an oath has been taken, the statements are still excluded if not subjected to cross-examination; as well as by the further fact that, whenever an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1422) is found established, i.e. whenever statements not subjected to cross-examination are exceptionally received, it is not required that they shall have been made under oath.

It is thus apparent that the essence of the Hearsay rule is a requirement that testimonial assertions shall be subjected to the test of cross-examination, and that the judicial expressions (above quoted) coupling oath and cross-examination had in mind the oath as merely the ordinary accompaniment of testimony given on the stand, subject to the essential test of cross-examination.

§ 1363. Spurious Theories of the Hearsay Rule. Occasionally there have been advanced other reasons or definitions of the Hearsay rule, — though without much emphasis, and usually as supplementary only to the orthodox theory.

(1) It has been said, for example, that hearsay assertions are to be excluded because of the risk of incorrect transmission of the statements by the one reporting them:

> 1851, FLETCHER, J., in Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 40: "The danger that casual observations would be misunderstood, misremembered, and misreported, increases the number and force of the objections to the admission of hearsay."
>
> 1868, BREESE, C. J., in Marshall v. R. Co., 48 Ill. 476 (after naming the real reason) "And the misconstruction to which such evidence is exposed from the ignorance or inattention of the hearers, or from criminal motives, are powerful additional objections."

To this supposed reason there are two conclusive answers: (a) This theory would exclude only oral assertions; yet the Hearsay rule excludes with equal strictness the best-authenticated written assertions of all sorts, — letters, sealed documents, affidavits, and the like, — and, of the numerous exceptions to the rule, only one or two show any special favor to written assertions. (b) Other oral statements, not offered as exceptions to the Hearsay rule, but as admissions (ante, § 1048), or as impeaching evidence (ante, § 1017), or as 'res gestæ' utterances (post, § 1768), are never excluded because they are oral, and never admitted because they are written; and yet they are equally obnoxious to this supposed policy of excluding that which is liable to incorrect and garbled transmission.

[2] 1899, Vann, J., in Lent v. Shear, 160 N. Y. 462, 55 N. E. 2 ("Declarations made under oath do not differ in principle from declarations made without that sanction, and both come within the rule which excludes all hearsay evidence").

(2) It has been said, by eminent names, that hearsay evidence possesses some intrinsic weakness:

1813, MARSHALL, C. J., in Mima Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cranch 295: "That this species of testimony supposes some better testimony which might be adduced in the particular case is not the sole ground of its exclusion. Its intrinsic weakness, its incompetency to satisfy the mind of the existence of the fact, and the frauds which might be practised under its cover, combine to support the rule that hearsay evidence is totally inadmissible."

1836, STORY, J., in Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 436: "[Besides lacking oath and cross-examination, its fault is] . . . that it is peculiarly liable to be obtained by fraudulent contrivances, and above all that it is exceedingly infirm, unsatisfactory, and intrinsically weak in its very nature and character."

The charge of "intrinsic weakness", so far as this vague expression is open to interpretation, seems to mean nothing more than that such statements lack the trustworthiness that the test of cross-examination might supply. The further suggestion of a peculiar liability to fraudulent manufacture seems to mean that oral utterances of the sort can by false witnesses be placed in the mouth of absent persons; and no doubt this is so. But, in the first place, this is not true of written statements offered and authenticated in court, and yet the Hearsay rule equally excludes these; and, in the second place, it is just as true of the other oral and receivable utterances above named, and yet these are equally admissible with written statements. There seems to be no soundness in either of the above suggestions.

(3) The Hearsay rule has sometimes been stated in part by describing the distinct principle above named (ante, § 1361, par. 1) requiring personal knowledge as one of a witness' qualifications:

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 98: "It is requisite that whatever facts the witness may speak to, he should be confined to those lying in his own knowledge, whether they be said or done, and should not testify from information given by others, however worthy of credit they may be."

But here we are not regarding the reported statement of the absent person as a testimonial assertion; we are thinking of the witness on the stand as speaking directly to the ultimate fact, and we are denying the sufficiency of his knowledge of this fact. This is not a question of the Hearsay rule, but of the witness' Testimonial Qualifications (ante, §§ 657, 1361).[1]

(4) We sometimes think of "hearsay" as a merely anonymous utterance or rumor; but such anonymity is not the source of the Hearsay rule's exclusion. An anonymous assertion would in any event be excluded, because the author is not shown to be qualified by knowledge and otherwise. The Hearsay rule assumes that the declarant is qualified as a witness (post, § 1424); but it still excludes the untested assertion, even though made by a qualified person.

§ 1363. [1] Judicial opinions illustrating this use of the term will be found ante, § 657.

§ 1364. History of the Rule. Under the name of the Hearsay rule, then, will here be understood that rule which prohibits the use of a person's assertion, as equivalent to testimony to the fact asserted, unless the assertor is brought to testify in court on the stand, where he may be probed and cross-examined as to the grounds of his assertion and of his qualifications to make it. The history of the Hearsay rule, as a distinct and living idea, begins only in the 1500s, and it does not gain a complete development and final precision until the early 1700s. Before tracing its history, however, from the time of what may be considered its legal birth, it will be necessary to examine a few salient features of the preceding century, in order to understand the conditions amid which it took its origin.

One distinction, though, must be noticed even before this preliminary survey, — the distinction between requiring an extra-judicial speaker to be called to the stand to testify, and requiring one who is already on the stand to speak from personal knowledge (ante, § 1361, par. 1). The latter requirement had long ago been known in the early modes of trial preceding the jury. In the days when proof by compurgation of oath-helpers lived as a separate mode alongside of proof by deed-witnesses and other transaction-witnesses, "the witness was markedly discriminated from the oath-helper; the mark of the witness is knowledge, acquaintance with the fact in issue, and moreover, knowledge resting on his own observation."[1] Such a witness' distinctive function was to speak 'de visu suo et auditu.'[2] The principle was not fully carried out; for a deed-witness need not have actually seen it executed, and might merely have promised by attestation to appear and vouch in court.[3] But at any rate this principle, so far as it prevailed, concerned a different mode of trial, "trial by witnesses", which jury-trial supplanted.[4] Afterwards, nearly three centuries later, when jury-trial itself had changed, and witnesses (now in the modern sense) became once more a chief source of proof, the old idea reappeared and was prescribed for them; the witness would speak to "what hath fallen under his senses",[5] and this became in the modern law a fundamental principle.[6] But at the time now to be considered, when jury-trial was coming in (say the 1300s), that principle belonged in what was practically another mode of trial, and did not affect the development.

§ 1364. [1] 1892, Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, II, 397; 1902, Schröder, Lehrbuch der deutschen Rechtsgeschichte, 4th ed. 772.

[2] 1898, Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 18, 499.

The main conclusions, concerning the historical effect of these distinctions, drawn by Professor Melville M. Bigelow, "The Old Jury" (Mass. Historical Society, 1916, p. 310; reprinted 1920 in his Papers on the Legal History of Government), seem far-fetched and negligible.

[3] Thayer, ubi supra, 98; and cases cited ante, § 1292. A good additional illustration occurs in Seld. Soc., Select Civ. Pl., I, No. 76; and as late as 1543, in Rolfe v. Hampden, Dyer 53 b, a survival of this is seen in the case of two will-witnesses who "deposed upon the report of others." This was probably because such witnesses were originally transaction-witnesses, not document-witnesses, and in their latter character the earlier trait survived, as the history of the parol-evidence rule indicates (post, § 2426).

[4] Thayer, ubi supra, 17, 500; Brunner, Entstehung der Schwurgerichte, quoted infra.

[5] 1670, Vaughan, C. J., in Bushel's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 999, 1003; 1696, Holt, C. J., in Charnock's Trial, 12 id. 1454.

[6] Cases cited ante, § 657.

What we are here concerned with is a different notion, namely, that when a specific person, not as yet in court, is reported to have made assertions about a fact, that person must be called to the stand, or his assertion will not be taken as evidence. That is to say: Suppose that A, who does not profess to know anything about a robbery, is offered to prove that B, who did profess to know, has asserted the circumstances of the robbery; here B's assertion is not to be credited or received as testimony, however much he may know, unless B is called and deposes on the stand.

Preliminary. As to the history of this Hearsay rule proper, it is necessary at the outset to notice briefly certain important conditions which prevailed at the beginning of the 1500s.

(a) And, first, it is clear that there was, up to about that time, no appreciation at all of the necessity of calling a person to the stand as a witness in order to utilize his knowledge for the jury. On the contrary, the leading conditions and influences of jury-trial permitted and condoned the practice of the jury's obtaining information by consulting informed persons not called into court:

1872, Professor Heinrich Brunner, The Origin of Jury Courts, 427, 452: "We may not interpret the verdict 'ex scientia', in the domain of English law, as a verdict based on personal perception. The jurors of the assize were certainly entitled to give a verdict based on the communications of trustworthy neighbors. Glanvill makes it requisite, for the jurors' knowledge, 'that they should have knowledge from their own view and hearing of the matter or through the words of their fathers and through such words of persons whom they are bound to trust as worthy.' Thus they exhibit really in their verdict the prevailing conviction of the community upon the matter in question. For ascertaining this, ample opportunity is furnished by the 'view' and by the period of time elapsing between the view and the swearing in court. If their verdict agreed with the opinion throughout the community, they had nothing to fear from an attaint. . . . Thus the juror of the English law who gives a verdict 'ex scientia' (with reference to the view of lands had) is a 'knowledge-witness' simply, whether his knowledge rests on his own perceptions or on another's communication. . . . The English knowledge-witness [juror] is not an eye-witness, not a 'testis de scientia' in the sense of the later Norman law."[7]

1895, Sir F. Pollock and Professor F. W. Maitland, History of the English Law, II, 622, 625: "Some of the verdicts that are given must be founded on hearsay and floating tradition. Indeed, it is the duty of the jurors, so soon as they have been summoned, to make inquiries about the facts of which they will have to speak when they come before the court. They must collect testimony. . . . At the least a fortnight had been given to them in which to 'certify themselves' of the facts. We know of no rule of law which prevented them from listening during this interval to the tale of the litigants. . . . Separatively or collectively, in court or out of court, they have listened to somebody's story and believed it."

[7] Professor Brunner goes on to point out (p. 453 ff.) that since in France the judicial use of "trial by witnesses" proper came early into prominence (in the 1300s and 1400s) through the civil or canonical system, and since the contrast between these two competing methods led the former to be called 'testes de scientia', and the jurors merely 'testes de credentia', the jury system became discredited as an inferior one and ultimately fell into disuse. In other words, the lack of any sharp discrimination in England as to the sources of the jury's "knowledge" was the marked feature which enabled it to survive, in contrast to the fate of its kindred institution in Normandy, where circumstances had led to the emphasizing of its inferior sources of knowledge. Compare also Glasson, Histoire du droit et des institutions de la France, VI, 544 (1895).

The ordinary witness, as we to-day conceive him, coming into court and publicly informing the jury, was (it must be remembered) in the 1400s a rare figure, just beginning to be known.[8] Of persons thus called, the chief kinds were the preappointed ones, — deed-witnesses and other transaction-witnesses; and even these, with the jury, "all went out and conferred privately as if composing one body; the witnesses did not regularly testify in open court." [9] Even where facts were involved which, as we should think, needed other testimony, the counsel stated them by allegation, and a special witness might or might not be present to sustain the allegations.[10] Well into the 1400s "it was regarded as the right of the parties to 'inform' the jury after they were impanelled and before the trial." [11] In 1450 it is said by Chief Justice Fortescue, "If the jurors come to a man where he lives, in the country, to have knowledge of the truth of the matter, and he informs them, it is justifiable", [12] i.e. it is not the offence of maintenance.[13] Note that the only objection thought of is that of maintenance. In 1499 a juror, in a certain trial where a thunderstorm had caused a separation without leave, talked with a friend of one of the parties, and this, from the same point of view, was held not unlawful.[14]

Such practices of obtaining information from informed persons not called were a chief reliance for the early jury. In fact, the strict notions then prevailing as to the offence of maintenance tended to discourage the coming of witnesses. In the 1400s "it was by no means freely done"; [15] and when, in 1562–63,[16] compulsory process for ordinary witnesses was first provided, the measure came rather as a protection for the witness against the charge of maintenance than for any other reason.[17] In short, as late as through the 1400s, there was not only no feeling of necessity for having every informant come to testify publicly in court, but there was still a discouragement of such a general process; and the jury might and did get a great deal of its knowledge by express inquiry from specific persons not called, or by the counsel's report of what had been or would be said by persons not called or not put on the stand.

(b) But in the meantime certain conditions were changing in a significant respect. Contrasting the end of the 1400s and the beginning of the 1600s, it appears, as the marked feature, that the proportion between the quantity of information obtained from ordinary witnesses produced in court and of

[8] Note 20, infra.

[9] Thayer, ubi supra, 97, 102; this continued probably into the 1500s.

[10] Thayer, ubi supra, 121, 133.

[11] Thayer, ubi supra, 92; in Palgrave's "The Merchant and the Friar", there cited, an account of a trial for robbery in London in 1303 represents the sheriff as saying, when asked by the judge whether the jury is ready: "The least informed of them has taken great pains to go up and down in every hole and corner of Westminster — they and their wives — and to learn all they could concerning his past and present life and conversation."

[12] Y. B. 28 H. VI, 6, 1; cit. Thayer, 128; see also the petition quoted ib. 125.

[13] Again, in 1504 (Y. B. 20 H. VII, 11, 21; cit. Thayer, 129), Rede, J., says: "If the jury come to my house to be informed of the truth, and I inform them, that is not maintenance."

[14] Y. B. 14 H. VII, 29, 4; cit. Thayer, 132.

[15] Thayer, ubi supra, 130.

[16] St. 5 Eliz. c. 9, § 6.

[17] The history of compulsory process is examined post, § 2190.

information by the jury itself contributed or obtained was in effect reversed. The former element, in the 1400s, was "but little considered and of small importance",[18] but by the early 1600s the jury's function as judges of fact, who depended largely on other persons' testimony presented to them in court, had become a prominent one, perhaps a chief one.[19] It is necessary to appreciate that the ordinary witness (as we conceive him) did not come to be a common feature of jury trials till the very end of the 1400s.[20] Thus during the 1500s the community was for the first time dealing with a situation in which the jury depended largely, habitually, and increasingly, for their sources of information, upon testimonies offered to them in court at the trial.

(c) This, then, is the reason why another notion (a marked feature of the 1500s and early 1600s) should come into particular prominence at that epoch and not before. During that period much is found to be said, in the trials, about the number of witnesses, their sufficiency in quantity and quality. Juries were just beginning to depend for their verdict upon what was laid before them at the trial, and it was thus natural enough that they should begin to ask themselves, and to be urged by counsel to consider, whether they had been furnished with sufficient material for a right decision. Much begins to be thought and said, in statutes and otherwise, about having witnesses "good and lawful", "good and pregnant", "good and sufficient."[21] There was, moreover, already in existence at that time, well known to a large proportion of the legal profession, and only waiting for a chance to be imported and adopted, a mass of rules in the civil and canon law about the number of witnesses necessary in given cases, and the circumstances sufficient to complement and corroborate testimony deficient in number. Throughout the State trials of the 1500s and early 1600s, the accused is found insisting that one witness to each material fact is not enough.[22] In spite of these repeated appeals to the numerical system of the civil law, they produced no permanent impression in the shape of specific rules, except in treason and perjury.[23] But the general notion thoroughly permeated the times, and barely escaped being incorporated in the jury system.

In a particular respect it left an impression material to the present inquiry. There had hitherto been no prejudice against the jury's utilizing information

[18] Thayer, ubi supra, 130.

[19] For example, in 1499, Vavasour, J., says: "Suppose no evidence is given on either side, and the parties do not wish to give any, yet the jury shall give their verdict for one side or the other; and so the evidence is not material to help or harm the matter" (Y. B. 14 H. VII, 29, 4, cit. Thayer, 133); while in the early 1600s, Coke says (3 Inst. 163) that "most commonly juries are led by deposition of witnesses." Another indication is seen in the practical disuse of the attaint by the end of the 1500s (Thayer, ubi supra, 138, 150, 153, 167), due largely to the fact that the jury now depended so much upon testimony in court.

[20] Thayer, ubi supra, 102, 121, 122, 126.

[21] In other respects, also, this was a time significant of a desire to see to the sufficiency of the evidence placed before a jury; see Thayer, ubi supra, 179, 180, 430.

[22] A single example must suffice; in Lord Strafford's Trial (1640), 3 How. St. Tr. 1427, 1445, 1450, he argues: "He is but one witness, and in law can prove nothing"; such "therefore could not make faith in matter of debt, much less in matter of life and death."

[23] The treason-statutes, coming in 1547–1554, will be noted later.

The history of the numerical system, and of its failure to obtain a foothold in our law, is examined post, § 2032.

from persons not produced. But now that their verdict depended so much on what was laid before them at the trial, and now that the sufficiency of this evidence, in quantity and quality, began to be canvassed, it came to be asked whether a hearsay thus laid before them would suffice. It was asked, for example, whether, if there was one witness testifying in court from personal knowledge and another's hearsay statement offered, the two together would suffice.[24] Again, it was discussed in Queen Mary's reign (1553), whether, of the two accusers required in treason, one could testify by reporting a hearsay.[25] In Raleigh's trial (1603), Chief Justice Popham, refusing to produce Cobham to testify, explained that, "where no circumstances do concur to make a matter probable, then an accuser may be heard in court, and not merely by extra-judicial statement; but so many circumstances agreeing and confirming the accusation in this case, the accuser is not to be produced";[26] that is, a hearsay statement was sufficient if otherwise corroborated. So, too, the notion that persisted in the 1600s, that a hearsay statement, though not alone sufficient, was nevertheless usable in confirmation of other testimony,[27] was a direct survival of this treatment of hearsay from the standpoint of numerical sufficiency. During the 1500s nothing was settled in this direction; the matter was being debated and doubted. But the important feature is that the doubt about using hearsay statements — i.e. testimony from persons not called — was merely incidental to a general canvassing of the numerical and qualitative sufficiency of testimony, which in turn was a novelty arising from the jury-conditions of the 1500s.

It appears, then, that at the entrance to the 1500s (a) there had hitherto been no conception of a special necessity for calling to the stand persons to whose assertions credit was to be given; (b) that by the 1500s the increasing dependence of the jury on the evidence laid before them in court (as distin-

[24] 1541, Rolfe v. Hampden, Dyer 53*b* (of three witnesses to a will, "two deposed upon the report of others, and the third deposed of his own knowledge", and there was no apparent objection, "though the jury paid little regard to the testimony aforesaid"); 1622, Adams v. Canon, Dyer 53*b*, note (disbursement of money for P.; of two witnesses, one "deposed that he himself knew it to be true, and being examined why he would swear that, answered, 'because his father had said so'; and in this case much was said about the deposition of witnesses; first, that if one witness depose of his own knowledge of the very point in question, and the other in the circumstances, that shall be sufficient ground for the judge to pass sentence"; here the "circumstances" means the hearsay statement, as shown by Pyke v. Crouch, infra). The earlier loose practice in this respect is seen in a London case of 33 Edw. I., cited in Bateson's Borough Customs, II, Introd. p. 32 (Selden Society Pub., XXI, 1906).

[25] 1553, R. v. Thomas, Dyer 99*b* ("It was there holden for law, that of two accusors, if one be an accusor of his own knowledge, or of his own hearing, and he relate it to another, the other may well be an accusor"); 1556, Dyer, 134*a*, note (under the treason statute requiring two accusers, "an accusation under the hands of the accusers or testified by others is sufficient"); 1628, Coke, 3d Inst. 25 ("The strange conceit in 2 Mar. [Thomas's Case], that one may be an accuser by hearsay, was utterly denied by the justices in Lord Lumley's Case [1572]", "reported by the lord Dier under his own hand, which we have seen, but [is] left out of the print"); approved by Hale, Pleas of the Crown (1680), I, 306, II, 287.

This notion of quantity, as associated with hearsay, is seen also in certain coeval rules on the Continent, declaring (for example) one witness upon personal knowledge to be equal to two or three going upon hearsay (Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., 1900, vol. VI, pt. 1, p. 388; Esmein, Histoire de la procédure criminelle en France, 1882, pp. 269, 369).

[26] As reported in Jardine's Criminal Trials, I, 427.

[27] Infra, note 33.

guished from their other sources of information) gave a new importance to such evidential material; and (c) that there was thus much debate as to the sufficiency of witnesses in number and kind, and that incidentally doubt began to be thrown on the propriety of depending on extra-judicial assertions, either alone or as confirming other testimony given in court.

With this preliminary survey, the process may now be traced of making more precise and comprehensive the general notion against hearsay which thus sprung into consciousness. It will be convenient to consider, first, hearsay statements in general, and, next, hearsay statements under oath; for the rule as it affected the latter had both an earlier origin and a slower development.

I. Hearsay statements in general. (1) In the first place, then, there is no exclusion of hearsay statements. Through the 1500s and down beyond the middle of the 1600s, hearsay statements are constantly received, even against opposition.[28] They are often objected to by accused persons, and are sometimes said by the judge to be of no value or to be insufficient of themselves, and are even occasionally excluded. In short, they are regarded as more or less questionable, and the doubt particularly increases in the 1600s; but, in spite of all, they are admissible and admitted. Nor is this result due to any abuse or irregularity peculiar to trials for treason or other State prosecutions; it is equally apparent in the rulings in the few civil cases that are reported. The practice is unmistakable.

(2) In the meantime, the appreciation of the impropriety of using hearsay

[28] 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, Jardine's Crim. Trials, I, 157, 158, 159, 179, 201, 206, 210 (various letters and other hearsay statements are used against the accused); 1590, Stranham v. Cullington, Cro. Eliz. 228 (prohibition for suing for tithes: "they said that hearsay shall be allowed for a proof"); 1601, Webb v. Petts, Noy 44 ("the witness said that for a long time, as they had heard say, the occupiers . . . had used to pay annually to the parson 3s."; held that "a proof by hearsay was good enough to maintain the surmise within the statute 2 Ed. 6"); 1622, Adams v. Canon, Dyer 53*b*, note (a hearsay admissible for one witness; see quotation supra); 1632, Sherfield's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 519, 536 (information in the Star Chamber against a vestryman of New Sarum for breaking a painted glass window; to show that the Bishop had warned him not to do it, one of the Court offered a letter from the Bishop, "but this being out of course, and a thing to which the defendant could make no answer, was not approved of"); 1640, Earl of Strafford's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 1381, 1427 ("they prove very little but what they took upon hearsays"); 1644, Archbishop Laud's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 315, 383 (argued for defendant: "He adds what Sir Thomas Ailsbury's man said. . . . But why doth he rest upon a hearsay of Sir Thomas Ailsbury's man? Why was not this man examined to make out the proof?"), 391 (argued for defendant: "Of all which there is no proof but a bare relation what Mr. H., Mr. I., and Sir W. B. said; which is all hearsay and makes no evidence, unless they were present to witness what was said [by me to them]"), 395 (argued for defendant: "This is but Sir E. P.'s report, and so no proof, unless he were produced to justify it"); again at 399, 402, 432, 534, 538 (in all these instances the hearsay statements are received); 1663, Moders' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 273, 276 (bigamy; a witness testified that he once saw the first husband, not produced, "and the man did acknowledge himself to be so"; the Court: "Hearsays must condemn no man; what do you know of your own knowledge?" but the statement gets in); 1669, Hawkins' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 921, 935 (collateral charge that defendant picked N.'s pocket; N.'s statements to that effect were given by the witness, in spite of the defendant's demand that N. be called; Sir Matthew Hale was judge); 1670, Style's Practical Register 173 (citing a case of 1646).

For the history and theory of the Hearsay rule on the Continent, see a learned and exhaustive essay by Eugen Kulischer, "Das Zeugnis von Hörensagen" (Zeitschrift für privat- und öffentliches Recht, 1907, XXXIV, 169).

statements by persons not called is growing steadily. By the second decade after the Restoration, this notion receives a fairly constant enforcement, both in civil and in criminal cases.[29] There are occasional lapses;[30] but it is clear that by general acceptance the rule of exclusion had now become a part of the law as well as of the practice. There even is found[31] a counsel for the prosecution stopping "for example's sake" its violation by his own witness. No precise date or ruling stands out as decisive; but it seems to be between 1675 and 1690 that the fixing of the doctrine takes place.[32]

[29] It is worth noting that the not uncommon belief which attributes most of the reforms in the rules of evidence in criminal trials to the Commonwealth of 1649 or the Revolution of 1688 is hardly well founded. In the present case, for example, the new idea comes in with the Restoration régime, 1660–1685; and this is generally true of the other matters of improvement (as noted post, §§ 2032, 2250). The Commonwealth went on with very much the same practices as the royal government which it overthrew; witness the argument (infra) of Mr. Prynne, who was one of the most vigorous opponents of Charles I. At the Restoration, much warning seems to have been taken, and it is then that the decided amelioration is apparent; the trials of the Regicides, for instance, were (contrary to the general impression) almost models of fairness, considering the prior practice. What was left to be done was done under Anne, after 1700, rather than under William. Even Scroggs, in 1678, did not much violate existing rules; and the real abuses and irregularities occurred chiefly in the terrible time of unrest and mutual suspicion, just before and after the Duke of York's accession, and at the hands of the unscrupulous Jefferies, whose faults were chiefly his own and abnormal.

Compare the similar opinion of Professor Willis-Bund, State Trials for Treason, 1882, vol. II, Introd. xx.

[30] E.g. in the cases infra of 1680, 1681, 1682, 1686.

[31] E.g. in Colledge's Trial, infra.

[32] 1673, Pickering v. Barkley, Vin. Abr. "Evidence", P, b, 1, vol. XII, 175 (to show the mercantile usage construing a policy, "a certificate of merchants" was read in court; but "the Court desired to have the master of the Trinity-house and other sufficient merchants to be brought into court to satisfy the Court 'viva voce'"); 1676, Rutter v. Hebden, 1 Keb. 754 (objected that a contradictory statement of a witness could not be proved because not made on oath; but allowed); 1679, Bishop Burnet on the Popish Plot, 6 How. St. Tr. 1406, 1422, 1427 (refers to a part of Dugdale's testimony as "only upon hearsay from Evers, and so was nothing in the law"); 1678, Earl of Pembroke's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1309, 1325, 1336 (a deceased person's statements as to persons injuring him, received; one of the statements was offered as a death-bed declaration; and counsel adds, "there are little circumstances which are always allowed for evidence in such cases, — where men receive any wounds, to ask them questions while they are ill, about it, who hurt them"); 1678, Ireland's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 79, 105 (the defendant, to prove an alibi at St. Omer's college in France, offered to bring "an authentic writing" "under the seal of the college and testified by all in the college, that he was there all the while"; Atkins, J.: "Such evidences as you speak of we would not allow against you; therefore we would not allow it for you"; afterwards, members of the college were produced in person); 1679, Samson v. Yardley, 2 Keb. 223 (appeal of murder; what a witness, now dead, swore on the indictment was excluded; "what the witness dead had said generally, being but hearsay of a stranger, and not of a party [in] interest, they would not admit, which might be true or false"); 1680, Anderson's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 811, 865 (charge of being a priest and saying mass at the Venetian ambassador's; a letter of the ambassador, then out of the kingdom, denying his saying of mass, not admitted for the defendant); 1680, Gascoigne's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 959, 1019 (one Barlow being offered as a witness, but being apparently afraid to speak, one Ravenscroft offered to tell what Barlow had told him the night before; Pemberton, J.: "You must not come to tell a story out of another man's mouth"; yet after some objection he was allowed to tell the whole story); 1681, Plunket's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 447, 458 (other persons' statements of defendant's acts, admitted without objection), 461 (Witness: "Mr. L. B. told me that he did hear of the French —"; Pemberton, L. C. J.: "Speak what you know yourself"); 1681, Busby's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 525, 545 (witness offers an affidavit of a register of births; Street, B.: "You ought to have brought the man along with you to testify it"; Witness: "The sexton is an old man about 60 years of age and could not come"; Street, B.: "That does not signify anything at all"); 1681, Colledge's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 549, 603 (seditious publication; the Attorney-General himself stops a prosecution-witness who tells what the printer said as to the author), 628 (another counsel for the prosecution does the same; "we must not permit this for example's sake, to tell what others said"), 663 (counsel for prosecution: "You

(3) At the same time, and along with this general rule of exclusion, there is still a doctrine, clearly recognized, that a hearsay statement may be used as confirmatory or corroboratory of other testimony.[33] Here we have the survival of that notion about sufficiency and quantity, already referred to. A hearsay statement, by itself, is insufficient as the sole foundation for a conclusion; by itself it "can condemn no man", and so, by itself, it is excluded; but, when it merely supplements other good evidence already in, it is receivable. This limited doctrine as to using it in corroboration survived for a long time in a still more limited shape, i.e. in the rule that a witness's own prior consistent statements could be used in corroboration of his testimony on the stand;[34] and the latter was probably accepted as late as the end of the 1700s.[35]

(4) In the meantime, the general rule excluding hearsay statements comes must not tell a tale of a tale of what you heard one say"); 1682, Lord Grey's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 127, 136 (hearsay statements plentifully received without objection); 1684, Hampden's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1053, 1094 (hearsay statements excluded; Jefferies, L. C. J.: "You know the law; why should you offer any such thing?"); 1684, Braddon's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1127, 1181, 1189 (Mr. J. Withins: "We must not hear what another said that is no party to this cause"); 1686, Lord Delamere's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 509, 548 (hearsay statements put in without check); 1692, Stainer v. Droitwich, 1 Salk. 281 (an exception to the hearsay rule discussed as such); 1693, Thompson v. Trevanion, Holt 286, Skinner 402 (a hearsay statement, received apparently as an exception); 1696, Charnock's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 1377, 1454 (Holt, L. C. J., alludes to the objection as well founded, and informs the jury when charging them: "Therefore I did omit repeating [to you] a great part of what D. said, because as to him it was for the most part hearsay"); 1697, Pyke v. Crouch, 1 Ld. Raym. 730 (if a testator sends a duplicate of his will to a stranger "and the stranger sends back a letter" mentioning its receipt, "after the death of the stranger such letters may be read as circumstantial evidence" to prove that such a duplicate was sent).

[33] 1679, Knox's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 763, 790 (the witness' former statement offered; L. C. J. Scroggs: "The use you make of this is no more but only to corroborate what he hath said, that he told it him while it was fresh and that it is no new matter of his invention now"); 1683, Lord Russell's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 577, 613 (L. C. J. Pemberton: "The giving evidence by hearsay will not be evidence": Attorney-General: "It is not evidence to convict a man if there were not plain evidence before; but it plainly confirms what the other swears"); 1692, Cole's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 876 (Mrs. Milward: "My lord, my husband [now deceased] declared to me that he and Mr. Cole were in the coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they two killed Dr. Clenche"; Mr. J. Dolben: "That is no evidence at all, what your husband told you; that won't be good evidence, if you don't know somewhat of your own knowledge"; Mrs. Milward: "My lord, I have a great deal more that my husband told me to declare"; Mr. J. Dolben: "That won't do; what if your husband had told you that I killed Dr. Clenche, what then? This will stand for no evidence in law; we ought by the law to have no man called in question but upon very good grounds, and good evidence upon oath, and that upon the verdict of twelve good men." Nevertheless, he let her relate more of what her husband told her about the plot to kill Dr. Clenche; in charging the jury, he referred to it as "no evidence in law . . . especially when it is single, without any circumstance to confirm it"); 1725, Braddon, Observations on the Earl of Essex' Murder, 9 How. St. Tr. 1229, 1272 ("It is true, no man ought to suffer barely upon hearsay evidence; but such testimony hath been used to corroborate what else may be sworn").

[34] 1682, Lutterell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282 (it was proved that one of the witnesses for the plaintiff had often "declared the same things" as now; and L. C. B. Bridgman "said, though a hearsay was not to be allowed as direct evidence, yet it might be made use of to this purpose, viz. to prove that W. M. was constant to himself, whereby his testimony was corroborated"); ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 149 ("A mere hearsay is no evidence: . . . but though hearsay be not allowed as direct evidence, yet it may be in corroboration of a witness' testimony, to show that he affirmed the same thing before on other occasions; . . for such evidence is only in support of the witness that gives in his testimony upon oath").

[35] 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 249, and cases cited ante, § 1123.

over into the 1700s as something established within living memory. It is clear that its firm fixing (as above observed) did not occur till about 1680; and so in the treatises of the early 1700s the rule is stated with a prefatory "It seems."[36] By the middle of the 1700s the rule is no longer to be struggled against;[37] and henceforth the only question can be how far there are to be specific exceptions to it.

What is further noticeable is that in these utterances of the early 1700s the reason is clearly put forward why there should be this distinction between statements made out of court and statements made on the stand; the reason is that "the other side hath no opportunity of a cross-examination." This reason receives peculiar emphasis in the final and comprehensive application of the rule to a peculiar class of statements made prior to the trial in hand, namely, statements made under oath. These come now to be considered.

II. Hearsay statements under oath. (1) As early as the middle of the 1500s a first step had been attempted towards requiring the personal production of those who had already made a statement upon oath. This requirement was limited to trials for treason; and the circumstances leading up to its introduction are described in the following passage:

1696, Bishop Burnet, arguing in the House of Lords, at Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 537, 752: "There passed many attainders in that reign [of H. VIII], only upon depositions that were read in both houses of parliament. It is true, these were much blamed, and there was great cause for it. . . . In Edward VI's trial, the lord Seymour was attained in the same manner [sc. without being heard], only with this difference, that the witnesses were brought to the bar and there examined, whereas formerly they proceeded upon some depositions that were read to them. At the duke of Somerset's trial [in 1551], which was both for high treason and for felony, in which he was acquitted of the treason but found guilty of the felony, depositions were only read against him, but the witnesses were not brought face to face, as he pressed they might be.[38] Upon which it was that the following parliament enacted that the accusers (that is, the witnesses) should be examined face to face, if they were alive."[39]

[36] 1716, Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, II, 596, b. II, c. 46, § 44 ("As to the Fifth Point, viz. of parol evidence, and how far hearsay shall be admitted. It seems agreed that what a stranger has been heard to say is in strictness no manner of evidence either for or against a prisoner, not only because it is not upon oath, but also because the other side hath no opportunity of a cross-examination"); 1736, Bacon, Abridgment, Evidence, (K) ("It seems agreed that what another has been heard to say is no evidence, because the party was not on oath; also, because the party who is affected thereby had not an opportunity of cross-examining").

[37] 1701, Captain Kidd's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 147, 177 (Witness: "Here is a certificate [of my reputation] from the parish where I was born"; L. C. B. Ward: "That will signify nothing; we cannot read certificates; they must speak 'viva voce'"); 1716, Earl of Wintoun's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 804, 856; 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 323, 455; 1725, L. C. Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 767, 1137; 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 id. 1160 (a statement of Mrs. P., deceased, as to a material fact was offered; after some debate, the Court excluded it "on the principal reason that hearsay evidence ought not to be admitted, because of the adverse party's having no opportunity of cross-examining"); 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 383, 406 (rule undisputed).

[38] This may be seen in the duke's trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 520.

[39] Substantially the same account as Bishop Burnet's is given in Rastal's Statutes (?), I, 102, as quoted in a note to the Duke of Somerset's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 520; but no edition of any of Rastal's books seems to contain such a passage.

The statute of 1553, thus referred to as first requiring the witness' production on the trial, was St. 5 Edw. VI, c. 12, § 22.[40] This was followed by a similar provision in 1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, § 11.[41] But this early step was premature; the innovation was too much in advance of the times; and it had only a short life. From the very year of the latter enactment, until the end of the succeeding century, it remained by judicial construction a dead letter. The means by which this result was reached was another section (§ 7) in the act of Philip and Mary, providing that trials for treason should be conducted "according to the common law", i.e. without any requirement of two witnesses or of producing witnesses; so that since the requirement of § 11 applied only to trials for the treasons defined by that very statute, the Crown, by bringing prosecutions on other definitions of treason (common law or statutory), was free from any such requirement.[42]

This judicial construction was perhaps strained, and was abandoned after the Revolution and under William III's government. Nevertheless it was clear law for a century and a half; and, when Sir Walter Raleigh insisted so urgently on the production of Lord Cobham, he was truly answered by Chief Justice Popham that "he had no law for it."[43]

[40] "Which said accusers at the time of the arraignment of the party accused, if they be then living, shall be brought in person before the party so accused, and avow and maintain that which they have to say to prove him guilty", unless he confesses.

[41] Upon arraignment for treason, the persons "or two of them at the least", who shall declare anything against the accused "shall, if they be then living and within the realm, be brought forth in person before the party arraigned if he require the same, and object and say openly in his hearing what they or any of them can against him."

[42] 1554, Throckmorton's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 862, 873, 880, 883 (the defendant in vain invoked the treason-statute); 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, 978, 992 (by the prosecuting Serjeant: "the law was so for a time, in some cases of treason, but since the law hath been found too hard and dangerous for the prince, and it hath been repealed"): 1586, Abington's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1142, 1148 ("You stand indicted by the common law and the statute of 25 Edw. III . . . and in that statute is not contained any such proof"); 1603, Raleigh's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 16, 18; Jardine's Cr. Tr., I, 418, 420 (Popham, C. J.: "Sir Walter Raleigh, for the statutes you have named, none of them help you. The statutes of the 5th and 6th of Edward VI and of the 1st Edward VI are general; but they were found to be inconvenient and are therefore repealed by the 1st and 2d of Philip and Mary, which you have mentioned, which statute goes only to the treasons therein comprised, and also appoints the trial of treasons to be as before it was at the common law"); 1649, Lilburne's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1269, 1401 (same rule). Compare the decisions by which the same result was reached for the requirement of two witnesses (post, § 2032). There was another similar statute about the same time, but it apparently was ineffective for the same reason: 1558, St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, § 27 (no person to be convicted of ecclesiastical offences or treason under this act — against heresy and foreign church authority — unless the two required witnesses, or such as are living and within the realm, "shall be brought forth in person face to face before the party so arraigned, and there shall testify and declare what they can say against the party so arraigned, if he require the same").

[43] The learned Mr. Jardine, in his Criminal Trials, I, 514, has vindicated this trial against the unjust criticisms of later times: "This doctrine and practice [of 1690 and later], however, though directly the reverse of those which preceded them, were not founded upon any legislative provision or any recorded decision of the Courts. But at the period of Raleigh's trial, there was, perhaps, no point of law more completely settled, than that the statute of the 1 & 2 Philip and Mary, c. 10, had repealed the provisions of the statute of the 5th of Edward VI, respecting the production of two witnesses in cases of treason. . . . If, therefore, the Judges who presided on Raleigh's trial were to abide by the solemn and repeated decisions of their predecessors, and the uniform practice of the Courts of law for centuries, they could do no otherwise, consistently with their duty, than decide as they did."

Thus this limited attempt to require personal production, instead of 'ex parte' depositions by absent persons, perished at its very birth. So far as this statutory attempt at the beginnings of a hearsay rule is concerned, it played no further part at all; except perhaps as furnishing a moral support for the opinion which was already working towards a general hearsay rule.

(2) That at this time, then (say, until the early 1600s), the general absence of any hearsay rule (as already noted) allowed equally the use of this specific class, namely, extra-judicial statements taken under oath, is clear enough. It appears as well in ordinary felony trials[44] as in treason trials.[45]

(3) It had, of course, always been usual (though, as just seen, not essential) to have the deponent present at the trial; but in such cases the general practice in State trials seems to have been, first to read aloud his sworn statement to the jury, and then to have him confirm it by declaring that it was "willingly and voluntarily confessed without menace or torture or offer of torture."[46] This went on till well into the 1600s. The sworn statement was still the main or the sufficient thing; but it was thought proper to have it openly adopted by the witness, so as to show that the prosecution did not fear a recantation. Thus the emphasis came gradually to be transferred from the sworn statement, as the sufficient testimony, to the statement on the trial as the essential thing.

(4) About this time, however, and markedly by the middle of the 1600s (coincidently with the general movement already considered), the notion tends to prevail, and gradually becomes definitely fixed, that even an extra-judicial statement under oath should not be used if the deponent can be personally had in court. This much has now been gained; and it is seen in civil and in criminal trials equally.[47] About this time the great dramatist reveals the arrival of a popular notion of the justice of the rule:

[44] 1615, Weston's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 911, 924; 1615, Elwes' Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 935, 941.

[45] To the instances of this already cited above, construing the treason statute, may be added the following: 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, passim; 1586, Mary Queen of Scot's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1162, 1183; 1590, Udall's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1271, 1302. Mr. Jardine, in his Criminal Trials, I, 514, says: "At the time of Raleigh's trial, most of the circumstances objected to by Sir John Hawles [under William III, about 1696] were strictly legal and justifiable: for instance, at that time, the depositions of absent persons were read as the usual course of evidence which had prevailed for centuries in State prosecutions; this mode of proof constituted the general rule, and the oral examination of witnesses was the exception, which was in practice sometimes allowed, but was as often refused, and never permitted but by the consent of the counsel for the prosecution." He also asserts (Introd., I, 25) that "the ordinary mode of trying persons indicted for murder, robbery, or theft" forbade the use of depositions; but his only authority for this statement is Sir Thomas Smith's description of a trial, which does not sustain him; and the citations in the note above seem to disprove his belief.

[46] The following list is only a selection: 1586, Babington's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1127, 1131; 1589, Earl of Arundel's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1250, 1252; 1600, Earl of Essex' Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1333, 1344; 1616, Earl of Somerset's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 965, 978. Compare the cases cited ante, § 818, under Confessions. The following case indicates a growing inclination to insist on this 'viva voce' confirmation where the original examination was technically defective: 1631, Lord Audley's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 401, 402 ("certain examinations having been taken by the lords without an oath, it was resolved [by all the judges] those could not be used until they were repeated upon oath").

[47] The first suggestion of this view seems to occur in the following cases: 1583, Puckley v. Bridges, Choice Cases in Ch. 163, quoted

Richard Second, IV, 1.
Bishop. "Thieves are not judged but [= unless] they are by to hear, Although apparent guilt be seen in them."
1613 (circa) King Henry VIII, II, 1:
1 Gent. . . . "The great duke
Came to the bar. . . .
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urged on the examinations, proofs, confessions,
Of divers witnesses; which the duke desired
To have brought 'viva voce' to his face;
At which appeared against him his surveyor," etc.

However, the deponent's statement can still be used, if he cannot be had in person, — for example, because of his death (and there is much vacillation of opinion as to the sufficiency of other causes, such as absence beyond sea); and nothing is as yet said as to the further objection that the deposition was not taken subject to cross-examination. The significant feature of this stage is the thought that the hearsay statement is usable only in case of necessity, i.e. the deponent ought to be produced if he can be. But the thought that in any case there must indispensably have been an opportunity for cross-examination has not been reached.

1 Swanst. 171 (witnesses deceased and beyond seas; depositions in the Star Chamber, etc. used); 1590, Udall's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1271, 1283 (examination on oath of one T. read, T. being beyond seas; but it does not appear that the latter circumstance was essential). In Raleigh's Trial (1603), 2 How. St. Tr. 16, 18, Raleigh is willing to concede that Lord Cobham's deposition could have been used, "where the accused is not to be had conveniently"; yet there it was used, though Cobham was "alive, and in the House."

But thereafter the precedents indicate a general acceptance of the notion stated above: 1612, Tomlinson v. Croke, 2 Rolle's Abr. 687, pl. 3 (deposition receivable if the deponent is dead, not if he is living); 1613, Fortescue & Coake's Case, Godb. 193 (depositions in chancery not to be read at law "unless affidavit be made that the witnesses who deposed were dead"); 1629, Anon., Godb. 326 ("if the party cannot find a witness", then his deposition "in an English court, in a cause betwixt the same parties", may be read); 1631, Fitzpatrick's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 419, 421 (a defendant in rape demanded that the lady be "produced face to face; which she was; who by her oath 'viva voce' satisfied the audience"); 1636, Dawby's Case, Clayt. 62 (admitted, when dead); 1645, Lord Macguire's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 653, 672 (most of the witnesses spoke 'viva voce'; a deposition was used of one who "was in town but he could not stay"); 1658, Mordant's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 907, 922 (all sworn except one, an escaped prisoner whose deposition was used); 1666, Lord Morley's Case, Kel. 55, 6 How. St. Tr. 770 (depositions before a coroner might be read if the deponent were dead, or unable to travel, or detained by defendant; but not if unable to be found); 1673, Blake v. Page, 1 Keb. 36 (speaks of the affidavit of an absent person as allowable, but apparently by consent only); 1678, Bromwich's Case, 1 Lev. 180 (like Lord Morley's Case); 1678, Earl of Pembroke's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1309, 1338 (a physician offers his prior deposition before the magistrate; the Court: "You must give it again 'viva voce'; we must not read your examination before the Court"); 1685, Oates' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 1227, 1285 (deposition of a witness not found after search, excluded); 1692, Harrison's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 833, 851 (deposition taken by the coroner in the defendant's absence, read because the defendant had eloigned the deponent). When this necessity for the witness' absence could be foreseen (as when a deposition 'de bene' was asked for before trial), there are some early indications that cross-examination would be a required condition: 1606, Matthews v. Port, Comb. 63 ("The witnesses may be examined [prior to trial] before a judge, by leave of the Court, as well in criminal causes as in civil, where a sufficient reason appears to the Court, as going to sea, etc., and then the other side may cross-examine them"); 1662, St. 13 & 14 Car. II, c. 23, § 5 (in certain insurance claims, seamen being often the witnesses, an oath 'de bene' may be administered, "timely notice being given to the adverse party, and set up in the office before such examination, to the end such witness or witnesses may be cross-examined").

(5) By the middle of the 1600s, the orthodox tradition in favor of allowing the use of extra-judicial sworn statements had thus become decidedly weakened and was on the point of giving way. Nevertheless, there was still a tradition of orthodoxy; and this tradition was in harmony with the practice of influential modes of trial other than trial by jury in the common-law courts.[48] A fixed rule to the contrary was consciously an innovation; and this innovation, though now on the point of prevailing, remained still to be established and to acquire orthodoxy. From the middle of the century we see the idea still progressing. The state of opinion is illustrated by one of the prosecutions conducted by the anti-Stuart party just before it obtained the upper hand and deposed Charles I:

> 1643, Col. Fiennes' Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 185, 214; the defendant, tried by court-martial, argued that "no paper-deposition ought to be allowed by the law, in cases of life and death, but the witnesses ought to be all present and testify 'viva voce': that he had not had notice of the commission "so that he might cross-examine the witnesses"; then Mr. Prynn, for the prosecution, answered, among other things, that in the civil law and courts-martial trials were as usual "by 'testimoniis' [i.e. depositions] as by 'testibus viva voce'; that in the Admiralty, a civil law court, as likewise in the Chancery, Star Chamber, and English courts formed after the civil law, they proceed usually by way of deposition; that even at the common law in some cases, depositions taken before the coroner, and examinations upon oath before the chief justice or other justices, are usually given in evidence even in capital cases; that the high Court of Parliament hath upon just occasions allowed of paper depositions in such cases"; and the depositions were "upon solemn debate" admitted.

This case, to be sure, was no precedent for a common-law trial, and it occurred amidst a bitter political controversy; but it sufficiently illustrates the unsettled state of opinion and the tendency of the time.[49] Yet no final settlement came under the Commonwealth, nor under the Restoration, nor directly upon the Revolution.[50]

[48] Ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, pt. III, § 21, in Hargr. Collect. Jurid. 200 ("It is a great imputation to our English courts that witnesses are privately produced", in chancery: pointing out that the ecclesiastical Court does otherwise, and reciting a recent reform of L. C. Egerton that witnesses should be produced before the opponent, "that the other side might examine him also if they please"); 1637, Bishop of Lincoln's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 769, 772 (Banks, Attorney-General, arguing in the Star Chamber, says: "The proceedings in this court, as in all other courts, is by examination of witnesses returned in parchment, not 'viva voce'").

[49] A reflection of the English rule in this period is seen in the following colonial records: 1660, Mass. Revised Laws and Liberties, Whitmore's ed., "Witnesses", § 2 (a witness' testimony may be taken before the magistrate, but, if the witness lives within ten miles and is not disabled, it shall not be used "except the witness be also present to be further examined about it; provided also that in capital cases all witnesses shall be present, wheresoever they dwell"; repeated in the Revision of 1672); 1692, Proprietor v. Keith, Pa. Colon. Cas. 117, 124 (affidavits were offered to prove the truth of a libel; but the Court "were very unwilling to have them read, saying it was no evidence unless the persons were present in court"; yet they permitted some to be read, since the witnesses could not be present "by reason of the extremity of the weather"). See also Browne's History of Maryland, 84.

[50] Mr. Jardine, in his Criminal Trials, Introd., I, 25, 29, says: "The ancient mode of proof by examinations [under oath of absent persons] continued to be the usual and regular course [in cases of treason or other state offences] during the reigns of Elizabeth, James I, and Charles I. . . . During the Commonwealth the practice of reading the depositions of absent witnesses entirely disappeared, and has never been since revived. . . . It is believed that not a single instance can be produced of the reading of the deposition of an absent witness on the trial of a criminal (except in cases expressly provided for by statute), since the reign of Charles I." It would, however, seem that the instances in note 47, supra, show the practice to have been sanctioned even until after the Revolution; Mordant's Trial, above cited, certainly shows that it did not cease during the Commonwealth. Mr. Jardine seems to have had a general but incorrect notion that the older methods ceased with the Commonwealth; for example, that torture did not cease, as he believes it did, has been noticed ante, § 818; see also note 29, supra.

(6) By 1680–1690 (as already noted) had come the establishment of the general rule against unsworn hearsay statements. This must have helped to emphasize the anomaly of leaving extra-judicial sworn statements unaffected by the same strict rule. By 1696, or nearly a decade after the Revolution, that anomaly ceased substantially to exist. A few rulings under the Restoration had foreshadowed this result;[51] but in that year it was definitely and decisively achieved in the trials of Paine and of Sir John Fenwick. The former was a ruling by the King's Bench after full argument, and came in January.[52] The latter, coming in the next November,[53] involved a lengthy debate in Parliament; and, though the vote finally favored the admission of the deposition, the victory of reaction was in appearance only; for the weighty and earnest speeches in this debate must have burned into the general consciousness the vital importance of the rule securing the right of cross-examination, and made it impossible thereafter to dispute the domination of that rule as a permanent element in the law.[54]

[51] Ante 1668 (no date or name), Rolle's Abr., II, 679, pl. 9 (depositions taken by bankruptcy commissioners, not admitted, "in a suit in which comes in question whether he was a bankrupt or not, or to prove anything depending on it, for the other party could not cross-examine the party sworn, that is the common course"); 1669, R. v. Buckworth, 2 Keb. 403 (perjury; testimony of a deceased witness sworn at the trial where the perjury was committed, received; by two judges to one); ante 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 306 ("The information upon oath taken before a justice of the peace" is admissible in felony, if the deponent is unable to travel, yet in treason this is "not allowable, for the statute requires that they be produced upon arraignment in the presence of the prisoner, to the end that he may cross-examine them"); 1688, Thatcher v. Waller, T. Jones 53 (deposition before the coroner of one beyond sea, admitted; but held that a deposition before a justice of the peace should not be received; the case of the coroner standing on the ground of a record); 1694, R. v. Taylor, Skinner 403 (affidavit not admissible); and the citations at the end of note 47, supra.

[52] 1696, R. v. Paine, 5 Mod. 163 (libel; a deposition of B., examined by the mayor of Bristol upon oath but not in P.'s presence, was offered; it was objected that "B. being dead, the defendant had lost all opportunity of cross-examining him", and the use of examinations before coroners and justices rested on the special statutory authority given them to take such depositions; the King's Bench consulted with the Common Pleas, and "it was the opinion of both Courts that these depositions should not be given in evidence, the defendant not being present when they were taken before the mayor and so had lost the benefit of a cross-examination"; the reports of this case in 1 Salk. 281, 1 Ld. Raym. 729, are brief and obscure).

[53] It is a little singular that R. v. Paine is not cited by any of the numerous debaters in Fenwick's Trial. The date of the former is given as Hilary Term, 7 Wm. III, which must have been January, 1696, or ten months before Fenwick's Trial. It is cited in Bishop Atterbury's Trial, in 1723, infra.

[54] 1696, Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 537, 591–607, 618–750 (the sworn statement before a justice of the peace of one Goodman, said to have absented himself by the accused's tampering, was offered on a trial in Parliament; a prolonged debate took place, and this deposition, termed hearsay, was opposed on the precise ground of "a fundamental rule in our law that no evidence shall be given against a man, when he is on trial for his life, but in the presence of the prisoner, because he may cross-examine him who gives such evidence", "by which much false swearing was often detected"; the deposition was finally admitted, Nov. 16, by 218 to 145 in the Commons, and the attainder passed by 189 to 156 in the Commons and by 66 to 60 in the Lords; but it is clear from the debate that many of those voting to receive the deposition did so on the theory that Parliament was not bound to follow the rules of evidence obtaining in the inferior Courts; the speeches claiming that

(7) From this time on, the applicability of the Hearsay rule to sworn statements in general, as well as to unsworn statements, is not questioned.[55] From the beginning of the 1700s the writers upon the law assume it as a settled doctrine;[56] and the reason of the rule in this connection is stated in the same language already observed in the history of the rule in general, namely, that statements used as testimony must be made where the maker can be subjected to cross-examination.[57]

(8) There were, however, two sorts of sworn statements which, being already expressly authorized by statute, though not expressly made admissible, might be thought to call for special exemption, namely, the sworn examination of witnesses before justices of the peace in certain cases, and of witnesses before a coroner. That the rule excluding depositions taken without cross-examination should be applied to those of the former sort was not settled until the end of the 1700s.[58] That it should apply to those of the latter sort never came to be conceded at all in England,[59] — at least, independently of statutory regulation in the 1800s; and long tradition availed to preserve the use of these, though only as a distinct exception to a general rule.

(9) That general rule, from the early 1700s, was clearly understood to exclude alike sworn and unsworn statements made without opportunity to the opponent for cross-examination. From that period the rule could be broadly stated in the words of a judge writing just two centuries later: [60] "Declarathose rules would admit it were half-hearted and evasive; moreover, the prosecution only ventured (595) to offer it as "corroborating evidence"; see supra, note 33).

[55] The last remnant of hesitation is found in Bredon v. Gill, 1697, 2 Salk. 555, 1 Ld. Raym. 219, 5 Mod. 279 (question whether on statutory appeal from excise-commissioners to appeal-commissioners depositions below could be used or the witnesses should "be brought in again personally and be examined 'viva voce'"; ruled at first that "the law does not make 'viva voce' evidence necessary, unless before a jury; in other cases depositions may be evidence"; but afterwards, 'mutata opinione', the Court required examination 'de novo'). But the persistence with which the older notion lingered on is seen in Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 323, 463, 471, 495, 503, 523, 536, 595, 607, 608, 616, 673; here an examination before the Council, not on oath, of one since dead, was on an impeachment voted by a majority of the Lords to be received; but the vote was clearly the result of hot partisanship, and the managers of the impeachment conceded that their evidence was not legal; in this trial the first citation of R. v. Paine occurs, at p. 536.

[56] 1730, Emlyn, Preface to State Trials, 1 How. St. Tr. xxv ("The excellency therefore of our laws above others I take to consist chiefly in that part of them which regards criminal prosecutions. . . . In other countries . . . the witnesses are examined in private and in the prisoner's absence; with us they are produced face to face and deliver their evidence in open court, the prisoner himself being present and at liberty to cross-examine them"); ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 58 ff.; 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203 (deposition before bankruptcy commissioners, excluded).

[57] See the quotations in the preceding six notes.

[58] 1739, R. v. Westbeer, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 12 (deceased accomplice's information upon oath, admitted, though it was objected that the defendant "would lose the benefit which might otherwise have arisen from cross-examination"); 1762, Foster, Crown Law, 328 (the eminent author regards a deceased deponent's examination before either coroner or justices as admissible, not discriminating as to the accused's presence and cross-examination); 1789, R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 500 (justice of the peace's examination of the victim of an assault, excluded); 1790, R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707 (justice of the peace's examination of a pauper as to his settlement; a divided Court); 1801, R. v. Ferryfrystone, 2 East 54 (the excluding opinion of the preceding case confirmed).

[59] R. v. Eriswell, supra; and cases cited post, § 1374.

[60] 1889, Vann, J., in Lent v. Shear, 160 N. Y. 462, 55 N. E. 2.

tions under oath do not differ in principle from declarations made without that sanction, and both come within the rule which excludes all hearsay evidence."

One noteworthy consequence, having an important indirect influence on other parts of the law of Evidence, was the addition of a new activity to the accepted functions of the counsel for an accused person. In 1695 [61] counsel had been allowed, in treason only, to make full defence for the accused; but until 1836 [62] no law allowed this in felony. Yet as soon as the right of cross-examination was established, it was indispensable that trained counsel should be permitted to conduct it, if it were to be effective.[63] And so in a short time this practice (without technical sanction) forced itself on the judges in criminal trials:

> 1883, Sir James Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, 1, 424: "The most remarkable change introduced into the practice of the courts [from the middle of the eighteenth century] was the process by which the old rule which deprived prisoners of the assistance of counsel in trials for felony was gradually relaxed. . . . In Barnard's trial [in 1758] his counsel seem to have cross-examined all the witnesses fully. . . . On the other hand, at the trial of Lord Ferrers two years later, the prisoner was obliged to cross-examine the witnesses without the aid of counsel. . . . The change [of law by the statute of 1836] was less important than it may at first sight seem to have been."

Indirectly, this resulted speedily in a new development, to a degree before unknown, of the art of interrogation and the various rules of Evidence naturally most applicable on cross-examinations, — particularly, the impeachment of witnesses.[64]

Furthermore, it resulted ultimately in the breakdown of the old fixed tradition that a criminal trial must be finished in one sitting. The necessary sifting of testimony by cross-examination took double and treble the time used of yore. Under vast inconvenience, the old tradition was preserved, until at last it yielded, from very exhaustion, to the new necessities.[65]

What we find, then, in the development of the Hearsay rule is: (1) A period up to the middle 1500s, during which no objection is seen to the use by the jury of testimonial statements by persons not in court; (2) then a period of less than two centuries, during which a sense arises of the impropriety of such sources of information, and the notion gradually but definitely shapes itself, in the course of hard experience, that the reason of this impropriety is that all statements to be used as testimony should be made only where the person to be affected by them has an opportunity of probing their

[61] St. 7 & 8 Wm. III, c. 3.

[62] St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 114.

[63] By the prosecuting counsel it had of course already been employed, e.g. 1688, Seven Bishops' Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 183.

[64] As noted ante, § 8.

[65] "Mr. Erskine made his celebrated speech in Lord George Gordon's case, 1781, after midnight, and the verdict was given at 5.15 A.M., the Court having sat from 8 P.M. the previous day. In 1794, in Hardy's case, the Court sat from 8 till past midnight" (Sir H. B. Poland, A Century of Law Reform, 1901, p. 63). Until the trial of Hardy, in 1794, "there had not yet been an instance of a trial for high treason that had not been finished in a single day" (Campbell, Lives of the Chancellors, 5th ed., VIII, 307). Compare the citations post, § 1864.

trustworthiness by means of cross-examination; (3) Finally, by the beginning of the 1700s, a general and settled acceptance of this rule as a fundamental part of the law.[66]

Such, in brief, seems to have been the course of development of that most characteristic rule of the Anglo-American law of Evidence, — a rule which may be esteemed, next to jury-trial, the greatest contribution of that eminently practical legal system to the world's methods of procedure.

§ 1365. Cross-examination and Confrontation. The essential requirement of the Hearsay rule, as just examined, is that statements offered testimonially must be subjected to the test of Cross-examination. But a process commonly spoken of as Confrontation is also often referred to as an additional and accompanying test or as the sole test.

Now Confrontation is, in its main aspect, merely another term for the test of Cross-examination. It is the preliminary step to securing the opportunity of cross-examination; and, so far as it is essential, this is only because cross-examination is essential. The right of confrontation is the right to the opportunity of cross-examination. Confrontation also involves a subordinate and incidental advantage, namely, the observation by the tribunal of the witness' demeanor on the stand, as a minor means of judging the value of his testimony. But this minor advantage is not regarded as essential, i.e. it may be dispensed with when it is not feasible. Cross-examination, however, the essential object of confrontation, remains indispensable. The details of this distinction are elsewhere to be examined (post, § 1395); it is enough to note here that, so far as confrontation is an indispensable element of the Hearsay rule, it is merely another name for the opportunity of cross-examination.

§ 1366. Division of Topics. An exposition of the Hearsay rule embraces four general topics:

I. The Hearsay rule's requirements, and their satisfaction; i.e. the detailed rules for application of the tests of Cross-examination and Confrontation;

II. The kinds of assertions admitted as Exceptions to the Hearsay rule;

III. Utterances, not being testimonial assertions, to which the Hearsay rule is not Applicable;

IV. Hearsay rule as Applicable to Statements of Members of the Tribunal itself.

[66] It therefore does not date back so far as our judges have sometimes fondly predicated, — "to Magna Charta, if not beyond it", for instance (Anderson v. State, 89 Ala. 12, 7 So. 429; 1890).

SUB-TITLE I: THE HEARSAY RULE SATISFIED

TOPIC I: BY CROSS-EXAMINATION

CHAPTER XLIV.

IN GENERAL

§ 1367. Cross-examination as a Distinctive and Vital Feature of our Law. For two centuries past, the policy of the Anglo-American system of Evidence has been to regard the necessity of testing by cross-examination as a vital feature of the law. The belief that no safeguard for testing the value of human statements is comparable to that furnished by cross-examination, and the conviction that no statement (unless by special exception) should be used as testimony until it has been probed and sublimated by that test, has found increasing strength in lengthening experience.[1] Not even the abuses, the mishandlings, and the puerilities which are so often found associated with cross-examination have availed to nullify its value. It may be that in more than one sense it takes the place in our system which torture occupied in the mediæval system of the civilians. Nevertheless, it is beyond any doubt the greatest legal engine ever invented for the discovery of truth. However difficult it may be for the layman, the scientist, or the foreign jurist to appreciate this its wonderful power, there has probably never been a moment's doubt upon this point in the mind of a lawyer of experience. "You can do anything," said Wendell Phillips, "with a bayonet — except sit upon it." A lawyer can do anything with a cross-examination, — if he is skilful enough not to impale his own cause upon it. He may, it is true, do more than he ought to do; he may "make the worse appear the better reason, to perplex and dash maturest counsels",— may make the truth appear like falsehood. But this abuse of its power is able to be remedied by proper control. The fact of this unique and irresistible power remains, and is the reason for our faith in its merits. If we omit political considerations of broader range, then cross-examination, not trial by jury, is the great and permanent contribution of the Anglo-American system of law to improved methods of trial-procedure.[2]

Striking illustrations of its power to expose inaccuracies and falsehoods are plentiful in our records;[3] and it is apparent enough, in some of the great failures of justice in Continental trials, that they could hardly have occurred under the practice of effective cross-examination.[4]

The special weakness of Chancery procedure (which followed Continental traditions) lay in its obstacles to an effective cross-examination.[5] The praise § 1367. [1] Approved per Wheeler, C. J., in Bishop v. Copp, 1921, 96 Conn. 157, 114 Atl. 682.

[2] Mr. Bentham affirms this in the quotation post. Such also was the opinion (expressed in 1890) of an eminent member of the Tokyo Bar, Mr. Masujima, who had entered the Bar at the Middle Temple, London, and had enjoyed an opportunity of comparing the methods there learned with those of his brethren who had been trained in France and Germany. In Continental practice, the examination of witnesses is in theory conducted by or through the judge, by repetition of questions, and in practice cross-examination is so casual or so feeble as to be a negligible quantity. The Common Law Practice Commissioners of 1853 — a body including the eminent names of Jervis, Cockburn, Martin, Bramwell, Willes — declared "the circumstances which give to the system of English procedure its peculiar and characteristic merits" to be 'viva voce' interrogation, cross-examination, publicity, examination in the presence of the tribunal."

[3] See ante, §§ 782, 990–996, 1005–1006, 1260, post, § 1368, for examples.

[4] For example, in some of the trials set out in the Appendix to Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, vol. I.

Conversely, in the Dreyfus trial (1899), the exposure of the conspirators' particular frauds was due almost entirely to M. Labori's cross-examination.

[5] 1827, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. III, c. 16 (Bowring's ed. vol. VI, p. 491); 1837, Story, J., in Smith v. Burnham, 2 Sumn. 612, 623; 1877, Langdell, Equity Pleading, § 56 ("It is not surprising therefore that the mode of taking testimony in equity fell into disrepute and finally broke down"); 1901, Mr. Augustine Birrell, A Century of Law Reform, p. 189; Mr. W. Blake Odgers, ib. 222 ("Cross-examination under such conditions became a farce"); and the citations post, § 1885.

Mr. (Assistant District Attorney) Arthur Train points out the analogous failures of cross-examination through an interpreter ("The Prisoner at the Bar", 1906, p. 239); "It is practically impossible to cross-examine through an interpreter, for the whole psychological significance of the answer is destroyed; ample opportunity being given for the witness to collect his wits and carefully to frame his reply."

of cross-examination and its efficacy as a fundamental test of truth have often been the subject of comment and exposition by our judges and jurists:

Ante 1680, Sir Matthew HALE, L. C. J., in his History of the Common Law, c. 12: "The excellency [in English law] of this open course of evidence to the jury in presence of the judge, jury, parties, and council, and even of the adverse witnesses, appears in these particulars: . . . 3dly, That by this course of personal and open examination, there is opportunity for all persons concerned, viz. the judge. or any of the jury, or parties, or their council attornies, to propound occasional questions, which beats and boults out the truth much better than when the witness only delivers a formal series of his knowledge without being interrogated."

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 198: "Whoever has had an opportunity of attending courts of judicature and also of seeing the private examinations which are taken upon many of the occasions above alluded to, must be convinced of the great danger of suffering any public or private interests to be affected by such examinations. Wherever the narration of a witness may be the subject of objection on account of his veracity, the failure which justice must experience from the want of an opportunity of trying the fact by a minute examination of circumstances open to contradiction, by fixing the witness to time and place and all other topics not comprised in a general sweeping account, will be manifest to the most cursory observers. . . . But even when all suspicion of veracity is supposed to be out of the question, how very unsatisfactory is the 'ex parte' account of a witness taken under circumstances in which the adverse had not a fair opportunity of cross-examination. . . . The decision of the event by the materiality of facts disclosed on cross-examination is a matter of perpetual occurrence. . . . The experience of every lawyer must furnish many instances of a set of cut-and-dried depositions being unable to stand the test of an open cross-examination."

1811, BAYLEY, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 405: "Whoever has attended to the examination, the cross-examination, and the re-examination of witnesses, and has observed what a very different shape their story appears to take in each of these stages, will at once see how extremely dangerous it is to act on the 'ex parte' statement of any witness and still more of a witness brought forward under the influence of a party interested. In this case A., whose legitimacy is supposed to be in issue, has put to J. S. every question he thought fit, and has therefore obtained from him probably not the whole that J. S. knows upon the subject, but all that will benefit A.; while B., against whom this deposition is to be read, has had no opportunity of proposing a single question to J. S., either to put his veracity to the test, or to bring out any other matter within the knowledge of J. S. which would make in his favor. . . . There may be various other considerations in point of interest to influence the father, which if exhibited by cross-examination might in a great degree impeach, if not completely destroy, the effect of the evidence he has given. So it might turn out on cross-examination that he had made other contrary declarations, perhaps equally solemn as those as to which he has been asked, and that his conduct . . . had been such as to throw an entire discredit on his present asseverations."

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence I, 96, 129: "The power given to the party against whom evidence is offered of cross-examining the witness upon whose authority the evidence depends constitutes a strong test of both the ability and the willingness of the witness to declare the truth. By this means the opportunity which the witness had of ascertaining the fact to which he testifies, his ability to acquire the requisite knowledge, his powers of memory, his situation with respect to the parties, his motives, are all severally scrutinized and examined. Under such circumstances it must be very difficult for a witness to interweave a false account so nicely with the truth as to make it consist and agree with all the other circumstances of the case. . . . However artful the fabrication of the falsehood may be, it cannot embrace all the circumstances to which the cross-examination may be extended; the fraud is therefore open to detection for want of consistency between that which has been fabricated and that which the witness must either represent according to the truth, for want of previous preparation, or misrepresent according to his own immediate invention. . . . The power and liberty to cross-examine is one of the principal tests which the law has devised for the ascertainment of truth, and is certainly a most efficacious test."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. II, c. IX, and b. III, c. XX: "In the character of a security for the correctness and completeness of testimony, so obvious is the utility and importance of the faculty and practice of interrogation that the mention of it in this view might well be deemed superfluous. . . . By interrogations thus pointed, such a security for completeness is afforded as can never be afforded by any general engagement which can be included in the terms of an oath or other formulary. . . . By interrogation, and not without, is the improbity of a deponent driven out of all its holds. . . . The best possible mode of extracting testimony — the mode which a considerate master of a family would employ when sitting in judgment on the conduct of a servant or a child — in a word, the mode by oral interrogation and counter-interrogation, is a production of English growth. Among those who in its native country are so cordial in their admiration of this mode of trial [by jury], there are not twenty perhaps who at this moment are aware that, in contradiction to Roman jurisprudence, the mode of extracting evidence on this occasion is as peculiar to English procedure as the constitution of the court. The peculiarity of the practice called in England cross-examination, the complete absence of it in every system of procedure grounded upon the Roman (with the single exception of the partial and narrow use made of it in the case of confrontation), is a fact unnoticed till now in any book, but which will be as conclusively as concisely ascertained at any time by the impossibility of finding a word to render it by in any other language. . . . No political institution was ever kept more completely hidden from general observation. All mouths are open in praise of trial by jury; and this is the mode of extraction employed on a trial by jury. It has been observed that somehow or other the ends of justice were more effectually accomplished in that sort of court of which the tribunal called a jury was one feature, and the use of this mode of extracting evidence another; but to which of them the effect was principally to be ascribed is a question that seems never to have presented itself. The feature which consists in the composition of the court seems to have engrossed all the praise of it. 'Trial by jury! Ever blessed and sacred trial by jury! Juries for ever!' is the cry; not 'Trial by oral and cross-examined evidence!' It is, however, to this comparatively neglected feature that that most popular of all judicial institutions would be found to be indebted for the least questionable and most extensively efficient, if not the most important of its real merits."

1806, Livingston, Sen., in Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 John. 35 (rejecting a testator's hearsay declarations): "Besides the danger of tampering with a person who may be known to have made a will, . . . the right of cross-examining is invaluable and not to be broken in upon. How often is testimony which, when first delivered, appears conclusive and irrefragable, entirely frittered away by this process, — so much so, that a witness well sifted not unfrequently proves more against than in favor of the party that produces him. If one eye-witness be worth more than ten hearsay witnesses, a still higher value must be set on proofs made in presence of both parties, compared with 'ex parte' declarations. In one way, the whole truth comes out; in the other, no more than it may suit the witness or his friends to have disclosed. The not being under oath, although a serious objection, is not with me the greatest, because, admitting everything said to be true, so long as it is in the absence of one and at the solicitation of the other party, it should go for nothing. In what way the will was extorted, what menaces were used, why he was afraid of being murdered, . . . with many other inquiries which a public examination might have suggested, would have afforded the jury a much fairer means of arriving at the truth."

1844, Richardson, J., in State v. Campbell, 1 Rich. L. 126: "The defendant's cross-examination expresses well the searching process and practical test furnished and intended by this rule of law. . . . Experience has proved that it is, of all others, the most effective, the most satisfactory, and the most indispensable test of the evidence narrated on the witness' stand. . . . I know of no disagreement, among the expounders of evidence, upon the importance of cross-examination."

1846, NISBET, J., in McCleskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 555: "I have been thus particular in planting the power of cross-examination upon a foundation laid in authority, because of the sacred character of that right. The power of cross-examination is the most efficacious test which the law has devised for the discovery of truth. Without it, 'viva voce' examinations, and more particularly examinations by commission, would be very unsafe; the ingenious witness, or still more ingenious examiner-in-chief, might easily evade the truth and at the same time avoid the pains and penalties of perjury. The right to be confronted with the witness, and to sift the truth out of the mingled mass of ignorance, prejudice, passion, and interest, in which it is very often hid, is among the very strongest bulwarks of justice."

1881, RUFFIN, J., in State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 764: "All trials proceed upon the idea that some confidence is due to human testimony, and that this confidence grows and becomes more steadfast in proportion as the witness has been subjected to a close and searching cross-examination; and this because it is supposed that such an examination will expose any fallacy that may exist in the statement of the witness, or any bias that might operate to make him conceal the truth; and trials are appreciated in proportion as they furnish the opportunities for such critical examinations."

§ 1368. Theory and Art of Cross-examination. That the process of cross-examination is thus invaluable, the lawyer well knows. But why is it invaluable? Just what does it do, and how? What is the theory of its efficiency?

Upon this we commonly reflect but little. Nevertheless, conscious of its power, we must also be conscious of the reasons for its power, if it is to be used intelligently and effectively. Those reasons can best be seen by contrasting cross-examination, as a stage or mode of presenting evidence, with the two other and alternative modes which co-exist with it. Cross-examination by an opponent is to be contrasted, on the one hand, with proof by direct examination of the same witness by the proponent, and on the other hand, with proof by other witnesses called by the opponent. What will cross-examination succeed in doing, which either of these modes might fail to do?

I. The Theory of Cross-examination. 1. Proof by direct examination of the same witness, contrasted. The fundamental feature is that a witness, on his direct examination, discloses but a part of the necessary facts. That which remains suppressed or undeveloped may be of two sorts, (a) the remaining and qualifying circumstances of the subject of testimony, as known to the witness, and (b) the facts which diminish and impeach the personal trustworthiness of the witness.

(a) The remaining and qualifying circumstances of the subject of testimony will probably remain suppressed or undisclosed, not merely because the witness frequently is a partisan, but also and chiefly because his testimony is commonly given only by way of answers to specific interrogatories (ante, §§ 768, 785), and the counsel producing him will usually ask for nothing but the facts favorable to his party. If nothing more were done to unveil all the facts known to this witness, his testimony (for all that we could surmise) might present half-truths only. Some one must probe for the possible (and usual) remainder. The best person to do this is the one most vitally interested, namely, the opponent.[1] Cross-examination, then, i.e. further examination by the opponent, has for its first utility the extraction of the remaining qualifying circumstances, if any, known to the witness, but hitherto undisclosed by him.[2]

(b) The facts which diminish and impeach the personal trustworthiness or credit of the witness will also, in every likelihood, have remained undisclosed on the direct examination. These it is the further function of the opponent's examination to extract. Some of them, no doubt, could be as well or sometimes better proved by other witnesses.[3] But many of them can be obtained only from the witness himself, — particularly those which concern his personal conduct and his sources of knowledge for the case in hand. To this extent, again, cross-examination is vital, i.e. it does what must be done and what nothing else can do.[4]

2. Proof by other witnesses called by the opponent, contrasted. But so far as the rules of law and the circumstances of the case would permit the same facts, obtainable on cross-examination, to be equally proved by other witnesses cognizant of them, why not use the latter mode? The advantages secured by cross-examination are here mainly dramatic; but they are only less important (in the long run) than the foregoing, and they may be (in individual cases) even more emphatic:

(a) The first is that the cross-examination immediately succeeds in time the direct examination. In this way the modification or the discredit produced by the facts extracted is more readily perceived by the tribunal. No interval of time elapses, to diminish or to conceal their force. Proving the same facts by new witnesses, after others of the proponent have intervened, might lose this benefit, and the counsel's argument at the close might not be able to replace it.

§ 1368. [1] It is at this point that the Continental system breaks down, for the cross-interrogation is there chiefly by the judge, who has neither the strong interest nor the full knowledge that are required.

The same Continental theory obtains in the modern procedure of the Catholic Church: Codex Juris Canonici Pii X, 1917, Can. 1772 ("Testes seorsim singuli examinandi sunt. Prudenti tamen judicis arbitrio relinquitur post edita testimonia testes inter se aut cum parte conferre, seu, vulgo, 'confrontare' . . ."); Can. 1773, § 2 ("In examine interrogationes non ab alio quam a judice, vel ab eo qui judicis locum tenet, testibus deferendæ sunt. Quapropter si partes, vel promotor justitiæ, vel defensor vinculi, examini intersint et novas interrogationes testi faciendas habeant, has non testi, sed judici vel eius locum tenenti proponere debent, ut ipse eas deferat").

Some valuable comments on French procedure are given in Professor James W. Garner's "Criminal Procedure in France" (Yale Law J., 1916, XXV, 255).

[2] Examples are given, infra, par. II.

[3] At this point the contrast infra, par. 2, becomes important.

[4] The foregoing two features have been analyzed and emphasized in the following work: 1885, Mr. J. C. Reed, Conduct of a Lawsuit, 2d ed., 280 ("There are at bottom but two kinds of cross-examination, — the one intended to elicit friendly evidence. . . . to make the witness give a complete narrative, if what has been kept back is favorable to your side, . . . and the other, to show the unreliability of the witness"; in the ensuing pages of the above work, this judicious and admirable author develops in detail these two aspects, from the point of view of the tactical art).

The underlying principle of this was eloquently stated by Mr. Evarts, in his epigram "Truth, if truth, will match all round, with material facts, with moral qualities", in the notable passage on the function of cross-examination, beginning "Truth comports with every fact" (Tilton v. Beecher, Official Report, III, 674).

(b) But, chiefly, the advantage is that the cross-examined witness supplies his own refutation. If qualifying or discrediting answers are extracted from him, they are the more readily believed. No other witness' credit intervenes to add a contingency of mistake. If we believed the answers on the direct examination, we must also believe the answers on cross-examination. Moreover, the dramatic contrast of the former and the latter may multiply and even exaggerate the concrete probative effect of the facts extracted. The difference between getting the same fact from other witnesses and from cross-examination is the difference between slow-burning sulphurous gunpowder and quick-flashing dynamite; each does its appointed work, but the one bursts along the weakest line only, the other rends in all directions.[5]

Cross-examination, then, will do things that cannot be done by questioning other witnesses.

What are the lessons to be drawn from this, the nature of cross-examination and its workings, to the technical use of it? The detailed rules and hints of experience for the art of successful cross-examination are without the present purview; for they involve also many considerations of human character rather than of rules of law.[6] But at least the conclusions that depend upon the evidential theory of cross-examination may be noticed:

II. The Art of Cross-examination. Since the direct examination may not have disclosed all the remaining and qualifying circumstances of the issues, as known to the witness, and may also have left unrevealed the deficiencies of his knowledge, the suspicions of his motives, and other elements of discredit (supra, par. 1, a and b), it remains for the cross-examiner to evoke these. But what is he about to evoke? What will be the complexion of these facts when extracted? They may be what the cross-examiner hopes. And yet they may not be. In the long run, there will be a large proportion of such facts. But for a given witness it is often otherwise. The cross-examiner may already know what is there waiting for disclosure. But if he does not, he is faced by a contingency. He may extract the most confirming circumstances for the proponent's own case, which have somehow been left unmentioned. He may demonstrate that the credit of the witness is greater, not less, than was supposed. The great axiom, then, of the art of cross-examination, as dependent on the theory, is that it is a contingency whether the facts that will actually be extracted will be favorable or unfavorable to the cross-examiner's purposes. It is here that the art (that is, the technical skill) of cross-examination enters. On this hang all the lesser rules of the art. Hence it is that it must call to its aid so many other elements than mere knowledge of law. Experience of human nature, judgment of chances, knowledge of the case, tact of manner, — all these things, and more, have to do with the art. Yet the theory of the process underlies and influences at every point. To cross-examine, or not to cross-examine, — that is the fundamental question, which springs from the essential nature of the process and arises anew for every part of every witness' testimony. The greatest cross-examiners have always stated this as the ultimate problem.

[5] The quotations from Pigott's cross-examination and Judge Daly's anecdote, infra, illustrate this principle.

[6] For a collection of references to writers on the art of cross-examination, see ante, § 768.

III. Illustrations of the theory and the art. The theory and the art of cross-examination, as thus outlined, are amply illustrated in the annals of recorded trials. From these, a few examples, of manageable compass, must here suffice. With reference to the foregoing analysis (par. 1, a and b, supra), the examples may be grouped under four heads:[7]

1, a. Examples of the utility of a cross-examination, in bringing out desirable facts of the case, modifying the direct examination or otherwise adding to the cross-examiner's own case:

1856, Mr. David Paul Brown, in "The Forum", II, 456 (this celebrated Pennsylvanian advocate is describing a case of alleged infanticide by poison, administered by its mother, whose seducer had deserted her): "It was shown that a day or two before the death of her infant, the mother had sent for half-an-ounce of arsenic to a grocer's. That after the death the arsenic was taken to the grocer's, and was weighed, and had lost twenty-four grains in its weight. This circumstance, together with the opinion of the chemist, presented a strong case. Neither was sufficient in itself, but together they were dangerous. Of course, the cross-examination as to the weight was very rigid and severe. Upon this particular point it ran thus: 'When the arsenic was purchased, how did you weigh it?' 'I weighed it by shot.' 'How many shot?' 'Six.' 'Of what description?' 'No. 8.' 'When it was returned, did you weigh it in the same scales?' 'Yes.' 'Did you weigh it with the same shot?' 'I weighed it with shot of the same number — for I had no other number.' 'How much less did it weigh?' 'Twenty-four grains less.' It was plain that this testimony bore hard upon the prisoner — but at this stage of the case the Court adjourned. Immediately my colleague (Mr. Boyd) and myself visited the stores of all the grocers, and took from various uncut bags of No. 8, the requisite number of shot, subjected them to weight in the most accurate scales, and found that the same number of these different parcels of shot varied more in weight than the difference referred to as detected in the arsenic at the time of its return. The shot — the grocers — the apothecary — the scales — were all brought before the Court. They clearly established the facts stated, and enabled us fairly to contend that there had been no portion of the arsenic used, — which argument, aided by the excellent character of the prisoner, proved entirely successful, and after a painful and prolonged trial, she was acquitted; so that her life may be said to have been saved by a shot."

1885, Mr. John C. Reed, Conduct of a Lawsuit, 400: "When your evidence is but slight and that of the other side is very strong, you may be reckless in spurring his witnesses to make a complete statement. Your case is so bad that any change in it may be for the better. We add an entertaining and apt illustration. Some time ago the writer while waiting in court watched the trial of a case where the plaintiff sought to recover damages for a breach of warranty. The defendant had sold him a horse with an express warranty that he was sound and kind and free from all 'outs.' The next day the plaintiff noticed that a shoe was loose, and he undertook to drive him to a blacksmith's shop to have him shod, when the horse exhibited such violent reluctance that he was obliged to abandon the attempt. Repeated efforts made it evident that he never would be shod willingly, and therefore he was obliged to sell him. The defendant called two witnesses. The first, an honest, clean-looking man, testified that he was a blacksmith, that he knew the horse in question perfectly well, and he had shod him about the time referred to in the plaintiff's testimony. 'Did you have any difficulty in shoeing him?' asked the defendant's counsel. 'Not the least. He stood perfectly quiet. Never had a horse stand quieter.' The other, a venerable-looking man, with a clear, blue eye, testified that he had owned the horse and that he was perfectly kind. 'Did you ever have any trouble about getting him into a blacksmith's shop?' 'Well, sir, I don't remember that I ever had occasion to carry him to a blacksmith's shop while I owned him.' The plaintiff's counsel evidently thought that cross-examination would only develop this unpleasant testimony more strongly, so he let the witnesses go. The jury found for the defendant. The next morning, as the writer was sitting in court waiting for a verdict, a man behind him, whom he recognized as the blacksmith, leaned forward and said, 'You heard that horse case tried yesterday, didn't you? Well, that fellow who tried the case for the plaintiff didn't know how to cross-examine worth a cent. I told him that the horse stood perfectly quiet while I shod him; and so he did. I didn't tell him that I had to hold him by the nose with a pair of pincers to make him stand. The old man said he never took him to a blacksmith's shop while he had him. No more he did. He had to take him out into an open lot and cast him before he could shoe him.' Of course the plaintiff's counsel should have been more searching in the examination, where he could not possibly have made his own case worse."

[7] Almost all of these, under 1, a and b, infra, serve also to illustrate the contrast noted in par. 2, a and b, supra, and no grouping is necessary. Besides the ensuing examples, others will be found quoted elsewhere under other principles (ante, §§ 782, 990–996, 1005–1006, 1260).

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 15th day, Times' Rep., pt. 3, p. 125; the Irish Land League was charged with complicity in crime and agrarian outrage; its leaders did not deny the fact of outrages, boycotts, and the like, but did deny that the Land League had any share in them, and claimed that sundry local secret societies and individual miscreants were really responsible. James Burke testified; Direct examination: "I am a blacksmith. . . . There was a falling off in my customers. Previously to that, I had received a letter which threatened my life if I shod Bermingham's horses. I gave the letter to the police. I went before the League at Kinvarra." Q. "What for?" A. "I went to look for mercy; I was suffering from boycotting. . . . They told me it was not from there I was boycotted — it was not from the League. Afterwards I subscribed to the League, and paid 1s. Customers returned again and I have had no trouble since." Cross-examination: "When they told me that it was not the League that was boycotting me, I believed them. The shilling I paid was the ordinary subscription." . . . Q. "It was not the League who boycotted you?" A. "No." Q. "Do you know who it was?" A. "Some blackguards, I think." G. "There were no blackguards in the League, I hope?" A. "Not that I know of." Q. "All respectable people?" A. "Yes, I believe so." [8]

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 34th and 43d days, Times' Rep., pt. 10, pp. 110, 113, 123, pt. 11, p. 158; a police-superintendent came to testify that at the meetings of the local Land Leagues speeches were habitually made denouncing certain persons, and that outrages upon them followed shortly, the League thus being charged with direct incitement of outrage; this witness had kept a record of the speeches and the ensuing outrages; "every meeting that occurs in the division is reported to me; . . . my record gives a summary of the language used;" and on cross-examination by Sir C. Russell, who asked him to go through the various instances "exhaustively", the witness was led through a number of cases of the sort he alleged; the connection between speech and outrage being sometimes made out by him; on a subsequent day, he was cross-examined by Mr. Davitt as follows, so as to show the slender basis for the witness' assertion of the criminal influence of the League's speeches. Q. "Your experiences of the League cover the counties of Wexford, Carlow, Kilkenny, Tipperary, Waterford — six counties altogether, I believe?" A. "No, eight counties." Q. "And this experience extends over a period of eight years?" A. "Not of all the counties; in some cases over a lesser period." Q. "About how many branches of the League are there in each of these counties?" A. "I have not the return with me. . . . I should say there are branches of the League in every parish." Q. "Then you would say there would be at least 50 branches in each county?" A. "At least that." Q. "Three hundred branches altogether in six counties?" A. "Yes." Q. "These branches meet weekly, I believe?". . . A. "I should say practically they meet once a fortnight." Q. "That would represent a very large number of meetings of each branch every year; and for the total number of branches quite an extraordinary number of meetings — 6000 during the year; multiply that by eight years, we have 48,000 meetings. Now at each of these meetings, I understand, a chairman presides, and if there is a resolution to be proposed it is spoken to by two speakers. That would be three speeches for each meeting?" A. "I only know the procedure from what I see in the papers." Q. "I believe that is the rule. That would be 144,000 speeches in eight years, delivered in branches of the League in these counties of which you have experience of the League and its working. About how many outrages, roughly speaking, did you particularize to Sir C. Russell yesterday as resulting directly from speeches of the Land League?" A. "I gave instances of about two dozen." Q. "About 24. Dividing 24 into 144,000, that would give a very small number of outrages for eight years, would it not?" A. "Yes."[9]

[8] So also the examination of David Freeley, ib. 28th day, pt. 8, p. 13.

1, a'. Examples of the inutility of a cross-examination, in bringing out undesirable facts of the case, strengthening the direct examination:

1878, Mr. W. N. V. Bay, Bench and Bar of Missouri, 151: "In Parker's reminiscences of Rufus Choate is related a story of the cross-examination of a sailor who had turned State's evidence, and was relating the story of a theft of money from the ship while in a distant port. The witness declared that though he had taken the money, it was the defendant, the great advocate's client, that had instigated the theft. 'What did he say to you?' asked Choate. 'Why, he told us,' replied the witness, 'that there was a man in Boston, named Choate, who would get us off even if they caught us with the money in our boots!' This terrible thrust produced an uproar of laughter in the court-room. Yet it is related that Choate's countenance remained absolutely immovable."[10]

[9] Compare also these: 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 St. Tr. N. S. 1, 252 (cross-examination by Mr. Hatchell); 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., "Official" Report, II, 116 (cross-examination of Mr. R. E. Holmes, as to the Winsted scandal, by Mr. Fullerton); II, 412 (cross-examination of Mr. J. L. Gay, by Mr. Morris).

The following anecdote perhaps equals any instance ever chronicled: "A certain ex-Governor had on one occasion a client who was indicted for maiming, the specific charge being that the defendant had bitten off the ear of the prosecutor. The case came on for trial and the outcome of it was not very promising for the defendant. While the defence was still being adduced, the defendant leaned over and whispered in the ear of his attorney, saying, 'Call Jack Deans; he was there; he saw the whole thing.' Thereupon in a short while Jack Deans was duly called and put upon the witness stand in behalf of the defendant. 'Now, Mr. Deans,' said the ex-Governor, after some preliminary questions, 'you say that you know the defendant and that you were present at the time of the alleged assault by him on the prosecutor. Tell us what you saw of that occurrence.' 'Well, I was coming 'long the road,' said the witness, 'and I seen 'em gitting up out of the dirt; but I didn't see the defendant hit the prosecutor, and I didn't see him kick him, and I didn't see him bite his ear off.' 'You were in plain view of the parties and you say you did not see any of these things?' asked the ex-Governor, with an expanding chest. 'Yes,' said the witness. Then the prosecuting attorney took a hand, and cross-examined. 'Now, Mr. Deans,' said he, 'you have told the Governor all that you did not see of this assault; please tell me what you did see of it.' 'Well,' said the witness, squirming in his chair and hesitating a long time before proceeding, 'it's so; I didn't see the defendant bite off the prosecutor's ear. But jest as I got abreast of him I seen him spit the ear out of his mouth!' That was enough for the prosecution and a great deal more than enough for the ex-Governor" (13 Green Bag 423). The anecdote of the old gentleman's valet, quoted post, § 2094, is also an excellent illustration of the present principle.

[10] This anecdote is related in Brown's Life of Choate, 3d ed. 451, but not so pointedly. Compare the following: 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., "Official" Report, II, 236 (cross-examination of Mr. Oliver Johnson,

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 72d day, Times' Rep., pt. 20, pp. 145, 247; the Irish Land League was charged with collecting funds to be used for supporting crime and outrage and armed rebellion, and Mr. Parnell was under cross-examination as to the purpose for which he collected money during his tour in America; he admitted accepting money from all sources, including those "physical force" adherents, who favored dynamite-violence and the like, but claimed that he received it for the sole purpose of furthering the peaceable and lawful methods of the Land League; Sir Richard Webster, the attorney-general, in cross-examining, brought up the following significant incident, but by pressing it too far gave opportunity for the witness wholly to explain away and nullify its force; Q. "Do you remember the celebrated occasion at Troy, when a gentleman came forward and offered you 'five dollars for bread and twenty dollars for lead'?" A. "Yes." Q. "You did not think it necessary to refuse the twenty dollars for lead?" A. "I was very glad to get the money, but not for lead." Q. "In your presence, then, at Troy, a man offered five dollars for bread and twenty for lead?" A. "That was the expression used." [11] Q. "You understood that to mean that some one in the audience was ready to subscribe five dollars for charity and twenty dollars for fighting purposes?" A. "Not a bit of it. I understood that he was ready to subscribe five dollars to our charitable fund and twenty dollars in support of the Land League movement." Q. "Then did you think it a fair description of your agitation to call it 'lead'?" A. "No, I did not think it was." Q. "Why do you think the gentleman meant the Land League by 'lead'?" A. "Because if he had not he would not have given the money to me." Q. "Do you represent that a public offer of twenty dollars for lead in support of your agitation and an acceptance of the sum on your side would be understood as a repudiation of physical force opinions?" A. "At the beginning of my meetings in America I had declared that I would not receive one cent for arms or for any unconstitutional or illegal movement. . . . Having made that declaration at the outset of my tour, and having said subsequently nothing inconsistent with that declaration, I consider that no man in his senses would have offered me twenty dollars believing that the money would be used for the very purposes which I had repudiated." . . . Q. "Now, do you not know that that speech about lead was repeatedly quoted in Ireland, and that the construction put upon it was that the subscription was for physical force matters?" A. "By your side it was quoted, I know." Q. "What do you mean by my side?" A. "The Tory party." . . . Q. "Did not Boyton, the Land League organizer, quote the speech as meaning what I have indicated?" A. "I do not know that he did." A. "Do you not know that it has been proved already in this case?" A. "I do not. The only use made of the speech in that sense was when Mr. O'Hanlon tried to break up our meeting in the Rotunda. He wrote a letter to a newspaper next day wanting to know what I had done with these twenty dollars." Q. "And suggesting that the money ought to have gone to the physical force party for the purchase of lead?" A. "Yes; he thought that I was misappropriating it." [12]

1916, Messrs. L. Esarey and E. V. Shockley, Courts and Lawyers of Indiana (I, 149): "Another slander case. In one of the oldest communities of the Whitewater valley, society had been thrown into two hostile factions by the slanderous statement of one woman that another had stolen a goose. All the women in the community were in the court house as witnesses, and all the men had come to hear the lawyers and see fair play generally. There were a score of witnesses to prove character, — though nobody's character was ever questioned. There was a like number of witnesses to prove the spoken words, — which nobody denied. The whole question hinged on the ownership of the goose. The plaintiff, repre-by Mr. Fullerton); II, 706 (cross-examination of Mr. James Freelands, by Mr. Fullerton); II, 307 (cross-examination of Mr. Samuel Wilkeson, by Mr. Beach); 1906, Train, "The Prisoner at the Bar", 290 (cross-examination of the old lady).

[11] Here the cross-examiner might well have stopped.

[12] It is just to add that on the next day the cross-examiner returned to the subject with success.

sented by Governor David Wallace, Senator James Noble and General McKinney, proved that she owned and always had owned the goose in question from the time it bursted its shell. The defendant, represented by William R. Morris and Senator O. H. Smith, proved by an equal number of witnesses that she had raised and always owned the said goose. She had proved that as a young gosling it had a peculiar habit of wanting to play in the water. The case seemed 'on the ridge.' After noon the plaintiffs asked leave to introduce one more witness. She was a dignified old lady of seventy years. She testified that for sixty years she had been intimately acquainted with geese; knew the one in question well, and knew it belonged to the plaintiff. 'Take the witness,' said Mr. Wallace. Smith was suspicious and advised that no cross-questions be asked. He was overruled, however, and Mr. Morris asked: 'How do you know that this particular goose belonged to the plaintiff?' 'Because she was white and paced. I owned her greatgrandmother, and she paced, and so did all of that breed.' The answer was conclusive and determined the suit, in spite of a two-days' argument. Nor did it occur to the defendant or her lawyers that all geese paced! The verdict followed of one dollar and costs. But the social factions were not healed."

1, b. Examples of the utility of a cross-examination, in bringing out, from the witness himself, facts to lessen his credit:

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 78th day, Times' Rep., pt. 21, pp. 225, 230, 231; the Land League having been charged with terrorizing and intimidation of the people at large, a Catholic priest who was president of one of the branches was examined for the defence as to the methods of the League; Direct examination: Q. "Was any kind of pressure of intimidation exercised to your knowledge to make people join the League?" A. "No; things were done in a very regular way. A notice was posted up asking the people to come and join the League. Those who wished to do so then came and paid their subscriptions. There was no house-to-house-visit, there was no pressure whatever; it was perfectly free." . . . Cross-examined by Mr. Murphy. Q. "Nothing particular was done, I understand you to say, to induce people to join the Land League?" A. "Nothing, in my district." Q. "Are you quite certain?" A. "Quite certain." . . . Q. "I will call your attention to some of your own speeches. On the 12th of December, 1880, speaking at Craughwell, you say, 'I tell you that the wretch who has not joined the League, that that man deserves to go down to the cold, dead damnation of disgrace.' That is pretty strong?" A. "Yes." Q. "Did you use those words?" A. "It is possible." Q. "Did you use them?" A. "I may have." Q. "Have you any doubt about it?" A. "I never saw it in print." Q. "Did you use that language?" A. "Very likely I did." Q. "Do you regard that as an invitation to join the League voluntarily or involuntarily?" A. "Well, it does not involve any intimidation." . . . Q. "'To go down to the cold, dead damnation of disgrace'?" A. "Well, it is rather a strong expression, I admit." Q. "Did you believe that that was the proper fate for anyone who did not join the League?" A. "Well, I suppose I used it in order to induce them to join." Q. "Did you use the expression in order to frighten the people?" A. "I suppose it was in order to induce them to join the League."

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceeding, 55th day, Times' Rep., pt. 14, p. 252; certain letters, purporting to be Mr. Parnell's, and approving the Phœnix Park assassinations, had been sold to the London "Times" by one Richard Pigott, an Irish editor and informer; these letters had been in fact fabricated by Pigott himself, but until he came under Sir Charles Russell's cross-examination the case for the letter's genuineness was strong; the word "hesitency" occurred in one of the letters and this with other words had been written down by Pigott at the opening of his cross-examination; Q. "Yesterday you were good enough to write down certain words on a piece of paper, and among them was the word 'hesitancy.' Is that a word you are accustomed to use?" A. "I have used it." Q. "Did you notice that you spelt it as it is not ordinarily spelt?"

A. "Yes, I fancy I made a mistake in the spelling." Q. "What was it?" A. "I think it was an 'a' instead of an 'e', or 'vice versa'; I am not sure which." Q. "You cannot say what was the mistake, but you have a general consciousness that there was something wrong?" A. "Yes." Q. "I will tell you what was wrong according to the received spelling. You spelt it with an 'e' instead of an 'a.' You spelt it thus — 'hesitency.' That is not the received way of spelling it?" A. "I believe not." Q. "Have you noticed the fact that the writer of the body of the letter of the 9th of January, 1882 — the alleged forged letter — spells it in the same way?" A. "I heard that remark made long since, and my explanation of my misspelling is that having that in my mind I got into the habit of spelling it wrong." Sir C. Russell. "Did your Lordships catch that last answer?" The President. "Oh, yes." Q. "You say that your attention was called to the fact a long time ago that in the alleged forged letter 'hesitancy' was misspelt, and you fancy that, your attention having been called to the misspelling, you so got into the habit of spelling it in that way?" A. "I suppose so; I heard so much discussion about it. I never met anybody who spelt every word correctly, scarcely. (Laughter.)" Q. "It had got into your brain?" A. "Yes, somehow or other." Q. "Who called your attention to it?" A. "Several people; it was a matter of general remark." Q. "Do you think that but for the fact of your attention being drawn to the way in which it had been spelt you would probably have spelt it rightly?" A. "Yes." Q. "You know that the [above] letter purports to be dated the 9th of January, 1882; you have already told me that this letter (handing [another] letter to witness) is yours?" A. "Yes, that is right; that is my letter." Q. "But you did not become possessed of this valuable [Parnell] letter, dated January 9, 1882, until the summer of 1886; and this letter [of yours] is prior to that. The wrong spelling had not got into your head then?" A. "No. I say that spelling is not my strong point." Q. "Did you notice that in this letter you spell 'hesitency' in the same way?" A. "No, I did not." . . . Q. "How do you account for that? Your brain was not injuriously affected at that time?" A. "I cannot account for it." Q. "At all events you cannot account for it by that disturbance of your brain?" A. "No." [13]

1, b'. Examples of the inutility of a cross-examination, in bringing out facts which strengthen the witness' credit, or answers which otherwise give him a personal victory:

1840, Mr. J. C. Jeaffreson, Law and Lawyers, I, 180: "Jeffreys, the afterwards notorious chief justice and chancellor, was retained in a trial in the course of which he had to cross-examine a sturdy countryman clad in the habiliments of the laborer. Finding the evidence of this witness telling against his client, Jeffreys determined to disconcert him. So he exclaimed in his own bluff manner: 'You fellow in the leathern doublet, what have you been paid for swearing?' The man looked steadily at him, and replied: 'Truly, sir, if you have no more for lying than I have for swearing, you might wear a leathern doublet as well as I.'" [14]

[13] The very effective cross-examination of the medical man, reported by Judge Daley, and the memorable cross-examination of Majocchi, in Queen Caroline's trial (quoted ante, § 995), belong here also.

[14] In this same entertaining volume, other like anecdotes may be found at the same page. Of the same order is the following: "Ex-Governor Shaw, of Iowa, lately chosen to be Secretary Gage's successor at the head of the Treasury Department, tells how he once heard a small boy get the better of a lawyer who was cross-examining him. Part of the questioning and the replies thereto were as follows: 'Have you any occupation?' 'No.' 'Don't you do any work of any kind?' 'No.' 'Just loaf around home?' 'That's about all.' 'What does your father do?' 'Nothin' much.' 'Does n't he do anything to support the family?' 'He does odd jobs once in a while when he can get them.' 'As a matter of fact, is n't your father a worthless fellow and a loafer?' 'I don't know, sir; you 'd better ask him. He 's sittin' over there on the jury.'" (Brooklyn Eagle, 1903.)

Mr. Train has collected ("The Prisoner at the Bar", 1906, pp. 286–290) some useful examples on this point.

1869, Saurin v. Starr, as reported in O'Brien's Life of Lord Russell, 86 (a Sister of Mercy, being expelled for transgression of the rules of the convent, and suing for libel, her counsel was Mr., afterwards L. C. J., Coleridge): "Coleridge's case was that the breaches of discipline were trivial, contemptible. He pressed Mrs. Kennedy [the matron] on the point, asking what had Miss Saurin done. Mrs. Kennedy said, as an example, that she had eaten strawberries. 'Eaten strawberries!' exclaimed Coleridge, 'what harm was there in that?' 'It was forbidden, sir,' said Mrs. Kennedy, — a very proper answer. 'But, Mrs. Kennedy,' retorted Coleridge, 'what trouble was likely to come from eating strawberries?' 'Well, sir,' replied Mrs. Kennedy, 'you might ask what trouble was likely to come from eating apples; yet we know that trouble did come from it.' The answer floored Coleridge."

1878, Mr. W. V. N. Bay, Bench and Bar of Missouri, 162: "The following story is told by Edwards: On a trial at Auburn, New York, the counsel for the People, after severely cross-examining a witness, suddenly put on a look of severity, and said: 'Mr. Witness, has not an effort been made to induce you to tell a different story?' 'A different story from what I have told?' 'That is what I mean.' 'Yes, sir; several persons have tried to get me to tell a different story from what I have told; but they could n't.' 'Now, sir, upon your oath, I wish to know who those persons are.' 'Well, I guess you 've tried as hard as any of 'em.'"

Anon., Kentucky Law Journal, IV, 37: "A railroad lawyer who has had much to do with human nature says: 'Never cross-question an Irishman from the old sod.' And he gave an illustration from his own experience:

'A section hand had been killed by an express train, and his widow was suing for damages. The main witness swore positively that the locomotive whistle had not sounded until after the whole train had passed over his departed friend. "See here, McGinnis," said I, "you admit that the whistle blew?" — "Yis, sor, it blew, sor." — "Now, if that whistle sounded in time to give Michael warning, the fact would be in favor of the company, would n't it?" — "Yis, sor, and Mike would be testifying here this day." The jury giggled. — "Very well. Now, what earthly purpose could there be for the engineer to blow his whistle after Mike had been struck?" — "I preshume that the whistle wos for the next man on the track, sor." — I quit, and the widow got all she asked.'"

§ 1369. Other Rules concerning Cross-examination discriminated. We are here concerned solely with the opponent's right to have cross-examination, and with the rule which therefore excludes testimonial statements not subjected to cross-examination. Accordingly the inquiry is whether for a given statement it has satisfied this rule or not; and for this purpose we are to pass in review the various sorts of testimonial statements as to which such a question can be raised.

From this inquiry, then, four others must be distinguished, with which cross-examination in other aspects is concerned. (1) There is sometimes a special liberality as to the kind of fact that may be asked for on cross-examination. This involves the principles applicable to the admissibility of different sorts of evidence to impeach and discredit a witness. The real problem there involved concerns the mode of proving certain facts or the kind of facts admissible. Thus, certain facts are allowed to be proved by cross-examination only, not by other witnesses; moreover, even upon cross-examination certain kinds of facts are not allowed to be brought out. This subject is elsewhere dealt with (ante, §§ 875–1144, particularly §§ 878, 990–996).

(2) In the order of presenting evidence, certain stages are to be observed; the direct examination comes first, then cross-examination, and so on.

Whether a certain fact may be asked about on cross-examination may involve these rules as to the order of presenting evidence (post, §§ 1866–1900, particularly § 1885). With these rules we are here not concerned.

(3) Cross-examination is chiefly used to discredit the witness thus examined, and there is a rule which forbids the discrediting of one's own witness. Accordingly, the inquiry often arises whether a witness is one's own or the opponent's, — for example, whether one may cross-examine (i.e. discredit) a witness called by the opponent but not examined, or called only to bring documents; in cases of that sort, the rule against impeaching one's own witness is involved (ante, §§ 909–918). With that rule we are here not concerned.

(4) Cross-examination, as well as direct examination, involves certain rules as to the manner of interrogation,— whether a question may be leading, whether it may be repeated, and the like. These principles are elsewhere dealt with, under Testimonial Narration (ante, §§ 768–788).

§ 1370. Cross-examined Statements not an Exception to the Hearsay Rule. The Hearsay rule excludes testimonial statements not subjected to cross-examination (ante, § 1362). When, therefore, a statement has already been subjected to cross-examination and is hence admitted — as in the case of a deposition or testimony at a former trial,— it comes in because the rule is satisfied, not because an exception to the rule is allowed. The statement may have been made before the present trial, but if it has been already subjected to proper cross-examination, it has satisfied the rule and needs no exception in its favor. This is worth clear appreciation, because it involves the whole theory of the rule:

> 1834, TINDAL, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 3 A. & E. 3, 22 (declaring that this testimony of a deceased subscribing witness at a former trial is equivalent to calling him now and thus obviates the necessity of calling another and living subscribing witness): "[The examination of B. at the former trial] is evidence as direct to the point in issue, and as precise in its nature and quality, as that of P. when called to the stand. . . . The evidence resulting from the written examination of the deceased witness, in the former suit between the same parties, is of as high a nature, and as direct and immediate, as the 'viva voce' examination of one of the witnesses remaining alive and actually examined in the cause."
>
> 1892, MITCHELL, J., in Minneapolis Mill Co. v. R. Co., 51 Minn. 304, 315, 53 N. W. 639: "The admission of the testimony of a witness on a former trial is frequently inaccurately spoken of as an exception to the rule against the admission of hearsay evidence. The chief objections to hearsay evidence are the want of the sanction of an oath and of any opportunity to cross-examine; neither of which applies to testimony given on a former trial."

§ 1371. Opportunity of Cross-examination, as equivalent to Actual Cross-examination. The doctrine requiring a testing of testimonial statements by cross-examination has always been understood as requiring, not necessarily an actual cross-examination, but merely an opportunity to exercise the right to cross-examine if desired. The reason is that, wherever the opponent has declined to avail himself of the offered opportunity, it must be supposed to have been because he believed that the testimony could not or need not be disputed at all or be shaken by cross-examination. In having the opportunity and still declining, he has had all the benefit that could be expected from the cross-examination of that witness. This doctrine is perfectly settled:[1]

1813, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Cazenove v. Vaughan, 1 M. & S. 6: "The rule of the common law is that no evidence shall be admitted but what is or might be under the examination of both parties. But if the adverse party has had liberty to cross-examine and has not chosen to exercise it, the case is then the same in effect as if he had cross-examined. Here then the question is whether the defendant had an opportunity of cross-examining."

1883, RAPALLO, J., in Bradley v. Myrick, 91 N. Y. 296: "The witness . . . was subject to cross-examination by the defendant's attorney, if he chose to exercise that right, or in his absence by the Court. . . . On every trial the opposing party has the power to cross-examine. If he does not choose to appear and exercise this power the consequences should fall on him and not on his adversary."

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 97: "To satisfy this principle, it is not necessary that the party on whose authority the statement rests should be present at the time when his evidence is used, in order that he may then be cross-examined; it is sufficient if the party against whom it was offered has cross-examined or has had the opportunity of doing so, being legally called upon so to do when the statement was made. . . . If the party might have had the benefit of a cross-examination in the course of a judicial proceeding, it is the same thing as if he had actually availed himself of the opportunity."

But, though this doctrine is a practically inevitable corollary of the general principle, it is worth while to note the possible consequences of its looseness, as warnings against an inconsistent strictness shown in other applications of the general principle. For, on the one hand, testimony already subjected to a cross-examination, however thorough, by a former party not in privity with the present opponent is excluded (post, § 1388); while, by the present doctrine, testimony never actually tested at all, in consequence of the careless-§ 1371. [1] England: 1693, Howard v. Tremaine, 1 Salk. 278 (depositions taken 'in perpetuam'; the opponent to the bill had refused in contempt to answer; depositions admitted); United States: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1846 ("A witness . . . can be heard only in the presence of and subject to the examination of all the parties, if they choose to attend and examine"); and the codes following the California Code; D. C. 1907, Munster v. Ashworth, 29 D. C. App. 84 (counsel left the place, stating that he did not care to cross-examine; admitted); Ky. 1900, Small v. Reeves, — Ky. —, 59 S. W. 515 (deposition voluntarily not cross-examined; motion to allow cross-examination on the trial, held properly refused in discretion); La. 1904, Union I. & F. Co. v. Soonenfield, 113 La. 436, 37 So. 20; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 35, Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 36 (the Court may exclude a deposition if the "adverse party failed without fault to attend the taking thereof"); P. I. 1903, Jové v. Palatine Ins. Co., 5 P. R. 115 (sworn testimony, after citation and non-attendance of opponent, admitted); 1904, Moret, v. Vazquez, 5 P. R. 489, 505 (similar).

The ruling in U. S. v. French, D. C., 117 Fed. 976 (1902), that notice to attend is not sufficient is clearly erroneous. Compare § 1377, post.

The intimation in Twohig v. Leamer, 48 Nebr. 247, 67 N. W. 152 (1896) that it must affirmatively appear, in using testimony at a former trial, that a cross-examination was had, is also erroneous; for if cross-examination is an ordinary part of the proceedings before that kind of tribunal, it must be assumed that an opportunity for it was given, and an opportunity was sufficient.

The ruling in Hosch Lumber Co. v. Weeks, 123 Ga. 336, 51 S. E. 439 (1905), that where the taking party fails to attend but the opponent attends and cross-examines, the latter cannot use his cross-examination but must give notice again and take the deposition again as his own, is both unsound and unjust.

Distinguish the principles of § 912, ante, § 1983, n. 7, post.

Compare the rulings post, § 1378 (notice to attend).

ness, fraud, or incompetence of counsel, or of a privy in interest, is admitted, if merely the opportunity so to test it had existed. On the whole, both err in attempting to create an inflexible rule. No doubt, usually, a mere opportunity to cross-examine can be trusted as a sufficient safeguard; and no doubt, usually, only a privy in interest would apply a sufficient cross-examination. But room should be allowed for the exceptional instances which will certainly occur. The trial Court should have a discretion.

§ 1372. Division of Topics. The subject of present inquiry is: What classes of testimonial statements satisfy the rule requiring an opportunity of cross-examination? The various sorts of statements may be grouped as follows, according to the circumstance in which the rule fails to be satisfied:

1. The kind of tribunal or officer, before whom the statement was made, as not furnishing a sufficient opportunity; 2. Notice to the opponent, as necessary to furnishing a sufficient opportunity; 3. The nature of the cause, as to issues and parties, in which the statement was made, as not furnishing a sufficient opportunity; 4. The course of the examination itself, as furnishing only an incomplete opportunity.

1. Kind of Tribunal or Officer, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination

§ 1373. General Principle; Sundry Tribunals (Commissioners of Land-titles, Pilotage, Bankruptcy, etc.; Arbitrators). In general the principle is clearly accepted that testimony taken before a tribunal or officer not empowered to compel or not in practice employing cross-examination as a part of its procedure is inadmissible; and, conversely, the kind of tribunal is immaterial and the testimony is admissible if in fact cross-examination was practised under its procedure:

1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 241: "From what has been said it is evident that (as there can be no Cross-examination), a voluntary Affidavit is no Evidence between Strangers. . . . So where there cannot be a Cross-examination, as Depositions taken before Commissioners of Bankrupts, they shall not be read in Evidence."

1825, GRAHAM, B., in Attorney-General v. Davison, McCl. & Y. 167: "The barrack commissioners were not required to summon the party for the purpose of examining the witnesses; and I have no doubt that they proceeded to examine the witnesses and to make their report without giving notice to the other side; and consequently, as the party had no opportunity of attending or cross-examining the witness, this cannot be legal evidence." GARROW, B.: "In order to affect any party by oral or written testimony, an opportunity should be allowed to him of checking or correcting it by cross-examination."

1806, THOMPSON, J., in Jackson v. Bailey, 2 Johns, 20: "It is said that this rule ought not to be extended to testimony taken before the Onondaga commissioners [to try land-titles]. . . . Opportunity was given for cross-examining witnesses; and it appears that the title now in question was actually litigated before the commissioners."

1858, EASTMAN, J., in Orr v. Hadley, 36 N. H. 580: "Neither is it necessary that the former testimony should have been given on the trial of a cause in the exact technical shape of an action. It is sufficient if the point was investigated in a judicial proceeding of any kind, wherein the party to be affected by such testimony had the right of cross-examination."

Accordingly, testimony has been received or rejected on this account, i.e. because an opportunity for cross-examination was or was not a part of the procedure, when given before bankruptcy-commissioners,[1] pilot-commissioners,[2] marine hull-inspectors,[3] barrack-commissioners,[4] land-commissioners,[5] county-boards,[6] registers,[7] and arbitrators.[8]

§ 1374. Testimony at Coroner's Inquest. In England, testimony at a coroner's inquest had been frequently admitted before the Hearsay rule was established.[1] During the 1700s, this continued as a traditional exception.[2] The dignity of the office was sometimes put forward as an explaining reason. But the determining circumstance was after all the tradition, as well as the early statutory provision authorizing the reporting of the testimony (though not expressly making it admissible).[3] The anomaly was in effect removed in 1848 by Sir John Jervis' Act,[4] which provided for a cross-examination and expressly made admissible in later proceedings the testimony thus obtained.

In the United States, the question has been re-considered upon principle and apart from the traditional English exception, and the proper conclusion has been reached that the lack of cross-examination as an element in coroner's procedure makes such testimony inadmissible:[5]

§ 1373. [1] Ante 1668, Anon. Rolle's Abr. II, 679, pl. 9; 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203; 1787, Fitch v. Hyde, Kirby 258; 1810, Cox v. Pearce, 7 Johns. N. Y. 298.

So also court commissioners of various sorts: 1906, U. S. v. Greene, 146 Fed. 796, — D. C. — (deceased witness' testimony before a U. S. commissioner on a proceeding for extradition, admitted.)

[2] 1843, Com. v. Ricketson, 7 John. 298.

[3] 1896, Louisville Ins. Co. v. Monarch, 99 Ky. 578, 36 S. W. 563.

[4] 1825, Att'y-Gen'l v. Davison, McCl. & Y. 167, quoted supra; 1802, Davis v. Batty, 1 H. & J. 264, 282, semble.

[5] 1806, Jackson v. Bailey, 2 John. 20, quoted supra; 1797, Montgomery v. Snodgrass, 2 Yeates 230 (deposition before a board of property, excluded; "the witness had been cross-examined", yet the board "are not vested with the powers essentially necessary to such a tribunal" as a court); 1798, DeHaas v. Galbreath, 2 Yeates 315 (deposition before the same board, excluded).

[6] 1899, Dunck v. Milwaukee Co., 103 Wis. 371, 79 N. W. 412.

[7] 1899, Payne v. Long, 121 Ala. 385, 25 So. 780.

[8] 1858, Orr v. Hadley, 36 N. H. 580 (see quotation supra); 1845, Bailey v. Woods, 17 N. H. 372; 1794, White v. Bisbing, 1 Yeates 400; 1824, Forney v. Hallagher, 11 S. & R. 203; 1850, McAdams v. Stilwell, 13 Pa. 90, 96.

It was excluded in Jessup v. Cook (1798), 1 Halst. 438; but here the witness was not shown unavailable, under § 1402, post.

Whether the rules of Evidence, including opportunity to cross-examine, are applicable to such administrative officers, has been considered ante, § 4 a.

§ 1374. [1] 1666, Lord Morly's Case, Kelyng 55; 1692, Harrison's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 852; cited ante, § 1364.

[2] 1754, Robins v. Wolseley, 2 Lee Eccl. 135, 421, 442 (referring to the common law); 1790, R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707.

[3] 1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13; 1555, St. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10; 1816, St. 7 Geo. IV, c. 64. It is not certain whether St. 1 Wm. IV, c. 22 (1830) was to be regarded as applying to coroners; but testimony before the coroner, continued to be admitted: 1840, Sills v. Brown, 9 C. & P. 601, 603.

[4] St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. The English Courts would now exclude testimony not thus taken under cross-examination; 1830, R. v. Wall, Russell on Crimes, b. IV, c. IV, § 3; 1866, R. v. Rigg, 4 F. & F. 1085; 1921, Barnett v. Cohen, 1 K. B. 461 (testimony at coroner's inquest, inadmissible in action for death, except to cross-examine as to contradiction, etc.).

[5] Accord: Ala. 1881, Sylvester v. State, 70 Ala. 17, 24; Colo. 1891, Jackson v. Crilly, 16 Colo. 103, 26 Pac. 331 (death of a passenger; testimony of a deceased witness before the coroner, under cross-examination and in the presence of "the respective counsel", excluded, because it did not appear "in whose behalf, in what capacity, nor for what purpose the respective counsel were present"; unsound); D. C. 1916, Capital Traction Co. v. King, 44 D. C. App. 315 (personal injury; excluded); Ill. 1885, Pittsburgh C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McGrath, 105 Ill. 172, 3 N. E. 439 (depositions excluded); 1904, Knights Templar & M. L. I.

1842, BRONSON, J., in People v. Restell, 2 Hill N. Y. 297: "It is said that depositions taken by the coroner on holding an inquest are evidence, although the defendant was not present when they were taken. This doctrine has been gravely questioned, and I am strongly inclined to the opinion that it cannot be maintained. The great principle that the accuser and the accused must be brought face to face and that the latter shall have the opportunity to cross-examine can never be departed from with safety."

1858, NAPTON, J., in State v. Houser, 26 Mo. 436: "It is true that there may be a few cases in which depositions taken before coroners in England, without any opportunity of cross-examination, have been used against the accused, where the witness subsequently died; but the authority of such cases is questioned, even in that country, by the ablest writers on common law — Starkie, Roscoe, Russell — and it is doubtful whether such testimony would be now received. At all events, such testimony has never been permitted in this country, and in England its admissibility has been altogether placed upon the peculiar dignity and importance attached to the office of coroner; and no such reasons exist here."

Of course, if the coroner's practice does include (as sometimes provided by statute) a right of cross-examination, then testimony there delivered may become admissible afterwards elsewhere.[6]

§ 1375. Testimony before a Committing Magistrate or Justice of the Peace. Similar considerations apply to proceedings before a committing magistrate or a justice of the peace. If there was under the procedure of that official an opportunity of cross-examination, the testimony is admissible; otherwise not. There never has been any doubt on this point since the establishment of the general doctrine (ante, § 1364) in R. v. Paine, in 1696,[1] except in the special case of justices of the peace acting as committing magistrates under the statutes of Philip and Mary (ante, § 1374). The statutory provision for such examination, though not expressly making the testimony admissible, was thought by some during the 1700s[2] to imply a special exception, as Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066 (excluded); 1920, People v. Sorrells, 293 Ill. 591, 127 N. E. 651 (homicide; testimony of deceased witness at the coroner's inquest, excluded); La. 1852, State v. Parker, 7 La. An. 83, semble; N. J. 1915, State v. Murphy, 87 N. J. L. 515, 94 Atl. 610 (testimony given at a coroner's inquest, under cross-examination by counsel for the now accused, undecided; why not have decided it?); Oh. 1883, Insurance Co. v. Schmidt, 40 Oh. St. 112 (testimony excluded); Pa. 1881, McLain v. Com., 99 Pa. 97; 1844, State v. Campbell, 1 Rich. L. 125 (O'Neall, J., diss.); P. R. 1913, Rodriguez v. Porto Rico R. L. & P. Co., 19 P. R. 613; S. Car. 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 225, 227, 7 S. E. 296.

Not decided: 1905, Puls v. Grand Lodge, 13 N. D. 559, 102 N. W. 165.

Contra: 1881, State v. McNeil, 33 La. An. 1333.

[6] Ark. Dig. 1919, § 1583 (testimony before a coroner, admissible "on the trial of any person present at his examination"); Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 1350 (deposition before a coroner, usable "on the trial of any person present at the examination"); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 13642 (workmen's compensation; notice of coroner's inquest upon death of employee to be given to parties, "who shall have the right to cross-examine the witnesses"; and the "proceedings" are "admissible in evidence" by certified copy); St. 1921, Mar. 28, p. 425, § 50 (workmen's compensation claims; employer and claimants shall have the right of cross-examination at coroner's inquest); Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 834 (quoted post, § 1375); 1894, Meyers v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 204, 210, 26 S. W. 196 (before a coroner, the defendant present and privileged to cross-examine; admitted).

§ 1375. [1] 5 Mod. 165; quoted supra, also ante, § 1364.

[2] E.g. in R. v. Eriswell (1790), 3 T. R. 707, per Buller, J. (the examination of a pauper, as to his place of settlement, before two justices of the peace was offered at the Quarter Sessions; the judges of the King's Bench were equally divided, but the opinion of Lord Kenyon subsequently prevailed in R. v. Ferryfrystone, 2 East 54, 1801; Kenyon, L. C. J.: "Examinations upon oath, except in the excepted cases, are of no avail unless they are made in a cause of proceeding depending between the parties to be affected by them and where each has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness").

in the case of coroners' examination. But even this supposed exception was by the 1800s repudiated in England.[3] On principle, as has often been pointed out, the question in all such cases depends simply upon whether there was an opportunity of cross-examination:[4]

1696, R. v. Paine, 5 Mod. 165: "It was the opinion of both Courts [King's Bench and Common Pleas], that the depositions should not be given in evidence, the defendant not being present when they were taken before the mayor and so had lost the benefit of a cross-examination."

1817, RICHARDS, C. B., in R. v. Smith, Holt N. P. 615, "observed that the statute did not mention the prisoner's presence at all. Undoubtedly, however, the decisions established the point that the prisoner ought to be present that he might cross-examine. But here he had the advantage offered him and omitted to use it."

1835, JOHNSON, J., in State v. Hill, 2 Hill S. C. 609: "If the accused is present and has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness, the depositions, according to the rule, are admissible. . . . We know, too, how necessary a cross-examination is to elicit the whole truth from even a willing witness; and to admit such evidence, without the means of applying the ordinary tests, would put in jeopardy the dearest interests of the community."

[3] 1817, R. v. Smith, Holt N. P. 615, quoted post; affirmed in R. v. R. 340 by all the judges; accord, 1817, R. v. Forbes, Holt N. P. 599; 1838, R. v. Arnold, 8 C. & P. 621; 1838, R. v. Errington, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 142, per Patteson, J. (answering the objection that St. 7 Geo. IV, c. 64, s. 2, did not require the accused's presence). The statutes in England now require an opportunity of cross-examination; 1848, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42; 1867, St. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, § 61. In R. v. Beeston (1854), 6 Cox Cr. 430, Jervis, C. J., said: "[The statute of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42] adds a rule which the judges had previously engrafted upon the old statutes of P. & M., that there must be full opportunity of cross-examination"; the statute was applied in: 1886, R. v. Griffiths, 16 Cox Cr. 46; 1916, R. v. Noakes, 1 K. B. 581 (cited post, § 1406);

So also in Canada: Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 90, § 10 (on a trial at the general sessions, a deposition taken before the magistrate at the original hearing may be used if the accused was present "and he, his counsel or solicitor, had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness"); Can. R. S. 1906, Crim. C. § 999 (quoted post, § 1380, note 3); Que. 1854, R. v. Peltier, 4 Low. Can. 22.

[4] Accord: The authorities cited post, § 1398, 1413, also imply this result: Federal: 1851, U. S. v. Macomb, 5 McLean 286 (justice of the peace); Alabama: 1883, Harris v. State, 73 Ala. 497; Arizona: St. 1903, No. 25, Rev. St. 1913, P. C. §§ 753, 881 (preliminary hearing before a magistrate); Arkansas: 1895, McNamara v. State, 60 Ark. 400, 30 S. W. 762; California (see the statutes and cases cited post, § 1413); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3971 (committing magistrate shall examine the witnesses in the accused's presence); Georgia: 1882, Robinson v. State, 68 Ga. 833; 1883, Smith v. State, 72 Ga. 115; 1899, Hardin v. State, 107 Ga. 718, 33 S. E. 700; Kansas: 1880, State v. Wilson, 24 Kans. 189, 194; Kentucky: 1869, O'Brian v. Com., 6 Bush 563, 570; Louisiana: Annot. Rev. St. 1915, § 1439 (record by the recorder of New Orleans, or a justice of the peace, of testimony at fire inquest, taken on notice to the occupant, owner, agent, or custodian of property, admissible); Minnesota: 1895, State v. George, 60 Minn. 503, 63 N. W. 100; New York: N. Y. C. Cr. P. 1881, § 8 (testimony before committing magistrate admissible only if there was cross-examination or the opportunity); North Carolina: 1842, People v. Restell, 2 Hill 300; Con. St. 1919, § 4572 (examinations taken by a committing magistrate, usable only if the accused was present and had an opportunity to hear and cross-examine); 1847, State v. Valentine, 7 Ired. 225, 226; Pennsylvania: 1865, Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. 338 ("notwithstanding the above-named statute [2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10] had been extended to Pennsylvania, it was displaced by our Constitution, and no 'ex parte' testimony could be given against a prisoner in a capital case"); Porto Rico: 1906, People v. Reyes, 10 P. R. 240 (examination before the magistrate, excluded under C. Cr. P. § 11, for lack of defendant's presence); 1908, People v. Hernandez, 13 P. R. 217, 225; 1913, Rodriguez v. Porto Rico R. L. & P. Co., 19 P. R. 613; South Dakota: 1909, State v. Heffernan, 24 S. D. 1, 123 N. W. 78; Texas: 1876, Johnson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 333, 338 (good opinion); Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 834 (depositions before an "examining Court or jury of inquest", admissible if defendant was present and had the privilege of cross-examination); Vermont: 1845, State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 658, 669 (magistrate); Wisconsin: 1897, Pooler v. State, 97 Wis. 627, 73 N. W. 336 (depositions of accomplices excluded, because the defendant was not present at their examination).

In the United States the only instance in which to-day any statutory exception seems to have been made is that of the examination of the complainant in bastardy; but it is not clear that an examination taken in the defendant's absence and without some sort of notice given him (post, §§ 1378, 1382) would be admissible unless expressly so declared by the statute.[4]

§ 1376. Depositions; Effect of Other Principles discriminated. (1) A deposition is not receivable unless taken by an officer or other person authorized by law. It can be conceived that cross-questions put informally and recorded in writing might be as effective as a formal cross-examination. But cross-examination in its proper scope signifies a probing and testing under a power to compel answers; hence, that cross-examination which satisfies the rule must be a cross-examination, if not before a regular judge or magistrate, at least before an officer or other expressly authorized person. As to the kind of officer or other person thus authorized, the question involved is one of the constitution of Courts and their officers.[1] Statutes have provided a variety of ways, more or less formal, in which depositions may be taken.[2] So far as the admissibility of a deposition depends upon its being taken by an authorized person, the question is one of judicial machinery, the organization of Courts, and is beyond the present purview.

(2) By Chancery practice, common-law practice, and statutes, a preliminary order to authorize the taking of a deposition is usually obtainable only upon certain conditions, — the illness or the impending departure of the deponent, and the like. But statutes have often removed these conditions in certain classes of cases. This process of securing in advance the evidential material for a trial is a part of the preliminary procedure of courts, — just as is the process of obtaining discovery from an opponent. These questions of preliminary procedure are without the present purview, which is limited to the admissibility of a deposition already taken.

(3) When a deposition is offered, the principle of Confrontation requires that the witness' personal attendance be shown impracticable before the deposition may be used. The conditions thus required are dealt with under that principle (post, §§ 1401–1418).

(4) The document offered as a deposition is the testimony of the deponent in writing. Testimony by deposition can be only in writing, not oral, and the writing, moreover, must be made and transmitted according to a detailed mode prescribed by statute or by practice. So far as the manner of interro-

[4] Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 3085 (the mother's deposition in a bastardy charge may be taken in the defendant's absence if the constable returns "that he cannot be found"); Ill. St. 1907, Feb. 11, p. 56 (bastardy complaint; the woman shall be examined by the magistrate upon oath, etc., "in the presence of the man alleged to be the father of the child"). Compare the statutes quoted post, § 1417.

§ 1376. [1] For the officers having power to compel answers, see post, § 2195.

[2] The statutes bearing on the subject may be found from the citations collected post, §§ 1380–1383. For the statutes granting discovery from on opponent, see post, §§ 1856, 1859.

Distinguish also the following: 1921, Tootle v. Payne, 82 Okl. 178, 199 Pac. 201 (if a legal cause for using is shown when the deposition is offered, it is not inadmissible because no cause was mentioned in the notice to take).

gation is involved, the principle is that of the Mode of Testimonial Narration, already dealt with (ante, §§ 799–805).[3]

(5) Procedure rules as to the mode of transmitting the deposition to the Court, the filing of it before trial, the opening of the officer's envelope, and the like, are for the same reason beyond the present purview.[4]

2. Notice, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination

§ 1377. Depositions: General Principle: Opportunity of Cross-examination required. The principle of the Hearsay rule, as applied to the use of a deposition, is precisely the same as for testimony obtained in other tribunals, in the instances already reviewed (ante, §§ 1373–1375). The mere speaking under oath is not sufficient; the essential condition is that the person against whom the sworn statement is offered should have had an opportunity to cross-examine the deponent (ante, § 371). This is universally conceded as a common-law principle:[1]

1763, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 240: "If the witness be examined 'de bene esse', and, before the coming in of the answer, the defendant not being in contempt, the witness die, yet his deposition shall not be read, because the opposite party had not the power of cross-examination, and the rule of the common law is strict in this, that no evidence shall be admitted but what is or might have been under examination of both parties."

1777, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., in Goodright v. Moss, Cowper 592: "[As to] offering a deposition or an answer in evidence against a person not a party to the original suit. That cannot be done for this reason, because such person has it not in his power to cross-examine."

1790, KENYON, L. C. J., in R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707: "Examinations upon oath, except in the excepted cases, are of no avail unless they are made in a cause or proceeding depending between the parties to be affected by them and where each has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness. . . . [In this case the deposition] was 'ex parte', obtained at the instance of those overseers whose parish was to benefit by it, and behind the backs of the parish against whom it has now been used, without having an opportunity of knowing what was going on or attending to have the benefit of a cross-examination. I regard the question as of the last importance and as putting in danger the law of evidence in which every man in the kingdom is deeply concerned."

1811, LAWRENCE, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 412: "A deposition is considered a partial representation of facts, as to all persons who have no opportunity of bringing out the whole truth by cross-examination."

1863, per CURIAM, in Waterson v. Seat, 10 Fla. 333 (after pointing out that no notice of a deposition had been given to the opponent, "so as to enable him to cross-interrogate"): "We can conceive of no circumstances under which the notice may be dispensed with.

[3] For the conclusiveness of the magistrate's report of testimony, see ante, §§ 1326, 1349. For the use of the magistrate's report without calling the magistrate in person, see post, § 1667. For the authentication of a deposition or magistrate's report, see post, §§ 1676, 1681, 2164.

[4] 1921, Emery & Co. v. American Refrig. T. Co., — Ia. —, 184 N. W. 750 (deposition taken for one trial and offered at a second trial without filing).

§ 1377. [1] The rule in Chancery was not so strict, presumably because (ante, § 1367) cross-examination in Chancery was almost futile: 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 240; 1827, Story, J., in Gass v. Stinson, 3 Sumner 98, 104 (examining the authorities); 1842, St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. But the principle existed: 1859, Rehden v. Wesley, 26 Beav. 434 (Romilly, M. R.: "This is clear that if you intend to use the answer of one defendant against another defendant, the latter must have the right of cross-examination").

The plainest principle of natural justice, as well as our statute, require it. It is stated by one of the earliest writers [2] (to enforce the rule on the subject) that even the Almighty would not proceed to pronounce sentence against our great ancestor without giving him notice, and therefore first called to him, 'Where art thou, Adam?' "

§ 1378. Same: Notice and Sufficient Time; Attendance cures Defective Notice. The opportunity of cross-examination involves two elements, (1) notice to the opponent that the deposition is to be taken at the time and place specified, and (2) a sufficient interval of time to prepare for examination and to reach the place.

(1) Where a deposition is taken for pending litigation, the parties to whom notice is to be given are definitely ascertainable, and the requirement of it, apart from statutory exceptions, is indispensable.[1] But where a deposition is taken with a view to use in litigation not yet begun (' in perpetuam memoriam '), it may not be possible to ascertain the names of all the interested parties, and the question may thus arise whether a deposition so taken may be used against a person who never received any notice and could not by diligence have been notified. This question does not seem to have been judicially decided; [2] but, so far as a statute has authorized a mode of notice by advertisement or the like, it would seem that this by implication sanctions the use of such a deposition, as a necessary deviation from the strict requirements of principle.

(2) The requirements as to the interval of time are now everywhere regulated by statute (post, §§ 1380–1383); the rulings in regard to the sufficiency of time are thus so dependent on the interpretation of the detailed prescriptions of the local statutes that it would be impracticable to examine them here.[3] But whether or not the time allowed was supposably insufficient or was precisely the time required by statute, the actual attendance of the party obviates any objection upon the ground of insufficiency, because then the party has actually had that opportunity of cross-examination (ante, § 1371) for the sole sake of which the notice was required.[4] On the other hand, the

[2] The learned judge's reference here is probably not, as might be supposed, to Genesis III, 9, but to Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliæ (1470), where the famous chief justice alludes to the above passage in Genesis.

§ 1378. [1] See the statutes and cases post, §§ 1380–1382. Apart from statute, the notice may be oral: 1847, Milton v. Rowland, 11 Ala. 732, 736 ("the form or manner of notice is of no importance, when one in point of fact is proved").

Whether the notice must be served on party or attorney depends chiefly on statutory wordings: 1906, Webb v. Ritter, 60 W. Va. 193, 54 S. E. 484. Ordinarily, notice to the attorney will suffice: 1919, Streeter's Dependents v. Hunter, 93 Vt. 483, 108 Atl. 394 (rule for notice to attorney or party, considered).

Defects in the designation of residence etc. are immaterial if they did not in fact mislead: 1908, Rock Island Plow Co. v. Schoening, 104 Minn. 163, 116 N. W. 356.

But the requirement of notice does not apply to 'ex parte' testimony, miscalled depositions, used as a sworn complaint to authorize a magistrate's issuance of a warrant: 1909, State v. Stevens, 19 N. D. 249, 123 N. W. 888.

[2] See the statutes and cases cited post, § 1383.

[3] See some of them cited post, § 1381; 1921, U. S. v. Goldstein, 8th C. C. A., 271 Fed. 838 (reasonableness of time of notice, on the facts).

[4] Ala. 1862, Aicardi v. Strang, 38 Ala. 326, 328 (applied to written interrogatories); Ark. 1849, Caldwell v. McVicar, 9 Ark. 418, 422 ("Where the party appears, by himself or attorney, and makes his appearance, cross-failure of the opponent to attend, after sufficient notice, leaves it still true that there has been the necessary opportunity,[5] which is sufficient on the same principle (ante, § 1371).

(3) Further details of procedure involve no new fundamental principle, and are regulated by variously phrased statutes.[6]

§ 1379. Same: Plural Depositions at the Same Time and Different Places. The principle requiring an opportunity of cross-examination is clearly violated in the case of plural depositions appointed by one party for the same time at different places, so that it becomes impossible for the opponent to attend in person for cross-examination at both. Here he is deprived of the opportunity for cross-examination in one at least of the depositions:

1881, GRAY, C. J., in Cole v. Hall, 131 Mass. 90: "The manifest design of the Legislature is that the adverse party shall have opportunity to attend in person, or at least by his attorney duly instructed in the cause, to cross-examine the witnesses. . . . If depositions are taken at different places at or near the same time, it is within the power of the court, when the depositions are offered in evidence, to suppress the depositions of those witnesses whom the adverse party has thereby been deprived of reasonable opportunity to cross-examine. . . . In this, as in many other matters concerning the introduction of evidence, much must be left to the discretion of the judge presiding at the trial."

1895, ALLEN, J., in Evans v. Rothschild, 54 Kan. 747, 39 Pac. 701: "Where testimony is taken by deposition, it is in one sense a part of the trial of the cause, and the only chance given to the opposing party to confront the witnesses whose depositions are taken under the notice is to attend before the officer who takes them. The only opportunity to apply the tests necessary to correct errors or detect falsehood in the statements drawn out on direct examination is that afforded by cross-examination at the same time. A party to an action has a right, if he deems it necessary, to be personally present when depositions are being taken affecting his interests. He is not required to employ a multitude of attorneys to protect his interests at different places on the same day, nor does the fact that he chooses to intrust his interests to the care of an attorney (other than the one who tries the case for examines, objects to a question, to the competency of the witness, or does any substantive act connected with the taking of the depositions, and it so appears in the depositions regularly certified, the party will not at the hearing of the cause be allowed to object that no legal notice had been given"); Cal. 1858, Jones v. Love, 9 Cal. 68, 70 ("Having appeared and cross-examined, it was too late afterwards to make the objection" of short notice); 1908, Bollinger v. Bollinger, 153 Cal. 190, 94 Pac. 770 (attendance waives all irregularity in the form of notice; but the correct theory is not that there is a waiver, but that 'de facto' opportunity to examine is all that is needed); Colo. 1895, Ryan v. People, 21 Colo. 119, 40 Pac. 777; Col. (Dist.) 1907, Munster v. Ashworth, 29 D. C. App. 84 (notice for deposition of witness M., three others were produced); Ill. 1850, Greene Co. v. Bledsoe, 12 Ill. 267, 271; Ind. 1844, Connersville v. Wadleigh, 7 Blackf. 102, 104; 1847, Doe v. Brown, 8 Blackf. 443, 444; Ia. 1859, Nevan v. Roup, 8 Ia. 207, 210; 1859, Mumma v. McKee, 10 Ia. 107, 110, semble; Ky. 1811, Talbot v. Bradford, 2 Bibb 316; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 30; 1905, Real Estate T. Co. v. Union T. Co., 102 Md. 41, 61 Atl. 228; N. J. 1868, State v. Bassett, 33 N. J. L. 26, 31; Pa. 1860, McCormick v. Irwin, 35 Pa. 111, 118; Wis. 1862, Cameron v. Cameron, 15 Wis. 1, 5.

Contra: 1861, Hunt v. Gaslight Co., 1 All. 343, 348 (on the fallacious ground that "it was impossible for them [the opponent] to say with certainty that the deposition would not be admitted"; this assumes that the law could not be known beforehand, — an assumption which would confuse all legal rules).

For the time of objections to competency and relevancy, see ante, §§ 18, 486, 586.

[5] Cases cited ante, § 1371; and the following: 1895, Moore v. Triplett, — Va. —, 23 S. E. 69 (but in the special class of statutory proceedings here covered, i.e. sale of infant's lands, etc., under Code §§ 2435, 2619, actual presence was held necessary).

[6] Decisions upon miscellaneous details have been placed in § 1382, post.

him) at one place, require him or his principal counsel to attend on the same day at another place."

Under such circumstances, that deposition should be suppressed for which the opponent lost the opportunity of cross-examination, i.e. he is allowed to attend either, and the one not attended is excluded.[1] If in fact he succeeds in having representatives at both, then both become admissible, for there has been for both an actual opportunity of cross-examination.[2] But where he refrains from attending either, he practically waives the opportunity (ante, § 1371) as to both, and therefore both are admissible.[3] The policy of excluding both, merely because the appointments are incompatible,[4] cannot be supported.

§ 1380. Same: Notice as a Requirement; English and Canadian Statutes. The requirement of notice to the opponent as the basis of furnishing an opportunity for cross-examination has been almost invariably preserved in its integrity in the statutory regulation of the subject. The few deviations have occurred chiefly in provisions respecting notice to absent or unknown parties, respecting the discretion that may properly be allowed a trial Court in making exceptions. This statutory regulation became necessary for the main purpose of vesting the common-law Courts with that power which, by singular ineptitude, they conceived themselves to lack or to be somehow prevented from exercising with due freedom — the power of authorizing depositions to be taken before appointed officers.[1] The statutes conferring the power have thus usually also specified the requirements to be observed in giving notice to the opponent.

In England this statutory reform came piecemeal. The chief enactments have been five: (1) in 1830–31, 1 Wm. IV, c. 22, a statute giving to all superior § 1379. [1] 1861, Hankinson v. Lombard, 25 Ill. 573; 1879, Collins v. Richart, 14 Bush 625; 1897, Cross v. Cross, — Ky. —, 41 S. W. 272 (notice to take on the same day that the opponent was taking another in the same suit on a previous notice, insufficient); 1867, Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. Va. 187, 226; and cases quoted supra.

[2] 1906, Ivey v. Bessemer C. C. Mills, 143 N. C. 189, 55 S. E. 613 (notice to attend in F. and in P.; the opponent attended at P., and the deposition at F. was not taken); 1878, Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. Va. 340.

[3] 1879, Hay's Appeal, 91 Pa. 268; see Blair v. Bank (1850), 11 Humph. Tenn. 88.

[4] Ia. Code 1919, § 7396 ("if notices are given in the same case by the same party of the taking of depositions at different places on the same day, thay shall be invalid"); Ky. 1815, Waters' Heirs v. Harrison, 4 Bibb 89; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 112, § 4 (if notice of two depositions at the same time and place is given, or if deceptive means are used to prevent attendance, the Court "may reject them"); N. H. 1856, Scammon v. Scammon, 33 N. H. 60; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 1074 (contested elections to legislative assembly; depositions at more than two places at the same time by either party, allowable only by court order); S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 7352 (legislative election contests; "testimony . . . shall not be taken at more than two places at the same time by either party"). The following ruling is sound: 1893, Wytheville B. & I. Co. v. Teeger, 90 Va. 277, 282, 18 S. E. 195 (notice on same day of deposition in another State in another suit in which proponent of present deposition was not a party though his counsel was engaged; admitted).

§ 1380. [1] A deposition could be authorized by the cumbrous methods either of the personal attendance of a judge of the Court (1606, Matthews v. Port, Comb. 63), or of a postponement of trial till the opponent consented (1774, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161, 174); but otherwise the party must sue out a commission in chancery (1827, L. C. Eldon, in Macaulay v. Shackell, 1 Bligh N. S. 96, 119, 131).

Courts the power of authorizing depositions both abroad and at home;[2] (2) in 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, § 61, a statute extending the power to criminal proceedings for indictable offences; (3) the Judicature Act of 1873, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, Rules of Procedure, Order XXXVI; (4) the Judicature Act of 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, § 17, the Rules of the Supreme Court (Order XXXVII) superseding the foregoing Rules and covering the same ground; (5) in 1883, the Rules of the Supreme Court (Order XXXVII), made under authority of the same Act (c. 77, § 17), and superseding all prior civil regulations; and (6) a few later statutes extending the principle of the foregoing to new fields.[3]

Under the statute of 1830–31, the mode of taking depositions was left to the discretion of the Court; but it does not appear that any change of prac-

[2] This was narrowly construed as applying to civil cases only: 1847, R. v. Upton St. Leonards, 10 C. B. 834.

[3] The relevant English Rules of 1883 and later statutes, are as follows:

Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883 (under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, § 17). Order XXXVII: I. Evidence Generally: Rule 1. "In the absence of any agreement between the solicitors of all parties, and subject to these Rules, the witnesses at the trial of any action or at any assessment of damages shall be examined 'viva voce' and in open court, but the Court or a Judge may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing or trial, on such conditions as the Court or Judge may think reasonable, or that any witness whose attendance in court ought for some sufficient cause to be dispensed with, be examined by interrogatories or otherwise before a commissioner or examiner; provided that where it appears to the Court or Judge that the other party 'bona fide' desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorising the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit." (This first appeared in the Rules of 1873.) Order XXXVII: II. Examination of Witnesses. . . . Rule 5. "The Court or a Judge may, in any cause or matter where it shall appear necessary for the purposes of justice, make an order for the examination upon oath before the Court or Judge or any officer of the Court, or any other person, and at any place, of any witness or person, and may empower any party to any such cause or matter to give such deposition in evidence therein on such terms, if any, as the Court or a Judge may direct." (This first appeared in the Rules of 1875.) Rule 6. "An order for a commission to examine witnesses shall be in the Form No. 36 in Appendix K." (The form provides fully for notice and cross-examination.) Rule 6 A. "If in any case the Court or a Judge shall so order, there shall be issued a request to examine witnesses in lieu of a commission." (This is the mode usually employed for foreign countries and sometimes for India and the Colonies; the form provides for notice and cross-examination.) Rules 10, 11. "Where any witness or person is ordered to be examined before any officer of the court, or before any person appointed for the purpose, . . . the examination shall take place in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents, and the witnesses shall be subject to cross-examination and re-examination." (The provisions of 6, 6 A, 10, and 11 first appear in the Rules of 1883; though they may be considered as an adaptation of the provisions of the Chancery Practice Act of 1852, St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.) Rule 201. "Any party or witness having made an affidavit to be used or which shall be used on any proceeding in the cause or matter shall be bound, on being served with such subpœna [from the opposite party], to attend before such officer or person [appointed by the Court] for cross-examination." (This first appears in the Rules of 1883.) Order XXXVIII: Affidavits and Depositions: Rule 1. "Upon any motion, petition, or summons evidence may be given by affidavit; but the Court or a Judge may, on the application of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the person making any such affidavit." (This was contained in substance in the Rules of 1873.)

Later Statutes: 1904, St. 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 14 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act; for depositions of children, notice and opportunity of cross-examination are required); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, §§ 28, 29 (Children Act: notice for deposition of child or young person); 1917, Gayer v. Gayer, Prob. 64 (divorce for adultery in New York; conditions examined on which affidavits will be allowed to be used, instead of a commission to take evidence).

tice actually ensued. Under the final Rules of 1883, the essential requirement of an opportunity for cross-examination was safeguarded, while at the same time a certain just amount of flexibility was provided for; so that the English system now represents a thoroughly practical and successful regulation of the subject. In brief, it deals with the requirement of an opportunity of cross-examination as follows: (a) Depositions must be taken subject to notice and opportunity for cross-examination before the officer appointed; (b) within certain limits the Court has a discretion to accept 'ex parte' sworn statements; but even in these cases the opponent is entitled to a subsequent cross-examination of the deponent before decision rendered.

In Canada, these Rules have been adopted in substance, either by statute or by rule of court.[4]

The practice of English Courts since the adoption of these rules indicates a disposition to preserve the principle of cross-examination so far as possible, and to use the discretionary powers of dispensation as little as possible.[5]

[4] CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1906, c. 139, § 99, c. 140, § 67 (Exchequer and Supreme Courts); c. 146, Crim. Code § 997 (commissions out of Canada; rules to conform to those of civil trials, "as nearly as practicable"); § 998 (depositions of sick persons; reasonable notice and a full opportunity of cross-examination is required); § 999 (deposition at a preliminary investigation, if it is proved that it was "taken in the presence of the accused, and that he, his counsel, or solicitor, if present, had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness"); Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, No. 382 (a person who has made an affidavit may be cross-examined thereon); No. 393 (similar, with details): Nos. 395–412 (depositions); 1920, R. v. Macdonald, 51 D. L. R. 539, Alta (whether the depositions at the preliminary hearing must be read over to the accused, under Crim. C. § 684); British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 58, § 57 (all witnesses before any judge, etc., "shall give their testimony 'viva voce' on oath, and be subject to examination by counsel in the presence of the Court", etc., "unless it is otherwise ordered by the Court or a judge on special grounds, or with the consent of the parties", etc.); § 59 (nothing herein shall "affect the mode of giving evidence by the oral examination of witnesses in trials by jury or before a judge without a jury", "save as far as relates to the power of the Court for special reasons to allow depositions or affidavits to be read"); c. 78, § 15 (examination of an aboriginal, etc., on preliminary inquiry, taken by a magistrate, etc., is admissible like a deposition); Rules of Court 1912, No. 483 (like Eng. Ord. 37, R. 1); Nos. 487–507 (depositions); No. 548 (requiring cross-examination of affiants); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule 478 (depositions admissible on terms); R. 483 (cross-examination of affiants); R. 501, 507 (testimony taken on commission); New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 111, §§ 262, 265 (provisions for notice); c. 112, §§ 84, 85 (Supreme Court in equity); Newfoundland: Con. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 33; (provisions for notice); Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 159, § 41 (municipal Courts); Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 3 B, R. 10 (provisions for notice); North West Territory: Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rule 263 (like Ont. Rules, § 483); Rules 271, 272 (opportunity of cross-examination provided); 1904, R. v. Thompson, 7 N. W. Terr. 188 (deposition taken for the prosecution; Dom. Crim. Code § 687, applied); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 63, § 118 (provisions for notice); Rules of Court 1914, R. 269 (the Court may authorize testimony by affidavit or before an examiner; "but where the other party 'bona fide' desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and such witness can be produced", no affidavit shall be authorized); R. 271 (depositions); R. 279–281 (rules for commissions); Prince Edward Island: St. 1887, c. 4, §§ 2–4 (rules for notice); St. 1910, c. 8, § 48 (chancery proceedings); St. 1910, c. 3, § 45 (election trials); Quebec: 1919, Guillemette v. The King, 61 D. L. R. 345, — Que. — (depositions excluded for lack of adequate opportunity to cross-examine); Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 41, § 27 (surrogate's court); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, R. 273 (like Ont. Rules of Court, R. 269); R. 303 (like Eng. Ord. 38).

Compare the statutes admitting affidavits (post, § 1710).

[5] On applications for the issuance of an order to take a deposition, the question whether it shall issue is entirely different from that of the admissibility of a deposition when taken, as pointed out post, § 1401. But sometimes a ruling on such an application may involve a ruling that such a deposition, even if taken, would be inadmissible; such a ruling was the following, in which the requirement of cross-examination is insisted upon as indispensable: 1882, Crofton v. Crofton, L. R. 20 Ch. D. 760 (Fry, J., refused to issue a commission to examine a witness in France, because the mode of examination there, which would control, left the putting of questions to the judge's discretion: "He is a witness who ought to be subjected to the most drastic cross-examination, and . . . I decline to delegate my discretion to any other tribunal. If under the commission, the witness would have been subject to cross-examination in the ordinary way, I should have thought it desirable to issue it").

§ 1381. Same: U. S. Federal Statutes. In the two types of ordinary deposition dealt with in the Federal statutes and Court rules (deposition 'de bene esse', i.e. on an order for conditional taking, and 'dedimus potestatem', i.e. a special commission), the principle is preserved that there must have been an opportunity of cross-examination.[1] By the original act of 1789 (c. 20, § 30), regulating the former class, the notice and opportunity to cross-examine was not necessary if the opponent or his attorney was not within one hundred miles of the place; but this defect was remedied (R. S. § 863, Code § 1364) in the later statute. The statute authorizing the latter class of depositions (R. S. § 866, Code § 1367) has also been construed to require notice and opportunity for cross-examination;[2] but the terms of the statute are so complicated with local State usage that it is not possible to say that all depositions offered in Federal Courts must be tested by that requirement.[3]

§ 1381. [1] STATUTES: U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 863, Code § 1364 (for depositions 'de bene esse', "reasonable notice must first be given in writing"; and "whenever, by reason of the absence from the district and want of an attorney of record or other reason, the giving of the notice herein required shall be impracticable, it shall be lawful to take such depositions as there shall be urgent necessity for taking, upon such notice as any judge authorized to hold courts in such district shall think reasonable and direct"); § 866, Code § 1367 (for depositions by 'dedimus potestatem' "to prevent a failure or delay of justice", the provisions of the above section "shall not apply", and they may be taken "according to common usage"); Code § 148 (rule for contested congressional elections). St. 1909, Feb. 16, c. 130, § 16, Code § 3116 (rules for depositions in naval courts); St. 1911, Mar. 3, c. 231, Judicial Code, § 169, Code § 1138 (testimony for Court of Claims; superseding Rev. St. § 1083); St. June 4, 1920, ch. V, subchapter II, Articles of War, Art. 25 ("reasonable notice" required for depositions in military courts, ect.;

RULES OF COURT: Supreme Court, No. 13, Rules 1912, No. 12 (for new evidence in maritime cases before the Supreme Court, no commission shall issue except on notice and a copy of interrogatories); Equity Rules, No. 67, Rules 1912, Nos. 47, 53 (rules prescribed for notice and cross-examination in taking testimony by deposition); No. 48 (expert's affidavits are subject to the witness' production for cross-examination, in patent and trademark cases); No. 54 (superseding old Rules 68 and 70; depositions may be taken as provided by law; but "if in any case no notice has been given", the opponent on application is "entitled to have the witness examined orally before the court, or to a cross-examination before an examiner or like officer, or a new deposition taken with notice, as the Court or judge under all the circumstances shall order"); C. C. A. Rules in Admiralty, No. 9 (requires "reasonable notice in writing given to the opposite party", or his attorney).

[2] For the manner and time of the notice under these statutes, see the following: 1897, American E. N. Bank v. First N. Bank, 27 C. C. A. 274, 82 Fed. 961 (reasonableness depends on the circumstances of the case); 1900, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Ross, 42 C. C. A. 691, 102 Fed. 722 (notice to a corporate agent to accept service after the revocation of his authority but before appointment of another, held good).

[3] The situation is as follows:

(1) The 'dedimus potestatem' section (§ 866) prescribes that "common usage" shall control the mode. This "common usage" was for some time construed to permit the adoption of local statutory and common-law modes: U. S. v. Cameron, 15 Fed. 797 (McCrary, J., 1883); Warren v. Younger, 18 Fed. 859 (McCormick, J., 1884). Contra, Randall v. Venable, 17 id. 162 (Turner, J., 1884).

(2) Then in 'Ex parte' Fisk, 113 U. S. 725, 5 Sup. 724 (1884), the Supreme Court refused to recognize such a construction for the purpose of enforcing an order to take under a peculiar State law, and intimated, though expressly reserving the point, that the deposition, had it been already taken and were it offered in evidence, would be rejected on the same grounds.

§ 1382. Same: State Statutes. The requirement of notice and opportunity to cross-examine has been generally preserved in all the various State statutes. Only a few deviations are found here and there.[1]

(3) By St. 1892, c. 14, Code § 1372 the Federal lower Courts were authorized to take (and presumably to admit in evidence) depositions according to the mode allowable in the State of the trial; thus apparently annulling the effect of 'Ex parte' Fisk, supra. The doubt thus remained whether the new statute, going beyond the 'dedimus potestatem' section (§ 866), operates also to relax the detailed requirements of § 863 (concerning 'de bene' depositions). The pronouncements under this statute are as follows: 1903, Hanks Dental Ass'n v. Tooth Crown Co., 194 U. S. 303, 24 Sup. 700 (U. S. St. 1892, c. 14, Mar. 9, "does not purport to repeal in any part, or to modify, § 861, or to create additional exceptions to those specified in the subsequent sections by enlarging the causes or grounds for taking depositions"; here applied to forbid following New York law as to depositions of a party for discovery before trial; collecting the intervening rulings of the Federal intermediate courts on St. 1892); 1904, Zych v. American Car & F. Co., 127 Fed. 723, 728, C. C. (Thayer, J.: "It will not be out of place to observe, because the question has been to some extent discussed, that the law as declared in 'Ex parte' Fisk has not been altered by the act of Congress of Mar. 9, 1892, supra; . . . there seems to be a general consensus of judicial opinion that the act relates merely to the mode of taking testimony, adopting in that respect the provisions of the laws of the various States relative to the method of taking depositions, without altering the conditions prescribed by §§ 863 and 866 of the Revised Statutes of the U. S. under which depositions for use in the Federal courts may be taken"); 1905, Carrara P. A. Co. v. Carrara P. Co., 137 Fed. 319, C. C. (the statute of 1892 does not "add to the classes of witnesses" but "provides an additional mode" for taking depositions).

(4) Finally, by St. 1906, June 29, Code § 1356, amending Rev. St. 1878, § 856, the "competency of a witness to testify" is to be determined by "the laws of the State or Territory in which the court is held."

Compare the citations ante, § 6 (applicability of State law in Federal courts).

§ 1382. [1] In the following list a few of the judicial rulings in regard to the requirement of notice have been placed after the respective statutes; where the requirement is not merely of "reasonable notice", but of notice in a specific way, the result depends almost entirely upon the wording of the local statute; where not otherwise stated, the statute requires notice and prescribes details; compare here the statutes cited post, § 1413 (former testimony) and § 1710 (affidavits);

Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 4031–4033, 4043, 4047, 7887, 7890 (criminal cases); 1895, Wisdom v. Reeves, 110 Ala. 418, 18 So. 13 (no notice necessary in proceedings under § 2803); 1905, Edwards v. Edwards, 142 Ala. 267, 39 So. 82 (Chancery statute applied);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1478, 1482, 1484, 1489 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 840, 844, 846, 851); 1888, Dunbar v. DeGroff, 2 Alsk. 25 (expounding Oregon Gen. L. 1843–1872, § 806, as representing the law in force, in Alaska, by virtue of U. S. St. 1884, May 17);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1239, 1250 (depositions taken by accused); Civ. C. §§ 169, 1693, 1701 (civil cases);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, §§ 4215–4230, § 3112 (rule applied to depositions taken for accused in criminal case); § 10517 (no notice required of attesting witness' deposition for will-probate unless contested);

California: P. C. 1872, §§ 1335–1340 (depositions in criminal cases, both for accused and, except in homicide, for prosecution, pursuant to Const. 1879, Art. I, § 13); § 882, as amended in 1878 (prosecution's depositions); C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2004, 2023, 2024, 2025½, 2029, 2031 (civil cases);

Colorado: Const. 1876, art. II, § 17, Comp. L. 1921, § 7085 ("reasonable notice" required in criminal cases); C. C. P. §§ 377, 384, 389 (in general);

Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 922 (deposition taken by defendant in a criminal case); Code 1919, § 132 (notice of commission to take testimony of attesting witnesses to a will need not be given, unless the probate is opposed); §§ 1058, 1060 (in general); 1913, Hutchins v. Hutchins, 41 D. C. App. 367 (this Court cannot order a deposition by commission on oral examination of a witness in a foreign country; only letters rogatory can be used, with the questions prepared beforehand); § 6637 (depositions for accused);

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1919, § 5707 (in general); §§ 5712, 5714 (commission to take deposition of one in military or naval service);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, §§ 2743, 2757 (in general); § 6086 ff. (deposition for accused person); § 2736 (on motions heard on affidavits, the Court may order "such witnesses as it may think necessary to appear and be examined 'viva voce'");

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5889–5902 (commissions on interrogatories); §§ 5903, 5905–5917 (depositions without commission);

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, §§ 2574–2577 (domestic depositions); § 2566 (by commission, in foreign country);

There is also an apparent exception, under the statutes of numerous jurisdictions, which permit a party to file an affidavit, with notice, and await the Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 8002, 8005, 8025, 8786, 9143, 9158 (in general); § 86 (legislative election contest); § 6778 (injunction proceedings; affiants may be required to appear for cross-examination);

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, §§ 24–28, c. 148, § 4 (in general); 1903, Arrowsmith's Estate, 206 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 77 (semble, under R. S. c. 148, § 4, providing for depositions in probate cases by commission, the failure of the opponent to receive notice of the taking does not prevent the use of the deposition);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 435–437, 465 (in general); § 3142 (probate proceedings); § 451 (commission to foreign country); § 2118 (defendant in criminal case);
Iowa: Code 1897, §§ 4687–4689, 4693–4699, Comp. Code, §§ 7395–7397, §§ 7401–7407 (in general); § 5222, Comp. Code, §§ 9176, 9462, 9463 (accused's depositions); 1905, State v. Mosher, 128 Ia. 82, 103 N. W. 105 (Code, § 4688, as to deposition by Court order, construed);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, §§ 7247, 7255 (in general); § 7254 (affidavits may be filed with court and 10 days' notice given; if opponent within 5 days gives notice of desire to cross-examine or of denial of truth of affidavit, it is not admissible on the trial); 1893, Peterson v. Albach, 51 Kan. 150, 32 Pac. 917 (time of notice);
Kentucky: 1915 Stats. § 4855 (for depositions of attesting will-witnesses, notice required only to the party contestant); C. Cr. P. 1895, § 153 (defendant's depositions in criminal cases); C. C. P. 1895, §§ 566–569 (in general); § 1009 (depositions in equity); 1915, Fireman's Ins. Co. v. McGill, 164 Ky. 621, 176 S. W. 27 (C. C. P. § 571 applied);
Louisiana: Ann. Rev. St. 1915, §§ 615, 621, C. Pr. 1900, §§ 425–430, 438 (in general); St. 1896, No. 124, Wolff's Rev. L. 278 (prosecution in criminal cases); R. S. 1870, §§ 938, 3485 (prosecutions; deposition of master or officer of vessel or of any "transient person" deemed to be necessary); St. 1910, No. 176, p. 261, July 6 (witnesses residing out of the parish; reasonable notice required); 1903, State v. Jackson, 111 La. 343, 35 So. 596 (depositions taken for the prosecution under St. 1896, No. 124, admitted; the statute construed); 1904, Thibodeaux v. Thibodeaux, 112 La. 906, 36 So. 800 (deposition excluded for lack of proper notice); 1905, Honor Co. v. Stevedores' & L. B. Ass'n, 114 La. 361, 38 So. 271 (notice required); 1905, De Renzes v. His Wife, 115 La. 675, 39 So. 865 (under Rev. St. § 611, for a foreign commission, no notice of time and place is required when interrogatories are annexed and notice thereof given);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 112, §§ 5–9 (in general);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 16–31 (in general); art. 84, § 9 (depositions in shipping cases); 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18 (notice necessary for depositions under the act of 1723, c. 8, for land commissions);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, §§ 26, 44 (notice required; unless notice was impossible under the circumstances); c. 233, § 42 (where the adverse party does not appear to defend, no notice is required); c. 276, § 50 (criminal cases; magistrate may take depositions, on notice as in civil actions, "with the consent of the defendant"); c. 277, § 76 (court may issue commission, on defendant's application, for witness out of the State; prosecution may join and name material witnesses for the Commonwealth); 1918, Re Derinza, 229 Mass. 435, 118 N. E. 942 (St. 1915, c. 275, § 1, applied to a deposition taken in Italy for a claim before the State industrial accident board);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12494 (in general); 1897, Drosdowski v. Chosen Friends, 114 Mich. 178, 72 N. W. 169 (reasonable notice; trial Court's discretion approved);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, §§ 8382–8386 (civil cases); § 8514 (accused);
Mississippi: Code 1906, §§ 1927–1937, Hem. §§ 1587–1597 (in general);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, §§ 5440–5465 (in general); 1894, Glenn v. Hunt, 120 Mo. 333, 336, 25 S. W. 181 (notice not necessary under R. S. 1889, § 4435, for an opponent out of the State); 1903, Re Wogan, 103 Mo. App. 146, 77 S. W. 490 (time of notice);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10646, 10650, 10651, 10653 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2024, etc.); §§ 12190, 12203, 12205 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1338, 1353, 1355); § 11795 (deposition before a magistrate of a witness not giving recognizance);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, §§ 8881, 8887, 10127 (in general); § 5017 (county surveyor's inquiry as to lines, etc.; testimony "shall never be used as evidence in any action involving corners or boundary lines except for the purpose of impeachment");
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5455, 5459, 7370 (in general); §§ 6855, 6997 (deposition of a witness for the people, admissible if it is taken in the defendant's presence, and the defendant has had "an opportunity to cross-examine");
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 225, §§ 4, 5, 14 (in general);
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence, § 31 (in general); § 38 (notice of eight days required for a commission out of the State, unless by consent or by judge's order); § 45 (for depositions before a judge, commissioner, etc., out of the State, terms of notice prescribed); § 44 (same, deposition in foreign State); Evidence, § 56*a* (in a proceeding for divorce or annulment, where no appearance is opponent's counter-notice either disputing the affidavit or demanding cross-examination of the affiant; in the absence of such counter-notice, the affidaentered, a deposition in another State or Territory may be taken and used "'ex parte' and without notice"); District Courts, § 65 (rules for taking depositions in district courts); St. 1913, Mar. 12, c. 69 (party's deposition taken on his own behalf 'in perpetuam'); St. 1917, Mar. 26, c. 121 (amending C. S., Evidence, § 38); St. 1917, Mar. 26, c. 122 (amending ib. § 31); 1904, Stokes v. Hardy, 71 N. J. L. 116, 58 Atl. 650 (proof of notice);

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, §§ 2128-2135 (in general); St. 1919, Mar. 10, c. 29, § 2 (civil causes; oral interrogatories);

New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 219 (in depositions for the prosecution, two days' notice must be given); § 632 (in depositions for accused, notice as specified by the judge); C. P. A. 1920, § 290, J. C. A. § 204 (notice prescribed); S. C. A. 1920, § 74 (surrogate proceedings);

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, §§ 1809, 1815 (in general); § 1812 (depositions taken by accused); 1896, State v. Finley, 118 N. C. 1161, 24 S. E. 495 (under c. 522, St. 1891, a co-defendant need not be notified);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7891–7905 (civil cases); §§ 11043, 11053 (criminal cases); § 1073 (contested elections to legislative assembly);

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 11534, 11535, 11536 (in general); § 13668 (in criminal cases, the judge's order may prescribe terms of notice); § 64 (impeachment before the Legislature); Const. 1851, Art. I, § 10, amended 1912 (depositions for the State or the accused; quoted post, § 1397);

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, §§ 618, 619, 2491, 2772, 2845, 2856;

Oregon: Laws 1920, §§ 840, 844, 846, 851 (in general); §§ 1514–1516 (criminal cases);

Pennsylvania: St. 1895, June 25, Dig. 1920, § 10292; St. 1909, Apr. 27, § 2, Dig. § 8175, Crim. Procedure (accused's witnesses out of the State but in the U. S., in criminal cases); St. 1911, June 8, Dig. § 10295;

Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, §§ 356, 361;

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 6462, 6475 (accused in criminal cases); §§ 1506, 1511 (civil cases);

Rhode Island: Gen. Laws, 1909, c. 292, § 23, 26, 32; 1851, Hazard v. R. Co., 2 R. I. 62 (no notice required under statute, for an opponent more than 100 miles distant); 1917, Stern & Sons Inc. v. Chagnon, 39 R. I. 567, 99 Atl. 592 (whether the notice must give the witness' name; authorities collected); 1917, Fales v. Musicians' Protective Union, 40 R. I. 34, 99 Atl. 823 (failure to notify of continuance of adjourned hearing, held error);

South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, §§ 686, 695 (ten days' notice required for depositions on commission or before a court clerk); § 698 ("reasonable notice, not less than ten days", unless notice is impracticable, required for certain depositions); the statutes are applied in the following cases: 1900, Henderson v. Williams, 57 S. C. 1, 35 S. E. 261; 1901, Wallingford v. Tel. Co., 60 S. C. 201, 38 S. E. 443; C. Cr. P. § 976 (deposition of the female in rape cases); Crim. L. 1922, § 714 (harboring deserting seamen; deposition of a master of vessel "or other transient person", may be taken on 5 days' notice);

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2762–2763 (civil cases); §§ 5010, 5022 (criminal cases); § 7351 (legislative election contest); St. 1921, c. 411 (depositions for defendant in criminal cases);

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5627, 5640–5647 (notice to be as the Court may order, or according to detailed rules provided); § 5632 (if cross-examination is omitted, it may be had afterwards); § 7356 (rules for civil cases made applicable to defendant's depositions in criminal cases); § 3210 (special rule for notary's deposition);

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 3650–3652, 3664 (in general); Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, §§ 817, 825, 828 (criminal cases); § 3234 (rules for notice in probate proceedings);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7164, 7169, 7179, 7183, 7184, 9301, 9314 (in general); § 8767 (testimony of witnesses before committing magistrate);

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, §§ 1917, 1918, 2564 (reasonable notice is to be given; for non-residents having no attorney in the State, no notice is necessary); §§ 252, 254 (notice required in election contests); 1868, Kimpton v. Glover, 41 Vt. 284 (time of notice); 1916, Gilman v. Hoosac Tunnel & W. R. Co., 90 Vt. 451, 98 Atl. 982 (deposition taken in Italy; statutory rules for notice, interpreted);

Virginia: Code 1919, §§ 6228–6229 (in general); § 5252 (will-witness in probate proceedings; if uncontested, no notice need be given);

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 1233, 1234, 1240, 1241, 1962 (in general);

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 35 (in general); c. 50, § 106 (depositions before justices); c. 121, § 3 (specific rules for service of notice on non-residents); c. 77, § 27 (deposition of subscribing witness to will; notice necessary only to a party opposing probate); c. 159, § 1 (depositions for the accused); c. 71, § 23 (suit against infant or lunatic); 1922, Woodrum H. O. Co. v. Adams Exp. Co., — W. Va. —, 110 S. E. 549 (service of notice);

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, §§ 4086, 4096, 4102, 4114, 4115 (in general);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5839, 5840 (in general); §§ 7514, 7518 (criminal cases).

vit may be used at trial. This use rests upon a virtual waiver by the opponent of his right of cross-examination.

§ 1383. Same: Depositions in Perpetuam Memoriam; Depositions for use Without the State; Sovereign's or Ambassador's Testimony. (1) The principle requiring notice and opportunity of cross-examination applies equally to depositions taken in view of future litigation, 'in perpetuam memoriam'; and it is preserved in the statutes as well as enforced in the judicial rulings.[1] Where a § 1383. [1] ENGLAND: Rules of Court 1883, Ord. 37, r. 5 (quoted ante, § 1380; presumably suffices for this purpose); CANADA: Compare the statutes cited ante, § 1380, and post, § 1388; UNITED STATES: Notice is prescribed, except as otherwise stated; compare also the statutes cited post, § 1388, as to identity of parties and issues: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 867, Code § 1368 (quoted post, § 1388); §§ 866, 1367 (provisions of R. S. § 863, Code § 1364, as to depositions 'de bene' do not here apply); 1897, Green v. Compagnia, 82 Fed. 490, 495 (excluded, if taken without notice; here, a corporation in a foreign country, witnesses being sailors about to leave this country); 1909, Ohio Copper M. Co. v. Hutchings, 8th C. C. A., 172 Fed. 201 (under Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3467, the deposition of a person corporally injured may be taken at the instance of his wife and may be used on his death, clause (1) of the statute permitting this); Ala. Code 1907, §§ 4064, 4065, 4071, 4074; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1517; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1722; Ark. Dig. 1919, §§ 4240–4245 (notice required; if the adverse party is an infant, nonresident, unknown, or for four months absent from the State, the Court may appoint a cross-examiner); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2084; Colo. Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 401; Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 5717; Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 3617 (boundary cases; notice to owners and tenants required); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2761; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 4560 (the Court is to provide for "the most effectual notice"); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 2585; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, §§ 8051–8063; Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, §§ 39–44 (notice required, and details prescribed; if the ordinary requirements seem to the Court insufficient, "the Court may order such reasonable notice to be given as it shall deem proper"); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 457, 458 (in general); §§ 1306, 1313 (testimony to perpetuate a lost deed, record, etc., before the recorder, etc.; no notice apparently required); Ia. Code 1897, §§ 4718–4720, Comp. Code, §§ 7426–7428 (notice required; if personal notice is impossible, the Court is to appoint a cross-examiner); Comp. Code, §§ 7382–7390 (perpetuation of testimony by taking affidavit on notice to parties interested); Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 7292 (Court to prescribe time and manner of notice); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 611 (notice to the "expected adverse party", required); La. C. Pr. 1900, § 440; St. 1914, No. 112 (mode of taking, amended); Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 112, §§ 22, 27; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 33 (land-boundaries; notice is to be posted in "the most public places in the county" 20 days before, and where all persons interested are known and any one lives out of the county, by newspaper advertisement 40 days before); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, §§ 46–58 (mode of notice to specific persons named as interested, within or without the State, for use only against those persons or their privies); §§ 59–63 (mode of notice by additional publication, "so that the depositions may be evidence against all persons"); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12498; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, §§ 8401, 8407; Miss. Code 1906, §§ 1943–1953, Hem. §§ 1603–1613; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, §§ 5479, 5482, 5503; 1866, Patterson v. Fagan, 38 Mo. 70 80 (notice necessary); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10687; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, §§ 8929, 8930 (notice prescribed as the judge directs; if personal notice is impossible, the judge is to appoint a cross-examiner); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5464–5468; N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 226, §§ 3–5; N. M. Annot. St. 1905, §§ 2144–2147; N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 317; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7927–7930; St. 1917, Mar. 8, c. 110 (depositions 'in perpetuam' in personal injury cases); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 12216–12219 (in general); §§ 2795, 2808, 2813 (county surveyor may take and return testimony to marks, etc., on notice to the adverse party); Okl. Comp. St. 1921, §§ 657, 658 (notice required; the Court to prescribe details, and to appoint an attorney to cross-interrogate in case no personal notice can be given); Or. Laws 1920, §§ 883, 888 (notice required, and details prescribed; the officer himself to cross-examine, if no opponent appears); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 371; R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, §§ 33, 35; S. C. C. C. P. 1922, §§ 722–726 (for lost documents); S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 2777 (the judge to prescribe terms of notice; and to appoint a cross-examining attorney where the parties cannot be notified); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5671, 5672; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3653; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7194–7199; Vt. Gen. L. 1919, §§ 1927, 1928; Va. Code 1917, § 6235 (reasonable notice required to "the persons who may be so affected"); Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 1250; W. Va. Code 1914, c. 130, § 39 (reasonable notice to be given to "the persons who may be so affected"); Wis. Stats. 1919, §§ 4118, 4125, 4128, 4131; Wyo. Comp.

deposition is offered against one who has not been notified and could not have been, even by due diligence (as is likely to occur in cases where the parties to the future litigation are still unknown), it may be thought that a case of necessity exists, dispensing with the requirements; the statutes sometimes provide expressly that a deposition may be or shall not be used against such a party.[2]

In some jurisdictions, the statute requires that this kind of deposition shall be publicly recorded, the object being to secure as wide a notice of it as possible, so that counter-testimony may be availed of if desired; an object analogous to that of the requirement of notice for cross-examination.[3] Under such a statute an unrecorded deposition would be inadmissible.[4]

(2) For litigation taking place in a foreign jurisdiction, the Legislature in earlier practice did not provide, at the time of framing the statutes authorizing depositions to be taken. Obviously, also, a person within this jurisdiction cannot be compelled by any foreign authority to attend and testify either in the foreign Court or before an officer taking his deposition in the State of his residence. Hence occurred, in modern times of easy transit and copious interstate commerce, numerous failures of justice for lack of needed testimony.

Statutes of comity now authorize the domestic Court to require the deposition of any resident, for use in extra-State litigation. The rules for notice to the opponent are sometimes specially framed, sometimes the same as for depositions as ordinarily taken.[5]

(3) At common law, in England, the king's testimony as an individual seems to have been receivable without attendance for cross-examination, thus forming an exception to the Hearsay rule.[6] On the same principle it would seem that the testimony of a visiting sovereign or an ambassador (privileged from attendance under the principle of § 2372, post) should be receivable; nevertheless, no exception is recognized, i.e. the ambassador's testimony must be taken, if at all, in the form of a deposition subjected to cross-examination, — in criminal cases at least.[7]

§ 1384. Affidavits. Upon the principles already examined, it is perfectly clear that a mere affidavit — i.e. a statement made upon oath before an officer — is inadmissible:

St. 1920, §§ 6308–6309 (notice required; the Court to appoint a cross-examiner, where personal notice cannot be given).

[2] See the statutes in § 1388, post.

[3] Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, §§ 50, 62; and other States, supra, n. 1; 1840, Thacher, J., in Com. v. Stone, Thacher Cr. C. 604, 607 ("Why does the statute require that a deposition 'in perpetuam' should be recorded? It is to preserve its purity and integrity, as well as the testimony itself. The record is a publication and serves to make it known as well as remembered. If it should contain errors or falsehoods, the parties in interest will have an opportunity to guard against them in season, either by taking the deposition 'de novo', or by putting on record the deposition of others to contradict or explain its contents").

[4] 1814, Bradstreet v. Baldwin, 11 Mass. 229, 233; 1822, Braintree v. Hingham, 1 Pick. Mass. 245, 247; 1840, Com. v. Stone, Thacher Cr. C. Mass. 604, 607.

[5] The statutes have been placed post, § 2195 (power to compel attendance).

[6] The cases are collected post, § 1674.

[7] The cases are collected post, § 1407.

1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 241: "From what has been said, it is evident that, as there can be no cross-examination, a voluntary affidavit is no evidence between strangers."

1853, Common-Law Practice Commissioners, Second Report, p. 31: "All applications to the Courts for their summary intervention in what may be termed incidental matters are founded on testimony contained in affidavits. If resisted, the evidence in opposition is brought before the Court in the same manner. Now it must be admitted that this species of evidence is of all others the most unsatisfactory. All the circumstances which give to the system of English procedure its peculiar and characteristic merits—'viva voce' interrogation, cross-examination, publicity, examination in the presence of the tribunal, whereby an opportunity is afforded of observing the demeanor of the witness — are here wanting; and not only this, but the testimony is often not the spontaneous statement of the witness; the affidavit is prepared for and sworn to by the deponent, often without the sense of responsibility which would be felt by a witness when delivering a statement in his own words. Another very serious objection to affidavit-evidence is that there is no effectual mode of ascertaining the means of knowledge or the grounds on which general conclusions sworn to have been arrived at."

1851, GRIER, J., in Walsh v. Rogers, 13 How. 287 (referring to 'ex parte' depositions): "Testimony thus taken is liable to great abuse. At best it is calculated to elicit only such a partial statement of the truth as may have the effect of entire falsehood. The person who prepares the witness and examines him can generally have just so much or so little of the truth, or such a version of it, as will suit his case."

1870, THORNTON, J., in Becker v. Quigg, 54 Ill. 390, 394 (rejecting an affidavit to prove loss of a document): "One serious objection to the admission of 'ex parte' affidavits is that the opposite party is denied the privilege of cross-examination. This is a most efficacious test for the discovery of truth, and should never be departed from, except from necessity. A witness subjected to this test cannot easily impose on the Court or fabricate falsehood."

This principle has been constantly recognized and enforced judicially.[1]

There are, however, a number of instances (post, §§ 1709–1711) which form special exceptions to the Hearsay rule. They are briefly these: (1) a common-law exception for disqualified parties (when that form of incompetency prevailed), admitting the affidavit of the loss of a document proved by copy; this has been perpetuated in some statutes; (2) a common-law

§ 1384. [1] 1893, Allen v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 141, 145; 1691, R. v. Taylor, Skinner 403; 1898, Pickering v. Townsend, 118 Ala. 351, 23 So. 703; 1883, Smith v. Feltz, 42 Ark. 355, 357; 1899, People v. Plyer, 126 Cal. 379, 58 Pac. 904 (affidavit not admissible to prove death of former witness in order to use his testimony); 1908, Fender v. Ramsey, 131 Ga. 440, 62 S. E. 527; 1889, Shreve v. Cicero, 129 Ill. 226, 228, 21 N. E. 815 (affidavit of inspection of registry of deeds, excluded); 1871, State v. Felter, 32 Ia. 49, 51; 1893, Hudson v. Appleton, 87 Ia. 605, 607, 54 N. W. 462 (even where the affiant has become ill and mentally incompetent); 1894, Democrat P. Co. v. Lewis, 90 Ia. 304, 57 N. W. 869 (affidavits usable before a certain board, here excluded); 1866, Patterson v. Fagan, 38 Mo. 70, 82; 1909, McCabe v. State, 85 Nebr. 278, 122 N. W. 893 (illegal sale of liquor; the search-warrant and return, including the sworn complaint before the county court by L. who did not testify on the trial, was admitted; held erroneous); 1898, Supreme Lodge v. Jaggers, 62 N. J. L. 96, 40 Atl. 783; 1845, Harper v. Burrow, 6 Ired. N. C. 33; 1906, People v. Wolf, 183 N. Y. 464, 76 N. E. 592 (affidavits forming a criminal information against the defendant); 1913, U. S. v. Escondo, 25 P. I. 579 (municipal official's affidavit as to a tax being unpaid, excluded); 1901, People v. Fernandez, 14 P. R. 611, 621, 1909, State v. Weil, 83 S. C. 478, 65 S. E. 634 (illegal liquor-selling; record of an injunction-case against the defendant, containing affidavits, held improperly admitted).

Distinguish the following: 1889, Graham v. McReynolds, 88 Tenn. 240, 247, 12 S. W. 547 (affidavit by plaintiff, offered as ratifying attorney's action in prosecuting suit; admitted).

Distinguish also the use of the opponent's affidavit as an admission (ante, § 1075).

exception in Pennsylvania for an affidavit of a copy of a foreign register, in certain cases; (3) a statutory exception, widely in favor, for an affidavit of publication of a newspaper notice; (4) statutory exceptions in sundry unrelated cases. The use of affidavits in interlocutory and 'ex parte' proceedings is (ante § 4) not within the present purview, which is confined to adversary proceedings in the nature of common-law trials.

Statutes providing for the right to cross-examine affiants, thus making them the equivalent of depositions, are considered ante, § 1382.

§ 1385. Preliminary Rulings on 'Voir Dire'; Testimony by an Opponent; Ex Parte Expert Investigations; Expert Reading his Prepared Report. (1) In preliminary rulings by a judge on the admissibility of evidence, the ordinary rules of evidence do not apply (ante, § 4). Hence there is no absolute right to cross-examination.[1] Nevertheless, it is customary and proper to hear evidence on both sides before the ruling is made. Some Courts, however, are inclined erroneously to apply the specific right of cross-examination to that situation.[2]

(2) The interrogation of an opponent, by way of discovery (post, § 1856), is in itself in the nature of a cross-examination, and secures all the benefits of it. But the manner and subject of the interrogatories may be limited by the rule against impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 916), when the opponent is examined by deposition or on the stand like other witnesses. By the same rule, the interrogation of even an ordinary witness may be restricted (ante, §§ 910-915); and this question is sometimes loosely and improperly referred to as involving the general "right to cross-examine", as if that right were not recognized. So, also, the same improper phrase is sometimes applied to the rule forbidding to deal with the subject of one's own case on cross-examination (post, § 1885).[3]

(3) Of late years, the fallacious suggestion has sometimes been made by unreflecting counsel that the rule requiring an opportunity of cross-examination applies to forbid the use of a diagram or model or map, or of a chemical analysis or other expert investigation, prepared or made out of court without notice to the other party. The suggestion is erroneous, for the reason that there is afforded in such cases the required opportunity of cross-examination, namely, when the witness who has made the model or the analysis takes the stand at the trial to testify to the results of his work. No more can be demanded. The map or model or analysis is not in itself testimony (ante, § 793); it is nothing until adopted by a competent witness as a part of his testimony and a mode of communication. One might as well demand that an opportunity of cross-examination be had at the time of the occurrence of § 1385. [1] 1868, Com. v. Morrell, 99 Mass. 542, 543; 1895, Com. v. Hall, 164 Mass. 152, 14 N. E. 133.

[2] Compare the citations ante, § 487 (qualifications of witnesses), § 861 (confessions), § 1258 (documentary originals), post, § 1451 (dying declarations), § 2550 (judge and jury).

[3] Distinguish also the question whether there is a right of cross-examination on an affidavit denying common source of title in ejectment; here the affidavit is really only a sworn pleading: 1884, Thatcher v. Olmstead, 110 Ill. 26 ("an oath of this character is not evidence").

an affray, or at the time that a witness is collecting his thoughts in the anteroom, or doing any other act in preparation for testimony. The suggestion in question has been universally and properly repudiated by the Courts:[4]

1886, HENRY, C. J., in State v. Leabo, 89 Mo. 274, 253, 1 S. W. 288 (examination of corpse by experts): "There is but a slight, if any, analogy between the examination by an expert or any one else of physical objects with a view of testifying to the result of his observations, and the deposition of a witness, as regards notice; the notice in the latter case is required in order that the opposite side may have an opportunity to cross-examine the deponent upon the facts testified to by him; the expert, when he comes to testify, is subject to that cross-examination."

1894, Burg v. R. Co., 90 Ia. 106, 118, 57 N. W. 680: "It is not the law that in making such tests, measurements, etc., the opposite party is entitled to notice in order that he may be present. It is the right of each party, in the preparation for trial, to take all legal steps in the way of being able to meet the issues of fact by proofs; and in preparing for the presentation of his evidence, no notice to the adverse party is required."

No doubt a part of the notion leading to the making of such an objection is the distrust which must be felt for testimony coming from one who has been employed as a partisan and must therefore have been interested to reach results of a certain tenor. But this element in the objection is in truth directed, not against the absence of notice and cross-examination, but against the competency of a hired and partisan expert witness.[5] Since to-day no in-

[4] Federal: 1898, Day v. U. S., 30 C. C. A. 572, 87 Fed. 125 (witnesses who had examined certain horses, though not for the express purpose of determining their satisfaction of a contract, admitted); Colo. 1891, Graves' Trial, Colo., 13 Amer. St. Tr. 256, 320 (murder by poisoned whisky sent in the mails); Georgia: 1881, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Dorsey, 68 Ga. 234 (model prepared 'ex parte', admissible); Iowa: 1894, Burg v. R. Co., 90 Ia. 106, 118 (quoted supra); Mississippi: 1906, Lenoir v. People's Bank, 87 Miss. 559, 40 So. 5 (maps and surveys testified to by the surveyor, taken in a survey made with the notice provided in Code 1892, § 1653, admitted); Missouri: 1886, State v. Leabo, 89 Mo. 247, 253, 1 S. W. 288 (quoted supra); 1887, State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 579, 5 S. W. 257, 330 (similar); North Carolina: 1881, State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 756, 760 (notice to a defendant, not necessary; here, a witness who had examined boot-tracks; to admit the opposite contention "is to put an end to all inquiry into the commission of offences depending upon the introduction of circumstantial evidence"); 1887, State v. Whitacre, 98 N. C. 753, 3 S. E. 488 (diagrams made 'ex parte', received); Rhode Island: 1903, State v. Nagle, 25 R. I. 105, 54 Atl. 1063 (expert's experiments with a pistol); Tennessee: 1885, Lipes v. State, 15 Lea 125 (testimony from witnesses who examined the defendant's feet for the express purpose of seeing whether they fitted tracks, admissible); 1886, Mississippi & T. R. Co. v. Ayres, 16 Lea 725, 727 (expert examination 'ex parte' of an injured person, made 'pendente lite', admissible; that "the evidence of an expert is rendered incompetent because based upon an 'ex parte' examination", repudiated); 1894, Byers v. Railroad, 94 Tenn. 345, 352, 29 S. W. 128 (test made 'ex parte' as to the time required for stopping a train, admitted; preceding cases approved); 1896, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (examination of the deceased by two physicians called to him just after the affray; that this was done without notice to defendant, is no objection); Washington: 1902, Moran Bros. Co. v. Snoqualmie F. P. Co., 29 Wash. 292, 69 Pac. 759 (model of a regulator-box for a power-plant); Wisconsin: 1901, Mauch v. Hartford, 112 Wis. 40, 87 N. W. 816 (X-ray photograph); 1902, Hayes v. State, 112 Wis. 304, 87 N. W. 1076 (exhumation and post-mortem examination).

Contra: 1903, Wood v. LeBlanc, 35 N. Br. 47, 56, by two judges among seven (a witness using a plan to illustrate his testimony should prepare it in court, not before trial; this is unsound).

For the use of an 'ex parte' surveyor's return, under statute, see post, § 1665.

[5] It is this consideration which was had in mind by Messrs. Wharton & Stillé, Medical Jurisprudence, § 1246, in a passage which was probably the original source of the objection in question. The influence of the Wharton passage can be seen in counsel's argument in Graves' Trial, supra, n. 1.

terest can disqualify, the objection fails in this aspect also.[6] How best to obtain impartial experts is another question (ante, § 563).

But note that where the abolition of a privilege or the prevention of unfair surprise is involved, by permitting one party to inspect the opponent's documents, premises, or person, it may in such case be a fair requirement that the inspection shall not be 'ex parte', i.e. that the other party shall have notice and an opportunity to secure the presence of witnesses (post, §§ 1845, 2220, 2221).

(4) Reading a report prepared beforehand. So long as the witness is at the trial subject to cross-examination, there can be no possible objection, on the present principle, to the form of delivering his testimony. In particular, he may read a report prepared beforehand.[7] The report's statements themselves were indeed not subjected to cross-examination at the time of their competition; but they are now subject to it, and that is enough. The case is the same as though the witness should give an uninterrupted oral narrative for his direct examination, being afterwards subjected to cross-examination. Whether a witness delivers his direct testimony with or without interrogation by the party calling him, is merely a matter of the mode of narration (ante, § 787), and does not affect the present principle.

In view of the speed, lucidity, and general satisfaction, which is often to be obtained, especially with expert witnesses, on matters of science, this form of testimony should be encouraged.[8]

[6] 1898, Sanborn, J., in Day v. U. S., 30 U. S. App. 572, 87 Fed. 125: "The measure of the competency of a witness is not the view or purpose with which he obtained his information but the extent and character of the knowledge he obtained. The question is not why he obtained his knowledge, but what amount of knowledge he acquired."

For a consideration of the propriety of reform in the system of expert witnesses, see ante, § 563. For the rule of notice to the opponent for evidence in general, see post, § 1845.

Compare ante, § 4*a* (applicability of the rules of Evidence to administrative tribunals).

[7] 1920, Butler v. State, 17 Ala. App. 511, 85 So. 864 (embezzlement; under Code 1907, § 547, amended St. 1911, p. 492, providing that "Reports of examiners of public accounts shall be 'prima facie' evidence of what they charge", the report of the examiner was introduced in evidence, the examiner himself being also called; held that the constitutional provision entitling to confrontation by witnesses was satisfied, "for the reason that the author and writer of the report in question did appear and testify as a witness, and the report, if not otherwise objectionable, could properly be admitted in evidence in connection with the testimony of the examiner"); 1872, Townsend v. Radcliffe, 63 Ill. 1 (survey to fix a boundary by a commission, under St. 1869, § 2; the statute provided that the commission of surveyors should report its survey and plot to the Court, and should incorporate testimony taken by them; the report was objected to for violation of the due process principle by the statute; Lawrence, C. J., for the Court, held that the report was not conclusive, but was "simply a piece of evidence", and that a trial of the issue by jury must be had; but that by the correct construction of the Act, no more than this was meant; incidentally the Court assumes it perfectly sound that "the surveyors can be appointed . . . and make their report", and that "the survey could be received in evidence only in connection with and as a part of the testimony given by one or all of the commissioners as witnesses").

[8] Compare the following uses of it, sanctioned by statute in other connections:

Admitting a certificate of analysis, etc., by a State chemist, etc., and calling him for cross-examination if desired (post, § 1671);

Designating a physician to examine physically a claimant for workman's compensation, and receiving his report, subject to the right to call him for examination upon it (post, § 2220).

The judge calling a disinterested expert on insanity, and directing his report to be read (ante, § 563).

3. Issues and Parties, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination

§ 1386. General Principle: Issue and Parties must have been Substantially the Same. A testimonial statement may still not satisfy the Hearsay rule even where it has been made before a tribunal or officer at which there was cross-examination, or the opportunity, for the then opponent; because the cross-examination, for which there must have been an opportunity, must have been an adequate one. Unless the issues were then the same as they are when the former statement is offered, the cross-examination would not have been directed to the same material points of investigation, and therefore could not have been an adequate test for exposing inaccuracies and falsehoods. Unless, furthermore, the parties were the same in motive and interest, there is a similar inadequacy of opportunity, for the present opponent cannot be fairly required to abide by the possible omissions, negligence, or collusion of a different party, whose proper utilization of the opportunity he has no means of ascertaining:[1]

1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 68: "When you give in evidence any matter sworn at a former trial, it must be between the same parties, because otherwise you dispossess your adversary of the liberty to cross-examine."

1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 239: "A Deposition cannot be given in Evidence against any Person that was not a Party to the Suit; and the Reason is because he had not Liberty to cross-examine the Witness, and it is against natural Justice that a Man should be concluded by Proofs in a Cause to which he was not a Party."

1777, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., in Goodright v. Moss, Cowper, 592: "[As to] offering a deposition or an answer in evidence against a person not a party to the original suit. That cannot be done, for this reason, because such person has it not in his power to cross-examine."

1845, GILCHRIST, J., in Bailey v. Woods, 17 N. H. 372: "We do not understand that the admissibility of such evidence depends so much upon the particular character of the tribunal as upon other matters. If the testimony be given under oath in a judicial proceeding, in which the adverse litigant was a party and where he had a right to cross-examine and was legally called upon to do so, the great and ordinary tests of truth being no longer wanting, the testimony so given is admitted in any subsequent suit between the parties. It seems to depend rather upon the right to cross-examine than upon the precise nominal identity of the parties."

1856, BARTLEY, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 343: "The main reason for the exclusion of hearsay evidence is to be found in the want of the sanction of an oath, of legal authority requiring the statement, and an opportunity for cross-examination. Where these important tests of truth are not wanting, and the testimony of the statements of the deceased witness is offered on a subsequent trial between the same parties, touching the same subject-matter, and open to all the means of impeachment and objection to incompetency which might be taken if the deceased person could be present as a witness, there would not appear to be any sound and satisfactory ground for its exclusion."

1862, HINMAN, C. J., in Lane v. Brainerd, 30 Conn. 579: "As that was a trial between different parties, having different rights and with whom the plaintiff had no privity, and as he had no opportunity to examine or cross-examine the witnesses, it would be contrary to the first principles of justice to bind or in any way affect his interests by the evidence given on that occasion."

§ 1386. [1] For the mode of proving former testimony, by stenographers' notes, judges' reports, etc., see post, §§ 1666–1669.

For the rule that only the substance or a part need be proved, see post, §§ 2098, 2103, 2115.

§ 1387. Issue the Same. The issue on the occasion when the former testimony or deposition was given must have been substantially the same, for otherwise it cannot be supposed that the former statement was sufficiently tested by cross-examination upon the point now in issue. Conversely, it is sufficient if the issue was the same, or substantially so for the purpose.

The general rule in this shape is nowhere disputed. But there is naturally much variance shown in the strictness of its application in specific cases.[1]

§ 1387. [1] In the following list, those rulings which rest on complicated facts peculiar to the special case, or which merely apply the general rule to facts not stated, are noted without any detailed statement of the ruling:

ENGLAND: 1817, R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339 (testimony on charge of assault and robbery, admitted on a subsequent charge of murder for same act); 1834, Alderson, B., in Doe v. Foster, 1 A. & E. 791, note (ejectment for one piece of land, then for another, but the issue in both being the same, viz., who was A. B.'s heir; admissible); 1850, R. v. Ledbetter, 3 C. & K. 108 (testimony on a charge of assault, not received on a trial for felonious wounding, the act being the same; the ruling is in effect repudiated by later cases); 1852, R. v. Dilmore, 6 Cox Cr. 52 (testimony on a charge of felonious wounding, admitted on a charge of manslaughter for the same act); 1854, R. v. Beeston, 6 Cox Cr. 425, Dears. Cr. C. 405 (deposition on a charge of felonious wounding with intent to do bodily harm, admitted on a trial for murder, the act being the same; Jervis, C. J.: "The presiding judge must determine in each case whether the prisoner has had full opportunity of cross-examination; and if the charges were entirely different, he would not decide that there had been that opportunity; but where it is the same case, and only some technical difference in the charge, the accused generally has had full opportunity of cross-examining"; Alderson, B.: "The question really is whether the deposition was taken under such circumstances that the accused had full opportunity of cross-examination"); 1864, R. v. Lee, 4 F. & F. 63 (testimony on a charge of robbery, admitted on a charge of murder, the assault being the same); 1874, R. v. Castro (Tichborne Case), Charge of Cockburn, C. J., II, 305 (testimony in a civil case admitted at the trial of the then claimant for perjury at the former trial); 1876, Brown v. White, 24 W. Rep. 456, Jessel, M. R.; 1909, Edmunds' Case, 2 Cr. App. 257 (like R. v. Beeston, supra).

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 999 (testimony "at any former trial upon the same charge", admissible); Man. 1898, R. v. Hamilton, 12 Man. 354 (abortion: deposiposition taken "on another charge of the same purport and in connection with the same unlawful purpose", admitted); N. Br. 1862, Bennett v. Jones, 5 All. 342 (the issue being substantially the same, for board of the plaintiff's wife, her former testimony was admitted); 1896, Hovey v. Long, 33 N. Br. 462, 467 (testimony at a former trial between the same parties on the same issues, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1896, Seeley v. K. C. Star Co., 71 Fed. 554 (a deposition taken in a suit in a State court, not admissible after voluntary withdrawal of the suit and re-institution for the same cause of action and against the same party in the Federal court; going upon R. S. § 861, limiting the taking of depositions to causes "pending in a district or circuit court"; the Federal court here being bound to proceed under the Federal statute not sound; compare § 1381, ante); 1900, Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Gumby, 39 C. C. A. 455, 99 Fed. 192 (loss of services of plaintiff's son; testimony of deceased witness for the son in his former action by a guardian for his own injury, not admitted for the plaintiff here, the parties and issues being different); 1900, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Ross, 42 C. C. A. 601, 102 Fed. 722 (admitting a deposition lawfully taken in Texas, before removal of the cause, of a witness residing out of the county, though not under the Federal statute more than 100 miles distant; in the Federal court the witness' death afterwards made it admissible);
Alabama: 1850, Davis v. State, 17 Ala. 357 (testimony on a charge of larceny by stealing a mule, excluded on a charge of stealing a buggy; the act of taking being the same); 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 Ala. 801, 802 (former issue, plea in abatement in an action on a note; present issue, a plea to merits; admitted); 1905, Nordan v. State, 143 Ala. 13, 39 So. 406 (murder by abortion; testimony of the deceased, in a prior criminal prosecution against the defendant for the seduction, as to the handwriting of certain letters there and here offered, admitted, the particular issue being identical);
Arkansas: 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 32 S. W. 102; 1912, Fox v. State, 102 Ark. 393, 144 S. W. 516 (robbery of C. W., defendant being charged as accessory; on a former indictment of defendant as accessory to the murder of C. W., the robbery and the murder being parts of the same transaction by the same persons, the testimony of a now deceased witness was taken; admitted; sensible opinion by Hart, J.);
California: 1873, Pico v. Cuyas, 47 Cal. 174, 179; for the peculiar rule in this State as to testimony before the committing magistrate, see post, § 1398;

The situation is one that calls for common sense and liberality in the application of the rule, and not a narrow and pedantic illiberality. On the whole,

Colorado: 1902, Woodworth v. Gorsline, 30 Colo. 186, 69 Pac. 705 (testimony in replevin suit against a sheriff, held admissible in a subsequent action of trover for the same goods against the creditor jointly liable);
Connecticut: 1864, Spear v. Coon, 32 Conn. 292 (deposition used on petition for new trial, admissible on the new trail; the two are "parts of the same proceedings"); 1902, Mechanics' Bank v. Woodward, 74 Conn. 689, 51 Atl. 1084 (action for money paid to the defendant's use on notes forged by his wife; testimony at the prior trial of an action, founded on the same transaction, after which an amended complaint had been substituted for the present suit, held admissible); 1913, Atwood v. Atwood, 86 Conn. 579, 86 Atl. 29 (issues held substantially the same, on the facts);
Delaware: 1838, Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harringt. 448, 456 (issue out of probate 'devisavit vel non'; deposition taken on an application for review of a former issue on the same will, admitted);
Georgia: 1849, Crawford v. Word, 7 Ga. 445, 456; 1872, Gavan v. Ellsworth, 45 Ga. 283, 288 (former trial a criminal complaint for the same assault as the present civil action; admitted); 1881, Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Venable, 45 Ga. 697, 699 (former action, by a mother for personal injuries; present action, by a child for her death from those injuries; admitted); 1900, Whitaker v. Arnold, 110 Ga. 857, 36 S. E. 231; 1900. Hooper v. R. Co., 112 Ga. 96, 37 S. E. 165 (testimony in a suit for personal injury by a minor through his father as next friend, not admitted in a suit by the father for loss of service caused by the same injury); 1901, Radford v. R. Co. 113 Ga. 627, 39 S. E. 108 (answers to interrogatories in a former suit between the same parties for the same claim, but dismissed and now renewed, admitted);
Illinois: 1854, Doyle v. Wiley, 15 Ill. 576, 578 (depositions taken before amendment and filing of new bill, admitted); 1910, McInturff v. Insurance Co., 248 Ill. 92, 93 N. E. 369 (plaintiff's house was burned in March, 1908; later in 1908 the plaintiff and his wife were indicted for fraudulent arson, and B. at that trial testified for the prosecution; the accused were acquitted; the now plaintiff then shot and killed B.; afterwards the present suit was brought, and the testimony of B. formerly given on the criminal trial was offered for the defendant, on its plea of fraudulent arson; excluded; the decision is erroneous on principle because the issue in the two trials was precisely the same, and the parties were substantially the same; perhaps no precedent has gone as far as to admit in such a case; but the artificial application of the principle as in the present case would reduce the principle to dead wood; see an able critique of the case by Professor Henry C. Hall in the Illinois Law Review, VI. 136); 1914, Stephens v. Hoffman, 263 Ill. 197, 203, 104 N. E. 1090 (ejectment by successors of a testator; testimony of an absent witness in "one of the earlier ejectment suits between G. and the appellees herein", admitted); 1915, Hoffman v. Stephens, 269 Ill. 376, 109 N. E. 994 (similar);
Kansas: 1880, State v. Wilson, 24 Kan. 189, 194 (testimony on charge of assault with intent to kill B., admitted on trial for murder of B.);
Kentucky: 1820, Brooks v. Cannon, 2 A. K. Marsh. 525 (successive bills for the same cause; admitted); 1850, Heth v. Young, 11 B. Monr. 278, 280;
Maryland: 1808, Hopkins v. Stump, 2 H. & J. 301, 303 (depositions on a former dismissed bill for same cause and same parties, admitted); 1821, Bowie v. O'Neale, 5 H. & J. 226, 231; 1900, Baltimore Consol. R. Co. v. State, 91 Md. 506, 46 Atl. 1000 (the deponent being present and testifying at the first trial, the deposition was not used; when offered at the second trial, the deponent being absent, it was excluded, because "his deposition should be retaken for use at that trial, so that the opposing party may have the opportunity, at the execution of the second commission, to avail of the witness' antecedent admissions and contradictions [at the first trial]"; this is unpractical and over-refined reasoning; the opponent in such case can obtain the same benefit by proving the witness' testimony given at the first trial, or if that would be forbidden by the rule of § 1032, ante, he could himself have taken a second deposition to put the question);
Massachusetts: 1828, Melvin v. Whiting, 7 Pick. 81 (fishery controversy in both suits, but in the former a claim of free fishery, in the latter a claim of several fishery; excluded); 1871, Weatherby v. Brown, 106 Mass. 338 (deposition before amendment of declaration, admitted); 1908, McGivern v. Steele, 197 Mass. 164, 83 N. E. 405;
Minnesota: 1899, Watson v. R. Co., 76 Minn. 358, 79 N. W. 308 (death by wrongful act; issues after amendment held substantially the same);
Mississippi: 1902, Dukes v. State, 80 Miss. 353, 31 So. 744 (murder; testimony of the deceased at a prior trial for the robbery which resulted in the death, excluded; this ruling is over-strict);
Missouri: 1865, Jaccard v. Anderson, 37 Mo. 91, 95; 1920, Lampe v. St. Louis Brewing Co., 204 Mo. App. 373, 221 S. W. 447 (personal injury and death; same cause of action, but widow succeeding injured man as plaintiff; deposition admitted);
Nebraska: 1897, Ord v. Nash, 50 Nebr. 335, 69 N. W. 964 (testimony at any one of two or more prior trials, admissible);
New Hampshire: 1863, Leviston v. French, 45 N. H. 21; the judicial rulings show a liberal inclination to receive testimony already adequately tested; but there is yet room for much improvement.

A statute sometimes attempts to provide for the admission, under the present rule, of testimony at a former trial,[2] as well as of ordinary deposi-

New York: 1848, Osborn v. Bell, 5 Denio 370, 377 (implied assumpsit for goods tortiously seized and sold; testimony in a former action of trover by plaintiff's intestate for the same taking, admitted); 1904, Taft v. Little, 178 N. Y. 127, 70 N. E. 211 (a former trial, in which the case had been rested but no formal termination reached, owing to the referee's death, held sufficient under C. C. P. § 830); 1907, Shaw v. N. Y. Elev. R. Co., 187 N. Y. 186, 79 N. E. 984 (action to enjoin the operation of an elevated railroad; a deceased witness' testimony for the plaintiff at the first trial, admitted at the second trial against a party becoming a lessee after the first trial and brought in by stipulation as a defendant on the second trial; St. 1899, c. 352, p. 762, and St. 1893, c. 595, p. 1375, amending C. C. P. 1877, § 830, held not to affect this result, the testimony being admissible on common-law principles);
North Carolina: 1839, M'Morine v. Storey, 4 Dev. & B. 189 (testimony in D.'s action to recover slaves transferred to J., not admitted in an action by D.'s creditor against J.'s administrator as executor 'de son tort'); 1898, Mabe v. Mabe, 122 N. C. 552, 29 S. E. 843 (ejectment; deposition in another State between the same parties in a suit on a note for the price of the same land, the matters being "connected", received); 1917, Mechanics' Bank & T. Co. v. Whilden, 175 N. C. 52, 94 S. E. 723 (title to land);
North Dakota: 1919, Fosston Mfg. Co. v. Lemke, 44 N. D. 343, 175 N. W. 723 (deposition in another suit, having different issues and additional parties, excluded);
Oklahoma: 1897, Watkins v. U. S., 5 Okl. 729, 50 Pac. 88 (perjury; testimony in the civil cause in which the perjury was charged, excluded);
Oregon: 1914, State v. Von Klein, 71 Or. 159, 142 Pac. 549 (polygamy; the defendant, already married, then married N. and took her to a hotel, and after two days left her, taking her jewelry; the theft of the jewelry was alleged by the State as a motive for the fraudulent marriage; the defendant had already been tried for the larceny, and two witnesses who had testified to the facts of the larceny were now without the State; admissible; an enlightened decision);
Pennsylvania: 1851, Jones v. Wood, 16 Pa. 25, 43 (suits involving different land but the same boundaries; admitted); 1853, Wertz v. May, 21 Pa. 274, 279 (previous action terminated by a non-suit; admissible); 1860, Haupt v. Henninger, 37 Pa. 138, 140 (depositions taken for application to a judge in chancery, admissible in a feigned issue before jury on same point);
South Carolina: 1850, Bishop v. Tucker, 4 Rich. L. 178, 182; 1902, Oliver v. R. Co., 65 S. C. 1, 43 S. E. 307 (deposition at a first trial, admitted at the second; re-taking not required);
Texas: 1880, Dunlap v. State, 9 Tex. App. 179, 188 (testimony on charge of assault with intent to murder, admitted on trial for murder); 1901, People's N. Bank v. Mulkey, 94 Tex. 395, 60 S. W. 753 (depositions taken between the same parties, except one, in a prior suit on the same issue begun in a justice's court but dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, excluded, because the statute merely allowed their use "in any suit in which they are taken"; unsound);
Vermont: 1912, Lynch's Adm'r v. Murray, 86 Vt. 1, 83 Atl. 746 (fraudulent conveyance; issues held substantially the same, approving the text above);
Virginia: 1903, Reed & McCormick v. Gold, 102 Va. 307, 45 S. E. 868 (action by a receiver against delinquent stockholders of the corporation; testimony of a now deceased person in the prior chancery proceedings against the corporation, excluded, because the issues were not substantially the same);
Wisconsin: 1864, Charlesworth v. Tinker, 18 Wis. 633, 635 (testimony on a criminal complaint for assault, admitted against plaintiff in a civil action for same cause).

[2] Compare also the statutes cited post, §§ 1413, 1416, 1417, particularly for testimony in issues of wills and bastardy:

ENGLAND: 1883, Rules of Supreme Court, Order 37, Rule 25 ("All evidence taken at the hearing or trial of any cause or matter may be used in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause or matter").

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, Cr. C. § 1000 (depositions are admissible in a prosecution "for any other offence" by the same person in all respects as they might be "according to law" on the trial of the charge for which they were taken); Alta. Rules of Court 1914, No. 394 ("all evidence taken at the trial may be used in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause"); B. C. Rules of Court 1912, No. 506 ("all evidence taken at the hearing or trial of any cause or matter may be used in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause or matter"); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 26 (former testimony, admissible "between the same parties or those claiming under them"); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 33, R. 25 (former testimony may be used "in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause or matter"); N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, R. 287 (like N. Sc.

Ord. 35, R. 24); N. Sc. Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 24 (all testimony may be used "in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause or matter"); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 297 (like N. Sc. Ord. 35, R. 24).

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1920, June 4, amending Rev. St. § 1342 (Articles of War; Art. 25 permits the "record of the proceedings of a court of inquiry" to be read, with the consent of the accused, before a court-martial etc. "in any case not capital nor extending to the dismissal of an officer", but the exception does not apply to the defence);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 881, par. 7 (testimony at the preliminary hearing before a magistrate is admissible "upon any subsequent trial of such defendant for the offence for which he is held"); P. C. § 1052 (testimony of deceased, etc. witness at former criminal trial, reported by official stenographer, admissible "in any subsequent trial or proceeding had in the same cause"); P. C. § 753 (testimony before committing magistrate or deposition for the State; like Cal. P. C. § 686); Civ. C. § 1679 (former testimony receivable "in any subsequent trial of or proceeding had in the same cause"; quoted post, § 1413);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1870 (8) (testimony in a "former action between the same parties relating to the same matter", admissible); § 1316 (testimony at a probate is admissible "in any subsequent contests concerning the validity of the will or the sufficiency of the proof thereof"); P. C. 1872, § 686 ("In a criminal action the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the Court, except that, where the charge has been preliminary examined before a committing magistrate and the testimony taken down by question and answer in the presence of the defendant, who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses, or where the testimony of a witness on the part of the People, who is unable to give security for his appearance, has been taken conditionally in like manner in the presence", etc. as above, "the deposition of such a witness may be read" if dead, etc.; added in 1911, after constitutional amendment: "and except also that . . . the testimony on behalf of the People or the defendant of a witness deceased, insane, out of the jurisdiction, or who cannot with due diligence be found within the State, given on a former trial of the action in the presence of the defendant, who has either in person or by counsel cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, may be admitted"; for the history of this section, and the decisions interpreting its interim text before the amendment of 1911, see post, § 1398); St. 1905, c. 540, P. C. 1872, § 882 (admits depositions for the prosecution taken before a committing magistrate; quoted post, § 1411, n. 1);
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 1772 (irrigation; testimony taken "before any former referee", admissible on hearing before the referee for a decree of appropriation of water);
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1065 (on the death, etc. of a party, his testimony given at a trial may be used "in any trial or hearing in relation to the same subject-matter between the same parties or their legal representatives");
Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5735 ("in actions by or against the representatives of deceased persons, in which any trustee or receiver is an adverse party, the testimony of the deceased, relevant to the matter in issue, given at his examination, upon the application of said trustee or receiver, shall be received in evidence"); § 5723 (testimony "upon a former trial of said action", admissible);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2723, as amended by St. 1921, c. 8572, No. 177 (bill of exceptions in a civil case may be used to show former testimony "upon any subsequent trial or hearing of the case, or in any other civil cause or civil proceeding, as to any matter in issue at a previous trial or hearing"; otherwise, a stenographic report may be used if the opponent "or his privy was a party on the former trial", and "the issue is substantially the same");
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5773, P. C. § 1027 (former testimony, admissible if "upon substantially the same issue and between substantially the same parties");
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 7 (testimony at a preliminary probate; see post, § 1413; for decisions construing it, see post, § 1417); St. 1921, June 29, § 23, par. j (workmen's compensation; if the employee dies after a finding by the board, the testimony may be used, "in any subsequent proceeding" by his successor);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 1019, 1023 (written examination of complainant in bastardy before the justice may be used on the trial in Circuit Court); § 3168 (recorded testimony at probate of a will, admissible "upon any controversy concerning any lands devised by such will");
Iowa: St. 1898, p. 16, c. 9, § 1, Code Suppl. 1902, § 245*a*, Comp. Code § 7391 (quoted more fully post, § 1669, n. 2; notes of testimony are admissible "on any re-trial of the case or proceeding in which the same were taken", and "shall have the same force and effect as a deposition");
Kentucky: Stats. 1915, §§ 1019*a*, 4643 (former testimony admissible, in trial Court's discretion, "in any subsequent trial of the same [civil] case between the same parties"); § 1649*a* (real estate controversies; elaborate provisions for notice; the deposition to be evidence in any court having jurisdiction); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 135 (former testimony as to execution or acknowledgment tions, taken in the same or other proceedings,[3] and of depositions taken in of a deed, admissible in another civil cause, "involving the same question", if the parties are the same, or if one is the same and the present opponent was agent for the opponent in the former suit);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10531, par. 8 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870 (8));
Nevada: § 6855 (committing magistrate; like Cal. P. C. § 686);
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence, § 10 (on new trial in action revived after party's death, his former testimony is admissible); Evidence, § 11 (in a new trial of a civil action, the official stenographic report of the testimony of a witness who has since died is admissible);
New Mexico: St. 1919, Mar. 10, c. 29, § 7 (former testimony may be used "in any subsequent trial or hearing of the same issue between the same parties");
New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 348 (testimony of a party or witness, since deceased or insane or incompetent, "taken or read in evidence at the former trial or hearing or at the same trial or hearing may be given or read in evidence upon any subsequent trial or hearing of the same subject-matter in the same or another action or special proceeding between the same parties to such former trial or hearing or their legal representatives, by either party to such new trial or hearing", etc., etc.); St. 1912, c. 390, Apr. 15, adding § 221*b* to C. Cr. P. (official stenographic report of testimony before a committing magistrate, admissible);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4572 (committing magistrate; quoted ante, § 1375);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 727, par. 8 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870 (8));
Pennsylvania: St. 1887, May 23, § 3, Dig. 1920, § 8172, Crim. Procedure (testimony of deceased, etc. witness, taken when defendant was present and had opportunity to cross-examine, admissible on a subsequent trial "of the same criminal issue"); ib. § 9, Dig. § 21859, Witnesses (in a civil proceeding testimony of a deceased, etc. witness is admissible, if the now party opponent had opportunity to cross-examine, "in any civil issue which may exist at the time of his examination, or which may afterwards be formed between the same parties and involving the same subject-matter as that upon which the witness was examined");
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 8 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); C. C. P. 1901, § 364 (deposition may be read by either party "in any stage of the same action . . . or in any other action between the same parties about the same subject-matter"); Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15 (like Cal. P. C. § 686);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 6 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 8);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7205, 9277 (official stenographer's report may be read "in any subsequent trial of or proceeding had in the same cause"); § 8767 (testimony of witnesses released under bonds, when taken by committing magistrate, may be used at preliminary examination or at the trial "or both", as if the witnesses "were present in court and testifying"); St. 1919, Mar. 13, c. 36, amending Comp. L. § 1885 (city courts; official reporter's transcript of testimony of witness deceased, etc., may be read by either party "in any subsequent trial of or proceeding had in the same cause");
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1247 (testimony "given in a former action or proceeding, or in a former trial of the same cause or proceeding", if a civil one, "where it is between the same parties and relates to the same matter", is admissible);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4141*a* (deceased witness' testimony admissible "in any other action where the party against whom it is offered shall have had the opportunity to cross-examine the deceased witness and where the issue upon which it is offered is substantially the same").

[3] Compare also the statutes cited post, §§ 1411, 1416, 1417.

CANADA: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 111, § 263 (depositions taken "when the title to land shall be in question" may be read "in all future causes between the same parties or persons holding under them for the same land").

UNITED STATES: Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1490 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 852); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. §§ 1718, 1719 (depositions usable after discontinuance in another action for the same cause "between the same parties or their representatives", or on an appeal); P. C. § 753 (like Cal. P. C. § 686);
California: P. C. 1872, § 686 (quoted supra, note 2); C. C. P. 1872, § 2022 (deposition "in any other action between the same parties upon the same subject", admissible; amended in 1907 by inserting after "same parties", the words "or their privies or successors in interest");
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 379 (a deposition may be read "in any stage of the same action or proceeding");
Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5722 (any deposition in a civil action "may be used in another civil action between the same parties or their executors or administrators and upon the same cause of action");
Florida: G. S. 1919, § 2769 (a deposition is usable, after discontinuance or non-suit, in another suit "for the same cause between the same parties or their respective representatives", if it has remained on file);

perpetuam memoriam.[4] But it is worth noting that usually the effect of the Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2583 (deposition is admissible, after non-suit or discontinuance, in another suit "for the same cause between the same parties or their representatives"); § 3821 ("depositions taken in the preliminary or other investigation of any charge against any person may be read as evidence in the prosecution of the same or any other offence whatever, upon the like proof" as in the prosecution in which they were taken);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8022 (deposition duly filed may be used in another action, after dismissal, for the same cause, "between the parties or their assignees or representatives");
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 48 (all testimony taken by commissions of surveyors to establish corners "may be read in evidence in all suits in reference to said corners hereafter");
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 456 (when another action is "commenced for the same cause" after dismissal of the first, a deposition is usable "in the second or any other action between the parties, or their assignees or representatives, for the same cause");
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7259 (usable "in any stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action or proceeding upon the same matter between the same parties");
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 112, § 19 (after non-suit or discontinuance, depositions are usable in an action for the same cause between the same parties or their representatives);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 37 (after discontinuance or non-suit, depositions are usable in a later action "for the same cause between the same parties or their respective representatives");
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12500 (depositions are usable "on appeals and re-trials of the same cause of action");
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8396 (a filed deposition is usable when an action is discontinued or dismissed and another action for the same cause is afterward commenced between the same parties, or their respective representatives");
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10654 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2034);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8891 (a deposition is usable "in any stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action or proceeding, upon the same matter between the same parties");
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5457 (usable "in any stage of the same action or proceeding");
New York: C. P. A. 1921, § 303 (deposition may be used in any subsequent action "between the same parties or between any parties claiming under them or either of them in an individual or representative capacity, involving the same subject matter", with further details);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7901 (like Okl. Stats. § 623);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11540 (a deposition is usable "in any stage" of the action, "or in any other action or proceeding upon the same matter between the same parties"); St. 1913, Apr. 23, Gen. Code 1921, § 11540–1 (depositions taken by plaintiff in action for "damages by personal injuries may be read by the administrator", etc. "in any action for damages or wrongfully caused death resulting from the same personal injuries");
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 623 (admissible "in any stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action or proceeding upon the same matter between the same parties");
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 852 (deposition may be read "in the same action or proceeding or in any other action or proceeding between the same parties or their representatives upon the same subject");
Pennsylvania: St. 1814, Mar. 28, Dig. 1920, § 10287, Evidence (a deposition is usable in "any subsequent cause in which the same matter shall be in dispute between the same parties, their heirs", etc.);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2766 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 7901);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7182 (deposition may be read "in every stage of the same action or proceeding, or in any other action between the same parties, upon the same subject");
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1926 (on discontinuance by reason of death, depositions, not of parties, may be used in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their representatives involving the same subject-matter);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 2628 (for actions pending in the same court between the same parties "depending upon the same facts, or involving the same matter of controversy, in whole or in part", a deposition taken in one may be read in all);
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1246 (depositions are usable, after discontinuance or dismissal, in another action "for the same cause between the same parties, or their respective representatives"); § 1248 (depositions are usable on new trial on appeal and on change of venue);
West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 38 (provision for future trials, after appeal, etc.);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4093 (a deposition is usable "in any trial, inquiry, or assessment" in the action, and "in any other action between the same parties, including their respective legal representatives, involving the same controversy", if filed, etc.);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5844 (like Oh. Gen. Code Ann. § 11540).

[4] Compare the statutes cited post, § 1412, and the following:

common-law principle would be even broader than the statutes' terms, and would suffice to admit even where the case is not covered by the phraseology

CANADA: N. Sc. Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 35 (in proceedings in which the Attorney-General is made a party for the Crown, depositions 'in perpetuam' are admissible though the Crown was not a party to the action in which it was taken); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 56, § 134 (similar);

UNITED STATES: Federal: Code § 1368, Rev. St. 1878, § 867 ("Any court of the U. S. may, in its discretion, admit as evidence in any cause before it any deposition taken 'in perpetuam rei memoriam', which would be so admissible in a court of the State wherein such cause is pending, according to the laws thereof");
Alabama: Code 1907, § 4068 (admissible on trial "between the persons described in the affidavit as parties, actual or expectant, or their successors in interest");
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1522 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 886);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 1724 (usable "in any suit which may be hereafter instituted by or between any of the parties to the statement [affidavit] or those claiming under them");
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4245 (admissible on a trial "between the persons named on the affidavit as expected parties, or their successors in interest");
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2088 (usable "between the parties named in the petition as parties expectant, or their successors in interest, or between any parties wherein it may be material to establish the facts which such depositions prove");
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 405 (usable "if a trial be had between the parties named in the petition as parties expectant, or their successors in interest, or between any parties wherein it may be material to establish the facts which such depositions prove or tend to prove");
Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5719 (admissible in the cause for which they were taken and "in all other causes" with same subject-matter and with same parties or between heirs or representatives of petitioner and the other parties);
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3617 (boundary cases; notice to owners and tenants required; depositions usable "against the parties to the petition and their privies in any suit or controversy in which the bounds which they concern shall come in question");
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2763 (usable in suits "between the person at whose request it was taken and the persons named in the said written statement, or any of them, who were notified as aforesaid, or any persons claiming under either of the said parties, respectively, concerning the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement; or, if notice by advertisement hereinbefore provided for shall have been given, then between the person at whose request it was taken, or any person claiming under him, concerning the claim, title, or interest set forth in the statement, and any other person");
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 4558, 4560 (the Court is to provide "for the most effectual notice"; but testimony "may be used against all persons, whether parties to the proceeding or not");
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2588 (admissible in a trial "between the parties named in the petition or their privies or successors in interest touching the matter of controversy set forth in the petition");
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8056 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); § 8063 (depositions may be used "in any cause between the parties named in the affidavit or in any cause between persons claiming under either of said parties");
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 46 (admissible "in any case to which the same may relate"; "and parties notified 'as unknown owners' . . . shall be bound to the same extent as other parties");
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 462 (usable "in any cause between the parties named in the affidavit [for taking], or in any cause between persons claiming under either of said parties");
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4723, Comp. Code, § 7431 (usable on a trial "between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest");
Kansas: Gen. S. 1915, § 7239 (usable "if a trial be had between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest");
Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 611 (notice to the "expected adverse party" required; testimony usable in trial between the "expected parties or their representatives or successors");
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 112, § 25 (substantially like Minn. Gen. St. § 8404);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, §§ 59, 63 (deposition 'in perpetuam', taken "so that it may be used against all persons", according to the statutory mode, "may be used by the person at whose request it was taken, or by any person who claims under him, against any person whatever, in any action or process, wherein is brought in question the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement upon which the commission was founded"); c. 233, § 51 (deposition 'in perpetuam' taken on notice to persons interested may be used in an action "between the petitioner and the persons named in his application or any of those who were notified as aforesaid, or any person claiming under any of said persons, relative to the title, claim, or interest set forth in the application"); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8404 (deposition of the statute; i.e. the statute merely secures admissibility in certain instances, and is not intended to forbid admission in other instances.

It is to be noted that a deposition or former testimony, not offered as such, is not subject to this rule requiring identity of issues. Where the other testimony is offered, not as evidence of the truth of the facts asserted in it, but merely as an utterance having an indirect bearing, it is not hearsay (post, § 1789) and the ruling requiring cross-examination and identical issues does not apply.

'in perpetuam' usable "in any action, or proceeding wherein the title, claim, or interest, set forth in the statement under which it was taken is brought in question, by the applicant or any person notified of the taking thereof, or by any person claiming under either or any of them");
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1952, Hem. § 1612 (admissible "in any suit between the parties described in the written statement for procuring such testimony or their privies in interest");
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5491 (admissible "in any cause or judicial proceeding to which they relate, in favor of any parties thereto, or any or either of them, or his or their executors or administrators, heirs or assigns, or their legal representatives"); § 5508 (when taken to establish land-corners, admissible "in all cases to which they may relate");
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10691 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8933 (admissible on a trial "between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest");
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088);
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 226, § 9 (may be used in any cause where the matters concerned are in question);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2156 (admissible "in any cause or judicial proceeding to which they relate, in favor of any parties thereto, or any or either of them, or their executors or administrators, heirs or assigns, or their legal representatives");
New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 321 (in actions involving title to real property, depositions 'in perpetuam' may be read by any party against the person petitioning, or "each person to whom notice . . . was given", or "all persons claiming from, through, or under them or any of them");
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7931 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 12221 (admissible in a trial "between the parties named in the petition or their privies or successors in interest");
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 659 (admissible "if a trial be had between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest");
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 886 (usable on a trial "between the persons named in the petition as parties actual, expectant, or possible, or their representatives or successors in interest"; see Hill's Codes for different provisions in an unenacted statute of 1870);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 375 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088, adding, "whose interest was unknown to the party taking the deposition at the time of taking");
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2779 (like Okl. Stats. § 659);
Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5671, 5672, 5682 (notice to the "opposite party" required; admissible, "in any suit between the parties to the petition" or their "privies in interest");
Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3653 (usable "in any suit which may be thereafter instituted by or between any of the parties to the statement, or those claiming under them");
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7198 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1932 ("The deposition so taken and record, or a certified copy thereof, may be used by the person at whose request it was taken, or by any person claiming under him, against any person in an action or process wherein the title, claim or interest set forth in the affidavit is brought in question");
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1253 (usable on a trial "between the person at whose request the deposition was taken and the person named in the statement, or any of them, or their successors in interest");
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4121 (usable in an action "between the person at whose request it was taken and the persons named in the said written statement, or any of them, who were notified as aforesaid, or any person claiming under either of the said parties respectively concerning the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement"); § 4134 (deposition taken by special form of notice as against all persons "may be used by the person at whose request it was taken or by any person claiming under him against any person whatever in any action or proceeding wherein shall be brought in question the title, claim, or interest set forth in the statement");
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6311 (admissible on a trial "between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest").

(1) Thus, testimony in another cause may be proved in a trial for perjury so far as it indicates the materiality in that cause of testimony now charged to be perjured.[5]

(2) In an action for malicious prosecution, the testimony on the original prosecution is not admissible from that point of view, because it could not have served as "probable cause" before it was delivered; yet it would be admissible in the ordinary way as testimony at a former trial, provided the witness is deceased or otherwise unavailable, and this principle, so long as parties were disqualified in their own behalf, would always admit the defendant's own testimony given at the original trial.[6] A similar question arises where a surety or joint-tortfeasor sues principal or co-tortfeasor for contribution to a claim sued for and paid; here the testimony at the first trial may be received as a part of the record (even without showing the witnesses unavailable) to define the scope of the issue adjudged, but not as testimony to the facts.[7]

(3) Where the deposition or testimony embodies an admission by the opponent, it is not subject to the present rule.[8]

§ 1388. Parties or Privies the Same. It is commonly said that the parties to the litigation in which the testimony was first given must have been the same as in the litigation in which it is now offered.[1]

[5] 1893, People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 226, 32 Pac. 11 (because "all that was sought to be proven here was the mere fact that certain testimony had been given").

[6] The cases involve other distinctions, and are collected post, § 1417.

[7] 1896, Washington G. Co. v. District, 161 U. S. 316, 16 Sup. 564. 1906, Spokane v. Costello, 42 Wash. 182, 84 Pac. 652.

[8] Cases cited ante, § 1075; 1855, Williams v. Cheney, 3 Gray Mass. 215, 217, 220; 1909, State v. Longstreth, 19 N. D. 268, 121 N. W. 1114 (procuring an abortion; defendant's testimony in a suit by the woman for bastardy, admitted).

§ 1388. [1] In the following list, rulings of no service as precedents have not been stated in detail; statutes dealing additionally with the subject have been placed in the notes to the preceding section:

ENGLAND: 1664, Terwit v. Gresham, Freem. Ch. 184, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 227, Cas. Ch. 73 (depositions in former cause on same subject, admitted, though the parties did not claim under the former parties, but "the tertenants were then parties"); 1669, Rushworth v. Pembroke, Hardr. 472 (tenant and lord of manor, in respective suits; excluded); 1868, Coke v. Fountain, 1 Vern. 413 (depositions in action against father, not read against son not claiming as heir); 1695, Bath v. Bathersea, 5 Mod. 9 (depositions in former suit against plaintiff by other parties, admitted "because the defendant shelters himself under the other's title"); 1702, Lord Peterborough v. Duchess of Norfolk, 1 Vern. 264, 3 Brown P. C. 539, 545, semble (depositions against a tenant for life, not usable against a reversioner or remainder-man); 1703, Nevil v. Johnson, 2 Vern. 447 (depositions on bill of testator's creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyance, read upon legatees' bill for same cause against same grantees); 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203 (see note 4, infra); 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, in App. to Le Marchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 410 (issue of legitimacy: testimony under bill to perpetuate, filed in 1640, excluded; inadmissible "in any cause in which the parties were not the same parties as the parties in the cause in Chancery, or did not claim under some or one of them"); 1826, Pratt v. Barker, 1 Sim. 1, 5 (depositions not read against parties afterwards joined); 1826, Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440, 445 (tenant for life and remainder-man as privies; not decided as to this point); 1826, Goodenough v. Alway, 2 Sim. & St. 481; 1827, Williams v. Broadhead, 1 Sim. 151; 1834, Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3 (see note 2, infra); 1834, Doe v. Derby, 1 A. & E. 783, 786; 1836, Atkins v. Humphreys, 1 Moo. & Rob. 523 (see note 6, infra); 1836, Humphreys v. Pensam, 1 Myl. & C. 580, 586 (see note 6, infra); 1852, Hulin v. Powell, 3 C. & K. 323 (admitting testimony formerly given for the defendant R. in a suit for the same land by the same plaintiff against R., whose expenses were paid by the present defendant, also a claimant; Williams, J., "The admissibility of depositions in cases of this kind does not depend on mere technical grounds; and one question is,

But this limitation suffers in practice many modifications; and properly so, for it is not a strict and necessary deduction from the principle. At

Had the lessor of the plaintiff an opportunity of cross-examining the witness? He certainly had, and I see no fair reason for supposing that the cross-examination would have been to a different effect, whether the lessor of the plaintiff knew or did not know whether Mr. P. was the real defendant"); 1866, Morgan v. Nicholl, L. R. 2 C. P. 117 (see note 3, infra); 1881, Llanover v. Homfray, L. R. 19 Ch. D. 229; 1894, Printing Tel. & C. Co. v. Drucker, 2 Q. B. 801 (action for capital-instalments; plea, false representations inducing to become a shareholder; testimony in a similar action by the same plaintiff against another person pleading the same defence, excluded).

CANADA: 1877, Domville v. Ferguson, 17 N. Br. 40, semble (successive actions against agent and principal for wrongful detention of goods; the principal's testimony in the first suit, held admissible in the second); 1900, Carte v. Dennis, 5 N. W. Terr. 32, 40 (an examination of a defendant, on discovery, is admissible against a co-defendant if the latter has had an opportunity of cross-examination; here a rule of Court applied in part); 1894, Walkerton v. Erdman, 20 Ont. App. 444, 23 Can. Sup. 352 (action for injuries in a ditch, the defendants being a municipal corporation and H.; the deceased person's deposition was taken, after notice to the former defendant only, and the action was abated by death, and renewed by his representative under the statute; held, by three judges to two, that the deposition was admissible against the former defendant, because the testimony related to an issue of claim the same in substance, and because the judgment might be rendered against the former defendant only; good opinion by King, J.).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1821, Bondereau v. Montgomery, 4 Wash. C. C. 186 (five heirs as parties in one action, and all, about one hundred, in the present action; excluded); 1832, Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. 328, 340; 1851, Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 307, 335 (one co-plaintiff in former suit now lacking; admitted); 1917, Mathieson v. Craven, D. C. Del., 247 Fed. 223 (bill to distribute an estate; Mr. & Mrs. B. having intervened as co-complainants, on condition that prior testimony be admissible as against them, held that this addition of parties plaintiff did not prevent the prior testimony from being used as against the defendant); 1918, Anderson v. Hultberg, 8th C. C. A., 247 Fed. 273 (testimony at a prior trial before arbitrators concerning the same title, where she was neither party nor privy, excluded); 1918, Virginia & W. Va. Coal Co. v. Charles, D. C. W. D. Va., 251 Fed. 83, 116 (chain of title; various depositions in an ejectment suit of 1878, passed upon);

Alabama: 1847, Holman v. Bank, 12 Ala. 369, 408; 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 Ala. 801, 802 (former party deceased, represented here by administrator; admitted); 1850, Clealand v. Huie, 18 Ala. 347 (similar); 1883, Goodlett v. Kelly, 74 Ala. 219 (in the former suit the present parties were reversed, except that a now defendant K., transferee of the others, was not then a party; admitted); 1886, Turnley v. Hanna, 82 Ala. 139, 143, 2 So. 483; 1896, Wells v. Mge. Co., 109 Ala. 430, 20 So. 136 (defendant administrator succeeded by administrator d. b. n., and a new claimant added as defendant after revivor of the bill; testimony in the preceding stage admitted against them); 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 Ala. 455, 22 So. 149 (the plaintiff acted in the one suit individually, in the other as executrix; admitted); 1901, Simmons v. State, 129 Ala. 41, 29 So. 929 (testimony at a trial of another person for the same offence, excluded); 1919, Julian v. Woolbert, 202 Ala. 530, 81 So. 32 (bill for accounting; testimony taken before a revivor by an administrator, held admissible);

California: 1887, Fredericks v. Judah, 73 Cal. 604, 608, 15 Pac. 305 (former party executrix, present party heir; admitted); 1889, Marshall v. Hancock, 80 Cal. 82, 85, 22 Pac. 61; 1889, Briggs v. Briggs, 80 Cal. 253, 22 Pac. 334 (present party claiming under deed of gift of former party; admitted); 1897, Lyons v. Marcher, 119 Cal. 382, 51 Pac. 559 (action by L. against F. A. M. and C. A. M.; deposition in former suit by L. against F. A. M., C. A. M., D. L. M., and A. E. M., offered by L., excluded; ruling not sound); 1898, McDonald v. Cutter, 120 Cal. 44, 52 Pac. 120; 1899, Wolters v. Rossi, 126 Cal. 644, 59 Pac. 143 (actions consolidated by Court order; depositions in each mutually admissible);

Connecticut: 1907, In re Durant, 80 Conn. 140, 67 Atl. 497 (disbarment; a deceased witness' testimony before a bar association grievance committee on charges against the now respondent, admitted; "the requirement of identity of parties is only a means to an end; . . . the issues were substantially the same, and nothing more is necessary in that regard", per Prentice, J.; approving the above text);

Delaware: 1866, Dawson v. Smith, 3 Houst. 335, 340;

Georgia: 1878, Haslam v. Campbell, 60 Ga. 650, 654; 1881, Hughes v. Clark, 67 Ga. 19, 23; 1881, Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Venable, 67 Ga. 697, 699 (former party, a mother suing for personal injuries; present party, her child suing for her death from those injuries; admitted);

Illinois: 1857, Wade v. King, 19 Ill. 301, 308 (successors in interest; admitted); 1864, first sight, indeed, it seems fair enough to argue even that a person against whom former testimony is now offered should have to be satisfied with such

Goodrich v. Hanson, 33 Ill. 498, 508 (former party, an agent pleading property in principal, in replevin; present party, the principal suing in trover; admitted); 1871, Hutchings v. Corgan, 57 Ill. 71 (intestate and administrator are privies); 1911, London Guarantee & A. Co. v. American Cereal Co., 251 Ill. 123, 95 N. E. 1064 ("both actions must involve the same issue between the same parties or their privies", and the fact that the now opponent "was a party to the former action and had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness does not necessarily render the testimony admissible"; thus adhering to the reactionary ruling in McInturff v. Ins. Co., supra, § 1387; here applied to a suit involving the liability of an independent contractor on the facts, the testimony was emphatically such as would have been admitted by any procedure founded on good sense); 1914, Stephens v. Hoffman, 263 Ill. 197, 104 N. E. 1090 (ejectment; former testimony in an ejectment suit between present opponents and offeror's predecessor in title, admitted);

Indiana: 1876, Indianapolis & S. L. R. Co. v. Stout, 53 Ind. 158 (deceased and representative on privies); 1912, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Huffman, 177 Ind. 126, 97 N. E. 434 (H. sued in a State court for personal injury caused by the defendant; the cause was removed to the Federal court; H. died, and his administratrix was substituted; the cause was dismissed, and a suit for H.'s death was begun in a State court; the deposition of H. at the former trial was admitted as against the defendant; but not as against the defendant's agent, who had not been a party to the former suit);

Iowa: 1869, Shaul v. Brown, 28 Ia. 37, 50; 1884, Atkins v. Anderson, 63 Ia. 739, 743, 19 N. W. 323 (former party the assignor of present party; admitted); 1897, Krueger v. Sylvester, 100 Ia. 647, 69 N. W. 1059 (assault and battery; testimony on a prior criminal charge, of assault with intent to commit bodily injury, for the same act, admitted; "the admissibility of such evidence seems to turn on the right to cross-examine, rather than on the precise identity of the parties"); 1897, Brown v. Zachary, 102 Ia. 433, 71 N. W. 413 (deposition taken before opponent's joinder as party, excluded); 1897, State v. Smith, 102 Ia. 656, 72 N. W. 279 (former charge of murder against T.; the testimony of a deceased witness there offered by the State, now received from this defendant to prove the circumstances of the same killing); 1905, Hunter v. District Court, 126 Ia. 357, 102 N. W. 156 (contempt; testimony in a similar charge against an accomplice, excluded); 1906, Wiltsey's Will, 135 Ia. 430, 109 N. W. 776 (testimony at a former probate proceeding for the same will, with parties slightly different in form, admitted under Code Suppl. 1902, § 245*a*, cited ante, § 1387);

Kentucky: 1830, Arderry v. Com., 3 J. J. Marsh. 183; 1871, Kerr v. Gibson, 8 Bush 129 (new party joined by amendment; deposition not admitted as to him); 1895, Oliver v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 32 S. W. 759 (excluding, in an action by a wife, joining husband, for personal injuries, a deposition taken in a former action by the husband for loss of service by the same injuries; Lewis, J.: "While reason for the rule mentioned does not exist to the same extent as if there had been different occurrences or transactions, we can very well see how disregard of it by the Court might have taken defendant by surprise, and deprived it of the advantage of developing, on cross-examination, admissions and confessions of the wife it was not permitted to show in the other suit"); 1905, Andricus' Adm'r v. Pineville Coal Co., 121 Ky. 724, 90 S. W. 233 (two fellow-workmen killed at the same time and place by the same cause, and two actions by the same person their administrator against the same defendant; a deposition taken in one, admitted in the other); 1919, Robertson v. Robertson's Adm'r, 185 Ky. 503, 214 S. W. 972 (original action dismissed without prejudice and revived in the name of the original plaintiff's administrator; deposition admitted);

Louisiana: 1826, Hennen v. Monro, 4 Mart. N. s. 449, 451 (action by a shipper against a vessel owner for general-average contribution; in a prior action for loss of the goods in question charging the defendant as carrier, defendant had succeeded; testimony of deceased and absent witnesses at that trial was now offered and admitted); 1901, State v. N. O. Waterworks Co., 107 La. 1, 31 So. 395 (excessive water-rates; testimony at a former suit, brought by private persons on the same contract proceeded upon by the State in the case at bar, and involving the same issues, admitted);

Maryland: 1843, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 1 Gill 66, 83 (proponent deceased, and administrator not then made a party; a deposition taken then on behalf of that side, though with notice insufficient under St. 1828, c. 165, the deposition not being taken by "either party");

Massachusetts: 1843, Warren v. Nichols, 6 Metc. 261 (general principle stated); 1873, Yale v. Comstock, 112 Mass. 268 (transferee and transferor of land are privies);

Michigan: 1902, Waterhouse v. Waterhouse, 130 Mich. 89, 89 N. W. 585 (testimony in a former trial, one of the then parties in interest being now only a next friend; excluded); 1912, Ecsley Light & P. Co. v. Commonwealth cross-examination as any other person whatever, in another suit, may have chosen to employ. And it is entirely settled that in some such cases he must

P. Co., 172 Mich. 78, 137 N. W. 663 (water-power dam; testimony about the same river's history, in a suit between different parties, on a different issue, excluded);
Minnesota: 1890, Lougee v. Bray, 42 Minn. 323, 44 N. W. 194 (H. and B. coming in by separate pleas as intervenors, but tendering the same issue, a deposition taken by H. was admitted for B.); 1904, Edgerly's Estate, — Minn. —, 99 N. W. 896 (deposition not admitted against one not a party); 1916, Palon v. Great Northern R. Co., 135 Minn. 154, 160 N. W. 670 (personal injury of a child by wrongful act; in the father's action as guardian for the boy's injuries, B. testified but since deceased; in the father's own action for loss of the boy's services, B.'s former testimony was received; approving the text above);
Mississippi: 1877, Strickland v. Hudson, 55 Miss. 235, 241;
Missouri: 1870, Parsons v. Parsons, 45 Mo. 265 (discontinued suit by son against father, revived against latter's widow: admitted); 1872, Coughlin v. Hanessler, 50 Mo. 126; 1879, Adams v. Raigner, 69 Mo. 363 (successor in title; admitted); 1879, Breeden v. Feurt, 70 Mo. 624 (administrator reviving intestate's suit; admitted); 1917, Harrell v. Harrell, — Mo. —, 186 S. W. 677 (repudiating the principle of mutuality, and approving the text above, par. (b)); 1920, Lampe v. St. Louis Brewing Co., 204 Mo. App. 373, 221 S. W. 447 (personal injury; Harrell v. Harrell followed);
Montana: 1909, O'Meara v. McDermott, 40 Mont. 38, 104 Pac. 1049 (testimony in another suit, involving the same parties, admitted; "precise nominal identity of all the parties is not necessary");
Nebraska: 1870, Holmes v. Boydston, 1 Nebr. 346, 354 (depositions taken before amendment by adding former partners as plaintiffs, admitted);
New Hampshire: 1858, Orr v. Hadley, 36 N. H. 580; 1917, Morrison v. Noone, 78 N. H. 338, 100 Atl. 45 (right of flowage);
New York: 1806, Jackson v. Bailey, 2 John. 20 (general principle); 1818, Jackson v. Lawson, 15 John. 544; 1829, Jackson v. Crissey, 3 Wend. 252 (transferee of land, held not privies); 1880, Wood v. Swift, 81 N. Y. 31 (testimony taken before referee before compulsory joining of new party opponent, not admitted against him, even though liberty to re-cross-examine had been allowed; clearly erroneous);
North Carolina: 1884, Bryan v. Malloy, 90 N. C. 508, 510; 1891, Stewart v. Rossiter, 108 N. C. 588, 591, 13 S. E. 234;
North Dakota: 1903, Persons v. Smith, 12 N. D. 403, 97 N. W. 551 (testimony between the same parties on the same issues in the Federal Circuit Court, admitted);
Ohio: 1884, Bryan v. O'Connor, 41 Oh. St. 368, 372 (depositions not admissible against parties brought in after the taking); 1891, McClaskey v. Barr, 47 Fed. 155, 165 (deposition of life-tenant, taken to show ownership of fee, admitted under Ohio statute in partition-suit to show identity of co-tenants out of possession);
Pennsylvania: 1824, Watson v. Gilday, 11 S. & R. 342; 1827, Walker v. Walker, 16 S. & R. 379, 381 (depositions in suit against one only of present defendants holding by separate title, not admitted against the other); 1828, M'Cully v. Barr, 17 S. & R. 445, 451; 1839, Cooper v. Smith, 8 Watts 536, 539 (ejectment against successor in interest; admissible); 1861, Wright v. Cumpsty, 41 Pa. 111; 1882, Galbraith v. Zimmerman, 100 Pa. 374, 376 (former party represented by heirs; admitted);
Philippine Islands: 1916, U. S. v. Remigio, 35 P. I. 719 (testimony at a co-defendant's trial, delivered once, the defendant being present but declining to cross-examine because claiming a separate trial, held improperly admitted); 1915, U. S. Conception, 31 P. I. 183 (opium offence; defendant's husband's testimony in prior trial for the same offence, excluded);
Rhode Island: 1915, Lyon v. Rhode Island Co., 38 R. I. 252, 94 Atl. 893 (father and daughter were injured in the same collision; the daughter's suit by next friend was tried, and H. testified therein; then the father sued for his personal injuries; H. having died, his testimony was offered at this trial; the father was the next friend, and the same counsel acted at both trials; admitted, approving the above text and In re Durant, Conn.);
South Carolina: 1847, Mathews v. Colburn, 1 Strobh. 269; 1903, State v. Milam, 65 S. C. 321, 43 S. E. 677 (trial of M., followed by a second trial of M. & McC., for the same offence; testimony of a deceased witness at the first trial, held admissible, as against M., though not as against McC.); 1905, Martin v. Ragsdale, 71 S. C. 67, 50 S. E. 671 (former testimony in 1882 in a suit between the present plaintiffs and a remote assignor of defendants on the same subject, admitted);
South Dakota: 1896, Smith v. Hawley, 8 S. D. 363, 66 N. W. 942; 1897, Salmer v. Lathrop, 10 S. D. 216, 72 N. W. 570 (deposition taken by the plaintiff; the addition before trial of two nominal plaintiffs, held not to prevent its use against the defendant);
Vermont: 1918, Vermont Fruit Co. v. Wilson, 92 Vt. 112, 102 Atl. 1044 (contract, by trustee process, or garnishment proceedings; deposition in prior proceedings, admitted on the facts; liberal opinion by Miles, J.);
Virginia: 1799, Rowe v. Smith, 1 Call 487; West Virginia: 1902, Miller v. Gillispie, 54 W. Va. 450, 46 S. E. 451 (deposition taken by be satisfied, namely, in cases where the other person was a privy in interest with the present party. The reason for such cases is that there the interest to sift the testimony thoroughly was the same for the other person as for the present person. The principle, then, is that where the interest of the person was calculated to induce equally as thorough a testing by cross-examination, then the present opponent has had adequate protection for the same end. Thus, the requirement of identity of parties is after all only an incident or corollary of the requirement as to identity of issue. It ought, then, to be sufficient to inquire whether the former testimony was given upon such an issue that the party-opponent in that case had the same interest and motive in his cross-examination that the present opponent has; and the determination of this ought to be left entirely to the trial judge.

Nevertheless the Courts have not, in name at least, often gone so far as to accept so broad a principle.

(1) It is well settled that the former testimony is receivable if the difference of parties consists merely in a difference of nominal parties only, or in an addition or subtraction on either side of parties not now concerned with the testimony.[2]

(2) It is well settled that the former testimony is receivable if the then party-opponent, though a different person, had the same property-interest that the present opponent has.

The application of this doctrine is usually thought to involve a resort to the technicalities of the substantive law determining privity in interest. It is, of course, often necessary to consider to some extent the rules of substantive law defendant in a creditor's suit to avoid a conveyance, not usable against another creditor in a suit to avoid the same conveyance); 1916, Pfeiffer v. Chicago & M. El. R. Co., 163 Wis. 317, 156 N. W. 952 (W. and P. while riding together were respectively injured and killed at a railroad crossing; W. brought suit and testified; P.'s administrator now sues, and offers W.'s testimony given at the trial of the other case, W. being apparently deceased; held not admissible under Stats. § 4141 a; unsound); 1916, Illinois Steel Co. v. Muza, 164 Wis. 325, 159 N. W. 908 (title to land, and adverse possession; testimony of M. and others, received, in an action against the same defendant for other land, held admissible against the now plaintiffs, the issue being substantially the same, and the party having had the same interest and motive and opportunity to cross-examine fully; "we are now convinced that we erred in construing this statute in the Pfeiffer Case, and . . . it is overruled").

The statute making survivors incompetent to testify against deceased opponents may have bearing here; see Speyerer v. Bennett, 79 Pa. 445; for the effect of such disqualification on the use of the survivor's former testimony, see post, § 1409.

How far the use of a judgment between other parties is allowable (particularly, a conviction of a principal against an accessory) is not a question of evidence (as noted ante, § 1347).

[2] For example: 1834, Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3 (T. claimed against W. as heir of J. M., while W. claimed under a will of J. M. T. first filed a bill in Chancery against W. and three others, and evidence was taken on an issue framed at law in which W. was plaintiff. Then T. brought an ejectment action against W., in which John Doe was the nominal plaintiff. It was held, when the testimony of a deceased witness B. at the former trial was offered in the second action, that (1) the nominal difference in the parties on T.'s side, and (2) the addition of three new parties on W.'s side, could not prevent the use of the testimony as between T. and W.; Tindal, C. J.: "Mr. T., the lessor of the plaintiff in this action, had precisely the same power of objecting to the competency of B., the same right of cross-examination, and of calling witnesses to discredit or contradict his testimony, on the former trial, as he would have had if Mr. W. had been the sole plaintiff in that suit or as he would have had now if B. had been alive and subpœnaed as a witness").

that may be pertinent to show the interest of the prior party; for example, where the prior opponent was the present opponent's intestate or grantor, one cannot determine that the interests are sufficiently the same without considering the law of Property. But it does not follow that the rules of Property should be resorted to as affording mechanically a solution of the question in Evidence. That question is merely whether a thorough and adequate cross-examination has been had. It is conceivable that, by an excessively strict application of the rule, only a prior cross-examination by the very same party, with the same counsel, might have been deemed sufficient (ante, § 1371). So pedantic a strictness could not be maintained; but such relaxation as is conceded must be made with a sole view to the substantial fulfilment of the principle involved, and not with a view to any extrinsic and unrelated rules. Whether the test of the Evidence-principle would or would not in a given instance lead to the same result as the Property-rule is immaterial. There is no necessary dependence of the former upon the latter. The latter should be kept in its place, and should be the servant, not the master, of the principle of Evidence. In spite of all this, there is an unfortunate judicial inclination to reverse the true relations of the rules, and to ignore the living principle of evidence while resorting to the doctrines of substantive law to obtain a merely mechanical rule for solution. Two aspects of this tendency may be noticed:

(a) It is sometimes said, for example, that "the same rule applies as in cases of res judicata and estoppel";[3] it is asked whether the present opponent is "bound" by the former proceeding;[4] and the niceties of property-law are frequently investigated in order to ascertain whether the prior opponent held by a title precisely coincident with the present opponent's. Now, this resort to extraneous rules is, for the reasons above suggested, fallacious in theory and misleading in practice. In Morgan v. Nicholl,[5] for example, it is perfectly apparent that the son in the prior suit was a person having precisely the same interest to litigate as the present father, and therefore that the son's cross-examination would have been an adequate one; although the judgment against the son could not, by the rules of 'res judicata,' bind the father. Again, in litigation by a tenant for life, involving only the validity of a will or of a prior grant, it is clear that nothing will turn on the precise quantity of his estate, and that his cross-examination to the points in dispute will be adequate to justify the use of the testimony against the remainderman in his subsequent litigation involving the same issue; yet the judgment against one would not bind the other because the one does not claim under the other. Again, there is no privity between the parties to a criminal prosecution and a civil action for the same injury; yet testimony given at the former ought to be admitted in the latter. It is thus apparent that the proper application of the principle of evidence cannot be mechanically restricted by the rules of judgments and land-titles.

[3] 1866, Morgan v. Nicholl, L. R. 2 C. P. 117 (the plaintiff's son, supposing the plaintiff dead and claiming as heir, had brought an action of ejectment for the same property against the defendant's father, now dead; testimony at the former trial was rejected; Erle, C. J.: "The present plaintiff is for this purpose as distinct a person from his son as a perfect stranger; he does not in any way claim through him, and he cannot be injured by anything his son may have done at a former trial").

[4] 1747, Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203 (bill by creditors against T. L. and his daughter M. L., charging fraud in pretending that an estate in his daughter M. L.'s name was bought with her money, not his; the examination of the daughter M. L., as a witness in bankruptcy proceedings against T. L. shortly before was rejected because "M. L. is not at all bound by the proceedings in a commission of bankruptcy against T. L.").

[5] Note 3, supra.

(b) Again, proceeding upon the same fallacious notion, it is sometimes said that there must be "reciprocity" or "mutuality", i.e. that former testimony, already cross-examined by B, cannot now be offered by A against B unless B could now have offered it against A.[6] But for this there is not a shadow of justification. The sole question is whether B has had an adequate opportunity by cross-examination to sift this testimony; this, by hypothesis, he has had; and so the rule is satisfied. It is quite immaterial whether A would have been able to object (for example, because he came afterwards into the suit) to its use against him; the testimony is not offered against A, but by A; and the whole object of the present rule is to protect the opponent against whom the testimony is offered, i.e. B, and B has already been thus protected. To exclude the testimony against B, who has been protected, because A, who does not need or want protection, has not been protected, is as absurd as it would be to forbid A to use against B a witness disqualified for B by interest, on the ground that A could have objected to B's production of the witness on B's behalf, — which no one ever thought of maintaining. The fallacious doctrines of the foregoing limitations have been properly criticised in the following passage:

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. XII (Bowring's ed. vol. VII, p. 171): "Another curious rule is, that, as a judgment is not evidence against a stranger, the contrary judgment shall not be evidence for him. If the rule itself is a curious one, the reason given for it is still more so: 'Nobody can take benefit by a verdict, who had not been prejudiced by it, had it gone contrary': a maxim which one would suppose to have found its way from the gaming-table to the bench. If a party be benefited by one throw of the dice, he will, if the rules of fair play are observed, be prejudiced by another; but that the consequence should hold when applied to justice, is not equally clear."

The rulings in the different jurisdictions exhibit varying degrees of liberality; and naturally the result depends much on the facts of the particular case.

[6] 1836, Atkins v. Humphreys, 1 Moo. & Rob. 523 (whether a conveyance to A. S. or partner was 'bone fide' as against the defendants interested in the grantor's estate; in a suit by A. S. against these defendants to set aside the conveyance, depositions taken by A. S. had been used by these defendants; held, that the now plaintiffs, assignees of A. S.'s firm, could not use them, because "there is no reciprocity"); 1836, Humphreys v. Pensam, 1 Myl. & C. 580, 586 (same litigation; same ruling by L. C. Cottenham, but here the plaintiffs are said to be the assignees of only one A. C., one of the partners of A. S.); 1835, Norris v. Monen, 3 Watts Pa. 470 (Huston, J.: "Certain other heirs of J. N. had brought a former ejectment against the present defendant to recover their respective shares. . . . The present defendant could not use depositions taken in that cause against the present plaintiffs, for they had no oportunity to cross-examine, and it must be reciprocal"); 1821, Bourdereau v. Montgomery, 4 Wash. C. C. 186.

This doctrine goes back a long distance: 1669, Rushworth v. Pembroke, Hardr. 472.

§ 1389. Deposition used by Either Party; Opponent's Use of a Deposition taken but not read. It has sometimes been thought — perhaps under the influence of the preceding fallacies — that where the party taking a deposition has not chosen to put it in as evidence, the opponent, against whom it was taken, is not at liberty to do so.[1] So far as the present principle is concerned, there is no support for this prohibition.

The chief reliance of the few Courts that enforce it seems to be an opinion weighted with the great name of Chief Justice Shaw:

1837, SHAW, C. J., in Dana v. Underwood, 19 Pick. 99, 104: "Where one party takes a deposition, it is at his option to use it or not, as he thinks fit; and it has been held that, where a deposition taken by one party is returned and filed, and the party taking it does not think proper to use it, it cannot be read by the other party without consent. One reason for this, among others, is obvious: the parties are under very different rules in the mode of putting their questions to a deponent. The taker is restrained from asking leading questions; the adverse party may put a leading question. A party may try the experiment of taking the deposition of a person known to be a willing witness for the other side, or, believing that he is favorable to his own side, finds the contrary in the progress of the examination; the adverse party, finding him a willing witness on his side, puts leading questions and gets out answers which he could not do if he were his own witness; now if this deposition, instead of being used at the option of a taker, may be used by the adverse party without and against his [the taker's] consent, it would be wholly reversing the rules of examination and going counter to the reasons on which those rules were established. . . . The strong, and in our judgment the decisive objection, is, the party would be allowed to introduce a deponent as his own witness whom he has had the right to cross-examine and the adverse party has not."

The answers to this argument are not difficult to discover: (1) The vital assumption of the above opinion is incorrect, namely, that leading questions would have been forbidden to the taker of the deposition; for it is well settled (ante, §§ 773, 774) that, if the deponent had proved to be an unwilling or hostile witness, the taker could have put leading questions. (2) The objection stated in the opinion, even if it were correctly stated, would apply equally to one calling a hostile witness to the stand; yet no one supposes that in such a case the calling party, on discovering the witness' hostility, could withdraw him and compel the opponent to call him; so that, on the theory of the above opinion, a party taking a deposition would be given a peculiar advantage in suppressing testimony, which he would not have if he called the same witness to the stand. (3) Finally, the whole notion of cross-examination refers to one's right to probe the statements of an opponent's witness, not one's own witness; thus, if A has taken X's deposition or called X to the stand, and B has cross-examined, it is not for A to object that he has not had the benefit of cross-examination; that benefit was not intended for him nor needed by him; it was intended only to protect against an opponent's witness, who would be otherwise unexamined by A; and if A has had the benefit of examining a witness called on his own behalf, he has had all that he needs, and the right to probe by cross-examination is B's, not A's.

§ 1389. [1] Accord: 1889, Anderson v. State, 89 Ala. 12, 7 So. 429 (in criminal cases, against the accused; here the deposition had been taken but not used by him); 1854, Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345, 351 (opponent's deposition not usable because "he may be taken at a disadvantage, because he was restrained from putting leading questions on his examination in chief, and . . . could not impeach or discredit them"); 1908, Western Union T. Co. v. Hanley, 85 Ark. 263, 107 S. W. 1168 (rule of Sexton v. Brock not applicable to deposition taken by agreement of parties); 1908, Ong Chair Co. v. Cook, 85 Ark. 390, 108 S. W. 203 (following Sexton v. Brock); 1912, McDonald v. Brown, 90 Nebr. 676, 134 N. W. 263 (examination of bastardy complainant); 1854, Norvell v. Oury, 13 Tex. 31 (excluded, where no cross-interrogatories had been filed, under a statute allowing either party to use "all depositions where cross-interrogatories have been filed and answered"); 1856, Harris v. Leavitt, 16 Tex. 340, 343 (similar).

In the following passages the correct doctrine is vindicated:[2]

[2] Such is the result now practically everywhere accepted; in most jurisdictions a statute expressly so provides:

ENGLAND: 1825, M'Intyre v. Layard, Ry. & Moo. 203 (plaintiff allowed to use answers to interrogatories on a commission, given by defendant's witnesses but not put in by defendant; but the ruling was apparently with hesitation); 1836, Procter v. Lainson, 7 C. & P. 629 (Abinger, L. C. B.: "Under a judge's order, they are examined as much for one side as the other").

CANADA: Man. 1908, Richardson v. McMillan, 18 Man. 359 (and the taker need not put it in).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1809, Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cr. 335, 343 (defendant objected to plaintiff using defendant's deposition because defendant had not given plaintiff proper notice; Marshall, C. J.: "The admission of notice by the plaintiff is certainly sufficient, if notice to him was necessary"); Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 4068, 4072 (for depositions 'in perp. mem.'); 1846, Stewart v. Hood, 10 Ala. 600, 607 (see quotation supra); 1903, Curtis v. Parker, 136 Ala. 217, 33 So. 935; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1488 (like Or. Laws, § 850); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. §§ 1249, 1261 (in criminal cases, for depositions taken by accused); Civ. C. § 1712 (in civil cases); P. C. § 881, par. 7 (testimony before committing magistrate); California: P. C. 1872, §§ 1345, 1362; C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2022, 2038, 2088; Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 378 (usable by either party "against any party giving or receiving the notice"); § 405 (depositions 'in perpetuam', usable by either party); Hawaii: Civil Rev. L. 1915, § 2588 (depositions 'in perpetuam'); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 8056, 9150, 9165; Illinois: 1877, Adams v. Russell, 85 Ill. 284, 287 ("unless he obtains leave before the trial and withdraws it"); Indiana: 1872, Woodruff v. Garner, 39 Ind. 246, semble (the non-taker, after reading the deposition, allowed to introduce another taken by himself from the same witness); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4723 Comp. Code, § 7431 (for 'in perpetuam memoriam' depositions); 1849, Nash v. State, 2 Greene 286, 298 (accused's depositions allowed to be used by the prosecution; here prescribed by statute, but also independently decided as a constitutional question); 1854, Crick v. McClintic, 4 Greene 290; 1859, Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Ia. 1, 21; 1862, Wheeler v. Smith, 13 Ia. 564; 1876, Hale v. Gibbs, 43 Ia. 380, 382; 1884, Brown v. Byam, 65 Ia. 374, 21 N. W. 684; 1885, Citizens' Bank v. Rhutasel, 67 Ia. 316, 319, 25 N. W. 261; Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7295 (depositions 'in perp. mem.'); 1887, Rucker v. Reid, 36 Kan. 468, 13 Pac. 741; Kentucky: 1817, Rogers v. Barnett, 4 Bibb 480 (objection that a deposition was taken at the instance of the appellant, the party not using it, overruled); 1850, Young v. Wood, 11 B. Monr. 123, 134 (same ruling); 1861, Musick v. Ray, 3 Metc. 427, 431; 1869 Weil v. Silverstone, 6 Bush 698, 700; 1871, Sullivan v. Norris, 8 Bush 519, 520; 1903, St. Bernard Coal Co. v. Southard, — Ky. —, 76 S. W. 167; 1907, Chesapeake Stone Co. v. Fossett, — Ky. —, 100 S. W. 825; Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 617 (civil cases); Maine: 1837, Polleys v. Ins. Co., 14 Me. 141, 147, 153 (by a majority; a deposition left on file after the first term may be read by the opponent); Massachusetts: 1852, Linfield v. O. C. R. Co., 10 Cush. 562, 570 (the non-taker may compel the reading of the answers to a deposition taken but not used by the opponent; unless, the deposition having been taken for the purpose of meeting the testimony of an opposing witness who is after all not introduced, the taker has given prior notice of his conditional purpose); Michigan: 1905, McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211, 102 N. W. 668 (by Circuit Court Rule 41 a); Minnesota: 1886, Smith v. Capital Bank, 34 Minn. 436, 26 N. W. 234 (even under a stipulation "to be introduced . . . on behalf of said" party taking it); Missouri: Rev. L. 1919, § 5491 (depositions 'in perpetuam'); 1846, Greene v. Chickering, 10 Mo. 109, 111 (deposition filed may be read by the opponent); 1862, McClintock v. Curd, 32 Mo. 411, 417 (nor is notice required); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10650, 10653, 10691 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2022, 2038, 2088); §§ 12197, 12212 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1362); Nebraska: 1883, Converse v. Meyer, 13 Nebr. 190, 15 N. W. 340; 1901, Ulrich v. McConaughey, 63 Nebr. 10, 88 N. W. 150; 1901, Hamilton B. S. Co. v. Milliken, 62 Nebr. 116, 86 N. W. 913; Ne-

1822, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Gordon v. Little, 8 S. & R. 532, 548: "I do not perceive the force of this distinction between plaintiff and defendant. When the deposition is taken it ought to be filed; it is not the property of the party on whose behalf it was taken; nor has he any right to withhold it. But it often happens that the party at whose instance it was taken finds himself mistaken and the testimony proves to be unfavorable to him; in such case the adverse party has a right to make use of it [subject only to the condition of showing the witness personally unavailable]."

1846, GOLDTHWAITE, J., in Stewart v. Hood, 10 Ala. 600, 607: "The question, then, comes to this: Can the adverse party, who has cross-examined, use the deposition taken at the instance of the other party? We do not well see what reasonable objection there is to such a course. If the witness was examined in open court, it is very certain we should never hear the objection of interest from the party offering him; and there certainly is no good to result from a practice which will permit a party first to ascertain by actual examination what a witness will swear, and then admit or exclude him at pleasure."

1849, WILLIAMS, C. J., in Nash v. State, 2 Greene Ia. 286, 298: "Has he [the accused] been denied the benefit of this right [of confrontation of the witness]? The testimony was of his own procurement. The witnesses were selected by himself, and he propounded the questions which were answered by them. At his instance the depositions were returned and filed in the court, as a part of the case for hearing and in order to sustain his defence on the issue joined. The evidence, if relevant and material, was in possession of the Court by his own act. . . . When filed, it was in the custody of the Court as evidence in the case. We cannot see under the circumstances how a moral wrong or injustice in fact was done to the prisoner."

1895, TORRANCE, J., in Ansonia v. Cooper, 66 Conn. 184, 33 Atl. 905: "In most cases, depositions are taken for the purpose of being used by the party taking them. The cases where they are not so used are comparatively few in number; but in such cases, if the right to use the depositions be denied to the adverse party, it may work a great hardship vada: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5456, 5457, 5463, 5470, 6977; New Hampshire: 1914, Taylor v. Thomas, 77 N. H. 410, 92 Atl. 740 (overruling George v. Fisk, 32 N. H. 32); 1921, Highland v. Hines, — N. H. —, 116 Atl. 347 (death by wrongful act; depositions of defendant's employees, taken but not used by plaintiff, allowed to be used by defendant; statutory provisions examined); New Jersey: 1903, Wallace M. & Co. v. Leber, 60 N. J. L. 312, 55 Atl. 475; New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2140; New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 348 (testimony at a former trial may be read "by either party"); C. Cr. P. 1881, §§ 631, 657; North Carolina: 1805, Collier v. Jeffreys, 2 Hayw. 400; 1880, Strudwick v. Broadnax, 83 N. C. 401, 404; North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7931 ('in perpetuam'); §§ 11048, 11062 (criminal cases); St. 1917, Mar. 8, c. 110 (personal injury cases, 'in perpetuam'); 1902, First Nat'l Bank v. Minneapolis & N. E. Co., 11 N. D. 280, 91 N. W. 436 (statute applied); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, §§ 2851, 2865 (depositions taken for accused); Oregon: Laws 1920, §§ 850, 886; 1902, Tobin v. Portland F. M. Co., 41 Or. 269, 68 Pac. 743; Pennsylvania: 1822, Gordon v. Little, 8 S. & R. 532, 548; 1867, O'Connor v. American I. M. Co. 56 Pa. 234, 238; Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 360 (depositions), § 375 ('in perp. mem.'); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 6469, 6484 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1362); § 1504, 1512 (civil cases); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 29; South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2779, 5015, 5029 ('in perpetuam'); §§ 8818, 8832 (criminal cases); Tennessee: 1872, Brandon v. Mullenix, 11 Heisk. 446, 449; 1897, Saunders v. R. Co., 99 Tenn. 130, 41 S. W. 1031; Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 817, 818 (accused's depositions, taken not on the ground of non-residence or age or infirmity, cannot be used by him except after giving his consent "that the entire evidence or statement of the witness may be used against him by the State on the trial"); § 3675 ("When cross-interrogatories have been filed and answered", either party may use the depositions); compare the earlier Texas citations, supra, note 1; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7168, 7182, 7198, 9307; so also for former testimony: §§ 7205, 9277; St. 1919, Mar. 13, c. 36, amending Comp. L. § 1885 (city courts, former testimony); Virginia: Code 1919, § 6233; 1826, M'Mahon v. Spangler, 4 Rand. 51, 56, semble; Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1244; West Virginia: Code 1914, 1891, c. 130, § 37; 1869, Echols v. Staunton, 3 W. Va. 574, 578; Wisconsin: 1862, Juneau Bank v. McSpedon, 15 Wis. 696 (good opinion by Paine, J.); 1873, Hazelton v. Union Bank, 32 Wis. 34, 44; Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6311 (depositions 'in perpetuam').

and injustice. It will seldom be known in advance of the actual trial whether the party taking the depositions does or does not intend to use them, and, when it is known that he will not use them, it will usually be too late for the adverse party to avail himself of the testimony of the deponents in any way, although he may have relied on that testimony in support of his case. If this right be denied to the adverse party, it will in very many cases necessitate the taking of two sets of depositions of the same witnesses, involving a useless expenditure of time and money. We see no good reason why this should be done at least, not in cases like the present, where the depositions were filed with the clerk, in whose custody they must, by statute, remain, unless suppressed by the Court, until final judgment in the cause."

But the propriety of allowing the non-taker's use of the deposition, so far as the present principle is concerned, must be distinguished from the propriety of allowing its use with reference to wholly distinct rules of Evidence. The contrariety of rulings on the subject is chiefly due to the circumstance that different results may be reached according as one or another rule of Evidence is being invoked. There are, besides the present rule, three others which may have to be considered:

(a) The rule of Confrontation (post, § 1395) requires the deponent to be produced in person, if he can be, and this rule applies as well to the non-taker as to the taker of the deposition; so that, before using it, the non-taker must show that the deponent is deceased or otherwise unavailable.[3]

(b) The deponent may be disqualified by interest as a witness for the non-taker; in that case, it is necessary to inquire whether the taker, by the mere taking without using, has so made the deponent his own witness that he is barred from objecting to the deponent's disqualification for the non-taker; this involves the whole doctrine of impeaching one's own witness, and has been already dealt with elsewhere (ante, §§ 909, 913).

(c) The non-taker may offer the deposition, not as the testimony of the deponent (i.e. from the present point of view), but as an assertion adopted by the taker and made his own by using it on a former occasion, i.e. as an admission by the party taking it and then using it; in this view the limitations of the present subject — as to parties, issues, cross-examination — disappear entirely, and the only question is whether the taker's former use of the deposition has been such that he can fairly be said to have adopted its statements as his own. This is a question of Admissions, dealt with elsewhere (ante, § 1075).[4]

(d) Where a party's deposition is taken by the opponent, and the party has now deceased, the present opponent has of course had the benefit of a cross-examination; hence, if the party's successor (the non-taker) desires to use the

[3] The authorities are collected in § 1416, post.

[4] Moreover, such use of a deposition by the non-taker does not authorize the use of testimony contained in the deposition but not in itself admissible: 1832, Wilson v. Calvert, 5 Sim. 194 (deposition taken by the plaintiff but not used by him, not admitted for the defendant, because it concerned a conversation of the defendant which was usable as an admission against him but not in his favor); 1880, Forbes v. Snyder, 94 Ill. 374, 378.

For the prohibition against the opponent's using a cross-examination when the direct examination has been excluded, see post, § 1893.

For the rule about putting in the whole of a deposition, see post, §§ 2103, 2115.

deposition, he has only to satisfy the principle of Confrontation, and the party's death excuses him from this; hence he may use the deposition, though it is that of his own predecessor.[5]

4. Conduct of the Cross-examination itself, as affecting Opportunity of Cross-examination

§ 1390. Failure of Cross-examination: (1) Through the Witness' Death or Illness. There may have been an adequate opportunity of cross-examination (ante, § 1371), so far as depends upon the nature of the tribunal or the state of the issues and parties; yet the required opportunity may nevertheless practically have failed, through circumstances connected with the conduct of the examination.

These circumstances may be distinguished under six heads: (1) the witness' death or illness intervening to prevent or curtail cross-examination; (2) the witness' refusal to answer on cross-examination or the party's prevention of his answer; (3) the witness' answering the direct examination "non-responsively", i.e. without dealing with the subject of the question; (4) the framing of the direct examination so as to prevent adequate cross-examination; (5) the lack of interpretation of testimony of an alien, etc.; (6) sundry circumstances preventing adequate cross-examination.

(1) Where the witness' death or lasting illness would not have intervened to prevent cross-examination but for the voluntary act of the witness himself or the party offering him—as, by a postponement or other interruption brought about immediately after the direct examination, it seems clear that the direct testimony must be struck out.[1] Upon the same principle, the same result

[5] Accord: 1896, Moore v. Palmer, 14 Wash. 134, 44 Pac. 142, semble (cited post, § 1416). Contra: 1910, Johnson v. Birket, 21 Ont. L. R. 319 (the plaintiff in an action for money paid was examined on discovery by defendant before trial; she died ten months later; her executor on the trial offered her examination; held inadmissible; unsound; the opinion does not appreciate that the plaintiff's answers were testimony, and therefore inevitably fall within the present principle); 1913, Cartwright v. Toronto, 29 Ont. L. R. 73, 13 D. L. R. 604 (like Johnson v. Birket, 21 Ont. L. R. 319; plaintiff's predecessor in title died, having been examined on discovery by defendant; held, that plaintiff could not offer his answers as a deposition, unless defendant had used some portion; opinion shows the same unsound theory as to discovery-answers); 1914, Cartwright v. Toronto, 20 D. L. R. 189, Can. Sup. (same case on appeal; same decision; "these rules are statutory and must be restricted to the provisions of the statute"; unsound).

In Louisiana, however, the party-opponent's answers to interrogatories of discovery are treated as part of the pleadings, like an answer in chancery, and hence are admissible for himself on the trial, even though not offered by the party interrogating: 1921, Wilkin-Hale State Bank v. Tucker, 148 La. 980, 88 So. 239 (citing precedents).

§ 1390. [1] 1918, Kemble v. Lyons, 184 Ia. 804, 169 N. W. 117 (direct examination being had on Saturday, Oct. 21, and cross-examination having just begun at the time of adjournment to Monday, the party calling the witness applied on Monday for a continuance; no further examination was had, and the witness died in the interval; former testimony held not admissible for the party calling); 1880, Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 361, 4 N. W. 13 (at the former trial, the examination of the witness had been stopped just before cross-examination, in order that the party offering might put on another witness; but the former witness died shortly after and before an opportunity for cross-examination was had; Graves, J.: "There was here no such opportunity [to cross-examine], and the want of it was caused by the claimant [the party offering], and the estate was in no way answerable for it", and the testimony was excluded); 1844, Forrest v. Kissam, 7 Hill N. Y. 470.

should follow where the illness is but temporary and the offering party might have reproduced the witness for cross-examination before the end of the trial.[2] But, where the death or illness prevents cross-examination under such circumstances that no responsibility of any sort can be attributed to either the witness or his party, it seems harsh measure to strike out all that has been obtained on the direct examination. Nevertheless, principle requires in strictness nothing less. The true solution would be to avoid any inflexible rule, and to leave it to the trial judge to admit the direct examination so far as the loss of cross-examination can be shown to him to be not in that instance a material loss.[3] Courts differ in their treatment of this difficult situation;[4]

[2] 1815, Clements v. Benjamin, 12 Johns. N. Y. 299.

[3] As in Scott v. McCann, Md., infra.

[4] ENGLAND: 1828, Jones v. Fort, 1 M. & M. 196 (defendant's examination in bankruptcy was offered by plaintiff; the cross-examination had been postponed at the commissioners' request, and in the meantime the deponent was stricken with apoplexy; yet the examination was received, probably as containing admissions, and not as being strictly a mere witness' deposition); 1837, R. v. Hagan, 1 Jebb Cr. C. 127, Ire. (a witness fainted shortly after his cross-examination began; held, by a vote of 7 to 5 judges, that the direct examination should be received, the case standing "upon the same principle [as death], fatality or the act of God"; the leading case, with good opinions on both sides); 1892, R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox Cr. 503 (dying woman examined, and after the cross-examination "had continued for about ten minutes", the magistrate stopped it on account of her condition; she died a few minutes later; held inadmissible, unless the cross-examination was being continued merely as a pretext); IRELAND: 1804, O'Callaghan v. Murphy, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 158, Ire. (where a witness in chancery died after direct examination but before any cross-examination, the testimony was read, on the facts of the case); CANADA: 1899, Randall v. Atkinson, 30 Ont. 242 (deposition of defendant, who had died pending adjournment and before cross-examination, without fault on either side admitted; exhaustive opinion by Rose, J.; but the analogies of chancery practice and of the statutory affidavit practice are emphasized); UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1908, Wray v. State, 154 Ala. 36, 45 So. 697 (the witness was brought into court, but his physician stated that an examination might be fatal; the Court declined to allow an examination; but finally consented to allow the State to ask one vital question, which was asked, and then the Court gave liberty to cross-examine, which was not availed of; held, that the right of cross-examination was not adequately had); Georgia: 1910, Gale v. State, 135 Ga. 351, 69 S. E. 537 (the witness collapsed physically and mentally pending cross-examination; after adjournment and at a later session, the witness' inability continuing, opponent's counsel declined to accept the judge's offer of a mistrial; held that the trial judge's admission of the testimony was not improper; careful opinion by Lumpkin, J., quoting the text above); Maryland: 1892, Scott v. McCann, 76 Md. 47, 24 Atl. 536 (the deponent-party died during adjournment and before cross-examination; admitted, partly because of chancery precedents, partly because the surviving opponent had testified, and partly because the cross-examination was not "likely to modify his testimony in chief"; a sensible ruling); Massachusetts: 1855, Fuller v. Rice, 4 Gray 343 (a witness fell ill at the 19th cross-interrogatory; testimony received; Shaw, C. J.: "No general rule can be laid down in respect to unfinished testimony. If substantially complete, . . . it ought not to be rejected"); 1858, Lewis v. Ins. Co., 10 Gray 511 (failure of memory through illness; testimony admitted); Michigan: 1879, Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 471 (Campbell, C. J.: "There are cases in which a failure to respond on cross-examination will justify the exclusion of at least so much of the direct testimony as it might have qualified"); 1894, People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147, 151, 60 N. W. 458 (witness dismissed by the judge after cross-examination at length; admitted, though the cross-examiner for unspecified reasons had asked for further cross-examination); New York: 1844, Forrest v. Kissam, 7 Hill 470, overruling Kissam v. Forrest, 25 Wend. 652 (the witness died after direct examination, pending adjournment by consent; though it was otherwise inadmissible, the judges differed as to the sufficiency of the present ground); 1871, People v. Cole, 43 N. Y. 513 (the witness fainted at the end of the direct examination and became too ill to permit of cross-examination; Grover, J.: "The common-law rule . . . should be adhered to, although in some cases there may be an apparent hardship. No injustice is done to the party seeking to avail himself of the evidence to require that before its admission its truth shall be subjected to such tests as the experience of ages has shown except that, by general concession, a cross-examination begun but unfinished suffices if its purposes have been substantially accomplished. Where, however, the failure to obtain cross-examination is in any sense attributable to the cross-examiner's own consent or fault, the lack of cross-examination is of course no objection,[5] — according to the general principle (ante, § 1371) that an opportunity, though waived, suffices.

§ 1391. Same: (2) Through the Witness' Refusal to Answer or the Fault of the Party offering him. (2) Where the witness, after his examination in chief on the stand, has refused to submit to cross-examination, the opportunity of thus probing and testing his statements has substantially failed, and his direct testimony should be struck out.[1] On the circumstances of the case, the refusal or evasion of answers to one or more questions only need not lead to this result.[2] When such a refusal, however, occurs in answer to the written were necessary to render reliance thereon at all safe; and where this has been prevented without any fault of the adverse party, to exclude the evidence"; Forrest v. Kissam declared to be no authority, because the decision was rested on different grounds by different judges); 1875, Sturm v. Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 87 (Folger, J.: "It may be taken as the rule that, where a party is deprived of the benefit of the cross-examination of a witness by the act of the opposite party or by the refusal to testify or other misconduct of the witness, or by any means other than the act of God, the act of the party himself, or some cause to which he assented, the testimony given on the examination-in-chief may not be read"); 1876, Hewlett v. Wood, 67 N. Y. 396 (the witness was ill and after repeated adjournments no cross-examination could be had; semble, that the fault of the witness or his party, or "any matter of substance", would exclude a deposition; People v. Cole and Sturm v. Ins. Co., not mentioned); Missouri: 1918, St. Charles S. Bank v. Denker, 275 Mo. 607, 205 S. W. 208 (deposition not completed on account of the deponent's illness; ruling obscure); Pennsylvania: 1868, Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 290, semble (inadmissible, if cross-examination is prevented by act of God).

[5] 1848, R. v. Hyde, 3 Cox Cr. 90 (the witness, a child, was very ill, and after the substance of the story had been obtained for the prosecution in taking the deposition, further questioning was abandoned; the counsel for the defendant declined to cross-examine, "as the child is evidently not in a fit state to answer", but did not ask for a postponement; the witness signed the deposition, and died shortly afterwards; Platt, B., conceded that "an attorney cannot shut out a deposition by abstaining from cross-examination"; but the argument that the condition of the child had precluded a satisfactory examination left him in doubt on the whole case); 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 7th day, Times Rep. pt. 2, p. 66; 1896, People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361, 66 N. W. 213, semble (here the witness fainted; but the opponent failed to move to strike out the direct testimony; held, admissible); 1921, State v. Harris, 181 N. C. 600, 107 S. E. 466 (an expert witness after partial cross-examination asked leave to depart, so as to catch a train and attend to a case of mortal illness; counsel for defendant said he was not finished, but assented; held a waiver); 1879, Hay's Appeal, 91 Pa. 265, 268 (the plaintiff witness became disqualified, by the death of the opponent, after the direct examination and during adjournment, the opposing counsel having declined cross-examination before adjournment, on account of his client's absence; direct examination admitted, on the ground of waiver).

§ 1391. [1] 1885, Rieger's Succession, 37 La. An. 104 (note 2, infra); 1842, Smith v. Griffith, 3 Hill N. Y. 333; 1879, State v. McNinch, 12 S. C. 95; 1896, Millikan v. Booth, 4 Okl. 713, 46 Pac. 489; so also the cases cited ante, § 1390. Contra: 1826, Courtenay v. Hoskins, 2 Russ. 253 (the refusal of the witness to be cross-examined is no reason for later suppressing the direct examination; because the cross-examiner should insist at the time on the enforcement of his right).

[2] Ala. 1845, Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281, 294 (failure to answer a question not material; deposition admitted); 1846, Spence v. Mitchell, 9 Ala. 744, 749 (failure to answer two questions directly, held not fatal, on the facts); 1857, Harris v. Miller, 30 Ala. 221, 224 (deposition suppressed, one answer being "evasive and incomplete"); 1861, Black v. Black, 38 Ala. 111, 112 (answer held not evasive, merely for referring to former direct answers); 1902, Electric Lighting Co. v. Rust, 131 Ala. 484, 31 So. 486 (deposition suppressed for evasive answers on material points); D. C. 1896, Clark v. Harmer, 9 D. C. App. 1, 5, 7 (the witness was partly cross-examined, and then upon adjournment was requested by counsel interrogatories of a deposition (taken on the Chancery model), the situation may require more strictness, for the deponent is not in a position to be coerced by the Court's summary process, and the opportunity of further probing the witness and of investigating the motive of the refusal and the materiality of the loss of evidence is not so abundant:

1838, SHAW, C. J., in Savage v. Blanchard, 20 Pick. 167, 172: "So far as the objection goes upon the assumption that a deposition must be rejected because some of the questions of the adverse party are not answered, as a general rule it is untenable. . . . [But] cases may be supposed where, if a witness is manifestly favorable to the party taking the deposition and declines answering pertinent and material questions to facts apparently within his knowledge, it would be a good ground for excluding the deposition altogether. It would show that the witness had violated his duty and his oath in not telling the whole truth, and the deposition would in effect be taken 'ex parte.'

1846, NISBET, J., in McCloskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 555: "This rule does not mean that a party shall be deprived of the benefits of his witness' testimony by failure of the other party to exercise the privilege of cross-examination, or by the dereliction of the commissioners, or by the contumacy of the witness. But it does mean that a party seeking the privilege of cross-examination shall not be forced to trial without it. It certainly does mean that interrogatories ought not to be read where cross-questions are filed and unanswered (provided they are such as by law ought to be answered), until the processes of the Court are exhausted to compel the witness to answer."

Courts treat this situation with varying degrees of strictness.[3] It should be to return on the next Court day, but no notice was given of this to the Court; the witness not re-appearing at all, the Court refused to strike out his testimony); Ga. 1849, Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 348, 350 (deposition suppressed, for failure to answer one question; "it will not do to permit a witness to judge what questions he shall answer and what not"); 1850, Thomas v. Kinsey, 8 Ga. 421, 425 (answer held sufficient on the facts); 1858, Heard v. McKee, 26 Ga. 332, 342 (similar); 1895, Senior v. State, 97 Ga. 185, 22 S. E. 404 (the complainant in a rape case refused to point out which of two persons was the assaulter, and her testimony was excluded); Ky. 1899, Flannery v. Com., — Ky. —, 51 S. W. 572 (child's refusal to answer one question, not sufficient to justify exclusion); La. 1885, Rieger's Succession, 37 La. An. 104 (witness excused after direct examination, on the ground of illness, but repeatedly failing, when apparently able, to re-appear for cross-examination; excluded); 1888, Townsend's Succession, 40 La. An. 67, 73, 3 So. 488 (witness ordered to appear for further cross-examination, but failing to do so; admissible in trial Court's discretion); Wis. 1882, Trowbridge v. Sickler, 54 Wis. 306, 309, 11 N. W. 581 (oral interrogatories; evasive answers held not to justify suppression of the deposition, on the facts; the cross-examiner "can repeat the questions or put others until the witness is forced to answer the precise point required, or fairly refuse; of course, refusal or evasion might be so gross as to indicate corruption and authorize a suppression of the whole deposition").

But a refusal to answer on a privileged subject cannot justify suppressing the direct examination; for the latter is equally liable with cross-examination to be balked by the privilege, and it is a mere accident on which side the privileged topic occurs: 1800, Barber v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 60, 62 (a witness' direct examination is not to be forbidden, because his cross-examination will probably include questions which he may be privileged not to answer). Contra: 1896, McElhannon v. State, 99 Ga. 672, 26 S. E. 501 (on the facts of the case, the witness claiming on cross-examination his privilege on material points, the testimony was struck out).

Distinguish the controversy whether the question can be put (or read, in a deposition) even though the answer claims privilege (post, § 2268).

[3] Federal: 1816, Nelson v. U. S., Pet. C. C. 235 (letters rogatory; deposition not suppressed, where the interrogatories were "substantially, though not formally" all answered); 1837, Gass v. Stinson, 3 Sumn. 98 (where the Chancery authorities are elaborately examined by Story, J.); 1898, Bird v. Halsey, 87 Fed. 671, 674 (refusal to answer a question suffices to exclude; but here admitted for the opponent's failure to compel answer or otherwise to make proper objection); Ga. 1846, McCloskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 555 (deposition to impeach another witness, excluded because a single material question was left left to the determination of the trial judge, regard being had chiefly to the motive of the witness and the materiality of the answer.

§ 1392. Same: (3) Non-Responsive Answers; (4) General or "Sweeping" Interrogatories. (3) When a deposition is taken on written interrogatories filed beforehand, and the witness in an answer to a direct interrogatory departs from the subject of the question, the cross-examiner may be virtually deprived of cross-examination, because by not anticipating this answer he will not have framed his cross-interrogatories to probe the witness on that subject. This objection is obviously applicable to written interrogatories only;[1] but to that extent it has a just foundation:

1876, HALLETT, C. J., in Marr v. Wetzel, 3 Colo. 2, 6: "In taking evidence upon interrogatories attached to the 'dedimus' or commission, the rule which requires that the witness shall answer the question put, without more, should be somewhat strictly applied. In such case the party against whom the deposition is to be used has no opportunity to cross-examine, except that which is afforded by filing cross-interrogatories to be attached to the commission. In drawing them he must often be governed entirely by the direct interrogatories filed by his adversary; and if these last give no light as to the subject upon which the witness is to be examined, he will be unable to cross-examine. Of this the deposition in the record affords an illustration. In the direct interrogatories there is nothing calling for the witness' knowledge as to the service of the process on the defendant in the State of Missouri, and yet such evidence was elicited. As to this the defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine."

Nevertheless, whether there has been a substantial failure of cross-examination will depend much on the materiality of the answer, the facts of the unanswered; quoted supra); 1880, Schaefer v. R. Co., 66 Ga. 39, 43 (substantial answering of cross-interrogatories, sufficient); Ill. 1922, Ward Pump Co. v. Ind. Com., 302 Ill. 199, 134 N. E. 127 (deposition suppressed because of officer's failure to require answers to certain cross-interrogatories); Ia. 1917, State v. Powers, 181 Ia. 452, 164 N. W. 856 (taking testimony through an interpreter is not receiving hearsay); La. 1859, Nicholson v. Desobry, 14 La. An. 81, 83 (in the trial Court's discretion, the failure to answer a material interrogatory is ground for exclusion); Mass. 1838, Savage v. Blanchard, 20 Pick. 167 (quoted supra); 1863, Robinson v. B. & W. R. Co., 7 All. 393, 395 (deposition suppressed, for a single evasive answer); 1864, Stratford v. Ames, 8 All. 577 (failure to answer one question does not exclude all, "unless his answer is so imperfect or evasive as to induce the Court to believe that he wilfully kept back material facts within his knowledge"); Minn. 1867, McMahon v. Davidson, 12 Minn. 357, 367 (answers must appear "fully and fairly given, without the suppression of any fact material to the case"); Pa. 1821, Withers v. Gillespy, 7 S. & R. 10, 16 (incomplete answers; rejected on the facts); 1867, Crossgrove v. Himmelrich, 54 Pa. 203, 208 (refusal to answer an irrelevant question, held no ground for suppression); R. I. 1917, State v. Deslovers, 40 R. I. 89, 100 Atl. 64 (interpreter must translate the whole of the witness' answer; the Court may not rule upon a part only translated); Tex. 1922, Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co., — Tex. —, 239 S. W. 919 (out of 56 cross-interrogatories, 44 were left unanswered by misunderstanding; held on the facts that the deposition should be suppressed); Ut. 1894, Hadra v. Bank, 9 Utah 412, 414, 35 Pac. 508 (refusal to answer a question affecting the admissibility of the entire testimony; deposition excluded); Wash. 1811, Richardson v. Golden, 3 Wash. C. C. 109 (there was "no answer given to or notice taken of the general interrogatory"; excluded); Wis. 1882, Trowbridge v. Sickler, 54 Wis. 306 (cited supra, note 2).

§ 1392. [1] 1876, Marr v. Wetzel, 3 Colo. 2, 6 (see quotation supra); 1872, Greenman v. O'Connor, 25 Mich. 30 (for a non-responsive answer on a material point, the testimony was held improperly admitted; "the right of cross-examination would be thereby defeated entirely, because no cross-interrogatories can be expected to enter upon subjects not opened by the direct ones"); 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 185 (the rule is confined to "settled written interrogatories"; "no such difficulty can arise where the witness is examined openly and orally").

case as known to the cross-examiner, and the tenor of the cross-interrogatories; so that no fixed rule can be laid down.

Apart from the present ground, there is no inherent objection to a non-responsive answer; in particular, the direct examiner cannot object to it, nor can the cross-examiner object to it when it is evoked by his own interrogatory.[2]

(4) A direct interrogatory may be so general or "sweeping" as to enable the witness, while responsively answering, to range over a variety of topics whose tenor the cross-examiner cannot by possibility have anticipated. In this way, for the same reason just noted, he may be substantially deprived of his right. Such a general question, to be sure, is often useful and has been traditionally employed to close a deposition taken by written interrogatories.[3] Nevertheless, its capability of abuse is well understood; and the trial judge should have discretion to strike out the answer to it if a substantial injustice would result:[4]

1897, FISH, J., in McBride v. Macon T. P. Co., 102 Ga. 422, 30 S. E. 999: "Strictly speaking, this was not an interrogatory at all, but a mere request or demand for general information in addition to that sought to be elicited by the preceding specific questions propounded to the witness. We cannot approve of this method of examination, as applied to a witness whose testimony is taken by interrogatories, notwithstanding it may be in accord with a practice commonly pursued by counsel in this State. Every interrogatory addressed to a witness should be sufficiently explicit to indicate to the opposite party the nature of the testimony expected. Obviously, a full and intelligent cross-examination of the witness is not possible, unless the questions propounded to him on his direct examination indicate with reasonable certainty the particular points as to which his testimony is desired. As strict matter of right, therefore, a party suing out a set of interrogatories cannot claim that the response of the witness to such a sweeping interrogation (if it may be called such) as that above quoted has been legitimately drawn forth, and is in consequence admissible in evidence. On the other hand, if the reply of the witness does not include matter not suggested by the preceding interrogatories put to him, the opposite party will not have been prejudiced by an abridgment of his right to a full opportunity to cross-

[2] Cases cited ante, § 785.

[3] Federal Equity Rules, No. 71 (the last written interrogatory shall be, in substance: "Do you know, or can you set forth, any other matter or thing which may be a benefit or advantage to the parties at issue in this cas , or either of them, or that may be material to the subject of this your examination or the matters in question in this cause? If yea, set forth the same fully and at large in your answer").

[4] The rulings have naturally varied: Fed. 1827, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 722 (answer to a general interrogatory, admitted); Ala. 1848, Yarborough v. Hood, 13 Ala. 176, 180 (answer to a general interrogatory, held improperly excluded), 1877, Blunt v. Strong, 60 Ala. 572, 577 ("To such interrogatory no answer should be allowed of matter that is not germane to the subject of some special inquiry, and in a measure the complement of testimony previously given"); Ga. 1898, McBride v. Macon T. P. Co., 102 Ga. 422, 30 S. E. 999 ("State all the facts that will inure to the benefit of the plaintiff or the defendant in this case", held not a proper interrogatory in a deposition; quoted supra); 1906, Taylor v. Globe Ref. Co., 127 Ga. 138, 56 S. E. 292; N. Y. 1820, Percival v. Hickey, 18 Johns. 257, 264, 289 (Spencer, C. J.: "I perceive no abuse likely to follow from allowing the witnesses to state every material fact, under that interrogatory, not before drawn forth by the special interrogatories"); 1854, Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 203, 210 (deposition not suppressed, for a general interrogatory with answers "pertinent to the matters in issue"; the opponent should have applied beforehand to remedy any surprise "either by a further examination of the same witnesses or otherwise"); Tex. 1903, Sparks v. Taylor, 99 Tex. 411, 90 S. W. 485 (further pertinent answers by an opponent in discovery, made by advice of his attorney, admitted).

examine the witness, and accordingly cannot justly complain in the event the Court declines to rule out the testimony thus elicited. Under such circumstances, the trial judge may very properly exercise his discretion in the premises, to the end that complete justice may be done as between the respective parties to the litigation."

So far as the mode of direct interrogation may in any other way deprive the opponent of the adequate exercise of his right of cross-examination, through rendering it impossible to anticipate the subject, the trial judge may properly exclude the direct examination, to the extent of its impropriety.[5]

§ 1393. Same: (5) Through Lack of Interpretation for a Witness Alien, Deaf-and-Dumb, etc. (a) Where the cross-examination is hampered by the witness' organic defects of speech, hearing, or the like, the admissibility of the testimony should be left entirely to the trial judge.[1] The same principle applies to an accused who is deaf or dumb or blind.[2]

(b) Where the witness testifies in a foreign language, or when the opponent is an alien not well knowing the language of the forum, the opponent is entitled to understand, so as to be able to cross-examine the witness. Hence, the furnishing of an interpreter becomes essential to the right of cross-examination; this corollary being as applicable in civil cases as in criminal cases, though usually emphasized in the latter instance only.[3] Injustice is doubtless being done from time to time, in communities thronged with aliens, through failure of the judges to insist on a supply of competent interpreters. The subject

[5] 1902, Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 133 Ala. 381, 32 So. 124 (divorce; on interrogatories propounded by the chancellor 'ex mero motu' to the defendant, the plaintiff was held entitled to notice for purposes of cross-examination); 1848, Stagg v. Pomeroy, 3 La. An. 16 ("any further enquiries propounded by the plaintiff's counsel before the commissioner were 'ex parte', and to the disadvantage of the defendants, who had no opportunity of counteracting them by cross-examination"); 1897, Anderson v. Bank, 6 N. D. 497, 72 N. W. 916, semble (amendment of a declaration after deposition taken; the defendant not allowed to suppress the deposition because of no cross-examination on the amended pleading); 1904, Young v. Valentine, 177 N. Y. 347, 69 N. E. 643 (an oral answer, stricken out before signing, and therefore not subject to cross-examination, cannot be used); 1884, First National Bank v. Wirebach's Ex'r, 106 Pa. 44 (deposition admitted, though new matter came up on the trial, as to which the deponent had not been cross-examined).

For the question whether more than one counsel on a side may cross-examine, see ante, § 783.

For the question whether a witness who has been merely subpœnaed or merely asked one question may be cross-examined, or must be called as his own witness by the cross-examiner, see post, § 1892.

§ 1393. [1] 1882, Quinn v. Halbert, 55 Vt. 228 (receiving testimony where the witness was dumb and could merely shake his head in assent or dissent, and the opportunity of cross-examination was thus very limited).

[2] 1906, Felts v. Murphy, 201 U. S. 123, 26 Sup. 366 (an accused, in a State court, unable by deafness to hear the testimony, which was not repeated to him by his ear-trumpet; this was held not to give ground for complaint as a Federal question under the Fourteenth Amendment); 1905, Ralph v. State, 124 Ga. 81, 52 S. E. 299 (the accused being deaf, the Court refused to let the testimony be taken by a stenographer and then typewritten and read by the accused as the trial progressed, but allowed the counsel to write down the testimony and show it to the accused; held sufficient, in the trial Court's discretion); Minn. St. 1905, c. 47, Gen. St. 1913, § 7469 (a person deaf or dumb, charged with insanity, is entitled "as a matter of absolute right" to an interpreter); 1919, Cook v. Denike, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 216 S. W. 437.

[3] But in criminal cases it is a part of the constitutionally protected principle (post, § 1397); one State constitution explicitly mentions it: N. Mex. Const. 1911, Art. II, § 14 (in all criminal prosecutions the accused is entitled "to have the charge and testimony interpreted to him in a language that he understands").

is one upon which the profession are in general too callous, for no situation is more full of anguish than that of an innocent accused who cannot understand what is being testified against him.

Nevertheless, the varied situations which arise are too numerous to be reducible to any set of rules; and the inflexibility of fixed rules would here be inappropriate. The following enlightened opinion sets forth the modern English practice:

1916, Lord READING, C. J., in R. v. Lee Kun, 1 K. B. 337, 339: "The appellant, Lee Kun, a Chinese, was convicted of murder of one Clara Thomas. He appeals to this Court to quash the conviction on the ground that, being a foreigner and ignorant of the English language, he did not understand the evidence for the prosecution, which was not translated to him.

"When a foreigner who is ignorant of the English language is on trial on an indictment for a criminal offence and is undefended, the evidence given at the trial must be translated. . . . If he does not understand the English language, he cannot waive compliance with the rule that the evidence must be translated; he cannot dispense with it by express or implied consent, and it matters not that no application is made by him for the assistance of an interpreter. It is for the Court to see that the necessary means are adopted to convey the evidence to his intelligence, notwithstanding that, either through ignorance or timidity or disregard of his own interests, he makes no application to the Court. The reason is that the trial of a person for a criminal offence is not a contest of private interests in which the rights of parties can be waived at pleasure. The prosecution of criminals and the administration of the criminal law are matters which concern the State. Every citizen has an interest in seeing that persons are not convicted of crimes, and do not forfeit life or liberty, except when tried under the safeguards so carefully provided by the law.

"No trial for felony can be had except in the presence of the accused. . . . The reason why the accused should be present at the trial is that he may hear the case made against him and have the opportunity, having heard it, of answering it. The presence of the accused means not merely that he must be physically in attendance, but also that he must be capable of understanding the nature of the proceedings. . . . If the accused is fit to plead, it may yet be that no communication can be made in the ordinary way; it may be that he is deaf and can only be approached by writing or signs; or dumb and can only make his views known by writing or signs; or a foreigner who cannot speak English and requires the assistance of an interpreter to understand the proceedings and make answer to them. In such cases the judge must see that proper means are taken to communicate to the accused the case made against him and to enable him to make his answer to it. In the case of a foreigner ignorant of the English language who is undefended no difficulty has arisen in practice. The evidence is always translated to him by an interpreter.

"The more difficult question arises when an accused foreigner, ignorant of the English language, is defended by counsel and no application is made to the Court for the translation of the evidence. There is no rule of law to be found in the books on the subject, and as a result of inquiry which we have made since the argument, it has become clear that the practice of the Courts in this respect has varied considerably during the last fifty years.

"We have come to the conclusion that the safer, and therefore the wiser, course, when the foreigner accused is defended by counsel, is that the evidence should be interpreted to him, except when he or counsel on his behalf expresses a wish to dispense with the translation, and the judge thinks fit to permit the omission. The judge should not permit it unless he is of opinion that because of what has passed before the trial the accused substantially understands the evidence to be given and the case to be made against him at the trial. To follow this practice may be inconvenient in some cases and may cause some further expenditure of time; but such a procedure is more in consonance with that scrupulous care of the interests of the accused which has distinguished the administration of justice in our criminal Courts, and therefore it is better to adopt it. No injustice will be caused by permitting the exception above mentioned.

"If there should be a substantial departure from the evidence recorded in the depositions the judge would take care, even if counsel omitted to ask it, that the variation or addition should be translated to the accused, so that he might throw any further light upon the case. The importance of the translation of any new or additional evidence cannot be doubted; such evidence may have a special significance to the accused and may enable him to recollect facts till then forgotten or to give additional information to his counsel for cross-examination. Further, he may wish to make a statement dealing with the evidence against him instead of himself giving evidence, and he should have all information for that purpose; or, again, the variation from or addition to the evidence originally given at the police court may have a bearing upon the sentence. We think, therefore, that any substantial variation from the story originally told in the depositions or any additional evidence should be translated to the accused, even though he may be indifferent upon the matter or may not wish it."

The right to interpretation being conceded, this right is satisfied if somehow an understanding is attained, either by his own or his counsel's knowledge of the language or by the help of an interpreting third person; and the precise mode of attaining it is immaterial.[4]

Moreover, the opponent is also entitled to cross-examine the interpreter so as to test the correctness of the translation,[5] and to call other witnesses to verify the interpretation.[6]

[4] ENGLAND: 1916, R. v. Lee Kun, 1 K. B. 337 (Chinese accused ignorant of English; at the magistrate's hearing, an interpreter translated all the testimony; at the trial the testimony was the same, and no request for an interpreter was made by defendants' counsel; held, that the testimony should always be interpreted, whether counsel asks for it or not, but that in this case the error was not harmful; excellent opinion by Reading, L. C. J.); CANADA: N. Sc. 1912, The King v. Sylvester, 45 N. Sc. 525, 1 D. L. R. 186 (the accused were Italians from Calabria; the interpreter for one important witness gave only the purport of the witness' direct testimony delivered in English, and none of his cross-examination, but the counsel cross-examined in English: held no substantial error; Graham, E. J., dissenting, in a sound opinion; prior English and Canadian cases collected; the dissent deserves support, for a common official abuse in this country is to supply inadequate interpretation; if the judges could be sent to a foreign country and there haled into court for crime, and made to feel the plight of an alien accused, some improvement might take place); UNITED STATES: Haw. 1888, R. v. Ah Har, 7 Haw. 319 (the constitutional right "is not complied with unless the accused is in some way made to understand their evidence", in order to avail himself of the right of cross-examination; but "if the accused has counsel who understands the evidence, whether directly from the witnesses or through an interpreter, the constitutional requirement is complied with, though the accused himself may not understand it"; yet the Court may, on request in such a case, order interpretation to the accused of the testimony as given by each witness; a request not made till the close of the prosecution's case is not seasonable); 1899, Republic v. Yamane, 12 Haw. 189 (R. v. Ah Har followed, and held equally applicable to capital cases); Pa. 1903, Com. v. Lenousky, 206 Pa. 277, 55 Atl. 977 (testimony of an absent witness, given originally at a preliminary hearing, in the presence of the accused, a foreigner who understood the witness' language, held inadmissible, because he had no counsel to tell him that he had the right to cross-examine; unsound).

Compare § 811, ante, § 1810, post (interpreters).

[5] 1911, Terr. v. Kawano, 20 Haw. 469 (interpreter may be required to repeat in the foreign language the words used by him); 1859, Schnier v. People, 23 Ill. 1, 22 (interpreter may be required to give the primary meaning, etc., of words used).

[6] 1859, Schnier v. People, 23 Ill. 1, 22; 1878, Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245, 251 (to correct a witness' account of a conversation heard in a foreign language, other interpreting witnesses may be called to render the conversation as reported).

§ 1394. Same: (6) Sundry Insufficiencies of Cross-examination (Party Absent; Opponent Present, etc.). (a) The party's own absence from the court-room during cross-examination can hardly be deemed to injure his opportunity of cross-examination; for his appearance by counsel gains him the benefit of the right. Nevertheless, some Courts have thought it improper (partly from the present point of view) to compel the party to retire from the room during the trial, or to refuse him permission to attend at the taking of a deposition.[1]

(b) Whether there has been a substantially adequate cross-examination where a deposition written down in the accused's absence has been afterwards read over to him by the magistrate in the witness' presence with liberty then to cross-examine, is a question that has been several times discussed in England. It would seem that, under the circumstances of a given case, such an opportunity might be adequate.[2]

(c) Whether the trial judge's limitation of the time for cross-examination (ante, § 783) has in effect deprived the opponent of its benefits may involve the present principle.

(d) When a deposition is admitted although the deponent is present in court, under the anomalous rule recognized in some States (post, § 1415), the opponent is not entitled to a duplicate cross-examination then and there, in addition to the one already afforded in the deposition. But undoubtedly the trial Court has power to permit such cross-examination if the circumstances show that it would assist in reaching the truth.

§ 1394. [1] Cases cited post, § 1399 (confrontation), § 1841 (sequestration of witnesses), and the following: 1876, Crowe v. Peters, 63 Mo. 429, 433 (on a suggestion that the defendant was by gestures and looks intimidating a witness, he was ordered from the room; held, erroneous, because it prevented his aid in the cross-examination; but a change of position, etc., might have been required; this is unsound, because it was the party's own fault); 1917, Anderson v. Snyder, 91 Conn. 404, 99 Atl. 1032 (fraud of an agent; the plaintiff being aged and infirm, her deposition was to be taken at her home; the defendant demanding to be present personally, this was refused by the plaintiff's attorneys because of the mental disturbing effect upon the plaintiff, but whether as witness or as an individual does not appear; deposition excluded, the defendant's claim to be present being sanctioned).

Conversely, lack of counsel is not necessarily a defect: 1919, People v. Caballero, 41 Cal. App. 146, 182 Pac. 321 (applying P. C. § 686, subd. 3).

For intimidation by the cross-examiner, see ante, §§ 781, 786.

[2] 1817, R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339 (admissible); 1817, R. v. Forbes, Holt 599, Chambre, J. (inadmissible); 1845, R. v. Hake, 1 Cox Cr. 226 (the witness' deposition was taken and authenticated on the 28th; on the 29th, the defendant and two co-defendants being present for the first time, and the witness also being present, the deposition was read over to all the defendants; it was not re-signed by the magistrates; Erle, J.: "The reading of it in the prisoner's presence is equivalent to a taking of it in his presence. . . . The object is to afford to the party charged an opportunity for cross-examination. Such an opportunity has been held to be afforded by a reading over of the deposition where there is one prisoner only; the object is not the less secured because there are many prisoners"); 1852, R. v. Day, 6 Cox Cr. 55, Platt, B. (the mere reading over to the accused a deposition already taken is not enough).

Whether the loss of a document whose genuineness is disputed should exclude the testimony of an expert who has studied it, by reason of the consequent impossibility of cross-examining him upon its details, is a question involving the principles of handwriting testimony (ante, §§ 697, 1185, post, § 2015).

SUB-TITLE I (continued): THE HEARSAY RULE SATISFIED

TOPIC II: BY CONFRONTATION

CHAPTER XLV.

1. General Principle of Confrontation

2. Circumstances of Necessity making the Witness' Personal Presence Unavailable

1. General Principle of Confrontation

§ 1395. Purpose and Theory of Confrontation. In the period when the Hearsay rule is being established, and 'ex parte' depositions are still used against an accused person (ante, § 1364), we find him frequently protesting that the witnesses should be "brought face to face", or that he should be "confronted" with the witnesses against him. The final establishment of the Hearsay rule, in the early 1700s, meant that this protest was sanctioned as a just one, — in other words, that Confrontation was required. What was, in principle, the meaning and purpose of this Confrontation? So far as there is a rule of Confrontation, what is the process that satisfies this rule?

It is generally agreed that the process of confrontation has two purposes, a main and essential one, and a secondary and subordinate one:

(1) The main and essential purpose of confrontation is to secure for the opponent the opportunity of cross-examination. The opponent demands confrontation, not for the idle purpose of gazing upon the witness, or of being gazed upon by him, but for the purpose of cross-examination, which cannot be had except by the direct and personal putting of questions and obtaining of immediate answers. That this is the true and essential significance of confrontation is demonstrated by the language of counsel and judges from the beginning of the Hearsay rule to the present day:[1]

1680, L. C. J. HALE, Pleas of the Crown, I, 306 (commenting on St. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, c. 12, § 12 (1552); "which said accusers [of treason] at the time of the arraignment of the party accused, if they be then living, shall be brought in person before the party so accused, and avow and maintain that that they have to say to prove him guilty"): "Yet in case of treason, where two witnesses [i.e. accusers] are required, such an examination [before a justice of peace] is not allowable, for the statute requires that they be produced upon the arraignment in the presence of the prisoner, to the end that he may cross-examine them."

1696, Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 591, 638, 712 (before the House of Commons). Sergt. Lovel (for the prosecution): "We have Mr. Goodman's examination under the hand of Mr. Vernon; we pray it may be read." Sir B. Shower (for the accused): "Mr. Speaker, . . . I humbly oppose the reading of this examination, as not agreeable to the rules of practice and evidence, and that which is wholly new. . . . No deposition of a person can be read, though beyond sea, unless in cases where the party it is to be read against was privy to the examination and might have cross-examined him or examined to his credit, if he thought fit. . . . Our law requires persons to appear and give their testimony 'viva voce'; and we see that their testimony appears credible or not by their very countenances and the manner of their delivery; and their falsity may sometimes be discovered by questions that the party may ask them, and by examining them to particular circumstances which may lay open the falsity of a well-laid scheme, which otherwise, as he himself had put it together, might have looked well at first; and this we are deprived of, if this examination should be admitted to be read. . . . We oppose it at present for that we were not present nor privy nor could have cross-examined him." Sir T. Powis, arguing: "How contrary this is to a fundamental rule in our law, that no evidence shall be given against a man, when he is on trial for his life, but in the presence of the prisoner, because he may cross-examine him who gives such evidence; and that is due to every man in justice."

1720, Duke of Dorset v. Girdler, Finch's Prec. Ch. 531: "The other side ought not to be deprived of the opportunity of confronting the witnesses and examining them publicly, which has always been found the most effectual method for discovering of the truth."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. III., c. XIX: "Under the head of Confrontation may be found whatever advances (scanty indeed they will be seen to be) have been made in Roman procedure towards the introduction of that universal and equal system of interrogation above delineated and proposed, — consequently whatever part has been covered by the Roman law of the ground covered by the operation called Cross-examination in English law. The operation has two professed objects: one is the establishing the identity of the defendant, viz. that the person thus produced to the deponent is the person of whom he has been speaking; the other is that an opportunity may be afforded to the defendant, in addition to whatever testimony may have been delivered to his disadvantage, to obtain the extraction of such other part (if any) of the facts within the knowledge of the deponent as may operate in his favor. . . . [It is in Continental law] an imperfect modification of cross-examination, . . . a faint shadow of it."

§ 1395. [1] See also Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 373.

1856, BARTLEY, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 341: "Evidence of the statements of a deceased witness on a former trial . . . would seem to be now confined to cases where opportunity for cross-examination had been afforded, and therefore to cases where the accused had been confronted by the deceased witness when the testimony was given on the former trial."

1865, WOODWARD, C. J., in Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. 337: "Confronting witnesses does not mean impeaching their character, but means cross-examination in the presence of the accused. When the common law of England was transported to these colonies, it gave a person charged with a capital crime no compulsory process to obtain witnesses and entitled him to no examination by himself or his counsel of witnesses brought against him. . . . To remedy this state of the law, our constitutions all declared — what statutes had then provided in England — that the accused should have an impartial trial by jury, should have process for witnesses and be entitled to counsel to examine them, and to cross-examine those for the prosecution in the presence of (confronting) the accused."

1876, BOREMAN, J., in U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 322: "On the former trial she was under oath, and subject to cross-examination by the defendant, and then he was confronted by the witness. The main objects of producing the witness upon the stand had been attained."

1891, EARL, J., in People v. Fish, 125 N. Y. 150, 26 N. E. 319: "It is quite a valuable right to a prisoner to be confronted upon his trial with the witnesses against him, so that he may cross-examine them and the jury see them and thus judge of their credibility. . . . The evidence of the witness was taken in his presence where he had the opportunity to cross-examine him, where he did in fact cross-examine him, and thus he had all the protection that the Bill of Rights and the Constitution were intended to secure him."

Thus the main idea in the process of confrontation is that of the opponent's opportunity of cross-examination; the former is merely the dramatic feature, the preliminary measure, appurtenant to the latter.

The following historical incident is a telling illustration of the value of Confrontation as an expedient for subjecting witnesses to cross-examinations:

1789, Col. George Rogers Clark, Memoir on The Conquest of the Illinois (ed. Quaife, 1920), p. 42: "During the night I sent for several individuals, from whom I sought to procure information, but obtained very little that was not already known to us. We learned, however, that the conduct of several of the inhabitants indicated them to be inclined to the American cause; that a large number of Indians were in the neighborhood of Cahokia, sixty miles distant; that Mr. Cerré, a leading merchant and one of our most inveterate enemies, had left Kaskaskia with a large quantity of furs a few days before, and that he was then in St. Louis, the Spanish capital, but his wife and family were still in town, together with a considerable quantity of goods which would be useful to our men.

"In addition to Cerré, information was given me about numerous other individuals. I at once suspected that the object of the informers was to make their peace with me at the expense of their neighbors, and my situation demanded of me too much caution to permit giving them much satisfaction. I found Cerré to be one of the most eminent men of the country, with great influence over the people. I had some suspicion that his accusers were probably in debt to him, and hence desired to ruin him. . . . I immediately caused a guard to be stationed at his house and his stores to be sealed along with all the others. I did not doubt that when he should hear of this he would be extremely anxious for an interview. . . . Agreeably to my expectation, upon learning the situation of affairs he resolved to return, but hearing that there was a guard kept at his house alone, and that several persons had attempted to ruin him with their information to me, he was advised not to cross the river without a safe-conduct. . . . I absolutely refused it, and intimated that I wished to hear no more on the subject; nor would I hear any person who had anything to say in vindication of him. I told them I understood Mr. Cerré to be a sensible man. If he were innocent of the allegation against him, he would not be afraid to surrender himself. I added that his backwardness seemed to prove his guilt, and I felt very little concern about him.

"I suppose rumor immediately carried this information to him, for in a few hours he crossed over the river and, without stopping to visit his family, presented himself before me. I told him that I supposed he was aware of the charges preferred against him, particularly that of inciting the Indians to murder, a crime that ought to be punished by all people who should be fortunate enough to get such culprits into their power; and that his recent backwardness about surrendering himself convinced me of his guilt. He replied that he was merely a merchant, that he never concerned himself about affairs of state further than the interest of his trade required. . . . He defied any man to prove that he had ever incited the Indians to war; many people, on the contrary, had often heard him express his disapproval of the cruelty of such proceedings. He said there were several people in town who were deeply indebted to him, and it might be the object of some of them to extricate themselves from their debts by ruining him. . . .

"Without making any further reply, I told him to withdraw into another room. The whole town was anxious to know his fate. I sent for his accusers, who were followed by a large number of townsmen, and had Mr. Cerré called in. I perceived plainly the confusion into which they were thrown by his appearance. I stated the case to the whole assembly, telling them that I never condemned a man unheard. I said that Cerré was now present, and I was ready to do justice to the world in general by punishing him if he were found guilty of inciting to murder, or by acquitting him if he proved innocent of the charge. I closed by desiring them to submit their information. Cerré undertook to speak to them, but was ordered to desist. His accusers began to whisper among themselves and to retire for private conversation. At length only one out of six or seven was left in the room, and I asked him what he had to say to the point in question. In short, I found that none of them had anything to say!

"I gave them a suitable reprimand; and after some general conversation informed Mr. Cerré that I was happy to find he had so honorably acquitted himself of so black a charge. I told him he was now at liberty to dispose of himself and property as he pleased. If he chose to become a citizen of the United States, it would give us pleasure. If he did not, he was at full liberty to do as he wished. He made many acknowledgments and concluded by saying that many doubts he had entertained were now cleared up to his satisfaction, and that he wished to take the oath of allegiance immediately. In short, he became a most valuable man to us. Simple as this transaction may appear, it had great weight with the people, and was of infinite service to us."

(2) There is, however, a secondary advantage to be obtained by the personal appearance of the witness; the judge and the jury are enabled to obtain the elusive and incommunicable evidence of a witness' deportment while testifying, and a certain subjective moral effect is produced upon the witness.[2] This

[2] In the earlier and more emotional periods, this confrontation was supposed (more often than it now is) to be able to unstring the nerves of a false witness; the following is merely one example: 1678, Atkins' Examination, 6 How. St. Tr. 1473, 1481 (one Captain Atkins was the chief witness against the accused, also named Atkins; the accused tells that at his examination, Lord Shaftesbury said, " 'Pray look one another in the face', so we gazed very earnestly, and my lord Shaftesbury went on, speaking to Captain Atkins, 'Come, Captain Atkins, confess truly and ingenuously, have you belyed Mr. Atkins or no?' . . . After this sort my lord Shaftesbury pressed Captain Atkins very home; and while he was doing so, and we looking steadfastly upon each other, Captain Atkins' countenance changed very white; which I taking notice of, and observing to the lords, my lord marquis of Winchester cried, 'Where, where? I don't see it' ").

The great dramatist alludes to this earlier subordinate advantage has been expounded in the following passages:[3]

1836, PUTNAM, J., in Com. v. Richards, 18 Pick. 437: "[Even] if you get the whole, it is very defective; for you cannot have a true representation of the countenance, manner, and expression of the deceased witness, which either confirmed or denied the truth of the testimony."

1857, RYLAND, J., in State v. McO'Blenis, 24 Mo. 421: "There are many things, aside from the literal import of the words uttered by the witness while testifying, on which the value of his evidence depends. These it is impossible to transfer to paper. Taken in the aggregate, they constitute a vast moral power in eliciting the truth, all of which is lost when the examination is had out of court and the mere words of the witness are reproduced in the form of a deposition."

1882, CAMPBELL, J., in People v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 56: "The production of witnesses in open court is one of the best means of trying their credit; and every one knows how difficult it is to judge from written testimony of the demeanor and appearance which strike those who examined them. Still more difficult must it be to have the testimony reproduced."

1860, Chief Justice APPLETON, Evidence, 220: "The witness present, the promptness and unpremeditatedness of his answers or the reverse, their distinctness and particularity or the want of these essentials, their incorrectness in generals or particulars, their directness or evasiveness, are soon detected. . . . The appearance and manner, the voice, the gestures, the readiness and promptness of the answers, the evasions, the reluctance, the silence, the contumacious silence, the contradictions, the explanations, the intelligence or the want of intelligence of the witness, the passions which move or control — fear, love, hate, envy, or revenge — are all open to observation, noted and weighed by the jury."

This secondary advantage, however, does not arise from the confrontation of the opponent and the witness; it is not the consequence of those two being brought face to face. It is the witness' presence before the tribunal that secures this secondary advantage, — which might equally be obtained whether the opponent was or was not allowed to cross-examine. In other words, this secondary advantage is a result accidentally associated with the process of confrontation, whose original and fundamental object is the opponent's cross-examination.

§ 1396. Witness' Presence before Tribunal may be Dispensed with, if not Obtainable. The question, then, whether there is a right to be confronted with opposing witnesses is essentially a question whether there is a right to cross-examine. If there has been a Cross-examination, there has been a Confrontation. The satisfaction of the right of Cross-examination (under the rules examined ante, §§ 1371–1393) disposes of any objection based on the so-called right of Confrontation.

Nevertheless, the secondary advantage, incidentally obtained for the tribunal by the witness' presence before it — the demeanor-evidence — is an conception, still current in his day: King Richard: "Then call them to our presence; face to face, And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear The accuser and the accuséd freely speak" (Richard II, I, 1).

The French practice still shows this notion of confrontation, in liveliest manner; illustrations will be found in the French trials quoted in the Appendix to Sir J. F. Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, and in those reported in Albert Batailles' "Causes criminelles et mondaines", 1895 and earlier years.

It would be interesting to trace this earlier notion carefully in Howell's State Trials, until its merger in the 1700s with the principle of cross-examination.

[3] So also Blackstone, III, 373.

advantage to be insisted upon wherever it can be had. No one has doubted that it is highly desirable, if only it is available. But it is merely desirable. Where it cannot be obtained, it need not be required. It is no essential part of the notion of confrontation; it stands on no better footing than other evidence to which special value is attached; and just as the original of a document (ante, § 1192) or a preferred witness (ante, § 1308), may be dispensed with in case of unavailability, so demeanor-evidence may be dispensed with, in necessity. Accordingly, supposing that the indispensable requirement of cross-examination has been satisfied, the only remaining inquiry is whether the demeanor-evidence, to be obtained by the witness' production before the tribunal, is available.

This inquiry — the conditions of unavailability of demeanor-evidence, by reason of death, illness, and the like — remains now to be made. But first the effect must be considered of the constitutional sanction, in the United States, of the principle of Confrontation; for this has sometimes erroneously affected the judicial attitude towards demeanor-evidence.

§ 1397. Effect of Constitutional Sanction of Confrontation. In the United States, almost all Constitutions have given a permanent sanction to the principle of confrontation, by provisions requiring that in criminal cases the accused shall be "confronted with the witnesses against him" or "brought face to face" with them.[1] The question thus arises whether these constitutional provisions affect the common-law requirement of confrontation, otherwise than by putting it beyond the possibility of abolition by an ordinary legislative body.

§ 1397. [1] Statutes are also here included: UNITED STATES: Federal: 1787, Amendment VI ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Alabama: 1901, Art. I, § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused has a right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Arizona: Const. 1910, Art. II, § 24 ("In criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); P. C. 1913, § 753 (similar); Arkansas: 1874, Art. II, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); California: 1879, Art. I, § 13 ("The Legislature shall have the power to provide for the taking, in the presence of the accused and his counsel, of depositions of witnesses in criminal cases, other than cases of homicide, when there is reason to believe that the witness, from inability or other cause, will not attend the trial"); P. C. § 686 ("In a criminal action the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him, in the presence of the Court"; except as quoted ante, § 1387); Colorado: 1876, Art. II, § 16 ("In criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); § 17 ("Such deposition [of a witness in criminal cases] shall not be used, if, in the opinion of the Court, the personal attendance of the witness might be procured by the prosecution, or is procured by the accused"); Connecticut: 1818, Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Delaware: 1897, Art. I, § 7 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath a right . . . to meet the witnesses in their examination face to face"); Art. VI, § 16 ("In civil causes, when pending, the Superior Court shall have the power, before judgment, . . . of directing the examination of witnesses that are aged, very infirm, or going out of the State, upon interrogatories 'de bene esse', to be read in evidence in case of the death or departure of the witnesses before the trial, or inability by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, then to attend; and also the power of obtaining evidence from places not within the State"); Florida: 1887, Decl. of R., § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Georgia: 1877, Art. I, § 1, par. 5 and Rev. C. 1900, § 6361 ("Every person charged with an offence against the laws of this State . . . shall be confronted with the witnesses testifying against him"); so also P. C. 1910, § 8; Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3687 (accused "shall have a right to meet the witnesses, who are produced against him, face to face", and "to cross-examine those produced against him"); Illinois: 1870, Art. II, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right

. . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Indiana: 1851, Art. I, § 13 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Iowa: 1857, Art. I, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions, and in cases involving the life or liberty of an individual, the accused shall have a right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Kansas: 1859, Bill of R., § 10 ("In all prosecutions, the accused shall be allowed . . . to meet the witness face to face"); Kentucky: 1891, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused has the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Louisiana: 1921, Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused in every instance shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Maine: 1819, Art. I, § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have a right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Maryland: 1867, Decl. of R., Art. XXI ("In all criminal prosecutions every man hath a right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him, . . . to examine the witnesses for and against him on oath"); Massachusetts: 1780, Decl. of R., Art. 12 ("Every subject shall have a right to produce all proofs that may be favorable to him; to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Gen. L. 1920, c. 263, § 5; Michigan: 1908, II, § 19 ("In every criminal prosecution, the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Comp. L. 1915, § 15623 (to "meet the witnesses who are produced against him face to face"); Minnesota: 1857, Art. I, § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Mississippi: 1890, Art. III, § 26 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have a right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Missouri: 1875, Art. II, § 22 ("In criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Montana: 1889, Art. III, § 16 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); § 17 ("[In criminal proceedings, if a witness] cannot give security, his deposition shall be taken in the manner prescribed by law, and in the presence of the accused and his counsel, or without their presence, if they shall fail to attend the examination after reasonable notice of the time and place thereof. Any deposition authorized by this section may be received as evidence on the trial, if the witness shall be dead or absent from the State"); Rev. C. 1921, § 1161, (like Const. Art. III, § 16); Nebraska: 1875, Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 6855 ("In a criminal action, the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the Court"; but provision is made for use of testimony taken on preliminary hearing); New Hampshire: 1793, Part I, Art. 15 ("Every subject shall have a right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face); New Jersey: 1844, Art. I, § 8 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); New Mexico: 1911, Art. II, § 14 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); New York: Cons. L. 1909, Civil Rights § 12; North Carolina: 1868, Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions, every man has the right . . . to confront the accusers and witnesses with other testimony"); North Dakota: 1889, I, 13 (no provision on this subject); Comp. L. 1913, § 10393 ("In all criminal prosecutions the party accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Ohio: 1851, Art. I, § 10, as amended 1912 ("In any trial in any court the party accused shall be allowed . . . to meet the witness face to face; . . . but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the State, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance cannot be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present and with counsel at the taking of such deposition and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court"); Oklahoma: 1907, Art. II, § 20, Comp. St. 1921, § 2349 ("In a criminal action the defendant is entitled . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the Court"); Oregon: 1859, Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Pennsylvania: 1874, Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath a right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Philippine Islands: U. S. St. 1916, Aug. 29, c. 416, § 3, 39 Stats. 546, Code 1919, § 4112 (Bill of Rights); P. I. P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15 ("to be confronted at the trial by and to cross-examine the witnesses against him"; with a proviso as to using former testimony for the prosecution, like Cal. P. C. § 686, quoted ante, § 1387); Porto Rico: U. S. St. 1917, Mar. 2, § 2, 39 Stats. 951, Code 1919, §4043 (Bill of Rights); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6022 (quoted post, § 1411); 1904, People v. Bat-

The only opening for argument lies in the circumstance that these brief provisions are unconditional and absolute in form, i.e. they do not say that the accused shall be confronted "except when the witness is deceased, ill, out of the jurisdiction, or otherwise unavailable", but imperatively prescribe that he "shall be confronted." Upon this feature the argument has many times been founded that, although the accused has had the fullest benefit of cross-examining a witness now deceased or otherwise unavailable, nevertheless, since the witness' presence before the tribunal is constitutionally indispensable, his decease or the like is no excuse for now dispensing with his presence.

That this argument is unfounded cannot be doubted; and the answer to it may be put in several forms:

(1) There never was at common law any recognized right to an indispensable thing called Confrontation as distinguished from Cross-examination. There was a right to cross-examination as indispensable, and that right was involved in and secured by confrontation; it was the same right under different names. This much is clear enough from the history of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364), and from the continuous understanding and exposition of the idea of confrontation (ante, § 1395). It follows that, if the accused has had the benefit of cross-examination, he has had the very privilege secured to him by the Constitution.[2]

tistini, 5 P. R. 120 (U. S. Constitution Am. VI, assumed to be applicable); Rhode Island: 1842, Art. I, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); South Carolina: 1882, Art. I, § 13 ("Every person shall have a right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); 1895, Art. I, § 18 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); C. Cr. P. 1922, § 951; South Dakota: 1889, Art. VI, § 7 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Rev. C. 1919, § 4410 (an accused is entitled "to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); Tennessee: 1870, Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); so also Shannon's Code 1916, § 7355; Texas: 1876, Art. I, § 10, as amended 1910 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall be confronted with the witnesses against him, . . . except that where the witness resides out of the State and the offense charged is a violation of any of the anti-trust laws of this State, the defendant and the State shall have the right to produce and have the evidence admitted by deposition"); Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 4 (same, down to the exception); § 24 (defendant shall be confronted, etc., "except in certain cases provided for in this code where depositions have been taken"); Utah: 1895, Art. I, § 12 ("In criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted by the witnesses against him"); Comp. L. 1917, § 8553 (like Cal. P. C. § 686 without the 2d exception); Vermont: Ch. I, Art. 10 ("In all prosecutions for criminal offences, a person hath a right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses"); so also Stats. 1894, § 1861; Virginia: 1902, Art. I, § 8 ("In all criminal prosecutions, a man hath a right . . . to be confronted with the accusers and witnesses"); Washington: 1889, Art. I, § 22 ("In criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to meet the witnesses against him face to face"); West Virginia: 1872, Art. III, § 14 ("In all such trials [of crimes and misdemeanors], the accused shall . . . be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Wisconsin: 1848, Art. I, § 7 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to meet the witnesses face to face"); Wyoming: 1889, Art. I, § 10 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him").

[2] This first answer plainly disposes of all objections to the use of cross-examined depositions and former testimony. But the use of dying declarations and other exceptional statements can only be met by the further answers set forth in (2) and (3).

(2) Moreover, this right of cross-examination thus secured was not a right devoid of exceptions. The right to subject opposing testimony to cross-examination is the right to have the Hearsay rule enforced; for the Hearsay rule is the rule requiring cross-examination (ante, § 1362). Now the Hearsay rule is not a rule without exceptions; there never was a time when it was without exceptions. There were a number of well-established ones at the time of the earliest constitutions, and others might be expected to be developed in the future. The rule had always involved the idea of exceptions, and the constitution-makers indorsed the general principle merely as such. They did not care to enumerate exceptions; they merely named and described the principle sufficiently to indicate what was intended, — just as the brief constitutional sanction for trial by jury, though absolute in form, did not attempt to enumerate the excepted cases to which that form of trial was appropriate nor to describe the precise procedure involved in it, — just as the brief prohibition against "abridging the freedom of speech" was not intended to ignore the exception for defamatory statements, — just as the brief guarantee of the right to have counsel was not intended to prohibit a prosecution where no counsel could be found by the accused, — just as the prohibition against involuntary servitude does not abolish the father's common-law right to the services of his child. The rule sanctioned by the Constitution is the Hearsay rule as to cross-examination, with all the exceptions that may legitimately be found, developed, or created therein.

(3) The net result, then, under the constitutional rule, is that, so far as testimony is required under the Hearsay rule to be taken infra-judicially, it shall be taken in a certain way, namely, subject to cross-examination,— not secretly or 'ex parte' away from the accused. The Constitution does not prescribe what kinds of testimonial statements (dying declarations, or the like) shall be given infra-judicially, — this depends on the law of Evidence for the time being, — but only what mode of procedure shall be followed — i.e. a cross-examining procedure — in the case of such testimony as is required by the ordinary law of Evidence to be given infra-judicially.[3]

These answers are represented in the following passages:

1852, LUMPKIN, J., in Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 374: "The admission of dying declarations in evidence was never supposed in England to violate the well-established principles of the common law that the witnesses against the accused should be examined in his presence. The two rules have co-existed there certainly since the trial of Ely in 1720, and are considered of equal authority. . . . The right of a party accused of a crime to meet the witnesses against him face to face is no new principle. It is coeval with the common law. Its recognition in the Constitution was intended for the twofold purposes of giving it prominence and permanence."

1852, YERGER, J., in Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322, 357: "The admission of these [dying] declarations was established as a rule of evidence by the Courts of the common law, almost coeval with the foundations of that law itself. The general principle of the common law with few exceptions, has always been that 'hearsay evidence' could not be admitted. But simultaneous with the adoption of this rule, an exception was made to it in the case of the 'dying declarations' of the deceased on the trial of a party charged with his murder. . . . When the bill of rights was adopted by the framers of our Constitution, they were aware of this rule of evidence of the common law. They found it adopted into and forming a part of the jurisprudence of the country. The object they had in view, in adopting the clause referred to, was not to introduce a new or abolish an old rule of evidence. Their intention was not to declare or specify the nature, character, or degree of evidence which the Courts of the country should admit. Their aim was simply to re-assert a cherished principle of the common law which had sometimes been violated in the mother country in political prosecutions; leaving to the Courts to decide, according to the rules of law, upon the nature and kind of evidence which a witness, when confronted with the accused, might be permitted to give."

[3] The above text was approved and adopted in the opinion of McCoy, J., for the Court, in State v. Heffernan, 24 S. D. 1, 123 N. W. 87 (1909).

1856, BARTLEY, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 341: "This right . . . has application to the personal presence of the witness on the trial and not to the subject matter or competency of the testimony to be given. . . . If the right secured by the bill of rights applied to the subject matter of the evidence, instead of the witness it would exclude in criminal cases all narration of statements or declarations by other persons heretofore received as competent evidence."

1857, LEONARD, J., in State v. McO'Blenis, 24 Mo. 416, 435: "The purpose of the people was not, we think to introduce any new principle into the law of criminal procedure, but to secure those that already existed as part of the law of the land from future change by elevating them into constitutional law. . . . It was never supposed in England, at any time, that this privilege was violated by the admission of a dying declaration, or of the deposition of a deceased witness under proper circumstances; nor, indeed, by the reception of any other hearsay evidence established and recognized by law as an exception to the rule. . . . These exceptions to the general rule were never considered violations of the rule itself; they grew out of the necessity of the case, and are founded in practical wisdom." RYLAND, J.: "The provision . . . does not make a new rule of evidence; it does not declare what may be or may not be proper and lawful evidence on the trial of a criminal prosecution; it relates to the position of the witness in lawfully detailing such facts as may be lawfully submitted to the jury in a criminal prosecution. . . . He must be in court. So must the accused. He shall not detail his knowledge of the facts in a dark or secret chamber, in the absence of the accused, to be afterwards read against the accused before the jury."[4]

1909, McCOY, J., in State v. Hefferman, 24 S. D. 1, 123 N. W. 87: "It is generally agreed that the process of confrontation has two purposes — the main and essential one, and a secondary one. The main and essential purpose of confrontation is to secure the opportunity of cross-examination. The opponent demands confrontation, not for the idle purpose of gazing upon a witness or of being gazed upon by him, but for the purpose of cross-examination, which cannot be had except by the direct and personal putting of questions and obtaining immediate answers. That this is the true and essential significance of confrontation is demonstrated by counsel and judges from the beginning of the hearsay rule to the present day. There is, however, a secondary advantage to be obtained from the personal appearance of the witness. The judge and jury are enabled to obtain the elusive and incommunicable evidence of a witness' deportment while testifying, and a certain subjective moral effect is produced upon the witness. This secondary advantage, however, does not arise from the confrontation of the opponent and the witness. It is not the consequence of those two being brought face to face. It is the witness' presence before the tribunal that secures this secondary advantage, which might equally be obtained whether the opponent was or was not allowed to cross-examine. In other words, this secondary advantage is a result accidentally associated with the process of confrontation, whose original and fundamental object is the opponent's cross-examination. The witness' presence before the tribunal may be dispensed with if not obtainable. The question, then, whether there is a right to be confronted with opposing witnesses, is essentially a question whether there is a right of cross-examination. If there has been a cross-examination, there has been a confrontation. The satisfaction of the right of cross-examination disposes of any objection based on the so-called right of confrontation. Nevertheless, the secondary advantage incidentally obtained for the tribunal by the witness' presence before it — the demeanor-evidence — is an advantage to be insisted upon whenever it can be had. No one has doubted that it is highly desirable if only it is available. But it is merely desirable. Where it cannot be obtained, it need not be required. It is no essential part of the motion of confrontation. It stands on no better footing than other evidence to which special value is attached, and just as the original of a document, or a preferred witness may be dispensed with in case of unavailability, so demeanor-evidence may be dispensed with in a similar necessity. Accordingly, supposing that the indispensable requirement of cross-examination has been satisfied, the only remaining inquiry is whether the demeanor-evidence, to be obtained by the witness' production before the tribunal, is available.

[4] 1900, State v. Moore, 156 Mo. 204, 56 S.W. 883 ("The discussion in that case [State v. McO'Blenis] . . . constitutes a chapter in our judicial history which will forever command the admiration of the bench and bar of our State").

"This inquiry, the conditions of unavailability of demeanor-evidence by reason of death, illness, and the like, remains now to be made. But first the effect must be considered of the constitutional sanction in the United States of the principle of confrontation; for this has often erroneously affected the judicial attitude towards demeanor-evidence. In the United States most of the Constitutions have given a permanent sanction to the principle of confrontation by provisions requiring that in criminal cases the accused shall 'be confronted with the witnesses against him' or 'brought face to face' with them. The question thus arises whether these constitutional provisions affect the common-law requirement of confrontation otherwise than by putting it beyond the possibility of abolition by an ordinary legislative body. The only opening for argument lies in the circumstance that these brief provisions are unconditional and absolute in form; i.e., they do not say that the accused shall be 'confronted' except where the witness is deceased, ill, out of the jurisdiction, or otherwise unavailable, but imperatively prescribes that he 'shall be confronted.' Upon this feature the argument has many times been founded that, although the accused has had the fullest benefit of cross-examining a witness now deceased or otherwise unavailable, nevertheless, the witness' presence before the tribunal being constitutionally indispensable, his decease or the like is no excuse for dispensing with his presence.

"That this argument is unfounded is doubtless; and the answer to it may be put in several forms: (1) There never was at common law any recognized right to an indispensable thing called confrontation as distinguished from cross-examination. There was a right to cross-examine as indispensable, and that right was involved in and secured by confrontation. It was the same right under different names. This much is clear enough from the history of the hearsay rule, and from the continuous understanding and exposition of the idea of confrontation. It follows that, if the accused has had the right of cross-examination, he has had the very privilege secured to him by the Constitution. (2) Moreover, this right of cross-examination thus secured was not a right devoid of exceptions. The right to subject opposing testimony to cross-examination is the right to have the hearsay rule enforced, for the hearsay rule is the rule requiring cross-examination. Now, the hearsay rule is not a rule without exceptions. There never was a time when it was without exceptions. There were a number of well-established ones at the time of the earliest Constitutions, and others might be expected to develop in the future. The rule had always involved the idea of exceptions, and the Constitution makers indorsed the general principle merely as such. They did not care to enumerate exceptions. They merely named and described the principle sufficiently to indicate what was intended. The rule sanctioned by the Constitution is the hearsay rule as to cross-examination, with all the exceptions that may be legitimately found, developed, or created therein. (3) The net result then, under the constitutional rule, is that, so far as testimony is required under the hearsay rule to be taken infrajudicially (that is, within the presence of the Court), it shall be taken in a certain way, namely, subject to cross-examination, not secretly or 'ex parte' away from the accused. . . .

"The former testimony of a witness who is absent from the State — that is, beyond the jurisdiction of the Court — is one of the well-recognized necessities within the exceptions of the hearsay rule. A party desiring to offer the testimony of a witness who is out of the jurisdiction and beyond the reach of a subpœna or other compulsory process of the trial Court is helpless. This branch of the rule stands upon the same reasoning and basis as the former testimony of a deceased witness."

1915, PELHAM, P. J., in Todd v. State, 13 Ala. App. 301, 69 So. 325: "There was not at common law any recognized right to an indispensable thing called confrontation as distinguished from the right of cross-examination, and this in effect has been recognized by the Supreme Court as to the provision of our organic law. If this is the proper interpretation of the clause, and we think it is, then a public record declared by law to be evidence that imports verity, furnishes no reason for the application of the rule, as cross-examination can have no application to this class of evidence. The constitutional rule of confrontation is but a sanction or guaranty of the right recognized under the common law, and is subject to the same exceptions as then existed, and those that may be legitimately found to exist, developed or created in the future in consonance with the progress of human affairs through necessity, expediency, or public policy. Other exceptions that may be made are but the necessary application of old rules to the new order of things and new conditions."

It is important to appreciate this, the true interpretation of the constitutional provisions, because the erroneous answer has occasionally been advanced that the "witness" who is to be "brought face to face" is merely the person now reporting another's former testimony or dying declaration, and that thus the constitutional provision is satisfied by the production of the second person.[5] The fallacy here is that the statements of the former witness or dying declarant are equally testimony, since they are offered as assertions offered to prove the truth of the fact asserted (ante, § 1361), and the question must therefore still be faced whether these testimonial statements are covered by the constitutional provision.[6] That they are not so covered is a conclusion which can only be reached by the other and safer answers already noticed.

It is well to have the sound theory fully understood and accepted, because, if the other should temporarily prevail, its overthrow and the exposure of its fallacies might be thought to involve the overthrow of the exceptions to the Hearsay rule. The revision and extension of those exceptions is gradually progressing, and it is well to appreciate fully that there is in this progress nothing inconsistent with constitutional sanctions. So bold are nowadays the attempts to wrest the Constitution in aid of crime, and so complaisant are the Courts in listening to fantastic and unfounded objections to evidence, that the permissibility of such changes should not be left in the slightest doubt.

[5] 1837, Smith, J., in Woodside v. State, 2 How. Miss. 665 ("[In dying declarations] the murdered individual is not a witness. . . . His declarations are regarded as facts or circumstances connected with the murder. . . . It is the individual who swears to the statements of the deceased that is the witness, not the deceased").

[6] 1858, Napton, J., in State v. Houser, 26 Mo. 437 ("To say that the witness who must meet the accused 'face to face' is he who repeats what the dying man has said, is a mere evasion. . . . [He is not] the witness whose testimony is to affect the life or liberty or property of the accused. It is the dying man who is speaking through him, whose evidence is to have weight and efficacy sufficient, it may be, to take away the prisoner's life. The living witness is but a conduit-pipe, — a mere organ, through whom this evidence is conveyed to the Court and jury").

§ 1398. Same; State of the Law in the Various Juridictions. (1) In dealing with depositions and former testimony of deceased or absent witnesses, our Courts have almost unanimously received them, when offered against the accused in criminal prosecutions, as not being obnoxious to the constitutional provision, if the right of cross-examination had been satisfied. The leading opinions were rendered chiefly between 1840 and 1860. Up to 1886, apparently the only contrary precedent not overruled was an early Virginia case,[1] afterwards often cited; this professed to decide the question merely on English precedent, and not on constitutional grounds, and proceeded on the authority of an earlier English treatise,[2] which in turn went upon the authority of Fenwick's Trial (ante, § 1364), a parliamentary decision actually to the opposite effect, and misunderstood by the writer of the treatise. This early Virginia ruling, of so little weight in itself, served however to keep a doubt alive; and in the last generation a few ill-considered rulings in other jurisdictions have followed it.[3] Apart from these rulings, it is well and properly settled that such evidence — assuming always that there has been a due cross-examination — is admissible for the State in a criminal prosecution, without infringing the Constitution.[4]

§ 1398. [1] 1827, Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. 708.

[2] Peake, Evidence, 60 (1801).

[3] Ala. 1889, Anderson v. State, 89 Ala. 12, 7 So. 429 (here the statute expressly required consent of the defendant; but in this case the deposition had been taken by the defendant, and was not put in by him); Ark. 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 32 S. W. 102, semble (depositions; but see the earlier cases in the next note); Ill. 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 593, 13 N. E. 809 (said obiter that the use of depositions in a criminal case "would be a direct denial of the right to meet the witnesses face to face"; no authority cited; see the contrary later case in the next note); Ia. 1871, State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 36, 40 (see the contrary later case in the next note); 1905, State v. Mosher, 128 Ia. 82, 103 N. W. 105, semble (rule not applicable in disbarment proceedings; but "were this a criminal case, the point might be well taken"); Kan. 1897, State v. Tomblin, 57 Kan. 841, 48 Pac. 144, semble; Ky. 1886, Kaelin v. Com., 84 Ky. 354, 368, 1 S. W. 594 (said 'obiter'; no precedent cited; see contra the case cited in the next note); Mont. 1893, State v. Lee, 13 Mont. 248, 33 Pac. 690 (but see the later case in the next note); 1899, Re Wellcome, 23 Mont. 260, 58 Pac. 711, semble; Okl. 1897, Watkins v. U. S., 5 Okl. 729, 50 Pac. 88; Tex. 1896, Cline v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. App. 320, 36 S. W. 1099 (apparently attempting, in a singularly unenlightened opinion, to overrule the long line of Texas precedents cited in the next note); Va. 1827, Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. 708; 1853, Com. v. Brogy, 10 Gratt. 722, 732 (Finn's Case approved: but nothing said of the constitutional question): 1909, Parks v. Com., 109 Va. 807, 63 S. E. 462 (Finn's Case repudiated, so far as concerns the general principle: testimony of a deceased former witness, admitted: Finn's Case restricted to the case of an absent witness; the above text quoted).

[4] Besides the following cases, many others cited in the sections post, after § 1402, use such evidence in criminal cases without expressly passing upon the constitutional question; the following cases represent the view stated above in the text, except as otherwise noted:
Federal: 1851, S. v. Macomb, 5 McLean 286; 1895, Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 240, 15 Sup. 337; 1897, Brown, J., Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 17 Sup. 326; 1904, West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258, 24 Sup. 650 (cross-examined testimony before a committing magistrate, the witness now being permanently a non-resident, offered against a defendant; held, that the only Federal question can be whether there was due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment, and this is not thereby violated; the Sixth Federal Amendment, quoted ante, § 1397, does not control State legislation); 1906, U. S. v. Greene, 146 Fed. 796, D. C.; 1906, U. S. v. Zucker, 163

But nevertheless the early doubt as to the constitutional propriety of allowing the prosecution to use depositions against the accused was widespread at the U. S. 710, 16 Sup. 641 (the Court merely decided that a suit by the Government for duties payable, the plaintiff not having chosen to prosecute criminally for the evasion of the tax, was not a "criminal prosecution" under U. S. Const. Am. 6, and hence the question whether a deposition was properly taken in France was not affected by that clause). In Federal Court-martial practice, tradition excludes depositions in capital cases where offered by the prosecution; the statute still maintains this irrational distinction; U. S. St. June 4, 1920, ch. V, subchapter II, Articles of War, Art. 25.

Alabama: 1875, Horton v. State, 18 Ala. 488, 495;

Arkansas: 1860, Pope v. State, 22 Ark. 372; 1881, Green v. State, 38 Ark. 304, 321; 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 Ark. 353, 370, 24 S. W. 885; 1895, McNamara v. State, 60 Ark. 400, 30 S. W. 762;

California: 1872, People v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 137; 1884, People v. Oiler, 66 Cal. 101, 4 Pac. 1066; 1893, People v. Douglass, 100 Cal. 1, 5, 34 Pac. 490, semble; 1895, People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 id. 697; 1897, People v. Sierp, 116 Cal. 249, 251, 48 Pac. 88 (because the Constitution has no confrontation-clause); 1897, People v. Cady, 117 Cal. 10, 48 Pac. 908; 1907, People v. Clark, 151 Cal. 200, 90 Pac. 549 (affirming People v. Sierp; "the matter should be considered as finally settled"). In this State there was originally a limitation, resting upon P. C. § 686 (quoted ante, § 1387), and excluding testimony at a former trial, while admitting testimony given before a committing magistrate, because the statute in terms authorized the latter only: 1881, People v. Chung Ah Chue, 57 Cal. 567; 1881, People v. Qurise, 59 Cal. 343; 1893, People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127, 131, 32 Pac. 880; 1893, People v. Gordon, 99 Cal. 227, 233, 33 Pac. 901; 1898, People v. Brennan, 121 Cal. 495, 53 Pac. 1098 (charges of rape, extortion, etc.; testimony at the preliminary examination excluded; reason obscure); 1901, People v. Bird, 132 Cal. 261, 64 Pac. 259 (testimony at a former trial, inadmissible for the prosecution, by reason of the omission to enumerate such a case in P. C. § 686; but the accused may use such testimony); 1904, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169 (testimony before the magistrate, admitted for the State; no cases cited). But in 1911, by constitutional amendment (quoted ante, § 1387, n. 2), express provision was made for testimony at a former trial of the same cause, so that the foregoing rulings are no longer effective. Compare here also the peculiar local rulings under the statute for using a stenographic report of the testimony (post, § 1669).

Colorado: 1895, Ryan v. People, 21 Colo. 119, 40 Pac. 775 (under Const. Art. 2, sects. 16, 17) 1914, Henwood v. People, 57 Colo. 544, 143 Pac. 373 (following Young v. People, 54 Colo 293, 130 Pac. 1011);

Connecticut: 1921, State v. Gaetano, 96 Conn 306, 114 Atl. 82 (former testimony before the magistrate of a witness now escaped and disappeared);

Delaware: 1855, State v. Oliver, 2 Houst. 589;

Florida: 1920, Blackwell v. State, 79 Fla. 709, 86 So. 224 (former testimony of a witness now ill, admitted; but in this State a statute (engineered by what special interest or prejudice, does not appear) immediately proceeded to forbid the use in criminal cases: St. 1921, c. 8572, No. 177 (testimony . . . shall not be admitted against an accused person in a subsequent trial, but the witness shall be produced);

Georgia: 1856, Williams v. State, 19 Ga. 403; 1918, Smith v. State, 147 Ga. 689, 95 S. E. 281 (witness removed to another State);

Hawaii: 1916, Terr. v. Curran, 23 Haw. 421;

Idaho: 1890, Terr. v. Evans, 2 Ida. 627, 632; 1890, Terr. v. Evans, 2 Ida. Hasb. 651, 23 Pac. 232; 1908, State v. Zarlenga, 14 Ida. 305, 94 Pac. 55;

Illinois: 1870, Barnett v. People, 54 Ill. 325, 330 (former testimony); 1898, Gillespie v. People, 176 Ill. 238, 52 N. E. 250;

Indiana: 1911, Wilson v. State, 175 Ind. 458, 93 N. E. 609 (witness out of the State and not found); St. 1905, p. 584, § 242, Burns Annot. St. 1914, § 2118 (a defendant's request or notice, in a criminal case, to take depositions "shall be deemed a waiver of his constitutional right to object to the taking of depositions by the State", etc.);

Iowa: 1884, State v. Fitzgerald, 63 Ia. 272, 19 N. W. 202; 1911, State v. Kimes, 152 Ia. 240, 132 N. W. 180; 1911, State v. Brown, 152 Ia. 427, 132 N. W. 862 (applied to former testimony of one now out of the jurisdiction;

Kansas: 1904, State v. Nelson, 68 Kan. 566, 75 Pac. 505 (thus presumably disposing of the doubt in State v. Tomblin, supra, n. 4); 1904, State v. Harmon, 70 Kan. 476, 78 Pac. 805 (foregoing case approved); 1911, State v. Stewart, 85 Kan. 404, 116 Pac. 489 (preliminary examination); 1912, State v. Gentry, 86 Kan. 534, 121 Pac. 352 (preliminary examination);

Kentucky: 1855, Walston v. Com., 16 B. Monr. 35; 1904, Fuqua v. Com., 118 Ky. 578, 81 S. W. 923 (former testimony of a deceased witness, admitted; holding that St. 1903, § 4643, Stats. 1915, §§ 1019*a*, 6643, quoted post, § 1413, and providing that the consent of the defendant in criminal cases shall be necessary, applies in that respect "alone to the testimony of living witnesses so taken"); 1906, Austin v. Com., 124 Ky. 55, 98 S. W. 295 (former testimony); bar, a hundred years ago. The doubt showed itself in the legislative omission, when providing authority for taking depositions generally, to make provision

Louisiana: 1876, State v. Harvey, 28 La. An 105; 1903, State v. Kline, 109 La. 622, 33 So. 618; 1903, State v. Banks, 111 La. 22, 35 So. 370; 1903, State v. Wheat, 111 La. 860, 35 So. 955 (the rule is not different under the Constitution of 1898);
Maine: 1906, State v. Herlihy, 102 Me. 310, 66 Atl. 643;
Massachusetts: 1836, Com. v. Richards, 18 Pick. 437;
Michigan: 1895, People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92, 62 N. W. 1017; 1910, People v. Droste, 160 Mich. 66, 125 N. W. 87 (illness; deposition);
Minnesota: 1895, State v. George, 60 Minn. 503, 63 N. W. 100;
Mississippi: 1837, Woodsides v. State, 2 How. 665; 1886, Owens v. State, 63 Miss. 450, 452 (former testimony; probably overruling Dominges v. State, 7 Sm. & M. 475); 1899, Lipscomb v. State, 76 Miss. 223, 25 So. 158; 1902, Dukes v. State, 80 Miss. 353, 31 So. 744, semble;
Missouri: 1857, State v. McO'Blenis, 24 Mo. 416 (see quotation supra); 1858, State v. Houser, 26 Mo. 433; 1918, State v. Barnes, 274 Mo. 625, 204 S. W. 267 (State v. McO'Blenis, supra, affirmed);
Montana: 1895, State v. Byers, 16 Mont. 565, 41 Pac. 708;
Nebraska: 1919, Koenigstein v. State, 103 Nebr. 580, 173 N. W. 603;
Nevada: 1877, State v. Johnson, 12 Nev. 123;
New York: 1876, Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262, 268 (St. 1821, c. 19, relating to the perpetuation of testimony, without cross-examination, held constitutional); 1902, People v. Elliott, 172 N. Y 146, 64 N. E. 837; 1891, People v. Fish, 125 N. Y. 136, 26 N. E. 319; 1914, People v. Qualey, 210 N. Y. 202, 104 N. E. 138 (testimony before a magistrate under C. C. P. § 8; for the further point as to using the official stenographic report, see n. 8, infra);
Ohio: 1856, Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 341; 1857, Robbins v. State, 8 Oh. St. 163;
Oklahoma: 1910, Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 651, 108 Pac. 561 (approving the above text); 1911, Warren v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 1, 115 Pac. 812 (testimony at preliminary examination);
Oregon: 1909, State v. Walton, 53 Or. 557, 99 Pac. 431, 101 Pac. 389 (following Mattox v. U. S., cited infra, n. 7); 1911, State v. Myers, 59 Or. 537, 117 Pac. 818 (following State v. Walton, supra); in State v. McPherson, 70 Or. 371, 141 Pac. 1018, the opinion, without citing any authority, loosely expresses "grave doubt" whether anything less than "meeting the witnesses face to face in the very trial" will do;
Pennsylvania: 1873, Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 321 325; 1892, Com. v. Cleary, 148 Pa. 26, 38, 23 Atl. 1110;
Philippine Islands: 1904, People v. Ruiz, 7 P. R. 129;
South Carolina: 1915, State v. Rogers, 101 S. C. 280, 85 S. E. 636;
South Dakota: 1909, State v. Heffernan, 24 S. D. 1, 123 N. W. 87 (former testimony; leading opinion by McCoy, J.);
Tennessee: 1838, Anthony v. State, Meigs 265; 1850, Kendrick v. State, 10 Humph. 484 (overruling, in effect, State v. Atkins, 1 Overt. 229); 1885, Baxter v. State, 15 Lea 660; Texas: 1871, Greenwood v. State, 35 Tex. 587, 591; Const. Art. I, § 10 (quoted ante, § 1397, n. 7); 1876, Johnson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 333, 338, 344 ("the constitutional objection . . . is now no longer an open question"); 1876, Black v. State, 1 Tex. App. 368, 383; 1879, Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 319, 339; 1880, Dunlap v. State, 9 Tex. App. 179, 188; 1887, Steagald v. State, 22 Tex. App. 464, 490; 1888, Gilbreath v. State, 26 Tex. App. 315, 318; 1896, Cline v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. App. 320, 36 S. W. 1099 (contra to the foregoing, by a majority opinion); 1907, Porch v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 7, 99 S. W. 1122 (testimony of a deceased witness before the committing magistrate, received; "we therefore without a further tedious discussion of the question, overrule the majority opinion in the Cline case [cited supra], and reaffirm the opinions of this Court rendered prior to the Cline case as the law"; this was a sensible and praiseworthy attitude, meant to set right once for all the law in this State; this decision therefore practically repudiates also on this point Smith v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 65, 85 S. W. 1153, cited more fully post, § 1405); 1908, Pratt v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 291, 109 S. W. 138 (former testimony of deceased witness, admitted: Davidson, P. J., diss., on authority of Cline v. State, but ignoring Porch v. State); 1908, Nixon v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 325, 109 S. W. 931 (Porch v. State confirmed); 1908, Hobbs v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 76, 112 S. W. 308 (former testimony of witness now in another jurisdiction, admitted; Davidson, P. J., still dissenting; his history is unsound); 1911, Kemper v. State, 63 Tex. Cr. 1, 138 S. W. 1025 (deceased witness at former trial of same case; Scott, Sp. J., for the majority: "We therefore adhere to the majority opinion of the Court as announced in the Cline Case, and expressly overrule the Porch Case and Hobbs Case and the Pratt Case, and in fact every other case in Texas which has announced a contrary rule"; the opinion vainly wrestles with the history and reason of the subject, and is a futile effort to turn this Court backward from the sensible rule, by invoking the supposed laws of Moses and of Rome; Prendergast, diss., files notice that whenever the majority is otherwise consituted "this decision may be overruled"); 1912, Robertson v. State, 63 Tex. Cr. 216, 142 S. W. 533 ("Kemper v. State is overruled on this point, and Cline v.

for depositions on behalf of the prosecution. This omission was almost universal in the several States. Hence, regardless of what the Courts might have held if such depositions (as distinguished from testimony at a former trial) were sought to be used, there was little or no opportunity to present the question; for in practice they could not be taken, lacking the authority in any officer to take them.[5] This deficiency, however, has in modern times begun to be cured by statutes (sometimes expressly sanctioned by constitutional provisions) authorizing depositions to be taken and used by the prosecution.[6]

(2) The same conclusion has been accepted for the constitutionality of evidence admissible by way of exception to the Hearsay rule. The use of dying declarations has been often thus passed upon, and without any dissenting rulings.[7] A like consequence must of course follow for the other ex-

State, and all cases following it are again overruled", Davidson, P. J., diss.); 1917, Young v. State, 82 Tex. Cr. 257, 199 S. W. 479 (Morrow, J.: "The rule in the Cline Case was abandoned by a divided Court in the opinion in Porch v. State . . . and in Hobbs' Case", admitting the testimony of one residing out of the State); 1921, Russell v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 572, 232 S. W. 309;
Utah: 1876, U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 322; 1902, State v. King, 24 Utah 482, 68 Pac. 419; 1910, State v. Vance, 38 Utah 1, 110 Pac. 434;
Washington: 1897, State v. Cushing, 17 Wash. 544, 50 Pac. 412;
West Virginia: 1894, Carrico v. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 89, 19 S. E. 571 (left undecided);
Wisconsin: 1892, Jackson v. State, 81 Wis. 127, 130, 51 N. W. 89; 1907, Spencer v. State, 132 Wis. 509, 112 N. W. 462 (testimony before a committing magistrate; usable when the witness is deceased or permanently incapacitated mentally or physically; rule for a witness out of the jurisdiction, not stated; careful opinion by Winslow, J.); Wyoming: 1916, Ivey v. State, 24 Wyo. 1, 154 Pac. 589.

Whether disbarment proceedings are criminal, in the constitutional sense, has usually been answered in the negative: 1905, State v. McRae, 49 Fla. 389, 38 So. 605; 1905, State v. Mosher, 128 Ia. 82, 103 N. W. 105; 1899, Re Wellcome, 23 Mont. 260, 58 Pac. 711.

Whether the 6th Amendment applies to criminal contempts: 1912, Merchants' S. & G. Co. v. Board of Trade, 8th C. C. A., 201 Fed. 20, 29 (in criminal contempt proceedings, the defendant is not entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him).

[5] The following rulings show the application of the principle: 1899, State v. Potter, 6 Ida. 584, 57 Pac. 431 (depositions taken on preliminary examination by the State, not to be used at all at the trial, because not expressly authorized by statute; the opinion ignores the common-law practice, ante, § 1375; this is in truth not a deposition at all, but testimony at a former trial); 1886, Kaelin v. Com., 84 Ky. 354, 367, 1 S. W. 594 (deposition, taken by the accused, of a person abroad, not authorized by statute: excluded).

In People v. Turner, 265 Ill. 594, 107 N. E. 162 (1914), the Court refused to order a continuance, on application of the defendant, as an alternative to admitting a deposition of a non-resident taken by the defendant; "the Court ought not indirectly to change the law by compelling prosecutors to consent to the introduction of evidence for the defendant not legally admissible." This 'non possumus' attitude is unfortunate. The Courts have just as much power to deal with the law in litigation as the Legislature. But, even if not, they can at least revert to the original practice of themselves (mentioned in Greenleaf, I, § 320, as quoted in the above opinion). A good deal more courage and self-assertion on the part of Courts in their legitimate field of procedure should replace their present self-abnegation.

[6] For example, in California, formerly P. C. 1872, § 1335, authorized the use of depositions in criminal cases for the accused only; but by Const. 1879, Art. 1, § 13, and St. 1905, c. 540, p. 702, provision was made for taking depositions for the prosecution also, except in homicide cases: P. C. §§ 1335, 1345 (quoted ante, § 1387, post, § 1411).

The other jurisdictions now authorizing depositions to be taken by the State include the following; the provisions will be found cited post, § 1411, except as otherwise noted: Alabama (with accused's consent); Colorado; Idaho; Indiana (supra, n. 4; with accused's consent); Kentucky (supra, n. 4; with accused's consent); Louisiana; Maine; Montana; Nevada; New York; Ohio (ante, § 1397); South Carolina (in one class of cases only); Texas (ante, § 1397; in one class of cases only); Virginia (in one class of cases only); Washington; Wisconsin; Wyoming. In the Federal military Courts a similar authority exists (supra, n. 4, and post, § 1411).

[7] Federal: 1895, Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 243, 15 Sup. 337; 1897, Brown, J., in Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 17 Sup.

ceptions to the Hearsay rule; it has been expressly sanctioned for official statements,[8] and for reputation and other established exceptions.[9] The anoma-

326; Cal. 1858, People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 36; Ga. 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 374 (see quotation supra); 1908, Jones v. State, 130 Ga. 274, 60 S. E. 840; Haw. 1893, Govt. v. Hering, 9 Haw. 181, 189; Ia. 1858, State v. Nash, 7 Ia. 377; Ky. 1885, Walston v. Com., 16 B. Mon. 34; La. 1858, State v. Brunetto, 13 La. An. 45; Mass. 1853, Com. v. Carey, 12 Cush. 246; Miss. 1852, Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322, 357 (see quotation ante, § 1397); N. Y. 1898, People v. Corey, 157 N. Y. 332, 51 N. E. 1024; N. Car. 1850, State v. Tilghman, 11 Ired. 554; Oh. 1890, State v. Kindle, 47 Oh. St. 361, 24 N. E. 485; 1902, State v. Wing, 66 Oh. St. 407, 64 N. E. 514 (for the exceptions in general); Or. 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 12 Pac. 441; P. I. 1909, U. S. v. Gil, 13 P. I. 530, 548; 1909, U. S. v. Javellana, 14 P. I. 186; R. I. 1889, State v. Murphy, 16 R. I. 533; 1900, State v. Jeswell, 22 id. 136, 46 Atl. 405; Tex. 1857, Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 731; 1876, Black v. State, 1 Tex. App. 368, 384; Utah: 1914, State v. Inlow, 44 Utah 485, 141 Pac. 530 (affirming State v. King, supra, n. 4); Wash. 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650; Wis. 1870, Miller v. State, 25 Wis. 386; 1877, State v. Dickinson, 41 id. 299, 308; 1892, Jackson v. State, 81 id. 130, 137, 51 N. W. 89.

[8] FEDERAL: 1911, Dowdell v. U. S., 221 U. S. 325, 31 Sup. 590 ("where a clerk, upon suggestion of the diminution of the record, orders a clerk of the court below to send up a more ample record, or to supply deficiencies in the record filed", the provision of the Constitution is not applicable; here a clerk's certified copy of entries showing for the Supreme Court the defendant's arraignment in the lower court at Samar, P. I.); 1912, Heike v. U. S., C. C. A., 192 Fed. 83 (official records of U. S. weighers in revenue department, admitted); Alabama: 1915, Todd v. State, 13 Ala. App. 301, 69 So. 325 (transcript of stenographic report of testimony made admissible by statute); Florida: 1914, Collins v. Plant, 68 Fla. 337, 67 So. 80 (State chemist's certificate of analysis, admitted, under G. S. § 1271); 1919, Adams v. American Agricultural C. Co., 78 Fla. 362, 82 So. 850 (State chemist's certificate of analysis of fertilizer, made admissible by Gen. St. 1906, § 1271, in purchaser's claim for defective articles, held not unconstitutional); 1921, Fleischer v. Virginia-Carolina C. Co., 82 Fla. 50, 89 So. 401 (foregoing case followed); Illinois: 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 593, 13 N. E. 809 (certificate of marriage; the constitutional provision "has no reference to record evidence which may during the progress of a criminal trial become necessary to establish some material fact"); 1904, Sokel v. People, 212 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 382 (following Tucker v. People); Iowa: 1886, State v. Matlock, 70 Ia. 229, 30 N. W. 495 (county marriage records, not excluded by the Constitution); 1888, State v. Smith, 74 Ia. 580, 583, 38 N. W. 492 (approving State v. Matlock); Louisiana: 1917, State v. Wilson, 141 La. 404, 75 So. 95 (St. 1908, No. 40, providing for the use of the U. S. internal revenue collector's certificate of licenses issued, held valid to make the certificate admissible, but not 'prima facie' evidence; overruling State v. Donato, 127 La. 393); New York: 1914, People v. Qualey, 210 N. Y. 202, 104 N. E. 138 (Laws 1912, c. 390, April 15, adding § 221 b, C. C. P., for the admission of the official stenographic report of testimony before a magistrate, is constitutional); North Carolina: 1894, State v. Behrman, 114 N. C. 797, 804, 19 S. E. 220 (the use of official records does not violate the constitutional prohibition: here, a foreign marriage certificate was otherwise objectionable as unauthenticated); 1907, State v. Dowdy, 145 N. C. 432, 58 S. E. 1002 (illegal sale of liquor; U. S. revenue collector's certified copy of a Federal liquor license record, admitted; following State v. Behrman); Tennessee: 1869, Reeves v. State, 7 Coldw. 96, 101, 108 (official paper on file; McClain, J., diss.; but the majority take the untenable stand that "the paper is the witness", and that production of a certified copy, where by law the original need not be produced, is in effect a confrontation); Virginia: 1916, Bracey v. Com., 119 Va. 867, 89 S. E. 144 (St. 1908, p. 286, § 24, making admissible the State chemist's certificate of analysis of a beverage, held constitutional).

Contra: 1868, State v. Reidel, 26 Ia. 430, 436 (notary's certificate of protest, not receivable in a criminal case to show no funds); 1887, People v. Foster, 64 Mich. 717, 720, 31 N. W. 596 (official signal-service record of weather; entrant required to be produced in a criminal case, upon the present principle); 1903, People v. Goodrode, 132 Mich. 542, 94 N. W. 14 (clerk's certificate of no record of marriage, excluded, under the Constitution; distinguishing People v. Jones, supra).

The following seem to belong here: Ky. Stats. 1899, § 4643 (official stenographic report not usable in criminal case except by defendant's consent); 1899, Cutler v. Terr., 8 Okl. 101, 56 Pac. 861 (statutory permission for use of official reporter's stenographic notes does not allow them to be used in a criminal case except by calling the reporter).

[9] 1888, State v. Waldron, 16 R. I. 192, 14 Atl. 847 (reputation); 1917, Cochran v. Com., 122 Va. 801, 94 S. E. 329 (express carrier's record of delivery of liquor, made admissible by St. 1916, c. 146, § 40). Contra: 1902, U. S. v. Tanjuanco, 1 P. I. 374 (robbery; held improper, on the present principle, to receive a resolution, lous recent contrary rulings noticed under the former head and in the preceding paragraph above are interesting instances of that finical wisdom which looks back over a century of unquestioned professional practice and imagines sophomoric innovations which the fathers of the profession, living at the Constitution's birth, never dreamed of.

(3) The constitutional provision, so far as it may apply in a given case for lack of cross-examination, may of course be waived by the accused.[10]

The testimony of an absent witness, received by consent of the prosecution to avoid a continuance, is therefore not within the prohibition.[11]

§ 1399. Confrontation, as requiring the Tribunal's or the Defendant's Sight of the Witness. So far, then, as the essential purpose of Confrontation is concerned, it is satisfied if the opponent has had the benefit of full cross-examination. So far, furthermore, as a secondary and dispensable element is concerned, the thing required is the presence of the witness before the tribunal so that his demeanor while testifying may furnish such evidence of his credibility as can be gathered therefrom.

In asking whether these two requirements are fulfilled, the inquiry, for the first element, is determined by the rules already examined (ante, §§ 1373–1393).

For the second element, there is a little room for dispute in the application of the principle; it is satisfied if the witness, throughout the material part of his testimony, is before the tribunal where his demeanor can be adequately observed. It is possible to quibble over the precise fulfilment of this requisite in a given instance;[1] but it will ordinarily be easy to adopted at a meeting of the residents of several towns, and certified by the proceedings of the municipal council, stating that the accused "was known as a man of bad character by reason of his notorious acts . . . robbery, theft, and other crimes").

[10] 1912, Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S. 442, 32 Sup. 250 (testimony at the preliminary investigation, offered by the accused); 1870, State v. Polson, 29 Ia. 133, 135; 1884, State v. Fooks, 65 Ia. 452, 21 N. W. 561; 1898, State v. Olds, 106 Ia. 110, 76 N. W. 644; 1881, State v. McNeil, 33 La. An. 1332, 1335; 1910, State v. Vanella, 40 Mont. 326, 106 Pac. 3641; 1896, State v. Mitchell, 119 N. C. 784, 25 S. E. 783 ('ex parte' examination of bastardy-prosecutrix; failure to object is a waiver); State v. Rogers, 119 N. C. 793, 26 S. E. 142 (same); 1906, U. S. v. Anastasio, 6 P. I. 413 (charge of attempt at rape dismissed after evidence heard, and another charge substituted; defendant assented to be tried on the evidence of record on the former charge; held valid; Carson, J.: "Both the primary and the secondary purposes of confrontation were attained"); 1909, U. S. v. Raymundo, 14 P. I. 416, 438. Compare § 1371, ante.

[11] 1904, Schick v. U. S., 195 U. S. 65, 24 Sup. 826 (said 'obiter' that Art. 6 of the U. S. Constitution can be waived); 1909, Mullen v. U. S., 212 U. S. 516, 29 Sup. 330 (holding the same for U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 1624, providing for courts-martial, in so far as that provision is intended to be analogous to the constitutional right); 1912, Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S. 442, 32 Sup. 250; 1900, Ruiz v. Terr., 10 N. M. 120, 61 Pac. 126 (but here it was put upon the ground that the witness' agreed testimony turned out to be favorable to the defendant); and cases cited post, § 2595, n. 6.

§ 1399. [1] The following are instances of amusing legal pedantry: 1896, Bennett v. State, 62 Ark. 516, 36 S. W. 947 (holding erroneous the action of the trial Court in proceeding with the examination of witnesses during the accused's absence in the watercloset); 1899, State v. Mannion, 19 Utah 505, 57 Pac. 543 (a witness for the State claiming to be afraid of the defendant, the Court placed him back in the room, out of sight and hearing of the witness; held improper, on the absurd ground that the dictionaries define "confront" as meaning "to bring face to face", and that the constitutional provision was thus violated; Bartch, C. J., dissenting as to the reasoning). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1393.

determine whether in substance the desired object of the law has been obtained.[2]

2. Circumstances of Necessity making Witness' Personal Presence Unavailable

§ 1401. Preliminary Distinctions; (a) Deposition and Testimony; (b) Civil and Criminal Cases; (c) Taking and Using a Deposition. Before examining the circumstances of that necessity which dispenses with the witness' personal presence for testifying (ante, § 1396), it is desirable to notice certain distinctions which here play a more or less important part.

(a) There is on principle no distinction between a deposition and former testimony as to the conditions upon which either may be used at the trial. So far as the circumstances make it impossible to obtain the witness' personal presence for testifying, by reason of his death, illness, absence from the jurisdiction, and the like, that impossibility exists in precisely the same degree for a deposition and for former testimony to a jury, — supposing, of course, that in each case there has been cross-examination. There is on principle not the slightest ground for failing to recognize all the dispensing circumstances as equally sufficient for both kinds of testimony. Nevertheless, there is in most jurisdictions more or less inconsistency on this subject; and it can never be safely assumed that a Court will treat both kinds in the same way. There are usually independent lines of precedents for the two kinds of testimony. This is due, of course, to the peculiar inability of the common-law Courts to authorize depositions (ante, § 1376), in consequence of which the treatment of depositions has been handled apart by itself as a special legislative problem. The statutes, in granting the power to order depositions, have usually specified the conditions of necessity allowing their admission, and this statutory specification has rarely been sufficiently thoughtful of all the possible kinds of necessity; the result is an unfortunate patchwork of statutes and decisions. Presumably the statutory enumeration will not be treated as intended to exclude other causes unenumerated; this ought to be the construction.

As between depositions 'de bene esse' and 'in perpetuam memoriam', there are also to be found differences uncalled for on principle. The statutes authorizing depositions of the latter sort have seldom enumerated the conditions of use, and the judicial precedents are rare. The precedents and statutes will therefore here be distinguished according as they apply to former testimony and to depositions 'de bene esse' and 'in perpetuam memoriam.'

[2] Eng. 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1341 (Stafford: "I beg your lordships that he may look me in the face"; the witness was turned to the Court; "I desire the letter of the law, which says my accuser shall come face to face"; L. H. S. Finch: "My lord, you do see the witness: that is enough for face to face"); U. S. 1886, Skaggs v. State, 108 Ind. 57, 8 N. E. 695 (the prosecutrix, in a rape case, was deaf and dumb, and being shocked at a question put to her, ran out into an adjoining room; the interpreter followed her, obtained an answer, and returned with her, in about one minute, and then reported the answer to the Court; held, that no substantial right was prejudiced); 1918, Com. v. Principatti, 260 Pa. 587, 104 Atl. 53 (excluding persons who intimidated the witness; cited more fully post, § 1840).

(b) There is on principle no distinction, as to the conditions of necessity for using depositions and former testimony, between civil and criminal cases. If absence from the jurisdiction (for example) is a necessity in the one class of cases, it is equally a necessity in the other. The needs of public justice are as strenuous as those of private litigation. It is even more necessary that an offender against the community be duly punished than that a debtor discharge his private obligation. Our traditional tenderness for accused persons explains to some extent the prevalence of this distinction in some jurisdictions. But there are also two legal principles that chiefly account for the distinction where it is found: (1) The constitutional provision requiring the confrontation of witnesses with the accused is regarded in a few jurisdictions (ante, § 1398) as preventing any use, by the prosecution in criminal cases, of depositions and former testimony; (2) the statutory authorization for taking depositions has in some jurisdictions culpably failed to give that power on behalf of the prosecution in criminal cases; accordingly, if such a deposition is there offered, it is rejected for the simple reason that there never was authority in any officer to take it; the deposition is legally non-existent (ante, § 1398).

(c) There is a distinction to be observed between the statutory conditions upon which an order to take a deposition may be granted and those upon which it may be used when taken. The statutes empowering Courts to order the taking of depositions usually specified also the cases in which such an order could issue, — the witness' illness, or impending departure, or the like. Now there may be, by the time of the trial, no actual necessity for using a deposition taken merely in anticipation of a possible necessity; hence, the conditions of necessity for using the deposition are in law independent of the conditions of policy on which the order for taking may have issued. The order for taking concerns a preliminary stage of the trial, the machinery of preparing evidence; it is therefore without the present purview. Until the deposition is offered on the trial, the question of Admissibility is not raised. The statutes prescribing the mode of taking prescribe also usually the conditions of admissibility; but they sometimes make no provisions of the latter sort, and then resort may have to be had to the provisions of the former sort to ascertain the legislative intention.

The effect of those statutes which abolish all limitations on taking depositions before trial is virtually to make a radical change in another part of the law, viz. the rule against obtaining discovery from a witness before trial; that aspect of the statutes is considered post, §§ 1850–1856.

§ 1402. General Principle of Necessity or Unavailability. The principle upon which depositions and former testimony should be resorted to is the simple principle of necessity, — i.e. the absence of any other means of utilizing the witness' knowledge. If his testimony given anew in court cannot be had, it will be lost entirely for the purposes of doing justice if it is not received in the form in which it survives and can be had. The only inquiry, then, need be: Is his testimony in court unavailable?

We may of course distinguish further between testimony unavailable by any means whatever and testimony unavailable without serious inconvenience. The common-law rulings certainly stopped at unavailability of the former sort; conditions of the latter sort rest wholly on statutory sanction. But the common-law principle clearly went in theory as far as the former line, i.e. there are indications of a principle broad enough to sanction any case in which the present testimony is in fact unavailable by any means whatever. Such a broad principle was never fully and consistently enforced in practice; but it clearly existed 'in gremio legis':

Ante 1726, GILBERT, C. B., Evidence, 61: "In this case the deposition is the best that can possibly be had, and that answers what the law requires."

1812, ELDON, L. C., in Andrews v. Palmer, 1 Ves. & B. 22: "The depositions, if published, could not be read at law unless it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the witness could not be examined at the trial."

1835, JOHNSON, J., in State v. Hill, 2 Hill S. C. 609: "What a deceased witness, or one who from other causes has become incapacitated to give evidence, has sworn upon a former trial, is admitted on the principle that is the best of which the case admits."

1898, GREEN, J., in Wells v. Ins. Co., 187 Pa. 166, 40 Atl. 802: "The cause of the subsequently accruing incompetency is not material. It may arise from absence, from sickness, from interest, from death, or from a newly-created statutory incompetency; but the principle controlling them all is that if, at the time the deposition or testimony was taken, the witness was competent, it may be given in evidence after the incompetency had arisen. Such is the sense of all the modern decisions, and we think the conclusion is reasonable and just."

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 168: "The same principle will lead us farther to conclude that in all cases where the party has without his own fault or concurrence irrecoverably lost the power of producing the witness again, whether from physical or from legal causes, he may offer the secondary evidence of what he testified in the former trial. If the lips of the witness are sealed, it can make no difference in principle whether it be by the finger of death or by the finger of the law."

It remains to examine the precedents dealing with specific instances of unavailability. Some of these rulings have been rendered under the terms of express statutes (post, §§ 1411–1413); but it is not always practicable to distinguish whether a statute affected the ruling. The possible cases might be grouped under three heads, according as the witness (a) is not available even for the purpose of serving legal process to attend, or (b) is available for the purpose of process, but not of actual attendance, or (c) is available for the purpose of process and attendance, but not of actually testifying; but no such grouping has been recognized, nor does it assist to interpret the concrete rules.

§ 1403. Specific Cases of Unavailability; (1) Death. This has always been the typical and acknowledged case of unavailability, and is equally conceded to suffice for depositions and for former testimony.[1] The jurisdictions in which, by anomaly, it is not deemed sufficient are those (ante, § 1398) in which, for constitutional or other reasons, no use at all is permitted, in criminal cases, of either depositions or former testimony.

§ 1403. [1] For early illustrations, see the history of the Hearsay rule, ante, § 1364. For others, see ante, § 1398. For the use of reputation to evidence the witness' death, see post, § 1605.

§ 1404. Same: (2) Absence from Jurisdiction. Where the witness is out of the jurisdiction, it is impossible to compel his attendance, because the process of the trial Court is of no force without the jurisdiction, and the party desiring his testimony is therefore helpless.[1]

Three conditions, however, have been by some Courts suggested as essential in order that the present testimony may be regarded as unavailable in the fullest sense:

(a) The absence, it is sometimes said, must be by way of residence, and not merely of temporary sojourn, because otherwise the trial could be postponed until his return.[2] This, however, seems too strict a rule; by his absence he is at the time actually unavailable, no matter when he is to return; and, if the witness is not of such importance as to require a postponement until his return, still more if the opponent does not desire or consent to a postponement, there is no reason for distinguishing between temporary and permanent absence.

(b) It is sometimes said that an effort should have been made to persuade the witness' voluntary attendance;[3] and no doubt the trial Court's discretion might occasionally make such a requirement; but it is unnecessary to prescribe this as a general rule.

(c) It has also been suggested[4] that an effort should have been made to obtain the witness' deposition by commission; but this is futile, for a deposition is no better than his former testimony.

This ground of admission, then (absence from the jurisdiction of trial), is generally accepted for testimony at a former trial.[5] A few Courts, following § 1404. [1] 1705, Lord Holt, C. J., in Altham v. Anglesea, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 18; 1911, U. S. v. Cohen, D. C. So. D. N. Y., Oct. 26, MS., Hough, J. (witnesses for the prosecution, released after former testimony, and then disappearing; former testimony admitted).

[2] See the Alabama cases, infra.

For the person's declarations as evidence of intent not to return, see post, § 1725.

[3] 1914, Spencer, J., in Levi v. State, 182 Ind. 188, 104 N. E. 765; 105 N. E. 898; 1877, Rothrock, C. J., in Shisser v. Burlington, 47 Ia. 302.

[4] 1914, Spencer, J., in Levi v. State, 182 Ind. 188, 104 N. E. 765; 105 N. E. 898; Shisser v. Burlington, supra; 1870, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341. Contra (i.e. holding that this is unnecessary): 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313; 1905, Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, 137 Fed. 48, 61, 69 C. C. A. 28.

[5] ENGLAND: 1737, Fry v. Wood, 1 Atk. 445.

CANADA: 1852, Roe v. Jones, 3 Low. Can. 58; 1859, Sutor v. McLean, 18 U. C. Q. B. 490, 492 (resident out of the jurisdiction, admitted); 1866, Abel v. Light, 6 All. N. Br. 423, 427.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1897, Chicago St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Myers, 25 C. C. A. 486, 80 Fed. 361 (if his personal attendance cannot be secured); 1904, West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258, 24 Sup. 650 (permanent non-residence suffices, at least under the fourteenth Amendment; here applied to testimony before a committing magistrate offered against a defendant); 1905, Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, 137 Fed. 48, 57, 69 C. C. A. 28 (former testimony of a witness in Indiana, out of the jurisdiction of this court and more than 100 miles away, admitted); 1916, Great Northern R. Co. v. Ennis, 9th C. C. A., 236 Fed. 17, 25 (both at common law and under Montana Rev. Codes, § 7887, it is not necessary that the witness' absence be permanent or indefinite); Alabama: 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 Ala. 803 ("permanent absence"); 1860, Mims v. Stevant, 36 id. 630; 1888, Lowe v. State 86 Ala. 47, 50, 5 So. 435 (absence for an indefinite time, sufficient, even in criminal case); 1888, South v. State, 86 Ala. 617, 620, 6 So. 52 (permanent absence, sufficient); 1888 Perry v. State, 87 Ala. 30, 33, 6 So. 425 (permanent or indefinite absence, sufficient); 1890, Pruitt v. State, 92 Ala. 41, 9 So. 406 (absence "for such an indefinite time that his return is merely contingent or conjectural", sufficient); 1891, Lucas v. State, 96 Ala. 51, 11 So. 216 (preceding definition held not here satisfied on the facts); 1893, Lowery v. State, 98 Ala. 45, 50, 13 So. 498; 1894, Thompson v. State, 106 Ala. 67, 75, 17 So. 512 (same); 1894, Burton v. State, 107 Ala. 68, 73, 18 So. 240 (indefinite absence, sufficient); 1895, Thompson v. State, 106 Ala. 67, 17 So. 512; ("left the State permanently; or for such an indefinite time that his return is contingent and uncertain"); 1897, McMunn v. State, 113 Ala. 86, 21 So. 418; 1897, Mitchell v. State, 114 Ala. 1, 22 So. 71; Burton v. State, 115 Ala. 1, 22 So. 585; 1898, Dennis v. State, 118 Ala. 72, 23 So. 1002; 1900, Lett v. State, 124 Ala. 64, 27 So. 256 (non-residence in jurisdiction suffices); 1900, Birmingham N. Bank v. Bradley, — Ala. —, 30 So. 546 (former testimony of one who had "removed from the State and was at the time without the jurisdiction", admitted); 1902, Jacobi v. State, 133 Ala. 1, 32 So. 158 (removal from the State "permanently or for an indefinite time", suffices); 1902, Jacobi v. Alabama, 187 U. S. 133, 23 Sup. 48 (by the law of Alabama, the testimony is receivable if the witness is "beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, whether he has removed from the State permanently or for an indefinite time"); 1903, Southern Car & F. Co. v. Jennings, 137 Ala. 247, 34 So. 1002 (witness "staying indefinitely at M. in this State"; not sufficient); 1904, Sims v. State, 139 Ala. 74, 36 So. 138 (a witness to a dying declaration, shown merely to have gone to Texas; former testimony excluded); 1904, Wilson v. State, 140 Ala. 43, 37 So. 93 ("residence and indefinite absence from the State" suffices); 1904, Kirkland v. State, 141 Ala. 45, 37 So. 352 (removal permanently or for an indefinite time suffices); 1904, Southern R. Co. v. Bonner, 141 Ala. 517, 37 So. 702 (similar); 1914, Francis v. State, 188 Ala. 39, 65 So. 969 (witness resident in Nebraska);

Arkansas: 1874, Hurley v. State, 29 Ark. 23; 1883, Dolan v. State, 40 Ark. 461; 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 Ark. 353, 370, 24 S. W. 885; 1900, Wilkins v. State, 68 Ark. 441, 60 S. W. 30; 1905, Petty v. State, 76 Ark. 515, 89 S. W. 465; 1909, Wimberly v. State, 90 Ark. 514, 119 S. W. 668; 1910, Poe v. State, 94 Ark. 172, 129 S. W. 292 (witness "beyond the jurisdiction");

California: 1873, People v. Devine, 46 Cal. 48; 1894, Benson v. Shotwell, 103 Cal. 163, 168, 37 Pac. 147;

Colorado: 1914, Henwood v. People, 57 Colo. 544, 143 Pac. 373 (witnesses "beyond the jurisdiction of the court"); 1915, Bolles v. O'Brien, 59 Colo. 261, 151 Pac. 450 (testimony in a former trial in Florida, with no accounting for the witness, excluded);

Georgia: 1869, Adair v. Adair, 39 Ga. 75, 77, 1878, Eagle & P. M. Co. v. Welch, 61 Ga. 445; 1893, Atlanta & C. A. R. Co. v. Gravitt, 93 Ga. 369, 371, 20 S. E. 550 (whether a witness is "inaccessible" under Code § 3782 is for the trial judge's determination); 1900, Owen v. Palmour, 111 Ga. 885, 36 S. E. 969; 1906, Taylor v. State, 126 Ga. 557, 55 S. E. 474 (absence from the county, being last heard from within the State, does not suffice, under P. C. 1895, § 1001, P. C. 1910, § 1027); 1912, Crumm v. Allen, 11 Ga. App. 203, 75 S. E. 108 (where the witness is the party himself offering his former testimony, of course his voluntary absence from the State does not make him inaccessible); 1912, Taylor v. Felder, 11 Ga. App. 742, 76 S. E. 75 (under Civ. C. 1910, § 5773, a witness residing in an adjoining county within the State is not "inaccessible"); 1918, Smith v. State, 147 Ga. 689, 95 S. E. 281 (removal to another State; former testimony admitted; Pittman v. State, 92 Ga. 480, repudiated, and Smith v. State, 72 Ga. 114, affirmed);

Hawaii: 1916, Terr. v. Curran, 23 Haw. 421 (former testimony of a soldier absent from the jurisdiction on furlough and not due to return for a month, admitted; citing the above text with approval; Quarles, J., dissenting, in a learned opinion, on the ground that a merely temporary absence does not suffice);

Illinois: 1916, Stephens v. Hoffman, 275 Ill. 497, 114 N. E. 142 (former testimony of a witness residing in Oklahoma, excluded, no showing being made that a deposition could not have been taken; unsound);

Indiana: 1910, Reichers v. Dammeier, 45 Ind. App. 208, 90 N. E. 644 (non-resident); 1914, Levi v. State, 182 Ind. 188, 104 N. E. 765, 105 N. E. 898 (general principle recognized: but here former testimony was held improperly admitted because no effort was made other than by subpœna to obtain the witness' presence or their depositions; unsound); 1921, Zimmerman v. State, — Ind. —, 130 N. E. 235 (in military service in France);

Iowa: 1877, Shisser v. Burlington, 47 Ia. 302 (provided an effort has been made to secure the witness' voluntary attendance or his deposition); 1890, Bank v. Gifford, 79 Ia. 311, 44 N. W. 558 (residence in another county, sufficient, by statute); 1911, State v. Brown, 152 Ia. 427, 132 N. W. 862 (settling the rule for criminal cases);

Kansas: 1902, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Osborn, 64 Kan. 187, 67 Pac. 547; 1904, State v. Nelson, 68 Kan. 566, 75 Pac. 505; 1904, State v. Harmon, 70 Kan. 476, 78 Pac. 805 (absence from the State suffices); 1908, State v. Simmons, 78 Kan. 872, 98 Pac. 277; 1912, State v. Gentry, 86 Kan. 534, 121 Pac. 352;

Kentucky: 1895, Reynolds v. Powers, 96 Ky. 481, 29 S. W. 299; 1896, Louisville Water Co. v. Upton, — Ky. —, 36 S. W. 520; Louisiana: 1882, State v. Douglass, 34 La.

An. 523, 524; 1882, State v. Jordan, 34 La. An. 1219; 1898, State v. Madison, 50 La. An. 679, 23 So. 622 (residence out of the State, sufficient); 1901, State v. Banks, 106 La. 480, 31 So. 53 (permanent absence is necessary); 1903, State v. Kline, 109 La. 603, 33 So. 618 (absence from the State, with no reasonable probability of a return, held sufficient); 1903, State v. Banks, 111 La. 22, 35 So. 370 (permanently absent from the State; testimony at a preliminary hearing admitted; the prior ruling, supra, was made in construing a special statute, No. 123 of 1898, applying to certain New Orleans criminal courts); State v. Kline, 109 La. 603, cited supra (affirmed on writ of error, under the U. S. 14th Amendment, s. v. West v. Louisiana, U. S., cited infra); 1904, State v. Sejours, 113 La. 676, 37 So. 599 (permanent absence from the State suffices);

Maryland: 1829, Rogers v. Raborg, 2 G. and J. 60;

Massachusetts: 1915, Hansen v. Fitchburg & L. St. R. Co., 222 Mass. 116, 109 N. E. 813 ("the mere unexplained absence from the jurisdiction" is not enough as a matter of law; misguided ruling);

Michigan: 1878, Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 799; 1899, Wheeler v. Jennison, 120 Mich. 422, 79 N. W. 643; 1907, Dolph v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 149 Mich. 278, 112 N. W. 981;

Minnesota: 1892, Minneapolis M. Co. v. R. Co., 51 Minn. 304, 315, 53 N. W. 639 (not necessary to try first for his deposition); 1893, King v. McCarthy, 54 Minn. 190, 195, 55 N. W. 960 ("not likely to return within the jurisdiction", sufficient); 1898, Hill v. Winston, 73 Minn. 80, 75 N. W. 1030 (residence in another State, sufficient); 1911, Finnes v. Selover B. Co., 114 Minn. 339, 131 N. W. 371 (admissible if "not a resident of the State, and without the jurisdiction of the court"); 1911, Gutmann v. Klimek, 116 Minn. 110, 133 N. W. 475 (residence in another State; here the plaintiff's own testimony at a former trial, offered in his own behalf; not decided);

Missouri: 1913, State v. Butler, 247 Mo. 685, 153 S. W. 1042 (testimony before committing magistrate, admitted for defendant, though Rev. St. 1909, §§ 5056, 5033, do not specify any conditions on which such testimony may be used);

Montana: 1903, Reynolds v. Fitzpatrick, 28 Mont. 170, 72 Pac. 510 (absence not sufficiently shown, on the facts); 1909, O'Meara v. McDermott, 40 Mont. 38, 104 Pac. 1049 (witness in California; admitted under Rev. Codes, § 7887); 1909, Motte & K. D. Co. v. Lowrey, 39 Mont. 124, 101 Pac. 966 (preliminary examination);

Nebraska: 1893, Omaha v. Jensen, 35 Nebr. 68, 52 N. W. 833; 1894, Omaha S. R. Co. v. Elkins, 39 Nebr. 480, 58 N. W. 164 (mere absence sufficient); 1896, Lowe v. Vaughn, 48 Nebr. 651, 67 N. W. 464; 1897, Ord. v. Nash, 50 Nebr. 335, 69 N. W. 964; 1899, Wittenberg v. Molyneaux, 59 Nebr. 203, 80 N. W. 824, semble; 1917, O'Connor's Estate, 101 Nebr. 617, 164 N. W. 570 (probate of a will; issue, forgery; former testimony of an expert now "in Chicago engaged in a hearing requiring his attendance for two weeks", admitted);

New York: 1918, People v. Fisher, 223 N. Y. 459, 119 N. E. 845 (testimony before the magistrate of the complaining witness, now gone to Italy, admitted);

North Dakota: 1915, Felton v. Midland Continental R. Co., 32 N. D. 223, 155 N. W. 23 (personal injury; former testimony of a witness who had gone to Nebraska and been "continuously absent from Jamestown since that time", admitted); 1917, Flamer v. Johnson, 36 N. D. 215, 162 N. W. 307 (former testimony of a witness not proved to have left the State and not diligently searched for, excluded);

Oklahoma: 1910, Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 651, 108 Pac. 561; 1913, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 37 Okl. 48, 130 Pac. 577; 1916, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Walker, 61 Okl. 37, 160 Pac. 79 (witness at the former trial was a railroad conductor of the defendant; evidence was offered that counsel had wired or written the general counsel at St. Louis, pursuant to custom, asking to procure the conductor's attendance, and the general counsel had replied that the conductor was residing in California; held insufficient; this is an example of the mechanical way to administer these rules; either the conductor was still in the employ of the party or he was not; if he was, the party should not have been excused at all, even by non-residence, from producing him; if he was not, the above evidence was ample);

Oregon: 1900, Wheeler v. McFerron, 38 Or. 105, 62 Pac. 1015; 1909, State v. Walton, 53 Or. 557, 99 Pac. 431, 101 Pac. 389;

Pennsylvania: 1818, Magill v. Kauffman, 4 S. & R. 317; 1824, Forney v. Hallagher, 11 S. & R. 203; 1898, Giberson v. Mills Co., 187 Pa. 513, 41 Atl. 525 (sufficient; nor need efforts be made to secure his attendance);

Rhode Island: 1908, Kolodrianski v. American Locomotive Co., 29 R. I. 127, 69 Atl. 505;

Texas: 1879, Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 319, 339; 1887, Steagald v. State, 22 Tex. App. 464, 488, 3 S. W. 771; 1887, Conner v. State, 23 Tex. App. 378, 384, 5 S. W. 189; 1888, Gilbreath v. State, 26 Tex. App. 315, 318, 9 S. W. 618; 1914, Millner v. State, 72 Tex. Cr. 45, 162 S. W. 348; 1917, Young v. State, 82 Tex. Cr. 257, 199 S. W. 479 (residence out of the State; see the prior cases cited ante, § 1398);

Utah: 1910, State v. Vance, 38 Utah 1, 110 Pac. 434; 1914, State v. Inlow, 44 Utah 485, 141 Pac. 530; 1916, State v. De Pretto, 48 Utah 249, 155 Pac. 336 (preliminary testimony of a witness absent in another State, admitted, applying Comp. L. 1907, § 4513); an early New York ruling, refuse to recognize it at all;[6] a few others refuse to recognize it in criminal cases particularly.[7]

For depositions, this cause was at common law established as sufficient,[8]

Vermont: 1902, McGovern v. Hayes and Smith, 75 Vt. 104, 53 Atl. 326 (nor is it necessary to try to procure his attendance or to search for him);
West Virginia: 1922, Browning v. Hoffman, — W. Va. —, 111 S. E. 492 (witness in a distant State; former testimony admitted);
Wyoming: 1916, Ivey v. State, 24 Wyo. 1, 154 Pac. 589 (former testimony of absent witnesses, admitted).

[6] 1826, Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cow. N. Y. 164; 1834, Crary v. Sprague, 12 Wend. N. Y. 45; 1874, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341; 1876, Collins v. Com., 12 Bush 273. In Cassady v. Trustees, 105 Ill. 567 (1883), the testimony was excluded on the facts of the case.

[7] 1881, U. S. v. Angell, 11 Fed. 43; 1886, Owens v. State, 63 Miss. 450, 452; 1858, State v. Houser, 26 Mo. 439; 1843, People v. Newman, 5 Hill N. Y. 296; 1827, Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. Va. 708; 1853, Com. v. Brogy, 10 Gratt. Va. 722, 732 (not sufficient in a criminal case, even for defendant).

In Alabama, the rulings in Dupree v. State, 33 Ala. 388, and Harris v. State, 73 Ala. 497, are superseded by the later ones in note 5, supra. In Virginia, Finn's Case, supra, was partly repudiated and its validity for the present purpose left undetermined, in Parks v. Com., 109 Va. 807, 63 S. E. 462 (1909).

[8] ENGLAND: 1688, Thatcher v. Waller, T. Jones 53 (deposition before coroner of one beyond sea, admitted; it was "all one as if he were dead"; for earlier English rulings, see ante, § 1364); 1705, Altham v. Anglesea, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 18; 11 Mod. 212; 1729, Patterson v. St. Clair, 1 Barnard. K. B. 268; 1744, Ward v. Sykes, Ridgw. t. Hardw. 193; 1772, Birt v. White, Dick. 473; 1806, Fonsick v. Agar, 6 Esp. 92 (deposition of one already on board ship, admitted); 1808, Falconer v. Hanson, 1 Camp. 172; 1841, Robinson v. Markis, 2 Moo. & Rob. 376 (mere inability to find does not suffice to establish absence); 1849, Varicas v. French, 2 C. & K. 1008 (absence in Australia, held sufficiently proved); 1856, R. v. Austen, 7 Cox Cr. 55 (mere absence in the witness' own country, without a showing of inability to secure his presence by request, not sufficient); 1873, 'Ex parte' Huguet, 12 Cox Cr. 551 (a French witness refusing to stay, and returning to France; admissible, per Martin, B., and, semble, Pollock, B.; semble, contra, Kelly, C. B.).

CANADA: Alberta: 1915, McQuaid v. Prudential Trust Co., 22 D. L. R. 877 (deposition of defendant's officers in Quebec, under Rule 395); British Columbia: 1914, R. v. Angelo, 16 D. L. R. 126 (deposition of a constable who had gone to the United States while on leave, and had failed to report for duty ever since, admitted); Manitoba: 1916, R. v. Roblin, 31 D. L. R. 724 (commission ordered for expert witnesses residing in the U. S., under Code § 997); Northwest Terr. 1900, R. v. Forsythe, 4 N. W. Terr. 398 (the evidence of absence must be such as reasonably to satisfy the trial judge); Nova Scotia: 1908, Rogers v. Troop, 43 N. Sc. 279 (trial Court decides, under Order 35, R. 17); Saskatchewan: 1915, Coristine Ltd. v. Haddad, 21 D. L. R. 350 (depositions authorized for witnesses living in Quebec and unwilling to leave that jurisdiction to attend the trial); 1915, First National Bank v. Kruse, 23 D. L. R. 684 (commission to take testimony of witness in Iowa, refused in the Master's discretion, under Rule 365).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 125 (lost deposition of a witness living in another State and more than 100 miles away; contents allowed to be proved); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313 (deposition burned; Burton v. Driggs approved); Alabama: 1839, McCutchen v. McCutchen, 9 Port. 650, 654 (that the witness had "started to move to the State of Arkansas with his family", though he expected to stop on the way in another county with relatives, sufficient); 1851, Long v. Davis, 18 Ala. 801, 803 (permanent absence, sufficient; no effort to obtain him necessary); Connecticut: 1854, Larkin v. Avery, 23 Conn. 304, 318 (absence on a journey other than the one contemplated at the taking of the deposition, sufficient; semble, fact of absence is determinable by trial Court); Idaho: 1890, Terr. v. Evans, 2 Hasb. Ida. 627, 632, 23 Pac. 232 (overruled by State v. Potter, 6 Ida. 584, 57 Pac. 431, cited post, § 1418); Indian Terr. 1899, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 2 Ind. T. 407, 51 S. W. 1068 (deposition by railroad employee, residing out of the jurisdiction, but frequently coming within it during their employment, admitted); Illinois: 1897, Gardner v. Meeker, 169 Ill. 40, 48 N. E. 307 ("non-resident" includes one residing in another county but within the State, and his deposition on oral interrogatories may be received); Massachusetts: 1850, Kinney v. Berran, 6 Cush. 394 (mere inability to find is not sufficient to prove absence); North Carolina: 1897, Cunningham v. Cunningham, 121 N. C. 413, 28 S. E. 525 (evidence of absence held sufficient, the trial Court having discretion); Pennsylvania: 1819, Carpenter v. Groff, 5 S. & R. 165; Vermont: 1869, Johnson v. Sargent, 42 Vt. 195; West Virginia: 1897, Hoopes v. De Vaughn, 43 W. Va.

subject in occasional rulings to the distinctions above noted; and by statute it has been almost universally provided for.[9]

§ 1405. Same: (3) Disappearance; Inability to Find; (4) Opponent's Procurement. (3) If the witness has disappeared from observation, he is in effect unavailable for the purpose of compelling his attendance. Such a disappearance is shown by the party's inability to find him after diligent search. The only objection to recognizing this ground of unavailability is the possibility of collusion between party and witness; but supposing the Court to be satisfied that there has been no collusion and that the search has been 'bona fide', this objection loses its force.

For former testimony [1] this cause of unavailability has long been recognized.

447, 27 S. E. 251 (non-residence may appear from the deposition itself as well as from the statutory affidavit at the time of application); 1915, County Court v. Grafton, 77 W. Va. 84, 86 S. E. 924 (Code 1913, § 4891, applied).

Contra: 1911, Redhouse v. Graham, 20 Haw. 717 (plaintiff's own former testimony excluded, where he had left the jurisdiction before trial without any explained reason); 1897, State v. Tomblin, 57 Kan. 841, 48 Pac. 144 (and in spite of the fact that the defendant himself had caused the taking; this is indeed using the law to shield crime); 1893, State v. Humason, 5 Wash. 499, 504, 32 Pac. 1[illegible] 'not sufficient in criminal cases for either party).

The rule has been held to be the same for the deposition of the party himself, though this seems erroneous: 1896, Standard L. & A. Ins. Co. v. Tinney, 73 Miss. 726, 19 So. 662 (party out of State; admissible). Compare § 1416, post.

For the case of a witness once present during the time of trial, but subsequently departing, see post, § 1415.

[9] The statutes are collected in § 1411, post.

The statute's omission to enumerate this case should not injure the established common-law principle. But if the statute has not even given the power to order a deposition taken out of the State it would seem to be inadmissible because legally non-existent; 1886, Kaelin v. Com., 84 Ky. 354, 367, 1 S. W. 594 (statutory limits held exclusive; therefore the accused cannot take the deposition of a person abroad).

§ 1405. [1] ENGLAND: 1623, Anon., Godbolt 326 ("If a party cannot find a witness, then he is as it were dead unto him", and his former testimony may be read, "so as the party make oath that he did his endeavor to find his witness, but that he could not see him nor hear of him"); 1685, Oates' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 1227, 1285 (Oates: "My lord, I will then produce what he swore at another trial"; L. C. J. Jeffreys: "Why, where is he? Is he dead?"; Oates: "My lord, it has cost a great deal of money to search him out; but I cannot anywhere meet with him, and that makes my case so much worse that I cannot, when I have done all that man can do to get my witnesses together. I sent in the depth of winter for him, when I thought my trial would have come on before; but I could never hear of him"; L. C. J.: "Look you, though in strictness, unless the party be dead, we do not use to admit of any such evidence, yet if you can prove anything he swore at any other trial, we will indulge you so far"); 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 60.

CANADA: 1907, Cuff v. Frazee S. & C. Co., 14 Ont. L. R. 263 (witness supposed to have gone to the U. S.).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1899, Motes v. U. S., 178 U. S. 458, 20 Sup. 993 (testimony of one who had escaped through the negligence of the prosecuting officers, excluded);
Alabama: 1895, Thompson v. State, 106 Ala. 67, 17 So. 512; 1897, Mitchel v. State, 114 Ala. 1, 22 So. 71 ("after diligent search is not found within the jurisdiction of the Court", sufficient; mere inability to find at the usual residence or in the county, not sufficient); 1902, Jacobi v. State, 133 Ala. 1, 32 So. 158 (a "fruitless search for him in every county in which there is any apparent likelihood of his being found", may suffice, as amounting to proof of removal from the jurisdiction; requirements of such a search considered); 1905, Bardin v. State, 143 Ala. 74, 38 So. 833 (mere inability to find, after searching the county of usual residence, insufficient); 1906, Woodstock Iron Work v. Kline, 149 Ala. 391, 43 So. 362; 1913, Pope v. State, 183 Ala. 61, 63 So. 71 (former testimony; inability to find after diligent search is sufficient to admit; here a defendant's witness); 1921, Wigginton v. State, 205 Ala. 147, 87 So. 700 (absence or inability to find, held not sufficiently shown on the facts);
Arkansas: 1878, Shackleford v. State, 33 Ark. 539; 1886, Sneed v. State, 47 Ark. 186, 1 S. W. 68; 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 Ark. 353, 370, 24 S. W. 885 ("upon diligent inquiry cannot be found"; the trial Court's discretion to control); 1895, McNamara v. State, 60 Ark. 400, 30 S. W. 762; 1896, Harwood v. State, 63 Ark. 130, 37 S. W. 304; 1913, Paxton v. State, 108 Ark. 316, 157 S. W. 396; 1918, Rogers v. State, 136 Ark. 161, 206 S. W. 152;

California: 1899, People v. Plyler, 126 Cal. 379, 58 Pac. 904 (trial Court's determination controls in applying P. C. § 686, cited post, § 1411); 1904, People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 Pac. 467 (same); 1804, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169 (testimony before the magistrate, admitted under P. C. § 686; here the witness was in Mexico); 1904, People v. Barker, 144 Cal. 705, 78 Pac. 266 (similar); 1921, People v. Johnson, — Cal. App. —, 197 Pac. 135 (search by subpœna in every county, etc., held sufficient; witness' statement of intention to leave the State, considered);

Connecticut: 1902, Mechanics' Bank v. Woodward, 74 Conn. 698, 51 Atl. 1084 (former testimony of a witness "who has since gone to parts unknown", admitted, under Pub. Acts 1895, p. 503, c. 116); 1921, State v. Gaetano, 96 Conn. 306, 114 Atl. 82 (witness escaped from detention and not found after diligent efforts);

Florida: 1904, Dorman v. State, 48 Fla. 18, 37 So. 561 (witness for the defendant; former testimony not admitted on the facts); 1908, Putnal v. State, 56 Fla. 86, 47 So. 864;

Georgia: 1880, Gunn v. Wades, 65 Ga. 537, 541 (after which, Williams v. State, 19 Ga. 403, is probably of no consequence); 1890, Atlanta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 302, 314, 11 S. E. 706; 1907, Robinson v. State, 128 Ga. 254, 57 S. E. 315 (due diligence not used, on the facts);

Hawaii: 1907, Tsuruda v. Farm, 18 Haw. 434 (witness subpœnaed in two places and not found; showing held insufficient on the facts);

Indiana: 1911, Wilson v. State, 175 Ind. 458, 93 N. E. 609 (not found in or out of the State);

Iowa: 1896, Spaulding v. R. Co., 98 Ia. 205, 67 N. W. 227 (information given to an officer serving a subpœna, as indicating the sufficiency of search on which to base a return if not found);

Kansas: 1915, State v. Chadwell, 94 Kan. 302, 146 Pac. 420 (preliminary examination);

Louisiana: 1876, State v. Harvey, 28 La. An. 105; 1884, State v. Coudier, 36 La. An. 291; 1894, State v. White, 46 La. An. 1273, 1276, 15 So. 623; 1898, State v. Timberlake, 50 La. An. 308, 23 So. 276;

Michigan: 1912, Krouse v. Detroit U. R. Co., 170 Mich. 438, 136 N. W. 434 ("the proofs should be full and convincing"); 1922, People v. Schepps, — Mich. —, 186 N. W. 508 (former testimony admitted, the witness having disappeared and diligent search in Michigan and Canada having been made);

Minnesota: 1898, Hill v. Winston, 73 Minn. 80, 75 N. W. 1030 (person's declarations as to residence, and sheriff's return of not found, received);

Missouri: 1904, State v. Riddle, 179 Mo. 287, 78 S. W. 606 (due diligence not found on the facts);

Nebraska: 1919, Koenigstein v. State, 103 Nebr. 580, 173 N. W. 603 (former testimony of a witness who could not be found and had probably left the State held admissible in the trial court's discretion based on an adequate search in good faith);

Oklahoma: 1908, Driggers v. U. S., 21 Okl. 60, 1 Okl. Cr. 67, 95 Pac. 612 (witness said to be dead; the marshal's return on the subpœna, and testimony that "they had been told he was dead", held not enough; unsound); 1911, Warren v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 1, 115 Pac. 812 (witnesses not to be found, and last heard from in Arkansas); 1913, Edwards v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 306, 131 Pac. 956 (preliminary examination); 1916, Jeffries v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 146, 162 Pac. 1137 (witness searched for and returned not found, on the faith of hearsay that he had left the State; deposition admitted, citing the above text with approval: "the doctrine announced in Driggers v. U. S. [supra] has never been followed by this Court, and we think is not the law"); 1917, Fitzsimmons v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 80, 166 Pac. 453 (witness not found after diligent search within the State; former testimony admitted, following Jeffries v. State, supra);

Pennsylvania: 1895, Seitz v. Seitz, 169 Pa. 510, 32 Atl. 594, semble;

Texas: 1879, Sullivan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 319, 342; 1905, Smith v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 65, 85 S. W. 1153 (former testimony of an absent person, excluded; this Court here appeared to be unable clearly to tell the profession just what rules it meant to lay down on these points; from this opinion it is impossible to say whether the exclusion is (1) because the witness was not sought for with sufficient diligence, or (2) because mere inability to find is never enough, but only absence from the jurisdiction, or (3) because the Texas statutes for depositions, post, §§ 1411, 1413, are the only sources of admissibility, and under them no provision at all is made for using testimony at a former trial in a criminal case, or (4) because the use of former testimony in a criminal case is always unconstitutional, under Cline v. State, cited ante, § 1398; the only things fairly apparent from the opinion are that Sullivan v. State, sup. x, is regarded as overruled, in Evans v. State, 12 Tex. App. 370, on some point or other, and that Cline v. State, supra, may be still law for some purpose or other, though its status is doubtful on another point, ante, § 1398);

Utah: 1902, State v. King, 24 Utah 482, 68 Pac. 418 (under Rev. St. 1898, § 4513);

Washington: 1915, Kennedy v. Canadian Pacific R. Co., 87 Wash. 134, 151 Pac. 252 (excluded, there being no showing of due diligence).

It ought equally to suffice for depositions; the principle is no different.[2]

(4) If the witness has been by the opponent procured to absent himself, this ought of itself to justify the use of his deposition or former testimony,[3] — whether the offering party has or has not searched for him, whether he is within or without the jurisdiction, whether his place of abode is secret or open; for any tampering with a witness should once for all estop the tamperer from making any objection based on the results of his own chicanery.

§ 1406. Same: (5) Illness, Infirmity, Age, preventing Attendance. Any physical incapacity preventing attendance in court, except at the risk of serious pain or danger to the witness, should be a sufficient cause of unavailability; and this has been almost universally recognized by Courts.[1] Certain distinctions, however, have from time to time received special notice.

(a) The duration of the illness need only be in probability such that, with regard to the importance of the testimony, the trial cannot be postponed.[2]

Contra: 1837, R. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 169; 1834, Crary v. Sprague, 12 Wend. N. Y. 45 (Nelson, J.: "Even diligent inquiry, without being able to find the witness, is not sufficient, though it is obvious there can be scarcely a shade of difference between the two cases, death and absence, either in principle or hardship"); 1826, Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cow. N. Y. 164 (former testimony of a witness who could not be found and had declared that he was going to Pennsylvania, excluded); 1902, State v. Wing, 66 Oh. 407, 64 N. E. 514 (prior testimony of a witness not found after diligent search, and believed to be without the State, held not admissible in a criminal case, unless the absence was due to the accused's connivance).

For the admissibility of statements made to the searchers, as evidence of inability to find, see post, §§ 1414, 1789; and compare the rulings for lost documents, ante, § 1196; for attesting witnesses (ante, § 1313), for persons not heard from (ante, §§ 158, 664), and for statements of intent (post, § 1725).

[2] 1895, Burton v. State, 107 Ala. 68, 18 So. 240; 1903, People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 Pac. 177; 1917, Griffith v. Midland Valley R. Co., 100 Kan. 500, 166 Pac. 467 (witness not found after diligent search; deposition admitted, as if absent from the county, under Gen. St. 1915, § 7262; this ruling shows the good sense of not treating the legislative enumeration as if it exhausted all possible wisdom on the subject, for it never does or can); 1828, Tompkins v. Wiley, 6 Rand. Va. 242 (due diligence not shown on the facts); 1818, Pettibone v. Derringer, 4 Wash. C. C. 219.

Contra: 1666, Lord Morly's Case, Kelyng 55 ("Agreed, that if a witness who was examined by the coroner be absent, and oath is made that they have used all their endeavors to find him and cannot find him, that is not sufficient to authorize the reading of such examination"; compare this case ante, § 1364, note 47); 1851, R. v. Scaife, 5 Cox Cr. 243, 17 Q. B. 243.

[3] 1692, Harrison's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 851; 1851, R. v. Scaife, 5 Cox Cr. 243 (procurement by a co-defendant, held not sufficient as to a defendant not procuring); 1876, U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 322, 98 U. S. 158; 1893, Peddy v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 547, 21 S. W. 542 (removal by contrivance of a private prosecutor does not affect the use by the State).

Contra: 1856, Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 427.

§ 1406. [1] Contra, for former testimony: 1827, Doe v. Evans, 3 C. & P. 221, Vaughan, B.; 1893, Com. v. McKenna, 158 Mass. 207, 210, 33 N. E. 389 (for criminal cases). Contra, for a party's examination: 1912, Park v. Schneider, Alta. S. C., 6 D. L. R. 451 (plaintiff lived in Ohio, and was too ill to travel; his examination on discovery by defendant was taken, with leave to treat it as on a commission; the plaintiff was not allowed to use it on the trial, the credibility of the witness being important; this erroneous ruling indicates a failure to perceive that a party's examination taken by an opponent stands exactly on the footing of a deposition for present purposes; compare the similar fallacy in Johnson v. Birket, Ont., cited ante, § 1389).

[2] 1916, R. v. Noakes, 1 K. B. 581 ("The question [of illness] . . . is a question for the determination of the presiding judge", approving R. v. Stephenson, L. & C. 165; the "credible witness" required by the statute was here a constable who had seen the witness in bed; the testimony of a medical man, held not necessary); 1891, Mitchell, J., in Thornton v. Britton, 144 Pa. 130, 22 Atl. 1048: "The determination of this question in each case as it arises rests largely in the discretion of the Court. On a trial for a murder, for instance, the judge presiding would feel it his duty to enforce the attendance of a witness having knowledge of the crucial facts, (b) As to the degree of the illness, the traditional phrase, "so ill as not to be able to travel", sufficiently indicates the requirements of common sense; and the "ability" is to be considered with reference to the risk of pain or danger to the witness. That the illness should be such as to make it impracticable to take the witness' deposition at his home has been said by one Court to be the correct limitation;[3] but this is certainly incorrect, for a deposition obtained from a person during illness could not be any better than his former cross-examined testimony or deposition, and would probably be much less trustworthy.[4] There is no reason why the application of the general principle in a given instance should ever come before a Court of Appeal; to the trial Court should be left the determination of the existence of the necessity in a particular case.

There is further no distinction properly to be made between former testimony[5] even at some risk to the witness' health or life; while in a civil action he might feel free to hold that a much smaller risk to the witness would be sufficient to excuse him from personal attendance."

[3] 1870, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341; 1908, Smith v. Moore, 149 N. C. 185, 62 S. E. 892 (approving Berney v. Mitchell, and taking the singular view that a deposition is better than a stenographic report).

[4] 1828, Mathews, J., in Miller v. Russel, 7 Mart. N. s. La. 268.

[5] The rulings recognizing this ground for using former testimony are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1737, Fry v. Wood, 1 Atk. 445; 1831, R. v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143; the ensuing rulings are under St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, allowing testimony before a committing magistrate to be used when the witness is "so ill as not to be able to travel"; most of them are obstinately narrow; 1850, R. v. Harris, 4 Cox Cr. 440 (bowel-complaint, not sufficient on the facts); 1850, R. v. Harney, 4 Cox Cr. 441 (woman's confinement a week before, sufficient); 1850, R. v. Ulmer, 4 Cox Cr. 441 (cold; not sufficient); 1862, R. v. Stephenson, 9 Cox Cr. 156 (woman daily expecting confinement; sufficient in trial Court's discretion); 1862, R. v. Welton, 9 Cox Cr. 296 (illness must be proved by medical man); 1871, R. v. Bull, 12 Cox Cr. 31 (bowel complaint two days before, not sufficient); 1874, R. v. Farrell, 12 Cox Cr. 606, L. R. 2 Cr. C. R. 116 (the witness was "very nervous and 74 years of age"; "it might be dangerous for her to be examined at all", and particularly in open court; but the deposition was held not admissible); 1876, R. v. Thompson, 13 Cox Cr. 182 (the witness was 87 years of age and "in such a great state of nervous excitement that it would be attended with great risk to her life to bring her into court to give evidence"; "it might bring on an attack of apoplexy; there is no actual disease or illness, only a predisposition to it"; but the deposition was excluded); 1878, R. v. Heesom, 14 Cox Cr. 42 (deposition of a woman in daily expectation of confinement was admitted); 1878, R. v. Wellings, L. R. 3 Q. B. D. 428 (same; here it was pointed out that the degree of illness should be left to the discretion of the trial judge); 1887, R. v. Pruntey, 16 Cox Cr. 344 (unsworn statement of child, under St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, post, § 1828, not receivable as a deposition in her absence through illness, under St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42).

UNITED STATES: Florida: 1920, Blackwell v. State, 79 Fla. 709, 86 So. 224 (temporary absence by reason of illness, held sufficient in the trial Court's discretion); Louisiana: 1828, Miller v. Russel, 7 Mart. N. s. La. 268 (see citation supra); 1882, State v. Granville, 34 La. An. 1088 ("lying sick in hospital", sufficient on the facts); 1903, State v. Wheat, 111 La. 860, 35 So. 955 (testimony before the committing magistrate, of one since become too ill to be able to attend, admitted; the trial Court's determination of the facts is generally to control; on a rehearing, the testimony was held inadmissible because the witness could attend at the next term and because the prosecution had misled the defence by applying for a continuance); Maryland: 1829, Rogers v. Raborg, 2 G. & J. 60; Michigan: 1878, Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795, 799; 1900, Siefert v. Siefert, 123 Mich. 664, 82 N. W. 511 (temporary illness, not sufficient); 1910, People v. Droste, 160 Mich. 66, 125 N. W. 87 (woman about to be confined; testimony before the examining magistrate, admitted; careful opinion by Brooke, J.; virtually overruling Siefert v. Siefert, which held that the illness must be permanent); 1917, Neal v. Novelty Leather Works, 198 Mich. 598, 165 N. W. 681 (illness not sufficient on the facts); New Jersey: 1870, Berney v. Mitchell, 34 N. J. L. 341 (see citation supra, n. 3); North Carolina: 1908, Smith v. Moore, 149 N. C. 185, 62 S. E. 892 (mere doctor's certificate that witness was "too unwell to attend court", held not sufficient on the facts); Oklahoma: 1921, Valentine v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 194 Pac. 254 (manslaughter; testimony before magistrate of B., now ill and unable to attend, admitted for the State); Pennsylvania: 1827, Pipher v. Lodge, 16 S. & R. 214, 221 (inability to travel, not sufficiently shown on the facts); 1874, Emig v. Diehl, 76 Pa. 373; 1881, McLain v. Com., 99 Pa. 97 (for civil cases; for criminal cases, question reserved); 1891, Thornton v. Britton, 144 Pa. 130, 22 Atl. 1048 (supra, note 2); 1893, Perrin v. Wells, 155 Pa. 299, 300, 26 Atl. 543 (too ill to be present, sufficient); Vermont: 1918, Martin's Will, 92 Vt. 362, 104 Atl. 100 (witness "unable to attend court as a witness or to give a deposition"; former testimony admitted); Wisconsin: 1907, Spencer v. State, 132 Wis. 509, 112 N. W. 462 (see the citation ante, § 1398).

thus rendered necessary, and depositions;[6] although the statutes (post, § 1411) have dealt with the latter in almost every jurisdiction.

§ 1407. Same: Attendance prevented by (6) Imprisonment, (7) Official Duty or Privilege; (8) Distance of Travel. (6) The witness' imprisonment for crime, supposing him not to be disqualified for infamy, is no reason for excusing his non-production; for his production can presumably be obtained by order of Court.[1] So far, of course, as this is not the case, there is good reason for using his former testimony or deposition;[2] a new deposition, obtained in prison, could be no better than either.[3]

(7) An official duty may be sufficient cause for not producing the witness engaged in that duty; the sufficiency should be left to the trial Court.[4] Where

[6] ENGLAND: 1666, Lord Morly's Case, Kelyng 55 (before coroner); 1682, Lutterell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282; 1709, Altham v. Anglesea, 11 Mod. 212, per Gould, J.; 1719, 2 Lilly's Pract. Reg. 703 ("A witness who by reason of sickness, extreme age, or other cause, cannot come to a trial, may by order of Court be examined in the country, before any judge of the Court where the cause depends, in the presence of the attorneys of each side; and the testimony so taken shall be allowed to be given in evidence at the trial"); 1752, Bradley v. Crackenthorp, Dick. 182 ("the witness being aged and infirm and unable to travel", it sufficed); 1785, Jones v. Jones, 1 Cox 184 (deposition of one "above 80 years of age and unable to attend in person" admissible); 1808, Palmer v. Aylesbury, 15 Ves. Jr. 176 ("in such a state of health as not to be capable of attending"); 1813, Corbett v. Corbett, 1 Ves. & B. 335, 342 (order in chancery made for depositions to be read at law if the deponent proved "unable to attend" the trial by reason of illness; Lord Eldon lays down the conditions on which such an order will be made beforehand in chancery); 1817, Morrison v. Arnold, 19 id. 672 ("sick, incapable of travelling, or prevented by accident", is sufficient; said of depositions 'in perp. mem.'); 1908, Stewart's Case, 1 Cr. App. 57 (statute applied, the witness being ill).

UNITED STATES: Conn. 1775, Avery v. Woodruff, 1 Root 76 ("The deposition of a woman who lived within 20 miles of the court, that had a child of a month old, dangerously sick so that the mother could not leave it" was admitted, as "within the reason of the statute"); Ga. 1874, Baker v. Lyman, 53 Ga. 339, 341, 350 (excluding a deposition where the witness was not too ill to be able to testify); N. H. 1859, Hayward v. Barron, 38 N. H. 366; N. Car. 1903, Willeford v. Bailey, 132 N. C. 402, 43 S. E. 928 (witness "unable to talk and physically unable to remain in court"; deposition received); Okl. 1897, Hanley v. Banks, 6 Okl. 79, 51 Pac. 662 ("infirmity" does not include the case of a wife kept at the bedside of her sick husband by the necessity of attending him); Vt. 1869, Johnson v. Sargent, 42 Vt. 195 (old age); Va. 1898, Taylor v. Malory, 96 Va. 18, 30 S. E. 472.

§ 1407. [1] 1896, State v. Conway, 56 Kan. 682, 44 Pac. 627 (former testimony admissible, semble, where by a life-sentence of imprisonment civil death has ensued, but not here where a year's sentence produced no such result and a deposition could have been taken in prison or the prisoner brought into court; opinion obscure).

Statutes providing for a writ of 'habeas corpus ad testificandum' are noted post, § 2199.

[2] 1851, Switzer v. Boulton, 2 Grant U. C. 693 (witness in the penitentiary and refusing to be re-examined, knowing that he could not be punished for contumacy more severely than by imprisonment; former testimony received), 1910, Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 651, 108 Pac. 561 (life prisoner in a Federal penitentiary out of the State, the prison authorities having refused the request of the State Governor to bring the prisoner to testify).

[3] 1900, People v. Putnam, 129 Cal. 258, 61 Pac. 961 (conditions determined for granting order to produce convicts under statute).

[4] 1796, Mushrow v. Graham, 1 Hayw. 361 (deposition of a Collector of Imposts received, as one of those "the duties of whose offices oblige them to attend at a particular place for the discharge thereof"); 1828, Noble v. Martins, 7 Mart. N. S. 282 (deputy sheriff officially engaged elsewhere; admitted).

the witness, exercising a privilege as an official (post, §§ 2206, 2370–2372) refuses to attend and his attendance is not compellable, the case falls under the present principle of impossibility of compelling attendance, and an excuse for non-production clearly exists.[5]

(8) On grounds of the personal inconvenience of attendance from a distance, statutes (post, §§ 1411, 1412) have almost everywhere provided, for the case of depositions, that residence beyond a certain distance, or without the county, shall allow the use of a deposition; the same cause should be equally sufficient for using former testimony, though this has rarely been provided.[6] In a few statutes (post, § 1411) this notion of personal inconvenience has been given such consideration that in cities of a certain size depositions are in general admissible on the ground that "to require the personal attendance of witnesses would involve them in great pecuniary loss and involve a sacrifice of their personal interest without any corresponding personal advantage."[7] This policy is a poor one. In the first place, there is no reason for exalting the sacrifices of a wholesale merchant or a banker above those of a farmer; one deserves no more consideration than the other; moreover, the sacrifice in rural districts may be even greater, for it may require a whole day for a farmer to travel to and from the court, while a city merchant may easily be kept informed by his clerk by telephone of the course of a trial and need usually not give up more than an hour or two for the purpose. In the second place, the notion that any citizen's private interests should override his duty to the community is a false one. The principle that the whole community, and every member of it, should join in rendering all possible aid to the establishment of truth and justice is a fundamental one in civilized society (post, § 2192). An occasional reminder of these duties is a wholesome thing; and the attendance for that purpose upon a session of a court of justice tends vividly to strengthen the appreciation of this vital principle. That the citizen should by law be encouraged and abetted in shirking his fundamental duty to aid in the vindication of the rights of his fellow-citizens is reprehensible. Such statutes should nowhere be imitated.

§ 1408. Same: (9) Insanity, or other Mental Incompetency. A witness who has become insane is no longer qualified; his testimony in court is no longer available; and by universal concession his former testimony[1] or dep-

[5] Distinguish the following: 1856, Dubois' Case, Wharton, Digest of International Law, I, 668, Lawrence's Wheaton's International Law, 393 (upon the Netherlands minister's consenting to give his deposition out of court, but not subject to cross-examination, the district-attorney at Washington declined to take it, as "it would not be admitted as evidence"). For the case of the King, see ante, § 1384.

[6] Most of the following cases have reference to one of the statutes given post, § 1411: Former testimony: 1883, Broach v. Kelly, 71 Ga. 698, 704 (in adjacent county, insufficient); 1896, Spaulding v. R. Co., 98 Ia. 205, 67 N. W. 227 (absence from the county, sufficient); 1885, State v. Allen, 37 La. An. 685 (not in the parish, semble, sufficient); Deposition: 1848, McLane v. State, 4 Ga. 335 (deposition by commission taken for defendant of persons within the State, excluded, because the authorizing statute covered civil cases only); 1869, Riegel v. Wilson, 60 Pa. 388, 392, semble (residence more than 40 miles distant, sufficient).

[7] 1896, Atkinson, J., in Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussen, 95 Ga. 584, 23 S. E. 207, quoted post, § 1417.

§ 1408. [1] 1880, Marler v. State, 67 Ala. 62 (Somerville, J.: "There is no real or practical

osition [2] may therefore be used. So also the loss of any one of the faculties necessary for testimony (ante, § 478) furnishes an equal reason, whether the loss occurs through disease or through senility. This may be the case where the lost faculty is that of speech,[3] or (under certain circumstances) of sight,[4] or of memory;[5] and it would seem that a total loss of memory through lapse of time alone should equally suffice, providing the Court is entirely satisfied of the fact of the loss.[6]

§ 1409. Same: (10) Disqualification by Interest or Privilege in the Cause. A disqualification by subsequently-acquired interest, or the exercise of a privilege, makes the witness' present testimony unavailable, and hence should suffice to allow resort to his deposition or former testimony. This doctrine was not accepted in early English common-law practice;[1] which was followed by our Courts in a few instances.[2] But it was well established in English difference between the death of the mind and the death of the body"); 1895, Thompson v. State, 106 Ala. 67, 17 So. 512; 1868, Cook v. Stout, 47 Ill. 531; 1892, Walkup v. Com., — Ky. —, 20 S. W. 221; 1878, Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 799; 1883, Whitaker v. Marsh, 62 N. H. 478 (in effect overruling a contrary statement in State v. Staples, 47 N. H. 119); 1921, Com. v. Loomis, 270 Pa. 254, 113 Atl. 428 (insanity); 1908, People v. Hernandez, 14 P. R. 217, 225, semble.

For evidencing insanity by prior or subsequent condition, see ante, § 233; for evidencing it by inquisition of lunacy, see post, § 1671; and in general, ante, § 497.

[2] 1790, R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707; 1841, R. v. Marshall, Car. & M. 147 (even where temporary only); 1913, Atwood v. Atwood, 86 Conn. 579, 86 Atl. 29.

[3] 1857, R. v. Cockburn, 7 Cox Cr. 265 (stroke of paralysis rendering the witness unable to hear or to speak; sufficient).

[4] 1705, Kinsman v. Crooke, 2 Ld. Raym. 1166 (the witness had become blind; his deposition in chancery was used for those parts of his testimony which depended on his consultation of documents); 1883, Houston v. Blythe, 60 Tex. 509, 512 (sufficient, where the witness had lost his eyesight and the testimony necessarily involved the examination of documents).

[5] 1861, R. v. Wilson, 8 Cox Cr. 453 (illness of the brain affecting memory, sufficient); 1895, Central R. & B. Co. v. Murray, 97 Ga. 326, 22 S. E. 972 (loss of memory by old age); 1874, Emig v. Diehl, 76 Pa. 373 ("such a state of senility as to have lost his memory of the past"); 1879, Rothrock v. Gallagher, 91 Pa. 112 ("bereft of memory by senility or sickness"); 1819, Drayton v. Wells, 1 Nott & McC. S. Car. 247; 1879, Railroad v. Atkins, 70 Tenn. 250.

[6] The difficulty is that the witness must be called in order that this fact may appear, so that in practical application there would be no dispensation of his presence; moreover, he might in some cases be able to use the deposition or report of testimony as a record of past recollection (ante, §§ 737, 761). Sanctioning the above cause: 1901, State v. N. O. Waterworks Co., 107 La. 1, 31 So. 395 (former testimony of a witness who, "by reason of the lapse of time, 15 years, and his age, was no longer able to remember the facts testified to", held admissible; following Jack v. Woods, Pa., infra); 1857, Jack v. Woods, 29 Pa. 378, semble. Repudiating it: 1913, Rio Grande So. R. Co. v. Campbell, 55 Colo. 493, 136 Pac. 68 (new trial 5 years later, but the witness a young man of unimpaired health and mind); 1868, Cook v. Stout, 47 Ill. 531, semble; 1921, Stearns Lumber Co. v. Howlett, — Mass. —, 131 N. E. 217 (witness testifying about 1920 could not recall the events fully, but stated that his recorded testimony of 1916 before a former master represented his "best recollection"; held, that to allow the witness to adopt and read that former testimony in lieu of present fragments of recollection "would be to adopt a further exception to the rule . . . and would not be conducive to the practical administration of justice"; rather say that this ruling exhibits glaringly the artificiality and mental obliquity of the rules of Evidence as still administered by able minds in a hard rut); 1861, Robinson v. Gilman, 43 N. H. 297; 1883, Velott v. Lewis, 102 Pa. 326, 333; 1819, Drayton v. Wells, 1 Nott & McC. S. Car. 248.

§ 1409. [1] 1702, Holcroft v. Smith, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 224 (Common Pleas); 1718, Baker v. Fairfax, 1 Str. 101. So also for depositions 'in perpetuam memoriam': 1703, Tilley's Case, 1 Salk. 286 (the witness had by inheritance become interested; "Trevor, C. J., held that they ought [to be read]; for that he was disabled to give evidence by the act of God, so that it was in effect the same thing as if he were dead. Tracy and Blencow contra"; and the K. B. agreed with the majority).

[2] 1907, Greenlee v. Mosnat, 136 Ia. 639, 111 N. W. 996 (former testimony of a party now dischancery practice,[3] and this would probably be generally followed in our Courts.[4] The analogies of the case of an attesting witness (ante, § 1316) are in harmony with this result.

§ 1410. Same: (11) Disqualification by Infamy. The same principle recognizes disqualification by infamy (or conviction of crime) as cause for using a deposition or former testimony;[1] but this has been denied by a few Courts,[2] apparently upon the notion that competency at the time of trial is essential. If this were true, then death itself, as well as insanity and interest, would be insufficient to allow the use of a deposition. There is no support for such a notion; the time of the witness' testifying is here the time of the deposition qualified by the opponent's death; St. 1898, c. 9, § 1, quoted post, § 1669, n. 2, held not to alter this result); 1892, Messimer v. McCray, 113 Mo. 382, 389, 21 S. W. 17 (deponent incompetent since taking of deposition, excluded); 1848, Fagin v. Cooley, 17 Oh. 44, 50; 1808, Irwin v. Reed, 4 Yeates Pa. 512; 1828, Chess v. Chess, 17 S. & R. Pa. 412 (these Pennsylvania cases are no longer law; see the cases in note 4, infra); 1915, State v. Rogers, 101 S. C. 280, 85 S. E. 636 (witness disqualified since testifying; excluded, because "the present case did not fall within any of the exceptions"; unsound); 1896, Moore v. Palmer, 14 Wash. 134, 44 Pac. 142 (party made incompetent by opponent's death); 1917, Lyen v. Lyen, 98 Wash. 498, 167 Pac. 1113 (the time of testifying controls; here the husband was joined as defendant in an action by his wife for alienation of affections, and his deposition was taken, then the case was dismissed as against him; his deposition was held inadmissible as of the time offering it, because under Rem. Code § 1214 the marital privilege applied except in "proceedings by one against the other"; unsound); 1909, Sayre v. Woodyard, 66 W. Va. 288, 66 S. E. 320.

The following ruling seems erroneous: 1859, Hayward v. Barron, 38 N. H. 371 (liability to self-incrimination, not sufficient).

[3] 1702, Holcroft v. Smith, 2 Freem. 260, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 224; 1715, Gosse v. Tracy, 2 Vern. 699, 1 P. Wms. 287; 1743, Haws v. Hand, 2 Atk. 615 (interest sufficient, though the interest arose by the witness' own act in becoming administrator and therefore plaintiff; Hardwicke, L. C.); 1750, Glynn v. Bank, 2 Ves. Sr. 42; 1774, Brown v. Greenly, Dick. 504.

[4] Colo. Comp. St. 1921, § 6556 (in any suit in which one party is disqualified by reason of death, etc. of the other, and "the defendant in any such suit has previously been required to testify" under other provisions, the report of testimony may be read for the defendant, "so far as the same relates to the estate" etc.); D. C. 1898, Bowie v. Hume, 13 D. C. App. 286, 318 (testimony of one disqualified by survivorship admitted); Kan. 1911, State v. Stewart, 85 Kan. 404, 116 Pac. 489 (husband privileged not to testify against his wife, and claiming his privilege; his former testimony, admitted; able opinion by Johnston, C. J.); 1915, New v. Smith, 94 Kan. 6, 145 Pac. 880 (testimony, at a former trial, by a party now disqualified as survivor, admitted; the several local statutes examined); Mass. 1804, Gold v. Eddy, 1 Mass. 1; 1843, Sabine v. Strong, 6 Metc. 277; Pa. 1875, Evans v. Reed, 78 Pa. 415, 84 Pa. 254 (party becoming incompetent as survivor; former testimony admissible); 1876, Pratt v. Patterson, 81 Pa. 114 (same; former testimony); 1880, Walbridge v. Knipper, 96 Pa. 50 (same); 1879, Hay's Appeal, 91 Pa. 265, 268 (deposition; same); 1882, Galbraith v. Zimmerman, 100 Pa. 374 (same; former testimony); 1898, Wells v. Ins. Co., 187 Pa. 166, 40 Atl. 802 (physician becoming subject to privilege by passage of statute; deposition admitted).

Conversely, the deposition of one who becomes competent after taking and before offering should be excluded. Contra: 1912, Howard v. Strode, 242 Mo. 210, 146 S. W. 792 (deposition of T. J. M., alleged to be husband of plaintiff, offered against her, a divorce having been granted to T. J. M. after deposition taken but before offered; admitted).

For the effect of time on privilege, see post, § 2237 (marital privilege); and for its effect on disqualification of an attesting witness, see post, § 1510.

§ 1410. [1] 1847, State v. Valentine, 7 Ired. N. Car. 225, 227; 1910, Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 651, 108 Pac. 561 (approving the above text).

[2] 1887, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harper, 50 Ark. 157, 159, 6 S. W. 720 (subsequent infamy does not admit; but here the Court added a touch of the absurd by ruling that even the ensuing death by hanging of the convicted felon did not admit his deposition); 1898, Redd v. State, 65 Ark. 475, 47 S. W. 119; 1817, LeBaron v. Crombie, 14 Mass. 235; 1882, Webster v. Mann, 56 Tex. 119; 1914, Goldstein v. State, 75 Tex. Cr. 390, 171 S. W. 709 (following Webster v. Mann, and here applying it to a conviction in another State since the former trial).

or former testimony; his qualifications then to speak the truth are alone concerned.[3]

§ 1411. Same: Statutes affecting Depositions 'de bene esse.' The conditions of necessity in which a witness' present testimony in court cannot be had are now in almost every jurisdiction dealt with, in part at least, by statutes.[1]

[3] Compare §§ 483, 583, ante.

§ 1411. [1] For certain decisions and other statutes which concern bastardy and probate of wills, see post, §§ 1413, 1417; for the following statutes in their bearing on the rules of notice and cross-examination, see ante, §§ 1380–1382:

ENGLAND: In criminal cases: 1867, St. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, § 2 (admissible if the witness is dead or if "there is no reasonable probability that such person will ever be able to travel or to give evidence"); in civil cases, the following series of statutes were progressively enacted, the Rules of 1883 being now in force (these statutes are cited more fully ante, § 1380): 1830–31, St. 1 Wm. IV, c. 22, § 10 (deposition may not be read unless "the deponent is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or dead, or unable from permanent sickness or other permanent infirmity to attend the trial"); 1873, Rules of Procedure, under Judicature Act of 1873, c. 66, No. 36 (depositions are allowed where the witness' attendance in court "ought for some sufficient cause to be dispensed with"); 1875, Rules of Supreme Court, under Judicature Act of 1875, c. 77, Order XXXVII, Rule 4, now Rule 5 of the same Order in Rules of 1883 ("where it shall appear necessary for purposes of justice" depositions may be authorized and received in evidence); Rule 18 ("Except where by this Order otherwise provided, or directed by the Court or a Judge, no deposition shall be given in evidence at the hearing or trial of any cause or matter without the consent of the party against whom the same may be offered, unless the Court or Judge is satisfied that the deponent is dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the hearing of trial"); 1883, Nadin v. Bassett, L. R. 25 Ch. D. 21 (personal identity of plaintiff; commission to take plaintiff's testimony in New Zealand, refused on the facts); 1887, Burton v. Railway, 35 W. R. 536, Kay, J. (the witness, under the above Order, must be "incapable of being examined"); 1894, St. 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, § 16 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children; like St. 4 Edw. VII, infra, with an additional clause that the Court must be satisfied that the evidence of the child "is not essential to the just hearing of the case"); 1904, R. v. Hale, 20 Cox Cr. 739 (St. 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, § 16, construed as to the child's evidence being "essential"); 1904, St. 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 13 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act; in trials for offences under this act, "where a justice is satisfied by the evidence of a registered medical practitioner that the attendance before a court of any child", in respect of whom an offence of cruelty is charged, "would involve serious danger to its life or health", the sworn deposition of the child may be taken); ib. § 14 (similar provision for the admission of a child's depositions taken under this or certain other acts); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, §§ 28, 29 (Children Act; where the attendance at court of a "child or young person", the victim of the alleged offence, "would involve serious danger to the life or health of the child or young person", the deposition may be taken and used); St. 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 59, Bankruptcy, § 141 (deposition of deceased debtor or his wife or any witness in bankruptcy, admissible).

CANADA: Dominion: R. S. 1906, c. 139, §§ 96, 102, 103, c. 140, §§ 64, 70, 71 (in proceedings in the Supreme or Exchequer Court, any person's deposition may be ordered when in the Court's opinion it is "owing to the absence, age, or infirmity, or the distance of the residence of such person from the place of trial, or the expense of taking his evidence otherwise, or for any other reason, convenient to do so"; the depositions may be used without further proof, "saving all just exceptions"); c. 146, Crim. C. § 997 (depositions on commission out of Canada; the rules for criminal cases to be "as nearly as practicable" the same as in civil cases); c. 146, Crim. C. § 998 (the deposition of a sick person taken under ib. § 995 is admissible if the person is dead or if "there is no reasonable probability that such person will ever be able to attend at the trial to give evidence"); c. 146, Crim. C. § 999 (a deposition at a prior investigation of the charge or testimony at a former trial is admissible if the witness "is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, or is absent from Canada"); St. 1913, 3 & 4 Geo. V, c. 13, § 30 (amending Crim. Code, 1906, § 999; allowing former testimony or deposition to be used also "if such person refuses to be sworn or to give evidence"); St. 1919, 9 & 10 Geo. V, c. 36, § 81 (bankruptcy; "in case of the death of the debtor or his wife, or of a witness whose evidence has been received", etc., the deceased's deposition is admissible);

Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, No. 395 (the Court may empower a deposition to be given in evidence "on such terms as may seem just"); No. 409 (commission for persons out of the jurisdiction; like Ont. Rule 287);

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 58, § 57

(Supreme Court; "on special grounds", the Court may order that 'viva voce' testimony be dispensed with); c. 67, §§ 30, 31 (special rules prescribed for divorce); c. 58, §§ 57, 59 (quoted ante, § 1380); Rules of Court 1912, No. 500 (like Eng. Ord. 37, R. 18);

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule of Court 464 (deposition may be admitted on terms directed by the Court); Rules 483, 484 (production of affiant for cross-examination may be required); Rules 500, 514 (depositions taken on commission of any "aged or infirm person resident within Manitoba, or of any person who is about to withdraw therefrom or who is residing without the limits thereof", may be taken; when taken on commission, they may be given in evidence "without any other proof of the absence from this country" than the solicitor's or agent's affidavit of belief); c. 44, § 138 (affidavit of a party or witness without the judicial district or the province may be received, in county courts; but "where it is reasonably practicable", the judge may require his appearance); c. 47, § 57 (Surrogate Court may allow testimony by deposition, where the witness "is without the limits of Manitoba, or where by reason of his illness or otherwise the Court does not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court");

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 111, § 263 (Supreme Court; depositions of witnesses taken in the Province by reason of illness, etc., are receivable; but if they "shall at the time of the trial be in the Province and able to travel, they shall be required to give their testimony 'viva voce' at such trial"); § 272 (Supreme Court; other depositions and commissions; the examination shall not be read unless the deponent "is out of the Province, or dead, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the trial"); c. 112, §§ 84, 86 (Supreme Court in equity; depositions may be read as in c. 111);

Newfoundland: Cons. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 33, R. 1 (like Ont. Rule 269; R. 18 (except as otherwise ordered, no deposition shall be received unless the witness "is dead, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or resident in Labrador, or is unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend"); Northwest Territories: Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rule 263 (like Ont. Rule, 269; Rule 267 (deposition may be received "on such terms if any" as the Court directs); Rule 280 (except as otherwise directed, no deposition shall be received unless "the deponent is dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend");

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 41 (the deposition of a judge of the Supreme Court may be used "if he is, owing to official business, unable to attend such trial"); c. 149, § 41 (in municipal courts, a deposition may be read when the witness is "absent from the county, aged, infirm, or otherwise unable to travel"); Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 35, R. 1 ("any witness whose attendance in court ought for some sufficient reason to be dispensed with" may by order of Court be examined before a commissioner); R. 4 (the Court may empower a party to give a deposition in evidence "on such terms if any as the Court or judge directs"); R. 17 (except as otherwise provided in this Order or directed by a judge, no deposition shall be given in evidence without consent, unless the deponent "is dead, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the hearing or trial");

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 63, § 118, par. 1, 2 (division courts; the deposition of a person without the Province may be taken, but, if he is the party applying or an employee of his, not unless "a saving of expense will be caused thereby, or unless it is clearly made to appear that the person is aged, infirm, or unable from sickness to appear as a witness"); par. 3 (a deposition may be taken, if it appears that "a material and necessary witness residing within the Province is sick, aged, or infirm, or that he is about to leave the Province, and that his attendance at court as a witness cannot by reason thereof be procured"; it "may be used upon the trial, saving all just exceptions"); par. 4 ("a witness who resides in a remote part of the Province and at a great distance from the place of trial, if it be clearly made to appear that his attendance cannot be procured, or that the expense of his attendance would be out of proportion to the amount involved in the action, or would be so great that the party desiring his attendance, should not under the circumstances be required" to incur it, may be examined by deposition); Rules of Court 1914, R. 269 (affidavit not to be authorized, if the witness "can be produced"; quoted ante, § 1380); R. 271 ("The Court . . . may permit such deposition to be given in evidence"); R. 287 (commission for a person residing out of Ontario; the deposition may be used "without any other proof of the absence from Ontario of the witness" than the affidavit of the solicitor or agent);

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, § 56 (depositions shall not be read unless the witness "is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or dead, or unable from permanent sickness or infirmity or other sufficient cause to attend the trial"); St. 1910, c. 8, § 48 (chancery proceedings; deposition before a master shall not be read without consent "unless the inability of the witness to personally attend exists to the satisfaction of the Court at the time such evidence is offered"); St. 1910, c. 3, § 45 (special provision in election trials for a witness who "intends to leave the Province and cannot attend the trial"),

Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 41, § 28 (surrogate's court);

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 273 (like Ont. Rules of Court, 269; R. 277 (like N. W. Terr. Rule 267); c. 48, Rule 290 (like N. W. Terr. Rule 280).

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 861, Code § 1360 ("The mode of proof in trials of actions at common law shall be by oral testimony and examination of witnesses in open court, except as hereinafter provided"); § 863, Code § 1364 (in civil cause in a district or circuit court a deposition may be taken "when the witness lives at a greater distance from the place of trial than 100 miles, or is bound on a voyage to sea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of the district in which the case is to be tried, and to a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of trial, before the time of trial, or when he is ancient and infirm"); § 865, Code § 1366 ("Unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Court that the witness is then dead, or gone out of the United States, or to a greater distance than 100 miles from the place where the court is sitting, or that, by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, he is unable to travel and appear at court, such deposition shall not be used in the cause"); § 866, Code 1367 ("In any case where it is necessary, in order to prevent a failure or delay of justice, any of the courts of the United States may grant a 'dedimus potestatem' to take depositions according to common usage; . . . and the provisions of the three sections last preceding shall not apply to any deposition to be taken under the authority of this section"); for the construction of the foregoing provisions, see particularly post, § 1417, ante, § 1381; St. 1909, Feb. 16, c. 130, No. 230, Code § 3116 (35 Stat. L. p. 620), § 16 (rules for depositions in naval courts); St. 1911, Mar. 3, c. 231, Judicial Code, §§ 167, 168, Code, §§ 1132, 1136 (testimony for Court of Claims; superseding Rev. St. §§ 1081, 1082); Equity Rules 1912, Rules 46–48; St. 1916, Aug. 29, c. 418, § 3, 39 Stats., amending Rev. St. § 1342 (Articles of War; Art. 25: "in any case not capital" before a military court a deposition may be read "if such deposition be taken when the witness resides, or is found, or is about to go" beyond the State, etc., or "beyond the distance of 100 miles", or when "the witness by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, imprisonment, or other reasonable cause is unable to appear and testify"; "provided that testimony by deposition may be adduced for the defense in capital cases"); St. 1920, June 4, c. V, subchapter II (Articles of War; Art. 25 re-enacts the terms of St. 1916, supra); 1904, Zych v. American Car. & F. Co., C. C. A., 127 Fed. 723, 728 (cited ante, § 1381); 1917, Block v. Arrowsmith Mfg. Co., D. C. D. N. J., 243 Fed. 775 (Equity Rule 47 applied); for a valuable account of the practice under the Federal statutes and the Equity Rules of 1912, see the articles of Mr. Wallace R. Lane, on the Federal Equity Rules, in the Harvard Law Rev. XXVII, 629, XXIX, 55, XXXV, 276.

Alabama: Code 1907, § 4030 (deposition may be taken (1) if witness is a woman, or (2) "from age, infirmity, or sickness, is unable to attend court", or (3) resides "more than 100 miles from the place of trial, computing by the route usually traveled, or resides out of or is absent from the State", or (4) is "about to leave the State and will probably not return until after the trial", or (5) when "the claim or defense, or a material part thereof, depends exclusively on the evidence of the witness", or (6) when the witness is "the Governor, secretary of State, State treasurer, State auditor, attorney-general, superintendent of education, commissioner of agriculture and industries, examiner of public accounts, or the head of any other department or bureau of the State government, chancellor, judge, or clerk of any court of record, register in chancery, or sheriff; or president, director, or other officer of a bank incorporated in this State; postmaster or other officer of the United States; or practicing physician or lawyer; or a person constantly employed on any steamboat or other water-craft, or on any turnpike, or manufactory, or about the engine or other machinery of a railroad or is a superintendent, secretary, treasurer, master of road repairs, or conductor of any railroad; or is a telegraph operator; or a teacher of a public or private school actually engaged in teaching, or a minister of the gospel, or pastor of a religious society in charge of any diocese, parish, church, district, or circuit"); § 4044 (deposition not usable "if it appear at the trial that the cause for which it was taken, or some other cause, does not then exist, unless such witness is dead or of unsound mind"); § 4045 (where the witness resides in county and affidavit of necessity of personal attendance is made, deposition must be suppressed, "unless the witness, from age, infirmity, or sickness, is unable to attend court"); § 4660 (in justices' courts, depositions may be taken also of witnesses residing out of county and 10 miles distant); § 7886 (in criminal cases, defendant may take the deposition of "any witness who from age, infirmity, or sickness, is unable to attend court; or who resides out of the State, or more than 100 miles from the place of trial, computing by the route usually traveled; or who is absent from the State; or where the defense, or a material part thereof, depends exclusively on the testimony of the witness"); § 7888 (so also for prosecution's witness within the State, on defendant's written consent filed); § 7889 (a deposition is not admissible "if it appear that the witness is alive and able to attend court and within its jurisdiction"); § 7890 (convict's deposition may be taken by defendant); § 6559 (testimony of convicts in civil suits may be taken "as in other cases of taking by interrogatories"); § 6560 (in criminal cases, the convict may be taken to court to testify).

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 1476, 1489 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 837, 851, except that § 1476, subdiv. 3, substitutes "about to go more than 100 miles beyond the place of trial").

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1249 (deposition of witnesses in the State taken by accused, admissible if the witness "is unable to attend, by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); § 1261 (deposition of a witness residing out of the State, taken by accused, admissible if "the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); § 1713 (in civil cases, "no deposition of a witness shall be permitted to be read in evidence unless the party offering the same, his agent, attorney, or some competent person, shall first make oath that the witness is without the limit of the county where the suit is pending, or more than 50 miles from the place of trial, or that such witness is dead, or that by reason of age, sickness, infirmity, or official duty, such witness is unable to attend the court"); §§ 752, 768 (testimony on contested probate of will, admissible in subsequent contests over the will if the witness "is dead or has permanently removed from this State"); § 753 (like Cal. P. C. § 686).

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4206 (deposition is usable (1) "where the witness does not reside in the county where the action is pending, or in an adjoining county, or is absent from the State, or is in the military service of the United States, or of this State"; (2) "where the witness is the Governor, Secretary of State, auditor or treasurer of this State, a judge or clerk of a court, a president, cashier, teller, or clerk of a bank, a practicing physician, surgeon, or lawyer, or keeper, officer, or guard of the penitentiary"; (3) "where, from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, the witness is unable to attend court, or is dead"; (4) "where the witness resides 30 miles or more" from the place of trial, "unless the witness is in attendance on the court"); § 4208 (the Court may order personal attendance, on affidavit that his testimony "is important, and that the just and proper effect of his testimony cannot, in a reasonable degree, be obtained without an oral examination before the jury"); § 4210 (deposition may be taken of "any witness 'de bene esse', which may be used under the circumstances described in § 4206"); § 3115 (depositions for the accused in criminal cases are usable "upon the death of the witness or his becoming mentally incapable of testifying, or physically incapable of attending the trial or giving his testimony, or a non-resident of the State, or absent therefrom, so that he could not be summoned"; but in last two cases defendant's affidavit "that he has tried in good faith to procure the attendance of such witness and been unable to do so" is necessary); § 10517 (on a will-probate, the attesting-witness' deposition is admissible if he resides out of State, or is confined in "another county or corporation" under legal process, or is "unable from sickness, age, or other infirmity, to attend", or reside more than 50 miles distant); § 10521 (testimony on application for probate, and "any deposition lawfully taken out of Court", "of witnesses who cannot be produced at a trial afterward before a jury", is admissible).

California: C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2020, 2021 (deposition of a witness out of the State may be taken; that of a witness in the State may be taken, 1, when he is a party, or an officer or member of a corporation-party, or a beneficiary of the action; 2, when he resides out of the county or more than 50 miles distant; 3, when he is "about to leave the county . . . and will probably continue absent when the testimony is required"; 4, when he, "otherwise liable to attend the trial, is nevertheless too infirm to attend"; 5, for a motion or like proceedings; 6, when the witness "is the only one who can establish facts or a fact material to the issue; provided that the deposition of such witness shall not be used if his presence can be procured at the time of the trial"); § 2032 (if taken under subdiv. 2, 3, or 4, above, "proof must be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, or is dead"); § 2022 (depositions taken and returned may be read except as provided in § 2032); § 1997 (production of a witness imprisoned in the county may be required); P. C. 1872, § 686 (testimony before a committing magistrate, or a deposition taken conditionally for the prosecution, admissible if the witness is "dead, or insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the State"; quoted fully ante, § 1387; see the interpreting decisions cited ante, § 1398); § 1204 (motion for mitigation or aggravation of sentence; depositions allowed, under certain conditions); §§ 1335, 1345 (depositions taken for the accused, or, except in homicide, for the prosecution, usable if the witness is "unable to attend, by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); § 1346 (deposition of a jail-prisoner may be taken for the accused, subject to the foregoing); § 1362 (depositions taken on commission out of the State by the accused may be read upon a showing "that the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); St. 1905, c. 540 (amends P. C. 1872, § 882, applying to depositions for the prosecution before the committing magistrate, by providing that "such deposition may be used upon the trial of the defendant, except in cases of homicide, under the same conditions as mentioned in § 1345", but this section is not to apply to an accomplice); Pol. C. 1872, § 282 (gubernatorial election contests; depositions admissible by "the same rule as . . . on the trial of civil actions").

Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 376 (deposition may be taken where the witness (1) is a party or a beneficiary, (2) "resides out of the county", (3) "is about to leave the county . . . and will probably continue absent when the testimony is required", (4) "though otherwise liable to attend the trial, is nevertheless too infirm to attend", (5) "is for any other cause expected to be unable to attend the trial"); § 378 ("If the deposition be taken by reason of the absence, or intended absence, from the county of the witness, or because he is too infirm to attend, proof by affidavit or oral testimony shall be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, to the best of deponent's knowledge or belief. The deposition thus taken may also be read in case of the death of a witness"); Const. 1876, Art. II, § 17, Comp. St. 1921, § 7086 (deposition by either party in a criminal case, admissible, unless "in the opinion of the Court, the personal attendance of the witness might be procured by the prosecution or is procured by the accused"); § 5207 (depositions of witnesses to a will, "non-resident" or "resident out of the county" of application for probate, admissible).

Columbia (District): Code 1919, § 1058 (depositions 'de bene' may be taken of witness living beyond the District, or likely to go beyond it or out of the U. S. and not return, or infirm or aged or if for any reason it is feared the testimony will not be obtainable, or if during the trial, illness or other cause prevents attendance; but "if at the time of the trial the witness can be produced to testify in open court, the deposition shall not be read in evidence; but if the attendance of the witness can not be produced, then the said deposition shall be admissible in evidence"); § 1060 (depositions of persons out of the District taken on commission shall not be admitted at the trial "if at the time the witness be present in the District, and his attendance can be obtained by the process of the court"); § 144 (in will cases, depositions taken on commission and 'de bene' "may be read").

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5707 (depositions may be taken, in civil actions, or persons (1) living out of the State, (2) living more than 20 miles from place of trial, (3) "going to sea or out of the State", (4) "by age or infirmity unable to travel to court", (5) confined in jail; but nothing is said as to their admission); § 5708 (for persons more than 60 years old, depositions may be taken, and used if deponent is "unable to attend and testify"); § 7512 (depositions of persons in military or naval service may be used); § 6637 (depositions for accused, admissible "by reason of bodily infirmity or residence out of the State").

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3085, as reenacted by St. 1921, c. 134, § 5 (the mother's deposition in a bastardy case, admissible "if her attendance cannot be procured").

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, §§ 2741, 2756 (deposition may be taken if the witness "reside out of the county" or "be bound on a voyage to sea, or be about to go out of the State to remain until after the trial", or "be very aged or infirm", or upon affidavit that party "believes that a material part of his claim or defence depends upon the testimony of such witness"; no conditions of admissibility specified); § 2765 (deposition may be taken of an attesting-witness to a will residing out of the State); § 3372 (on adjournment or continuance before a justice of the peace, depositions of witnesses in attendance may be taken and used on trial "as if such testimony were given at the trial"); § 3605 (at a probate contest, a deposition is usable if "the personal attendance of any witness cannot be obtained, or if it be manifested inconvenient for any witness to attend"); § 6085 (accused person may take depositions of absent persons whose testimony is material and necessary, if they "reside beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or are so sick and infirm that with diligence their attendance cannot be procured at the same or the next succeeding regular or special term at which the case may be tried"); § 6090 (such a deposition is not to be read "when the attendance of the witness can be procured", or if the deponent "has absented himself by the procurement, inducement, or threats of the accused, or of any person in his behalf").

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5886 (deposition may be taken in a civil cause on interrogatories, if the witness (1) resides out of the county; (2) "from the condition of his health, from age or otherwise, he cannot attend the court, or from the nature of his business or occupation it is not possible to secure his personal attendance without manifest inconvenience to the public or to third persons, — such as postmasters, public carriers, physicians, schoolteachers, etc."; (3) is about to remove from the county, or to leave home on business, for a sojourn or a tour, which will extend "beyond the term of the Court"; (4) "all female witnesses"; (5) "the only witness to a material point in the case"); § 5887 (deposition of a member of the General Assembly may be taken, when its session conflicts with Court session); § 5888 ("If the state of facts on which the commission was issued ceases to exist before the trial of the cause, and the witness is then accessible by subpœna", the deposition taken on commission "cannot be used"); § 5909 (depositions without commission; "if the reasons for taking the deposition cease to exist before the trial, such deposition shall not be used in the case").

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2569 (depositions are not to be read "unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Court" that the deponent is the opposite party, "or is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or is resident in another circuit, or dead, or unable from permanent sickness or other permanent infirmity to attend").

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8016 (deposition may be taken "in the trial of all issues, in any action, in the following cases: first, when the witness does not reside in the county, or when he resides in a county adjoining and more than 30 miles from place of trial, or is absent from the State; second, when the deponent is so aged, infirm, or sick as not to be able to attend the court or place of trial, or is dead; third, when the depositions have been taken by agreement of parties, or by the order of the court trying the cause; fourth, when the deponent is a State or county officer, or a practising physician, or attorney-at-law, and the trial is to be had in any county in which the deponent does not reside"); § 8008 ("No deposition shall be read in evidence on the trial of a cause, if at that time the witness is produced in court, unless the deposition has been taken by agreement of the parties, or by order of the Court"); § 8015 (when a deposition is offered, "it must appear to the satisfaction of the Court that the cause for taking and reading it still exists"); § 9037 (fixing of sentence; like Cal. P. C. § 1204); § 9150 (deposition taken for accused within the State may be read if the witness "is unable to attend by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); § 9165 (deposition taken for the accused without the State may be read if the witness "is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); 1908, State v. Zarlenga, 14 Ida. 305, 94 Pac. 55 (a deposition taken for the prosecution, under Rev. St. 1887, § 7588: the conditions requisite to be shown, specified in full; i.e. due taking before a magistrate, notice, inability to attend, and due diligence).

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 25 (in suits at law, depositions of witnesses resident in the State may be taken wherever the witness "resides in a different county from that in which the court is held, is about to depart from the State, is in custody on legal process, or is unable to attend such court on account of advanced age, sickness, or other bodily infirmity"); § 26 ('dedimus potestatem' commission, allowed in civil causes for a witness residing in the State more than 100 miles distant, or not residing in the State, or engaged in the military or naval service of the United States or this State and out of this State); § 34 (every deposition duly taken and returned "may be read as good and competent evidence in the cause in which it shall be taken, as if such witness had been present and examined by parol in open court, on the hearing or trial thereof"); c. 148, § 4 (when an attesting-witness to a will "shall reside without the limits of this State", or the county in which probate is desired, "or shall be unable to attend said court", a deposition by commission may be taken and used).

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 439, 448 (deposition is usable when the deponent (1) does not reside in the county, or adjoining county, of trial, or is absent from the State; (2) is "so aged, infirm, or sick, as not to be able to attend", or is dead; (3) when the deposition is taken by agreement or by Court order; (4) when the deponent is "a State or county officer, or a judge, or a practicing physician, or attorney-at-law", and the trial is in a county of non-residence); § 2118 (defendant in a criminal case may by leave of Court have depositions taken of witnesses residing out of the State, but must first enter consent for similar depositions by prosecution on the same matter); § 441 (if a witness "is produced in Court", his deposition is not to be read, unless taken by agreement or by Court order); § 1079 (in divorce causes, the Court may "for good cause shown" receive depositions, though the witnesses could attend).

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4684, Comp. Code, § 7392 (in a civil action, a deposition may be taken if the witness resides in a different county, or "is about to go beyond the reach of a subpœna", or is "for any other cause expected to be unable to attend court at the time of trial"); § 4709, Comp. C. § 7417 (unless the record discloses a cause for taking, the proponent must show that "the witness is a non-resident of the county, or such other fact as renders its taking legal"); § 3285, Comp. C. § 7807 (in a will probate, depositions are allowable of subscribing witnesses residing out of the State or judicial district); Comp. C. §§ 9462, 9463 (accused may take depositions as in civil cases); 1920, Bohen v. North American Life Ins. Co., 188 Ia. 1349, 177 N. W. 706 (statute held not to authorize the taking of a non-resident's deposition on oral interrogatories).

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, §§ 7239, 7262 (depositions usable only "when the witness does not reside in the county" of trial, or "when from age, infirmity or imprisonment the witness is unable to attend court, or is dead", or upon a motion, etc.); §§ 11768, 11803 (will-probate; commission may issue for witness residing out of the jurisdiction, or for one residing within it but "infirm and unable to attend court").

Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 554 (deposition is usable if the deponent resides 20 miles or more away; is absent from State; is its Governor, secretary, register, auditor, or treasurer; or is judge or court clerk; or is postmaster, or bank president, cashier, teller, or clerk; or is practising physician, surgeon, or lawyer; or is keeper, officer, or guard of penetentiary; or is dead; or has become of unsound mind; or is prevented by infirmity or imprisonment from attendance; or is in the Federal or State military service); § 556 (on affidavit that the testimony is important and its "just and proper effect" cannot "in a reasonable degree" be attained otherwise, the Court may order personal attendance); C. Cr. P. 1895, § 153 (defendant's depositions in criminal cases are usable only in case of death, absence from State, or physical inability to attend for examination); Stats. 1899, §§ 4855, 4863 (attesting-witness to a will; deposition may be taken if he resides out of the Commonwealth, or is confined under legal process in another county or corporation, or is unable from sickness, age, or other infirmity to attend, or resides more than 50 miles away; this may be used on the jury trial if the witness "cannot be produced").

Louisiana: Ann. Rev. St. 1915, §§ 615, 617 (depositions may be taken by the clerk of court whenever the party desires; no conditions of using specified); §§ 938, 3485 (deposition of vessel master or officer or any transient person taken for a prosecution, may be used if the magistrate taking makes oath that the witness "is not at the time of the trial within the jurisdiction of the court"); § 3941 (deposition is allowable for a witness residing out of the parish of trial); § 3942 (deposition of a member of the religious order of Saint Ursuline Nuns in New Orleans); C. Pr. 1894, § 352 (party residing out of the parish may be examined on interrogatories without attendance); §§ 138, 425–439 (provision for taking depositions of non-residents, infirm persons, etc.; and "parties in all cases, except criminal and civil jury cases, may take testimony of witnesses out of court, who reside in the parish where the cause is pending"); St. 1896, No. 124, Wolff's Rev. L. 278 (in criminal cases the deposition of a witness taken under detention is admissible "in case of the death or departure of said witness from the parish or other inability to attend court", but not "when the presence of said witness can be procured by subpœna"); St. 1908, No. 105, p. 162, July 1 (no deposition of "a fugitive from justice from this State" shall be admissible); St. 1910, No. 176, p. 261, July 6 (testimony of witnesses residing out of the parish may be taken by deposition in civil cases).

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 112, §§ 4, 11, 17 (deposition shall not be used if the cause for taking no longer exists; those causes are (1) "so aged, infirm, or sick, as to be unable to attend"; (2) residence or absence out of the State; (3) being bound to sea on a voyage, or about to go without the State or more than 60 miles away, and not to return in season; (4) being a judge and prevented by official duty from attendance; (5) residing in another town; (6) residing in the same town, provided he is dead or permanently removed from the town or too ill, or infirm to attend at the time of trial; (7) being confined in prison until after the trial); c. 136, § 20 (defendant and prosecution may take and use depositions out of the State as in civil causes; but the prosecution may not use its own if the defendant does not use his; defendant may take depositions within the State); c. 68, § 6 (admissible in probate proceedings when a will-witness lives out of the State, or more than 30 miles distant, or "by age or indisposition of body" is unable to attend).

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, §§ 16, 17 (depositions on commission of witnesses "who for any reason cannot be brought" before Court or of non-resident witnesses "shall be admitted"; no conditions specified); §§ 19, 21 (deposition of any witness taken may be used "in case only" of his death, or of party's "inability to procure the attendance of such witness at the time of trial and the probable continuance of said inability" until the next term); § 27 (certain depositions usable, if the deponent is dead or out of the State or "cannot be had to attend"); Art. 84, § 9 (deposition of master or "other transient person", in shipping offence, admissible if not within jurisdiction at time of trial).

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, §§ 25, 35 (the reasons for taking are: residence more than 30 miles away; intention to go out of the Commonwealth and not return in time for the trial; "so ill, aged, or infirm, as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend"; the deposition is not to be used "if it appears that the reason for taking it or other sufficient cause for its use no longer exists").

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12494, 12500 (deposition may be taken if witness "is about to go or resides out of the State", or "more than 50 miles from the place of trial", or "beyond the jurisdiction of the court", or "when the witness is sick, aged, or infirm, or where there is reasonable cause for apprehension that his testimony cannot be had at the trial", or where "the purposes of justice will be aided thereby"; the deposition may be read, but nevertheless the Court may order "the production of the witness, if within the jurisdiction"; and in any case either party may compel his attendance "if he is within the jurisdiction of the court and able to attend and give his testimony"); 1908, Nolan v. Garrison, 151 Mich. 138, 115 N. W. 58 (Comp. St. 1897, § 10136, being § 12494 above, and § 10188 for chancery causes, compared, and held not to be inconsistent: both methods are available; under § 10136 the taker need not wait until 10 days after issue joined).

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8381 (in civil causes, the deposition of a witness in the State may be taken if the witness "lives more than 30 miles from the place of trial, or is about to go out of the State and not to return in time for trial, or is so sick, infirm, or aged as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend at the trial or hearing"; also if he is without the State and within any U. S. State or Territory); § 8395 ("no deposition shall be used if it appears that the reason for taking it no longer exists", unless the party offering "shows any sufficient cause then existing for using such deposition");

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1924, Hem. § 1584 (deposition in a civil case may be taken of a witness in the State, if he (1) is "about to depart from the State, or by reason of age, sickness, or other cause shall be unable, or likely to be unable, to attend the court"; (2) "when the claim or defense, or a material point thereof, shall depend upon the testimony of a single witness"; (3) when he is a judge of the Supreme Court, or circuit court, or chancellor, or "any other officer of the government of the State or the United States, who, on account of his official duties, cannot conveniently attend"; (4) "when the testimony of the clerk of any court of record, or of any sheriff or justice of the peace, shall be required beyond the limits of the county of his residence"; (5) when a "female"; (6) when residing more than 60 miles distant); § 1925, Hem. § 1585 (in a civil cause before a justice of the peace, allowable also for any witness residing in another county); § 1928, Hem. § 1588 (commission may issue for non-residents); § 1933, Hem. § 1593 (depositions to be admissible; but the opponent "may procure the attendance of such witness" and put him on the stand); § 1936, Hem. § 1596 (deposition for a chancery bill may be taken if the witness is "sick, aged, infirm, or about to go out of the State"); § 1940, Hem. § 1600 (chancery deposition of "a party or other interested witness" is not to be admitted if the opponent file an affidavit ten days before trial that oral examination is "necessary to the attainment of justice", and if the witness "be alive at the time of trial and not unable to attend court on account of disability from permanent sickness, physical injury, or from weakness and disability incident to old age"); § 1941, Hem. § 1601 (in causes testamentary, etc., in chancery, the party may examine in open court; but this is not to change the rule as to non-resident witnesses or as to depositions in circuit court, or as to cases in which depositions generally are authorized); § 1994, Hem. § 1659 (non-resident subscribing witness to a will may testify by deposition); § 2464, Hem. § 2030 (in 'habeas corpus' proceedings, "whenever the personal attendance of a witness cannot be procured, his affidavit, taken on reasonable notice to the adverse party, may be received").

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 3964 (the accused may take the deposition of a witness who "resides out of the State, or, residing within the State, is enceinte, sick or infirm, or is bound on a voyage or is about to leave this State, or is confined in prison under sentence for a felony"); § 3965 (such depositions are to be read "in like cases" as in civil suits); § 3966 (the accused may also take conditional examinations by commission as in civil cases); § 5440 (civil suits; any witness' deposition may be taken conditionally); § 5467 (depositions are usable, "first, if the witness resides or is gone out of the State; second, if he be dead; third, if by reason of age, sickness, or bodily infirmity, he be unable to or cannot safely attend court; fourth, if he reside in a county other than that in which the trial is held, or if he be gone to greater distance than 40 miles from the place of trial without the consent, connivance, or collusion of the party requiring his testimony; fifth, if he be a judge of a court of record, a practicing attorney or physician, and engaged in the discharge of his official or professional duty at the time of the trial"); § 520 (if an attesting witness to a will "shall reside without the United States, or out of this State and within the United States, or within this State and more than 40 miles" from place of probate, "or if such witness shall be prevented by sickness from attending at the time when any will may be produced for probate", his deposition may be taken); § 528 (on the trial of a will's validity, the oath of a subscribing witness at probate is admissible if he "be deceased or cannot be found").

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10645, 10652 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2021, 2032); § 12212 (like Cal. P. C. § 1362); § 11795 (deposition before a committing magistrate of a witness not giving an undertaking, admissible if the witness "be dead or absent from the State"); § 12197 (criminal cases; deposition may be read if the witness "is dead or is absent from the State"); § 12198 (deposition of a person imprisoned, taken for the accused, may be used like other depositions).

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 278 (the mother's examination on a bastardy complaint before a magistrate, admissible on the trial); § 8880 (a deposition is usable "only in the following cases": first, when the witness does not reside in the county or is absent from it; second, "when, from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, the witness is unable to attend the court, or is dead"; third, on a motion or where oral examination is not required); § 8894 (deposition not to be read unless, for a cause specified in ib. § 8880, the "attendance of the witness cannot be procured").

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5454 (witness in the State; like Cal. C. C. P. § 2021, par. 1, 2, 3, 4); § 5456 ("If the deposition be taken by reason of the absence or intended absence from the county of the witness, or because he is too infirm to attend, proof by affidavit or oral testimony shall be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, to the best of the deponent's knowledge or belief"; the witness' death also admits the deposition); § 5458 (witness out of the State; no conditions prescribed for using); §§ 5442, 5444 (deposition allowable for a witness imprisoned in jail); § 6855 (deposition of a witness for the People, taken conditionally, is admissible if it is "satisfactorily shown to the Court that he is dead or insane, or cannot, with due diligence, be found within the State"); § 7366 (defendant in a criminal case may take the deposition of a witness who "is about to leave the State, or resides out of the State, or has departed from the State and his or her place of abode is known, or is so sick or infirm as to afford reasonable grounds for apprehending that he or she will be unable to attend the trial"); § 7384 (such a deposition is usable "upon it being shown that the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever").

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 225, § 1 (any deposition may be used in a civil cause unless the adverse party procures the witness' attendance); § 13 (depositions for the accused in criminal cases may be used in the Court's discretion when necessary for justice).

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 51 (a deposition is usable if the witness "resides or is out of the State, or is dead, or by reason of age, sickness, or bodily infirmity is unable to attend"; see also Justices' Courts, § 116); § 35 (deposition of a party is not to be taken in his own behalf, except by consent or by judicial order); § 46 (deposition of a party residing out of the State may be taken like that of any witness); St. 1913, Mar. 12, c. 69 (party's deposition may be taken at his own instance, so as to be usable if he himself afterwards becomes incompetent though an opposing party's death); 1915, Stengel v. Stengel, 85 N. J. Eq. 277, 96 Atl. 358 (practice as to taking depositions 'de bene' out of the State, examined).

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2125 (civil cases; a deposition may be taken (1) "when by reason of age, infirmity, sickness, or official duty, it is probable that the witness will be unable to attend the court"; (2) when he "resides without the State or the county in which the suit is pending"; (3) when he "has left or is about to leave" the State or county, "and will probably not be present at the trial"); § 2143 (it may be read in evidence; no conditions named); § 5877 (at the original probate of a will, deposition of a witness may be taken when he is "not a resident of the county in which such will is offered for probate, and also whenever any witness is incapacitated from sickness or age from attending upon such court"; the deposition when filed to have the same effect as if the witness testified in person); St. 1919, Mar. 10, c. 29, §§ 1, 6 (civil causes; supplementary provisions; deposition may be taken when the witness is a non-resident, or resides more than 100 miles distant, or "for any reason will not be able to attend the trial", or in any other case where the judge deems proper; it may be used "as if the witnesses were personally present and testifying").

New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 354 (a physician or surgeon or nurse attached to hospital, etc., may testify before a referee to the condition of a patient in an action for personal injury, the judge having discretion to order his examination in court); § 304 (a deposition, except one of an adverse party or one taken by stipulation, is not to be used unless the witness is dead, or out of the State or more than 100 miles distant, or unable personally to attend "by reason of insanity, sickness, or other infirmity or imprisonment" or when "for any reason" his attendance could not with reasonable diligence be compelled by subpœna); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 8 (depositions are admissible against the accused, if the witness is dead, insane, or cannot with due diligence be found in the State); §§ 219, 631 (a deposition taken on either side in a criminal case may be used if witness is "unable to attend, by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); N. Y. C. Mun. Ct. Code 1915, § 116 (similar to C. P. A. § 304; absence from city suffices); St. 1918, c. 64, amending C. C. P. § 830, now C. P. A. 1920, § 348, quoted ante, § 1387 (by adding a clause for former testimony of a person who "being a resident of the State has departed therefrom by reason of military or naval service under the State or United States").

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1821, (depositions are admissible if the witness (1) is dead or has become insane, (2) is a resident of a foreign country or another State and is not present, (3) is confined in prison beyond the county, (4) is "so old, sick, or infirm as to be unable to attend court", (5) is the Federal president or head of a department, or Federal judge, district attorney, or clerk, and the trial occurs during term of his court, (6) is the State Governor or head of a department or president of the university or other incorporated college or superintendent or physician of State insane hospital, (7) is a State Supreme Court judge, or a judge, presiding officer, clerk, or solicitor of a court of record, and the trial occurs during the court's term, (8) is a member of Congress or the General Assembly, and the trial occurs during a session, (9) if the witness, being summoned, is out of the State or more than 75 miles distant by usual mode of travel, without the offeror's procurement or consent, (10) in "justice's court", if the witness resides more than 75 miles distant); § 1812 (depositions taken by the accused may be read on above conditions); § 1815 (depositions taken in certain 'quo warranto' proceedings are admissible "without regard to the place of residence of such witness or distance of residence from said place of trial").

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7889, 7904 (like Okl. Comp. St. 1921, §§ 612, 626); §§ 11048, 11049, 11062 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1346, 1362); § 8577 (probate court may receive deposition of any witness residing within State, on ground of "necessary expense or inconvenience of procuring his attendance"); § 8578 (probate judge may go personally to hear testimony of a witness aged, sick, or infirm; unless interested party requests taking by deposition).

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11525 (a deposition is usable when the witness (1) "does not reside in or is absent from" the county; (2) "is dead, or from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, is unable to attend court"; (3) it is also usable on motions or "where the oral examination of the witness is not required"); § 10545 (in probating a lost or destroyed will, the deposition may be taken of a witness residing out of the jurisdiction, or infirm and unable to attend court); § 10518 (same, for ordinary probate); §§ 13668, 13668–1, 13668–2, 13668–3 (in criminal cases, the defendant or the prosecution may have a deposition taken of a witness who (1) resides out of the State, (2) is sick or infirm, (3) is about to leave the State, or (4) is confined in prison; nothing said as to admissibility); Const. 1851, Art. I, § 10, amended 1912 (depositions taken by the State or by the accused; quoted ante, § 1397).

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 612 (a deposition is usable only (1) when the witness does not reside in the county of trial or is absent from it: (2) when "from age, infirmity, or imprisonment, the witness is unable to attend court, or is dead"; (3) when the case is one in which oral testimony is not required); § 626 (on offering a deposition, it must appear that for "any cause specified" in the above section "the attendance of the witness cannot be procured"); § 2772 (on a hearing for mitigation or aggravation of sentence, depositions may be used if the witness is "so sick or infirm as to be unable to attend"); § 2843 (in criminal cases the deposition of a material witness may be taken for defendant if the witness is "about to leave the State, or is so sick or infirm as to afford reasonable grounds for apprehending that he will be unable to attend the trial"); § 2851 (such a deposition is usable "upon its appearing that the witness is unable to attend by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); §§ 2853, 2865 (the deposition of a material witness for defendant residing out of the State may be read "upon it being shown that the witness is unable to attend from any cause whatever"); § 2852 (the deposition of a material witness for defendant may be taken if the witness is prisoner in a State prison or in a jail of a county other than that of trial).

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 837 (a deposition in the State may be taken when the witness (1) is a party, (2) is privileged from attendance under ib. § 818 by reason of distance, (3) is "about to leave the county and go more than 20 miles beyond the place of trial", (4) "though otherwise liable to attend the trial, is nevertheless too infirm to attend", and (5) on a motion or otherwise where oral examination is not required); § 851 (when taken under (2), (3), or (4) of ib. § 837, not usable unless proof is made "that the witness did reside beyond the service of a subpœna, or that he still continues absent or infirm, as the case may be").

Pennsylvania: St. 1909, Apr. 27, § 4, Dig. 1920, § 8178, Crim. Procedure (accused's nonresident witnesses in criminal cases; deposition usable unless it appears that witness "is in attendance, or has been or can be subpœnaed, or his attendance otherwise procured").

Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, §§ 354, 355 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2020, 2021, omitting the exception for distance in par. 2 of § 2021); § 362 (deposition taken in the Islands "may be also read in case of the death of the witness"; but there is nothing to explain this "also"); P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15 (like Cal. P. C. § 686).

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1504, 1512 (civil cases; deposition cannot be read unless proof is made that the witness is "absent from the district", or resides out of it and 30 miles away, or is "too infirm to attend the trial", or is dead; but such proof is needless when the deponent is a party or resides out of the district, etc. at the time of taking) § 6022 ("to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the Court" except as provided in Cal. P. C. § 686); § 6469 (depositions for an accused; like Cal. P. C. § 1345); § 6484 (like Cal. P. C. § 1362).

Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, §§ 22, 29, 30 (apparently no restrictions whatever as to accounting for witness' absence; but by § 38 any Court "may order the oral examination of witnesses in open court"); § 40 ('viva voce' testimony required in divorce cases, unless in case of physical disability to attend, residence and presence out of the State, or a deponent before a master in chancery).

South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, §§ 685, 687, 688 (a deposition may be taken under commission, if the witness (1) resides out of the State or county, (2) or resides more than 100 miles from court, (3) or is about to remove from the State before trial expected, (4) or cannot personally be procured "by reason of indispensable attendance on some public official duty or professional duty as an attorney at such time", or (5) "by reason of such sickness or infirmity as incapacitates such witness or witnesses from traveling in order to appear and testify"; nothing is said as to conditions of admissibility; except that by § 687 personal attendance may be compelled of any deponent residing within the county or not more than 30 miles from court house; and by § 688 the attendance of an officer of a lunatic asylum in a civil cause is to be required only when "justice cannot be done" without it); § 694 (commissioners shall attend at the home of "persons unable to leave home by reason of age, infirmity, sickness, or bodily hurt"); § 695 (any party's or witness' deposition may be taken in civil causes before the clerk of court, subject to either party's right to require personal attendance); § 698 (depositions may be taken 'de bene' before a judge, clerk, notary, etc., if the witness (1) lives without the county, (2) lives more than 100 miles away, (3) is bound to sea, (4) is about to leave the State or the county or to go 100 miles away, or (5) is aged or infirm; but by § 700 such depositions are to be used only if it appears that the deponent is dead or out of the county or State or 100 miles away, or is by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, unable to travel and appear); § 15 (depositions for the Probate Court may be taken if the witness (1) resides out of the State or the county, (2) or resides more than 30 miles away, (3) or "by reason of age or bodily infirmity shall be unable to attend in person"); C. Cr. P. 1922, § 976 (in trials for rape, the deposition of the female may in the judge's discretion be admitted "as though such testimony had been given orally in court"); Crim. L. 1922, § 714 (harboring a deserting seaman; deposition of a vessel-master "or other transient person", admissible if he is not "within the jurisdiction of the State").

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2757, 2769 (like N. D. Comp. L. §§ 7889, 7904); § 4960 (deposition admissible, when sentence is to be fixed, if a witness "is so sick or infirm as to be unable to attend"); § 5015 (deposition within the State taken for accused may be read if the witness is "unable to attend by reason of his death, insanity, sickness, or infirmity, or of his continued absence from the State"); § 5029 (deposition taken for accused on commission may be read if the witness "is unable to attend from any cause whatever").

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3210 (notary's deposition admissible, "should the notary die or remove out of the State before trial"); § 5624 (deposition in a civil action may be taken if the witness (1) "from age, bodily infirmity, or other cause", is incapable of attending; (2) resides out of the State; (3) resides out of the county; (4) is obliged to leave the State before issue; (5) is about to leave the county and "will probably not return until after the trial"; (6) is "the only witness to a material fact"; (7) is "an officer of the United States, an officer of this State or of any county in this State", clerk of another court of record, member of the General Assembly in session or a clerk or officer thereof, a practising physician or attorney, or a jailer or prison-keeper of another county; (8) is a notary public; (9) when the suit is brought 'in forma pauperis'); § 5625 (a female witness may testify by deposition, unless sufficient cause be shown for compelling her attendance); § 5626 (the deposition of any person in the county may be taken, but the opponent may summon him to attend); § 5631 (the opponent may compel attendance in the above cases, except where the witness is by law privileged not to attend); § 7356 (rules for civil cases, applicable to defendant's depositions in criminal cases); §§ 7574-7576 (a convict not being removable for a civil case, his deposition may be used; defendant in a criminal case may also use it).

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3649 (depositions may be taken in all civil suits; "provided, the failure to secure the deposition of a male witness residing in the county in which the suit is pending shall not be regarded as want of diligence where diligence has been used to secure his personal attendance by the service of subpœna or attachment, under the rules of law, unless by reason of age, infirmity, or sickness or official duty, the witness will be unable to attend the court, or unless he is about to leave or has left the State or county in which the suit is pending, and will not probably be present at the trial"); § 3677 (depositions may be read; no conditions prescribed); § 3267 (at the probate of a will, "if all the [subscribing] witnesses are non-residents of the county, or those resident of the county are unable to attend court", their depositions may be used; where the subscribing witnesses are dead, the witnesses to handwriting may testify "by deposition"); Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 817 (the accused may take the deposition of any witness, not to be used except on giving consent to use by the State; and also of a witness who resides out of the State or is aged or infirm); § 832 (such depositions "shall not be read, unless oath be made that the witness resides out of the State, or that since his deposition was taken the witness has died; or that he has removed beyond the limits of the State; or that he has been prevented from attending the court through the act or agency of the defendant, or by the act or agency of any person whose object was to deprive the defendant of the benefit of the testimony"; or that by reason of "age or bodily infirmity such witness cannot attend"); § 833 (the foregoing oath "may be made by the district or county attorney or any other credible person" for the State; for the defendant "the oath shall be made by him in person").

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7168, 7177 (the deposition of "a witness out of the State" is usable, without conditions specified); § 7178 (witness in the State; like Cal. C. C. P. § 2021, par. 1 to 5, omitting the second clause of par. 1 and of par. 2, and the whole of par. 6); § 7180 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2032); § 8553 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 686); § 7139 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1997); § 9053 (mitigation or aggravation of sentence; like Cal. P. C. § 1204); §§ 9307, 9323 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1345, 1362, but omitting in § 9307 to provide for the State's depositions); § 8767 (summarized post, § 1413);

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1909 ("A deposition taken for any of the reasons, and in the manner hereinafter provided, shall be admitted as evidence in a civil cause for which it is taken"); § 1910 (a deposition may be taken of a person (1) residing more than 30 miles distant, (2) about to leave the State, not to return before trial, (3) incapable of traveling and appearing, through "age, sickness, or other bodily infirmity", (4) residing out of the State, (5) confined in jail, (6) being a judge of the Supreme Court, going out of his residence-county on official duty, not to return before trial; (7) a "cloistered sister of a religious community"); § 3196 (in probate proceedings, a deposition may be taken where the person resides out of the probate district, or is unable to attend through age or bodily infirmity); § 2556 (non-residents in criminal cases); § 2564 (criminal cases).

Virginia: Code 1919, § 6231 (a deposition is usable if the witness is "dead, or out of this State, or one of its judges, or a superintendent of a lunatic asylum distant more than 30 miles from the place of trial, or in any public office or service the duties of which prevent his attending the court, or be unable to attend it from sickness or other infirmity, or be more than 100 miles from the place of trial"; but in the last instance the Court may require attendance); § 5252 (if a will-witness is "unable from sickness, age, or other infirmity to attend", or in case of his confinement in another county or corporation in the State under legal process, his deposition may be taken); § 5261 (testimony on a motion to probate a will, or depositions taken thereunder, of witnesses who "cannot be produced at a trial afterwards before a jury", are admissible); § 2618 (deposition of certain officers, not compellable to leave the office to testify in State bond-coupon suits, admissible); § 4415 (deposition of the female in rape or attempted rape may be read without accounting for her absence).

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1231 (a deposition may be taken when the witness (1) "resides out of the county and more than 20 miles from the place of trial", (2) "is about to leave the county and go more than 20 miles from the place of trial, and there is a probability that he will continue absent when the testimony is required", (3) "is sick, infirm, or aged, so as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend at the trial", (4) "resides out of the State"); § 1245 ("If it appear at the trial that the reason for taking the deposition no longer exists, the deposition shall not be read in evidence, unless the party offering it shows that another of the causes specified by § 1231 then exists, or that the witness is dead, or cannot safely attend at the trial on account of sickness, age, or other bodily infirmity"); § 1298 (the deposition of an attesting witness to a will may be taken when he is "prevented by sickness from attending at the time when any will may be produced for probate, or resides out of the State or more than 30 miles from the place"); § 1962 (a witness for the prosecution, released on recognizance; his deposition taken by a magistrate may be read on the trial "if the witness is not present when required to testify in the case"); § 1909 (before a justice of the peace, a deposition cannot be used unless the witness "1, is dead, or resides more than 20 miles from the place of trial; or, 2, is unable, or cannot safely attend before the justice on account of sickness, age, or other bodily infirmity; 3, that he has gone more than 20 miles from the place of trial without the consent or collusion of the party offering the deposition"); §§ 2131, 2306 (on a criminal trial, confrontation is necessary, but wherever witnesses whose depositions have been lawfully taken by a committing magistrate "are absent, and cannot be found when required to testify in such case, so much of such deposition" as is competent is admissible); § 1223 (the deposition of one confined in jail may be taken).

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 36 (a deposition is usable if the witness be "dead, or out of this State, or one of its judges, or in any public office or service the duties of which prevent his attending the court, or be unable to attend it from sickness or other infirmity, or be out of the county"; but in the last case attendance may for good cause be required); c. 50, § 111 (before a justice of peace, it is usable if the witness is absent from county, sick, or otherwise unable to attend); c. 159, § 1 ("every deposition" in a criminal case, taken by the accused, may be read by him; it may be taken of one non-resident, or absent from the State in some employment, or aged and infirm so as to be unable to attend); c. 77, § 27 (subscribing witness to a will; the deposition may be taken and used if he is out of the State, confined under legal process in another county, or unable to attend from sickness, age, or other infirmity).

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4086 ("In all criminal or quasi-criminal cases in courts of record", the defendant or the State may obtain leave to take the deposition of "any material witness within the State who is in imminent danger of death or who resides or is to be without the State"); § 4089 ("No deposition shall be used if it shall appear that the reason for taking it no longer exists, unless the party producing it shall show other sufficient cause then existing for its use"); § 4095 (the deposition of a party may be taken for himself for the same causes as that of any witness); § 4101 (the deposition of a witness within the State may be taken when the witness (1) lives more than 30 miles distant or beyond the reach of subpœna, (2) is about to "go out of the State, not intending to return in time for the trial or hearing", (3) "is so sick, infirm, or aged as to make it probable that he will not be able to attend", (4) is a member of the Legislature and his House or a committee is in session, (5) "when his testimony is material to any motion or other similar proceeding pending in any court of record, and he shall have refused voluntarily to make his affidavit"); § 4110 (the deposition of any witness without the State may be taken); § 4113 (a deposition by commission for a witness without the State may be taken (1) after issue of fact joined, (2) after no answer or demurrer filed in due time, (3) before issue of fact joined, "when the witness is so sick, infirm, or aged as to afford reasonable ground to apprehend that he may die or become unable to give his testimony, or when he is about to remove so that his testimony cannot conveniently be taken, or for any other cause which shall be deemed sufficient by the Court"; (4) "when required for use on any trial or hearing or upon any motion or proceeding before or after judgment").

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5831, 5847 (like Ohio Gen. Code Ann. § 11525); § 7518 (like Ohio Gen. Code Ann. § 13668, omitting par. 4); § 7512 (deposition for the prosecution in a criminal case may be taken of a material witness (1) about to leave the State, (2) so sick or infirm as probably to be unable

The causes enumerated in such statutes are seldom more than three or four in number, and never include all those recognized by the Courts at common law. It would therefore be an error to treat the statutory enumerations as exhaustive; they can seldom be construed as other than declaratory of rules already recognized. Nor is there any objection on principle to this result. So far as the statute confers a judicial power to order the taking of a deposition, the power exists only so far as specified by the statute, because the power did not exist at common law (ante, §§ 1376, 1398). But where a deposition had been lawfully taken — before a common-law judge in person, or before a master in chancery — the conditions on which it could be used in a common-law court were a simple question of the admissibility of evidence, and were constantly dealt with by the common-law courts, as the rulings in the foregoing sections indicate; hence, the principles already established for this purpose at common law remain in force unless expressly changed by statute.[2] Those principles have nothing to do with the lack of judicial power to initiate the taking of a deposition. It would be unfortunate if the patchwork legislation of the statutes on this subject should be thought to alter the already well-established principles of the common law.

§ 1412. Same: Statutes affecting Depositions 'in Perpetuam Memoriam'. It has been customary, in statutory enactments, to deal separately with depositions 'in perpetuam memoriam' in specifying the conditions of necessity allowing their use.[1] There is, however, no need for a separate treat-to attend, (3) a non-resident, (4) unable or unwilling to recognize for appearance); § 7516 ("Should any witness whose deposition has been taken fail to appear", his deposition may be read as if he were "personally present and testifying").

[2] Accord: 1905, Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, 137 Fed. 48, 58, 69 C. C. A. 28 (the term "except" in U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 861, "was simply an opening for letting in an addition to the powers of the Court as they had been customarily exercised"; here admitting the former testimony of a witness out of the jurisdiction, though the statute names only depositions; good opinion by Severens, J.); 1913, State v. Butler, 247 Mo. 685, 153 S. W. 1042 (citing the text above). Contra: 1906, R. v. Snelgrove, 39 N. Sc. 400 (prosecutrix, examination before the magistrate; the prosecutrix being now deceased, her examination was held inadmissible under Cr. Code 1892, § 687, the case of death being not therein provided for, and the Code provision being meant as exhaustive; unsound).

§ 1412. [1] With the following, compare the statutes cited ante, § 1383, for notice and cross-examination as required for such depositions: ENGLAND: 1918, Beresford v. Attorney-General, Prob. 33 (witness "unable, owing to their age and infirmities, to attend the trial");

UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1878, § 867, Code § 1368 (quoted ante, § 1387); Rev. St. 1878, § 866, Code § 1367 ("In any case where it is necessary in order to prevent a failure or delay of justice, any of the courts of the United States may grant a 'dedimus potestatem' to take depositions according to common usage; and any circuit court, upon application to it as a court of equity, may according to the usages of chancery direct depositions to be taken 'in perpetuam memoriam'", etc., and Rev. St. §§ 863-865 for 'de bene' depositions shall not apply); 1908, Westinghouse Machine Co. v. Electric S. B. Co., C. C. N. J., 165 Fed. 992 (statute applied, and order refused); Alabama: Code 1907, § 4068 (usable "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness,'[1] or his absence from the State); §§ 4073-4076 (depositions perpetuated by heirs or distributees to prove kinship with a decedent, may be taken "when the witness is over 60 years of age, or is infirm, or resides out of the State, or is about to go beyond the United States, or when the claim of such person depends exclusively on the testimony of such witness or witnesses", and are apparently usable unconditionally); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1522 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 880); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 1724 (usable "in like manner as "other depositions); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4245 (usable "where the witness is dead or insane, or, if alive and of sound mind, where his attendance for oral examination cannot be required"); Califor- ment; whatever causes are sufficient for the one suffice equally for the other class. The common-law principles applicable to depositions 'in perpetuam

nia: C. C. P. 1872, § 2088 (usable "upon proof of the death, or insanity of the witnesses, or that they cannot be found, or are unable by reason of age or other infirmity to give their testimony"); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 405 (admissible "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness or witnesses, or of his or their inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, settled infirmity, or for any other cause"); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3617 (deposition to perpetuate in boundary cases, admissible "in case of the death of the witnesses or inability to procure their attendance"); Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2763 (usable on the same conditions as if taken 'pro lite'); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 4563 (usable "'de bene esse', if, at the time the litigation arises, no more satisfactory examination of the witness may be had"); § 4558 (they "shall be afterward used only from the necessity of the case"); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2588 (receivable "where the witness or witnesses are insane or dead, or their attendance for oral examination cannot be required or obtained"); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8063 (usable "upon the proof of death, insanity, or absence from the State of such witness, or distant more than 30 miles from the place of trial, or inability by reason of age or infirmity to attend"); § 8056 (deposition usable "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witnesses, or that they cannot be found, or are unable by reason of age or other infirmity to give their testimony"; this is for an order based on petition; § 8063 is for an order based on affidavit); Illinois: Rev. St. c. 51, § 46 (admissible as if originally taken in the suit); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 462 (usable upon "death, insanity, or absence from the State of such witness, or inability by reason of age or infirmity to attend"); §§ 1307, 1313 (testimony before a recorder, etc., to perpetuate a lost deed, record, etc., usable apparently unconditionally); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4723, Comp. Code, § 7431 (usable "where the witnesses are dead or insane, or where their attendance for oral examination cannot be obtained as required"); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7295 (usable "where the witnesses are dead or insane, or where attendance for oral examination cannot be had or required"); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 613 (depositions usable on the conditions provided for 'de bene' depositions); Stats. 1915, § 1649*a* (real estate controversies; no conditions specified); Louisiana: C. Pr. 1870, § 440 (usable "should the witness examined be dead or absent"); St. 1914, No. 112 (similar); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 61, 63 (admissible on the same conditions "as if it had been originally taken" for the suit); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12498 (the testimony "may be used in case it cannot again be obtained at the time of trial"); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, §§ 8404, 8411 (usable on the same conditions as if originally taken for the action); Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1952, Hem. § 1612 (admissible in case of "death, insanity, subsequent incompetency, or departure to some place unknown"); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5491 (admissible, "first, if the deponent is dead; second, if he be unable to give testimony, by reason of insanity or imbecility of mind; third, if he be rendered incompetent, by judgment of law; fourth, if he be removed, so that his testimony cannot be obtained"); § 5508 (depositions taken to establish land-corners, admissible; no conditions specified); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10691 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8933 (usable "where the witnesses are dead, or insane, or where their attendance for oral examination cannot be obtained or required"); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5670 (usable "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness, or of his inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, or settled infirmity"); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2156 (admissible if the deponent is dead, or "unable to give testimony by reason of insanity or of imbecility of mind", or "rendered incompetent by judgment of law", or "removed out of the Territory so that his testimony cannot be obtained"); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 313 (depositions 'in perpetuam' may be read if the witness "is deceased, or is unable personally to attend by reason of insanity, sickness, or other infirmity, or is confined in a prison or jail, or is absent from the State, and his attendance cannot be compelled by subpœna or his testimony taken by commission, with reasonable diligence"); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7931 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2089); St. 1917, Mar. 8, c. 110 (in personal injury cases deposition may be used on death of witness); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 1221 (receivable if the witness is dead or insane or his "attendance for oral examination cannot be required or obtained"); § 2811 (deposition taken by a county surveyor in proof of old marks, etc., admissible only if the witness is dead or without the jurisdiction); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 659 (admissible "where the witnesses are dead or insane, or where attendance for oral examination cannot be obtained or required"); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 886 (admissible on proof "of the death or insanity of the witness, or that he is beyond the State and his residence unknown, or of his inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, or settled infirmity"; but in equity this proof is unnecessary); Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 375 memoriam' never reached a full development (§ 1417, post); but it would be proper, where the statute was silent, to apply the principles dealt with in the foregoing sections.

§ 1413. Same: Statutes affecting Testimony at a Former Trial. Statutes dealing with this class of evidence are comparatively few in number.[1] It is (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 34 (usable in case of death, unsound mind, absence from the State, or inability to attend); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2779 (like Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 659); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5678 (admissible on the witness' "death, insanity, or departure to some place unknown"); §§ 5624, 5682 (in case of a notary, admissible if he should "die or remove out of the State"); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7198 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2088); Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1253 (usable "upon proof of the death or insanity of the witness, or his inability to attend the trial by reason of age, sickness, or settled infirmity"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, §§ 4121, 4129, 4134 (usable on "the same conditions" as depositions taken pending action); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6311 (admissible "when the witnesses are dead or insane or when their attendance for oral examination cannot be required or obtained").

§ 1413. [1] With the following compare the statutes just cited in § 1411, for the word "deposition" is sometimes used to signify the magistrate's report of testimony; compare also the citations ante, § 1388, for identity of issues and parties; for statutes affecting probate and bastardy proceedings, see the interpreting decisions cited post, § 1417:

ENGLAND: 1849, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, § 17 (testimony before a committing magistrate, taken in writing, on a charge of an indictable offence may be used if the deponent "is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel"); St. 1915, 5 & 6 Geo. V, c. 94, Evidence Amendment, § 1 (provision for using depositions of persons absent in military or naval service during the war).

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 999 (quoted ante, § 1411); St. 1913, 3-4 Geo. V, c. 13, § 30 (amending Crim. C. § 999; quoted ante, § 1411); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 26 (former testimony admissible, if the witness "is dead, or out of the province, or from sickness or infirmity is unable to attend").

UNITED STATES: Uniform Act: Uniform Illegitimacy Act, § 26 (National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, Proceedings, 1921, 1922; testimony of mother in bastardy proceedings at preliminary hearing, admissible if she is deceased or insane or not found);
Federal: U. S. St. June 4, 1920, ch. V, subchapter II, Articles of War, Art. 27 (record of proceedings of a court of inquiry may be read before a court-martial, etc.; but not in capital cases, or cases of officers' dismissal, without the accused's consent); under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 861, quoted ante, § 1411, a testimony at a former trial is not forbidden to be used, on the appropriate showing as to decease, absence, etc.; 1905, Toledo Traction Co. v. Cameron, 6th C. C. A., 137 Fed. 48 (good opinion by Severens, J.); 1920, Smythe v. New Providence, 3d C. C. A., 263 Fed. 481. Contra, but unsound: 1900, Salt Lake City v. Smith, 8th C. C. A., 104 Fed. 457; 1909, Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Newsome, 8th C. C. A., 174 Fed. 394.
Alabama: 1907, § 6209 (testimony of subscribing witnesses at a will-probate is admissible on a contest in chancery);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1679, P. C. § 1052 (official report of testimony of witness at a former trial of the same cause, admissible for either party, if the witness "shall die or be beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the cause is pending without procurement by the party offering"); P. C. § 881, par. 7 (testimony at the preliminary hearing before a magistrate is admissible if the witness "is dead, or insane, or when such witness is shown by the return of the sheriff on a subpœna duly issued for his appearance to be out of the jurisdiction of the Court"); § 753 (like Cal. P. C. § 686);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 8 ("testimony of a witness deceased, or out of the jurisdiction, or unable to testify", is admissible); § 1316 (testimony at a will-probate is admissible in subsequent contests, "if the witness be dead, or has permanently removed from the State"); P. C. 1872, § 686, as amended in 1911 (quoted ante, § 1387; this section originally applied only to testimony before a committing magistrate, and the decisions so limiting it are noted ante, § 1398; but by the amendment of 1911 it includes testimony "on a former trial of the action");
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1065 (if a party "shall die or become insane or otherwise incapable of testifying", his testimony at a former trial is admissible);
Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5723 (testimony of a witness who "is beyond the reach of the process of the courts of this State or cannot be found", is admissible in civil causes "on a subsequent trial of said case", by a sworn certified copy of court stenographer's notes); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 1350, § 4 (deposition before a coroner, admissible, if the witness is dead); § 3972 (testimony before a committing here even clearer than in the case of depositions (ante, § 1411) that the statutory enumeration of conditions of admissibility is not to be taken as exclusive.

magistrate, admissible, if the witness is dead);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2723 as amended by St. 1921, c. 8572, No. 177 (bill of exceptions of former testimony, in civil cases, usable if the "evidence . . . cannot be had", whatever that may mean; otherwise, a stenographic report may be used if "a sufficient reason is shown why the original witness is not produced"; quoted more fully post, §§ 1668, 1669);
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5773, P. C. § 1027 (admissible if the witness is "deceased, or disqualified, or inaccessible for any cause");
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7456 (testimony at the probate of a will; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1316);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 7 (after probate of a will in the county court and on trial by jury in the circuit court, "the certificate of the oath of the witnesses at the time of the first probate shall be admitted as evidence"; compare the cases cited ante, § 1303, post, § 1417);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 1019 (the written examination of the complainant in bastardy, usable "to sustain or impeach the testimony of such witness"); § 1023 (on the death of the complainant in bastardy, her written examination before the justice "may be read in evidence"); § 3168 (recorded testimony at the probate of a will, admissible in a controversy about lands devised, if the witnesses "are dead, out of the State, or have become incompetent" since probate);
Iowa: St. 1898, p. 16, c. 9, § 1, Comp. Code 1919, § 7391 (quoted more fully ante, § 1387, n. 2, post, § 1669, n. 2; admits former testimony with "the same force and effect as a deposition"); Comp. Code § 7312 (party disqualified as survivor; his deposition taken during lifetime or sanity of opponent may by read if filed 10 days before death or insanity);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 11777 (testimony before a probate court, admissible on the trial of a contest in the district court, if the witness is out of the jurisdiction, or dead, or has become incompetent since probate); § 3003 (court stenographer's transcript of former testimony, admissible like a deposition; cited more fully post, § 1669);
Kentucky: Stats. 1915, §§ 1019*a*, 4643 (official report is usable in the trial Court's discretion "where the testimony of such witness or witnesses cannot be procured"); 1904, Fuqua v. Com., 118 Ky. 578, 81 S. W. 923 (the proviso in the statute for the consent of the defendant in a criminal case applies "alone to the testimony of living witnesses so taken"; a better construction would be that it applies only to the use of the official report, leaving the sworn testimony of the stenographer on the stand unaffected by the statute);
Louisiana: Ann. Rev. St. 1915, § 1439 (testimony at a fire inquest, admissible, apparently unconditionally); C. Pr. 1870, § 586 ("All the testimony taken in writing in the parish court shall be used as evidence in the district court [on a trial 'de novo' on appeal]"); § 599 (same provision; testimony usable "without being obliged to produce the witnesses in person"); the two foregoing sections are annotated by the editor as "inoperative", without citing authority; § 1042 (testimony in writing before a probate court "may be read on the appeal"); § 943 (depositions of witnesses at the time of probating a will are admissible "in case the will is subsequently attacked, although such witness be dead or removed permanently from the State"); St. 1908, No. 247, p. 368, July 8 (on a new trial in a civil case, all the testimony at the former trial, if written down, may be used, without recalling the witnesses, except so far as the Court may permit on request of a party); St. 1915, No. 11, § 17 (trusts and monopolies; record of any other suit to which defendant has been party, admissible with certain limitations);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 135 (former testimony of a subscribing witness, in certain actions, admissible on his death);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 276, § 50, Pub. St. 1882, c. 212, § 41, Rev. L. 1902, c. 217, § 49 (a witness' deposition before a magistrate may be read "if he is unable to attend at the time of the trial, by reason of his death, insanity, illness, or infirmity");
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 272, Hem. § 221 (testimony of the deceased mother before a justice on a bastardy complaint, admissible on the trial);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10036 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1316); § 10531, par. 8 (like ib. § 1870, par. 8);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 6977 (testimony on examination before a committing magistrate may be used on the trial "when the witness is sick, out of the State, dead, or when his personal attendance cannot be had in court"); § 6855 (testimony before a committing magistrate, reduced to writing and subscribed, is admissible if it is "satisfactorily shown to the Court that he is dead or insane, or cannot, with due diligence, be found in the State"); § 5472 (former trial in civil cases; like Utah, Comp. L. 1917, § 7205);
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Bastards, § 14 (the mother's examination in a bastardy case, admissible, if she is dead, or insane, or has left the State);
New Mexico: Ann. St. 1915, § 5878 (the testimony of a will-witness, reduced to writing, is admissible in future contests, "if the attendance of the witness cannot be procured"); St. 1919, Mar. 10, c. 29, § 7 (former testimony may be used if the witness is dead or insane, or is a non-resident, or "after diligent effort" cannot be found);

New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 348 (where a party or witness has died or become insane or if a non-resident has departed the State, or if a resident has departed into military service, since or during the trial of an action or the hearing upon the merits of a special proceeding, the testimony of the decedent or insane person or absentee, or of any person who is rendered incompetent by the provisions of the last section, as quoted ante, § 488, may be read at a subsequent trial); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 8 (testimony at a commitment is admissible against the accused, in case the witness is dead, insane, or cannot with due diligence be found in the State); § 864 (bastardy: the mother's testimony on examination before the magistrate is admissible if she is dead or insane); St. 1913, c. 542, p. 1465 (amending Consol. L. 1909, Insanity, § 93; on second or later application for habeas corpus by insane person, testimony at any former hearing may be used without calling the witnesses);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4572 (examinations taken by a committing magistrate are admissible if the deponent is "dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, or by procurement or connivance of the defendant has removed from the State, or is of unsound mind"); § 4160 (when a subscribing witness "shall die or be absent beyond the State", the affidavits and proofs taken in common form shall be 'prima facie' evidence); § 4474 (desertion by seamen: testimony taken before justice may be used on the trial on appeal, if the witness is master, etc., on a vessel, "as if such person were in person present to give evidence");
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 8641 (on contested probate witness' testimony is admissible on subsequent testamentary trial, "if the witness be dead, or has permanently removed from the State");
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11469 (former testimony is admissible if the witness is dead, beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, insane, unable "through any physical or mental infirmity" to testify, or "has been summoned but appears to have been kept away by the adverse party", or "cannot be found after diligent search"); § 12125 (in bastardy proceedings, the testimony of the deceased mother before the magistrate is admissible); § 12084 (the testimony of a witness at a will-probate is receivable on the trial if the witness is dead or out of the jurisdiction or has become incompetent);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 1109 (testimony at a will-probate is admissible "in any subsequent contests or trials concerning the validity of the will, or the sufficiency of the proof thereof, if the witness be dead, or has permanently removed from this State");
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 727, par. 8 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 8); § 932 (official reporter's transcript of testimony, admissible as a witness' deposition "in the case mentioned in § 852 of the C. C. P.", quoted ante, § 1387);
Pennsylvania: St. 1887, May 23, § 9, Dig. 1920, § 8172, Crim. Procedure (testimony in criminal proceeding is admissible if the witness "die, or be out of the jurisdiction so that he cannot be effectively served with a subpœna, or if he cannot be found, or if he become incompetent to testify for any legally sufficient reason"); ib. § 9, Dig. § 21859, witnesses (similar, for civil cases);
Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 8 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 6 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 8);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 3228 (testimony at a will-probate; like Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 1109);
Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3275 (testimony at a will-probate is usable "on the trial of the same matter in any other court when taken there by appeal or otherwise"); C. Cr. P. 1911, § 834 (depositions before an examining court or jury of inquest are admissible on the same conditions as depositions 'de bene', set forth ante, § 1411); 1905, Smith v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 65, 85 S. W. 1153 (cited more fully ante, § 1405 n.);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7205, 9277 (official stenographer's report may be read when the witness "shall die or be beyond the jurisdiction of the court"); § 8553 (committing magistrate; like Cal. P. C. § 686 without the second exception added by the 1911 amendment); § 7573 (probate testimony; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1316); § 8767 (testimony of witness released on bond, taken 'de bene' before committing magistrate, usable if the witness is "dead or insane or cannot with due diligence be found within the State"); St. 1919, Mar. 13, c. 36, amending Comp. L. § 1885 (city courts; official reporter's transcript of testimony may be read if the witness "shall die or be beyond the jurisdiction of the court");
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1310 ("In all trials respecting the validity of a will, if any subscribing witness be deceased, or cannot be found, the oath of such witness, examined at the time of probate, may be admitted as evidence"); § 1247 ("The testimony of any witness, deceased, or out of the State, or for any other sufficient cause unable to appear and testify", when written and certified as in § 1669, post, may be used in any civil case); St. 1913, c. 126, p. 386, § 6 (official reporter's certified transcript, admissible in any civil cause "when satisfactory proof is offered to the judge presiding that the witness originally giving such testimony is then dead or without the jurisdiction of the court", subject to objections as if he were present testifying); St. 1919, Mar. 25, c. 203 (bastardy proceeding: mother's testimony before the justice may be read, if the mother dies);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4141*a* (testimony

§ 1414. Proof of Unavailability of Witness. The proponent of the former testimony or the deposition is of course ordinarily the party to prove the necessity of resorting thereto in consequence of the witness' unavailability in person.

Where former testimony is offered, no difficulty arises in applying this principle.[1]

But where a deposition is offered, it is usually the case that the proponent, in applying for authority to take the deposition, has already had occasion to make proof of the same cause as that now alleged by him to prevent the witness' non-attendance. In such cases — chiefly, illness, absence from the jurisdiction, and residence beyond a certain distance — must the proponent show at the trial that the cause upon which the taking was authorized still continues as a reason for non-attendance? On principle, he must, for the admissibility of the deposition depends on the existence of that cause and the question is for the first time before the trial Court for determination.[2] Nevertheless, it is practically desirable and proper, where the cause for taking was a probably permanent one — for example, residence without the limits — to presume that it continues, and to leave it to the opponent to show (if such is the case) that the cause has ceased.[3] of "any deceased witness or any witness who is absent from the State", taken in any "action or proceeding except in a default action or proceeding where service of process was obtained by publication", offered in any "retrial, other action, or proceeding", is admissible if the issue is substantially the same and the opponent had opportunity to cross-examine);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6715 (in probate trials, the former testimony of an attesting witness is receivable if he "be dead, has permanently removed from the State, or is otherwise incompetent").

§ 1414. [1] 1904, Fitch v. Traction Co., 124 Ia. 665, 100 N. W. 618 (former testimony); 1909, Van Norman v. Modern Brotherhood, 143 Ia. 536, 121 N. W. 1080 (former testimony).

[2] 1839, Weguelin v. Weguelin, 2 Curt. Eccl. 263 (deposition of one in danger of death; new affidavit of illness required at trial); 1920, Wilmer v. Placide, 137 Md. 107, 111 Atl. 822 (deposition held inadmissible, there being nothing in the record to show unavailability of the witness in person); 1825, Read v. Bertrand, 4 Wash. C. C. 559 (similar).

[3] Federal: 1831, Patapsco Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. 616 (absence [illegible] miles away); California: 1906, Dolbeer's Estate, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695 (deposition of a non-resident taken under C. C. P. § 2024; continued non-residence presumed); Iowa: 1859, Nevan v. Roup, 8 Ia. 207 (the deponent had stated that he was a non-resident but intended to be present if alive and well; held, admissible, "unless it is shown that the witness is present in court"); 1878, Cook v. Blair, 50 Ia. 128 (deposition taken on the ground of expected absence at the time set for trial, that time having afterwards been postponed; admitted, "unless the witness was in court"); 1887, Sax v. Davis, 71 Ia. 400, 32 N. W. 403 (deposition of one temporarily disabled a year before, the trial having been postponed nearly a year; the proponent required to show the witness' inability to attend); Michigan: 1904, Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658, 101 N. W. 832 (age, and inability to travel); Missouri: 1921, Mayne v. Kansas City R. Co., 287 Mo. 235, 229 S. W. 386 (deposition by soldier at Camp Funston, in Kansas; evidence held sufficient to show absence); Nebraska: 1887, Sells v. Haggard, 21 Nebr. 357, 32 N. W. 66 (non-residence of deponent presumed to continue to the time of trial); 1904, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 70 Nebr. 766, 98 N. W. 44 (non-residence in Iowa presumed to continue); South Carolina: 1897, Kaufman v. Caughman, 49 S. C. 159, 27 S. E. 16; Washington: 1894, Hennessy v. Ins. Co., 8 Wash. 91, 93, 35 Pac. 585; West Virginia: 1915, County Court v. Grafton, 77 W. Va. 84, 86 S. E. 924.

Contra: 1876, Bowie v. Findly, 55 Ga. 604 (after dismissal of the original case, the cause for the deponent's non-attendance must be shown anew); 1894, Atkinson v. Nash, 56 Minn. 472, 58 N. W. 39 (because the taking officer was not authorized to certify to the cause); 1908, O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co., 212 Mo. 59, 110 S. W. 705 (non-residence

As evidence of the witness' death, absence, or non-residence, replies received during the search ought to be admissible; whether or not they are testimony in themselves, they serve as circumstances indicating due diligence of the party in seeking the witness.[4]

§ 1415. If Witness is Available for Testifying, Deposition is not Usable. No one has ever doubted that the former testimony of a witness cannot be used if the witness is still available for the purpose of testifying at the present trial. But, in the case of a deposition, authorized as it is by statute to be taken for subsequent use in the trial, a notion has sometimes been formed that the authorized taking involves an absolute authority to use the deposition, unconditionally and without showing the witness' unavailability at the trial.

Such a notion is entirely opposite to the orthodox principle of the common law. A deposition was taken 'de bene esse', i.e. conditionally. The fundamental notion was that it was taken as a provision against the loss of the evidence at the trial, so that if the witness was after all at the time of the trial available for testifying, the deposition was not needed and was not admissible. But for this principle, all the inquiries, above examined, as to the sufficiency of death, illness, insanity, and the like, would have been meaningless:

1839, Dr. LUSHINGTON, in Weguelin v. Weguelin, 2 Curt. Eccl. 263 (affidavit of continuing illness required): "The very meaning of the phrase 'de bene esse' implied that it was conditional, and that the witness must be re-examined if capable."

1863, CAMPBELL, J., in Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 292 (appeal in Chancery from a decree dismissing a divorce-bill, based on the verdict in an issue framed for a jury): "The deposition of E. L. was allowed to be read when she was present in Court. This was also illegal. It is very well settled that the order usually made [in Chancery for trying an issue by jury] that the depositions may be [there] read, is only designed to remove legal objections which might exist by reason of the trial at law being technically a separate proceeding, which, until our Courts were entrusted with jurisdiction both at law and in equity, was in another tribunal. But trials before a jury of issues from Chancery are governed by rules of courts of law, which do not permit depositions to be read when the witness is present."

in the county must be shown by the party offering the deposition; one judge diss.); 1904, Carter v. Wakeman, 45 Or. 427, 78 Pac. 362 (because the statute, cited ante, § 1411 n. 1, expressly requires that proof be made that the witness "still continues" unavailable).

For the time of making objections to a deposition, see ante, §§ 18, 486.

[4] 1921, Wigginton v. State, 205 Ala. 147, 87 So. 698 (deposition of absentee; ruling not clear).

Compare the authorities upon the similar question arising in proof of loss of an original document (ante, § 1196), absence of an attesting witness (ante, § 1313), statements of intention (post, § 1725), statements made to searchers (post, § 1789), persons not heard from (ante, §§ 158, 664).

The following case is peculiar and unsound: 1908, Driggers v. U. S., 21 Okl. 60, 95 Pac. 612 (witness said to be dead; the marshal's return on the subpœna and the testimony of others that they "had been told he was dead", held not enough; this is a sample of the Court's twiddling thumbs over a game of checkers while the world clamors for justice to be done on murderers; the question here, Was Jim Saddler dead? could probably have been answered positively in two minutes if the Court had gone about it as directly as they would go about it in their ordinary business affairs. Is it necessary for Judicial Justice to shut itself off from the world in a temple and perform a sort of legal-religious ritual in order to determine the answers sought by its suppliants?). This ruling has been repudiated in Jeffries v. State, 1916, 13 Okl. Cr. 146, 162 Pac. 1137, cited more fully ante, § 1405.

1892, MAXWELL, C. J., in Everett v. Tidball, 34 Nebr. 803, 806, 52 N. W. 816: "It is the right of the adverse party to have the witness produced in court, unless for some of the causes mentioned above he cannot be present. The appearance of the witness, his manner of testifying, his apparent fairness or interest or bias in the case, are facts for the consideration of the jury in judging of the credibility of the witness. In addition to these, in case the witness testifies to a wilful falsehood, he may more readily be prosecuted for perjury where the parties reside and the facts are known than at some distant point, perhaps in another State."

It is clear, therefore, that if the witness is present in the court-room at the time when his deposition is offered, the deposition is inadmissible, because there is no necessity for resorting to it.[1] So also if the witness is within reach of the court-process and is not shown to be unavailable by reason of illness or the like, the deposition is inadmissible.[2] Where the witness, at some time since trial begun and prior to the moment when his deposition is offered, has been within reach of process, but is not at the precise moment, the deposition's admissibility would seem to depend on whether the witness' absence is due in any respect to bad faith on the proponent's part; but here the rulings are not harmonious.[3] The opponent's waiver of cross-examination by failure to § 1415. [1] To the express statutory provisions, ante, § 1411, add the following: Federal: 1901, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 50 C. C. A. 230, 112 Fed. 402; Ala. 1877, Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Walker, 58 Ala. 290; 1883, Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 Ala. 77; Conn. 1896, Neilson v. R. Co., 67 Conn. 466, 34 Atl. 820; 1904, Handy v. Smith, 77 Conn. 165, 58 Atl. 694; Ia. 1904, Lanza v. Le Grand Quarry Co., 124 Ia. 659, 100 N. W. 488 (testimony at a former trial, assimilated to a deposition, under St. 1898, 27 Gen. Ass. c. 9, Rev. Code § 7417, excluded, the witnesses being present); Mich. 1863, Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 292 (see quotation supra); Mo. 1893, Schmitz v. R. Co., 119 Mo. 256, 271, 24 S. W. 472; 1896, Benjamin v. R. Co., 133 Mo. 274, 34 S. W. 590 (but his arrival in court after the deposition is read does not require it to be struck out); 1896, Barber Co. v. Ullman, 137 Mo. 543, 38 S. W. 458; 1906, State v. Coleman, 199 Mo. 112, 97 S. W. 574 (testimony at a former trial, excluded, the witness being present in court); Nev. 1871, Gerhauser v. Ins. Co., 7 Nev. 189; N. Car. 1821, State v. McLeod, 1 Hawks 344; P. I. 1903, U. S. v. Castillo, 2 P. I. 17 (testimony of a co-defendant, given at the preliminary inquiry, excluded the co-defendant being present in court; applying Gen. Order 58, § 15); 1903, U. S. v. Caligagan, 2 P. I. 433; S. Car. Salley v. R. Co., 62 S. C. 127, 40 S. E. 111; Vt. 1801, Doe v. Adams, 1 Tyl. 197; Wis. 1904, Hughes v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 122 Wis. 258, 99 N. W. 897.

[2] England: 1702, Anon., 2 Salk. 691 (prior examination, on a rule of Court, of a witness going to sea; if he has not gone when the trial comes on, "he must appear; for the rule was made on supposal of his absence"); 1847, Blagrave v. Blagrave, 1 De G. & Sm. 252, 259 (the deponent must be shown unavailable; distinguishing London v. Perkins, 1734, 3 Bro. P. C. 602, where the ground of decision is obscure); United States: 1907, Dover v. Greenwood, C. C. R. I., 154 Fed. 855 (patent application; testimony taken in interference proceedings, refused to be made a part of the record, on the present principle); 1885, Baldwin v. R. Co., 68 Ia. 37, 25 N. W. 918 (a statute making shorthand notes admissible, held not to take away the necessity of "showing an excuse for not producing the witness in court"); 1895, Frankhouser v. Neally, 54 Kan. 744, 39 Pac. 700; 1894, Munro v. Callahan, 41 Nebr. 849, 60 N. W. 97; 1859, Morgan v. Halverson, 9 Wis. 271.

[3] Cal. 1906, Dolbeer's Estate, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695 (trial began Nov. 2, deposition was taken Nov. 11, witness left the State Dec. 5, deposition was offered Dec. 7; admitted); Conn. 1864, Spear v. Coon, 32 Conn. 292 (admitted, where a non-resident deponent was merely "a short time before the trial in the place" of taker's residence); Ga. 1849, Hammock v. McBride, 6 Ga. 178 (excluded, where the witness "has resided within the county a sufficient time previous to the trial for his personal attendance to be coerced by process of subpœna", provided the taker had notice thereof); Kan. 1887, Waite v. Teeters, 36 Kan. 604, 14 Pac. 146 (deponent residing in another county and therefore not compellable to attend; his temporary presence in the county on the morning of trial, without further showing as to the proponent's ability to secure him, not sufficient to exclude the deposition); 1893, Eby v. Winters, 51 Kan. 777, 33 Pac. 471 (non-resident deponent, present attend (ante, §§ 1371, 1378) would not be a waiver of the right to require the witness to be shown unavailable.[4]

A few Courts, ignoring the above principle, take the extraordinary attitude of nullifying the conditional nature of a deposition, by admitting it even when the witness is in the court-room.[4] 5 at the trial; deposition admitted, neither the proponent nor the Court being shown aware of his presence until after the deposition was read, and the deponent being afterwards placed on the stand); Mo. 1894, McFarland v. Accid. Ass'n, 124 Mo. 204, 221, 27 S. W. 436 (the witness was present during plaintiff's testimony in chief, then went home; the deposition was offered in rebuttal, though properly testimony in chief; admitted, no collusion being shown); 1896, Benjamin v. R. Co., 133 Mo. 274, 34 S. W. 590 (mere presence in the jurisdiction, at the time of trial, of one whose deposition was taken without it, does not exclude); Nebr. 1892, Everett v. Tidball, 34 Nebr. 803, 805, 52 N. W. 816 (witness temporarily absent, but for some time before the trial present in the county; excluded); N. J. 1904, Flannery v. Central B. Co., 70 N. J. L. 715, 59 Atl. 157 (a deposition of the plaintiff taken by consent was offered and received on the opening of the trial; on the second day the plaintiff appeared in court; after close of the plaintiff's case, a motion to strike out the deposition was made by the defendant; held, that the defendant's unexplained delay was a waiver of objection); Vt. 1843, Starksboro v. Hinesburgh, 15 Vt. 200 (witness present at the time first set for trial, but not available at the adjourned date when his testimony was called for; admitted); 1869, Johnson v. Sargent, 42 Vt. 195 (same).

§ 1416. Same: Rule not applicable (1) to Deposition of Party-Opponent; or (2) to Deposition containing Self-Contradiction; but applicable (3) to Deposition of Opponent's Witness; and (4) to Former Testimony in Malicious Prosecution. (1) The general principle that the witness must be shown unavailable for testifying in court does not apply to a party's use of his party-opponent's deposition (taken, as is usual, under statutes allowing in common-law courts a process similar to a bill for discovery) — for the simple reason that every statement of an opponent may be used against him as an admission without calling him (ante, § 1049); the opponent's sworn statement, though called a deposition, is no less an admission than any other statement of his:[1]

[4] 1829, Carrington v. Cornock, 2 Sim. 567.

That a stipulation expressly waiving attendance is constitutional, see post, § 2591.

[5] Georgia: 1894, Western & A. R Co. v. Bussey, 95 Ga. 584, 23 S. E. 207 (a deposition taken under Code § 3893, admitted without regard to personal inability to attend; the witness here was present in court); 1908, Georgia W. & A. R. Co. v. Sasser, 4 Ga. App. 276, 61 S. E. 505 (like Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey); Illinois: 1856, Bradley v. Geiselman, 17 Ill. 571; Frink v. Potter, 17 Ill. 408 (but these seem inconsistent with Cook v. Stout, 47 Ill. 531, cited ante, § 1408, note 6; the statutory wording in this State is likely to mislead); Kentucky: 1898, Edmonson v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 679; 1899, Louisville v. Muldoon, — Ky. —, 49 S. W. 791; Michigan: 1904, Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658, 101 N. W. 832 (under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10136–10142, quoted ante, § 1411, the judge's discretion controls); New York: 1835, Phenix v. Baldwin, 14 Wend. 62, semble; Tennessee: 1850, Ford v. Ford, 11 Humph. 89, 90 (the opponent's statutory right to summon deponents out of the county does not prevent the deposition being received, subject to cross-examination, when the witness is present); 1903, Sherrod v. Hughes, 110 Tenn. 311, 75 S. W. 717 (under Code, § 5626, the deposition may be read by the taker, even though the opponent has produced the witness in court; settling the prior conflict of rulings in this State); Texas: 1914, Holt v. Guerguin, 106 Tex. 185, 163 S. W. 10 (left to the trial Court's discretion; the opinion shows an imperfect apprehension of the subject); 1919, Cook v. Denike, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 216 S. W. 437 (collecting prior cases); Wisconsin: 1861, Thayer v. Gallup, 13 Wis. 539, 541 (left to the trial Court's discretion).

Whether, in such a case, the opponent has a right to oral cross-examination at the trial, in addition to the deposition, is considered ante, § 1393.

§ 1416. [1] Accord: California: 1887, Newell v. Desmond, 74 Cal. 46, 15 Pac. 369 (under §§ 2021, , 2032 plaintiff's deposition taken by defendant may be read, though plaintiff be present); 1897, Adams v. Weaver, 117 Cal. 421, 48

1888, BRACE, J., in Bogie v. Nolan, 96 Mo. 85, 91, 9 S. W. 14: The Legislature . . . did not intend to narrow the scope of inquiry . . . by abrogating that ancient, well-recognized, and hitherto unquestioned rule of evidence that the declarations of a party to the suit may be given in evidence against him. . . . There can be no difference in the character of the evidence whether the declarations are made in the deposition of a party taken in his own case then on trial, his deposition taken in another case to which he was a party, or taken as a witness in a case in which he was not a party and had no direct interest. They are admissible in each case for the same reason, not as the deposition of a witness under the statute, but as the declaration of a party to the suit."

But this allowance of the use of a party's deposition as an admission presupposes that it is the party-opponent's; a party's statements offered in his own favor are of course not admissions, and hence there is no reason why a party should be allowed to put in his own deposition instead of taking the stand.[2]

(2) So also the use of a deposition to show in it a contrary statement of the deponent, who has already testified on the stand, is allowable even though

Pac. 972; Florida: 1914, Bennett v. State, 68 Fla. 494, 67 So. 125 (accused's former testimony); Georgia: 1914, Hope v. First National Bank, 142 Ga. 310, 82 S. E. 929 (testimony in supplemental proceedings); Kansas: 1880, Moore v. Brown, 23 Kan. 269; Maine: 1874, Hatch v. Brown, 63 Me. 410, 419; Michigan: 1911, Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219, 131 N. W. 538 (opponent's former testimony used, although he was at the later trial disqualified); Missouri: 1855, Kritzer v. Smith, 21 Mo. 296; 1858, Charleston v. Hunt, 27 Mo. 34; 1882, Pomeroy v. Benton, 77 Mo. 64, 82; 1885, Priest v. Way, 87 Mo. 16, 28 (contra); 1888, Bogie v. Nolan, 96 Mo. 85, 9 S. W. 14 (overruling the preceding case; see quotation; supra); 1907, Southern Bank v. Nichols, 202 Mo. 309, 100 S. W. 613; New Hampshire: 1903, Profile & F. H. Co. v. Bickford, — N. H. —, 54 Atl. 699; Porto Rico: 1916, De Diego v. Rovira, 9 P. R. 71, 82; Texas: 1885, Schmick v. Noel, 64 Tex. 406, 408; Virginia: 1891, Lee v. Hill, 87 Va. 497, 504, 12 S. E. 1052, semble (testimony of a now disqualified opponent at a former trial); Washington: 1894, Denny v. Sayward, 10 Wash. 422, 428, 39 Pac. 119; Wisconsin: 1887, Meier v. Paulus, 70 Wis. 165, 35 N. W. 301; 1904, Hughes v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 122 Wis. 258, 99 N. W. 897 (rule for parties not applicable to employees of a corporation); 1905, Johnson v. St. Paul & W. C. Co., 126 Wis. 492, 105 N. W. 1048 (rule applied to an officer of a corporation, distinguishing Hughes v. R. Co., supra); 1906, Clark Co. v. Rice, 127 Wis. 451, 106 N. W. 231 (similar); 1906, Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 127 Wis. 273, 106 N. W. 1077 (like Hughes v. R. Co., supra); St. 1913, c. 246, p. 259 (amending Stats. § 4096, so as to make it plain that the answers on examination of an adverse party or "any of the persons mentioned" may be received in evidence from the taker "notwithstanding the person who was so examined may be present at the trial or proceeding"); 1921, Thomas v. Lockwood Oil Co., 174 Wis. 486, 182 N. W. 841 (death by wrongful act of defendant's agent F.; F.'s deposition taken adversely by plaintiff under Stats. § 4096, as amended by St. 1913, c. 246, held admissible for plaintiff without calling F.).

But an oral answer which has been stricken out of the written deposition before signing cannot be used at all: 1904, Young v. Valentine, 177 N. Y. 347, 69 N. E. 643.

For the opponent's right to use parts of such a deposition not read by the first party, see post, § 2124 (principle of Completeness).

[2] Can. 1919, Massey-Harris Co. & Gray-Campbell Co. v. Dell, 45 D. L. R. 734, Sask. (party's answer to discovery interrogatories); U. S. 1895, State v. Oliver, 55 Kan. 711, 41 Pac. 954 (former testimony); 1896, Moore v. Palmer, 14 Wash. 134, 44 Pac. 142 (even though originally taken by opponent; but semble, if the party had died or become incompetent, the deposition of course would be admissible); 1920, Lange v. Heckel, 171 Wis. 59, 175 N. W. 788 (the examination of a party, taken adversely under Stats. 4096, is not admissible on his own behalf at the trial). Contra, but erroneous: 1890, Johnson v. McDuffee, 83 Cal. 30, 23 Pac. 214.

If the party is out of the jurisdiction, this does not excuse his absence and allow him to take and offer his own deposition, for he must be assumed to be willing to come to court on his own behalf: 1916, Laurel Printing & P. Co. v. James, 6 Boyce Del. 185, 97 Atl. 601 (well-reasoned opinion, by Conrad, J.).

If, however, he is deceased, he is unavailable in person, and his successor may use the deposition like that of any other witness: Cases cited ante, § 1389.

the witness be present and available; for the deposition is here used not as substantive testimony (ante, § 1018), but only as containing a statement inconsistent with the same witness' testimony already given.[3]

(3) But the use of the deposition of an opponent's witness — i.e. a deposition taken by the opponent but not used by him — which, as already noted, is in other respects allowable (ante, § 1389) is not the use of an opponent's admission. It is offered as the substantive testimony of that witness, whose testimony has not as yet been heard. There is therefore no reason why one party rather than the other should be allowed to resort to a deposition without showing the deponent unavailable in person; and this the non-taker, as well as the taker, must do before using it:

1822, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Gordon v. Little, 8 S. & R. 532, 548: "The defendants say that it was the business of the plaintiff [who took the deposition] to subpœna his own witness, and therefore they did not do it. But in this they were wrong. The plaintiff might not like the evidence, and, if he did not, he was under no obligation to summon the witness. If the defendant thought this testimony favorable to himself, it was his business to secure it, by taking out a subpœna for the witness and endeavoring to procure his personal attendance."

1854, WATKINS, C. J., in Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345, 349: "It is argued that this [filing for security] was also designed to make them common property, so as to entitle either party to use them at pleasure. . . . But all depositions in common-law cases are taken 'de bene esse', and can only be read as if the witnesses 'were present and examined in open court',— as, if it be shown the witness is dead, sick, or infirm, or residing without the county, and the like, so as to excuse his personal attendance; . . . [they are] but a substitute, and an imperfect one, for the personal attendance of the witness when that is impossible or inconvenient to be obtained. . . . Depositions are not in the first instance original evidence, though a substitute for it; the party taking it upon due notice may be entitled, upon showing the death, infirmity, or absence of the witness from the county, to read it. There is no reason, from the necessity of the case, why the opposite party, if he desired the testimony, could not have procured it by deposition or enforced the attendance of the witness. . . . [In this case, the plaintiff was wrongly allowed to read a deposition, filed by the opponent,] without showing any compliance with the conditions prescribed by statute or any effort to procure the attendance of the witnesses by subpœna."

Distinguish, however, from the above principle, the use of a deposition or affidavit of an opponent's witness used and adopted by the opponent on a former occasion. So far as the opponent has thus by adoption made it his own statement, it may be used as the opponent's admission (on the principle examined ante, § 1075), and the deponent therefore need not be shown unavailable.

(4) Where in malicious prosecution the former testimony of a witness on the original prosecution is offered, the present principle is no less applicable than in other cases, and the witness must be shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable.[4] The apparent exception, early established, that the now

[3] 1896, People v. Hawley, 111 Cal. 78, 43 Pac. 404; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 112, § 11.

[4] 1876, Fitch v. Murray, Wood Man. 74, 89 (admissible, if the witness is absent); 1865, Chapman v. Dodd, 10 Minn. 350, 357 (malicious prosecution; magistrate's report of the testimony before him, excluded, the witnesses not being shown unavailable; good opinion, by McMillan, J.); 1830, Burt v. Place, 4 Wend. N. Y. 591 (cited infra); 1827, Rich-defendant's own former testimony could be used,[5] serves merely to "prove the rule"; for at common law the now defendant would have been disqualified as a witness in the second trial, and thus he would be unavailable as a witness (on the principle of § 1409, ante). It has, however, sometimes been thought that the former testimony might be used (without accounting for the witnesses) not as testimony of the facts recited in it, but as evidence of the grounds of belief of the then prosecutor, now the defendant (on the principle of § 258, ante.[6] It is true, in some varieties of the action for malicious prosecution, that this use would be correct.[7] But ordinarily the theory of it is not applicable, because testimony delivered after prosecution begun cannot be said to have served as probable ground for a belief which must have existed before prosecution begun.[8]

(5) Occasionally, a provision is found permitting the use of depositions ards v. Foulke, 3 Oh. 52 (the testimony of other witnesses than the defendant, at the former trial, excluded, as being merely "secondary evidence").

The objection of difference of parties and issues (ante, § 1387) might also be raised; but the difference does not seem to be substantial.

[5] 1705, Johnson v. Browning, 6 Mod. 216 (L. C. J. Holt admitted the testimony of the now defendant's wife, given at the former trial, she being now disqualified; "for otherwise, one that should be robbed, etc., would be under an intolerable mischief; for if he prosecuted for such robbery, etc., and the party should at any rate be acquitted, the prosecutor would be liable to an action for malicious prosecution, without the possibility of making a good defence"); 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 19; 1810, Swift, Evidence (Conn.) 131; 1830, Burt v. Place, 4 Wend. 591, 596, 601 (the witnesses not being deceased, the defendant was not allowed to prove the testimony delivered for him at the prior trial, as evidence of probable cause; but "where the prosecution alleged to have been malicious was for a crime, and the defendant was a witness", he would be allowed to "show what was his testimony"); 1798, Moody v. Pender, 2 Hayw. N. C. 29 (defendant's former testimony admitted, on the ground of necessity; otherwise, perhaps, "had any other witness sworn to the same facts and circumstances"); 1813, Scott v. Wilson, Cooke Tenn. 315 (the testimony of the now defendant, given at the former trial, may be admitted, even concerning facts not "alone confined to his knowledge", on the ground of necessity). Presumably this exception would no longer be law, the defendant being now a qualified witness.

[6] 1903, Kansas & T. Coal Co. v. Galloway, 71 Ark. 351, 74 S. W. 521 (malicious prosecution by arresting for contempt of an injunction; testimony of E. in the contempt proceedings allowed to be proved without calling E.; good opinion by Bunn, C. J.); 1849, Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 217, 238 (malicious prosecution before magistrate; testimony before the magistrate admitted, because "the knowledge that he would so testify might have been one of the grounds on which the defendants made their complaint").

[7] 1814, Burley v. Bethune, 5 Taunt. 580 (in an action against a magistrate for malicious conviction without probable cause, the testimony before the magistrate, being material, may be proved; whether without producing the witnesses, not decided); 1911, Carpenter v. Ashley, 15 Cal. App. 461, 115 Pac. 268 (malicious prosecution by indictment for perjury in a suit of M. v. R.; E.'s testimony in the suit of M. v. R. admitted as bearing on probable cause for the indictment).

[8] 1844, Newton v. Rowe, 1 C. & K. 616 (libel in charging the plaintiff with falsely and maliciously accusing R.; plea, truth; testimony before the magistrates, held not material for the defendant to show the plaintiff's malice); 1865, McMillan, J., in Chapman v. Dodd, 10 Minn. 350, 358 ("The testimony delivered upon the hearing could not have influenced the action of the prosecution in commencing the proceedings, for at that time it had no existence"); 1827, Richards v. Foulke, 3 Oh. 52 (the question to be decided being that of probable cause, "this the jury was required to decide, not upon the evidence given before the justice, but upon the facts of the case and the defendant's knowledge of these facts"); 1834, Huidekoper v. Cotton, 3 Watts Pa. 56, 58.

No doubt, when sometimes it has been said that the "evidence" in the first trial is also admissible in the second one, it was merely meant that the facts to be proved would be the same in the latter; e.g. 1902, Perkins v. Spaulding, 182 Mass. 218, 65 N. E. 72.

For a similar question arising in suits by a surety or joint-tortfeasor against principal or co-tortfeasor for contribution to a claim sued for and paid, see ante, § 1387.

in a former case where the issue involves merely the bearing of a former conviction of crime.[9]

§ 1417. Same: Exceptions to the Rule for (1) Chancery and analogous Proceedings; (2) Commissions by 'Dedimus Potestatem'; (3) Depositions 'in Perpetuam Memoriam'; (4) Will-Probates; (5) Bastardy Complaints; (6) Sundry Cases. (1) According to the traditional chancery practice, all evidence was taken and presented to the Court of Chancery in the form of written depositions; there was no requirement of 'viva voce' testimony on the trial. The chancery practice is not within the present purview. But in a few jurisdictions such a practice appears to have been introduced by statute, in certain cases, for common-law trials.[1] So far as such a procedure has been expressly sanctioned by statute, it is clear that the trial may proceed upon written depositions without showing the deponent unavailable in person. But certainly this effect should not be judicially attributed to a statute by mere implication. The fragmentary introduction of such chancery practice into a common-law trial is an unfortunate measure. The impropriety of the unfair discrimination and of the underlying policy of the typical statutes of this class has already been noticed (ante, § 1407).

(2) Under the Federal statute [2] a deposition taken 'de bene esse' cannot be used unless the witness is shown to be unavailable in one of the specified ways.[3] Even under the Act of 1892 (ante, § 1381) empowering Federal Courts to order the taking of depositions "in the mode prescribed by the laws of the States in which the courts are held",[4] it was ruled that, even in a State in which depositions may be used without showing the witness unavailable, such a showing must still be made according to the Federal statute.[5] But the depositions under the 'dedimus potestatem' clause [6] stand upon a different footing. These are taken under a commission, supposed to be grantable wherever it is necessary to prevent a failure or delay of justice; and, when once allowed to be taken, are unconditionally admissible; so that there is no need at the trial to account for the witness as unavailable.[7] It does not ap-

[9] Can. Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. 908 (on an issue of former conviction or acquittal, the depositions, etc., in the former case are admissible).

§ 1417. [1] Ante, § 1415, note.

[2] U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 865, Code § 1366; quoted ante, § 1411.

[3] 1831, Patapsco Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. 616; and the cases in note 5.

So in patent proceedings: 1910, Dover v. Greenwood, C. C. R. I., 177 Fed. 946 (bill in equity over a patent; testimony taken in interference proceedings in patent office held inadmissible under Rev. St. § 4915, without accounting for the witness in the usual way).

So, too, in equity, under Equity Rules 46–48 of 1912; here "good and exceptional cause for departing from the general rule" is to be shown.

[4] St. 1892, c. 14, Mar. 9, Code § 1372 ("in addition to the mode herein provided of taking the depositions of witnesses in causes pending at law or equity in the district courts of the United States, it shall be lawful to take depositions or testimony of witnesses in the mode prescribed by the laws of the State in which the courts are held").

[5] 1895, Mulcahey v. R. Co., 69 Fed. 172; 1899, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Wilder, 35 C. C. A. 105, 92 Fed. 953 (depositions taken in a State Court cannot be used on removal in a Federal Court unless the witness is unavailable under § 865, in spite of St. March 9, 1892). Compare the rulings cited in § 1381, ante.

[6] U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 866, Code § 1367, quoted ante, § 1411.

[7] 1819, Sergeant v. Biddle, 4 Wheat. 511; 1875, Jones v. R. Co., 3 Sawyer 527, Deady, J. Compare Rhoades v. Selim, 4 Wash. C. C. 724 (1827), under a rule of court.

pear that this anomalous theory is applied in other jurisdictions to 'dedimus potestatem' depositions.[8]

(3) Depositions 'in perpetuam memoriam' ought to stand on precisely the same footing as other depositions, i.e. they are taken conditionally, to be used at the trial only in case the witness is not available.[9] Yet the contrary view has occasionally been hinted at judicially,[10] or sanctioned by statute.[11]

(4) In some States the statutes providing for a jury trial or chancery hearing, on appeal from the preliminary probate of a will in the probate court, are so worded that the formal (and usually 'ex parte') testimony of the subscribing witnesses delivered and reduced to writing at the preliminary probate, is receivable absolutely at the later trial, i.e. without accounting for the witnesses' absence.[12] But this is anomalous and accidental.

(5) Similarly, the mother's testimony before the magistrate in a bastardy complaint is sometimes by statute made absolutely receivable at the later and regular trial;[13] though most statutes expressly condition this on the mother's decease or insanity.

(6) So, also, before tribunals authorized to dispense with the usual rules of evidence, this rule as to confrontation may be dispensed with.[14]

§ 1418. Anomalous Jurisdictions in which no necessity suffices to admit. There may be jurisdictions in which no cause whatever of unavailability will suffice to admit a deposition or former testimony. The reasons for this have already been noted, but may here be summarized. (1) So far as the constitutional provision securing the right of confrontation to an accused person is

The later statutes, noted ante, § 1381, do not seem to change this theory, except so far as they allow the local State practice to be recognized.

[8] It seems to be, however, in Colorado: 1906, Stone v. Victor E. Co., 36 Colo. 370, 85 Pac. 327 (for a deposition taken out of the State).

[9] 1618–19, Order in Chancery, No. 73, Bacon, L. C. ("no benefit shall be taken of the deposition of such witnesses in case they may be brought 'viva voce' upon the trial, but only to be used in case of death before the trial, or age or impotence [preventing attendance]. or absence out of the realm at the trial"); 1720, Dorset v. Girdler, Finch Prec. Ch. 532 ("these depositions cannot be made use of so long as the witnesses are living and may be had to be examined before a jury"); 1732, Benson v. Olive, 2 Stra. 919; 1817, Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. Jr. 672; 1856, Booker v. Booker, 20 Ga. 777, 780.

[10] 1766, Apthorp v. Eyres, 1 Quincy, Mass. 229 (three judges to two; but chiefly because it was treated as an affidavit and the issue was not to a jury).

[11] E.g. in Michigan, cited ante, § 1412.

[12] The statutes are placed ante, §§ 1411, 1413; some of the rulings applying them are as follows: Ill. 1851, Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15, 18; 1897, Harp v. Parr, 168 Ill. 459, 48 N. E. 113 (the statute applied; but here one subscribing witness was called at the contest in chancery); 1899, Entwistle v. Meikle, 180 Ill. 9, 54 N. E. 217; 1903, Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410 (at the chancery contest, the "certificate of the oath" of witnesses at the first probate may be either in affidavit form or in the form of questions and answers); 1903, Arrowsmith's Estate, 206 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 77; 1916, Lyman v. Kaul, 275 Ill. 14, 113 N. E. 944 (this provision does not admit the testimony of any but the subscribing witnesses); Kan. 1907, McConnell v. Keir, 76 Kan. 527, 92 Pac. 540; N. J. 1905, Beggans' Will, 68 N. J. Eq. 572, 59 Atl. 874;
Contra: 1922, McCarty v. Weatherly, — Okl. —, 204 Pac. 632 (probate of a will; attesting witnesses' affidavits, excluded). Compare post, § 1658, par. 5, and n. 4.

[13] 1841, Walker v. State, 6 Blackf. Ind. 1, 4; 1905, McLaughlin v. Joy, 100 Me. 517, 62 Atl. 348 (here merely to show compliance with the statute as to complaints); 1874, Hoff v. Fisher, 26 Oh. St. 8; and cases and statutes cited ante, § 1413.

Compare the rule about accusations in travail (ante, § 1141).

[14] 1919, Ocean Accident & G. Co. v. Industrial Commission, 180 Cal. 389, 182 Pac. 35 (applying St. 1917, p. 831, § 60).

held, as it erroneously is in some jurisdictions (ante, § 1398), to preclude the use of depositions or former testimony by the prosecution, it is obvious that no cause, even the witness' death, will suffice to admit them. (2) So far as the statute has not empowered the Court to order the taking of depositions in a given class of cases, a deposition taken in such a case is unlawfully taken and has therefore no legal existence; such a deposition therefore is inadmissible (ante, §§ 1398, 1401).

SUB-TITLE II: EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

INTRODUCTORY

CHAPTER XLVI.

§ 1420. Principle of the Exceptions to the Hearsay Rule. The purpose and reason of the Hearsay rule is the key to the exceptions to it. The theory of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1362) is that the many possible sources of inaccuracy and untrustworthiness which may lie underneath the bare untested assertion of a witness can best be brought to light and exposed, if they exist, by the test of cross-examination. But this test or security may in a given instance be superfluous; it may be sufficiently clear, in that instance, that the statement offered is free from the risk of inaccuracy and untrustworthiness, so that the test of cross-examination would be a work of supererogation. Moreover, the test may be impossible of employment — for example, by reason of the death of the declarant —, so that, if his testimony is to be used at all, there is a necessity for taking it in the untested shape. These two considerations — a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness, and a Necessity, for the evidence — may be examined more closely, taking first the latter.

(1) Where the test of cross-examination is impossible of application, by reason of the declarant's death or some other cause rendering him now unavailable as a witness on the stand, we are faced with the alternatives of receiving his statements without that test, or of leaving his knowledge altogether unutilized. The question arises whether the interests of truth would suffer more by adopting the latter or the former alternative. Whatever might be thought of the general policy of choosing the former alternative without any further requirement, it is clear at least that, so far as in a given instance some substitute for cross-examination is found to have been present, there is ground for making an exception. The mere necessity alone of taking the untested statement, instead of none at all, might not suffice; but if, to this necessity, there is added a situation in which some degree of trustworthiness more than the ordinary can be predicated of the statement, there is reason for admitting it as not merely the best that can be got from that witness, but better than could ordinarily be expected without the test of cross-examination. We thus come to consider the second essential element.

(2) There are many situations in which it can be easily seen that such a required test would add little as a security, because its purposes had been already substantially accomplished. If a statement has been made under such circumstances that even a sceptical caution would look upon it as trustworthy (in the ordinary instance), in a high degree of probability, it would be pedantic to insist on a test whose chief object is already secured. Supposing that such a situation exists, the statement could properly be received, especially if no other evidence from that person was now available. The law of evidence properly assumes that such situations can and do exist, and the exceptions to the Hearsay rule are concerned with defining them.

A perception of these two principles and their combined value has been responsible for most of the Hearsay exceptions.[1] Each exception, to be sure, has come into existence and been maintained independently and amid considerations peculiar to itself alone. There has been no comprehensive carrying-out of a system of principles. Yet the results may be coördinated under those two heads. There has rarely been any judicial summing-up of the principles; yet their existence has been fully perceived and often judicially stated. The following utterances illustrate this recognition:

1876, JESSEL, M. R., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154: "So inconvenient was the law upon this subject, so frequently has it shut out the only obtainable evidence, so frequently would it have caused a most crying and intolerable injustice, that a large number of exceptions have been made to the general rule. . . . Now I take it the principle which underlies all these exceptions is the same. In the first place, the case must be one in which it is difficult to obtain other evidence; for no doubt the ground for admitting the exceptions was that very difficulty. In the next place, the declarant must be disinterested; that is, disinterested in the sense that the declaration was not made in favor of his interest. And, thirdly, the declaration must be made before dispute or litigation, so that it was made without bias on account of the existence of a dispute or litigation which the declarant might be supposed to favor. Lastly, and this appears to me one of the strongest reasons for admitting it, the declarant must have had peculiar means of knowledge not possessed in ordinary cases.[2]

"Now all these reasons exist in testifying both as to matters of public and general interest, and as to matters of pedigree, and some, if not all of them, exist in the other cases to which I have referred."

1810, SWIFT, C. J., Evidence, 121: "The law has therefore very wisely rejected all such evidence, excepting where it is impossible in the nature of things to obtain any other, and where this is sufficient to establish the matter in question."

1811, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binney 328: "It is objected that, however impressive the declaration of a man of character may be, yet the law admits the word of no one in evidence without oath. The general rule certainly is so; but subject to relaxation in cases of necessity or extreme inconvenience."

§ 1420. [1] Mr. Starkie (Evidence, I, 45), in 1824, was the first writer to state plainly the philosophy of the Exceptions.

[2] The learned judge, in this fourth element is referring merely to the requirement that the hearsay witness must possess the ordinary knowledge-qualifications of every witness. This is therefore not peculiar to the Hearsay exceptions (post, § 1424).

1826, EWING, C. J., in Westfield v. Warren, 8 N. J. L. 251: "The general rule of evidence excludes all hearsay. From necessity and from the impracticability, in some instances, of other proof, exceptions to this rule have been made."

1852, JOHNSON, C. J., in Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. 804 (stating that hearsay lacks the securities of oath and cross-examination): "Where, however, the particular circumstances of the case are such as to afford a presumption that the hearsay evidence is true, it is then admissible."

1881, LOOMIS, J., in Southwest School District v. Williams, 48 Conn. 507: "The law does not dispense with the sanction of an oath and the test of cross-examination as a prerequisite for the admission of verbal testimony, unless it discovers in the nature of the case some other sanction or test deemed equivalent for ascertaining the truth."

§ 1421. First Principle: Necessity. The scope of the first principle may be briefly indicated by terming it the Necessity principle. It implies that since we shall lose the benefit of the evidence entirely unless we accept it untested, there is thus a greater or less necessity for receiving it. The reason why we shall otherwise lose it may be one of two:

(1) The person whose assertion is offered may now be dead, or out of the jurisdiction, or insane, or otherwise unavailable for the purpose of testing. This is the commoner and more palpable reason. It is found in the exception for Dying Declarations and in the five ensuing ones. The principle is not always fully and consistently carried out in the rules; but the general notion is clear and unmistakable, and it is acknowledged in these exceptions with more or less directness and strictness.

(2) The assertion may be such that we cannot expect, again or at this time, to get evidence of the same value from the same or other sources. This appears more or less fully in the exception for Spontaneous Declarations, for Reputation, and in part elsewhere. Here we are not threatened (as in the first case) with the entire loss of a person's evidence, but merely of some valuable source of evidence. The necessity is not so great; perhaps hardly a necessity, only an expediency or convenience, can be predicated. But the principle is the same.

§ 1422. Second Principle: Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness. The second principle which, combined with the first, satisfies us to accept the evidence untested, is in the nature of a practicable substitute for the ordinary test of cross-examination. We see that under certain circumstances the probability of accuracy and trustworthiness of statement is practically sufficient, if not quite equivalent to that of statements tested in the conventional manner. This circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness is found in a variety of circumstances sanctioned by judicial practice; and it is usually from one of these salient circumstances that the exception takes its name. There is no comprehensive attempt to secure uniformity in the degree of trustworthiness which these circumstances presuppose. It is merely that common sense and experience have from time to time pointed them out as practically adequate substitutes for the ordinary test, at least, in view of the necessity of the situation.

May we, however, generalize any further among the different exceptions and find any more detailed principles involving the reasons why these circumstances suffice as substitutes? Though no judicial generalizations have been made, there is ample authority in judicial utterances for naming the following different classes of reasons underlying the exceptions:[1]

a. Where the circumstances are such that a sincere and accurate statement would naturally be uttered, and no plan of falsification be formed;

b. Where, even though a desire to falsify might present itself, other considerations, such as the danger of easy detection or the fear of punishment, would probably counteract its force;

c. Where the statement was made under such conditions of publicity that an error, if it had occurred, would probably have been detected and corrected.

As to these, it may be said:

First, it is not always that an Exception is founded merely on a single one of these considerations. Often it rests on the operation, in different degrees, of two of them. For example, the exceptions for Declarations of Mental Condition, Spontaneous Declarations, and Declarations against Interest rest entirely on Reason a; while the exception for Declarations about Family History (Pedigree) rests largely upon Reason a, though partly also on Reason c. The exception for Dying Declarations rests entirely on Reason b (the fear of divine punishment). The exception for Regular Entries rests chiefly on Reason b, though partly also on Reasons a and c. The exception for Official Statements rests chiefly on Reasons b and c, though a also enters. Mixed considerations have thus often prevailed.

Secondly, the Exceptions have been established casually in the light of practical good sense, and with little or no effort (except in modern times) at generalization or comprehensive planning. The Courts have had in mind merely to sanction certain situations as a sufficient guarantee of trustworthiness. As elsewhere in the development of Anglo-American law generally, they have not (until recently) looked ahead, or behind, or about, to make comparisons and obtain unity of theory. Nevertheless, in analyzing the notions on which the exceptions have proceeded, we may distinguish clearly the three separate types of reason above set forth. This is no more than saying that the exceptions are and were to that extent rational; for wherever a reason is given for a result, it is possible to analyze and classify the results according to the nature of the reason.

§ 1423. Incomplete Application of the Two Principles. These two principles — Necessity and Trustworthiness — are only imperfectly carried out in the detailed rules under the exceptions. It would be strange if it were otherwise, in a legal system formed as ours is, partly on precedent and partly on principle, at the hands of judges of varying disposition and training. The two principles are not applied with equal strictness in every exception; sometimes one, sometimes the other, has been chiefly in mind. In one or two instances one of them is practically lacking. Nevertheless they play a fundamental part. It is impossible without them to understand the exceptions. In these principles is contained whatever of reason underlies the exceptions. What does not present itself as an application of them is the result of mere precedent, or tradition, or arbitrariness. It is the proper office of an expounder of the law of Evidence to note this element of living principle, and to distinguish its applications from rulings which are merely arbitrary. It is through the failure to do this strictly that a general appearance of unreason and unpracticalness has been given to the Hearsay rule and its exceptions. In the following expositions of the Exceptions, the mode of treatment will consist in clearly separating that which can be directly placed to the credit of these two leading principles from that which remains as mere precedent and tradition. It may be affirmed that this residuum is on the whole decidedly a minor portion.

§ 1422. [1] The judicial utterances illustrating the above reasons will be found under the several exceptions.

In making this separation, regard must strictly be had to the judicial utterances. There should be no forcing, no infusion of that which cannot be found in the authorities. The office of the commentator is to expound rules of law as he finds them declared and enforced; and, where he finds a rule without a principle, to note this with equal fidelity. But this fidelity is wanting where he neglects to distinguish between rules which rest on principle and rules which do not. What the judges supply is the rule and its principle if any. What the commentator is usually left to supply is a systematic analysis and a comprehensive grouping; and this must not merely be forgiven to him, — it must be demanded of him.[1]

§ 1424. Witness-Qualifications, and other Rules, also to be applied to Statements admitted under these Exceptions. The Hearsay rule is merely an additional test or safeguard to be applied to testimonial evidence otherwise admissible. The admission of hearsay statements, by way of exception to the rule, therefore presupposes that the assertor possessed the qualifications of a witness (ante, §§ 483–721) in regard to knowledge and the like. [1] These qualifications are fundamental as rules of Relevancy. Thus these extra-judicial statements may be inadmissible because of their failure to fulfil the ordinary § 1423. [1] How little the judges can be expected to supply this element is seen in the present instance by the fact that until the Master of the Rolls, Sir George Jessel, uttered his memorable generalization, in 1876 (ante, § 1420), nothing of the same sort had been given us by a judge. Some dozen distinct exceptions are expounded in the following chapters; but upon even such an elementary point as the number of the exceptions there has been a total absence of correct judicial appreciation. The following enumerations have been made: Mansfield, C. J., in 4 Camp. 401 (1811), two; Best, C. J., in 2 Moo. & R. 25 (1828), two; Lord Campbell, in 11 Cl. & F. 85 (1844), three; Mellor, J., in L. R. 2 Q. B. 326 (1867), two; Lord Blackburn, in 5 App. Cas. 623 (1880), and Brett, M. R., in 13 Q. B. D. 818 (1884), five; Marshall, C. J., in 7 Cranch U. S. 295 (1813), five; Skinner, J., in 17 Ill. 20 (1855) and McGowan, J., in 13 N. C. N. S. 462, one in criminal cases.

§ 1424. [1] 1881, Lord Blackburn, in Dysart Peerage Case, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 489, 504: "It is impossible to say that if a person said something, and could not himself if alive have been permitted to give testimony to prove it, he can by dying render that statement admissible. I think that is a self-evident proposition."

rules about qualifications, even though they meet the requirements of a hearsay exception. For example, in the Pedigree Exception there are rules about membership in the family which rest solely on the necessity of knowledge in the person whose statement is offered, — i.e. a rule of Testimonial Qualifications.

However, in applying these principles to hearsay exceptions, special situations arise, and the rules that depend upon merely the usual testimonial qualifications for witnesses on the stand come naturally in practice to be bound up with the rules about hearsay exceptions as special details of those exceptions. In the following chapters, for clearness' sake and convenience of reference, these rules involving the application of ordinary testimonial qualifications will be examined at the same time, instead of being relegated to the general treatment of those principles. It must be understood, however, that the principles involved do not have their origin in the Hearsay rule.

For similar reasons, testimony received under a hearsay exception being none the less testimony, the opponent may desire to discredit or to corroborate the declarant in the ways appropriate to discrediting or corroborating an ordinary witness (ante, §§ 875–1144). The application of such principles to hearsay exceptions can most conveniently be dealt with under the different exceptions.

In the same way, the allowance of an exception to the Hearsay rule does not of itself dispense with the application of the other Auxiliary Rules of Probative Policy (ante, § 1171), of which the Hearsay rule is only one. For example, when a written entry is offered under an exception to the Hearsay rule, the rule about Producing the Original of a Document (ante, § 1177) comes into application and must be observed; in offering a dying declaration, the rule of Completeness (post, § 2095) may come into place; and the rules of Testimonial Preference (ante, §§ 1286, 1325, 1335, 1345) are often invoked throughout the exceptions. These, with the rule of Authentication (post, §§ 2129–2169) and the rule of Integration or Parol Evidence (post, § 2400) are the Auxiliary Rules that find most frequent application to testimony admitted under hearsay exceptions. For purposes of practical convenience, their application here will be treated under the different exceptions, instead of under the heads of the respective auxiliary rules.

§ 1425. Outline of Topics for each Exception. Under each exception, then, the general order of topics will be as follows:

a. The Necessity principle, and its applications in the Exception in hand;

b. The principle of a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness, and its applications in the Exception in hand;

c. The rules based on the independent principles of Testimonial Qualifications, Primariness, Authentication, and the like, as applied to the class of statements admitted; and, finally,

d. Arbitrary limitations and modifications not resting on any principle whatever.

This order of treatment must occasionally be slightly varied, but it serves as a general plan to be followed.

§ 1426. Order of the Exceptions. Owing to the mode of development of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364), it is scarcely possible to predicate a definite order of historical origin for the exceptions to the rule; we merely find that, after the time that the rule comes to be established (the early 1700s), certain classes of hearsay statements continued to be received as before. Recorded cases under some of these classes are found earlier in some instances than in others, but this, for the above reason, does not entitle us to say that such statements, as exceptions to the rule, are older in recognition than the others. It can be said definitely that most of the exceptions began to be recognized during the 1700s, and that the few remaining ones were not recognized until the 1800s; but that is all.

A more profitable order of arrangement is one based upon the differing nature of the Necessity principle (ante, § 1421) as recognized in the different exceptions. In several of them, the notion of Necessity is satisfied only where the particular declarant is shown to be personally unavailable as a witness, by reason of death or the like. In the others, the resort to the hearsay statement is allowed without showing the personal unavailability of the declarant at all. A grouping based on this radical difference seems to be the only one in any way dictated by the nature of the exceptions; and within these two groups the further arrangement may be left to be determined merely by convenience of orderly exposition.

The arrangement, then, is as follows, the first six forming the first group above mentioned, and the seventh bridging the gap to the remaining seven, which fall into the second group:

1. Dying Declarations; 2. Statements against Interest; 3. Declarations about Family History; 4. Attestation of a Subscribing Witness; 5. Regular Entries in the Course of Business; 6. Sundry Statements of Deceased Persons; 7. Reputation; 8. Official Statements; 9. Learned Treatises; 10. Sundry Commercial Documents; 11. Affidavits; 12. Statements by a Voter; 13. Declarations of a Mental Condition; 14. Spontaneous Exclamations.

§ 1427. Future of the Exceptions. The needless obstruction to investigation of truth caused by the Hearsay rule is due mainly to the inflexibility of its exceptions and to the rigidly technical construction of those exceptions by the Courts (ante, § 8 a).

The next and needed step in the liberalization of the Rule is the adoption of the general exception for all statements of deceased persons; leaving the application of the rule to the trial Court. This general exception, once foreshadowed a century ago (post, § 1576), has in modern times been introduced in a few States (post, § 1577), and should receive universal recognition.

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC I: DYING DECLARATIONS

CHAPTER XLVII.

§ 1430. History. This exception, as such, dates back as far as the first half of the 1700s, — the period when the Hearsay rule was coming to be systematically and strictly enforced (ante, § 1364) and at the same time certain excepted cases were coming to be recognized and defined. The ruling of Lord Mansfield in Wright v. Littler, in 1761 (post, § 1431), is generally taken as the leading early case, though the notion that special trust may be reposed in deathbed statements was already long understood.[1]

§ 1430. [1] Compare Shakespeare's allusion, about 1595, quoted post, § 1438.

The custom of using dying declarations probably comes down as a tradition long before the evidence-system arises in the 1500s; 12th Cent., London Custumal: "[When the sheriff holds inquest over a man killed], if the neighborhood names any one or suspects any one, or if the dead man himself has accused any one before he died, the sheriff ought to attach him who is accused, if he can find him" (Bateson's Borough Customs, I, 13; Selden Soc. vol. XVIII, 1904).

The earliest reported passages in trials seem to be the following: 1603, Sir Walter Raleigh's Trial, Jardine Crim. Tr., I, 435 (the accused argues, "Besides, a dying man is ever presumed to speak the truth"); s. c. 2 How. St. Tr. 18 (Serjt. Philips: "Nemo moriturus præsumitur mentiri"); 1678, Earl of Pembroke's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1309, 1335 (murder; the deceased's statements after the assault though apparently not made in consciousness of approaching death, were received, the counsel premising that "the sayings of a dying man in such circumstances are remarkable"); 1691, Lord Mohun's Trial, 12 id. 967, 975, 987 (murder); 1722, R. v. Reason, 16 id. 24 ff.; 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 id. 918, 936 (described by counsel as "the

The exception has in some jurisdictions been recognized by statutes.[2] These, however, were seldom intended to alter in substance the details of the common-law rule.[3]

1. The Necessity Principle

§ 1431. Scope of the Principle. The requirements of this principle, as generally accepted in the beginning, were simple. The notion was that, since the witness had died, there was a necessity for taking his only available trustworthy statements — his dying declarations. The necessity, then, lay simply in the death of the witness, and that was all that need be shown. Conceivably, there might be still a necessity if the witness, though supposed to be dying, had recovered and had since left the jurisdiction, but this case had never occurred, and the question never arose.

By the 1800s, however, another interpretation of the Necessity principle had arisen, and this came to prevail. It is artificial and inconsistent with precedent and with itself, and its rules are now in fact nothing more than arbitrary. Nevertheless, as they purport to be logical deductions from a supposed principle, they must be treated as rational rules, and not as merely arbitrary limitations.

1. First, then, the original, orthodox, and only legitimate limitation was that the witness whose declarations it was desired to use should be unavailable by death. This is amply shown by the cases up to the beginning of the 1800s,[1] declarations of the deceased, while a dying man, and after the stroke is given"); 1765, Lord Byron's Trial, ib. 1191, 1197, 1201, 1205 (the dying explanations of Lord Byron's antagonist, Mr. Chaworth, in the duel); 1791, R. v. Dingler, Leach Cr. C. 300, Gould, J.; 1793, R. v. Callaghan, McNally, Evidence, 385, Downs, J.; 1793, R. v. Trant, ib. 385, Downs, J.; 1800, R. v. Minton, ib. 386.

[2] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 4 ("in criminal actions, the act or declaration of a dying person, made under a sense of impending death, respecting the cause of death", is admissible); Ga. P. C. 1910, § 1000 ("made by any person in the article of death, who is conscious of his condition, as to the cause of his death and the person who killed him", admissible in evidence "in a prosecution for homicide"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10531, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); Or. Laws 1920, § 727, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 4); S. D. St. 1921, c. 230 (dying declarations are "statements of material facts concerning the cause and circumstances constituting the 'res gestæ'" in homicide, rape, and abortion, "made by the victim voluntarily while sane and under the fixed and solemn belief that his death is inevitable and near at hand", and are admissible, "provided the deceased would be a competent witness if living", and are equally admissible for the defence); Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 788 ("The dying declarations of a deceased person may be offered in evidence, either for or against a defendant charged with the homicide of such deceased person, under the restrictions hereafter provided. To render the declarations of the deceased competent evidence, it must be satisfactorily proved: 1, that at the time of making such declaration he was conscious of approaching death and believed there was no hope of recovery; 2, that such declaration was voluntarily made, and not through the persuasion of any person; 3, that such declaration was not made in answer to interrogatories calculated to lead the deceased to make any particular statement; 4, that he was of sane mind at the time of making the declaration").

[3] For statutes altering specific details, see post, § 1432.

§ 1431. [1] 1761, Wright v. Littler, 3 Burr. 1244 (in an action of ejectment, the genuineness of a will being in issue, evidence was received by Mansfield, L. C. J., that one of the subscribing witnesses on his deathbed declared it a forgery, the other judges concurring); 1769, Camden, L. C., and Mansfield, L. C. J., in the Douglas Peerage Case, 2 Hargr. Collect. Jurid. 387, 389, 397 (receiving "dying declarations" of Lady Douglas as to the paternity of the claimant, apparently on a general principle; "Would she have died as well as by the treatises of the same period.[2] In particular, there is found no distinction between civil and criminal cases, or between different kinds of criminal cases.

2. But at this point (as has more than once happened), the misconstrued words of a treatise-writer, followed by a 'nisi prius' decision or two, started a heresy which in the next generation obtained full sway, and must now be taken as orthodox; it limits the use to criminal cases of homicide. The language of Serjeant East seems to have been the unwitting source of the heresy:

1803, Serjeant East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 353: "Besides the usual evidence of guilt in general cases of felony, there is one kind of evidence more peculiar to the case of homicide, which is the declaration of the deceased, after the mortal blow, as to the fact itself, and the party by whom it is committed. Evidence of this sort is admissible in this case on the fullest necessity; for it often happens that there is no third person present to be an eye-witness to the fact; and the usual witness on occasion of other felonies, namely, the party injured himself, is gotten rid of." [3]

This language led to a change of practice, and its influence is clearly to be traced in subsequent American cases. Finally, in 1860, a note of Chief Justice Redfield, in his edition of Professor Greenleaf's treatise, gave it the widest credit and led to its general acceptance:[4]

1857, OGDEN, J., in Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 617: "Such declarations are received as evidence from necessity, for furnishing the testimony which in certain cases is essential to prevent the manslayer from escaping punishment. When a death-wound is inflicted in with a lie in her mouth and perjury in her right hand?"); 1784, R. v. Drummond, Leach Cr. L. 4th ed., 337 (on an indictment for robbery, the dying confession of another person, recently executed, that he was the true robber, was rejected solely because of the deceased's incompetence as a convict); ante, 1805, Anon., cited in 6 East 195, per Ellenborough, L. C. J., as occurring under Heath, J. (action on a bond; dying confession of forgery by a witness admitted); approved (1805) by Ellenborough, L. C. J., ubi supra, (1808) by the same, in 1 Camp. 210; 1836, Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615 (Parke, B.: "Both then [coram Lord Mansfield] and at the time of the Nisi Prius trial before Mr. Justice Heath, an opinion prevailed (which is now properly exploded) that any declaration 'in extremis' was admissible, on the ground that the solemnity of the occasion was equivalent to a declaration on oath").

[2] 1802, McNally, Evidence, 381, 386 ("In exception to the general rule that 'no evidence can be received against a prisoner but in his presence', it has been repeatedly determined and is unquestionably law, that on a trial for murder the declarations of the deceased, after the mortal wound is given, conscious of approaching death, may be received in evidence against the prisoner, although such declaration was not made in his presence. . . . In civil cases the rule of receiving as evidence the dying declaration of a person 'in extremis' hath also been adopted, and on the same principle as in criminal cases"); 1810, Swift, Evidence, 125 ("In civil cases the rule of receiving as evidence the dying declarations of a person 'in extremis' has also been adopted, and on the same principle as in criminal cases"). The distinction had been suggested as early as 1743, by counsel in Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1161 (ejectment); but the absence of any settled distinction was in 1744 conceded by Mr. Chute, arguendo in Omichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 38 ("A man, as he is just leaving the world, may be supposed to have a greater regard to truth").

[3] It was natural, in a chapter on Homicide, to call special attention to these considerations; but Mr. East did not and could not cite any authority for confining the evidence to such cases, and probably had no intention of making such an absolute statement.

[4] The same view of the Necessity principle is illustrated in the following cases: 1835, State v. Ferguson, 2 Hill S. C. 624; 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 375; 1855, Walston v. Com., 16 B. Monr. Ky. 34; 1868, Marshall v. R. Co., 48 Ill. 476; 1869, Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 198; 1872, Schell v. Stephens, 50 Mo. 374; 1881, State v. Wood, 53 Vt. 564; 1884, Waldele v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 274; 1885, Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. 105, 1 Atl. 314.

secret, as was done in this case, no person can be expected to speak to the fact except the victim of the violence."

1860, REDFIELD, C. J., in Greenleaf, Evidence, I, § 156, editorial note: "It is not received upon any other ground than that of necessity, in order to prevent murder going unpunished. What is said in the books about the situation of the declarant, he being virtually under the most solemn sanction to speak the truth, is far from presenting the true ground of the admission. . . . And although it is not indispensable that there should be no other evidence of the same facts, the rule is no doubt based upon the presumption that in the majority of cases there will be no other equally satisfactory proof of the same facts. This presumption and the consequent probability of the crime going unpunished is unquestionably the chief ground of this exception in the law of evidence."

This orthodox heresy, with its narrow view of the necessity for such evidence, has been applied with some attempt at consistency, the result of which is the following limitations.

§ 1432. Rule Applicable in Certain Criminal Cases only. (1) The proceeding in which the statements are offered may not be a civil case.[1]

(2) It must be a public prosecution for the specific crime of homicide.[2]

(3) It must be a prosecution, not merely for an act which has resulted in fact in death, but for an offence involving legally the resulting death as a necessary element. This limitation is a refinement evolved from the earlier and simpler form of statement that "death must be the subject of the charge." When the evidence was offered in a prosecution for attempted abortion and like offences, where the woman's death resulted, the earlier form of statement became capable of opposite interpretations. Generally the narrower one has been adopted.[3]

§ 1432. [1] 1836, Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615; 1865, Daily v. R. Co., 32 Conn. 357; 1869, Wooten v. Wilkins, 39 Ga. 223; 1886, East Tenn. Valley & G. R. Co. v. Maloy, 77 Ga. 237, 2 S. E. 941; 1869, Duling v. Johnson, 32 Ind. 155; 1896, Thayer v. Lombard, 165 Mass. 174, 42 N. E. 563; 1871, Brownell v. R. Co., 47 Mo. 245; 1806, Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. N. Y. 36; 1818, Wilson v. Boerem, 15 Johns. N. Y. 286; 1854, Barfield v. Britt, 2 Jones L. N. C. 43 (overruling McFarland v. Shaw, 2 N. C. Law Repos. 105); 1917, Ross v. Cooper, 38 N. D. 173, 164 N. W. 679 (defendant's son shot and killed plaintiff's husband, who was farm foreman; issue as to defendant's liability for his son's acts as agent; deceased's dying declarations excluded; another example of the shockingly unjust results of this irrational limitation of the rule; Grace, J., diss.); 1921, Milne v. Landers, 143 Tenn. 602, 228 S. W. 702 (workmen's compensation; dying declarations of employee as to cause of death, excluded).

The following cases are therefore practically outlawed: 1806, Jackson v. Vredenburgh, 1 Johns. N. Y. 159, 163 (wife's dying declarations as to her husband's will; left undecided, as to the present point); 1859, People v. Blakely, 4 Park. Cr. C. N. Y. 184 (admitting a declaration that a note had been signed; "It is true this is said only in regard to criminal cases; but the rules of evidence in criminal cases are in most respects the same as in civil cases"; here the declaration was in any case admissible as against interest).

See § 1141, ante (Corroboration by Similar Statements) for the Delaware statute treating a bastard's mother's declaration in travail as a dying declaration.

[2] Excluded in the following cases: 1824, R. v. Mead, 2 B. & C. 605 (perjury); 1830, R. v. Lloyd, 4 C. & P. 233 (robbery); 1874, Johnson v. State, 50 Ala. 459 (rape); 1905, People v. Stison, 140 Mich. 216, 103 N. W. 542 (incest, followed by death at childbirth; deceased's declarations excluded); 1876, State v. Barker, 28 Oh. St. 583; 1866, Hudson v. State, 3 Coldw. Tenn. 359 (robbery); 1911, Haley v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 138 S. W. 631 (rape); 1918, Taylor v. Com., 122 Va. 886, 94 S. E. 795 (felonious assault upon B. T., wife of defendant); 1871, Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 514 (assault with intent to kill).

In some of the statutes cited ante, § 1430, the scope is extended to "criminal actions" in general, though the subject of the declaration must be "the cause of death."

[3] 1822, R. v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & C. 608, note, Bayley, J. (administration of drugs to a

Through this pedantic refinement much labor has been wasted, and justice has often been hampered and defeated, for it is obvious that the evidential need and value of the statement is precisely the same, whatever the criminal issue. We see here that the strictly evidential question has been entirely lost sight of, and the exclusion or admission of the statements is made to depend arbitrarily on the definition of a particular criminal offence.

In several jurisdictions the aid of the Legislature has been invoked to stop the further defiance of common sense by the Courts over such monstrous trivialities, and to admit dying declarations in charges of abortion and related offences.[4]

In another jurisdiction, the shackles of irrational tradition have been boldly thrown off, by judicial interpretation, so as to admit dying declarations in civil cases generally.[5] In another jurisdiction the Legislature has enlarged the exception so as to include civil cases of personal injury.[6] pregnant woman); 1860, R. v. Hind, 8 Cox Cr. 300, Pollock, C. B. (attempt to procure a miscarriage); 1891, Com. v. Homer, 153 Mass. 344, 26 N. E. 872; 1900, State v. Meyer, 64 N. J. L. 382, 45 Atl. 779 (excluded on a charge of abortion in which the woman's death was not of the essence of the crime, though it affected the punishment); 1874, People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95; 1878, State v. Harper, 35 Oh. St. 78; 1908, State v. Fuller, 52 Or. 42, 96 Pac. 456; 1885, Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. 103, 1 Atl. 314. Contra: Del. 1906, State v. Fleetwood, 6 Penna. Del. 153, 65 Atl. 772; Ind. 1881, Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 345 (Elliott, C. J.: "We conclude, where death results from the unlawful attempt to produce an abortion, that death is the subject of the enquiry and that dying declarations are competent. If we adopt any other view, we shall sacrifice principle to a mere form of words. . . . We regard the statute as clearly intending that death shall be deemed a controlling element of the offence, and in this respect it differs from the statutes of New York and Ohio, as construed by the courts of those states. . . . If in reality the offence is homicide and the subject of enquiry the manner of the deceased's death, the settled rules of evidence which prevail in such cases should be enforced"); 1903, Seifert v. State, 160 Ind. 464, 67 N. E. 100; N. J. 1900, State v. Meyer, 65 N. J. L. 237, 47 Atl. 486 (even where abortion is a crime, though the death did not result from that cause, the woman's dying declaration is admissible; approving Montgomery v. State); Wis. 1877, State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 308.

The following are distinguishable: 1901, Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355 (causing abortion followed by mother's death; dying declaration admitted, because abortion consists in killing the unborn child); 1894, State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226, 233, 57 N. W. 652, 1065 (manslaughter by procuring abortion; admitted).

[4] Mass. St. 1889, c. 100, Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 64 (dying declarations of a woman dying from abortion, admissible in prosecutions for the offence); 1893, Com. v. Thompson, 159 Mass. 56, 59, 33 N. E. 1111 (statute applied); Mo. St. 1907, p. 245, Mar. 6, Rev. St. 1919, § 4034 (in prosecutions for abortion, etc., the woman's dying declarations are admissible, provided she was "of sound mind when such declarations were made"; but "no conviction shall be based alone upon such declarations unless corroborated as to the fact that an abortion or miscarriage has taken place", and the privilege for communications to the attending physician shall not apply to his testimony); N. Y. St. 1875, c. 352 (similar); St. 1909, c. 66, § 1, p. 85 (reenacting St. 1875, c. 352, § 1, as C. Cr. P., § 398*a*); Oh. St. 1910, p. 210, May 13, Gen. C. Annot. 1921 (on a trial for violation of Gen. Code § 12412, the woman's dying declaration "as to the cause and circumstances of such miscarriage or attempt", to be admissible; enacting a new § 12412-1); Pa. St. 1895, June 26, Dig. 1920, § 10361 (similar, with peculiar and lengthy wording; the prosecution must first show the declarant's "sound mind", and there must be corroboration of the declaration); S. D. St. 1921, 230 (dying declarations admissible in cases of abortion and rape; quoted ante, § 1430).

[5] Kansas: 1914, Thurston v. Fritz, 91 Kan. 468, 138 Pac. 625 (cited post, § 1436); 1920, Vassar v. Swift & Co., 106 Kan. 836, 189 Pac. 943 (injury received by intestate in loading cars; his dying declaration as to circumstances of the injury, admitted; affirming Thurston v. Fritz).

[6] North Carolina: St. 1919, c. 29, amending Cons. St. 1919, § 160 (in actions for death by wrongful act, "the dying declarations of the deceased as to the cause of his death" are admissible under the same rules as in "criminal actions for homicide"); 1920, Latham v.

§ 1433. Death in Question must be Declarant's. Again, not any death may be the subject of the charge; the deceased declarant must be the person whose death is the subject of the charge:[1]

1875, KINGMAN, C. J., in State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 418: "Mr. Redfield states that this evidence is not received upon any other ground than that of necessity, in order to prevent murder going unpunished. . . . Its admission can be justified only on the ground of absolute necessity, growing out of the fact that the murderer, by putting the witness, and generally the sole witness of his crime, beyond the power of the Court by killing him, shall not thereby escape the consequences of his crime. . . . Necessity, then, being the only ground on which such testimony can be admitted, it remains to be seen whether that necessity exists so generally, or to so great an extent, where the death of any one else than the declarant is the subject of the inquiry, as to justify the adoption of a rule admitting such testimony"; and in a trial for the murder of T. A., declarations were rejected of W. A., shot at the same time with T. A., but surviving him a few hours.

§ 1434. Circumstances of Death related. Finally, the declaration may not concern any and all topics. It must concern the facts leading up to or causing or attending the injurious act which has resulted in the declarant's death; for it is only as to such facts that the supposed necessity for the statements can exist.[1] Here again there is opportunity for prolific quibbling. The appli-

Andrews Mfg. Co., — N. C.—, 105 S. E. 423 (St. 1919, c. 29, admitting dying declarations "under the same rules" etc. as in criminal actions, applied to admit the dying statement of an employee in an action for wrongful death); 1921, Williams v. Randolph & C. R. Co., 182 N. C. 267, 108 S. E. 915 (death by wrongful act; decedent's dying declaration admitted under St. 1919, c. 29).

§ 1433. [1] Excluded: 1916, Allsup v. State, 15 Ala. App. 121, 72 So. 599 (another person killed in the same affray); 1916, Holland v. State, 126 Ark. 332, 190 S. W. 104 (declarations of D., killed in the same affray as B., excluded on trial for the murder of B.); 1893, Mora v. People, 19 Colo. 255, 262, 35 Pac. 179 (declarations by an accomplice resisting arrest); 1904, Taylor v. State, 120 Ga. 857, 48 S. E. 361 (like State v. Bohan, Kan., quoted supra); 1875, State v. Bohan, 15 Kan. 418 (quoted supra); 1867, State v. Fitzhugh, 2 Or. 227, 232 (declarations of F., killed in the same affray); 1873, Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 329 (husband and wife murdered in different places about the same time; excluding at the trial for the killing of the former the latter's declarations); 1878, Poteete v. State, 9 Baxt. 270 (third person killed in the same affray); 1894, Radford v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 520, 526, 27 S. W. 143 (husband and wife killed at the same time; on a charge of murder of the husband, the wife's declarations excluded).

Admitted: 1837, R. v. Baker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 53 (declarations of one poisoned at the same time as the person whose death was charged); 1871, State v. Wilson, 23 La. An. 559 (declarations of J. S., shot at the same time as W. D., for whose murder the accused was on trial); 1859, State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. L. S. C. 329 (declarations of one poisoned at the same time with him whose death was the subject of the charge).

§ 1434. [1] Alabama: 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 676 ("whether he had forbade the prisoner walking the road that morning, immediately preceding the time that prisoner had shot him", admitted); 1860, Mose v. State, 35 Ala. 421; 1861, Ben v. State, 37 Ala. 105; 1881, Reynolds v. State, 68 id. 506; California: 1883, People v. Fong Ah Sing, 54 Cal. 253; 1881, People v. Taylor, 59 Cal. 640, 648; 1897, People v. Wong Chuey, 117 Cal. 624, 49 Pac. 833; Florida: 1901, Clemmons v. State, 43 Fla. 200, 30 So. 699 (the scope of the declarations is the 'res gestæ'); 1916, Malone v. State, 72 Fla. 28, 72 So. 415 (that deceased "shot her on account of a fight they had", excluded); Georgia: 1893, Wilkerson v. State, 91 Ga. 729, 739, 17 S. E. 990 (killing of a husband by the wife's paramour; the husband's declaration that he had found them in adultery, admitted); 1898, Perry v. State, 102 Ga. 365, 30 S. E. 903 (declarations as to the relations of deceased and defendant some time before, excluded); 1899, Bush v. State, 109 Ga. 120, 34 S. E. 298 (declarations as to defendant's threats immediately preceding, admitted); 1914, Harris v. State, 142 Ga. 627, 83 S. E. 514 (as to conversations prior to the homicide, admitted); Indiana: 1903, Seifert v. State, 160 Ind. 464, 67 N. E. 100 (death by abortion; deceased's declarations as to the defendant's incitement to the act and furnishing of an instrument, admitted); Iowa: 1903, State v. McKnight, 119 Ia. 79, cation of the Opinion rule operates further (post, § 1447) to limit the scope of the narration otherwise admissible under the present principle.

§ 1435. Further Limitations rejected. The foregoing limitations, it will be observed, are logically required by the principle as introduced by Serjeant East (ante, § 1431). But two further and equally necessary results of it have never been accepted:

(1) If the killing was not secret, or if other and adequate testimony as to the circumstances of the death is at hand, nevertheless the dying declaration is admissible, even though in strictness it is not needed:[1]

1898, WILLIAMS, J., in Com. v. Roddy, 184 Pa. 274, 39 Atl. 211: "[The defendant] alleges that the Commonwealth was under no necessity to use the dying declarations, and therefore had no right to use them. This rests on a misapprehension of the rule relating to their

93 N. W. 63 (declaration as to prior assaults by the defendant on the deceased; excluded); 1922, State v. Brooks, 192 Ia. 1107, 186 N. W. 46 (remarks by declarant's wife, etc., held inadmissible as a part of the declaration); Kansas: 1899, State v. O'Shea, 60 Kan. 772, 57 Pac. 970 (sundry statements as to prior relations of deceased and defendant, excluded); Kentucky: 1872, Leiber v. Com., 9 Bush 13; 1888, Peoples v. Com., 78 Ky. 500, 9 S. W. 509, 810; 1899, Redmond v. Com., — Ky. —, 51 S. W. 565 (that he had no pistol, admitted); 1899, Baker v. Com., 106 Ky. 212, 50 S. W. 54 ("I want all you people to swear the truth about this", excluded); 1913, Lucas v. Com., 153 Ky. 424, 155 S. W. 721 (declaration as to certain prior occurrences, excluded; the precision with which the admissible and inadmissible portions of the declaration are nicely dissected in this opinion shows the utterly unreasonble nature of this limitation); Maine: 1912, State v. Albanes, 109 Me. 199, 83 Atl. 548 (declarations as to threats of defendant reported to deceased on the day of the killing, admitted); Michigan: 1910, People v. Alexander, 161 Mich. 645, 126 N. W. 837 (statement as to prior trouble between the parties, excluded); Missouri: 1903, State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191, 72 S. W. 650 ("I never made any threats against him in my life", "I never had a quarrel with him", excluded, though the defendant had introduced evidence of recent threats by the deceased; this ruling is absurd, and disfigures the law of evidence in Missouri, — the more emphatically because a new trial was ordered solely because of the admission of these parts of the declaration); 1909, State v. Kelleher, 224 Mo. 145, 123 S. W. 551 (declarations as to prior occurrences, excluded; unsound on the facts); Montana: 1911, State v. Crean, 43 Mont. 47, 114 Pac. 603; New York: 1902, People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210, 64 N. E. 814 (declaration as to an occurrence of three hours before the fatal injury, excluded; the ruling is unsound); North Carolina: 1899, State v. Jefferson, 125 N. C. 712, 34 S. E. 648 (declarations about a precedent quarrel, etc., with defendant, whom deceased did not recognize at time of shooting, excluded); Oklahoma: 1921, Wratislaw v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 194 Pac. 273 (recitals of circumstances too long prior to the killing excluded); Oregon: 1874, State v. Garrand, 5 Or. 216, 219; 1908, State v. Doris, 51 Or. 136, 94 Pac. 44 ("I never had any trouble with him before", excluded); 1908, State v. Fuller, 52 Or. 42, 96 Pac. 456 (abortion; admissible for facts "tending to establish every essential element of the crime"; here, for declarant's condition of health on the day when defendant operated); Pennsylvania: 1905, Com. v. Spohr, 211 Pa. 542, 60 Atl. 1084 (declarations stating the defendant's conversation just before shooting, in which he referred to his prior threats and arrest, admitted); South Carolina: 1895, State v. Petsch, 43 S. C. 132, 20 S. E. 993 (circumstances of preceding dispute, beginning two weeks before, semble, admissible); Tennessee: 1911, Still v. State, 125 Tenn. 80, 140 S. W. 298 (threat relating to a past occurrence, excluded); Texas: 1920, Hill v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 179, 225 S. W. 521 (wife-murder; wife's declaration about prior beatings, etc., excluded); Virginia: 1912, Patterson v. Com., 114 Va. 807, 75 S. E. 737 (declarations as to prior conduct, excluded); 1921, Pendleton v. Com., — Va. —, 109 S. E. 201 (murder; dying declaration as to preceding circumstances, partly admitted, partly rejected); Washington: 1897, State v. Moody, 18 Wash. 165, 51 Pac. 356 (declaration as to a prior threat of defendant, excluded); 1919, State v. Swartz, 108 Wash. 21, 182 Pac. 954 (certain portions excluded, but too rigorously); Wyoming: 1903, Foley v. State, 11 Wyo. 464, 72 Pac. 627 (statement as to quarrels within the past two weeks, excluded).

§ 1435. [1] Accord: 1881, Reynolds v. State, 68 Ala. 506; 1903, Fuqua v. Com., — Ky. —, 73 S. W. 782; 1883, Payne v. State, 61 Miss. 163; 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 627; 1916, People v. Barrios, 23 P. R. 772; 1905, Lyles v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 119, 86 S. W. 763.

admission. The 'necessity' to which the text-books and the cases refer is not the exigency of any particular case, but a public necessity, which civilized society feels the pressure of, for the protection of human life by the punishment of manslayers. . . . [The evidence] is competent, not in a particular case, where the defendant could not otherwise be convicted, but in all cases, no matter how ample the evidence of identification through other sources may be."

This again shows the historical unsoundness of the spurious principle; for, had it originated in the reason given, the first and fundamental rule would have been to distinguish between cases in which other evidence was or was not attainable.

(2) Where the fact of the killing is conceded, the dying declaration, under the spurious principle, is by hypothesis unnecessary; nevertheless, this result is not recognized; the declaration is admitted, even where the killing is conceded.[2]

§ 1436. Foregoing Limitations Improper. All of the foregoing limitations, except the death of the declarant, are unsound; and for the following reasons:

(1) The orthodox policy of the Hearsay exceptions in general (ante, § 1421) is to interpret the "necessity" for the evidence as meaning, not the absence of other evidence from any source, but merely the absence of other evidence from the same source, i.e. the declarant. (2) The spurious principle, even so far as carried out, rests on wrong assumptions; for it is of as much consequence to the cause of justice that robberies and rapes be punished and torts and breaches of trust be redressed as that murders be detected; the notion that a crime is more worthy the attention of Courts than a civil wrong is a traditional relic of the days when civil justice was administered in the royal courts as a purchased favor, and criminal prosecutions in the king's name were zealously encouraged because of the fines which they added to the royal revenues. (3) The sanction of a dying declaration is equally efficacious whether it speaks of a murder or a robbery or a fraudulent will; and the necessity being the same, the admissibility should be the same. (4) The spurious principle is recognized as unworkable in logical strictness, and, when fairly carried out, comes into conflict with convenience and good sense. (5) Its limitations are heresies of the last century, which have not even the sanction of antiquity. They should be wholly abolished by legislation.[1]

[2] 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 305, 12 Pac. 441. Contra: 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390.

§ 1436. [1] Courts have here and there expressed dissatisfaction with these limitations: 1815, Taylor, C. J., in McFarland v. Shaw, 2 N. Car. L. Repos. 105; 1861, Davis, J., in Caujolle v. Ferrié, 23 N. Y. 94; 1869, McCay, J., in Wooten v. Wilkins, 39 Ga. 223; 1873, Barrows, J., in State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 195; 1917, Grace, J., in Ross v. Cooper, 38 N. D. 173, 164 N. W. 679.

In one jurisdiction the irrationality of these limitations has now been judicially recognized: 1914, Thurston v. Fritz, 91 Kan. 468, 138 Pac. 625 (action by an executor to recover the residue of a purchase price due to his testator; the sum paid was in dispute; the deceased had made a statement, when on the point of death, purporting to give "the truth about the sale of my farm to Mr. Fritz and Mr. Beal"; held admissible, Benson, J., diss.; liberal and rational opinion by West, J.; "we are confronted with a restrictive rule of evidence commendable only for its age"; the restrictions positively repudiated seem to be the restriction (1) to criminal cases, (2) to homicide issues, (3) to the details of a specific transaction).

Upon the policy of enlarging or retaining the present arbitrary limitations of the Exception, see the following interesting dis-

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee

§ 1438. In general; Solemnity of the Situation. All Courts have agreed, with more or less difference of language, that the approach of death produces a state of mind in which the utterances of the dying person are to be taken as freed from all ordinary motives to mis-state. The great dramatist expressed the common feeling long before it was sanctioned by judicial opinion.[1] In the following passages will be found the now classical sentences of the earlier English judges, as well as later ones pointing out clearly how the situation supplies a circumstantial guarantee of accuracy equivalent to that of the tests of oath and cross-examination:

1789, EYRE, C. B., in Woodcock's Case, Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 500: "The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted is that they are declarations made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death and when every hope of this world is gone; when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth; a situation so solemn and so awful is considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is created by a positive oath administered in a court of justice."

1837, ALDERSON, B., in Ashton's Case, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 147: "When a party comes to the conviction that he is about to die, he is in the same practical state as if called on in a court of justice under the sanction of an oath, and his declarations as to the cause of his death are considered equal to an oath, but they are nevertheless open to observation. For, though the sanction is the same, the opportunity of investigating the truth is very different, and therefore the accused is entitled to every allowance and benefit that he may have lost by the absence of the opportunity of more full investigation by the means of cross-examination."

1858, VOORHIES, J., in State v. Brunetto, 13 La. An. 45: "The reason for the rejection of hearsay evidence is that the party against whom it militates has not had the benefit of a cross-examination, and because the declarant did not speak under the sanction of an oath. An exception to this rule obtains in cases of dying declarations, the sense of impending dissolution being considered as offering the necessary guarantees that the declaration is in accordance with the truth."

1880, MULKEY, J., in Tracey v. People, 97 Ill. 106: "There are certain guarantees of the truth of dying declarations, growing out of the solemnity of the time and circumstances under which they are made, which in contemplation of law are supposed to compensate for the fact that they are not sanctioned by an oath and the party against whom they are used has had no opportunity to cross-examine."

1896, GRAY, J., in People v. Craft, 148 N. Y. 631, 43 N. E. 80 (the trial judge told the jury that a dying declaration "is given all the sanction which the law can give to evidence"): "Dying declarations are of the nature of hearsay, or second-hand, evidence. . . . It never has been, and it is not to be, supposed that they have all the guaranties which surround evidence given under oath in a court of justice. . . . It is, of course, true that such declarations are considered to be equal to an oath taken in a court of justice; but that is because cussion: Mr. Wilbur Larremore, in American Law Review, XLI, 660 (Sept.–Oct., 1907); Mr. Wm. A. Purrington, in Bench and Bar, XI, 91 (Dec., 1907); Mr. Larremore again, in Bench and Bar, XII, 39 (Jan., 1908).

§ 1438. [1] About 1595: King John, V, 4:

Melun: "Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here and live hence by truth?"

of the circumstances surrounding them when made. It is assumed that, being made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death, and believes that all hope in this world is gone, they have some guaranty for their truth, in view of the solemnity of the occasion, or as much as an oath in court would have. But it is clear that their value as evidence rests upon an assumption; and hence it is that, while the law recognizes the necessity of admitting such proof on a par with an oath in a court of justice, it does not and cannot regard it as of the same value and weight as the evidence of a witness given in a court of justice, under all the tests and safeguards which are there afforded for discovering the truth, the object of judicial inquiry;[2] for there the accused has the opportunity of more fully investigating the truth of the evidence by the means of cross-examination, and the jury have the opportunity of observing the demeanor of the person whose testimony is relied upon. The power of cross-examination is quite as essential, in the process of eliciting the truth, as the obligation of an oath; and where the life or the liberty of the defendant is at stake the absence of the opportunity for cross-examination is a serious deprivation; which differentiates in nature and in degree the evidence of a dying declaration from that which is direct and given upon the witness stand. . . . Speaking in a strict sense, the sanction of an oath and the sanction of such declarations are deemed to be the same, when the state of mind of the person is considered; but, as it was said by Baron Alderson, in Ashton's Case, 'though the sanction is the same, the opportunity of investigating the truth is very different, and therefore the accused is entitled to every allowance and benefit that he may have lost by the absence of the opportunity of more full investigation by the means of cross-examination.'"[3]

Such being the nature of the guarantee, certain rules follow from the principle.

§ 1439. Consciousness of the Approach of Death; Subsequent Confirmation. As the guarantee consists in the subjective effect of the approach of death, the declarant should appear to have had a consciousness of the approach of death:

1829, PARK, J., in R. v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598: "We allow the declaration of persons 'in articulo mortis' to be given in evidence, if it appear that the person making such declaration was then under the deep impression that he was soon to render an account to his Maker."

1869, RAY, J., in Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 199: "As this class of evidence forms an exception to the general rule; as there can be no cross-examination of the declarant; as the accused cannot often meet his accuser face to face; and as there must of necessity exist greater danger of abuse; it must clearly appear that the statements offered in evidence have been made under a full realization that the solemn hour of death has come."

[2] Accord: 1905, People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 79 Pac. 435; 1905, Zipperian v. People, 33 Colo. 134, 79 Pac. 1018; 1904, Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042; 1911, People v. Falletto, 202 N. Y. 494, 96 N. E. 355; 1914, State v. Riley, 98 S. C. 386, 82 S. E. 621 ("There is no presumption that [the declarant or] any witness will speak the truth; . . . [the declarant] has in legal contemplation been sworn and no more").

On this point, see also a good opinion in Lambeth v. State, 23 Miss. 322, 358 (1852).

[3] Compare also: 1844, Forrest v. Kissam, 7 Hill N. Y. 474, Forrest, Sen.; 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 374, Lumpkin, J.; 1855, Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 20, 21, Skinner, J., Scates, C. J.; 1858, Godfrey v. State, 31 Ala. 323, Rice, C. J.; 1859, State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. L. 329, O'Neall, J.; 1864, People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17, 24, Sanderson, C. J.; 1868, Whitley v. State, 38 Ga. 70, Harris, J.; 1871, Hill v. State, 41 Ga. 503, Lochrane, C. J.; 1871, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301, Chapman, C. J.; 1872, State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 14, Rodman, J.; 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 152, 13 Sup. 50, Fuller, C. J.

This consciousness must of course have been at the time of making the declaration.[1]

It follows, on the one hand, that a subsequent change of this expectation of death, by the recurrence of a hope of life, does not render inadmissible a prior declaration made while the consciousness prevailed,[2] although a repetition of the declaration during the subsequent inadequate state of mind would not be admissible;[3] and, on the other hand, that a declaration made during an inadequate state of mind may become admissible by a subsequent affirmance of it made when the realization of impending death had supervened.[4]

§ 1440. Certainty of Death. It follows, from the general principle, that the belief must be, not merely of the possibility of death, nor even of its probability, but of its certainty. A less stringent rule might with safety have been adopted;[1] but this is the accepted one.

The tests have been variously phrased; there must be "no hope of recovery"; "a settled expectation of death"; "an undoubting belief."[2] Their general § 1439. [1] 1835, R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 190; 1875, Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 195; 1876, May v. State, 55 Ala. 41; 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 618.

[2] 1881, R. v. Hubbard, 14 Cox Cr. 565; 1894, State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 773, 37 Pac. 174; 1893, State v. Shaffer, 23 Or. 555, 560, 32 Pac. 545.

[3] 1896, Carver v. U. S., 160 U. S. 553, 16 Sup. 388; 1899, State v. Sadler, 51 La. An. 1397, 26 So. 390 (statements made the day after admissible statements; excluded, because consciousness of impending death was not shown to continue; an illiberal ruling).

[4] 1872, R. v. Steele, 12 Cox Cr. 168, 170; 1894, Johnson v. State, 102 Ala. 1, 16 So. 99 (even though it is not read over to him); 1904, Sims v. State, 139 Ala. 74, 36 So. 138; 1901, Wilson v. Com., — Ky. —, 60 S. W. 400; 1902, Smith v. Com., 113 Ky. 19, 67 S. W. 32; 1920, Jackson v. Com., 189 Ky. 68, 224 S. W. 649; 1894, State v. Evans, 124 Mo. 397, 409, 28 S. W. 8; 1901, State v. Garth, 164 Ky. 553, 65 S. W. 275; 1910, State v. Peacock, 58 Wash. 41, 107 Pac. 1022 (but requiring great certainty in the declarant's reference to the prior statement).

Contra: 1901, Harper v. State, 79 Miss. 575, 31 So. 195 (no authority cited).

§ 1440. [1] In the following cases a strong probability only was required: 1765, Lord Byron's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 1205, 1206, semble; 1840, R. v. Perkins, 9 C. & P. 395 (before thirteen judges).

[2] Examples: ENGLAND: 1826, R. v. Craven, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 77 ("I am afraid, doctor, I shall never get better"; admitted); 1831, R. v. Crockett, 4 C. & P. 544; 1829, R. v. Simpson, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 78 ("I fear I am in great danger"; admitted); 1837, Ashton and Thorneley's Case, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 147 ("I think I will not recover", after a similar statement by the surgeon; admitted); 1838, Errington's Case, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 149 ("I think myself in great danger"; excluded); 1881, R. v. Osman, 15 Cox Cr. 1, 3 ("a settled hopeless expectation of immediate death"); 1888, R. v. Gloster, 16 Cox Cr. 471, 476; 1909, Perry's Case, 2 Cr. App. 267, 2 K. B. 697 ("a settled, hopeless expectation of death").

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1902, Milton v. State, 134 Ala. 42, 32 So. 653; 1904, Gregory v. State, 140 Ala. 16, 37 So. 259; 1916, Lightner v. State, 195 Ala. 687, 71 So. 469; California: 1880, People v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 77; 1881, People v. Taylor, 59 Cal. 648; 1882, People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 175; Colorado: 1893, Graves v. People, 18 Colo. 170, 176, 32 Pac. 63 (inadmissible, if there is an expection of recovery); Florida: 1870, Dixon v. State, 13 Fla. 640; 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232 ("no hope whatever", "entirely without hope"); 1901, Green v. State, 43 Fla. 552, 30 So. 798; Illinois: 1902, Collins v. People, 194 Ill. 506, 62 N. E. 902; Kansas: 1872, State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 288; Kentucky: 1904, Brown v. Com., — Ky. —, 83 S. W. 645; 1912, Biggs v. Com., 150 Ky. 675, 150 S. W. 803 ("he had a little hope"; excluded); Louisiana: 1904, State v. Harris, 112 La. 937, 36 So. 810 ("Bill Harris is my friend, and I don't want nothing done to him"; excluded); 1904, State v. Gianfala, 113 La. 463, 37 So. 30; Maryland: 1901, Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355; Massachusetts: 1781, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301; Michigan: 1896, People v. Beverly, 108 Mich. 509, 66 N. W. 379; 1896, People v. Weaver, 108 Mich. 649, 66 N. W. 567 ("I make these statements in full view of my probable death"; admitted); Mississippi: 1901, Harper v. State, 79 Miss. 575, 31 So. 195; 1912, Fannie v. State, 101 Miss. 378, 58 So. 2 ("make haste and get the doctor, I am going to die"; excluded); New York: 1903, People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333, 67 N. E. 624; South Carolina: 1900, effect is the same. The essential idea is that the belief should be a positive and absolute one, not limited by doubts or reserves; so that no room is left for the operation of worldly motives:

1851, PIGOT, C. B., in R. v. Mooney, 5 Cox Cr. 318: "These declarations would not be evidence unless she was under a clear impression that she was in a dying state."

1860, WILLES, J., in R. v. Peel, 2 F. & F. 22: "There must be a settled, hopeless expectation of death in the declarant."

1869, R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 Cr. C. R. 192; KELLY, C. B.: "The result of the cases is that there must be an unqualified belief in the nearness of death, a belief without hope that the declarant is about to die." BYLES, J.: "The authorities show that there must be no hope whatever."

1888, BEASLEY, C. J., in Peak v. State, 50 N. J. L. 222, 12 Atl. 701: "[The declarant] shall have a complete conviction that death is at hand. . . . Death, shortly to ensue, must be an absolute certainty, so far as the consciousness of the person making the declaration is concerned."

§ 1441. Speediness of Death. It follows, also, that the expectation must be of a speedy death. All men are mortal, and know it. An expectation of ultimate but distant death is obviously, in experience, not calculated to produce that sincerity of statement which is desired. Nevertheless, no definition of time can be fixed; the determination must vary with each case, after all the circumstances are considered:[1]

1829, HULLOCK, B., in R. v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 631: "A man may receive an injury from which he may think that he shall ultimately 'never recover'; but still that would not be sufficient to dispense with an oath."

1869, BYLES, J., in R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 Cr. C. R. 193: "In order to make a dying declaration admissible, there must be an expectation of impending and almost immediate death."

But the actual period of survival after making the declaration is immaterial. The necessary element is a subjective one, — the declarant's expectation;

State v. Jaggers, 58 S. C. 41, 36 S. E. 434; Tennessee: 1848, Smith v. State, 9 Humph. 17 ("fully conscious of that fact, not as a thing of surmise and conjecture or apprehension, but as a fixed and inevitable fact"); 1853, Brakefield v. State, 1 Sneed 218; Texas: 1905, Craven v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 78, 90 S. W. 311.

Asking for a physician does not necessarily show that there is hope of recovery: 1844, R. v. Howell, 1 Denison Cr. C. 1; 1894, McQueen v. State, 103 Ala. 12, 15 So. 824; 1904, Pitts v. State, 140 Ala. 70, 37 So. 101; 1904, State v. Bordelon, 113 La. 690, 37 So. 603; 1904, Hawkins v. State, 98 Md. 355, 57 Atl. 27; 1894, State v. Evans, 124 Mo. 397, 28 S. W. 8. Contra, but unsound: 1892, Matherly v. Com., — Ky. —, 19 S. W. 977.

§ 1441. [1] Eng. 1881, R. v. Osman, 15 Cox Cr. 1, 3 ("immediate death"); 1888, R. v. Gloster, 16 Cox Cr. 471, 477 (same); U. S. Ala. 1858, McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 323 ("that despair which is naturally produced by an impression of almost immediate dissolution"); 1898, Titus v. State, 117 Ala. 16, 23 So. 77 (that he "said he would die", insufficient; but "believed he would soon die", sufficient); D. C. 1893, U. S. v. Schneider, 21 D. C. 381, 404 ("speedily"); Fla. 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232 ("imminent and inevitable"); Ill. 1905, Brom v. People, 216 Ill. 418, 74 N. E. 790 (statement excluded on the facts); 1911, People v. Cassesse, 251 Ill. 422, 96 N. E. 274 (excluded on the facts); Kan. 1920, Vassar v. Swift & Co., 106 Kan. 836, 189 Pac. 943 ("impending and certain"); Ky. 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390 ("I shall not get well"; excluded on the facts); La. 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 ("bound to die", "could not live much longer"; received); Mo. 1893, State v. Welsor, 117 Mo. 570, 579, 21 S. W. 443 ("immediate dissolution"); R. I. 1897, State v. Dalton, 20 R. I. 114, 37 Atl. 673 ("impending", not necessarily "immediate"); P. I. 1914, U. S. v. Mallari, 29 P. I. 14, 19 (three days; admitted); S. C. 1914, State v. Riley, 93 S. C. 386, 82 S. E. 621.

and the subsequent duration of life, whatever it may turn out to be, has no relation to his state of mind when speaking:

1857, POLLOCK, C. B., in R. v. Reaney, 7 Cox Cr. 209, 212: "In truth, the question does not depend upon the length of interval between the death and the declaration, but on the state of the man's mind at the time of making the declaration and his belief that he is in a dying state."

Accordingly, there seems to be no case in which the time of survival was deemed to exclude the declaration; and various periods have been passed upon as not too long.[2]

§ 1442. Consciousness of approaching Death; how determined. In ascertaining this consciousness of approaching death, recourse should naturally be had to all the attending circumstances.

It has been contended that only the statements of the declarant himself could be considered for this purpose; or, less broadly, that the nature of the injury alone could not be sufficient, i.e., in effect, that the declarant must have shown in some way by conduct or language that he knew he was going to die. This, however, is without good reason. We may avail ourselves of any means of inferring the existence of such knowledge; and, if in a given case the nature of the wound is such that the declarant must have realized his situation, our object is sufficiently attained. Such is the settled judicial attitude:[1]

[2] 1834, R. v. Bonner, 6 C. & P. 386; 1869, R. v. Bernadotti, 11 Cox Cr. 316 (nearly three weeks' survival; admitted); 1893, Boulden v. State, 102 Ala. 78, 84, 15 So. 341 (two months' survival; admitted); 1880, Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 74; 1902, Burton v. Com., — Ky. —, 70 S. W. 831 (death eleven days later; admitted); 1920, Jackson v. Com., 189 Ky. 68, 224 S. W. 649 (27 days; admitted); 1879, State v. Daniel, 31 La. An. 95; 1862, Com. v. Cooper, 5 All. Mass. 497; 1871, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301; 1879, Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 457; 1897, State v. Craine, 120 N. C. 601, 27 S. E. 72 (five months before death, admitted); 1896, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (five days before death; admitted); 1921, Walker v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 389, 227 S. W. 308 (six weeks); 1875, Swisher's Case, 26 Gratt. Va. 971.

§ 1442. [1] Accord: CAN. 1873, R. v. Smith, 23 U. C. C. P. 316; U. S. Federal: 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 151, 13 Sup. 50; 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228 (the administration of extreme unction by a priest, admitted to show that the deceased knew she was dying); 1898, Re Orpen, 86 Fed. 760, 764; Ala. 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 674; Ark. 1841, Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 247; 1900, Newberry v. State, 68 Ark. 355, 58 S. W. 351; Ariz. 1897, Wagoner v. Terr., 5 Ariz. 175, 51 Pac. 145; Cal. 1882, People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 175; Conn. 1894, State v. Cronin, 64 Conn. 293, 302, 29 Atl. 536 ("Lord, have mercy"); Del. 1913, State v. Van Winkle, 4 Del. 132, 86 Atl. 310; Fla. 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232; Ga. 1852, Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 377; 1878, Dumas v. State, 62 Ga. 58; 1902, Young v. State, 114 Ga. 849, 40 S. E. 1000; 1920, Jones v. State, 150 Ga. 775, 105 S. E. 495; 1922, Thompson v. State, — Ga. —, 111 S. E. 651; Haw. 1893, Govt. v. Hering, 9 Haw. 181, 188; Ill. 1865, Murphy v. People, 37 Ill. 447, 456, semble; Ind. 1869, Morgan v. State, 31 Ind. 199; 1905, Gipe v. State, 165 Ind. 433, 75 N. E. 881; 1907, Williams v. State, 168 Ind. 87, 79 N. E. 1079; Ia. 1877, State v. Elliott, 45 Ia. 488; Ky. 1888, Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 496, 9 S. W. 509, 810; 1889, Com. v. Matthews, 89 Ky. 292, 12 S. W. 333; 1907, Kennedy v. Com., 30 Ky. L. 1063, 100 S. W. 242; 1915, Alsop v. Com., 164 Ky. 171, 175 S. W. 7 (quoting the above passage); 1918, Ulrich v. Com., 181 Ky. 519, 205 S. W. 586; La. 1857, State v. Scott, 12 La. An. 274; 1895, State v. Jones, 38 La. An. 792, 18 So. 515; Mass. 1871, Com. v. Roberts, 108 Mass. 301; Mich. 1882, People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 477, 12 N. W. 662; Miss. 1895, Bell v. State, 7 Miss. 507, 17 So. 232; Mo. 1894, State v. Evans, 124 Mo. 397, 28 S. W. 8; Mont. 1893, State v. Russell, 13 Mont. 164, 168, 32 Pac. 854; 1911, State v. Crean, 43 Mont. 47, 114 Pac. 603; Nebr. 1895, Collins v. State, 46 Nebr. 37, 64 N. W. 432; Nev. 1905, State v. Roberts, 28 Nev. 350, 82 Pac. 100; N. J. 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 500, 618; 1916, State v. Bovino, 89 N. J. L. 586, 99 Atl. 313; N. M. 1910, Terr. v. Eagle, 15 N. M. 609, 110 Pac. 862; N. C. 1855, State v. Shelton, 2 Jones L.

1789, EYRE, C. B., in Woodcock's Case, Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 500: "My judgment is that inasmuch as she was mortally wounded and was in a condition which rendered almost immediate death inevitable; as she was thought by every person about her to be dying, though it was difficult to get from her particular explanations as to what she thought of herself and her situation; her declarations made under these circumstances ought to be considered by a jury as being made under the impression of her approaching dissolution; for, resigned as she appeared to be, she must have felt the hand of death and must have considered herself as a dying woman."

1790, R. v. John, 1 East's Cr. L. c. 5, § 124, p. 358: all the judges agreed that "if a dying person either declare that he knows his danger, or it is reasonably to be inferred from the wound or state of illness that he was sensible of his danger, the declarations are good evidence."

1850, DARGAN, C. J., in Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 594: "The Court must look to all the circumstances under which they were made; and if they be sufficient to induce the belief that the deceased made them under the sense of impending death, the declarations are admissible."

It must be said, however, that in ascertaining generally the existence of a knowledge of approaching death, Courts are now and then found making rulings at which common sense revolts. Moved either by a disinclination to allow the slightest flexibility of rule on applying principles to circumstances or by a general repugnance to exceptions to the Hearsay rule, they have recorded decisions which can only be derided by laymen and repudiated by the profession.[2] It is the narrow and over-cautious spirit of such decisions

360; Or. 1893, State v. Fletcher, 24 Or. 295, 297, 33 Pac. 575; 1903, State v. Gray, 43 Or. 446, 74 Pac. 927; Pa. 1858, Kilpatrick v. Com., 31 Pa. 215; 1922, Com. v. Puntario, 271 Pa. 501, 115 Atl. 831 (approving the text above); Tenn. 1848, Smith v. State, 9 Humph. 20; 1914, Jollay v. State, 130 Tenn. 286, 170 S. W. 58; Tex. 1916, McKinney v. State, 80 Tex. Cr. 31, 187 S. W. 960; Va. 1831, Vass' Case, 3 Leigh 863.

Contra, semble: 1875, R. v. Morgan, 14 Cox Cr. 337 (Denman, J., and Cockburn, C J., thought that "there was no case in which the judge had admitted the statement entirely upon an inference drawn from the nature of the wound itself and from giving the deceased credit for ordinary intelligence as to its natural results", and offered to reserve the case, but the evidence was withdrawn; here the man's head was all but cut off, the windpipe and chief blood-vessels severed; being unable to speak, he motioned for paper and wrote on it; he died in ten minutes after writing; query, whether any but two lawyers could have doubted that the man was aware of his horrible plight?).

So, also, if the statement is taken in writing (post, § 1450), the writing need not contain a statement of the expectation of death: 1847, R. v. Hunt, 2 Cox Cr. 239; 1897, People v. Yokum, 118 Cal. 437, 50 Pac. 686, semble; 1897, Austin v. Com., — Ky. —, 40 S. W. 905.

[2] 1851, R. v. Mooney, 5 Cox Cr. 318 (the evidence was that "the clergyman had warned her to prepare for death; she had not told any person that she knew she was dying; but she had been heard recommending her soul to God"; Pigot, C. B., held that the proof of her being aware that she was dying was not sufficient); 1852, R. v. Nicolas, 6 Cox Cr. 121 (testimony: "I believe he knew he was dying. I cannot recollect that he said anything about dying before he began his statement. As he finished it, he said, 'Oh, God! I am going fast; I am too far gone to say any more'"; Cresswell, J.: "It being possible that this man did not discover the extent of his weakness till he had made the statement, and that it was only after he had made it he for the first time discovered that he was going fast, there is not, consequently, that clear ascertainment of his consciousness of his state, before he made it, to render it admissible"); 1904, State v. Knoll, 69 Kan. 767, 77 Pac. 580 (the deceased was assaulted on Feb. 19, died on Mar. 23, and declared on Mar. 7 "any hour, any day, he might die, and he had to die of the whipping of John K."; a priest administered the last rites; his declaration was excluded; "there is nothing indicating that he considered death imminent"; a brilliant 'tour de force' in judicial reasoning).

See also the following: 1835, R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 190; 1848, Smith v. State, 9 Humph. Tenn. 22, 23; 1854, R. v. Peltier, 4 Low. Can. 22.

For an example of liberal treatment, see Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 495, 9 S. W. 509, 810 (1888).

which tends to stunt the free development and application of living principles, to hamper the administration of justice, and to undermine public confidence in legal procedure; and no opportunity ought to be omitted of protesting against the manifestations of this spirit.

No rule can here be laid down.[3] The circumstances of each case will show

[3] In the following cases various states of fact, useless as precedents, were passed upon; the profession should not have been burdened by a judicial opinion on them:

ENGLAND: 1865, R. v. Smith, 10 Cox Cr. 82, 95; 1866, R. v. Forester, ib. 368; 1868, R. v. Mackay, 11 Cox Cr. 148; 1887, R. v. Smith, 16 Cox Cr. 170.

CANADA: 1897, R. v. Woods, 5 Br. C. 585, 589; 1903, R. v. Louie, 5 Br. C. 1, 7; 1910, R. v. Walker, 15 Br. C. 100; 1906, R. v. Magyar, 7 N. W. Terr. 491; 1907, R. v. Sunfield, 15 Ont. L. R. 252.

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1892, Justice v. State, 99 Ala. 180, 182, 13 So. 658; 1895, Cole v. State, 105 Ala. 76, 16 So. 762; 1895, Clark v. State, 105 Ala. 91, 17 So. 37; 1898, Fuller v. State, 117 Ala. 36, 23 So. 688; 1899, Dubose v. State, 120 Ala. 300, 25 So. 185; 1900, Gibson v. State, 126 Ala. 59, 28 So. 673; 1903, Smith v. State, 136 Ala. 1, 34 So. 168; 1904, Walker v. State, 139 Ala. 56, 35 So. 1011; 1907, McEwen v. State, 152 Ala. 38, 44 So. 619; 1909, Parker v. State, 165 Ala. 1, 51 So. 260; Arkansas: 1893, Evans v. State, 58 Ark. 47, 54, 22 S. W. 1026; 1907, Fogg v. State, 81 Ark. 417, 99 S. W. 537; 1921, Freeman v. State, 150 Ark. 387, 234 S. W. 267; California: 1899, People v. Fuhrig, 127 Cal. 412, 59 Pac. 693; 1901, People v. Lem Deo, 132 Cal. 199, 64 Pac. 265; 1903, People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 694, 72 Pac. 339; Colorado: 1905, Zipperian v. People, 33 Colo. 134, 79 Pac. 1018; 1918, Garcia v. People, 64 Colo. 172, 171 Pac. 754; Florida: 1900, Richard v. State, 42 Fla. 528, 29 So. 413; 1909, Copeland v. State, 58 Fla. 26, 50 So. 621; 1913, Bennett v. State, 66 Fla. 369, 63 So. 842; Georgia: 1898 Parks v. State, 105 Ga. 242, 31 S. E. 580; 1900, Wheeler v. State, 112 Ga. 43, 37 S. E. 126; 1905, Anderson v. State, 122 Ga. 161, 50 S. E. 46; 1911, Glover v. State, 137 Ga. 82, 72 S. E. 926; Idaho: 1916, State v. Fong Loon, 29 Ida. 248, 158 Pac. 233; Illinois: 1894, Simons v. People, 150 Ill. 66, 73, 36 N. E. 1019; 1897, Kirkham v. People, 170 Ill. 9, 48 N. E. 465; 1901, Hagenow v. People, 188 Ill. 545, 59 N. E. 242; 1908, Board v. Provident H. & T. S. Ass'n, 233 Ill. 216, 84 N. E. 218; 1920, People v. Haensel, 293 Ill. 33, 127 N. E. 181; 1922, People v. Savant, 301 Ill. 225, 133 N. E. 775; Indiana: 1900, Green v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637; Iowa: 1898, State v. Young, 104 Ia. 730, 74 N. W. 693; 1902, State v. Phillips, 118 Ia. 660, 92 N. W. 876; 1903, State v. Dennis, 119 Ia. 688, 94 N. W. 235; 1922, State v. Brooks, 192 Ia. 1107, 186 N. W. 46; Kansas: 1902, State v. Morrison, 64 Kan. 669, 68 Pac. 48; 1905, State v. Bonar, 71 Kan. 800, 81 Pac. 450, 484; 1918, State v. Smith, 103 Kan. 148, 174 Pac. 551; Kentucky: 1898, Jones v. Com., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 217; 1901, Barnes v. Com., 110 Ky. 348, 61 S. W. 733; 1904, Martin v. Com., — Ky. —, 78 S. W. 1104; 1907, Com. v. Hargis, 124 Ky. 356, 99 S. W. 348; 1910, Tibbs v. Com., 138 Ky. 558, 128 S. W. 871; 1913, Daniel v. Com., 154 Ky. 601, 157 S. W. 1127; 1915, Alsop v. Com., 164 Ky. 171, 175 S. W. 7 (quoting the above passage); 1916, Allen v. Com., 168 Ky. 325, 182 S. W. 176; 1917, Postell v. Com., 174 Ky. 272, 192 S. W. 39; 1922 Spencer v. Com., 194 Ky. 699, 240 S. W. 750; Louisiana: 1896, State v. Smith, 48 La. An. 533, 19 So. 452; 1899, State v. Sadler, 51 La. An. 1397, 26 So. 390; 1904, State v. Brown, 111 La. 696, 35 So. 818; 1904, State v. Bordelon, 113 La. 690, 37 So. 603; 1905, State v. Daniels, 115 La. 59, 38 So. 895; Maine: 1919, State v. Bordeleau, 118 Me. 424, 108 Atl. 464; Maryland: 1904, Hawkins v. State, 98 Md. 355, 57 Atl. 27; Massachusetts: 1895, Com. v. Brewer, 164 Mass. 577, 42 N. E. 92; Michigan: 1899, People v. Lonsdale, 122 Mich. 388, 81 N. W. 277; 1914, People v. Christmas, 181 Mich. 634, 148 N. W. 369; Mississippi: 1895, Bell v. State, 72 Miss. 507, 17 So. 232; 1898, Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 23 So. 210, 230, 76 Miss. 223, 25 So. 158; 1898, Joslin v. State, 75 Miss. 838, 23 So. 515; 1905, Ashley v. State, — Miss. —, 37 So. 960; 1905, Pryor v. State, — Miss. —, 39 So. 1012; Missouri: 1893, State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452, 461, 22 S. W. 378; 1893, State v. Johnson, 118 Mo. 491, 503, 24 S.W. 229; 1894, State v. Nocton, 121 Mo. 537, 549, 26 S. W. 551; 1899, State v. Garrison, 147 Mo. 548, 49 S. W. 508; 1905, State v. Brown, 188 Mo. 451, 87 S. W. 519; 1905, State v. Craig, 190 id. 332, 88 S. W. 641; 1907, State v. Kelleher, 201 Mo. 614, 100 S. W. 470; 1910, State v. Colvin, 226 Mo. 446, 126 S. W. 448; 1915, State v. Thomas, — Mo. —, 180 S. W. 886; 1918, State v. Livingston, — Mo. —, 204 S. W. 262; 1920, State v. Rozell, — Mo. —, 225 S. W. 931; 1922, State v. Shannon, — Mo. —, 237 S. W. 466; 1922, State v. Gore, — Mo. —, 237 S. W. 993; Montana: 1910, State v. Byrd, 41 Mont. 585, 111 Pac. 407; Nebraska: 1895, Basye v. State, 44 Nebr. 261, 63 N. W. 811; New York: 1908, People v. Del Vermo, 192 N. Y. 470, 85 N. E. 690; North Carolina: 1893, State v. Whitt, 113 N. C. 716, 720, 18 S. E. 715; 1896, State v. Finley, 118 N. C. 1161, 24 S. E. 495; whether the requisite consciousness existed; and it is poor policy to disturb the ruling of the trial judge upon the meaning of these circumstances.

§ 1443. Revengeful Feelings; Theological Belief. It remains to examine more closely the nature of the circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness. It is separable (as may be seen from the judicial language already quoted) into three elements. (1) The declarant, being at the point of death, "must lose the use of all deceit" — in Shakspeare's phrase. There is no longer any temporal self-serving purpose to be furthered. (2) If a belief exists in a punishment soon to be inflicted by a Higher Power upon human ill-doing, the fear of this punishment will outweigh any possible motive for deception, and will even counterbalance the inclination to gratify a possible spirit of revenge. (3) Even without such a belief, there is a natural and instinctive awe at the approach of an unknown future, — a physical revulsion common to all men, irresistible, and independent of theological belief. In view of these three elements, what may be laid down as to the condition of the declarant's mind at this moment before dissolution?

First, the declarant may exhibit such strong feelings of hatred or revenge that the effect of all the above influences appears to be lacking. If he is in such a frame of mind, the supposed guarantee of trustworthiness fails, and the declaration should not be admitted:[1]

1896, State v. Mace, 118 N. C. 1244, 24 S. E. 798; 1905, State v. Teachey, 138 N. C. 587, 50 S. E. 232; 1912, State v. Watkins, 159 N. C. 480, 75 S. E. 22; Oklahoma: 1909, Bilton v. Terr., 1 Okl. Cr. 566, 99 Pac. 163; 1910, Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 651, 108 Pac. 561; 1915, Morehead v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 62, 151 Pac. 1183; 1917, Paden v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 585, 165 Pac. 1155; 1917, Williams v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 189, 163 Pac. 279; 1919, Thompson v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 716, 184 Pac. 467; 1920, Palmer v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 187 Pac. 502; 1920, Williams v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 188 Pac. 890; 1921, Canty v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 531; 1922, Dick v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 205 Pac. 516; Oregon: 1874, State v. Garrand, 5 Or. 216, 218; 1904, State v. Gray, 43 Or. 446, 74 Pac. 927; Pennsylvania: 1894, Com. v. Silcox, 161 Pa. 484, 497, 29 Atl. 105; 1895, Com. v. Mika, 171 Pa. 273, 33 Atl. 65; Philippine Islands: 1906, U. S. v. Montes, 6 P. I. 443; 1908, U. S. v. Castellon, 12 P. I. 160; 1909, U. S. v. Gil, 13 P. I. 530; 1911, U. S. v. Jakan Tucko, 20 P. I. 235; 1912, U. S. v. Ramos, 23 P. I. 300, 307; South Carolina: 1880, State v. Belcher, 13 S. C. 459, 463; 1896, State v. Arnold, 47 S. C. 9, 24 S. E. 926; 1900, State v. Taylor, 56 S. C. 360, 34 S. E. 939; 1908, State v. McCoomer, 79 S. C. 63, 60 S. E. 237; 1908, State v. Gallman, 79 S. C. 229, 60 S. E. 682; 1908, State v. Franklin, 80 S. C. 332, 60 S. E. 953; 1916, State v. Thomas, 103 S. C. 316, 88 S. E. 20; 1918, State v. Brown, 108 S. C. 490, 95 S. E. 61; South Dakota: 1910, State v. Swenson, 26 S. D. 589, 129 N. W. 119; Tennessee: 1896, Lemons v. State, 97 Tenn. 560, 37 S. W. 552; 1918, Dickason v. State, 139 Tenn. 601, 202 S. W. 922; Texas: 1894, Meyers v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 204, 216, 26 S. W. 196; Virginia: 1901, O'Boyle v. Com., 100 Va. 785, 40 S. E. 121; 1912, Patterson v. Com., 114 Va. 807, 75 S. E. 737; Washington: 1894, State v. Eddon, 8 Wash. 292, 298, 36 Pac. 139; 1901, State v. Power, 24 Wash. 34, 63 Pac. 1112; Wisconsin: 1901, Hughes v. State, 109 Wis. 397, 85 N. W. 333.

In the following courts the determination of the trial judge is said to control: 1904, Sims v. State, 139 Ala. 74, 36 So. 138; 1907, Williams v. State, 168 Ind. 87, 79 N. E. 1079; 1899, Baker v. Com., — Ky. —, 50 S. W. 54; 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560; 1895, Basye v. State, 44 Nebr. 261, 63 Mo. 811; 1906, State v. Monich, 74 N. J. L. 522, 64 Atl. 1016 (the only question on review is whether there was any evidence to support the finding of admissibility).

§ 1443. [1] 1914, Reeves v. State, — Miss. —, 64 So. 836.

In Pendleton v. Com., — Va. — (1921), 109 S. E. 201, the Court takes occasion to correct a view expressed in Patterson v. Com., 114 Va. 816, 75 S. E. 740, where the above text was cited, but without foundation, in support of that view.

1880, MULKEY, J., in Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 105: "The fact sought to be shown [profane language] was important in another point of view. It strikes at the very foundation of the reasons upon which dying declarations are admitted at all. There are certain guaranties of the truth of dying declarations, growing out of the solemnity of the time and circumstances under which they are made. . . . It was clearly the right of the accused to show . . . that the deceased in making the statement was not in that frame of mind which the law presupposes and requires in such cases, . . . that the deceased . . . was in a reckless, irreverent state of mind, and entertained feelings of ill-will and hostility towards the accused."

Secondly, if we suppose the second element to be essential, and not merely usual, then a theological belief of a particular sort — a belief in a punishment in a future state — must be required. Yet if (as seems better) the third element — the physical revulsion peculiar to the moment — is to be regarded as the essential element of the guarantee, then the theological belief is immaterial. This distinction has not been expressly passed upon by the Courts. The majority of the few cases hold that the theological belief is material.[2]

But this question must be distinguished from that of the declarant's capacity to take an oath. If in the jurisdiction a witness is no longer affected by the common-law rule requiring an oath and the capacity to take an oath, i.e. the possession of a specific theological belief (post, § 1829), the declarant's belief is immaterial in determining his oath-capacity. But even where this common-law rule is abolished, his belief may still become material, with reference to the admissibility of this specific class of declaration. In several cases, however, the Courts, ignoring this double aspect of the question, have been satisfied with pointing out the abolition of the common-law rule affecting capacity to take the oath, and have without further question admitted the declarations.[3] In a few cases it is said that the declarant's belief goes only to [2] 1829, R. v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598 (Park, J.: "As this child was but four years old, it is quite impossible that she, however precocious in her mind, could have had that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such a declaration admissible. . . . [Her remark] does not show that she had any idea of a future state; indeed, I think that from her age we must take it that she could not possibly have had any idea of that kind"); 1880, Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 105 (Mulkey, J.: "The vital inquiry before the Court was as to the real condition of the mind of the deceased when making the statement under consideration. . . . The use of profane language immediately preceding the statement is hardly to be reconciled with the assumption that he was at the time of sound mind and impressed with a sense of almost immediate death. . . . It is hard to realize how any sane man who believes in his accountability to God can be indulging in profanity when at the same time he really believes that in a few short hours at most he will be called upon to appear before Him to answer for the deeds done in the body").

Accord: 1840, R. v. Perkins, 9 C. & P. 395 (dying declaration of a child of ten received; here he said that he expected "to go to hell if he told a lie, and to heaven if he told the truth"); 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 507, 620; 1918, State v. Agnesi, 92 N. J. L. 53, 104 Atl. 299 (belief in a Supreme Being or in a future state, etc.; failure to prove lack of such belief does not exclude the declaration; State v. Donnelly approved); 1829, Phillips, Evidence, 7th Eng. ed., 236; 1843, ib. C. & H.'s Notes, No. 457, p. 611.

Contra: 1871, Nesbit v. State, 43 Ga. 249 (Lochrane, C. J.: "If a man . . . [dies] without belief in God or in the divine revelation . . . his declarations would be admissible"); 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228, semble (disbelief in a future state of rewards and penalties does not exclude).

[3] 1872, People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 34 (Wallace, C. J.: "The common-law rule in that respect [incompetence of a witness lacking a religious sense of accountability] has been abrogated. It mattered not, therefore, upon the point of the mere competency of the evi-

the weight of his statements; but the Courts here seem still to have had in mind only the question of common-law competency to take an oath.[4]

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and other Independent Rules of Evidence, as applied to this Exception

There remain certain rules which do not arise from the Hearsay exception as such (ante, § 1424), but are merely instances of general principles otherwise established.

§ 1445. Testimonial Qualifications (Infancy, Insanity, Interest, Recollection, Leading Questions, Written Declarations, etc.). In general, for testimonial qualifications, the rules to be applied are no more and no less than the ordinary ones, already examined (§§ 483–812), for the qualifications of other witnesses:

1857, OGDEN, J., in Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 620: "Whatever would disqualify a witness would make such [dying] declarations incompetent testimony."

1864, SANDERSON, C. J., in People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 26: "They stand upon the same footing as the testimony of a witness sworn in the case, and are governed by the same rules, except as to . . . leading questions."

1874, CAMPBELL, J., in People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 434: "They [the declarations] are substitutes for sworn testimony, and must be such narrative statements as a witness might properly give on the stand if living."

1885, ELLIOTT, C. J., in Boyle v. State, 97 Ind. 322; 105 Ind. 470: "Dying declarations are admissible in a case where the evidence would be competent if the declarant were on the witness stand. . . . The question here is . . . whether the declarant's statement was one that a witness on the stand would have been allowed to make."

(1) Insanity, Infancy, Interest. If the declarant would have been disqualified to take the stand, by reason of infancy,[1] insanity,[2] or interest,[3] his extra-judicial declarations must also be inadmissible.

(2) Knowledge. The declarant must have had actual observation or opportunity for observation of the fact which he relates.[4] dence, even had it appeared that the deceased had no religious belief"); 1877, State v. Elliott, 45 Ia. 489 (the declarant "believed in no God or future conscious state"); 1880, State v. Ah Lee, 8 Or. 218.

[4] 1886, Hill v. State, 64 Miss. 440, 1 So. 494; 1861, Goodall v. State, 1 Or. 335.

§ 1445. [1] 1784, R. v. Drummond, Leach Cr. L. 4th ed. 337; 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650; for the general rules, see ante, § 492.

Distinguish R. v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598 (cited ante, § 1443, n. 1).

[2] 1898, Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 22 So. 188, 23 So. 210, 330, 76 Miss. 223, 25 So. 158 ("not insane or delirious, but spoke with discernment, reason, and intelligence"); 1897, State v. Reed, 137 Mo. 125, 38 S. W. 574 (possession of proper mental faculties need not be shown in advance); Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 808 (quoted ante, § 1430); for the general rules, see ante, § 519.

[3] 1806, Jackson v. Vredenburgh, 1 John. 159, 163; for the general rules, see ante, § 576.

For oath-capacity, see ante, § 1443.

[4] 1882, Walker v. State, 39 Ark. 225; 1889, Jones v. State, 52 Ark. 347, 12 S. W. 704 (declarations rejected because it was impossible for the declarant to have seen who shot him, and he had therefore no adequate source of knowledge); 1901, Jones v. State, 79 Miss. 309, 30 So. 759 (declaration, by one shot in the back through a window at night, that J. shot her, because he had said that he was going to do so, held inadmissible because of lack of personal knowledge; yet the declaration as to J.'s threat should have been admitted, as concerning a part of the transaction); 1897, State v. Reed, 137 Mo. 125, 38 S. W. 574 (admissible as to whatever the deceased could testify to if on the stand); 1919, State v. Wilks, 278 Mo. 481, 213 S. W. 118 ("C. W. shot me, and Virgil and Bill hired him to do it", excluded because the declarant could not have spoken

(3) Recollection. The declarant's capacity of recollection, and his actual recollection, must have been sufficiently unimpaired to be trustworthy.[5] The allowance of leading questions to stimulate recollection is sometimes here said to be by way of exception to the general rule against leading questions (ante, § 769). But in truth there seems to be no exception. The situation is not that of a presumably partisan witness offered in court, and questions leading in form will often have to be asked in order to obtain the information from a dying person unable to express himself except by a brief "yes" or "no." The mere fact, then, that questions leading in form are asked does not infringe the principle which forbids the supplying of a false memory (ante, § 778). There is thus no general rule here against leading questions.[6] Nevertheless, where, in a particular case, the interrogators might seem to be really supplying a false memory, the answers should be excluded.[7]

(4) Communication. (a) Any adequate method of communication, whether by words or by signs or otherwise, will suffice, provided the indication is positive and definite, and seems to proceed from an intelligence of its meaning:[8] the latter clause from personal observation); Com. v. Roddy, 184 Pa. 274, 39 Atl. 211 (dying identification of murderer; declarant held qualified on the facts).

For the general rules, see ante, § 656.

Compare the cases cited post, § 1447, some of which can be supported on the present principle.

[5] 1880, Mockabee v. Com., 78 Ky. 379 (the declarant affirmed a paper previously written, and this was admitted on condition that his memory as to its contents was then clear); 1856, Brown v. State, 32 Miss. 448 (Smith, C. J.: "There are strong reasons for believing that the deceased did not fully understand the declarations as read to him, or that his faculties were so much impaired by the wounds under which he suffered that he was incapable of remembering with distinctness or stating with accuracy the facts and circumstances of the rencontre which resulted in his death"); 1831, Vass' Case, 3 Leigh Va. 863, semble.

For the general rules, see ante, § 725.

[6] 1835, R. v. Fagent, 7 C. & P. 238; 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 152, 13 Sup. 50; 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 675; 1918, Sparks v. State, 19 Ariz. 455, 171 Pac. 1182; 1864, People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 26; 1919, State v. Perretta, 93 Conn. 328, 105 Atl. 690, semble; 1906, Park v. State, 126 Ga. 575, 55 S. E. 489; 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 (mere asking of specific questions does not exclude); 1901, Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355; 1916, Thompson v. State, 79 Tex. Cr. 478, 187 S. W. 204; 1885, People v. Callaghan, 4 Utah 49, 6 Pac. 49; 1908, State v. Clark, 64 W. Va. 625, 63 S. E. 402.

Contra: Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, §§ 788, 808 (see quotation ante, § 1430); 1908, Lockhart v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 589, 111 S. W. 1024.

[7] 1892, R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox Cr. 503, 507 (dying declarations made in answer to unrecorded questions, excluded, partly because the questions might have been leading); U. S. 1899, People v. Fuhrig, 127 Cal. 412, 59 Pac. 693 (long typewritten statement read over without stopping, and then assented to, excluded on the facts); 1915, People v. Kane, 213 N. Y. 260, 107 N. E. 655 (coroner's inquiries made by reading from a printed form the preliminary questions as to belief in impending death, etc., held not to exclude answers; but a warning is given against perfunctory methods); 1914, Jollay v. State, 130 Tenn. 286, 170 S. W. 58 (long written statement of a third person, read aloud by sentences; not decided).

Contra, semble: 1872, People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 116 (Campbell, J.: "Where they are taken under suspicious circumstances, or drawn out by doubtful means, they are not excluded, but go to the jury for what they are worth").

The following case belongs here: 1912, State v. Law, 150 Wis. 313, 136 N. W. 803, 137 N. W. 457 (statement made after the physician had refused to treat the deceased until she told what had happened to her, admitted).

[8] Eng. 1872, R. v. Steele, 12 Cox Cr. 168 (the deceased had told Dr. Patchett his story; then, when dying, and being asked what happened, he said, "Tell him, Patchett"; and P. repeated the story in the declarant's presence; P.'s statement was admitted; Lush, J.: "It is equivalent to saying it himself"); Br. C. 1903, R. v. Louie, 10 Br. C. 1, 3, 9 (nodding the head, held sufficient); U. S. Ala. 1858, McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 323 (the attorney put questions, the attending friends made answers, and the deceased nodded his head to them;

1880, HINES, J., in Mockabee v. Com., 78 Ky. 382: "Dying declarations are not necessarily either written or spoken. Any method of communication between mind and mind may be adopted that will develop the thought, as the pressure of the hand, a nod of the head, or a glance of the eye."

(b) When the declaration is in writing, the question may arise whether it is his narration at all (ante, § 799). If the declarant has written it, or has signed or otherwise approved it after reading it, or hearing it read aloud to him, it may be offered as his declaration.[9] Otherwise it is not his declaration; and it cannot in such a case be put in as being itself the dying person's declaration;[10] though it may of course be used to refresh the writer's recollection, or may be put in as embodying the writer's recollection (under the principles of §§ 744–764, ante).[11] Whether this writing must be offered, instead of an auditor's testimony by recollection, is a different question (examined post, § 1450).

§ 1446. Testimonial Impeachment and Rehabilitation. The dying declaration being in effect a testimonial statement made out of court (ante, § 1424), the declarant is open to impeachment and discrediting in the same way as other witnesses (ante, § 885), so far as such a process is feasible. Thus, impeachment by bad testimonial character (ante, § 922) is allowable,[1] or by excluded, the Court not believing on the facts "that he either perfectly understood the language or was able to have detected the erroneous inference as to his meaning which his friends may honestly have drawn"); 1858, Godfrey v. State, 31 Ala. 321 (the declarant merely nodded his head to questions by friends, his mind being also weak and lethargic at the time; rejected, because it did not appear that he understood their words or could know what they understood as his meaning); Ariz. 1897, Wagoner v. Terr., 5 Ariz. 175, 51 Pac. 145 (when asked why the defendant shot him, the deceased said, "You know why"; held admissible, when interpreted by the circumstances as applying to his wife's adultery with the defendant); Ky. 1919, Jones v. Com., 186 Ky. 283, 216 S. W. 607 (murder; answers by shaking the head, for "no", admitted); Mass. 1853, Com. v. Casey, 11 Cush. 420 (pointing with a finger, so as to convey a meaning clearly, held sufficient); N. Y. 1911, People v. Madas, 201 N. Y. 349, 94 N. E. 857 (deceased had a tube in his windpipe and could not articulate; answers by nods, admitted).

Compare Luby v. Com., 12 Bush 6 (1876).

For the general rules, see ante, §§ 789, 811.

It has been ruled that the expressions must be in form assertive, i.e. that mere exclamations are not to be admitted: 1874, People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 435. But this is without reason. If a definite assertive effect is conveyed the form is immaterial.

[9] 1898, Perry v. State, 109 Ga. 365, 30 S. E. 903 (that it is reduced to writing by another and signed by the deceased, does not exclude); 1900, Freeman v. State, 112 Ga. 48, 37 S. E. 172 (the deceased's signature is not necessary); 1896, State v. Parham, 48 La. An. 1309, 20 So. 727 (written by a physician, signed by the deceased, and authenticated by a magistrate, admitted); 1913, Updike v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 124, 130 Pac. 1107; 1885, People v. Callaghan, 4 Utah 49, 6 Pac. 49 (like the next case); 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526 (not signed, but assented to on hearing it read over; admitted); 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650 (the statement as written down need not be in the deceased's exact language).

[10] 1875, State v. Frunburg, 40 Ia. 557 (a running memorandum of the statement written by a magistrate, and not read over or signed by the declarant, held not admissible); 1903, Foley v. State, 11 Wyo. 464, 72 Pac. 627 (a memorandum not read over or signed by the deceased, and therefore usable only to refresh the writer's recollection, held not technically itself admissible).

[11] 1903, Fuqua v. Com., — Ky. —, 73 S. W. 782 (writing not signed by the deceased, used to aid the writer's memory); 1910, State v. Byrd, 41 Mont. 585, 111 Pac. 407 (statement taken down by a hearer, and signed by the declarant, though not read over, admitted as the witness' report of it).

§ 1446. [1] 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228; 1915, Carter v. State, 191 Ala. 3, 67 So. 981; 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232; 1896, Redd v. State, 99

conduct showing a revengeful or irreverent state of mind at the time (ante, § 950),[2] or by conviction of crime (ante, § 980),[3] or by prior or subsequent inconsistent statements (ante, § 1017).[4] So also he may be corroborated by evidence of similar consistent statements, so far as this is allowable by the principles of that subject (ante, § 1122).[5]

Technically, the victim of a crime is never a party in the criminal prosecution; hence, the statements of the deceased, exculpating the accused, in a homicide charge, are not receivable as admissions (ante, § 1076), but must satisfy some hearsay exception, usually the present one; probatively, however, they have as much real value as any party's admissions and should be received.

§ 1447. Rule against Opinion Evidence. The Opinion rule has no application to dying declarations. The theory of that rule (post, § 1918) is that, wherever the witness can state specifically the detailed facts observed by him, the inferences to be drawn from them can equally well be drawn by the jury, so that the witness' inferences become superfluous. Now, since the declarant is here deceased, it is no longer possible to obtain from him by questions any more detailed data than his statement may contain, and hence his inferences are not in this instance superfluous, but are indispensable.

Nevertheless, most Courts accept the Opinion rule as applicable.[1] More-

Ga. 210, 25 S. E. 268; 1898, Perry v. State, 102 Ga. 365, 30 S. E. 903.

So also for other impeaching qualities (ante, § 933): 1847, State v. Thawley, 4 Harringt. Del. 562 (admitting general evidence of his intemperate habits and of his low state of health at the time); 1904, Nordgren v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042 (declarant's character impeached by intemperate habits).

[2] 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228 (that the deceased did not believe in future rewards and punishments, admitted); 1904, Nordgen v. People, 211 Ill. 425, 71 N. E. 1042 (wife-murder; deceased declarant's malice and revengefulness to the accused, admitted); 1899, State v. O'Shea, 60 Kan. 772, 57 Pac. 970 (that the deceased "used profanity" just before his death, admitted); 1907, State v. Zorn, 202 Mo. 12, 100 S. W. 591 (whether the deceased's religious infidelity could be shown, not decided; that he did not want a minister to pray for him, held immaterial).

Contra: 1910, State v. Yee Gueng, 57 Or. 509, 112 Pac. 424 (that the deceased did not believe in future rewards and punishments, excluded).

Compare § 1443, ante.

[3] 1896, State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650; 1920, Liddell v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 193 Pac. 52. Compare § 1445, note 1, ante.

[4] The authorities are collected ante, § 1033, where the special objection to this kind of evidence, that no prior question can be asked of the declarant, is discussed in detail.

So also impeachment by contradiction (ante, § 1000) may be allowable: 1900, State v. Stuckey, 56 S. C. 576, 35 S. E. 263 (whether irrelevant facts in the declaration could be disproved for impeachment, as an exception to § 1003, ante; not decided).

[5] But the usual limitations seem to be not always strictly observed: 1858, People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32, 36 (even in chief, without any impeachment); 1879, State v. Blackburn, 80 N. C. 474, 478 (similar statements in support after impeachment by contradiction, admitted); 1897, State v. Craine, 120 N. C. 601, 27 S. E. 72 (an affidavit made on the same day, admitted).

§ 1447. [1] It must be noted that so far as the declarant's "opinion" is construable as a mere guess, not based on personal observation, it is inadmissible on other principles (ante, §§ 1445, 658), and this may account for some of the following rulings; others also may be supported on the rule (ante, § 1434), that the declarations must relate to the circumstances connected with the death: Alabama: 1893, Sullivan v. State, 102 Ala. 135, 142, 15 So. 264 ("he cut me for nothing", admitted; "I pray God to forgive him", excluded); 1901, Gerald v. State, 128 Ala. 6, 29 So. 614 ("he killed me for nothing", admitted); Arkansas: 1897, Berry v. State, 63 Ark. 382, 38 S. W. 1038 (that the whiskey which the defendant gave him was poisoned, excluded); 1908, Baker v. State, 85 Ark. 300, 107 S. W. 983; 1912, Rhea v. State, 104 Ark. 162, 147 S. W. 463 (as to who shot him; admitted on the facts): Florida: 1908, over, the rule is by some Courts applied here with more than the ordinary absurdity of results found in the use of that rule; some of the rulings, in their pedantic technicality, are a scandal to any system of Evidence supposed to be based on reason and common sense.

Gardner v. State, 55 Fla. 25, 45 So. 1028 ("She shot me a purpose", excluded); Georgia: 1868, Whitley v. State, 38 Ga. 70; 1897, White v. State, 100 Ga. 659, 28 S. E. 423 ("he shot me down like a dog", received); 1897, Kearney v. State, 101 Ga. 803, 29 S. E. 127 (that the wound was accidentally inflicted by the defendant, excluded); Indiana: 1874, Binns v. State, 46 Ind. 311; 1885, Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 472, 5 N. E. 203 (that there was no cause for the killing, allowable); 1898, Lane v. State, 151 Ind. 511, 51 N. E. 1056 (that the deceased made no attempt to injure the defendant, admitted); 1906, Shankenberger v. State, 154 Ind. 630, 57 N. E. 519 (that she was "poisoned by my mother-in-law", admitted); Iowa: 1866, State v. Nettlebush, 20 Ia. 257; 1900, State v. Wright, 112 Ia. 436, 84 N. W. 541 (that the defendant did not intend to shoot him, and that the defendant was crazy, excluded); 1902, State v. Sale, 119 Ia. 1, 92 N. W. 680, 95 N. W. 193 (declaration of deceased that "he was to blame", excluded; this well shows the absurdity of applying the Opinion rule here); 1913, State v. Klute, 60 Ia. 170, 140 N. W. 864 ("He just deliberately shot me", etc., admitted); Kansas: 1899, State v. O'Shea, 60 Kan. 772, 57 Pac. 970 (that the deceased and the defendant were the "best of friends", etc., excluded); Kentucky: 1876, Collins v. Com., 12 Bush 272; 1889, Com. v. Matthews, 89 Ky. 293, 12 S. W. 333; 1898, Jones v. Com., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 217 (that the defendant had shot him "for nothing", excluded); 1903, Henderson v. Com., — Ky. —, 72 S. W. 781 ("I know that one of the two shot me", admitted); 1916, Cavanaugh v. Com., 172 Ky. 799, 190 S. W. 123 ("I was shot without cause", "he shot me just because he could", excluded); 1922, Rooney v. Com., 193 Ky. 723, 237 S. W. 403 (murder; "he shot me for nothing", held inadmissible); Louisiana: 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 ("that he was to blame with his own death", admitted, the accused offering them); Mississippi: 1883, Payne v. State, 61 Miss. 163; 1897, Powers v. State, 74 Miss. 777, 21 So. 657 ("You have killed me without cause", admitted); 1898, Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 22 So. 188, 23 So. 210, 76 Miss. 223, 25 So. 158 ("(1) I am going to die; I have been dead; the good Lord has sent me back to tell you that (2) Dr. L. has killed me, has poisoned me with a capsule he gave me to-night, (3) that G. J. had insured his life, and had hired Dr. L. to kill him"; these words were uttered between convulsions; held, by a majority that (1) and (3) could be separated, and that (2) was admissible, not being opinion evidence, Magruder, J., diss.; the dissenting opinion is a pitiable instance of the barren quibbling to which this question leads; and the reprehensible practice of allowing a minority judge to write the chief opinion makes it difficult to unearth the points decided; in 'Ex parte' Jack, Miss., 22 So. 188, a habeas corpus proceeding arising out of this death, the same declaration was used; see the comments of Mr. Blewett Lee, in "Psychic Phenomena and the Law", 34 Harvard Law Rev. 636); 1905, Walton v. State, 87 Miss. 296, 39 So. 689 (why the defendant shot the deceased; excluded); Montana: 1911, State v. Crean, 43 Mont. 57, 114 Pac. 603 (that the defendant shot without provocation, etc., allowed); New York: 1875, People v. Shaw, 63 N. Y. 40; 1878, Brotherton v. People, 75 N. Y. 159; North Carolina: 1872, State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12, 17 ("It was E. W. who shot me, though I did not see him", excluded); 1896, State v. Mace, 118 N. C. 1244, 24 S. E. 798 ("They have murdered me", solemnly held not to be "an expression of opinion with respect to the degree of the homicide"); 1902, State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808, 42 S. E. 944 (that the assailant looked like defendant, allowed); 1912, State v. Watkins, 159 N. C. 480, 75 S. E. 22 ("I have done nothing to be shot for", admitted); 1914, State v. Williams, 168 N. C. 191, 83 S. E. 714 (that he was shot "without cause", admitted, Walker, J., diss.; the long opinions exhibit the profound mental slavery which the Opinion rule imposes on judicial action); Ohio: 1870, Wroe v. State, 20 Oh. St. 469; Oklahoma: 1910, Blair v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 359, 111 Pac. 1003 (not decided); Oregon: 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 305, 12 Pac. 441 ("he shot me down like a dog", admitted); 1893, State v. Foot You, 24 Or. 61, 75, 32 Pac. 1031, 33 Pac. 537 (positive identification, admitted; opinion in general excluded); South Carolina: 1900, State v. Lee, 58 S. C. 335, 36 S. E. 706 ("he shot me for nothing", admitted); Texas: 1905, Wilson v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 50, 90 S. W. 312 ("They killed me for nothing", admitted; prior rulings cited); 1908, Lockhart v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 589, 111 S. W. 1024 ("He killed me for nothing", admitted, by a majority; Davidson, P. J., diss.); 1918, Davis v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. 539, 204 S. W. 652 ("He was to blame", admitted); Utah: 1897, State v. Kessler, 15 Utah 142, 49 Pac. 293 ("he shot me down like a rabbit", admitted); 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526 (a statement as to the intent of a person performing an operation on the womb of a deceased, excluded on the principle of § 1964, post); Virginia: 1921, Pendleton v. Com., — Va. —, 109 S. E. 201

§ 1448. Rule of Completeness. The application of the doctrine of Completeness (post, § 2094) is here peculiar. The statement as offered must not be merely a part of the whole as it was expressed by the declarant; it must be complete as far it goes. But it is immaterial how much of the whole affair of the death is related, provided the statement includes all that the declarant wished or intended to include in it. Thus, if an interruption (by death or by an intruder) cuts short a statement which thus remains clearly less than that which the dying person wished to make, the fragmentary statement is not receivable, because the intended whole is not there, and the whole might be of a very different effect from that of the fragment; yet if the dying person finishes the statement he wishes to make, it is no objection that he has told only a portion of what he might have been able to tell:[1]

1873, BARRETT, J., in State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308, 313: "What we understand is . . . not that the declarant must state every thing that constituted the 'res gestæ' of the subject

(Sims, J.: "The true principle would seem to be that the dying declaration is not inadmissible in evidence merely because it states a conclusion of facts"); 1915, Pippin v. Com., 117 Va. 919, 86 S. E. 152 ("He done it a-purpose", admitted; approving the rule as stated in the text above); Washington: 1894, State v. Gile, 8 Wash. 12, 22, 35 Pac. 417 (that he was "butchered", admitted); West Virginia: 1900, State v. Burnett, 47 W. Va. 731, 35 S. E. 983 (a declaration that "I think C. B. did the shooting, because he has threatened to do it", excluded as opinion: here properly excluded, on the principle of § 658, ante); Wyoming: 1912, Hollywood v. State, 19 Wyo. 493, 120 Pac. 471 ("Jack was not to blame; it was all my fault", excluded).

Are not some of these exclusion-rulings equal to any of the medieval witch-formulas and conjurers' spells, as a means of getting at the truth?

§ 1448. [1] Accord: Ala. 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 675 ("the declaration in this case was complete, and it is not shown that he intended or desired to connect it with any other fact or circumstance explanatory of it"; admitted); Ga. 1906, Park v. State, 126 Ga. 575, 55 S. E. 489; Ind. 1846, Ward v. State, 8 Blackf. 101, 102 (the substance suffices); Ia. 1866, State v. Nettlebush, 20 Ia. 260; La. 1898, State v. Ashworth, 50 La. An. 94, 23 So. 270 (the statement must be complete "to the extent that the deceased desired to make it"; but that it consists of several remarks between which other conversation took place is immaterial); 1901, 1902, State v. Carter, 106 La. 407, 30 So. 895, 107 La. 792, 32 So. 183 ("a dying declaration must go in as a whole, and is not rendered inadmissible because some of its statements of themselves, and if standing alone, would be inadmissible"); Miss. 1850, Nelms v. State, 13 Sm. & M. 505 (the substance of his statement suffices); 1906, Cooper v. State, 89 Miss. 351, 42 So. 666 (declaration reported in part only, excluded); Mo. 1893, State v. Johnson, 118 Mo. 491, 504, 24 S. W. 229 (obscure statement); 1922, State v. Brinkley, — N. C. —, 110 S. E. 783 (the deceased "became too weak to tell the whole story"; admitted); Va. 1831, Vass' Case, 3 Leigh 864; 1870, Jackson v. Com., 19 Gratt. 668.

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 2097, 2099.

If a part only is proved, the opponent may prove the remainder: 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 152, 13 Sup. 50; 1910, Beaty v. Com., 140 Ky. 230, 130 S. W. 1107; compare the cases cited post, § 2115.

If the statement was given by answers to questions put, it is not indispensable that the questions should be offered also; Can. 1903, R. v. Louie, 10 Br. C. 1, 8; 1906, R. v. Magyar, 7 N. W. Terr. 491 (questions and answers merged into narrative form, read over to deceased, and signed by him, admitted); U. S. 1900, Com. v. Birriolo, 197 Pac. 371, 47 Atl. 355 (a dying statement written down by another person may be used, though it contained the answers only and not the questions). But the questions may properly be included: 1919, State v. Parretta, 93 Conn. 328, 105 Atl. 690 ("The entire conversation, question and answer, should be given so far as possible").

The following belongs here: 1904, Boyd v. State, 84 Miss. 414, 36 So. 525 (wife-murder by poison; her statement to the doctor "I have taken nothing except what you gave me", admitted; but the question by the doctor "I told her her husband was under suspicion, and it was her duty to tell me if she had taken anything herself", excluded; this seems unsound, because the answer was an implied adoption of the question, and the only doubt could be whether she was qualified to accuse the husband).

of his statement, but that his statement of any given fact should be a full expression of all that he intended to say as conveying his meaning as to such fact."

§ 1449. Rule of Producing Original of a Document. The rule that, where a writing is desired to be proved, the original must be produced or else accounted for (ante, § 1179), applies here as everywhere, and is not disputed.[1] It must be noted, however, that this rule applies even where the document is not regarded (under the principle of the following section) as the exclusive evidence of the declaration. That is, if in such a jurisdiction a bystander's oral account of the declaration is offered, the writing need not be produced; but if it is the substance of the contents which he purports to give, the absence of the writing must first be accounted for; the general principle is explained ante, § 1231.

§ 1450. Rule of Preferring Written Testimony. The principles which determine whether a written report of another person's statement is to be preferred to oral testimony, and must therefore be produced, have already been examined in their general applications (ante, §§ 1326, 1332). It is, however, more convenient to consider here their application to dying declarations.

(a) Where an auditor of a dying declaration makes in written form a note or report of the oral utterances, this written statement of the auditor is not preferred evidence, and need not be produced; for there is not and never was any principle of evidence preferring a person's written memorandum of testimony to his or another's oral or recollection testimony.[1] Nor is the case different when the person thus making the written report was a magistrate having power to administer oaths or take testimony on a preliminary examination;[2] for such a person has no duty or authority by law to report dying declarations, and it would be solely by virtue of an express duty that a magistrate's report could be preferred to other witnesses (ante, § 1236).

(b) Where a written memorandum or report thus made is read over to the declarant and signed or assented to by him, the writing thus becomes a second and distinct declaration by him. The first oral statement is not merged in § 1449. [1] 1908, Gardner v. State, 55 Fla. 25, 45 So. 1028 (justice of the peace's copy of his original, held improperly used).

§ 1450. [1] To the following add the cases in note 3, infra, as also involving the same ruling: 1885, Anderson v. State, 79 Ala. 5, 8 (declaration reduced to writing, but not read over to deceased or signed; writing not preferred); 1903, Jarvis v. State, 138 Ala. 17, 34 So. 1025 (similar); 1910, Mixon v. State, 7 Ga. App. 805, 68 S. E. 315 (bystander's written report, not preferred); 1879, State v. Sullivan, 51 Ia. 142, 146, 50 N. W. 572 (declaration reduced to writing but not signed; writing not preferred); 1885, State v. Holcomb, 86 Mo. 371, 377 (written down by another, writing not preferred); 1881, Allison v. Com., 99 Pa. 17, 33 (declaration reduced to writing, but not read over to the deceased nor signed; writing not preferred).

Contra: 1880, Epperson v. State, 5 Lea Tenn. 291, 297 (where there is but one declaration, and a bystander reduces it to writing, this is preferred; but perhaps not, in proving "an independent declaration at the same interview"). The question came up, but was avoided, in 1765, in Lord Byron's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 1222.

[2] 1907, Mitchell v. State, 82 Ark. 324, 101 S. W. 763; 1906, Brennan v. People, 37 Colo. 256, 86 Pac. 79; 1838, Beets v. State, Meigs Tenn. 106, semble (written notes of a dying declaration sworn to before a justice, not preferred).

Contra. 1722, R. v. Reason and Tranter, 16 How. St. Tr. 33 (assumed by all the judges as law, quoted in note 5, infra).

For the rule that the magistrate must be called to the stand, and not merely his writing used, see post, § 1667.

the later written one, because, since the transaction is not a contract or other legal act between two parties thereto, the rule of Integration, or Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2425), has no application. The first and oral declaration is therefore provable without producing the later written one.[3] Nevertheless, the majority of Courts, accepting the superficial analogy of the Parol Evidence rule or of Depositions (ante, §§ 799, 802), require the writing to be used, excluding testimony to the oral statement.[4] It may be noted that of course so far as the proponent is offering to prove the terms of the writing, not of the oral utterance, the writing must be produced (ante, § 1449).

(c) Where the declarant makes one oral statement, and afterwards at another time a second statement, the latter being in writing or reduced to writing, there are here two distinct statements, and either one may be offered without testifying to the other; for the principle of Completeness (ante, § 1448) requires only that the whole of a single utterance should be offered together, and in the present instance the declarant, though referring to the same occurrence, is nevertheless making distinct statements, each of which is independently admissible. It is thus clear (1) that separate oral utterances are admissible, even though the written one has been proved; (2) that, even before or without proving the written one, the separate oral ones are admissible, — though on the latter point the Courts are not always explicit.[5]

[3] 1904, Sims v. State, 139 Ala. 74, 36 So. 138 (the writing not preferred, if not signed; repudiating the contrary intimation in Boulden v. State, infra, n. 4); 1894, State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 37 Pac. 174; 1879, Com. v. Haney, 127 Mass. 455 (declarations reduced to writing and signed by deceased; the writer allowed to testify to oral declarations, using the writing to refresh his memory; Ames, J.: "The words used by the deceased were none the less primary evidence for having been taken down by a bystander in writing; they may be testified to by any one who heard and remembers them; the written statement was a contemporary memorandum of what he said"); 1892, State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 697, 16 S. E. 332 (declaration taken in writing by A, and used by A to refresh memory; writing not the preferred evidence, though signed and sworn to by deceased); 1838, Beets v. State, Meigs Tenn. 106, semble (cited in note 2, supra).

Not decided: 1906, Willoughby v. Terr., 16 Okl. 577, 86 Pac. 56.

That the writing may also be used, under the ordinary rules, to refresh the witness' memory, see ante, §§ 759 ff.

[4] 1835, R. v. Gay, 7 C. & P. 230, Coleridge, J. (declaration taken down, then signed by the declarant; the writing preferred to the writer's oral testimony); 1893, Boulden v. State, 102 Ala. 78, 84, 15 So. 341 (declaration "reduced to writing" in an unspecified way, preferred, if available); 1858, People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32, 37 (declaration reduced to writing and signed, preferred to oral testimony; oral declarations at a different time also allowed, the written one being first proved); 1860, State v. Tweedy, 11 Ia. 350, 359 (declaration reduced to writing at the time and signed; the writing preferred; but oral statements at other times admissible); 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390; 1892, King v. State, 91 Tenn. 617, 650, 20 S. W. 169; 1906, Phillips v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 127, 94 S. W. 1051, semble (writing assented to; the opinion is faultily inconsistent); 1876, People v. Tracy, 1 Utah 343, 346 (called "the best evidence"; here signed by the declarant); 1908, State v. Clark, 64 W. Va. 625, 63 S. E. 402.

[5] ENGLAND: 1722, R. v. Reason, and Tranter, 16 How. St. Tr. 33 (Pratt, L. C. J.: "You know in the Court of Chancery, when the party is examined on his oath, he gives in a first answer, and on exceptions taken to it he gives in a second, and so a third; all these are taken but as one answer and entire confession of the party. . . . [Now in this case of alleged murder] this minister came to enquire of this [dying] gentleman about the circumstances of his death; after that, the same gentleman is present when the justices of the peace come; thereupon the justices of the peace desire him to take it in writing; he asks the same questions as he did before, and they are taken in writing; he takes it designing to make the first examination more authentic to charge the person that gives the examination. Now really, when all this is done, the examination

(d) That a magistrate's report of the declaration should be regarded as conclusive, so as to forbid a showing by other testimony of what was really said by the declarant, has already been noted as an unsound principle (ante, § 1349). It seems not to have been applied to dying declarations.

§ 1451. Judge and Jury. (a) That the judge is to pass on the preliminary conditions necessary to the admissibility of evidence is unquestioned (post, § 2550). It follows, as of course, that, since a consciousness of impending death is according to the foregoing principles legally essential to admissibility, the judge must determine whether that condition exists before the declaration is admitted.[1] of him before the justice, taken in writing by the same person that enquired of him before, and all this done in order to perfect and consummate the examination, whether you will not take them both together as one entire account given by the deceased?"; Fortescue, J., thought differently: "I think we should allow what was said at other times to be given in evidence, because the first is no examination, because no justice of the peace then present, so that the examination stands distinctly by itself", and this opinion prevailed).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1859, Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36, 44 (declarations made on three different occasions, on the last two being reduced to writing; the first statements received, without producing the others); California: 1858, People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32, 37 (see note 4, supra); 1868, People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 49; 1900, Morrison v. State, 42 Fla. 149, 28 So. 97 (any one of separate written statements, admissible without the others); Illinois: 1898, Dunn v. People, 172 Ill. 582, 50 N. E. 137 (statements at several times; reduction to writing on one occasion does not exclude oral testimony of the statements "on other occasions"); Indiana: 1898, Lane v. State, 151 Ind. 511, 51 N. E. 1056 (other and oral statements not excluded); 1860, State v. Tweedy, 11 Ia. 350, 359 (see note 4, supra); Kentucky: 1903, Hendrickson v. Com., — Ky. —, 73 S. W. 674 (other statements made "about or subsequent to the drafting" of the paper signed by the deceased, admitted); 1907, Cleveland v. Com., — Ky. —, 101 S. W. 93 (like Hendrickson v. Com.); Louisiana: 1904, State v. Gianfala, 113 La. 463, 37 So. 30; Michigan: 1882, People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474, 478, 12 N. W. 662 (oral declarations at different times, admissible, semble); Oklahoma: 1911, Morris v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 29, 115 Pac. 1030; 1913, Addington v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 703, 130 Pac. 311 (both are admissible); Tennessee: 1880, Epperson v. State, 5 Lea 291, 297, semble (see note 1, supra); Texas: 1902, Herd v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 575, 67 S. W. 495 (other statements, made at the same time with one reduced to writing and signed, held admissible; Henderson, J., diss.); 1910, Hunter v. State, 59 Tex. Cr. App. 439, 129 S. W. 125 (cases reviewed); Utah: 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526 (oral declarations, afterwards reduced to writing and assented to; all admissible); 1910, State v. Vance, 38 Utah 1, 110 Pac. 434 (an oral statement, made after the written one, also received).

§ 1451. [1] Eng. A contrary ruling was made by L. C. B. Eyre, in 1790, R. v. Woodcock, Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 563; but this was subsequently repudiated in England, and the principle as stated above does not seem to have been since doubted: 1816, R. v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 521 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., said this was the "unanimous opinion" of the judges here, on a consultation from Ireland; "it might as well," Mr. Starkie adds, "be left to a jury to say whether a witness ought to be sworn, or whether he is not incapacitated by ignorance or infamy or any other cause from giving evidence upon oath"); Br. C. 1904, R. v. Abo, 11 Br. C. 114 (but it is not incumbent on the judge to exclude the jury "during the inquiry as to admissibility"); U. S. Ark. 1916, Paul v. State, 125 Ark. 209, 188 S. W. 555; Ill. 1914, People v. Hotz, 261 Ill. 239, 103 N. E. 1007; Ind. 1907, Williams v. State, 168 Ind. 87, 79 N. E. 1079; Ky. 1906, Coyle v. Com., 122 Ky. 781, 93 S. W. 584 (the judge alone passes on admissibility; good opinion, by Nunn, J.); La. 1916, State v. Buchanan, 140 La. 420, 73 So. 253 (and must listen to opposing evidence if offered); Mass. 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560; Mo. 1907, State v. Zorn, 202 Mo. 12, 100 S. W. 591 ("the jury have absolutely nothing to do with their admissibility"); 1908, State v. Crone, 209 Mo. 316, 108 S. W. 555 (State v. Zorn approved); 1915, State v. Thomas, — Mo. —, 180 S. W. 886; N. J. 1906, State v. Monich, 74 N. J. L. 522, 64 Atl. 1016 ("In our opinion the question admits of but one answer; . . . [the condition of admissibility] is not reviewable by the jury"; prior cases considered; lucid opinion by Pitney, J).; N. Y. 1887, People v. Smith, 104 N. Y. 491, 504, 10 N. E. 873 ("It cannot be left to the jury [in the first instance] to say whether the deceased thought he was dying or not, for that must be decided by the judge before he permits the declaration to be given in evidence"); Okl. 1915, Morehead v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 62, 151 Pac. 1183.

(b) After a dying declaration, or any other evidence, has been admitted, the weight to be given to it is a matter exclusively for the jury. They may believe it or may not believe it; but, so far as they do or do not, their judgment is not controlled by rules of law. Therefore, though they themselves do not suppose the declarant to have been conscious of death, they may still believe the statement; conversely, though they do suppose him to have been thus conscious, they may still not believe the statement to be true. In other words, their canons of ultimate belief are not necessarily the same as the preliminary legal conditions of Admissibility, whose purpose is an entirely different one (ante, § 29). It is therefore erroneous for the judge, after once admitting the declaration, to instruct the jury that they must reject the declaration, or exclude it from consideration, if the legal requirement as to consciousness of death does not in their opinion exist. No doubt they may reject it, on this ground or on any other;[2] but they are not to be expected to follow a definition of law intended only for the judge. Nevertheless, this heresy has obtained sanction in some jurisdictions;[3] it is analogous to that already discussed in reference to a jury's use of confessions (ante, § 861).

So also for the opinion rule: 1901, Jones v. State, 79 Miss. 309, 30 So. 759 (whether a declaration is matter of opinion is for the Court to determine before submission to the jury; State v. Williams, N. C., infra, note 2, distinguished).

For the trial judge's discretion, see ante, § 1442, n. 3, at the end.

The statement that the judge must be satisfied, as to admissibility, "beyond a reasonable doubt", is sometimes made: 1911, People v. White, 251 Ill. 67, 95 N. E. 1036. But this is thoroughly unsound.

[2] Ark. 1907, Fogg v. State, 81 Ark. 417, 99 S. W. 537; Ga. 1899, Bush v. State, 109 Ga. 120, 34 S. E. 298 (the jury, "in passing upon the value and weight of the evidence", are to consider whether declarant was at the point of death and conscious of it); Ill. 1911, People v. White, 251 Ill. 67, 95 N. E. 1036; Ia. 1902, State v. Phillips, 118 Ia. 660, 92 N. W. 876 (the jury are to reconsider it under all the circumstances); Ky. 1914, Com. v. Johnson, 158 Ky. 579, 165 S. W. 984; Me. 1919, State v. Bordeleau, 118 Me. 424, 108 Atl. 464 (question left undecided); Mo. 1898, State v. Sexton, 147 Mo. 89, 48 S. W. 452 (the judge passes on admissibility, but the jury may be allowed to weigh the value); 1907, State v. Zorn, 202 Mo. 12, 100 S. W. 591; N. J. 1907, State v. Barnes, 75 N. J. L. 426, 68 Atl. 145 (compare this with State v. Biango, infra, n. 3, handed down a week earlier: such inconsistency points to one-man opinions in this Court); 1910, State v. Leo, 80 N. J. L. 21, 77 Atl. 523 (judge passes upon admissibility); N. C. 1872, State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12, 17 (the judge must pass on admissibility); Okl. 1921, Canty v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 531.

[3] Cal. 1905, People v. Thompson, 145 Cal. 717, 79 Pac. 435; 1920, People v. Rulla Lingh, 182 Cal. 457, 188 Pac. 987; Ga. 1876, Jackson v. State, 56 Ga. 235 (instruction to the jury to decide whether the statement was made at the point of death, held proper); 1878, Dumas v. State, 62 Ga. 58, 62 (same); 1899, Smith v. State, 110 Ga. 255, 34 S. E. 204 (instruction that, if jury thought the declarant not at point of death nor conscious of it, they must not consider the declaration, held proper); 1903, Anderson v. State, 117 Ga. 255, 43 S. E. 835; 1903, Smith v. State, 118 Ga. 61, 44 S. E. 817; 1906, Findley v. State, 125 Ga. 579, 54 S. E. 106; 1908, Jones v. State, 130 Ga. 274, 60 S. E. 840; 1920, Thomas v. State, 150 Ga. 269, 103 S. E. 244; Mass. 1895, Com. v. Brewer, 164 Mass. 577, 42 N. E. 92 (an instruction "You are not to consider the statement . . . unless you are satisfied . . . that he believed that there was no hope of life", held proper); Nev. 1914, State v. Scott, 37 Nev. 412, 142 Pac. 1053 (Talbot, C. J., diss.); N. J. 1907, State v. Biango, 75 N. J. L. 284, 68 Atl. 125, semble; Or. 1908, State v. Doris, 51 Or. 136, 94 Pac. 44; Tex. 1899, Hopkins v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 53 S. W. 619 (the trial Court allowed to "submit the question to the jury"); 1921, Walker v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 389, 227 S. W. 308; W. Va. 1921, State v. Long, 88 W. Va. 669, 108 S. E. 279.

A careful discussion of principle and precedents will be found in Professor V. H. Lane's article in 1 Michigan Law Review 624 (1903), "The Right of the Jury to review the Decision of the Court upon the Admissibility of Dying Declarations."

§ 1452. Declarations usable by Either Party. Owing to the present peculiar limitation of this evidence to public prosecutions for homicide, and the tenor of the declarations usually made by the dying person, it has sometimes been argued that the declarations cannot be used by the accused. But the argument has no foundation whatever, and has been generally repudiated.[1]

However, under the baleful operation of the Opinion rule (ante, § 1447) the accused often loses the benefit of an exonerating declaration.

§ 1452. [1] 1892, Mattox v. U. S., 146 U. S. 151, 13 Sup. 50; 1848, Moore v. State, 12 Ala. 767; 1898, People v. Southern, 120 Cal. 645, 53 Pac. 214; 1914, People v. Hotz, 261 Ill. 239, 103 N. E. 1007; 1907, Green v. State, 89 Miss. 331, 42 So. 797; 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 304, 12 Pac. 441; 1919, Com. v. Bednorciki, 264 Pa. 124, 107 Atl. 666 (but the accused is restricted by the same limitations as the prosecution).

Contra, semble: 1836, R. v. Scaife, 1 Moo. & Rob. 552, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 150 (a declaration was after doubt received in favor of the prisoner, but as influencing the amount of punishment); 1872, People v. McLaughlin, 44 Cal. 435, per Wallace, C. J. (the declarations cannot be offered by the accused).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC II: STATEMENTS OF FACTS AGAINST INTEREST

CHAPTER XLVIII.

§ 1455. In general; Statutes. This exception may be traced back as early as any of the others, namely, to the early 1700s. The historical development can be more particularly noted under certain details of the rule (post, §§ 1464, 1476).

The Exception presupposes, like most of the others, first, a Necessity for resorting to hearsay (ante, § 1421), i.e. the death of the declarant, or some other condition rendering him unavailable for testimony in court; and, secondly, a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1422), — in this instance, the circumstance that the fact stated, being against the declarant's interest, is not likely to have been stated untruthfully. There is also to be considered (ante, § 1424) the bearing of other independent rules of Evidence; and finally, there are certain arbitrary limitations resting on no reason at all.

In a few jurisdictions statutory enactments purport to deal with this exception.[1] They are, however, for the most part obstructive or confusing rather than helpful; for they either merely restate, in a form too concise to be useful, the established common-law rule, or they mingle in inextricable confusion certain fragments of this and other exceptions. Their specific contributions to the details of the exception may be noted under the respective details.

There was a time when the present exception was by some supposed not to exist in this country at all;[2] but even at that time it had in fact received recognition in sundry rulings; and it is to-day everywhere fully accepted.[3]

1. The Necessity Principle

§ 1456. Death, Absence, Insanity, etc., as making the Witness Unavailable. The Necessity Principle (ante, § 1421), as here applied, signifies the impossibility of obtaining other evidence from the same source, the declarant being unavailable in person on the stand. Whenever the witness is practically unavailable, his statements should be received.

Death is universally conceded to be sufficient:[1]

§ 1455. [1] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1946 ("The entries and other writings of a decedent, made at or near the time of the transaction and in a position to know the facts stated therein" are admissible "1, When the entry was made against the interest of the person making it"); § 1853 ("The declaration, act, or omission of a decedent, having sufficient knowledge of the subject, against his pecuniary interest, is also admissible as evidence to that extent against his successor in interest"); § 1870, par. 4 ("The act or declaration of a deceased person, done or made against his interest in respect to his real property" is admissible); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5767 ("Declarations of a person in possession of property, in disparagement of his own title, are admissible in favor of any one, and against privies"); § 5768 ("The declarations and entries of a person, since deceased, against his interest, and not made with a view to pending litigation, are admissible in evidence in any case"); § 5778 (admissions of strangers, receivable when they are "admissions made by a third person against his interest, as to a fact collateral to the main issue between the litigants, but essential to the adjudication of the cause"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7967 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Ia. Comp. Code § 7329, C. 1897, § 4622 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Mont. Rev. c. 1921, §§ 10514, 10531, par. 4, § 10594, par. 1 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1853, 1870, par. 4, § 1946); Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8855 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Or. Laws 1920, §§ 710, 727, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1853, 1870, par. 4); § 790 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, inserting after "deceased", "or without the State", and after "writings", "of a like character"); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 282 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1853); § 298, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 328 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 4); § 1461 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Utah Comp. L. 1917, § 7113 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946).

[2] Smith's Leading Cases, American notes, 1st ed., II, 233 (1844), 8th ed., II, 381. It was also ignored, not repudiated, in a few early cases, such as Longenecker v. Hyde, 6 Binn. Pa. 1 (1813). Compare the history of a party's admissions, which at the beginning was not differentiated (ante, § 1080).

[3] Except possibly in Maine; 1886, Libby v. Brown, 78 Me. 492, 7 Atl. 114.

§ 1456. [1] 1815, Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 229; 1839, Phillips v. Cole, 10 A. & E. 106; 1825, Barrows v. White, 4 B. & C. 328; 1829, Spargo v. Brown, 9 B. & C. 936, semble; 1855, Papendick v. Bridgwater, 5 E. & B. 178; 1896, Bertrand v. Heaman, 11 Man. 205, 210; 1884, Trammell v. Hudmon, 78 Ala. 223; 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81; 1860, Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray 504; 1860, Webster v. Paul, 10 Oh. St. 536; 1846, Lowry v. Moss, 1 Strobh. 64; 1840, Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 189.

In two early Nisi Prius rulings, long outlawed by time and later cases, the statements of living witnesses were admitted: 1795, Walker v. Broadstock, 1 Esp. 458; 1803, Doe v. Rickarby, 5 Esp. 4.

1833, WILLIAMS, J., in Fitch v. Chapman, 10 Conn. 11: "The cases where such evidence is admitted seem to proceed generally upon the principle that, by the decease of the person, better evidence cannot be had."

The principle of necessity is broad enough to assimilate other causes; but the rulings upon causes other than death are few. They are ill-judged, so far as they do not recognize the general principle of unavailability. Illness[2] and insanity[3] should be equally sufficient to admit the statements; as well as absence from the jurisdiction.[4] Supervening incompetency through interest stands on the same ground.

The written receipt of a third person, acknowledging payment of money, is undoubtedly a statement of a fact against interest (post, § 1461); but it cannot be received under the present principle, unless the receiptor is deceased or otherwise unavailable.[6]

[2] Contra: 1813, Harrison v. Blades, 3 Camp. 458 (the declarant had suffered an apoplectic fit and was by physicians said to be 'in extremis'; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "No case has gone so far [as to admit such evidence] and I am afraid to establish a precedent. It is difficult to determine when a patient is past all hope of cure. If such a relaxation of the rules of evidence were permitted, there would be very sudden indispositions and recoveries").

[3] 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81, semble; 1915, Weber v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 175 Ia. 358, 151 N. W. 852 (personal injuries received in a derailment in March, 1905; defence, derailment by the criminal act of K., intentionally wrecking the train; the written statement of K., made 10 days after the derailment, confessing fully his act, was offered as a declaration of a fact against interest; K. had been convicted of the crime of derailment in 1906 or 1907, his conviction was set aside for errors, then he was in 1908 adjudged insane, and in 1909 he was released from the asylum as not a menace to the public in his mental condition, and at the time of this trial in 1910 he was at large in parts unknown; in 1907, while he was in prison, the now defendant had interrogated him on deposition as to the crime, but he had refused to answer; by a majority, two judges dissenting, K.'s statement of 1905 was held admissible; without elaborating this "very pretty question", as it is termed by a dissenting judge, suffice to note that any system of evidence which would refuse to permit a defendant to exonerate himself by showing the conviction of K. for the crime, his statement, his insanity, and all the rest of it, would be a system of mental slavery fit for the scrapheap of justice); 1881, Jones v. Henry, 84 N. C. 324.

[4] 1826, Shearman v. Atkins, 4 Pick. 293; 1903, Pound, C., in South Omaha v. Wrzensinski, 66 Nebr. 790, 92 N. W. 1045 (in a concurring opinion; admitting the letter of a city clerk absent from the jurisdiction). Doubting: 1851, Williams, J., in Geralopulo v. Weiler, 10 C. B. 690, 696.

Contra: 1831, Stephen v. Gwenap, 1 Moo. & Rob. 120 (flight of a bankrupt under a criminal charge); 1910, Moffit v. Canadian Pacific R. Co., 2 Alta. 483 (letter from a mother in Ontario acknowledging receipt of money, excluded; point not raised); 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81, semble.

[5] 1841, Pugh v. McRae, 2 Ala. 394; 1831, Dwight v. Brown, 9 Conn. 93; 1833, Fitch v. Chapman, 10 Conn. 11. Contra. 1825, Burton v. Scott, 3 Rand. 409.

[6] Accord: Can. 1844, Joplin v. Johnston, 2 Kerr N. Br. 541 (mortgagee's receipt for rent); U. S. Ariz. 1906, Matko v. Daley, 10 Ariz. 175, 85 Pac. 21; Ark. 1906, Walnut Ridge M. Co. v. Cohn, 79 Ark. 338, 96 S. W. 413 (on rehearing, reversing the original ruling, which was based on Greenleaf's statement quoted infra); Conn. 1839, Newell v. Roberts, 13 Conn. 63, 72; 1905, British Amer. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 77 Conn. 559, 60 Atl. 293; Md. 1921, Myers v. State, 137 Md. 496, 113 Atl. 92 (larceny of an automobile; plea, title by purchase; a receipt signed by the purporting seller A. in New York, excluded); Mass. 1826, Shearman v. Atkins, 4 Pick. 283, 293 (assumpsit by guardians against the ward's estate for money spent; receipts for the sums in question were admitted; the referee allowing this only for such persons as were not "alive and within the Commonwealth"); 1896, Silverstein v. O'Brien, 165 Mass. 512, 43 N. E. 496 (receipts for rent, signed by tenants, to show that the offering party was owner, excluded); Minn. 1885, Ferris v. Boxell, 34 Minn. 262, 25 N. W. 592 (receipt of third person is not evidence, nor made so by a statute exempting it from authentication if properly recorded); Mo. 1921, State v. Howe, 287 Mo. 1, 228 S. W. 477 (receiving money earned by prostitution); Nebr. 1921, Hays v. Christiansen, 105 Nebr. 586, 181 N. W. 379 (foreclosure of mortgage; "receipts of third persons", held not admissible); Pa. 1818, Cutbush v. Gilbert, 4 S. & R. 551, 555 (receipts by third persons not called, excluded; "his oath is better"); 1825, Morton

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee

§ 1457. General Principle. The basis of the Exception is the principle of experience that a statement asserting a fact distinctly against one's interest is entirely unlikely to be deliberately false or heedlessly incorrect, and is thus sufficiently sanctioned, though oath and cross-examination are wanting:

1861, BLACKBURN, J., in Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326: "When the entries are against the pecuniary interest of the person making them, and never could be made available for the person himself, there is such a probability of their truth that such statements have been admitted after the death of the person making them."

1879, FITZGIBBON, C. J., in Lalor v. Lalor, 4 L. R. Ire. 681: "The interest against which the statement appears to be made . . . [is required] in order to supply that sanction which, after the death of the party, is accepted as a substitute for an oath."

1832, ROGERS, J., in Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle 437: "The principle is founded on a knowledge of human nature. Self-interest induces men to be cautious in saying anything against themselves, but free to speak in their own favor. We can safely trust a man when he speaks against his own interest."

1841, GIBSON, C. J., in Addams v. Seitzinger, 1 W. & S. 244: "[It rests on] the principle which allows entries or memorandums which were prejudicial to the interest of the writer to be evidence, . . . thus substituting for the sanction of a judicial oath the more powerful sanction of a sacrifice of self-interest."

1879, COFER, J., in Mercer's Adm'r v. Mackin, 14 Bush 441: "Experience has taught us that when one makes a declaration in disparagement of his own rights or interests it is generally true, and because it is so the law has deemed it safe to admit evidence of such declarations." [1]

The specific applications of this broad principle to the different kinds of facts against interest come now to be considered.

§ 1458. Statements predicating a Limited Interest in Property. A statement predicating of oneself a limited interest instead of a complete title to property asserts a fact decidedly against one's interest, and has always been so regarded. In particular, assertions that one's estate is a leasehold, not a

v. M'Glaughlin, 13 S. & R. 107; Wash. 1904, Beebe v. Readward, 35 Wash. 615, 77 Pac. 1052.

Contra: Eng. 1914, R. v. Sagar, 3 K. B. 1112 (false pretences; the issue was whether defendant was carrying a business of dealing in cycles; certain receipts for payment to the R. Cycle Co., held admissible); U. S. 1915, People v. Davis, 269 Ill. 256, 110 N. E. 9 (on a charge of embezzlement, a principal's receipts admitted for the agent); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 336 (payment by a municipal corporation may be evidenced by receipt on file if dated at least 6 years before); 1796, Alston v. Taylor, 1 Hayw. N. C. 381, 395 (counsel's receipt for a bond taken to sue upon, admitted as given in "the course of business"); 1853, Reed v. Rice, 25 Vt. 171, 186, per Redfield, C. J. (misunderstanding Gilson v. Gilson, 16 Vt. 464, where the receipt was by an agent of the party).

The following passage probably led to misunderstanding on this point: 1842, Greenleaf, Evidence, § 147, note 3: "In auditing the accounts of guardians, administrators, etc., the course is to admit receipts as 'prima facie' sufficient vouchers"; but the authorities cited do not bear this out as a general exception.

Of course, such receipts of a party-opponent would be receivable as admissions: ante, § 1049.

Distinguish the above question whether a trustee's or administrator's accounting may be sufficiently made by producing vouchers signed by third persons without calling those persons: 1917, Wylie v. Bushnell, 277 Ill. 484, 115 N. E. 618; N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 107 (in accountings by executors, etc.; "vouchers are presumptive evidence of disbursement, without other proof, unless impeached"; if lost, contents may be proved by affidavit).

§ 1457. [1] So also Blackburn, J., in R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 763; Somerville, J., in Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 Ala. 79.

freehold, or that one's possession is merely as agent or as trustee for another, are admissible :[1]

1861, BLACKBURN, J., in R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 763 : "Is such a statement [cutting down an interest in realty] admissible to the same extent and for the same purposes as where the effect of the statement is to charge the person with the receipt of money? I neither find any distinction taken between them in any of the cases, nor can I in principle see any. The probability that a man would speak truth (which is the reason assigned for admitting the evidence) is equally great whether the tendency of the declaration is to establish liability for money or to deprive a man of real estate."

Such statements may be used in so far as they tend to prove the matter against interest, for example, that some other person is the owner of the higher estate. But they could not be received to prove the matter as to which they were not against interest, — for example, the ownership of the limited estate asserted.[2]

§ 1458. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1795, Walker v. Broadstock, 1 Esp. 458; 1803, Doe v. Rickarby, 5 id. 4; 1808, Doe v. Jones, 1 Camp. 367 (whether a locus was part of a copyhold of the defendant; a writing by the deceased former owner of the copyhold, then occupying the locus, that he did not own it but paid rent for it, was admitted for the plaintiff); 1811, Peaceable v. Watson, 4 Taunt. 16; 1835, Carne v. Nicoll, 1 Bing. N. C. 430; 1845, Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 243; 1847, Doe r. Langfield, 16 M. & W. 513; 1865, Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326.

CANADA: 1862, Powell v. Wathen, 5 All. N. Br. 258 (deceased's disclaimer of title, admissible for one charged as executor 'de son tort' of the deceased).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1913, In re Thompson, U. S. D. C. N. J., 205 Fed. 556 (bankrupt's statements, in possession of a dredge, that he was not owner of it, admitted); Georgia: 1873, Turner v. Tyson, 49 Ga. 165, 169 (admission by the heir, of the genuineness of an ancestor's divesting deed, received); 1892, Lamar v. Pearre, 90 Ga. 377, 17 S. E. 92 (declarations by a possessor in apparent ownership, that the land had been purchased with trust funds from the sale of other land, admitted); Indiana: 1846, Doe v. Evans, 1 Blackf. 322 (by a possessor, that he was tenant only, admitted); Iowa: 1867, Robinson v. Robinson, 22 Ia. 427, 433 (trust declarations, admitted); Louisiana: 1918, Demarets v. Demarets, 144 La. 173, 80 So. 240 (transfer in fraud of wife; statements by the grantor held not against interest on the facts); Maine: 1902, Walsh v. Wheelwright, 96 Me. 174, 52 Atl. 649 ("declarations of a deceased occupant of land, made while occupying, in the course of his occupation, as to the character of his occupation, and against his own pecuniary interest, are admissible"); Massachusetts: 1860, Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray 504 (statements as to land, admitted); New Hampshire: 1843, Pike v. Hayes, 14 N. H. 20; 1845, Rand v. Dodge, 17 N. H. 359 (declarations indicating possession as agent or tenant merely, not owner, admitted); 1880, Perkins v. Towle, 59 N. H. 584; New York: 1894, Lyon v. Ricker, 141 N. Y. 225, 36 N. E. 189 (conditions of delivery of a deed; the deceased grantor's declarations, while in possession, that he had made and delivered the deed on certain conditions, admitted); 1907, Tompkins v. Fonda G. L. Co., 188 N. Y. 261, 80 N. E. 933 (declarations of a director of a corporation, admitting knowledge of the plaintiff's title to goods bought, received); 1912, People v. Storrs, 207 N. Y. 147, 100 N. E. 730 (forgery by a wife of a marriage settlement dated Aug. 21, 1909, by the husband reciting the gift to her of an automobile; the deceased husband's declarations that he had given the automobile to her, held admissible); North Carolina: 1880, Melvin v. Bullard, 82 N. C. 37; 1906, Smith v. Moore, 142 N. C. 277, 55 S. E. 275 (deceased life-tenant's declaration, while in possession, that "she had made a deed to Mr. M. for the lot", admitted); Philippine Isl. 1907, Leonards v. Santiago, 7 P. I. 401 (husband's statement disclaiming title to land held by him for his wife, admitted; applying C. C. P. § 282); Vermont: 1895, Swerdferger v. Hopkins, 67 Vt. 136, 31 Atl. 153 (as to land boundaries, admitted); Virginia: 1890, Dooley v. Baynes, 86 Va. 644, 10 S. E. 974 (deceased possessor's declarations that he had only a life-estate and could not transfer a fee, admitted); 1901, First National Bank v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 39 S. E. 126 (husband's declarations of a gift to wife, made when free from debt, admitted).

[2] 1897, Hollis v. Sales, 103 Ga. 75, 29 S. E. 482 (declaration by a husband that he made a deed to his wife because he was in debt to her, excluded, as not against interest on the question whether the deed was for a valuable consideration).

§ 1459. Same: Other Statements (Admissions, etc.), about Land, discriminated. There has been in some jurisdictions much confusion through a failure to distinguish certain principles, distinct in themselves, but all finding an application to declarations about land-possession and having only that superficial feature in common: [1]

(1) If the issue involves a prescriptive title and adverse possession, the nature of the possession alleged is important, and under the doctrine of Verbal Acts (post, §§ 1778, 1779) the statements and conduct of the possessor are admissible as giving character to the possession and indicating whether it is adverse or not. Here the statements are not taken as assertions, and the Hearsay rule is not applicable. Their chief limitation is that they must accompany the possession which they are supposed to characterize; but the declarant's decease is not a condition.

(2) Under the principle of Admissions, the statements of a party-opponent, or his predecessor in title, acknowledging an inferior or different title, may be used (ante, § 1082). Here the main requirements are that the admitter must have had title at the time, and that the admission shall be used only against himself or his successors; but the admitter need not be deceased before the statement can be used. Here, too, no Hearsay exception is involved.

(3) In statements offered under the present exception to the Hearsay rule, the declarant must be deceased. Moreover, there must have been an interest at the time to say the contrary, but the statements may be used in any controversy, without regard to the parties concerned.

(4) Still dealing with Hearsay exceptions, there are, further, two American doctrines admitting declarations as to boundaries (treated post, §§ 1563–1570); by one of these, obtaining generally, the declarant must not have been an interested party (for example, an owner), and he need not have been in possession; but by the other, in vogue in a few Atlantic jurisdictions, he must have been an owner and must have been on the land at the time.

A more detailed analysis of the discriminations between these and other superficially related statements about land is elsewhere made (ante, § 1087, post, § 1780), as well as of the distinction of theory between statements against interests, admissions, and confessions (post, § 1475). There is also to be distinguished the doctrine of substantive law forbidding a tenant to dispute his landlord's title (post, § 1473).

§ 1460. Statements predicating a Fact against Pecuniary Interest; Indorsements of Payments; Receipts. Statements of a fact against pecuniary in-

In Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 931 (1835), and Pike v. Hayes, 14 N. H. 20 (1843), a declaration as to the extent of one's land was said to differ from a declaration as to the limits of one's interest in it, and to be inadmissible. But both must stand on the same footing; the former should be admitted as indicating that neighboring estates extended at least up to the point named. Accord: 1795, Walker v. Broadstock, 1 Esp. 458. A unique application of the principle is found in the following: 1855, Allegheny v. Nelson, 25 Pa. 334 ("It was against the interest of N. to expend his time and money in taking out a title for the land as an island, if it was not one. His application therefore was evidence that it was an island").

§ 1459. [1] E.g. 1845, Smith v. Martin, 17 Conn. 401; 1855, Plimpton v. Chamberlain, 4 Gray Mass. 321; 1898, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Logan, 31 C. C. A. 172, 87 Fed. 637.

terest furnish the greatest number of illustrations,[1] and of difficulties as well. Perhaps the oldest form was the account kept by a steward or bailiff of sums collected from tenants.[2] Another instance was the entry of receipt of a tithe-payment in a vicar's books.[3] Money-receipts in general have always been conceded to fall under the rule.[4]

Another typical instance was the indorsement, on a note, a bill, or a bond, of payments received; it would evidence the payment (under this rule), and the act of payment would serve as an acknowledgment of existing debt (or new promise) by the debtor, and this in turn would be sufficient to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. Other reasons, however (noted post, § 1466), impose special restrictions on the use of this class of statements.

§ 1461. Statements of Sundry Facts against Interest. There are many facts which in their ultimate effect may be against proprietary or pecuniary interest, though in their immediate and narrow aspect there may be no such clear character. These facts, however, may nevertheless be facts so decidedly against interest that no one would be inclined falsely to concede their existence. If so, on the general principle (ante, § 1457) they should therefore be admitted. No more precise test can well be formulated, except in the suggestion that the interest injured or the burden imposed by the fact stated should be one so palpable and positive that it would naturally have been present in the declarant's mind.[1]

§ 1460. [1] The following are miscellaneous instances: 1905, Massee-Felton L. Co. v. Sirmans, 122 Ga. 287, 50 S. E. 92 (sheriff's entry; cited post, § 1464); 1909, Kaleikini v. Waterhouse, 19 Haw. 359 (entries in an account book, "memorandum of my debts", etc., admitted); 1900, German Ins. Co. v. Bartlett, 188 Ill. 165, 58 N. E. 1075 (creditors' suit for property conveyed to wife by deceased husband; declarations by him before the transfer, that he was indebted to her, admitted); 1898, Keesling v. Powell, 149 Ind. 372, 49 N. E. 265 (statements by a deputy-treasurer that taxes had been paid in, admitted); 1911, Johnson v. Schoch, 85 Kan. 837, 118 Pac. 696 (by the holder of notes, that the notes were paid, admitted); 1890, Vogely v. Bloom, 43 Minn. 163, 45 N. W. 10 (consideration for a note; entry of a deceased payee of another note, as to its discharge and the making of a new note, admitted); 1903, Quimby v. Ayers, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 464 (deceased's statements that he was insolvent, admitted); 1874, Livingston v. Arnoux, 56 N. Y. 519 (receipt by a sheriff admitted).

[2] See the citations post, § 1476.

[3] 1810, Perigal v. Nicholson, 1 Wightw. 63.

[4] See the cases cited ante, § 1456.

§ 1461. [1] The following are sundry rulings applying the principle:

ENGLAND: 1861, Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326 (a letter by a clerk, notifying the employer of the arrival of B.'s draft, "with three huge cases, at the office", and going on to state the terms of the contract with B., was rejected; Blackburn, J.: "It is no more than an admission that he has the care of the three chests which have arrived at the office, and the possibility that this statement might make him liable in case of their being lost is an interest of too remote a nature to make the statement admissible in evidence"); 1877, Sly v. Sly, L. R. 2 P. D. 91 (declaration by one raising a loan that his estate was a life interest under a will, admitted to show the existence of the will); 1891, Flood v. Russell, 29 L. R. Ire. 96 (declarations by a wife as to the existence of a will of her husband by which she profited less than by his intestacy, admitted); 1914, Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn S. C. Co., A. C. 733 (whether a workmen's compensation claimant was a dependent, the claimant being concededly an illegitimate child; the deceased's statements admitting his paternity, held admissible as "conduct"; per Earl Loreburn, L. C., also as a statement of a fact constituting a legal duty to support the child, and therefore semble a fact against interest).

CANADA: 1902, Yuill v. White, 5 N. W. Terr. 275, 291 (the mere statement of the terms of a contract is not of a fact against interest).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1896, Lucas v. U. S., 163 U. S. 612, 16 Sup. 1168 (a statement that the declarant did not belong to the Choctaw Nation, excluded; but the sub-

It has by one Court been said that the liability involved in the fact stated must not be a mere conditional or contingent one.[2] But this limitation cannot be supported, and would, if consistently carried out, practically nullify the exception in this respect. The liability to pay conditionally is none the less a liability; moreover every contract is subject to some conditions imposed by implication of law. The incurring of a contract liability of any sort is on principle a fact against interest.[3] ject is confused with that of Admissions); California: 1903, Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 74 Pac. 35 (action on a contract by defendant's testator to adopt and support the plaintiff as a son; the testator's declarations that he was the plaintiff's guardian, not admitted for the defendant; the reason for the ruling is questionable, because as guardian the testator was under liability to account, but not merely as adoptive father); Georgia: 1899, Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 108 Ga. 507, 34 S. E. 316 (wife's action for husband's death; the husband's statement of his careless conduct, admitted); 1908, Chandler v. Mutual L. & I. Ass'n, 131 Ga. 82, 61 S. E. 1036 (statement that the declarant had not made or authorized any application for insurance, held to be of a fact against interest); 1913, Murdock v. Adamson, 12 Ga. App. 275, 77 S. E. 181 (father's action for son's death; son's statements of his own negligence, received); Idaho: 1901, State v. Alcorn, 7 Ida. 599, 64 Pac. 1014 (declarations as to pregnancy, by one seeking an abortion, admitted, chiefly on this ground); 1909, Wheeler v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 16 Ida. 375, 102 Pac. 347 (child killed and grandmother injured; in the action for the child's death, the grandmother's statement that it was her fault was excluded; but here she was not deceased); Iowa: 1876, Ross v. McQuiston, 45 Ia. 147 (a testator's declaration, when sane, that he had not been in his right mind for twenty years, admitted); 1898, Moehn v. Moehn, 105 Ia. 710, 75 N. W. 521 (declaration by an indorser of a note, that it was not paid and that it belonged to his wife, held not against interest); 1906, Drefahl v. Security Sav. Bank, 132 Ia. 563, 107 N. W. 179 (contract by intestate to transfer funds to R., the intestate's statements that "R. was after her money, and she did not want him to have it", not admitted as statements against interest); 1915, Weber v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 175 Ia. 358, 151 N. W. 852 (action for personal injuries received by a negligent derailment; the defendant set up the criminal act of a third person K., intentionally wrecking the train; K.'s written statement fully admitting his act, received, as a statement of a fact making him civilly liable for damages; Deemer, C. J., diss.); Kansas: 1898, Walker v. Brantner, 59 Kan. 117, 52 Pac. 80 (action for the death of the plaintiff's husband, a railway engineer; declarations of the husband, after the injury, that he could have avoided it by keeping a lookout, admitted); Massachusetts: 1894, Farrell v. Weitz, 160 Mass. 288, 35 N. E. 783 (admissions of paternity by a deceased person, not receivable for the defendant in bastardy); Minnesota: 1889, Hosford v. Rowe, 41 Minn. 247, 42 N. W. 1018 (Dickinson, J.: "Declarations by a person to show that he had executed a will, or that he had not executed a will, or that he had revoked his will, . . . are not to be regarded, in general, as declarations against interest, for the acts to which the declarations relate, and the consequences of such acts, are wholly within the control of the person whose declaration is in question"); 1902, Halvorsen v. Moon & K. L. Co., 87 Minn. 18, 91 N. W. 28 (deceased employee's statement that a fire in a room in his charge had been caused by an act of negligence on his part, admitted; good opinion); Montana: 1922, Gray v. Grant, — Mont. —, 206 Pac. 410 (accounting; or testator's declarations admitting a contract with one of the defendants, admitted under Rev. C. 1921, § 10514); Texas: 1904, Smith v. International & G. N. R. Co., 34 Tex. Civ. App. 209, 78 S. W. 556 (by the deceased, injured on a railroad track, that he was asleep when struck, admitted); Utah: 1908, Smith v. Hanson, 34 Utah 171, 96 Pac. 1087 (action for attorney's services to deceased; the latter's statement that he was "not going to sue", etc., held not to involve any fact of pecuniary or proprietary interest); Virginia: 1881, Tate v. Tate, Ex'r, 75 Va. 532 (a memorandum of the receipt of bonds deposited with the writer as bailee without reward, held not sufficiently against interest).

[2] 1843, R. v. Worth, 4 Q. B. 134 (the entry was: "April 4th 1824, W. Worsell came [as farm-hand]; and to have for the half-year 40s." Lord Denman, C. J.: "The book here does not show any entry operating against the interest of the party. The memorandum could only fix upon him a liability on proof that the services had been performed").

[3] 1850, White v. Chouteau, 10 Barb. 209 (incurring an obligation to reimburse a surety); 1859, People v. Blakeley, 4 Park. Cr. C. 185 (executing a note); 1889, Hosford v. Rowe, 41 Minn. 247, 42 N. W. 1018 (a husband said that he had destroyed an antenuptial agreement reserving to himself power to will away from his wife more than the statute permitted).

§ 1462. The Fact, not the Statement, to be against Interest. It must be remembered that it is not merely the statement that must be against interest, but the fact stated. It is because the fact is against interest that the open and deliberate mention of it is likely to be true. Hence the question whether the statement of the fact could create a liability is beside the mark.[1]

§ 1463. Facts may or may not be against Interest according to Circumstances or according to the Parties in dispute. A fact thus stated may or may not be against interest according to the circumstances. For example, a statement that one is not a partner in a certain firm states a fact which favors one's interest if the firm is insolvent (and a deficit is therefore to be made up), but disfavors one's interest if the firm is solvent (and profits are thus to be shared); while a statement that one is a partner in the firm is for and against interest in just the reverse situations.[1]

Again, the same fact may or may not be against interest according to the parties' situation in the case in which it comes into dispute; it may be against interest in one aspect, but in favor of interest in another.[2]

§ 1464. No Motive to Misrepresent; Preponderance of Interest; Credit and Debit Entries. It has sometimes been said, loosely and in analogy to other Hearsay exceptions, that there must be no motive to misrepresent; this being put as an additional requirement.[1] But there is no such additional requirement. The real object of this mode of statement is to furnish a test for a not uncommon situation, — the situation in which, along with the disserving interest, there is also a more or less palpable interest to be served by the fact. The real question is: Shall we attempt to strike a balance between the two opposing interests and admit the statement only if on the whole the disserving interest preponderates in probable influence? Or shall we regard the disserving interest as sufficient to admit, and leave the other merely to affect the credit of the statement? The former alternative has by the Courts been generally followed.[2] It must be noted, however, that § 1462. [1] This has been misunderstood in the following case: 1869, Western Maryland R. Co. v. Manro, 32 Md. 280 (Brent, J., rejecting a statement by a collector that he had received money from X. in payment of stock-subscriptions: "How the declaration offered was against the interest of M. [the collector], we have been unable to discover. It did not create a debt or establish a liability on his part to pay a sum of money to any person or body corporate. It did not furnish any ground, or pretext even, upon which he might have been sued or proceeded against either in law or equity").

§ 1463. [1] 1857, Raines' Adm'r v. Raines' Cred'rs, 30 Ala. 428; 1883, Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 id. 79.

[2] 1912, Cryer v. McGuire, 148 Ky. 100, 146 S. W. 402 (adverse possession of E. C.; statements by E. B. C. held not of facts against interest, under the circumstances); 1883, Chase v. Smith, 5 Vt. 557 (the plaintiff sued for services rendered when a minor; the defendant offered an entry in his books crediting the plaintiff's services, but to his father, who owed the defendant money, and not to the plaintiff; it was rejected. Here the entry was against his interest so far as concerned the rendering of the services. But that was not disputed. As to whether the contract was with the plaintiff or his father, it was obviously the defendant's interest to attribute it to the father, against whom he had a set-off; hence on this point the entry was not against his interest).

§ 1464. [1] 1833, Gleadow v. Atkins, 3 Tyrw. 301; 1837, Marks v. Lahee, 3 Bing. N. C. 408, Vaughan, J.; 1864, County of Mahaska v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81; 1831, Gilchrist v. Martin, 1 Bailey's Eq. 503.

[2] 1821, Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 477, 489 (entries by one of a college of vicars, who was also proctor or collector, of dues for the college, were objected to; Sir T. Plumer, M. R.:

so great a judge as Sir George Jessel has said that the latter alternative is the proper one, i.e. the counter-interest should affect only the weight of the evidence.[3]

A common illustration of this question is the use of a merchant's credit entry of payment received (thus against his interest) which at the same stroke has included (thus in favor of his interest) the debit entry of his claim leading to the payment; and, conversely, an agent's debit and credit account in which the receipts creating liability are on the whole equalled or exceeded by the payments or credits in his favor. When, in the former case, the entry of payment received, or, in the latter case, of an item creating liability, is sought to be used, the argument has been made that since, taking both sides of the account together, the writer is not left with any liability and perhaps appears to have a claim for a balance, the matter cannot be said to be against his interest. This argument, accepted at Nisi Prius in Doe v. Vowles,[4] has since been repudiated. The answer to it is that the entrant's interest in making the favoring items does not really affect, as a counter-motive, his interest against the individual charging-items; the entries of the latter, taken by themselves, are to be trusted:[5]

1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 266; it was objected by Mr. Brougham, against a tool-keeper's book, that "where in the same document in which the charge appears, a discharge also appears, which squares the account, or it may be leaves a balance in his favor, then taking the whole together — both sides of the account, the charge and the discharge, — the reason fails, because it no longer is a declaration of a party against his own interest; it may be a declaration for his own interest"; the argument was disapproved. LITTLEDALE, J.: "A man is not likely to charge himself for the purpose of getting a discharge." TENTERDEN, L. C. J.: "Almost all the accounts that are produced are accounts on both sides. That objection would go to the very root of that sort of evidence."

"Though the proctors were members of the body of vicars, that does not affect the ground on which such entries are admitted: there being evidently a balance of interests, and the interest in making the entry the smallest. . . . If we look to the set-off of the opposite interests, the preponderance being against making false charges, reduces him to the situation of any other proctor or collector"). Accord: 1841, Clark v. Wilmot, 1 Y. & C. 54; 2 Y. & C. 259, note; 1862, Ganton v. Size, 22 U. C. Q. B. 483; 1886, Confederation Life Ass. v. O'Donnell, 13 Can. Sup. 225, 229; 1895, Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 165; 1905, Massee-Felton L. Co. v. Sirmans, 122 Ga. 297, 50 S. E. 92 (sheriff's entry of a sale of land under a fi. fa., admitted to prove the fact of an execution and levy, though it also recited his discharge from liability by payment).

Compare Massey v. Allen, L. R. 13 Ch. D. 562 (1879).

[3] 1876, Taylor v. Witham, L. R. 3 Ch. D. 605 (Jessel, M. R.: "It must be 'prima facie' against his interest; that is to say, the natural meaning of the entry standing alone must be against the interest of the man who made it. Of course, if you can prove 'aliunde' that the man had a particular reason for making it, and that it was for his interest, you may destroy the value of the evidence altogether: but the question of admissibility is not a question of value. The entry may be utterly worthless when you get it, if you show any reason to believe that he had a motive for making it, and that though apparently against his interest, yet really it was for it; but that is a matter for subsequent consideration when you estimate the value of the testimony"). Accord: 1857, Raines' Adm'r v. Raines' Cred'rs, 30 Ala. 428.

[4] 1833, Doe v. Vowles, 1 Moo. & R. 261 (a receipt for payment for work done was objected to because the single entry of the claim and the release could not be against interest, as "this left the writer just in the same situation as before"; this objection was sustained).

[5] Accord: 1838, Williams v. Greaves, 8 C. & P. 592; 1843, Coleridge, J., in R. v. Worth, 4 Q. B. 134 ("Accounts are evidence, though the writer upon the whole discharges himself"; here admitting an entry of payment after an

§ 1465. Statement admissible for All Facts Contained in it; Separate Entries. Since the principle is that the statement is made under circumstances fairly guaranteeing the declarant's sincerity and accuracy (ante, § 1457) it is obvious that the situation guarantees the correctness of whatever he may say while under that influence. In other words, the statement may be accepted, not merely as to the specific fact against interest, but also as to every fact contained in the same statement.[1] As for the limits which it thus becomes necessary to set, these must be largely a matter of judgment in each case. For the phrasing of a rough general test, different language has been used by different judges:[2]

1851, POLLOCK, C. B., in Percival v. Nanson, 7 Exch. 1: "If the entry is admitted as being against the interest of the party making it, it carries with it the whole statement."

1861, BLACKBURN, J., in Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326: "[It is] admissible as evidence not merely of the precise fact which is against interest, but of all matters involved in or knit up with the statement."

1869, HAYES, J., in R. v. Exeter, L. R. 4 Q. B. 344: "The principle that a declaration against interest was evidence as to all that formed an essential part of it was long since settled"; here the entry "Paid Brook balance of a quarter's rent due on 24 June last, 3 l." was against proprietary interest, and was admitted to show the payment.

It may be doubted, however, whether for really difficult cases any additional light is gained from such phrases as "all matters knit up with or involved in the statement", or "all that forms an essential part of it." These tests give more or less arbitrary results. Going back to the living principle, a more useful test appears to be this: All parts of the speech or entry may be admitted which appear to have been made while the declarant was in the trustworthy condition of mind which permitted him to state what was against his interest. This being the fundamental principle, any reference to collateral records which amounts to a repetition or an incorporation of them would make them a part of the admissible statement.[3] entry of hiring and agreeing to pay): 1876, Taylor v. Witham, L. R. 3 Ch. D. 605, per Jessel, M. R. The language of Gibbs, C. B., in Bullen v. Michel, 2 Price 413 (1816) is indecisive as to the general principle.

§ 1465. [1] The leading case is Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East 109 (1808): an entry of services rendered as man-midwife, followed by a note "pd. 25th Oct., 1768", was admitted to show the date of the child's birth: Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "It is idle to say that the word paid only shall be admitted in evidence without the context, which explains to what it refers; we must therefore look to the rest of the entry, to see what the demand was which he thereby admitted to be discharged. By the reference to the ledger, the entry there was virtually incorporated with and made a part of the other entry, of which it is explanatory."

[2] Further examples are as follows: 1792, Stead v. Heaton, 4 T. R. 670 (the receipt was acknowledged, in a town account-book, of money paid by parties disputing a customary payment; a preceding entry on the same page, describing the apportionment of the customary dues, was admitted); 1824, Doe v. Cartwright, Ry. & M. 62; 1840, Davies v. Humphreys, 6 M. & W. 153; 1861, R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 763 (to prove the amount of rent, a declaration that the declarant was a tenant at the rent of £20 per year was admitted); 1905, Turner v. Turner, 123 Ga. 5, 50 S. E. 969 (statement admitting a debt, received also to show the facts of a conveyance, etc., stated at the same time); 1906, Knapp v. St. Louis T. Co., 199 Mo. 640, 98 S. W. 70 (testamentary insanity; an entry in a deceased physician's book of accounts "By Cash paid, $2.", held to admit the preceding entry of the disease for which the visit was made); 1906, Smith v. Moore, 142 N. C. 277, 55 S. E. 275 (obscure).

[3] As was said by Coleridge, J., in Doe v. Wittcomb, 15 Jur. 778 (1851): "It was a short mode of re-entering it, exactly the same as if it had all been written over again."

In any case, the line of distinction clearly excludes entries made at a subsequent and separate occasion, when the original entry was complete, even though the subsequent entry was made in the same place: [4]

1849, COLTMAN, J., in Doe v. Beviss, 7 C. B. 504 (the account-roll of a bailiff was offered; the entries charging himself were admitted; the entries discharging himself by payments were rejected): 'The reeve has no interest in speaking falsely when he is charging himself; but it is obviously his interest to falsify the account quoad the discharging part of it. . . . Where the charging part of the account refers to the discharging part, it may be necessary to read the whole. So where the latter contains anything explanatory of the former, that may render the whole account admissible. But that is not the case here." MAULE, J.: "It may be that a person, in charging himself, makes a declaration which is not intelligible without looking at the other side of the account; and in that case recourse must necessarily be had to both sides. . . . But the items of discharge in the accounts in question which were not referred to in, or necessary to explain, the items of charge which were admitted and read were properly rejected. The presumption that those entries are false is at least as strong as the presumption that the others are true." CRESSWELL, J.: "If the discharging part of the account be necessarily resorted to for the purpose of explaining the charging part, it may be evidence."

§ 1466. Against Interest at the Time of the Statement; Creditor's Indorsement of Payment of Note or Bond; Statute of Limitations. The fact stated must of course have been against interest at the time of the statement; else the influence for correctness would not operate.[1]

1. The chief application of this corollary is to creditor's indorsements of payment on bonds or notes (ante, § 1460). The creditor's receipt of payment, in part or in whole, is a fact against his interest; hence his memorandum indorsing upon the instrument the fact of his receipt of payment would be a statement of a fact against his interest (ante, § 1460); the fact of payment, thus evidenced, would be by implication an acknowledgment (or a new promise) by the debtor; and this would at common law suffice to give a new beginning to the period of the statute of limitations: [2]

1841, GIBSON, C. J., in Addams v. Seitzinger, 1 W. & S. 244: "It is impossible to conceive of a motive for fabricating such a memorandum while the right of action remains unimpaired. To suppose that a creditor would set about the commission of what is at least a moral forgery, to obviate the anticipated consequences of his own apprehended supineness, [4] Accord: 1830, Doe v. Tyler, 4 Moo. & P. 381 (a steward rendered an account showing a balance due his employer; at the foot was a further and subsequent entry of the payment of the balance by him; held, per Tindal, C. J., that the former part could not bring in the last entry, which was the evidential one desired); 1840, Knight v. Waterford, 4 Y. & C. 294 (a steward made a debit-entry of rent received and afterwards on the opposite page a credit-entry of a sum paid the tenant as poor-rates; the latter entry was rejected).

§ 1466. [1] Eng. 1829, Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317; 1851, Percival v. Nanson, 7 Ex. 1, per Parke, B.; 1879, Lalor v. Lalor, 4 L. R. Ire. 681, per Fitzgibbon, L. J.

[2] 1728–29, Searle v. Lord Barrington, 2 Stra. 826, 3 Bro. P. C. 593; 1916, Murdock v. Taylor, 128 Md. 633, 98 Atl. 149 (promissory note by deceased payor; payee's indorsement of "$500 pd. on this note", admissible "as tending to show the amount still due thereon"; not clear); 1900, Cunningham v. Davis, 175 Mass. 213, 56 N. E. 2 (mortgagee's indorsement on an original mortgage note, showing discharge, admitted).

A credit in an account-book has been held not to have this effect: 1836, Hancock v. Cook, 18 Pick. 32; 1886, Libby v. Brown, 78 Me. 792, 7 Atl. 114. Compare § 1466, post.

Distinguish an indorsement by the payor himself, which may be an admission: 1916, Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416, 158 N. W. 185.

when he might by bringing immediate suit prevent the occurrence of those consequences altogether, is absurd. . . . It is not to be supposed that a creditor could so far mistake his interest as to sacrifice a part of his debt to save the residue when no part of it was in danger. It is possible that a weak man might do so; but it is inconsistent with the ordinary course of human action."

But, obviously, if the debt has matured and also the statutory period has elapsed before the date of the supposed payment, the creditor's interest has now changed; his superior interest from that time onwards is to revive the remainder of the debt at the cost only of acknowledging the receipt of a part of it. Thus a partial payment after that time is on the whole a fact in his interest, and not against it. Hence it has always been conceded that such an indorsement, to be admissible, must appear to have been made before the statutory period has elapsed:[3]

1809, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Rose v. Bryant, 2 Camp. 322: "I think you must prove that these indorsements were on the bond at or recently after the times when they bore date, before you are entitled to read them. Although it may seem at first sight against the interest of the obligee to admit part payment, he may thereby in many cases set up the bond for the residue of the sum secured. . . . I am of opinion they cannot be properly admitted unless they are proved to have been written at a time when the effect of them was clearly in contradiction to the writer's interest."

2. But this crucial importance of the date of the indorsement plainly holds out a temptation to the creditor (the instrument being in his possession) to forge or antedate the indorsement; and doubtless such misdealing has been observed. Accordingly, in some jurisdictions the possibility of the abuse, by creditors, of the present sort of evidence has led to its prohibition by the Legislature. This prohibition, however, does not imply a repudiation of the principle; it means rather that, since the effect of the indorse-

[3] Cases cited supra, n. 2, and the following: 1739-40, Turner v. Crisp, 2 Str. 827; 1750, Glynn v. Bank of England, 2 Ves. 43; 1821, Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 488; 1833, Gleadow v. Atkins, 3 Tyrwh. 301; U. S. 1903, Small v. Rose, 97 Me. 286, 54 Atl. 726 (deceased payee's entry of part payment in a cash account, dated after the statute had begun to run, excluded under Pub. St. 1883, c. 81, § 100, infra); 1869, Carter v. Carter, 44 Mo. 195 (admitted; mode of authenticating the actual time of indorsement, considered); 1819, Roseboom v. Billington, 17 Johns. N. Y. 185 (excluded, because not shown to have been made before the time of limitation); 1871, Bland v. Warren, 65 N. C. 373; 1841, Addams v. Seitzinger, 1 W. & S. Va. 244 (quoted ante, § 1460); 1855, Allegheny v. Nelson, 25 Pa. 334; 1823, Gibson v. Peebles, 2 McCord S. C. 419. Contra: 1873, Phillips v. Mahan, 52 Mo. 197 (excluded, not citing Carter v. Carter, supra, and misunderstanding Roseboom v. Billington, N. Y.).

Distinguish the following: 1892, Arbuckle v. Templeton, 65 Vt. 205, 208, 25 Atl. 1095 (action on a note, by T. and M.; indorsement by the plaintiff before statutory bar, of $50 received from T., excluded, because not made on personal knowledge).

Where the obligee is not deceased, the indorsement can of course not be put in, by reason of the principle of § 1456, ante; this was the case in Gupton v. Hawkins (1900), 126 N. C. 81, 35 S. E. 229. But this decision exhibits the fallacy of ignoring the principle of this section; for the Court declares the indorsement of a deceased obligee admissible when offered by the obligor as being "a declaration against interest", and yet inadmissible from the obligee because a "declaration in his favor." Now the time to be considered is the time of making, and if it is then a declaration against interest (as it is when the statute has not run), it is always admissible. Admissibility does not here depend on whether the obligor or the obligee happens afterwards to be the offering party. The obligee cannot offer it if he is living, for the reason of § 1456, ante; but if he is deceased his representative may do so; and if that had not been the case, many of the foregoing precedents on this subject would not be in existence.

ment, to be against interest at the time, depends on whether it was made before the statutory period expired, and since the opportunity for antedating is so likely to be abused without possibility of exposure, the whole practice is dangerous:

1882, BERRY, J., in Young v. Perkins, 29 Minn. 173, 176, 12 N. W. 515: "The holder of a note, or any person interested in it, can manufacture false evidence of part payment as well after as before the statute of limitations has in fact run against the note, and in this way he can make out a case for himself to which the maker or his representatives must yield, unless he or they can overcome it by opposing evidence. This seems to us to be giving the holder an advantage to which he is not entitled, either in reason or in sound policy or by any analogy of the law of Evidence."

Such statutes therefore prohibit the use of indorsements in the creditor's hand.[4] The indorsement may, under these statutes, usually be employed if the debtor assented to it; but in that case it is dealt with directly as an acknowledgment by the debtor himself, and not as the creditor's entry against interest.

3. From the foregoing type of statute, however, must be distinguished

[4] ENGLAND: 1828, St. 9 Geo. IV, c. 14, § 3 ("No indorsement or memorandum of any payment written or made [hereafter] . . . upon any promissory note, bill of exchange, or other writing, by or on behalf of the party to whom such payment is made, shall be deemed sufficient proof of such payment, so as to take the case out of the operation of either of said statutes [of limitation]");

CANADA: B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 145, § 14 (similar); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 90, § 7 (similar); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 167, § 8 (similar); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 75, § 58 (similar);

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 6977 (sealed instruments; like Eng. St. 9 Geo. IV);
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 6414 (like the Massachusetts statute);
Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 303 (similar to Massachusetts);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 86, § 103 (like the English statute, with the words "or purports to be made" inserted after the words "payment is made"); this statute began as Rev. St. 1841, c. 146, § 23, and changed the rule as laid down in 1835, in Coffin v. Bucknam, 12 Me. 471;
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 260, §§ 13, 14 (the acknowledgment or promise must be "in some writing signed by the party chargeable"; yet this shall not "alter the effect of a payment of principal or interest"; but "no indorsement . . . by the party to whom such payment has been made . . . shall be deemed sufficient proof of the payment"); this statute began as St. 1834, c. 182, § 3, and changed the rule as recognized in 1836, in Hancock v. Cook, 18 Pick. 32 (where the rule was not directly involved, and the entry was dated in 1816);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12331 (like Mass. Gen. L. c. 260, § 14);
Minnesota: Here the same object has been attained by the judicial construction of a permissive statute: Gen. St. 1913, § 8449 ("An indorsement of money received, on any promissory note, which appears to have been made when it was against the interest of the holder to make it, is 'prima facie' evidence of the facts therein contained"); 1882, Young v. Perkins, 29 Minn. 173, 12 N. W. 515 (under the above statute, there must be other evidence than the mere purport of the indorsement that it was actually made at the time when it was against interest; quoted supra);
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Limit. of Actions, § 11 (like Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 260, § 14);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1868 (the indorsement must be in payor's hand; applicable to all writings); 1881, Bailey v. Danforth, 53 Vt. 504 (in spite of the statute, providing that an indorsement, etc., shall not be "sufficient proof", an indorsement of payment by the payee, whether made before or after the statute has run, is admissible; the opinion cites no precedents, and does not fairly consider the inadmissibility of an indorsement made after statute run); 1903, McDowell v. McDowell's Estate, 75 Vt. 401, 56 Atl. 98 (Bailey v. Danforth approved and followed);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4247 (like the English statute).

Note that these statutes merely forbid the use of the indorsement as showing acknowledgment sufficient to take the debt out of the statute of limitations.

Its use to indicate a part-payment which relents the presumption of payment after a certain lapse of time (post, § 2517) seems still to remain.

two others; all of them aiming to relieve the debtor by dealing with the conduct which removes the bar of the limitation period:

(a) A statute generally in vogue forbids the limitation to be removed except by an express acknowledgment or new promise in writing by the debtor; the effect is to cut off entirely the use of the implied acknowledgment found in a payment by the debtor. Thus indirectly it results equally in the exclusion of the creditor's entry.[5]

(b) In some jurisdictions the statute which thus requires writing for an express acknowledgment or promise makes special provision for the survival of the common-law rule as to implying an acknowledgment or promise from a payment; thus the creditor's entry may still become available at common law to evidence the payment.[6]

(c) Finally, some of these statutes (par. b) take the step described above (par. 2), by forbidding the use of creditors' indorsements, while allowing the act of payment to be given effect if evidenced in some other way.[7]

§ 1467. Statement to be made 'Ante Litem Motam'. It is sometimes said that the statement (as in other hearsay exceptions) must have been made

[5] Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 726; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 360 (new promise or acknowledgment must be "in some writing signed by the party to be charged"); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2930; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 4383; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 6631; Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 83, § 16; Kan. G. S. 1915, § 6913, St. 1909, c. 182; La. Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2278; Miss. Code 1906, § 3118, Hem. § 2482; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 1338; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 4985; N. Mex. Annot. St. 1915, § 3356; P. I. Civ. C. § 1229 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. § 4303); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 5032; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 5705; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6489; W. Va. Code 1914, c. 104, § 8.

[6] CANADA: New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 138, § 5; UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1907, § 4850; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 854; Col. (Dist.) Code 1919, § 1271 (acknowledgment or promise shall be signed, etc.; but this shall not "lessen the effect of any payment of any principal or interest made by any person whatsoever"); Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 5738 (like Mass. Rev. L. c. 260, §§ 13, 14, first two parts, omitting the third part); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 9062; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 7712 (new promise must be in writing signed; "but this section shall not alter the effect of a payment of principal or interest"); N. C. Com. St. 1919, § 416 (new promise must be in writing signed; "but this section does not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest"); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 7394 (the acknowledgment or new promise must be in writing; "but this section shall not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest"); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11223 ("if payment has been made", or a written promise signed, the period runs again); Or. Laws 1920, § 24 (new promise must be in writing, etc.; "but this section shall not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest"); S. Car. Code 1922, C. C. P. § 328 (the acknowledgment or new promise must be in writing; but "payment of any part of principal or interest is equivalent to a promise in writing"); S. Dak. Rev. C. 1919, § 2275 ("no acknowledgment or promise" suffices to remove the bar of the statute, unless in writing signed by the party; "but this section shall not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest"); Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 176 ("this section shall not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest").

In Porto Rico the following provision, from the Spanish law, seems to bear on the present kind of evidence: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 4303 ("A note written or signed by a creditor at the end, in the margin, or on the back of an instrument held by him constitutes evidence in all that may be favorable to the debtor. The same shall be understood of a note written or signed by the creditor, on the back, in the margin, or at the foot of the duplicate of an instrument or receipt which the debtor may hold. In either case the debtor who wishes to avail himself of what may be favorable to him shall have to abide by what is prejudicial"). So also in Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2250 (creditor's indorsement of payment on an instrument is "good evidence when it tends to establish the discharge of the debtor").

[7] The Massachusetts statute, supra, n. 4, is of this type.

§ 1467. [1] Ga. Rev. Code 1910, § 5768 (quoted ante, § 1455); 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81; 1922, Jelser v. White, — N. C. —, 110 S. E. 849 (after controversy arisen).

before litigation began.[1] But this is only saying that the declarant's partisan attitude during litigation must be regarded as counterbalancing the interest prejudiced by the fact stated (ante, § 1464). This, however, might not be so in a given instance, and each case should be judged on its merits.

§ 1468. Disserving Interest to be shown by Independent Evidence. The fact that the matter stated was against interest must be shown by independent evidence,[1] — like every fact preliminary to the introduction of testimony.

§ 1469. Statement may be Oral as well as Written. An oral statement of fact against interest is admissible.[1] It was early held in Massachusetts that a statement against pecuniary interest must be written, not oral, and furthermore must be in the form of account entries or formal documents, not mere letters.[2] But this distinction is wholly devoid of support in either principle or precedent, and no attempt has elsewhere been made to introduce the distinction. Moreover, oral declarations against proprietary interest are freely admitted in the same jurisdiction of Massachusetts.[3]

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence and Substantive Law

§ 1471. Testimonial Qualifications. (a) The qualifications of the declarant (ante, § 1424) with reference to Testimonial Knowledge of the fact stated are those of the ordinary witness; the phrases of different judges vary.[1] It has once or twice been loosely said that the declarant must have "peculiar knowledge"; but so far as this may mean a knowledge better than that ordinarily required of witnesses, i.e. the usual knowledge by personal observation (ante, § 656), it is not law. (b) The statement must also, comformably with the principles of Testimonial Narration (ante, §§ 766, 789, 811), distinctly import the fact of which it is offered as an assertion.[2]

§ 1468. [1] 1831, Davies v. Morgan, 1 C. & J. 591.

§ 1469. [1] 1861, R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 768.

[2] 1824, Framingham Mfg. Co. v. Barnard, 2 Pick. 532 (Parker, C. J.: "The case of verbal declarations or of letters is totally different [from book-entries], the first being easily misapprehended and misrepresented, and the second being too easily fabricated, to make them safe sources of evidence"); 1840, Lawrence v. Kimball, 1 Metc. 527. See, also, Phillips on Evidence, Cow. & H.'s Notes, 260 (1843). The doubt on this point in the English case of Fursdon v. Clogg (1842), 10 M. & W. 572, never had any foundation.

[3] 1851, Marcy v. Stone, 8 Cush. 9; 1852, Stearns v. Hendersass, 9 id. 502; 1860, Currier v. Gale, 14 Gray Mass. 504.

§ 1471. [1] 1812, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Doe v. Robson, 15 East 34 ("a competency in them to know it"); 1821, Plumer, M. R., in Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 488 ("persons having a competent knowledge, or whose duty it was to know"); 1826, Eldon, L. C., in Barker v. Ray, 2 Russ. 76 ("persons who have a complete knowledge of the subject"); 1829, Parke, J., in Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317 ("a party cognizant of a fact"); 1833, Gleadow v. Atkins, 3 Tyrw. 302 (Bayley, B., "a person having peculiar means of knowledge"; Vaughan, B., "having peculiar knowledge of the fact at the time", "with perfect cognizance of the fact"); 1837, Marks v. Lahee, 3 Bing. N. C. 420 (Park, J., "means of knowledge"; Vaughan, J., ("full knowledge of the transaction"); 1851, Parke, B., in Percival v. Nanson, 7 Ex. 1 ("peculiar means of knowing a fact"); 1864, Dillon, J., in Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81 ("a matter concerning which the declarant was immediately and personally cognizable [sic?]"). In Bird v. Hueston, 10 Oh. St. 428 (1859) the declarations were rejected of one who was H.'s son, attorney, and business agent, because the statements concerned services rendered H. as manager of a farm and distillery; the ruling is far-fetched.

[2] 1810, Haddow v. Parry, 3 Taunt. 303 (a bill of lading signed "contents unknown" was rejected as being in effect no declaration of

§ 1472. Authentication, etc. The principles of Authentication (post, §§ 2129–2169) must appear to have been satisfied. In particular, (a) a written entry must be shown to have been executed by the person alleged to be the declarant.[1] Either the signature or the body of the entry must be in the declarant's handwriting; but not necessarily both.[2] (b) Documents thirty years old may be assumed, under the usual conditions (post, § 2137), to be authentic.[3]

So, too, the rule about Producing Originals (ante, § 1179), and all other rules applicable to proof of writings, may be invoked.

§ 1473. Tenant's Statements used against Landlord's Title. The rule of substantive law, that a tenant may not dispute by plea or by claim the superior right of his landlord, has occasionally been erroneously applied in the domain of Evidence, and has been supposed to forbid, as a rule of evidence, the use of a tenant's declarations against his proprietary interest, so far as they tend to cut down the landlord's right.[1] It is difficult to see how such an application can be invoked. The inexpediency of allowing tenants to litigate against titles which they have, by implication, agreed to accept as good, has nothing to do with the desirability of using the evidence of a deceased tenant, in a litigation to which he is not a party and on a matter as to which he has knowledge and has made a trustworthy statement.[2]

§ 1474. Principal's Statements used against Surety. It was once ruled that the statements of a deceased principal debtor against his interest could not be used against the surety.[1] This came from a confusion of the rule concerning Admissions, which may be used only against parties or privies in interest, with the present Hearsay exception, which has in fact nothing to do with such restrictions. But the error has been corrected by the repudiation of the earlier ruling.[2]

what the chests contained); 1829, Plaxton v. Dare, 10 B. & C. 19 (payment indicated by crosses placed against names); 1847, Doe v. Langfield, 16 M. & W. 514 (the assertion of an estate "by life-interest" only was regarded as ambiguous and inadmissible). In Doe v. Burton, 9 C. & P. 254 (1840), an entry of payment from B. for building a cottage was held not receivable to prove that B. built the cottage.

§ 1472. [1] 1821, Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 467 (Plumer, M. R.: "In all these cases [of books by bailiffs, etc.], the first point is to prove the character of the individual who wrote them; if you fail in this they cannot be evidence. . . . In all the private relations of life you do not presume the existence of the particular character, nor does a person's acting in that character prove that he possessed it. . . . It would let in a dangerous latitude if the Court were once to dispense with that which is an essential preliminary before any writing, not verified on oath, can be made evidence, and which must be established 'aliunde.'") In general, add: 1808, Doe v. Lord Thynne, 10 East 209; 1815, Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 228; 1816, Bullen v. Michel, 2 Price 427; 1835, Baron de Rutzen v. Farr, 4 A. & E. 56; 1849, Doe v. Beviss, 7 C. B. 486. Compare the cases cited post, § 2144.

[2] 1792, Barry v. Babbington, 4 T. R. 514 (Kenyon, L. C. J.: "If the entry be not in the handwriting of the steward, undoubtedly it must be signed by him: but here all these entries were written by the steward himself"). Accord: 1833, Doe v. Stacey, 6 C. & P. 139; 1831, Dwight v. Brown, 9 Conn. 93.

[3] 1821, Wynne v. Tyrwhitt, 4 B. & Ald. 376.

§ 1473. [1] 1855, Papendick v. Bridgwater, 5 E. & B. 176.

[2] 1894, Lyon v. Ricker, 141 N. Y. 225, 36 N. E. 189 (Papendick v. Bridgwater commented on).

§ 1474. [1] 1821, Goss v. Watlington, 4 B. & B. 138.

[2] 1829, Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317; 1864, Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 16 Ia. 81; 1833, Hinkley v. Davis, 6 N. H. 210; 1811, Assignees of S. v. Boucher, 2 Wash. C. C. 473.

§ 1475. Distinction between Statements against Interest, Admissions, and Confessions. (1) A statement of a fact against interest is receivable on the ground that such a statement is one which would not be made unless truth compelled it, and that it is therefore as trustworthy as if made on the stand under cross-examination (ante, § 1457).

(2) But is not a statement by a party-opponent credited for substantially the same reason? Such certainty is the fact, in most instances of the sort (ante, §§ 1048, 1049). Why, then, is not a party's admission merely one sort of the statements against interest receivable under the Hearsay exception? Such is the notion often found judicially advanced, especially in the earlier rulings, when the principle of the present exception was not fully established.

But there are two decisive answers which demonstrate its fallacy. (a) In the first place, under modern law, the party-opponent in a civil case may be summoned as a witness; if, then, the Hearsay exception be invoked, the opponent's extrajudicial statements are inadmissible, unless he is shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable, — as every other declarant must be, in order that his statements against interest may be received (ante, § 1456). But this is never required as preliminary to using an opponent's admissions (ante, § 1049); hence, it is clear, they enter independently of the present Hearsay exception. (b) Secondly, an opponent's admission is receivable even though the fact as stated by him was then not against his interest, i.e. even though he was then making a claim in his favor. This principle (ante, § 1048) shows clearly that opponents' admissions, though they are usually of facts then against their interest, need not be; and thus, again, their use rests on a principle distinct from that of the present exception to the Hearsay rule.

(3) The statements of an accused in a criminal case may be either confessions, in the narrow sense, or admissions, in the broader sense; the distinction has already been examined (ante, §§ 816, 1650). So far as they are admissions (i.e. of facts not necessarily against interest, but merely inconsistent with his present defence), they enter like the admissions of a civil opponent; the first distinction above (a) does not apply, because the accused cannot be called to the stand by the prosecution; but the second distinction (b) does apply, for exculpatory statements of facts not at the time against his interests are nevertheless admissible (ante, § 821). But so far as his statements are direct confessions of crime, they fulfil both the main requirements of the present exception; the declarant is not available as a witness for the prosecution, and the fact of the crime as confessed is directly against his interest. Thus, the direct confessions of an accused person are receivable, not only as included in the general principle of Admissions (ante, § 1048) but also as covered by the doctrine of the present exception to the Hearsay rule. This particular aspect of them, as the chief source of their credit, has often been dwelt upon by judges and jurists.[1] It is worth emphasizing here, § 1475. [1] The following are only a few of many instances: 1726, Gilbert, Evidence 137 ("As persons interested are utterly removed from being evidence for want of integrity, so because it shows the fallacy of the supposed exclusion (post, § 1476), under the present exception, of statements of facts against penal interest.

4. Arbitrary Limitations

§ 1476. History of the Exception; Statement of Fact against Penal Interest, excluded; Confessions of Crime by a Third Person. It is to-day commonly said, and has been expressly laid down by many judges, that the interest prejudiced by the facts stated must be either a pecuniary or a proprietary interest, and not a penal interest. What ground in authority there is for this limitation may be found by examining the history of the Exception at large.

The Exception appears to have taken its rise chiefly in two separate rivulets of rulings, starting independently as a matter of practice, but afterwards united as parts of a general principle. On the one side, it early became customary, shortly after the Hearsay rule was established (ante, § 1364) to receive in evidence the account-entries of a deceased person (particularly a bailiff or steward) charging himself with the receipt of money.[1] No distinct reason appears to have been expressed; but the practice was well-established, and its traces as an independent doctrine are found at a late period.[2] Analogous to this, and yet in origin probably independent, were the practices, already referred to (ante, § 1460), of receiving entries in a vicar's tithe-book and indorsements of payments on notes and bonds. On the other side, a practice obtained, in an independent series of rulings, of receiving declarations, usually oral, in disparagement of one's proprietary title.[3] The use of a party's admissions was also developing (ante, § 1080).

These lines of precedent proceeded independently till about the beginning of the 1800s, when a unity of principle for some of them came gradually to be perceived and argued for.[4] This unity lay in the circumstance that all on the other side the voluntary confession of the party in interest is reckoned the best evidence; for if a man's swearing for his interest can give no credit, he must certainly give most credit when he swears against it"); 1791, Lambe's Case, 2 Leach, Cr. L., 3d ed., 628 (Grose, J., for the twelve judges: "Confessions of guilt . . . are at common law received in evidence as the highest and most satisfactory proof of guilt, because it is fairly presumed that no man would make such a confession against himself if the facts confessed were not true"); 1846, State v. Kirby, 1 Strobh. 156 (Evans, J.: "There is no legal principle better established than that a free and voluntary confession is deserving of the highest credit; for it is not to be presumed that one will falsely accuse himself of a crime especially when he knows that a conviction of it will incur a forfeiture of his life"); 1847, State v. Cowan, 7 Ired. N. C. 246 (Ruffin, C. J., "[We may] proceed upon the common experience of men's motives of action and of the tests of truth. Now few things happen seldomer than that one in the possession of his understanding should of his own accord make a confession against himself which is not true"); 1875, Levison v. State, 54 Ala. 525 (Brickell, C. J.: "The confession is admissible on the presumption that a person will not make an untrue statement criminating himself and militating against his own interest").

§ 1476. [1] 1737, Manning v. Lechmere, 1 Atk. 453 (rental-roll receipts by bailiffs); 1792, Barry v. Bebbington, 4 T. R. 514 (steward's receipts); 1792, Stead v. Heaton, 4 T. R. 670 (town account-books).

[2] 1811, Holladay v. Littlepage, 2 Munf. Va. 320; 1815, Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 229; 1832, Wart v. Pomfret, 5 Sim. 475.

[3] 1787, Davies v. Pierce, 2 T. R. 54 (declarations of tenancy by lessees); 1808, Doe v. Jones, 1 Camp. 367 (charging one's self with rent due).

[4] The case by which the argument was inspired was Warren v. Greenville, 2 Strs. 1129 (1740); to show the fact of a surrender of a life-such statements, in that they concerned matters prejudicial to the declarant's self-interest, were fairly trustworthy and might therefore (if he were deceased) be treated as forming an exception to the Hearsay rule.

This broad principle made its way slowly. There was some uncertainty about its scope; but it was an uncertainty in the direction of breadth; for it was sometimes put in the broad form that any statement by a person "having no interest to deceive" would be admissible. This broad form never came to prevail (post, § 1576). But acceptance was gained, after two decades, for the principle that all declarations of facts against interest (by deceased persons) were to be received. What is to be noted, then, is that from 1800 to about 1830 this was fully understood as the broad scope of the principle. It was thus stated without other qualifications; and frequent passages show the development of the principle to this point.[5]

But in 1844, in a case in the House of Lords, not strongly argued and not considered by the judges in the light of the precedents, a backward step was taken and an arbitrary limit put upon the rule. It was held to exclude the statement of a fact subjecting the declarant to a criminal liability, and to be confined to statements of facts against either pecuniary or proprietary interest.[6] estate, the books of a deceased attorney, charging for services in drawing and engrossing the surrender, and acknowledging payment therefor, were admitted; "it was a circumstance material upon the inquiry into the reasonableness of presuming a surrender; and not [to] be suspected to be done for this purpose; that if E. was living he might undoubtedly be examined to it, and this was now the next best evidence." But the broad argument seems not to have been deliberately recognized until 1808, in Ivat v. Finch, 1 Taunt. 141; here, the plaintiff's acquisition of ownership from the deceased W. being in issue, W.'s declaration that she had given the property to him was admitted; Mansfield, C. J.: "The evidence ought to have been received. . . . The admission, supposed to have been made by Mrs. W., was against her own interest."

[5] In 1808, Lord Ellenborough speaks (Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East 109) of "the broad principle on which receivers' books have been admitted, namely, that the entry made was in prejudice of the party making it." In Roe v. Rawlings, 7 East 290 (1806), the same judge had said that "there are several instances in the books where the declaration of a person having no knowledge of a fact and no interest to falsify it, has been admitted as evidence of it after his death." He then goes on to point out that in the case in hand there was even an interest that would be injured by the fact stated. But he makes no distinct separation, as a class, of statements against interest. Yet in 1811 (Stanley v. White, 14 East 341) he appears to recognize such a class. In 1812 again (Doe v. Robson, 15 East 34), he phrases it that "the ground upon which this evidence has been received is that there is a total absence of interest . . . to pervert the fact." Bayley, J., in the same case, however, puts it as "an established principle of evidence", that the entries are admissible "because it is against his own interest." But the broadest form never obtained acceptance. In 1826, in Barker v. Ray, 2 Russ. 76, where the counsel had argued as if the rule required merely "total absence of interest" (in Lord Ellenborough's words), Lord Eldon said: "The only doubt I have entertained was as to the position that you are to receive evidence of declarations where there is no interest. At a certain period of my professional life, I should have said that the doctrine was quite new to me. I do not mean to say more than that I still doubt concerning it."

Thenceforward, however, and up to the fourth decade of the century, the phrase "against interest" was used without limitation. Bayley, B., says, in 1829 (Middleton v. Melton, 10 B. & C. 317): "It is a general principle of evidence, that declarations or statements of deceased persons are admissible when they appear to have been made against their interest." Littledale, J., in the same case, speaks of "this general principle, that when a person has peculiar means of knowing a fact, and makes a declaration or written entry of that fact, which is against his interest at that time, it is evidence of the fact as between third persons after his death." Parke, J., uses identical language.

[6] 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 109 (declarations of a clergyman that he had performed a marriage which would subject him to a prosecution were rejected; Lyndhurst, L. C.:

Thenceforward this rule was accepted in England;[7] although it was plainly a novelty at the time of its inception; for in several rulings up to that time such statements had been received.[8]

The same attitude has been taken by most American Courts,[9] excluding

"A is indicted for murder; B, who is dead, made while living a declaration that he was present at the murder; that declaration is against his own interest, and would, had he lived, have subjected him to a prosecution. It is in principle the very case supposed in the argument, and it is not possible to say that such a declaration would have been receivable in evidence").

[7] 1844, Davis v. Lloyd, 1 C. & K. 276, Lord Denman, C. J.; 1855, Papendick v. Bridgwater, 5 E. & B. 180, Erle, J. ("It is contended that there is a wide and universal principle that the declaration of a dead person, made against his interest, is admissible. No doubt many judges do use that language; but I think that the principle must be limited [giving the above limits]. . . . The argument in support of the evidence has almost gone the length of asserting that the declaration becomes admissible where any hope or fear might have prompted a contrary assertion; but it was admitted that the rule could not go so far; and in the case in the House of Lords . . . it was said that the interest, to make the declaration admissible, must be either pecuniary or proprietary").

[8] These rulings were not considered in the Sussex Peerage Case: 1660, Hulet's Trial, 5 How. St. 1185, 1192 (charged as being the executioner of King Charles; it was disputed — and has never been clearly known — whether Gregory Brandon, the common hangman, officiated on that occasion, the executioner being masked; the defendant Hulet tried to prove that Brandon did the deed; Witness: "When my lord Capell, duke of Hamilton, and the earl of Holland, were beheaded in Palace-Yard, in Westminster, my lord Capell asked the common hangman, said he, 'Did you cut off my master's head?' 'Yes,' saith he. 'Where is the instrument that did it?' He then brought the ax. . . . My lord Capell took the ax, and kissed it, and gave him five pieces of gold. I heard him say: 'Sirrah, wert thou not afraid?' Saith the hangman, 'They made me cut it off; and I had thirty pounds for my pains'"); 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 306 ("In relation to the manner of their testimony, . . . if it be a hearsay from the offender himself confessing the fact, such a testimony upon hearsay makes a good witness within the statute [of treason]"); 1791, Standen v. Standen, Peake 32 (a marriage-register entry recited the publication of banns; the clergyman's confession that he had married without banns, received; Kenyon, L. C. J., pointing out that a false entry was a felony: "He put himself in a dangerous situation by making such a confession"); 1833, Powell v. Harper, 5 C. & P. 590 (libel, charging the plaintiff with being a receiver of stolen goods; the declarations of A that he had stolen them, received).

[9] The following rulings to this effect are further commented on post, § 1477:

CANADA: 1842, Blair v. Hopkins, 1 Kerr N. Br. 540 (confession of a third person that he and the plaintiff committed the felony, excluded; here the third person was not accounted for).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1913, Donnelly v. U. S., 228 U. S. 243, 33 Sup. 449 (murder; confession by J. D., since deceased, that he was the one who had killed the victim, excluded; Holmes, Lurton, and Hughes, JJ., diss.; the dissenting opinion, by Holmes, J., concisely expresses the whole doctrine); 1918, Royal Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 4th C. C. A., 254 Fed. 805 (fire policy; defence, that W. had set the fire at plaintiff's instigation; W. had been convicted and was therefore disqualified under the local statute; he had made a confession, but after the conspiracy was ended; held, that W.'s confession was not admissible as a declaration against interest, following Donnelly v. U. S.; a judgment for the plaintiff was affirmed; which shows the practical possibility of injustice to a meritorious defence in the application of the irrational limitation of Donnelly v. U. S.; the rule is an intellectual disgrace to our system of Evidence);
Alabama: 1846, Smith v. State, 9 Ala. 995 (declarant not deceased); 1887, Snow v. State, 58 Ala. 375; 1884, West v. State, 76 Ala. 99; 1892, Welsh v. State, 96 Ala. 92, 11 So. 450 (confession of L., not accounted for, excluded); 1916, Spicer v. State, 198 Ala. 13, 73 So. 396 (wife murder; G.'s statement that he was the guilty one, having shot the wife by mistake, held inadmissible; here G. was a servant of defendant and had been shot to death by the defendant, an hour after the wife's death, as her assassin; of course G.'s statement should have been listened to, in any system of Evidence that was not satisfied with burning joss-sticks of precedent; Mayfield, J., diss.);
Arkansas: 1914, Tillman v. State, 112 Ark. 236, 166 S. W. 582 (murder; rule affirmed);
California: 1892, People v. Hall, 94 Cal. 595, 30 Pac. 7 (confession of K., killed while escaping from arrest for the same charge, excluded); Connecticut: 1889, Benton v. Starr, 58 Conn. 285, 20 Atl. 450 (bastardy; confessions of paternity by a third person, excluded; here his absence was unaccounted for); 1886, State v. Beaudet, 53 Conn. 536 (assault with intent to confessions of a crime, or other statements of facts against penal interest, murder: said 'obiter' that admissions of guilt by third persons are inadmissible); 1916, State v. Mosca, 90 Conn. 381, 97 Atl. 340 (assault with intent to murder; evidence that one S., now in Italy, had there confessed that he was the perpetrator, together with evidence of S.'s presence at the time of the assault, excluded; "S. is alive, and his place of residence was known to the accused and his counsel; . . . his deposition might have been taken");

Georgia: 1857, Lyon v. State, 22 Ga. 399 (declarant not accounted for; treated in terms of admissions); 1880, Daniel v. State, 65 Ga. 199 (declarant not accounted for); 1889, Kelly v. State, 82 Ga. 441, 9 S. E. 171 (like the Lyon case); 1896, Delk v. State, 99 Ga. 667, 26 S. E. 752; 1897, Lowry v. State, 100 Ga. 574, 28 S. E. 419 (the third person here not accounted for); 1901, Robinson v. State, 114 Ga. 445, 40 S. E. 253 (joint indictment of R. and H.; before trial, H. disappeared; his declaration confessing the killing and exonerating R., not received); 1906, Perdue v. State, 126 Ga. 112, 54 S. E. 820 (here offered to impeach the witness);
Indiana: 1878, Jones v. State, 64 Ind. 473, 484 (declarant not accounted for; treated on the principle of admissions); 1897, Hank v. State, 148 Ind. 238, 46 N. E. 127, 47 N. E. 465 (abortion; a letter of the deceased asserting that she had herself attempted to produce it, excluded); 1860, Reilley v. State, 14 Ind. 217 (receiving stolen goods; the thief's confession, not admitted to show the theft; "it would seem to be the dictate of natural reason, but the authorities are otherwise"); 1905, Miller v. State, 165 Ind. 566, 76 N. E. 245 (Reilley v. State, approved);
Iowa: 1902, State v. Sale, 119 Ia. 1, 92 N. W. 680, 95 N. W. 193 (murder; deceased's statement that "he was to blame", excluded, ignoring the present point of view); 1915, Weber v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 175 Ia. 358, 151 N. W. 852 (stated more fully ante, § 1461, n. 1; the majority opinion apparently does not sanction the extension of the exception to statements of facts solely against penal interest; see the further comment ante, § 1456);
Kentucky: 1893, Davis v. Com., 95 Ky. 9, 23 S. W. 585 (confession of P., deceased, excluded);
Louisiana: 1893, State v. West, 45 La. An. 928, 929, 13 So. 173 (the confession of B., killed while resisting arrest from the charge, excluded); 1901, State v. Young, 107 La. 618, 31 So. 993 (confessions of one G., not accounted for, held inadmissible); 1911, State v. Jones, 127 La. 694, 53 So. 959 (arson; written and oral admissions by E. W., that he had done the burning, excluded; E. W. was not accounted for);
Maine: 1855, Pike v. Crehore, 40 Me. 503, 511 (to disprove the receipt of money sent by mail, the alleged payee offered the confession of the letter-carrier in that town, made while in prison, that he had taken the money; excluded, the letter-carrier being presumably available as a witness);
Maryland: 1880, Munshower v. State, 55 Md. 1, 18 (not admissible, even to discredit the declarant testifying for the State); 1920, Baehr v. State, 136 Md. 128, 110 Atl. 103 (bastardy; issue whether the woman had had intercourse with other men about the period of conception; the woman's admission of such intercourse with D. having been received, D.'s statement that he had had such intercourse with her was excluded, even after an offer to show that D. could not after search be found; the opinion approves the reason given in Munshower v. State, supra, that this would "effect a dangerous innovation . . . and open the door to the most fraudulent practices", etc.);
Massachusetts: 1804, Com. v. Chabbock, 1 Mass. 144 (declarant not shown to be deceased); 1866, Com. v. Densmore, 12 All. 537 (Bigelow, C. J., excluding declarations of the deceased offered by the defence on a trial for manslaughter: "We are not aware that the exception [against interest] has ever been extended further, so as to render competent declarations which are not otherwise against the interest of the party who made them except that they tend to throw on himself some degree of blame or criminality in relation to the particular transaction and to exonerate others therefrom"); 1894, Farrell v. Weitz, 160 Mass. 288, 35 N. E. 783 (bastardy; admission of paternity by another person not accounted for, excluded); 1899, Com. v. Chance, 174 Mass. 245, 54 N. E. 551; 1855, Com. v. Elisha, 3 Gray 460 (record of conviction of the stealer, on his plea of guilty, not receivable against the receiver of stolen goods, with certain limitations); 1918, Com. v. Wakelin, 230 Mass. 567, 120 N. E. 209 (homicide; a confession by D., who had occupied a cell with the witness, made before defendant's arrest, and admitting the killing of the person whose death was here charged, D. having since been executed, excluded; the opinion calls the rule "salutary"; it should have termed it "abominable");
Michigan: 1882, People v. Stevens, 47 Mich. 411, 11 N. W. 220 (one defendant in court admitted his guilt and offered to withdraw his plea of not guilty, yet apparently did not go on the stand; excluded); 1904, People v. Hutchings, 137 Mich. 527, 100 N. W. 753 (testimony of an accomplice in the police court, the accomplice claiming privilege on the trial, excluded); Mississippi: 1890, Helm v. State, 67 Miss. 572, 7 So. 487 (declarations of the deceased, on a trial for murder, inculpating himself, were offered as declarations against interest, but rejected on precedent and also on the rather curious ground that "how any declarant can be made by third persons; although there is not wanting authority in favor of admitting such statements.[10]

§ 1477. Same: Policy of this Limitation. It is plain enough that this said to be against the interest of a man already passed into the other world . . . is wholly incomprehensible by us");

Missouri: 1874, State v. Evans, 55 Mo. 460 (declarant not accounted for); 1893, State v. Duncan, 116 Mo. 288, 311, 22 S. W. 699 (declaration of S., admitting the shooting, excluded); 1898, State v. Hack, 118 Mo. 92, 98, 23 S. W. 1089 (confession of a co-defendant, not accounted for, excluded);
Nebraska: 1904, Mays v. State, 72 Nebr. 723, 101 N. W. 979 (written confession of a fugitive from justice, excluded; no authority cited);
New York: 1881, Greenfield v. State, 85 N. Y. 75, 86, 88 (declarant in court and not called);
North Carolina: 1833, State v. May, 4 Dev. 332 (larceny; declarant absconded); 1846, State v. Duncan, 6 Ired. 239 (declarant not shown deceased); 1873, State v. White, 68 N. C. 158 (like State v. May); 1874, State v. Haynes, 71 N. C. 84 (same); 1875, State v. Bishop, 73 N. C. 44 (same);
Oklahoma: 1913, Davis v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 515, 128 Pac. 1097 (confession of two persons, not accounted for, that they were the thieves, excluded: "it would be impossible to convict any thief [if such evidence were admissible] because he could always find witnesses who would testify that they had heard some one who was absent confess to being guilty of the crime"); 1915, Dykes v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 602, 150 Pac. 84 (murder in an affray; an alleged confession by C., an accomplice, that he was the one firing the fatal shots, excluded; following Donnelly v. U. S., but not citing Davis v. U. S.; here C. was not accounted for in any way); 1917, Williams v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 189, 163 Pac. 279 (testimony of "a couple of irresponsible jailbirds" to a confession of guilt by a third person unspecified, excluded);
Oregon: 1893, State v. Fletcher, 24 Or. 295, 300, 33 Pac. 575 (murder; confession of a third person, who had fled, excluded);
South Carolina: 1912, Fonville v. Atlanta & C. A. L. R. Co., 93 S. C. 287, 75 S. E. 172 (action for death caused by derailment; to disprove negligence defendant offered the confession of A. that he had thrown the switch and caused the wreck; A. had been convicted of murder on this charge, was serving a life sentence, and was disqualified thereby to testify; excluded; Woods, J., diss.; the decision illustrates in an extreme way the absurdity of the exclusionary rule; the majority opinion unsuccessfully attempts to distinguish Coleman v. Frazier, infra, n. 10);
Tennessee: 1836, Wright v. State, 9 Yerg. 344 (declarant not deceased); 1837, Rhea v. State, 10 Yerg. 260 (same); 1870, Sible v. State, 3 Heisk. 137 (larceny; confessions of a co-indictee, incompetent as a witness, not admitted for the defendant); 1887, Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 259, 6 S. W. 389 (confession of a person not accounted for, excluded);
Vermont: 1900, State v. Totten, 72 Vt. 73, 47 Atl. 105 (indefinite confession by a third person, not accounted for, excluded); 1921, Flemming v. State, — Vt. —, 113 Atl. 783 (breach of the peace; S. was assaulted by a man in the dark; the assailant was identified by his clothes, etc., as the defendant; but the defendant denied his identity; for defendant was offered the statement of a third person, unidentified, who was overheard by the witness to speak as the committer of the offence; the third person had since disappeared; held that the presence of the third person in the vicinity was admissible, but not his statement admitting the offence; this ruling shows the injustice as well as the irrationality of the present law);
Wyoming: 1896, Reavis v. State, 6 Wyo. 240, 44 Pac. 62 (perjury in testifying that C. did not commit an assault; confession of C., unaccounted for, not admitted for the prosecution; treated on the principle of admissions).

[10] 1913, Donnelly v. U. S., 228 U. S. 243, cited supra, n. 9 (the three judges dissenting); 1846, Smith v. State, 9 Ala. 995, cited supra, (Goldthwaite, J., dissenting: "When the other facts and circumstances connect the party with the act, and the confession is made under circumstances which repel the suspicion of any motive, I can see no reason why a doubtful crime may not be thus fixed on the confessing person, though the fact of that confession may tend to exculpate another, to whom the circumstances equally point as the guilty person"); 1898, Masons' F. A. A. v. Riley, 65 Ark. 261, 45 S. W. 684 (policy on accidental death; confession of S., shortly after the death, that he had killed the deceased, admitted, perhaps on the 'res gestæ' grounds, post, § 1747); 1850, Coleman v. Frazier, 4 Rich. L. 152 (a third person's statement that he had stolen money was admitted; O'Neall, J.: "This is not of a matter of business, like those spoken of in that case, but was a criminal act. . . . The admission of such testimony arises from necessity, and the certainty that it is true from the want of motive to falsify. Both these are apparent here. . . . Here we have every guaranty of its truthfulness — the grave consequences of infamy, and at the least ten years' imprisonment, would certainly insure the truth of the speaker"); 1894, Martin v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 317, 26 S. W. 400 (perjury in falsely testifying to larceny by S. and P.; confessions of B. and B. that they committed the larceny, admitted).

limitation, besides being a fairly modern novelty, is inconsistent with the broad language originally employed in stating the reason and principle of the present exception (ante, §§ 1457, 1476) as well as with the settled principle upon which Confessions are received (ante, § 1475).[1]

But, furthermore, it cannot be justified on grounds of policy. The only plausible reason of policy that has ever been advanced for such a limitation is the possibility of procuring fabricated testimony to such an admission if oral.[2] This is the ancient rusty weapon that has always been drawn to oppose any reform in the rules of Evidence, viz. the argument of danger of abuse. This would be a good argument against admitting any witnesses at all, for it is notorious that some witnesses will lie and that it is difficult to avoid being deceived by their lies. The truth is that any rule which hampers an honest man in exonerating himself is a bad rule, even if it also hampers a villain in falsely passing for an innocent.

The only practical consequences of this unreasoning limitation are shocking to the sense of justice; for, in its commonest application, it requires, in a criminal trial, the rejection of a confession, however well authenticated, of a person deceased or insane or fled from the jurisdiction (and therefore quite unavailable) who has avowed himself to be the true culprit. The absurdity and wrong of rejecting indiscriminately all such evidence is patent:

§ 1477. [1] The limitation is apparently supported by the doctrine (ante, §§ 1076, 1079) that the confessions of an accomplice are not to be used by the prosecution against the accused except so far as they are the admissions of a co-conspirator; for A's confession implicating himself and B, the accused, is at least against his own penal interest, and therefore might seem to fall under the present supposed principle. But (1) the interest of A in obtaining a pardon by confessing and betraying his co-criminals is in such cases usually so important that, according to the doctrine of preponderance of interest (ante, § 1464), the statement would not even under the present exception be admissible; (2) the question has usually been dealt with according to the doctrine of Admissions (Tong's Case, quoted infra, note 3), and the present aspect has not been considered; (3) the accomplice must, according to the present exception, be shown deceased or otherwise unavailable, and this showing has usually not been attempted in such cases; the following case shows its application: 1832, R. v. Turner, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 119 (the confession of one of the other prisoners, on examination before a magistrate, it was objected to, "secondly, that it was not the best evidence that the circumstances of the case admitted of, inasmuch as the prisoner whose examination it purported to be was not attaint [he had pleaded guilty, but sentence had not been passed], and might therefore be put into the box and examined as a witness, which would give the prisoner's counsel an opportunity of cross-examining her on oath"; the confession was rejected, without indicating the grounds).

[2] 1857, McDonald, J., in Lyon v. State, 22 Ga. 399, 401: "All one defendant would have to do would be to admit that his guilty accomplice was innocent and that he himself had perpetrated the crime, absent himself so as to enable the party on his trial to have the benefit of his admission, and after his acquittal appear, demand his trial, and prove by the evidence of the acquitted party that he was in fact the guilty person." That any judge could believe such a scheme to be within the possibilities of successful accomplishment seems curious.

The following press dispatch (the year of which has inadvertently not been preserved) illustrates the possibilities of using this exception: "Columbia, Miss., March 10. — A death-bed confession by Joseph Beard, a farmer, announced today by the sheriff's office, cleared of suspicion William Purvis, who twenty-five years ago escaped death by hanging, after conviction for murder, only because the noose about his neck slipped when the scaffold trap was sprung.

"Purvis was found guilty of killing from ambush William Buckley. When he fell from the scaffold unharmed, spectators, who thought it an intervention of Providence, induced the authorities to put him back in jail, and an appeal to the governor brought a commutation of sentence. Several years later Purvis was pardoned. He now lives in Lamar County.

"Beard, dying of pneumonia, confessed that he and two other men killed Buckley."

1913, HOLMES, J., diss., in Donnelly v. United States, 228 U. S. 243, 33 Sup. 449: "The confession of Joe Dick, since deceased, that he committed the murder for which the plaintiff in error was tried, coupled with circumstances pointing to its truth, would have a very strong tendency to make any one outside of a Court of justice believe that Donnelly did not commit the crime. (I say this, of course, on the supposition that it should be proved that the confession really was made, and that there was no ground for connecting Donnelly with Dick.) The rules of Evidence in the main are based on experience, logic, and common sense, less hampered by history than some parts of the substantive law. There is no decision by this Court against the admissibility of such a confession; the English cases since the separation of the two countries do not bind us; the exception to the hearsay rule in the case of declarations against interest is well known; no other statement is so much against interest as a confession of murder; it is far more calculated to convince than dying declarations, which would be let in to hang a man; and when we surround the accused with so many safeguards, some of which seem to me excessive, I think we ought to give him the benefit of a fact that, if proved, commonly would have such weight. The history of the law and the arguments against the English doctrine are so well and fully stated by Mr. Wigmore that there is no need to set them forth at greater length."

The rulings already in our books cannot be thought to involve a settled and universal acceptance of this limitation. In the first place, in almost all of the rulings the declarant was not shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable as a witness, and therefore the declaration would have been inadmissible in any view of the present exception (ante, § 1456). Secondly, in some of the rulings (for example, in North Carolina) the independent doctrine (ante, §§ 139–141) was applicable that, in order to prove the accused's non-commission of the offence by showing commission by another person, not merely one casual piece of evidence suffices but a 'prima facie' case resting on several concurring pieces of evidence must be made out. Finally, most of the early rulings had in view, not the present exception to the Hearsay rule, but the doctrine of Admissions (ante, §§ 1076, 1079) that the admissions of one who is not a co-conspirator cannot affect others jointly charged.[3]

It is therefore not too late to retrace our steps, and to discard this barbarous doctrine, which would refuse to let an innocent accused vindicate himself even by producing to the tribunal a perfectly authenticated written confession, made on the very gallows, by the true culprit now beyond the reach of justice. Those who watched (in 1899) with self-righteous indignation the course of proceedings in Captain Dreyfus' trial should remember that, if that trial had occurred in our own Courts, the spectacle would have been no less shameful if we, following our own supposed precedents, had refused to admit what the French Court never for a moment hesitated to admit, — the authenticated confession of the escaped Major Esterhazy, avowing himself the guilty author of the treason there charged.

[3] 1663, Tong's Case, Kelyng 18 ("Such confession [before a justice of a privy councillor on examination] so proved is only evidence against the party himself who made the confession, but cannot be made use of as evidence against any others whom on his examination he confessed to be in the treason").

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC III: DECLARATIONS ABOUT FAMILY HISTORY (PEDIGREE)

CHAPTER XLIX.

§ 1480. In general; Statutory Provisions. This is one of the oldest of the exceptions. In the 1800s, little difficulty was made about accepting reputation-evidence generally. It could hardly be otherwise when the jury-practice had just been freed (ante, § 1364) from the traditional notion that the jury themselves represented the reputation or community-knowledge of the neighborhood. Soon, however, the use of reputation became limited to what had doubtless been its commonest instances, — matters of prescriptive possession and of pedigree or genealogy. From the former was then developed the exception for Reputation to Land-Boundaries (post, § 1582); from the latter, the present exception. Here the notion of general reputation as the distinguishing form of the evidence has long since disappeared. The evidence may be in the form of individual declarations; though it may also be in the form of family reputation. In general, the scope of the present exception has been much enlarged during the past century in this country. Occasionally a statute has attempted to define its terms.[1]

1. The Necessity Principle

§ 1481. Death, etc., of Declarant or of Family. The Necessity principle (ante, § 1421) is here satisfied by the general difficulty of obtaining any other than traditionary evidence in matters of family history. The following passages illustrate the accepted judicial attitude:

1806, L. C. ERSKINE, in Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140: "Courts of law are obliged in cases of this kind to depart from the ordinary rules of evidence, as it would be impossible to establish descents according to the strict rules by which contracts are established and subjects of property regulated, [by] requiring the facts from the mouth of the witness who has the knowledge of them. In cases of pedigree, therefore, recourse is had to a secondary sort of evidence, — the best the nature of the subject will admit, establishing the descent from the only sources that can be had."

1811, LAWRENCE, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 409: "From the necessity of the thing, the declarations of members of the family in matters of pedigree are generally admitted, . . . [the rejection of which] would often be the rejection of all the evidence that could be offered." MANSFIELD, C. J.: "In matters of pedigree, it being impossible to prove by living witnesses the relationships of past generations, the declarations of deceased members of the family are admitted."

1836, STORY, J., in Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 434: "In cases of pedigree, [hearsay] is admitted upon the ground of necessity, or the great difficulty and sometimes the impossibility of proving remote facts of this sort by living witnesses, . . . there being no 'lis mota' or other interest to affect the credit of their statement."

1886, WOODS, J., in Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, 29 Sup. 915: "This exception has been recognized on the ground of necessity; for as, in inquiries respecting relationship or descent, facts must often be proved which occurred many years before the trial and were known to but few persons, it is obvious that the strict enforcement in such cases of the rules against hearsay evidence would frequently occasion failure of justice."

1891, PECKHAM, J., in Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024: "In many cases it will readily be seen such evidence may under the circumstances be the only evidence § 1480. [1] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1852 ("The declaration, act, or omission of a member of a family who is a decedent, or out of the jurisdiction, is also admissible as evidence of common reputation, in cases where, on questions of pedigree, such reputation is admissible"); § 1870, par. 4 ("the act or declaration, verbal or written, of a deceased person in respect to the relationship, birth, marriage, or death of any person related by blood or marriage to such deceased person" is admissible); § 1870, par. 13 ("entries in family Bibles or other family books or charts; engravings on rings, family portraits, and the like, as evidence of pedigree", are admissible; see also ib. § 1870, par. 11, cited post, § 1597, under Reputation); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5764 ("Pedigree, including descent, relationship, birth, marriage, and death, may be proved either by the declarations of deceased persons related by blood or marriage, or by general repute in the family, inscriptions, 'family trees', and similar evidence"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10513, 10531, par. 4, 11, 13 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1852, 1870); Or. Laws 1920, §§ 709, 727, par. 4, 11, 13 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1852, 1870); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 281 (like Cal C. C. P. § 1852, omitting after "evidence" and inserting "of [sic? if] pedigree or relationship or family genealogy are questions at issue"); § 298, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, inserting, after "deceased person", the words "or a person not in the Philippine Islands"); § 298, par. 11, 13 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 4); § 1403, par. 9 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 11); par. 11 (like ib. § 1870, par. 13).

which can be obtained. . . . Traditional declarations become the best evidence sometimes, when those best acquainted with the fact are dead."

It will be noticed that the language here used offers opportunity for choice between three distinct and competing rules in the application of the Necessity principle.

(1) First, there are references to "past generations", "many years before", "lapse of time", "after one generation has passed away", and the like. These imply that the exception comes into play only where the matter is "ancient", i.e. of a past generation; and that therefore, on the one hand, matters of recent occurrence may not be so proved, whether or not there are living witnesses, and, on the other hand, that matters of a time whose witnesses are likely to have passed away may be so proved, whether or not living witnesses are available. But there appears to be in fact no rule of such a form, in spite of the implication of the above language. The tendency is against such a narrowness for the rule.[1]

(2) Secondly, a similar but slightly broader rule may be seen indicated by the phrases, "no living witnesses can be had", "the great difficulty of procuring living witnesses", and by the statements that such evidence is admissible because living witnesses can "often" or "usually" not be had. The implication is that where any living witness to the same matter, particularly a member of the family, can be had, no hearsay statement of any deceased persons can be received. This form of rule, which has had some support in decisions,[2] is perhaps appropriate enough where the evidence is § 1481. [1] 1870, Scharff v. Keener, 64 Pa. 379 (semble, that the recent date of the occurrences is immaterial).

[2] Ala. 1847, White v. Strother, 11 Ala. 724 (excluded, where other members of the family were alive); 1916, Duncan v. Watson, 198 Ala. 180, 73 So. 448 (family repute from a witness 22 years old, as to marriage of an aunt, etc., etc., not admitted without showing that "the declarants from whom the information came were not living at the time of the trial"); Ga. 1890, Traveler's Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 779, 12 S. E. 18 (insurance claim; family reputation as to the fact of death, the time being less than a year before, the members of the family still surviving, excluded); Haw. 1910, Makekau v. Kane, 20 Haw. 203 (family repute heard from a grandfather and a grandmother, the former being shown deceased; admitted, without showing the latter's decease); Ia. 1884, Ross v. Loomis, 64 Ia. 432, 20 N. W. 749 (present reputation at M.'s place of residence "among the relatives and family" of M., as to his decease, the wife being alive, excluded); Pa. 1846, Covert v. Hertzog, 4 Pa. St. 146 (hearsay declarations were rejected as evidence of "a comparatively recent marriage", where "there was abundance of such evidence by living witnesses"); Tex. 1859, Campbell v. Wilson, 23 Tex. 252 (unidentified entries in a family Bible were rejected, where the father was dead but the mother was alive and in the jurisdiction); Vt. 1896, Hurlburt's Estate, 68 Vt. 366, 35 Atl. 77 (H. went to Dakota in 1882; reputation in the family, consisting of sister, mother, and brother, the father alone being dead, as to the fact of H.'s death, excluded; "when all the facts relative to a question of pedigree are within the knowledge of living witnesses, and none of such facts are derived from the declarations of deceased members of the family, there is no necessity for resorting to so-called 'family reputation', created wholly by the living, any more than in any other kind of case not involving pedigree").

In the following cases peculiar modifications of this rule were laid down: 1883, Harland v. Eastman, 107 Ill. 538 (several members of the family were living and available; Dickey, J.: "They are all living and their sworn testimony is better than their unsworn statements. It follows that the witness cannot properly be allowed to state his conclusion from such unsworn statements, unless all of them taken together, with their surroundings, enable him to say such was the accepted state of the case in the family or such was the uncontradicted repute in the family"); 1818, Crouch v. Eveleth, 15 Mass. 305 (family hear-offered in the shape of family reputation; for there is in strictness no necessity for resorting to the hearsay of the family as such, until it appears that members of the family cannot be had to testify on the stand.

(3) But where the evidence offered is the declaration of an individual member of the family, the necessity for this person's hearsay lies merely in the impossibility of procuring the declarant himself to testify on the stand; i.e. the death, absence, insanity, or the like, of the declarant alone suffices. Such is the rule dictated by the analogies of the other Hearsay exceptions admitting individual statements (for example, Dying Declarations, Statements against Interest, Regular Entries). In the exception for Reputation (post, § 1580) there is some support for the notion that the necessity must consist in the lack of other evidence of any sort; but where individual declarations are receivable, no claim can be made for such a broad idea of necessity. Accordingly the only sound rule for the use of individual declarations is that the declarant himself must be shown to be unavailable.[3]

It should be noted that since entries in a family Bible, or the like (post, § 1495), may usually be treated as representing either the entrant's individual assertion or the family's reputation, it should therefore be enough, if the entrant is identified, to show the entrant alone to be unavailable, and not to show also the unavailability of other members of the family.

(4) Supposing the evidence offered to be the declaration of an individual, it is clear that at least the declarant must be shown unavailable, by decease or otherwise.[4] Here the analogies of the other exceptions, as well as the nature say of the existence of children as heirs was rejected because no effort had been made to obtain the record of marriage and no showing that it was lost; this would hardly be followed).

If a person's testimony as to his own age is to be treated as a report of family hearsay (post, § 1495), this rule would require that the members of his family be accounted for. Contra: 1880, Cherry v. State, 68 Ala. 30 (a person's statement as to his age was treated as based on pedigree hearsay; but no specific decease was required to be shown). In the same State the ruling of Rogers v. De Bardelaben Co., 97 Ala. 154, 12 So. 81, that a brother and a brother-in-law could not testify on the stand to the plaintiff's age, because third persons whose declarations are offered must be deceased, is incomprehensible.

[3] 1912, Jarchow v. Grosse, 257 Ill. 36, 100 N. E. 290 (where the declarant is deceased, the matter need not be an ancient one, and other members of the family may still be living); 1860, Crauford v. Blackburn, 17 Md. 54 (Bartol, J.: "This exception to the general rule had its origin in the necessity of the case. . . . It is objected that . . . the necessity did not exist [for a husband's declarations as to the marriage], there being a party to the alleged marriage [the wife] living and competent to testify. . . . This objection arises from a misapprehension of the rule. Such declarations are not held to be admissible or inadmissible according to the necessity of the particular case; but . . . by the established rule of law, which, though said to have its origin in necessity, is universal in its application").

[4] ENGLAND: 1859, Butler v. Mountgarret, 6 H. L. C. 648; CANADA: 1848, Doe v. Servos, 5 U. C. Q. B. 284, 288; UNITED STATES: Ala. 1920, Sheffield Iron Co. v. Dennis, 204 Ala. 530, 86 So. 467 (employment of minor; affidavit of parents, still living, not admissible under hearsay exception, but only as testimonial contradiction); Cal. 1897, People v. Mayne, 118 Cal. 516, 50 Pac. 654 (a family-Bible entry, made by the mother; excluded, the mother being alive and available); 1899, James' Estate, 124 id. 653, 57 Pac. 579, 1008; Conn. 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349; Ia. 1870, Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 303; 1904, State v. Trusty, 122 Ia. 82, 97 N. W. 989; Kan. 1905, State v. Miller, 71 Kan. 200, 80 Pac. 51 (age of a child; copy of a Russian parish record, made by the priest at the father's instance and brought over with the family, excluded, on the ground that the father was still living); Me. 1918, Eagle Lake v. Ft. Kent, 117 Me. 134, 103 Atl. 10 (pauper settlement; father's declarations excluded, because living and unaccounted for; son's testimony to father's birthplace, construed as of the necessity-principle itself, indicate that not only death, but other circumstances — such as insanity, absence from the jurisdiction, and the like — may create such a necessity. On this point, however, the rulings are few.[5]

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee

§ 1482. General Principle. The circumstantial guarantee for trustworthiness (ante, § 1422) has been found in the probability that the "natural effusions" (to use Lord Eldon's often-quoted phrase) of those who talk over family affairs when no special reason for bias or passion exists are fairly trustworthy, and should be given weight by judges and juries, as they are in the ordinary affairs of life. The sentence of Lord Eldon's in Whitelocke v. Baker has become the classical passage on this subject:

1790, ASHHURST, J., in R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 720: "It is natural for persons to talk of their own situations and of their families. The evidence is in its nature of an unsuspicious kind; it is generally brought from remote times, when no question was depending or even thought of, and when no purpose would apparently be answered."

1807, L. C. ELDON, in Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 514: "Declarations in the family, descriptions in wills, descriptions upon monuments, descriptions in Bibles and registry books, all are admitted upon the principle that they are the natural effusions of a party who must know the truth, and who speaks upon an occasion when his mind stands in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth." [1]

1811, Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 406, 409, 420. LAWRENCE, J.: "Where the relator had no interest to serve, and there is no ground for supposing that his mind stood otherwise than even upon the subject, . . . we may reasonably suppose that he neither stops short nor goes beyond the limits of truth in his spontaneous declarations respecting his relations and the state of his family." WOOD, B.: "The admission of hearsay evidence of the declarations of deceased persons in matters of pedigree is an exception to the general testimony to the father's statement); Mo. 1919, State v. Bowman, 278 Mo. 492, 213 S. W. 64 (rape under age; a list of the children's birth dates, written down by the grandmother, at the mother's dictation, before controversy arisen, excluded, the mother being alive and having testified in the case; obviously, a technically correct ruling; but, obviously also, precisely the useful kind of evidence to which the hearsay rule should show flexibility); N. H. 1828, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 378; 1854, Mooers v. Bunker, 29 N. H. 432; 1854, Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 491; N. Y. 1829, Leggett v. Boyd, 3 Wend. 379; 1851, Robinson v. Blakely, 4 Rich. 588 (a father's entry in a family register, and a father's declarations, the father being still alive and in the jurisdiction, excluded); Okl. 1922, Campbell v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 206 Pac. 622 (statutory rape; family Bible not admitted, the mother and the father being present and testifying); Tex. 1912, Bigliben v. State, 68 Tex. Cr. 530, 151 S. W. 1044 (family-Bible entry, made by the father, still living; excluded); W. Va. 1884, Peterson v. Ankrom, 25 W. Va. 56, 62.

Contra: 1914, State v. Goddard, 69 Or. 73, 133 P. 90, 138 Pac. 243 (holding exceptionally that the death of the entrant in a family Bible need not be proved, because L. O. L. § 727, subsect. 13, makes such entries admissible unqualifiedly).

[5] Can. 1897, May v. Logie, 27 Can. Sup. 443, 445 (statements of a father, living in England, excluded, since his deposition might have been obtained); U. S. 1919, Paulsen's Estate, 179 Cal. 528, 178 Pac. 143 (letters etc. from relatives in Denmark, telling of B.'s death, admitted); 1884, Ross. v. Loomis, 64 Ia. 432, 20 N. W. 749 (statements as to M.'s decease, by M.'s wife, living in another jurisdiction, excluded); 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 (declarant residing without the State; admitted); 1919, Garvin v. Western Cooperage Co., 94 Or. 487, 184 Pac. 555 (letter from a brother in Austria, admitted); 1859, Campbell v. Wilson, 23 Tex. 252, semble (absence from the jurisdiction suffices); and the Codes quoted ante, § 1480.

§ 1482. [1] Approved by Lord Cranworth in Butler v. Mountgarret, 6 H. L. C. 644 (1859).

law of evidence; and it has ever been received with a degree of jealousy, because the opposite party has had no opportunity of cross-examining the persons by whom the declarations are supposed to have been made. But declarations, to be receivable in evidence, . . . must have been the natural effusions of the mind of the party making them, and must have been made on an occasion when his mind stood in an even position, without any attempt to exceed or fall short of the truth." ELDON, L. C.: "If the entry be the ordinary act of a man in the ordinary course of life, without interest or particular motive, this, as the spontaneous effusion of his own mind, may be looked at without suspicion and received without objection. Such is the contemporaneous entry in a family Bible, by a father, of the birth of a child."

1840, VERPLANCK, Sen., in People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 220: "In order to adhere as closely as possible to the policy of shutting out all vague, second-hand, and unauthenticated evidence, such exception is made in favor of proof of declarations and reputation [of family history] only where the persons whose opinion and declarations are relied upon, besides being those most likely to be well informed as to the facts, were also, so far as appears, free from all possible inducement to misrepresent the truth themselves or from any danger of being misled by others so interested. . . . It is then received . . . because ordinarily they could have no temptation to falsehood or misrepresentation on such a subject."

1849, PEARSON, J., in Moffitt v. Witherspoon, 10 Ired. 192: "[Pedigree] is a matter about which they [the members of a family] are presumed to be particularly interested to ascertain and declare the truth. Every one from a feeling of nature endeavors to know who his relations are and will seldom declare those to be his kinsmen who are not."

In applying this principle, what specific rules have been deduced?

§ 1483. Declarations must have been made before Controversy. First, declarations made during the course of a controversy are to be regarded as lacking in the guarantees of trustworthiness. In the traditional phrase, the declarations, to be receivable, must have been made 'ante litem motam':

1811, HEATH, J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 413: "When the contest has originated, people take part on one side or the other; their minds are in a ferment, and if they were disposed to speak the truth, facts are seen by them through a false medium. . . . It would hold out an invitation to fabricated testimony if declarations could be received in evidence which have been made when the contest was actually begun."

1831, L. C. BROUGHAM, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 160: "If there be 'lis mota', or anything which has precisely the same effect upon a person's mind with 'litis contestatio', that person's declaration ceases to be admissible in evidence. It is no longer what Lord Eldon calls a natural effusion of the mind. It is subject to a strong suspicion that the party was in the act of making evidence for himself. If he be in such circumstances that what he says is said, not because it is true, not because he believes it, but because he feels it to be profitable or that it may hereafter become evidence for him or for those in whom he takes an interest after his death, it is excluded. . . . The question then always will be, . . . Was the evidence in the particular circumstances manufactured, or was it spontaneous and natural?"

On two occasions, judges have doubted the expediency of this limitation;[1]

§ 1483. [1] 1811, Graham, B., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 408; 1821, Boudereau v. Montgomery, 4 Wash. C. C. 190 (Washington, J., admitting depositions in a previous cause: "It is not without great diffidence that I venture to dissent from the reasoning of the judges in the Berkeley Peerage Case. But it seems to be rather artificial than solid, when directed against the admissibility of the evidence; although I acknowledge that the possibility of an undue bias having been produced by the existence of a controversy might

but it is entirely in analogy to the limitations in other exceptions, and, so long as the Hearsay rule is enforced in its present form, this limitation has a legitimate place.[2]

Principle requires, however, that the dispute, if it is to exclude the statements, should have been more or less over the precise point to which the statements refer; else no bias could be supposed to affect it. There is opportunity for much latitude in applying this limitation. Judges' opinions have differed;[3] but it should be a matter for the trial Court's discretion whether under the circumstances of each case bias can be supposed to have existed:

1840, VERPLANCK, Sen., in People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 215, 224: "If the rule that actual litigation or litigious controversy without actual suit always vitiates the hearsay declaration of those in whose family it existed be narrowed down to controversies upon the very point afterwards sought to be ascertained, and strictly and legally involving it, the reason of the rule is lost sight of. The result would be to exclude such family traditions when the parties had an accurate knowledge of their legal rights or the legal grounds of their claim, whilst it would admit them in cases where the claim pursued with equal ardor and interest is erroneously understood by the parties themselves, and where, for that very reason, they and their friends are more disposed to see the whole question and its evidence through a false medium, and to suffer their wishes and feelings to disturb or discolor their recollections or relations of facts. The spirit and reason of the rule in my judgment, therefore, apply to every ancient controversy involving or affected by the question afterwards in litigation or supposed at the time to be involved in it or affected by it."

On the other hand, it is not necessary that litigation should actually have begun at the time of the declaration. The element to be avoided is a bias in the mind of a declarant; and this is sufficiently probable if a dispute or controversy is actually in progress, even though it may not have reached the stage of legal proceedings:

1831, L. C. BROUGHAM, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 160: "Prove that . . . the person concocting or making the declaration took part in the controversy. Show with propriety be urged against the credit to be given to the evidence, where the proofs in the cause are contradictory and to be weighed. I am apprehensive that great mischief and injustice might be the consequence of excluding the only species of evidence which circumstances not within the control of the parties interested may have left to them, on the ground of a presumed bias created by an existing or even presumed controversy").

[2] Limitation recognized: Eng. 1816, Freeman v. Phillipps, 4 M. & S. 397; 1881, Dysart Peerage Case, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 489, 503; U. S. 1839, Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. 209, 220; 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349; 1915, Mobley v. Pierce, 144 Ga. 327, 87 S. E. 24; 1859, Collins v. Grantham, 12 Ind. 444; 1881, De Haven v. De Haven, 77 Ind. 236, 237; 1840, People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. N. Y. 210; 1911, Rollins v. Wicker, 154 N. C. 559, 70 S. E. 934 (deceased declarant's testimony at a former trial of similar issue, held inadmissible as 'post litem motam'); 1922, Jelser v. White, — N. C. —, 110 S. E. 849 (before controversy arisen); 1825, Morgan v. Purnell, 4 Hawks 97; 1900, Nehring v. McMurrian, 94 Tex. 45, 57 S. W. 943; 1903, Davis v. Moyles, 76 Vt. 25, 56 Atl. 174 (recitals in a petition concerning confiscated lands, excluded).

[3] The following cases apply the rule: 1816, Freeman v. Phillipps, 4 M. & S. 397; 1857, Gee v. Ward, 7 E. & B. 511; 1860, Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170, 188 ("if a controversy exist, it must be on the very point in respect of which the declarations are sought to be used"; here there had been controversy about the legitimacy of children, but not about a cohabitation or a deathbed marriage, with which the admitted letter dealt); 1828, Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. 337; 1919, Garvin v. Western Cooperage Co., 94 Or. 487, 184 Pac. 555 (letter from a brother of deceased, after his death, lent before controversy arisen as to the precise issue, viz. the mother's identity, admitted).

me even that there was a contemplation of legal proceedings, with a view to which the pedigree was manufactured, and I shall hold that it comes within the rule which rejects evidence fabricated for a purpose by a man who has an interest of his own to serve."

1859, WILLES, J., in Butler v. Mountgarret, 6 H. L. C. 641: "The 'lis' would surely have dated at least from the time when the parties had respectively assumed a hostile attitude. . . . A suit is not necessary to constitute 'lis.'" [4]

The fact that no controversy existed, being preliminary to the admission of the evidence, must be shown by the party offering it.[5] But, as this is in effect proving a negative, slight evidence should suffice.

§ 1484. No Interest or Motive to Deceive. The existence of a controversy is only one circumstance (though the most common one) likely to produce a bias fatal to the trustworthiness of the declaration. Judicial opinion seems to hold, and properly, that other considerations may under certain circumstances operate to exclude the declarations. In general, they would be excluded where there is any specific and adequate reason to suppose the existence of a motive inconsistent with a fair degree of sincerity. In Lord Eldon's words, they must appear to be the "natural effusions of a party standing in an even position":[1]

[4] Compare the opinions of the other law lords, and the opinion of Greene, B., in the same case below, in 6 Ir. C. L. 94.

It was once said by Baron Alderson (1834, Walker v. Beauchamp, 6 C. & P. 561) that it was sufficient if at the time of the declaration the state of facts existed (for example, the birth of a child) as to which the controversy afterwards arose. This, however, obviously cannot be sound; for it is to the controversy, and to nothing else, that the bias is to be attributed. Mr. Baron Alderson's opinion has been more than once repudiated, and has apparently never been confirmed: 1843, Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. 344 (Sugden, L. C.: "The point of inquiry respecting the admissibility of such evidence is, not the existence of a state of facts out of which a claim has arisen, but the existence of a controversy or dispute respecting that claim"; here the question depended on whether a child was born alive or not, but no one supposed till several years afterwards that anything depended on the child's birth). Accord: 1856, Pigot, C. B., in Butler v. Mountgarret, 6 Ir. C. L. 107; 1836, Shadwell, V. C., in Slaney v. Wade, 7 Sim. 615; 1860, Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170, 187; 1919, Estill v. Estill, 149 Ga. 384, 100 S. E. 365 (inheritance under a will to children of M. W. E.; written and oral declarations of M. W. E., now deceased, that the claimant was M. V. E. his daughter, admitted under Civ. C. 1910, § 5764; in this case the will left the income of certain property to M. W. E., and the principal to his children if any, and if none, the principal to other distributees; on the ground that this furnished a motive of interest in M. W. E. to secure the principal for a child and for his widow, and that the result of such inheritance had been discussed by him, Hill, J., dissented, applying the principle of 'post litem motam'; but this interpretation is far-fetched and is not justified by the authorities).

[5] 1825, Morgan v. Purnell, 4 Hawks N. C. 97; 1890, Hodges v. Hodges, 106 N. C. 374, 11 S. E. 364; 1906, Gorham v. Settegast, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 254, 98 S. W. 665.

It has been held that the existence of a controversy between certain members of the family is sufficient to condemn declarations by a member who was himself ignorant of the controversy and therefore quite unbiassed: 1811, Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 417 (Mansfield, C. J.: "I have now only to notice the observation that to exclude declarations you must show that the 'lis mota' was known to the person who made them. There is no such rule. . . . If an inquiry were to be instituted in each instance, whether the existence of the controversy was or was not known at the time of the declaration, much time would be wasted and great confusion would be produced"). But this is against the reason of the rule, and cannot be supported: 1860, Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170, 187 (Cresswell, J.: "We must judge of the feelings of the party from what he knew at the time").

§ 1484. [1] Accord: 1828, Doe v. Randall, 2 Moo. & Rob. 25; 1831, Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 147; 1843, Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. 345; 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349; 1828, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 378; 1895, Byers v. Wallace, 87 Tex. 503, 29 S. W. 760 (excluding the statements of one asserting the death of a nephew whose sole heir he was; superseding Fowler

1861, CHANNELL, B., in Plant v. Taylor, 7 H. & N. 237: "Perhaps the learned judge was right in rejecting the evidence on the ground that any declaration made by Thomas Taylor, the father, . . . would be a declaration by a person whose mind could not be free from bias. It was manifestly in many ways directly for his interest to make a declaration tending to disavow his first marriage, or having a tendency to show that it was an illegal marriage and consequently did not invalidate the second. No case has been cited in which the declaration of a deceased person obviously for his interest has been received."

But this principle must not be pushed too far. Cautions have more than once been given to avoid excluding evidence merely because there might have been a bias:[2]

1847, L. C. J. DENMAN, in Doe v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 325: "[A declaration in a deed] was objected to on account of the interest they had had in making out things to be as there represented, and at least this intention of disposing of property was said to be equivalent to a 'lis mota.' But we think this objection also fails. . . . The parties did what they had a right to do if members of the family. Almost every declaration of relationship is accompanied with some feeling of interest, which will often cast suspicion on the declarations, but has never been held to render them inadmissible."

1840, WALWORTH, C., in People v. Fire Ins. Co., 25 Wend. 215: "The declarations of deceased relatives are not to be absolutely rejected because there is room for a suspicion that they may have been made for a sinister purpose, if the party making them has no interest in their truth."

In particular, as to the entry of a birth declared to be legitimate, the mere circumstance that the entry was made with a view to perpetuating evidence of legitimacy or of the date of birth should not exclude the entry; otherwise very few such entries would be receivable, and the chief and honorable purpose of making them would be defeated:[3]

1801, MANSFIELD, C. J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 418 (for all the Judges, respecting an entry in a family Bible): "The father is proved to have declared that he made such entry for the express purpose of establishing the legitimacy of his son and the time of birth, in case the same should be called in question after the father's death. The opinion of the Judges is that the entry would be receivable in evidence, notwithstanding the professed view with which it was made. Its particularity would be a strong circumstance of suspicion; but still it would be receivable, whatever the credit might be to which it would be entitled."

Finally, the offeror of the evidence must perhaps show the absence of motive to deceive;[4] but slight evidence should suffice.

v. Simpson, 79 id. 611, 614, 15 S. W. 682); 1899, Turner v. Sealock, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 594, 54 S. W. 358 (same; sister's declarations as to brother's death, excluded); 1899, Lewis v. Bergess, 22 id. 252, 54 S. W. 609 (same; mother's declarations excluded).

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 1492, 1493, which are sometimes wrongly placed on this principle.

[2] Accord: 1831, Shields v. Boucher, 2 Russ. & M. 147, per Brougham, L. C.; 1919, Estill v. Estill, 149 Ga. 384, 100 S. E. 365 (cited more fully ante, § 1483, n. 4).

[3] Accord: 1777, Goodright v. Moss, 2 Cowp. 594, semble, Lord Mansfield, C. J.; 1857, Gee v. Ward, 7 E. & B. 511; 1840, People v. Fire Ins. Co., 20 Wend. 211, Cowen, J. Contra: 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349 (Swift, C. J.: "When they are made for the express purpose of being given in evidence on a question of pedigree, they will not be received. If a person were to take up a Bible, and, having the idea that it was afterwards to be produced in evidence, were to write down at once the births and deaths of his children, such an entry would not be admissible").

[4] 1854, Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 491; and cases supra, semble, §§ 1482, 1483.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence

§ 1485. (1) Testimonial Qualifications. As in the other exceptions to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1424), there are here found certain requirements resting upon the general principles of Testimonial Qualifications which are applicable to all testimonial statements and have been already examined for testimony in general. Chiefly there arise here questions as to the means of Knowledge (ante, § 656) of the declarant, and the form of Communication (ante, § 766) of his knowledge.

§ 1486. (a) Sufficiency of the Declarant's Means of Knowledge; General Principle. The ordinary principle applicable to the situation would be (ante, §§ 654, 656) that the declarant must appear to have had fair knowledge, or fair opportunities for acquiring knowledge, on the subject testified to. This principle, as applied to the facts of family history, indicates that the qualified persons will be found chiefly, if not exclusively, within the family circle; for they alone may be expected to have fairly accurate information. It is of course not to be expected that personal observation shall be demanded, i.e. that only from those who were present at the birth, wedding, or death, shall hearsay statements be received; this would be to misconceive the theory of the exception. That theory is that the constant (though casual) mention and discussion of important family affairs, whether of the present or of past generations, puts it in the power of members of the family circle to be fully acquainted with the original personal knowledge and the consequent tradition on the subject, and that those members will therefore know, as well as any one can be expected to know, the facts of the matter. It is not that they have, each and all, a knowledge by personal observation, but that they at least know the fact as accepted by family understanding and tradition, and that this understanding, based as it was originally on observation, is 'prima facie' trustworthy. This has always been accepted as the sufficient reason for predicating testimonial qualifications: [1]

§ 1486. [1] Personal knowledge of the facts is therefore not requisite: 1831, Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 165 (Brougham, L. C.: "The declarations tendered may either refer to what the party knew of his own personal knowledge, or, as is much more frequently the case, to what he had heard from others to whom he gave credit."). Accord: 1879, Van Sickle v. Gibson, 40 Mich. 173; 1843, Jewell's Lessee v. Jewell, 1 How. 231. Nor need the knowledge, such as it is, be exact in its details; for example, the declaration, in affirming relationship, need not particularize as to the degree, where that is not material in the case: 1806, Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 147, L. C. Erskine; 1828, Doe v. Randall, 2 Moo. & R. 25, Burrough, J.

The following rulings therefore seem sound: 1899, Rothwell v. Jamison, 147 Mo. 601, 49 S. W. 503 (a person testifying on the stand to family history must have personal knowledge, unless he professes merely to give family repute upon the subject); 1906, Scott v. Herrell, 27 D. C. App. 395, 400 (attorney's testimony excluded; following Blackburn v. Crawfords, U. S. post, § 1491); 1903, Grand Lodge v. Bartes, 69 Nebr. 631, 96 N. W. 186 (wife's statement of her deceased husband's age, based solely on the statement of the priest at the time of marriage, excluded); 1904, Grand Lodge v. Bartes, 69 Nebr. 631, 98 N. W. 715 (same case as in 96 N. W., supra: the witness appearing, on the whole of the record, to have lived 20 years with her husband, during which period his parents lived in the family, and thus to have become "acquainted with family history, and tradition" independently of the priest's statement, her testimony was held admissible; "the date of a person's birth may be testified to by members of his family, although he may know of the fact only by hearsay founded on family tradition").

1807, L. C. ELDON, in Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 514: "It was not the opinion of Lord Mansfield, or of any judge, that tradition, generally, is evidence even of pedigree; the tradition must be from persons having such a connection with the party to whom it relates that it is natural and likely from their domestic habits and connections that they are speaking the truth, and that they could not be mistaken."

1811, MANSFIELD, C. J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416: "General rights are naturally talked of in the neighborhood, and family transactions among the relations of the parties. Therefore, what is thus dropped in conversation upon such subjects may be presumed to be true."

The difficulties, then, that arise are concerned with drawing the line between declarants that may fairly be supposed to be thus qualified and those that may not. The questions here are of two general sorts: First, Shall a line be drawn between those who are relatives, i.e. strictly members of the family circle, and those who are not, i.e. servants, friends, neighbors, and the like? Secondly, Shall any line be drawn between different kinds of relatives, for example, according as they are near or distant, or as they are related by consanguinity or by affinity?

Before considering these two great classes of questions, it is desirable to examine the language of the Courts and observe what general notions, if any, are expressed, as to the scope of this knowledge-qualification:

1790, L. C. J. KENYON, in R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707: "I admit, declarations of the members of a family, and perhaps of others living in habits of intimacy with them, are received in evidence as to pedigrees; but evidence of what a mere stranger has said has ever been rejected in those cases."

1806, L. C. ERSKINE, in Vowles v Young, 13 Ves. 140: "[A pedigree declaration] is evidence from the interest of that person in knowing the connections of the family. Therefore the opinion of the neighborhood or what passed among acquaintance will not do."

1817, SWIFT, C. J., in Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 349: "The declaration must be from persons having such a connection with the party to whom it relates that it is natural and likely, from their domestic habits and connexions, they are speaking the truth and cannot be mistaken. . . . The opinion of deceased neighbors or acquaintances of the family are not evidence in a question of pedigree; for they cannot be supposed to have that certain knowledge which can be relied on. . . . From this it appears that the deceased relative whose declarations are given in evidence is to be considered as standing on the foot of a witness, and the hearsay declarations admitted in lieu of his testimony. It is therefore essential that the relative whose declarations are given in evidence should be named, so that the Court may be enabled to know whether his relationship or connexion with the family whose pedigree is in question was such that he may be supposed to know the truth of the declarations."

1883, DICKEY, J., in Harland v. Eastman, 107 Ill. 538: "What has been said by deceased

The following ruling seems unsound: 1873, Deedes v. Giles, 17 Sol. J. 420, 7 Alb. L. J. 269 (statements by a deceased grandfather about his own grandfather, who died before his birth, excluded, because it did not appear that the former's information was obtained from members of the family).

The following case is hardly a ruling of exclusion: 1841, R. v. Lydeard, St. Lawrence, 11 A. & E. 616 (pauper settlement; a witness' statement, "I was born in the parish of L. St. L., as I have heard and believe", held not to be of itself sufficient to prove the place of his birth; Patteson, J.: "It does not appear when or where the son was born, except by his own evidence; he could not know these facts; and they do not ask his father, who probably knew and was examined"; that the testimony was regarded as absolutely inadmissible does not clearly appear).

members of the family is admissible upon the presumption that they knew from the general repute in the family the facts of which they speak."

§ 1487. Same: Declarations of Non-Relatives. The required qualification, then, in general may be supposed to be present whenever (following the judicial phrases) there are found persons "likely to know the facts", "having an opportunity to know the facts", or "holding a relation rendering it very probable that he would learn them truly." If this is so, the line need not be drawn strictly at relatives. But the language of Lord Erskine (quoted above), "the interest of the person in knowing the connections of the family" does require the line to be drawn there, excluding non-relatives.[1]

§ 1487. [1] Accordingly, this uncertainty of phrasing has led to conflicting rulings; note, however, that several of the rulings excluding the statements of non-relatives do so on the ground that the declarant was not shown deceased (ante, § 1481) or that the particular declarant was not qualified on the facts of the case:

ENGLAND: 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1160 (the godmother of an alleged child, intimate friend of the mother; her hearsay to the child's existence and legitimacy, not allowed); 1754, Robins v. Wolseley, 2 Lee Eccl. 135, 421, 442 (deceased vicar's affidavit of the time of a marriage by him, admitted; whether by common law or canon law does not appear; compare § 1476, ante); 1776, Duchess of Kinston's Trial, 20 How. St. Tr. 355, 592 (bigamy; the widow of parson Annis testified to knowing the defendant; Q. "Were you privy to her marriage in your husband's lifetime?" A. "I was not at the wedding; but I have heard my husband say he married them"; a Lord: "That is not evidence"; no ruling was made or asked for); 1811, Berkeley Peerage Case, Min. Ev. 655, quoted in Hubback, Succession, 246 (declaration of a deceased clergyman, chaplain to the Earl, that the Earl and Countess were married by him, and that a certain person was their legitimate son, excluded, by all the judges); 1812, Walker v. Wingfield, 18 Ves. 443, 446 (Eldon, L. C.: "The question whether a physician or a servant who has attended the family can be admitted as one of the family has not, I conceive, been decided"); 1824, Johnson v. Lawson, 2 Bing. 86 (quoted post); 1843, Casey v. O'Shaughnessy, 7 Jur. 1140 (Roman Catholic priest, excluded); 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 426, per James, L. J. (intimate friends, excluded).

In the British Indian Code, drawn by Sir James Stephen, declarations by persons having "special means of knowledge" are made admissible: Whitley-Stokes' ed. II, 875, § 32.

CANADA: 1848, Doe v. Auldjo, 5 U. C. Q. B. 175 (declarations of an old body-servant, excluded, by two judges to one).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1839, Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. 209, 220 (statements of "many old persons" in Germany, as to the plaintiff being brother to G. S., deceased, excluded, partly because the declarants were living, partly because the statements "do not appear to have been made by members of the family or by persons who had such connexions with the deceased as to have a personal knowledge of the facts stated"); 1876, Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schwenck, 94 U. S. 598 (an entry of age in the minute-book of a lodge of Odd Fellows, of which the deceased was a member, was rejected, as being the statement of a "stranger"); 1896, Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217, 222 (declaration of one who was a servant in the household for an unspecified time, as to the birth of an illegitimate child to a daughter in the house; semble, excluded); 1911, Osborne v. Ramsay, C. C. A., 191 Fed. 114 (repute or statements from persons not family members nor related; not decided); Arkansas: 1867, Wilson v. Brownlee, 24 Ark. 589 (it was conceded that declarations by others than members of the family were admissible; but declarations by persons as to whose knowledge nothing whatever was shown were rejected); Connecticut: 1817, Chapman v. Chapman, 2 Conn. 347 ("declarations of the deceased members of a family, or those who have lived in the family and may from their connexion with it be supposed to know the state of it", are admissible; but not "of deceased neighbours or acquaintances of the family", "for they cannot be supposed to have that certain knowledge which can be relied on"); Iowa: 1901, Alston v. Alston, 114 Ia. 29, 86 N. W. 55 (declarations of F. and his wife, friends in whose family the plaintiff, the illegitimate child of a mother D., was brought up from a time shortly after birth, were admitted to show plaintiff's paternity); New York: 1811, Jackson v. Cooley, 8 Johns. 130 (Thompson, J.: the declarations of "persons who from their situation were likely to know are competent evidence"; and a reputation among acquaintances of the family was admitted; Spencer, J., dissented, but apparently on the chief ground that the acquaintances were not shown to be deceased); 1820, Jackson v. Browner, 18 Johns. 39 (Spencer, C. J.; rejected declarations

Yet, after all, such a narrow test seems too narrow, at least for this country. Even in England, where so much of personal advancement and material prosperity for the individual depended upon his family rank and his rights of inheritance, it seems too much to say that only those who have this immediate property-interest in learning the family history can possibly have adequate information; for family physicians and chaplains, old servants, and intimate friends may, in cases, be equally and sufficiently informed. In this country at least, the conditions are such, for the mass of the population, that the interest in family rank and inheritance cannot require such a narrowing of the test.

It is not necessary to maintain that the statements of any friend are always admissible; but it is desirable to disavow any limitation which would exclude the statements of one whose intimacy with the family could leave no doubt as to his sufficient acquaintance, equally with the family members, or the facts of the family history:

1848, Robinson, C. J., in Doe v. Auldjo, 5 U. C. Q. B. 175 (holding admissible testimony from a member of the family that an old body-servant, now deceased, had returned from Africa and told them of the death there of his master, an explorer, the ancestor in question): "There is therefore no improbability in the servant's relation, which seems to have been credited at the time and ever since . . . and after fifty years parties are relieved from the necessity of attempting to account for him. . . . No better evidence would be required than the account brought back by his faithful servant to his family, and accredited by them and by the government which employed him."

The only reasoned defence of the narrower rule is found in the following opinion:

1824, Johnson v. Lawson, 2 Bing. 86; declarations of one who had been a housekeeper in the family for 24 years were rejected. Best, C. J.: "Evidence of that kind must be subject to limitation, otherwise it would be a source of great uncertainty; and the limitation hitherto pursued, namely, the confining such evidence to the declarations of relations from acquaintances of a particular ancestor in Ireland, because the witnesses "have not derived their information from such persons as had any connection or particular acquaintance with the family from which John M'Neil sprang"); Oklahoma: 1921, O'Neill v. Lauderdale, 80 Okl. 170, 195 Pac. 121 (identity of parentage; testimony of G., grandson of "the G's who had reared E. L.", that he had heard his grandmother and uncle say that E. L.'s "mother was dead, and that she was an orphan", held not qualified); Oregon: 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 (neighbor speaking only from repute; excluded); Pennsylvania: Dinan v. Supreme Council, 201 Pa. 363, 50 Atl. 999 (health board's certificate, undertaker's coffin-plate, and newspaper obituary notice, stating the deceased's age, and founded on conflicting statements of various members of the family, excluded); Texas: 1889, Howard v. Russell, 75 Tex. 171, 176, 12 S. W. 525 (recitals in an ancient masonic lodge-record, as to the domicile of a visitor, received, as involving a question of pedigree); 1899, Turner v. Sealock, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 594, 54 S. W. 358 (declarations as to H.'s death, by persons who were with him, admitted); 1899, Lewis v. Bergess, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 54 S. W. 609 (declarations of a friend who went with H. to the Mexican war, that he served in the army and died there unmarried, admitted); West Virginia: 1884, Peterson v. Ankro, 25 W. Va. 56, 61, 63 (affidavit of an intimate friend; undecided).

Distinguish the following, which seems to involve the principle of § 1788, post: 1897, Posey v. Hanson, 10 D. C. App. 497, 507 (in rebutting the presumption of death, the fact of the person being "heard from" may include the hearsay of persons not members of the family).

of the family, affords a rule at once certain and intelligible. If the admissibility of such evidence were not so restrained, we should on every occasion, before the testimony could be admitted, have to enter upon a long inquiry as to the degree of intimacy or confidence that subsisted between the party and the deceased declarant."

It may be noted, as to this reasoning, first, that its result is inconsistent with the general language used in earlier judicial opinions (ante, § 1486), and is supportable only on the narrow test of Lord Erskine before mentioned; secondly, that the special reason given, namely, the inconvenience of an investigation into sources of knowledge, is anomalous in the law of Evidence; for no Court is allowed to decline to investigate the sources of a witness' qualifications so far as may be necessary, while in each case the investigation need be no more tedious than the judge's discretion permits; and, finally, that the proof of intimacy in the household would surely be no more tedious than proof of family membership is often found to be.

§ 1488. Same: Reputation in the Neighborhood or Community. The use of declarations of individual friends and intimates is to be distinguished from the use of reputation in the neighborhood or community. The elements of trustworthiness that are found in a community-reputation, and are recognized as sufficient to render it evidential in certain classes of cases are examined under the Reputation-Exception to the Hearsay rule, and the application of that principle to facts of family history (such as race-ancestry, marriage, birth, and death), can there best be dealt with (post, § 1605). In the Courts recognizing the use of neighborhood-reputation for the present class of facts, the recognition has historically been reached often as a direct extension of the principle of family-reputation.

§ 1489. Same: Declarations of Relatives; Distinctions between Different Kinds of Relatives. Is there any reason for excluding any class of relatives as not having probable adequate information?

1. First, there has been no attempt to rule out specific consanguines because of the remoteness of relationship. This might, perhaps, well be done in a given case; but the rule has apparently crystallized with this arbitrary limit.

2. Next, should any distinction be made between a relation by blood and a relation by marriage, to the disadvantage of the latter? All that can be said for such a distinction is that relations by marriage are likely to be less intimate in the family circle and to have little or no interest depending upon a chance of inheritance. But the general likelihood of their being correctly informed is perhaps quite as great as for distant consanguineous relations, and is sufficient in the ordinary instances. As a matter of precedent, the statements of one who is a party to a marriage are regarded as acceptable (i.e. statements regarding the other marital party's family history). Historically, this was first settled for the case of a declarant husband:[1]

§ 1489. [1] Accord: 1825, Doe v. Harvey, 1 Ry. & Mod. 297; 1843, Jewell's Lessee v. Jewell, 1 How. U. S. 231.

1806, L. C. ERSKINE, in Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140: "The law resorts to hearsay of relations upon the principle of interest in the person from whom the descent is to be made out. . . . As far as hearsay is evidence of anything within the knowledge of a man, no man can be supposed ignorant of the reputation of the descent of his wife. . . . But it must be considered whether that can extend to mere collateral declarations of this kind [a wife's illegitimacy], where there is no interest in the husband. . . . Consider, then, whether the knowledge of the husband as to the legitimacy of his wife is not likely to be more intimate, and his interest stronger, than that of any relation however near in blood. First, if she has an estate tail, he is tenant by the curtesy. Has he not an interest in knowing her legitimacy, his expectation depending upon it? So as to her personal estate, he is entitled to all that comes to her. Is not that a strong interest?"

Then, tardily, it was settled for the case of a declarant wife.[2] Furthermore, in general, the declaration of any person connected on one side of a marriage concerning relationship in the family on the other side would probably be received, unless the actual absence of adequate information should be made to appear in a given instance:[3]

1828, BEST, C. J., in Doe v. Randall, 2 Moo. & P. 25: "Consanguinity, or affinity by blood, therefore, is not necessary, and for this obvious reason, that a party by marriage is more likely to be informed of the state of the family of which he is become a member than a relation who is only distantly connected by blood, as by frequent conversation the former may hear the particulars and characters of branches of the family long since dead."

§ 1490. Same: Declarant's Qualifications must be shown. Upon the general principle for testimonial knowledge (ante, § 654), the qualifications of the deceased declarant — his relationship, or whatever is relied upon as equipping him with information — must be shown in advance.[1] In other words,

[2] 1857, Shrewsbury Peerage Case, 7 H. L. C. 22, 26; presumably superseding Davies v. Lowndes, 1843, 7 Scott N. R. 188, and confirming Doe v. Randall, 1828, 2 Moo. & P. 25.

[3] Accord: Codes cited ante, § 1480; 1840, People v. Fire Ins. Co., 2 Wend. N. Y. 209 (admitting declarations by deceased members of the family of a grandson of a maternal uncle of W., the propositus, as to the non-existence of collateral relatives of W. on the paternal side); 1905, State v. Hazlett, 14 N. D. 490, 105 N. W. 617 (mother's father's family Bible admitted); 1894, Pickens' Estate, 163 Pa. 14, 28 Atl. 875.

Contra: 1895, Turner v. King, 98 Ky. 253, 32 S. W. 941 (a family Bible of the testator's mother's father, to show the testator's age, excluded as not being the reputation of the testator's family; this is unsound; is not a grandchild a member of the grandfather's blood-family?).

§ 1490. [1] Eng. 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, 2 Selw. N. P. 764, and in App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 410, 412; Can. 1848, Doe v. Servos, 5 U. C. Q. B. 284, 289; U. S. 1886, Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, 6 Sup. 780; 1921, Ross' Estate, 187 Cal. 454, 202 Pac. 641; 1905, Lanier v. Hebard, 123 Ga. 626, 51 S. E. 632; 1919, Liliuokalani's Estate, 25 Haw. 127; 1906, Hoyt v. Lightbody, 98 Minn. 189, 108 N. W. 818, 843; 1882, Wise v. Wynn, 59 Miss. 592; 1904, Grand Lodge v. Bartes, 69 Nebr. 631, 98 N. W. 715; 1906, Bernards Tp. v. Bedminster Tp., 74 N. J. L. 92, 64 Atl. 960; 1901, Young v. Shulenberg, 165 N. Y. 385, 59 N. E. 135; 1880, Thompson v. Woolf, 8 Or. 463; 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 592; 1903, Davis v. Moyles, 76 Vt. 25, 56 Atl. 174.

Of course, also, it must be shown that the witness on the stand, reporting the family reputation, has sufficient acquaintance with the family to know what that reputation is; this, again, is an ordinary question of the testimonial qualifications, i.e. of the witness on the stand, and is not peculiar to the Hearsay exception: 1883, Harland v. Eastman, 107 Ill. 539; 1854, Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 491; 1820 Jackson v. Browner, 18 Johns. N. Y. 29; 1814, Barnet's Lessee v. Day, 3 Wash. C. C. 243; 1869, Eaton v. Tallmadge, 24 Wis. 222.

But the witness on the stand need not be related to the family of the declarant: 1900, Elder v. State, 124 Ala. 69, 27 So. 305; 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967; 1913, McLain v. Woodside, 95 S. C. 152, 79 S. E. 1. Contra: 1915, Mobley v. Baxter & the relationship of the declarant to the family whose history he refers to must be shown by evidence independent of his mere declaration; otherwise, there would be a begging of the question.

The only apparent exception is found in the case of a declarant speaking of his own personal history, — for example, of his marriage.[2] But obviously a person is qualified to speak of himself; it is only where a relationship with others is involved that the fact must be made to appear independently.

§ 1491. Same: Relationship always Mutual; Connecting the Declarant with Both Families. It follows, in applying the foregoing principle, that where an alleged relationship between Doe and Roe is to be testified to, a relation of Doe may speak to it, because it concerns the relationships of Doe's family, while a relation of Roe may equally speak to it, because it concerns the relationships of Roe's family; hence, all that is required of the declarant is a connection with either one or the other, but not with both.

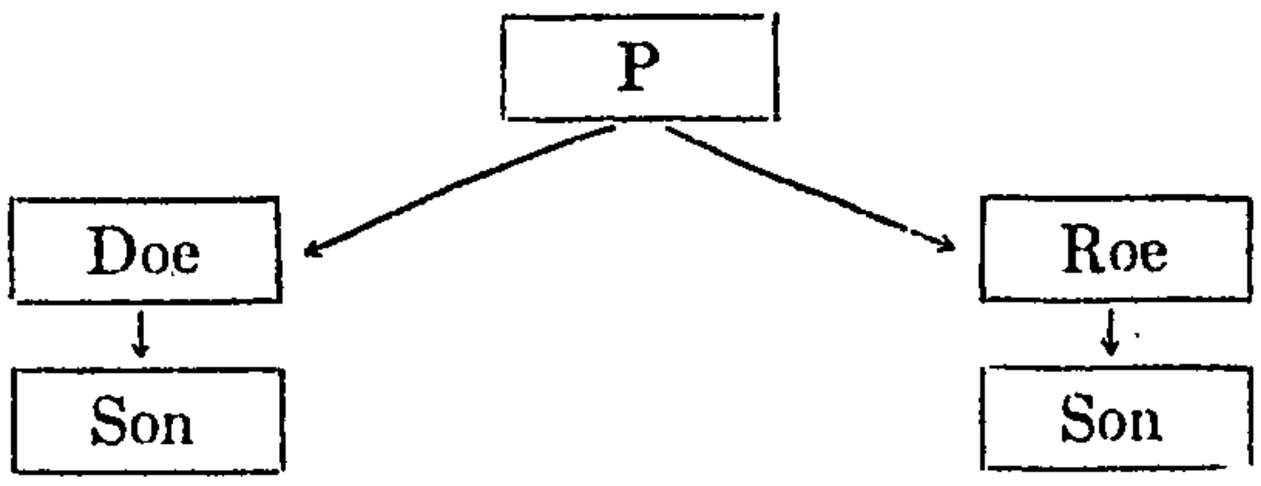
This truth, however, has been obscured by what must be regarded as erroneous rulings. The question being whether Doe is related to Roe (for example, so as to share in Roe's inheritance), the argument has been that it would be idle to require merely that the declarant should be shown to be related to Doe alone, because then any family could connect itself with any other by its members' mere assertion of the relationship. But the proper way to approach the question seems to be a different one, and is as follows:

Suppose that Roe's inheritance from P is in issue, and a declaration of Doe's deceased son is offered that Roe was the brother of Doe, the declarant's father; thus:



Any member of Doe's line may declare as to the relationships (i.e. memberships) of that family, and any member of Roe's line may declare as to the relationships (i.e. memberships) of that family; and the qualifications of Co., 143 Ga. 565, 85 S. E. 859 (opinion obscure); 1915, Mobley v. Pierce, 144 Ga. 327, 87 S. E. 24 (same evidence, and same ruling).

Nor need the witness on the stand, of course, have personal knowledge of the fact, provided he knows the family repute: Cases cited supra.

[2] 1915, Colbert's Estate, 51 Mont. 455, 153 Pac. 1022 (certain declarants held sufficiently qualified; citing the above text with approval); 1819, Allen v. Hall, 2 Nott & McC. S. C. 114 (partition; defendants claiming against a grantee from their ancestor's alleged wife were allowed to show their ancestor's declarations that he was not married).

Of course a deceased declarant's statements about his own age, birth, etc., are admissible under the present rule: 1905, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Henderson C. Mills, 120 Ky. 218, 85 S. W. 1090; 1907, Taylor v. Grand Lodge, 101 Minn. 72, 111 N. W. 919; this is assumed in the English cases settling the rule.

Compare § 268, ante (conduct as evidence of marriage), and § 2063, post (testimony to illegitimacy of offspring during marriage).

the declarant, as such member, must of course be shown beforehand, like the qualifications of any witness (ante, § 1486). Thus, before declarations of a supposed member of Doe's family can be admitted, the declarant's membership in Doe's family — for example, that he is Doe's son — must be shown. But that is the whole effect of this requirement. The further question, if any, is, whether a declaration of Doe's son that Doe is related to Roe (for example, is Roe's brother) is a declaration as to Doe's family at all, — i.e. whether it is, for the case in hand, solely a declaration about Roe's family-relationships, as to which Doe's son is by hypothesis not yet shown to be a qualified declarant. Now the state or condition of relationship must always in effect, though not in form, be double or mutual;[1] i.e. the fact that Doe is brother to Roe is also the fact that Roe is related as brother to Doe. Hence, a statement of Doe's son that Doe is brother to Roe, though in one form an assertion of Roe's relationships, is also and equally a declaration that one of the relations of Doe (i.e. one of the members of Doe's family) is Roe, — for example, that one of the sons of Doe's father is Roe. It is therefore a declaration upon which Doe's son is qualified to speak. The doubt, then, can only be as to whether it should make any difference that in the case in hand it is Roe's descendants who are seeking Doe's estate or Doe's who are seeking Roe's estate. This surely cannot affect the evidential value of the declarations; for that must depend on the circumstances at the time of making, and no one has ever contended that, apart from the 'lis mota' and kindred limitations (ante, §§ 1483, 1484), it makes any difference whether the declarant belongs to a poor or obscure branch of the family or to a rich and notorious one. Moreover, it is usually at a later date only that it has become apparent which branch would have a pecuniary interest in connecting itself with the other. The difference, then, is a matter of the form of statement only, and such assertions as the above must be treated as in substance declarations as to Doe's family-relationships; whether it is one or the other family that now happens to be seeking the inheritance is immaterial.[2]

§ 1491. [1] L. C. Brougham, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, cited infra: "It is not more true that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another than that persons related by blood to the same individual are more or less related to each other."

[2] Accord: England: 1831, Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 147 (declarations of J. T. as to the relationship of S. T. and G. T. were admitted, J. T.'s kinship with G. T., but not with S. T., being first shown; Lord Brougham, L. C.: "I cannot go to the length of holding that you must prove him to be connected with both the branches of the family touching which his declaration is rendered"); United States: 1906, Scheidegger v. Terrell, 149 Ala. 338, 43 So. 26, semble, 1901, Mann v. Cavanaugh, 110 Ky. 776, 62 S. W. 854 (recitals of grantors' heirship of J. C. in an ancient deed by J. J. C. and others, held sufficient to prove J. C. the ancestor of J. J. C.); 1884, Sitler v. Gehr. 105 Pa. 577, 592 ("The declarants were A. M. G. and John G.; the plaintiff's ancestor was Joseph G.; the deceased ancestor was Balser G., of Berks County. It was not denied that the declarants were of the family of Joseph G., and it was attempted to show by their declarations that the above-named Joseph G. and Balser G. were related to each [other]. . . . The plaintiffs in error contend, not only that the declarants must be shown by evidence 'aliunde' to be related to the family as to which declarations were made, but also that they must be thus shown to be related to the person who died seised. . . . Although there is some conflict in the cases, the weight of authority seems to be that while a declarant must be shown by evidence 'aliunde' to belong to the family, it does not appear to be necessary to

Any other rule would produce this singular inconsistency, that if in 1863, Doe and Roe being both poor, Doe's son James mentions Roe in a letter as his father's brother, and then dies in 1864, and if in 1884 litigation arises and James is proved to be the son of Doe, his letter would be received if Doe had become the wealthy one and Roe's relatives were claiming a share, but would be rejected (without other proof) if Roe had happened in the meantime to become the wealthy one and Doe's relatives were seeking a share. Yet this seems to be the practical consequence of the doctrine laid down by the Federal Supreme Court.[3] show that he belongs to the same branch of it"; Monkton v. Attorney-General followed); 1891, Robb's Estate, 37 S. C. 19, 22, 33, 36, 16 S. E. 241 (declarations of G., son of M. M., whose sister was J. M., that R. was the son of R. and J. M., admitted; the family to which it was necessary to connect the declarant being that of M., not R.).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1573 (recitals of heirship in ancient deeds), which often give the same result.

Where the declarant is the intestate himself, his declarations may be received as admissions of a predecessor in title (ante, § 1082), and the present question need not arise; e.g.: 1918, Friedman's Estate, 178 Cal. 27, 172 Pac. 140 (persons claiming that declarant is a member of their family, held not entitled to require that his relationship be shown by the opponent when offering declarations; James' Estate, post, § 1495, doubted); 1901, Malone v. Adams, 113 Ga. 791, 39 S. E. 507 (one claiming as niece and heir, allowed to prove her relationship to the decedent by the decedent's declarations; distinguishing Greene v. Almand, 111 Ga. 735, 36 S. E. 957, which, however, seems contra).

[3] The following cases take the stricter view: CANADA: 1849, Dunlop v. Servos, 5 U. C. Q. B. 288 (here the plaintiff claimed as heir of J. D., and declarations of A. D., the plaintiff's father, that the plaintiff was the heir, were offered; it was held that A. D.'s relationship to J. D. must first be shown); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1865, Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 187 (declarations by A, sister of B, that B was married to X, the brother of Y, whose property-succession was in issue, were rejected, because the declarant did not belong to the family whose pedigree was in issue); Columbia (Dist.): 1896, Jennings v. Webb, 8 D. C. App. 43, 56 (Blackburn v. Crawfords, U. S., followed); California: 1903, Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 74 Pac. 35 (action on a contract by defendant's testator to adopt and support plaintiff; the testator's declarations that he was only the guardian of the plaintiff, excluded on the present principle; of course this is erroneous; it is a pity that the negative form of such statements seems to puzzle and mislead the minds of so many judges; if we have regard to the general principles of the Exception, and imagine a man having a boy in his family and about to speak of his relationship with the boy, it is obvious that his utterances will be neither more nor less credible whether on speaking he happens to say "He is" or "He is not my son"; i.e., it is the subject of sonship that makes it a pedigree utterance, not the negative or affirmative tenor of the assertion); Georgia: 1914, Terry v. Brown, 142 Ga. 224, 82 S. E. 566 (whether William H. was the only son of Wilson H.; declarations to that effect by William H. and by his mother as wife of Wilson H., all being deceased, were excluded; following Greene v. Almand, cited supra, n. 2; but, per Lumpkin, J., "that decision fell into error, and is contrary both to sound reason and to the great weight of authority; disapproving Blackburn v. Crawfords, U. S., and approving the text above); Illinois: 1912, Jarchow v. Grosse, 257 Ill. 36, 100 N. E. 290 ("where the claimant is seeking to reach the estate of the declarant himself, . . . such declarations are admissible"; thus accepting the unsound distinction); 1920, Nolan v. Barnes, 294 Ill. 25, 128 N. E. 293 (action by heirs to set aside a deed of Annie N., deceased; N.'s declarations as to who were her relatives, admitted, without other evidence of her relationship to them, the declarant's estate being the subject in controversy); Mississippi: 1882, Wise v. Wynn, 59 Miss. 588, 592 (C. W.'s estate being claimed by children of an alleged brother T. W., C. W.'s declarations that he had a brother T. W., admitted; but they would have been excluded if the claim here had been by C. W.'s children to T. W.'s estate); Missouri: 1912, Vantine v. Butler, 240 Mo. 521, 144 S. W. 807 (John B. and Jane B. had three children, and then John separated from his wife pregnant with a fourth, born thereafter; afterwards he married again; the plaintiff, Lizzie V., was the adopted child of W., and married V.; she claimed to be the last child of John B.; the declarations of the plaintiff's mother, calling herself Jane Butler, and stating that John Butler was her husband, admitted; the opinion does not note the point, but nevertheless admits the evidence, on the ground that the relationship of Jane to John was otherwise

§ 1492. Same: Relationship of Illegitimate Child. It has been ruled in England that where the relationship claimed and to be testified to is that of an illegitimate child, the father's relations are not qualified declarants, because (apparently) the claimant is legally not of the declarant's family.[1] But this seems a mere juggling with legal rules. The question is, Was the declarant in such a position as to be likely to know something of this alleged fact of family history? Whether the illegitimate child is or is not a lawful heir according to the rules of the substantive law about succession, is quite beside the point in determining the evidential question of the declarant's probable information. The principle of the ruling has been disapproved in England,[2] and ought not to be followed in this country.[3]

It seems never to have been doubted that the declarations of the parents themselves, or the repute in the household where the child lived, as to a child's legitimacy or illegitimacy, are receivable;[4] although it is obvious that upon sufficiently evidenced); New Jersey: 1911, Hubatka v. Maierhoffer, 81 N. J. L. 410, 79 Atl. 346 (action by a daughter to obtain title to land of her mother; a deed conveyed to Josephine M. and the defendant M.; the issue was whether Josephine was the wife of M.; Josephine's declarations that she was not were held inadmissible; same fallacy; the declarations of J. ought to be interpreted as declarations about her relationships as including M., hence she is qualified; it is strange how difficult this simple idea seems to many learned judges); New York: 1914, Aalholm v. People, In re Kenneally, 211 N. Y. 406, 105 N. E. 647 (rule of Blackburn v. Crawfords followed, and Monkton v. Att'y-Gen'l distinguished; Werner, J., in a careful but unconvincing opinion, discusses the principle).

In Plant v. Taylor, 1861, 7 H. & N. 226, 237, the reasoning is hopelessly confused.

§ 1492. [1] 1863, Crispin v. Doglioni, 3 Sw. & Tr. 44 (declarations of J. as to the relationship of illegitimate son which the plaintiff claimed with J.'s brother were excluded, by Sir C. Cresswell, because "the plaintiff according to his own account is 'filius nullius' by our law"). Accord: 1837, Doe v. Barton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 28 (declarations of B., an illegitimate son, as to the death of an illegitimate brother, excluded).

[2] 1879, Murray v. Milner, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 849 (admitting declarations in a will as to the naturalness of a child, semble). The following ruling seems to require too much: 1871, Hitchins v. Eardley, L. R. 2 P. & D. 248 (whether M. was the legitimate child of J. and L.; M.'s declarations admitted, after a 'prima facie' case of legitimacy was otherwise made out).

[3] It has however been at least twice approved: 1896, Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217, 234 (following Crispin v. Doglioni); 1844, Northrop v. Hale, 76 Me. 312 (approving Crispin v. Doglioni, but here admitting declarations of the mother's sister, because a bastard is legally of his mother's family).

Contra, admitting the statements: 1907, Champion v. McCarthy, 227 Ill. 87, 81 N. E. 808 (whether plaintiff H. was the illegitimate son of S. the mother of J., who was also an illegitimate, and the intestate; S. was married to C. and had also legitimate children; declarations of J., S., and deceased members of the C. family, as to H. being a relative, held admissible; rule of Crispin v. Doglioni repudiated); 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 (declarations of the illegitimate child's father's sister, in whose home the illegitimate intestate was brought up; also of a half-brother of the illegitimate intestate by a subsequent lawful marriage).

Compare Barnum v. Barnum, in the next note.

[4] Eng. 1777, Goodright v. Moss, Cowp. 594 (quoted post, § 1497); 1791, Goodright v. Saul, 4 T. R. 356 ("the reputation in the family of the son's being a bastard", received without question); U. S. Cal. 1901, Heaton's Estate, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 321 (claim of inheritance as illegitimate child of H.; declarations of H., in whose family the claimant lived, held admissible); 1903, Heaton's Estate, 139 Cal. 237, 73 Pac. 186 (preceding ruling affirmed); Colo. 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 453, 460; Ia. 1862, Niles v. Sprague, 13 Ia. 198, 207; 1899, Watson v. Richardson, 117 Ia. 673, 80 N. W. 407; 1901, Alston v. Alston, 114 Ia. 29, 86 N. W. 55 (declarations as to paternity of a conceded illegitimate child, admitted); 1914, Robertson v. Campbell, 168 Ia. 47, 147 N. W. 301 (illegitimate child's claim to inheritance; the deceased father's recognition being in issue under Code § 3385, his declarations of paternity were admitted); La. Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 193, 194 (quoted post, § 1606); Md. 1848, Copes v. Pearce, 7 Gill 247, 264; 1875, Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251, 304 (declarathe false theory of Crispin v. Doglioni, the father's declarations of illegitimacy would be inadmissible. There is a danger of being too nice in the logical application of the substantive law of relationship to the present testimonial rule, which rests rather upon the moral probabilities of trustworthiness in the declarant.

Apart from the evidential question of using the parents' declarations is the question of substantive law, whether the parents have acknowledged an illegitimate child so as to fix his status by an act equivalent to adoption. This question can hardly arise for a legitimate child; for the birth during marriage constitutes legitimacy. But in the Continental system of law a status of quasi-legitimacy — that of the "natural" child — may be bestowed by acts of acknowledgment as defined by law; and in several American States a partial and unsystematic legislative measure has introduced a similar principle. This aspect is considered post, § 1606.

§ 1493. Same: Testimony to one's Own age. Testimony to one's own age may be treated in one of two ways. (1) The objection may be made that the statement on the stand (for example, "I am twenty years of age", or, "I was born January 1, 1860") is not founded on adequate knowledge. Whether it is so, although not based on personal observation and direct memory, but on hearsay sources, is a question of Testimonial Qualifications. From this point of view, it should nevertheless be regarded as admissible; and is therefore accepted by most Courts (ante, § 667). (2) But if it is not, it may still be admissible, under the present Exception, as in effect an assertion of the family reputation. Some Courts so treat it, and therefore admit it.[1] The only question can then be whether it is necessary to show that all the members of the family are unavailable (ante, § 1481).

tions of the mother of R. as to the non-marriage of R. and C., and the illegitimacy of their child J., admitted); 1894, Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176, 30 Atl. 752 ("declarations of deceased parents are admitted as evidence to prove the legitimacy of their children"); Mass. 1862, Haddock v. R. Co., 3 All. 298 (deceased mother's statement that her daughter was illegitimate, admitted); Mich. 1919, Kotzke v. Kotzke's Estate, 205 Mich. 184, 171 N. W. 442 (mother's statements of paternity of illegitimate child, admitted; also the family repute); N. Car. 1890, Woodward v. Blue, 107 N. C. 407, 410, 12 S. E. 453 ("Was not the violent grief of David, the king, upon the death of the child, some corroboration that he, and not Uriah, was its father?"); Okl. 1915, Johnson v. Perry, 54 Okl. 23, 153 Pac. 289 (inheritance; deceased mother's affidavit, in an application for Indian enrollment, of illegitimacy of a child, admitted).

If the declarant is available, such statements are of course inadmissible: 1825, Stegall v. Stegall's Adm'r, 2 Brockenb. 256, 262.

Compare the cases cited ante, § 269 (parents' conduct as evidence of legitimacy).

Distinguish the question whether a parent may testify to facts of non-access as evidencing the illegitimacy of a child born after marriage, post, § 2063.

For community-reputation of illegitimacy, see post, § 1605.

§ 1493. [1] 1880, Cherry v. State, 68 Ala. 30; 1888, Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 185, 17 N. E. 232 ("What was your reputed birthday in the family?", allowed, the father being out of the jurisdiction); 1892, Houlton v. Manteuffel, 51 Minn. 185, 187, 53 N. W. 541; 1894, State v. Cougot, 121 Mo. 463, 26 S. W. 566 ("that a witness may be permitted to state his or her own age, subject to cross-examination as to the sources of his or her information, is the settled practice"; but here excluded because it appeared to rest solely on perusal of a church record); 1897, State v. Marshall, 137 Mo. 463, 39 S. W. 63, semble; 1891, State v. Best, 108 N. C. 749, 12 S. E. 907; 1845, Watson v. Brewster, 1 Pa. St. 383; 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 592; 1877, Hart v. Stickney, 41 Wis. 630, 638 ("It was a matter of repute in the family when the defendant was born, and though he could not

§ 1494. Same: Statements of Family History, to Identify a Person. Where a mere question of identity of person is involved, i.e. whether J. S., formerly of Millville, is the same person as J. S. deceased in San Antonio, all the personal marks of the two become relevant (ante, § 411). From this point of view the person's history, and in particular his beliefs and utterances, may have a bearing, and therefore his claims of relationship may be receivable. They are not offered testimonially, and therefore are not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1791). It is true that their testimonial use will tend to be employed by indirection, especially if in the case there is also an issue as to relationship. Yet, even when offered testimonially, it would seem that they are receivable without connecting the declarant to a particular family by other evidence, if they concern merely the declarant's personal doings (ante, § 1489). In any event, they are independently receivable so far as they serve legitimately the purpose of identifying one person with another.[1]

§ 1495. (b) Form of the Assertion (Family Bibles or Trees; Tombstones, Wills, etc.). According to the general testimonial principle (ante, §§ 789, 799), the testimonial statement may be in any form. It may be oral or written; it may consist in words or in conduct;[1] it may be made by the declarant's own writing, or by assenting to or adopting the writing of another. This is equally true, whether the statement offered be an individual's assertion or the family repute:

1777, Lord MANSFIELD, C. J., in Goodright v. Moss, Cowper 594: "Suppose from the hour of one child's birth to the death of its parent it had always been treated as illegitimate, and another introduced and considered as the heir of the family, that would be good evidence. An entry in a father's family Bible, an inscription on a tombstone, a pedigree hung up in a family mansion (as the Duke of Buckingham's was), are all good evidence."

1806, ERSKINE, L. C., in Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. 140: "Inscriptions upon tombstones are admitted, as it must be supposed the relations of the family would not permit an inscription without foundation to remain. So engravings upon rings are admitted upon the presumption that a person would not wear a ring with an error upon it."

1811, MANSFIELD, C. J., in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416: "If the father is proved to have brought up the party as his legitimate son, this is sufficient evidence of legitimacy till impeached, and indeed it amounts to a daily assertion that the son is legitimate."

have any personal knowledge of [the date of] his birth, yet he might testify as to his age as he had learned it from his parents and relatives"; yet the point was not "absolutely decided").

Contra: 1847, Doe v. Ford, 3 U. C. Q. B. 352 (deceased person's statement as to his own age, excluded, as not based on "personal knowledge"; here his testamentary capacity was involved).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1486.

Of course, a deceased declarant's statement as to his own age is admissible; cases cited ante, § 1490, n. 2; and doubtless in many of the earlier precedents this is assumed.

§ 1494. [1] 1915, Colbert's Estate, 51 Mont. 455, 153 Pac. 1022 (heirship; deceased relatives' statements that C. spoke German, etc., admitted; citing the above text with approval); 1900, Young v. State, 36 Or. 417, 59 Pac. 812, 60 Pac. 711 (John F.'s property was escheated; plaintiff claimed it as heir of Jonas F., identical with John F.; declarations of John F. as to his family relationships with persons of plaintiff's family, admitted, as identifying circumstances); and cases cited ante, §§ 270, 413, post, § 1791.

Compare also some of the cases cited post, § 1502.

The practical difference between the present rule and that of the principles above cited would be that the death of the declarant must here be shown.

§ 1495. [1] For conduct, as evidence of marriage and legitimacy, see also ante, §§ 268, 269, post, § 1606.

1880, Lord BLACKBURN, in Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 641: "Such statements by deceased members of the family may be proved not only by showing that they actually made the statements, but by showing that they acted upon them or assented to them, or did anything that amounted to showing that they recognized them."

That the document containing the assertion is a formal one — as, a deed or will — does not make the assertion inadmissible.[2] That the assertion is made in the course of a deposition or trial-testimony is immaterial, so long as the litigation does not involve a controversy rendering the statement biassed and untrustworthy.[3]

An assertion may have necessary implications which should be given full effect by natural interpretation; for example, an assertion by a woman that she is a widow implies clearly enough that her husband is deceased.[4] Even the failure to make an express assertion, where it would naturally have been made if the fact existed, may (on the same principle as in § 1071, ante) be construed as an assertion that the fact does not exist.[5]

§ 1496. (2) Authentication; Proving Individual Authorship; Family Bible. The principles of Authentication (post, § 2129), as applicable to proof of the execution or genuineness of a writing, are in general applicable to a writing offered under the present exception. No special considerations here need attention, except as regards the necessity of proving the handwriting of entries in family Bibles or the like. The fundamental idea of Authentication is to connect the writing with the person alleged to be its author. Now under the present exception the testimonial statement may be the assertion either of an individual member or of the family. Hence, it is not necessary, where a family Bible or family tree is offered as embodying the family repute

[1] 1867, Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R. 1 P. & D. 354 (deed); 1879, Murray v. Milner, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 349 (will); 1901, Heaton's Estate, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 331 (will); 1900, Summerhill v. Darrow, 94 Tex. 71, 57 S. W. 942 (will).

For recitals of pedigree in ancient deeds, see post, § 1573. For the use of a family Bible, see cases cited ante, §§ 1481, 1484, and post, § 1496.

[2] Cases cited ante, §§ 1483, 1484. The opinion of the judges in the Banbury Peerage Case, 1809 (extracted in 2 Selwyn's Nisi Prius, c. 18, 11th Eng. ed., p. 765), excluding a certain bill in chancery, as a "declaration respecting pedigree", is supportable on the ground that the fact of legitimacy, asserted in the bill, was apparently already in controversy, for the bill was filed to perpetuate testimony of that fact. For the use of depositions, bills, and answers, as parties' admissions, see ante, §§ 1065, 1075.

For certificates and registers of marriage, birth, or death, see post, § 1642.

[3] 1897, Harman v. Stearns, 95 Va. 58, 27 S. E. 601 (recital in a deed by a woman that she was a widow, admitted to show the fact of her husband's death); 1899, James' Estate, 124 Cal. 653, 57 Pac 579 (declarations of intestate, that he was unmarried, not admissible for heirs denying the alleged wife's claim; unsound, because the intestate virtually declared that there was in his family no person who was his wife); 1918, Friedman's Estate, 178 Cal. 27, 172 Pac. 140 (declarations that he had "no one left", etc., admitted; James' Estate doubted).

A statement that a person is the declarant's "sister" or the like is to be construed as asserting legitimate relationship: 1867, Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R. 1 P. & D. 354.

[4] 1812, Doe v. Griffin, 15 East 293 (that an absent family-member had never been heard of in the family as married, admitted); 1852, Crouch v. Hooper, 16 Beav. 182, 186 (omission of entry in baptismal register, though other children were entered, admitted); 1913, Uuku v. Kaio, 21 Haw. 710, 719 (that the witnesses "never heard from I. and K. that P. was I.'s half-brother", admitted); 1848, Copes v. Pearce, 7 Gill Md. 247, 265 (lack of entry of alleged illegitimate child's name in family Bible; not given weight on the facts).

to prove the entry to be that of an individual member, for its adoption by the family makes it a family assertion:[1]

1860, BIGELOW, C. J., in North Brookfield v. Warren, 16 Gray 174 (speaking of a pedigree-chart): "They are in their nature public, openly exhibited, and well-known to the family, and therefore may be presumed to possess that authenticity which is derived from the tacit and common assent of those interested in the facts which they record."

1876, ALVEY, J., in Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 160: "Proof of the handwriting or authorship of the entries is not required when the book is shown to have been the family Bible or Testament, for then the entries, as evidence, derive their weight not more from the fact that they were made by any particular person than that, being in that place as a family registry, they are to be taken as assented to by those in whose custody the book has been kept."

On the other hand, if the signature of a specific member of the family can be authenticated, proof of this general family-recognition, by a public exposure of the writing, is not needed:

1831, L. C. BROUGHAM, in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 163 (admitting a signed chart): "It is urged . . . that the principle of all those cases would exclude such a pedigree as this, which was not hung up or in any way made public. . . . But why is it that the publicity is relied upon in those cases? Why is it that the family Bible, the public wearing of a ring, the public exposure of an inscription upon a tombstone, and the public hanging up of the family pedigree in the mansion, are all relied upon in respect of their publicity? It is because in all those cases the publicity supplies a defect, there existing but not here existing, — the want of connection between the pedigree, the tombstone, the ring, or the Bible with particular individuals, members of the family. . . . The presumption is, it would not be suffered to remain if the whole of the family did not more or less adopt it and thereby give it authenticity."

Moreover, even where it is offered as an individual's assertion, the individual's personal execution of the writing is not always essential; for he may § 1496. [1] Eng. 1846, Perth Peerage Case, 2 H. L. C. 876 (held sufficient, where the documents had been hung up on the wall of a room of a family relative, the room being a general reception-room to which all visitors had access); 1866, Hubbard v. Lees, L. R. 1 Exch. 258 (family Bible); U. S. 1896, People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915 (a family Bible with entries in English; the fact that the mother, who authenticated it, could not read or write English, held immaterial); 1898, People v. Slater, 119 Cal. 620, 51 Pac. 957 (family Bible received to show the date of a child's birth); Ky. St. 1916, Mar. 18, p. 162 (age for school-attendance; family Bible admissible; quoted post, § 1644); 1879, Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 719; 1915, Colbert's Estate, 51 Mont. 455, 153 Pac. 1022 (family Bible admitted; "the admissibility of a family Bible . . . does not depend upon authorship or authenticity of the entries"); 1848, Eastman v. Martin, 19 N. H. 157; N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Penal § 817 (age of child; entry in a family Bible, admissible); 1905, State v. Hazlett, 14 N. D. 490, 105 N. W. 617 (grandfather's family Bible admitted); 1912, Peterson's Estate, 22 N. D. 480, 134 N. W. 751 (family Bible entries, received); 1896, Union Ins. Co. v. Pollard, 94 Va. 146, 26 S. E. 421 (family Bible admissible, no matter who made the entry).

Contra: 1906, Bryant v. McKinney, 29 Ky. L. 951, 96 S. W. 809 (entry on a fly-leaf of a Bible, copied from another Bible, excluded; not authority cited for this point; the ruling is entirely unsound); 1897, Supreme Council v. Conklin, 60 N. J. L. 565, 38 Atl. 659 (family Bible, used in the family, with entries in different handwriting and in different inks; "there is no evidence showing when the dates were placed in the book or by whose authority"; not received to show the deceased father's age; no precedents cited); 1897, State v. Hairston, 121 N. C. 579, 28 S. E. 492 (handwriting of the mother in a Bible, spoken of as material).

In State v. Neasby, 188 Mo. 467, 87 S. W. 468 (1905), was admitted a paper containing pencil entries made at the time of each child's birth by neighbors at the father's request, who testified; this was really on the principle of § 748, ante, though treated by the Court under the present principle.

have adopted something written by another, — as, by wearing a ring engraved with a marriage-date, or by ordering a tombstone to be carved, or by carrying about a certificate of marriage.[2]

§ 1497. (3) Production of Original Document; Preferred Writings. If the statement offered is in the form of a writing, the general rule requiring the production of the writing itself (ante, § 1179), is of course applicable.[1] But if the object of the offer is an oral declaration of an individual, or the general unwritten family repute, the terms of no writing are in question, and the rule of production is not applicable. Furthermore, it has been already seen (ante, § 1335) that there is no general principle preferring written statements above oral statements; hence, the mere existence of a written statement, in the form of a Bible-entry or the like, does not render it necessary to use that writing in preference to independent oral statements otherwise admissible.[2]

2 and 3. Kind of Fact that may be the Subject of the Statement

§ 1500. General Principle. In considering what sort of facts it is that may be the subject of the declarations, it is seen that the limitations must rest partly on the principles of both the second and the third groups just considered; that is, (2) the circumstantial guarantee that ordinary family conversation will be indifferent and sincere is true of certain topics only, namely, the ordinary incidents of family life; while (3) the probability that the various members of the family will have fair information (i.e. will be testimonially qualified) is also true for certain topics only, namely, the topics that are most likely to be the subject of repeated conversation and of fairly definite knowledge.[1]

The combined effect of these two principles, therefore, is to limit the topics with which the declarations may be concerned to the events regarded commonly as of importance in the family life. This certainly includes the fact and date of birth, marriage, and death, and the fact and degree of relationship, — as has always been conceded. But there has been more or less fluctuation and uncertainty about the exact limits to be applied, and upon certain classes of facts some doubt still unnecessarily exists.

[2] 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 453, 461 (extracts from parish register, passport, etc., found among deceased's effects, and reciting his marriage and the birth and names of his children, admitted as statements of the deceased); 1900, Hall v. Cardell, 111 Ia. 206, 82 N. W. 503 (leaves of a family Bible, with entries said to be copied from another Bible, admitted).

§ 1497. [1] 1873, McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 545, 559 (leaf of Bible "blotched" but legible; production required); 1888, Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 185, 17 N. E. 232 (production of family-record required); 1913, Ewell v. Ewell, 163 N. C. 233, 79 S. E. 509 (copy of an entry in a family Bible).

[2] 1915, Carter v. State, 68 Fla. 143, 148, 66 So. 1000 (mother testifying to her child's age; her entry of the birth-date in the family Bible, not preferred); and cases cited ante, § 1336 and § 1339.

§ 1500. [1] "Family transactions," says Mansfield, C. J., in the Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416, "are naturally talked of among the relations of the parties. Therefore what is thus dropped in conversation upon such subjects may be presumed to be true."

§ 1501. Declarations as to Place of Birth, Death, etc. The place of birth or death — something more than the fact of birth or death — has by some Courts been thought to be an inadmissible subject. But there is no apparent reason to conclude that a statement on this topic is, from either of the above points of view, less trustworthy:

1847, KNIGHT-BRUCE, V. C., in Shields v. Boucher, 1 DeG. & Sm. 53 (declaring in favor of statements concerning the place of birth, place of residence, and the like, so far as material in a pedigree case): "I own myself not convinced that the reasons and grounds (so far as I can collect and understand them) upon which births and times of births, marriages, deaths, legitimacy, illegitimacy, consanguinity generally, and particular degrees of consanguinity and of affinity, are allowed to be proved by hearsay (from proper quarters) in a controversy merely genealogical, are not as applicable to interrogatories . . . like the present. . . . Who generally is more likely to know whence a man or a family came than the man or the family? Does the emigrant, living or dying, forget his native soil? Is a woman less likely to state her country than her age with accuracy? . . . Nor are there, perhaps, any recollections or traditions of the old more readily communicated or more acceptable to an auditory of descendants than the original seat of the family, its former residences and possessions, its migrations, its local and other distinctions of the past, its advancement or its decay. If such topics are not strictly genealogical, they are at least intimately connected with genealogy . . . and in the most striking manner with the reason [of the rule]."

Such is the conclusion to-day generally and properly accepted.[1]

The truth seems to be that the doubt as to receiving declarations of place was originally due solely to a misunderstanding of the obscure language of the ruling in R. v. Erith (post, § 1503); in that case the ruling actually proceeded on the nature of the issue involved (post, § 1503) — a pauper's settlement — and not on the kind of fact stated. In England this misunderstanding has now been recognized;[2] but in the United States it has had considerable influence, and a few Courts have excluded declarations as to place.[3]

§ 1502. Sundry Kinds of Facts. There is no definite or formal limitation as to the kind of fact that may be the subject of the statement.[1] The general

§ 1501. [1] Eng. 1812, Doe v. Griffin, 15 East 293 (ejectment; family repute that a member had died in the West Indies, admitted); 1844, Rishton v. Nesbitt, 2 Moo. & Rob. 554; 1861, Attorney-General v. Köhler, 9 H. L. C. 686; U. S. 1919, Paulsen's Estate, 179 Cal. 528, 178 Pac. 143 (death in Denmark); 1882, Wise v. Wynn, 59 Miss. 588, 591; 1818, Jackson v. Boneham, 15 Johns. N. Y. 227; 1884, Hammond v. Noble, 57 Vt. 193, 203, semble.

[2] 1847, Knight-Bruce, V. C., in Shields v. Boucher, 1 De G. & Sm. 40 ("If the place of birth in Rex v. Erith had been a genealogical fact, as it was not, — had been material, namely, for any genealogical purpose, which it was not, Lord Ellenborough and the Court of King's Bench might possibly have dealt with the evidence differently"). See also Lord Brougham, L. C., in Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 156. Contra in Canada: 1885, Currie v. Stairs, 25 N. Br. 4, 10 (entries in a family Bible, not admitted to prove the place of birth).

[3] 1821, Brooks v. Clay, 3 A. K. Marsh, Ky. 550; 1826, Wilmington v. Burlington, 4 Pick. Mass. 175; 1876, Tyler v. Flanders, 57 N. H. 618, 624; 1827, Independence v. Pompton, 4 Halst. N. J. 212; 1875, Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 229.

§ 1502. [1] Admitted: ENGLAND: 1844, Rishton v. Nesbitt, 2 Moo. & Rob. 554 (the existence of relatives in a certain town); 1861, Attorney-General v. Köhler, 9 H. L. C. 686 ("events in the early life of J. G. which identify him with G. K."; such as his trade, enlistment in the army, running away from home, sending home money, etc.); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1908, Cox v. Brice, 5th C. C. A., 159 Fed. 378 (that a person went to Texas, and was killed there while with Fannin's command, allowed; approving Byers inquiry, as already indicated (ante, § 1500), should be: Were the circumstances named in the statement such a marked item in the ordinary family history and so interesting to the family in common that statements about them in the family would be likely to be based on fairly accurate knowledge and to be sincerely uttered? There is ample authority for a broad application of this principle, although the rulings are by no means in harmony.

4. Arbitrary Limitations

§ 1503. Kind of Issue or Litigation involved. On principle, the kind of issue involved in the litigation ought to have no bearing on the admission of the present class of declarations. A deceased father's entry in a family Bible is equally trustworthy or untrustworthy whether the issue subsequently arising happens to be framed upon a claim to an inheritance, a plea of infancy to a promissory note, or an application to appoint a guardian. But historically these declarations were first customarily (though not exclusively) used in England in inheritance cases, where the pedigree or genealogy of a claimant was directly a part of the issue; and this traditional use served to give the impression to many Courts that the rule had crystallized into an arbitrary shape. This rule, thus interpreted, says that declarations, otherwise satisfactory, can nevertheless be used in those cases only where the issue involves as material a question of pedigree, i.e. genealogy, — chiefly, therefore, in inheritance cases:

1807, Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., in R. v. Erith, 8 East 539 (settlement of a pauper; the father's declarations as to his bastard birth and the place of birth were rejected): "The only doubt which has been introduced into this case has arisen from improperly considering it as a question of pedigree. The controversy was not, as in a case of pedigree, from what

v. Wallace, Tex., infra); Ala. 1904, Locklayer v. Locklayer, 139 Ala. 354, 35 So. 1008 (the declarant's negro race); Cal. 1900, Woolsey v. Williams, 128 Cal. 552, 61 Pac. 670 (enlisting in the Federal army in the civil war, and being there killed); Md. 1820, Walkup v. Pratt, 5 Harr. & J. 56 (the purchase and sale of a slave; here, in order to identify the alleged ancestor and trace descent); 1920, Hendrickson v. Attick, 136 Md. 1, 109 Atl. 468 (place of residence of relatives); Mich. 1879, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 214, 235, 3 N. W. 882 (that two brothers came from Michigan together, and were the only two brothers of the family that came); N. Y. 1818, Jackson v. Boneham, 15 Johns. 227 (the death in war and the place of death of an ancestor); Or. 1900, Young v. State, 36 Or. 417, 59 Pac. 812, 60 Pac. 711 (that the declarant had enlisted, gone to Washington, deserted, etc.; here, on the theory of identifying circumstances); Tenn. 1848, Story v. Saunders, 8 Humph. 667, semble (that S. had died in the revolutionary army); Tex. 1894, Byers v. Wallace, 87 Tex. 503, 28 S. W. 1059 (that a person went to Texas, and enlisted in the army, and was killed at the Fannin massacre; overruling Smith v. Shinn, infra); Vt. 1869, Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465, 471 (time of death); Wis. 1872, Du Pont v. Davis, 30 Wis. 178 (that A. was killed by the explosion of a powder-mill in 1855 or 1856).

Excluded: 1905, Lutterell v. Whitehead, 121 Ga. 699, 49 S. E. 691 (family repute as to possession of land by an ancestor); 1903, Wright v. Com., — Ky. —, 72 S. W. 340 (family tradition, to show ancestral and collateral insanity); 1870, Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 83 (the existence of heirs; failure of heirs being in issue); 1826, Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. N. Y. 319 (the circumstances of the finding and burial of a body); 1897, People v. Koerner, 154 N. Y. 355, 48 N. E. 730 (family reputation as to insanity); 1882, Smith v. Shinn, 58 Tex. 1 (service in war).

Compare the Codes quoted ante, § 1480, and the cases cited post, § 1503.

For neighborhood-repute to this class of facts, see post, §§ 1605, 1623–1626.

parents the child has derived its birth; but in what place an undisputed birth, derived from known and acknowledged persons, has happened. The point thus stated turns on a single fact, involving no question but of locality, and therefore not falling within the principles of or governed by the rules applicable to cases of pedigree."

1891, EARL, J., in Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024: "A case is not necessarily one of that kind [pedigree], because it may involve questions of birth, parentage, age, or relationship. Where these questions are merely incidental, and the judgment will simply establish a debt, or a person's liability on a contract, or his proper settlement as a pauper, and things of that nature, the case is not one of pedigree."

This strict limitation was probably a novelty of Lord Ellenborough's;[1] though it came to prevail in England and in some courts of the United States.[2]

But in the majority of American jurisdictions this limitation is ignored; the declarations are now admitted whatever the general nature of the issue, and whether or not the issue is one of genealogy, pedigree, or descent.[3]

§ 1503. [1] 1664, Herbert v. Tuckal, T. Raym. 84 (devisor's capacity to make a will; father's entry of age in almanac, admitted). In settlement cases (which were notoriously esoteric in their practice) Lord Ellenborough appears to have gone directly against the previous practice: 1744, R. v. Greenwich, Burr. Settl. Cas. I, 343; 1772, R. v. Nutley, Burr. Settl. Cas. II, 701; 1782, R. v. Holy Trinity, Cald. Just. Peace (Settl. Cas.), 141.

[2] ENGLAND: 1841, Figg v. Wedderburne, 11 L. J. Q. B. 46, semble (contract; plea of infancy); 1884, Haines v. Guthrie, L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 818 (contract; plea of infancy). But otherwise under some Colonial statutes: 1916, Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark, 2 A. C. 575 (plea of infancy to a mortgage; entry of date of defendant's birth made by his deceased father in a book containing family records of births, deaths, and marriages, held admissible, under Straits Settlements Evidence Ordinance 1893, § 32, similar to Indian Evidence Act; the limitation of Haines v. Guthrie supra, to cases of pedigree not being recognized in that statute).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1876, Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schwenck, 94 U. S. 598 ("The present case [an action on a life-insurance policy] involves no question of pedigree; the proof of age was not offered for the purpose of proving parentage or descent, both of which were impertinent to the issue between the parties"); 1902, Fidelity Mutual L. Ass'n v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. 662 (insurance policy; death of the insured); Cal. 1897, People v. Mayne, 118 Cal. 516, 50 Pac. 654, semble (rape on a child under 14); Conn. 1873, Union v. Plainfield, 39 Conn. 564 (pauper settlement); Mass. 1882, Com. v. Felch, 132 Mass. 22 (criminal charge of abortion); Mo. 1896, State v. Marshall, 137 Mo. 463, 36 S. W. 619 (criminal action for seduction where the offence could by statute be committed only upon a person under 18 years of age); N. J. 1826, Westfield v. Warren, 8 N. J. L. 251 (pauper settlement); N. Y. 1891, Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024 (quoted supra); 1902, Washington v. Bank, 171 N. Y. 166, 63 N. E. 831 (action for money in the defendant savings bank, deposited by the plaintiff's intestate in the name of certain alleged sons, the plaintiff claiming that the beneficiaries were fictitious, and the defendant denying this; held, that the issue was as to "the right of succession to the personal property of a deceased person" and therefore one of pedigree); Okl. 1914, Freeman v. First National Bank, 44 Okl. 146, 143 Pac. 1165 (cancellation of a minor's deeds; a brother's testimony to the alleged minor's age, as reputed in the family, excluded; citing Eisenlord v. Clum, supra, but not showing knowledge of the real angles of the exception); Tex. 1903, Donley v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 428, 71 S. W. 958, semble (the statement of a brother, not shown to be deceased, as to the age of a prosecutrix in rape, excluded); Vt. 1856, Londonderry v. Andover, 28 Vt. 428 (pauper settlement).

[3] Ala. 1880, Cherry v. State, 68 Ala. 30, semble (selling liquor to a minor); Ark. 1867, Wilson v. Brownlee, 24 Ark. 589 (action on a promissory note; plea in abatement that one of the joint payees was dead); Cal. 1919, Paulsen's Estate, 179 Cal. 528, 178 Pac. 143 (appointment of administratrix); Colo. 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Watson, 2 Colo. 442, 453, 461 (action by administrator for damages for death); Ga. 1874, Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 547 (entries in a family Bible; the issue being as to the age of the insured in an action on an insurance policy; § 3772 of the Code was perhaps slightly involved); Ind. 1859, Collins v. Grantham, 12 Ind. 444 (plea of infancy to a note); Ia. 1860, Carnes v. Crandall, 10 Ia. 379 ('scire facias' to revive a judgment; hearsay as to the fact of the defendant's death was rejected on grounds not affecting the nature of the issue); 1870, Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 302 (declarations of a father as to the son's age, in an action for death by a brakeman's carelessness, were

This is a just result. Any such arbitrary and unreasoning limitation places the rules of Evidence on a par with the rule of chess that a king may move one square only, or the rule of whist that the card played must follow the suit led, — rules, that is, which justify their existence because they add complexity, and therefore interest, to the game. If a trial upon evidence is a game, such limitations have a place in the law of Evidence; if it is the employment of rational and practical methods in the discovery of truth, such limitations should be discarded without scruple:

1860, BIGELOW, C. J., in North Brookfield v. Warren, 16 Gray 175 (admitting evidential declarations where the main issue was as to a pauper's settlement): "Upon principle we can see no reason for such a limitation. If this evidence is admissible to prove such facts at all, it is equally so in all cases whenever they become legitimate subjects of judicial inquiry and investigation."

held admissible, though ruled out for other reasons); Ky. 1905, Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Henderson C. Mills, 120 Ky. 218, 85 S. W. 1090 (action to indemnify for a sum paid for the death of a minor); Mich. 1879, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 235, 3 N. W. 882 (will-contest); 1891, Lamoreaux v. Attorney-General, 89 Mich. 146, 50 N. W. 812 (mandamus to institute 'quo warranto' proceedings as to the right to exercise a sheriff's office); Minn. 1892, Houlton v. Manteuffel, 51 Minn. 185, 187, 53 N. W. 541 (plea of infancy to action on note; point not raised); Pa. 1840, Carskadden v. Poorman, 10 Watts 84 (action against a magistrate to recover a penalty for marrying a minor); 1845, Watson v. Brewster, 1 Pa. St. 383 (action on a note, with a plea of infancy); S. D. 1916, Svendsen's Estate, 37 S. D. 353, 158 N. W. 410 (wife's application for appointment as administratrix; issue as to validity of marriage; deceased's statements both asserting and denying marriage, received; Tenn. 1846, Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 98 (a testator devised to negroes, and his sanity was impeached; hearsay was accepted to show that they were his illegitimate children, and thus to sustain his capacity); 1883, Swink v. French, 11 Lea 79 (in an action on a note, a contract to extend the time was alleged, and infancy was alleged in reply; hearsay of the date of birth was admitted); Tex. 1851, Primm v. Stewart, 7 Tex. 178, 182 (whether W. was dead when a power of attorney from him was executed; rule held not confined "to cases where the question is one of pedigree); 1900, Summerhill v. Darrow, 94 Tex. 71, 57 S. W. 942 (vendor's lien; whether the statute of limitations was suspended by coverture; her mother's will-recitals admitted); Vt. 1872, Masons v. Fuller, 45 Vt. 30 (bastardy complaint); 1884, Hammond v. Noble, 57 Vt. 193, 203, semble (petition for new trial, because of a juror's alienage; family declarations admitted); Wis. 1872, Du Pont v. Davis, 30 Wis. 178 (the death of A. was shown, as indicating the non-necessity of joining him as a party plaintiff in a suit relating to land of which he was assumed to be joint-tenant); 1877, Hart v. Stickney, 41 Wis. 630, 638 (plea of infancy to a promissory note; defendant's testimony to the family repute of his age, admitted; yet the point was not "absolutely decided").

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC IV: ATTESTATION OF A SUBSCRIBING WITNESS

CHAPTER L.

§ 1505. Theory of the Exception. It has long been unquestioned that the attestation of an attesting or subscribing witness to a document may be used, when the attester is unavailable in person, as evidence of the document's execution; and according to the orthodox form of the Preferred Witness rule (ante, § 1320), the attestation must even be used in preference to other testimony. There was a time, apparently, when the testimony of the attester in person was so rigorously required that even his death could not excuse his absence (ante, §§ 1287, 1311), and in that period it cannot be said that the present exception to the Hearsay rule (if indeed there existed then any Hearsay rule) was recognized. But the recognition unquestionably came by the second half of the 1700s, and this use of an attestation has since then been unquestioned.

What has not been always clearly understood is that such a use of an attestation is in truth an exception to the Hearsay rule, i.e. is the testimonial use of an extrajudicial assertion as evidence of the truth of the fact asserted (ante, § 1362). In practice, the dramatic feature of the evidence has tended to obscure the legal principle; that is to say, the mode of using it consists merely in proving the genuineness of the attester's signature to the document. But this is after all nothing less than offering the attester's written statement, expressly or impliedly made at the time of execution, that the document was seen by him to be executed as it purports to be. And this was always assumed in judicial opinion, until the following perverse utterance from an eminent judge shook the faith of the profession:

1836, Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615; declarations of a deceased attesting witness M., whose handwriting had been proved, were offered as amounting to an acknowledgment of forgery, but were rejected. Counsel: "Proving the signature of the deceased witness is no more than [proving] a declaration on his part that he saw the party execute the deed. . . . If the plaintiff is permitted to prove declarations of M. to sustain the deed, the defendant may use them also to impugn it. If the signature does not amount to a declaration that the witness saw the party sign, it amounts to nothing." Lord ABINGER, C. B.: "Is it not an assumption of yours that the signature is a declaration? It is a fact." . . . PARKE, B. (for the Court): "One of the grounds [of argument] was that as the plaintiff used the declaration of the subscribing witness, evidenced by his signature, to prove the execution, the defendant might use any declaration of the same witness to disprove it. The answer to this argument is that evidence of the handwriting in the attestation is not used as a declaration by the witness, but to show the fact that he put his name in that place and manner in which in the ordinary course of business he would have done if he had actually seen the deed executed. A statement of the attesting witness by parol, or written on any other document than that offered to be proved, would be inadmissible. The proof of actual attestation of the witness is therefore not the proof of a declaration, but of a fact."

As to this, it may be said (1) that all evidential data whatever are merely "facts"; the testimonial utterance of a witness in the stand is merely a "fact", i.e. we are asked to believe that A struck B because of the evidential "fact" that M, a competent observer, is willing to assert under oath on the stand that A struck B (ante, § 475). (2) If, however, by "fact" the learned judge be supposed to have meant an extrajudicial utterance, and to have looked upon all such statements as circumstantial evidence in distinction from testimonial evidence, then it must be answered that the distinction between testimonial and circumstantial evidence admits of no such significance (ante, §§ 25, 479). The Hearsay rule, to be sure, draws a distinction between testimonial utterances made upon the stand and made off the stand (ante, § 1362); but a human assertion offered as evidence of the truth of the assertion is testimonial evidence, no matter where it is uttered. (3) If, finally, by "fact" the learned judge meant that the act of subscribing in attestation, when proved in Court for the purpose of establishing the maker's execution, is a mere circumstance of conduct and not an implied assertion of the fact of execution, his notion is clearly not correct. It might as well be argued that, because a deponent merely signs his name to a deposition, his act is mere circumstantial evidence and not testimony.

That this singular aberration of Stobart v. Dryden is unfounded, appears in the constant judicial treatment of the whole subject, as indicated in the following sections (particularly in §§ 1511–1513); but the error is especially repudiated in the following passages:[1]

1824 Per CURIAM, in Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57): "The proof of the handwriting of the witness is 'quasi' bringing him into Court. . . . It proves as much as the subscribing witness can prove himself in many cases."

§ 1505. [1] Accord: 1903, Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756 (good opinion by Holloway, J.); 1860, Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 294; 1832, Daniel, J., in Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 356; 1847, Gibson, C. J., in Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 412 ("the equivalent of the witnesses' oath"); 1848, Rogers, J., in Harden v. Hays, 9 Pa. St. 156.

1842, NELSON, C. J., in Losee v. Losee, 2 Hill 609: "Proof of the signature of a deceased subscribing witness is presumptive evidence of everything appearing upon the face of the instrument relative to its execution; as it is presumed the witness would not have subscribed his name in attestation of that which did not take place. . . . The attestation, comes in by way of substitute for his oath." Note by Mr. Nicholas Hill (afterwards judge): "The act of attesting an instrument is regarded as a written declaration of the subscribing witness, to which the law, in the event of his death or absence, yields a reluctant credit by way of necessary substitute for his oath."

1867, THOMPSON, J., in Kirk v. Carr, 54 Pa. 285, 290: "Memory can no more be kept alive than the body, and hence the law allows the attesting signature to speak when the tongue may be silent."

1867, WRIGHT, J., in Boyens' Will, 23 Ia. 354, 357: "The witnesses to a will become such from the moment they sign it. They testify from that moment, and hence, though they should die before the testator or before the probate of the will, it is still good."

The attestation, then (when proved to have been made), by establishing the genuineness of the signature, comes in as an extrajudicial or hearsay assertion of the attester.[2] What are the limitations to its use, upon the general principles of the Hearsay exceptions as already expounded?

1. The Necessity Principle

§ 1506. Attester must be Deceased, Absent from Jurisdiction, etc. Upon the general principle already noted for the preceding Exceptions (ante, § 1421), the attester's hearsay statement cannot be used unless the attester is unavailable for the purpose of giving testimony in person. The various situations which fulfil this condition — death, absence from the jurisdiction, insanity, illness, etc. — have already been fully examined in connection with the rule of Preferred Witnesses (ante, §§ 1309–1319), and therefore need not be again considered here. The case of failure of memory of an attester, called to the stand, is later examined (post, § 1511).

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness

§ 1508. General Principle. Unquestioned as the reception of this hearsay statement has been, no judicial attempt seems to have been made to define the reasons for the trustworthiness thus accorded, by exception, to this class of hearsay statements.[1] The question is virtually this (ante, § 1422): What guarantee is there that the attester did not sign his name as attester to a document which he did not see executed by the purporting maker?

[2] Of course, it may be proved without any attempt to use it testimonially, as where the law requires an attestation as an element in the validity of the document and the party desires merely to show that the elements of validity exist; 1860, Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 295 (where the signature was proved merely to show the statutory requirement fulfilled, and the will's execution was otherwise proved).

§ 1508. [1] The following suggestions are found: 1819, Kirkpatrick, C. J., in Newbold v. Lamb, 2 South. N. J. 449, 451 ("The only reason why the proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness is taken as sufficient proof of the execution of a deed is founded upon the presumption that what an honest man hath attested under his hand is true"); 1823, Gibson, J., in Crouse v. Miller, 10 S. & R. Pa. 158 ("The handwriting of a witness. . . . standing in the place of the oath, derives its claim to respect from the consideration that the law presumes every man honest till the contrary appears").

The circumstances tending to trustworthiness seem to be four: (1) The occasion is a formal one, and the statement requires a writing; and there is commonly a radical disinclination to take part in a false transaction of such a sort. (2) The concoction of a false document will either fix an innocent party with a false obligation or will divest legitimate heirs of their rights, and there is a natural repugnance to giving assistance in such a wrong. (3) The making of a false attestation, whether or not it is in criminal law a forgery or a perjury, is popularly supposed to be such, and the attester would probably be at least an accomplice in a forgery; so that the subjective sanction deterring from a crime would probably operate to prevent a false attestation. (4) The attester knows that he is liable at any time to be called upon in Court to substantiate his attestation; and not only is his falsity likely there to be exposed by the opponent's witnesses, but he will there be obliged either to commit perjury by swearing to the fact of execution or to undergo the disagreeable ordeal of recanting and confessing his falseness. — There is thus a combination of circumstances which easily account for the establishment of this Exception to the Hearsay rule.

§ 1509. Who is an Attester; Definition of Attestation. An attesting or subscribing witness, then, is a person who, at the request or with the consent of the maker, places his name on a document with the intent of making thereby an express or implied statement that the document was then known by him to have been executed by the purporting maker. Only such a signature can be used as a hearsay statement. Thus, it cannot be used if the person did not write it himself, or not at the time, or if he did not sign as an attester but for some other purpose. These and related questions have been already treated in examining the notion of an attesting witness under the rule of Preferred Witnesses (ante, § 1292), and their solution would probably be the same for the present subject.

The kind of issue in which the attestation is offered is immaterial, so long as it is offered to prove the execution of a document.[1] But the only statement admissible as made under circumstances of trustworthiness is the written statement in the document, either expressed or implied by the signature; so that any oral statement otherwise made is not receivable;[2] except when offered as a self-contradiction to impeach the written statement (post, § 1514). The statement need not be expressly written in full; the placing of the signature implies an assertion of execution (post, § 1511).

§ 1509. [1] Contra: 1895, Walker v. State, 107 Ala. 5, 18 So. 393 (perjury for falsely swearing that he had not signed a conveyance; evidence of the handwriting of a deceased attesting witness was not admitted to show that the defendant had signed it; "upon this question he was entitled to be confronted by the witnesses against him, and not be prejudiced by evidence that the paper bore the names, as attesting witnesses, of persons who are not examined on the trial"; this is unsound; on such a doctrine no exceptions to the Hearsay rule could ever exist; see ante, §§ 1397, 1398).

[2] 1866, Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120, 135 (excluding statements by the deceased witness as to the sanity of the testator; such statements are not an implied part of the attestation).

3. Testimonial Principles

§ 1510. Attester must be Competent at time of Attestation. The attestation is offered as the statement of the attester made at the time of attestation. Hence:

(1) If he was at that time not qualified as a witness,[1] his statement in the attestation is not admissible. The usual instance of this has been the case of a disqualification by interest.[2] But this result involved often the frustration of genuine testamentary dispositions and did an injustice to honest legatees. Modern statutes have devised a remedy, viz. the nullification of the interest, by declaring void any devise or bequest made in the will to an attesting witness; thus rendering the attester competent. The statutes vary, however, in the details by which this expedient is given effect.[3]

(2) If the attester was then qualified, but has since become disqualified to take the stand, his attestation is receivable, because it speaks as from a time when he was qualified.[4] Whether in this case the attestation is valid as an element of execution, under statutes requiring the attester to be a credible witness, is a matter of substantive law not here involved;[5] the doubt

§ 1510. [1] Whether in such a case, under the Preferred Witness rule, he may be disregarded as not an attester, and need not be called or accounted for, is a different question, treated ante, § 1292.

[2] 1793, Swire v. Bell, 5 T. R. 371 (interest existing at the time of attestation and since; handwriting not allowed, the case of a subsequent incompetency being distinguished); 1841, Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. Mass. 522, 532; 1813, Hamilton v. Marsden, 6 Binn. Pa. 45, 50, per Yeates, J.; 1820, Miller v. Carothers, 6 S. & R. Pa. 215, 222 (will); 1852, Harding v. Harding, 18 Pa. St. 340, 342; 1859, Jones v. Jones, 12 Rich. S. C. 116, 120.

[3] CANADA: Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 118, §§ 6, 7; Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 120, §§ 17–19; Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 74, §§ 11–14; UNITED STATES: Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 579–584; Ark. Dig. 1919, §§ 10529–10535; Cal. Civ. C. 1872, §§ 1282, 1283; Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 5190, 5191; Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 4943; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 3849; Haw. Rev. L. 1915, §§ 3262, 3263; Ill. 1915, Scott v. O'Connor-Couch, 271 Ill. 395, 111 N. E. 272 (applying the rule of Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 8, and St. 1911, p. 538, that a person disqualified by a beneficial interest under the will may become competent and compellable by the annulment of the interest; here applied to a stockholder attesting a will which made his banking corporation executor); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 3144; Ia. Code 1919, § 7796; Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 11763; Ky. 1917, Caddell's Heirs v. Caddell's Ex'x, 175 Ky. 505, 194 S. W. 541; Me. 1915, Clark's Appeal, 114 Me. 105, 95 Atl. 517 (history of statutes examined); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 191, § 2; Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11823, 11824; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 7254; Miss. Code 1906, §§ 2001, 2002, Hem. §§ 1666, 1667; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, §§ 542–547; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 6987; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, §§ 1248, 1249; N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Wills, §§ 4–8; N. Y. S. C. A. 1920, § 75, Cons. L. 1909, Decedent Est. § 27; N. C. Con. St. 1919, §§ 4137, 4138; § 370 (proof of contents of destroyed will; any devisee or legatee is competent to prove contents, "except such as may concern his own interest in the same"); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, §§ 5630, 5631; Or. Laws 1920, §§ 10111–10118; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 622, Civ. C. § 683; S. C. Civ. C. 1922, §§ 5557, 5558; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 7870, 7871; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6322; Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 3211; Va. Code 1919, §§ 5244, 5245; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 1332; W. Va. Code 1914, c. 77, §§ 18–20; Wis. 1921, Re Johnson's Will, — Wis. —, 183 N. W. 888 (under St. 1905, c. 128, making void a gift to a subscribing witness "unless there be two other competent witnesses to the same", the proviso means "subscribing witnesses"; so that the gift is void even though other bystander-witnesses, not subscribing, testified to the will's execution; two judges diss.); Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 6670.

[4] The cases are collected ante, § 1316, in dealing with the excuses for not calling the attesting witness.

That his good character need not first be shown in any case is clear: 1850, Chaffe v. Cupp, 5 La. An. 684 (Slidell, J., diss., being apparently the only person who ever doubted). Compare § 1104, ante.

[5] 1904, Boyd v. McConnell, 209 Ill. 396, 70 N. E. 649; 1904, O'Brien v. Bonfield, 213 Ill. 428, 72 N. E. 1090; 1865, Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 All. Mass. 155 (Bigelow, C. J.:

has usually been solved by statutes expressly authorizing probate in spite of subsequent testimonial incompetency.[6]

§ 1511. Implied Purport of Attestation; (1) All Elements of Due Execution implied. When the attester's signature is identified as genuine, what does the attester thereby purport to testify to?

Assuming that the signature is appended to a clause of attestation expressly stating the facts of execution, it is clear that the signed attestation is a testimonial assertion of all the facts thus required to be stated. This has never been doubted for the case of an attester deceased or otherwise unavailable in person.

But it has not been always so easy to appreciate in the case of an attesting witness who on being called to the stand is found to have forgotten all the circumstances. In such a case, it is not doubted that the proponent may, if he can, prove the facts of execution by other witnesses (ante, § 1302). But, apart from that, does not the signed attestation itself serve as some evidence of the facts, the attester's failure of memory having practically made his present testimony unavailable? On this point there can be no doubt:

1839, TUCKER, P., in Clarke v. Dunnavant, 10 Leigh 13, 30, 35: "[If the witness is dead, or the like,] his attestation is a sufficient ground for presuming that the instrument has been executed with all the solemnities and ceremonies required by the law. . . . It is then a question for the jury whether under the circumstances of the case it is probable that all the formalities of the statute were regularly observed. . . . The question still recurs whether, as the witnesses have been actually examined and have failed to prove a compliance with all the requisitions of the statute, that compliance can be inferred from their attestation. . . . [This is answered in the affirmative, by the precedents,] nor do I apprehend any evil from this decision. It may perhaps sometimes lead to the establishment of wills not duly executed, as doubtless may be the case also where the witnesses are all dead or absent, and everything is presumed from their attestation. But far greater mischiefs would arise from a contrary decision, which should make the rights of every devisee and legatee depend not only upon the honesty but also upon the slippery memory of witnesses. Under such a decision, no man could be sure of dying testate, since the forgetfulness of a witness would frustrate all his precaution; and a question of title by will, which in the spirit of the statute of frauds, the Legislature designed to rest upon written evidence alone, would after all depend upon the integrity and the memory of those who were called on to attest the instrument. . . . It would tend, I have no doubt, to multiply the attempts, already too common, to set aside wills; since the chances of success must be very much increased if the frailty of human memory is to be called in to the aid of the discontented heir."

"It is to be borne in mind that the question to be determined in this case is, not whether the witness objected to at the trial was competent to give evidence in the case, but whether he was competent according to the rules of the common law to act as a subscribing witness. If he was, then the will was duly attested; but if he was not, then the will cannot be admitted to probate, because it was not subscribed in the presence of the testator by three competent witnesses"); and compare the cases cited ante, § 582.

[6] CANADA: Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 118, § 5; Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 120, § 16; Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 74, § 11; UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1907, § 6173; Cal. Civ. C. 1872, § 1280; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 3848; Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 3261; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7813; Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 3132; Ky. Stats. 1915, § 4836; Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 11767; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 79, § 2; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 191, § 3; Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 11821; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 7251; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 6984; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 1245; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 5682; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 621; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 3769; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 640; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6319; Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 3210; Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 6670.

1849, GIBSON, C. J., in Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. St. 489, 498: "What avails it that the man is living, if his memory is dead? If it were blotted out by paralysis, or worn out by decay, his attestation would stand for proof by a witness; but it must be immaterial how or by what means it lost its tenacity."

That the attestation may thus, in all cases where the witness is unable to testify in person, be taken as evidence of the fact of execution is not doubted.[1] The matter of controversy has usually been merely the effect of such evidence, i.e. whether it should be given the force of a presumption or merely suffices as evidence to go to the jury (post, §§ 2490, 2520), — a matter not here involved.[2] As to the specific facts to be taken as a part of the assertion, — delivery, presence, request, publication, and the like —, there is perhaps some room for doubt.

Assuming that there is on the document an attestation-clause of some sort, it is generally said that the attestation is evidence of all the facts essential to a due execution of the document under the substantive law applicable to that kind of document.[3] A few Courts have here and there hesitated in regard § 1511. [1] Accord: 1846, Hitch v. Wells, 10 Beav. 84, 89 (in this case "where one witness is dead, [and] another is not to be believed [in denying attestation], and the third is an ignorant man whose recollection fails him, you must supply it [publication] by presumption"); 1895, Gillis v. Gillis, 96 Ga. 1, 23 S. E. 107; 1898, Thompson v. Owen, 174 Ill. 229, 233, 51 N. E. 1046; 1873, Kellum's Will, 52 N. Y. 517, 519 ("a mere failure of memory on the part of the witnesses shall not defeat a will, if the attestation clause and other circumstances are satisfactory to prove its execution").

So, too, from another point of view, the failure of memory of an attester called to the stand excuses the party under the Preferred Witness rule, as if through death or the like his attendance could not be had (ante, § 1315).

[2] Whether the attestation suffices under the Quantity rule, requiring two witnesses not necessarily attesters, is considered post, § 2048.

As to the sufficiency of the attestation, when the witness on the stand fails to remember and merely verifies by asserting that he would not have attested without knowing the facts, see the cases cited ante, § 1315, and also compare §§ 747, 98.

[3] ENGLAND: 1739, Croft v. Pawlet, 2 Stra. 1109 (the attestation clause to a will said nothing about the witnesses' signing in the testator's presence; and it was objected that "the hands of the witnesses could only stand as to the facts they had subscribed to"; but the Court left it to the jury to say whether there was "a compliance with all circumstances [required]"); 1808, Milward v. Temple, 1 Camp. 375 (debt on bond; the plaintiff put in a paper, signed by the defendant's attorney, whereby the signatures of the defendant and the attesting witness to the bond were admitted; L. C. J. Ellenborough at first doubted whether the delivery of the bond by the defendant as his deed ought not also to have been admitted, or must not still be proved to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict; but upon consideration, "his lordship said, as the attesting witness' handwriting was admitted, this might be taken as a presumptive admission of all he professed to attest and would have been called to prove"); 1834, Tindal, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 22 ("the presumption [is] that he witnessed all that the law requires for the due execution of a will").

CANADA: 1843, Hamilton v. Love, 2 Kerr 243, 250 (on the facts); 1874, Hanlon's Will, 15 N. Br. 136, 140.

UNITED STATES: Georgia: 1900, Underwood v. Thurman, 111 Ga. 325, 36 S. E. 788 (the clause "raises a presumption that such paper was executed with all the requisite legal formalities"); Illinois: 1895, Hobart v. Hobart, 154 Ill. 610, 614, 619, 39 N. E. 581 (proof of handwriting presumes due attestation); 1898, Thompson v. Owen, 174 Ill. 229, 233, 51 N. E. 1046; 1889, Canatsey v. Canatsey, 130 Ill. 397 (the testimony of one of the witnesses, who identified his signature but recollected nothing of the circumstances, held sufficient; Wilkin, J., diss.); 1909, Elston v. Montgomery, 242 Ill. 348, 90 N. E. 3 (see the citation post, § 1513, n. 3); 1917, Hutchison v. Kelly, 276 Ill. 438, 114 N. E. 1012; 1919, Hart v. Hart, 290 Ill. 476, 125 N. E. 366; 1918, Flynn v. Flynn, 283 Ill. 206, 119 N. E. 304 (principle applied to signature by mark); 1919, Rupp v. Jones, 289 Ill. 596, 124 N. E. 560; 1921, Jenkins v. White, 298 Ill. 502, 131 N. E. 634 (even where one of the witnesses testifies to non-performance of some requirement); Iowa: 1898, Scott v. Hawk, 107 Ia. 723, 77 N. W. 467 (proof of handwriting is to its application to individual kinds of facts; but the principle as above stated is the orthodox one and is in general acceptance. It has commonly proof of due execution, even where the testator signs by mark); 1902, Hull's Will, 117 Ia. 738, 89 N. W. 979; Kentucky: 1829, Pate v. Joe, 3 J. J. Marsh. 113, 116; 1847, Chisholm v. Ben, 7 B. Monr. 408, 410, semble; Maine: 1920, Re Goodridge, 119 Me. 371, 111 Atl. 425 (attestation clause held sufficient, even though other evidence showed that it was incorrect as to certain non-essential facts of execution); Maryland: 1913, Conrades v. Heller, 119 Md. 448, 87 Atl. 28; 1917, Woodstock College v. Hankey, 129 Md. 675, 99 Atl. 962; Massachusetts: 1853, Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. 332, 342 (the signature is to be taken as "put there for the purpose stated in connection with the signature"); Michigan: 1860, Lawyer v. Smith, 8 Mich. 411, 414, 423 (identification of his signature by the witness, sufficient to go to the jury); Mississippi: 1857, Fatheree v. Lawrence, 33 Miss. 585, 618; 1858, Nixon v. Porter, 34 Miss. 697, 706; Nebraska: 1906, Robertson's Estate, — Nebr. —, 109 N. W. 506 (witnesses' failure of memory); New Jersey: 1819, Newbold v. Lamb, 2 South. 449, 451 (an attestation-clause not specifying sealing and delivery, held not sufficient to show that a scroll-seal was made before attestation; Southard, J., diss.); 1858, Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 290, 293 ("the attestation-clause . . . is 'prima facie' evidence of the facts stated in it"); 1872, Alpaugh's Will, 23 N. J. Eq. 507 (death or non-recollection; "the attestation-clause must be taken as true"); 1875, Allaire v. Allaire, 37 N. J. L. 312, 325 ("proof of their signature will be evidence that what they attested in fact did take place"); 1876, Tappen v. Davidson, 27 N. J. Eq. 459 (similar); 1882, Turnure v. Turnure, 35 N. J. Eq. 437, 440 (publication also, if recited, is presumed); 1886, McCurdy v. Neall, 42 N. J. Eq. 333, 7 Atl. 1566; 1887, Ayres v. Ayres, 43 N. J. Eq. 565, 569, 12 Atl. 621; 1888, Elkinton v. Brick, 44 N. J. Eq. 154, 167, 15 Atl. 391; 1892, Farley v. Farley, 50 N. J. Eq. 435, 439, 26 Atl. 178; 1905, Beggans' Will, 68 N. J. Eq. 572, 59 Atl. 874; 1906, Bogert v. Bateman, — N. J. Eq. —, 65 Atl. 238; 1910, Bioren v. Nesler, 77 N. J. Eq. 560, 78 Atl. 201; New York: 1841, Remsen v. Brinckerhoff, 26 Wend. 325, 338 (attestation-clause is "good presumptive evidence . . . and sufficient to prove the will, if not refuted"; but see ib. p. 332); North Carolina: 1832, Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 356, semble; Oklahoma: 1916, Ballard's Estate, 56 Okl. 149, 155 Pac. 894; Oregon: 1902, Skinner v. Lewis, 40 Or. 571, 62 Pac. 523, 67 Pac. 951; Pennsylvania: 1847, Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409, 412 (attestation is "'prima facie' evidence of execution"; here, of the testator's signing); 1849, Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 489, 498 (attestation presumes "compliance with the requisitions of the statute"; here, that the testator's name was written by his express direction); 1847, Barr v. Graybill, 13 Pa. 396, 399 ("his memory, in respect of it, was extinct, and he himself legally dead; . . . his attestation would have stood for proof by a witness"; but in this case there was not such a failure of memory); 1856, Barker v. McFerran, 26 Pa. 211, 214 (attestation presumes "everything else necessary to establish the will"; here, that the testator's name was written by his express direction); 1858, Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. 218, 224 (like Greenough v. Greenough; attestation implies "that everything else necessary to give the instrument validity existed"; the Court may treat this as a presumption to control the jury); 1865, McKee v. White, 50 Pa. 354, 360 (like Greenough v. Greenough); 1867, Kirk v. Carr, 54 Pa. 285, 290 (same); 1867, Leckey v. Cunningham, 56 Pa. 370, 373 ("proof of attestation proves the will"; here, held to imply a signing in the witness' presence); 1868, Hamsher v. Kline, 57 Pa. 397, 402, semble; South Carolina: 1817, Pearson v. Wightman, 1 Mill Const. 336, 341 (publication may be presumed); 1831, M'Elwee v. Sutton, 2 Bail. 128, 129 (attestation imports "the testimony which the law presumes him to give"; "the proof of his handwriting after his death established the deed as a true and genuine paper, on presumptions, 1st, that if it had not been so, he would not have witnessed it, and 2d, that if he had been alive, he would have given all the evidence necessary to support it"); 1839, Dawson v. Dawson, Rice Eq. 243, 254 ("Attestation is evidence of what it professedly declares"; here an attestation of signing and sealing was held not to imply delivery); 1840, Ednionston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 83 (the grantor's "signature, seal, and delivery are proved when the handwriting of the witnesses is proved"); 1892, Re Brock, 37 S. C. 348, 353 (attestation presumes all essential facts); St. 1839, Civ. C. 1922, § 5570 (attestation and testator's signature are 'prima facie' evidence "that the testator did execute the will in question in the presence of the witnesses thereto"); South Dakota: 1922, Hauer v. Hauer, — S. D. —, 186 N. W. 566; Tennessee: 1877, Beadles v. Alexander, 9 Baxt. 604, 609 (attestation raises a presumption of the presence of testator); 1830, Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598, 616 (Story, J.: "[There arises] only a presumption of the due execution of the deed from the mere fact that the signature of the witness is to the attestation clause"); Utah: 1912, Butcher v. Butcher, — Utah —, 122 Pac. 397; Vermont: Gen. St. 1917, § 3221 (the handwriting of the witnesses is usable "where the names of the witnesses are subscribed to a certificate stating been extended to imply an assertion of the maker's sanity.[4] But it could not cover facts not ordinarily known to the attester at the time of execution.[5]

§ 1512. Same: Lack of Attestation-Clause is Immaterial. It cannot be material, for this purpose, that the signature is not accompanied by an attestation-clause expressly stating all the facts; for, in the first place, the sole object of the signature is to attest the facts of execution; secondly, the maker and the witness may not know these facts to be essential or may not suppose it necessary to state them in writing, although the facts have occurred; and, thirdly, experience teaches that, if heed were given to the contrary possibility, more genuine and properly-executed documents would fail of proof than forged or improperly executed documents would be established by proof of the mere signature:

1777, Lord MANSFIELD, C. J., in Graft v. Lord Bertie, Peake, Evidence, 72: "Dadley's [the deceased attesting-witness] hand is proved as evidence of all he would have said if living."

1872, MCCAY, J., in Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415, 443: "As a matter of course, the presumption is stronger or weaker according to any material facts connected with the case; and if it was recited, this would strengthen it. But it is a wise rule of law that such a presumption should exist. How many wills do not come up for probate until many years after the execution of them! Sometimes the witnesses can only recognize their own handwriting; sometimes they can only remember the fact that the testator signed, and perhaps only that they signed. Who was present, and all the other details, have passed from memory. To say that under such circumstances the will is not to be probated would be a death-blow to wills. . . . I only say that if the jury had been told there was a presumption of the presence of the testator . . . , it is possible they might have come to a different conclusion [than they did here in finding against the will]."

Such seems always to have been the rule in England;[1] and it obtains, with that the will was executed as required in this chapter"); 1901, Claflin's Will, 73 Vt. 129, 50 Atl. 815 (the attestation clause is evidence of due execution); Virginia: 1799, Bogle v. Sullivant, 1 Call 561, semble; 1846, Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439, 464, semble (attestation is evidence of a "compliance with all the circumstances"); West Virginia: 1881, Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376, 388 (attestation suffices to show all the requirements of execution); 1898, Thompson v. Halstead, 44 W. Va. 390, 29 S. E. 991; Wisconsin: 1903, Gillmor's Will, 117 Wis. 302, 94 N. W. 32; 1910, Hawkinson v. Otway, 143 Wis. 136, 126 N. W. 683 (careful opinion, by Dodge, J.: applied to a signature by mark); 1912, Grant's Will, 149 Wis. 330, 135 N. W. 833; 1922, Maresh's Will, — Wis. —, 187 N. W. 1010.

[4] 1904, More v. More, Ill., cited post, § 1512, n. 2; 1900, Stevens v. Leonard, 154 Ind. 67, 56 N. E. 27 ("The witness must be understood to attest, not merely the act of signing, but also the mental capacity of the testator to sign"); 1830, Scribner v. Crane, 2 Paige 147, 149 (attestation implies sanity); 1871, Sellars v. Sellars, 2 Heisk. 430 (same). Contra: 1856, Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray 71, 82: 1848, Flanders v. Davis, 19 N. H. 139, 148 (attestation does not imply testimony to a grantor's sanity). Compare the cases cited ante, § 689 (attesting witness qualified to speak to sanity).

[5] 1838, People v. McHenry, 19 Wend. 482, 484 (where it appeared that the signature of the debtor was not in his handwriting, the proof of the subscribing witness' signature was held not to imply that the person signing for the debtor had a power of attorney).

§ 1512. [1] 1694, Dayrell v. Glascock, Skinner 413 (that a will-witness will not swear to execution, held, not fatal: "if proved to be his hand, and that he set it as a witness to the will, it is sufficient to satisfy the statute"); 1736, Hands v. James, 2 Comyns 531 (the clause did not recite the witnesses' signing in testator's presence; per Curiam: "In case the witnesses be dead, . . . the proof must be circumstantial, and here are circumstances: 1. Three witnesses have set their names, and it must be intended that they did it regularly; 2. One witness was an attorney of good character, and may be presumed to understand what ought to be done, rather than the contrary. . . . It being a matter of fact, was proper to be left scarcely an exception, in all the American jurisdictions in which the question has arisen.[2]

§ 1513. Same: (2) Must the Maker's Signature or Identity also be otherwise proved? It has often been contended that the signature of the maker also, as well as that of the attester, must be proved. This contention means in effect that another witness to the maker's signature must be called; for (as has just been noted) the attestation is the attester's testimony to the fact of execution, i.e. the placing of the signature by the purporting maker. If, then, it is necessary to call a second witness to the maker's signature, this must be on the supposition that the testimony of the attestation, taken alone, does not go far enough in its implied or expressed statements. This is indeed the ground upon which in part the above contention has been rested. It argues, first, that the attestation, while asserting execution by a person of a certain name, does not sufficiently identify that person with the party in to them [the jury]"); 1737, Brice v. Smith, Skinner 539, Willes 1 (apparently, similar); 1844, Burgoyne v. Showler, 1 Rob. Eccl. 5; 1859, Thomas' Goods, 1 Sw. & Tr. 255; 1860, Trott v. Skidmore, 2 Sw. & Tr. 12; 1890, Harris v. Knight, L. R. 15 P. D. 170 (by two judges to one; a profitable case for study; Lopes, L. J.: "The inference to be drawn in cases of this kind depends upon a number of circumstances peculiar to the cases in which they arise").

The following is apparently the only contrary expression: 1855, Roberts v. Phillips, 4 E. & B. 450, 457 (Lord Campbell, C. J.: "What effect then arises from the entire absence of a 'testimonium' clause? A 'testimonium' clause not being indispensable, we conceive that the absence of it would only make a difference in the extrinsic evidence which would be required to prove that the witnesses had seen the testator execute the will and that they signed it with the intention of attesting it at his request and in his presence").

[2] To the following cases, add a few of those noted in the preceding section, where the doctrine is apparently adopted to the present extent: Ala. 1900, Woodruff v. Hundley, 127 Ala. 640, 29 So. 98; Cal. 1898, Tyler's Estate, 121 Cal. 405, 53 Pac. 928 (all the statutory requisites presumed); Del. 1838, Pennel v. Weyant, 2 Harringt. 501, 506 (attestation implies all necessary formalities; but not ordinarily for a foreign will, where the requirements of execution may differ from those of the forum); 1847, McDermott v. McCormick, 4 id. 543 (signature as witness does not imply all the requisites for a will, but does for other documents); Ga. 1872, Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415, 441 (see quotation supra); D. C. 1903, Kelly v. Moore, 22 D. C. App. 9, 25 (imperfect clause); Ill. 1904, More v. More, 211 Ill. 268, 71 N. E. 988 ("an inference arises, from the mere fact of attestation, that the witnesses believed that the testator possessed testamentary capacity", and that the execution and attestation were duly performed; here one of the attesters was a lawyer); 1907, Mead v. Presbyterian Church, 229 Ill. 526, 82 N. E. 371 (More v. More followed); Mass. 1860, Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray 91, 97 (mere signature may suffice, if the tribunal is "reasonably satisfied of the fact of a proper attestation from other sources and the circumstances of the case"); 1865, Eliot v. Eliot, 10 All. 357 (preceding case approved); N. Y. 1843, Chaffee v. Baptist M. C., 10 Paige 85, 90, 91 ("the fact of such compliance may be . . . inferred from circumstances"); Or. 1903, Mendenhall's Will, 43 Or. 542, 72 P. 318, 73 Pac. 1033; Pa. 1865, McKee v. White, 50 Pa. 354, 359 ("The name of the deceased witness stands for his solemn declaration that it was executed as it appears; . . . in all such cases, the proof of the signature by the witness proves the instrument"; here held to imply the testator's signature, request, etc.); R. I. 1852, Fry's Will, 2 R. I. 88 (no attestation clause; all elements of execution implied); 1909, Newell v. White, 29 R. I. 343, 73 Atl. 798 (imperfect attestation clause; Blodgett, J., diss.); Va. 1839, Clarke v. Dunnavant, 10 Leigh 13, 22, 30 ("all the necessary requisites [may be implied] . . . although the memorandum of attestation is silent as to material ones"; Brooke, J., diss., except where the witnesses are unavailable; see the quotation in the preceding section); Vt. 1855, Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746, 750 (the signature, with no attestation-clause, is evidence "of all those facts which he was required to attest"; but see the statute quoted in the preceding section); Wis. 1888, O'Hagan's Will, 73 Wis. 78, 82, 40 N. W. 649 (the signature only is sufficient to show due execution).

But whether a genuine presumption is raised by the signature alone might be differently decided (post, § 2520).

the case. It argues, furthermore, from the point of view of policy, that a person might be bribed to make a false attestation to a forged maker's signature, and then to abscond, leaving it feasible to prove the document against a deceased person by establishing the attester's genuine signature. These arguments are presented in the following passages:

1833, BAYLEY, B., in Whitelocke v. Musgrove, 1 Cr. & M. 520: "I have always felt this difficulty, that that proof alone [of the subscribing witness' handwriting] does not connect the defendant with the note. . . . What is the effect which, with the greatest degree of latitude can be given to the attestation of the subscribing witness? It is that the facts which he has attested are true. Suppose an attestation of an instrument which describes the person executing it as A. B. of C. in the county of York. Then the utmost effect you can give to the attestation is to consider it as establishing that A. B. of C. in the county of York executed the instrument. But you must go a step further and show that the defendant is A. B. of C. in the county of York, or in some manner establish that he is the person by whom the note appears to be executed. Now what does the subscribing witness in this particular case attest? Why, that this instrument was duly executed by a person of the name of Francis Musgrove. There may be many persons of that name, and if you do not show that the defendant is the Francis Musgrove who executed the instrument, you fail in making out an essential part of what you are bound to prove. It is not sufficient for the subscribing witness merely to prove that he saw the instrument executed. . . . Why? Because it is an essential part of the issue, which you are bound to prove, that the instrument was executed by the defendant in the suit. It seems to me, therefore, on principle, that you must give some evidence of the identity of the defendant with the party who has signed the instrument."

1828, PORTER, J., in Dismukes v. Musgrove, 7 Mart. N. S. 58, 63: "The only case that can be readily imagined where this rule would produce hardships is that of a stranger, whose handwriting was little known, coming into the country and exacting obligations before witnesses who after his departure died. No general rule can be laid down that will not do injury in some particular cases. But that just spoken of, in our judgment, is nothing in comparison with the danger that might result from sanctioning the other doctrine. The facility of proving any instrument under it is obvious. Whether forged or not, nothing more is necessary than to procure a non-resident of the State to put his name to it as a witness; and thus, a paper false in itself might be established by proving nothing but the truth in a court of justice." [1]

These arguments may be answered as follows. As to the first, it is at least an objection which may equally be made when the attester is called to the stand; for he may have known A. B. to execute the document, but he may not know him to be identical with A. B., a deceased party to the cause. Furthermore, sameness of name is always some evidence, and perhaps even raises a presumption, of identity of person;[2] so that his attestation-statement that A. B. executed the document is at least sufficient evidence of the identity of that and this A. B. As to the second argument, it is also equally, though not so strongly, available against an attesting witness on the stand; for it is equally possible, though perhaps more difficult, to bribe an attester to give false testimony on the stand to a forged maker's signature. Furthermore, the § 1513. [1] Further expositions of the same notion will also be found here and there in the quotations in § 1320, ante; a good opinion is that of Gantt, J., in Plunket v. Bowman, 2 McCord 139, 140 (1822).

[2] Post, § 2529.

supposed requirement merely asks that another witness be brought to testify to the maker's signature; yet a proponent who has bribed an attesting-witness and forged a maker's signature will presumably not lack the scruple and the means to supply a false witness to meet this additional requirement. Finally, to fail to impose this requirement, merely relieves the proponent of an extra burden; it does not sanction his supposed forgery, and does not prevent the opponent, any more than before, from exposing the forgery, if it is one.

These answers to the above arguments on behalf of such a requirement are in part represented in the following passages:

1808, MARSHALL, C. J., in Murdock v. Hunter, 1 Brockenb. 135, 140: "If the plaintiff, by proving the death and handwriting of the subscribing witness, was only let in to prove the execution of the bond by other testimony, it would seem to be sufficient to prove the death of the subscribing witness and to identify his person by any other proof than that of his handwriting, — as, for instance, that he was the only person of that name in a situation to render it probable that he could have attested the bond. [But] since it is not only necessary to prove the death, but to prove the handwriting of the subscribing witness, it would seem that something further than the mere permission to establish the execution of the bond by other testimony was gained by this proof. This can only be the inference, which is drawn by the law, that if the person who attested the bond was present he could and would prove its execution. . . . It would seem, then, . . . that a naked case, standing singly on this proof, would be in favor of the plaintiff. But this evidence, which is merely circumstantial, may be met by other circumstantial evidence. Whatever deducts from it may and ought to be weighed against it. It is therefore always advisable to support it by other testimony, if such testimony be in the power of the plaintiff. . . . The Court is inclined to the opinion that, in a case unsupported and unopposed by any other circumstance whatever, this proof would be deemed sufficient to establish the execution of the bond."

1838, NELSON, C. J., in Kimball v. Davis, 19 Wend. 442: "It seems to me, if proof of the signature of the witness amounts to anything, it must be carried in the first instance as far as an acknowledgment goes; otherwise it affords no evidence of the execution at all, because so much is essential to make out what the face of the deed purports, or any proof of the execution by the grantor."

These arguments, it would seem, should conclude us against imposing such a requirement as a general rule. The preferable rule is to allow the attester's signature to suffice, in the absence of special circumstances which might justify the trial Court, in its discretion, in exacting something more. At the same time, where the alleged maker is deceased (as in the case of wills), and therefore the counter-proof may likely be less available, it would be proper enough to insist on the present requirement.

So far as concerns the state of the law in the various jurisdictions, the requirement has been by some Courts repudiated, by others sustained; and the jurisdictions are fairly divided on the question; except that statutes almost always sanction the requirement for wills.[3] Of those jurisdictions

[3] The rulings in the various jurisdictions are as follows; but the statutes, which in the case of wills often expressly prescribe a rule, have been collected in one place, to avoid repetition, ante, § 1320 (where they are involved in the rule of Preferred Attesting Witnesses);

sustaining the contention, some require, having respect to the first argument above noted, that other evidence of the maker's identity be offered; some the cases on the Presumption from Identity of Name (post, § 2529) may also be profitably consulted:

ENGLAND: ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius 171 ("Proof that one who called himself B. executed is not sufficient if the witness did not know it to be the defendant"; said of a witness on the stand); 1779, Coghlan v. Williamson, 1 Dougl. 93 (Mansfield, L. C. J., allowed proof of both signatures, but it does not appear that he required it); 1798, Buller, J., in Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360 ("The handwriting of the obligor need not be proved; that of the attesting witness, when proved, is evidence of everything on the face of the paper; which imports to be sealed by the party"); 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (bond executed abroad; Lord Kenyon, C. J., ruled that the handwriting of the obligor as well as of one witness must be proved); 1817, Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Stark. 239, Holroyd, J. (an attesting witness saw execution by a person introduced as H.; held, further evidence necessary); 1817, Bayley, J., in Nelson v. Whittall, 1 B. & Ald. 19, 21 ("If the attesting witness himself gave evidence, he would prove, not merely that the instrument was executed, but the identity of the person so executing it"; and he required the same when the attester's signature was used); 1827, Page v. Mann, Moo. & M. 79 (the attesting witness' signature having been proved, evidence that the defendants were the parties whose signature he had attested was held unnecessary; Tenterden, L. C. J., would not follow Bayley, J., in Nelson v. Whittall: "The practice has been otherwise; . . . if I am wrong, I may be corrected"); 1828, Kay v. Brookman, 3 C. & P. 555, 556 (a power of attorney; Best, C. J.: "It has been the uniform practice only to prove the handwriting of the attesting witness, and I am of opinion that it is the most convenient course"); 1833, Whitelocke v. Musgrove, 1 Cr. & M. 520 (Exchequer; see quotation supra; other evidence of maker's identity required; Bolland, B.: "It is a question as to which eminent judges have certainly entertained different opinions. It seems clear from the case of Wallis v. Delancey that Lord Kenyon was of opinion that such evidence was necessary; and it is clear that Lord Ellenborough had not made up his mind upon the subject, because in Nelson v. Whittall he did not take upon himself to say what would be the case if no evidence of identity had been given. The opinion of Lord Tenterden was certainly invariably the other way, and Lord Chief Justice Best acted on the same view of the subject as Lord Tenterden"); 1841, Jones v. Jones, 9 M. & W. 75 (King's Bench; the attesting witness testified to the maker's signature "Hugh Jones", but could not identify him with defendant, and it appeared that the name was there a common one; further evidence of identity held as necessary; Parke, B.: "This point must be considered as settled by the case of Whitelocke v. Musgrove"); 1841, Greenshields v. Crawford, M. & W. 314 (bill drawn on "Charles Banner Crawford" and accepted "C. B. Crawford"; held sufficient; Alderson, B.: "It is quite a different question whether . . . [proof of an attesting witness' signature suffices]; I agree that in such a case there should be some additional evidence").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1808, Murdock v. Hunter, 1 Brockenb. 135, 139 (signature of the witness, usually enough; see quotation supra); 1823, Spring v. Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. 268, 283 (where both are dead, other evidence of the signature of the party is required); 1830, Walton v. Coulson, 1 McLean 120, 124 (not required, "in ordinary cases"); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313 (on objection that "as the testimony to establish its execution was the proof of the handwriting of subscribing witnesses, it was necessary to prove the identity of the grantor", the identity was then proved by other evidence); Alabama: 1887, Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 56, 4 So. 225 (other evidence of testator's signature, not required for wills); 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 Ala. 455, 22 So. 149 (witness' signature sufficient; here, a deed); Delaware: 1837, Layton v. Hastings, 2 Harringt. 147 (witness ignorant of the maker's identity, but proving his own signature; proof also of the maker's handwriting, sufficient); Georgia: 1849, Watt v. Kilburn, 7 Ga. 356, 358 (witness' signature suffices); 1850, Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201, 206 (same); 1861, Howard v. Snelling, 32 Ga. 195, 202 (other evidence of maker's signature, not required; but here the maker signed by mark); 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 584, 586, 24 S. E. 23 (proof of the maker's signature not necessary; but the policy of this doubted by Atkinson, J.; the maker's signature held necessary where it was to be used merely as a standard for comparison of hands); 1914, Strickland v. Babcock Lumber Co., 142 Ga. 120, 82 S. E. 531 (under Code 1895, § 5245, Code 1910, § 5834, quoted ante, § 1320, n. 2, testimony to the signing or the handwriting of the maker is indispensable, unless it be shown to be unattainable; here, on evidence only of the signature of one witness, a verdict was directed against the document); Illinois: 1851, Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175 ("evidence of the handwriting of both party and witness would be requisite" for documents required by law to be attested); 1895, Hobart v. Hobart, 154 Ill. 610, 615, 39 N. E. 581 (whether the testator's signature also must always be proved, undecided); require, having in view the second argument, that other evidence of the maker's signature be offered; some, again, require that evidence be offered of 1909, Elston v. Montgomery, 242 Ill. 348, 90 N. E. 3 (attesting witnesses deceased, but signatures genuine, conflicting evidence as to the testatrix' handwriting, an attestation clause reciting due execution; the judge's direction of a verdict for the proponent was held proper, on the ground that the testatrix' oral acknowledgment of a will in the witnesses' presence is legally sufficient, that therefore proof of her signature's genuineness is not essential, and that the absence of evidence negativing the acknowledgment required a directed verdict; the ruling on the last point is novel, but seems sound); 1915, O'Brien v. Rhembe's Estate, 269 Ill. 592, 109 N. E. 1044; 1919, Rupp v. Jones, 289 Ill. 596, 124 N. E. 560 (affirming O'Brien v. Rhembe's Estate); Indiana: 1828, Ungles v. Graves, 2 Blackf. 191 (not decided); Iowa: 1898, Scott v. Hawk, 105 Ia. 467, 75 N. W. 368 (not decided; will); Louisiana: 1828, Dismukes v. Musgrove, 7 Mart. N. S. 58, 60 (other evidence of maker's signature required); 1836, Tagiasco v. Molinari, 9 La. 512, 521 (same; except where the maker signs by mark); 1837, Madison v. Zabriskie, 11 La. 247, 251 (same); 1847, Harris v. Patten, 2 La. An. 217 (approving the preceding cases); 1849, Rachal v. Rachal, 4 La. An. 500 (not required; preceding cases not noticed); 1850, Chaffe v. Cupp, 5 La. An. 684 (required; earlier cases followed with hesitation; rule not applied where the obligor signs by mark); 1851, Smith v. Gibbon, 6 La. An. 684 (not clear); 1854, Wattles v. Conner, 9 La. An. 227 (required; earlier cases followed); 1857, McGowan v. McLaughlin, 12 La. An. 242 (same); Maryland: 1800, Collins v. Elliott, 1 H. & J. 1 (signatures "of the testator and of all the witnesses", required for a will); 1864, Keefer v. Zimmerman, 22 Md. 274 (St. 1825, c. 20, making it lawful not to call the attesting witness, does not make proof of the grantor's signature preferable, and allows proof of the witness' signature as before); Missouri: 1874, Gallagher v. Delargy, 57 Mo. 29, 36 (witness' handwriting, no dispute as to identity, and direct testimony of execution; sufficient); New Hampshire: 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 616 (for a mortgage, where witnesses are required by law, the grantor's and both witnesses' signatures must be proved); New Jersey: 1832, Kingwood v. Bethlehem, 13 N. J. L. 221, 226 (indenture of apprenticeship; other evidence of the maker's signature required); 1909, Worman v. Seybert, 78 N. J. L. 176, 73 Atl. 529 (bill of sale; attesting witnesses' signatures alone suffice; Kingwood v. Bethlehem not noticed; useful opinion); New York: 1800, Mott v. Doughty, 1 John. Cas. 230 (bond; the obligor's handwriting need not be proved; here the witness was dead); 1809, Sluby v. Champlin, 4 Johns. 461, 467 (same; here the witness was in foreign parts); 1822, Jackson v. Legrange, 19 Johns. 386, 389 (will; other evidence of testator's signature required); 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. 221, 225 (same); 1828, Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 406, 412 (same); 1833, M'Pherson v. Rathbone, 11 Wend. 96, 99 (requirement repudiated for a deed); 1834, Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. 178, 197, per Tracy, Sen. (preceding case approved); 1838, Kimball v. Davis, 19 Wend. 437, 442 (deed; requirement as to maker's identity repudiated; see quotation supra); 1840, s. c. appealed, s. v. Brown v. Kimball, 25 Wend. 259, 270 273 (Verplanck, Sen., in cases where there was "anything to raise a counter-presumption of fraud or even of doubt", required additional evidence of either the signature or of the identity of the grantor; but whether he meant by "identity", the bearing of the signed name by the grantor, or the grantor's identity with another person, was not stated; Walworth, C., and Edwards, Sen., thought proof of the witness' signature was sufficient; by 11 to 9 the former opinion prevailed); 1844, Northrop v. Wright, 7 Hill 476, 493 (preceding case questioned); North Carolina: 1792, Nelius v. Brickell, 1 Hayw. 19 (bond; other evidence of the maker's signature required); 1793, Jones v. Brinkley, 1 Hayw. 20, semble (bond; contra); 1798, Irving v. Irving, 2 Hayw. 27 (bond; like the first case); 1818, Stump v. Hughes, 5 Hayw. 93, semble (witness' handwriting, and either grantor's handwriting or an admission of signature, or the handwriting of both witnesses, required); North Dakota: St. 1907, c. 139, p. 198 ("nor shall it be permissible to prove such instrument or contract in any case by proof of the handwriting of said subscribing witness or witnesses", but proof must be made as if there were no subscribing witnesses; what this legislator doubtless meant — and, by the way, what queer whim induced him to meddle in this particular triviality of the law of Evidence? — would be expressed by inserting "alone" at the end of the quoted clause); Ohio: 1824, Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57) ("under proper circumstances . . . either may be sufficient"); 1858, Richards v. Skiff, 8 Oh. St. 586 (other evidence not required); Pennsylvania: 1810, Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. 192, 196 (bill; other evidence of the maker's signature, suggested as desirable but not as settled law); 1813, Hamilton v. Marsden, 6 Binn. 45, 47, 50 (requirement repudiated; here for a lease); 1815, Powers v. M'Ferran, 1 S. & R. 44, 46 (requirement repudiated; here for a deed); 1847, Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. St. 409, 412 ("[The witness' signature], when it is all that can be had, is an equivalent of the witness' oath; and, being 'prima facie' evidence of execution, it is not either the one or the other; and there are more sub-varieties of rule. In England, there was for a long time a varying practice, until finally a requirement apparently became fixed that other evidence of the maker's identity should be offered. In this country, the requirement, when any has been made, has usually been of other evidence of the maker's signature; though a few Courts have properly left the matter to depend on the circumstances of each case.

Whether the attester's signature must be proved, or the maker's alone suffices, is a different question, involving the rule of Preference for Attesting Witnesses, and has been examined under that head (ante, § 1320).

§ 1514. Attester may be Impeached or Supported like other Witnesses. Since the attestation is offered as testimonial evidence of the attester speaking at the time of attestation (ante, § 1505), his statement, though he himself is not on the stand, may be impeached or supported as any witness' statements may be:

1860, WHELPLEY, J., in Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 294: "Whenever the attestation is offered in evidence as proof of the execution of the instrument, any evidence which would have been competent against the witness, had he been sworn, will be competent to overthrow the force of his declaration offered in evidence instead of his testimony."

(1) Thus his moral character as a witness may be impeached in the way (ante, §§ 920, 977) appropriate for an ordinary witness.[1] He may also be indispensable that it be followed by evidence of the handwriting of the grantor, obligor, or drawer of a bill or note"; here applied to a will); 1857, Transue v. Brown, 31 Pa. St. 92, semble same; 1868, Hamsher v. Kline, 57 Pa. St. 397, 402 (signature of the witness, with evidence of identity of the maker's name, sufficient); South Carolina: 1798, Hopkins v. DeGraffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 192 (for a "bond or deed", and here for a will, other evidence of maker's signature required); 1803, Turner v. Moore, 1 Brev. 236 (release; witnesses absent; proof of their handwriting held sufficient, without proof of the obligor's); 1810, Shiver v. Johnson, 2 Brev. 397 (witness' hand alone, sufficient, even where the maker signs by mark); 1820, Bussey v. Whitaker, 2 N. & McC. 374 (note signed by mark; subscribing witness' signature, sufficient); 1822, Plunket v. Bowman, 2 McC. 139 (bond; signature of both witness and maker required for all documents); 1827, Sims v. DeGraffenreid, 4 McC. 253 (deed; both required); 1840, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 83 (other evidence of the grantor's signature not necessary; "but it is usual to prove his handwriting, and where it can be done, it is safest and best to prove it"); 1841, Trammell v. Roberts, 1 McM. 305, 307 (both required at common law; here for a note); 1858, Russell v. Tunno, 11 Rich. 303, 318 (other evidence of the maker's handwriting or "something else to connect him with the instrument", necessary in addition to the witness' signature; here applied to an assignment; Plunket v. Bowman followed); 1859, Jones v. Jones, 12 Rich. 116, 120 (preceding case approved); 1878, Lyons v. Holmes, 11 S. C. 429, 432 (handwriting of the two witnesses to a maker signing by mark, held sufficient, without other evidence of the mark, there being corroborating evidence besides; Russell v. Tunno not overruled, but regarded as not to be extended; here there was such additional evidence as Russell v. Tunno required); 1892, Martin v. Bowie, 37 S. C. 102, 115, 15 S. E. 736 (deed; witness' proof of his own and the maker's signature, not enough; a singular novelty); Tennessee: 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 103 ("the signature of the testator, though not absolutely essential, ought to be superadded"); 1855, Harrel v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 612, semble (other evidence of the maker's signature not necessary, unless required to prove identity); Texas: 1878, Gainer v. Cotton, 49 Tex. 101, 118 (not clear).

§ 1514. [1] 1836, Doe v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 330, Coleridge, J. (here for "the attorney who prepared the will"; but the notion in the Court's mind is evidently the general one); 1868, Chamberlain v. Torrance, 14 Grant Ch. U. C. 181, 184 (deed attempted to be proved by thirty years' age); Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 135 (former testimony of deceased subscribing witness, admissible in certain suits, may be impeached like that of a living witness); 1843, Lawless v. Guelbreth, 8 Mo. 139, impeached by evidence of bias or interest,[2] or of self-contradictions or inconsistencies,[3] or by other appropriate evidence.

(2) The party offering his attestation may in turn endeavor to rehabilitate him, by evidence of his good character,[4] or otherwise, according to the principles applicable to the corroboration and rehabilitation of witnesses (ante, §§ 1100–1144).

142; 1903, Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756 ("the petitioner may not have the benefit of the testimony of the two witnesses . . . without having such witnesses subject to be discredited"; here, by bad reputation for honesty and integrity); 1842, Losee v. Losee, 2 Hill N. Y. 609, 611; 1854, State v. Thomason, 1 Jones L. N. C. 274, semble; 1848, Harden v. Hays, 9 Pa. St. 158; 1820, Gardenhire v. Parks, 2 Yerg. Tenn. 23.

This is of course allowable where the witness is on the stand: 1832, Vandyke v. Thompson, 1 Harringt. 109 (a subscribing witness who merely testifies to execution may be impeached).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 68 (character of a third person alleged to have forged a will).

[2] 1868, Chamberlain v. Torrance, 14 Grant Ch. U. C. 181, 184 (bias).

[3] The authorities will be found ante, § 1033, because the question is complicated by the supposed necessity of inquiring of the witness before proving the inconsistent statement.

[4] 1831, Doe v. Walker, 4 Esp. 50, Kenyon, L. C. J. (deceased witnesses to a will; by the testimony of the survivor of three, the conduct of all appeared fraudulent; the good character of the deceased two was admitted); 1829, Provis v. Reed, 5 Bing. 435, 438 (deceased attorney who had prepared the will and was attesting witness; good character received in support, after imputations cast upon it; Best, C. J.: "The two decisions which have been cited, one of them from no less an authority than Lord Kenyon, are clearly in point; I have repeatedly tendered such evidence myself in similar cases when at the bar; I have had it tendered on the other side and have never objected; and the common practice of Westminster Hall has always been to receive it"; Park, J., reaffirmed this, and Burrough, J., referred to Doe v. Wood, unreported); 1784, Com. v. Fairfield, Mass., Dane's Abr. c. 84, art. 2, § 3, semble; 1838, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. N. Y. 569, 580 (good character received, after imputations of fraud); 1823, Crouse v. Miller, 10 S. & R. Pa. 158 (same); 1839, Braddee v. Brownfield, 9 Watts Pa. 124 (admissible; but whether merely because he is deceased, or not until his character is impeached, or in what way it must be impeached, does not appear).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC V: REGULAR ENTRIES

CHAPTER LI.

§ 1517. In general. To this Exception there are two branches. Historically, they are separate, yet traceable to a common origin. Theoretically, they are by no means identical, yet closely related in principle.

The main branch has a legitimate and living place among the Hearsay Exceptions. The other branch (for parties' account-books) has no longer on the whole any justification for a separate existence, and remains only as a fixed tradition, surviving in a form more or less modified by statute, after the reasons for its establishment have passed away. The former involves a general exception in favor of regular entries made in the course of business (but in England only in the course of a specific duty), the entrant being no longer available as a witness on the stand. The latter sanctions the admission of a narrower class of regular entries, i.e. made by a party to the suit, whether available as a witness or not.

The history of the two branches of the Exception must be considered before examining the tenor and limitations of each.

§ 1518. History of the Two Branches of the Exception.[1] (1) In England, (a) first, for parties' books, there appears at least as early as the 1600s, a custom to receive the shop-books of "divers men of trades and handicraftsmen" in evidence of "the particulars and certainty of the wares delivered"; and this whether the books were kept by the party himself or by a clerk, and whether the entrant were living or dead. But there was more or less abuse of this evidence, in "leaving the same books uncrossed and any way discharged" and still suing for the claim. Moreover, the whole proceeding was also discredited as involving the making of evidence for one's self, for "the rule is that a man cannot make evidence for himself." In 1609, then, a statute,[2] after reciting these considerations, forbade this use of parties' shop-books "in any action for any money due for wares hereafter to be delivered or for work hereafter to be done", except within one year after the delivery of the wares or the doing of the work, or where a bill of debt existed, or "between merchant and merchant, merchant and tradesman, or between tradesman and tradesman", for matters within the trade.[3] The higher Courts, § 1518. [1] The history of the exception was first traced and expounded by Professor Thayer in his Cases on Evidence, 1st. ed., 471, 506, 516.

[2] 1609, St. 7 Jac. I, c. 12, continued by St. 3 Car. I, c. 4, § 22; St. 16 Car. I, c. 4; Rev. St. I, 691.

It would seem, however, that this English statute was merely falling in with a movement which had for a generation been proceeding, all along the line, in other headquarters of the mercantile world. The precise features of the statute, namely, exclusion of mercantile books from evidence above a certain sum and beyond a certain time, are found in numerous Italian and French ordinances of the same epoch, several of which dated between 1575 and 1609 (Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., 1900, vol. VI, pt. 1, pp. 421, 423; Bonnier, Traité des preuves, ed. Larnaude, 5th ed., 1888, § 779; Lessona, Le Prove, 1892-1905, Book IV, Sect. I, part I, Ch. I, § I, Ch. II, § I, part II, Ch. I, § I, A); e.g. in 1575, "ad fraudem occasiones tollendas, aromatariorum libris ultra tres annos fides in judiciis ne habeatur", etc.; in 1582, "s'abbi da dare intera fede in giudizio insino alla somma di 10 scudi."

[3] That this statute was regarded as limiting a usage before unlimited, may be inferred from the following passage: Isaac Disraeli, Curiosities of Literature, vol. III, p. 362, Boston ed. of 1858 (in "The Philosophy of Proverbs"):

"A member of the House of Commons, in the reign of Elizabeth, made a speech entirely composed of the most homely proverbs. The subject was a bill against double-payments of book-debts. Knavish tradesmen were then in the habit of swelling out their book-debts with those who took credit, particularly to their applying the principle that a man cannot make evidence for himself, ultimately made this exclusion complete, by refusing to recognize these books at all, after the expiration of the year.[4] In the lower courts, it is true (the Small Causes Court of London and provincial Courts of Request, succeeded by the County Courts), where the jurisdiction was limited to small claims, the use of these books continued to be a common practice, in many if not in all,[5] — where indeed the general rules of Evidence were perhaps, in the absence of counsel, more or less relaxed. But, apart from this local usage, the books of a party ceased after the 1600s to form the subject of a hearsay exception at common law in England. They came in again only under statutory rules of the late 1800s.[6]

(b) Next, however, for third persons' books, it appears that before the end of the same century of the above statute (1600) the entries of a deceased clerk (even a clerk of a party) began to be admitted, on a principle distinctly that of the preceding Hearsay exceptions (ante, §§ 1421, 1422), — necessity and trustworthiness. At that time there was hardly a conscious and definite recognition of the scope of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364), but the idea was the fundamental idea of its exceptions. The admission of these books was treated as anomalous, and it was directly understood that their use, though affording some concession to parties, was an essentially different thing from the use of books kept by a living party himself. The cases begin with the 1700s;[7] Price v. Lord Torrington is the one most frequently taken as the landmark of the rule. The attitude of the Courts at this time may be gathered from the following language of Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in 1750, in Lefebure v. Worden:

"It must be admitted that by the rules of evidence no entry in a man's own books by himself can be evidence for himself to prove his demand. So far [nevertheless] the Courts of justice have gone (and that was a good way, and perhaps broke in upon the original strict rules of evidence), that where there was such evidence by a servant known in transacting the business, as in a goldsmith's shop by a cashier or bookkeeper, such entry, supported on the oath of that servant that he used to make entries from time to time and that younger customers. One of the members who began to speak 'for very fear shook', and stood silent. The nervous orator was followed by a blunt and true representative of the framed governor of Barataria, delivering himself thus — 'It is now my chance to speak something, and that without humming or hawing. I think this law is a good law. Even reckoning makes long friends. As far goes the penny as the penny's master. "Vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt." Pay the reckoning over-night, and you shall not be troubled in the morning. If ready money be "mensura publica", let every one cut his coat according to his cloth. When his old suit is in the wane, let him stay till that his money bring a new suit in the increase.' (Townshend's 'Historical Collections', p. 283.)"

The practice of receiving the books appears considerably earlier in England, in the ecclesiastical Courts at least: 1552, Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum, tit. 'De fide', c. 5.

[4] Crouch v. Drury, 1 Keble 27 (1661); Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (1694); Glynn v. Bank of England, 2 Ves. 38 (1750); Lefebure v. Worden, 2 Ves. 54 (1750); Digby v. Stedman, 1 Esp. 328 (1795); Sikes v. Marshall, 2 Esp. 705 (1798).

[5] Thayer, ubi supra, 'ex relatione' an English judge (Thomas Hughes).

[6] See the quotations in the next section. Meantime, it is true, there was some recognition in chancery practice: 1828, L. C. Hart, in Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. Ire. 186, 196 (used by the Chancellor "to inform his mind, although perhaps not absolutely to govern his decision").

[7] Pitman v. Maddox, 1 Ld. Raym. 722 (1698–99); Price v. Lord Torrington, 2 Ld. Raym. 873 (1703); Sir Biby Lake's Case, Theory of Evidence, 93 (1761); Glynn v. Bank of England, supra; Lefebure v. Worden, supra.

he made them truly, has been read. Further, where that servant, agent, or bookkeeper has been dead, if there is proof that he was the servant or agent usually employed in such business, was intrusted to make such entries by his master, [and] that it was the course of trade, — on proof that he was dead and that it was his handwriting, such entry has been read (which was Sir Bibly Lake's Case). And that was going a great way; for there it might be objected that such entry was the same as if made by the master himself; yet by reason of the difficulty of making proof in cases of this kind, the Court has gone so far."

The admission thus far made covered only the books of the clerk of a party. But already there were instances foreshadowing a wider principle. In several rulings, books regularly kept by third persons then deceased had been admitted, his death and the regularity of the book being more or less explicitly recognized as the grounds of admission.[8] Finally, in 1832, in Doe v. Turford,[9] following one or two minor cases, the doctrine was placed on a firm footing, and the general scope of the exception was recognized. It was understood to cover all entries made "by a person, since deceased, in the ordinary course of his business", whether a person wholly unconnected with the parties, or the clerk of a party, or the party himself; and it is this general exception that to-day is universally recognized.

(2) The history of the doctrine was widely different in the United States.

(a) For parties' books, the English statute of 1609, or a similar one, for parties' shop-books, was in force, to a considerable extent, in the Colonies. In the Plymouth Laws, as well as in the later laws of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and other New England States, the use of parties' account-books was limited, but still authorized by statutes; a special action of "book-debt" was in some places authorized.[10] In New York and New Jersey the use seems clearly traceable to Dutch practice,[11] which however did not vary in essentials from the English. In most of the jurisdictions (though not in all) the party was allowed and required to verify the accounts by a "suppletory" oath; but in all jurisdictions, though there were practically no limitations of time (as there were in England) to the use of the books, there were many restrictions as to the kind of business, the kind of transaction, and the like, which rested on the same distrust of a party's own evidence and seriously limited the use of the books. But a cardinal feature of the attitude of the Courts, peculiar to the United States, was that the evidence was treated on the same grounds already set forth (ante, §§ 1421, 1422) as underlying the Hearsay

[8] Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (1694); Woodnoth v. Lord Cobham, Bunbury 180 (1724); Sutton v. Gregory, Peake's Add. Cas. 150 (1797).

[9] 3 B. & Ad. 890.

[10] These statutes for the New England Colonies, will be found quoted or cited in Thayer, ubi supra, 506, 515. To those citations add, for North Carolina, St. 1756, and for South Carolina, St. 1721 (post, § 1519). These early statutes are not here set out, because nothing turns upon their wording; for either (as in New England) the statutes have fallen into desuetude and the rulings of the Courts since the Revolution have become the source of the law, or (as in North Carolina) a modern statute has superseded the early one.

[11] This is pointed out by Mr. Justice Charles P. Daly, the learned historian of New York, in his History of the Court of Common Pleas, in 1 E. D. Smith xxx; also in 4 id. 397. Possibly (on the lines suggested by Mr. Douglas Campbell, in his Puritan in England, Holland, and America) the English usage of Elizabeth's time was itself learned from the Dutch merchants.

exceptions generally, — the principles of necessity and of a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness. The necessity was the fact that so many small traders, in the then condition of the country, keeping no clerk, and being as parties incompetent to take the stand, were totally bereft of any means of proof except their own extrajudicial statements in these books (post, § 1537). The guarantee of trustworthiness was that which we now recognize in the regularity of the entries (post, § 1522).

What is to be noticed, then, is that the books were received practically on the footing of a special Hearsay exception. By keeping in mind that the party was unavailable as a witness for himself, and that there was thus a necessity for using his past, extrajudicial, i.e. hearsay statements, — that in short the judicial attitude was the same to this as to ordinary Hearsay exceptions, it is easy to follow out the rationalized form which this branch of the exception took, — a form usually, but incorrectly, regarded as merely arbitrary.

(b) For third persons in general, at that time (i.e. up to the earliest part of the 1800s) no other exception of the sort appears to have been recognized in the United States, — that is, there was no using of regular entries except this limited use of a party's shop-books.[12] But a knowledge of the doctrine of Price v. Lord Torrington (1703) seems to have been then brought about by the English decisions of Pritt v. Fairclough[13] and Hagedorn v. Reid,[14] rendered in 1812 and 1813; and shortly after this time two well-considered rulings, following these authorities, established on a firm footing the large and general principle of admitting regular entries by deceased persons, — the cases of Welsh v. Barrett,[15] in Massachusetts, in 1819, and Nicholls v. Webb,[16] in the Federal Supreme Court, in 1823. In these two decisions the Exception found a recognition entirely independent of the use of parties' books; and it was only in the course of time, especially through Professor Greenleaf's treatment in his work on Evidence, that the two branches of the exception became associated and their analogy recognized. When this relation came to be appreciated, certain difficulties had to be solved; for example, one of the questions presented to American Courts was whether the books of a deceased or an absent party should be treated according to the parties'-books doctrine or from the point of view of the broad and inclusive exception admitting regular entries of deceased persons generally. Another and analogous question was the place to be assigned to books kept by a deceased clerk of a party. These questions concerning the delimitation of the two divisions still trouble the waters of precedent.

[12] The following belongs under the older tradition: 1792, Lewis v. Norton, 1 Wash. Va. 76 (entries in the appellee's "store-books, which were proved to be in the handwriting of one of the appellee's bookkeepers, then dead", admitted).

[13] 3 Camp. 305.

[14] 3 Camp. 377.

[15] 15 Mass. 380.

[16] 8 Wheaton 326. There were one or two earlier cases, such as Clarke v. Magruder, 2 H. & J. 77 (Md., 1807), and Sterrett v. Bull, 1 Binn. 237 (Pa., 1808); but the former two were those chiefly esteemed by other Courts in establishing the doctrine.

By these stages the two parts of the Exception reached their present development in England and in the United States. In will be seen that in England there now exists (apart from statute) only the broad principle admitting regular entries of any sort by deceased persons generally; while in the United States there have grown up two branches, — one, the same general principle, the other, an analogous principle covering parties' account-books only.

§ 1519. Statutory Regulation. The main branch of the Exception — regular entries by persons deceased or the like — has seldom been intentionally dealt with in statutes. But the branch applicable to parties' books has been in many jurisdictions the subject of legislation.[1]

§ 1519. [1] The statutes for books of a corporation are noted ante, § 1074.

ENGLAND: 1883, Rules of Court, Ord. XXX, enacted 1894, Rule 7 ("On the hearing of the summons, the Court or judge may order that evidence of any particular fact, to be specified in the order, shall be given . . . by production of documents or entries in books, or by copies of documents or entries or otherwise as the Court or judge may direct"); Ord. XXXIII, Rule 3 ("The Court or judge", in directing an account, "may direct that in taking the account, the books of account in which the accounts in question have been kept shall be taken as 'prima facie' evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained"); 1879, St. 42 Vict. c. 11, Bankers' Books Evidence Act, § 3 (entries in a "banker's book" are to be 'prima facie' evidence of "the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded"); § 4 (provided the book "was at the time of making the entry one of the ordinary books of the bank, and that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that the book is in the custody of the bank").

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Cr. C. § 984 (in proving the age of a young person, on certain charges, "any entry or record by an incorporated society or its officers having had the control or care" of the person about the time of his being brought to Canada, is admissible, if made before the offence committed); Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, No. 294 (directing an account; like Eng. Ord. 33, Rule 3); British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 53, § 89 (in actions in a county court for a demand not for tort and not exceeding $250, the judge "on being satisfied of their general correctness" may receive in evidence "the books of the plaintiff", or for a payment or set-off or counter-claim, those of the defendant); Rules of Court 1912, No. 382 (like Eng. Ord. 33, R. 3); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 44, § 138 (in any action in county courts "for a debt or demand, not being for tort, the judge, on being satisfied of their general correctness, may receive in evidence the books of the plaintiff", or, for a set-off or counter-claim or payment, the books of the defendant); New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 112, § 177 (on a reference, "the books or writings of either party, or of any person or party represented by him or under whom he claims, may also be used in evidence for or against the party producing them"); c. 127, § 38 (on an issue as to the estate of a deceased person, "entries in the books of accounts of such deceased persons shall on proof of their being in the handwriting of the deceased or of a clerk who is deceased" be admissible and be 'prima facie' proof, if the Court is satisfied "that they were made in the ordinary course of business"); 1906, Anderson v. Anderson, 37 N. Br. 432 (certain entries in the account-books of a deceased grantor, admitted, under St. 1895, c. 16, Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 38); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 30, R. 3 (parties' books of account, admissible in certain cases); c. 92, §§ 2–6 (entries in bankers' books made admissible, on certain conditions); 1900, Mare v. Winter, 8 Newf. (Morris & Browning) 388 (action by a bank-trustee for balance due from a customer; the bank's books of 1882–1892, verified by the former bookkeeper, admitted); Nova Scotia: Rules of Court, 1900, Ord. 32, R. 3 (in directing an account, the judge may direct that "the books of account in which the accounts in question have been kept shall be taken as 'prima facie' evidence", with liberty to object); 1905, Carstens v. Muggah, 37 N. Sc. 361 (supplies of meat; plaintiff's books of account not admitted; no authority cited); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 63, § 119 (division courts: in money actions not exceeding $25: "the judge on being satisfied of their general correctness, may receive the plaintiff's, defendant's, or garnishee's books as evidence"); Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, § 52 ("Proof of the handwriting of any clerk, shopman, or servant, or other person, of any entry in any original book of entry, and made in the ordinary course of business, stating the delivery of goods, the payment of money, or the performance of labor", shall be evidence thereof, "in the absence from this Province of such clerk", etc., as if he were dead); Yukon: Consol. Ord.

In England this legislation has merely restored, in broad and indefinite language, something of the usage which for two centuries had ceased to be a part of the common law. In the New England States, the original colonial statutes fell into desuetude, and the practice was perpetuated by judicial rulings. But in some of the Southern States new statutes from time to time re-stated the terms of the rule; and in the legislation of 1914, c. 48, Rule 245 (like N. Sc. Ord. 32, R. 3).

United States: Alabama: Code 1907, § 3975 ("The original entries in the books of a physician are evidence for him in all actions brought for the recovery of his medical services, that the services were rendered, unless the defendant in open court deny on oath the truth of such entries, but the physician is required to prove the value of such services"; a denial by the opponent's representative may be on belief only); § 3976 ("Books of account kept by a deceased executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, or entries or memoranda made by him in the course of business or duty, are admissible evidence; and if such book or memoranda be lost, a copy thereof, supported by the oath of the person making it, is admissible evidence"); § 4003 ("The books of account of any merchant, shopkeeper, physician, blacksmith, or other person doing a regular business and keeping daily entries thereof, may be admitted in evidence as proof of such accounts upon the following conditions: (1) That he kept no clerk, or else the clerk is dead or otherwise inaccessible, or for any other reason the clerk is disqualified from testifying. (2) Upon proof (the party's oath being sufficient) that the book tendered is his book of original entries. (3) Upon inspection by the court, to see if the books are free from any suspicion of fraud");
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. §§ 1756–1758 (books of account; like Minn. Gen. St. 1913, §§ 8437–8439);
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4134 ("The regular and fairly kept books of original entries of a deceased merchant or regular trader, or any person keeping running accounts for goods, wares, merchandise, or other property sold or labor done, accompanied by the affidavit of the executor or administrator of such deceased person, or some creditable person for him, setting forth that they are the books or accounts of his testator or intestate, shall be evidence to charge the defendant for the sum therein specified, subject to be repelled by other competent testimony"); § 4135 ("To entitle the party to introduce such evidence, he must first establish, to the satisfaction of the Court, that the testator or his intestate had the reputation of keeping correct books"); § 4136 (statute not to apply to "hawkers or peddlers");
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1946 ("The entries and other writings of a decedent, made at or near the time of the transaction and in a position to know the facts stated therein, may be read as 'prima facie' evidence of the facts stated therein, . . . 2, when it [the entry] was made in a professional capacity, and in the ordinary course of professional conduct; 3, when it was made in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law"); § 1947 ("When an entry is repeated in the regular course of business, one being copied from another at or near the time of the transaction, all the entries are equally regarded as originals");
Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 6557 (when in any civil action "the claim or defense is founded on a book account, any party or interested person, association or company may testify to his or their account-book and the items therein contained; that the same is a book of original entries, and that the entries therein were made by himself or his employe and are true and just, or that the same were made by a deceased person, or by a disinterested person, a non-resident of the State at the time of a trial, and were made by such employe, deceased or non-resident person in the usual course of trade, and of his duty or employment to the party so testifying");
Connecticut: Gen. St. 1902, § 981 ("In all actions for a book debt, the entries of the parties in their respective books shall be admissible in evidence"; and the defendant may have an order for oyer before pleading); 1904, Handy v. Smith, 77 Conn. 165, 58 Atl. 694 (statute applied, without noting the specific point involved); the statute concerning actions for book debt does not appear in Gen. St. 1918; St. 1911, c. 175, p. 1438, Aug. 9, § 1, Gen. St. 1918, § 5737 (in civil cases where a party has become unable to testify because of "incurable sickness, failing mind, old age, infirmity, or senility", or insanity, "the entries and memoranda of such party, made while sane, relevant to the matter in issue, may be received as evidence"; receivable also in favor of one claiming under such person insane, etc.; the trial Court to determine the applicability of this rule); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 4226 (a "book of original entries, regularly and fairly kept", offered with plaintiff's oath or affirmation, is admissible to charge the defendant "with the sums therein contained for goods sold and delivered, and other matters properly chargeable in an account", or is admissible, with defendant's oath or affirmation, to establish a set-off; "cash items are not properly so chargeable"; "provided that the party proving his book of original entries shall be subject to cross-many Western States this part of the exception was also embodied in statutes.

examination touching the same and the entries therein and the transactions to which such entries relate");
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2738 ("In all suits the shop-books and books of account of either party, in which the charges and entries shall have been originally made, shall be admissible in evidence in favor of such party", the jury to judge of credibility);
Georgia: Rev. Code 1910, § 5764 ("The books of account of any merchant, shopkeeper, physician, blacksmith, or other person doing a regular business and keeping daily entries thereof, may be admitted in evidence as proof of such accounts, upon the following conditions: 1. That he kept no clerk, or else the clerk is dead or otherwise inaccessible, or for any other reason the clerk is disqualified from testifying; 2. Upon proof (the party's oath being sufficient) that the book tendered is his book of original entries; 3. Upon proof (by his customers) that he usually kept correct books; 4. Upon inspection by the Court, to see if the books are free from any suspicion of fraud"); St. 1910, No. 309, p. 57, July 28 (amending Code 1895, § 5182, Rev. C. 1910, § 5764, by inserting, after "blacksmith" the words "farmer, dairyman, planter");
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7967 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 3 ("Where in any civil action, suit, or proceeding, the claim or defense is founded on a book account, any party or interested person may testify to his account-book, and the items therein contained; that the same is a book of original entries, and that the entries therein were made by himself, and are true and just; or that the same were made by a deceased person, or by a disinterested person, a non-resident of the State at the time of the trial, and were made by such deceased or disinterested person in the usual course of trade, and of his duty or employment to the party so testifying; and thereupon the said account-book and entries shall be admitted as evidence in the cause"); 1872, Presbyterian Church v. Emerson, 66 Ill. 269, 271 ("This section is a repeal of the common-law rule as to the admissibility of the account-book"); 1892, House v. Beak, 141 Ill. 290, 297, 30 N. E. 1065 ("Section 3, which was first passed in 1867 (Laws of 1867, § 3, p. 184), adds to and enlarges, but does not repeal the common law; a contrary statement made in Presbyterian Church v. Emerson, 66 Ill. 269, was mere 'dictum', and not necessary to the decision of the case");
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4622, Comp. Code § 7329 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, with "or" instead of "and", in the second class of cases); § 4623, Comp. C. § 7330 ("Books of account, containing charges by one party against the other, made in the ordinary course of business, are receivable in evidence only under the following circumstances. . . . First, the books must show a continuous dealing with persons generally, or several items of charges at different times against the other party in the same book or set of books; Second, it must be shown, by the party's oath or otherwise, that they are his books of original entries; Third, it must be shown in like manner that the charges were made at or near the time of the transaction therein entered, unless satisfactory reasons appear for not making such proof; Fourth, the charges must also be verified by the party or the clerk who made the entries, to the effect that they believe them just and true, or a sufficient reason must be given why the verification is not made; Any loose leaf or card or other form of entry which may be in use in the ordinary course of business by the party seeking to prove an account against another, and shall have been properly identified as being the original entry of such account shall be admitted as competent evidence for the purpose of proving such account by deposition or in open court, and it shall be competent for any person whose duties in the ordinary course of such business require a personal knowledge of the records of such business, to verify such account or make deposition or testify in open court with regard to any matters pertaining to such records. In all cases where depositions are taken by either method provided by law, outside of the county in which the case is for trial when books of account are competent evidence in the case, the party desiring to offer the entries of said books as evidence may cause the same to be photographed by or under the direction of the officer taking the deposition and such photographic copy when certified by such officer with his seal attached shall be attached to the deposition"); a valuable critique of the judicial interpretation and the shortcomings of this statute, with suggestions for improvement, will be found in the article by Prof. Frederic M. Miller, "Regular Entries, Books of Account, and the Iowa Statutes" (1922, Iowa Law Bulletin, VII, 88);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7288 ("Entries in books and other writings intended as records of sales, purchases, receipts, payments, deliveries, weights, measures, time, transactions of events, made in the regular course of business of any person, firm, corporation or public officer, as a record of the matters to which they relate, at or near the time of the transaction or occurrence, shall be admissible in evidence on proof that they were so made. Where such entries are in the possession of the adverse party, they shall be produced at the trial on reasonable notice, unless the court or judge excuse such production for good cause, and allow the substitution of a sworn copy thereof,

The history of this Western legislation is obscure; but it seems to have come about in general by way of imitation or adaptation of the Southern statutes to be furnished by the party in possession thereof. Entries in possession of strangers to the suit, which are kept without the county in which the action is triable, may be proven copies");

Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 606, par. 6 (quoted ante, § 488);
Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2248 ("The books of merchants cannot be given in evidence in their favor");
Massachusetts: St. 1913, c. 288, now Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 78 ("An entry in an account kept in a book or by a card system or by any other system of keeping accounts shall not be inadmissible in a civil proceeding as evidence of the facts therein stated because it is transcribed or because it is hearsay or self-serving, if the Court finds that the entry was made in good faith in the regular course of business and before the beginning of the civil proceeding aforesaid; the Court, in its discretion, before admitting such entry in evidence, may, to such extent as it deems practicable or desirable but to no greater extent than the law has heretofore required, require the party offering the same to produce and offer in evidence the original entry, writing, document or account, or any other [book] from which the entry offered or the facts therein stated were transcribed or taken, and to call as his witness any person who made the entry offered or the original or any other entry, writing, document or account from which the entry offered or the facts therein stated were transcribed or taken, or who has personal knowledge of the facts stated in the entry offered"); c. 233, § 79 (hospital records; quoted post, § 1639);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12541 ("In all trials . . . books of account, containing charges or entries for money paid, laid out, or furnished, shall be received and admitted as evidence, and deemed to be evidence of such charges and entries, and that such moneys were so paid, laid out, furnished, or lent, as is in such books charged or entered, and of the liability of the person charged therefor, in the same manner and to the same extent as books of account containing charges for goods, wares, or merchandise sold and delivered, are received and admitted as evidence of sale and delivery of such goods and merchandise, and of the liability of the person charged therefor; provided, this section shall not apply to cases where persons acting or having acted as commission merchants or agents for the sale of produce, grain, or other property, unless accompanied by a voucher or receipt for the money so claimed to be laid out, lent, or furnished");
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8437 ("Whenever a party in any cause or proceeding shall produce at the trial his account books, and prove that the same are his account books kept for that purpose, that they contain the original entries for moneys paid, goods or other articles delivered, services performed or material furnished; that such entries were made at the time of the transactions therein entered; that they are in his handwriting or that of a person authorized to make charges in said books, and are just and true to the best knowledge and belief of the person making the proof, such books, subject to all just exceptions as to their credibility, shall be received as 'prima facie' evidence of the charges therein contained. If any book has marks which show that the items have been transferred to a ledger, it shall not be received unless the ledger is produced. Provided, that the entry of charges or credits, involving money, goods, chattels or services furnished or received, when the furnishing or receipt thereof constitutes a part of the usual course of business of the person on whose behalf such entry is made, shall be received as evidence tending to prove the fact of the furnishing or receiving of such moneys, goods, chattels or services, whether the same be contained in an account book, or in a so-called loose-leaf, card or similar system of keeping accounts, and whether the same be made by handwriting, typewriting or other similar means, if it shall appear that such entry was made by a duly authorized person contemporaneously with the transaction therein referred to, as a part of the general system of accounts of the person on whose behalf the entry is made, and that the same is made in the usual and ordinary course of said business"); § 8438 ("Any entries made in a book by a person authorized to make the same, he being dead, may be received as evidence, in a case proper for the admission of such book as evidence, on proof that the same are in his handwriting, and in a book kept for such entries, without further verification"); § 8439 (where a deposition is used, production of such books to the officer suffices, and copies of entries may be attached);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5410 (quoted ante, § 488); § 5411 (quoted post, § 1859);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10594, 10595 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1946, 1947);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8855 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, substituting "or" for "and" in the second class, and "presumptive" for "prima facie"); § 8846 (like Ia. Code § 4623, with "or set of books" omitted at the end of the first proviso and ending with "not made" in the fourth proviso);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2187 (in civil causes, "the books of account of any merchant, shopkeeper, physician, blacksmith, or other person doing a regular business and keeping daily entries thereof, may be admitted as proof of such accounts upon the following conditions:

familiar to many of the early immigrants. Much of it preceded the abolition of parties' disqualification (ante, § 577), and was intended to alleviate

First, that he kept no clerk, or else the clerk is dead or inaccessible; Second, upon proof, the party's oath being sufficient, that the book tendered is the book of original entries; Third, upon proof, by his customers, that he usually kept correct books; Fourth, upon inspection by the Court to see if the books are free from any suspicion of fraud"); 1898, Byerts v. Robinson, 9 N. M. 427, 54 Pac. 932 (the foregoing statute supersedes the common law);

New York: St. 1909, c. 517, p. 1309 (water-supply department of first-class cities; records of observations of water-supply, its effects, etc., to be admissible when verified by officer's affidavit, if he "cannot be found or is absent, incapacitated, or dead"; this statute is one of the strangest mongrels ever bred in the legislative kennels);

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1786 (in claims "for goods, wares, and merchandise by him sold and delivered or for work done and performed", on the claimant's oath that the matter is a book account and "that he hath no means to prove the delivery of any of the articles which he then shall propose to prove by himself but by this book", and that "it doth contain a true account of all the dealings or the last settlement of accounts" and that "all the articles therein contained and by him so proved were 'bona fide' delivered, and that he hath given the opposing party all just credits", the book and oath are admissible for articles delivered within two years before action begun, but not "for any greater amount than sixty dollars"); § 1787 (similar provisions for an executor, etc., using deceased's book, on oath that "there are no witnesses to his knowledge capable of proving", etc.; the matters to be within three years before suit begun and two years before the death of the deceased); § 1788 (a copy of an account may be used instead of the original, unless the opponent has given ten days' notice to produce); § 1789 (in actions on an account for goods sold and delivered, "a verified itemized statement of such account" shall be 'prima facie' evidence);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7909 ("Any entries in a book or other permanent form, in the usual course of business, contemporaneous with the transactions to which they relate and as a part of or connected with such transactions, made by persons authorized to make the same, may be received in evidence when shown to have been so made upon the testimony either of the person who made the same, or if he be beyond the reach of a subpœna of the trial court or insane, of any person having custody of the entries and testifying that the same were made by a person or persons authorized to make them in whose handwriting they are, and that they are true and correct to the best of his knowledge and belief. In case such entries are, in the usual course of business, also made in other books and papers as a part of the system of keeping a record of such transactions, it shall not be necessary to produce as witnesses all of the persons subject to subpœna who were engaged in the making of such entries; but before such entries are admitted the court shall be satisfied that they are genuine and in other respects, within the provisions of this section");

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11495 (quoted ante, § 488);

Oklahoma: ("Entries in books of accounts may be admitted in evidence, when it is made to appear by the oath of the person who made the entries that such entries are correct, and were made at or near the time of the transaction to which they relate, or upon proof of the handwriting of the person who made the entries, in case of his death or absence from the county");

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 790 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, inserting, after "deceased", "or without the State", and after "writings", "of a like character"); § 791 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1947);

Pennsylvania: St. 1883, June 22, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10343, Evidence ("book entries of any bank or banker doing business at the time" of evidence required are provable by copy); St. 1883, June 22, § 2, Dig. § 10344 (in admitting this copy, "there must be an affidavit or the testimony of an officer of the bank stating that the book is one of the ordinary books of the bank used in the transaction of its business, that the entry is as was originally made at the time of its date, and in the usual course of its business, that there are no interlineations or erasures, and that the copy has been compared with the book, and is a correct copy of the same, and such book shall be open to the inspection of any interested party"); St. 1883, June 22, § 3, Dig. § 10345 (this statute shall not apply to "any suit to which the bank or bankers is a party"); St. 1897, May 25, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 18557 ("Hereafter in any suit or action brought in any Court within this commonwealth in which the accounts kept by any common carrier, railroad company, chartered storage or transportation company, or other public corporation doing business within this commonwealth are involved in an issue between other parties, and in the result of which such common carrier, railroad company, chartered storage or transportation company, or other public corporation, has no direct or pecuniary interest, a copy of the books of account of original entry of such common carrier, railroad company, chartered storage or transporation company, or other public corporation, under the oath or affirmation of an officer or employee in charge of the books of such common carrier, railroad com-that rule. The Western legislation, however, was often broader in language than the Southern statutes, which usually did not do much more than perpany, chartered storage or transportation company, or other public corporation, filed within ten days of the date of the trial or hearing of the issue in said suit or action, shall be and become 'prima facie' evidence");

Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 328 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, adding to par. 3, "or in the course of the ordinary and regular duties of the person making the entry"); § 329 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1947);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1461 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, adding to par. 3 the words "contract or employment");
South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 718 ("Books of original entry kept by farmers and planters relating to the transactions of their farms or plantations shall be receivable in evidence in all trials in which the business or transactions of their farms or plantations shall be called in question, as between the farmer or planter and his employees, in the same manner as books of merchants and shopkeepers are"); § 719 ("The books of accounts of tavernkeepers, shopkeepers, or retailers of spirituous liquors shall not be admitted, allowed, or received as evidence, in any court having a right to try the same, of any debt contracted, or moneys due, for spirituous liquors sold in less quantity than a quart");
Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5562 (in actions for goods sold and delivered or for work and labor, the plaintiff's books of account are to be admissible to prove sale and delivery of "articles not exceeding seventy-five dollars in value, which were delivered within two years before the action brought, if the plaintiff make oath (1) that the matter in dispute is a book account, (2) that he has no means to prove the delivery of such articles as he shall then propose to prove by his own oath, but by his book, (3) that the book contains a true account of all the dealings or last settlement of account between them, (4) that all the articles therein contained and by him so proved were really delivered, and (5) that he has given the defendant all just credits"); § 5563 (a deceased creditor's representative may use the book on swearing (1) that he believes the account just, (2) that there are no witnesses who can prove it, (3) that he "found the book with the account so stated", and (4) that he "knows of no further or other credit to be given"); § 5564 (a copy may be used unless the defendant has given notice, at the time of issue joined, to produce the book); § 5565 (if both parties are deceased persons' representatives, the deceased opponent's book may be admitted to disprove charges);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7113 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, §§ 1891, 1893 (quoted ante, § 488); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4186 ("Whenever a party in any cause or proceeding shall produce at the trial his account-books and swear that the same are his account-books, kept for that purpose; that they contain the original entries of charges for goods or other articles delivered, or work or labor or other services performed or materials found, and that such entries are just, to the best of his knowledge and belief; that said entries are in his own handwriting, and that they were made at or about the time said goods or other articles were delivered, said work and labor or other services were performed, or said materials were found, the party offering such book or books as evidence, being subject to all the rules of cross-examination by the adverse party that would be applicable by the rules to any other witness giving testimony relating to said book or books, if it shall appear upon the examination of said party that all of the interrogatories in this section contained are satisfactorily established in the affirmative, then the said book or books shall be received"); § 4187 ("Whenever the original entries mentioned in the preceding section are in the handwriting of an agent, servant, or clerk of the party, the oath of such agent, servant, or clerk may in like manner be admitted to verify the same, and said books shall be testimony" as in § 4186; provided that under neither section shall a book "be admitted as testimony of any item of money delivered at one time exceeding five dollars, or of money paid to third persons, or of charges for rent"); § 4188 (a book with marks showing a posting in a ledger is inadmissible "unless the ledger be produced"); § 4189 ("Any entries made in a book by a person authorized to make the same, he being dead, may be received as evidence in a case proper for the admission of such books as evidence. Entries in a book or other permanent form, other than those mentioned in §§ 4186 and 4189*b*, in the usual course of business, contemporaneous with the transactions to which they relate and as part of or connected with such transactions, made by persons authorized to make the same, may be received in evidence when shown to have been so made upon the testimony either of the person who made the same, or if he be beyond the reach of a subpœna of the trial Court or insane, of any person having custody of the entries and testifying that the same were made by a person or persons authorized to make them in whose handwriting they are, and that they are true and correct to the best of his knowledge and belief. In case such entries are, in the usual course of business, also made in other books or papers as a part of the system of keeping a record of such transactions, it shall not be necessary to produce as witnesses all of the persons subject to subpœna who were engaged in the petuate the original colonial practice with its narrow limitations. Moreover, at the time of the Western enactments, the main branch (or general exception for deceased persons' entries) was already fully recognized by the Courts; so that the language of these statutes often shows traces of this main exception, and in some respects serves to admit evidence which would ordinarily have been already available under the judicial exception. It is therefore sometimes difficult to know whether the statute is to be regarded as merely declaratory of the common law in those respects, or whether it must be taken as a substitute replacing and excluding the common-law principle. Having regard to the history of the parties'-books exception, it seems safer and more correct, as it certainly is more advantageous, to regard these statutes as intended to enlarge or to replace merely the parties'-books branch of the exception; so that whatever principle there was at common law for the main exception (for regular entries by deceased persons in general) remains unabolished by these statutes. Their clauses, therefore, which deal with such entries of persons deceased or absent, are merely declaratory and cumulative, and the remaining limitations or elements of the main exception at common law, unmentioned in the statute, remain in force as at common law. The result of these statutes, as affecting in general the existence of either of the branches of the Exception, is later dealt with (post, § 1561).

The statutes in their details may affect any of the topics of the ensuing sections, particularly in the branch dealing with the parties' books. Though they have been collected here at the outset, the common-law limitations examined in the following sections must be understood to be subject to the local control of these statutes.

A. REGULAR ENTRIES IN GENERAL

1. The Necessity Principle

§ 1521. Death, Absence, etc., of the Entrant; Corporation Books; Carriers, Books; Bankers' Books; Hospital Books. On the principle of Necessity (ante, § 1421), this Exception sanctions the use of statements by persons whose testimony, though not necessarily the sole evidence available on the subject, is yet the only testimony now available from that person. Hence the usual rule applies that the person must be unavailable as a witness:

making of such entries; but before such entries are admitted, the Court shall be satisfied that they are genuine" and fulfil the above rules); § 4189*b* ("Whenever any evidence shall be required . . . from the books of any bank or banker doing business at the time", copies of entries are admissible, with a bank officer's affidavit or testimony that the book is "one of the ordinary books of the bank used in the transaction of its business", that the entry "was originally made therein at the time of its date and in the usual course of the business of the bank, that there are no interlineations or erasures, that the book is in the custody or control of the bank"); § 3932 (after the decease of an executor or administrator, his books of account "as such executor or administrator, appearing to have been kept in his own handwriting", are admissible to prove receipts, disbursements, and services);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5806 (quoted ante, § 488).

1750, HARDWICKE, L. C., in Lefebure v. Worden, 2 Ves. Sr. 543: "On proof that the declarant was dead, such entry has been read; . . . by reason of the difficulty of making of proof in cases of this kind, the Court has gone so far."

1819, PARKER, C. J., in Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380: "The question was thought to fall within the general rule which requires the best evidence the nature of the case admits of. . . . It is analogous to the exceptions to other general rules of evidence."

1823, STORY, J., in Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326: "It is the best evidence the nature of the case admits of. If a party is dead, we cannot have his personal examination upon oath, and the question then arises, whether there shall be a total failure of justice, or secondary evidence shall be admitted to prove facts where ordinary prudence cannot guard us against the effects of human mortality."

As is frequent in these Hearsay exceptions, the principle of unavailability has not been fully and consistently carried out. Certain specific situations have from time to time been ruled upon as sufficient or insufficient.

(1) It is of course at least necessary that the witness should be somehow unavailable. Where the absence of the desired witness is not somehow accounted for (except when a party, under the other branch of the rule), the entries cannot be used.[1]

(2) Of the various facts sufficiently excusing from production, death, as in other Hearsay exceptions, is the common and universally conceded instance. Insanity should be equally sufficient.[3] Illness effectively preventing the attendance of the witness should suffice.[4] Absence from the jurisdiction should admit the statements, and this is generally conceded;[5] the offeror might § 1521. [1] To the following, add the cases infra, notes 2–6; 1899, Baird v. Reilly, 35 C. C. A. 78, 63 U. S. App. 157, 92 Fed. 884 (hospital record by person not called, excluded); 1891, Terry v. Birmingham N. Bank, 93 Ala. 608, 9 So. 299 (stock-exchange books excluded); 1896, Tennessee & C. R. Co. v. Danforth, 112 Ala. 80, 20 So. 502 (estimates of cost by a constructor not accounted for, excluded); 1874, Bartholomew v. Farwell, 41 Conn. 109 (requiring the entrant to be produced or shown to be unavailable; on this point overrules Butler v. Iron Co., 1853, 22 Conn. 360, an anomalous ruling); 1916, Stolz v. Scott, 28 Ida. 417, 154 Pac. 982 (journal kept by a bookkeeper not called, excluded); 1862, Barnes v. Simmons, 27 Ill. 512; 1901, State Bank of Pike v. Brown, 165 N. Y. 216, 59 N. E. 1 (bank-books excluded, the makers not being accounted for).

The following case should have been placed on this ground: 1884, Watrous v. Cunningham, 65 Cal. 410, 4 Pac. 408 (here the books of account of one L. S., called as a witness, were rejected, but on the absurd ground that "the entries in this book did not bind defendants"; no authority cited).

If the entrant is present in court, he should use the entries to assist his recollection (post, §§ 1530, 1560).

[2] Eng. In re Fountaine, In re Dowler, [1909] 2 Ch. 382, 390 (death of one member of a firm does not admit the books of the firm); U. S. Ala. 1895, Sands v. Hammel, 108 Ala. 624, 18 So. 489; Conn. 1842, Livingston v. Tyler, 14 Conn. 498; 1852, Stiles v. Homer, 21 Conn. 511; 1857, Ashmead v. Colby, 26 Conn. 310; 1874, Bartholomew v. Farwell, 41 Conn. 109; Md. 1807, Clarke v. Magruder, 2 H. & J. 77; Mass. 1838, Washington Bank v. Prescott, 20 Pick. 342; N. M. 1885, Price v. Garland, 3 N. M. 289, 6 Pac. 472; N. Y. 1843, Sheldon v. Benham, 4 Hill 131; 1865, Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 121; 1876, Fisher v. Mayor, 67 N. Y. 77; Pa. 1808, Sterrett v. Bull, 1 Binn. 237; 1821, Patton's Adm'rs v. Ash, 7 S. & R. 125.

[3] 1886, Bridgewater v. Roxbury, 54 Conn. 217, 6 Atl. 415 (books of a physician, who "had become mentally incompetent to testify", admitted; "it is the same as if he were dead"); 1825, Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. 109.

[4] In Taylor v. R. Co., 80 Ia. 435, 46 N. W. 64 (1890), where it was a railroad-employee's duty to make an entry of certain things and the entrant was kept away by illness, the entries were rejected; but the opinion does not indicate an apprehension of the real points involved.

In Griffin v. Boston & M. R. Co. (1913), 87 Vt. 278, 89 Atl. 220 (cited more fully post, § 1530, n. 3), the view in the text above is approved.

[5] 1833, North Bank v. Abbot, 13 Pick. Mass. 471: Shaw, C. J.: "It was satisfactorily in a particular case be required to show the witness' unwillingness to return and testify, or perhaps the inability to obtain a deposition; but this requirement is not sanctioned.

Other cases of unavailability may no doubt be presented;[6] to all of them applies the broad language of Chief Justice Shaw: "The ground is the impossibility of obtaining the testimony, and the cause of such impossibility seems immaterial." In some of the statutes (quoted ante, § 1519), other grounds of unavailability are expressly named; occasionally the broad principle is laid down that the statements are usable "if sufficient reason is given" for the entrant's non-production.[7]

The practical impossibility, on grounds of mercantile inconvenience, of producing all the clerks, salesmen, teamsters, or the like, who have contributed their knowledge on making up the items of voluminous accounts is by some Courts recognized as a sufficient ground for non-production; but this ground can better be examined in considering the use of entries resting on the combined knowledge of two or more persons (post, § 1530). The policy of these rulings, so far as it exempts from the production of all but one verifying person, on the ground of mercantile convenience, is deserving of common adoption. The general principle should recognize practical inconvenience as an excuse, subject to the judge's discretion to require the entrant's production for cross-examination where the nature of the dispute renders it desirable.

proved, not merely that the witness was out of the jurisdiction of the Court, but that it had become impossible to procure his testimony. We cannot distinguish this, in principle, from the case of death or alienation of mind. The ground is the impossibility of obtaining the testimony, and the cause of such impossibility seems immaterial."

Accord: Federal: 1865, Fennerstein's Champagne, 3 Wall. 149, semble; Ala. 1837, Moore v. Andrews, 5 Port. 108 (permanent absence); 1884, Elliott v. Dycke, 78 Ala. 157; 1890, McDonald v. Carnes, 90 Ala. 147, 7 So. 919 ("indefinite absence from the State" suffices); Ark. 1893, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Henderson, 57 Ark. 402, 21 S. W. 878 (absence from jurisdiction, sufficient; but here no effort had been made to find him, and the entries were excluded); Conn. 1874, Bartholomew v. Farwell, 41 Conn. 109; Haw. 1906, Godfrey v. Rowland, 17 Haw. 577, 581 (baptismal record by a clergyman in Australia, admitted); Ind. 1889, Culver v. Marks, 122 Ind. 565, 23 N. E. 1086; Ia. 1871, Karr v. Stivers, 34 Ia. 125; Kan. 1903, Haas v. Chubb, 67 Kan. 787, 74 Pac. 230, semble (railroad-agent's entries, excluded, the entrant being out of the county but in the State); Ky. Poor v. Robinson, 13 Bush 290, 294 ("died or absconded" suffices); Mich. 1902, Cameron Lumber Co. v. Somerville, 129 Mich. 552, 89 N. W. 346; Pa. 1808, Sterrett v. Bull, 1 Binn. 237; S. C. 1823, Elms v. Cheirs, 2 McC. 349; 1896, Rigby v. Logan, 45 S. C. 651, 24 S. E. 56; Tex. 1908, Consolidated K. C. S. & R. Co. v. Gonzales, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 79, 109 S. W. 946 (entrant absconded and his whereabouts unknown); W. Va. 1883, Vinal v. Green, 21 W. Va. 313 (temporary absence does not suffice).

Contra: 1793, Cooper v. Marsden, 1 Esp. 1; 1894, Little Rock Granite Co. v. Dallas Co., 13 C. C. A. 620, 66 Fed. 522, semble; 1919, People v. Geister, 289 Ill. 249, 124 N. E. 530 (the entrant was in another State "temporarily absent in one of the training-camps of the Government"; held inadmissible; the entrant must be "permanently out of the State"; no precedent cited, and the language of the Illinois statute not noticed); 1849, Browning v. Flanagin, 22 N. J. L. 567, 572; 1826, Wilbur v. Selden, 6 Cow. N. Y. 163; 1902, McKeen v. Bank, 24 R. I. 542, 54 Atl. 49 (account-books of a third person out of the State, excluded; but the Court proceeds also on the ground that the entries must be against interest; this radical misconception of the whole principle of this Exception is scarcely palliated by the circumstance that it rests on a further misunderstanding of Mr. Greenleaf's original language on this point).

[6] 1921, Stringer v. Com., 192 Ky. 318, 233 S. W. 718 (larceny from a railroad car; to prove the shipment, railroad books were admitted on proof that the entrant had left the railroad's employ and his whereabouts was unknown).

[7] Applied in Volker v. Bank, 26 Nebr. 605, 42 N. W. 732.

(3) The foregoing type of Necessity is the creation of judicial interpretation. But the same policy of necessity is seen recognized by legislation in statutes which provide for the admission of corporation-books, either in general or as against stockholders (ante, § 1074), of banker's books in general (post, § 1683), of hospital books (post, § 1707), and of common carriers' books, specifically to evidence the transportation of intoxicating liquor (post, § 1708). In the judiciary's application of the principle, the necessity must be shown to exist in each instance of a book's offering (post, § 1530). But in the legislative measures, a rule-of-thumb is provided, admitting those classes of books unconditionally; the policy is merely the underlying reason for the rules. The rules therefore, in those instances, occupy an anomalous status in the system of Evidence; the authorities are more conveniently placed under the heads above cited.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness

§ 1522. Reasons of the Principle. The reasons justifying the admission of this class of statements, untested as they are by cross-examination, have not been as clearly defined by the judges as in other Hearsay exceptions; but they seem fairly clear. They fall within the second general type already described (ante, § 1422), i.e. the situation is one where, even though a desire to state falsely may casually have subsisted, more powerful motives to accuracy overpower and supplant it. In the typical case of entries made systematically and habitually for the recording of a course of business dealings, experience of human nature indicates three distinct though related motives which operate to secure in the long run a sufficient degree of probable trustworthiness and make the statements fairly trustworthy:

(1) The habit and system of making such a record with regularity calls for accuracy through the interest and purpose of the entrant; and the influence of habit may be relied on, by very inertia, to prevent casual inaccuracies and to counteract the possible temptation to mis-statements. This reason has been referred to in the following passage:

> 1835, TINDAL, C. J., in Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649: "It is easier to state what is true than what is false; the process of invention implies trouble, in such a case unnecessarily incurred."

(2) Since the entries record a regular course of business transactions, an error or mis-statement is almost certain to be detected and the result disputed by those dealing with the entrant; mis-statements cannot safely be made, if at all, except by a systematic and comprehensive plan of falsification. As a rule, this fact (if no motive of honesty obtained) would deter all but the most daring and unscrupulous from attempting the task; the ordinary man may be assumed to decline to undertake it. In the long run this operates with fair effect to secure accuracy.

(3) If, in addition to this, the entrant makes the record under a duty to an employer or other superior, there is the additional risk of censure and disgrace from the superior, in case of inaccuracies, — a motive on the whole the most powerful and most palpable of the three. This reason has been more than once mentioned:

1835, TINDAL, C. J., in Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649: "The clerk had no interest to make a false entry; if he had any interest, it was rather to make a true entry; . . . a false entry would be likely to bring him into disgrace with his employer. Again, the book in which the entry was made was open to all the clerks in the office, so that an entry if false would be exposed to speedy discovery."

1819, PARKER, C. J., in Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380: "What a man has said when not under oath may not in general be given in evidence when he is dead. . . . But what a man has actually done and committed to writing, when under obligation to do the act, it being in the course of the business he has undertaken, and he being dead, there seems to be no danger in submitting to the consideration of the jury."

1865, SWAYNE, J., in Fennerstein's Champagne, 3 Wall. 149: "The rule rests upon the consideration that the entry, other writing, or parol declaration of the author, was within his ordinary business. . . . In all [the cases] he has full knowledge, no motive to falsehood, and there is the strongest improbability of untruth. Safer sanctions rarely surround the testimony of a witness examined under oath."

This last motive was most highly thought of in the earlier stages of the exception's history, and in England it has come to be regarded as indispensable.

From these general motives and reasons, forming the policy on which the principle rests, are developed certain specific requirements and limitations.

§ 1523. Regular Course of Business; (1) Business or Occupation. The first general requirement is that the entry must have been made in the regular course of business. The judicial phrasings of this requirement vary in terms.[1]

The entry must have been, therefore, in the way of business. This may be defined to mean a course of transactions performed in one's habitual relations with others and as a natural part of one's mode of obtaining a livelihood. It would probably exclude, for instance, a diary of doings kept merely for one's personal satisfaction; but it would not exclude any regular record that was helpful, though not essential nor usual in the same occupation as followed § 1523. [1] Eng. 1832, Doe v. Turford, 3 B. & Ad. 890 (Parke, J., and Taunton, J.: "in the ordinary course of business"); 1835, Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649 (Tindal, C. J., "made in the usual course and routine of business"); 1860, Rawlins v. Rickards, 28 Beav. 373 (Romilly, M. R., admitting a solicitor's books: "in the exercise of his business and duty, . . . and in the regular course of his business"); U. S. 1823, Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326 (Story, J., of a notary's book of protests: ". . . an employment in which he was usually engaged; . . . memorandums in the ordinary discharge of their duty and employment; . . . memorandums, made by a person in the ordinary course of his business, of acts which his duty in such business requires him to do for others"); 1844, Watts v. Howard, 7 Metc. Mass. 481 (Shaw, C. J.: "in the usual and ordinary course of their business, in relation to acts coming within the scope of their authority and duty"); 1848, Dow v. Sawyer, 29 Me. 119 ("as he had occasion to make them in the course of his business"); 1865, Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. Mass. 161 ("in the ordinary course of his business occupation"); 1875, State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 378 (Royce, J., "made by him in the regular course of business and it was his business to make them").

by others.[2] There is, therefore, no special limitation as to the nature of the occupation.[3]

Since it is thus not essential that the occupation should be a mercantile or industrial one, nor even that it should be a secular one, it follows that a register of marriages or the like, kept by a priest or minister, is admissible.[4] The admission of a non-official marriage-register, however, is not recognized in England, partly because of another principle (post, § 1524), nor in some of the American courts; and such books are therefore admissible in those courts so far only as they are made under a legal duty, i.e. on the principle of Official Statements (post, § 1644). A ship's log-book is admissible under the present exception; but as it is in some jurisdictions required by statute to be kept, it is thus also admissible as an Official Statement (post, § 1641). Records of a hospital satisfy the present principle; but in another aspect they present difficulties (post, § 1530). Corporation books, in the present aspect, stand no differently from others; but they may also involve the doctrine of Parties' Admissions in a peculiar way, and have been specially dealt with by legislation, and are therefore considered ante, § 1074. Bankers' books

[2] 1876, Fisher v. Mayor, 67 N. Y. 77 (Andrews, J.: "It is sufficient if the entry was the natural concomitant of the transaction to which it relates, and usually accompanies it").

The following ruling belongs here: 1904, Elliott v. Sheppard, 179 Mo. 382, 78 S. W. 627 (forgery of an acknowledged deed; to overthrow the certificate of acknowledgment, the deceased grantor's diary, with entries showing him to have been in Kentucky on the day in question, was offered; excluded, because "not in the nature of a book account"; no authority cited; the ruling is of no value, because the present point is not considered, and on the facts the ruling is thoroughly unsound).

[3] The following have been admitted: Eng. 1816, Champneys v. Peck, 1 Stark. 326 (memorandum of delivery of copy of a bill by a clerk who usually made such a memorandum upon the copy kept); 1835, R. v. Cope, 7 C. & P. 726 (indorsement of service on an order of the aldermen, the writer's duty being to serve orders and indorse them when served); U. S. 1915, Sharp v. Blanton, 194 Ala. 460, 69 So. 889 (whether a person's age entitled him to disaffirm a sale; to evidence the date of birth, books of a physician, a prior party in defendant's chain of title, were admitted; elaborate survey of the history of the rule, by Thomas, J.); 1886, Bridgewater v. Roxbury, 54 Conn. 217, 6 Atl. 415 (physician's entries of services rendered); 1905, Hagarty v. Webber, 100 Me. 305, 61 Atl. 685 (scale-books of a timber-surveyor); 1853, Sasscer v. Farmers' Bank, 4 Md. 418 (notary's entries); 1858, Perkins v. Augusta Co., 10 Grav Mass. 324 (certificate of a marine inspector as to a vessel's condition); 1875, De Armond v. Neasmith, 32 Mich. 233 (weather-record at an insane asylum); 1894, Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406, 410, 59 N. W. 174 (weather-records kept at an asylum, received); 1917, State v. Bowman, 272 Mo. 494, 199 S. W. 161 (rape under age; doctor's charge-book, admitted to show the date of a birth); 1899, Roberts v. Rice, 69 N. H. 472, 45 Atl. 237 (insurance-agent's register of policies); 1822, Halliday v. Martinet, 20 Johns. N. Y. 172 (notary's record of protests); 1831, Nichols v. Goldsmith, 7 Wend. N. Y. 161 (cashier's notice of non-payment of note); 1865, Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 121 (entry in a lawyer's record-book of the proceedings in a cause); 1874, Livingston v. Arnoux, 56 N. Y. 518 (receipt by a sheriff for money paid by a judgment-debtor in redemption of land sold on execution); 1876, Fisher v. Mayor, 67 N. Y. 77 (attorney's books); 1920, O'Day v. Spencer, 96 Or. 73, 189 Pac. 394 (attorney's book of accounts); 1895, Dickens v. Winter, 169 Pa. 126, 32 Atl. 292 (time-book of teaming done).

Excluded: 1913, Arnold v. Hussey, 111 Me. 224, 88 Atl. 724 (a diary of weather conditions, regularly entered twice daily, by a deceased person, but not in pursuance of any business or duty, excluded).

For a notary's entries, see further post, §§ 1525, 1675.

For prices current, see post, § 1704.

For surveyors' notes, see further post, §§ 1524, 1566, 1665.

[4] 1865, Gray, J., in Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. Mass. 161 ("An entry made in the performance of a religious duty is certainly of no less value than one made by a clerk, messenger, or notary, an attorney or solicitor, or a physician, in the course of his secular occupation").

(post, § 1683), and common carriers' books (post, 1708), have also been given a special legislative status.

§ 1524. Same: English Rule; Duty to a Third Person. The further limitation exists in England and Canada that there should have been a duty to a third person, in the course of which the report or record was made.[1] A suggestion of this appears in the language of the early American cases;[2] but, though it did not with us survive, it was in England later emphasized and insisted upon.

Its requirements are strict. First, there must have been a duty to do the very thing recorded.[3] Secondly, there must have been a duty to record or otherwise report the very thing.[4] Thirdly, the duty must have been to record or otherwise report it at the time.[5] This limitation is a reminiscence of the early history (ante, § 1517), and is needlessly strict.

§ 1525. Same: (2) Regularity. The entry offered must of course be a part of a system of entries, not a casual or isolated one. This is necessarily involved in the reasons (ante, § 1522) on which the rule is founded. Thus, a single entry in a book, made after it has been closed or put away, or without using it again, or a memorandum casually made, would not answer this requirement.[1] This regularity of the record may be evidenced by inspection

§ 1524. [1] England: 1831, Chambers v. Bernasconi, 1 C. & J. 451; on app. 1 C. M. & R. 347; 1843, R. v. Worth, 4 Q. B. 132 (rejecting a farmer's book of his farm-laborers' work done, because not "made in the discharge of some duty for which he is responsible"; "actually in the discharge of a duty to another person"); 1887, Lyell v. Kennedy, 35 W. R. 725; 1904, Mellor v. Walmesley, 2 Ch. 525 (to identify a boundary, a field-book of a deceased surveyor, employed by the Local Board to survey, was excluded); 1904, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 534, 541 (reports of a surveyor in 1610–1625, excluded); 1905, Mellor v. Walmesley, 2 Ch. 164, 166 (Mellor v. Walmesley, supra, reversed on appeal; Vaughan Williams, L. J.: "Here the duty of the surveyor was . . . to record everything without which he could not arrive at that ultimate conclusion. If it was his duty to record those matters at the time, and he in fact did so contemporaneously, I think the rule as to admissibility applies"); 1905, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 538, 554 (Mercer v. Denne, supra, affirmed on appeal).

Canada: 1877, O'Connor v. Dunn, 2 Ont. App. 247 (deceased surveyor's notes made as a part of his regular entries, not admitted on the facts); 1883, Canada C. R. Co. v. McLaren, 8 id. 564 (engineer's entry in a repairs-book, made in the course of duty after a fire; opinions inconclusive).

[2] E.g. Story, J., in Nicholls v. Webb, quoted ante, § 1523.

[3] 1867, Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 332 (Blackburn, J.: "The duty must be to do the very thing to which the entry relates, and then to make a report or record of it"); 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 431; 1887, Lyell v. Kennedy, supra, per Bowen, L. J.; 1885, McGregor v. Keiller, 9 Ont. 677 (deceased surveyor's field notes, not made in execution of a specific duty, excluded).

[4] 1831, Chambers v. Bernasconi, supra (rejecting a deputy's return of the place of arrest, because "it may be the duty of the sheriff's officer to make a return to the sheriff that he has made the arrest, but it is not a necessary part of that duty that he should state the particular place of the arrest"; "the statement of other circumstances, however naturally they may be thought to find a place in the narrative, is no proof of those circumstanees"); 1867, Smith v. Blakey, supra; 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 420, 426, 431; 1879, Trotter v. McLean, L. R. 13 id. 579; 1879, Massey v. Allen, ib. 558; 1887, Lyell v. Kennedy, supra.

[5] 1867, Smith v. Blakey, supra; 1879, Polini v. Gray, supra.

§ 1525. [1] 1816, Dickson v. Lodge, 1 Stark. 226 (bill of lading signed by a captain, not received to show the shipping of goods for the plaintiff); 1865, Barton v. Dundas, 24 U. C. Q. B. 275 (excluding a notice sent in unusual course); 1880, Lilly v. Larkin, 66 Ala. 115 (admitting an attorney's indorsement to a note among an administrator's papers, stating the date of the account-settlement); 1895, Culver v. R. Co., 108 Ala. 330, 18 So. 827 (written report on a railroad accident by an employee to his employer, the maker not being accounted for, excluded); 1914, Wilcox v. Downing, 88 Conn. 368, 91 Atl. 262 (memorandum book with irregular en-of the book; and the fulfilment of this requirement is for the Court to pass upon in each case.[2]

§ 1526. Contemporaneous with the Transaction. The entry should have been made at or near the time of the transaction recorded,[1] — not merely because this is necessary in order to assure a fairly accurate recollection of the matter, but because any trustworthy habit of making regular business records will ordinarily involve the making of the record contemporaneously. The rule fixes no precise time; each case must depend on its own circumstances.

§ 1527. No Motive to Misrepresent. It is often added that there must have been no motive to misrepresent.[1] This does not mean that the offeror must show an absence of all such motives; but merely that if the existence of a fairly positive counter-motive to misrepresent is made to appear in a particular instance the entry would be excluded. This limitation is a fair one, provided it be not interpreted with over-strictness. The exclusion of the notorious Fleet registers of marriage (post, § 1642) illustrates the kind of circumstances that call for the application of this requirement.

§ 1528. Written or Oral Statement. That the statement admissible under the present exception must be a written statement has been generally assumed in the United States in the judicial phrasings of the rule.[1] In England, however, it seems to be settled that an oral statement is equally admissible.[2] Since in that jurisdiction the third motive of trustworthiness (ante, § 1522) is regarded as most important, and the statement must be made under a duty to a third person (ante, § 1524), it may be conceded that an oral statement would be scarcely inferior to a written one in trustworthiness. In this country, however, where that limitation does not obtain, the trustworthiness of tries, excluded on the facts); 1875, Kibbe v. Bancroft, 77 Ill. 19 (entry made in an account-book not used for ten years, and laid aside in the meantime, excluded); 1874, Walker v. Curtis, 116 Mass. 101 (memoranda by a surveyor in the course of his employment on a particular enterprise, admitted); 1901, Sexton v. Perrigo, 126 Mich. 542, 85 N. W. 1096 (under Comp. L. § 2635, a deceased notary's certificate of protest is not admissible as a regular entry, when the fact of notice is denied by affidavit); 1905, U. S. v. Dayutal, 4 P. I. 93 (insurrection; defendant asserted an alibi working in a quarry; a record composed of loose leaves unnumbered, excluded); 1897, Barley v. Byrd, 95 Va. 316, 28 S. E. 329 (memorandum by Bushrod Washington, as agent for James Wilson, receipting for the possession of a deed; excluded, because not found in a book of "entries of the daily business regularly made"); 1901, Kelley v. Crawford, 112 Wis. 368, 88 N. W. 296 (Stats. § 4189 applied, to exclude entries not shown to be in the usual course of business, etc.).

For stenographic reports of testimony, see post, § 1669.

[2] 1914, Wilcox v. Downing, 88 Conn. 368, 91 Atl. 262; 1848, Dow v. Sawyer, 29 Me. 119.

§ 1526. [1] 1816, Champneys v. Peck, 1 Stark. 326; 1832, Doe v. Turford, 3 B. & Ad. 890; 1920, Dameron v. Harris, 281 Mo. 247, 219 S. W. 954 (entries held sufficiently near in time); 1878, Ray v. Castle, 79 N. C. 580.

Compare the citations post, § 1550, under the other branch of this Exception.

§ 1527. [1] Eng. 1835, Poole v. Dicas, 1 Bing. N. C. 649; 1839, Malone v. L'Estrange, 2 Ir. Eq. 16; 1879, Polini v. Gray, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 430, per Brett, L. J.; U. S. 1854, Lord v. Moore, 37 Me. 220; 1865, Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. 161; 1890, Lassone v. R. Co., 66 N. H. 345, 354, 24 Atl. 902.

§ 1528. [1] But see the passage from Swayne, J., in Fennerstein's Champagne, ante, § 1522.

[2] 1844, Lord Campbell, in Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 113 ("a declaration by word of mouth or by writing made in the course of the business"); 1873, R. v. Buckley, 13 Cox Cr. 293 (oral report of a constable).

an oral statement would seem to be far inferior to that of a written one, especially as affected by the second reason for the rule (ante, § 1522).

Nevertheless, in the actual conduct of business by subordinates in mercantile or industrial houses (practically the only class of persons by whom oral reports are regularly made), the element of duty (as required in England) does in fact exist; and where it does exist, the case seems a proper one for the adoption of the broader English rule admitting oral statements. Apart from the above considerations, there is no reason for distinguishing between oral and written statements to the disadvantage of the former; no such distinction is made in most of the other Exceptions. In those Courts admitting entries based on joint knowledge (post, § 1530) there is in effect an acceptance of oral reports.

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence

§ 1530. Personal Knowledge of Entrant; Entries by Bookkeeper, etc., on report of Salesman, Teamster, etc. (1) There can be no doubt that the general principle of testimonial evidence (ante, § 657) should apply here as elsewhere, namely, that the person whose statement is received as testimony should speak from personal observation or knowledge. This principle has often been invoked in excluding entries made by a person who had no personal knowledge of the supposed facts recorded.[1]

(2) But does this principle necessarily exclude all entries made by persons not having personal knowledge of the facts entered? May not this act of personal knowledge on the part of the entrant be supplemented by the personal knowledge of some other person whose knowledge is in fact represented in the entry? In other words, if the element of personal knowledge can somehow be adequately supplied by a second person, it is material that the entrant himself did not have this personal knowledge.

In order to work out this problem, it is necessary to keep in mind the results already established in connection with the doctrine about memoranda of past recollection (ante, § 571). It was there noticed that a memorandum whose correctness was established by composite testimony could be used; for example, if S has made a written memorandum of a transaction done by him, § 1530. [1] 1873, Avery's Ex'rs v. Avery, 49 Ala. 195. Peters, J.: "Such a book must contain the registration of some fact . . . by one who would at the time have been a competent witness to the fact which he registered." Accord: 1873, Chaffee v. U. S., 18 Wall. 542 (entries excluded of a collector of freight noting arrivals of whiskey, but made merely on a perusal of the B. L. offered by the ship-captains, who themselves had no personal knowledge that the freight had even been shipped); 1876, Connecticut M. L. I. Co. v. Schwenk, 94 U. S. 598 (entry by a lodge secretary of the age of a member, in a minute-book of an Odd Fellows' Lodge, excluded); 1842. Batre v. Simpson, 4 Ala. 312; 1880, Davis v. Tarver, 65 Ala. 102 (entries by a clerk of an alleged lunatic were not admitted to show that the goods received were necessaries and were the consideration of a note); 1890, McDonald v. Carnes, 90 Ala. 148, 7 So. 919 ("all matters within the knowledge of the person making the entries"); 1900, Walling v. Morgan Co., 126 Ala. 326, 28 So. 433 (bank-book containing an account with W., not admitted on the mere testimony of a cashier who did not keep it or receive or pay the money); 1842, Livingston v. Tyler, 14 Conn. 498; 1854, Lord v. Moore, 37 Me. 220.

and has given the writing to B, who has copied it and destroyed the original, then if S swears the original to have been accurately made, and if B swears the copy to be correct, the copy produced is thus by their joint testimony rendered an accurate record of the transaction, although B alone has no personal knowledge of the transaction, and although S alone does not know the copy to be correct. Furthermore, it was seen to be the generally and properly accepted extension of that doctrine that the same result ensues where S's original statement to B was an oral report, not a written memorandum, as in the typical case of a salesman and a bookkeeper; because in this case S swears that his report of the transaction to B was an accurate statement of what he did, and B swears that his entry was a correct record of what B reported to him; B's written entry thus being in truth a copy of S's report, as effectually as it would have been a copy of a memorandum. Now this doctrine suffices only for cases where both S and B are produced, and by their joint testimony on the stand verify the writing as a memorandum of past recollection (under § 751, ante). If either S or B does not come to the stand, then the offer contains an element of hearsay assertion, and therefore the writing can be admissible, if at all, only under the present Exception. Is there any fatal objection in the way of this? By no means. There are three possible situations:

(a) Suppose B, the entrant, to be deceased; here, if S, the actor in the transaction, swears to the correctness of his original memorandum or oral-report, the element of personal knowledge is sufficiently supplied; and the entry of B is then admissible if it was made in the regular course of business.

(b) Suppose S, the transactor, to be deceased, but B, the entrant, to swear to the entry as correctly representing B's memorandum or oral report; here B's entry, if based on a memorandum, would be sufficient, as supplying the element of S's personal knowledge, if made in the regular course of business; its production being impossible by destruction, and S being unavailable by decease. If S's statement were an oral report (as often in the case of salesmen, teamsters, foremen, tallymen, and the like), it would be none the less made in the regular course of business; but here, although, as already seen (ante, § 1528), the Exception does not ordinarily in the United States cover oral statements, nevertheless the reasons of the Exception (ante, § 1522) apply to admit it. In the first place, it is made in the course of a duty to a third person, which in England suffices to admit oral statements; secondly, the immediate reduction to writing by B removes in the main the objections which might otherwise exist to admitting merely oral statements, and brings into play with practically full effect the two reasons already mentioned (ante, § 1522) as obtaining for written entries. In short, there is every reason for taking as admissible these oral reports of a deceased person in the regular course of business and duty, supplying the element of personal knowledge, and correctly recorded in the entry sworn to by B.

(c) Suppose both B and S, entrant and transactor, to be deceased; here there is presented merely the first and the second case combined; if we concede admissibility for those two cases, it must be conceded for this also.

(3) One more consideration remains to be noted. The supposition in the above cases was that B or S or both were deceased. But suppose, instead, that S, the salesman, teamster, or the like, is otherwise unavailable; is the result to be any different? It need not be. In the language of Chief Justice Shaw, already quoted (ante, § 1521): "The ground is the impossibility of obtaining the testimony, and the cause of such impossibility seems immaterial." Now the ordinary conditions of mercantile and industrial life in some offices do in fact constantly present just such a case of practical impossibility. Suppose an offer of books representing transactions during several months in a large establishment. In the first place, the employees have in many cases changed and the former ones cannot be found; in the next place, it cannot always be ascertained accurately which employee was concerned in each one of the transactions represented by the hundreds of entries; in the third place, even if they could be ascertained, the production of the scores of employees, to attend court and identify in tedious succession the detailed items of transactions would interrupt and derange the work of the establishment, and the evidence would be obtained at a cost practically prohibitory; and finally, the memory of such persons, when summoned, would usually afford little real aid. If unavailability or impossibility is the general principle that controls (ante, § 1521), is not this a real case of unavailability? Having regard to the fact of mercantile and industrial life, it cannot be doubted that it is. In such a case, it should be sufficient if the books were verified on the stand by a supervising officer who knew them to be the books of regular entries kept in that establishment; thus the production on the stand of a regiment of bookkeepers, salesmen, shipping-clerks, teamsters, foremen, or other subordinate employees, should be dispensed with. No doubt much should be left to the discretion of the trial Court; production may be required for cross-examination, where the nature of the controversy seems to require it. But the important thing is to realize that upon principle there is no objection to regarding this situation as rendering in a given case the production of all the persons practically as impossible as in the case of death.

(4) The conclusion is, then, that where an entry is made by one person in the regular course of business, recording an oral or written report, made to him by one or more other persons in the regular course of business, of a transaction lying in the personal knowledge of the latter, there is no objection to receiving that entry under the present Exception, verified by the testimony of the former person only, provided the practical inconvenience of producing on the stand the numerous other persons thus concerned would in the particular case outweigh the probable utility of doing so.

Why should not this conclusion be accepted by the Courts? Such entries are dealt with in that way in the most important undertakings of mercantile and industrial life. They are the ultimate basis of calculation, investment, and general confidence in every business enterprise. Nor does the practical impossibility of obtaining constantly and permanently the verification of every employee affect the trust that is given to such books. It would seem that expedients which the entire commercial world recognizes as safe could be sanctioned, and not discredited, by Courts of justice. When it is a mere question of whether provisional confidence can be placed in a certain class of statements, there cannot profitably and sensibly be one rule for the business world and another for the court-room. The merchant and the manufacturer must not be turned away remediless because methods in which the entire community places a just confidence are a little difficult to reconcile with technical judicial scruples on the part of the same persons who as attorneys have already employed and relied upon the same methods. In short, Courts must here cease to be pedantic and endeavor to be practical.

In the following judicial passages are expounded some of the reasons that have led Courts to sanction the principles here involved:

1853, LUMPKIN, J., in Fielder v. Collier, 13 Ga. 499: "Shall the plaintiffs be compelled to go behind the books thus verified by the clerks who kept them, and resort to each of the sub-agents who participated in the transaction and sale of this produce? Are not the entries thus made in the usual course of the business of this extensive trading establishment, and as a part of the proper employment of the witnesses who prove them, not only the best, but the only reliable evidence which it is practicable to secure? We have no hesitation in holding that propriety, justice, and convenience require it to be admitted. The weighers, wharfingers, and numerous subordinates who handled this cotton kept no books. They report to the clerks who keep the books of the concern, and their functions are performed. It is not reasonable to suppose that they can remember the multitude of transactions thus occurring every day. . . . To impose a different rule upon these establishments, whether at home or abroad, and to require them at all times, within the statutory period of limitations, to be prepared with original 'aliunde' evidence to prove the terms of sale of all the property consigned to them, each item of expense, etc., would trammel commerce and amount to a denial of justice."

1895, THAYER, J., in Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Robson, C. C. A., 69 Fed. 773 (books of camp-scalers; the scalers measured the logs and entered the amounts on cards; each day these cards were copied into the scale-book; inspectors periodically verified them by measuring a portion of the logs sufficient to test the book's accuracy; the scale-book was sent to the log-owner, and payment made by him on the faith of it to the log-cutters; the inspectors testified to the book's correctness; the opinion quotes from the Court below): "'It is said that the camp-scalers should have been hunted up and their testimony introduced. . . . When the scalers made the count and measurement, two records thereof were made, — one in the memory of the scaler, the other in the scale-book. Which is now the best evidence? Years have elapsed. The entries on the scale-book remain unchanged; they are now just what they were when originally made. Can the same be said of the record made upon the memory of the scalers? If the scalers had been produced and had testified that . . . as they now remembered it the number and quantity were so and so, but upon the production of the scale-books they showed a different quantity and measurement, which should control? . . . It cannot be maintained that there is more reliable evidence than the scale-book.' For the reasons so well stated by the trial judge, we entertain no doubt that the scale-books in question were properly received in evidence.' They appear to have been kept under conditions that were calculated to prevent mistakes therein, and to ensure high degree of accuracy. They were also identified by witnesses who were familiar with their contents, and whose special duty it was to see they were properly and accurately kept."

1902, WILKES, J., in Continental National Bank v. First National Bank, 108 Tenn. 374, 68 S. W. 497 (holding a bank's books sufficiently verified by the cashier, without calling the bookkeeper): "We think it not necessary that the bookkeeper who made the entries should be examined as to their correctness. At most he could only testify that the entries made by him are true entries of transactions reported to him by others. In other words, he could only testify that he wrote down what others told him. The Court knows, as a matter of common information, that there are many persons in the employ of banks, and each has his different department, and each transaction passes through the hands of several — it may be, of many — persons. We take a deposit, for instance. It goes into the hands of the receiving teller, thence into the hands of a journal clerk, thence to the individual bookkeeper, or such other officials as perform the functions of these officers. When it reaches the hands of the bookkeeper, who makes the final entry, which stands as the true statement between the bank and depositor, it has gone through the hands of a dozen parties, perhaps; and the last party only records what comes to him through so many hands, and knows nothing, it may be, of the actual transaction. It would seem that the cashier, whose function it is to overlook all transactions at the counter and over the books, and test each transaction through all its stages, would be the person most competent to produce the books and vouch for their accuracy."

1909, HAMMOND, J., in Delaney v. Framingham Gas, Fuel, and Power Co., 202 Mass. 359, 88 N. E. 776 (excluding certain hospital records): "The rule applicable to such records ordinarily is that the entries must be made by a person having personal knowledge of the truthfulness of the statements. . . . And the rule has been adhered to quite generally, except where in the course of the business the clerk making the entry receives his information either orally or in writing from various persons whom he cannot expect to remember and whom it will be impracticable to call. To apply the rule in such a case and to require the evidence of every person in the long line of persons who have had anything to do with the transaction recorded, would be practically impossible, and so as a practical necessity the record is admitted upon the oath of the recorder, if alive, or upon proof of handwriting if he be dead. It is probable that the exception has been carried farther elsewhere than in this State. . . . In the present case the records were produced by the witness Gahagan. It appeared that the records were made by her, and that she was the proper custodian of them. But it further appeared that she never had any personal knowledge of the facts stated therein; that she received slips of paper from Dr. Painter, the physician, and copied them into the record; and that was all she knew about them. The record was offered as evidence to show that the statements therein made were true. As handed to the witness by the physician they were simply statements of the physician as to what the patient had said to him, or as to the diagnosis made by the physician. The records were comparatively recent. It was not shown that the physician was not living and within the jurisdiction of the court. No necessity was shown, therefore, for the introduction of this hearsay testimony. For aught that appeared there was better evidence. Under these circumstances the reason upon which the general rule was based, namely, that the record should be a record of facts of which the writer had personal knowledge, should be applied. The case is not within the above mentioned exception to the general rule."

1917, PRENTIS, J., in French v. Virginian R. Co., 121 Va. 383, 93 S. E. 585: "In this case they [the train sheets] were verified by the claim adjuster, an employe of the defendant company, who testified that he had access to all of the books and records, and that he had obtained the dispatcher's register of trains for Sunday, November 21, 1915, from the division office of the company at Princeton, W. Va. He testified that the register produced was kept by the dispatcher of the said division office from information received by him from other employes of the defendant by telegraph or telephone from stations along its line, and that it was in the handwriting of three men, who were the dispatchers on duty on the said date. So that the question to be determined is whether or not this document was sufficiently verified to justify its admission as evidence. . . .

"The train sheets of a properly operated railroad must be accurately and properly kept by the train dispatchers, or else the lives and property of its passengers, the safety of its employes, and its own property are all imperiled. Indeed, a railway cannot be operated unless the train dispatchers are kept informed as to the location and movements of its trains. Outside of the courtroom no one would question the value of these records, for no other practical method has been devised to prevent collisions. Were these particular train sheets sufficiently identified as the record kept by those whose duty it was to keep them? While they should have been proved by the train dispatchers who kept them, failure to do so affects, not their admissibility, but their credibility, and the vital question is, not by whom they were proved, but whether or not they were the original train sheets. . . . We have here, then, the practical impossibility, on the ground of inconvenience, of producing all the persons who have contributed their knowledge in making up the various entries upon these train sheets, and we also have the circumstantial guaranty of trustworthiness growing out of the fact that the entries were made in the regular performance of duty, and that errors and misstatements in train sheets are almost certain to be promptly detected and to result disastrously. When there is this practical necessity and this circumstantial guaranty of trustworthiness, then such records are admissible, when sufficiently verified. . . . Of course, extreme caution must be exercised by the trial Courts, and no evidence of this character should be admitted, unless the document comes from the proper custody and it is proved that it is a record kept in accordance with the established rule of business, made contemporaneously before the controversy arose, by persons under the very highest duty and responsibility to keep a true record."

(5) The rulings upon the subject are not yet harmonious: (a) There are, first, a number of States accepting with practical completeness the conclusion above reached, i.e. in given cases admitting verified regular entries without requiring the salesmen, time-keepers, or other original observers having personal knowledge, to be produced or accounted for.[2]

[2] CANADA: 1908, Cummings v. Gourlay, 1 Alta. 86 (timber scale-books, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1895, Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Robson, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 805 (see quotation supra); 1898, Northern P. R. Co. v. Keyes, C. C., 91 Fed. 47 (tables of railroad business prepared under direction of general officers by 40 or 50 clerks; officers called, but clerks not called, though available and willing to testify; admitted; good opinion); 1902, Continental Nat'l Bank v. First Nat'l Bank, 108 Tenn. 374, 68 S. W. 497 (bank account books held to be sufficiently verified by the cashier, without calling the bookkeeper; see quotation supra); 1903, United States v. Venable C. Co., C. C., 124 Fed. 267 (a constructing engineer's tables of work and materials, based chiefly on the regular written reports of numerous subordinates, admitted, without calling the latter); 1906, Grundberg v. U. S., 145 Fed. 81, 97 (invoices, ledgers, etc.; principle apparently recognized); 1907, Greene v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 154 Fed. 401, 415 (bank-books showing the accounts of the defendants with the bank, proved by the chief bookkeeper who had no personal knowledge, without calling or accounting for the 13 under-bookkeepers, admitted; Pardee, J., diss.; the majority opinion does not discuss the point); 1909, Reyburn v. Queen City S. B. & T. Co., 3d C. C. A., 171 Fed. 609, 616 (bank entries in the discount register, the discount ledger, and the individual ledger, verified by the clerks in charge, admitted, without calling all persons concerned in the matters recorded; the above principle approved); 1911 Heike v. U. S., C. C. A., 192 Fed. 83 (weighers' records, and "pink books", admitted, affirming 175 Fed. 852); 1913, Wisconsin Steel Co. v. Maryland Steel Co., 7th C. C. A., 203 Fed. 403 (cost of manufacture; workmen marked their job-time on cards; from these the bookkeepers made up the payroll, and sheets distributing the wages-amount paid for each job; from these sheets the account-books were made up; the books, with time-cards, etc., were held admissible, both by Federal common law and under Wis. Stats. §§ 4186–9); 1916, Rutan v. Johnson, 3d C. C. A., 231 Fed. 369, 279 (amount of taxation due; the various entrants being called, except for certain periods when they were absent on vacations, the records were nevertheless held admissible);

(b) There are rulings admitting verified regular entries after a showing

Alabama: 1910, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Sutton, 169 Ala. 389, 55 So. 989 (defendant's trainsheet kept by the operators at stations, recording times of arrival and departure of trains, admitted for the plaintiff without calling the operators, on the testimony of the engineer; the opinion confuses the present principle and those of 'res gestæ' and parties' admissions); 1916, Shirley v. Southern R. Co., 198 Ala. 102, 73 So. 430 (mine payroll, in handwriting of A., out of the State, held admissible without accounting for the other persons making up the roll; citing the above text with approval; liberal opinion by Thomas, J.); 1920, Little v. Thomas, 204 Ala. 66, 85 So. 490 (mortgage payment; ledger of bank, admitted to show payments made; verified by one witness only);

California: 1911, People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 400, 114 Pac. 1009 (bank-books admitted to show that M. was not a depositor); 1920, Patrick v. Tetztaff, — Cal. App. —, 189 Pac. 115 (books of an automobile repair-shop, admitted, without calling the workmen);

Columbia (Dist.): 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 379 (the marshal's office kept a record of measurements of convicted persons, the clerk writing down the measurement as called out by the subordinate taking it; the clerk C. alone was called; Cox, J.: "It was said that it was hearsay on the part of Carroll, because he did not take the measurement. . . . In a complicated transaction in which two persons participate, we do not think it is essential that each one should have personal knowledge of all the steps in the transaction. For example, a merchant in his store selling goods calls out the price and the character of his goods, and his clerk writes them down; that is in the regular course of business; and it would not be necessary that the clerk should follow the merchant around and have a personal knowledge of all that passed between him and his customer");

Georgia: 1853, Fielder v. Collier, 13 Ga. 496, 499 (see quotation supra); 1880, Schaefer v. R. Co., 66 id. 39, 43 (witness making records of receipts and shipments of cotton by his subordinates in the office; admitted, without accounting for the others, on the ground of public convenience; following Fielder v. Collier);

Illinois: 1896, Chisholm v. Machine Co., 160 Ill. 101, 43 N. E. 796 (workmen made out time-slips of work done, foremen examined and checked them, and bookkeepers entered them in time-books, errors being checked and corrected throughout; the bookkeepers testified to the correctness of the books, and the foremen the slips, but not the workmen; the books were held admissible); 1907, Cooke v. People, 231 Ill. 9, 82 N. E. 863 (to show deposits to the defendant's account, the books of a bank were admitted, verified by the cashier, who had not personally made them; here the bank had ceased doing business, and the different clerks and bookkeepers "were not at the time of the trial in the employ of the bank, but were living in different places, many of them being in foreign States"; following Chisholm v. Machine Co., supra); 1908, Richardson Fueling Co. v. Seymour, 235 Ill. 319, 85 N. E. 496 (delivery-book of a tugboat captain, verified by him, admitted; the wheelbarrow-loads were checked off by him, or by "some one else", in which case he "got a ticket signed by some one on the boat"; the delivery tickets had been lost); 1909, Pittsburg C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Chicago, 242 Ill. 178, 89 N. E. 1022 (destruction of numerous freight-cars by a mob; issue as to their loads and contents; reports of arrival etc. of cars, made up in parts from various employees' reports, verified by the clerk who transcribed them and the conductors who handed in the originals, the originals being destroyed in course of business, admitted under the circumstances);

Iowa: 1922, Farmers Nat'l Bank v. Pratt, — Ia. —, 186 N. W. 924 (false representatives; book entries testified to by the bookkeeper, admitted without calling other participants); Kansas: 1904, State v. Stephenson, 69 Kan. 405, 76 Pac. 905 (ledger verified by the bookkeeper, admitted, without calling salesmen, shipping clerks, etc.);

Kentucky: 1906, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, 122 Ky. 256, 91 S. W. 691 (train-movements at M., allowed to be evidenced by the trainsheet record of the train-dispatcher at E., based chiefly on telegraphic reports from others, but verified on the stand by the train-dispatcher as a correct record, without calling the various employees making the reports; lucid and forceful opinion by O'Rear, J., one of the best on the subject);

Maine: 1907, Madunkeunk D. & I. Co. v. Allen C. Co., 102 Me. 257, 66 Atl. 537 (logging scale-book, made up by an assistant, used by the surveyor, without calling the assistant);

Massachusetts: The bizarre piece of patchwork legislation in 1913, quoted ante, § 1519, was probably meant to affect this topic: 1893, Donovan v. R. Co., 158 Mass. 450, 452, 33 N. E. 583 (trainsheet, made up by combined reports of operators at various stations, and showing whereabouts of trains; received on verification by the collector, without accounting for operators); 1909, Delaney v. F. G. F. & P. Co., 202 Mass. 359, 88 N. E. 776 (quoted supra); 1916, Bradford v. Boston & M. R. Co., 225 Mass. 129, 113 N. E. 1042 (fire set by defendant's locomotives; the train-dispatcher's testimony, verifying a record based on telegrams from station agents, admitted); that the original observer was deceased; possibly absence from the jurisdiction, insanity, or the like, would equally have sufficed.[3]

Montana: 1920, Smith v. Sullivan, 58 Mont.

77, 190 Pac. 288 (services rendered by the plaintiff owing a repair-garage; his books were kept by a bookkeeper, who made up loose-leaf ledger accounts from the time-cards filed by the mechanics; held admissible, on testimony of the bookkeeper, without calling or accounting for the mechanics; citing and accepting the full principle of the text above; liberal opinion, per Holloway, J.);
North Carolina: 1905, Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Seaboard A. L. Co., 138 N. C. 42, 50 S. E. 452 (time of arrival of a train at H.; the trainsheet, verified by the train-dispatcher at R., admitted, without calling the operator at H. who reported the arrival; one of the best modern opinions, by Connor, J.); 1908, Jones v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 148 N. C. 449, 62 S. E. 521 (conductor's train record, not admitted to show condition of stock, solely because the conductor himself was not offered);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7909 (quoted ante, § 1519);
Ohio: 1919, Leonard v. State, 100 Oh. 456, 127 N. E. 464 (cold storage; exhibits verified by an auditor, showing receipts and deliveries, admitted on the facts);
Pennsylvania: 1904, Wells Whip Co. v. Tanners' M. F. Ins. Co., 209 Pa. 488, 58 Atl. 894 (testimony to the amount of a stock of goods, by the secretary of the company, based on an inventory compiled in part by clerks, received without calling the clerks);
Texas: 1906, Pelican Lumber Co. v. Johnson, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 6, 98 S. W. 207 (a secretary-manager allowed to testify that the books were to his own knowledge correct, though he was not the bookkeeper making the entries and the bookkeeper was not called);
Vermont: 1916, Squires v. O'Connell, 91 Vt. 35, 99 Atl. 268 (services in cutting lumber; a book of entries made in part from tallies reported by C., admitted, C. being absent from the State, on the above principle);
Virginia: 1917, French v. Virginian R. Co., 121 Va. 383, 93 S. E. 585 (timber burned by fire set by defendant's locomotive; to show the passage of a train, the trainsheet made up by train-dispatchers from station agents, was admitted, though verified only by the claim adjuster, not the train dispatcher; quoted supra);
Wisconsin: 1897, Dohmen Co. v. Ins. Co., 96 Wis. 38, 71 N. W. 69 (to show the amount of goods on hand, a set of books properly verified by the bookkeeper and the manager of the business, held admissible, though neither has actual knowledge of the specific transactions; the opinion specifies in full certain conditions, and is worth careful reading); Stats. 1919, § 4189 (quoted ante, § 1519).

[3] ENGLAND: 1899, R. v. Dexter, 19 Cox Cr. 360 (a witness, who was a solicitor, had had interviews with the accused, and had after each interview dictated to his stenographer an account of what was said, and the stenographer had written out the notes in longhand; the solicitor had within three weeks after such interview gone over the notes and could say that he believed them correct; the stenographer was now in New Zealand; Grantham, J., allowed the solicitor to use the notes, saying that "the shorthand clerk is his 'alter ego'"; but the opinion pays no attention to the distinction between the two kinds of recollection, and rests in part on the circumstance that the solicitor had himself verified the notes within a short time after taking, thus invoking the principle of § 748, ante).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1896, American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 18 C. C. A. 644, 72 Fed. 470 (a ledger of receipts and payments kept by the bookkeeper of a bank, from checks and deposit-tags handed him by the teller, and representing the moneys received and paid out by the teller; the teller being dead, the bookkeeper verified his entries, which were received to show the amounts received and paid out by the teller); Arkansas: 1897, Stanley v. Wilkerson, 63 Ark. 556, 39 S. W. 1043 (salesmen's books were burned and the salesmen deceased; journal and ledger copies, verified by the bookkeepers, were admitted);
Michigan: 1902, Meyer v. Brown, 130 Mich. 449, 90 N. W. 285 (record of car-weights, testified to by the weighmaster, admitted without calling the weigher, the original card being lost and the weigher's identity impossible to ascertain); Missouri: 1920, Dameron v. Harris, 281 Mo. 247, 219 S. W. 954 (entries made by other persons in the deceased proprietor's presence and under his orders, admitted as his, the entrants testifying); New Hampshire: 1917, Roberts v. Claremont Power Co., 78 N. H. 491, 102 Atl. 537 (pollution of a river; certain sales sheets were prepared by H. on reports from others, one of whom was dead and the others out of the jurisdiction; admitted; careful opinion by Peaslee, J.);
New York: 1920, Shmargon v. Rosenstein, App. Div. 182 N. Y. Suppl. 343 (goods supplied; plaintiff's books kept by three clerks, held improperly admitted on the testimony of one only); North Dakota: 1916, Northern Trust Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 33 N. D. 1, 156 N. W. 212 (county account-books, proved by the deputy treasurer, the treasurer being in the penitentiary, admitted); Tennessee: 1823, McNeill v. Elam, Peck Tenn. 268 (deceased notary made protests and notices, and his daughter entered them under his instructions; admitted; whether the daughter was called does not appear); Vermont: 1913, Griffin v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 87 Vt. 278, 89 Atl. 220 (train registers kept at stations,

(c) There are rulings excluding such entries because the original observer was in no way accounted for, or declaring that he must be produced, without deciding what excuse, if any, for non-production would suffice.[4]

the entries made by the conductor of each train as it passed, offered to show who was the engineer on a certain train on certain days; the conductors were called, except one, and he was proved to be unable by illness to attend; held admissible not only as "confirmatory" evidence for the witnesses who testified, but as "independent" evidence); West Virginia: 1911, West Virginia Architects & Builders v. Stewart, 68 W. Va. 506, 70 S. E. 113 (bookkeeper's entries of labor in performance of a contract, based on reports from M., the corporation president, and W. the foreman; M. the bookkeeper testified; M. was offered as a witness but was disqualified as an interested survivor; W. was not called; held, that the entries were admissible; quoting the principle of the text above).

[4] CANADA: N. Br. 1869, Leslie v. Hanson, 1 Han. N. Br. 263 (book made from numbers marked by different persons on logs sawn, not admitted, in the absence of satisfactory testimony from all the persons who had measured and marked the logs); Que. 1913, Canadian Pacific R. Co. v. Quinn, 11 D. L. R. 600 (hospital chart of the plaintiff's case, verified by the nurse-superintendent and one other nurse, but containing entries by a nurse not called and not available, held not admissible on the facts; the opinion shows no familiarity with the subject).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1894, The Norma, 15 C. C. A. 553, 68 Fed. 509 (foreman and bookkeeper); 1911, Southern R. Co. v. Mooresville C. Mills, C. C. A., 187 Fed. 72 (chief freight clerk's memorandum of a weighing not personally known to him, excluded); 1921, Crowell v. Panhandle G. & El. Co., 8th C. C. A., 271 Fed. 129 (R.'s record of freight-samples, based on reports of subordinates not called, excluded; unsound);
Alabama: 1919, Loveman Joseph & Loeb v. McQueen, 203 Ala. 280, 82 So. 530 (loose-leaf ledger transcribed by bookkeepers from salesmen's slips; two bookkeepers testified, two could not be found, and one was ill; the salesmen were not produced nor accounted for; held that Code 1907, § 4003, required the salesmen to be produced or accounted for; but "we approve the reasoning . . . of the modern decisions" which apart from statute do not require this);
Arizona: 1906, Matko v. Daley, 10 Ariz. 175, 85 Pac. 721 (certain pay-rolls, in part kept by a former paymaster not accounted for, excluded);
California: 1899, Butler v. Estrella R. V. Co., 124 Cal. 239, 56 Pac. 1040 (salesbooks kept by witness from report of manager not called, excluded);
Georgia: 1902, Whitley Grocery Co. v. Roach, 115 Ga. 918, 42 S. E. 282 (an inventory made by three persons, one or two examining the articles and one or two entering the items, but only two of the three testifying, held not admissible); 1902, Meadows v. Frost, 115 Ga. 1002, 42 S. E. 390 (books kept by one who merely copied slips handed to her by another person not called, held inadmissible);
Illinois: 1898, Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey, 173 Ill. 169, 50 N. E. 713 (book kept by a desk-sergeant of police made from reports of accidents by other policemen based on hearsay, excluded; probably correctly, because the policemen themselves had not personal knowledge);
Iowa: 1905, Monarch Mfg. Co. v. Omaha, C. B. & S. R. Co., 127 Ia. 511, 103 N. W. 493 (weather records, kept by a railroad, but not verified by the agent in charge at the time in issue, excluded; opinion obscure, and erroneous on principle, though correct on the facts);
Kentucky: 1909, Fidelity & D. Co. v. Champion I. M. & C. S. Co., 133 Ky. 74, 117 S. W. 393 (a storage company's employee entered the names of the depositors, but not the amounts received from them; these sums he embezzled; to prove the amount embezzled, in an action against the surety company, the storage company offered a witness who had taken the list of some one hundred depositors, visited each one, heard their statements of the sum paid by each, and then prepared a list of these items; this list, as verified by that witness, held inadmissible; theoretically correct, practically unsound, because the amount was virtually undisputed);
Louisiana: 1857, White v. Wilkinson, 12 La. An. 360 (bookkeeper and salesman; apparently oral reports by the latter);
Massachusetts: 1905, Gould v. Hartley, 187 Mass. 561, 73 N. E. 656 (bill for cigars, liquor, etc.; the plaintiff offered an original book, sworn to by the clerk keeping it, and made up by him from tickets punched by a registering machine operated by the salesman, who sent the tickets to the clerk, who made up the entries; neither the tickets nor the salesman were produced; excluded; thus the Court refused a plain opportunity to make a liberal and safe application of the principle to modern business methods); 1909, Delaney v. Framingham G. F. & P. Co., 202 Mass. 359, 88 N. E. 773 (certain hospital records of medical cases, made by a clerk testifying but based on slips handed to her by a specific physician who was not shown to be unavailable, excluded: otherwise, perhaps, where the entrant clerk receives the information "from various persons whom he cannot expect to remember and

(d) Finally, a few rulings inexorably exclude such entries even where the original observer is accounted for as absent from the jurisdiction, or the like,[5] i.e. declining to excuse his non-production on such grounds, and thus inconsistent with the general principle (ante, § 1521).

(6) A similar question is presented for parties' books (post, § 1555).

whom it will be impracticable to call"); St. 1905, c. 330, as now embodied in Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 79 (certain hospital records to be admissible; quoted post, § 1707); 1913, Butcher's S. & M. Ass'n v. Boston, 214 Mass. 254, 101 N. E. 426 (drawtenders' official record of vessels passing, not admissible so far as founded on reports of substitute drawtenders; see post, § 1635); 1917, Rhoades v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 227 Mass. 138, 116 N. E. 244 (death of employee; on the issue of interstate commerce, to evidence interstate shipment, the express messenger's testimony to a book made up by him from waybills, etc., on the packages, held not admissible: this is unsound, from any point of view);
Michigan: Swan v. Thurman, 112 Mich. 416, 70 N. W. 1023 (books testified to by a bookkeeper, who made the entries upon the salesmen's reports; excluded, as not founded upon personal knowledge);
Minnesota: 1901, Carlton v. Carey, 83 Minn. 232, 86 N. W. 85 (book made up by A on information furnished by memoranda from a workman B, excluded, as not based on personal knowledge; but here neither A nor B was called or shown to be unavailable); 1903, Price v. Standard L. & A. Ins. Co., — id. —, 95 N. W. 1118 (hospital register, with entries by a superintendent based on reports of a physician, but verified by the former only, without calling the latter, excluded);
Missouri: 1906, Einstein v. Holladay K. L. & L. Co., 118 Mo. App. 184, 94 S. W. 296 (abstracts of title, made partly by S. and partly by K., but verified by S. only, excluded);
Montana: 1921, Gallatin Co. Farmers' Alliance v. Flannery, 59 Mont. 534, 197 Pac. 996 (chief bookkeeper, making only a few of the entries, and bookkeeper making most of them, on reports from men at the grain elevators; the chief bookkeeper only being called, held that the other bookkeeper should have been called also);
New Hampshire: 1920, Mason v. Dover S. & R. St. R. Co., 79 N. H. 300, 109 Atl. 841 (record of street lights, kept by persons not named nor produced nor accounted for, excluded);
New Jersey: 1896, New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. L. Z. & I. Co., 59 N. J. L. 189, 35 Atl. 915 (bookkeeper's entries of deliveries of which he knew nothing, excluded);
New York: 1886, Mayor of New York v. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 572, 7 N. E. 905 (sub-foreman's oral reports to foreman);
North Dakota: 1916, Starke v. Stewart, 33 N. D. 359, 157 N. W. 302 (goods sold; receiver's books not proved by any one having personal knowledge, excluded);
Oklahoma: 1909, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Davis, 24 Okl. 677, 104 Pac. 34 (stockyards book of stock deliveries, kept by a clerk on reports from the foreman and other persons; the foreman alone was offered, and the clerk was not accounted for; held that the present principle was not applicable, and also that under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. Stats. 1903, § 4574, the clerk must be accounted for);
Oregon: 1905, Manchester Assur. Co. v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 46 Or. 152, 79 Pac. 60 (shop-book record of engine inspections, by E. and W. and a clerk; semble, the testimony of all three required; opinion confused);
Pennsylvania: 1918, Caffery v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 261 Pa. 251, 104 Atl. 569 (personal injury; photographer's record, verified by the manager, but not by the operator who was unaccounted for, excluded);
Vermont: 1911, Coolidge v. Taylor, 85 Vt. 39, 80 Atl. 1038 (to prove the delivery of milk to T., a book of entries of such delivery, verified on the stand by the company's secretary, who transcribed them from the delivery-clerk's daily memoranda, was excluded, because the secretary had no personal knowledge and the delivery-clerk was not called nor accounted for); 1913, Osborne v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 87 Vt. 104, 88 Atl. 512 (hospital record; one of the entrant nurses testifying, but the others being unaccounted for, it was excluded);
Virginia: 1919, Lavenstein Bros. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 125 Va. 191, 99 S. E. 579 (insurance policy; whether plaintiff's inventory was admissible on the present principle, not decided);
Washington: 1894, Tingley v. Land Co., 9 Wash. 34, 42, 36 Pac. 1098 (entries in book made by witness from memoranda partly by scalers of logs, excluded); West Virginia: 1922, Woodrum H. O. Co. v. Adams Exp. Co., — W. Va. —, 110 S. E. 549 (delivery of goods to a carrier).

[5] 1894, Chicago Lumbering Co. v. Hewitt, 12 C. C. A. 129, 64 Fed. 314 (tallies of logs reported in writing by F., copied by M.; F. had disappeared, through what the Court considered the negligence of the party offering the books); 1854, Kent v. Garvin, 1 Gray Mass. 150 (drayman orally reporting to clerk, the former being in California).

For the same question arising for parties' books, see post, § 1555; the cases are not usually discriminated, and indeed involve the same principle.

(7) Hospital records of a patient's treatment often involve the present principle, and have frequently been excluded in consequence.[6] But in view of the special circumstances which involve their preparation and use, they have in some States been given (as they should be) by legislation a special status, and thus form an exception of their own (post, § 1707).

(8) Bankers' books (post, § 1683) and corporation-books (ante, § 1074) have also been given a special legislative status.

(9) A common carrier's records stand on no better and no worse footing at common law than any other person's business-records; if the entries satisfy the conditions of the present principle on the facts as shown, they become admissible, but not otherwise. However, in an issue where the carrier is a disinterested third person there is good practical reason for dispensing with any showing of the necessary conditions; the presumption being that a common carrier's records are ordinarily of the composite character that would satisfy the present principle. If such an application of it be made, it should admit a common carrier's records of consignment, carriage, and delivery, in all manner of litigated issues.

Thus far the only application of it is confined to shipments of intoxicating liquors. Under the modern prohibitory legislation, the records of a railroad or express carrier have been made admissible, without calling the various employees whose personal knowledge goes to make up the entries.[7] Legislation 'ad hoc', changing settled rules of procedure in the zealous pursuit of a particular measure, is seldom wise; moreover, it is a mark of unbalanced judgment to deem a liquor-offence more urgent for speedy and practicable proof than the offences of anarchists, thugs, plunderers, forgers, and cheats. But in this case the rule of Evidence adopted is one that merits wider extension.

§ 1531. Form or Language of the Entry; Impeaching the Entrant's Credit. Apart from the general rule, already dealt with (ante, § 1528), that the statement must be in writing, there is no limitation as to the mode of written expression. Any mark or sign that is interpretable as having a definite meaning will suffice.[1] The absence of an entry, where an entry would naturally have been made if a transaction had occurred, should ordinarily be equivalent to an assertion that no such transaction occurred, and therefore should be admissible in evidence for that purpose;[2] the same question arises for other kinds of evidence (post, §§ 1556, 1639).

The rules for impeaching the credit of the entrant would presumably be those accepted for parties' books (post, § 1557).

[6] Cases cited supra, notes 2 to 5.

[7] The authorities are collected post, § 1708.

§ 1531. [1] 1833, North Bank v. Abbot, 13 Pick. 471. Compare the same principle applied to parties' books, post, § 1556.

[2] 1886. Bridgewater v. Roxbury, 54 Conn. 217, 6 Atl. 415 (said obiter); 1896, State v. McCormick, 57 Kan. 440, 46 Pac. 777 (a book of depositors, admitted to show that J. was not a depositer); 1901, Bastrop State Bank v. Levy, 106 La. 586, 31 So. 164 (bank's deposit-entries, held evidence that no other sums than there recorded had been received by it). Contra: 1903, Vandyke v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 71 S. W. 441 ("usually admitted only as affirmative evidence"); 1860, Sanborn v. Ins. Co., 16 Gray 448, 452, 455 (absence of an entry in a risk-book regularly kept, not received to show that the contract was not made).

§ 1532. Production of Original Book. The general rule requiring the production of the original of a writing (ante, § 1179), applies no less to entries offered under this Exception than to other writings;[1] but the rule is of course satisfied where the original is accounted for as lost or otherwise unavailable.[2] As between different kinds of account-books, — a ledger, a journal, and the like, — the question will arise which of them is to be considered as the original; and upon this point the rule developed for parties' books (post, § 1558) would presumably be regarded as here applicable.

§ 1533. Opinion Rule. The Opinion rule (post, § 1917) doubtless applies in theory to this class of testimonial evidence as to others.[1] But as the entrant is not before the Court, being deceased or otherwise unavailable, the rule will usually not properly exclude the entry, since (as already noted for Dying Declarations, ante, § 1447) there is no opportunity by questions to obtain from the witness the data of bare facts separated from his inference or opinion thereon. To apply the much misused Opinion rule in this connection can hardly ever be justified.

B. Parties' Account-Books

§ 1536. In General. The history (ante, § 1518) of that branch of the Exception which admits parties' account-books or shop-books gave to it a development and a series of precedents distinct from that of the general Exception. Nevertheless, the principles upon which this branch was developed in the Courts of the United States show equally a recognition of the two traditional features of hearsay exceptions in general, namely, the Necessity principle (ante, 1431), and the Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness (ante, § 1422). The application of the principle of necessity lay in this, that since a party was disqualified as a witness for himself, and since in certain classes of transactions he was thus totally without evidence obtainable from others, certain past statements of his must be admitted by very necessity. Moreover, his own shop-books were regarded as being more or less trustworthy, for reasons analogous to those already examined (ante, § 1522). Thus, the principle of necessity and the principle of a circumstantial guarantee were both recognized; and the case stood on the ordinary footing of an exception to the Hearsay rule, without reference to other specific exceptions.

§ 1532. [1] Can. 1908, Cummings v. Gourlay, 1 Alta. 86 (ledger entries made from scale-books; doubted); 1909, Claudet v. Golden Giant Mines, 15 Br. C. 13 (copy of minutes of directors' meeting kept by deceased secretary, excluded on the facts); U. S. 1859, Churchill v. Fulliam, 8 Ia. 45; 1879, Peck v. Parchen, 52 Ia. 46, 54, 2 N. W. 597; 1826, Herring v. Levy, 4 Mart. N. S. La. 386.

So also the rule (post, § 2129) requiring the genuineness of the book or entries to be evidenced: 1906, Nolan v. Salas, 7 P. I. 1 (applying C. C. P. § 378).

[2] 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 135 (original jurisdiction); 1831, Holmes v. Marsden, 12 Pick. Mass. 171 (original burned); 1905, Manchester Assur. Co. v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 46 Or. 162, 79 Pac. 60; 1896, Rigby v. Logan, 45 S. C. 651, 24 S. E. 56 (ledger admitted, the original entry being burned).

Consult the rules and citations ante, §§ 1192–1230.

§ 1533. [1] 1888, Bradford v. S. S. Co., 147 Mass. 57, 16 N. E. 719 (report of an appraiser, made in the regular course of employment, stating the amount of damage, excluded).

When parties were made competent, on their own behalf, a main reason — the necessity — disappeared; but the form of the rule was established before this change was made; and its limitations can therefore be understood only by keeping in mind that the original attitude of the Courts in establishing it was precisely analogous to their attitude towards other Hearsay exceptions.

It may be noted here that in a few jurisdictions this branch of the Exception was never judicially recognized,[1] apart from modern statutes.

1. The Necessity Principle

§ 1537. Nature of the Necessity. The foundation of the admission of parties' shop-books or account-books in the United States was a necessity, resting in two circumstances; first, the disqualification of the party to take the stand as a witness, and, secondly, the conditions of mercantile and industrial life in the early days, which left the party generally without other evidence than his own statements in the books. This appears in the language of the judges in all the jurisdictions and epochs; and the specific rules of limitation grew directly out of this living principle:[1]

1808, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Starrett v. Bull, 1 Binn. 237: "In consideration of the mode of doing business in the infancy of the country, when many people kept their own books, it has been permitted from the necessity of the case to offer these books in evidence. . . . No such necessity exists when the fact is that clerks have been employed and the entries made by them."

1810, SWIFT, C. J., Conn., Evidence, 81: "The provision of the statute is grounded on the necessity of the thing; for in many instances it would be very difficult to obtain other or better proof."

1816, PARKER, C. J., in Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 427: "[The exception] is necessary for the security of tradesmen and small dealers, who are generally unable to support clerks on whose testimony they might establish their claims."

1838, HITCHCOCK, J., in Cram v. Spear, 8 Hamm. 497: "The mischief to be remedied was the extreme difficulty, and in many cases the utter impossibility of proving the quantity, quality, or delivery of articles passing from one person to another upon credit and which are ordinarily charged upon book. The merchant does not always keep a clerk by whom this proof could be made; the farmer or mechanic rarely if ever. Hence the necessity of the statute."

1882, DEVENS, J., in Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 477: "It has been sanctioned as an exception to the general rule of law, as it formerly existed, that a party should not be a witness in his own cause, and from supposed necessity in order to prevent a failure of justice, that he shall be allowed to produce the record of his daily transactions, to many of which, on account of their variety and minuteness, it cannot be expected there will be witnesses."

1892, ANDREWS, J., in Smith v. Rentz, 131 N. Y. 169, 30 N. E. 54: "It was founded upon a supposed necessity, and was intended for small traders who kept no clerks."

§ 1536. [1] Ala. 1842, Nolley v. Holmes, 3 Ala. 642; 1845, Grant v. Cole, 8 Ala. 521; 1846, Turnipseed v. Goodwin, 9 Ala. 378; 1873, Avery's Ex'rs v. Avery, 49 Ala. 195; Fla. 1852, Higgs v. Shehee, 4 Fla. 385; Ind. 1836, De Camp v. Vandegrift, 4 Blackf. 272; La. 1844, Martinstein v. Creditors, 8 Rob. 8; Md. 1833, Owings v. Low, 5 G. & J. 142; Mo. 1855, Hissrick v. McPherson, 20 Mo. 310.

§ 1537. [1] Accord: 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 575; 1825, Beach v. Mills, 5 Conn. 496; 1832, Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 348; 1833, Dunn v. Whitney, 10 Me. 14; 1852, Cole v. Dial, 8 Tex. 349.

What, then, were the specific rules of limitation growing out of this principle of necessity?

§ 1538. Not admissible where a Clerk was Kept. The party must have been his own bookkeeper;[1] moreover he must have had no clerk helping him;[2] for if he had, the clerk could be called if living, or, if deceased, his book-entry could be used.

This limitation has been enforced even in modern times. But the tendency has been to lose sight of it, — a result partly due to the legislation on the subject (ante, § 1519), which in many jurisdictions has expressly provided in the same statutory passage for the admission of a party's books and also of books kept by a deceased clerk. Now the entries of a clerk were already admissible at common law, either as memoranda of a past recollection verified by the clerk on the stand (ante, § 745), or, the clerk being deceased or otherwise unavailable, as regular entries in the course of business, under the main Exception just treated (ante, §§ 1521–1529). The result, then, of the statutory enactments, so far as entries by a clerk are effected, is left uncertain. Either it may be thought that the statute merely sanctioned in part the common-law exception for regular entries by a deceased person; or it may be thought that the statute abolished for parties' books the limitation to persons having no clerk and acting as their own bookkeepers. The latter would be the more natural inference, and would involve less doubt and confusion as to the effect of the change.[3] Nevertheless, the limitation in some statutes to clerks deceased or absent is inconsistent with this interpretation.

The truth is that the statutory enactments often leave it impossible to say what is the precise significance of the change. It hardly matters, for the books of the clerk, living or dead, are available in any event, in the modes above noted.

§ 1539. Not admissible for Cash Payments or Loans. On the same prin-

§ 1538. [1] 1871, Kerr v. Stivers, 34 Ia. 125. Contra: 1882, McGolderick v. Traphagen, 88 N. Y. 334, 338 (lack of a "clerk" does not mean lack of a mere bookkeeper, but of "one who had something to do with and had knowledge generally of the business of his employer with reference to goods sold or work done, so that he could testify on that subject, . . . and thus is able to prove an account"; two judges diss.).

[2] Cal. 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 576; 1886, Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 Cal. 32, 11 Pac. 811; Mich. 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 481; Ill. 1841, Boyer v. Sweet, 3 Scam. 122; 1859, Waggeman v. Peters, 22 Ill. 42, semble; 1869, Ruggles v. Gatton, 50 Ill. 416; Me. 1833, Dunn v. Whitney, 10 Me. 14; N. M. 1910, Radcliffe v. Chavez, 15 N. M. 258, 110 Pac. 699 (a wife held not a clerk); N. Y. 1815, Vosburgh v. Thayer, 12 John. 461; 1834, Linnell v. Sutherland, 11 Wend. 568; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 74; 1900, Smith v. Smith, 163 N. Y. 168, 57 N. E. 300 (but a wife is not a clerk).

Contra, semble: 1831, Martin v. Fyffe, Dudley Ga. 16; 1907, Hinkle v. Smith, 127 Ga. 437, 56 S. E. 464.

In the following cases entries actually made by clerks were treated as the party's: 1845, Littlefield v. Rice, 10 Metc. Mass. 209; 1834, Rhoads v. Gaul, 4 Rawle Pa. 407; 1841, Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 439.

Of course if there is a clerk, who made the entries, he may take the stand and use them as his own memoranda of recollection; 1853, Humphreys v. Spear, 15 Ill. 275; and cases cited post, § 1561.

[3] 1892, House v. Beak, 141 Ill. 290, 297, 30 N. E. 1065 ("It was not the intention of the statute to prohibit the introduction in evidence of books of account kept by a clerk", if living in the State and able to testify); 1910, Radcliffe v. Chavez, 15 N. M. 258, 110 Pac. 699 (not decided; noting prior inconsistent rulings).

Compare § 1561, post.

ciple of necessity, it was usually held that entries of cash payments or loans could not be used; because notes or receipts would have been or ought to have been taken, and thus other evidence would be extant:[1]

1852, POTTS, J., in Inslee v. Prall's Executor, 23 N. J. L. 463 (rejecting a series of cash entries): "We must endeavor to solve the question by a resort to first principles. . . . The consideration of necessity introduced the rule in reference to the admission of books of account. . . . I hold, first, that there is not and never was a necessity for making books of entry evidence of the payment or the lending of money. There is no such great and overruling amount of inconvenience in requiring that men should take a receipt for money when they pay it, or a note or memorandum for money when they lend it, as that the safe, sound principle of legal evidence should be overturned on account of it. It is the ordinary mode in which all careful, prudent men transact such business."

Nevertheless, a few Courts, while applying the same principle, have regarded it as leading to the opposite result, i.e. they have thought that there is as much necessity for admitting cash entries as for admitting others:[2]

1858, LUMPKIN, J., in Ganahl v. Shore, 24 Ga. 24: "In the nature of things no such principle can be maintained. . . . The business of banking is confined almost entirely to money items; so of the books of factors and commission merchants; so of brokers. Large pecuniary advances are made by commission houses to planters, in anticipation of crops; the customer sends an order for a thousand dollars; it is forwarded and charged to the planter's account; true, the factor has the written order, but the cash advanced depends upon the evidence of his books. Whatever doctrine may have obtained formerly upon this subject, the world is too much in a whirl, there is too much to be done in the twenty-four hours now, to allow of the particularity and consequent delay in the obtaining of receipts, etc. . . . He that so affirms [the rejection of money items] is half a century behind the age in which he lives; and to get up with it, he must forget the things that are behind, and press forward, for it will never stop or come back to him."

1822, KIRKPATRICK, C. J., in Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Halst. 99: "Upon principle I can see no reason why a book should be lawful evidence of one item and not of another; why it § 1539. [1] Accord: 1861, Bank v. Plannett, 37 Ala. 222, 226 (excluded, where the bank's custom was "to pay out moneys on the checks of its depositors, and not otherwise"); 1899, Harrold v. Smith, 107 Ga. 849, 33 S. E. 640; 1851, Brannin v. Force's Adm'rs, 12 B. Monr. 509; 1904, Galbraith v. Starks, 117 Ky. 915, 79 S. W. 1191; 1904, Proctor v. Proctor's Adm'r, 118 Ky. 474, 81 S. W. 272; 1906, Clark v. Clark, 122 Ky. 145, 91 S. W. 284; 1901, Waldron v. Priest, 96 Me. 36, 51 Atl. 235 (lawyer's office docket, with entry of payment); 1887, Oberg v. Breen, 50 N. J. L. 145, 12 Atl. 203; 1898, Hauser v. Leviness, 62 N. J. L. 518, 41 Atl. 725; 1892, Smith v. Rentz, 131 N. Y. 169, 30 N. E. 54; 1794, Ducoign v. Schreppel, 1 Yeates 347; 1819, Juniata Bank v. Brown, 5 S. & R. 231; 1912, Wells v. Hays, 93 S. C. 168, 76 S. E. 195; 1905, Lewis v. England, 14 Wyo. 128, 82 Pac. 869 (loan items, admitted).

Accord: without giving a reason: 1857, Le Franc v. Hewitt, 7 Cal. 186; 1841, Boyer v. Sweet, 3 Scam. 122; 1863, Ruggles v. Gatton, 50 Ill. 416; 1862, Maine v. Harper, 4 All. 115.

In Massachusetts, Maine, and New Hampshire, cash entries of amounts above 40*s.* or $6.66 are excluded: 1901, Waldron v. Priest, 96 Me. 36, 51 Atl. 235; 1825, Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. 109; 1833, Burns v. Fay, 14 Pick. 12; 1840, Bassett v. Spofford, 11 N. H. 267; 1860, Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 158. So too in Wisconsin, for amounts over $5: 1903, Brown v. Warner, 116 Wis. 358, 93 N. W. 17.

[2] Admitted: 1887, Hancock v. Kelly, 81 Ala. 368, 2 So. 281 (entries of the drawing of a bill of exchange and its payment, admitted); 1893, Peck v. Pierce, 63 Conn. 310, 313, 28 Atl. 524; 1918, Stockwell v. Stockwell's Estate, — Conn. —, 105 Atl. 30 (loans); 1869, Taliaferro v. Ives, 51 Ill. 247 (books admitted to show "how he had paid the notes"); 1907, Cooke v. People, 231 Ill. 9, 82 N. E. 863 (books, deposit-entries of a bank, verified by the cashier, admitted); 1912, Levi v. Levi, 156 Ia. 297, 136 N. W. 696; 1902, Stephen v. Metzger, 95 Mo. App. 609, 69 S. W. 625; 1893, Gleason v. Kinney, 65 Vt. 560, 563, 27 Atl. 208; 1896, Hay v. Peterson, 6 Wyo. 419, 45 Pac. 1073.

should be evidence of goods sold and delivered, and not of money paid or advanced. Why should there be witnesses called or receipts taken in the one case more than in the other? If necessity be pleaded for the one, may it not be for the other also? For they are both transactions in the common course of business, equally necessary and, I should think, equally frequent or nearly so."

In many Courts, the use of cash entries is commonly considered, not from the present point of view, but from that of the principle of regularity in the course of business; and cash entries are admitted or excluded according as they are thought to fulfil that principle or not (post, § 1549).

§ 1540. Not admissible for Goods delivered to Others on the Defendant's Credit. Entries of goods delivered to third persons but charged to the defendant as the guarantor or the principal, and, in general, entries of a guaranty by the defendant, cannot be used; for the third person's evidence is available and there is no necessity for a resort to the books.[1]

§ 1541. Not admissible for Terms of Special Contract. Where there were special terms to the contract, the entry cannot be used, because there would usually be a writing between the parties, containing the terms of the special contract and the book-entry would be unnecessary.[1]

§ 1542. Not admissible in Certain Occupations. The principle of necessity may, by the nature of the occupation, exclude entirely books in certain occupations. Thus, a schoolmaster's books have been excluded:

§ 1540. [1] Colo. 1915, Young v. U. S. Bank & Trust Co., 27 Colo. 331, 148 Pac. 919 (attorney's books); Conn. 1836, Green v. Pratt, 11 Conn. 205; Me. 1921, Mansfield v. Gushee, 120 Me. 333, 114 Atl. 296 (goods delivered to third persons); Mass. 1808, Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 458; 1838, Faunce v. Gray, 21 Pick. 247; 1852, Keith v. Kibbe, 10 Cush. 36; 1861, Gorman v. Montgomery, 1 All. 416; 1873, Somers v. Wright, 114 Mass. 174; 1875, Field v. Thompson, 119 Mass. 151; 1887, Kaiser v. Alexander, 144 Mass. 71, 78, 12 N. E. 209; Pa. 1788, Poultney v. Ross, 1 Dall. 238; 1795, Tenbroke v. Johnson, Coxe 288; 1819, Juniata Bank v. Brown, 5 S. & R. 231; S. Car. 1912, Wells v. Hays, 93 S. C. 168, 76 S. E. 195; Tenn. 1872, Black v. Fizer, 66 Tenn. 50; Vt. 1830, Skinner v. Conant, 2 Vt. 454; Wis. 1903, Brown v. Warner, 116 Wis. 358, 93 N. W. 17 (money paid to third persons).

Contra: 1910, Kamm v. Rees, 9th C. C. A., 177 Fed. 14, 22; 1899, Coleman v. Ins. Ass'n, 77 Minn. 31, 79 N. W. 588 (plaintiff's books of purchases and sales from and to third persons, admitted under statute to show the amount of stock on hand); 1897, Richmond U. P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 95 Va. 386, 28 S. E. 573 (to whom credit was furnished; admitted).

In Massachusetts a statute has changed the law: 1914, Brooks Co. v. Wilson, 218 Mass. 205, 105 N. E. 607 (following St. 1913, c. 288, quoted ante, § 1519, and admitting an entry in the plaintiff's account book charging to the defendant certain printed matter ordered by the defendant, an attorney for a corporation).

In general, the transaction must have been with the defendants: 1819, Rogers v. Old, 5 S. & R. 408; 1869, Wall v. Dovey, 60 Pa. 212. Compare the cases cited post, § 1544.

§ 1541. [1] 1901, Snow Hardware Co. v. Loveman, 131 Ala. 221, 31 So. 19; 1832, Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 348; 1870, Hart v. Livingston, 29 Ia. 221; 1833, Dunn v. Whitney, 10 Me. 15; 1889, Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 225, 41 N. W. 431; 1900, Collins v. Shaw, 124 Mich. 474, 83 N. W. 146; 1907, Jacobs v. Morgenthaler, 149 Mich. 1, 112 N. W. 492 (not admitted to show the payment of money for stock upon a special contract); 1914, Davis v. McClelland, 185 Mo. App. 130, 170 S. W. 691 (attorney's contract for services); N. J. L. 1838, Dauser v. Boyle, 16 N. J. L. 395; 1896, Wait v. Krewson, 59 Pa. 71, 35 Atl. 742; 1841, Lonergan v. Whitehead, 10 Watts Pa. 249; 1842, Nickle v. Baldwin, 4 W. & S. Pa. 290; 1898, Hall v. Woolen Co., 187 Pa. 18, 40 Atl. 986, semble (treated as secondary evidence to the contract's terms); 1896, Hazer v. Streich, 92 Wis. 505, 66 N. W. 720.

But this does not forbid using the entry to show the delivery of goods, under a special contract otherwise proved: 1922, Newton v. Consolidated Gas. Co., 258 U. S. 165, 42 Sup. 264 (rate of charge for gas; the plaintiff's books, kept under supervision of the State public service commission, admitted); 1843, Cummings v. Nichols, 13 N. H. 425; 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 236.

1823, COLCOCK, J., in Pelzer v. Cranston, 2 McC. 128: "The Court have always kept in view the necessity of the evidence. Now there are few persons in business who are furnished with as many witnesses as a schoolmaster may command, and there is no necessity for admitting his books to be produced in evidence."

Yet the books of an attorney have been admitted:

1850, WELLS, J., in Codman v. Caldwell, 31 Me. 561: "One objection . . . is that from the nature of the case, there must be better evidence [in existence]. But the book and oath of a party are often received to prove sales or services known to other persons and provable by them. . . . The demands of attorneys are sustainable by any mode of proof applicable to other descriptions of persons." [1]

Books of a corporation here stand on no different footing from that of a natural person. But owing to their special use under the doctrine of Parties' Admissions they are considered ante, § 1074. So, too, bankers' books (post, § 1683), common carriers' books (post, § 1708), and hospital records (post, § 1707), have been given by legislation a special status.

§ 1543. Not admissible for Large Items, nor for Immoral Transactions. The foregoing are the chief limitations generally acknowledged. But sundry different transactions have been from time to time ruled upon as exemplifying the necessity or non-necessity of using the entries.[1]

So far as any further generalizations can be made, two may be noticed: (1) Where the item involves so large an amount of goods sold that other evidence of its delivery must have existed, the entry cannot be used.[2] (2) Where the transaction is one not to be encouraged on general grounds of morality or policy, there is no necessity for helping to the recovery of the charge by admitting the entry.[3] But it cannot be said that these applications of the principle are generally accepted.

§ 1544. Rules not Flexible; Existence of Other Testimony in Specific Instances does not exclude Books. The principle of Necessity leading to these limitations naturally suggests the question whether the principle is to be ap-

§ 1542. [1] Accord: 1861, Wells v. Hatch, 43 N. H. 248, semble. Contra, semble: 1864, Hale's Ex'rs v. Ard's Ex'rs, 48 Pa. 22.

Books in the following occupations have been ruled on: 1900, Produce Exchange T. Co. v. Bieberbach, 176 Mass. 577, 587, 58 N. E. 162 (whether entries in bank-books fall within the rule; not decided); 1896, Fulton's Estate, 178 Pa. 78, 35 Atl. 880 (physician; left undecided); 1820, Frazier v. Drayton, 2 Nott & McC. S. C. 472 (a ferryman; admitted).

Compare the rulings upon the kind of occupation as affected by the principle of regularity, post, § 1547. For corporation books, see ante, § 1074.

§ 1543. [1] Excluded: 1856, Lynch v. Cronan, 6 Gray Mass. 532 (mechanic's lien); 1851, Batchelder v. Sanborn, 22 N. H. 328 (collateral purposes generally); 1823, Swing v. Sparks, 2 Halst. 61 (loss by injury to property); 1811, Wilmer v. Israel, 1 Browne Pa. 257 (wharfage dues); 1871, Godding v. Orcutt, 50 Vt. 56 (sundries).

[2] 1876, Petit v. Teal, 57 Ga. 145 (rejected for large items, e.g. $50, except where usage authorizes, as in banking); 1882, Carr v. Sellers, 100 Pa. 170 (Mercur, J.: "We will not now designate the maximum sum for which a book may be received in evidence. . . . Much more depends on the nature and character of the subject matter of the item, and on the evidence, outside of the book, which naturally exists to prove the items"); 1872, Winner v. Bauman, 28 Wis. 563, 566 (statute applied to exclude large items).

[3] 1897, Frank v. Pennie, 117 Cal. 254, 49 Pac. 208 (a gambler's "Poker Book" of accounts, excluded); 1826, Boyd v. Ladson, 4 McC. S. C. 76 (billiard-games; excluded); this case probably overrules Herlock's Adm'r v. Riser, 1821, 1 McC. 481 (whiskey sales; admitted).

plied as an open one outside of the above accepted applications, and whether in those classes it is to be regarded as a fixed rule of thumb or whether the question of necessity may be raised anew in a given case under its particular circumstances. The answer to both questions is in the negative; the rules are no longer flexible; in certain classes the entries are once for all excluded, in others admitted:

1836, WILLIAMS, C. J., in Peck v. Abbe, 11 Conn. 210: "This necessity is not the necessity of the individual case on trial, but of the class of cases to which it belongs. One man sells a bushel of corn to his neighbor, no other being present; he charges it on his book; and could never recover, unless his book or his oath or both were sufficient evidence. Necessity, therefore, requires this evidence. Another sells corn to his neighbor, surrounded with his family; of course, the same necessity of his oath or book does not exist. Still the charge is of the same class with the other, and may be supported in the same way. . . . The enquiry is not whether the party in that case could not have other testimony, but whether the case itself is of the class or character which will support the action."

It follows that it is immaterial, in a given case in the admissible classes, that other witnesses of the transaction are actually available, or that, in a case in the excluded classes, other witnesses were in fact not available.[1] There are contrary rulings;[2] but the general judicial attitude seems to be plain. Usually, it may be added, this sort of attitude is to be deprecated; it results in deadening and mutilating the living principles of Evidence, and serves no good purpose. But here the general principle itself is a mere survival, without any living function in the law of Evidence; and there can be no object in attempting to develop further that which has no reason for development, and no harm in accepting it, so long as it survives, in its fixed and traditional limitations.

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness

§ 1546. General Principle; Regularity of Entry in Course of Business. The general principle which suffices to admit parties' books as fairly trustworthy is the same as that recognized for the main Exception for regular entries.

§ 1544. [1] 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. 271; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 75.

[2] On each occasion the absence of other evidence must be sworn to: 1869, Neville v. Northcutt, 47 Tenn. 296. In particular cases, entries of a guaranty of credit may be received: 1847, Ball v. Gates, 12 Metc. 493; 1851, Tremain v. Edwards, 7 Cush. 415.

It has also been ruled that if the work was done by a servant of the plaintiff, or the goods delivered to a servant of the defendant, the entry was inadmissible; but this would probably not be followed in other jurisdictions: 1921, Mansfield v. Gushee, 120 Me. 333, 114 Atl. 296 (not ordinarily admissible to prove delivery; this learned opinion is a model of the antique learning which does so much to exhibit the law of Evidence to the modern world as a rusty worn-out tool). N. H. 1825, Eastman v. Moulton, 3 N. H. 156; Pa. 1811, Wright v. Sharp, 1 Browne 344 ("it is from necessity that a book of original entries, proved by a plaintiff's oath, is admitted in evidence at all; and where the work has been done by a third person, this necessity does not exist"); 1840, Lonergan v. Whitehead, 10 Watts 249 (entries of delivery of goods, as performance of prior contract, excluded; "the reasons on which the cases cited are ruled do not apply, for there is no necessity to resort to such proofs, and it is not according to the usual course of business; the delivery is a matter of notoriety, done through the agency of others, and therefore easily proved through disinterested witnesses"); 1842, Nickle v. Baldwin, 4 W. & S. 290 (same); 1898, Hall v. Woolen Co., 187 Pa. 18, 40 Atl. 986 (delivery of large quantities of goods; books rejected; "Lonergan v. Whitehead has been followed ever since it was decided").

The motives and results by which that principle is supposed to operate have already been sufficiently considered (ante, § 1522).[1] In general, it is thought that the regularity of habit, the difficulty of falsification, and the fair certainty of ultimate detection, give in a sufficient degree a probability of trustworthiness. The particular element of self-interest and partisanship that might be supposed to diminish trustworthiness in the case of a party himself is supposed to be balanced by certain additional requirements here made for this class of books, — for example, the existence of a reputation for honest bookkeeping, fair appearance of the books, and the like.

In applying the general principle of Regularity of Entry, different circumstances may come into question, — the kind of occupation, the kind of book, the kind of item. These circumstances may now be taken in order.

§ 1547. Regularity, as Affecting Kind of Occupation or Business. There can be no definite limitations as to the business or occupation of the entrant. The Court should decide, for each occupation, whether it involves the regular keeping of books:

1858, LUMPKIN, J., in Ganahl v. Shore, 24 Ga. 17: "We hold that any occupation which makes it necessary for books to be kept as the record of its transactions, the monuments of its daily business, — as factories, foundries, forges, gas-works, banks, factorage, no matter what, — if books are required 'ex necessitate rei' to be kept, these books are to be let in under the law . . . for the same purpose and to the same extent that a merchant or shop-keeper's books are received in evidence; and that is, to prove those matters which appertain to the ordinary business of the concern, which require to be charged, and which in fact constitute its 'res gestæ.'" [1]

Courts have ruled from time to time in the different jurisdictions upon various occupations.[2] In general, a mere casual rendering of services is not enough; there must be a regular occupation.[3] The principle of Necessity, it must be noted, may also affect the kind of occupation in which books are allowed to be used (ante, § 1542). Moreover, statutes have in many instances (ante, § 1519) expressly defined the kinds of occupation.

§ 1546. [1] Compare additionally the following: 1822, Kirkpatrick, C. J., in Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Halst. N. J. 98 ("The credit to which a book of the sort last mentioned is entitled as matter of evidence is derived from the presumption that though a man in the warmth of controversy or the heat of passion, might be disposed to raise up false charges against his adversaries, yet that no one is so abandoned as in his cooler moments, without such excitement and in the course of his daily business, deliberately to contrive and meditate a fraud against his neighbor").

§ 1547. [1] Accord: 1846, Taylor v. Tucker, 1 Kelly 233, per Nisbit, J.; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 75 (Cowen, J.: " . . . . whether he be a merchant or engaged in any other business").

[2] Admitted: 1856, Richardson v. Dorman's Ex'x, 28 Ala. 681 (physician; under the Code); 1916, James v. State, 125 Ark. 269, 188 S. W. 806 (physician's books, verified by himself, admitted to show date of a birth). Excluded: 1899, Remick v. Rumery, 69 N. H. 601, 45 Atl. 574 (diary of services performed, expenses paid, etc., by plaintiff as employee of defendant's intestate); 1790, Spence v. Sanders, 1 Bay 119 (physician); 1818, Thomas v. Dyott, 1 Nott & McC. S. C. 186 (printer); 1901, Bass v. Gobert, 113 Ga. 262, 38 S. E. 834 (books of a party not doing any "regular business"); 1835, Thayer v. Deen, 2 Hill S. C. 677 (pedlar).

[3] 1871, Karr v. Stivers, 34 Ia. 127; 1898, Atkins v. Seeley, 54 Nebr. 688, 74 N. W. 1100 (continuous dealing, etc., not shown); 1839, Walter v. Bollman, 8 Watts 544.

§ 1548. Regularity, as Affecting the Kind of Book; Ledger or Daybook. Any form of book, if regularly kept, is sufficient. A mere individual memorandum does not satisfy this principle; but obviously there may be separate books for separate classes of transactions, and of these a regularity can be predicated. It is thus often difficult to distinguish between books which are properly admissible because, though not comprehensive, they are nevertheless a complete and regular record of an integral series of transactions, and books which are inadmissible because they appear to have been kept apart from the general course of bookkeeping and thus are not likely to be affected by the considerations (ante, § 1522) that give trustworthiness to the ordinary records of transactions.[1]

The fact that the book is kept in ledger-form, with each person's account separate, or in daybook form, with the items in the actual order of the transactions, is immaterial; though it may perhaps lessen the credit to be given to the book.[2] But a ledger-book may be open to the independent objection that it is not the original book, and may on that ground be excluded (post, § 1558).

Finally, the record offered being a collected series of entries, it does not § 1548. [1] Ala. 1919, McWhorter v. Tyson, 203 Ala. 509, 83 So. 330 (entries, on stubs of a personal check-book, held to be shop-books under the statute; three judges diss.); 1916, Warten v. Black, 195 Ala. 93, 70 So. 758 (memoranda as to feeding etc. of cattle, made for a temporary purpose, held not a shop-book); Cal. 1901, Thompson v. Ruiz, 134 Cal. 26, 66 Pac. 24 ("private memorandum-book" of money collections, excluded); Conn. 1893, Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 410, 412, 27 Atl. 973 (ordinary diary, excluded); 1868, Ward v. Leitch, 30 Md. 326, 333 (entries made by one casually employed for the purpose and doing it "once a week and sometimes once a fortnight", not admissible; unsound); Mass. 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. 270 (a time-book of work done by laborers, admitted); 1885, Costello v. Crowell, 139 Mass. 592, 2 N. E. 698 (memorandum-book, excluded); 1896, Riley v. Boehm, 167 Mass. 183, 45 N. E. 84 (small pocket-memorandum-book used for sundry memoranda, held not improperly excluded); Mich. 1894, Countryman v. Bunker, 101 Mich. 218, 59 N. W. 422 (book not covering all transactions with the opponent, excluded); Nebr. 1897, Anderson v. Beeman, 52 Nebr. 387, 72 N. W. 361 (there must be "a continuous dealing with persons generally"); N. H. 1851, Richardson v. Emery, 23 N. H. 223 (excluding separate books kept for different lots of wood sold, thus "not affording security against interpolations" that a single book would give); Pa. 1896, Fulton's Estate, 178 Pa. 78, 35 Atl. 880 (a separate book from the regular books, containing charges against one person only, excluded); Tenn. 1872, Callaway v. McMillian, 11 Heisk. 557, 560 (entries in a private memorandum-book, excluded); Vt. 1886, Barber v. Bennett, 58 Vt. 483, 4 Atl. 231 (entries of account upon "a loose strip of paper" found in a desk, excluded); 1893, Gleason v. Kinney, 65 Vt. 560, 563, 27 Atl. 208 (entry in a diary, of money paid, there being a separate book of accounts, admitted; the nature of the item, not of the book, being material; this seems erroneous); 1896, Re Diggins' Estate, 68 Vt. 198, 34 Atl. 696 (a small book dealing with a special stock of goods, admitted); 1900, Post v. Kenerson, 72 Vt. 341, 47 Atl. 1072 (entries held to form a regular book, on the facts); 1904, Freehart v. Stanford, 77 Vt. 36, 58 Atl. 790 (Post v. Kenerson approved); Wyo. 1896, Hay v. Peterson, 6 Wyo. 419, 45 Pac. 1073 (a calendar containing two entries of payment, excluded, because not a regular account-book, and because the entries were not continuous).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1525.

Distinguish the question whether a trustee's accounts, to be satisfactory, may be kept in the form of separate memoranda not serially entered in a single book: 1917, Wylie v. Bushnell, 277 Ill. 484, 115 N. E. 618.

[2] 1806, Coggswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 221 (per Sewall, J.: "though the one method leaves a greater opening to fraud and falsehood than the other"); 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 234; 1861, Wells v. Hatch, 43 N. H. 248; 1921, Fargo Mercantile Co. v. Johnson, — N. D. —, 181 N. W. 953 (ledger-entries admitted, under Comp. L. 1913, § 7909); 1869, Hoover v. Gehr, 62 Pa. 136; 1850, Toomer v. Gadsden, 4 St. robh. L. S. C. 195.

But a general account drawn up at a later date is inadmissible: 1808, Prince v. Smith, 4 Mass. 458.

matter of what material the record is made, nor whether it is a record to which in ordinary parlance the word "book" would be applied.[3]

§ 1549. Regularity, as Affecting the Kind of Item or Entry; Cash Entry. In the first place, the entry must have been a part of a regular series of entries, — not, for example, a casual sale of an article not regularly dealt in, nor a casual entry at the beginning of a blank book or at the end of a book already finished and laid aside.[1] Again, the entry is not usable if it shows that it embraces in one item a number of separate transactions, or is in any other way so loosely made that regularity of entry cannot be predicated.[2]

The question already examined from the point of view of the principle of Necessity, namely, whether entries of cash payments are admissible (ante, § 1539), is often by some Courts discussed instead from this point of view; and here, as before, opinions differ in the application of the principle. The better opinion is that while as a general rule such entries are not to be regarded as admissible, yet in particular cases the ordinary course of business may involve cash entries and they may then be used:[3]

1838, HITCHCOCK, J., Cram v. Spear, 8 Hammond 497: "Money lent or paid is not ordinarily charged upon book. The person lending or paying usually takes a note or receipt. An individual, it is true, might be engaged in a business that would seem to justify such charges, and in such case I am not prepared to say that he might not be examined as a witness."

1859, STOCKTON, J., in Veiths v. Hagge, 8 Ia. 187: "The general rule is clearly established by these authorities that a charge for money paid or money lent cannot be proved by a party's book of accounts, that such transactions are not usually the subject of a charge in account, and that charges of that nature are not such as are made in the ordinary course of business by one party against another. . . . An individual might be engaged in business that would seem to justify such charges, as where one's ordinary business may be said to consist in receiving money on deposit and paying it out for others. . . . This would not, however, apply to the case of a party engaged in the mere business of keeping a retail store, whose customers purchase goods of him on credit, which are charged to them in a running

[1] 1846, Taylor v. Tucker, 1 Kelly Ga. 231 (slips of paper); 1836, Kendall v. Field, 14 Me. 30 (shingle).

§ 1549. [1] 1825, Beach v. Mills, 5 Conn. 496 (receipt of rent); 1864, Davis v. Sanford, 9 All. 216; 1822, Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Halst. 95; 1888, Stuckslager v. Neel, 123 Pa. 60, 16 Atl. 94; 1786, Lynch v. M'Hugo, 1 Bay 33; 1835, Thayer v. Deen, 2 Hill S. C. 677; 1901, Rowan v. Chenoweth, 49 W. Va. 287, 38 S. E. 544 (book made up "several years after the business").

[2] 1921, Mansfield v. Gushee, 120 Me. 333, 114 Atl. 290 (items with no prices carried out, excluded); 1921, Adkins v. Hastings, 138 Md. 454, 114 Atl. 288 (items for "goods", etc., without naming measure, weight, or quantity, admitted); 1842, Winsor v. Dilloway, 4 Metc. Mass. 222; 1849, Henshaw v. Davis, 5 Cush. Mass. 146 (three months' services in one item, excluded); 1853, Bustin v. Rogers, 11 Cush. 346; 1882, Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 477 (measure, weight, and quantity lacking; but admitted); 1889, Woolsey v. Bohn, 41 Minn. 238, 42 N. W. 1022; 1840, Bassett v. Spofford, 11 N. H. 267; 1825, Sawyer v. Miller, 3 Halst. N. J. 139; 1794, Ducoign v. Schreppel, 1 Yeates Pa. 347; 1882, Carr v. Sellers, 100 Pa. 171; 1904, McKnight v. Newell, 207 Pa. 562, 57 Atl. 39; 1893, Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 305 ("lump" charges, excluded); 1818, Lynch's Adm'r v. Petrie, 1 Nott & McC. S. C. 731; 1859, Johnson v. Price, 40 Tenn. 549; 1887, Baldridge v. Penland, 68 Tex. 441, 4 S. W. 565.

[3] Accord: 1909, Reyburn v. Queen City S. B. & T. Co., 3d C. C. A., 171 Fed. 609 (bank-books admissible; the limitation as to cash entries held not applicable); 1902, Harmon v. Decker, 41 Or. 587, 68 Pac. 11, 1111 (large cash items, held not provable by the party's books, unless custom sanctions such entries in a particular business); 1893, Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 304 (admissible, provided such transactions formed part of the ordinary course of business) account. . . . They would not ordinarily expect to find themselves charged in their accounts with sums of money lent or paid. . . . Yet if the jury should judge that small money-charges were legitimately made in the ordinary course of business, we should not be inclined to hold that they might not so determine."

But the general tendency of Courts is to regard such entries as absolutely excluded, without any allowance for exceptional cases in special occupations.[4] On the same principle, an entry of payment by note given would seem to be admissible.[5]

§ 1550. Contemporaneousness. Not merely regularity is required; the entry must have been fairly contemporaneous with the transaction entered.[1] This is another circumstance very properly required as tending to accuracy, and is similar to the requirement in the general Exception (ante, § 1526) as to entries by deceased persons. But no unvarying limitation need be fixed; the entry must merely have been made near enough to indicate a likelihood of accuracy; and thus each ruling must depend chiefly on the circumstances of the case:

1834, SERGEANT, J., in Jones v. Long, 3 Watts 326: "The entry need not be made exactly at the time of the occurrence; it suffices if it be within a reasonable time, so that it may appear to have taken place while the memory of the fact was recent, or the source from which a knowledge of it was derived, unimpaired. The law fixes no precise instant when the entry should be made."

1852, BIGELOW, J., in Barker v. Haskell, 9 Cush. 221: "The rule does not fix any precise time within which they must be made. There is no inflexible rule requiring them to be made on the same day. In this particular, every case must be made to depend upon its own peculiar circumstances, having regard to the situation of the parties, the kind of business, the mode of conducting it, and the time and manner of making the entries. Upon questions of this sort much must be left to the judgment and discretion of the judge who presides at the trial."

[4] Conn. 1803, Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day 104; Ia. 1859, Young v. Jones, 8 Ia. 222; 1859, Sloan v. Ault, ib. 230; 1859, Snell v. Eckerson, ib. 284; 1892, Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85 id. 543, 546, 52 N. W. 497 (register of loans); 1894, M. S. Bank v. Burson, 90 id. 191, 193, 57 N. W. 705; 1894, Shaffer v. McCracken, ib. 578, 580, 58 N. W. 910 (payment to attorney); 1909, Graham v. Dillon, 144 Ia. 82, 121 N. W. 47 (not decided): N. H. 1825, Eastman v. Moulton, 3 N. H. 156; 1851, Richardson v. Emery, 23 N. H. 223; 1907, Page v. Hazelton, 74 N. H. 252, 66 Atl. 1049; N. J. 1830, Carman v. Dunham, 6 Halst. 191 (single entry of cash lent in a regular book of entries containing no other dealings with the alleged debtor); N. Y. 1811, Case v. Potter, 8 John. 212; Pa. 1898, Fifth Mut. B. Soc. v. Holt, 184 Pa. 572, 39 Atl. 293 (entry of consideration received); Tex. 1852, Cole v. Deal, 8 Tex. 349; 1872, Kotwitz v. Wright, 37 Tex. 83; W. Va. 1911, West Virginia Architects & Builders v. Stewart, 68 W. Va. 506, 70 S. E. 113 (not decided).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1539.

[5] 1899, Estes v. Jackson, — Ky. —, 53 S. W. 271 (entry that an account was settled by note, excluded). Contra: 1898, Borgess Inv. Co. v. Vette, 142 Mo. 560, 44 S. W. 754 (admitting an entry of a note secured by deed of trust).

§ 1550. [1] 1910, Kamm v. Rees, 9th C. C. A., 177 Fed. 14, 22; 1899, Lane v. M. & T. Hardware Co., 121 Ala. 296, 25 So. 809; 1895, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Murphy, 60 Ark. 333, 30 S. W. 419; 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 575 (admitted. where the transfer from a slate to the book was made irregularly, but generally in from one to three days afterwards); 1881, Redlick v. Bauerlee, 98 Ill. 134, 138 ("the authorities do not establish any precise length of time"; here entries transferred monthly from memoranda at the time of manufacture were admitted); 1858, Anderson v. Ames, 6 Ia. 488; 1887, Rumsey v. Telephone Co., 49 N. J. L. 325, 8 Atl. 290; 1818, Curren v. Crawford, 4 S. & R. Pa. 3; 1829, Kessler v. M'Conachy, 1 Rawle Pa. 441; 1839, Walter v. Bollman, 8 Watts Pa. 544; 1865, Yearsley's Appeal, 48 Pa. 535.

§ 1551. Book must bear an Honest Appearance. The appearance of the book of entries must be honest;[1] no suspicion of false dealing must be apparent. But the trial Court's determination of this ought to be final.[2]

§ 1552. Reputation of Correct and Honest Bookkeeping. The tradition requires also that preliminary testimony be offered as to the good reputation of the party for correct and honest accounting.[1] Whether this would always be required is in some jurisdictions doubtful to-day, apart from express statute.[2]

3. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence

§ 1554. Party's Suppletory Oath; Cross-examination of Party; Use of § 1551. [1] 1861, Caldwell v. McDermit, 17 Cal. 466 (excluded, "when suspicious circumstances exist upon the face of the entries, and these circumstances are not explained by disinterested persons"); 1810, Swift, 1. idence, Conn., 81; 1880, Robinson v. Dibble's Adm'r, 17 Fla. 462; 1889, Kendrick v. Latham, 25 Fla. 819, 6 So. 871; 1891, L'Engle v. Reed, 27 Fla. 345, 3579 So. 213; 1899, Harrold v. Smith, 107 Ga. 849, 33 S. E. 540 (unfastened portion of a book, with leaves mutilated or missing, excluded); 1896, Gutherless v. Ripley, 98 Ia. 290, 67 N. W. 109; 1806, Cogswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 221, per Sewall, J.; 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. Mass. 270; 1882, Pratt v. White, 132 Mass. 477; 1878, Robinson v. Hoyt, 39 Mich. 405 (entries all on the last page of a book having many pages blank and many torn out, held "insufficient" for proof); 1896, Levine v. Ins. Co., 66 Minn. 138, 68 N. W. 855; 1825, Eastman v. Moulton, 3 N. H. 156; 1863, Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. 444, 448 ("The Court examines it to see if it appears 'prima facie' to be what it purports to be. If there are erasures and interlineations, and false or impossible dates, touching points that are material, or if for any reason it clearly appears not to be a legal book of entries, the Court may reject it").

But a mere error need not exclude: 1866, Schettler v. Jones, 20 Wis. 412, 415 (entries charged against a person not the opponent are admissible "if such mistake is fairly and satisfactorily explained by other competent evidence").

[2] 1806, Cogswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 223 (Sedgwick, J.: "The true ground . . . is that the judge or court before whom the case is tried, should on inspection, determine that the book was proper for that purpose, and that such determination renders it competent evidence. . . . To suffer our inquiries to go behind that decision would be throwing things into too loose a state").

§ 1552. [1] The precise tenor of this requirement varies; some Courts hold that the proof must be by persons who have settled with the party, and that, too, directly upon his books; Arkansas: 1898, Atkinson v. Burt, 65 Ark. 316, 46 S. W. 986, 53 S. W. 404 (must be shown correctly and contemporaneously kept); 1895, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Murphy, 60 Ark. 333, 30 S. W. 419; California: 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 576; 1886, Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 Cal. 32, 11 Pac. 811; 1894, Webster v. Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 326, 329, 35 Pac. 871 (absconding of the party's bookkeeper, who had falsified the books to defraud him, not sufficient to exclude); Illinois: 1841, Boyer v. Sweet, 3 Scam. 122; 1869, Ruggles v. Gatton, 50 Ill. 416; 1876, Patrick v. Jack, 82 Ill. 82; 1892, House v. Beak, 141 Ill. 290, 299, 30 N. E. 1065 (held here not essential, where the opponent had admitted the correctness of the account); Michigan: 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 487 (the rule is "to require evidence of the correctness and fairness of the books offered, founded on information gained by an actual inspection of and settlement by them", and not merely of "the character of the party whose books they are"); 1893, Seventh D. A. P. A. v. Fisher, 95 Mich. 274, 276, 54 N. W. 759 (may be shown by himself, without calling others); New Mexico: 1910, Radcliffe v. Chavez, 15 N. M. 258, 110 Pac. 699 (testimony by two customers as to correctness, here held sufficient); New York: 1815, Vosburgh v. Thayer, 12 Johns. 461; 1834, Linnell v. Sutherland, 18 Wend. 568; 1855, Morrill v. Whitehead, 4 E. D. Smith 241; 1882, McGoldrick v. Traphagen, 88 N. Y. 334, 336 (proof by several witnesses testifying to settlement by bills, and by another witness to settlement by the books themselves, held sufficient, the last witness being the bookkeeper of the party himself; two judges diss.); 1900, Smith v. Smith, 163 N. Y. 168, 57 N. E. 300; Texas: 1868, Werbiskie v. McManus, 31 Tex. 116, 124 (proof required that "his reputation as an honest man and correct bookkeeper is untarnished").

[2] 1888, Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98, 100, 35 N. W. 840 (proof by other persons, held not necessary "since the statute allows parties to testify generally in the case"); 1909, Bresler's Estate, 155 Mich. 567, 119 N. W. 1104 (similar to Montague v. Dougan).

This amounts to no more than a verification of correctness on oath (post, § 1554).

Books by or against Surviving Party. (1) Since the preliminary facts rendering evidence admissible must of course always be proved somehow in advance of its admission, the identity and character of parties' books, as fulfilling the foregoing conditions, must first be shown. But if the books were, by hypothesis, kept by the party himself, and without a clerk, it is obvious that they cannot be satisfactorily shown to be his books without calling in the aid of his own testimony. By very necessity, therefore, and for the purpose of identifying the books, the party, though otherwise disqualified (under the older law) as a witness, was allowed [1] to make a so-called suppletory oath of identification.[2] Moreover, this oath, by way of precaution, was made to involve an assertion that the books were correctly kept, and from this point of view the oath was not only allowed but required;[3] it could only be dispensed with where the party was dead, or insane, or out of the jurisdiction (post, § 1561). In many of the statutes (ante, § 1519) that have dealt with the subject, this suppletory oath is still retained as a requirement.

(2) As a necessary concession to the allowance of the suppletory oath, it was thought proper in a few jurisdictions by statute to allow a cross-examination of the party upon the transactions represented in the entries.[4]

(3) The modern statutory exception to a party's qualification, namely, the exclusion of a survivor from testifying to a transaction with a deceased opponent (ante, § 578) is commonly not thought to apply to the use of a party's books of account under the present Exception, for reasons elsewhere explained (post, § 1559). It follows that the surviving party may offer his books as against a deceased opponent;[5] and also that the use of a deceased party's books by his representative is not such a "testifying" by the representative as amounts to a waiver under the statute and permits the surviving opponent to take the stand against them.[6]

§ 1554. [1] Except in New York and New Jersey, where perhaps the Dutch tradition (ante, § 1518) accounts for the omission: 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. 75; 1859, Conklin v. Stamler, 8 Abb. Pr. 395.

[2] 1824, 3 Dane's Abr., Mass., Hutchinson's ed., 318; 1860, Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 573; 1886, Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 379, 12 Pac. 284; 1869, Neville v. Northcutt, 47 Tenn. 296; 1872, Marsh v. Case, 30 Wis. 531.

[3] 1913, Jackson v. Moore, 39 Okl. 234, 134 Pac. 1114 (requiring verification of the book's correctness).

[4] In addition to the statutes, ante, § 1519, see the following rulings: 1875, New Haven & H. Co. v. Goodwin, 42 Conn. 231; 1857, Betts v. Stevens, 6 Wis. 400 (no questions are to be asked the party except those authorized by the statute). In South Carolina the rulings varied: 1786, Foster v. Sinkler, 1 Bay 40; 1790, Spence v. Sanders, 1 Bay 117; Douglass v. Hart, 4 McCord S. C. 257; Thomson v. Porter, 4 Strobh. Eq. S. C. 65.

[5] 1886, Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 378, 12 Pac. 284, semble; 1901, Haines v. Christie, 28 Colo. 502, 66 Pac. 883; 1902, Chapin v. Mitchell, 44 Fla. 225, 32 So. 875; 1894, Dysart v. Furrow, 90 Ia. 59, 57 N. W. 644; 1867, Anthony v. Stinson, 4 Kan. 220; 1861, Dexter v. Booth, 2 All. 559, 561 (but not admissible "for other purposes", e.g. to prove to whom credit was given); 1862, Green v. Gould, 3 All. 465, 467 (similar principles); 1904, Cather v. Damerell, — Nebr. —, 99 N. W. 35; 1893, Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 304.

Contra: 1880, Dismukes v. Tolson, 67 Ala. 386; 1916, Warten v. Black, 195 Ala. 93, 70 So. 758 ("The precise point which D. v. T. decided has never since been brought into question"); 1899, Nance v. Callender, — Tenn. —, 51 S. W. 1025; 1893, Wyman v. Wilcox, 66 Vt. 26, 30, 28 Atl. 321 (plaintiff's entries made after decease of opponent's intestate, excluded).

[6] 1910, Winslow's Will, 146 Ia. 67, 124 N. W. 895; 1870, Kelton v. Hill, 58 Me. 116; 1889, Sheehan v. Hennessey, 65 N. H. 101, 18 Atl. 652; 1895, Stevens v. Moulton, 68

§ 1555. Personal Knowledge of Entrant; Party and Salesman verifying jointly. The use of a party's entries, like that of all the Hearsay exceptions, must be subject to the ordinary principles of testimonial qualifications (ante, § 1424). When the party is the entrant, then, he must have the elementary qualification, a personal knowledge of the transaction recorded (ante, § 657). This he would ordinarily have, in the situations for which the exception was peculiarly adapted and to which he is restricted in the ways just noticed. But it will often happen, even where the party is his own bookkeeper, that the goods are delivered or the services rendered by salesmen or workmen in his employ, and that thus the party, though the recorder, has no personal knowledge of the consummation of the transaction. This situation can be met in the way already examined (ante, § 751), in cases where a witness on the stand swears to the accuracy of a record but has no knowledge of the transaction recorded; i.e. by calling the other person, whose knowledge thus supplies the missing element and completes the testimony. This is a proceeding which, though correct on principle, has only with difficulty obtained recognition in the case of ordinary memoranda of a past recollection (ante, § 751). But, long before that recognition, it was perceived and adopted in the case of parties' entries. Where, then, the party has made the record but has not personal knowledge of the delivery of the goods or the rendering of the services charged, he may call the person having knowledge and use the latter's supplementary testimony.[1] If the salesman or teamster is deceased, or otherwise unavailable, or if the party is, or if both are, or if the conditions of the business make it impolitic to require the calling of every person concerned, still this need not prevent the use of the entry-book.[2] The

N. H. 254, 38 Atl. 732 (since the amendment of 1889, there is still no "election" to testify where an administrator offers and identifies the deceased's account-books).

As already stated (ante, § 578), there is here no attempt to collect fully the rulings interpreting this particular class of statutes.

§ 1555. [1] 1857, Harwood v. Mulry, 8 Gray Mass. 250 (one partner delivered the goods, the other made the charge in the books; Dewey, J.: "It is proper to introduce as witnesses all those persons who are thus connected with the transaction and whose testimony is necessary to establish those facts which would require to be proved by a single person"). Accord: Conn. 1880, Smith v. Law, 47 Conn. 431, 435 (entries made by the plaintiff's bookkeeper on report by a salesman, the salesman also testifying); Ill. 1892, House v. Beak, 141 Ill. 290, 299, 30 N. E. 1065 (entries by H., on reports of sales, etc., by B., H. and B. testifying); Ind. 1902, Place v. Baugher, 159 Ind. 232, 64 N. E. 852 (books of log-measurement, kept by plaintiff, the measurements being made by plaintiff and M., and both testifying thereto); Mass. 1831, Smith v. Sanford, 12 Pick. 140 (one partner sold and made a note, the other entered; both testified); N. Y. 1900, Smith v. Smith, 163 N. Y. 168, 57 N. E. 300 (husband-party making deliveries, wife entering from his memoranda, and both testifying); Pa. 1823, Ingraham v. Bockius, 9 S. & R. 285 (clerk delivered and party entered; both testified); S. C. 1831, Clough v. Little, 3 Rich. L. 353 (same); 1850, Thomson v. Porter, Strobh. Eq. 65 (same); Wis. 1892, Taylor v. Davis, 82 Wis. 455, 459, 52 N. W. 756 (shipping-book of lumber, entered by the bookkeeper from scale-bills handed to him, the bookkeeper and the scaler testifying); Wyo. 1905, Lewis v. England, 14 Wyo. 128, 82 Pac. 869 (entries in the business of an illiterate saloon-keeper, made by his wife, employees, and others, admitted).

[2] Connecticut: 1909, Mahoney v. Hartford Inv. Co., 82 Conn. 280, 73 Atl. 766 (books of a sewer-contractor, kept by a bookkeeper on slips from a foreman, admitted); Iowa: 1919, Coad v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 187 Ia. 1025, 175 N. W. 344 (shipper's books, not admitted on the facts; the opinion sets forth an elaborate set of rules); Maine: 1921, Mansfield v. Gushee, 120 Me. 333, 114 Atl. 296 (suppletory oath to books of account, by princireasons for this conclusion have already been examined in considering the same problem for the main Exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1530); here, as there, the rulings are not harmonious.

§ 1556. Form and Language of the Entry; Absence of Entry. The general principles already examined (ante, §§ 766–812) as to the mode of testimonial communication, or narration, have here also a certain application.

First, the entry must purport to record the whole of the transaction as alleged; in other words, a mere order-book or an entry of an order, not showing the delivery of the alleged goods or the rendering of the alleged services, could not be received.[1] Next, as to the mode of recording, any material or means pal bookkeeper, without calling all the other clerks who made entries, held sufficient on the facts); Maryland: 1921, Adkins v. Hastings, 138 Md. 454, 114 Atl. 288 (book of account, verified by bookkeeper present at all the sales and making most of them, admitted; precise distinction obscure); Massachusetts: 1844, Mathes v. Robinson, 8 Metc. 269 (time-book kept by plaintiff for labor of himself and apprentice; held not necessary to call the apprentice); 1849, Morris v. Briggs, 3 Cush. 343 (workmen made memoranda and plaintiff copied them into the book; workmen not required to be called); 1852, Barker v. Haskell, 9 Cush. 218 (plaintiffs, partners, made entries of work done by workmen; plaintiffs both gave the suppletory oath; workmen not required to be called; 1887, Miller v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162, 13 N. E. 468 (plaintiff kept a book of loads of sand delivered; teamster and plaintiff testify to items; said obiter that the teamster's testimony was "necessary"); 1911, Atlas Shoe Co. v. Bloom, 209 Mass. 563, 95 N. E. 952 (goods supplied on a guaranty of credit; memoranda in account-books, made by entry clerks, and testified to by these clerks — apparently — and the superintendent, but without calling for the clerks who actually made the sales and deliveries, excluded; this Court hung back too long in its recognition of liberal principles on this subject; the penalty that ensued was the legislative bungle, quoted ante, § 1519); Michigan: 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 484 (entries of brick, delivered, made by the party on reports from a foreman-teamster, the foreman-teamster who tallied the loading, being called, but not all the individual teamsters who hauled; held, that on the facts all the teamsters should be called or accounted for); 1901, Taylor-Woolfenden Co. v. Atkinson, 127 Mich. 633, 87 N. W. 89 (ledger made up from sale slips; admitted on certain conditions); 1912, Sullivan v. Godkin, 172 Mich. 257, 137 N. W. 521 (two men tallying lumber, one of them entering the data in a book; the entrant being deceased and the other on the stand, the book was admitted); Minnesota: 1903, Union Central L. Ins. Co. v. Prigge, 90 Minn. 252, 96 N. W. 917 (plaintiffs' entries based on memoranda furnished by the defendant, excluded; probably erroneous); Missouri: 1892, Anchor Milling Co. v. Walsh, 108 Mo. 284, 18 S. W. 904 (plaintiff's manager kept a shipping-book, in which most of the entries of deliveries were made on the knowledge of a shipping-clerk; the clerk had left the plaintiff's employment and was not called; admitted); 1906, Wright v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 118 Mo. App. 392, 94 S. W. 555 (stockyards books made up from scale-tickets, admitted to show cattle-weight; who verified them is not stated); New Jersey: 1901, Diament v. Colloty, 66 N. J. L. 295, 49 Atl. 455, 808 (books founded on slips containing reports from workmen, admitted, together with the slips, apparently without calling the workmen); 1908, Corkran v. Rutter, 76 N. J. L. 375, 69 Atl. 954 (see the citation post, § 1558, n. 2); 1908, Corkran v. Taylor, 77 N. J. L. 195, 71 Atl. 124 (see the citation post, § 1558, n. 2); 1908, Schlicher v. White, 74 N. J. L. 839, 71 Atl. 337 (ledger entries admitted, here on the doctrine of § 1074, n. 5, ante); Pennsylvania: 1834, Jones v. Long, 3 Watts 326 (like Morris v. Briggs, Mass.); Virginia: 1919, Lavenstein Bros. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., — Va. —, 101 S. E. 331 (whether the requirements of the present principle apply to an inventory, offered as satisfying the iron-safe clause, in an action on an insurance policy; not decided); Washington: 1897, Union Electric Co. v. Theatre Co., 18 Wash. 213, 51 Pac. 366 (books of an electric light company, recording the light furnished a theatre, made up from newspaper reports of number of performances per week and from collectors' reports, excluded); Wisconsin: 1862 Lynch v. State, 15 Wis. 40, 44 (certain voluminous accounts, testified to by the bookkeeper and a party, who had personal knowledge of most of the transactions, admitted.)

§ 1556. [1] 1882, Hancock v. Hintrager, 60 Ia. 376, 14 N. W. 725; 1834, Rhoads v. Gaul, 4 Rawle 467; 1835, Fairchild v. Dennison, 4 Watts 258; 1841, Parker v. Donaldson, 2 W. & S. 19; 1882, Laird v. Campbell, 100 Pa. 165. This rests perhaps equally on the principle of § 1541, ante.

The price need not be entered: 1885, Jones v. Orton, 65 Wis. 9, 14, 12 N. W. 172.

will suffice.[2] The entry must, however, be fairly intelligible; it must distinctly communicate the fact alleged; this requirement being satisfied, any kind of marks, capable of being interpreted, will suffice.[3]

The absence of a debit-entry, in a book containing both debits and credits, should be regarded as in effect a statement that no such goods or services had been received, and should therefore be admissible; [4] but some Courts, as also under the main Exception (ante, § 1531), take the opposite view.[5] Where, however, the book is offered by the opponent (post, § 1557), the absence of an entry of the transaction as claimed may properly be regarded as an admission that there was no such transaction (ante, § 1072).

§ 1557. Impeaching the Book; Opponent's Use of the Book as containing Admissions. (1) The party's book being virtually his testimonial assertions (ante, § 1361), the rules for impeaching testimonial evidence (ante, §§ 875–1087), so far as applicable, may be invoked. In particular, the party's general character for veracity (ante, § 920) may be impeached; [1] and the untrustworthiness of the book may be evidenced by demonstrating specific errors (ante, § 1000) in the entries.[2]

[2] That the entry need not be on paper or with ink has been noticed ante, § 1548.

[3] 1865, Barton v. Dundas, 24 U. C. Q. B. 275; 1887, Miller v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162, 13 N. E. 468; 1904, Cather v. Damerell, — Nebr. —, 99 N. W. 35 (physician's book, the items noted by dots and crosses, admitted); 1843, Cummings v. Nichols, 13 N. H. 425; 1872, March v. Case, 30 Wis. 531.

[4] 1893, Peck v. Pierce, 63 Conn. 310, 314, 28 Atl. 524 (issue as to payment of interest on note; deceased's book contained entries of interest-payments to others, though not all; lack of entry of payment to P., admissible); 1903, Volusia Co. Bank v. Bigelow, 45 Fla. 638, 33 So. 704; 1901, Waldron v. Priest, 96 Me. 36, 51 Atl. 235; 1902, Huebener v. Childs, 180 Mass. 483, 62 N. E. 729 (passbook and ledger admitted, to show no receipt of cash; "not every book of entries, if admitted, would lead to any inference from the omission of a matter; but we must assume that this book on inspection manifestly purported to contain all C.'s receipts, and if so it was a declaration by him, only less definite than if expressed in words, that he had received no other sums"; this book was admitted without specific reference to the present Hearsay exception).

[5] 1893, Shaffer v. McCracken, 90 Ia. 578, 580, 58 N. W. 910 (negative not to be proved by lack of entry in one book only out of several); 1874, Lawhorn v. Carter, 11 Bush Ky. 10; 1855, Morse v. Potter, 4 Gray Mass. 292; 1896, Riley v. Boehm, 167 Mass. 183, 45 N. E. 84; 1852, Alexander v. Smoot, 13 Ired. N. C. 462; 1901, Scott v. Bailey, 73 Vt. 49, 50 Atl. 557; 1918, Brosius & Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 65 Okl. 128, 174 Pac. 269 (action for a bank deposit; the bank's books of account and deposit slips, held not admissible with the cashier's testimony "that said books did not anywhere show that said deposit of $170 of April 29 was made"; absurd; this is the sort of ruling that sets the Courts apart from practical life as the devotees of a cult of esoteric logic); 1905, Conover v. Neher-R. Co., 38 Wash. 172, 80 Pac. 281 (time-book not admitted, to show that a witness was not employed on a certain day).

§ 1557. [1] 1823, Crouse v. Miller, 10 S. & R. Pa. 155, 158 ("his character was open to the same kind of animadversion that it would have been subject to if he had been a witness in the cause"); 1863, Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. 444, 448 ("the plaintiff who swears to his original book of entries puts his general character for truth and veracity, and the general character of his book for honesty and accuracy, in evidence, and invites attack upon either or both").

Contra: 1853, Winne v. Nickerson, 1 Wis. 1, 6 (impeachment of the party's character "for truth and veracity", held proper at common law; but the statute making them 'prima facie' evidence held to forbid this; absurd); 1854, Nickerson v. Morin, 3 id. 243 (foregoing case approved); 1872, Winner v. Bauman, 28 Wis. 563, 567 (same).

[2] 1913, Northwestern Elev. Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., 121 Minn. 321, 141 N. W. 298 (conductor's train-books recording conditions of cars; to show the book untrustworthy testimony was received to defects existing in cars not marked defective in the train-book); 1863, Funk v. Ely, 45 Pa. 444, 448 ("It is competent for the adverse party to show its [the book's] general character by pointing to charges and entries affecting other parties

(2) A party's own statements may always be used against him as admissions (ante, § 1048); hence the opponent may always offer the party's books as containing admissions favoring the opponent's claim of facts.[3] In such a case, none of the foregoing limitations as to the kind of book or entry stand in the way; for the book is not offered under the present exception.[4]

§ 1558. Production of Original Book; Ledger and Daybook. The general rule requiring the production of the original of a writing (ante, § 1179), here as elsewhere, must be satisfied; i.e. the entry offered must be an original; if the original cannot be had, as determined by the ordinary rules (ante, §§ 1192–1230), a copy may be used.[1] and by calling witnesses to prove such entries false and fraudulent. That this investigation may not turn into excessive departure from the issue on trial, the Court should limit it to the time, or near the time, covered by the account in suit, and should suffer no more examination of collateral cases than would bear directly on the general character of the book").

[3] Canada: 1905, Cairns v. Murray, 37 N. Sc. 451, 469; U. S. Federal: 1910, Foster v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 178 Fed. 165; 1911, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. U. S., C. C. A., 186 Fed. 280 (penalty for using cars lacking a safety-appliance; to identify the contents of a specific car, as shown by a way-bill, the defendant, having failed on notice to produce the way-bill, the prosecution offered "an impression copy of an entry of the way-bill book", made as a part of the defendant's records by the defendant's agent; received as "an admission of the fact by the railroad company"); 1906, Worden v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 204 Fed. 1, 6 (fraudulent investments); 1915, Bettman v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 224 Fed. 819, 832 (fraudulent investment; pointing out that in this use of the books, the party's knowledge of their contents must be evidenced, on the principles of §§ 260, 1074, ante); 1917, Freeman v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 244 Fed. 1, 11 (account books of defendant, admitted for the prosecution, regardless of the requirements of § 1530, ante, as a party's admissions, if kept "with the knowledge and under the general direction of the defendant"); Colo. 1899, Zang v. Wyant, 25 Colo. 551, 56 Pac. 565 (bank's account-books); Ia. 1902, Whisler v. Whisler, 117 Ia. 712, 89 N. W. 1110 (partition between heirs and devisees; ancestor's book-entries of advancements); La. Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2248; Md. 1868, Ward v. Leitch, 30 Md. 326, 333; Nebr. 1902, Globe Savings Bank v. Nat'l Bank, 64 Nebr. 413, 89 N. W. 1030; 1903, Gross v. Scheel, 67 Nebr. 223, 93 N. W. 418; N. Y. 1893, Doolittle v. Stone, 136 N. Y. 613, 616, 32 N. E. 639; R. I. 1921, State v. Pesce, — R. I. —, 112 Atl. 899 (keeping a house of ill-fame; defendant's record of "business done that night", admitted).

The following question is merely one of interpretation: 1916, Noel v. O'Neill, 128 Md. 202, 97 Atl. 513 (action for goods sold to defendant, a wife; whether the plaintiff's entry of credit to the wife is conclusive as to the sale being made upon her personal credit; authorities collected).

[4] Compare some of the cases cited under Admissions, ante, §§ 1060, 1072, 1073, 1074 (corporation or partnership books), 1082 (predecessor in title).

Whether the whole of an account may or must be offered is dealt with under Completeness (post, §§ 2104, 2118).

Wherever the issue in a criminal case involves the accused's knowledge of the contents of account-books, the problem may have several aspects (including that of § 260, ante) depending on the particular rule of substantive law involved; the following case collects some prior ones: 1915, Bettman v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 224 Fed. 819, 832 (fraudulent investments).

Where a duplicate original of a delivery-entry is handed to the buyer at the time of a delivery of goods, his retention of it makes it an admission, like an account stated, and it is receivable on the principle of § 1073, ante: 1911, Federal U. Surety Co. v. Indiana L. & M. Co., 176 Ind. 328, 95 N. E. 1104.

§ 1558. [1] 1898, First N. Bank v. Chaffin, 118 Ala. 246, 24 So. 80; 1879, Peck v. Parchen, 52 Ia. 46, 2 N. W. 597 (copy attached to a deposition, excluded); 1848, Smiley v. Dewey, 17 Oh. 156; 1831, Furman v. Peay, 2 Bail. S. C. 394; 1887, Baldridge v. Penland, 68 Tex. 441, 4 S. W. 565; 1845, Downer v. Morrison, 2 Gratt. Va. 250, 256 (books in New York, proved by copy annexed to a deposition).

Undecided: 1882, Hancock v. Hintrager, 60 Ia. 376, 14 N. W. 725.

Not clear: 1876, Woodbury v. Woodbury's Estate, 50 Vt. 156.

Contra, but clearly wrong: 1807, Cooper v. Morrel, 4 Yeates Pa. 341 (original in England; copy excluded).

The party's failure to produce his book, when it would be relevant, may justify an inference: 1860, Harrison v. Doyle, 11 Wis. 283, 285, and cases cited ante, § 291.

It therefore becomes necessary to distinguish between the different processes and the different classes of books employed in bookkeeping, in order to determine whether the one offered is or is not the first and original book of regular entries. A ledger, though otherwise not objectionable (ante, § 1548), will usually not be the first book entered up; nevertheless, if the first book be in fact kept in ledger form, it will be none the less admissible. Furthermore, the record admissible is one consisting of a regular series (ante, § 1548); hence, the first regular and collected record is the original one, and it is immaterial that it was made up from casual or scattered memoranda preceding it. The application of the principle must depend much on the circumstances of the particular case.[2]

[2] Admitted: Colo. 1896, Plummer v. Mercantile Co., 23 Colo. 190, 47 Pac. 294 (entries made in pencil on sheets of paper, then copied into a book); Conn. 1909, Mahoney v. Hartford Inv. Co., 82 Conn. 280, 73 Atl. 766 (original slips destroyed in the course of business); Ill. 1881, Redlich v. Bauerlee, 98 Ill. 134, 138 (entries transferred from a slate to the book; the book held an original); Ia. 1920, Shea v. Biddle Improvement Co., 188 Ia. 952, 176 N. W. 948 (labor performed; defendant's books admitted under Code § 4623 without producing the memorandum slips from which the loose-leaf ledger was made); Kan. 1904, State v. Stephenson, 69 Kan. 405, 76 Pac. 905 (modern ledger made directly from order-slips, admitted as the original; good opinion by Johnston, C. J.); Md. 1916, Stevens v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 129 Md. 215, 98 Atl. 551 (sale of car of beans); Mass. 1816, Faxon v. Hollis, 13 Mass. 427 (entries made on a slate and transcribed into a ledger); 1831, Smith v. Sandford, 12 Pick. 140 (chalking sales on a butcher-cart and then entering them on the book when the cart returned); 1852, Barker v. Haskell, 9 Cush. 218 (entries on a slate, copied into a daybook); 1854, Kent v. Garvin, 1 Gray 148 (entries from a drayman's book into an account-book); 1887, Miller v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162, 13 N. E. 468 (transferred to the book from marks on a sand-cart); Mich. 1860, Jackson v. Evans, 8 Mich. 476, 482 (account-book of brick delivered, made up from a tally-book or slate); Minn. 1896, Levine v. Ins. Co., 66 Minn. 138, 68 N. W. 855 (books founded on temporary slips furnished by salesmen); N. J. 1908, Corkran v. Rutter, 76 N. J. L. 375, 69 Atl. 954 (books made by the witness from time-sheets filled out by the workmen and handed in by the foreman; the books admitted, without requiring the original time-sheets); 1908, Corkran v. Taylor, 77 N. J. L. 195, 71 Atl. 124 (similar); Okl. 1911, Kasenberg v. Hartshorn, 30 Okl. 417, 120 Pac. 956 (bank account; original books required; copy-list of items excluded); Vt. 1916, Squires v. O'Connell, 91 Vt. 35, 99 Atl. 268 (book made up from tally-boards, etc.); Wis. 1853, Winne v. Nickerson, 1 Wis. 1, 5 (there being two books of original entries, only one was required to be produced, on the facts); 1917, Ott v. Cream City Sand Co., 166 Wis. 228, 164 N. W. 1005 (goods supplied; a certain ledger, not admissible under Stats. § 4186, allowed to be used to aid recollection); Wyo. 1905, Lewis v. England, 14 Wyo. 128, 82 Pac. 869 (ledger entries admitted on the facts, to explain the original slips of paper).

Excluded: Conn. 1911, Hawken v. Daley, 85 Conn. 16, 81 Atl. 1053 (single sheet copied from a page of a time-book, not admitted); Ia. 1881, Fitzgerald v. M'Carty, 55 Ia. 702, 8 N. W. 646 (ledger not admitted to show a single item not entered in the original books; but the Court declared it allowable for counsel to use the ledger in aiding the jury "the more readily to find the items charged in the account in the books of original entry"); 1895, Way v. Cross, 95 Ia. 258, 63 N. W. 683 (a ledger not showing the kind of goods sold, and made up directly from sale-slips); Me. 1906, Putnam v. Grant, 101 Me. 240, 63 Atl. 816 (a journal, made up by summarizing from certain prior books and bills, held not an original, on the facts); N. J. 1915, Hamilton v. Fusco Constr. Co., 87 N. J. L. 52, 94 Atl. 50 (certain loose-leaf books, held not original entries on the facts); Pa. 1854, Breinig v. Metzler, 23 Pa. 159 (a journal copied from a blotter).

Further illustrations are as follows: 1861, Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 569, 573; 1916, Emeny Auto Co. v. Neiderhauser, 175 Ia. 219, 157 N. W. 143 (repairs done; certain ledger pages excluded, but workmen's slips, not bound in book form, admitted); 1874, Bentley v. Ward, 116 Mass. 337; 1889, Woolsey v. Bohn, 41 Minn. 239, 42 N. W. 1022; 1856, Pillsbury v. Locke, 33 N. H. 96; 1887, Rumsey v. Telephone Co., 49 N. J. L. 325, 8 Atl. 290; 1838, Sickles v. Mather, 20 Wend. N. Y. 76; 1882, McGoldrick v. Traphagen, 88 N. Y. 334, 336; 1823, Ingraham v. Bockius, 9 S. & R. Pa. 285; 1834, Patton v. Ryan, 4 Rawle Pa. 410; 1836, Forsythe v. Norcross, 5 Watts Pa. 432; 1869, Hoover v. Gehr, 62 Pa. 136.

Since the book is merely a statement about the transaction, and is not the transaction itself, the Parol Evidence rule does not apply, and therefore the transaction, as such, can be proved orally without producing or accounting for the book.[3]

4. Present Exception as affected by Parties' Statutory Competency

§ 1559. Theory of Use of Parties' Books as Hearsay. That there is in modern times a new adjustment to be made, arises from the fact that the party, being formerly disqualified and unavailable as a witness, and allowed only by the necessity of the case to use his extra-judicial or hearsay entries (ante, § 1537), has now everywhere been made competent by statute; so that the change of the law has removed the necessity for using such hearsay statements and has taken away the reason of the Exception. The question arises how far this result has been recognized by the Courts since the change of the law, and what its effects are with regard to the mode of using parties' entries.

In ascertaining this, it is necessary to keep in mind the extent to which, under the original practice, the entry was treated as hearsay. That it was so treated has already been noticed (ante, § 1537) and appears throughout the general tenor of this branch of the Exception. The consequences of this attitude were strictly followed out. If the party did not appear on the stand as a witness, if the entries are merely extra-judicial, hearsay statements, it followed that none of the consequences attached to a party's taking the stand could be enforced against him. This theory was so firmly implanted that when the statutes, which made parties competent, left a surviving party incompetent against a deceased opponent (ante, § 578), the use of parties' account-books was still not considered as a "testifying", within the statute; so that (as generally held) the surviving party's use of his books was not forbidden, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the executor's use of the deceased opponent's books was not a testifying which amounted to a waiver and qualified the surviving party to take the stand (ante, § 1554). This result may well be questioned; but at least it shows the nature of the earlier theory.

Again, the suppletory or verifying oath of the party (ante, § 1554), by which he took the stand for the purpose of identifying the books and swearing that they contained true and just accounts, was expressly declared not to make the party a witness. It was treated as only a preliminary guarantee required as a matter of caution; and in effect it merely related back to the time of the entries and showed them to be proper for admission. His entries in the book, moreover, taken as made at a past time, were not entries made

In Prince v. Swett, 2 Mass. 569 (1793), and Bonnell v. Mayha, 22 N. J. L. 198 (1874), the anomalous ruling was made that the ledger or copy-entries also must be produced, if the entries had been posted into it from another book.

[3] 1899, Cowdery v. McChesney, 124 Cal. 363, 57 Pac. 221; 1899, Rissler v. Ins. Co., 150 Mo. 366, 51 S. W. 755 (cited ante, § 1339, n. 10); 1904, Halverson v. Seattle El. Co., 35 Wash. 600, 77 Pac. 1058; and cases cited ante, §§ 1245, 1339, post, § 2432; but compare the principles of §§ 1230, 1235, 1244, ante.

as a party; for he was not a party when he made them; and they thus could not be treated as tainted with his interest. Whatever may be thought today of the real effect of such an oath as incorporating the books into the party's infra-judicial statement and making them infra-judicial testimony, the Courts at any rate refused to take this view and accepted them as extra-judicial statements.[1]

The subjection to cross-examination (ante, § 1554) was a real inroad on the theory that the party was not a witness in his books; but it was made in a few States only, and by statute; and the fundamental theory was maintained as far as possible, for the liability of the party to cross-examination extended only to matters connected with the entries.

§ 1560. Statutory Competency as Abolishing the Necessity for Parties' Books; Using the Books to aid Recollection. Such being the consistent attitude of the Courts — that the books were used as hearsay or extra-judicial statements, and that the party did not take the stand as a witness —, how far is this branch of the Exception affected by the statutory abolition of a party's disqualification to take the stand? What has occurred is that the necessity for using his hearsay or extra-judicial statements in his books has been removed; he is free to relate as a witness all his knowledge on the subject of the transaction. Thus, the necessity having ceased, the whole basis of the Exception falls. There is now no excuse for offering his extra-judicial entries, not tested by cross-examination, while his infra-judicial testimony given under oath and subject to cross-examination, is available.

This does not mean that the party cannot use his entries at all. As a recorded past recollection (ante, § 745) he may swear to the accuracy of the book and use it to the fullest extent, incorporating it with his testimony and handing it to the jury as a part thereof (ante, § 754). The entries are no longer hearsay; they are adopted by the witness on the stand, and he is subject to full cross-examination on that as on all other parts of his testimony.

At the present day, then, the correct view is that the Hearsay exception in favor of parties' entries has disappeared with the parties' incompetency, and that the party uses them, if at all, as records of a past recollection adopted on the stand. A few Courts have recognized this result explicitly; others have ruled more or less in harmony with it:

1859, DALY, J., in Conklin v. Stamler, 8 Abb. Pr. 400: "The important change recently made in the law of this State, by which a party may testify the same as any other witness, has obviated the difficulty that was supposed to exist when the rule was made, and there is now no occasion for resorting to the books, unless it may be to refresh the party's memory as to the items, or in cases where there is a failure of recollection. In the latter case the books, if they contained the original entries of the transaction, would still, I apprehend, be evidence within the rule recognized in Merrill v. I. & O. R. Co.,[1] — that is, if the party

§ 1559. [1] 1844, Little v. Wyatt, 14 N. H. 26: "It is the book which is the evidence, and the party testifies in chief only to verify it. The party is not a witness who testifies to facts and then appeals to his book in corroboration of his story; but the book is the source of information."

§ 1560. [1] 16 Wend. N. Y. 586; cited ante, § 736.

who made the entries has entirely forgotten the facts which he recorded, but can swear that he would not have entered them if he had not known them at the time to be true, and that he believes them to be correct."

1875, Per CURIAM, in Nichols v. Haynes, 78 Pa. 176: "Questions relating to books of entry as evidence, since the Act of 1869 making parties witnesses, stand upon a different footing from that on which they stood before. . . . The party now stands by force of the act on the same plane of competency as the stranger stood upon, and therefore may make the same proof as a stranger could."

1898, HARRISON, J., in Bushnell v. Simpson, 119 Cal. 658, 51 Pac. 1080: "At the time when parties to an action were not competent witnesses in their own behalf, their books of account were admitted in evidence, upon a proper showing of the mode in which they had been kept, and were treated as original evidence of the matters for which they were introduced; but, since parties have been allowed to testify concerning all the facts for which the books were formerly offered, their testimony in reference thereto constitutes primary evidence of these facts, and the books of account become merely secondary or supplementary evidence. The books are not excluded as incompetent, but will be received, either in corroboration of the testimony of the parties as entries made at the time, or upon the principles by which inferior evidence is received where the party is unable to produce evidence of a higher degree."

In several other Courts the tendency seems to be to put the use of such books on their natural footing of records of past recollections.[2] Yet the existence of statutes expressly sanctioning the use of parties' books (although these statutes in the older States were enacted before parties' incompetency was abolished) naturally renders it more difficult to reach the conclusion that the Hearsay exception covered by these statutes is abolished by implication from other statutes.

[2] The following decisions treat the use of parties' entries from the point of view of records of past recollection, usually without complete recognition of the abolition of their use in the old manner: Ala. 1880, Dismukes v. Tolson, 67 Ala. 386; 1886, Hancock v. Kelly, 81 Ala. 378, 2 So. 281; 1892, Bolling v. Fannin, 97 Ala. 619, 621, 12 So. 59; Cal. 1886, Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 378, 12 Pac. 284, semble; 1898, Bushnell v. Simpson, 119 Cal. 658, 51 Pac. 1080 (action for salary and expenses as president of a corporation; plaintiff's books of account excluded as parties' books); but compare White v. Whitney, 1889, 82 Cal. 166, 22 Pac. 1138; Conn. 1896, Plumb v. Curtis, 66 Conn. 154, 33 Atl. 998; 1911, Hawken v. Daley, 85 Conn. 16, 81 Atl. 1053; Ill. 1875, Wolcott v. Heath, 78 Ill. 434; Ia. 1909, Graham v. Dillon, 144 Ia. 82, 121 N. W. 47; Mass. 1875, Field v. Thompson, 119 Mass. 151; Mich. 1888, Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98, 35 N. W. 840; 1886, Brown v. Whitman, 62 Mich. 557, 29 N. W. 98; yet compare Lester v. Thompson, 1892, 91 Mich. 250, 51 N. W. 893; Minn. 1893, Culver v. Lumber Co., 53 Minn. 360, 365, 55 N. W. 552; Mo. 1892, Anchor Milling Co. v. Walsh, 108 Mo. 284, 18 S. W. 904 (plaintiff's shipping-book, sworn to by the general manager, admitted as justified by the doctrine of memoranda of recollection); 1892, Robinson v. Smith, 111 Mo. 205, 20 S. W. 29 (bank-books of plaintiff admitted, following the preceding case); 1897, Walsher v. Wear, 141 Mo. 443, 42 S. W. 928 (books by G., a contractor guaranteed by the defendant, receivable from the defendant; following Anchor Milling Co. v. Walsh); 1898, Borgess Inv. Co. v. Vette, 142 Mo. 560, 44 S. W. 754; Nebr. 1892, St. Paul, F. & M. I. Co. v. Gotthelf, 35 Nebr. 351, 356, 53 N. W. 137; N. H. 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 237; 1855, Putnam v. Goodall, 31 N. H. 425; 1883, Pinkham v. Benton, 62 N. H. 690; N. J. 1887, Rumsey v. Telephone Co., 49 N. J. L. 326, 8 Atl. 290; N. M. 1885, Price v. Garland, 3 N. M. 505, 6 Pac. 472; Okl. 1911, McCants v. Thompson, 27 Okl. 706, 115 Pac. 600; Pa. 1888, Stuckslager v. Neel, 123 Pa. 61, 16 Atl. 94; P. I. 1904, Machan v. De La Trinidad, 3 P. I. 684 (plaintiff's books of account, admitted, citing C. C. P. §§ 328, 338); 1908, Garrido v. Asencio, 10 P. I. 691; 1916, Cang Yui v. Gardner, 34 P. I. 376 (partnership account; books admitted as memoranda to aid memory, even though not kept in pursuance to the Commercial Code requirements); Wis. 1866, Schettler v. Jones, 20 Wis. 412, 416; 1869, Riggs v. Weise, 24 Wis. 545 (preceding case approved); 1872, Winner v. Bauman, 28 Wis. 563, 567 (same); 1887, Curran v. Witler, 68 Wis. 16, 23, 31 N. W. 705 (same).

But under a statute declaring account-books to be "'prima facie' evidence", it has been held that their improper admission is a material error, even though they could have been used as memoranda to assist the memory: 1872, Winner v. Bauman, 28 Wis. 563, 567. Such a statute is anomalous and impolitic.

The important circumstance, however, is that whether or not the use of the books under the Hearsay exception is abolished, at any rate their use by the party as memoranda of recollection in connection with his testimony is now at his option, and that, when used from that point of view, the books would be subject to none of the restrictions of the present Exception (ante, §§ 1537–1552) regarding clerks, cash payments, credit guaranties, special contracts, kind of occupation, size of item, regularity of entries, reputation of correct bookkeeping, and the like. A survey of those restrictions seems to leave it certain that in no single respect is any advantage to be gained by using the book under the present Exception. Even when the book satisfies all these limitations, there appears to be no contingency in which the entry could be used under this branch of the Exception and yet could not also be used by adoption as a record of past recollection. Under the few anomalous rulings in which a clerk's entries were admitted as the party's, and in which the party's entries were held not to need personal knowledge, and under certain of the statutory enlargements (ante, § 1519), this might not be true. But apart from these and taking the Exception as it is applied at common law by orthodox authority, it is always preferable to offer the entries from the modern point of view. If the party himself made them, as the common law required (ante, § 1538), he may now take the stand with them; if a clerk made them, as permitted by some of the statutory enlargements (ante, § 1519), the clerk may take the stand with them.

It is perhaps singular that counsel have so frequently submitted to employ parties' books under the hampering restrictions of the present Exception. As for the Courts, their slowness in recognizing the full force of the change above judicially expounded is no doubt chiefly due to a rooted tendency to regard the books as independent or "original" evidence, distinct from the party's own testimony on the stand and thus to apply to them the only rule under which, in that view, they could be receivable.

§ 1561. Relation of this Branch to the main Exception; Books of Deceased Party; Books of Party's Clerk. The relation of this branch of the Exception, in favor of parties' entries, to the general Exception (ante, §§ 1521–1533) in favor of regular entries by persons in general, remains to be considered.

(1) The question arises first in this way: How shall we treat an offer of regular entries by a deceased party? On principle, they should be treated from the latter point of view; i.e. they should be treated as the ordinary case of a regular entry by a deceased person. This seems to have become the practice in England,[1] where the special Exception for parties' entries was § 1561. [1] 1812, Pritt v. Fairclough, 3 Camp. 305.

(except by statute) not recognized (ante, § 1518). But in the United States there has naturally been some confusion. One tendency is to rank them as parties' entries and to test them by the restrictions peculiar to the original practice in that branch of the Exception.[2] But several Courts have treated them according to the general exception in favor of regular entries by deceased persons.[3] In this view, absence from the jurisdiction,[4] as well as other circumstances (ante, § 1521), may suffice to admit the entries. No Court, however, seems to have declared with sufficient explicitness that this is the proper treatment;[5] though there can be no doubt of it, either as a matter of principle (because the party, when he made the entries, was not then a party), or as a matter of expediency for the person wishing to encounter the fewest restrictions for the evidence. For regular entries, then, by deceased or otherwise unavailable parties, the general exception (ante, § 1521) is the proper one to employ.

(2) Under the common-law limitations of this branch of the Exception, books kept by the party's clerk were not admitted as the party's books (ante, § 1538). There was thus at common law no confusion, as to a clerk's books, between the two branches of the Exception; they could come in only under the main Exception, if the clerk were deceased (ante, §§ 1521–1533), or to aid the recollection of the clerk, if living, who must then be called to the stand.[6] But many of the statutes dealing with parties' books (ante, § 1519) contain a clause admitting books kept by a clerk; sometimes the clerk is specified as the party's, sometimes as a "disinterested" person. In either case the question is presented whether the statute is to be construed as applying to the parties' books Exception and therefore as practically abolishing the exclusion of clerks' books (ante, § 1538), or whether it is to be construed as attempt-

[2] 1871, Bland v. Warren, 65 N. C. 373; 1817, Ash v. Patton, 3 S. & R. Pa. 303; 1869, Hoover v. Gehr, 62 Pa. 136. In this view, the only difficulty is the lack of the suppletory oath (ante, § 1554). But in the foregoing cases the decease was regarded as a sufficient reason for dispensing with the oath.

Absence from the jurisdiction ought equally to suffice. Contra: 1827, Douglass v. Hart, 4 McCord S. C. 257 (entries rejected; distinguishing Foster v. Sinkler, 1786, 1 Bay S. C. 38, and Spence v. Saunders, 1790, 1 Bay S. C. 110, and expressly refusing to assimilate the case to that of entries by absent clerks and other third parties; but in the later Thompson v. Porter, infra, the entries of a deceased partner were admitted).

Insanity ought equally to suffice: 1850, Holbrook v. Gay, 6 Cush. 216 (Dewey, J.: "The same necessity which justifies the introduction of the books of the party . . . alike seems to require and justify the admission of them where the party has become incapacitated to take the oath by reason of insanity").

[3] 1907, Davie v. Lloyd, 38 Colo. 250, 88 Pac. 446; 1898, Setchell v. Keigwin, 57 Conn. 478, 18 Atl. 594; 1837, Leighton v. Manson, 14 Me. 208; 1845, Odell v. Culbert, 9 W. & S. Pa. 67, semble; 1850, Thomson v. Porter, 4 Strobh. Eq. S. C. 65, semble.

[4] 1875, New Haven & H. Co. v. Goodwin, 42 Conn. 231; 1786, Foster v. Sinkler, 1 Bay S. C. 40 (but see the later Douglass v. Hart, supra, contra).

[5] In some modern decisions, it may be added, the two branches are hopelessly confounded: e.g., 1889, Culver v. State, 122 Ind. 562; 1883, Vinal v. Green, 21 W. Va. 308.

[6] E.g.: 1880, Ford v. R. Co., 54 Ia. 723, 730, 7 N. W. 126 (time-books kept by defendant's officers or employees; persons keeping them required to be called); 1911, First National Bldg. Co. v. Vandenburg, 29 Okl. 583, 119 Pac. 224 (requiring the bookkeeper to be called, if alive and accessible); and cases cited ante, § 1521.

ing to re-state a portion of the general Exception for deceased persons' entries and therefore as merely declaratory of the common-law on that point. This question, with the few rulings on the subject, has already been considered (ante, §§ 1519, 1538). It is perhaps vain to attempt to construe statutes whose framers themselves seem not to have understood precisely the bearing of their enactments.

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC VI: SUNDRY STATEMENTS OF DECEASED PERSONS

CHAPTER LII.

§ 1562. Introductory. At this point may be considered a few Exceptions, recognized in a limited number of jurisdictions, admitting certain kinds of statements of individuals deceased or otherwise unavailable. These Exceptions are related to the general group of the foregoing ones, in that the admissibility of the statements is founded on the Necessity principle, i.e. that the declarant is deceased or otherwise unavailable. They are thus distinguished from all the ensuing Exceptions, in which the declarant need not be shown unavailable. They are distinguished from the Exception next following (Reputation), in that they involve individual statements, not reputation.

A. DECLARATIONS ABOUT PRIVATE BOUNDARIES

§ 1563. History of the Exception. The use of individual declarations about private boundary must be distinguished from the use of Reputation to prove boundaries, in the ensuing Exception (post, § 1582); historically, the former grew out of the latter, in some jurisdictions; but they now exist as separate, each with its peculiar limitations. Reputation, whether about boundaries or about other things, stands on its own ground as fulfilling the requirements of a distinct Hearsay Exception. The present Exception is concerned with ordinary individual statements, which in themselves show neither the kind of Necessity nor the kind of Circumstantial Guarantee later to be considered with reference to Reputation.

The present Exception had historically three sources, these distinct origins being now lost in one blended form:

(1) In some of the Southern States, the Reputation Exception for land-boundaries and customs (post, § 1582), as stated in early English and American treatises, was misunderstood or deliberately expanded, and came to be regarded as justifying the reception of individual statements taken solely on the credit of the individual declarant.[1]

(2) In Massachusetts, the 'res gestæ' doctrine, whether in the general and loose sense of something done (post, § 1795) or in some special relation to an adverse possessor's declarations (post, § 1778), was regarded as covering these statements.[2]

(3) In New England, and elsewhere, the custom of periodical perambulations (or "processioning") of town boundaries (brought over from England) was recognized as one vehicle of introducing reputation evidence (post, § 1592), and then statements of individuals, particularly surveyors, were taken as being of equal value with these perambulations.[3]

§ 1564. General Scope of the Exception. In the following passages from opinions in the various jurisdictions the general tenor and purpose of the Exception may be seen:[1]

§ 1563. [1] See the quotations in the next section.

[2] See the citations in § 1567, post.

[3] 1829, Lawrence v. Haynes, 5 N. H. 36 (Richardson, C. J.: "It would be very singular if the circumstance that a line has been perambulated and marked as the true line by men who had the means of knowing whether it was the true line or not and whose duty and whose interests bound them to perambulate and mark no line but the true one, must be held to afford no evidence of its being the true line. It is in all cases evidence").

In a few States the statutes still recognize the proceeding: Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 4, § 134 (perambulation of town lines every five years); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 42, § 2 ("the boundary lines of every town shall be perambulated and run and the marks renewed, once in every 5 years", by the selectmen); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 2114 (proceedings to locate town boundaries by "survey or perambulation").

In Georgia and Tennessee this ancient custom is known as "processioning"; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, §§ 3817–3826 (prescribing the formalities for processioning); 1921, Tucker v. Roberts, 151 Ga. 753, 108 S. E. 222 (Civ. C. § 3818, as to procedure of running a boundary line by processioners, applied); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 3687–3690 (processioning to settle private boundaries).

§ 1564. [1] Besides the rulings in the following sections, naming the specific limitations, the rule is recognized in the following cases and statutes: Alabama: Code 1907, § 3961 (quoted post, § 1597); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5770 (quoted post, § 1597); Maryland: 1735, Howell's Lessee v. Tilden, 1 Harr. & McH. 84; 1766, Bladen v. Cockey, 1 Harr. & McH. 230; 1770, Redding's Lessee v. M'Cubbin Harr. & McH. 368; 1874, Hawkins v. Hanson, 1 Harr. & McH. 531; 1778, Weems' Lessee v. Disney, 4 Harr. & McH. 156; 1909, Cadwalader v. Price, 111 Md. 310, 73 Atl. 273 (declarations of D., deceased, a landowner familiar with the place, while on the land pointing out the boundaries, admitted); North Carolina: 1805, Harris v. Powell, 2 Hayw. 349; 1837, Hartzog v. Hubbard, 32 Dev. & B. 241; 1859, Scoggin v. Dalrymple, 7 Jones L. 46; 1886, Bethea v. Byrd, 95 N. C. 310, and intervening cases cited; 1904, Yow v. Hamilton, 136 N. C. 357, 48 S. E. 782 (collecting the cases); 1905, Hemphill v. Hemphill, 138 N. C. 504, 51 S. E. 42; 1905, Hill v. Dalton, 140 N. C. 9, 52 S. E. 273; 1906, Broadwell v. Morgan, 142 N. C. 475, 55 S. E. 340; 1914, Sullivan v. Blount, 165 N. C. 7, 80 S. E. 892; 1919, Singleton v. Roebuck, 178 N. C. 201, 100 S. E. 313 (reciting the general rule as stated in Hemphill v. Hemphill, supra); Pennsylvania: 1815, Hamilton v. Mentor, 2 S. & R. 73; 1898, Mineral R. & M. Co. v. Auten, 188 Pa. 568, 41 Atl. 327 (ancient survey); South Carolina: 1825, Spear v. Coate, 3 McCord 229; 1886, Sexton v. Hollis, 26 S. C. 231, 236, 1 S. E. 893; Tennessee: 1812, Beard's Lessee v. Talbot, 1 Cooke 142; Texas: 1866, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 666; 1878, Hurt v. Evans, 49 Tex. 316; 1887, Tucker v. Smith, 68 Tex. 478, 3 S. W. 671;

1813, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Caufman v. Cedar Spring, 6 Binn. 62: "Where boundary is the subject, what has been said by a deceased person is received as evidence. It forms an exception to the general rule."

1832, HENDERSON, C. J., in Sasser v. Herring, 3 Dev. L. 342: "We have in questions of boundary given to the single declarations of a deceased individual as to a line or corner the weight of common reputation. . . . Whether this is within the spirit and reason of the rule it is now too late to inquire."

1844, PARKER, C. J., in Smith v. Powers, 15 N. H. 563: "It is true that the decisions in England seem to restrict the evidence of the declarations of deceased persons respecting boundaries . . . to what the deceased said relative to the public opinion respecting the boundary. But the testimony has not been limited in this country. . . . The declarations of a person deceased, who appeared to have had means of knowledge and no interest in making the declarations, are competent evidence upon a question of boundary, even in a case of private right."

§ 1565. Death of Declarant. The principle of necessity (ante, § 1421) was found in the usual lack of other sufficient evidence for proving boundaries. The perishable nature of the landmarks, and the incompleteness of the records, rendered it necessary to resort to such statements, oral or written, as could be had from deceased persons having competent knowledge. Though the changed conditions of life in the later history of our communities have greatly diminished this necessity, it sufficed in the beginning to establish the exception in the law:

1859, MANLY, J., in Scoggin v. Dalrymple, 7 Jones L. 46: "Traditionary evidence has long been received by the courts of North Carolina in questions of private boundaries as well as public. . . . The necessity for such a departure from the common law principle grew out of the inartificial manner in which the lands of the State were originally surveyed and marked, making it necessary, in order to fix the position of the respective parcels, to resort more frequently to tradition, and to give this kind of evidence greater efficiency by enlarging its limits."

1864, PIERPONT, J., in Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 387: "In many of the States, and especially in this State, the territory within their limits was first divided into townships, and these were soon after subdivided into small lots and distributed between the several proprietors. Almost the only evidence left upon the land, to indicate the location of the lines either of the townships or of the divisions between the proprietors, was marks upon the trees standing thereon, and these evidences, from lapse of time, accidental causes, and the cutting off of the timber, are almost entirely obliterated. . . . If it be said that the lines must be established by witnesses who have personal knowledge of their original location, they cannot be proved at all, as in the great majority of cases all such persons are now dead."

Nevertheless, in fulfilling this condition of necessity, it was never required that the absence of other satisfactory evidence should in a given case be shown. That absence being assumed to be a general feature commonly ex-

Vermont: 1896, Martyn v. Curtis, 68 Vt. 397, 35 Atl. 333; Virginia: 1837, Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 712.

This kind of evidence seems never to have obtained recognition in England or Canada: Mellor v. Walmesley, 1904, 2 Ch. 525, and 1905, 2 Ch. 164; Mercer v. Denne, 1904, 2 Ch. 535, 541, and 1905, 2 Ch. 538, 554; and cases cited post, § 1584; 1905, Bartlett v. Nova Scotia S. Co., 37 N. Sc. 259, 264.

In Bower v. Cohen, 126 Ga. 35, 54 S. E. 918 (1906), this Exception seems to have been forgotten in excluding a surveyor's map.

Compare the cases on official surveys (post, § 1665).

isting, the only requirement was that the decease of the specific person whose declarations were offered should be shown; [1] in other words, there was a necessity for all the evidence that could be had, and, if this person were deceased, the only evidence available from him was his hearsay statements. It would seem, however, that insanity, or absence from the jurisdiction, would here not suffice (as it does for some of the foregoing Exceptions); because the necessity in general is predicated of titles and boundaries of long standing, for which the lapse of time has operated to destroy other evidence; and hence if the matter is one of the present generation, or if the evidence in question comes from the present generation (as it would if the declarant were merely absent), this necessity could hardly be presumed to exist.

§ 1566. No Interest to Misrepresent; Owner's Statement excluded. The general principle of a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness (ante, § 1422) is seen in the requirement that the declarant shall have had no interest or no motive to misrepresent; the words "interest" and "motive" being here used by the Courts interchangeably. The general notion is that he must stand in such a position that the Court cannot see any reason to expect misrepresentation: [1]

1870, NESMITH, J., in Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 239: "The party or declarant must have no interest to misrepresent. . . . It will be for the Court and jury to determine . . . whether they had any motives to misrepresent by a statement too favorable to their own pecuniary interest. . . . The evidence tends to show that the location of the bound where the father says it was established was in disparagement of the declarant's title; therefore it conveys or implies no purpose to misrepresent."

In particular, a statement by an owner himself about his own boundaries would thus be inadmissible: [2]

§ 1565. [1] This is mentioned in all the cases; see the quotations in the preceding section, and the following cases: 1901, Barrett v. Kelly, 131 Ala. 378, 30 So. 824 (declarations of a person not shown to be deceased, excluded; the statement of the rule is hopelessly confused); 1915, Smith v. Bachus, 195 Ala. 8, 70 So. 261 (whether certain land passed by a description in a deed; the pointing out of the location, etc., by the plaintiff's deceased father-grantor, admitted; the precise point of law decided is not mentioned; this is a frequent occurrence in the opinions of the learned Court of this State; there are six or seven principles on which this offer could have been made or challenged, and numerous details under each principle, but none are mentioned; the only clue is the case cited as precedent; this opinion cites Barrett v. Kelly, supra; hence the case is placed here); 1901, O'Connell v. Cox, 179 Mass. 250, 60 N. E. 580 (excluded, because the decease of the declarant was not shown); 1917, Mechanics' Bank & T. Co. v. Whilden, 175 N. C. 52, 94 S. E. 723.

§ 1566. [1] Accord: 1901, Tracy v. Eggleston, 47 C. C. A. 357, 108 Fed. 324 (declarations as to boundary by a deceased public surveyor, made on the land while pointing out a mound, admitted; Pardee, J., diss., because the declarant was at the time interested in a controversy as to the boundaries); 1888, Lawrence v. Tennant, 64 N. H. 540, 15 Atl. 543; 1917, Morrison v. Noone, 78 N. H. 338, 100 Atl. 45 (damage by flowage; statement by G., now deceased, as to limit of water-right, admitted); 1886, Bethea v. Byrd, 95 N. C. 310; 1915, Wilson W. & L. Co. v. Hinton, 171 N. C. 27, 86 S. E. 494 (here the additional requirement of 'ante litem motam' is made, without authority cited); 1825, Spear v. Coate, 3 McCord, S. C. 229; 1864, Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 387; 1868, Powers v. Silsby, 41 Vt. 291; 1873, Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 53; 1837, Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh Va. 713; 1895, Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347, semble; 1907, Douglas L. Co. v. Thayer Co., 107 Va. 292, 58 S. E. 1101 (Harriman v. Brown followed); 1877, Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 84.

[2] Fed. 1898, Scaife v. Land Co., 33 C. C. A. 47, 90 Fed. 238 (by an heir of the estate, ex-

1827, RICHARDSON, C. J., in Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 215 (excluding declarations as to the boundary of their own land): "It must be presumed to have been their interest to extend the boundaries of the lot, and their declarations in favor of their interest were clearly not admissible."

Nevertheless, a few Courts will admit even an owner's declarations, provided he appears to have had at the time no motive to misrepresent.[3] This feature of the general rule distinguishes it sharply from the Massachusetts variant next noticed.

§ 1567. Massachusetts Rule; Declaration must be made (1) on the Land, and (2) by the Owner in Possession. The general rule, as first established in the Southern States and thence widely adopted elsewhere (ante, § 1563) made no other limitations than the preceding. But two other limitations, one of them in conflict with the preceding, obtained originally in Massachusetts; these were due to the associated notions of 'res gestæ' and verbal acts (post, § 1778) which in that jurisdiction, as already noticed (ante, § 1563), served as the parent for the present Exception.

(1) The declarant must have been, at the time of the declaration, on the land and engaged in pointing out the boundaries mentioned. This originally was purely a Massachusetts variant, of long standing.[1] Though it once obtained a footing in New Hampshire and Vermont, it has there since been repudiated.[2] But, by a not unnatural misunderstanding of the local nature cluded); Conn. 1793, Porter v. Warner, 2 Root 23; 1910, Turgeon v. Woodward, 83 Conn. 537, 78 Atl. 577; Md. 1909, Peters v. Tilghman, 111 Md. 227, 73 Atl. 726 (guardian of infant owners; declaration excluded); N. H. 1827, Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 215 (quoted supra; but see this doctrine repudiated in this State, infra, n. 3); N. Car. 1832, Sasser v. Herring, 3 Dev. L. 342; 1885, Halstead v. Mullen, 93 N. C. 252; 1905, Hemphill v. Hemphill, 138 N. C. 504, 51 S. E. 42 (deed by the owner); S. Car. 1888, Taylor v. Glenn, 29 S. C. 292, 297, 7 S. E. 483; 1897, State v. Crocker, 49 S. C. 242, 27 S. E. 49 (lines on a plot inserted by the surveyor at the direction of a claimant, excluded); Tex. 1887, Tucker v. Smith, 68 Tex. 478, 3 S. W. 671; Vt. 1880, Evarts v. Young, 52 Vt. 334.

[3] 1895, Robinson v. Dewhurst, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed. 336 (but it will be noticed that this case, as cited post, § 1567, also follows the Massachusetts variant, and has evidently confused the two forms), 1910, Turgeon v. Woodward, 83 Conn. 537, 78 Atl. 577 (interesting and careful opinion by Wheeler, J.); 1899, Turner F. L. Co. v. Burns, 71 Vt. 354, 45 Atl. 896 (declarations of owners, admitted on the facts); 1905, Hathaway v. Goslant, 77 Vt. 199, 59 Atl. 835 (owner's declarations as to boundary, admitted); 1883, Corbleys v. Ripley, 22 W. Va. 154 (owner's declarations inadmissible, unless at the time he had no interest to misrepresent); 1897, High v. Pancake, 42 W. Va. 602, 26 S. E. 536.

And in New Hampshire, the above limitation has been repudiated (thus overruling, though not citing, Shepherd v. Thompson, supra): 1908, Keefe v. Sullivan Co. R. Co., 75 N. H. 116, 71 Atl. 379.

There have also been attempts to apply the 'post litem motam' restriction of other Hearsay exceptions: 1888, Taylor v. Glenn, 29 S. C. 292, 297; 1853, Smith v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. Va. 445, 455.

§ 1567. [1] Mass. 1832, Van Dusen v. Turner, 12 Pick. 532; 1842, Daggett v. Shaw, 5 Metc. 226; 1856, Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray 175; 1856, Ware v. Brookhouse, 7 Gray 454; 1857, Flagg v. Mason, 8 Gray 556; 1857, Whitney v. Bacon, 9 Gray 206; 1864, Morrill v. Titcomb, 8 All. 100; 1875, Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 414; 1886, Peck v. Clark, 142 Mass. 440, 8 N. E. 335; 1907, Goyette v. Keenan, 196 Mass. 416, 82 N. E. 427 (declarations not made on the land, inadmissible).

But declarations not referring to boundaries, but merely asserting some title, are not hereunder admissible: Ware v. Brookhouse, Morrill v. Titcomb.

[2] N. H. 1870, Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 237, overruling Melvin v. Marshall, 1851, 22 N. H. 382; 1908, Keefe v. Sullivan Co. R. Co., 75 N. H. 116, 71 Atl. 379; Vt. 1868, Powers v. Silsby, 41 Vt. 291, repudiating the 'dictum' in Wood v. Willard, 1864, 37 Vt. 387; but a later case looks backward again: 1899, Turner F. L. Co. v. Burns, 71 Vt. 354, 45 Atl. 896, semble (must be made "upon or in the vicinity of the boundaries, and pointing of this limitation, it has since unfortunately been adopted thence in Maine,[3] New Jersey,[4] Pennsylvania,[5] and perhaps in other jurisdictions also.[6]

(2) In Massachusetts, further, an anomalous and meaningless restriction is observed that the declarant must also have been, at the time of the declaration, in possession as owner;[7] for example, a mere surveyor's statement will not be received; this doctrine, again, being due historically (ante, § 1563) to the parental relationship, in this jurisdiction, of the 'res gestæ' rule. It will be noted that this limitation is precisely the reverse of that of the usual rule (ante, § 1566); i.e. an owner's declaration is by that rule excluded, but by the Massachusetts rule is admitted; and 'vice versa' for a surveyor's statement. This element of the variant rule has apparently been adopted in only two other jurisdictions.[8] It is to be hoped that in due time this and the them out"); the last aberration has now been repudiated in turn, and the rule of Powers v. Silsby restored, but with some obscurity of language: 1905, Hathaway v. Goslant, 77 Vt. 199, 59 Atl. 835.

[3] 1888, Royal v. Chandler, 81 Me. 119, 16 Atl. 410; 1899, Wilson v. Rowe, 93 Me. 205, 44 Atl. 615; 1905, Emmet v. Perry, 100 Me. 139, 60 Atl. 872 (preceding cases said to be "settled law").

[4] 1886, Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 77, 7 Atl. 886.

[5] 1856, Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. 335 (Knox, J.: "Nor was the boundary actually shown to the witness when the declaration was made"); followed in Kennedy v. Lubold, 88 Pa. 255 (1878); Kramer v. Goodlander, 98 Pa. 369 (1881); 1909, Collins v. Clough, 222 Pa. 472, 71 Atl. 1077 (confirming the preceding cases; the learned judge's suggestion that the term "variant", above applied in the text to this rule, is misapplied, seems to ignore the circumstances that the orthodox unlimited rule began in the 1700s and was recognized in several States, including Pennsylvania in 1815, and that the "variant" only came in Pennsylvania in 1856, by imitation of Daggett v. Shaw, Mass. That it is "unfortunate", as above termed, is respectfully maintained; that epithet suits any rule which narrows a wholesome exception to the Hearsay rule).

[6] Fed. By a misunderstanding of the Texas rule, which has no such limitation (ante, § 1566), this element was required in Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 1880, 102 U. S. 364; but it is doubtful since Clement v. Packer, 1887, 125 U. S. 325, 8 Sup. 907, whether this requirement would be insisted on where the law of the State did not prescribe it; in Ayres v. Watson, 1890, 137 U. S. 596, 11 Sup. 201, the doubt was left unsolved; in Robinson v. Dewhurst, 1895, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed. 336, it was held, thinking of this doctrine, that the declaration must be made while on the land and pointing out, or at least must be not a mere casual recital; so also Martin v. Hughes, 1898, 33 C. C. A. 198, 90 Fed. 632 (for Pennsylvania; declarant must be on the land; here a deceased surveyor).

Ala. 1902, Southern Iron Works v. Central of G. R. Co., 131 Ala. 649, 31 So. 723 (declarations as to private boundaries, held inadmissible, except when made by persons in possession and pointing out boundaries; following Hunnicutt v. Peyton, U. S., and adopting the Massachusetts rule); 1921, Murray v. Fowler, 205 Ala. 597, 88 So. 849 (plaintiff's deceased husband's declarations as to boundary while in possession, admitted); Cal. 1900, Smith v. Glenn, 129 Cal. 18, 62 Pac. 180 (owner's declarations while in possession and surveying, admitted).

Contra: N. C. 1909, Caldwell L. & L. Co. v. Triplett, 151 N. C. 409, 66 S. E. 343.

It is regrettable that this abnormal Massachusetts rule should be given such notice by other Courts to the confusion of the simple and settled rule of orthodox tradition.

[7] The full statement of the Massachusetts rule is as follows: 1842, Hubbard, J., in Daggett v. Shaw, 5 Metc. 226: "Declarations of ancient persons, made while in possession of land owned by them, pointing out their boundaries on the land itself, and who are deceased at the time of the trial, are admissible in evidence, where nothing appears to show that they were interested in thus pointing out their boundaries." Accord: 1856, Bartlett v. Emerson, 7 Gray 175; 1857, Whitney v. Bacon, 9 Gray 206; 1882, Boston Water P. Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483 (deceased surveyor's field notes and plottings, excluded); 1886, Peck v. Clark, 142 Mass. 440, 8 N. E. 335, and cases supra, par. 1; 1913, Morrison v. Holder, 214 Mass. 366, 101 N. E. 1067 (deceased owner's declarations as to use of land, tree as boundary, etc., admitted).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1573, which rest on a different doctrine.

[8] 1891, Royal v. Chandler, 83 Me. 152, 21 Atl. 842; 1899, Wilson v. Rowe, 93 Me. 205, 44 Atl. 615; 1886, Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 77, 7 Atl. 886.

In Canada, no certain rule appears in the cases: 1847, Doe v. Murray, 3 Kerr N. Br.

preceding anomaly of the Massachusetts rule will cease to vex the legitimate course of precedent elsewhere, and that other Courts will fully appreciate that the rulings in that jurisdiction and its few followers must be wholly ignored in applying the present Exception.

§ 1568. Knowledge of Declarant. The declarant, upon general testimonial principles (ante, §§ 1424, 653) must appear to have had knowledge of the boundary spoken of, or to have been in a position to acquire such knowledge:[1]

1837, TUCKER, C. J., in Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 713: "[Such declarations are admissible] provided such person had peculiar means of knowing the fact; as, for instance, the surveyor or chain carrier who were engaged upon the original survey; or owner of the tract, or of an adjoining tract calling for the same boundaries; and so of tenants, processioners, and others whose duty or interest would lead them to diligent inquiry and accurate information of the fact."

1856, LEE, J., in Clements v. Kyles, 13 Gratt. 478 (rejecting hearsay statements): "It is said that the declarant was living on the land at the time, but in what character is not stated. . . . That his living within the bounds of the survey gave him the opportunity to see trees marked as corners of some survey, found accidently or otherwise, would surely not be sufficient, unless some duty or interest can be traced to him by which he would have been prompted to make diligent inquiry and to obtain accurate information, within the meaning of the rule as propounded in Harriman v. Brown."

§ 1569. Opinion Rule. The Opinion rule (post, § 1956), for the reasons already indicated under the Exception for Dying Declarations (ante, § 1447), can hardly be thought to apply to these extra-judicial statements of deceased persons. Nevertheless, it is occasionally invoked.[1]

335 (declarations of a deceased surveyor while pointing out boundaries, admitted, "as part of the 'res gestæ'"); 1864, Sartell v. Scott, 6 All. N. Br. 166 (declarations of an owner in possession while pointing out the boundary of land he was selling, excluded); 1877, O'Connor v. Dunn, 2 Ont. App. 247 (deceased surveyor's notes, not admitted).

Whether the declarant must be deceased is not decided: 1910, Abbott v. Walker, 204 Mass. 71, 90 N. E. 405 (here the declarations were receivable against the declarant's successor, being admissions of a privy in title, under § 1082, ante).

§ 1568. [1] Fed. 1880, Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 364; 1895, Robinson v. Dewhurst, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed. 336; Cal. 1860, Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 279; Kan. 1916, Miller v. Moore, 98 Kan. 544, 158 Pac. 1108 (affidavit to a surveyor as to a boundary, some 30 years before, by owners having no personal knowledge, held "no independent evidence"); N. H. 1870, Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 237; 1908, Keefe v. Sullivan Co. R. Co. 75 N. H. 116, 71 Atl. 379 (foreman of a railroad section, in charge of fences and roadbed, admitted); 1917, Morrison v. Noone, 78 N. H. 338, 100 Atl. 45 (right of flowage; statements by G., now deceased, as to an agreement for a high-water mark, excluded; too strict; the distinction here drawn had no relation to G.'s liability); N. Car. 1902, Westfelt v. Adams, 131 N. C. 379, 42 S. E. 823 (declarations, as to a corner tree, not in view at the time of the declaration, admissible, if identification is practicable); Pa. 1856, Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. 335 ("It was no part of the offer that A. J. had made the boundary, or that he was present when it was made, or that he had subsequently examined it, or had run the lines of either survey. . . . It was the mere declaration of one who did not appear to have correct information on the subject"); S. C. 1888, Taylor v. Glenn, 29 S. C. 292, 297 (declarations of a neighbor, not having special knowledge, excluded); Tenn. 1900, Montgomery v. Lipscomb, 105 Tenn. 144, 58 S. W. 306 (declaration of former owner or surveyor, admissible; obscure); Tex. 1887, Tucker v. Smith, 68 Tex. 478, 3 S. W. 671; Vt. 1864, Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 387; 1868, Powers v. Sibley, 41 Vt. 291; 1873, Hadley v. Howe, 46 Vt. 142; Va. 1895, Fry v. Stowers, 92 Va. 13, 32 S. E. 500 (the son of an adjacent owner and a chain-bearer upon a different survey, excluded); 1912, Smith v. Stanley, 114 Va. 117, 75 S. E. 742 (declarations excluded for lack of means of knowledge); W. Va. 1877, Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 84.

§ 1569. [1] 1835, Smith v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. Va. 445, 455 (chain-carrier's statement as to "the waters on which the P. survey should § 1570. Form of the Declaration; Maps, Surveys, etc. The declaration may be either oral or written; and statements in the form of maps, plans, surveys, and the like, have been constantly admitted under the present Exception.[1] From this is to be distinguished the use of surveys or maps under the Exception for Reputation (post, § 1592), and under the Exception for Official Statements (post, § 1665).

§ 1571. Discriminations as to 'Res Gestæ', Admissions, etc. From the use, under this Exception, of a deceased person's declarations as to boundaries, are to be discriminated other kinds of declarations about land, coming under other principles; these are chiefly:

(1) Declarations by deceased persons offered as the vehicle of reputation (post, § 1584);

(2) Declarations by deceased persons of facts against their proprietary interest (ante, § 1458);

(3) Declarations by a party or privy constituting admissions of title (ante, § 1082);

(4) Declarations made as verbal acts, coloring the nature of possession of land (post, §§ 1778–1780);

(5) Notes by an official surveyor, admissible as official statements (post, § 1665).

The practical differences in the operation of these distinct principles are elsewhere more fully pointed out (ante, §§ 1459, 1097, post, §§ 1665, 1780).

B. ANCIENT DEED-RECITALS

§ 1572. Ancient Deed-Recitals, to prove a Lost Deed, or Boundary, or Pedigree, or Destroyed Records. There is a limited use of deed-recitals, by way of exception to the Hearsay rule, which has its root in orthodox and ancient tradition, and yet has never received great encouragement, and finds recognition in only a small number of precedents. This use of deed-recitals seems to have been recognized for at least half a dozen distinct purposes.

(1) Where in one deed the contents of another deed are recited, the rule requiring production of the original (ante, § 1179) must of course first be satisfied; but, supposing it to be satisfied by proof that the other deed once existed and was lost, then the recital, according to an early and unquestioned ruling, is admissible as evidence of the contents and the execution of the lost lie", excluded, as opinion); 1897, High v. Pancake, 42 W. Va. 602, 26 S. E. 536 ("We must have a declaration establishing a fact, as a corner tree or particular marked line, not simply a statement that the land is within his boundary or the same conveyed in a certain deed, or that a line would cross a creek at a certain point, without more"). Compare the cases cited post, § 1956.

§ 1570. [1] Examples: 1860, Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 279; 1870, Smith v. Forrest 49 N. H. 239, 1866, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 665; 1867, Welder v. Carroll, 29 Tex. 333.

The following statute belongs here rather than anywhere else: Kan. St. 1909, c. 114, Gen. St. 1915, § 8771 (where official road records are destroyed, and thereby the proceedings of road-establishment cannot be evidenced, "any map, plat, atlas, or diagram showing such road" is admissible, if made before destruction of records or if a copy of one so made; the county clerk's certificate under seal to be 'prima facie' evidence of time of making).

deed.[1] This precedent has been justified by eminent American judges in the following language: [2]

1811, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 327 (admitting recitals, in an ancient deed, of the existence and contents of another deed, afterwards lost, by a predecessor in title 'ante litem motam', the reciter being a trustee to make partition): "The assertion of such persons must make a strong impression. But it is objected that, however impressive the declaration of a man of character may be, even without his oath, yet the law admits the word of no one in evidence without oath. The general rule certainly is so; but subject to relaxation in cases of necessity or extreme inconvenience. How is it expected that a deed like the present is to be proved, when the subscribing witnesses have been dead eight and twenty years and the deed itself is not to be found? . . . Is it not necessary to resort to secondary evidence without oath?"

1830, STORY, J., in Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 83: "There are cases in which such a recital may be used as evidence even against strangers. If, for instance, there be the recital of a lease in a deed of release, and in a suit against a stranger the title under the release comes in question, there the recital of the lease in such release is not 'per se' evidence of the existence of the lease; but if the existence and loss of the lease be established by other evidence, there the recital is admissible as secondary proof in the absence of more perfect evidence, to establish the contents of the lease; and if the transaction be an ancient one and possession has been long held under such release and is not otherwise to be accounted for, there the recital will of itself materially fortify the presumption from lapse of time and length of possession of the original existence of the lease."

It would seem to be implied in this doctrine that the lost deed must be an ancient one (post, § 2137), or at least that no other evidence of execution or contents is available. Moreover, a few cases seem to impose the additional condition, analogous to that required for authenticating ancient deeds (post, § 2141), that the premises claimed should have been in possession of the claimant, as a necessary corroborative circumstance.[3] — That such a recital is § 1573. [1] 1704, Ford v. Grey, 6 Mod. 44, 1 Salk. 285 ("A fine was produced, but no deed declaring the uses; but a deed was offered in evidence which did recite a deed of limitation of the uses; and the question was whether that was evidence. And the Court said, that the bare recital of a deed was not evidence, but that if it could be proved that such a deed had been, and [was] lost, it would do if it were recited in another").

[2] Accord: Federal: 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 83 (admissible to show contents, if the original's existence is otherwise shown, and loss proved; see quotation supra); 1832, Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598, 610 (same; lapse of time may be sufficient evidence of execution and loss); 1866, Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 795, 797, 805 (recital of a will, of seisin, etc., admitted; Carver v. Jackson followed); 1913, Wilson v. Snow, 228 U. S. 217, 33 Sup. 487 (deed's recital of executrix' authority under a will; Carver v. Jackson approved; see post, § 2145, n. 4); Iowa: Code 1919, § 8107 (recitals in deeds prior to Jan. 1, 1905, of other deeds executed in pursuance to contract, etc. to be presumptive evidence); Michigan: 1900, Norris v. Hall, 124 Mich. 170, 82 N. W. 832 (recitals in a deed, a power of attorney, and a court order, of 1846, that title passed on S.'s death to survivors, etc., admitted); Missouri: 1921, Sawyer v. French, — Mo. —, 235 S. W. 126 (recitals of a lost deed in a deed of 1905; not decided); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Conveyances, § 69 (recital of a letter of attorney in a deed recorded for ten years, admissible to prove its existence, on oath by the claimant that he has seen the letter); 1890, Havens v. Sea Shore L. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 365, 375, 20 Atl. 497 (recital, "in an ancient deed or will, of any antecedent deed or document", admissible); Pennsylvania: 1811, Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 327, 332, 340 (but Tilghman, C. J., alone takes this reason; Brackenridge, J., seems to take another reason, noted ante, § 1133; and Yeates, J., dissents); 1900, Dorff v. Schmunk, 197 Pa. 298, 47 Atl. 113 (after evidence of loss, a recital in a deed of 1860 was admitted to prove the lost deed).

[3] Can. 1912, Boehner v. Hirtle, N. Sc., 6 D. L. R. 548 (recital of an earlier title in a crown grant, held not admissible). U. S.

not admissible where the original deed recited is not accounted for as lost or the like, seems unquestioned.[4]

(2) In Massachusetts, a series of precedents admits a recital in an ancient deed to show the location of a boundary or monument,[5] though possibly the scope of the exception may be somewhat larger. But the basis of the rule is the probability of the recital's truth by reason of its having been acted upon in contemporaneous transactions; and this limitation is strictly applied.[6]

(3) A recital, in an ancient deed, of a pedigree of inheritance is by some Courts treated as admissible to show the state of the relationship.[7] Here also

N. J. 1906, Rollins v. Atlantic C. R. Co., 73 N. J. L. 64, 62 Atl. 929 (quoted infra, n. 7); N. Y. 1860, McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 206, 211 (recitals in a will of the plaintiff's predecessor, excluded; "assertions of title or claims of ownership made in deeds or wills may in some rare cases be evidence, . . . but only in connection with other proof of a long-continued and undisputed possession in accordance with the right or title claimed"); St. 1890, c. 158, § 1, C. P. A. 1920, § 376 (sheriff's deed; cited more fully post, § 1664); S. Car. 1798, Frost v. Brown, 2 Bay 135, 138 (recital, in a deed by the offeror's ancestor W., of a lost deed from S. to W., offered in corroboration, to show the latter deed's existence; the offeror not being in possession; the Court equally divided); 1831, Sims v. Meacham, 2 Bail. 101 (recitals in an old deed of a State grant of a certain date, the public records of that year being lost, held "insufficient" to raise a presumption of such grant).

[4] 1885, Calloway v. Cossart, 45 Ark. 81, 85 (recitals of payment and receipt of patent, excluded); 1823, Hite v. Shrader, 3 Litt. Ky. 445, 447; 1810, Bonnet v. Devebaugh, 4 Binn. Pa. 175, 178, 190 (recitals in warrant dated 1763, of survey on proprietaries' order, excluded, apparently because loss of original was not shown); 1856, Watrous v. McGrew, 16 Tex. 506, 513; 1903, Davis v. Moyles, 76 Vt. 25, 56 Atl. 174 (certain recitals of confiscation in a petition of 1795 and 1799 excluded, the theory being obscure).

The following case stands on peculiar grounds: 1837, Jones v. Inge, 5 Port. Ala. 327, 335 (grantee of fee-patent from the U. S., the patent reciting that it was given to the grantee as purchaser from an Indian reservee; evidence of the Indian's incapacity to reserve and his infancy when selling was offered; held, (1) that recitals in general are not evidential against strangers; (2) that under the Indian treaties, the U. S. patent-recitals were intended to be admissible and indisputable as against strangers; (3) but that nevertheless the deed from the Indian to the patentee must be accounted for).

Compare the rules about grantor's admissions (ante, § 1082), and oral admissions of a deed's contents (ante, § 1256).

[5] 1840, Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Metc. Mass. 95, 101 ("Recitals in ancient deeds are always competent evidence"; here, of a boundary); 1870, Morris v. Callanan, 105 Mass. 129 (description of boundary in a deed more than 50 years old, admitted); 1879, Drury v. R. Co., 127 Mass. 571, 581 (plans of 1805 and 1816, showing the position of a creek, admitted); 1882, Randall v. Chase, 133 Mass. 210 (deed of 1839 admitted, reciting location of a way).

[6] 1882, Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483 (the document must be "of such a character as usually accompany transfers of title or acts of possession, and purport to form a part of actual transactions referring to coexisting subjects by which their truth can be tested, and there is deemed to be a presumption that they are not fabricated"; here excluding a deceased surveyor's field-notes and plotting, because not "acted on"); 1896, Whitman v. Shaw, 166 Mass. 451, 44 N. E. 333 (a plan and field-notes, made in 1818, by a surveyor under the direction of the predecessors in title of either plaintiff or defendant, the latter claiming by adverse possession, as well as by deed, and the dispute involving a boundary line, admitted, as representing "actual transactions").

[7] Federal: 1826, Stokes v. Dawes, 4 Mason 268, Story, J. ("after 60 years, it is not too much to say that a fact of heirship, stated in a deed under which possession was held without question for 30 years, may well be admitted"); 1866, Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 795, 805 (heirship); 1886, Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, 399, 6 Sup. 780 (preceding case approved; but the rule is treated as if governed by the pedigree exception); 1902, Stockley v. Cissna, 56 C. C. A. 324, 119 Fed. 812, 824 (recitals of heirship in a deed of 1897, not admitted against a stranger; Carver v. Jackson, supra, approved); Alabama: 1921, McMillan v. Aiken, — Ala. —, 88 So. 135 (deed of 1845 reciting heirship, admitted); Columbia (Dist.): 1910, Wilson v. Snow, 35 D. C. App. 562 (recitals that the grantor was executrix, in a deed 50 years old, admitted); Georgia: 1905, Lanier v. Hobard, 123 Ga. 626, 51 S. E. 632 (recital of heirship in a deed of 1871, not admitted, at least without corroboration by possession or the like); Hawaii: 1901, Mist v. Kapiolani Estate, 13 Haw. 523 (deceased grantor's recitals of relationship, in a deed later than 1853; "after a relationship and the death had been established by evidence 'aliunde', the recitals were properly admitted"); Kansas: 1913, Dyer v. Marriott, 89 Kan. 515, 131 Pac. 1185 (recital of a will, heir-at-law, etc., in a deed of recent but unspecified date, excluded); Maine: 1826, Little v. Palister, 4 Greenl. 209 ("after a long series of years", and with no contrary claimants in the meantime, the jury may "presume the pedigree as stated in deeds of conveyance"); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, 5374 (recital of heirship or kinship in a deed, or affidavit thereof by a maker attached to deed, admissible if the maker is "dead or absent from the State or otherwise disqualified from testifying", and the deed was filed for record five years before suit, and claimant has paid taxes for three years); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 5610 (for deeds prior to Jan. 1, 1907, recitals of heirship, etc., are admissible on the issue of power to convey; recitals of the fact of husband and wife are admissible to show the grantors to be such; recitals identifying grantors with prior grantees are admissible to evidence identity of one in possession); New Jersey: 1906, Rollins v. Atlantic C. R. Co., 73 N. J. L. 64, 62 Atl. 929 (recital that "she being the issue and heir at law of G. A.", admitted; "The rule I think may be regarded as settled that a recital, whether of an ancient deed, will, lease, or pedigree, may be [admitted when] supported by any testimony which renders credible the truth of the fact recited"; here the recording of the deeds, etc., were held to suffice; the opinion does not properly distinguish the present question, that of par. (1) supra, and the general pedigree rule); New York: 1830, Jackson v. Russell, 4 Wend. 543, 548 (recitals in an old deed, used to show death of persons in interest); 1901, Young v. Shulenberg, 165 N. Y. 385, 59 N. E. 135 (recitals in an ancient deed, admitted to prove relationship; but the Court inconsistently proceeds to apply the limitations of the pedigree exception, ante, § 1480); St. 1913, c. 395, C. P. A. 1920, § 379 (recital of heirship in a deed, etc., more than 30 years old and duly recorded, to be evidence); Pennsylvania: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 67 (recital "with respect to a pedigree", but not recital of another deed, admissible); 1795, Paxton v. Price, 1 Yeates 500 ("recitals in a conveyance are evidence of pedigree, the rules in general being much relaxed in this particular"); 1844, James v. Letzler, 8 W. & S. 192 ("There is an exception in the case of an ancient deed containing a recital, where the possession has accompanied such deed; . . . in deeds there are often recitals of marriages, births, or deaths without issue, and other facts incident to the conveyance", which thus become admissible; here, a recital of one P.'s attainder and forfeiture); 1867, Bowser v. Cravener, 56 Pa. 132, 142 (approving Paxton v. Price); 1870, Scharff v. Keener, 64 Pa. 376, 378 (recitals of pedigree in an ancient deed accompanied by possession, admitted); Tennessee: 1916, Fielder v. Pemberton, 136 Tenn. 440, 189 S. W. 873 (ejectment; recitals of heirship in a deed of 1880, admitted "against all persons"); Texas: 1863, Chamblee v. Tarbox, 27 Tex. 139, 145 (marriage); Vermont: 1841, Potter v. Washburn, 13 Vt. 558, 564 (mere recital of heirship in a deed, not receivable, "especially where the deed is of recent date"); 1842, Bell v. Porter, 14 Vt. 307, 309 ("However it may be with such a recital uncorroborated", the sequence of 30 or 40 years' possession by subsequent grantees here sufficed for admission); 1903, Davis v. Moyles, 76 Vt. 25, 56 Atl. 174 (recitals of descent in a petition to the Legislature, excluded, for lack of proof of the reciter's relationship); West Virginia: 1904, Wilson v. Braden, 56 W. Va. 372, 49 S. E. 409 (recitals as to widow and heir, admitted); 1906, Webb v. Ritter, 60 W. Va. 193, 54 S. E. 484 (recitals of heirship in a deed of 1843, admitted); Wisconsin: St. 1901, c. 28, Stats. 1919, § 2216 c ("Whenever any deed, mortgage, land contract, or other conveyance, shall contain a recital in respect to pedigree, consanguinity, marriage, celibacy, adoption, or descent, and shall have been recorded in the proper register's office for 20 years", and is otherwise admissible, it shall be received as evidence of the facts recited; so also a recital in "any will of real estate, or a copy thereof, foreign or domestic", if duly probated); 1885, Watts v. Owens, 62 Wis. 512, 524, 22 N. W. 720, semble (admissible).

the antiquity of the deed depends upon the rules of Authentication (post, § 2137). Moreover, in most of the precedents, the analogous requirement is mentioned (post, § 2141) that possession of the premises under the deed must also have existed as a corroborative circumstance.

Contra: Eng. 1826, Fort v. Clarke, 1 Russ. 601 (recitals of pedigree in a deed of 1793, excluded; semble, admissible if possession had been shown in the predecessors thus named); 1836, Slaney v. Wade, 1 Myl. & Cr. 338, 345, 358, per Eldon, L. C. (recitals of pedigree in an old deed, excluded); U. S. Ga. 1900, Dixon v. Monroe, 112 Ga. 158, 37 S. E. 180 (recital of heirship, excluded); Pa. 1838, Murphy v. Lloyd, 3 Whart. 538, 549 (recitals by a grantor of his own pedigree in an ancient deed, excluded); Tex. 1898, Watkins v. Smith, 91 Tex. 539, 45 S. W. 560 (recitals of heirship in predecessors' deeds, not admissible).

Compare the rule for hearsay statements of a deceased member of a family (ante, §§ 1480–1503).

(4) A recital, in an ancient deed, of a consideration paid, is admissible;[8] though many of the cases of this sort do not deal with ancient deeds, and may better be explained as merely laying down a rule of burden of proof presuming a consideration (post, § 2520).

(5) In Texas, a special doctrine admits a recital in an ancient instrument to evidence a claim of ownership.[9]

(6) By statute, occasionally, the contents of destroyed records in a chain of title may be evidenced by the recitals in a later deed, whether ancient or not.[10]

(7) By statute in Canada, an exception of large and indefinite scope is introduced for recitals in ancient deeds involved in completing contracts for sale of land.[11]

(8) In mining claims, a recital of discovery of a lode or vein, in a prior document of claim, may by custom be admissible.[12]

— Apart from the foregoing specific rules, a recital in an ordinary deed or document of title has no ground for being regarded as anything but inadmissible hearsay.

§ 1574. Other Principles Discriminated. From the foregoing use of deed-recitals as a hearsay exception, the application of certain other principles must be discriminated.

(1) From the hearsay use of ancient deed-recitals to prove the contents of another deed must be distinguished (a) the use of deed-recitals as admissions of the other deed's contents (ante, § 1082). The practical differences in the rules' limitations are three: by the former the deed must be ancient, but not by the latter; by the former the deed must be lost or destroyed, but probably not by the latter, though here there is much controversy (ante, § 1257); by the former the recitals are usable for or against any one, as is all evidence under hearsay exceptions, while by the latter they are usable only against

[8] 1911, Anderson v. Cole, 234 Mo. 1, 136 S. W. 395 (recital of consideration in a deed dated 1878, admitted).

[9] 1920, Magee v. Paul, 110 Tex. 470, 221 S. W. 254 (title to land; recitals in ancient archives admitted to show claim of ownership; collecting prior cases, in which "the principal reasons . . . are stated with such clearness and force in a series of opinions by the lamented Judge Reese, as to obviate the necessity for further discussion"; in this form of the rule, as in the orthodox one, actual possession is not required).

[10] Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 479 (administrator's deed, etc.; upon destruction of the courthouse containing the record of the decree, etc., the deed's recitals of such decree, etc., shall suffice); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 380 (when courthouse records have been destroyed, recital of contents in "any deed of conveyance", etc., executed prior to such destruction, by executor, sheriff, etc., are admissible).

[11] Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 55 (like Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 122, § 2); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 236, § 2 (like Ont. R. S. c. 122, § 2); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 122, § 2 (in completing contracts for sale of land, "recitals, statements and description of facts, matters and parties, contained in deeds, instruments, acts of Parliament or statutory declarations 20 years old at the date of the contract" are evidence); 1906, Gunn v. Turner, 13 Ont. L. R. 158 (applying the statute to admit a recital in a deed of 1864 that the grantor was administrator of his father's estate).

[12] 1918, Ralph v. Cole, 9th C. C. A., 249 Fed. 81, 93 (notice of location of lode claim; recital of discovery of lode or vein "creates the presumption of discovery of mineral"); 1920, Cole v. Ralph, 252 U. S. 286, 40 Sup. 321 (recitals of discovery in recorded notice of location of mining claim are not evidence of discovery).

the party whose predecessor or privy in title made the deed. (b) The use of recitals of other deeds in the deed of a sheriff, trustee, or other official (post, § 1664) must also be distinguished; for the latter are admissible under the Exception for Official Statements, and very different conditions of admissibility there apply. (c) The use of a party's self-serving statements as explaining away his admissions (ante, § 1133) may also serve to admit deed-recitals which would not be admissible under the present Exception. (d) The use of copies of ancient deeds not verified by a witness on the stand (ante, § 1281, post, § 2143) must also be distinguished. (e) The use of recitals of a power of attorney in an ancient deed, as sufficient evidence of the power's existence, falls under another head (post, § 2144).

(2) From the use under the present Exception of ancient deed-recitals to prove boundary (as in Massachusetts) must be distinguished (a) the use, under the foregoing branch of the Exception, of declarations by deceased persons about private boundary, particularly the Massachusetts form of the rule (ante, §§ 1564, 1567); and also (b) the use of reputation to prove boundary, under the next Exception (post, §§ 1587, 1592), by which ancient deeds, leases, maps, and the like, become admissible so far as they can be construed as the vehicle of reputation. (c) Moreover, where adverse possession is relied upon, the ancestor's making of a deed, reciting the extent of his claim, may be admissible as a verbal act coloring possession (post, § 1778). (d) Finally, in proving acts of adverse possession, the question may arise whether the mere making of a deed or lease is evidence of possession (ante, § 157).

(3) From the use of deed-recitals of pedigree, under the present Exception, must be distinguished the use of declarations of relationship by a member of the family, under the Family History Exception (ante, §§ 1480, 1497). The difference is that under the present Exception it is not necessary that the reciter should be related to the persons mentioned. Nevertheless, most of the recitals admitted under the present Exception would have been admissible under the former; and it is possible that the present one grew out of passages in earlier writers stating the former in loose language.

C. Statements by Deceased Persons in General

§ 1576. Statutory Exceptions for all Statements of a Decedent. There was a time, in the early 1800s, when it came near to being settled that a general exception should exist for all statements of deceased persons who had competent knowledge and no apparent interest to deceive;[1] but this tendency was of short duration and was decisively negatived.[2] Nevertheless, such an exception, uniting as it does the essential requirements of an exception to the Hearsay rule (ante, §§ 1420–1424), commends itself as a just addition to the present sharply defined exceptions, and represents undoubtedly the enlightened policy of the future (ante, § 1427):

§ 1576. [1] Cases cited ante, § 1476.

[2] 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 85; 1901, Morell v. Morell, 157 Ind. 179, 60 N. E. 1092 (statements by a deceased attesting witness, excluded).

1876, MELLISH, L. J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154: "I have not the least hesitation in saying that I think it would be a highly desirable improvement in the law if the rule was that all statements, made by persons who are dead, respecting matters of which they had a personal knowledge, and made 'ante litem motam', should be admitted. There is no doubt that by rejecting such evidence we do reject a most valuable source of evidence. . . . [But] it appears to me that it would be better to leave it to the Legislature to make the improvement, which in my opinion ought to be made, in our present rules with regard to the admissibility of evidence of that description."

1879, COCKBURN, L. C. J., in R. v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox Cr. 342: "I regret that according to the law of England any statement made by the deceased should not be admissible."

1886, HERSCHELL, L. C., in Woodward v. Goulstone, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 469: "No doubt there are many countries, and indeed Scotland is one of them, where the law permits declarations of persons who are dead to be given in evidence in all cases where they were made under circumstances in which such evidence ought properly to have been admitted if the person had been living; and there is much to be said for that law as compared with our own."[3]

1860, APPLETON, C. J., Evidence, 190: "It is equally desirable that all testimony should have all possible and conceivable securities for trustworthiness; but if from any cause the attainment of one or more of those securities becomes physically impracticable, that will not suffice for the rejection of such evidence thus obtained, if it have any the slightest probative force. . . . The best evidence, the highest securities for testimonial veracity, are required; but the best theoretic evidence, the best theoretic securities, may be unattainable. . . . If, then, these principles be adopted, it would seem to follow that when the witness is dead, his declarations in whatsoever form attainable should be received. . . . The epistles of Paul, the journal of Columbus, the letters of Washington, would not be adjudged competent to establish any fact which being in issue might be determined by their production. . . . Were Paul or Columbus or Washington living, the reasoning by which this testimony would be excluded might be considered unanswerable; dead, their evidence thus delivered, satisfactory to everybody else, to the judge alone seems without force."

Recommendations of such an enlargement had been made more than two generations ago.[4] But no effect was given them until fairly recent times. To-day are found statutes in three jurisdictions; and these experiments have sufficiently shown that the example is safe to follow. The statutory measure is found in two forms, the one being of a limited scope only.

(1) In Connecticut a statute admits all written statements of a deceased person in an action by or against his representatives or those claiming under him.[5]

[3] "[The French lawyers] laughed, not without reason, at our strictness in excluding all hearsay evidence" (Life of L. C. Campbell, I, 364).

[4] A proposal to this effect had been made in England as long ago as 1828, by Lord (then Mr.) Brougham, in his great Speech on the Courts of Common Law, 18 Hans. Parl. Deb. 2d Ser. 218, 227, who proposed that "any deceased person's books or memorandums may be received, provided it appear that they were not prepared with a view of making evidence for his successors but plainly 'alio intuitu.'" This proposal was probably based on Bentham's suggestion, in his Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VI, c. II, § 1, b. I, c. XIII, § 5.

The proposal now forms the subject of a Report (1923) by a Committee on Improvement of the Law of Evidence, acting under the Directors of the Commonwealth Fund (Professor E. M. Morgan, Yale University, Chairman of Committee).

[5] Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 5735 ("In all actions by or against the representatives of deceased persons, the entries, memoranda, and declarations of the deceased, relevant to the matter in issue, may be received in evidence"); § 5736 ("In all actions . . . in which the entries and written memoranda of deceased persons would be admissible in favor of the representatives of such deceased persons, such entries and memoranda may be admissible in favor of any person claiming title under or from such deceased person"); § 5737 (party insane or otherwise mentally disqualified; quoted ante, § 1519).

The avowed purpose of this statute was merely to place the deceased party's case on an equal footing, in respect to sources of proof, with that of the surviving opponent.[6] Regarded as a substitute for the statutory rule common in other jurisdictions (ante, § 578), whereby the survivor is disqualified as a witness, this rule deserves universal imitation. The policy of disqualifying the survivor has already been noticed (ante, § 578) as unenlightened and unpractical, and is so thoroughly to be condemned that there is no excuse for not employing the present rule as a more effective and rational expedient to attain the same end. The Connecticut statute has been in operation more than fifty years, and the trifling number of rulings required to interpret and apply it [7] merely puts in a more discreditable light the thousands of quibbling decisions that have been rendered necessary by the arbitrary and complicated wording of the other group of statutes.

In Massachusetts and Oregon, statutes of more limited scope have followed the Connecticut example.[8] In Virginia, a statute, after permitting the survivor of a transaction to testify, but requiring corroboration, provides further [6] 1893, Baldwin, J., in Rowland v. R. Co., 63 Conn. 415, 417, 28 Atl. 102 ("The act of 1848, by removing the common-law disqualification of interest, brought two important witnesses, the plaintiff and defendant, into the trial of almost every suit. Two years of practice under its provisions convinced the Legislature that, when the accident of death had withdrawn one of these witnesses, the testimony of the other gave him as a party an undue advantage. The act of 1850 [now Gen. St. § 5735] was intended to restore, so far as might be, the footing of equality between him and the representatives of the decedent which had existed at common law").

[7] 1865, Bissell v. Beckwith, 32 Conn. 509, 517 (the classes of writings named include ordinary letters, and are not confined to documents of purely mercantile or legal purpose); 1893, Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 412, 27 Atl. 973 (statute does not admit diaries of a testator in a probate appeal, this not being an "action"; unsound; such a ruling tends to reintroduce technicalities of enumeration); 1893, Rowland v. R. Co., 63 Conn. 415, 417, 28 Atl. 102 (where an injured plaintiff's deposition has been taken in action begun before his death, the exception for these extra-judicial statements fails); 1899, Brown v. Butler, 71 id. 576, 42 Atl. 654 (statute applied); 1900, St. Regis Lumber Co. v. Hotchkiss, — Conn. —, 44 Atl. 11 (statute applied); 1920, McClure v. Middletown Trust Co., 95 Conn. 148, 110 Atl. 838 (deceased agent's statements; "the case presents in striking fashion the tendency of the rule excluding the declarations of deceased persons to shut out the truth; most eminent authority . . . have favored the admission of statements of deceased persons", etc.).

[8] Massachusetts: St. 1896, c. 445, Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 66 ("If a cause of action brought against an executor or administrator is supported by oral testimony of a promise or statement made by the testator or intestate of the defendant, evidence of statements, written or oral, made by the decedent, memoranda and entries written by him, and evidence of his acts and habits of dealing, tending to disprove or to show the improbability of the making of such promise or statement, shall be admissible"); 1901, National Granite Bank v. Whicher, 179 Mass. 390, 60 N. E. 927 (statute applied); 1902, Huebener v. Childs, 180 Mass. 483, 62 N. E. 729 (statute applied to evidence adduced on re-examination); 1904, Cogswell v. Hall, 185 Mass. 455, 70 N. E. 461 (action by a husband's heir against his widow's executor on a promise to pay relating to the dower estate; the deceased widow's declarations and conduct, admitted in disproof of the promise); 1904, Tripp v. Macomber, 187 Mass. 109, 72 N. E. 361 (action on a contract by the testator; testator's declarations admitted);
Oregon: St. 1893, p. 134, Laws 1920, § 732 (amends Code § 732, quoted ante, § 488, by adding to par. 2: "provided that when a party to an action or suit by or against an executor or administrator appears as a witness in his own behalf, or offers evidence of statements made by the deceased against the interest of the deceased, statements of the deceased concerning the same subject in his own favor may also be proven"); 1894, Grubbe v. Grubbe, 26 Or. 368, 38 Pac. 182 (statute applied); 1915, Chance v. Graham, 76 Or. 199, 148 Pac. 63 (express or resulting trust; certain declarations of the deceased owner held not to fall within the statute); 1915, Goff v. Kelsey, 78 Or. 337, 153 Pac. 103 (oral land contract; statute applied).

that if such survivor testifies, the deceased opponent's written statements may be admitted.[9]

(2) In Massachusetts, a statute has gone the full length of the principle above mentioned as advanced in the early 1800s, by adding a general exception for statements of deceased persons.[10] The exception has been found to [9] Virginia: Code 1919, § 6209 (quoted post, § 2065); 1921, Robertson's Ex'r v. Atlantic C. R. Co., 129 Va. 494, 106 S. E. 521 (agent contracting with person now deceased; the first provision of the statute not being applicable to the agent, held that the deceased's written statements were not admissible).

[10] Massachusetts: St. 1898, c. 535, Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 65 ("A declaration of a deceased person shall not be inadmissible in evidence as hearsay if the Court finds that it was made in good faith before the commencement of the action and upon the personal knowledge of the declarant").

Construed and applied in the following cases: 1900, Brooks v. Holden, 175 Mass. 137, 55 N. E. 802 (statute does not apply in restriction of any other exceptions to the rule); 1901, Stocker v. Foster, 178 Mass. 591, 60 N. E. 407 (grantor's declaration as to intent of executing deed, admitted); 1901, Dixon v. R. Co., 179 Mass. 242, 60 N. E. 581 (deceased officer's statement admitted); 1902, O'Driscoll v. R. Co., 180 Mass. 187, 62 N. E. 3 (written report of deceased physician to the defendant, admitted); 1902, Green v. Crapo, 181 Mass. 55, 62 N. E. 956 (deceased's copying of letters in a press, said to "import a declaration that they are in the course of transmission", and semble to be within the statute as such); 1902, Boyle v. Columbian F. Co., 182 Mass. 93, 64 N. E. 726 (statute applied); 1903, Hayes v. Pitts-Kimball Co., 183 Mass. 262, 67 N. E. 249 (statute applied; see citation post, § 2099); 1900, Mulhall v. Fallon, 176 Mass. 266, 57 N. E. 386 (deceased's declarations as to sending money to his mother, etc., admitted under St. 1898); 1902, Stone v. Com., 181 Mass. 438, 63 N. E. 1074 (deceased third person's statement as to tidewater height, admitted under St. 1898); 1905, Nagle v. Boston N. St. R. Co., 188 Mass. 38, 73 N. E. 1019 (declarations of a deceased motorman, admitted; that they were made in answer to leading questions, held immaterial); 1905, Dickinson v. Boston, 188 Mass. 595, 75 N. E. 68 (personal injury; a statement made after serving notice of the injury to the city, held admissible; the trial Court's finding of good faith, presumed); 1906, Gray v. Kelly, 190 Mass. 184, 76 N. E. 724 (declarations as to boundary, admitted); 1906, Weeks v. Boston El. R. Co., 190 Mass. 563, 77 N. E. 654 (more than one statement of the deceased is admissible); 1906, Hall v. Reinherz, 192 Mass. 52, 77 N. E. 880 (statute applied to a written statement made before the statute); 1906, Luce v. Parsons, 192 Mass. 8, 77 N. E. 1032 (statute applied to declarations about land); 1906, Putnam v. Harris, 193 Mass. 58, 78 N. E. 747 (statute applied, the question here being as to the declarant's personal knowledge); 1907, Chaput v. Haverhill G. & D. St. R. Co., 194 Mass. 218, 80 N. E. 597 (decedent in an action for personal injury); 1908, McGivern v. Steele, 197 Mass. 164, 83 N. E. 405 (pointing out that a deceased's testimony may be admissible under the rule of § 1387, ante); 1908, Glidden v. U. S. Fidelity & G. Co., 198 Mass. 109, 84 N. E. 143 (statement not made "in good faith", excluded); 1908, Supple v. Suffolk S. Bank, 198 Mass. 393, 84 N. E. 432 (statute applied to declarations about money given); 1909, Phillips v. Chase, 201 Mass. 444, 87 N. E. 755 (revocation of a probate decree of adoption); 1910, Giles v. Giles, 204 Mass. 383, 90 N. E. 595 (whether the statute applies to admit testator's declarations of revocation not otherwise admissible; not decided); 1911, Com. v. Stuart, 207 Mass. 563, 93 N. E. 825 (whether applicable in criminal cases, not decided); 1912, Randall v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 212 Mass. 352, 99 N. E. 221 (statute admits prior declarations of one who has testified at a former trial); 1913, Pigeon's Case, 216 Mass. 51, 102 N. E. 932 (the statutory exception held applicable to cases arising before the Industrial Accident Board under an industrial insurance Act); 1916, Little v. Massachusetts N. E. St. R. Co., 223 Mass. 501, 112 N. E. 77 (a declaration by a deceased physician, as to the cause of a patient's injury, that it was being "thrown out of his carriage", held not a statement "upon personal knowledge"); 1917, McSweeney v. Edison El. I. Co., 228 Mass. 563, 117 N. E. 846 (death by wrongful act; the admissibility of declarations offered under Rev. L. c. 175, § 66, is for the trial judge, not for the jury); 1918, Keough v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 229 Mass. 275, 118 N. E. 524 (personal injury; statement by a deceased doctor, advising plaintiff to go away, excluded as opinion; absurd); 1918, Carr v. Dighton, 229 Mass. 304, 118 N. E. 525 (exclusion of children from school; certificate of a deceased physician that he had examined the childrens' heads and found no vermin, admitted); 1918, Com. v. Wakelin, 230 Mass. 567, 120 N. E. 209 (homicide; whether the statute applies to criminal cases, not decided; here a statement found not to have been made "in good faith" was excluded); 1919, Eldridge v. Barton, 232 Mass. 183, 122 N. E. 272 (death by wrongful act; the decedent's statement, "it is my fault, I am to blame", held not admissible if construable as an opinion; unsound); 1921, Horan v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 237 Mass. 245, 129 N. E. 355 (under this statute, the judge must make the preliminary finding required, before admitting the evidence to the jury).

work well; and its general adoption would be an important improvement in the law of Evidence.

For the doctrine as to the judge's determination of facts preliminary to admissibility of the declaration, see post, § 2550.

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

TOPIC VII: REPUTATION

CHAPTER LIII.

§ 1580. In General. At the time of the definite emergence of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364) — that is, by the end of the 1600s —, there remained in existence a practice, more or less loose, of receiving the repute of the community on various matters. At that time, the jury's traditional right to resort to common repute as a source of its knowledge was still a real part of trial-practice. It can be easily understood that the exclusion, when offered in court as evidence, of a repute which the jury could in any case have considered, had they otherwise known of it, would be unnatural and improbable.[1] But with the final shaping of the Hearsay rule's limits, and the conscious statement of specific exceptions, in the first half of the 1700s, and with the progress and final settlement, in the same century, of the doctrine that the jury could consider no information not presented to them as evidence in court (post, § 1800), the use of common repute came to be limited to specific excepted cases.

The excepted subjects thus surviving from the older loose practice included at that time (1) land-boundaries and land-customary-rights and verdicts in other litigation, (2) events of general history, (3) personal character, and (4) marriage and other facts of family history. Since that time a few other isolated classes of facts — for example, insolvency — have in various jurisdictions been treated as properly provable by reputation; these instances, however, do not represent historically a continuous survival of earlier practice, but a reasoned application of a general principle.

The precedents for these various groups of facts form for the most part separate and independent series. Nevertheless, they all rest equally on a more or less conscious recognition of a common and rationalized principle, which in a broad way is found to be satisfied alike in all of them and to justify the maintenance of the exceptions. This principle is the twofold one already indicated (ante, § 1420) as the basis of all the exceptions to the Hearsay rule, namely, the principle of Necessity and the principle of a Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness. (a) The necessity is here to be found in the general dearth of other satisfactory evidence of the desired fact, by reason of which we are thrown back upon reputation as a source of information. In the exceptions for land boundaries and customs this necessity is found to exist where the matter is an ancient one, and thus living witnesses are not to be had. In the exceptions for character and marriage the necessity lies in the usual difficulty of obtaining other evidence than reputation. (b) The circumstances creating a fair trustworthiness are found when the topic is such that the facts are likely to have been generally inquired about and that persons having personal knowledge have disclosed facts which have thus been discussed in the community; and thus the community's conclusion, if any has been formed, is likely to be a trustworthy one. This, under differing conditions, is the common ground of trustworthiness for reputation on land-boundaries and customs, for events of general history, and for character and marriage. There is therefore, on the whole, a certain underlying unity of principle for all the recognized uses of reputation.

§ 1580. [1] "It was natural," says Professor Thayer, "that what the Courts clearly recognized as a proper basis for the jury's action, when they picked up their own information, i.e. reputation or traditional declarations in matters of prescription, should be allowed to be offered to them by the statement of witnesses in court" (Cases on Evidence, 1st ed., 420).

In a few jurisdictions, legislative enactments have attempted to adopt and restate the first two branches to the exception;[2] but those statutory attempts usually fail to distinguish the limitations of the different exceptions, and can hardly be said to be successful.

A. LAND-BOUNDARIES AND LAND-CUSTOMS

1. The Necessity Principle

§ 1582. Matter must be Ancient. In the effort to put a limit to the use of reputation-evidence, and to phrase the conditions of necessity in which it could be resorted to in default of better evidence, the element of antiquity came to be made the fundamental characteristic of this branch of the Exception. When the phrase about "best evidence" began to be invoked (ante, § 1173), and its corollary was referred to, that the "best evidence" might be dispensed with if it could not be had, one of the specific rules sometimes associated with it was the present one; that is to say, in ancient matters of certain sorts the "best evidence" obtainable was reputation-evidence. An "ancient" matter would ordinarily be a matter upon which no living witnesses having personal knowledge were attainable; so the reputation is often predicated as coming merely from deceased persons, or deceased old persons.

The phrasing varies loosely; but the common idea is the same, namely, that it is to be the reputation of a past generation, and thus is to deal with a matter of which there can be no witnesses of the present generation having a personal knowledge. The following passages illustrate the general thought:

1811, MANSFIELD, C. J., in the Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 415: "The declarations of deceased persons, who are supposed to have had a personal knowledge of the facts, and to have stood quite disinterested, are received in evidence. In cases of general rights, which depend upon immemorial usage, living witnesses can only speak of their own knowledge to what has passed in their own time; and to supply the deficiency, the law receives the declarations of persons who are dead."

1855, Lord CAMPBELL, C. J., in R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535: "The admissibility of the declarations of deceased persons in such cases is sanctioned, because these rights and liabilities are generally of ancient and obscure origin, and may be acted on only at distant intervals of time; direct proof of their existence therefore ought not to be required."

1810, SWIFT, C. J., Evidence, 121: "The law has therefore wisely rejected all hearsay evidence, excepting where it is impossible in the nature of things to obtain any other. . . . This happens in matters of long standing, where the witnesses who were knowing to them are not in being. Such are . . . the ancient boundaries of land."

1860, SELDON, J., in McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 218: "The fact sought to be proved being of too ancient a date to be proved by eye-witnesses, and not of a character to be made a matter of public record, unless it could be proved by tradition there would seem to be no mode in which it could be established. It is a universal rule, founded in necessity, that the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits is always receivable."

[2] The statutes are collected post, § 1597.

In the United States the question came up most frequently with reference to boundaries of land, and the special necessity of resorting to reputation-evidence in such cases was often noticed:

1797, Per CURIAM, in Montgomery v. Dickey, 2 Yeates 213: "It must be obvious that when the country becomes cleared and in a state of improvement, it is oftentimes difficult to trace the lines of a survey made in early times. The argument 'ex necessitate rei' will therefore apply."

1837, TUCKER, C. J., in Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 707: "Questions of boundary, after the lapse of many years, become of necessity questions of hearsay and reputation. For boundaries are artificial, arbitrary, and often perishable; and when a generation or two have passed away, they cannot be established by the testimony of eye-witnesses."

What, then, may to-day be said to be the results of this requirement, so far as specific rules can be laid down? The authorities of modern date are few, owing perhaps in this country to the changes in the conditions of life and the methods of administration of land-records in the past century, and it is not easy to predict the exact form in which Courts may choose to apply the principle. But the following rules may be ventured:

(1) The matter to be proved must be ancient, i.e. of a past generation. The custom, landmark, or boundary, must either be a former one, or, if it is still in existence, its existence in a previous generation must be the subject with which the reputation is concerned:[1]

1855, BALTZELL, C. J., in Daggett v. Willey, 6 Fla. 511: "Reputation or hearsay, taken in connection with other evidence, is entitled to respect in cases of boundary when the lapse of time is so great as to render it difficult, if not impossible, to prove the boundary by the existence of the primitive landmarks or other evidence than that of hearsay."

(2) The reputation offered must also be ancient, i.e. of a past generation.[2]

(3) If the reputation is shown by means of the reported statements of individuals (post, § 1584), the persons whose statements are reported must be shown to be deceased.[3]

2. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness

§ 1583. General Principle; Reputation as Trustworthy. The element here

§ 1582. [1] Accord: 1886, Clark v. Hills, 67 Tex. 152, 2 S. W. 356.

[2] 1872, Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. 161; 1905, Dawson v. Orange, 78 Conn. 96, 61 Atl. 101; 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 412 (maps); 1862, Dobson v. Finley, 8 Jones L. N. Y. 495, 499 (a call in a grant of B. in 1798, admitted; death of B. and his surveyor need not be shown; antiquity is sufficient "without enquiring as to whether the parties . . . are living or dead"); 1906, Bland v. Beasley, 140 N. C. 628, 53 S. E. 443 (reputation no earlier than 1884, in a suit brought in 1901, excluded); 1914, Sullivan v. Blount, 165 N. C. 7, 80 S. E. 892 (reputation of 40 years or more, admitted); 1917, Mechanics' Bank & T. Co. v. Whilden, 175; N. C. 52, 94 S. E. 723 (to identify a disputed corner in a grant of 1872, "general reputations as to what tract of land the locust at J. is at the corner of", excluded, not being ancient); 1921, Barnhill v. Hardee, 182 N. C. 85, 108 S. E. 348 (reputation of a street's width 30–35 years before, admitted).

[3] 1843, R. v. Milton, 1 C. & K. 62. Compare the statutes cited post, § 1597.

operating to supply a fair degree of trustworthiness is the third already noticed (ante, § 1422), namely, the consideration that the prolonged and constant exposure of a condition of things to observation and discussion by a whole community will in certain cases sift the possible errors and will bring the resulting belief down to us in a residual form of fair trustworthiness. These conditions are usually found where the matter is one which in its nature affects the common interests of a number of persons in the same locality, and thus necessarily becomes the subject of active, general, and intelligent discussion; so that whenever a single and definite consensus has been reached in the shape of common reputation, it may be supposed to have considerable evidential value. This principle underlies the willingness of the Courts to give credit to such a reputation in all the branches of the present Exception, and has often been stated specifically for this branch, though sometimes more or less imperfectly; the passages quoted from Lord Campbell and Mr. Justice Loomis express it in a form which leaves nothing to be desired:

1837, Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 358; on appeal, in 5 Cl. & F. 720. COLTMAN, J.: "Where boundary is proved by reputation, what is the guarantee for sincerity?" Mr. Starkie, of counsel: "The publicity of the transaction and the general interest in the fact being rightly ascertained." COLTMAN, J.: "The principle on which I conceive the exception [of reputation as to public rights] to rest is this, — that the reputation can hardly exist without the concurrence of many parties interested to investigate the subject, and such concurrence is presumptive evidence of the existence of an ancient right, of which in most cases direct proof can no longer be given." ALDERSON, B.: "There are, no doubt, exceptions to this rule, in which hearsay evidence is admissible. One such exception is to be found in the case of public rights. There the general interest which belongs to the subject would lead to immediate contradiction from others, unless the statement proved were true; and the public nature of the right excludes the probability of individual bias and makes the sanction of an oath less necessary."

1855, CAMPBELL, L. C. J., in R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535: "The admissibility of the declarations of deceased persons in such cases is sanctioned . . . because in local matters in which the community are interested all persons living in the neighborhood are likely to be conversant; because, common rights and liabilities being naturally talked of in public, what is dropped in conversation respecting them may be presumed to be true; because conflicting interests would lead to contradiction from others if the statements were false, and thus a trustworthy reputation may arise from the concurrence of many parties unconnected with each other who are all interested in investigating the subject."

1881, LOOMIS, J., in Southwest School District v. Williams, 48 Conn. 507: "The law does not dispense with the sanction of an oath and the test of cross-examination as a prerequisite for the admission of verbal testimony, unless it discovers in the nature of the case some other sanction or test deemed equivalent for ascertaining the truth. The matters included in the class under consideration are such that many persons are deemed cognizant of them and interested in their truth, so that there is neither the ability nor the temptation to misrepresent that exists in other cases; and the matters are presumably the subject of frequent discussion and criticism, which accomplishes in a manner the purpose of a cross-examination. . . . After passing such an ordeal, it is reasonably safe to accept the result as an established fact."

This being the well-accepted foundation for receiving a common reputation as trustworthy, certain limitations are deducible as a necessary consequence.

§ 1584. Reputation, but not Individual Assertion. What is offered must be in effect a reputation, not the mere assertion of an individual. This follows from the nature of the foregoing principle, and is the thought running through the language of all the judges.

But reputation includes and is often learned through the assertions of individuals; it is therefore constantly necessary to distinguish between (a) assertions involving mere individual credit and (b) assertions involving a community-reputation. The common form of question put to a reputation-witness was: "What have you heard old men, now deceased, say as to the reputation on this subject?" The judges constantly speak of "reputation from deceased persons."[1] Thus, though in form the information may be merely what deceased persons have been heard to say about a custom, yet in effect it comes or ought to come from them as a statement of the reputation.[2]

This aspect of the rule is frequently found stated in the form "the reputation must be general"; in other words, the hearsay statement "I know the right or custom to be such-and-such" is not receivable; but "I understand the general acceptance of the custom by the community to be such-and-such" is admissible. The deceased individual declarant is merely the mouthpiece of the reputation. Whenever, therefore, individual declarations are offered, they must appear to be, in the words of Baron Wood, "the result of a received reputation":[3]

§ 1584. [1] E.g., 1813, Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 689 ("Evidence is to be admitted from old persons . . . of what they have heard other persons, of the same neighborhood, who are deceased, say respecting the right"); 1808, Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East 120 ("Reputation is no other than the hearsay of those who may be supposed to have been acquainted with the fact, handed down from one to another"); see also the quotations ante, § 1582.

[2] As well put by Knox, J., in Bender v. Pitzer, 27 Pa. 335, "The declaration did not amount to general reputation; for one man's declaration of the existence of a fact does not prove that the allegation is generally reputed to be well founded."

[3] See also the following instances:

ENGLAND: 1831, Davies v. Morgan, 1 C. & J. 590; 1835, Drinkwater v. Porter, 2 C. & K. 182; 1844, Earl of Carnarvon v. Villebois, 13 M. & W. 332; 1903, Brocklebank v. Thompson, 2 Ch. 344, 352 (a certain memorandum, excluded); 1904, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 534 (fishing-rights; depositions taken in 1639, under an information by the Attorney-General, stating the point to which the sea extended, excluded; Farwell, J., holding that "depositions of deceased witnesses" are admissible against strangers "if they relate to a custom where reputation would be evidence; but then those depositions must be depositions of matters of reputation, and not of matters of fact"); 1905, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 538, 560 (foregoing ruling affirmed on appeal, but on the principle of § 1591, post, by one of the three judges); 1913, Attorney-General v. Horner, 2 Ch. 140, 152 (Cozens-Hardy, M. R., "overborne by the weight of authority", rejected, on the ground that an individual's map must "purport to be a statement of reputation", three maps offered to show the physical condition of an alleged market-place in 1882, viz.: (1) a survey of 1677 by J. O. and W. M., dedicated to the Lord Mayor by W. M., his Majesty's cosmographer; (2) a map of 1681–2 by W. M.; (3) Gascoigne's map of Stepney, 1703); 1914, Fowke v. Berington, 2 Ch. 308 (location of ancient church buildings in the 1400s; "Habington's Survey of Worcestershire", a private treatise of repute, existing only in MS. until printed in modern times, containing a description of the premises made from H.'s personal observation in the early 1600s, was rejected, as not involving reputation; following Attorney-General v. Horner; but misunderstanding the principle).

CANADA: 1885, Vankoughnet v. Denison, 11 Ont. App. 699, 707 (reputation, as indicated by a city map, apparently not admitted to show the location and extent of a public square).

UNITED STATES: 1904, Cowles v. Lovin, 135 N. C. 488, 47 S. E. 610 ("reputation" and "hearsay" distinguished); 1906, Bland v. Beasley, 140 N. C. 628, 53 S. E. 443 (a reputation sifting down merely to what J. C. said, J. C. being alive, excluded).

1822, WOOD, B., in Moseley v. Davies, 11 Price 180: "It must be proved that the declarations establishing the reputation, and the acts done [by the community] in consequence, were the result of a received reputation. . . . The principal use of evidence of this sort is to show that the act done or declaration made was not a new thought adapted to serve some particular occasion, but the consequence of a received notion of the existence of a custom requiring the performance of the act, and accounting for or explaining it by such declaration. Such evidence should always be general."

1837, DENMAN, L. C. J., in R. v. Bliss, 7 A. & E. 550 (rejecting testimony that R., now deceased, had planted a willow in a certain spot to show where the boundary had been of a way alleged to be public): "He does not assert that he has heard old people say what was the public road; but he plants a tree and asserts that the boundary of the road is at that point. It is the mere allegation of a fact by an individual. . . . That is, he knew it to be so from what he had himself observed, and not from reputation."

It follows, conversely, that the form in which the reputation is presented is immaterial; whatever form it takes — individual writings, maps, leases, or the like — suffices if in truth it represents common repute; this application of the principle is later examined (post, § 1592).

But this exclusion of individual assertion, whenever it does not serve as the vehicle of reputation, applies of course only where the evidence is offered under the present Exception. Under the Exception for Private Boundaries, already examined (ante, § 1563), such declarations are in many American jurisdictions unquestionably admissible, merely as individual statements, and not associated with reputation. That Exception, historically, was mainly derived from the present one; but each now has its separate existence and peculiar limitations.

§ 1585. Reputation not as to Specific Acts. Furthermore, where a custom or right is to be shown, the reputation must be as to the custom or right itself, and not as to particular occasions of its exercise. It is obvious that as to such particular occasions or acts of its exercise there can be no fair opportunity for a reputation to arise. It can arise only as to the practice or validity of the right or custom in general. There may legitimately be a common reputation as to whether (for example) a general duty existed for the townspeople of Wilton to pay a fee at a certain tollgate; but not whether John Doe paid it on a particular occasion. It is sometimes said, misleadingly, that the reputation cannot be received as to a particular fact; [1] but this expression is inconclusive, because the line of a certain boundary is a "particular fact." This phrase, so far as used, has meant that, in proof of local customs, hearsay as to a particular individual act in exercise of the general custom would not be received. The latter form of phrasing is the more accurate (as used by Mr. Peake, infra); but, subject to explanation, the loose phrase occasionally found in judicial language need not mislead:

1801, Mr. Peake, Evidence, 13: "A witness may be permitted to state what he has heard from dead persons respecting the reputation of the right; but not to state facts of the exercise of it which the dead persons said they had seen."

§ 1585. [1] 1837, Coleridge, J., referring to the evidence excluded in R. v. Bliss, quoted ante, § 1584 ("It is a rule that evidence of reputation must be confined to general matters and not touch particular facts", i.e. the act of planting the willow).

1810, MACDONALD, C. B., in Harwood v. Sims, Wightw. 112 (admitting evidence of reputation from deceased persons as to a tithe payment): "I take this to be the distinction as to evidence of reputation: if they confine it to the fact of payment, it would not be evidence; unless the tradition that came with it was a reputation that that had always been the case."

1800, MUTER, C. J., in Cherry v. Boyd, Litt. Sel. Cas. 8: "Such hearsay evidence [of general customs and the common repute about them] is safe, because if not true, it can be disproved by other evidence of the same kind. But even in these cases hearsay is restricted from being evidence of particular facts; because in such instances, although the evidence should be false, yet counter evidence could not be expected." [2]

§ 1586. Reputation must relate only to Matters of General Interest. The question next arises, About what sorts of matters may reputation be received as trustworthy?

The principle already examined (ante, § 1583) prescribes the answer, — that the matter must be in its nature one about which a trustworthy common reputation could fairly arise, i.e. about which an active, constant, and intelligent discussion by the members of a community would result in a residuum of fairly trustworthy conclusions. As a rough-and-ready test, we may thus say that the matter should be one of public, or general, or public and general, interest; and this is the common phrasing; though it varies thus loosely. But this is still only a rule of thumb. To decide difficult cases it is necessary still to seek the living principle, and ask anew whether the matter is of such general interest to the community that by the thorough sifting of active, constant, and intelligent discussion a fairly trustworthy reputation is likely to arise. That this is the method actually followed by the Courts in ruling upon doubtful cases, and that the application of the principle is not narrowly to be made merely by defining the set terms "public" or "general", is seen in the following passages:

1835, R. v. Antrobus, 2 A. & E. 793 (evidence was rejected of reputation as to an exemption of the sheriffs of Chester county from executing criminals). Counsel for defendant: "The proper criterion as to the admissibility of reputation is whether the custom if it existed would be matter of public discourse." DENMAN, L. C. J.: "Reputation is admitted where a public interest is concerned; but I cannot see how the public are interested in the question which sheriff is to perform this duty."

1855, CAMPBELL, L. C. J., in R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535 (admitting reputation whether the county or private owners were bound to repair a bridge): "Let us now upon these principles examine whether . . . evidence of reputation ought to be admitted. It does involve matter of private right. . . . But does it not likewise relate to matters of public and general interest within the received meaning of the words? . . . [After showing the community's interest in the question, and using the language quoted ante, § 1583], the question therefore is almost sure to be discussed in the neighborhood, and a true reputation upon the subject is likely to prevail."

1881, LOOMIS, J., in Southwest School District v. Williams, 48 Conn. 507 (after stating the general reason as above, and using the language quoted ante, § 1583): "But if the fact to be proved is a particular date, [here, of the existence of a school-house,] though connected incidentally with a public matter, it is easy to see that it could not stand out as a salient fact for contemporaneous criticism and discussion so as to furnish any guaranty for its correctness."

[2] Accord: 1805, Nicholls v. Parker, 14 East 331 (evidence admitted of what old persons had said concerning the boundaries of the parishes and manors; though not as to particular facts or transactions); 1793, Outram v. Morewood, 5 T. R. 122; 1836, Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 437.

In the application of this general principle the typical classes of facts regarded as provable by reputation were boundaries of public land-divisions and customs affecting the rights and liabilities of the community in some governmental subdivision, — roughly speaking, public land boundaries and customs. But these kinds of facts, as the above quotations indicate, were merely typical and representative, not definitive. Sundry other facts of various sorts were also thus provable.[1] In the following passage is a sufficiently full and correct enumeration of the settled practice in England:

1895, SEYMORE, J., in Robinson v. Dewhurst, 15 C. C. A. 466, 68 Fed. 336: "The exception raises a question regarding that exception to the general rule excluding hearsay evidence which permits such evidence to be given, under certain limitations, in cases of ancient boundaries. The exception, as it originated in the English courts, was confined to such boundaries as were matters of public concern, and was part of a larger exception to the rule. On questions respecting the existence of manors; manorial customs; customs of mining in particular districts; a parochial modus; a boundary between counties, parishes, or manors; the limits of a town; a right of common; a prescriptive liability to repair bridges; the jurisdiction of certain courts, — matters in which the public is concerned, as having a community of interest, from residing in one neighborhood, or being entitled to the same privileges, or subject to the same liabilities, — common reputation and the declarations of deceased persons are received, if made, 'ante litem motam', by persons in a position to be properly cognizant of the facts."

§ 1587. Same: Private Boundaries, Title, or Possession. In the application of the foregoing principle, the subject of special controversy has been the ownership — in particular, the boundaries — of private property. May reputation be admitted of the boundary-locations of private property?

In England the answer was in the negative:

1811, KENYON, L. C. J., in Morewood v. Wood, 14 East 329: "Evidence of reputation upon general points is receivable because, all mankind being interested, it is natural to § 1586. [1] In the following cases reputation-evidence was admitted: Eng. 1899, Evans v. Merthyr Tydfil, 1 Ch. 241 (whether a piece of land was subject to commonable rights); 1905, Heath v. Deane, 2 Ch. 86, 91 (court rolls of a manor, admitted as to right of common for tenants to take stone; but not plainly on this ground); U. S. 1901, Klinkner v. Schmidt, 114 Ia. 695, 87 N. W. 661 (street boundary); 1883, State v. Vale Mills, 63 N. H. 4 (the former line of the road which the plaintiff was charged with obstructing); 1874, Cox v. State, 41 Tex. 4 (county lines); 1824, Ralston v. Miller, 3 Rand. Va. 49 (street lines); 1914, State v. Alderson, 74 W. Va. 732, 82 S. E. 1021 (county boundary).

In the following cases reputation-evidence was rejected: Eng. 1795, Withnell v. Gartham, 1 Esp. 325 (right of nomination to the place of schoolmaster); U. S. 1904, Hartford v. Maslen, 76 Conn. 599, 57 Atl. 740 (whether land was tendered by the city to the State in lieu of another site; the understanding of citizens at a mass-meeting in 1872, excluded; the precise point is obscure); 1867, Hall v. Mayo, 97 Mass. 417 (possession or habitancy of a house); 1875, Adams v. Swansea, 116 Mass. 596 (same); 1882, Boston Water Power Co. v. Hanlon, 132 Mass. 483 (same). The applicability of an Indian name to a given white person in a grant in a treaty was held not provable by hearsay, because the fact of identity would not "be likely to excite public interest", in Stockton v. Williams, 1 Dougl. Mich. 568 (1845).

The following ruling is anomalous: 1900, Shepard v. Turner, 129 Cal. 530, 62 Pac. 106 (reputation not admitted to show a road a public way).

suppose that they may be conversant with the subjects and that they should discourse together about them, having all the same means of information. But how can this apply to private titles? . . . How is it possible for strangers to know anything of what concerns only these private titles?" [1]

This conclusion was reached by a reasoned consideration of the principle on which reputation-evidence rests. But the correctness of the application may be questioned; for if such evidence may be offered to show customs and boundaries of a private manor, boundaries of a parish, and tithe-duties,[2] the principle may well cover any other property-rights in which a number are interested in general inquiry and discussion, whether the right is in substantive law called a public or a private one. Thus, in Weeks v. Sparke, decided shortly after Morewood v. Wood, supra, the argument was accepted that any fixed and (for this purpose) arbitrary distinction between "public" and "private" rights should be repudiated, and a flexible test be applied in each case, — this test being whether the matter affected the interests of a large number of persons:

1813, Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 690 (a right of common being in issue); BAYLEY, J.: "I take it that where the term 'public right' is used, it does not mean 'public' in the literal sense, but is synonymous with 'general', — that is, what concerns a multitude of persons." DAMPIER, J.: "[Reputation-evidence] has been extended to other rights which strictly cannot be called public, such as manors, parishes, and a modus, which comes the nearest to this case. That, strictly speaking, is a private right, but has been considered as public, as regards the admissibility of this species of evidence, because it affects a large number of occupiers within a district."

This reasoning might have led ultimately in England to the admission of reputation-evidence for private-property matters; but the case was practically repudiated by Baron Parke, in 1850,[3] and subsequent English practice has checked all further advances. The rule may there be said to be determined by the distinction (for this purpose more or less arbitrary) between "public" and "private" property-rights; i.e. the "public interest" which is required to exist is taken as meaning the legal liability or right which is vested in each member of the community as such, — not as meaning merely a motive of any sort stimulating the mass of the community to a concern in the matter.

In the United States the result has been otherwise. The earliest English practice had clearly been to admit reputation as to private titles,[4] and it is § 1587. [1] Accord: 1811, Doe v. Thomas, 14 East 323.

[2] 1819, Stell v. Prickett, 2 Stark. 466, Abbott, C. J.; and cases infra, n. 3, and post, § 1592.

[3] Eng. 1850, Dunraven v. Llewellyn, 13 Q. B. 809 (a right of common for individuals, not for the community, was involved: Parke, B.: "Reputation is not admissible in the case of such separate rights, each being private, . . . unless the proposition can be supported that, because there are many such rights, the rights have a public character. We think this position cannot be maintained. It is impossible to say in such a case where the dividing point is. What is the number of rights which is to cause their nature to be changed and to give them a public character? . . . The number of these private rights does not make them to be of a public nature"); 1855, R. v. Bedfordshire, 4 E. & B. 535; Can. 1905, Barlett v. Nova Scotia S. Co., 37 N. Sc. 259, 264.

[4] Thayer, Cases on Evidence, 1st ed., 421, note.

therefore natural to find, on questions of private boundary, that reputation was regularly admitted without question in the early American cases.[5] Then, when the English cases of the early 1800s became known to our judges, and the question was argued on its merits as a matter of principle, the decision was reached — entirely in harmony with the conditions of life at the time — that the rule ought to admit reputation-evidence of the landmarks of private title:

1837, TUCKER, P., in Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh 708: "Because we have not manors, shall we therefore lose the benefit of the rule which considers boundary as matter of reputation and permits hearsay evidence of its locality? If a like state of things exists among us, if the principle will be found to apply in its utmost strictness, shall we reject the evidence because the case is not identical? By no means. . . . [After quoting Lord Kenyon's language, supra,] If reputation is admissible to establish the boundaries of a manor because all the tenants of a manor are interested therein and naturally conversant about the boundary, and may be presumed to discourse together about it, what shall we say in the case of our wild lands, which were covered with early adventurers whose chief concern was to make themselves acquainted with the lines and corners of all around them? . . . Every one knows that such subjects were not only the familiar topics of conversation, but that they were the all-absorbing topics. I will venture to conjecture that for one discussion in private conversation about the boundaries of an English manor, there have been a hundred animated and interested debates about the situation of a corner tree in our western counties. I take it therefore that every motive for the admission of hearsay testimony as to boundary in case of a manor applies with equal force to its admission in questions of boundary with us."

1860, FIELD, C. J., in Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 279: "In this country the admissibility of this kind of evidence . . . has been uniformly maintained when the tract originally surveyed was lar· , and was subsequently subdivided into numerous farms, the boundary of the original tract serving as a boundary of the several farms. In cases of this kind, the principle upon which the evidence is received has been regarded as similar to that which relates to boundaries of a manor or parish."

1860, SELDEN, J., in McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 218: "That hearsay or reputation is admissible as evidence . . . upon questions respecting the boundaries of lands, is a familiar doctrine. But there are no doubt other cases in which the same kind of evidence may be received for the purpose of establishing a mere private right, when the fact to be proved is one of a quasi-public nature, that is, one which interests a multitude of people, or an entire community. . . . The Royal Grant, as it is called, is an extensive tract, embracing an entire township and parts of several others; and everything relating to the original document upon which the title depended would necessarily affect the interests of every occupant of the tract"; and common report as to the disposition of the patent would be admissible.

The result has been that, except in Maine and Massachusetts,[6] it is now everywhere accepted in the United States as a legitimate application of the general principle, that reputation, so far as it definitely exists, may be admissible to prove the location of private boundaries.[7] [5] 1823, Dane's Abr. III, 397 (citing some cases before 1800).

[6] 1853, Chapman v. Twitchell, 37 Me. 62; 1867, Hall v. Mayo, 97 Mass. 417; 1875, Long v. Colton, 116 Mass. 416 (abandoning the early Massachusetts practice). In an early case in Kentucky, no longer law, it was excluded for the unique reason that the matter did not lie in parol and could not be proved by parol: 1800, Cherry v. Boyd, Litt. Sel. Cas. 8.

[7] To the following, add the statutes cited post, § 1597: Federal: 1818, Conn v. Penn, 1 Pet. C. C. 511; 1887, Clement v. Packer, 125 U. S. 321, 8 Sup. 907. The reason of Mr. J. Story in Ellicot v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 435 (1836), given for a contrary view, that in re-

But this application of the principle is confined to reputation of boundaries. That title cannot be so evidenced is generally conceded.[8] There may however be cases in which possession should be thus provable, where adverse possession is to be shown.[9] At this point the present Exception shades off into an historically separate variant, whereby reputation may (by statute) be used to evidence title, incorporation, and other facts, in certain issues (post, § 1626); there the reputation may be modern and contemporary.

gard to private rights the acts of possession and assertion are capable of direct proof, but in public rights the acts of people not in privity with each other "cannot be explained to be in furtherance of a common public right", is vague, and, so far as intelligible, is without support; Alabama: 1873, Shook v. Pate, 50 Ala. 92; 1897, Taylor v. Fomby, 116 Ala. 621, 22 So. 910; Connecticut: 1833, Higley v. Bidwell, 9 Conn. 451; 1839, Wooster v. Butler, 13 Conn. 315; 1845, Kinney v. Farnsworth, 17 Conn. 363; Florida: 1855, Daggett v. Wiley, 6 Fla. 511; Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 3821 ("General reputation in the neighborhood shall be evidence as to ancient landmarks of more than 30 years' standing"); Illinois: 1881, Holbrook v. Debo, 99 Ill. 385; Kentucky: 1819, Smith v. Prewit, 2 A. K. Marsh. 158; 1822, Smith v. Nowells, 2 Lit. 160; 1909, Thurman v. Leach, — Ky. —, 116 S. W. 300; Maryland: 1770, Redding's Lessee v. McCubbin, 1 Harr. & McH. 368; 1735, Howell's Lessee v. Tilden, ib. 84; 1854, Tyson v. Shucey, 5 Md. 540; 1909, Peters v. Tilghman, 111 Md. 227, 73 Atl. 726; Minnesota: 1894, Thoen v. Roche, 57 Minn. 135, 139, 58 N. W. 686 (allowable for U. S. survey lines; acceptance of U. S. doctrine undecided); New Hampshire: 1827, Shepherd v. Thompson, 4 N. H. 215; New Jersey: 1886, Curtis v. Aaronson, 49 N. J. L. 78; North Carolina: 1795, Standen v. Bains, 1 Hayw. 238; 1820, Tate v. Southard, 1 Hawks 47; 1825, Taylor v. Shufford, 4 Hawks 132; 1838, Mendenhall v. Cassells, 3 Dev. & B. 49, 51 (rejecting it here as too indefinite); 1896, Shaffer v. Gaynor, 117 N. C. 15, 23 S. E. 154 (but where it relates not merely to landmarks or lines, but to a location being within a certain grant, evidence of "muniments of title" must accompany it); 1904, Cowles v. Lovin, 135 N. C. 488, 47 S. E. 610 (Shaffer v. Gaynor followed); 1905, Hemphill v. Hemphill, 138 N. C. 504, 51 S. E. 42 (the reputation must be ancient and 'ante litem motam', and must refer to some monument or natural object or be corroborated by possession, etc.); 1906, Bland v. Beasley, 140 N. C. 628, 53 S. E. 443 (approving the foregoing cases, but here rejecting reputation because "no deed covering this tract of land is introduced, no monument or natural object is shown . . . and no occupation or possession of any such tract by H. or any of his descendants", etc.); South Carolina: 1886, Sexton v. Hollis, 26 S. C. 231, 236, 1 S. E. 893; Texas: 1866, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 666; 1886, Clark v. Hills, 67 Tex. 152, 2 S. W. 356, semble.

[8] Ala. 1848, Moore v. Jones, 13 Ala. 303 (that an occupier was a lessee only); 1889, Ross v. Goodwin, 88 Ala. 390, 393, 396, 6 So. 682 (title by prescription); 1896, Goodson v. Brothers, 111 Ala. 589, 20 So. 443 (ejectment); 1905, Henry v. Brown, 143 Ala. 446, 39 So. 325 (land); 1906, Doe v. Edmondson, 145 Ala. 557, 40 So. 505 (land); Conn. 1839, South School District v. Blakeslee, 13 Conn. 227, 235 (reputation of a house as "J. A.'s school-house", excluded; "a man's general character may be proved by reputation, but not his title to real estate"); Mass. 1836, Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. 71, 75, 80; 1863 Howland v. Crocker, 7 All. 153 (title by adverse possession; that a piece of land was known as "the Barney Crocker lot", not admitted to show title in him); N. M. 1911, Perkins v. Roswell, 16 N. M. 185, 113 Pac. 609 (ordinance forbidding to "keep, maintain, or operate" a sanatorium for certain diseases; common repute that the defendant "runs" it, excluded; unsound); S. Car. 1886, Sexton v. Hollis, 26 S. C. 231, 235, 1 S. E. 893; 1899, Hiers v. Risher, 54 S. C. 405, 32 S. E. 509; Tex. 1904, Crippin v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 455, 80 S. W. 372 (permitting gambling in a house under control; ownership not provable by reputation; compare the cases cited post, § 1626, n. 7).

[9] Admitted: 1895, Vernon Irrig. Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 237, 39 Pac. 762 (reputation admitted to show an ancient claim of ownership and actual control by the city); 1830, Jackson v. Miller, 6 Wend. 228 (that a lot of land was commonly known by the name of an individual, — as "Smith's Lot", or "The Duke's Farm", or "The Queen's Farm", was admitted to show that the person in question was at the time in occupation, personally or by agent, of the property); 1847, Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 633, 732 (same).

Excluded: 1852, Benje v. Creagh, 21 Ala. 151, 156; 1888, Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ala. 436, 442, 6 So. 349; 1898, Carter v. Clark, 92 Me. 225, 42 Atl. 398.

But reputation may be otherwise admissible, in an issue of title by adverse possession, under the principle of § 254, ante, as evidence of the probable knowledge by the other party of the existence of the adverse claim, and therefore of acquiescence

It must be noted that, even in those jurisdictions where public boundaries alone are thus provable, the fact that the private boundary is alleged to be identical with the public one does not prevent the use of reputation to prove the latter, the identity being then otherwise shown.[10]

§ 1588. Reputation as (1) 'Post Litem Motam', or (2) from Interested Persons, or (3) Favoring a Right. Certain additional limitations have been suggested, as affecting the trustworthiness of the reputation; but only one of them has received any sanction.

(1) The limitation, already noticed as obtaining in other Hearsay exceptions, that the reputation, to be admissible, must have arisen 'ante litem motam', is well established; and its propriety cannot be doubted.[1]

(2) It was once argued that one's interest as a member of the community would involve bias, and hence statements of reputation as to a customary right in a community, coming from a deceased member of the community, could not be received. But such a declarant speaks merely of the current and undisputed reputation, and moreover is usually not personally interested in any important degree; and the argument against admission has not prevailed.[2]

(3) For the same reason, it is immaterial whether the reputation favors or disparages the existence of the custom or boundary;[3] because, although members of the community may be interested and biassed in favor of a public right, nevertheless there is almost invariably an equal opposite interest in [10] 1837, Thomas v. Jenkins, 6 A. & E. 525 (the boundary of a farm being in issue, and its identity with the hamlet-boundary being testified to, reputation as to the hamlet-boundary was admitted; Coleridge, J.: "The objection comes to this, that evidence shall not be given as to the boundary of a hamlet in the same mode as on other occasions because the proof is in the particular case only subsidiary. But I never heard that a fact was not to be proved in the same manner, when subsidiary, as when it is the very matter in issue"); 1893, Mullaney v. Duffy, 145 Ill. 559, 564, 33 N. E. 750 (where a private depends on a public boundary, the latter may be shown by reputation); 1839, Abington v. N. Bridgewater, 23 Pick. Mass. 174 (admitting declarations as to a boundary line with reference to proving, not a public right, but the situation of a house where a pauper lived); 1879, Drury v. Midland R. Co., 127 Mass. 581 (allowing reputation as evidence of the location of a creek "notorious and public in its nature", which in one view of the case was a dividing line between counties, and in another was in issue as a private boundary); 1921, Barnhill v. Hardee, 182 N. C. 85, 108 S. E. 348 (boundary line on a public street; reputation 30–35 years ago of width of the street, admitted).

Contra, semble: 1894, R. v. Berger, 1 Q. B. 823, 827 (obstructing a highway; dispute as to boundary; old map held admissible to show that land was a highway, but not to show the boundaries; unsound). Not decided: 1918, Virginia & W. Va. Coal Co. v. Charles, D. C. W. D. Va., 251 Fed. 83, 116.

§ 1588. [1] Accord: Eng. 1805, Nicholls v. Parker, 14 East 331, note; 1811, Mansfield, C. J., and Lord Redesdale, in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp. 416, 421; 1813, R. v. Colton, 3 Camp. 44, Dampier, J.; 1830, Richards v. Bassett, 10 B. & C. 661; 1832, Duke of Newcastle v. Broxtowe, 4 B. & Ad. 279; (but in Mercer v. Denne, 1904, 2 Ch. 534, 1905, 2 Ch. 535, 560, an ancient deposition was said to be admissible, ignoring the present principle); U. S. 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 412; 1917, Mechanic's Bank T. Co. v. Whilden, 175 N. C. 52, 94 S. E. 723; 1902, Westfelt v. Adams, 131 N. C. 379, 42 S. E. 823 (reputation after 1886, not admitted in the trial of an action begun in 1891); 1886, Clark v. Hills, 67 Tex. 152, 2 S. W. 356.

Contra, for a verdict as reputation (post, § 1593): 1816, Freeman v. Phillipps, 4 M. & S. 491; 1877, Duke of Devonshire v. Neill, L. R. Ire. 2 Exch. 156.

Compare the more fully developed definition of 'lis mota' under the Family History (Pedigree) exception (ante, § 1483).

[2] 1810, Harwood v. Sims, Wightw. 112; 1822, Moseley v. Davies, 11 Price 175.

[3] 1835, Drinkwater v. Porter, 2 C. & K. 182; 1830, Russell v. Stocking, 8 Conn. 240.

many as individuals in favor of a private claim, excluding the public one; so that the reputation, as it finally settles down in a definite form, represents the result of conflicting claims, and not merely a one-sided opinion.

2. Testimonial Qualifications, and Other Independent Rules of Evidence

§ 1591. Reputation must come from a Competent Source; Reputation in Another District. The principle that the witness must appear to have been in a position to obtain adequate knowledge (ante, § 653) finds an application to the present Exception. The reputation, to be admissible, must obviously have been formed among a class of persons who were in a position to have sound sources of information and to contribute intelligently to the formation of the reputation:

1813, LeBlanc, J., in Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 698: "The only evidence of reputation which was received was that from persons connected with the district, . . . such evidence being confined to what old persons who were in a situation to know what these rights are have been heard to say concerning them." [1]

In particular, the reputation must be offered from the particular district or the particular class of persons affected: [2]

1835, Parke, B., in Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 928: "In cases of rights or customs which are not, properly speaking, public but of a general nature and concern a multitude of persons . . . it seems that hearsay evidence is not admissible unless it is derived from persons conversant with the neighborhood. . . . But where the right is really public — a claim of highway, for instance — in which all the King's subjects are interested, it seems difficult to say that there ought to be any such limitation. In a matter in which all are concerned, reputation from any one appears to be receivable; but of course it would be almost worthless unless it came from persons who were shown to have some means of knowledge, as by living in the neighborhood or frequently using the road in dispute."

§ 1592. Vehicle of Reputation; Old Deeds, Leases, Maps, Surveys, etc. It is of course immaterial what form the reputation takes. That it may come in the shape of an individual's assertions, provided they genuinely purport to represent reputation, has already been noticed (ante, § 1584); and many other forms are to be recognized in the precedents. For example, the official § 1591. [1] In the following cases the rulings were too strict; the knowledge might have been presumed: 1854, Hammond v. Bradstreet, 10 Ex. 396 (a map of county boundaries from an old survey by J. and W. K. was rejected); 1904, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 535, 544 (a map of the sea-shore, made by an engineer, etc., in 1837, and found both in the British Museum and in the Admiralty, excluded, per Farwell, J., apparently on the present ground in part; but the opinion is a strange one); 1905, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 538, 560 (foregoing ruling affirmed on appeal; Vaughan Williams, J.: "The second question is: Were the deponents persons to whom we ought to impute such knowledge of the subject-matter as would render their statements evidence of reputation?"; but this part of the opinion was applied to certain ancient depositions, not to the map ruled upon by Farwell, J., supra); 1914, Fowke v. Berington, 2 Ch. 308 (Habington's Survey of Worcestershire, dating in the early 1600s, not admitted to show the location of parish church premises; the opinion misunderstands the principle; cited more fully ante, § 1584).

[2] 1849, Duke of Beaufort v. Smith, 4 Exch. 467, 469 (to prove a custom, an alleged survey of 1650 by a jury of the manor was excluded; Parke, B: "The question is whether a jury of the manor are not presumed to be acquainted with its customs, so as to bring the case within the rule laid down in Crease v. Barrett"; answering in the negative); 1852, Daniel v. Wilkin, 7 Exch. 437; 1860, McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 218, per Selden, J.

return of an assembly of the homage (or tenants of a manor), rehearsing customs, fees, and the like, was always regarded as equivalent to a reputation among the tenants, and therefore as receivable.[1] In the same way, old maps[2] and old surveys,[3] so far as they have been used and resorted to by the community in dealing with the land, may be taken as representing, after this test of use and criticism, the settled reputation of the community as to the correctness of the tenor of the map or the survey. So also, muniments of private title, such as old deeds and leases,[4] may, in a given case, just as effectually be the vehicle of reputation.[5] The use of history-books in this way is elsewhere considered (post, § 1598).

§ 1593. Same: Jury's Verdict as Reputation. That the verdict of a jury may amount to a statement of reputation has often been maintained, and the original practice, where the matter was of a public nature, was to admit verdicts upon this theory:

> 1801, LAWRENCE, J., in Reed v. Jackson, 1 East 357: "Reputation would have been evidence as to the right of way in this case; 'a fortiori', therefore, the finding of twelve men upon their oaths."

But the practice may be said not to have obtained in the United States, and has now in effect been discredited in England.

The truth is that it has to-day no possible justification under the present Exception. Its allowance up to the early part of the 1800s was merely "a relic of the time when a jury's verdict was a conclusion upon their own knowledge."[1] The jury's verdict did once represent the reputation of the neighborhood.[2] But in the modern practice neither a jury's verdict nor a judge's § 1592. [1] 1786, Goodwin v. Spray, 1 T. R. 473, per Ashhurst, J.; 1793, Beebee v. Parker, 5 T. R. 14.

[2] 1843, R. v. Milton, 1 C. & K. 62 (a map of parish boundaries made from information of one old man); 1898, Taylor v. McGonigle, 120 Cal. 123, 52 Pac. 159; 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 411; 1879, Drury v. Midland R. Co., 127 Mass. 581; and cases cited passim in the foregoing sections.

[3] 1816, Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297; 1870, Smith v. Earl Brownlow, L. R. 2 Eq. 252; 1914, Fowke v. Berington, 2 Ch. 308 (cited more fully ante, § 1584, n. 3, § 1591, n. 1); 1852, Adams, v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 411.

For maps and surveys, see also the exception for deceased surveyors (ante, § 1570), and the exception for official surveyors (post, § 1665). Most rulings about maps involve merely the question whether a deed has by reference incorporated a map, — not a question of evidence; compare §§ 1777, 1778, post (verbal acts), §§ 2464–2466, post (interpretation by usage).

[4] 1832, Henderson, C. J., in Sasser v. Herring, 3 Dev. L. 342: "We have also received private deeds and mesne conveyances . . . under the idea that they are common reputation. 'A fortiori' should grants from the State be admitted, for they are something more than the declaration of private individuals." Accord: 1819, White v. Lisle, 4 Madd. 223; 1829, Coombs v. Coether, 1 M. & M. 399; 1829, Plaxton v. Dare, 10 B. & C. 19 (it was argued for admission that "the fact recited in the leases . . . was equivalent to declarations made by the deceased landlords and the tenants"); 1829, Brett v. Beales, 1 M. & M. 418 (a deed under the seals of the University and Corporation of Cambridge); 1890, Weld v. Brooks, 152 Mass. 297, 305, 25 N. E. 719 (deed of 1860, between parties now deceased, admitted as reputation to evidence "the existence and location of a public way").

Compare the use of old deeds as circumstantial evidence of possession (ante, § 157).

[5] For perambulations as reputation-evidence, see ante, § 1563.

§ 1593. [1] Thayer, Cases on Evidence, 1st ed., 422; Preliminary Treatise, 90 ff., 168 ff.; post, § 1800.

[2] 1840, Alderson, B., in Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 254 (answering the citation of earlier cases): "That was when the jury was summoned 'de vicineto', and their functions were less limited than at present."

decree can well be regarded as a vehicle of reputation in any true sense. In the first place, if the judge or the jury were to be brought into court and asked, "What appeared to you to be the reputation among the witnesses?", the answer might in some cases involve reputation. But even here the difficulty is that neither judge nor jury do come into court as sworn witnesses to reputation. Next, the statement involved in a verdict or a decree does not necessarily or probably involve an answer to the above question. The verdict or the decree may have gone merely upon the preponderance of testimony; or it may have taken an old deed or other document as of superior and controlling value; or there may have been no evidence at all that could amount to a reputation. No doubt a previous verdict or decree should properly have an evidential value which the present form of the Hearsay rule does not concede it; but it is certainly not to be forced into evidence under the present exception.

That its acceptance was anomalous in modern practice came to be perceived in England in the middle of the century; it was admitted on precedent and half-heartedly, as "a sort of reputation."[3] Finally, when in 1882 such evidence was again received, and by the House of Lords, it was not under the Reputation exception, or as hearsay at all under any exception, but as a "verbal act" (post, § 1778), — i.e. not as testimonial assertion, but as an act of possession in the course of the exercise of a public right by the people of the neighborhood.[4] This seems to dispose of its use under the present exception.

§ 1594. Same: Judicial Order or Decree, or Arbitrator's Award, as Reputation. In connection with the earlier doctrine, just examined, that a jury's verdict might be used as involving reputation, the attempt was sometimes made to treat a judge's or arbitrator's order or award as also admissible in the same way. But for the reasons just stated, as well as upon the principle

[3] 1838, Brisco v. Lomax, 8 A. & E. 211 (Littledale, J.: "It is not reputation; but it is as good evidence as reputation"; Patterson, J.: "Now it is certainly difficult to say that a verdict can be received merely as evidence of reputation; for a jury are summoned from the body of the county at large, and are not themselves likely to know the matter. . . . Yet where a matter has been before a jury, the verdict is generally given in evidence as a sort of reputation, if I may so term it"; Coleridge, J.: "It is not precisely evidence of reputation"); 1840, Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 266, per Abinger, C. B.

[4] 1882, Neill v. Duke of Devonshire, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 147 (Selborne, L. C.: "Such evidence, admissible in cases in which evidence of reputation is received, is not itself in any proper sense evidence of reputation. It really stands upon a higher and a larger principle, especially in cases, like the present, of prescription; . . . it comes within the category of 'res gestæ' and of declarations accompanying acts. . . . The effect of this evidence . . . is extremely strong to establish a state of possession and enjoyment of the fisheries"; Lord O'Hagan: "I think the proceedings were admissible, not as evidence of reputation, which I agree they are not, but of something higher and better than reputation, . . . of the possession in fact at the time of the bills being filed of the several fishery. . . . Evidence of acts and proceedings with reference to the river generally — the leases, the covenants and reservations, the actions, the judgments, the licenses, and the successful assertions of right under the patents — was properly admitted"; Lord Blackburn agreed that the Court decree "is perhaps not properly evidence of reputation", but is "as strong or stronger than reputation"); 1869, Holiister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403, 407 (verdict in trespass or ejectment as indicating a claim of title).

of lack of Knowledge (ante, § 1591), such a use of orders or decrees has generally been repudiated.[1]

§ 1595. Negative Reputation. It would seem, on the analogy of other instances (ante, §§ 1071, 1497, 1531, 1556, post, 1614), that an assertion may be made by silence, and that therefore the absence of a reputation (i.e., the fact that no one in the region had ever heard of the right, custom, or boundary being as alleged) should be admissible as a negative reputation.[1]

B. EVENTS OF GENERAL HISTORY

The general principles of this branch of the exception do not differ materially from those of the preceding one; but the line of precedents is a separate one, and the scope of application is in some respects broader; so that it seems more profitable to regard it as a distinct branch of the exception.

§ 1597. Matter must be Ancient; Statutory Regulation. The principle of Necessity, allowing the use of this class of evidence, is the same as that already examined (ante, § 1582), namely, the matter as to which the history or other treatise is offered must be an ancient one, or one as to which it would be unlikely that living witnesses could be obtained. In other words, it must be a matter concerning a former generation.[1] Statutory declaration of the rule, however, has sometimes ignored this,[2] partly through a failure to dis-

§ 1594. [1] 1831, Rogers v. Wood, 2 B. & Ad. 256 (excluding a decree of court by certain judges, offered as reputation; "here the persons acting as judges had no knowledge of the fact [i.e. the customary rights of a city] except what they derived in the course of that proceeding); 1832, Duke of Newcastle v. Braxtowe, 4 id. 279 (orders of sessions made by the justices of the peace assembled in sessions were admitted as evidence of reputation as to a local custom, because, per Parke, J., "though they were not proved to be resiants in the county or hundred, they must, from the nature and character of their offices alone, be presumed to have sufficient acquaintance with the subject to which their declarations relate"); 1839, Evans v. Rees, 10 A. & E. 155 (Denman, L. C. J.: "[The opinion of an arbitrator as to a boundary is] formed not upon his own knowledge, as declarations used by way of reputation commonly are").

In the following cases a chancellor's decree was thus admitted: 1838, Laybourn v. Crisp, 4 M. & W. 326, per Parke, B.; 1877, Duke of Devonshire v. Neill, L. R. Ire. 2 Exch. 153.

§ 1595. [1] 1835, Drinkwater v. Porter, 2 C. & K. 182; 1842, Anglesey v. Hatherton, 10 M. & W. 239, 244, semble.

§ 1597. [1] 1833, Morris v. Lessee, 7 Pet. 558; 1871, Whiton v. Insurance Cos., 109 Mass. 31 (Appleton's American Cyclopedia, offered to prove that a certain island was reputed to be a guano island, was rejected because the facts were of recent occurrence). The same result is reached in construing Code provisions: 1885, Gallagher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 15, 6 Pac. 869 (McKee, J., construing C. C. P. § 1936: "What are 'facts of general notoriety and interest'? We think the term stands [1] for facts of a public nature, either at home or abroad, not existing in the memory of men, as contradistinguished from [2] facts of a private nature existing within the knowledge of living men, and as to which they may be examined as witnesses").

[2] The Code provisions are as follows: Alabama: Code 1907, § 3961 ("Hearsay evidence as to declarations of deceased persons as to ancient rights, and made before the litigation arose, are admissible to prove matters of public interest in which the whole community are supposed to take interest and have knowledge"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 11 ("common reputation existing previous to the controversy, respecting facts of a public or general interest more than 30 years old, and in cases of pedigree or boundary", is admissible); par. 13 ("monuments and inscriptions in public places, as evidence of common reputation", are admissible); § 1936 ("Historical works, books of science or art, and published maps or charts, when made by persons indifferent between the parties, are 'prima facie' evidence of facts of general notoriety and interest"); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5770 ("declarations of deceased persons as to ancient rights, made before litigation arose", admissible to prove "matters of public interest in which the whole community are supposed to take interest and to criminate properly between the present exception, in this and the foregoing branch, and the exception created for Learned Treatises in general (post, § 1693).

§ 1598. Matter must be of General Interest. When a treatise on history is offered as embodying a reputation of the community upon the fact in question, the treatise, in the first place, cannot be regarded as more than the statement of the individual author, unless it is a work so widely known, so long used, and so highly respected, that it can be said to represent the assenting belief of the community. In the next place, the facts for which such an opinion or reputation can be taken as trustworthy must (on the principle of § 1583, ante) be such facts as have been of interest to all members of the community as such, and therefore have been so likely to receive general and intelligent discussion and examination, by competent persons, that the community's received opinion on the subject cannot be supposed to have reached the condition of definite decision until the matter had gone, in public belief, beyond the stage of controversy and had become settled with fair finality.

This much of a general principle can be said to be beyond dispute. But for the application of the principle, it seems impossible to say that any more definite limitations have been accepted as law:

1696, Steyner v. Droitwich, Skinner 623, 1 Salk. 281: "Camden's Britannia was offered in Evidence to prove a Reputation Ninety-two years ago that Salt ought to be made only at the three Pits of the Burgesses [of Droitwich] and that all others were excluded. And it was said that the Sayings of antient Persons who are dead is always allowed, and this amounts to as much as the saying of an old Man at least, and that Camden was a publick Person, being Historiographer Royal, etc., and that a Gravestone had been allowed as Evidence. 'Sed non allocatur'; for if one part of Camden be allowed, another part ought to be, and if Camden, then another Historian as well as him, and there would not be any certainty. . . . And the Court said that an History may be evidence of the general history of the Realm, but not of a particular Custom; and therefore 'secundum subjectam materiam' it may be good Evidence or not."

1833, STORY, J., in Morris v. Lessees, 7 Pet. 558: "Historical facts of general and public notoriety may indeed be proved by reputation, and that reputation may be established by historical works of known character and accuracy. But evidence of this sort is confined . . . to cases where from the nature of the transactions, or the remoteness of the period, or the public and general reception of the facts, a just foundation is laid for general confidence."

1847, SANDFORD, V. C., in Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 724: "The statements of historians of established merit . . . are from necessity received as evidence of facts to which they relate, . . . restricted to facts of a public and general nature."

have knowledge"); § 5772 ("traditionary evidence as to ancient boundaries and landmarks", admissible); § 3821 ("acquiescence for seven years, by acts or declarations of adjoining landowners, shall establish a dividing line"); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7961 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4618. Comp. C. § 7325 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10531, par. 11 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 10584 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8852 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936, substituting "or" for "and" in the last clause, and "presumptive" for "'prima facie'"); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 727, par. 12, 13 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 781 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 11, 12 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 320 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 9 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 4); par. 11 (like ib. § 1870, par. 13); § 1451 (like ib. § 1936); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7107 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1936).

1860, SELDEN, J., in McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 216: "Such evidence is only admissible to prove facts of a general and public nature, and not those which concern individuals and mere local communities. . . . History is admissible only to prove history, that is, such facts as being of interest to a whole people are usually incorporated in a general history of the state or nation." [1]

In some instances the principle has been applied too narrowly, for example, in excluding county-histories; [2] for on certain matters there may be a general and settled county-reputation which will be quite as trustworthy as a national reputation upon national matters. There should therefore be no arbitrary line excluding local histories.

§ 1599. Discriminations; (1) Judicial Notice; (2) Scientific Treatises. (1) The paucity of rulings upon this class of evidence is probably due to the consideration that when a fact — for example, the date of Washington's birth or of Lincoln's assassination — is one of such general interst as to render an accepted historical treatise admissible upon the present principle, the fact is also of such notoriety that it will be assumed as true by the Court, upon the principles of Judicial Notice (post, § 2565). In such a case, if the judge is actually not certain of the precise truth as to the fact alleged, but it is of a class capable of being judicially noticed, he may consult an accepted treatise § 1598. [1] Other examples are as follows: England: 1672, St. Katherine's Hospital, 1 Vent. 151 ("It was shewn out of Speed's Chronicles, produced in Court, that at that Time Queen Isabel was under great Calamity and Oppression, and what was then determined against her was not so much from the Right of the Thing as the Iniquity of the Times"); 1682, Bronuker v. Atkyns, Skinner 14 ("Speed's Chronicle was given in Evidence to prove the Death of Isabel, Queen Dowager to E. II; and though Maynard seemed to oppose it, and Dobbins said it was done by Consent; yet the Chief Justice said he knew not what better Proof could be made. And Wallop said that in the Lords' House it was admitted by them as good evidence in the Lord Bridgewater's Case"); 1684, L. C. J. Jeffreys, in Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 625 (rejecting a history offered to show the date of Charles V's abdication and Philip and Mary becoming king and queen of Spain, over a century before: "Instead of records, the upshot is a little lousy history . . . Is a printed history, written by I know not who, an evidence in a court of law?"); 1718, Proceedings respecting the Education, etc., of the Royal Family, 15 How. St. Tr. 1202, 1203, 1206, 1209 (the Judges drew up an opinion upon the King's prerogative in the matter, and cited precedents on the exercise of the prerogative from Rymer's Fœdera, Lord Clarendon's History, Cotton's Record, Kennett's History of England, Burnet's History of the Reformation).

United States: 1834, Marguerite v. Chouteau, 3 Mo. 540, 555 (DuPratz, Barbé Marbois and others' works, consulted as to the existence of slavery of Indians in America in the 1700s); 1836, Com. v. Alburger, 1 Whart. Pa. 469, 473 (a letter of William Penn confirming a certain grant; its mention "in Proud and various other historical works" treated as sufficient, the matter being ancient); 1869, Baird v. Rice, 63 Pa. 489, 496 (in determining the ancient plan of London's streets, etc., so as to interpret Penn's plan of Philadelphia, the following works were consulted: Maitland's History of London, 1754; Bohn's Pictorial Handbook of London, 1854; Great London Directory, 1855); 1811, Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munf. Va. 53, 71, per Tucker, J. (Edwards' History of the West Indies, used to show the government of Hispaniola).

[2] 1834, Evans v. Getting, 6 C. & P. 586 (to show the boundary between two counties, Brecon and Glamorgan, Nicholl's History of Brecknockshire was offered; Alderson, B.: "This is a history of Brecknockshire. The writer of that history probably had the same interest in enlarging the boundaries of the county as an other inhabitant of it. It is not like a general history of Wales. I shall not receive it"; the fault of this decision is that it seems to proceed upon the principle that local interest excludes reputation, — a principle seen ante, § 1589, to have been repudiated; the above ruling largely influenced the two ensuing); 1860, McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 216 (rejecting Benton's History of Herkimer Co.); 1887, Roe v. Strong, 107 id. 356, 14 N. E. 294 (rejecting Thompson's History of Long Island).

as the basis of his ruling (post, § 2569); and thus the treatise is in fact used and trusted without being offered formally in evidence to the jury. An equivalent result is by indirection attained; and it can hardly be doubted that, while in practice little inconvenience is felt, yet in theory there is a lurking inconsistency.

(2) In a few jurisdictions, by way of a special Exception, the use of scientific treatises in evidence has, with certain limitations, been sanctioned (post, § 1690); so that an historical treatise not admissible under this exception might be receivable under that one. Nevertheless, the modern judicial tendency has been to construe the statutes in question as intended merely to re-state the present exception and not to create a new one (post, §§ 1693, 1697–1699).

C. Marriage, and other Facts of Family History

§ 1602. Reputation of Marriage; General Principle. The use of reputation, by exception to the Hearsay rule, to evidence marriage, fulfils both of the ordinary prerequisites already noted, the necessity principle (ante, § 1421) and the principle of trustworthiness (ante, § 1422).

The necessity, however, here lies not, as for land-boundaries (ante, § 1582), in the antiquity of the matter to be proved and the consequent dearth of living testimony, but in the absence of satisfactory direct testimony to the act of exchanging marriage consent. At common law the persons said to have been married, being usually parties or otherwise interested in the cause, would consequently have been disqualified as witnesses; and, when they were only third persons not interested (as in a contest over the inheritance of their property) would usually have been deceased and therefore unavailable. Furthermore, the procurement of the celebrant of their marriage, as a living witness, would usually not be feasible; and the use of a written record, in the shape of a certificate or a register-entry, was to a great extent not permissible by law, owing chiefly to the defective regulations of such records in English and American communities (post, §§ 1642–1645). Finally, the latter source of evidence was in the United States likely to be even more scanty, first, because of the constant migration of families over wide regions, and, next, because a marriage was here almost universally treated as valid without a ceremonial celebration, and therefore no record of it would exist for all such informal marriages. Practically, therefore the chief available sources of evidence were two only. One of these was the conduct of the persons themselves as husband and wife; this was used as circumstantial evidence indicating a prior exchange of consent, and has already been examined (ante, § 268); it was commonly spoken of as "habit." The other was the present kind of evidence, namely, reputation in the community as married persons.

As to its trustworthiness, for ordinary practical purposes, there could equally be no doubt. The relation of husband and wife has important consequences, social and legal, for those who deal with persons purporting to be such. The community has decidedly an interest to ascertain the fact; and this interest in ascertaining the truth has been already seen to be the ground for exceptionally admitting other kinds of hearsay statements (ante, §§ 1482, 1486, 1586) as from persons sufficiently qualified. The adequacy of this ground in the present instance has been expounded in the following passages:

1867, Lord CRANWORTH, in the Breadalbane Case, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 199: "The great facility which the law of Scotland affords for contracting marriage has given rise to rules and principles which have been sometimes considered peculiar to that law. By the law of England, and, I presume, of all other Christian countries, where a man and woman have long lived together as man and wife, and have been so treated by their friends and neighbors, there is a 'prima facie' presumption that they really are and have been what they profess to be. If after their deaths a succession should open to their children any one claiming a share in such succession as a child would establish a good 'prima facie' case by showing that his parents had always passed in society as man and wife, and that the claimant had always passed as their child. If the validity of the parents' marriage should be disputed, it might become necessary for the person claiming as their child to establish its validity, and, inasmuch as in England all marriages are solemnized in public and publicly recorded, it is reasonable to require the claimant to give positive evidence of its celebration, or else to explain why he is unable to do so. The principle is the same in Scotland; but as marriage there is not necessarily celebrated in public or recorded, it is much more probable than it would be in England that there may have been a marriage, but that there may be no means of giving direct proof of it. Those who have to decide, after the death of parents, on the legitimacy of children must much oftener than in England have to rely solely on the 'prima facie' evidence afforded by the conduct of the parties towards one another and of their friends and neighbors towards them. This sort of evidence is spoken of in Scotland as habite and repute. Persons are sometimes said to be married persons by 'habite and repute.' I agree, however, with the argument of the Appellant (speaking with deference to those who think otherwise), that this is an inaccurate mode of expression. Marriage can only exist as the result of mutual agreement. The conduct of the parties and of their friends and neighbors, in other words, 'habite' and 'repute', may afford strong, and, in Scotland, attending to the laws of marriage there existing, unanswerable evidence that at some unascertained time a mutual agreement to marry was entered into by the parties passing as man and wife. I cannot, however, think it correct to say that 'habite' and 'repute' in any case make the marriage. Repute can obviously have no such effect. It is, perhaps, less inaccurate to speak of 'habite' creating marriage, if by the word 'habite' we are to understand the daily acts of persons living together which imply that they consider each other as husband and wife, and it may be taken as implying an agreement to be what they represent themselves as being. It seems to me, however, even here to be an improper use of the word to say that it makes marriage. The distinction is perhaps one rather of words than of substance; but I prefer to say that 'habite' and 'repute' afford by the law of Scotland, as indeed of all countries, evidence of marriage, — always strong, and, in Scotland, unless met by counter evidence, generally conclusive."

1844, Mr. J. Hubback, Succession, 244: "Reputation of marriage, unlike that of other matters of pedigree, may proceed from persons who are not members of the family. The reason of the distinction is to be found in the public interest which is taken in the question of the existence of a marriage between two parties; the propriety of visiting or otherwise treating them in society as husband and wife, the liability of the man for the debts of the woman, the power of the latter to act 'suo jure', and their competency to enter into new matrimonial engagements, being matters which interest not their relations alone, but every one who by coming into contact with them may have occasion to regulate his conduct according as he understands them to be married or not."

1882, FINCH, J., in Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 552: "The reputation attending this cohabitation in the neighborhood where it existed and was known among those brought into its presence by relationship, business, or society, was that which ordinarily attends the dwelling together of husband and wife. It has been well described as the shadow cast by their daily lives. In the general repute surrounding them, the slow growth of months and years, the resultant picture of forgotten incidents, passing events, habitual and daily conduct, presumably honest because disinterested, and safer to be trusted because prone to suspect, we are enabled to see the character of the cohabitation and discern its distinctive features. It is for that reason that such general repute is permitted to be proven. It sums up a multitude of trivial details. It compacts into the brief phrase of a verdict the teaching of many incidents and the conduct of years. It is the average intelligence drawing a conclusion." [1]

Accordingly, it has been universally conceded that reputation in the community is always admissible to evidence the fact of marriage;[2] there does not seem to have been any time when this was disputed.

§ 1603. What constitutes Reputation; Divided Reputation; Negative Reputation. (1) The reputation need not be such as exists in the neighborhood; i.e. the limitation generally laid down (post, § 1615) for the use of reputation to moral character is not here applied. The fact of marriage may be of interest to many others than mere neighbors. To them chiefly it may be of social interest; but to others it may be of legal interest and equally important. There seems to be no settled formula of inquiry; in general, it may be assumed that the reputation may be one existing among any persons who know the parties said to be married:

1832, Evans v. Morgan, 2 Cr. & J. 453, 456: assumpsit on a note made by a woman before coverture; the only evidence of the marriage "was that of a person who did not appear to be related to them, or to live near them, or know them intimately; and proved only that he knew the defendant J. M. when she was J. R. and that he had heard that she had since married M."; this witness was not cross-examined. Counsel argued that "it has never been held that such loose evidence as this amounts to evidence of reputation." BAYLEY, B.: "It goes to show the reputation of the neighborhood." LYNDHURST, L. C. B.: "If you do not cross-examine on such point, you must take those expressions in the ordinary sense." VAUGHAN, B.: "I think that there was 'prima facie' evidence of reputation of a marriage." [1]

(2) The reputation must be a consensus of opinion; it must not be a (so-called) divided reputation:

1814, Lord REDESDALE, in Cunningham v. Cunningham, 2 Dow 482, 511: "The parties must be reputed and holden to be married. It must not be an opinion of A in contradiction to an opinion of B, and of C in opposition to D; it must be founded not on singular, § 1602. [1] Compare the following cases: 1874, Lyle v. Ellwood, L. R. 19 Eq. 107; 1876, De Thoren v. Attorney-General, L. R. 1 App. Cas. 686.

[2] The singular rule is laid down in Bowman v. Little, 101 Md. 273, 61 Atl. 223, 657, 1084 (1905) that where a ceremonial marriage is relied on reputation is inadmissible; this law would disturb thousands of lawful couples; the opinion of the majority in this case is an extraordinary one, full of loose law.

§ 1603. [1] 1791, Standen v. Standen, Peake N. P. 33 (that the deceased clerk of the parish had said the banns were published, admitted by Lord Kenyon "as evidence of the general reputation"); 1847, Jones v. Hunter, 2 La. An. 254, 256, semble (reputation in a place where the parties had only "lately arrived", insufficient).

but on general opinion. That species of repute which consists in A, B, and C, thinking one way, D, E, F, another way, is no evidence on such a subject. . . . The conduct of the parties must be such as to make almost every one infer that they were married."

This much, in theory, may be conceded; it is analogous to the rule laid down for reputation to moral character (post, § 1612).[2] But the difficulty comes in applying it. If the witnesses all agree that some of the community thought the persons married while others thought them not married, there is in truth no reputation, no consensus of opinion, and the individual opinions would be inadmissible as a reputation. But if, as will usually happen, the witnesses pro and con assert each that the general opinion in the community, as observed by them, was respectively affirmative and negative of marriage, this is not a case of divided reputation; there is or is not a genuine and universal reputation according as one or the other set of witnesses is believed; and the evidence should therefore go to the jury to determine the witnesses' credibility.[3] The attempt to apply any technical restriction of admissibility based on division of reputation seems therefore to be futile and unwise.[4]

(3) The reputation, assuming it to exist in definite form, may equally be a negative one, i.e. a reputation that certain persons living together are not married.[5]

§ 1604. Sufficiency of Reputation-Evidence, distinguished. Whether reputation is admissible at all, is the only question with which the Hearsay rule is concerned. But there are other rules which concern the sufficiency of admissible evidence, — rules of Quantity; and one of these declares reputation, or reputation together with habit, is insufficient at common law in prosecutions for bigamy and actions for criminal conversation. The testimony

[2] 1915, Peery v. Peery, 27 Colo. App. 533, 150 Pac. 329; 1875, Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251, 297 ("where reputation in such case is divided, it amounts to no evidence at all"); 1877, Jones v. Jones, 48 Md. 391, 403 (Barnum v. Barnum affirmed); 1921, O'Leary v. Lawrence, 138 Md. 147, 113 Atl. 638 (preceding cases approved); 1899, Williams v. Herrick, 21 R. I. 401, 43 Atl. 1036 (must be general and uniform); 1908, Weidenhoft v. Primm, 16 Wyo. 340, 94 Pac. 453 (Barnum v. Barnum, Md., approved).

[3] This seems to have been the view taken in the following cases: 1883, Powers v. Charmsbury, 35 La. An. 630, 634; 1894, Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176, 30 Atl. 752.

[4] The rule should rather be that a divided reputation, though admissible, is insufficient for proof: 1902, Heminway v. Miller, 87 Minn. 123, 91 N. W. 428; 1916, Svendsen's Estate, 37 S. D. 353, 158 N. W. 410.

[5] 1874, Lyle v. Ellwood, L. R. 19 Eq. 98, 106; 1918, Gorden v. Gorden, 283 Ill. 182, 119 N. E. 312 (legitimacy and inheritance); 1868, Boone v. Purnell, 28 Md. 607, 629; 1842, Re Taylor, 9 Paige N. Y. 611, (reputation of non-marriage was admitted; but the Chancellor declared that reputation after certain "stories were set afloat" was "not legal evidence to rebut the presumption", "as it was not a part of the 'res gestæ'"; this is a confusion of thought, but at any rate does not declare the reputation inadmissible).

Contra: 1885, Northrop v. Knowles, 52 Conn. 522 (title depending on legitimacy; after proof by certificate of marriage, reputation of the relation as adulterous was excluded; perhaps allowable, in proof by reputation, to show divided reputation in disproof); 1882, Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 554, semble (reputation of non-marriage of the man among persons with whom he lived as a bachelor, concealing his connection with the woman, held inadmissible; to be admissible "it does not and cannot go beyond the range of knowledge of the cohabitation").

Undecided: 1859, Hill v. Hill's Adm'r, 32 Pa. 511 (dower; reputation that claimant had been "called in her neighborhood" Mrs. W., not Mrs. H., excluded, as here being only individual declarations; general question reserved).

of an eye-witness is indispensable, i.e. the oral testimony of a bystander or the celebrant or a party to the marriage or the hearsay testimony of a certificate or register entry. These rules, which form a special class by themselves, are elsewhere dealt with (post, §§ 2082–2086).

§ 1605. Reputation of Other Facts of Family History (Race-Ancestry, Legitimacy, Relationship, Birth, Death, etc.). May not neighborhood-reputation be often sufficiently trustworthy to be received in evidence of certain other facts of family history likely to be notoriously canvassed and hence to become known with a sufficient degree of accuracy? [1]

In communities of more primitive conditions where social life continues stable amid constant and fixed surroundings, the neighborhood-reputation is unquestionably of some value. Such was formerly the almost universal state of things in England, on the Continent, and in the United States. Such is still the state of things in rural communities almost everywhere (except in newly-settled regions), notably in the small towns. That it has ceased to exist in the metropolitan communities does not indicate that neighborhood-reputation, where it arises, is less trustworthy; it merely indicates that amid the gregarious individualism and domiciliary mutations of the metropolitan horde no neighborhood-reputation is likely to exist. Moreover, the frequent migrations in American domestic life have in one respect made reputation-evidence even more necessary than in stable communities as a source of knowledge; for in countless families the only means of knowledge for them of the career of their migrated members is the reports brought back, at times, of the fate or fortune reputed to have overtaken them in the distant community where they took up a new home. In the typical cases coming before the courts, where, for example, one who was in California with John Doe, who emigrated from New England in 1850, testifies that Doe was commonly reputed in Sandy Gulch to have been killed in a brawl and to have been then and there buried, does not this serve to support belief? If it is the fear of imposition that stands in the way, would it not be equally possible to procure some perjurer to come from California and tell upon the stand a concocted story about the death of Doe as witnessed by him? It is not a question of absolute proof; it is a question of the admissibility of a single piece of evidence, which may or may not prove to be sufficient. It seems finical to exclude from all consideration whatever, in a legal investigation, a class of evidence which is not only much relied upon in practical affairs, but is also sufficiently within the general principle of two exceptions (Reputation and Family History) to the Hearsay rule.

Such evidence was once in England considered orthodox enough; [2] and its § 1605. [1] Distinguish the use of declarations by individuals (friends and intimates) not being family-relations, under the Family History Exception (ante, § 1487).

[2] It was always admitted to show place of birth, as fixing nationality: 1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 485, 509, 512, 515; 1704, Lindsay's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 987, 996; 1717, Francia's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 897, 962.

So also for time of birth: 1649, Duke of Hamilton's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1155, 1170 ("common report" admitted that defendant was a 'postnatus', i.e. born after the accession of James I of England). The practice probuse has been vindicated, on grounds of policy and of principle, by many American Courts, as admissible in certain classes of cases:

1821, MILLS, J., in Birney v. Hann, 3 A. K. Marsh. 326: "From the sayings of the parents or members of the family, Courts progressed at last to the admission of the general recognition or reputation of the heirship by others. It is admitted that it is difficult to lay down any precise rule on this subject. The kinds of evidence which are calculated to prove the consanguinity or affinity of one person to another are various, and all may be proper after a lapse of time. . . . Lapse of time, or distance of place, may furnish grounds for greater latitude and admit tradition, reputation, and recognition of a neighborhood, or the use of documents, records, and inscriptions, which may disclose the connexion by blood or marriage to him from whom a right is claimed."

1834, CATRON, C. J., in Flowers v. Haralson, 6 Yerg. 496: "Reputation of pedigree is the result of the public mind, founded upon actual knowledge of the whole community; and experience and knowledge in the nature and habits of man teach the unerring certainty of the public knowledge and conclusion in relation to family history. Individuals may fail in their investigations of particular facts; but where marriages, births, and deaths are the facts to be learned, human curiosity saves us the trouble and expense of proving the occurrences by witnesses present or by the hearsay of those who were, or of the family connexion. No individual investigations or testimony can generally be equal in certainty to the curious' scrutiny; and if secrecy be attempted, public curiosity sets on foot an anxious search for the truth. General reputation of such facts is not only competent, but highly credible."

1869, LAWRENCE, J., in Ringhouse v. Keener, 49 Ill. 471 (admitting testimony of friends that "his death was announced in the newspapers and he was spoken of by his acquaintances as dead"): "In a population as unstable as ours, and comprising so many persons whose kindred are in distant lands, the refusal of all evidence of reputation in regard to death, unless the reputation came from family relatives, would sometimes render the proof of death impossible, though there might exist no doubt of the fact, and thus defeat the ends of justice."

1875, COOPER, C., in Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 227: "In England it is now well settled that hearsay evidence is resorted to in matters of pedigree . . . upon the ground of the interest of the declarants in knowing the connections of the family. The rule is consequently restricted to the declarations of deceased persons who were related by blood or marriage to the person from whom the descent is claimed, and general repute in the family proved by a surviving member. . . . It is obvious that while the English rule may be most consonant to sound principle, and may answer the ends of justice in a dense population and settled community, yet it scarcely suffices in a sparsely inhabited country with a migratory and rapidly changing population. It would be utterly inadequate in matters relating to a slave population, where the family is not legally recognized, and, for the same reason, to the settlement of the rights of illegitimates. Where would the negro have been in suits for freedom, after a few years, on a change of domicile by the master, with the presumption of slavery against them by reason of color, if the English rule had been rigidly adhered to? . . . Under our decisions so much of the testimony in this case, based upon hearsay or reputation, as relates to the pedigree of James M. Garrett is admissible, whether it comes from members of the family or third persons, to be weighed according to the sources of information, the opportunities of witnesses, and the surrounding circumstances."

ably continued till the 1800s: 1792, Grose, J., in Morewood v. Wood, 14 East 330, note: "I remember the case of a pedigree tried at Winchester, where there was a strong reputation throughout all the country one way, and a great number of persons were examined to it."

This sanction of neighborhood-reputation has not been universal. It is illustrated in many rulings; but there is still in many other Courts an entire refusal to accept it. There are certain classes of facts for which it is entirely appropriate; there are others for which it may not be. The matter is one in which it should be left to the discretion of the trial Court to admit such a reputation wherever the meagreness of other evidence, or the difficulty of obtaining it, renders it desirable to accept that which is offered.

On no one point is there a general agreement in the rulings. They may be grouped according as they deal with the admissibility of reputation as evidence of legitimacy or the opposite;[3] of relationship, to a family or to an individual;[4] or of birth[5] or of death or its place or time;[6] or of race-ancestry (i.e.

[3] ENGLAND: 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1139, 1174, 1439, 'et passim' (admitted); 1744, Heath's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 1, 77 (same controversy; excluded); 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, in App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 447, 470, 481 (Lord Redesdale: "General reputation of legitimacy would have been evidence in favor of the legitimacy of Nicholas; so general reputation that there existed no issue of Lord Banbury was evidence against such legitimacy. . . . The reputation at home and abroad, the belief of relations, friends, and neighbors, was the evidence which ought to have been resorted to").

CANADA: 1853, Doe v. Marr, 3 U. C. C. P. 36, 49 (inheritance and legitimacy; repute as to the mother having had illicit intercourse with S., excluded).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1825, Stegall v. Stegall's Adm'r, 2 Brockenb. 256, 263, Marshall, C. J. (it "cannot be entirely disregarded", but its weight "depends on the circumstances of the case"; said of reputation to legitimacy); 1826, Stokes v. Dawes, 4 Mason 268, 270, Story, J. (admitted without question); 1896, Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217, 233 (neighbors' reputation as to illegitimate child, excluded); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 11 (quoted ante, § 1597); 1901, Heaton's Estate, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 321 (reputation in the community, excluded; C. C. P. § 1870, par. 11, "never was intended to broaden the common-law rule upon this subject"); Ga. 1857, Richardson v. Roberts, 23 Ga. 220 (reputation that the plaintiff's child was a bastard, etc., as alleged in an utterance charged as defamatory, excluded); Ind. 1881, DeHaven v. DeHaven, 77 Ind. 236, 239 (reputation as to paternity, excluded); Ia. 1899, Watson v. Richardson, 110 Ia. 673, 80 N. W. 407 (current reports in the community of deceased that the claimant was his illegitimate son, excluded; except so far as by statute the putative father's recognition in substantive law must be "notorious"); 1914, Hays v. Claypool, 164 Ia. 297, 145 N. W. 874 (inheritance by a recognized illigitimate child); Mass. 1862, Haddock v. R. Co., 3 All. 298 (reputation of child's illegitimacy, excluded); N. J. L. 1843, Fuller v. Saxton, 20 N. J. L. 61, 66 (that G. K. was the daughter of D. C.; reputation admitted, though not "traced to the family"); N. C. 1898, Erwin v. Bailey, 123 N. C. 628, 31 S. E. 844 (reputation to show legitimacy, excluded); Or. 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 (excluded); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 11 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 9 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 11); Tenn. 1846, Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 98 (admitted); 1875, Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 227 (admitted; see quotation supra).

[4] 1899, Elder v. State, 123 Ala. 35, 26 So. 213 (reputation in the neighborhood to show relationship, excluded); 1899, Lamar v. Allen, 108 Ga. 158, 33 S. E. 958 (reputation of neighborhood to show relationship, excluded); Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 27, § 49 (in actions against liquor-seller for damage to family, general reputation is admissible to show plaintiff's relationship to the intoxicated person); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 7050 (damage to family by liquor; like the Maine statute); N. Y. 1811, Jackson v. Cooley, 8 Johns. 130 (cited ante, § 1487); 1919, Ashe v. Pettiford, 177 N. C. 132, 98 S. E. 304 (claim by Joe A. by collateral descent from Martha P. as being the claimant's sister; "general reputation in the community" as to the relation between J. A. and M. P., excluded); S. Dak. Rev. C. 1919, § 10309 (in actions for injury to family by sale of intoxicating liquor, "the general reputation of the relation of husband or wife or parent and child" shall be 'prima facie' evidence); Tenn. 1834, Ewell v. State, 6 Yerg. Tenn. 364, 372 (admitted).

[5] Citations supra, note 2.

[6] Federal: 1831, Scott v. Ratliffe, 5 Pet. 81, 86, semble (reputation admitted); Ill. 1869, Ringhouse v. Keener, 49 Ill. 471 (admissible; see quotation supra); Ind. T. 1907, Driggers v. U. S., 7 Ind. Terr. 752, 104 S. W. 1166 (death of a former witness; not decided); Ia. 1860, Carnes v. Crandall, 10 Ia. 377 (reputation among C.'s friends and whether slave or free, whether white, negro, or Indian),[7] or of sundry facts of family history.[8]

§ 1606. Same: "Notorious" Recognition of Illegitimate Child by Parent. The Anglo-Norman traditions, which harshly fixed forever as unchangeable the illegitimate status of a child not born in wedlock, have been gradually abandoned in modern times.[1] But the transition has been incomplete and unsystematic, and several novel and unrelated expedients have found a place in our law. One of these is the statutory rule of several States which gives a lawful status (of some sort) to the "natural" child if there has been a "recognition" of him by the father, but for this purpose requires that this recognition be "general and notorious"; sometimes a writing is required in the alternative. Here the act of recognition, whether by conduct or by writing, is not merely evidential conduct (as in § 269, ante), or declarations (ante, § 1492), but is an act of substantive law, provable as a 'factum probandum.' The notoriousness is thus a part of the act; and reputation in the communneighbors in California that he had died there in 1851, excluded; no authority cited); Mass. 1885, Blaisdell v. Bickum, 139 Mass. 250, 1 N. E. 281 (reputation of death of Q. before marriage with E. Q., excluded; no authority cited); 1902, Welch v. R. Co., 182 Mass. 84, 64 N. E. 695 (general repute, brought home to the family, held admissible to prove death); N. J. 1917, Schaffer v. Krestovnikov, 88 N. J. Eq. 192, 102 Atl. 246 (neighborhood reputation that he died in the service of Russia in 1904–5, admitted); 1918, Schaffer v. Krestovnikow, 89 N. J. Eq. 549, 105 Atl. 239 (reputation admitted, affirming the above ruling on appeal); N. Y. 1826, Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. 319 (time of death; admissible); 1898, Arents v. R. Co., 156 N. Y. 1, 50 N. E. 422 (whether M. was the only surviving child of C. in 1849; reputation of the neighborhood received to show the death of certain other children); Tenn. 1834, Flowers v. Haralson, 6 Yerg. 496 (admissible; see quotation supra); Tex. 1851, Primm v. Stewart, 7 Tex. 178 (reputation that W. had died some years before, admitted); 1911, Wiess v. Hall,— Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 384 (repute twenty years ago that a married woman had had a child born dead, admitted; sensible opinion by Reese, J.); Vt. 1890, Hurlburt v. Hurlburt, 63 Vt. 667, 22 Atl. 850, semble (reputation in Dakota as to death of an emigrant, excluded); 1896, Hurlburt's Estate, 68 Vt. 366, 35 Atl. 77 (reputation among friends and acquaintances, in the place of residence, as to death, excluded).

[7] Ala. 1904, Locklayer v. Locklayer, 139 Ala. 354, 35 So. 1008 (inheritance of an alleged negro); Ga. 1856, Bryan v. Walton, 20 Ga. 480 (freedom of a person of color); Ind. 1864, Nave v. Williams, 22 Ind. 368 (mixed blood; admissible); Ky. 1839, Chancellor v. Milly, 9 Dana 24 (colored slave ancestry; admissible); N. C. 1906, Gilliland v. Board, 141 N. C. 482, 54 S. E. 413 (reputation as to the white race of an ancestor, admitted; here the reputation was shown by the fact that he had always been allowed to vote at public elections without objection); Okl. 1912, Cole v. District Board, 32 Okl. 692, 123 Pac. 426 (reputation of negro race, admissible, on an issue of school rights); Tenn. 1827, Vaughan v. Phebe, Mart. & Y. 19 (admissible, to show free or slave ancestry; leading opinion, by Crabb, J.); Va. 1806, Hudgins v. Wrights, 1 Hen. & M. 134, 137, 142 (Indian ancestry; admissible); 1808, Pegram v. Isabell, 2 id. 205 (similar).

[8] 1851, State v. Seawell, 18 Ala. 616 (reputation to prove a party out of the State, excluded); 1858, Griffin v. Wall, 32 Ala. 149, 160 (reputation to prove a voter's residence, inadmissible); 1897, Mitchell v. State, 114 Ala. 1, 22 So. 71 (the absence of a witness from the jurisdiction, excluded); La. Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 193–195 (reputation admissible; quoted post, § 1606); 1898, Albion v. Maple Lake, 71 Minn. 503, 74 N. W. 282 (reputation as to the residence of a pauper, excluded).

§ 1606. [1] See the Report of the Committee on Uniform Illegitimacy Act (Ernst Freund, Chairman), in the Proceedings of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, 1920 and 1921.

On the Continent the law has arrived at a state of systematic provision for the situation. For the Continental law and the various traditional controversies arising in it, see: Bonnier, Traité des preuves, ed. Larnaude, 5th ed., 1883, §§ 203–223, 547–571; Brissaud, Hist. of French Private Law (1912; Continental Legal History Series, vol. III), §§ 169–176, 573; Baudry-Lacantinerie et al., Traité théorique et pratique de droit civil, 2d ed., 1902, vol. III, "Des personnes", § 671, "Recherche de la paternité."

ity would therefore seem here to be a substantive fact, not merely (as in §§ 1492, 1605, ante) an evidential one. The reputation is of course admissible under such statutes.[2]

In Quebec and Louisiana, inheriting the French Civil Code (which itself inherited a long history on the subject of filiation of illegitimate and natural children), and in the Philippines and Porto Rico, which follow the Spanish Code, the act of "recognition" by the father, and its relation to other methods of filiation and the allowable ways of evidencing them, involve a special history and group of principles; and the precedents in those jurisdictions can hardly be of service elsewhere.[3]

[2] California: 1896, Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 584 (authorities reviewed); Iowa: 1899, Watson v. Richardson, 110 Ia. 673, 80 N. W. 407 (cited more fully ante, § 1605); 1901, Alston v. Alston, 114 Ia. 29, 86 N. W. 55; 1914, Robertson v. Campbell, 168 Ia. 47, 147 N. W. 301 (illegitimate child's claim to an inheritance; the neighborhood repute as to paternity, admitted); 1916, Luce v. Tompkins, 177 Ia. 168, 158 N. W. 535 (partition; on the issue of plaintiff's being a legitimate son, "general and notorious" recognition by the putative father suffices); 1918, McKellar v. Harkins, 183 Ia. 1030, 166 N. W. 1061 (descent of lands; under Code § 3385, providing that illegitimates inherit if the father's recognition has been "general and notorious, or else in writing", a judgment entry of bastardy, followed by the defendant's signature of assent to an adoption by third persons, was held on the facts to be a recognition in writing); Kansas: 1916, Record v. Ellis, 97 Kan. 762, 156 Pac. 711 (inheritance; Gen. St. 1905, § 2956, requiring "general and notorious" recognition, applied); 1921, Muir v. Campbell, 110 Kan. 110, 202 Pac. 844 (inheritance; under Gen. St. 1915, § 3845, providing that the recognition of a natural child must be either general and notorious or in writing, an entry on the docket of a justice of the peace in a bastardy proceeding is sufficient); 1922, Weber v. Gardner, 110 Kan. 295, 203 Pac. 705 (paternal recognition of an illegitimate son, held general and notorious under G. S. 1915, § 3845); Michigan: 1919, Kotzke v. Kotzke's Estate, 205 Mich. 184, 171 N. W. 442 (the father's "recognition" must be "general", under Comp. L. 1871, § 4312, in effect at the time here in issue; though by St. 1881, Comp. L. 1915, § 11798, his written acknowledgment is necessary); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 1228 (illegitimate child may be an heir if a person has in writing "acknowledged himself to be the father of such child").

Compare the citations ante, § 269 (parents' conduct as evidence of legitimacy), ante, § 1492 (family repute as evidence of legitimacy), and post, § 2527 (filiation of illegitimates).

[3] For the proceeding to compel recognition of an illegitimate child, see post, § 2527; for the admissibility of the record of civil status (marriage, birth, death), see ante, § 1336, post, § 1644); Quebec: 1917, Canada Cement Co. v. Hanchuk, 37 D. L. L. 422, Que. (death of employee; whether certain natural children had been recognized by him, held to depend on the same rules for recognition by writing, etc., as in the case of alimony, viz. Civ. C. §§ 240, 241; elaborate examination of the authorities on proof of filiation, per Archambeault, C. J.);
Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 193, 194 (filiation of legitimate children, provable by the register; if the register is lost or none existed, "it suffices for the child to show that he has been constantly considered as a child born during marriage"); § 195 (this "being considered" includes, "that the individual has always been called by the surname of the father from whom he pretends to be born", that the father treated him as his child, "that he has been constantly acknowledged as such in the world; that he has been acknowledged as such within the family"); §§ 203, 922 (rules for filiation of illegitimates); 1921, Minor v. Young, 148 La. 610, 87 So. 472, 89 So. 757 (inheritance; parental acknowledgment of an illegitimate or natural child, under Civ. C. §§ 203, 922, held the exclusive method, per Dawkins, J., for the majority; Provosty, J., diss.; the opinions elaborately examine the theory); 1917, Pizzicati's Succession, 141 La. 645, 75 So. 498 (whether adoption by notorial act is valid; theories of adoption discussed). 1918, Lacosst's Succession, 142 La. 673, 77 So. 497 (paternal acknowledgment, and other modes of proof, considered); 1922, Taylor v. Allen, 151 La. —, 91 So. 635.
Philippine Islands: Civ. C. §§ 129–136 (rules for giving effect to parental recognition); 1904, Mijares v. Nery, 3 P. I. 195 (Civ. C. §§ 129, 131 applied); 1904, Llorente v. Rodriguez, 3 P. I. 697 (Civ. C. §§ 129, 131, held not applicable to a prior recognition); 1905, Mendosa v. Ibañez, 4 P. I. 666 (letters held insufficient as recognition); 1905, Benedicto v. De La Rama, 4 P. I. 746 (similar); 1905, Buenaventura v. Urbano, 5 P. I. 1; 1907,

D. MORAL CHARACTER (PARTY OR WITNESS)

§ 1608. Reputation and Actual Character, distinguished. That actual character is distinct from reputation of it, and the latter is merely evidence to prove the former, ought to be a truism. But the common use of the word "character" in the senses both of actual disposition and of reputation has led to occasional obscurity of language in judicial opinions, and has thus tended to remove the emphasis from the distinction. When we argue that a defendant probably did not commit a forgery because his disposition was honest (ante, § 55), or that a witness probably is speaking falsely because he is mendacious in disposition (ante, § 922), we are arguing from his actual moral constitution, which in its turn becomes a fact to be proved; and when we then resort to reputation or individual opinion or particular conduct, we are resorting to it as evidence from which we may make some inference to the nature of the actual trait. The distinction has already been referred to elsewhere (ante, §§ 52, 920); but the following passages remind us of its importance:

Siguiong v. Siguiong, 8 P. I. 5 (subsequent marriage is not a recognition); 1907, Capistrano v. Fabella, 8 P. I. 135 (certificate of baptism, etc., is not a recognition); 1908, Cosio v. Pili, 10 P. I. 72 (recognition need not be in express terms); 1909, Dizon v. Ullman, 13 P. I. 88; 1909, Conde v. Abayor, 13 P. I. 249; 1912, Adriano v. De Jesus, 23 P. I. 350 (baptismal certificate); 1915, Enriquez' and Reyes' Estate, 29 P. I. 167 (Civ. C. §§ 129–136, applied); 1915, Dalistan v. Armas, 32 P. I. 648 (Civ. C. § 135 applied); 1916, Requejo v. Rabalo, 33 P. I. 14 (Civ. C. §§ 119–131 applied);

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 3263–3267 (rules for giving effect to parental recognition of paternity or of maternity); 1909, Gual v. Bonafoux, 15 P. R. 545, 551 (applying old Civ. C. § 137, and Rev. Civ. C. §§ 198, 199); 1916, Charres v. Arroyo, 16 P. R. 777; 1911, Diaz' Estate v. Diaz' Estate, 17 P. R. 53 ("The way to prove the filiation of children is by proof of the marriage of the parents and the birth of their children"; here a will's recitals were held inadequate); 1911, Fajardo v. Tio, 17 P. R. 230; 1911, Lucero v. Vilá's Heirs, 17 P. R. 141, 153; 1911, Calaf v. Calaf, 17 P. R. 185, 193 (when acknowledgment is denied, the only evidence is "a public and authentic document showing such acknowledgment, or a final judgment ordering that such acknowledgment be made"); 1912, García v. Garzot, 18 P. R. 835, 845 (effect of an acknowledgment made in ecclesiastical proceedings under the former Spanish system); 1913, Figueroa v. Diaz, 19 P. R. 683, 691 (Calaf v. Calaf followed); 1913, Villamil v. Romano, 19 P. R. 832 (effect of a certain written acknowledgment, considered); 1913, Jesús v. Villamil's Succession, 19 P. R. 850; 1913, González v. López, 19 P. R. 1056 (acknowledgment in a baptismal certificate, not sufficient, on a collateral issue of heirship; note that in a case under old Civ. C. § 137, Rev. Civ. C. § 189, the nature of an acknowledgment sufficient in itself to fix status for the purposes of any issue of litigation is more exacting than the evidential conduct sufficient to lead to a judicial decree of status in an action brought expressly to establish filiation; see the cases on the latter action, post, § 2527); 1916, Iturrino v. Iturrino, 24 P. R. 439 (like García v. Garzot, supra); 1914, Méndez v. Martínez, 21 P. R. 238, 252; 1915, Servera v. Otero, 22 P. R. 341 (an acknowledgment made in a will is effective since St. 1911, amending Rev. Civ. C. § 193); 1916, López v. López, 23 P. R. 766 (Calaf v. Calaf followed); 1917, Dupont v. Aybar, 25 P. R. 290; 1919, Román v. Agosto, 27 P. R. 529 (mandamus for a copy of a will acknowledging a natural child; held that such an acknowledgment is effective under Civ. C. §§ 727, 731, even before the testator's death; Wolf, J., dissenting in an able opinion).

Canal Zone: 1921, Panama R. Co. v. Castilla, 5th C. C. A., 272 Fed. 656 (death of a minor natural son of the plaintiff woman, who had never acknowledged the child in a public instrument or testamentary act; the Panama Civil Code, in force in the Canal Zone, contained provisions in Arts. 54–57 similar to those of P. I. Civ. C. §§ 129–136; but Panama St. 1890 also provided that acknowledgment by a mother who is a single woman is presumed, "as if they had been recognized by a public instrument"; held that this law of 1890 was not in force in the Canal Zone).

1851, CALDWELL, J., in Bucklin v. State, 20 Oh. 23: "The term 'character', when more strictly applied, refers to the inherent qualities of the person, rather than to any opinion that may be formed or expressed of him by others; the term 'reputation' applies to the opinion which others may have formed and expressed of his character; so that, as has been remarked in some of the books, when treating on this subject, a man's character may really be good when his reputation is bad, and, on the other hand, his reputation may be good when his character is bad. But, as we have before intimated, the terms when used in connection with this subject are generally used in contradiction to this distinction, — the term 'general character' being used in legal signification, as it is frequently used in common parlance, to express the opinion that has generally obtained of a person's character, the estimate the community generally has formed of it. When you ask a witness, then, in this sense of the term, what a man's general character is for truth and veracity, he is called on to answer as to what opinion is generally entertained and expressed of him by those acquainted with him."

1885, DURFEE, C. J., in State v. Wilson, 15 R. I. 180, 1 Atl. 415: "Doubtless there is a distinction observed by careful writers between 'character' and 'reputation'; 'character' (where the distinction is observed) signifying the reality, and 'reputation' merely what is reported, or understood from report, to be the reality, about a person or thing."

1895, JORDAN, J., in Wright v. Crawfordsville, 142 Ind. 636, 642, 42 N. E. 227 (admitting specific acts to prove character); "Counsel seemingly confuse real character — that which is actually impressed by nature, traits, or habits upon a person — with what is generally termed reputed character. Reputation may be evidence of character, but it is not character itself. That which a person really is must be distinguished from that which he is reputed to be."

1885, Mr. Richard Grant White, Words and their Uses, 9th ed., p. 99: "Character, Reputation. These words are not synonymes; but they are too generally used as such. . . . We know very little of each other's characters; but reputations are well known to us (except our own). Character, meaning first a figure or letter engraved, means secondarily those traits which are peculiar to any person or thing. Reputation is, or should be, the result of character. Character is the sum of individual qualities; reputation, what is generally thought of character, so far as it is known. Character is like an inward and spiritual grace, of which reputation is, or should be, the outward and visible sign. . . . Sheridan errs in making Sir Peter Teazle say, as he leaves Lady Sneerwell's scandalous coterie, 'I leave my character behind me.' His reputation he left; but his character was always in his own keeping."

§ 1609. Reputation not a "Fact", but Hearsay Testimony. It follows, since reputation is looked to merely as evidence of the character reputed, that the reputation is hearsay testimony; for it is the expression of an opinion on the part of the community, used testimonially, but uttered out of Court and not under cross-examination (ante, §§ 1361, 1362). It is therefore receivable, if at all, as an exception to the Hearsay rule.

It has been said, in an opinion often quoted,[1] that reputation is admissible as a "fact", i.e. as circumstantial evidence; but this is the merest error.

§ 1609. [1] 1877, Lord, J., in Walker v. Moors, 122 Mass. 504 (dealing with a witness to reputation for mercantile credit; "Was his testimony the statement of a fact, or was it simply what is ordinarily designated as hearsay evidence? The distinction between reputation and hearsay evidence is sometimes a difficult practical question. . . . General reputation is a fact. The mere declaration of one or many is hearsay. . . . The question is a simple one of fact, Is there a general reputation?"). So also Pollock, C. B., in R. v. Rowton, 1865, Leigh & C. 526 ("What you pick up of a man's reputation in the neighborhood in twenty years is not hearsay").

Reputation is testimonial evidence, i.e. the assertion of a number of persons used as the basis of an inference to the truth of the fact asserted (ante, § 25); and the true nature of this use cannot be obscured by calling it a "fact":

1815, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. 344 (rejecting neighborhood-reputation-evidence as to the character of an alleged disorderly house): "It is agreed on all hands that this is not one of those cases in which hearsay evidence can be admitted. But it is contended that the complaint of the neighborhood is a matter of fact, and therefore, when the witness proves the complaint, she only proves a fact within her own knowledge. I am not satisfied with this ingenious distinction, which gets round and avoids an important rule of evidence; in the same way all hearsay evidence may be introduced, for it is always a fact that the witness hears the other person speak, and it is a fact that the words spoken by that person were heard by the witness."

It is true that reputation is not always and necessarily used as hearsay, i.e. as a testimonial assertion. It may be a part of the very issue, as where the reputation of a plaintiff is in issue to determine the damages in an action for defamation, or where the reputation of a house of ill-fame is in issue; in these and similar cases (ante, § 70–79), the reputation is the fact to be proved, irrespective of the actual character reputed. Moreover, reputation may be evidential circumstantially, as where it is offered to show probable knowledge by a creditor of a debtor's insolvency or to show probable belief by a defendant in the violent character of the deceased on a trial for homicide; in these and similar cases (ante, §§ 245–261), the reputation is used merely as a circumstance from which it may be inferred that some other person obtained a knowledge or a belief. But when reputation is offered as a ground for inferring that the character affirmed by the reputation to exist does actually exist, then what we are asked to receive is testimonial evidence, precisely as it would be (by general concession) if the offer was to prove the extra-judicial belief and utterance of John Doe to the same character. Whenever the offer is to prove what Doe, or Doe and Roe, or Doe and Roe and five hundred others, think and say of J. S.'s character, as a mode of proving J. S.'s actual character, the evidence is hearsay, and must come in, if at all under a hearsay exception.

§ 1610. General Theory of Use of Reputation as Evidence of Character. There was perhaps a time when reputation alone was not regarded as admissible to prove character. There certainly was a time when the personal knowledge and opinion of acquaintances was regarded as a superior source of evidence.[1] But at any rate, for more than two centuries, it has been settled that reputation in the community is a proper source of evidence.

(1) That there is a necessity for this kind of evidence, according to a fundamental principle of Hearsay exceptions (ante, § 1421), appears not merely from the fortuitous circumstance that the personal opinion of intimates is by the present law of most jurisdictions improperly held to be inadmissible (post, §§ 1983, 1985); but also from the settled rule that particular acts, as evidence of character, are not to be resorted to at all against a defendant in a criminal case (ante, § 194) nor against a party in most civil issues (ante, §§ 199–212), and not against a witness except by cross-examination or by judgment of conviction for crime (ante, §§ 977–981); and furthermore from the probable scantiness and indefiniteness of evidence of the latter sort as compared with the fulness and solidity of material represented in a reputation based on a person's constant and repeated exhibition of his character in conduct as daily observed by the community. The last reason has been well set forth in the following passage:

§ 1610. [1] Post, § 1981.

1823, GIBSON, J., in Brindle v. M'Ilvaine, 10 S. & R. 282, 285 (excluding reputation to prove intemperance): "That kind of depravity which renders a man unworthy of belief, and which is proved, not by particular instances, but by general reputation, is of a moral kind, and is evinced by a variety of acts and a long course of general bad conduct, the particular instances of which (if they were not inadmissible for other reasons) could not in the nature of things be expected to be treasured up in the recollection of witnesses and spoken of in detail to enable a jury to draw their own conclusions; and therefore an inference of moral destitution drawn from this source by the public at large, which is nothing else than general reputation, is not secondary but the best evidence of the fact of which the nature of the case is susceptible. But the causes of physical depravity of the mental faculties are susceptible of a particular description by those who have witnessed them, and are to be proved by the ordinary evidence of any other fact."

(2) That there is, in the community's reputation, a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness, fulfilling another fundamental requisite for Hearsay exceptions (ante, § 1422), is found in the same considerations already mentioned as justifying the use of reputation on matters of general interest (ante, § 1583). Those considerations are that, where the subject matter is one in which all or many of the members of the community have an opportunity of acquiring information and have also an interest or motive to obtain such knowledge, there is likely to be such a constant, active, and intelligent discussion and comparison that the resulting opinion, if a definite opinion does result, is likely to be fairly trustworthy. That these considerations apply to a reputation of personal character cannot be doubted. No fact is more open to general observation, no fact is of more legitimate interest to the community as an object of knowledge, and consequently no fact is more the theme of general discussion, criticism, and comparison of views, than moral character as exhibited in conduct. The community relies upon this reputation as evidence in social, commercial, and professional relations, and the law of Evidence relies upon it. Erskine's description of reputation is celebrated:

1794, Mr. Thomas Erskine, arguing, in Thomas Hardy's Trial, 24 How. St. Tr. 1079: "You cannot, when asking to character, ask, What has A. B. C. told you about this man's character? No; but, what is the general opinion concerning him? Character is the slow-spreading influence of opinion, arising from the deportment of a man in society. As a man's deportment, good or bad, necessarily produces one circle without another, and so extends itself till it unites in one general opinion, that general opinion is allowed to be given in evidence."

No doubt reputation is often misleading; but so are all sources of evidence. No doubt actual character is not ascertainable by reputation beyond a few broad traits grossly marked, clearly exhibited, and easily observed; but the law does not attempt to use it beyond this point. No doubt actual character does not always merit the estimation which reputation puts upon it; but, nevertheless, there is a certain inevitableness in the revelation of character by conduct, and a certain sureness of apprehension even in the rough popular judgment. Confucius said[2] in a warning to his disciples: "How can a man conceal his character! How can a man conceal his character!" Emerson expounded it as a cardinal truth of life:[3] "A man passes for what he is worth. Very idle is all curiosity concerning other people's estimate of us; and all fear of remaining unknown is not less so. The world is full of judgment-days, and into every assembly that a man enters, in every action he attempts, he is gauged and stamped. 'What has he done?' is a divine question which searches men, and transpierces every false reputation. A fop may sit in any chair of the world, nor be distinguished for his hour from Homer and Washington; but there need never be any doubt concerning the respective ability of human beings. Human character evermore publishes itself." That was a keen answer of Murray, Lord Mansfield, when Mr. Cowper remarked, arguing about reputation-evidence:[4] "I have heard it said, as a common profligate observation of Colonel Charteris, that he would give twenty thousand pounds to be thought an honest man, — though he would not give twenty farthings to be one"; upon which the great judge commented: "His money could not have been worse laid out; for he would have lost his good character in half an hour afterwards."

(3) A third element, to be regarded in all Hearsay exceptions because required of all testimonial evidence (ante, § 1424), is that principle which excludes testimony not founded on adequate sources of knowledge. This requirement, though an independent one, is satisfied whenever the foregoing one is satisfied; but its bearing here is particularly seen in the rule limiting reputation to that community in which the person resides (post, § 1615).

§ 1611. Reputation, distinguished from Rumors. Reputation, being the community's opinion, is distinguished from mere rumor in two respects. On the one hand, reputation implies the definite and final formation of opinion by the community; while rumor implies merely a report that is not yet finally credited. On the other hand, a rumor is usually thought of as signifying a particular act or occurrence, while a reputation is predicated upon a general trait of character; a man's reputation, for example, may declare him honest, and yet to-day a rumor may have circulated that this reputed honest man has defaulted yesterday in his accounts.

The distinction in the latter aspect has already been sufficiently illustrated (in the passages quoted ante, § 74). The distinction in the former aspect is the more important one to be emphasized in the present connection:

[2] Analects, book II. [3] Essay on Spiritual Laws. [4] 1783, Bembridge's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 135.

1852, BELL, J., in Dame v. Kenney, 25 N. H. 320: "People usually form their opinions of the characters of men from what they know of them personally and from what is said of them by those who have the means of knowledge and whose opinions are entitled to confidence. . . . [Mere rumors and reports], if numerous and repeated, too often gain credit, and the general character may, in consequence of that credit, be seriously affected. The reports themselves prove nothing as to general character. They may be entirely discredited and disbelieved where the party assailed is known. The point of inquiry in relation to general character is not whether a man has been attacked; but, how does he stand now, when rumor has spent its force upon him?"[1]

§ 1612. Reputation must be General; Divided Reputation. It is commonly said that the reputation must be "general"; that is, the community as a whole must be agreed in their opinion, in order that it may be regarded as a reputation. If the estimates vary, and public opinion has not reached the stage of definite harmony, the opinion cannot yet be treated as sufficiently trustworthy. On the other hand, it must be impossible to exact unanimity; for there are always dissenters. To define precisely that quality of public opinion thus commonly described as "general" is therefore a difficult thing.

The requirements of modern Courts are apparently more strict than in the earlier practice; and there is something to be said for the liberality of the latter:

1780, Maskall's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 684: "Do you know anything more of him [the witness Richard Ingram]?" "I have been in several companies where he has been mentioned, and wherever his name was mentioned, he was generally known by the appellation of Lying Dick." To another witness: "What character does he bear?" "There is a diversity of opinions respecting him; some give him a good character, and some a very indifferent one." "Which is the most prevalent of the two?" "I hear that he is a most notorious liar." "Is the opinion more general of his being a liar than otherwise?" "I have heard them that know him a good deal say so."

1884, CAMPBELL, C. J., in Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 566: "General reputation consists in what is generally thought of one by those among whom he resides and with whom he is chiefly conversant. 'Common opinion'; 'that in which there is general concurrence'; 'the prevailing opinion in that circle where one's character is best known'; 'what is generally said by those among whom he associates and by whom he is known'; 'common report among those who have the best opportunity of judging of his habits and integrity'; 'common reputation among his neighbors and acquaintances', — are so many forms of expression by which an effort has been made to define wherein consists general reputation."

1895, MCSHERRY, J., in Jackson v. Jackson, 82 Md. 17, 33 Atl. 317: "A reputation, to be a provable reputation at all, must be a general reputation. It may be either one of two opposites; for instance, either good or bad. It cannot be intermediate, — that is, partly one, and partly the other; for that would not be general, and there would then be no general reputation either way. If it is generally good or generally bad, or, as applicable to the case at bar, if a man and woman are generally reputed to be married, or if the converse is generally asserted, a general reputation, one way or the other, exists; and of a general reputation, and none other, the law allows evidence to be given. But, if it be not general, then, obviously, it does not exist as a fact, and evidence cannot be received to show a partial, limited, or qualified repute. The existence of a diversity of opinion is one of the means by which a witness may know there is a general reputation, but this means of knowledge, apart from the fact that there is or is not a general reputation, and as a totally independent circumstance, is not the thing to be proved."

§ 1611. [1] Accord: 1879, Haley v. State, 63 Ala. 86; 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 653 ("rumor and belief", excluded); 1877, State v. Laxton, 76 N. C. 216 (excluded; here offered by the prosecution in rebuttal of a defendant's good character); 1903, Harrison v. Garrett, 132 N. C. 172, 43 S. E. 594; 1846, Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 101.

In applying this principle, a great variety of forms of question are to be found, sanctioned or disapproved, all of them involving efforts, more or less successful, to carry out more definitely the fundamental and unquestioned notion that the reputation must be "general."[1] There is on this subject often an attempt at nicety of phrase which amounts in effect to mere quibbling, because the witness ordinarily will not appreciate the discriminations; such requirements of definition should be avoided as unprofitable.[2]

§ 1612. [1] Federal: 1851, Wayne, J., in Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 555 (not merely what some say, but the general saying); Alabama: 1846, Sorrelle v. Craig, 9 Ala. 539 ("what is generally said of the person by those among whom he dwells or with whom he is chiefly conversant"); 1848, Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 720, 722 ("it is not necessary to know all his neighbors"); 1885, Jackson v. State, 78 Ala. 473 (reputation "in the upper portion of the neighborhood", admitted); 1913, Watson v. State, 181 Ala. 53, 61 So. 334 ("how he stood with the law-abiding people", excluded); Colorado: 1903, Vickers v. People, 31 Colo. 491, 73 Pac. 845 (testimony excluded, where the witness, a non-resident, had talked with only three persons); Illinois: 1845, Regnier v. Cabot, 7 Ill. 40 (the witness knew of the opinion of three persons only; excluded); 1859, Crabtree v. Kile, 21 Ill. 183 (what is "generally said"); 1861, Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. 233, 238 (what "a majority of his neighbors said"); Indiana: 1864, Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231, 238 (character founded on "report of his neighbors", excluded, as not involving the "general opinion of the neighborhood"); 1879, Meyncke v. State, 68 Ind. 404 ("the word 'general' is an essential requisite in an impeaching question of this kind"); Kansas: 1891, Coates v. Sulan, 46 Kan. 341, 26 Pac. 720 (a question as to the "reputation in this community", not inadmissible if properly understood by the witness as involving generalness, though the word "general" was not used); Maryland: 1869, Vernon v. Tucker, 30 Md. 456, 462 (what "several" of the neighbors said, excluded); Michigan: 1856, Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198 ("what people acquainted with him say", held improper; "what is generally said" is proper); 1878, Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 271 (apparently approving the preceding case); 1892, Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119, 122, 52 N. W. 1119 (numerously signed indorsement of petition for office, excluded); Mississippi: 1859, Powers v. Presgroves, 38 Miss. 227, 241 ("what is generally said"); 1885, French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386, 392, 394 (the testimony is "usually and necessarily indefinite" as to the number of persons; the witness must be able "as a matter of conscience" to give the "common or general opinion"); Nebraska: 1877, Matthewson v. Burr, 6 Nebr. 312, 316 (not "what two or three persons only may think or say", but "the general estimation in which he is held by his neighbors and acquaintances"); New Hampshire: 1851, Hersom v. Henderson, 23 N. H. 498, 506 ("Do the neighbors call him Lying Josh?", excluded); North Carolina: 1843, State v. O'Neale, 3 Ired. 88 (inquiries as to "what a majority of neighbors said", and "in what estimation E. was held", excluded; the estimation must be general); 1843, State v. Parks, 3 Ired. 296 (the witness "had heard a great deal said about his character"; "did not know whether a majority of those he heard speak of it spoke well or ill of it"; "had heard a great many respectable men speak well of L's character, and a great many, equally respectable, speak ill of it"; excluded, as not amounting to a general reputation); Ohio: 1853, French v. Millard, 2 Oh. St. 44 ("reputation" means "general reputation"); South Carolina: 1892, State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 539, 15 S. E. 602 (the reputation must be "general", the number of persons included depending largely on circumstances, in the trial Court's discretion); Utah: 1898, State v. Marks, 16 Utah 204, 51 Pac. 1089 ("the word 'general' should always be used", and directed to the reputation in the community of residence).

It follows that, on direct examination, the witness cannot be asked to name individuals who have spoken: 1872, State v. Perkins, 66 N. C. 127. For allowing this on cross-examination, see ante, §§ 988, 1111.

[2] 1859, Bell, J., in Boon v. Wethered, 23 Tex. 675, 681; 1880, Stone, J., in Sullivan v. State, 66 Ala. 50 ("The question of general character or reputation is one of difficult solution to a majority of witnesses. Counsel should be allowed to vary the phraseology, or sever the constituent parts or members of the sentence, so as to place the subject within the comprehension of the witness").

§ 1613. Same: Majority need not have Spoken. The reputation, as just indicated, must involve the general opinion, not a partial or fragmentary one. Nevertheless that opinion may exist as a general one, entertained by the community as a whole, although no utterance by that general mass of its members, or even by a majority of them, has been made. In other words, a general reputation may by inference be believed to exist, although the utterances actually heard by the witness, and used as the basis of his inference, may be and usually are those of a representative minority only:[1]

1884, CAMPBELL, C. J., in Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 567: "It was not necessary for him [the witness] to have heard a majority, or any given proportion, of that undefined and undefinable circle, designated as the 'neighborhood' or 'community', say what they thought of G. . . . While a witness should be cautious on this subject, and not be encouraged to testify that he is acquainted with the general reputation of another unless he knows the generally prevalent sentiment of those most conversant with him, he is not to be repressed by telling him he must know what a majority say of him about whom he is called to testify. . . . He may have heard a sufficient number express themselves to be willing to say he knows the general concurrence in one view of a number great enough to be regarded as a fair index to the community. One may know the general reputation of Sargent S. Prentiss as a matchless orator, although he has heard a small proportion of those who felt the thrill of his unrivalled eloquence say what they thought of him."

§ 1614. Same: Never Hearing anything against the Person. Upon the same principle, the absence of utterances unfavorable to a person is a sufficient basis for predicating that the general opinion of him is favorable. A witness to good reputation may therefore testify by saying that he has never heard anything said against the person:[1]

§ 1613. [1] Accord: 1878, Robinson v. State, 16 Fla. 835 (not necessary that a majority of the neighbors should have spoken on the subject); 1920, Girch v. State, 104 Nebr. 503, 177 N. W. 798; 1902, Cunningham v. Underwood, 53 C. C. A. 99, 116 Fed. 803, 810.

Yet the number of occasions may indicate in a given case that the witness has not sufficient knowledge (ante, § 692) of the community's opinion: 1883, Com. v. Rogers, 136 Mass. 158 (hearing the character spoken of on two occasions; excluded).

§ 1614. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1796, Leary's Trial, 26 How. St. Tr. 337, 338; UNITED STATES: Federal: 1902, Foerster v. U. S., 54 C. C. A. 210, 116 Fed. 860; Alabama: 1848, Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 720, 722; 1853, Dave v. State, 22 Ala. 23, 37 (disapproving an instruction asking for a knowledge of what "the majority of the neighbors" said or thought; because a majority may not have expressed themselves); 1876, Childs v. State, 53 Ala. 28, 29; 1888, Hussey v. State, 87 Ala. 129, 6 So. 420 (admitting the question whether he had ever heard of the defendant having any other "difficulty" than the one in question); 1888, Moulton v. State, 88 Ala. 121, 6 So. 758; 1917, Glover v. State, 200 Ala. 384, 76 So. 300; 1921, Massey v. Pentecost, 206 Ala. 411, 90 So. 866; Arizona: 1915, Leonard v. State, 17 Ariz. 293, 151 Pac. 947; California: 1902, People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 70 Pac. 662; Columbia (Dist.): 1914, Fletcher v. U. S., 42 D. C. App. 53; Florida: 1910, Hinson v. State, 59 Fla. 20, 52 So. 194; Georgia: 1854, Taylor v. Smith, 16 Ga. 7; 1888, Flemister v. State, 81 Ga. 768, 771, 7 S. E. 642; 1892, Hodgkins v. State, 89 Ga. 761, 15 S. E. 695; 1897, Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309; Illinois: 1893, Gifford v. People, 148 Ill. 173, 35 N. E. 754; Iowa: 1882, State v. Nelson, 58 Ia. 208, 12 N. W. 253; 1895, State v. Case, 96 Ia. 264, 65 N. W. 149; 1900, State v. Keenan, 111 Ia. 286, 82 N. W. 792; Kansas: 1908, State v. McClellan, 79 Kan. 11, 98 Pac. 209; Louisiana: 1922, State v. Emory, 151 La. —, 91 So. 659; Maine: 1908, State v. Lambert, 104 Me. 394, 71 Atl. 1092; Massachusetts: 1891, Day v. Ross, 154 Mass. 14, 27 N. E. 676 (compare the citations infra); Michigan: 1878, Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 271; 1895, Conkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1, 63 N. W. 990; 1907, Smitley v. Pinch, 148 Mich. 670, 112 N. W. 686; 1919, People v. Woods, 206 Mich. 11, 172 N. W. 384 (here the witness on cross-examination stated that he had "never heard anything said about his reputation one way or another"; held error to strike

1865, R. v. Rowton, Leigh & C. 520, 535, 536; ERLE, C. J.: "The best character is that which is the least talked of." COCKBURN, C. J.: "Negative evidence, such as 'I never heard anything against the character of the man', is the most cogent evidence of a man's good character and reputation, because a man's character is not talked about till there is some fault to be found with it. It is the best evidence of his character that he is not talked about at all."

1854, BENNING, J., in Taylor v. Smith, 16 Ga. 10: "Certainly the sort of silent respect and consideration by which one is treated and received by those who know him is some index of what they think of him as a man of veracity; and indeed, if he is a person whom they think very highly of, this is about the only index. The character for truth of such a person is never discussed, questioned, 'spoken of.' To discuss, question, or even perhaps to speak of one's reputation for truth, is to admit that two opinions are possible on that point. Suppose the question were, What was the character of Washington among his neighbors for truth? Could the answer be anything but this: 'I never heard it questioned, discussed, spoken of; and yet I know it to have been the most exalted'?"

But it is obvious that this form is no sufficient indication for a reputation of bad character.[2] Moreover, so far as the answer "I never heard his character discussed" implies that the witness has not had opportunities for learning what the reputation was, he is not a qualified witness to reputation (on the principle of § 692, ante).[3] out the testimony); Minnesota: 1876, State v. Lee, 22 Minn. 407, 409 (admissible, if the witness has been "acquainted with the accused for a considerable time, under such circumstances that he would be more or less likely to hear what was said about him"); 1886, Bingham v. Bernard, 36 Minn. 114, 116, 30 N. W. 404 (an instruction referring to this as the "very best evidence", held not improper); 1921, State v. Morris, 149 Minn. 41, 182 N. W. 721; Mississippi: 1885, French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386, 393; 1905, Sinclair v. State, 87 Miss. 330, 39 So. 522; 1906, Johnson v. State, — Miss. —, 40 So. 324; Missouri: 1878, State v. Grate, 68 Mo. 26; 1893, State v. Brandenburg, 118 Mo. 181, 185, 23 S. W. 1080; Montana: 1898, State v. Shafer, 22 Mont. 17, 55 Pac. 526; 1902, Matusevitz v. Hughes, 26 Mont. 212, 66 Pac. 939, 68 Pac. 467; Nebraska: 1877, Matthewson v. Burr, 6 Nebr. 312, 317; Nevada: 1880, State v. Pearce, 15 Nev. 188, 190; New Hampshire: 1900, State v. Saidell, 70 N. H. 174, 46 Atl. 1083; New Mexico: 1921, State v. Douthitt, 26 N. M. 532, 195 Pac. 879; New York: 1839, People v. Davis, 21 Wend. 315; 1907, People v. Van Gaasbeck, 189 N. Y. 408, 82 N. E. 718 (following R. v. Rowton, supra); North Carolina: 1873, State v. Speight, 69 N. C. 72, 75, semble; Ohio: 1860, Gandolfo v. State, 11 Oh. St. 114, 117; Oklahoma: 1922, Phillips v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 203 Pac. 902 (murder; witness could only recall one person who had spoken; allowed); Pennsylvania: 1850, Morss v. Palmer, 15 Pa. 51, 57; 1898, Milliken v. Long, 188 Pa. 411, 41 Atl. 540; Texas: 1859, Boon v. Weathered, 23 Tex. 675, 681; Utah: 1916, State v. Barretta, 47 Utah 479, 155 Pac. 343; Virginia: 1880, Davis v. Franke, 33 Gratt. 425; West Virginia: 1870, Lemons v. State, 4 W. Va. 755, 760; 1907, State v. Cremeans, 62 W. Va. 134, 57 S. E. 405; Wisconsin: 1907, Spencer v. State, 132 Wis. 509, 112 N. W. 462.

Contra: 1909, Brinsfield v. Howeth, 110 Me. 520, 73 Atl. 289 (whether the reputation was "questioned or doubted" until now, held improper, except to rebut testimony to bad reputation); 1877, Walker v. Moors, 122 Mass. 502 (a confused opinion, but apparently excluding such a form of answer); 1878, Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 268; 1915, Thayer v. Thayer, 188 Mich. 261, 154 N. W. 32; 1867, Lyman v. Philadelphia, 56 Pa. 488, 502, semble.

[2] 1884, Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 563, 567, semble: 1885, French v. Sale, 63 id. 386, 393; 1921, State v. Hulbert, — Mo. —, 228 S. W. 499 (murder; police officer's testimony to defendant's repute, based not on hearing any one talk but on observing defendant as frequenting dives, held inadmissible; this illustrates again the childish absurdity of the rule of § 1983, post, excluding personal opinion based on observation).

[3] In Com. v. Lawler, 12 All. Mass. 585 (1866), the question, "Have you heard his character called in question?" was excluded merely because the witness seemed to know nothing of the reputation.

The following case erroneously applies here the rule of § 692 ante: 1921, Prevatt v. State, 82 Fla. 284, 89 So. 807 (murder; "Have you ever heard anything said against his reputation in the community?" excluded, because the witness was not asked first if he knew the reputation; though the witness had known the defendant).

§ 1615. Reputation must be in Neighborhood of Residence. That discussion and comparison which contribute to the complete estimate and lead to the general consensus (ante, § 1610) must in the beginning obtain its data from the experience of those who have had direct contact with the person in question; and it is these data of personal observation which are indispensable as a foundation of the final reputation. Such experience of observed instances is to be found only among those with whom the person ordinarily associates, — that is, among the members of the community in which he lives and acts:

1887, BRACE, J., in Waddingham v. Hulett, 92 Mo. 533, 5. S. W. 27: "[The witness to reputation] must be able to state what is generally said of the person by those among whom he dwells, or with whom he is chiefly conversant, — not by those among or with whom he may have sojourned for a brief period, and who have had neither time nor opportunity to test his conduct, acts, or declarations, or to form a correct estimate of either. A man's character is to be judged by the general tenor and current of his life, and not by a mere episode in it."

Accordingly, it is commonly said that the place or community of which the reputation is predicated must be the "neighborhood" where he has "resided."[1] The phrasings and definitions of this community and of the time of sojourn vary considerably; but nothing should turn upon precise words; and the general idea may be with sufficient correctness phrased in various forms.

§ 1615. [1] Alabama: 1921, Charley v. State, 204 Ala. 687, 87 So. 177; Florida: 1904, Alford v. State, 47 Fla. 1, 36 So. 436 (reputation in different places, admitted); Georgia: 1852, Boswell v. Blackman, 12 Ga. 593 (reputation in a county, i.e. a district larger than the mere neighborhood, admitted); Indiana: 1863, Aurora v. Cobb, 21 Ind. 510 ("friends and neighbors"); 1877, Rawles v. State, 56 Ind. 441 (limiting it definitely to the neighborhood of residence; not accepting it from "the neighborhood where she is best known"); 1879, Smock v. Pierson, 68 Ind. 405 ("neighborhood where he resides"); Iowa: 1887, Hanners v. McClelland, 74 Ia. 322, 37 N. W. 389 (in a town near by, admitted); 1904, Douglass v. Agne, 125 Ia. 67, 99 N. W. 550 (reputation in places of brief residence, admitted on the facts); Kansas: 1895, State v. Brown, 55 Kan. 766, 42 Pac. 363 (a twenty-four hours' stay in a place, held sufficient to found a reputation for unchastity; "there is no fixed time within which a reputation may be gained; . . . she may have gained considerable notoriety in twenty-four hours"); Kentucky: 1859, Henderson v. Haynes, 2 Metc. Ky. 342, 348 ("those among whom he dwells or with whom he is conversant"); 1895, Combs v. Com., 97 Ky. 24, 29 S. W. 734 (in a county where he did not reside, excluded); Louisiana: 1889, State v. Johnson, 41 La. An. 574, 7 So. 670 ("general reputation", held improper, without the addition "in the neighborhood in which he lived"); Massachusetts: 1921, Com. v. Porter, 237 Mass. 1, 129 N. E. 298 (defendant's reputation only in the town of the witness' father-in-law, the employer of defendant, held inadmissible); 1859, Powers v. Presgroves, 38 Miss. 227, 241 (the reputation must be "where he is best known", "by those among whom he dwells or with whom he is chiefly conversant", but no definite limits to that neighborhood can be set); 1885, French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386, 392, 394 (the testimony is "usually and necessarily indefinite" as to the dimensions of the neighborhood; the witness must be able to say "as a matter of conscience that he knows the common or general opinion of the community or neighborhood on the subject"); Missouri: 1874, Warlick v. Peterson, 58 Mo. 408, 416 (must be at place of residence); 1887, Waddingham v. Hulett, 92 Mo. 533, 5 S. W. 27 (reputation at a place where the person visited 3 months, etc., excluded); 1893, State v. Petit, 119 Mo. 410, 414, 24 S. W. 1014 (reputation where the deceased had lived only 8 or 9 months, held receivable in trial Court's discretion); 1899, State v. McLaughlin, 149 Mo. 19, 50 S. W. 315 (residence for 6 or 8 months, sufficient); 1900, State v. Cushenberry, 157 Mo. 168, 56 S. W. 737 (reputation where he resided only a few weeks, allowed on the facts); New Hampshire: 1860, Kelley v. Proctor, 41 N. H. 140, 146 (the question "Are you acquainted with F.'s reputation for truth in the vicinity or neighborhood where he resides?" was urged by counsel as the proper form; Sargent, J.: "No doubt the form of the question as insisted on by the defendant is substantially correct; . . . but a man's neighborhood extends for these purposes as far as he is well known, — as far as people are acquainted with him and his character"; and the question, "Are you acquainted with F.'s reputation for truth?" was held sufficient);

§ 1616. Same: Reputation in a Commercial or other Group, not the Place of Residence. In a community where the ordinary person's home is under the same roof as his store or workshop, or where the stores, workshops, offices, and homes are all collected within a small village or town group, and one's working associates are equally the neighbors of one's home, there is but one community for the purpose of forming public opinion, and there is but a single capacity in which the ordinary person can exhibit his character to the community. In other words, he can there have but one reputation. But in the conditions of life to-day, especially in large cities, a man may have one reputation in the suburb of his residence and another in the commercial or industrial circles of his place of work; or he may have one reputation in his place of technical domicile in New York and another in the region of the mines of Michigan or the steel-mills of Ohio where his investments call him for supervision for portions of time. There may be distinct circles of persons, each circle having no relation to the other, and yet each having a reputation based on constant and intimate personal observation of the man.

There is no reason why the law should not recognize this. The traditional phrase about "neighborhood" reputation was appropriate to the conditions of the time; but it should not be taken as imposing arbitrary limitations not appropriate in other times. 'Alia tempora, alii mores.' What the law, then as now, desired was a trustworthy reputation; if that is to be found among a circle of persons other than the circle of dwellers about a sleeping-place, it should be received. This modern application of the traditional principle was foreshadowed in the following exposition of one of the greatest American judges:

1855, LUMPKIN, J., in Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 221 (murder in a brothel, by a railway-conductor): "We distinctly repudiate the doctrine that a man may not have different general characters, adapted to different circumstances and localities, — that is, a character for rail-cars and a character for the brothel, a character for the church and one for the street, a character when drunk and a character when sober. . . . A schoolmaster is indicted for an assault and battery upon one of his pupils; he defends himself under his acknowledged right to inflict moderate correction; the charge puts in issue the character of the teacher for violence; and where, pray, would you go to ascertain that character, — among his fellow-men, or in the school-room? There can be but one response to this question. An officer in the army or navy is tried for cruelty to a soldier or sailor; what has his reputation in the community generally to do with the trait of character involved in the issue? It is in the barracks and on board the man-of-war that we look for what we wish to learn."

Ohio: 1862, Griffin v. State, 14 Oh. St. 63 (excluding a reputation in a town 26 miles from the defendant's home, in a community "not having the means of forming from personal acquaintance an intelligent judgment on the subject"); South Dakota: 1905, State v. Cambron, 20 S. D. 282, 105 N. W. 241 (rule applied to a house of ill-fame); Texas: 1859, Boon v. Weathered, 23 Tex. 675, 686 ("in the community where he lives or is best known"); Vermont: 1915, State v. Gomez, 89 Vt. 490, 96 Atl. 190 (assault to kill; accused's reputation at M., where he lived prior to going to W., the near-by place of the assault, where he had been for a few weeks only, admitted); Washington: 1896, State v. Cushing, 14 Wash. 527, 45 Pac. 145 (reputation in a town a few miles from the witness' home, admitted).

1903, FISH, J., in Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 117 Ga. 47, 43 S. E. 456: "As the general reputation of a man is usually formed in the neighborhood where he spends most of his time, and most frequently comes in social and business contact with his fellow-men, it is usual to limit the inquiry as to a witness' general character to his general reputation in the neighborhood where he lives; that is, where he has his home. We do not think, however, there is any hard and fast rule which requires this to be done in every possible case. The very reason for so limiting the inquiry generally may be a good reason for allowing more latitude in an exceptional case. The reason for so limiting the inquiry generally, as already indicated, is that the place in which to ascertain a man's true reputation is the place where people generally have had the best opportunities of forming a correct estimate of his character. It is obvious that this may not, in every instance, be the neighborhood where a man's home is situated. . . . We apprehend that there may be cases in which a person has established no general reputation in the immediate neighborhood of his home, but has established such a reputation elsewhere. This may arise from the fact that his home is located in one place and his daily business or work is carried on in another, in which latter place he spends nearly all of his time, and hence is well known to people generally, while he rarely comes in social or business contact with people, outside of his family circle, in the neighborhood of his home."

The judicial rulings on this class of questions show frequently a defiance of common sense. "The rules of evidence," said Lord Ellenborough,[1] "must expand according to the exigencies of society." It is to be hoped that the due expansion will here be found.[2]

§ 1616. [1] 1812, Pritt v. Fairclough, 3 Camp. 305.

[2] The cases on both sides are as follows; hardly a one of the exclusionary rulings can be defended:

ENGLAND: 1664, Turner's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 565, 607 (robbery; defendant's reputation "upon the Exchange" asked for).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1897, Williams v. U. S., 168, U. S. 382, 18 Sup. 92 (extortion by a custom-house officer; the defendant's bad reputation "in the Custom House", excluded, because it prevailed only "among the limited number of people employed in a particular public building"; this is not an enlightened ruling; the place where a reputation would be best founded is the place of daily employment); 1905, Southern Pac. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 285, 68 C. C. A. 26 (reputation of a fellow-servant engineer, among conductors and brakemen, and not including "engineers and others acquainted with him", excluded); 1909, Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Thomas, 3d C. C. A., 174 Fed. 591 (repute of a motorman among fellow-employees, admitted; "reputation in a special employment or calling is competently proved — indeed, is best proved — as it exists among those of the same calling"); Alabama: 1860, Mose v. State, 36 Ala. 211, 229 (a family of eight or ten whites and about fifty blacks; the reputation of a slave therein, admitted, because in such cases "it is a general character and often the only character which the slave has"); California: 1883, People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 163, 30 Pac. 620 ("general reputation" among the police-officers of a certain town, excluded; reputation must be "amongst his neighbors" or "amongst those who have had opportunities of ascertaining his reputation as generally estimated"); 1906, People v. Lamar, 148 Cal. 564, 83 Pac. 993 ("A man may possess different characters, or different reputations, adapted to different localities"; here, in saloons); Columbia (Dist.): 1916, Gerber v. Probey, 44 D. C. App. 392, 407 (sale of automobiles; both parties were in the trade, the plaintiff living in Detroit, Mich.; a witness living in Martinsburg, Va., who knew plaintiff's reputation among manufacturers, excluded; unsound); Delaware: 1901, Giordano v. Brandywine Granite Co., 3 Pennewill Del. 423, 52 Atl. 332 (reputation among fellow-workmen, allowed to be shown by their expressed refusal to work with him because incompetent; sensible opinion; Lore, C. J., diss.); Georgia: 1903, Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 117 Ga. 47, 43 S. E. 456 (reputation "up and down the W. A. L. Railroad, where he worked," admitted; quoted supra): Indiana: 1890, Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 27, 26 N. E. 667 (reputation in H. at a time when the witness had been seven years confined in jail at I., excluded); Louisiana: 1878, § 1617. Time of Reputation; (1) Reputation before the Time in Issue. A reputation to character must ordinarily be thought of as contemporary with the character, i.e. as predicating the person, then existing in the community, to possess a certain trait. There is thus no objection, so far as concerns the reputation-element, to using a prior reputation, — for example, of Doe, in 1895, for peaceableness as evidential in a charge of murder in 1900; for the reputation in 1895 predicates the trait as then existing, and does not pretend to predicate anything as to 1900; and the real question to be met is a question of relevancy, namely, whether the existence of the trait in 1895 is evidence of its existence in 1900. That it is evidential for that purpose is unquestionable (ante, §§ 60, 191, 927). The judicial views thereon have already been considered in dealing with Witness' Character in Impeachment (ante, § 928).

§ 1618. Same: (2) Reputation after the Time in Issue. Where the reputation offered is of a time subsequent to the time of the act in issue, the objection is of a different sort, and involves directly the trustworthiness of the reputation-evidence.

There is here no difficulty from the point of view of the relevancy of character; a man's trait or disposition a month or a year after a certain date is as evidential of his trait on that date as his nature a month or a year before that date; because character is a more or less permanent quality and we may make inferences from it either forward or backward (ante, §§ 60, 921). Assuming, then, that we could ascertain the actual disposition (for example) of Doe one year after the time of a murder charged, there is no objection to using it as a basis for inferring his disposition a year before. But can we

State v. Clifton, 30 La. An. 951 (reputation for honesty in the defendant's boarding-house, excluded); Maine: 1908, State v. Lambert, 104 Me. 394, 71 Atl. 1092 (reputation in a town where "numerous business dealings" had been had, admitted, approving the above text); Maryland: 1902, Bonaparte v. Thayer, 95 Md. 548, 52 Atl. 496 (reputation for veracity "among his business associates", excluded); Minnesota: 1920, State v. Rogers, 145 Minn. 303, 177 N. W. 358 (keeping a house of ill-fame; repute as heard from persons who "had places of business in that locality and were there every day, but lived elsewhere", admitted); New Jersey: 1904, State v. Brady, 71 N. J. L. 360, 59 Atl. 6 (rape; the accused's repute for chastity and morality "among his fellow-workmen", excluded); New York: 1876, Thomas v. People, 67 N. Y. 224 (reputation in prison, admitted; "there was a large community there, and a man can have a general character there as well as elsewhere"); 1897, Youngs v. R. Co., 154 N. Y. 764, 49 N. E. 1106, 77 Hun. 612 (reputation among fellow-employees, not received to show the fact of incompetency); 1898, Park v. R. Co., 155 N. Y. 215, 49 N. E. 674 (same); North Carolina: 1903, Lamb v. Littman, 132 N. C. 978, 44 S. E. 646 (reputation of a boss, for incompetence, among mill hands, admitted; but this was a fellow-servant case); Pennsylvania: 1877, Snyder v. Com., 85 Pa. 519, 522 (the complaints of the defendant's children about his cruelty to them, held not equivalent to a reputation); Utah: 1900, State v. Hilberg, 22 Utah 27, 61 Pac. 215 (reputation "in that precinct", excluded; unsound); Wisconsin: 1910, Moering v. Falk Co., 141 Wis. 294, 124 N. W. 402 (reputation of a fellow-servant for recklessness among those acquainted with his work, admitted).

In the following two cases, trial instructions too long to be quoted, dealing with a reputation among criminals, gamblers, etc., were passed upon: 1896, Smith v. U. S., 161 U. S. 85, 16 Sup. 483; Brown v. U. S., 164 U. S. 221, 17 Sup. 33; the rulings of the majority opinion are possibly correct in theory; but in so far as they disapproved the well-worded instructions of Mr. J. Parker, one of our greatest American trial judges, they are lamentable quibbles; compare § 21, ante.

Distinguish the use of an employee's reputation to show the employer's knowledge of incompetence (ante, § 249).

assume that it is his real disposition or trait, one year later, which is before us? Is his reputation, as obtaining one year later, then a trustworthy index to his actual character? This question may be answered differently for a party and for a witness.

(a) Where the desired character is that of a party — for example, the defendant in a criminal charge, the prosecutrix in a rape charge, or the plaintiff in a statutory action for seduction — it is obvious that after the charge has become a matter of public discussion, and partisan feeling on either side has had an opportunity to produce an effect, a false reputation is likely to be created, — a reputation based perhaps in part upon rumors about the very act charged or upon interested utterances of either party. The safeguards of trustworthiness are here lacking:

1863, BATTLE, J., in State v. Johnson, Winston 151: "Upon principle, it ought to be confined to the time when the charge was first made. A different rule will expose the defendant to the greater danger of having his character ruined or badly damaged by the arts of a popular or artful prosecutor, stimulated to activity by the hope of thus making his prosecution successful. Evidence of character is of the nature of hearsay; and the general rule in relation to that kind of testimony is that it shall not be received if the hearsay be 'post litem motam.'"

1882, HINES, J., in White v. Com., 80 Ky. 486: "The only reason for stopping the inquiry at either point [time of discovery or time of arrest] is that the probabilities of innocence derived from previous good character may not be destroyed or embarrassed by the fact that the offence under consideration has been committed. . . . After the discovery that an offence has been committed, a previous good character may be destroyed and a bad one created by discussion of the circumstances connected with the offence, as well before as after the formal charge by legal proceeding is had."

Accordingly, it is generally agreed that a reputation at any time after a charge published, or other controversy begun, is not admissible.[1] But, since the above reasoning is directed against the risk of an unduly hostile reputa-

§ 1618. [1] Federal: 1898, Spurr v. U. S., 31 C. C. A. 202, 87 Fed. 701 (defendant's reputation since the time of the act charged, excluded); Alabama: 1871, Brown v. State, 46 Ala. 175, 184 (of defendant, after the time of the alleged crime, excluded); 1896, White v. State, 111 Ala. 92, 21 So. 330 (defendant's character while in jail, excluded; the time must be at or before the crime charged); 1904, Gordon v. State, 140 Ala. 29, 36 So. 1009 (reputation of the deceased after the killing, excluded); Indiana: 1910, In re Darrow, 175 Ind. 44, 92 N. E. 369 (disbarment; offer of good character, not limited to the time before the alleged offence, excluded); Iowa: 1915, State v. Rowell, 172 Ia. 208, 154 N. W. 488 (reputation after the time of the alleged crime, excluded); Kentucky: 1882, White v. Com., 80 Ky. 485 (bad reputation of a defendant, limited to the time before discovery of the offence charged); 1909, Allen v. Com., 134 Ky. 110, 119 S. W. 795 (defendant's reputation after the act charged, excluded); 1914, Combs v. Com., 160 Ky. 386, 169 S. W. 879 (murder; "general moral reputation" of the accused, at the time of trial admitted, thus not confining it to the time prior to the killing, when it is offered to impeach him as a witness, on the principle of § 923, ante; White v. Com. and Allen v. Com. distinguished as still in force for the case of a defendant not taking the stand; the witness distinction said to have been "first announced by this Court" in Hourigan v. Com., 89 Ky. 305, 12 S. W. 550; the distinction is sound enough in theory but it leads obviously to a quibble); Michigan: 1873, People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 133, 135 (seduction; the woman's reputation 'post litem', excluded); 1913, People v. Huff, 137 Mich. 620, 139 N. W. 1033 (larceny; cross-examination of a good-character witness to matters after the date of the act charged, excluded); Missouri: 1905, State v. Day, 188 Mo. 359, 87 S. W. 465 (prosecutrix in rape under age; reputation prior to the trial but after birth of the child, excluded); New Hampshire: 1861, State v. Forschner, 43 N. H. 89, 90 (rape; bad reputation of the prosecutrix for tion, it would seem that a party might properly be allowed to invoke in his favor a good reputation 'post litem motam'.

(b) In the case of a witness, the conditions above pointed out do not usually affect his reputation, because his conduct is not the subject of the controversy. Moreover, although a witness may sometimes be so related to the controversy or to the parties as to have suffered in consequence from partisan feeling, yet the situation hardly requires as a general rule a limitation to reputation 'ante litem motam'. Accordingly, the reputation of a witness even up to the time of testifying, is generally regarded as admissible.[2] chastity, as formed since the time of the alleged rape, excluded, as "inducing attempts to destroy the character of a prosecutrix in order to defeat the prosecution"); New Jersey: 1900, State v. Sprague, 64 N. J. L. 419, 45 Atl. 788 (rape-assault; defendant's bad reputation for violence after the time of arrest, or of commission of the offence — the opinion not clearly distinguishing —, inadmissible; the rule not to apply to the reputation of a witness or of a defendant as witness); North Carolina: 1877, State v. Laxton, 76 N. C. 216, 218 (of defendant, after charge made, excluded); Ohio: 1851, Cincinnati F. & M. Ins. Co. v. May, 20 Oh. 224 (of a pilot, confined to the time before the accident in issue); 1870, Wroe v. State, 20 Oh. St. 472 (of defendant, after the time of the offence, excluded); Rhode Island: 1893, State v. Kenyon, 18 R. I. 217, 223, 26 Atl. 199 (reputation of deceased for quarrelsomeness, since his death, excluded); South Carolina: 1900, State v. Taylor, 57 S. C. 483, 35 S. E. 729 (prosecutrix in rape; reputation after the date charged, excluded); South Dakota: 1897, State v. King, 9 S. D. 628, 70 S. W. 1046 (seduction; reputation after accusation made, excluded); Tennessee: 1895, Lea v. State, 94 Tenn. 495, 29 S. W. 900 (of defendant, after charge made, excluded); 1906, Powers v. State, 117 Tenn. 363, 97 S. W. 815 (defendant's repute after the homicide, excluded; but here the rule was erroneously applied to forbid cross-examination of a good-character witness as to reports of violent conduct; this was admissible on the principle of § 988, ante); Texas: 1922, Polk v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 238 S. W. 934 (seduction; complainant's reputation for unchastity after date of seduction, excluded); Vermont: 1906, State v. Biscome, 78 Vt. 485, 63 Atl. 877 (assault; excluded, but no authority is cited and the reasoning is confused); Virginia: 1819, Carter v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 169 (of defendant, after charge made, excluded); West Virginia: 1906, State v. Barrick, 60 W. Va. 576, 55 S. E. 652 (prosecutrix in rape; reputation after the alleged offence, inadmissible).

Contra, but missing the point: 1839, Com. v. Sacket, 22 Pick. Mass. 369 ("it may be of little weight, but still it will have some bearing, as commonly the descent from virtue to crime is gradual").

For the exclusion of reputation after publication of a defamatory charge, offered to mitigate damages in an action for defamation, see ante, § 74.

[2] 1899, Thrawley v. State, 153 Ind. 375, 55 N. E. 95 (bad reputation of defendant's wife at time of trial, admissible, even though affected by the charge against defendant); 1878, Fisher v. Conway, 21 Kan. 18, 25 (holding that the basing of the reputation upon rumors circulated by enemies, etc., goes merely to the weight of the evidence); 1858, Mask v. State, 36 Miss. 77, 89 (testimony to bad reputation admitted, though the witness had never heard it called in question till after the present dispute); 1838, State v. Howard, 9 N. H. 486 (although a concerted attempt to injure the witness' reputation was alleged to have been made by the opponent); 1881, Dollner v. Lintz, 84 N. Y. 669 (reputation at the time of trial, admissible to show reputation at the time the deposition was taken); 1897, Smith v. Hine, 179 Pa. 203, 36 Atl. 222 (that the reputation is founded on partisan opinions goes to weight only); 1900, Fossett v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 400, 55 S. W. 497; 1868, Stirling v. Sterling, 41 Vt. 80, 96 (bastardy; complainant's reputation since controversy begun, admitted); 1882, Amidon v. Hosley, 54 Vt. 25 (holding, conversely, that a person offering his witness' good character may confine his inquiry to the time before suit begun).

Contra: 1908, State v. Blackburn, 136 Ia. 743, 114 N. W. 531 (rape under age; the prosecutrix' repute at time of trial, admitted; unsound); 1864, Reid v. Reid, 17 N. J. Eq. 101 (opinions obtained by an agent sent to the neighborhood to make inquiries); 1879, Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65, 76 (reputation arising from the very will-contest before the court, excluded). Compare the cases ante, § 692, excluding testimony by one sent to a neighborhood to investigate reputation; in part they proceed upon this ground.

In general, a reputation may be stated to have been good up to a certain time, and then bad thereafter: 1858, Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 11 Gray 252, 257.

(c) Where the witness is also the party, it would seem that the rule applicable to parties should be applied usually to his case.[3]

§ 1619. Other Principles affecting Reputation, discriminated (Character in Issue, Witness' Knowledge of Reputation, Belief on Oath). (1) That reputation is distinct from character has already been noted (ante, § 1608). Hence, where "character" is in issue upon the pleadings, it is important to observe whether by the nature of the case it is the actual character or the reputation that is in issue. If the latter, then reputation is provable as a fact in issue; if the former, then reputation, though not in issue, is admissible under the present exception as evidence of the actual character. The classes of cases involving such questions have already been examined (ante, §§ 70–80, 202–212).

(2) The witness who testifies to reputation must, like other witnesses, have had opportunities to acquire personal knowledge of the fact to which he testifies. Hence it is commonly said that he must be a resident of the neighborhood or otherwise so placed as to be acquainted with the reputation; this principle has already been examined (ante, § 692).

(3) A witness to reputation may on cross-examination be tested, like other witnesses, as to the sources of his knowledge; whether he may be asked what persons he has heard speak unfavorably, or be otherwise so tested, rests on principles already examined (ante, §§ 988, 1111).

(4) Whether a witness testifying that he would not believe another upon oath may base the belief upon the other's reputation, is dealt with elsewhere, under the Opinion rule (post, § 1980), in treating of personal opinion to character.

§ 1620. Kind of Character; (1) Chastity; (2) House of Ill-fame; (3) Common Offender; Illegal Sale of Liquor or Drugs. That species of character of which reputation is strictly and properly a trustworthy evidence is moral character, i.e. traits of permanent moral constitution, such as peaceableness, honesty, veracity, and the like, or their opposites. But obviously the line between those personal qualities which are properly provable by reputation

[3] 1898, State v. Marks, 16 Utah 204, 15 Pac. 1089 (not after time of offence, "or at least", time of arrest; here applied to a defendant as witness); 1922, Mohler v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 454 (murder; accused's reputation for veracity at the time of trial admissible against him as a witness, even though affected by gossip since the date of the crime; otherwise, for his reputation for general peaceable character).

Contra: 1916, Smith v. State, 197 Ala. 193, 72 So. 316 (murder; defendant's good character since confinement in jail, and her appointment as a jail trusty, excluded); 1917, Parker v. Newman, 200 Ala. 103, 75 So. 479 (alienation of affections; to rebut defendant's good character evidence, plaintiff was allowed to introduce defendant's bad general repute "up to the time of the occurrence". but thereafter only her bad veracity character; this subtle and perhaps correct quiddity had presumably not the least appreciable effect on the jury's state of persuasion; why should Supreme Courts spend their mental vigor and the State's time doing something which they like the Roman augurs must in private candor regard as a vain thing?); 1889, Com. v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 313, 12 S. W. 550; 1916, State v. Murray, 139 La. 280, 71 So. 510 (assault; accused's good reputation after the event, excluded; distinguishing State v. Anderson, 135 La. 326); 1921, State v. Dolliver, 150 Minn. 155, 184 N. W. 848 (carnal knowledge of a female under age; defendant's good reputation to include the period following arrest, held inadmissible); 1900, State v. Sprague, N. J., supra, note 1; 1896, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046; 1900, Renfro v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 393, 56 S. W. 1013. Compare the cases cited supra, n. 1.

and those which are not is a difficult one to draw; it cannot be definitely fixed by way of deduction from principle. The considerations of principle (noted ante, § 1610) still leave it arguable in some classes of cases whether reputation is a proper source of proof within the general scope of the principle.

(1) As to chastity or its opposite, no doubt has ever arisen, except in a single and peculiar action. In the statutory action or prosecution for seduction of a woman of "previously chaste character", the question first arises whether this "character" is actual character or reputation. Assuming the former view to be taken, then, although actual character is the fact in issue, there is no reason why reputation should not be admissible, as in all other issues, to prove the chaste or unchaste character.[1] But in some jurisdictions the Court's adoption of the view that actual character is the fact in issue has led it erroneously to exclude reputation as evidence of that character.[2] It may be added that reputation is of course not admissible to prove a specific act of fornication,[3] or a condition of pregnancy.[4]

(2) On a charge of keeping a house of ill-fame or a disorderly house, the same distinction between actual character and reputation serves to solve the difficulty. (a) So far as the offence involves in the issue the kind of persons resorting to it, it is possible to maintain that either their reputation or their actual character is the fact in issue; if the former, then those persons' reputation is of course admissible as being in issue;[5] if the latter, then their reputation is admissible under the present exception as evidence of their personal moral character, and upon this point, naturally, no doubt has ever § 1620. [1] 1906, Ex parte Vandiveer, 4 Cal. App. 650, 88 Pac. 993; 1893, State v. Lenihan, 88 Ia. 670, 673, 56 N. W. 292 (good repute, admitted in rebuttal); 1905, State v. Hummer, 128 Ia. 505, 104 N. W. 722 (reputation, admissible in rebuttal, but only for chastity and not for general moral character); 1892, State v. Lockerby, 50 Minn. 363, 52 N. W. 958 (admissible "in corroboration" of the complaining witness); 1897, Carroll v. State, 74 Miss. 688, 22 So. 295 (where chastity is essential, in a charge of seduction, reputation is evidence of actual chastity); 1906, State v. Taylor, 207 Mo. 41, 183 S. W. 299 (citing with approval the text above); 1918, State v. Cook, — Mo. —, 207 S. W. 831 (carnal knowledge of a chaste female under age; good reputation admitted; careful opinion by Faris, J., citing with approval the text above); 1906, State v. Connor, 142 N. C. 700, 55 S. E. 787 (criminal elopement with a married woman of virtuous character; the woman's virtuous character admitted); 1910, State v. Mallonee, 154 N. C. 200, 69 S. E. 786; 1912, State v. Meister 60 Or. 469, 120 Pac. 406 (reputation admissible after evidence by specific unchaste acts).

[2] Ala. 1888, Hussey v. State, 86 Ala. 34, 36, 5 So. 484; Ia. 1871, State v. Shean, 32 Ia. 88, 92 (because actual chastity is required, reputation is excluded, either of unchastity or chastity, its use as hearsay to prove the actual character being ignored; but then, to disprove the commission of acts of lewdness charged, the actual character is declared relevant, and reputation is received to prove it; a paradoxical ruling); 1899, State v. Reinheimer, 109 Ia. 624, 80 N. W. 669 (unchaste repute, excluded); Mo. 1898, State v. Summar, 143 Mo. 220, 45 S. W. 254 (bad repute excluded, because by statute chastity was immaterial); Nebr. 1904, Woodruff v. State, 72 Nebr. 815, 101 N. W. 1114; N. Y. 1863, Kenyon v. State, 26 N. Y. 203, 208 ("It could not have been intended to substitute reputation for character in this its primary and true sense"; but Balcom, J., diss.); Okl. 1911, Hast v. Terr., 5 Okl. Cr. 162, 114 Pac. 261; Wash. 1911, State Workman, 66 Wash. 292, 119 Pac. 751 (statutory rape; but the reputation should be confined to the purpose of discrediting the witness, Chadwick, J., diss.).

For this difference of statutes and their interpretation, see more fully ante, § 205.

[3] 1822, Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 408, 414 (fornication and the having a bastard child); 1839, Overstreet v. State, 3 How. Miss. 328 (charge of fornication).

[4] 1835, Boies v. McAllister, 12 Me. 308.

[5] The cases are collected ante, §§ 78, 204; some of the statutes cited infra, n. 7, make this provision also.

arisen. (b) So far as the habitual use or "character" of the house itself is concerned, the same question again arises, whether the fact in issue is the "fame", i.e. reputation of it, or the actual habit and character of it. If we accept the former view (and here much depends on the statutory wording), then reputation is of course admissible as being in issue.[6] But if we take the latter view, then, the actual use and character of the house becoming the issue, the question arises whether reputation is admissible under the present exception to prove it. The subject of the reputation is not an individual's moral trait, and therefore is without the ordinary scope of the present exception. Nevertheless, having regard to the circumstances from which such a reputation arises, and the difficulty of obtaining other evidence in the ordinary way from unimpeachable witnesses, it seems unquestionable that reputation should be admitted as trustworthy and necessary evidence.[7]

[6] The cases are collected ante, § 78.

[7] Admitted: CANADA: 1916, R. v. Sands, 28 D. L. R. 375, Alta. (keeping a common bawdy-house: reputation not sufficient without other evidence); 1901, Re Fong Yuk, 8 Br. C. 118, 120 (deportation of a prostitute: reputation of the house in which the woman formerly lived, admissible);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1919, Anzine v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 260 Fed. 827 (keeping a house of ill-fame, under U. S. St. 1917, May 18, § 13: general reputation of the house, admitted); 1921, Hunter v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 272 Fed. 235, 241 (keeping a bawdy-house within 5 miles of a military post, under St. 1917, May 18, § 13; reputation of the house, admissible); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2008 (keeping a house of ill-fame; "common fame shall be competent evidence"); St. 1919, c. 20, § 4 (enjoining a house of prostitution: "common fame shall be competent evidence in support of the complaint"); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 4342 (maintaining house of prostitution; "general reputation of the place", admissible); P. C. § 308 (keeping a house of prostitution, etc.; "the general reputation of the house and of the persons frequenting the same", to be admissible); Arkansas: 1919, Batesville v. Smythe, 138 Ark. 276, 211 S. W. 140 (keeping a house of prostitution; repute of the house, admitted); California: 1899, Demartini v. Anderson, 127 Cal. 33, 59 Pac. 207 (lease for a house of prostitution; reputation of the house, admitted); 1920, People v. Bay Side Land Co., — Cal. App. —, 191 Pac. 994 (St. 1913, p. 20, Redlight Abatement Act, admitting "general reputation of the place", applied); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 6234 (abatement of a house of prostitution; "general reputation of the place or of its habitués", admissible); Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, p. 412, U. S. St. 1914, Feb. 7 (abatement of house of prostitution; "general reputation of the place," admissible); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 2707 (house of ill-fame: on injunction proceedings, "general reputation of the place" is admissible); Georgia: 1885, Hogan v. State, 76 Ga. 82; 1919, Wilkes v. State, 23 Ga. App. 727, 99 S. E. 390 (but reputation alone is not enough); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7046 (in actions to abate a "moral nuisance", "general reputation of the building or place" or its inmates and "those resorting thereto", is admissible); Illinois: St. 1915, June 22, p. 371, § 2 (abatement of prostitution nuisance: "general reputation of such building or apartment, or of such place, of the inmates thereof, and of those resorting thereto" is admissible); Iowa: Comp. Code § 8795, Code 1897, § 4944 (on a charge of keeping a house of ill-fame, the prosecution may introduce "general reputation of such house as so kept" to show its character); Code 1919, § 1030 (nuisance by prostitution: "general reputation of the place", admissible); 1904, State v. Steen, 125 Ia. 307, 101 N. W. 96 (statute applied); 1910, State v. Burns, 145 Ia. 588, 124 N. W. 600 (living as a prostitute in a house of ill-fame: repute of the house, admitted, on the analogy of Code § 4944); 1916, State v. Gardner, 174 Ia. 748, 156 N. W. 747 (resorting to a house of ill-fame for purposes of prostitution: general reputation of the house, admitted; nothing said about any statute); Kansas: 1918, State v. Fleeman, 102 Kan. 670, 171 Pac. 618 (maintaining a place of prostitution; reputation admitted); Kentucky: 1913, King v. Com., 154 Ky. 829, 159 S. W. 593 (maintaining a common public nuisance, viz. a bawdy-house; repute admitted, but not sufficient as the sole evidence: the opinion does not notice the statutory distinctions on which the rule depends); Louisiana: St. 1918, June 27, No. 47, § 7 (abatement of prostitution nuisance; "general reputation of the building, structure, land, or other place, or of the defendant, or of the occupants thereof or habitual visitors" is admissible, "and judgment may be based on the general reputation so proven"); Maine: Rev.

(3) The offence of being a common thief, or a common gambler, or other common offender, or of keeping a common nuisance, e.g. a place for illegal

St. 1916, c. 126, § 20 (pandering and pimping; "general reputation or common fame" admissible to prove a house one of prostitution, etc.); St. 1919, c. 112 (prostitution; pandering, etc.; "reputation of any place, structure, or building, and of the person or persons who frequent the same", admissible); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 27, § 19 (keeping a bawdy house; "general reputation of the house", admissible); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 7783 (nuisance of house of assignation, etc.; "general reputation of the place", admissible); Minnesota: 1896, Egan v. Gordon, 65 Minn. 505, 68 M. W. 103 (in an action to recover rent); Montana: 1895, State v. Hendricks, 15 Mont. 194, 39 Pac. 94 (provided there is corroboration by facts of such use); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 9769 (enjoining a nuisance of house of prostitution; "general reputation of the place", admissible); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 6513 (keeping house of ill-fame; "general reputation", admissible as to the house and the woman); New Hampshire: St. 1919, Mar. 28, c. 95, § 5 (abatement of prosecution nuisance; "general reputation of the place, or an admission or finding of guilt of any person under the criminal laws against prostitution", admissible to prove the nuisance); New Mexico: St. 1921, c. 69, § 3 (prostitution; "reputation of any place, structure, or building, and of the person or persons who reside in or frequent the same [and] of the defendant shall be admissible in support of the charge"); St. 1921, c. 90, § 4 (injunction against keeping a house of prostitution; "evidence of general reputation of the place", admissible); New York: St. 1914, c. 365 (injunction to suppress house of ill-fame as a nuisance; amending St. 1909, c. 49; inserting a new § 343*d*; "evidence of the common fame and general reputation of the place, of the inmates thereof, or of those resorting thereto, shall be competent evidence to prove the existence of the nuisance"); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 889 a, as added by St. 1919, c. 502 (pandering and prostitution; "reputation of the place wherein the offense occurred or of persons who frequent or reside therein" is admissible); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4347 (on trials for keeping a bawdy-house, etc., "evidence of the general reputation or character of the house shall be admissible and competent; and evidence of the lewd, dissolute, and boisterous conversation of the inmates and frequenters, while in and around the house, shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the bad character of the inmates and frequenters and of the disorderly character of the house"); § 4360 (pandering, pimping, etc.; reputation of "any place, structure, or building", and of "the person or persons who reside in or frequent the same, and of the defendant", is admissible); 1918, State v. Price, 175 N. C. 804, 95 S. E. 478 (keeping a bawdy-house; reputation of the house, admitted, under Pell's Revisal § 3353A); North Dakota: St. 1919, Mar. 7, c. 190, § 3 (prostitution offences; "testimony of a prior conviction or testimony concerning the reputation of any place, structure, or building, and of the person or persons who reside in or frequent the same, and of the defendant shall be admissible); Ohio: St. 1913, p. 180, Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 13031–11 (in pandering cases, "general reputation of a house as a house of prostitution or assignation" is competent); § 13031–14 (keeping a house for prostitution, etc.; "reputation of any place, structure, or building and of the person or persons who reside in or frequent the same and of the defendant" is admissible); § 6200 (use of liquor in house of ill-fame; sufficient to prove that the "building or place is generally reputed in the neighborhood" etc.); Oklahoma: 1913, Patterson v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 564, 132 Pac. 693; 1913, Putman v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 535, 132 Pac. 916 (weighty opinion by Furman, J.); 1919, Francis v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. App. 543, 185 Pac. 126 (reputation admissible, but not alone sufficient); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 2090 (bawdy-house; "common fame shall be competent evidence"); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 108, § 3 (common nuisance by keeping a place for prostitution, gaming, liquor-selling, etc.; "the notorious character of any such premises, or the notoriously bad or intemperate character of persons visiting the same", admissible); South Carolina: 1838, State v. McDowell, Dudley 345, 350 ("In a case in which character is its very gist, I am willing to make that which everybody says the evidence"); C. C. P. 1922, § 470 (abatement of prostitution nuisance; "general reputation of the place", admissible); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 3893 (to show the character of a house of ill-fame, "evidence of the general reputation of the house" is admissible); 1905, State v. Cambron, 20 S. D. 282, 105 N. W. 241 (the statute does not exclude other proper evidence); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5164 a 9 (in proceedings against a nuisance of prostitution, liquor-selling, gaming, etc., "general reputation of the place" is admissible); Texas: 1908, Joliff v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 61, 109 S. W. 176 (disorderly house for illegal sale of liquor; reputation admitted; Davidson, P. J., diss.); Virginia: 1922, Wilson v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 96 (keeping a house of ill-fame; of course, proof of repute is not required); Washington: 1912, State v. Stone, 66 Wash. 625, 120 Pac. 76 (placing a female in a house of prostitution); Wash. St. 1913, c. 127, p. 391, § 3, R. & B. Code 1909, § 946–3 (houses of prostitution, etc.; "evidence of the general reputation of the sale of liquor or drugs, is one which by some Courts, sometimes under statute, has been regarded as provable by reputation;[8] but perhaps the notion here place shall be admissible for the purpose of proving the existence of said nuisance"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4581 g (in prosecutions for keeping a house of ill-fame, etc., "common or general reputation" is admissible).

Excluded: 1833, U. S. v. Jourdine, 4 Cr. C. C. 338, overruling U. S. v. Grey, 1826, 2 Cr. C. C. 675; 1876, Wooster v. State, 55 Ala. 221; 1903, Ramsey v. Smith, 138 Ala. 333, 35 So. 325 (sale of a piano to a plaintiff for use in a house of prostitution; reputation not admitted to show the character of the house); 1846, Caldwell v. State, 17 Conn. 467, 472; 1900, Howard v. People, 27 Colo. 396, 61 Pac. 595 (keeping a house of ill-fame; petition of citizens to city council, inadmissible as constituting reputation); 1916, State v. Hunter, 173 Ia. 638, 155 N. W. 961 (prosecution under a city ordinance for keeping a disorderly house, in particular, for allowing unmarried persons to resort there, etc.; held that Code § 4944, admitting reputation on the trial of an indictment for keeping a house of ill-fame, did not authorize reputation as evidence here; nothing said about common-law principles; this is the kind of ruling that makes law regarded with repulsion and distrust by unsophisticated citizens); 1898, Shaffer v. State, 87 Md. 124, 39 Atl. 313 (keeping a disorderly house; its reputation inadmissible, until St. 1892, c. 522); 1885, Handy v. State, 63 Miss. 208; 1864, State v. Foley, 45 N. H. 466; 1863, Kenyon v. State, 26 N. Y. 203, 209 ("The general rule is that hearsay evidence is incompetent to establish any specific fact which is in its nature susceptible of being proved by the witnesses who speak from their own knowledge"); 1897, Nelson v. Terr., 5 Okl. 512, 49 Pac. 920; 1815, Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. Pa. 342; 1895, State v. Plant, 67 Vt. 454, 32 Atl. 237; 1917, State v. Guyer, 91 Vt. 290, 100 Atl. 113; 1894, Barker v. Com., 90 Va. 820, 20 S. E. 776.

Undecided: 1905, State v. Harris, 14 N. D. 501, 105 N. W. 621.

So, also, excluding reputation of the defendant himself as keeper (compare the cases cited ante, § 78, note 3): 1833, U. S. v. Jourdine, 4 Cr. C. C. 338; U. S. v. Warner, ib. 342; 1858, State v. Hand, 7 Ia. 411.

It may be noted that in these cases it is not always easy to determine whether the Court proceeds upon the present principle or that of § 78, ante.

For reputation as evidence of ownership of such a house, see ante, § 1587, n. 8, and post, § 1626.

Compare the cases holding unconstitutional a statute which makes reputation conclusive (ante, §§ 1354–1356).

[8] Accord: Alabama: St. 1909, No. 193, Spec. Sess. p. 183, Aug. 25, § 5 ("general reputation of being gamblers, admissible in trial for gaming offences); Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 5432 (keeping opium den; "general reputation" admissible to prove "the character of any building, structure, or shelter as an opium den"); Indiana: 1901, Kissel v. Lewis, 156 Ind. 233, 59 N. E. 478 (disorderly beer-garden as a nuisance; reputation admitted, partly as affecting the depreciation of the value of plaintiff's premises); Iowa: Code 1897, § 5003, Comp. Code § 8865 ("general reputation" of a place, admissible for prosecution to show the character of the place on a charge of keeping an opium resort); Maryland: 1878, World v. State, 50 Md. 49, 54 (reputation admissible under St. 1864, c. 38, to show a defendant to be a "common thief"; and though the reputation must be shown to exist within the statutory period, reputation before that time is relevant to show it); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 3263 (liquor nuisance; "general reputation of the place" is admissible); North Carolina: 1921, State v. McNeill, 182 N. C. 855, 109 S. E. 84 (keeping liquor for sale; general reputation of the "place" as to selling whisky, admitted in corroboration); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10128 (abatement of liquor nuisance; "general reputation of the place designated in the complaint" is admissible); Oklahoma: 1917, Cameron v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 692, 167 Pac. 339 (liquor nuisance); 1919, Siebenaler v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 576, 185 Pac. 448 (maintaining a public nuisance; reputation as a bootlegging joint, admitted); 1921, Tindell v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 196 Pac. 557 (manufacturing intoxicating liquors; general reputation of the place, inadmissible; otherwise on a charge of possession with intent to sell; the distinction is unsound); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 2160 (opium offences; "general reputation shall be received in evidence to establish the character of any building as an opium den"); § 2224–64 (similar, for liquor nuisance); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3079 a 328 (soft-drink-stand nuisance; "general reputation", admissible to prove the nuisance).

Contra: 1906, State v. Brooks, 74 Kan. 175, 85 Pac. 1013 (liquor nuisance); 1834, Com. v. Hopkins, 2 Dana Ky. 419 (common gambler); 1913, Mitchell v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 172, 130 Pac. 1175 (professional gambler); 1919, Levy v. State, 84 Tex. Cr. 493, 208 S. W. 667 (being a common prostitute; reputation of defendant and her associates, inadmissible).

Here compare the use of reputation to show knowledge merely (ante, § 257).

enters that reputation is a part of the issue.—The mode of proving such an offence by specific acts has already been noticed (ante, § 203).

Whether the foregoing offences can lawfully be constituted by repute alone is a constitutional question already dealt with (ante, §§ 1354–1356).

§ 1621. Same: (4) Sanity; (5) Temperance; (6) Expert Qualifications; (7) Negligence; (8) Animal's Character. (4) So far as the principle of necessity (ante, § 1610) is concerned, there is usually ample available evidence of sanity or insanity other than reputation. So far as the principle of trustworthiness (ante, § 1610) is concerned, although all the conditions that obtain for moral character obtain equally for sanity, yet opinions upon a standard of sanity differ so much that a reputation, without the opportunity to test its ground by cross-examination, would hardly be trustworthy. It is thus generally agreed that reputation is not admissible for this purpose:[1]

1849, NISBET, J., in Foster v. Brooks, 6 Ga. 290: "If reputation of insanity is competent, then reputation of sanity must also be. By this kind of evidence a fool may be proved a wise man, and a philosopher a fool. Public opinion declared Copernicus a fool when he promulgated the planetary system, and Columbus a fool when he announced the sublime idea of a New World. Hazardous in the extreme would it be to the rights of parties under the law, if they were allowed to depend upon the opinion of a neighborhood of the sanity of individuals. Hearsay evidence is excluded because a witness ought to be subjected to cross-examination, that being a test of truth. It ought to appear what were his powers of perception, his opportunities of observation, his attentiveness in observing, the strength of his recollection, and his disposition to speak the truth."

The use of a verdict or other inquisition of lunacy rests on a different principle (post, § 1671).

(5) A person's character or habits as temperate, or the reverse, in the use of intoxicating liquor, is sufficiently open to other sources of proof; and reputation is therefore unnecessary.[2]

(6) The qualifications of an expert or professional man, whether as a witness testifying on matters of skill, or as a party charged with lack of skill, § 1621. [1] Accord: 1904, Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012; 1882, People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53; 1880, State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 539 (here for paternal insanity); 1900, Snell v. U. S., 16 D. C. App. 501, 511; 1860, Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 424, 470; 1838, Yeates v. Reed, 4 Blackf. Ind. 463, 466; 1885, Walker v. State, 102 Ind. 507, 1 N. E. 856; 1876, Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44 Ia. 233 (rumor in a neighborhood, inadmissible); 1920, Mitchell v. Slye, 137 Md. 89, 111 Atl. 814 ("People all said he was insane", excluded); 1868, Townsend v. Pepperell, 99 Mass. 40, 46 (settlement of insane pauper; common speech of the neighborhood as to her insanity, excluded); 1906, Reed v. State, 75 Nebr. 509, 106 N. W. 649; 1884, Barker v. Pope, 91 N. C. 168; 1894, State v. Coley, 114 N. C. 879, 885, 19 S. E. 705; 1875, Lancaster Co. Nat'l Bank v. Moore, 78 Pa. 407, 415; 1881, Yanke v. State, 51 Wis. 469, 8 N. W. 276.

Contra: 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 932, 937 (confinement in a private asylum, admitted); 1868, Com. v. Andrews, Mass., Davis' Rep. 134 (murder; insanity of deceased ancestors, held provable by reputation); 1859, State v. Christmas, 6 Jones L. 471, 475 (admissible to prove hereditary insanity of other members of the family, so as to avoid complicated issues as to particular conduct).

[2] 1893, Stevens v. R. Co., 100 Cal. 554, 570, 35 Pac. 165 (as to intemperance, excluded; the opinion misunderstands the point); 1894, Cosgrove v. Pitman, 103 Cal. 268, 273, 37 Pac. 232, semble (reputation not sufficient to prove a habit of intemperance); 1823, Brindle v. M'Ilvaine, 10 S. & R. Pa. 285 ("causes of physical depravity of the mental faculties are susceptible of a particular description by those who have witnessed them").

ought to be provable by reputation. So far as personal opinion by witnesses is excluded (post, § 1984), there remains practically no other mode of proof than the present, except such tests as can be obtained on the stand by cross-examination (ante, §§ 938, 992). Moreover, professional (not popular) reputation is usually highly trustworthy. The rulings have generally excluded reputation;[3] but the question arises comparatively seldom, partly because the character of parties in this respect is seldom relevant or in issue (ante, § 64), partly because it is usually not profitable by such evidence to discredit skilled witnesses, and partly because of the reluctance of professional men to bear such testimony.

(7) Character as to negligence or care is provable when it is in issue (ante, §§ 80, 208); and is also usable evidentially, under certain conditions, to show the doing or not doing of a specific act (ante, § 65). The character thus relevant has always been regarded as properly provable by reputation.[4] From such a hearsay use of reputation, distinguish its use circumstantially to show notice, for example, by an employer, of the employee's character (ante, §§ 246–260).

(8) That an animal's character, as properly as that of a human being, may be the subject of trustworthy reputation, for reasons similar to those already noted (ante, § 1610), would seem a just conclusion.[5]

E. Sundry Facts

§ 1623. Reputation to prove Solvency or Wealth. When the fact to be proved is the condition of a merchant's pecuniary resources as to solvency — that is, the ability practically to pay at maturity an ordinary debt —, considerations analogous to those already noted (ante, §§ 1586 and 1610) as

[3] Excluded: 1870, DePhue v. State, 44 Ala. 39 (witness); 1886, Holtzman v. Hoy, 118 Ill. 534, 8 N. E. 832 (negligent treatment by a physician; professional skill held to be in issue, but not provable for defendant by his reputation "in the community and amongst the profession"; the opinion is unsatisfactory, because it ignores the offer of reputation in the profession; no authority cited); 1901, Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740 (abortion; defendant's reputation as to skill as a surgeon, excluded; no authorities cited); 1897, People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364, 69 N. W. 501 (reputation not admissible to show an expert's competence).

Compare the cases cited ante, §§ 64, 67, 199, 208.

[4] See the citations in the sections above mentioned, where this is assumed. The only excluding decision seems to be Baldwin v. R. Co., 1855, 4 Gray Miss. 333 (character as a careless driver).

[5] The rulings differ: 1903, Fisher v. Weinholzer, 91 Minn. 22, 97 N. W. 426 (reputation of a dog, admitted; the foundation for such a repute, discussed); 1901, Jones v. Packet Co., — Miss. —, 31 So. 201 (pedigree of a jack, allowed to be proved by reputation); 1865, Whittier v. Franklin, 46 N. H. 23, 27 ("the character of a person for truth, it may well be presumed, cannot be bad without being known to the public; but it may be otherwise in respect to the vicious propensities of the horse"); 1852, Heath v. West, 26 N. H. 191, 199 (to the value of a horse, excluded); 1872, McMillan v. Davis, 66 N. C. 539 (Reade, J., admitting reputation of foal-getting qualities, value being in issue: "We suppose that with all stock-raisers there are two principal inquiries in selecting a sire: What is his pedigree? and, Is he a sure foal-getter? Other qualities are judged of by inspection; these cannot be. How are these inquiries to be answered? The most usual and satisfactory, if not the only way, is by reputation").

For the use of a registry of pedigree of an animal, see post, § 1706.

For the admissibility of the animal's character itself, see ante, §§ 68, 201.

making reputation a necessary and a trustworthy source of evidence seem to be here fulfilled. The argument has been well expounded in the following passages:

1845, GOLDTHWAITE, J., in Lawson v. Orear, 7 Ala. 786: "Insolvency is rather the conclusion which the law deduces from other facts, than the fact itself, and therefore it is quite probable that a witness would not be permitted to state this conclusion independent of the facts from which it was to be inferred. But in most cases, where the question of insolvency is collaterally involved [here the question was whether a purchase was made with notice of insolvency], it is nothing more than the attempt to show that the particular individual is not in a condition to be trusted as a debtor. In all such cases the common question which suggests itself to every mind is, Why is he not to be so trusted? or, What is his condition as to property or credit or the want of either? . . . From the very nature of things it is scarcely possible that there can be any certain means of acquiring exact information upon such a subject. . . . In all, or in a very large majority of all the trading classes, the information of the seller as to the ability of the purchaser to pay is derived from reputation and most generally from no other source whatever. To shut out from the jury the same evidence upon which the entire community acts would present a singular result." [1]

1863, ATWATER, J., in Nininger v. Knox, 8 Minn. 140, 147: "It would seem that the fact of insolvency, from its nature, must usually exclude direct proof, as no one save the person himself could ordinarily safely swear that a man had no property, or insufficient to meet his liabilities, at a given time. . . . The fact of insolvency is of such a nature that the opportunities of the public for forming a correct judgment in the matter must be usually as ample as those existing to form a judgment of character in any other respect, and indeed more so."

In the greater number of jurisdictions, reputation is accordingly admissible to show insolvency or solvency.[2] Distinguish the circumstantial use of reputation as evidence of knowledge by a purchaser of a debtor's insolvency (ante, § 253).

It has also been held occasionally that the wealth of a party (usually when material in proving damages for breach of promise of marriage) may be evidenced by reputation;[3] but this seems unsound.

§ 1623. [1] Citing Weeks v. Sparke, ante, § 1587.

[2] Accord: 1845, Lawson v. Orear, 7 Ala. 786, per Goldthwaite, J.; 1861, McNeill v. Arnold, 22 Ark. 482, semble; 1871, Hayes v. Wells, 34 Md. 518; 1864, Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241, 252; 1863, Nininger v. Knox, 8 Minn. 140, 147 (quoted supra); 1875, Burr v. Wilson, 22 Minn. 206, 211; 1893, West v. Bank, 54 Minn. 466, 469, 56 N. W. 54; 1895, Hahn v. Penney, 60 Minn. 487, 62 N. W. 1129; 1900, Garrett v. Weinberg, 59 S. C. 162, 37 S. E. 51; 1846, Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 97 (where the solvency of R. was material in determining the adequacy of his note as "sufficient security" under a contract); 1860, Noyes v. Brown, 32 Vt. 430; 1860, Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland, 33 Vt. 430.

Contra: 1837, Ward v. Herndon, 5 Port. Ala. 382, 385 (undecided; here, of a debtor guaranteed by the defendant); 1843, Branch Bank v. Parker, 5 Ala. 736: 1858, Price v. Mazange, 31 Ala. 701, 708 (fraudulent mortgage); 1876, Holten v. Board, 55 Ind. 199; 1903, Wolfson v. Allen B. Co., 120 Ia. 455, 94 N. W. 910 (financial condition of vendees procured by the plaintiff as commission agent for the defendant); 1903, Coleman v. Lewis, 183 Mass. 485, 67 N. E. 603 (but here admitted to corroborate testimony to an indorser's waiver of presentment); 1905, Allison's Ex'r v. Wood, 104 Va. 765, 52 S. E. 559 ("particular opinions and particular acts", inadmissible).

[3] Accord: 1895, Stratton v. Dole, 45 Nebr. 472, 63 N. W. 875; 1920, Weiss v. Weiss, 95 N. J. L. 994, 112 Atl. 184 (slander); 1921, Bahrey v. Poniatishin, 95 N. J. L. 128, 112 Atl. 481 (slander); 1864, Kniffen v. McConnell, 30 N. Y. 285, 289; in State v. Cochran, 1828, 2 Dev. 65, reputation was thus admitted on another issue.

Contra: 1920, Smillie v. De Mendoza, 68 Colo. 461, 190 Pac. 533, semble (here admitting § 1624. Reputation to prove Partnership. The use of reputation to prove the existence of an agreement of partnership does not seem justifiable either by the necessity of the case or by the trustworthiness of the evidence; for not only may the testimony of the alleged partners, their admissions, and the written agreement if any, be ordinarily obtained, but the possibilities of a misleading reputation are particularly strong. These considerations have been more than once clearly set forth judicially:

1583 - 1624

1835, WAITE, J., in Brown v. Crandall, 11 Conn. 92, 95: "[The rule is that] hearsay evidence is incompetent to establish any specific fact which fact is in its nature susceptible of being proved by witnesses who speak from their own knowledge. . . . [If reputation here were admissible,] a person of doubtful credit might cause a report to be circulated that another was in partnership with him, for the very purpose of maintaining his credit. His creditors also might aid in circulating the report for the purpose of furnishing evidence to enable them to collect their debts. There is nothing in the nature of the fact to be proved requiring the admission of such testimony."

1838, COWEN, J., in Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. 81, 90 (after quoting the reasoning in Brown v. Crandall, supra): "It may be added that, independent of sinister misrepresentations, there is scarcely a question upon which common reputation is more fallible. A contract of partnership is in nature incapable of being defined by laymen; and whether an apparent partnership be really so or a contract of some other character is often a most embarrassing legal question with the ablest lawyer. General reputation of the more ordinary contracts, the legal nature and effect of which are understood by men of business in general, would be a much more proper subject of proof by general report; this the law always rejects, and yet I am not aware that there is a necessity for a resort to such proof in the one case more than the other."

Accordingly, it is to-day almost everywhere agreed that reputation is not admissible to prove the existence of a partnership.[1]

But in two other ways reputation may here become admissible. (1) By the substantive law of partnership liability, one holding himself out as partner may be charged as such, though no agreement was actually made; and to suffer a reputation of partnership to exist may in law amount to a holding testimony by the party himself to the amount of his property); 1894, Bliss v. Johnson, 162 Mass. 323, 38 N. E. 446 (not received to show lack of means of one claiming to have loaned money); 1902, Birum v. Johnson, 87 Minn. 362, 92 N. W. 1.

§ 1624. [1] 1893, Knard v. Hill, 102 Ala. 570, 574, 15 So. 345 (excluded); 1900, St. Louis & Tenn. R. P. Co. v. McPeters, 124 Ala. 451, 27 So. 518; 1853, Sinclair v. Wood, 3 Cal. 98, 100 (excluded); 1835, Brown v. Crandall, 11 Conn. 92, 95 (inadmissible; quoted supra); 1871, Bowen v. Rutherford, 60 Ill. 41 (excluded); 1904, Marks v. Hardy's Adm'r, 117 Ky. 663, 78 S. W. 864 (excluded); 1809, Bryden v. Taylor, 2 H. & J. Md. 396, 400 (reputation held "not sufficient"); 1835, Goddard v. Pratt, 16 Pick. 412, 434 (not admitted to show a dissolution); 1842, Grafton Bank v. Moore, 13 N. H. 99 (excluded); 1817, Whitney v. Sterling, 14 Johns. N. Y. 215 (admitted); 1833, M'Pherson v. Rathbone, 11 Wend. N. Y. 96 (same); 1838, Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. 81, 89; 22 Wend. 264 (held inadmissible, without other evidence; quoted supra); 1842, Smith v. Griffith, 3 Hill N. Y. 333, 336 (inadmissible); 1889, Adams v. Morrison, 113 N. Y. 152, 156, 20 N. E. 829 (reputation not admissible in any case to prove the fact); 1850, Inglebright v. Hammond, 19 Oh. 343 (excluded); 1898, Farmers' Bank v. Saling, 33 Or. 249, 54 Pac. 190 (excluded); 1824, Allen v. Rostain, 11 S. & R. Pa. 362, 363, 373 ("not evidence, except in corroboration of a previous testimony"); 1845, Hicks v. Cram, 17 Vt. 449, 456 (inadmissible). Contra: Tex. Rev. P. C. 1911, § 607 (liquor offences; membership in a firm is provable by "general reputation").

out; thus, the existence of such a reputation may become itself a fact in issue, irrespective of the truth of the matter reputed:[2]

1889, EARL, J., in Adams v. Morrison, 113 N. Y. 152, 156, 20 N. E. 829: "When there is a general reputation that two or more persons are copartners, and they know it, and permit other persons to act upon it, and to be induced thereby to give credit to the reputed firm, these facts may be proved and may be sufficient sometimes to estop the reputed members of the firm from denying the copartnership in favor of outside parties."

(2) For the purpose of establishing knowledge by a customer of the dissolution of a partnership, the reputation of its dissolution may be admissible as circumstantial evidence of such knowledge (ante, § 255).

§ 1625. Reputation to prove (1) Legal Tradition, (2) Incorporation. (1) So far as the custom and consent of the legal profession is of weight in determining the application of a principle of law, it seems to have been recognized that common opinion or reputation in the profession may be taken as evidence of this custom or consent.[1]

(2) By statute in many jurisdictions, reputation has been made evidence of the existence of a corporation or of certain kinds of incorporation;[2] and

[2] Accord: 1907, Grey v. Callan, 133 Ia. 500, 110 N. W. 909; 1917, Anfenson v. Banks, 180 Ia. 1066, 163 N. W. 608 (partner in a bank).

§ 1625. [1] 1761, Buckinghamshire v. Drury 2 Eden Ch. 60, 64 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C.: "The opinion of conveyancers in all times, and their constant course, is of great weight"; here, as to whether an infant is bound by a marriage jointure); 1892, Venable v. R. Co., 112 Mo. 103, 125, 20 S. W. 493 ("common consent and opinion of the profession", considered to show that dower may be barred in eminent domain).

Distinguish the reference to mere contemporaneous usage as an aid to interpretation: 1821, Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 144; 1873, Scanlan v. Childs, 33 Wis. 663, 666; and cases cited post, § 2464.

[2] Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1048 ("general reputation" admissible to prove incorporation, on charge of forgery of bill or note of company); Ark. Dig. 1919, §§ 3119, 3120 (banking company's existence, etc., in criminal cause, provable by "general reputation"); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1107 (forgery, etc., of bank-bill; incorporation provable by general reputation); Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 6570 ("general reputation", admissible to prove incorporation of bank or company in prosecution for forgery of its bill or note); Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 4227 (in criminal proceedings, a bank's incorporation may be proved by reputation); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8954 (forging, etc., a bill, etc., of incorporated company or bank; "general reputation", admissible to prove incorporation); Ia. Code 1897, § 4870, Comp. Code, § 8771 (general reputation, admissible to prove incorporation of bank, etc., on charge of forging bill, etc.); Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 8129 (banking corporation in criminal cause; incorporation provable by reputation); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 4032 (in criminal causes, the "existence, constitution, or powers of any bank company or corporation" are provable by "general reputation"); 1860, State v. Fitzsimmons, 30 Mo. 237, 239 (statute allowing in criminal cases the existence, etc., of a banking company to be proved by reputation; applied on a trial for selling counterfeit notes); 1904, State v. Knowles, 185 Mo. 141, 83 S. W. 1083 (statute applied); 1905, State v. Wise, 186 Mo. 42, 84 S. W. 954 (statute applied); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 11983 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); § 11985 (so also for any criminal case in proving corporate existence, powers, or constitution); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 6683, 7175 (on trial for forgery, etc., of bill or note of "incorporated company or bank", general reputation admissible to prove incorporation); § 7176 (so for proof of incorporation in any criminal case); N. Dak. Comp. L. 1913, § 10862 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Ohio: 1846, Reed v. State, 15 Ohio 217, 224 (existence of a foreign banking corporation, in prosecutions for counterfeiting); Okla. Comp. St. 1921, § 2721 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6281 (like Cal P. C. § 1107); S. Dak. Rev. C. 1919, § 4902 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8987 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); § 8989 (like Mont. Rev. C. § 11985); Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 7294 (on trial for forgery, etc., of bill or note of incorporated company or bank, incorporation is provable by "general reputation").

this is not inconsistent with the general considerations of policy already noted (ante, § 1610). It is in effect a practical mode of shifting the burden of proof; and the rule of many jurisdictions on that point (post, § 2535) is in effect scarcely to be distinguished from the present one.

§ 1626. Reputation to prove (1) Ownership or Title; (2) Sundry Facts. (1) In a few special classes of cases, chiefly of modern statutory origin, ownership or title, either to realty or personalty, is in some jurisdictions provable by reputation.[1] This result may sometimes be justified by experience in those classes of cases; the party having the burden of proof is thus given a short cut for what might otherwise have been a needless journey through a complex field of proof.

But here must be distinguished the long-settled common-law use of reputation to evidence ancient boundaries (ante, § 1587). There the feature of ancientness is the vital one, for it represents a necessity to resort to such evidence. But as that common-law Exception tended to shade off so as to include title or possession, it came to be not easily distinguished, in some rulings, from the present principle, which if recognized admits contemporary and modern repute, regardless of time.

(2) Apart from the classes of cases above enumerated, there seem to be none which fulfil the requisite considerations of policy already noted (ante, §§ 1586 and 1610), as justifying the resort to reputation. In the remaining rulings, the use of reputation to prove sundry specific acts or conditions has usually

For reputation to show a corporation's ownership of realty of personalty, see ante, § 1587.

§ 1626. [1] Arkansas: 1920, Pearrow v. State, 146 Ark. 201, 225 S. W. 308 (ownership of stolen goods);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1963, par. 12 (it is to be presumed "that a person is the owner of property, from exercising acts of ownership over it, or from common reputation of his ownership"); 1920, Simons v. Inyo Cerro Gordo M. & P. Co., — Cal. App. —, 192 Pac. 144 (issue as to the ownership of a water-right beginning with appropriation by C. before 1878; held, per Finlayson, P. J., (1) that C. C. P. § 1963, subd. 12, as to the presumption of ownership from repute is limited by C. C. P. § 1870, subd. 11, supra, n. 7, to matters of public or general interest; (2) that a claim to a water-right situated wholly on the public domain is such a matter of public interest; (3) that the repute must be ancient, i.e. dating back 30 years; (4) that the repute must concern the right to take water, not the title to the source, here a spring; and (5) that the witness must in form speak only to the repute of ownership, and not to the fact of ownership; this opinion seems well-reasoned and sound; but the Supreme Court "withhold our approval" from the second above statement, and "leave the question open for further consideration");
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2125 (trespass to State or U. S. lands or lands of non-resident; to prove ownership of such lands, it is 'prima facie' evidence if they are so "reputed in the neighborhood where such lands lie");
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7936, par. 12 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 799 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 334, par. 11 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, par. 12);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963).

In these days of complicated stockholdings the following departure seems sound: Reputation is admissible to show ownership of railroad premises or vehicles by a specific corporation: 1904, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Schmitz, 211 Ill. 446, 71 N. E. 1050. Contra: 1903, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 109 Tenn. 727, 72 S. W. 954 (reputation of ownership of locomotives causing a nuisance).

Compare the presumption of ownership from possession (post, § 2515).

Distinguish reputation of title as a fact in issue: 1915. Lowell Hardware Co. v. May, 59 Colo. 475, 149 Pac. 831 (notice of mechanic's lien must mention the "reputed owner").

been repudiated[2], though by statute an occasional rule is invented, e.g. admitting reputation to evidence an illegal trust or combination.[3]

[2] 1872, DeKalb Co. v. Smith, 47 Ala. 412 (action for personal harm done by disguised assailants; "rumor" admitted to show that the plaintiff had many enemies, in corroboration of the plaintiff); 1888, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 87 Ala. 708, 715, 722, 6 So. 277 (that a person had been killed at a low bridge; excluded); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Uhter, 212 Ill. 174, 72 N. E. 195 (repute as to prior injuries sustained by plaintiff, excluded); 1908, Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gray, 171 Ind. 395, 84 N. E. 341 (general repute, not admitted to show who were superintendent and engineer); 1889, State v. Evans, 33 W. Va. 417, 424, 10 S. E. 792 (excluded for showing one man's "influence" over another).

[3] Cal. St. 1907, p. 984, Mar. 23, § 6 (like Ohio Gen. Code § 6399); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 5725 (trusts and combinations; "general reputation" admissible); Oh. Gen. Code Annot. 1921, § 6399 ("The character of the trust or combination alleged [as illegal] may be established by proof of its general reputation as such"); 1908, Hammond v. State, 78 Oh. 15, 84 N. E. 416 (foregoing statute held unconstitutional; see ante, § 1354); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 4495 (trust or combination may be evidenced by "general reputation as such").

Sub-title II (continued): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HEARSAY RULE

Topic VIII: OFFICIAL STATEMENTS

CHAPTER LIV.

A. General Principles of the Exception

B. Application to Specific Kinds of Documents

1. Registers and Records

2. Returns and Reports

3. Certificates (including Certified Copies)

A. General Principles of the Exception

§ 1630. Name of the Exception. The scope of this Exception is often designated by the term "public documents."

But this term is inadequate and misleading. In the first place, the word "public" is ambiguous. It may signify "open to all," "capable of being known or observed by all"; or it may signify "having an interest for persons in general"; or it may signify "made or done by an officer of the government." These are decidedly different senses. So far as the term may indicate a general principle, it is obvious that the principle may result in different rules according to the sense in which the word "public" is to be interpreted. This ambiguity of phrase has already caused an undesirable uncertainty in the scope of the exception; and it is better to avoid a confusing terminology. The word "official" more accurately signifies the essence of the principle dominating the exception. In the second place, the word "document" is here inapplicable. It is true that the exception includes only written statements. Nevertheless, the Hearsay rule applies only to statements or assertions offered testimonially (ante, § 1361), and thus the present exception, so far as it is an exception, is concerned with statements or assertions as such, and not with writings or documents as such. The Hearsay rule excludes them only as containing testimonial assertions, and therefore this exception deals with them only as assertions. The word "statement" indicates the ground of the objection to them, and the word "document" does not. In the third place, the word "document" is ambiguous in so far as it suggests also other rules quite distinct from the Hearsay rule. To documents or writings, as such, applies the rule requiring the production of the original (ante, § 1177), and the rule requiring certain modes of authentication (post, § 2129); and still other rules may also have special application to certain kinds of documents. It is essential that these independent rules be kept distinct from each other and from the Hearsay rule; and the use of the word "document" to designate a Hearsay exception tends to prevent this separation of distinct principles.

For these reasons, the term "Official Statements" seems preferable as a designation of the present exception to the Hearsay rule.

§ 1631. The Necessity Principle; Inconvenience of Requiring the Official's Attendance. The principle of Necessity, which in one form or another is found in all the Hearsay exceptions (ante, § 1421), is satisfied in the foregoing exceptions by the impossibility of obtaining testimony in court from the same person; i. e. death, absence, insanity, or other like circumstance, has made it impossible to obtain the person's testimony now on the stand. But in the present and ensuing exceptions, this rigorous application of the principle of necessity is found relaxed. Something less than an absolute impossibility is regarded as sufficient. The necessity reduces itself to a high degree of expediency. In none of these exceptions is it required that the witness be shown to be unavailable by reason of death, absence, or the like circumstance.

In the present exception, it is easy to see why it is highly expedient, if not practically necessary, to accept the hearsay statement of an official, in certain classes of cases, instead of summoning him to attend and testify 'viva voce' before a court or by deposition before a commissioner. The public officers are few in whose daily work something is not done which must later be proved in court; and the trials are rare in which testimony is not needed from official sources. Were there no exception for Official Statements, hosts of officials would be found devoting the greater part of their time to attending as witnesses in court or delivering their depositions before an officer. The work of administration of government and the needs of the public having business with officials would alike suffer in consequence. Although, then, there is strictly no necessity for employing hearsay, in the sense that the personal attendance of the officer is corporally impossible to obtain, there is nevertheless a high degree of expediency that the public business be not deranged by insisting on the strict enforcement of the Hearsay rule. The principle, therefore, is in spirit here identical with that of the preceding exceptions.

§ 1632. The Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness; Official Duty; Publicity. The second essential (ante, § 1422) for an exception to the Hearsay rule is that some circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness be found, to take the place of cross-examination so far as may be.

Two reasons are judically sanctioned as justifying the present exception in this respect. The second, however, is of modern English suggestion, and has not received recognition in the United States. As its recognition involves a definite modification in the practical application of the rules, the two reasons deserve careful discrimination.

(1) The first reason is related in its thought to the presumption that public officers do their duty. When it is a part of the duty of a public officer to make a statement as to a fact coming within his official cognizance, the great probability is that he does his duty and makes a correct statement. The consideration that regularity of habit, a chief basis for the exception for Regular Entries (ante, §§ 1422, 1522), will tend to this end is not here an essential one; for casual statements — such as certificates — may be admissible, as well as a regular series of entries in a registry. The fundamental circumstance is that an official duty exists to make an accurate statement, and that this special and weighty duty will usually suffice as a motive to incite the officer to its fulfilment. Possibly the duty may not be one for whose violation a penalty is expressly prescribed. Possibly the officer may not be one from whom in advance an express oath of office is required. No stress seems to be laid judically on either of these considerations; nor need they be emphasized. It is the influence of the official duty, broadly considered, which is taken as the sufficient guarantee of trustworthiness, justifying the acceptance of the hearsay statement.

Nor is the adequacy of this traditional principle to be to-day discredited or doubted. Official honor may or may not be what it has been or what it ought to be, and it may differ in different communities and persons. But, in the matters with which the law of Evidence is concerned, official duty is on the whole a vital force, more potent than might be supposed, even in a community where official ceremony and dignity are as little regarded as with us. And even if the traditional assumption of the potency of official duty and honor be in some regions or for some classes of incumbents more a fiction than a fact, it is at least a fiction which we can hardly afford in our law openly to repudiate.

That this assumption is the established basis of the present exception is indicated in the following judicial utterances:

1785, Per CURIAM, in R. v. Aickles, 1 Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 436: "The law reposes such a confidence in public officers that it presumes they will discharge their several trusts with accuracy and fidelity; and therefore whatever acts they do in discharge of their public duty may be given in evidence and shall be taken to be true, under such a degree of caution as the nature and circumstances of each case may appear to require. . . . In the present case Mr. N. has no private interest whatsoever in this book to induce him to make factitious entries in it. He is a public officer recording a public transaction."

1850, ERLE, J., in Doe v. France, 15 Q. B. 758: "It depends upon the public duty of the person who keeps the register to make such entries in it, after satisfying himself of their truth."

1845, PARKE, B., in Irish Society v. Bishop of Derry, 12 Cl. & F. 468: "The bishop in making the return discharged a public duty, and faith is given that they would perform their duty correctly; the return is therefore admissible on the same principle on which other public documents are received."

1821, GIBSON, J., in Stewart v. Allison, 6 S. & R. 329: "What change in the law of evidence did the act of assembly [authorizing notaries' certificates] mean to produce? Evidently nothing more than to render that competent, under the sanction of an official oath, which would otherwise have to be attested by an oath taken in the presence of the Court and jury; thus substituting the oath of office, for the violation of which the notary would incur no temporal penalty, for the customary oath in court, which . . . renders the witness obnoxious to the penalties annexed to the crime of perjury."

1851, WAYNE, J., in Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 472, 570: "Such writings [those which the law requires to be kept for the public benefit] are admissible in evidence on account of their public nature, though their authenticity be not confirmed by the usual tests of truth, namely, the swearing and the cross-examination of the persons who prepared them. They are entitled to this extraordinary degree of confidence partly because they are required by law to be kept, partly because their contents are of public interest and notoriety, but principally because they are made under the sanction of an oath of office, or at least under that of official duty, by accredited agents appointed for that purpose. Moreover, as the facts stated in them are entries of a public nature, it would often be difficult to prove them by means of sworn witnesses."

1858, FOWLER, J., in Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 85, 95: "Official registers, or books kept by persons in public office, in which they are required to write down particular transactions, or to enrol or record particular contracts or instruments, are generally admissible in evidence, notwithstanding their authenticity is not confirmed by those usual and ordinary tests of truth, — the obligation of an oath and the power of cross-examining the persons on whose authority their truth and authenticity may depend. This has been said to be because they are required by law to be kept, because the entries in them are of public interest and notoriety, and because they are made under the sanction of an oath of office or in the discharge of an official duty."

1917, MCPHERSON, J., in Chesapeake & D. Canal Co. v. U. S., 3d C. C. A., 240 Fed. 903, 907: "We understand the general rule to be that when a public officer is required, either by statute or by the nature of his duty, to keep records of transactions occurring in the course of his public service, the records thus made, either by the officer himself or under his supervision, are ordinarily admissible, although the entries have not been testified to by the person who actually made them, and although he has therefore not been offered for cross-examination. As such records are usually made by persons having no motive to suppress or distort the truth or to manufacture evidence, and, moreover, are made in the discharge of a public duty, and almost always under the sanction of an official oath, they form a well-established exception to the rule excluding hearsay, and, while not conclusive, are 'prima facie' evidence of relevant facts. The exception rests in part on the presumption that a public officer charged with a particular duty has performed it properly. As the records concern public affairs, and do not affect the private interest of the officer, they are not tainted by the suspicion of private advantage." [1]

§ 1632. [1] So also: 1824, Starkie, Evidence, 79.

It is apparently not material whether this sanction for official statements be spoken of as an authority or a duty. An authority implies a duty, and 'vice versa.' The two words seem merely to represent different aspects of the same relation; for when an official statement actually made is questioned, its propriety is apt to be justified by predicating an authority to make it, and when a refusal to do an official act is questioned, the claimant is apt to lay stress on the duty to do it; and thus the difference between the two words is (for the present purpose) merely the difference of emphasis which is naturally suggested by the different attitudes of claimant and opponent in the case in hand. The idea of an authority, moreover, makes prominent the objective validity in evidence of the statement authorized to be made; while the idea of duty suggests chiefly the subjective trustworthiness

(2) It has also been suggested by some judges that a second circumstance forms an essential part of the sanction for receiving such hearsay statements, namely, the circumstance of publicity. The thought here is a composite one, and is closely related to that which is recognized as a reason for the exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1522). Where an official record is one necessarily subject to public inspection, the facility and certainty with which errors would be exposed and corrected furnishes a special and additional guarantee of accuracy. Not only would the periodic inspection by members of the public tend to produce correction of errors actually perpetrated; but, chiefly, the knowledge that the record is to be open to public inspection would subjectively act in advance as a stimulus to care and sincerity on the part of the official.

This reason was first definitely expounded as an essential one in the following passages:

1838, DENMAN, C. J., in Merrick v. Wakley, 8 A. & E. 170 (the regulations of a public workhouse, prescribed by the statutory authorities, required the medical officer to make a weekly return to the board of the attendance, etc., of poor persons; but the book was rejected): "The endeavour was to put this document upon the same footing with the register of the Navy-office, the log-book of a man-of-war, the books of the Master's office, and other public books which are held to be admissible in evidence. But in these cases the entries are made by an officer in discharge of a public duty; they are accredited by those who have to act upon the statements; and they are made for the benefit of third persons. Here, it is true the book is kept by a public officer, but no credit is given him in respect of the entries; they are merely a check upon himself."

1880, Lord BLACKBURN, in Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 623: "The principle upon which [a previous decision] goes is that it should be a public inquiry, a public document, and made by a public officer. . . . I understand a public document there to mean a document that is made for the purpose of the public making use of it and being able to refer to it. . . . I think the very object of it must be that it should be made for the purpose of being kept public, so that the persons concerned in it may have access to it afterwards. . . . Suppose the English Crown had required of a magistrate that some confidential report should be made, . . . I do not think it would come within the sense and meaning of the rule that a public officer, in making the statement for the public, was likely to speak the truth, and must be presumed 'prima facie' to have known and to have spoken the truth."[2]

This reasoning is plausible, and does, no doubt, add to many official documents a special measure of trustworthiness. But it should not be regarded as justifying a definite limitation of the scope of the exception; for its strict application would exclude many classes of official documents which are in fact admitted and ought in reason to be admitted. Apart from a few jurisdictions in which by statute the right is expressly given to every citizen to demand inspection of official documents, there are everywhere numerous official documents of which inspection cannot be demanded except in casual of the statement made in fulfilment of it. It is therefore proper to speak of the justifying circumstance indiscriminately as either an authority or a duty.

[2] 1920, Casey v. Kennedy, 52 D. L. R. 326, N. B. (Lord Blackburn's view discussed by Macdonald, C. J. A.).

cases by persons having a specific interest in the subject-matter, — for example, the account-books of public officers. It can hardly be supposed that this bare possibility of inspection can have any appreciable subjective influence on the officer. Moreover, where a certificate of an official act done, or a certified copy of a record, is given out, the certificate is delivered usually to a single party in interest, and the possibility of its inspection and comparison by another person before use in court is small; so that the making of this particular official statement is hardly amenable to the influence above supposed. Finally, so far as the other element is concerned — the actual correction of errors by public inspection — its efficacy must be of the slightest moment; for it is not supposed that the public, or specific interested members of it, do in fact (whatever their rights may be) ever demand inspection of the vast majority of official records that are made; and there can be hardly any chance of checking or revision from that source.

It would seem that this second reason, put forward so definitely by Lord Blackburn, is to be regarded as merely a casual advantage, and not an essential limitation, of the class of documents to be included within the exception. How far the limitation thus suggested is to-day recognized as law may be later noted (post, § 1634).

§ 1633. Nature of the Duty; General Principles (No Statute required; Foreign and De Facto Officers; Deputies; Required Statements by Non-official Persons; Writings; Motive to Misrepresent). Whether a given statement was made under an official duty will depend chiefly upon the nature of the office, the subject of the statement, and the form of its making. The application of the general principle to specific official statements is best dealt with under the heads of the various kinds of offices and records (post, §§ 1639–1684). But at the outset a few general considerations governing all of them are to be noticed.

(1) It is clear that no express statute or regulation is needed for creating the authority or duty to make the statement. The existence of the duty, and not the source of its creation, is the sanctioning circumstance. Not all, nor the greater part, of an officer's conceded duties are expressly laid upon him by written law. They may arise from the oral and casual directions of a superior, or from the functions necessarily inherent in the office. Where the nature of the office fairly requires or renders appropriate the making and recording of a specific statement, that statement is to be regarded as made under official duty: [1]

1856, TERRY, J., in Kyburg v. Perkins, 6 Cal. 676: "To entitle a book to the character of an official register it is not necessary that it be required by an express statute to be kept, nor that the nature of the office should render the book indispensable; it is sufficient that it be directed by the proper authority to be kept."

§ 1633. [1] Accord: 1847, Perth Peerage Case, 2 H. L. C. 875 (sundry records); 1892, Daly v. Webster, 1 U. S. App. 573, 611; 1896, White v. U. S., 164 U. S. 100, 17 Sup. 38; 1903, Hesser v. Rowley, 139 Cal. 410, 73 Pac. 156 (sheriff's books); 1840, Newman v. Doe, 4 How. Miss. 535 (an Indian agent's list of Choctaw family-names which were to be handed to the maker, though no list was expressly required to be kept); 1902, State v. Hall, 16 S. D. 6, 91 N. W. 325 (postmaster's record of money orders cashed).

1878, STRONG, J., in Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 660: "It may be admitted that there is no statute expressly authorizing the admission of such a [meteorological] record as proof of the facts stated in it; but many records are properly admitted without the aid of any statute. . . . The record had been kept by a person whose public duty it was to record truly the facts stated in it. . . . To entitle them to admission it is not necessary that a statute requires them to be kept. It is sufficient that they are kept in the discharge of a public duty."

(2) The subjective influence of the official duty being the essential justifying circumstance, it follows that an official statement by a foreign officer is equally admissible with one made by a domestic officer. That the duty is not recognized by the domestic law is immaterial; it exists for the foreign officer; and so far as it exists, it affords an equally sufficient sanction.[2] This application of the principle, though plain, has rarely been drawn in question.

(3) It would seem to follow, that a supposed duty, though non-existent, suffices. This consequence, though logically inevitable, has received only a partial recognition in the admission of records of an officer of a de facto government constituted rebelliously and therefore without legal right.[3] But no further recognition would probably be given, nor ought it to be; for it can hardly be doubted that hundreds of official documents, rejected because not made within the scope of official duty, have been made in good faith under a supposed duty; and yet it would be utterly impracticable to inquire in each case into the official's honest belief and to allow that belief to cure an otherwise defective document.

(4) The statement — whether by register, certificate, report, or the like —

[2] Accord: 1905, Florscheim v. Fry, 109 Mo. App. 487, 84 S. W. 1023 (but the foreign law must be shown; here a record of incorporation); 1868, Condit v. Blackwell, 21 N. J. Eq. 193, semble; 1908, Miller v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 18 N. D. 19, 118 N. W. 344 (Minnesota weigh-master's record of grain weights, made under Minn. Gen. St. 1894, § 7705, admitted; approving the above passage); 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 ("It is the intent of the statute that the officer having the legal custody should make his certificate according to the law of the place of record"); and the instances under marriage-registers and deed-records, post, §§ 1644, 1652.

Contra: 1900, Fish v. Smith, 73 Conn. 377, 47 Atl. 711 (Minnesota secretary of State's certificate of organization of incorporation, made receivable there by express statute, not admissible in Connecticut); 1921, Reed v. Stevens, 120 Me. 290, 113 Atl. 712 (crim. con.; to authenticate a New Hampshire marriage certificate, R. S. c. 64, §§ 15, 37, making certified copies admissible, held to "have no exterritorial force"; unsound).

Compare the rule for conflict of laws, ante, § 5.

[3] Because here the 'de facto' government, though non-existent as against the parent nation, is internationally existent, and its orders protect its officers and create duties for them. Accord: 1699, Underhill v. Durham, Freeman 509, 2 Gwill. 542 (surveys taken during the usurpation of Parliament, held admissible); 1824, Jones v. Carrington, 1 C. & P. 327, 331 (same); 1899, Oakes v. U. S., 174 U. S. 778, 19 Sup. 864 (archives of Confederate Government, being papers drawn up "by its officers in the performance of their supposed duties to that government," admitted to show whether a vessel was acquired by purchase or by capture).

Contra: 1873, Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242, 248 (notarial certificate of protest by one acting under the Confederate government of Louisiana, not recognized); 1873, Todd v. Neal, 49 Ala. 266, 272 (same; nor is this to be treated as a case of a 'de facto' notary, because the government was illegal and not recognizable, "and before there can be an officer 'de facto,' there must be a government known to the Court").

is admissible only so far as a duty exists to make statements on the specific subject-matter. Hence a statement as to matters not covered by the duty is inadmissible; this is conceded. Conversely, the statement is admissible for all matters properly included in the duty, for the duty of statement extends to each and all of the facts as to which the official was bound to inform himself in order to make the statement. This conclusion, too, cannot be doubted; the difficulty lying in its application to specific officers and their duties, as illustrated in the cases of assessors' books (post, § 1640) and marriage-records (post, § 1646).

(5) The statement must be in writing;[4] this is not doubted.[5] The policy of this limitation is unquestionable; for a written statement offers incomparable advantages with respect to accuracy of use and permanency of service; and since official records are commonly preserved after the death or retirement of the officer, there is commonly no practical need (as there is in the statements of private persons dealt with in the foregoing exceptions) of accepting oral statements.

(6) Since the assumption of the fulfilment of duty is the foundation of the exception, it would seem to follow that if a duty exists to record certain matters when they occur, and if no record of such matters is found, then the absence of any entry about them is evidence that they did not occur; or, to put it in another way, the record, taken as a whole, is evidence that the matters recorded, and those only, occurred. Such would probably be the judicial result in dealing with the present exception;[6] although there is in the other exceptions, where a similar question arises, some difference of opinion (ante, §§ 1495, 1531, 1556). Distinguish, however, the question whether this absence of an entry, if admissible, may itself be proved by the certificate of the custodian of the record (post, § 1678).

(7) In the foregoing exceptions, it is sometimes maintained that a statement otherwise admissible is to be excluded where there existed for the declarant a special interest or motive to misrepresent. No doubt, in a given case, circumstances may justify the exclusion of an official statement where a strong motive to misrepresent appears to have existed; but it seems undesirable to

[4] 1894, Propst v. Mathis, 115 N. C. 526, 20 S. E. 710 (record-clerk's oral reading of will, not admitted); 1810, Bonnet v. Devebaugh, 3 Binn. 175 (oral assertions even of a deceased official, inadmissible).

[5] Except perhaps in England; there the oral report of an officer to his superior, made in the regular performance of duty, has been held admissible (ante, § 1528); and since there is in England a tendency to confuse the present exception for Official Statements with that for Regular Entries in the Course of Business (ante, § 1524), it is possible that the above-cited ruling might there be regarded as governing the present class of statements.

[6] 1917, Chesapeake & D. Canal Co. v. U. S., 3d C. C. A., 240 Fed. 903 (non-payment of dividends to U. S. Treasury; records of accounts kept in the Treasury, admitted to show non-payment, by lack of entries of receipt of payment); 1919, Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Co. v. U. S., 250 U. S. 123, 39 Sup. 407 (action for dividends due from the Canal Co. to the U. S. for 1873, 1875, and 1876; account books of the U. S. Treasury Department for years 1848 to 1914, admitted to show, by absence of appropriate entries, that no payment was received or made for the years in question, citing the text above); 1827, Jackson v. Miller, 6 Cow. N. Y. 753; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 469 (absence of record of license as physician by State board of medical examiners is 'prima facie' evidence of lack of license).

prescribe exclusion, as a general rule; and the usual judicial attitude favors admission.[7]

(8) The person having the duty and the person making the statement must, on principle, be identical. Therefore a statement made by another person acting instead of the officer having the duty will be inadmissible; for it is not made under the duty of office.[8] But it does not follow that only the person taking the oath of office, or only the person expressly vested by statute or otherwise with the duty, is competent to make the statement. Not only does practical necessity require that the details of duty be delegated; but, furthermore, such a delegation re-creates the duty with equal efficacy sufficient to satisfy the requirements of principle. The instances in which the statement may be made by a person other than the one specifically charged with the duty seem to be of two classes:

(a) The first and commonest is that of deputy, — as a clerk, registrar, surveyor, or the like. The duty — in the sense of the direct responsibility — of making the record or other statement is upon the general officer or head of department. But the authority to delegate a part of his work to subordinates is in effect a parcelling out of his duty, and the duty exists again for them in fractional form to the extent that the work has been thus assigned. Whether the duty of the subordinates may be thought to run directly to the immediate chief or else to the Government is not material. The fact is that they are not mere intruders or unauthorized substitutes, but possess lawfully the delegated duty; and the determining inquiry must be whether the general nature of the office authorized a delegation of the details of work. A statement, therefore, by a lawful deputy should be admissible.[9]

[7] 1845, Parke, B., in Irish Society v. Bishop of Derry, 12 Cl. & F. 641, 669 ("a marriage or burial register would certainly be admissible to prove a marriage or death, in suits to which the clergyman who made it might happen afterwards to be a party, though he had a pecuniary interest in the particular marriage or death at the time. The observation that it might have been fabricated to advance the interests of the officer affects the value of the evidence and not its admissibility"); 1880, Lord Blackburn, in Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 623, 628; 1851, Marshall, J., in Ratcliff v. Trimble, 12 B. Monr. 32 (admitting a certified copy in the certifier's own favor: "The official character of the act, the duty and responsibilities of the clerk, the publicity and notoriety of the proceedings appearing of record and certified by him, the penal consequences of a false certificate, and facility of detection and exposure, are considerations which preclude the application of the rule against [parties' testifying for themselves]"); 1832, Briggs v. Murdock, 13 Pick. Mass. 316 (town-clerk's record of his own election and qualification, admitted).

Contra: 1818, R. v. Debenham, 2 B. & Ald. 185.

Another limitation, viz. that the entry must have been made contemporaneously, has once been laid down: 1913, Butcher's S. & M. Ass'n v. Boston, 214 Mass. 254, 101 N. E. 426 (drawtender's books).

[8] 1828, Doe v. Bray, 8 B. & C. 815 (Parke, J., rejecting an entry in a register made by another person, not the incumbent: "One ground why a register is evidence is because it is made by a person who has a public duty to perform. Here the register is made up by a person who, as far as this baptism was concerned, was a perfect stranger to the transaction").

[9] 1899, National Accid. Soc'y v. Spiro, 37 C. C. A. 388, 94 Fed. 750 (see the citation post, under § 1681); 1903, Laffan v. U. S., 68 C. C. A. 495, 122 Fed. 333 (a copy of an official bond, under U. S. R. S. § 886 may be certified by the acting Secretary of the Treasury); 1889, Keyser v. Hitz, 133 U. S. 138, 10 Sup. 290 (certificate of due incorporation of a bank, by the U. S. acting comptroller of the Treasury, under Rev. St. § 5154, held admissible); 1832, Triplett v. Gill, 7 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 431, 440 (copy of a will-record, subscribed in the clerk's name by the deputy clerk, sufficient; "the deputy had a right to sub-

(b) A municipality or other corporation or governing body may have an authority to make statements, and yet the statements themselves may be made by the officers, and not by the corporation itself, — as in the case of counties authorized to make surveys. Here, upon the same principle, the authority to do involves necessarily the delegation of performance to officers lawfully provided; and it must be immaterial whether the statement is made in the name of the corporation or of the proper performing officer.

(9) The duty of all officers runs in theory ultimately to the State. But it is not necessary that the duty to make a statement should be specifically created directly by the sovereign State. So far as the State has delegated the power of creating officers, the duties created for them are sufficient to satisfy the present Exception, whether created originally by the State or by the subordinate governing body. Thus, if a city is vested with ordinary municipal powers, it may create an officer whose duty it is to record marriages, and this officer's duty, though it runs directly to the city only, is still an official duty. So far as concerns the origin of such duties, no special discrimination can be made under the present Exception. Where an official duty would for purposes in general be deemed to exist, it exists equally for this exception.

§ 1633*a*. Same: Required Statements by Non-official Persons. Does the duty sufficiently exist only for persons having the general status of officials? Or may it exist (by express statute) solely for the purpose of furnishing a record or certificate, in a person who otherwise has no official position? For example, when a statute makes it the duty of a clergyman to record or certify a marriage ceremony performed by him, is the document to be regarded as made under an official duty in the sense of this exception?

In practice, little turns ordinarily on the answer to this question, because such statutes usually declare expressly that the document shall be admissible. But it is important, from the point of view of principle, to determine whether the use of such documents, sanctioned by statute, shall be regarded as forming an additional exception, standing on its own footing, or as merely an instance of the application by statute of the principle of the present exception? Can it be said that a private person, expressly required to make a record or certificate, makes it under an official duty? Or, is it to be said that the term "official" duty is too narrow, and that the principle includes in effect all documents made under any duty created by law?

scribe the principal clerk's name"); 1895, Com. v. Hayden, 163 Mass. 453, 456, 40 N. E. 846 (certified copy of register of marriage by the assistant-registrar, admitted, by implication of statute); 1916, Weitzel v. Brown, 224 Mass. 190, 112 N. E. 945 (certificate from the office of the U. S. Comptroller, bearing his seal, and signed by a deputy, admitted under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, §§ 884, 178, 327); 1854, Whitehouse v. Bickford, 29 N. H. 471, 480 (acting clerk of a corporation may certify a copy of its records); 1898, Steinke v. Graves, 16 Utah 293, 52 Pac. 386 (clerk's certificate may be signed by a deputy in the clerk's name).

Contra: 1816, Sampson v. Overton, 4 Bibb. Ky. 409 (certificate of copy-grant, in the name of the register himself, but in fact written by his clerk, excluded, though the clerk had taken an oath of office).

Distinguish the question (treated post, § 1635) whether a statement by the chief officer himself of transactions done by subordinates, and not by himself, is admissible.

It would at first seem that the latter mode of statement cannot be justified; for although, as already noticed (ante, § 1632), the oath of office is hardly to be regarded as the essential sanction, nevertheless the sanction does involve at least the idea of duty as created by official status, and not merely the idea of duty in the limited and imperfect sense of amenability to a penalty imposed by law. On the whole, however, it seems correct to say that such documents are made under an official duty, in the ordinary sense of a duty arising from status.

The objection to this view is dissipated when we reflect than an official duty does not involve the devotion of one's entire energies to official work. A justice of the peace, or a registrar of voters, or a coroner, may during the year devote but a small part of his time to official duties, and may occupy himself chiefly as lawyer, physician, or broker; his official duty exists none the less because it concerns only a small fraction of his doings. Conversely (as illustrated throughout this exception), it matters not that an official is completely devoted to official work, unless he has a specific duty to make the record or certificate desired to be admitted under this exception; for example, a city clerk ordinarily gives his entire time to scores of items of official duty, i. e. his status as an official is as complete as can be; and yet unless he has also the specific duty to record births, marriages, and deaths, his entries of such matters are inadmissible. In other words, it is not his general official status that renders such statements admissible, but the specific duty to make such statements. Since, then, the specific duty to make specific statements is what renders them admissible, and since this specific duty is not necessarily dependent on a general official status, it is difficult to see why the specific duty may not exist also for a person not having otherwise an official status. In short, a person may (so far as legal theory is concerned) be an officer for the purpose of doing a single specific class of acts, and may apart from this be merely a private person. It is therefore proper enough, where by statute such a specific and narrow duty has been created, to regard the statements made under it as statements under an official duty within the notion of the present exception.[1] There is, on principle, no obstacle to this view:

1824, Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229, 240; the plaintiff ship-captain brought an action against the defendant ship-owner, in which a part of the issue of fact was the value or profit of a voyage to the East Indies by one of the East India Company's ships; as evidence of the value of such a voyage, a book was offered, "containing a list of passengers, made by the captain, and deposited in the India House, pursuant to the Act of 53 Geo. III," § 1633a. [1] The above principle is exemplified in the following case: 1906, McInerney v. U. S., 143 Fed. 729, 736, C. C. A. (ship's manifest; cited more fully post, § 1672, n. 1); 1916, U. S. v. Elder, D. C. W. D. Ky., 232 Fed. 267 (violation of the oleomargarine law; to show the amounts received by defendant, the prosecution offered the monthly returns made by a manufacturer who sold to defendant; these returns were required by law to be filed with the Internal Revenue collector; held not admissible as official statements; this seems correct; but the opinion does not appear to be familiar with the interesting theoretical bearing of the question).

which provided that every ship in that trade should before clearing exhibit to the customs-officer upon oath, "a true and perfect list . . . setting forth the names, capacities, and descriptions of all persons embarked," etc., etc., and that the officer receiving such list should upon receiving it "transmit a copy of such list to the secretary of the court of directors of the said United Company." It was objected that "the captain's book is not such a public document as to entitle the plaintiff to give it in evidence." BEST, C. J. (overruling the objection): "I come now to the next question, that is, as to the admissibility of evidence. For the purpose of proving the damage, the plaintiff put in a list returned by a captain under the authority of the St. 53 Geo. III, c. 155, §§ 15, 16. It is contended that that paper was not evidence against third parties. I am decidedly of opinion that there is no foundation for that objection. 'This is a public paper made out by a public officer,[2] under a sanction and responsibility which impel him to make that paper out accurately; and that being the case, it is admissible in evidence, on the principle on which sailing instructions, the list of convoy, and the list of the crew of a ship are admissible. But, it may be said, 'Ay, but those are papers which come from Government officers.' I go on: But the books of the Bank of England have been made evidence, — all those are evidence that are considered as public papers, made out by persons who have a duty to the public to perform, and whose duty it is to make them out accurately. On account of that duty and responsibility, credit is given to them. . . . These are papers which the captain is ordered, by the 15th section of the statute to which we have been referred, to make out upon oath, which oath an officer of the customs is authorized to administer; for what purpose? for the purpose of informing the East India Company (who, though subjects in England, are great sovereigns in India) what kind of persons, and with what sort of arms, these persons are going to settlements the administration of the affairs of which are committed to them. If these are not public papers, made with a view to great principles of public policy, I am at a loss to know what are public papers."

But in given instances, nevertheless, it remains to determine whether the statutory duty can properly be so construed; in other words, to discriminate between a genuine official duty created and a mere penal responsibility established. For example, a statute requiring every owner of property to make a return of the items of his property, or requiring every employer to make a return of minors and women employed, merely establishes a penal responsibility; while statutes requiring officiating clergymen to record or certify marriage-ceremonies may properly be regarded as creating an official duty. Of the latter class of statutes, a few other instances will be noted from time to time in the ensuing sections. Of the former class, there are many instances in which the statute expressly makes admissible the statements thus required of private persons (for example, certified records of a corporation by its secretary, or of a bank's books by its agent). Although they do not on principle belong under the present exception, but form a statutory class by themselves, it seems more convenient to place them in the present Chapter under the respective classes of documents concerned (post, §§ 1672, 1683).[3]

§ 1634. Publicity of the Document as Essential. It has already been noted (ante, § 1632) that the opportunity of inspection by the public at large has by some judges been advanced as one of the essential reasons on which

[2] This phrase of the learned judge was here applied liberally; for the ship was a private ship, owned by Messrs. S. T. & S., and chartered by the East India Company for six voyages.

[3] As to the privilege for these Documents, see post, § 2377.

the Exception is based. If it is an essential reason, and not merely an incidental and usual advantage, then it follows that documents not so open to general inspection are inadmissible, even though made under an official duty. Such seems now to be the law in England.[1] But this may perhaps be regarded as in fact a modern innovation in that country. Before the opinion of Lord Blackburn in Sturla v. Freccia, it does not seem to have been laid down distinctly as essential.[2]

In the United States no definite acceptance of this limitation seems to have been made; although in a few opinions the element of publicity has been referred to 'obiter' as essential.[3]

For the reasons already indicated (ante, § 1632) the limitation is not a desirable one. Should it be accepted, however, the class of official documents excluded by it will after all be a narrow one, namely, those only which are strictly confidential, — for example, reports by inspectors, tax-officers, and the like. These would perhaps usually be privileged from disclosure in any case (post, § 2378), so that perhaps the question is not likely often to arise. It can hardly be supposed that the scope of this limitation, as expounded by Lord Blackburn, was intended to include other than confidential documents, i. e. to include that vast class of official records (including certified copies) which are customarily not compiled for reference by the general public nor placed where the public has constant opportunity to inspect.

§ 1635. Personal Knowledge of the Official; Notary's Knowledge; Certificate of Acknowledgment. It has already been seen (ante, § 657) that an § 1634. [1] 1838, Merrick v. Wakley, 8 A. & E. 170 (cited ante, § 1632); 1880, Sturla v. Freccia, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 623 (stated fully, post, § 1670); 1904, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 534, 541, 544 (fishing-rights; a report of a surveyor, in 1610, made by order of the Warden of the Cinque Ports, and maps prepared in 1641–47 by the War Office, not admitted as public documents, following Sturla v. Freccia; Farwell, J.: "The test of publicity as put by Lord Blackburn is that the public are interested in it, and entitled to go and see it, so that if there is anything wrong in it, they would be entitled to protest"; but two charts prepared by order of the Admiralty were admitted); 1905, Mercer v. Denne, 2 Ch. 538, 554 (Mercer v. Denne, supra, affirmed on appeal; Vaughan Williams, L. J., referring to Sturla v. Freccia, thought that "Farwell, J., in his judgment carried the ruling of Lord Blackburn rather further than Lord Blackburn himself intended," and believed that under that principle "records in the Exchequer of acts done by officers of the Crown in assertion or derogation of the King's title are admissible against all the world" in a proper case; though the documents here offered did not satisfy that rule).

[2] For example, in Doe v. Arkwright, 2 A. & E. 183 (1834), and in Daniel v. Wilkin, 7 Exch. 429, 437 (1852), Parke, B., refers only to the official duty as the reason of the Exception. In some of the quotations ante, § 1632, publicity is referred to as one of the reasons, but not as essential. In Irish Society v. Bishop of Derry, 12 Cl. & F. 468 (1845), Parke, B., hints at it as essential. In R. v. Martin, 2 Camp. 101 (1809), M'Donald, C. B., does the same, speaking of a corporation vestry-book; but he is there probably thinking of the incorrect analogy of private corporation books, as to which access is necessary in order to treat the entries as admissions (ante, § 1074).

[3] 1878, Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 66, (Strong, J.: "[These records of weather] are as we have seen, of a public character, kept for public purposes and so immediately before the eyes of the community that inaccuracies, if they should exist, could hardly escape exposure"); 1886, Cushing v. R. Co., 143 Mass. 78, 9 N. E. 22 (excluding a report by an official engineer describing preliminary surveys with reference to proposed harbor-works, and printed as a public document by the federal Senate; Field, J.: "Nor are the facts stated in the reports public facts, in the sense that they are facts which the United States have, under the authority of law, undertaken to ascertain and make public for the benefit of all persons who may be interested to know them").

essential qualification of a witness is that in general his knowledge or belief should be based on personal observation; and that testimony based on anything short of this is receivable only in a few classes of cases in which the source of knowledge is for practical purposes equivalent to personal observation. It has also been noted (ante, § 1424) that the same principle is applied to persons whose hearsay statements are receivable under exceptions to the Hearsay rule; and the application of the principle has been noticed from time to time in the foregoing exceptions.

How far is the principle to be maintained in the present exception? Must the officer whose statement is admitted have personal knowledge of the thing recorded, certified, or returned? In general, there can be no doubt that the principle applies here as elsewhere; but the principle itself need not be and is not judicially employed to the extent of unpractical strictness; and, as already noted (ante, § 664), it has its qualifications and exceptions, based on good sense and practical convenience. For the purpose of the present exception, the cases calling for its application seem to fall into three classes.

(1) Certain kinds of official statements are clearly intended by the law to be based upon actual personal observation. The transaction which the officer is authorized to record or certify is, in its nature, a transaction done by him or done before him by another person. He cannot fulfil his duty to do or supervise the transaction except so far as it is done by or before him, and thus the correlative duty to record, certify, or return involves necessarily a personal knowledge of the transaction. For example, a notary is authorized to certify that he himself protested a negotiable instrument, or to certify that some one "personally known" to him "personally appeared" before him and acknowledged a deed;[1] hence the nature of the duty and of the transaction presupposes the notary's ability to base his statement on personal knowledge.

That the principle applies to this class of cases has been well expounded in the following passages:

1821, GIBSON, J., in Stewart v. Allison, 6 S. & R. 327[2] (excluding a notary's certificate of protest stated by the notary on the stand to have been made on the information of his son, the notary not having served the notice himself): "Now put the case of a witness who has in his direct examination sworn positively to a fact, but from whom, on being cross-examined, it comes out that he personally knows nothing about the matter, having obtained all his information from a person on whose veracity he thinks he can depend. Ought not the Court to direct the jury that the whole of his evidence, taken with the explanation given, is incompetent and goes for nothing? . . . The assertion in a [notary's] protest of a fact founded on hearsay, which would be incompetent to be heard from a § 1635. [1] This has been true since the very origin of notaries: "scripsi quia et mihi preceptum est et omnia in presentia mea facta sunt," in a document of 1163 A.D.; quoted, with others, in Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre (1889), I. 495.

[2] Gibson, J., here was dissenting in that he wished to exclude the certificate entirely, while the other judges admitted it, feeling unwilling to decide whether the notary was falsifying on the stand or in his certificate; but all agreed that if the notary's testimony was true his certificate was inadmissible.

witness attending in the ordinary way, is not made competent and legal by the Act of Assembly. . . . The Legislature surely never intended to permit an officer to authenticate by his certificate a fact to which he would not, after being examined touching his means of knowledge, be permitted to swear. . . . I hold the notary competent to certify only what he personally knows to be true, and not what he may conjecture to be so from the relation of others. . . . The confidence supposed to be reposed in the truth and integrity of those officers by the Executive who appointed them is the ground on which the Legislature rested the substitution of their certificate for the ordinary judicial evidence of the facts asserted in it; and it therefore never could have intended to permit them to delegate this high personal trust to a stranger, acting without oath or even official responsibility."

1861, DIXON, C. J., in Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 413: "The notary's official oath is substituted for the ordinary judicial oath taken in the presence of the Court and jury, and he cannot lawfully and conscientiously certify or record, as matters of fact, things which he would be incompetent to testify to as a witness if called to the stand in the trial of a cause and which would be excluded as mere hearsay."

1865, HOLMES, J., in Commercial Bank v. Barksdale, 34 Mo. 563, 572: "The protest is to be evidence of the facts stated in it, of which the notary is supposed to have personal knowledge and credit is given to his official statements by the commercial world on the faith of his public and official character. In court the instrument speaks as a witness. Such statements made merely upon the information of another person would amount to hearsay only, if the notary were himself upon the stand as a witness. The notarial protest must state facts known to the person who makes it, and he cannot delegate his official character or his functions to another."

That the notary at any rate is one of those officers who are required to certify on nothing less than personal knowledge seems clear. For their certificates of protest of commercial paper, this has often been laid down.[3] For their certificates of acknowledgment of deeds, the rule is constantly enforced.[4]

[3] The practice of notaries to act in protests upon clerks' information has, however, obtained footing in some regions; and it is in England perhaps an unsettled question whether the practice would be legally recognized, at least for foreign bills; that it would not be was intimated by Buller, J., in Leftley v. Mills, 4 T. R. 170, 175 (1793), and was held by Lord Tenterden, C. J., in Vandewall v. Tyrrell, M. & M. 87 (1827), as reported by Mr. Chitty, in the seventh and following editions of his work on Bills, p. 458 (9th ed.); in the latter place is given a correspondence between the learned author and the notaries, in which the merits of the question are discussed.

That the notary must act personally is decided also in the following cases: 1844, Sacrider v. Brown, 3 McLean 481 ("This [the protest] must be done by the officer who acts under oath, and to whose official acts duly certified the law gives verity"); 1842, Onondaga Co. Bank v. Bates, 3 Hill N. Y. 53; 1843, Sheldon v. Benham, 4 Hill N. Y. 129, 131; 1845, Chenowith v. Chamberlin, 6 B. Monr. 60 (unless local custom sanctions the clerk's action); 1861, Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408, 412; 1865, Commercial Bank v. Barksdale, 34 Mo. 563, 572 (two in partnership, one making demand, the other drawing up the protest, excluded; see quotation supra). Compare Joost v. Craig (1901), 131 Cal. 504, 63 Pac. 840, and cases cited. So many questions of the law of commercial paper and the requisites of protest are usually involved in these rulings that they cannot be further examined here; see Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, II, §1959; and a collection of cases in 96 Am. Dec. 605.

Distinguish the use of the deceased clerk's entry under the Regular Entries exception (ante, § 1522), as in Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. 81, 85 (1838).

[4] The principle has been insisted upon repeatedly, but most of the decisions deal, not with the question of evidence whether the notary's statement of personal knowledge was true, but with the question of substantive law whether the omission of that statement from his certificate makes it useless for entitling the deed to record; the answer being always in the affirmative, and the implication being that the certificate would be equally useless if it were false in fact.

There is a collection of cases in a note to Livingston v. Kettelle, 41 Am. Dec. 168. The

In this respect, indeed, it deserves particular emphasis, as involving not merely the requirement of proper testimonial qualifications, but also the strict enforcement of the terms of his certificate. He certifies under his oath of office that A. B., known to him to be the person therein mentioned, personally appeared before him and executed the writing. If this was not so, then he is neither a good witness nor an honest officer. Yet in professional practice in some of our communities, it is not uncommon for a notary to give the certificate without such knowledge or in the absence of the person. Such practices tend to destroy the credit which the law gives to such certificates and to overturn the whole basis of security for the registration system. A specific penalty should be enforced for such violations of the oath of office. Courts should do what they can to insist on that faithful performance of official duty which alone is the justification for this branch of the Hearsay exceptions.

As for other officers than notaries, it may be difficult, no doubt, in particular instances, to determine whether the official statement belongs within this class. So far as the question has arisen, the cases may be elsewhere examined, under the different kinds of documents.[5] The proper test, in general, would seem to be whether the subject of the officer's duty is a transaction supposed in legal theory to be done by the officer or to occur or be done before him by another; if it is, then the recording or certifying of it presupposes the same conditions, in order to be admissible.

(2) Assuming still that the transaction is one in its nature required to be done by or before an officer, there are nevertheless many classes of public offices in which the work must be apportioned among subordinates. Clerks and treasurers, for example, have in populous districts one or more, perhaps scores, of assistants, to whom various parts of the work are assigned; the chief officer, on whom the general duty directly rests, retaining only a supervising function, and rarely doing in person the acts of recording, returning, or certifying. This is well understood and fully sanctioned as a proper and necessary mode of securing the performance of the official duty. The substantive law recognizes this; and it would be impossible and inconsistent in following cases are a portion only: 1858, Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 245; 1919, Anderson v. Aronsohn, 181 Cal. 294, 184 Pac. 12 (the opinion, by Lennon, J., sets forth forcefully the importance of preserving the principle of personal knowledge for a notary's certificate of acknowledgment, and offers a practicable definition of it); 1905, Ohio Nat'l Bank v. Berlin, 26 D. C. App. 218, 225; 1904, Lalakea v. Hilo Sugar Co., 15 Haw. 570; 1920, Myers v. Eley, 33 Ida. 266, 193 Pac. 77 (acknowledgment taken by telephone); 1857, Shephard v. Carriel, 19 Ill. 319; 1860, Gove v. Cather, 23 Ill. 641; 1868, Lindley v. Smith, 42 Ill. 527; 1870, Becker v. Quigg, 54 Ill. 396; 1861, Brinton v. Seevers, 12 Ia. 390; 1863, Reynolds v. Kingsbury, 15 Ia. 238; 1906, Com. v. Johnson, 123 Ky. 437, 96 S. W. 801 (whether a county clerk is liable for taking an acknowledgment of an impostor); 1907, Barnard v. Schuler, 100 Minn. 289, 110 N. W. 966 (good opinion by Start, C. J.); 1872, Callaway v. Fash, 50 Mo. 422; S. Dak. Rev. Code 1919, § 580 (the officer must "know, or has satisfactory evidence on the oath or affirmation of a credible witness, that the person making the acknowledgment is the individual" etc.); 1917, Figuers v. Fly, 137 Tenn. 358, 193 S. W. 117 (action against the notary).

For the question whether a certificate of acknowledgment is conclusive, ante, § 1347.

[5] See particularly §§ 1646, 1670, post (marriage-registers, etc.).

the law of Evidence to refuse equal recognition. When such an officer's record or certificate is made, no one supposes that the chief officer himself has had personal knowledge of the data stated over his name.

It cannot be doubted that such official statements are admissible. His duty makes him responsible for errors or defaults therein, no matter whose they are, and his duty should equally suffice to admit such statements. The question, it should be noted, is not whether a statement in the deputy's own name is admissible (as in § 1633, par. 8, ante), but whether a statement coming in the name of the officer himself is inadmissible if it appears that he made it, not on personal knowledge, but on the faith of a subordinate's information. Since the general nature of the official duty requires that the assistance of proper subordinates must be relied upon for its performance, it follows necessarily that the same assistance may be relied upon for the due recording of the things done. On principle, therefore, there seems to be no objection; and practical necessity certainly demands the same result.

Whether or not a given officer is one who in legal contemplation may properly employ the assistance of subordinates to do, and therefore to record, the transactions of his office is of course sometimes difficult to determine. It is easy to see, for example, that a notary's duty (as in the case above quoted) requires a strictly personal performance, and therefore personal knowledge. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the clerk of a busy court need not make in person the copies of records certified by him, nor know their correctness. In general, Courts are disposed liberally to enlarge the class of official statements which may properly be made on the faith of subordinates' acts.[6] But the principle extends only so far as the assistance relied upon is that of proper subordinates, and not that of outside persons or of other officers having independent duties; for in the latter alternative the statement belongs in the ensuing class.[7]

[6] Ala. 1881, Miller v. Boykin, 70 Ala. 469, 478 (postmaster's register of mail-arrivals and departures received, though not based on personal knowledge); Cal. 1904, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169 (rule stated for an official stenographer's transcript of testimony); People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 Pac. 177 (similar); D. C. 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 380 (Marshal's record of measurements of convicted persons, admitted, the measurements being actually taken by some unknown subordinate); Mass. 1886, Worcester v. Northborough, 140 Mass. 397, 401, 5 N. E. 270 (printed record of Massachusetts volunteers, published by adjutant-general under legislative resolve, admitted to show town of residence of a soldier; "this class of evidence is not strictly confined to facts within the personal knowledge of the officer making the record"); Mass. St. 1912, c. 64 (register of deeds for Worcester Co. may authorize in a specified manner an employee "to certify or attest as chief clerk records or copies of records," and such certified or attested documents shall be equally admissible as those done by "the register in person").

Contra: 1913, Butchers' S. & M. Ass'n. v. Boston, 214 Mass. 254, 101 N. E. 426 (drawtenders' official record of vessels passing, not admissible so far as made on reports by substitute drawtenders; unsound; decided on the principle of § 1530, ante, but that principle does not apply here, because the substitute is equally an official, hence need not be called; Worcester v. Northborough, not noticed).

[7] The following ruling, perhaps illiberal, illustrates this: 1820, Governor v. Jeffreys, 1 Hawks 208 (a certificate of the adjutant-general that the defendant, a colonel, did not make his return to the major-general as required by law, was held inadmissible, because the adjutant-general could not have had personal knowledge of the fact; although his certificate in general was evidence of the delinquencies of officers).

(3) Where the officer's statement is concerned with a transaction done, not by him or before him, but out of his presence (and out of the presence of his subordinates), the case is one in which obviously he can have no personal knowledge; the assumption must therefore be that his statement is inadmissible. It is to be noted, however, that the sufficient explanation is usually that the officer's duty does not extend to transactions out of his presence, and thus the recording or certifying of them is not covered by his official duty. For example, under the English ecclesiastical system it was the duty of the priest officiating at a baptism or a marriage to record the performance of the ceremony as an act done officially by him; but his duty was confined to the performance of the ceremony, and hence his record of the age of the persons baptized or married was not made as a part of his duty, since the age depended on the date of occurrence of birth at another time and place (post, § 1646). Thus, for matters not occurring in the presence of the officer, his record or certificate is inadmissible, not only because in general a witness must have personal knowledge, but also because an officer's duty is usually concerned only with matters done by or before him. Tested by either principle, there is a shortcoming.

Now there may be cases in which the officer's duty clearly does involve his ascertainment of facts occurring out of his presence and requiring his resort to sources of information other than his own senses of observation; for example, an assessor's record of the value of real estate and of its occupancy, or a registrar of voters' record of electors' residences. When such a duty clearly exists, the general doctrine above, that a witness should have personal knowledge, need not stand in the way, for (as already noted) it has its conceded limitations; and where the officer is vested with a duty to ascertain for himself by proper investigation, this duty should be sufficient to override the general principle. It is true that due caution should be observed before reaching the conclusion that the law has in fact in a given case intended to invest the officer with such an unusual duty. But when it clearly appears that a duty has been prescribed to investigate and to record or certify facts ascertained other than by personal observation, then it follows that, in accordance with the general principle of the present exception, the statement thus made becomes admissible. Such, in general, is the judicial attitude towards this class of questions. On the one hand, we find a general exclusion of statements not based on personal knowledge (of the officer or his subordinates); this exclusion being rested usually on the circumstance that the duty does not extend to such matters.[8] On the other hand, we find a few kinds of statements where it has clearly been made the officer's duty to investigate and record or report irrespective of personal knowledge; in such cases the statements are admitted; but Courts are disinclined to recognize many instances as belonging within this class.[9]

[8] Post, §§ 1639, 1646, 1648, 1664.

[9] Post, §§ 1670–1672.

Occasionally a statute makes the result clear by expressly declaring such statements admissible; but, in the absence of statute, Courts are found slow to infer merely from the nature of the office any specific duty to record or certify, on the faith of information derived from other persons, matters occurring without the officer's presence, — or, at least, any duty sufficient to render such statements admissible in evidence. This attitude is, on the whole, and apart from specific vagaries, a safe and practical one, because, so far as the sources of the officer's information are not personal to himself, they will in general be equally and sufficiently available in the ordinary way as testimony for the party desiring to make proof. The various instances in which this general question is illustrated may best be noted under the different kinds of documents.

§ 1636. Proposed Enlargement of Rule. It cannot be doubted that the rule of Evidence, in this vast field of application, is suffering seriously from failure to expand with change of circumstances. The principle of the common law was not liberal enough, and it was never liberally applied; Chief Justice Marshall's early pronouncement (post, § 1677) never found any vogue. The common law implied an authority in every official to keep a record of his doings, but it did not imply an authority (beyond a few instances) to make a report or return, or to make a certificate.

This narrow principle served well enough, perhaps, in the period and the community where it was generated; for there was but one jurisdiction, and all judicial records were centralized under the Chancellor in a single depository (post, § 1677); these circumstances, and the theory of a specific authority given by each impress of the Chancellor's seal, served to obviate serious inconvenience. But in a community like the United States, with now fifty jurisdictions, with the judicial system in each of them so decentralized that every county has one or more independent courts of record, and with an even more extensive hierarchy of State and county officials having independent functions, and scattered over wide areas, the multiple occasions for using the records, returns, and certificates of these various independent officials, make a far more complex demand on the original principle. Circumstances have so changed the entire condition of things that the primitive principle is outworn, and no longer serves the needs for such evidence.

Moreover, mechanical facilities have also changed, so that the strict safeguards of trustworthiness, suitable for the earlier modes of life, are no longer required. Rapid communication by telegraph makes it possible to verify doubts and check errors, as well as to prepare against forgery. Prompt transit by steam and electrical power make it possible to summon an official for 'viva voce' testimony if needed. Improved methods of copying, filing, and preserving records, make them readily accessible and verifiable.

In short, changes of condition make it both safe and imperative that a liberal rule of extensive scope should be recognized, as the logical modern development of the earlier principle. This conclusion is corroborated by the great bulk of legislation giving such an expansion in detail in every State. The thousands of statutes which expressly declare admissible the records, returns, and certificates of various specific officers prove that there is a legitimate demand in professional opinion for an enlargement of the narrow common-law rules. The unfortunate feature of these statutes is that they encumber the law with petty meticulous rules, each applicable only to an individual class of officers or documents. They virtually, in combination, rest upon a single large principle of official duty or authority. That large principle, already recognized in part in a few jurisdictions, should be explicitly formulated and recognized. It would not only save us from the lucubrations represented by the thousands of existing statutes, but would serve as a simple basis for the new kinds of officers and documents that may from time to time develop.

Accordingly, the following is offered as the sound rule for present and future conditions: [1]

1. Any statement in writing, made by a public officer acting under a duty or authority to make the statement, is admissible; subject to the following provisions:

2. The statement is admissible without calling the officer who made it or showing that he is deceased or otherwise unavailable.

But in the trial Court's discretion he may be summoned for cross-examination; and in the cases hereinafter provided for the party offering the statement must give reasonable notice before trial so that the opponent may apply seasonably for a summons for cross-examination.

3. The statement may be one made under a duty or authority expressly declared by statute, regulation, or order. If not expressly declared, the duty or authority will be implied in the following cases:

4. Registers and Records. Wherever there is a duty or authority for an officer to do or observe a thing, there is an implied duty or authority to enter in a record or register a statement of what is done or observed; and the statement is admissible.

5. Returns and Reports. (a) Wherever an officer's duty or authority requires him, while without the premises of his office, to do or observe something, he has an implied duty or authority, on returning to the official premises, to write down in a return or report what he did or observed; and the return or report is admissible.

(b) Whenever the officer's duty or authority requires him to obtain information other than by personal observation, he has an implied duty or authority to write down the results of such information; and the return or report is admissible, provided it has been kept on file in his or another office accessible to all persons interested.

§ 1636. [1] For a more elaborate and less liberal formulation, see the present writer's Pocket Code of Evidence, §§ 1090–1164.

6. Certificates. Every officer has an implied duty or authority to prepare and deliver out to an applicant a certificate stating anything which has been done or observed by him or exists in his office by virtue of some authority or duty, and the certificate is admissible.

7. Certified Copy. Every official custodian of a document has an implied authority or duty to make a copy of any document, not confidential, lawfully existing in his office and to deliver out therewith to an applicant a certificate stating that the copy is correct; and the certificate is admissible,

(a) to evidence the contents and genuineness of all official records lawfully kept in his custody;

(b) to evidence the contents of all private documents lawfully deposited in his custody;

(c) to evidence the execution of all private documents lawfully deposited in his custody, if by law the deposit is accompanied by some evidence of genuineness, such as the testimony of witnesses to execution, or the party's acknowledgment, or a certificate of such probate or acknowledgment from some other officer authorized thereto.

B. APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLES TO SPECIFIC KINDS OF DOCUMENTS

§ 1637. Three Types of Document: Register, Return, and Certificate. Official statements may of course be classified from various points of view. That classification will here be most serviceable whose distinctions rest on salient circumstances marking general limitations of the implied authority of officers, and therefore suggesting something as to the admissibility of a given document. These circumstances seem to concern mainly the form and the custody of the document. As to form, the statements may be regularly made in a series and collected in a general register or record, or they may be drawn up for each occasion as separate documents. As to custody, they may be preserved by the officer in official custody, or they may be given out to be carried away by the person wishing to use them. There thus arise three classes, in general sufficiently distinct, within which it would seem that all the various sorts of documents may be subsumed, namely, Registers (or Records), Returns (including Reports), and Certificates (including Certified Copies).

(1) A register or record differs from a return or report in that it comprises in a single volume a series of homogeneous statements, recorded by entries made more or less regularly; it differs from a certificate in that it is kept in the official custody. (2) A return or report differs from a register in that it is a single document, made separately for each transaction as occasion arises (perhaps filed or indexed with others, but having a separate existence of its own); this difference arising usually in practice from the circumstance that the statement deals with something done outside the official precincts and therefore not so fitted for entry in a single office volume. The return differs from the certificate in that it is preserved in official custody. A further distinction, within this class, between a return proper and a report is that the former deals with something personally done or observed by the officer, while the latter records the results of his investigations as to something that has occurred out of his presence. (3) A certificate differs from a return in that it is not preserved by the official, but is given out by him to an applicant for the latter's use. It differs from a register in that it is not a series of entries in a single volume.

In general, the practical importance of this distinction of terms appears in the following ways: (1) A register is usually authorized by implication to be kept by every officer to record his doings, and is therefore generally admissible without express authority to keep it. (2) A return is also usually by implication authorized for any officer whose duties involve the doing of things outside of the premises of his office, — for example, a sheriff or a surveyor; yet, so far as it is merely a report — i. e. not based on personal knowledge — few officers, if any, are found vested by implication with such authority, and consequently an express authority must be sought; moreover, the number of officers whose duties necessarily authorize the making of a return proper is small. (3) A certificate seems at common law rarely, if ever, to have been regarded as authorized by implication, and therefore an express authority must be sought in each instance. Thus, the distinction between the three classes has important consequences in determining the admissibility of the various sorts of official statements.

The terms above taken are not, it is true, employed in common usage with such precision as to mark these specific distinctions; nevertheless, the terms are sufficiently typical, and the ideas ordinarily conveyed by them do roughly correspond to the above definitions; it is enough if here they are understood to be employed in those senses. Furthermore, the lines between these three classes, while broadly enough marked in general, cannot always be strictly marked. Some official documents — for example, a justice's certificate of marriage, recorded with the town clerk — may conceivably be placed under one or another of the classes. In other cases, the officer prepares the document in two forms or prepares it in different forms in different jurisdictions, — for example, a notary, who in some localities gives out separate certificates of protest, in others enters the protest in a general register and gives out copies of the register. Nevertheless, the broad distinctions, and the legal consequences already mentioned, are clear enough, and serve sufficiently to group the various sorts for considering their admissibility in evidence.

§ 1638. Other Rules applicable to Official Documents, discriminated (Production of Original, Authentication, Privilege, etc.). The sole inquiry here is the scope of an exception to the Hearsay rule, i. e. the admissibility of an official document as testimony to the facts asserted in it by the officer. Other rules of evidence will also find application to the same document; but their bearing must be discriminated:

(1) The rule requiring the Production of the Original (ante, § 1179) finds constant application; but, assuming the original to be produced, the question still remains whether it is receivable as an assertion of fact under the present exception to the Hearsay rule.

(2) The rule of Authentication (post, § 2129) has always to be satisfied; for an official document may belong to a class clearly admissible under the present exception, and still the document actually offered must be authenticated as genuinely that which it purports to be.

(3) The rule of Completeness (post, § 2094), requiring the whole of a document to be used, and not merely a portion of it, has constant application to official documents, and may exclude that which would be admissible so far merely as the present exception was concerned.

(4) The rules of Preference (ante, §§ 1265, 1325, 1335, 1345) apply frequently to official documents, by way of requiring their use in preference to other kinds of testimony.

(5) The rules of Privilege (post, § 2367) occasionally forbid the use of official documents, or allow the officer to refuse to permit their use.

(6) The rule of Integration, or Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2400), has a frequent bearing on official documents.

1. REGISTERS AND RECORDS

§ 1639. General Principle, and Sundry Applications. Wherever there is a duty to record official doings, the record thus kept is admissible. This much is conceded; the judicial language already quoted (ante, §§ 1632, 1633) sufficiently illustrates the principle. The only matter of doubt can be whether there is in a given case a duty to record. It is clear that such a duty need not be expressly prescribed by statute or regulation, but may be implied from the nature of the office (ante, § 1633, par. 1).

Further, it may safely be laid down, as a general principle, that wherever there is a duty to do, then there is also a duty to record the things done. It is not conceivable that governmental work could be adequately carried on without the written preservation of the doings. The necessity for supervision and correction and for future reference to past doings makes this conclusion inevitable. Such a general principle seems not to have been expressly adopted by the Courts, but it is distinctly implied in the body of the decisions.

It must of course be taken with certain natural qualifications. The theory of official duty does not suppose every officer without exception to be engaged alike in doing and writing; some merely do, and others merely write. The theory applies not so much to individual officers as to each office or administrative group taken as a whole. It is the doings of the office, as such, that are to be recorded by some appropriate officer therein. For example, no one need maintain that the duty of the jail-sentry to watch on the wall implies also a duty to record from time to time the fact that he has watched certain prisoners; and yet the general duty of the prison-warden to keep the persons committed to him does imply a duty to record the persons committed and the length of time during which they are kept. With this qualification, then, that the principle applies to the doings of an office considered as a whole or as a distinct subdivision, the principle still remains true that wherever an official duty to do is found, there is also a duty on some appropriate person for the office to record the doings. Practically, then, the admissibility of a given register or record depends ultimately on whether the officer has the duty to do the class of things recorded; if they are within his duty, then the record is admissible; otherwise not.

The question of Evidence thus depends largely on the question of administrative law. Not all the judicial rulings conform strictly to this principle, but it unquestionably represents the general judicial attitude.[1]

§ 1639. [1] In the following list are contained only cases dealing with registers and records of sundry sorts; instances of documents in the nature of certificates and returns of sundry sorts will be found post, §§ 1672, 1674; in the following list are also placed judicial rulings made under statutes:

England: 1785, R. v. Aickles, 1 Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 436 (prison-register expressly required by law to be kept, admitted); 1802, Salte v. Thomas, 3 B. & P. 190 (prison-books, not admitted; partly because "the gaoler is not required by law to keep them"); 1813, Henry v. Leigh, 3 Camp. 499 (clerks in the Bankruptcy Court who saw the Lord Chancellor sign the certificates, and then made entries of the fact in a book kept for and consulted by the public, the clerks not being sworn officers; the entries not received); 1815, R. v. Grimwood, 1 Price 369, 371 (official excise-books, admitted; Thomson, C. B.: "If all the officers during the period to which they relate were necessarily to be called to substantiate them by proof, there would in most instances be an end of recovering duties in arrear"); 1829, Arnold v. The Bishop, 5 Bing. 316 (a bishop's register, admitted to prove "the business transacted at the bishop's visitation"; here, the existence of a custom as to a curate's election); 1838, Merrick v. Wakley, 8 A. & E. 170 (medical officer's book of returns of attendance, etc., in workhouse, excluded; see quotation ante, § 1632); 1845, Irish Society v. Bishop of Derby, 12 Cl. & F. 641, 657 (limits of admissibility of records of bishops as ecclesiastical officials, determined); 1863, The Maria das Dorias, 32 L. J. Adm. 163 (government lighthouse-journals, admitted); 1866, The Catherina Maria, L. R. 1 Ad. & Ec. 53 (returns of coastguard, admitted in a collision suit to show the weather conditions); 1920, Casey v. Kennedy, 52 D. L. R. 326, [illegible] B. (assault and battery; medical history sheet, by a medical board examining plaintiff under the Military Service Act, 1917, admitted as a public document).

United States: Federal: 1878, Evanston v. Gunn, 99 U. S. 660 (records of weather kept by U. S. Meteorological Bureau, admitted); 1882, The Sandringham, 10 Fed. 556, 508 (reports of a storm, from a U. S. signal-station, admitted); 1892, Daly v. Webster, 1 U. S. App. 573, 611, 4 C. C. A. 10, 56 Fed. 483 (copyright clerk's book, received to show deposit of a play); 1896, White v. U. S., 164 U. S. 100, 17 Sup. 38 (book of entries of receipts and discharges of convicts, kept by a jailer, admitted); 1917, Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Co. v. U. S., 3d C. C. A., 240 Fed. 903 (payment of dividends to U. S. Treasury; records of accounts kept in the U. S. Treasury Department, admitted); 1919, Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Co. v. U. S., 250 U. S. 123, 39 Sup. 407 (action for dividends due to the U. S.; books of account of the U. S. Treasury Department, kept pursuant to U. S. laws, admitted as public records); Alabama: 1881, Miller v. Boykin, 70 Ala. 469, 478 (postmaster's required register of arrival and departure of mails, receivable; but said groundlessly to serve only for collateral issues); Connecticut: 1902, Mears v. R. Co., 75 Conn. 171, 52 Atl. 610 (weather in Waltham, allowed to be evidenced by the Federal bureau's records at Boston, 10 miles away, the nearest office of the bureau); Columbia (Dist.): 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 380 (record of the measurements of convicted persons, kept by the marshal for the Department of Justice, admitted); 1900, Snell v. U. S., 16 D. C. App. 501, 513 (entries in the books of the Georgia State Sanitarium, concerning insane persons, not admitted to show facts of their history occurring before entering); Florida: 1918, Branch v. State, 76 Fla. 558, 80 So. 482 (embezzlement; official records of the State comptroller's office, showing the account of the defendant tax-collector as rendered to the State treasurer, admitted, applying several statutes); Illinois: 1921, Carlin v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co., 297 Ill. 184, 130 N. E. 371 (personal injury; issue as to fencing the right

Statute has of course frequently stepped in to make expressly admissible many kinds of registers and records. In most instances the statutory of way; records of Chicago commissioner of public works, in the form of "letter-press copies" of documents signed by him, addressed to all railroads, etc., and kept at his office in bound volumes, admitted without proof of mailing or receiving, as official records); Iowa: 1876, Butler v. Ins. Co., 45 Ia. 93, 96 (record of State insane hospital, kept by assistant physician, not under any authority or duty, excluded); 1897, Huston v. Council Bluffs, 101 Ia. 33, 69 N. W. 1130 (United States Meteorological Office's records, admitted); 1905, Monarch Mfg. Co. v. Omaha, C. B. & S. R. Co., 127 Ia. 511, 103 N. W. 493 (Huston v. Council Bluffs approved); 1906, Jones' Estate, 130 Ia. 177, 106 N. W. 610 (record of supervisors of a county as to a pauper, held not authorized); Maine: 1915, Inhabitants of Rumford v. Inhabitants of Upton, 113 Me. 543, 95 Atl. 226 (pauper supplies; town treasurer's books of account, received as public records); Massachusetts: 1857, Gurney v. Howe, 9 Gray 407 (postmaster's record of registered letters, admitted); 1904, Jordan v. Carberry, 185 Mass. 181, 69 N. E. 1062 (town clerk's issuance of dog-license to C. is no evidence of C.'s ownership or keeping, unless brought to C.'s knowledge); 1904, Cashin v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 185 Mass. 543, 70 N. E. 930 (certain hospital records, excluded); 1908, Allen v. Kidd, 197 Mass. 256, 84 N. E. 122 (assistant city engineer's notebook, kept with the public records, not admitted to show the side lines of any and all streets, his duty not having that scope; this is a narrow decision); 1909, Delaney v. Framingham G. F. & P. Co., 202 Mass. 359, 88 N. E. 773 (records of the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Carney Hospital, made before the duty imposed by St. 1905, infra, n. 2, requiring the keeping of records of "cases under their care," not admitted); 1916, Fondi v. Boston Mutual Life Ins. Co., 224 Mass. 6, 112 N. E. 612 (to evidence tuberculosis in the deceased, the insurer offered a copy of a destroyed original card, made at the office of the State Board of Health, and containing a record of the bacteriologist's analysis of some sputum, identified as taken by a physician from the defendant and sent to the Board; excluded, as "not a public record in the sense of Rev. L. c. 35, § 5"; nothing is said about any common law principle; in this instance, the authentication appears to have been defective; but it is a serious matter to refuse the quality of official statements to records of a State Board of Health; and this learned Court has indicated, in its several rulings, a marked tendency to be needlessly and obstructively strict on this point); 1921, Cawley v. Northern Waste Co., — Mass. —, 132 N. E. 365 (owner's action against lessee for damage to the building by fire; chief of fire departments' "entry made as to the cause of the fire," excluded; unsound); for hospital records in this State, see post, § 1707; Michigan: 1887, People v. Foster, 64 Mich. 717, 720, 31 N. W. 596 (record of weather by U. S. Signal Service, not admitted in a criminal case; unsound; compare § 1398, ante); 1911, Worden L. & S. Co. v. Minneapolis St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 168 Mich. 74, 133 N. W. 949 (Federal weather records, here excluded because relating to the wind at another point); Mississippi: 1840, Newman v. Doe, 4 How. Miss. 535 (Indian agent's record of names, admitted); Missouri: 1906, Levels v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 196 Mo. 606, 94 S. W. 275 (public school teacher's register of pupils' ages, kept by requirement of law, admitted); 1922, State v. Tarwater, — Mo. —, 239 S. W. 480 (murder; plea, insanity; certain records of an insane asylum in 1885, purporting to be made under Rev. St. 1919, § 12283, held not admissible; unsound); New Hampshire: 1921, Laird v. Boston & M. R. Co., — N. H. —, 114 Atl. 275 (action for injury to the plaintiff's eye in 1913; defendant offered to show that the war-draft board had accepted the plaintiff as physically fit in 1917 or 1918; excluded; unsound; the official examination fulfilled all the requisites of an official statement; the opinion goes upon the fallacious analogy of a judgment which must be binding on both parties; this is an ancient notion, which it is astonishing to find relied upon by this court; the opinion does not understand the point); New Jersey: 1849, Browning v. Flanagin, 22 N. J. L. 567, 572 (clerk's "sealing docket," containing entries of the issue and return of writs, held "an official register"); 1920, State v. Matarazza, 94 N. J. L. 263, 109 Atl. 304 (appraiser's record of a liquor license, admitted; "whether it be a book, or sheets of paper in a binder, or a box of cards on the card-index system, . . . if made up as a record, it has that evidential quality"); North Carolina: 1922, Peterson v. Tidewater Power Co., — N. C. —, 111 S. E. 8 (value of property burned); Oregon: 1903, Scott v. R. Co., 43 Or. 26, 72 Pac. 594 (U. S. Weather Bureau records of rainfall, admitted; here both the records verified by the incumbent on the stand and the records of his predecessor were admitted; of course the predecessor, under the principle of § 1422, ante, did not need to be called; compare § 665, ante); Pennsylvania: 1865, Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. 332, 338 (warden's record of prisoner's presence etc., treated as admissible); 1910, Hufnagle v. Delaware & H. Co., 227 Pa. 476, 76 Atl. 205 (a diary kept by law in a U. S. Weather Bureau station, held not improperly excluded; here the Supreme Court gives the law of Evidence a needless rebuff in order to save declaration was unnecessary. Liberal judicial rulings would have saved the law from the copious statutes.[2] reversing the case; better have held that the ruling was erroneous but harmless); Vermont: 1887, State v. Spaulding, 60 Vt. 228, 233, 14 Atl. 769 (assessment-rolls of collector of internal revenue, admitted to show the issuance of a liquor license to the defendant); Washington: 1905, Anderson v. Hilker, 38 Wash. 632, 80 Pac. 848 (records of the U. S. Weather Bureau, read by the officer in charge, admitted); Wisconsin: 1901, Hempton v. State, 111 Wis. 127, 86 N. W. 596 (record of insane person kept by law at State hospital, admitted).

For postmasters' certificates, see post, § 1674.

For postmarks as evidence of date, see post, § 2152.

For hospital records in general, see post, § 1707.

For other specific kinds of registers, see the ensuing section-titles.

[2] In the following list, only registers and records are dealt with; statutes about certificates and returns will be found post, §§ 1672, 1674; it is sometimes difficult to say in which class a document properly belongs:

CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act § 26, as amended by St. 1921, 9–10 Geo. V, c. 12 ("A copy of any entry in any book kept in any office or department of the Government of Canada, or in any commission, board or other branch of the public service of Canada, shall be received as evidence of such entry, and of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded, if it is proved by the oath or affidavit of an officer of such department, commission, board or other branch of the said public service, that such book was, at the time of the making of the entry, one of the ordinary books kept in such office, department, commission, board or other branch of the said public service, that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business of such office, department, commission, board or other branch of the said public service, and that such copy is a true copy thereof"); § 28, as amended by St. 1921 (seven days' or more notice required for using such copies); Alberta: St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, Evid. Act, § 31 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 28); British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 37 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 17 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26, applying also to any province of Canada); § 21 (like ib. § 22); New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 57 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26, including "this Province" also); Newfoundland: St. 1919, c. 21, Evid. Act, § 2 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26); Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 13 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26, including also the books of a department of Nova Scotia); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 28 ("any entry in any book of account kept in any department of the government of Canada or of this province" is admissible to prove the facts recorded, "if it is proved by the oath or affidavit of an officer of such department that such book was at the time of the making of the entry one of the ordinary books kept in such department, that the entry was, apparently and as the deponent believes, made in the usual and ordinary course of business of such department"); Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, Evidence Act, § 12 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26); Yukon: Cons. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 13 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 26, adding "or of this Territory").

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 886, Code 1919, § 1389 (in a suit for delinquency of a money officer, books of the Treasury Department are admissible); § 887, Code, § 1390 (on trial for embezzling public moneys, books and proceedings of the Treasury Department are admissible); § 889, Code, § 1391 (certain account-books in the Post-Office Department, admissible); § 896, Code, § 1399 ("all official entries in the books or records" of a U. S. consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent, admissible); Code, § 10375 (embezzlement of public money; a "transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury," admissible); California: Civ. C. 1872, § 2471 (county clerk's register of partnership names, etc., admissible); C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1920, 1926 ("Entries in public or other official books or records, made in the performance of his duty by a public officer of this State or by another person in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law," receivable; entry "made by an officer or board of officers or under the direction and in the presence of either, in the course of official duty," receivable to show "the facts stated in such entry"); § 1946 (regular entries of a decedent "in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law" are admissible); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 1300 (books of State railroad — the Western & Atlantic — to be evidence in actions by or against it); § 3819 (county surveyor's certified plot of boundaries, made by processioning, admissible); § 5756 (Georgia Soldier Roster Commission's roster of State Civil war service, admissible); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2139 (possession of such receipt on premises is evidence of keeping for sale, etc.); § 120 (election records, to be evidence); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7954 (like Col. C. C. P. § 1920); § 7959 (like ib. § 1926); § 7967 (like ib. § 1946); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 15, § 6 (State auditor's books of account with collectors, etc., admissible); c. 79, § 15 (county clerk's record of swearing, resignation, etc., of justices and constables, admissible); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2130 (books of State or county auditor or county board,

It is to be remembered that a register or record otherwise admissible may fail to be received for one of the general reasons already noted (ante, §§ 1633– admissible to show a balance against officials charged with embezzlement); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7289 ("books and records required by law to be kept by any probate judge, county clerk, county treasurer, register of deeds, clerk of the district court, justice of the peace, police judge, or other public officers," admissible); Kentucky: Gen. St. 1899, c. 81, § 17, Stats. 1915, § 3760 (official records in general; quoted ante, § 1352, n. 11); § 2572 d (livery keeper's register of hirings, required to be kept, and made admissible in evidence for offences under this act "if the livery keeper at the time issue a duplicate memorandum to the person hiring," etc.); Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 6 (Secretary of State's register, admissible to prove publication of a law); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 11, § 15 (town clerk's record of tax collector's bond, to be evidence of its contents); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 79 (replacing St. 1905, c. 330, St. 1908, c. 269, St. 1912, c. 442; records of hospitals supported by the State or a town or public charity, admissible; quoted post, § 1707, and cases applying it); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12522 (weather conditions provable in civil causes by U. S. signal service record); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 2714 (records of board of education admissible); § 8423 ("The original record made by any public officer in the performance of his official duty shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the facts required or permitted by law to be by him recorded"); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 4720 (books of State board of pharmacy, admissible); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10570, 10576, 10594 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1920, 1926, 1946); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 6083 (books and records of county clerk and county treasurer, to be evidence of sale, etc., in tax proceedings); § 6149 ("all records and documents kept on file by any officer" under the delinquent taxes law, to be 'prima facie' evidence of matters stated therein); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §3951 (State librarian's entries, admissible to prove delivery of books and date thereof, in action for fines, etc.); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence, § 27 (public record in a foreign State, etc., admissible, if there admissible); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 73 (records of cattle sanitary board, admissible); New York: Con. L. 1909, Insanity, § 93 (on habeas corpus, a patient's "medical history" as it appears in the case-book of a State hospital is admissible); C. P. A. 1920, § 375 (records of N. Y. State and other named official weather bureau, or a certified copy, admissible to prove the conditions of weather and of precipitation); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 513 (records of State board of dental examiners, admissible to prove the facts stated); §§ 7917, 7918 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1920, 1926); § 6432 (register of partnerships by clerk of district court, admissible); § 517 (record of State board of pharmacy, to be 'prima facie' evidence "of the matters therein recorded"); § 2713 (State board of veterinary medical examiners; books and records to be evidence of "all the matter therein recorded"); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 13674 (books of State auditor or county auditor or commissioners, admissible to prove a balance due against a public officer charged with embezzlement); § 145 (Governors' records of pardons, extraditions, notaries, etc., admissible); § 99 (penitentiary record of pardon-case, admissible); § 2407 (county commissioners' record of proceedings, admissible); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 5765 (county clerk's road record, admissible); § 6541 ("The books and records required by law to be kept by any probate judge, county clerk, county treasurer, register of deeds, clerk of the district court, justice of the peace, police judge, or any other public officers, may be received in evidence"); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 768 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1920, inserting "or of the U. S."); § 790 (like ib. § 1946, inserting after "writings," "of a like character," and after "deceased," "or without the State"); § 2752 (State treasurer's book, admissible); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 315 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1920); § 328 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946); Admin. C. 1917, § 652 (official embezzlement: auditor's books admissible, and provable by copy; also "bonds, contracts, or other papers," but the Court may require production of the original); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1439 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1920); § 1444 (like C. § 1926); Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1461 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1946, adding the words "contract or employment"); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1896, c. 62, § 11 (school district clerk's record of notice of meeting, admissible); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2726-7 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1920, 1926); § 1339 (register of partnerships by clerk of circuit court, admissible); § 10324 (illegal sale of liquor; quoted post, § 1680); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5583 (records of State Department of this or other domestic State or foreign State, or public documents purporting to have been printed by order of the Legislature or either branch, receivable to prove "acts of the Executive"); Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3698 (in State suits for official money defaults, records, etc., of comptroller of public accounts are admissible); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7093 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1920); § 7099 (like ib. § 1926); § 7113 (like ib. § 1946); § 3417 (State engineer's maps and records to be 'prima facie' evidence of the facts stated or delineated therein); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1902 (U. S. weather records "taken under direction of any department of the U. S. government," admissible 1635); in particular, a register of things done or occurring not within the personal knowledge of the officer may sometimes be excluded on that ground alone.

§ 1640. Assessors' Books; Electoral Register. (1) The duty of a tax-assessor requires him ordinarily to ascertain, for each piece of property, the person owning or occupying it and the value of the property. It is also clearly his duty to record the facts thus ascertained.

The only objection to the admissibility of his record as evidence of these facts must arise from the principle already considered (ante, § 1635), that the record of the assessor is not of his own personal deeds or observation, but of facts occurring without his observation. This objection is of no force when the officer's duty clearly requires him — as in the assessor's case — to depend upon investigation. If the assessor does not merely record the sworn statement of the claimant, but also satisfies himself by independent means, and follows his own judgment, his finding deserves some credit. It is true that the record is not made expressly for use as evidence in court; but it is certainly made for a weighty purpose; and few official documents are made expressly for use in evidence. It is also true that in many communities the assessment-book notoriously assesses values far below the actual standards; and that in others the assessor accepts without question the owner's filed statement; where these practices prevail, it is simple enough to reject those particular books as untrustworthy evidence of value, and as inadmissible. But where the books are not thus notoriously untrustworthy, there seems to be no sound objection to receiving them. No one maintains that they are conclusive; but at least they afford some evidence to a rational mind seeking the truth.

There is much judicial difference of opinion as to their admission. It would seem that to prove the value of property [1] they should be admissible, in civil cases, by certified copy under oath by the officer at the place of taking and keeping); Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 7088 (State weigher's bill of weight of shingles or lumber, to be evidence of the facts stated); § 7078 (State logscaler's books, to be evidence of the matters stated); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 150, § 29 b (State board of pharmacy's "books and register," admissible); § 29 e (State board of optometry's record of licenses, admissible); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4161 (records of village, as to boundaries, etc., admissible); § 4162 (records in office of county treasurer or clerk, admissible); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 2893 (records of clerk of board of county commissioners and county treasurer, admissible to prove sale of realty for taxes, etc.).

§ 1640. [1] In the following list are included those rulings which receive the assessors' records only as containing the admission of the owner as a party-opponent in the case (as noted post):

Admitted: IRELAND: 1844, Welland v. Middleton, 11 Ir. Eq. 603, Sugden, L. C. (assessment-book admissible to show value); 1848, Swift v. M'Tiernan, 11 Ir. Eq. 602, Brady, L. C. (same).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1830, Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349, 360 (legality of sale for taxes; the assessor's book "was made out and arranged by an officer in pursuance of a duty expressly enjoined by law; this not only makes the tax-book evidence, but the best evidence which can be given of the facts it contains; in this book are stated the name of the owner of the property, and his residence, if known; the number of the square, the number of the lot, the square feet it contains; the rate of assessment, the valuation, and the amount of the tax"); Alabama: 1890, Birmingham M. R. Co. v. Smith, 89 Ala. 305, 7 So. 634 (eminent domain; tax-assessor's valuation said to be inadmissible, but the owner's sworn statement of value filed with the assessor, held admissible against him); Arkansas: 1898, White v. B. & F. G. Co., 65 Ark. 278, 45 S. W. 1000 (admitted to show value of personalty); California: 1907, Central Pacific R. Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 303, 92 Pac. 849 (allowable on cross-examination, to test an expert); Colorado: 1875, Beckwith v. Talbot, 2 Colo. 639, 651 (cattle-sale; defendant's agent's tax-schedule of the cattle, admitted against him); Georgia: 1861, Lynch v. Lively, 32 Ga. 575, 577 (administration; the intestate's return of taxable property, admitted against an applicant for administration); 1895, Vernon S. R. Co. v. Savannah, 95 Ga. 387, 22 S. E. 625 (eminent domain; the owning corporation's return for taxation, admitted); Illinois: 1921, People ex rel. Miller, V. C. B. & Q. R. R., 300 Ill. 399, 133 N. E. 325 (official records and reports of State tax commission, admitted, in a suit for delinquent taxes); Maryland: 1905, Gossage v. Phila. B. & W. R. Co., 101 Md. 698, 61 Atl. 692 (county commissioners' books, based upon the plaintiff's admissions, received against him to show the value of a ship); Massachusetts: 1899, Manning v. Lowell, 173 Mass. 100, 53 N. E. 160 (cited ante, § 1060; received as containing the owner's admission); Missouri: 1897, Banking House v. Darr, 139 Mo. 660, 41 S. W. 227 (cited ante, § 1060; similar); 1898, St. Louis O. H. & C. R. Co. v. Fowler, 142 Mo. 670, 44 S. W. 771 (defendants' assessment list, admitted against him); Pennsylvania: 1877, Hanover Water Co. v. Iron Co., 84 Pa. 285; 1891, Mifflin Bridge Co. v. Juniata Co., 144 Pa. 365, 375, 22 Atl. 896 (eminent domain; the owning corporation's officers' sworn valuation, admitted against itself); 1897, West Chester & W. P. R. Co. v. Chester Co., 182 Pa. 40, 51, 37 Atl. 905 (similar); Texas: 1903, Boyer and Lucas v. St. Louis S. F. & T. R. Co., 97 Tex. 107, 76 S. W. 441 (damage by a railroad; the plaintiff's rendition of taxable property, received as an admission); Vermont: 1895, Hubbard v. Moore, 67 Vt. 539, 32 Atl. 465, semble (tax inventory, receivable only so far as it is an admission); 1907, Ripton v. Brandon, 80 Vt. 234, 67 Atl. 541 (quadrennial appraisal, admitted to show value of realty); West Virginia: 1910, McHenry v. Parkersburg, 66 W. Va. 533, 66 S. E. 750 (assessment admitted under Code 1899, c. 29, § 115, Code 1906, § 801).

Excluded: Arkansas: 1884, Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Eddy, 42 Ark. 527 (eminent domain; assessor's valuation of land, excluded, because "being for a different purpose, not a fair criterion of its market value"); 1909, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Magness, 93 Ark. 46, 123 S. W. 786 (assessor's valuation, excluded); Illinois: 1905, Sanitary District v. P. F. W. & C. R. Co., 216 Ill. 575, 75 N. E. 248 (question reserved); 1906, Lewis v. Englewood Elev. R. Co., 223 Ill. 223, 79 N. E. 44 (eminent domain; the assessed valuation of the land, not allowed to be asked of the owner producing his tax receipts; on the ground that, for real property, the owner is not required to list its value for taxation and therefore the assessed valuation does not involve any admission on his part; as to the theory of official statements by the assessor, the Court merely adds that "the assessor himself might have been a competent witness"); 1914, Kelley v. People's Nat'l F. Ins. Co., 262 Ill. 158, 104 N. E. 188 (assessor's schedule of value of household goods, not admissible against the owner; whether admissible as a return made by the owner or agent, not decided); Kentucky: 1901, Scott v. O'Neil, — Ky. —, 62 S. W. 1042 (assessment excluded as "hearsay"); Massachusetts: 1855, Brown v. R. Co., 5 Gray 35, 40 (eminent domain; "it is questionable whether any valuation made for the special purpose of taxation," several years before, is admissible); 1863, Flint v. Flint, 6 All. 34, 37 (not admitted to show "the actual value of the house"); 1869, Kenerson v. Henry, 101 Mass. 152, 155 (assessed valuation of an estate, excluded); 1869, Com. v. Heffron, 102 Mass. 148, 151 (excluding an assessor's book as evidence that the defendant's house was within a certain town's boundary different from that alleged in the indictment; Gray, J.: "The assessment can be no better evidence of the situation of land than it is of the value of land or the domicil of the person. The domicil of persons, the situation and value of property, and other facts, are required by the tax acts to be ascertained and recorded by the assessors, according to their best information and belief, for the sole purpose of the assessment and collection of the tax; and there would be great danger of injustice if their estimates of any of these details or incidents were held to be competent evidence against third persons of any fact of which better evidence is obtainable"); 1894, Anthony v. R. Co., 162 Mass. 60, 65, 37 N. E. 780 (assessors' valuation, not received to show value of a building burned); 1908, Atherton v. Emerson, 199 Mass. 199, 85 N. E. 530 (official appraisal by appraisers in bankruptcy, excluded); 1922, Johnson v. Lowell, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 629 (land-condemnation; assessed value of other parcels, held not admissible under St. 1913, c. 401, nor otherwise); Nevada: 1873, Virginia & T. R. Co. v. Henry, 8 Nev. 165, 174 (eminent domain; defendant's sworn valuation to the assessor, said obiter to be inadmissible, except to contradict him); North Carolina: 1899, Ridley v. R. Co., 124 N. C. 37, 32 S. E. 379 (tax-list made by assessors, not admissible to show value of land); 1904, Suffolk & C. R. Co. v. West End L. & I. Co., 137 N. C. 330, 49 S. E. 350 (assessor's list, not admitted to show value; collecting cases); Rhode Island: 1904, Spink v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 26 R. I. 115, 58 Atl. 499 (damage by a railroad fire; the assessor's valuation not admitted); Wisconsin: 1886, Tuckwood v. Hanthorn, 67 Wis. 326, 337, 30 N. W. 705 (sale in fraud of creditors; tax-roll held not admissible to show subject to the above limitations, as well as to prove its occupancy,[2] or the ownership or the lack of property by a particular person;[3] the objection, in the last instance, that the title-deeds should be produced, is disposed of by the same reasoning (ante, § 1246) that makes it proper for a person to testify on the stand that he is or is not the owner of property. They should also be admissible, it would seem, to prove any other facts which the duty of the assessor may require him to ascertain for the purpose of taxation, — for example, location,[4] age,[5] alienage, coverture, and the like.

It is to be noted that wherever the books are required to be based in part on the sworn statement, return, or list of a claimant or owner, then, as against that person, the statement, or the book containing it, may be used against him as involving in effect his admission;[6] and it is upon this theory plaintiff's lack of money, being receivable only by statute in a proceeding to enforce the tax; but the plaintiff's statements to the assessor were received as admissions).

So too, the valuation of benefit found by a jury of viewers has been held inadmissible, though the individual jurors may be called as witnesses: 1921, Re County Ditch No. 33, 150 Minn. 69, 184 N. W. 374 (citing prior cases).

[2] Eng. 1824, Doe v. Cartwright, Ry. & Mo. 62 (tax-collector's entry of payment, admitted to show occupation by Y.; but put on the ground of a declaration against interest, ante, § 1458); 1834, Doe v. Seaton, 2 A. & E. 171, 176, 178 (land-tax books admitted as corroborative evidence of occupation); 1833, Doe v. Arkwright, ib. 182, note (land-tax books not admitted to show occupation by an individual member of a family, in view of a practice to assess merely in the general family name); 1888, Blount v. Layard, cited in 1891, 2 Ch. 681, 691 (assessments for church and poor rates, admitted to show who were tenants); 1891, Smith v. Andrews, 2 Ch. 678, 694 (union-workhouse tax-books assessing a tax upon specific occupiers of land, admitted, the officers' "duty being to ascertain who is the occupier of the property and to enter his name as the person rateable in respect of it"); U. S. 1886, Fletcher v. Fuller, 120 U. S. 534, 552, 7 Sup. 667 (title by presumption of lost grant; the assessment of taxes for many years on the claimants, "such assessment being required to be made, under the laws of the State, to occupants or owners," said to be "circumstances of great significance").

[3] Ark. 1875, Winter v. Baudel, 30 Ark. 362, 371 (assessor's books, received to show that persons listed had no property above the exemption-limit); Ga. 1861, Tolleson v. Posey, 32 Ga. 372, 375 (assessor's books, admitted to show the defendant's wealth, as being based on his admissions); 1905, Ivey v. Cowart, 124 Ga. 159, 52 S. E. 436 (tax-return, receivable as an admission, to show the contents of lots of land); Ill. 1920, People v. Thompson, 295 Ill. 187, 129 N. E. 155 (under St. 1917, p. 661, the assessment book is evidence of ownership and liability); Ind. 1881, Painter v. Hall, 75 Ind. 208, 213 (assessment list, admitted as an official document "to show the amount of property owned by the assessed"); 1881, Hall v. Bishop, 78 Ind. 370, 371 (list admitted as embodying the admission of a party); 1904, Fudge v. Marquell, 164 Ind. 447, 72 N. E. 565 (action on a note; plaintiff's tax schedules received as an admission of non-ownership by omission of the note); N. C. 1918, Belk v. Belk, 175 N. C. 69, 94 S. E. 726 (tax-lists, admitted); Or. 1892, Beekman v. Hamlin, 23 Or. 313, 314, 31 Pac. 707 (assessment-rolls, admitted to show a debtor insolvent, in connection with a presumption of payment); Tex. 1921, Santikos v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 81, 233 S. W. 848 (violating Sunday amusement law; to prove defendant's ownership of theatre, the tax assessment record was received; approving the text above).

Contra: Ia. 1881, Adams v. Hickox, 55 Ia. 632, 8 N. W. 485; 1895, Hetch v. Eberke, 95 Ia. 757, 64 N. W. 650; 1897, Allbright v. Hannah, 103 Ia. 98, 72 N. W. 421; Mass. 1916, Com. v. Quinn, 222 Mass. 504, 111 N. E. 405 (false representations as to F. and M. as wealthy manufacturers at S.; the assessors' books at S., semble not admissible to show that F. and M. were not assessed for any property either real or personal; but it is time that this hoary error be repudiated; it offends common sense and it is unsound on principle).

[4] Contra: 1869, Com. v. Heffron, 102 Mass. 148 (quoted supra); 1902, Philadelphia v. Gowan, 202 Pa. 453, 52 Atl. 3 (assessment-books, held not admissible under statutes to prove for the city that property was assessed as urban).

[5] Contra: 1843, Clark v. Trinity Church, 5 W. & S. 266, 269, semble (assessor's entries, not admissible to prove the assessee to be of age).

[6] On the principle of § 1060, ante; the cases going on this theory are placed with the others in the notes supra. The following ruling therefore seems erroneous: 1795, Weaver v. Pratt, that most of the receiving rulings seem to have been made. In this view, a person's failure to list certain property would be evidence of a failure to claim, amounting (on the principle of § 1072, ante) to an admission.[7] Furthermore, so far as the proceedings of assessment and collection are material in determining the lawfulness of a tax, the amount due from a collector, or the like, the books are admissible without regard to the present principle (on the theory of § 2427, post).[8]

Statutes in many jurisdictions expressly make admissible these and other taxation-books; but whether this would authorize their use for any but the purpose last mentioned may be doubtful.[9]

(2) The electoral register, poll-books, tally-books, and the like, are clearly admissible in so far as they embody the doings of the election officials and the doings of others in their presence.[10] But so far as they record persons as

1 Esp. 369 (tax-collector's books, not admitted, semble, to prove that A had paid taxes on property as to which he was now charged as owner).

[7] 1902, Griffin v. Wise, 115 Ga. 610, 41 S. E. 1003 (tax-books admitted to show that S. did not make a return for taxation); 1912, Enfield v. Woods, 212 Mass. 547, 99 N. E. 331 (adverse possession; assessors' entry of the property as "town property and exempt under the law," held admissible to show that the party was not in occupation as owner); 1887, Austin v. King, 97 N. C. 339, 342, 2 S. E. 678; 1896, Pasley v. Richardson, 119 N. C. 449, 26 S. E. 32. In the following case, substantive law was involved: 1892, Bowman v. Dewing, 37 W. Va. 117, 119, 16 S. E. 440 (by law the failure to have land entered in assessor's books is ground of forfeiture; the books are of course receivable to show such failure). Compare § 1072, ante.

[8] 1880, Dudley v. Chilton Co., 66 Ala. 593, 598 (moneys due from tax-collector to county; assessor's book, probate judge's book, and treasurer's book, kept by law, receivable).

[9] U. S. Ala. Code 1907, § 2310 (legally required books and records of tax-collector or probate judge, admissible in issue of sale of realty for taxes); § 5943 (books of auditor or of superintendent of education, admissible to show amount due from county superintendent); § 2277 (tax collector's tax-book to be evidence of amounts due in suits for collection); Cal. Pol. C. 1872, § 3789 (assessment-book or delinquent list is evidence of assessment, property assessed, delinquency, amount of taxes, due and unpaid); Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 7188 (tax-roll, list of lands sold, etc., admissible); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 1120 ("drainage tax book," to be evidence of all matters therein contained); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 1286 (assessment or tax lists, tax-books, and delinquent lists, admissible to show the amount due, etc.); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 3253 (assessment-book or delinquent list, admissible to prove property assessed, and amount of delinquency); Ill. St. 1897, June 14, § 49 (local improvements; assessment roll to be evidence of "the correctness of the amount assessed," but "shall not be counted as the testimony of any witness or witnesses in the cause"); Mich. Comp. L. 1915 § 4098 (all tax-records, etc., to be 'prima facie' evidence of the facts stated); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 7751 (tax-books kept by auditor, collector, assessor, etc., admissible "as evidence of all the facts stated therein"); § 12974 (assessment-book, and all taxation-books in office of clerk of county court, admissible in controversies as to tax-sales of land); § 4621 (drain and levees; the levee tax-book of the district, to be evidence of "all matters therein contained"); § 4400 (district drainage tax-book, to be 'prima facie' evidence); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, §§ 2216, 2227 (county assessment book, etc., is evidence of assessment, delinquency, etc.); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 3658 (delinquent tax-list, admissible to prove "assessment, property assessed," delinquency and its amount); N. M. Annot. St. 1915, § 5511, St. 1921, c. 13 § 456 (records, lists, etc., of assessor, etc., admissible to prove facts there stated as to assessment, levy, or sale); N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 5955 (electoral register, and a certified copy thereof, shall be 'prima facie' evidence of a voter's right to vote); § 5971 (poll-books shall be evidence in a trial for illegal or fraudulent voting); Or. Laws 1920, § 4391 (all books connected with assessment, admissible); Pa. St. 1915, Apr. 21, Dig. 1920, § 21862 (in eminent domain cases, the tax-assessment is receivable for the claimant "as a declaration against interest"); R. I. Gen. L. 1896, c. 48, § 15 (tax-collector's return in sales of realty, to be evidence of facts stated); Utah: Comp. St. 1417, § 6048 (county auditor's certified copy of assessment is evidence of tax due); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4162 ("all assessments and tax-rolls and certificates and warrants thereto attached," as well as notices and proofs of publication, etc., required in relation to taxes, admissible).

[10] On the theory of § 2427, post.

residing within a district and as otherwise possessing electors' qualifications, they are open to the objection already noted for assessors' books, namely, the registrars' lack of personal knowledge. Nevertheless, this objection, for the reasons noticed, seems to be insufficient; for the registrars of election, in almost every electoral system and usually in practice, are charged with the duty of ascertaining by investigation the qualifications of persons registered and are supposed to enter the names only after satisfying their own judgment upon the facts. This result is generally accepted.[11]

§ 1641. Military and Naval Registers; Ship's Log-book. (1) In the Navy and the Army are kept certain muster-books and other records as a necessary part of administration; these have always been regarded as admissible to prove the facts customarily there recorded.[1] Moreover, by statute in many jurisdictions, records of enlistment, muster, discharge, death, and the like, are required to be kept by local officers who would not ordinarily have these duties, such records being made up by compilation from the original records of the officers within the service. The objection to these, namely, that they are not based on personal knowledge (ante, § 1635), is overcome by the circumstance that this duty is expressly created by statute;[2] this objection, moreover, has never availed even against the books, kept by custom and necessity, in the central administrative offices of Army and Navy. Distinguish the use of certificates of service, or of death, given out to the individual applicant (post, § 1675*a*).

(2) A ship's log-book is no doubt an entry made in the regular course of business; and, if the entrant is deceased or otherwise unavailable, it would undoubtedly be receivable under the exception for such statements (ante,

[11] 1860, Reed v. Lamb, 6 Jur. N. s. 828, semble (a register of voters, admissible); 1883, Patton v. Coates, 41 Ark. 111, 130 (poll-books and certificates of election-officers, receivable, though not expressly admitted by statute); 1891, Merritt v. Hinton, 55 Ark. 12, 15, 17 S. W. 270 (approving Patton v. Coates); Cal. Pol. C. 1872, § 1117 (entry in the great register of electors, admissible to prove the person named to be an elector of the county); 1851, New Milford v. Sherman, 21 Conn. 101, 112 (register of voters, not admissible to prove evidence for a pauper settlement); 1896, Enfield v. Ellington, 67 Conn. 459, 34 Atl. 818 (list of the registrar of elections, with B's name on it checked off, admitted to show that B was an elector and had voted there; New Milford v. Sherman disapproved on this point); 1895, Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 Atl. 300 (registry of voters, admitted to show residence, etc.; but here treated as a judicial finding of a lower court in an appeal from the finding); Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 88 (check-list used at a general election, admissible to show that a person voted).

§ 1641. [1] Eng. 1741, R. v. Fitzgerald, 1 Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 24 (muster-book of the navy, admitted); 1742, R. v. Rhodes, 1 Leach Cr. L. 29 (muster-book of the navy, made up of reports sent in by the captains, admitted to show the death of the seaman); 1800, Barber v. Holmes, 3 Esp. 190, semble (admitting the muster-roll of a frigate, from the Admiralty, to prove J. H. a member of the crew); 1804, Wallace v. Cook, 5 Esp. 117 (book of returns made by officers of royal ships to the Admiralty admitted to show the death of a sailor, as "a book of office kept by a public officer under the Admiralty"); U. S. 1879, Board v. May, 67 Ind. 561, 565 (to prove enlistment, muster, and discharge, the Adjutant-General's military record-books received); 1874, Hanson v. South Scituate, 115 Mass. 340 (army muster-roll, admitted).

[2] 1870, Wayland v. Ware, 104 Mass. 46, 48, 52 (record of names of enlisted townsmen required to be kept by a town-clerk, admitted); 1874, Hanson v. South Scituate, 115 Mass. 340 (town record of enlistments kept under statute, admitted); 1886, Worcester v. Northborough, 140 Mass. 401, 5 N. E. 270 (admitting a volume published by the Adjutant-General's office under a resolve of the Legislature, and stating the towns to which soldiers were credited).

§ 1521). But can it be received under the present exception, i. e. without showing the entrant unavailable?[3]

In England, it seems to have been generally considered that the log-book of a government war-vessel was in effect an official record, and therefore admissible; while the log-books of ordinary merchant-ships were at common law excluded.[4] The latter have, however, there been made admissible by statute.[5]

In the United States, the case of a government ship's log does not seem to have been presented. The merchant-ship's log has invariably been held inadmissible as a matter of common law. Two exceptions, apparent only, have been recognized. First, a log-entry may plainly be used as an admission, against the ship whose master made it; secondly, by Federal statute, the entries concerning desertion and other offences of seamen are not only allowed but required to be put in evidence.[6] But it may be argued that, although a merchant-ship's log is not kept under an official duty, it is at least kept under a duty imposed by law, and therefore ought to be admissible under the principle already considered (ante, § 1633*a*).

[3] See citations in note 1, supra.

[4] 1796; D'Israeli v. Jowett, 1 Esp. 427 (log-book of a royal convoy-ship, admitted to show the time of sailing of another ship in the convoy); 1809, The Eleanor, 1 Edw. Adm. 135, 163 (merchant-ship; Sir W. Scott: "The evidence of the log-book is to be received with jealousy where it makes for the parties, but it is evidence of the most authentic kind against the parties"); 1811, Le Niemen, 1 Dods. Adm. 9 (Sir W. Scott; log of naval vessel not admitted in her own interest to show the circumstances of capture); 1815, Watson v. King, 4 Camp. 272, 275 (log-book of naval ship, and official letter of captain, admitted to prove that a merchant-ship was in its convoy); 1816, L'Etoile, 2 Dods. Adm. 106, 113 (Sir W. Scott; log of sloop-of-war, used as evidence of the circumstances of a capture; possibly here as an admission); 1842, The Sociedade Feliz, 1 W. Rob. 303, 311 (Dr. Lushington; log of a naval vessel excluded; "The log-book of a party suing can never be made evidence in his favor under any shape"); 1880, R. v. Tower, 20 N. Br. 168, 202 (log-book received, as containing admissions of the defendant captain).

[5] St. 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, §§ 280, 285 ("all entries made in any official log-book," i. e. kept on any ship according to the official form naming certain required topics of entry, "shall be received in evidence"; the later St. 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, § 239, contains substantially the same provision); Can. Rev. St. 1906, c. 113, §§ 211, 246, 288 § 112 (all entries in a log-book, of facts directed by law to be entered, shall be admissible); 1861, Biccard v. Shepherd, 14 Moo. P. C. 471, 475, 489 (log-book of merchant-ship; ruling obscure); 1878, The Henry Coxon, L. R. 3 P. D. 156 (Sir R. Phillimore; log of a merchant-ship by the deceased mate, not admitted, to prove the circumstances of a collision, partly because the entry was not made till two days after the collision).

[6] UNITED STATES: Federal: St. 1790, July 20, c. 29, § 6, St. 1872, June 7, c. 322, § 58, Rev. St. 1878, §§ 4290–4292, 4547, 4550, 4555, 5465, Code 1919, §§ 7781–7783, 8114, 8118, 8123, (vessels required to keep "an official log-book," containing entries on specified topics; production by master, compellable, but nothing said otherwise about using in evidence); R. S. § 4597, Code § 8158 (entry of seaman's offence required to be made; and "in any subsequent legal proceedings the entries hereinbefore required shall, if practicable, be produced or proved," and in default of production, the Court may refuse to hear evidence of the offence); 1800, Jones v. The Phœnix, 1 Pet. Adm. 201 (entry admitted to prove desertion under the statute; but "it ought not to be admitted to any fact but that in which the act of Congress permits it to be evidence"); 1805, Malone v. Bell, 1 Pet. Adm. 139 (entry of a seaman's tardy return on board, admitted apparently under the statute); 1805, Thompson v. The Philadelphia, 1 Pet. Adm. 210 (similar); 1811, U. S. v. Mitchell, 2 Wash. C. C. 478 (debt on embargo bond; defendant not allowed, in proving his excuse for the breach, to use the ship's log-book without authentication); s. c. 3 id. 95, 96 (second trial; log-book now admitted as "better identified than it was"); 1829, Douglass v. Eyre, Gilp. 147 (entry of desertion, admitted under the statute); 1834, U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 19, 78 (Story, J.: "The log-book is in no just sense proof 'per § 1642. Registers of Marriage, Birth, and Death ; Records of Vital Statistics ; History and General Policy. The facts of birth, marriage, and death, with their times and places and the persons' names, are facts of pivotal importance in legal controversies, especially as affecting the title to property. The length of time that may elapse before a dispute arises or is litigated, the variety of place and lineage that may be involved, and consequently the difficulty of adducing upon a trial an ample and satisfactory array of evidence to prove even the simplest data, of which there need never have been any doubt whatever, combine to create a special need for the preservation of proof of that class of facts. It is of interest to the State that assistance be furnished to parties in whose cases such facts may be involved. The prime element of security of title is alone a sufficient consideration to justify some provision on the part of the State. Moreover, for few other classes of facts is it so easy for the machinery of State administration to be effectively employed; since registration by a State official will ordinarily for this class of facts (usually notorious and undisputed at the time of occurrence) furnish a simple, trustworthy, and serviceable class of evidence. As a matter of abstract expediency, one can hardly doubt that every community having rational government should by means of a system of official, universal, and compulsory registration authorize the preservation of an adequate source of evidence for this purpose.

Such a system has long been familiar in many parts of the European Continent and in Asiatic countries; it is commonly known on the Continent as the "register of civil status." But the deep-seated Anglo-Saxon individualism and its repugnance to State interference in family life and private affairs has availed until comparatively recent times to leave its communities lacking such an advantage. In England, indeed, a system of ecclesiastical registration, confined to the ministrants of the established church, provided for the recording of ceremonial occurrences, — baptisms, weddings, and burials.

se' of the facts therein stated, except in certain cases provided for by statute. . . . It would be mere hearsay not under oath. . . . I am yet to learn that parties can thus create evidence for themselves by inserting facts in a log-book. . . . In the most common class of cases in which the log-book is used, those of insurance, the log-book has never, to my knowledge, been allowed (if objected to) as proof of the loss for the assured"); 1836, The Rovena, Ware 309 (entry of desertion, admitted under the statute); 1848, The Hercules, 1 Sprague 534 (similar); 1882, The Sandringham, 10 Fed. 556, 558, 565, semble (log of merchant-ship, evidence only by way of admissions); 1907, The Kentucky, 148 Fed. 500, D. C. (log-books admitted, after being used by the other party for cross-examination, though "ordinarily the entries in such books are not receivable in support of the party who makes them"); Haw. 1851, Cobb v. Makee, 1 Haw. 51 (log-book not receivable except in the statutory cases; unless offered as an admission against the party keeping it); Mass.: 1829, Bixby v. Ins. Co., 8 Pick. 86, 89 (log-book of a former voyage, held inadmissible).

The following cases, though not involving log-books, should serve to indicate a common-law basis for any such books required by law to be kept: 1824, Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229 (list of passengers, kept under statute, admitted; quoted ante, § 1633); 1846, Buckley v. U. S., 4 How. U. S. 251, 258 (Richardson v. Mellish, Eng., supra, cited with approval); 1906, McInerney v. U. S., 143 Fed. 729, 736, C. C. A. (manifest of a shipmaster, required to be made by St. 1891, Mar. 3, c. 551, § 8, 26 Stat. 1805, reporting the name etc., of immigrants, admitted to show the time of arrival of the defendant in the U. S.).

But, even if this system had been thoroughly enforced, as it was not,[1] the ceremony was not the essential fact. Moreover, to sanction registration for members of a privileged church only, and to penalize religious dissent by refusing to dissenters the just facilities for proving the facts of family history, was irrational.[2]

In the United States, the harshest and most culpable features of this unthrift have disappeared in great part. Almost everywhere State and local officials are now authorized and required to provide by registration a source of proof.[3] But the racial disinclination to State control early showed itself. No thorough system was until recent times established. In a large number of jurisdictions, a municipal office was made the repository of returns from clergymen, physicians, undertakers, and midwives. But the important principle of placing upon the head of the family, the physician, and the undertaker the responsibility of reporting the desired facts was long neglected. In many jurisdictions, a general recognition was given to church registers of all sorts; but this indiscriminate sanction was only a makeshift, and failed to provide proper safeguards for the regularity, permanence, and accuracy of records. Compulsoriness, centralization, ease of authentication,[4] — these essential features of a proper system were in general lacking until the decade beginning 1910. About that time began a movement, supported by the American Medical Association and the National Conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws, which led to the rapid adoption by successive States of a standard adequate system.

No doubt many circumstances suggest easily an explanation, if not an excuse, for the early backwardness. But the fact remains; and one of its unfortunate results is seen in the difficulties of harmonizing safe legal principles with practical necessities, and consequently in the still uncertain and § 1642. [1] "An Irish Peer asked me in the House of Lords how the marriage of his grandfather was to be proved. I told him that it must be proved in the usual manner, by production of the register of the parish where the marriage was celebrated. 'But, my dear,' says he, 'in Ireland there are very few parish registers; I don't know in what parish my grandfather was married, but it has no register.' 'How do you know that,' said I, 'if you don't know the parish?' 'Oh, aye,' said he, 'that's true, it did not occur to me. But it is very hard, my lord; won't my testimony, my dear, be sufficient to prove my grandfather's marriage?' 'Certainly, my lord,' said I, 'it will, — if you were present at your grandfather's marriage; otherwise not.'" (Twiss' Life of Lord Eldon, II, 606; from the Chancellor's Anecdote Book).

[2] The pharisaism of this exclusive sanction for the parish registers is exposed by a remark made of them by Lord Eldon, in 1812 (Walker v. Wingfield, 18 Ves. 444): "There is not one in one hundred that is kept according to the canons." Tales told by genealogists searching records in England show also the carelessness with which these registers were often kept and ease with which they could be falsified. A novel of George Macdonald, "Wilfrid Cumbermede," takes as the main incident of its plot the tampering with a parish register.

An interesting litigation, in which copious forgeries of parish registers played an important part, and the dangerous possibilities of such registers under the old system were fully revealed, is described in Mr. Earwaker's "A Lancashire Pedigree Case" (the Harrison estates), Warrington, Eng., 1887.

[3] John Locke's code of laws for the Carolinas, in 1669, contained perhaps the earliest statute.

The Federal laws of the Northwest Territory, in 1791 (c. VII) provided for the recording of certificates of marriage in the county register "an exemplification of which shall be evidence of such marriage."

[4] Compare Bentham's remarks: 1827, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IV, c. X (Bowring's ed., vol. VI, p. 570).

imperfect condition of the law respecting proof of the great common facts of family history by registers and certificates.

§ 1643. Same : Theories of Admissibility of Registers. Five distinct theories appear by which the admissibility may be tested of registers of births (or baptisms), marriages, and deaths (or burials).

(1) Theory of duty arising from office. The orthodox theory, as established in England, was the general one governing the present Exception (ante, § 1632). The clergyman or priest of the Anglican church (and of the Irish church before disestablishment) were officers under the ecclesiastical branch of the government; by law it was expressly made a part of their duty as ecclesiastical officers to record the ceremonies of baptism, marriage, and burial, as officially performed by them. This register thus became admissible as one kept under an official duty:

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 76: "The register is good evidence, or a copy of it. The register began in the 30th of H. VIII [1539] by the instigation of the lord Cromwell, who at that time was vested with all the authority that the Pope's legate formerly had, under the title of Vicar-general to the King, and all wills that were above the value of £200 were to be proved in this court; and therefore it served his purpose [1] to set on foot a registry of all persons that were christened and buried; and this might be very well appointed by the King's authority as supreme head of the Church, since christening and burying are ecclesiastical acts; and when a book was appointed by public authority, it must be a public evidence. This was afterwards confirmed by the injunction of Edward VI, and the particular manner of registering appointed."

(2) Theory of statutory duty. A theory closely related to this, but not identical, finds the sanction for admission in a duty imposed by statute to keep such a record. This statutory duty is usually imposed upon persons already officers of some sort — for example, town clerks or magistrates; but so far as it is imposed upon private persons — for example, ministers of a church, in this country — it is obviously not an official duty in the strict sense. That such a statutory duty imposed upon a private person is after all to be assimilated in principle to a strictly official duty has already been seen (ante, § 1633*a*); yet it is worth noting that the two are not identical.

This theory of admissibility by virtue of statutory duty, which leaves admissibility to depend purely on the statutory terms (and may thus, for example, exclude a register of baptisms or of burials), represents the rule prevailing in most jurisdictions of the United States, and is expounded in the following passage:

1865, GRAY, J., in Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. 161, 162: "In England, a church record of baptisms kept by a clergyman of the established church is admissible, even before his death. . . . In the Church of England, from the time of the Reformation, registers of § 1643. [1] This slur on the motives of Cromwell is probably unjust, as is explained in Hubback on Succession, 470 ff.; Mr. Hubback believes the more natural explanation to be that the then recent dissolution of the monasteries by Henry VIII rendered it desirable to provide something to take the place formerly filled by the monastic records.

baptisms, weddings, and burials were kept by order of the Crown as head of that church. . . . The ordinances of the English Commonwealth in 1644 and 1653 provided for the registration of births, deaths, and marriages. But these ordinances were annulled upon the restoration of Charles II, and registers kept under ecclesiastical authority continued to be admitted in evidence by the Courts, although not required to be kept, nor declared to be evidence, by any statute. . . . [About 1700] Acts of Parliament began to be passed, which were repealed or altered from time to time, for the registration of births or baptisms, marriages, and burials, generally limited to the established church; and (unless for a few years towards the end of the last century) the law of England does not seem to have provided for registering births or deaths of any person, nor baptisms, marriages, or burials, in any form except that of the established church, from 1706 until 1836,[2] when the general registration act of 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 86, was passed. The English judges, adhering to the principle of admitting in evidence as public documents those registers only which the law require to be kept, have considered all others as mere private memoranda, and have refused to admit registers regularly kept by dissenters unless supported by the testimony of the person keeping them or [of] other witnesses. . . . Almost two centuries before the passage of the statute of William IV, the founders of the Massachusetts colony, though not less attached than other Englishmen to their own forms of worship, had the wisdom to perceive that it was more important for the civil government to preserve exact records of the dates of births and deaths than of religious ceremonies from which they might be imperfectly inferred; and that the importance of recording those facts did not depend on the particular crede or church government of the individual, but applied equally to the whole people. They accordingly left the baptism of the living and the burial of the dead to the churches, but, by an ordinance of 1639, enacted 'that there be records kept of the days of every marriage, birth, and death of every person within this jurisdiction'; and similar statutes have been ever since in force in Massachusetts. The record of a marriage by the justice of the peace or the minister, or the town clerk's or registrar's record of births, marriages, and deaths, kept as required by these statutes, or a duly certified copy of either, is held competent evidence. . . . It is perfectly true that in this Commonwealth the law makes no distinction between different sects of Christians, and the record of a Roman Catholic priest is of no less weight as evidence than that of a Congregational, or Protestant Episcopal, or any other minister. But, our law not requiring any record of baptisms, the church record [of baptisms] offered in this case, not having been kept under any requirement of law, was not a public record, and would not, had the priest who made the entries been still alive, have been admissible in evidence, unsupported by his testimony."

(3) Theory of regular entries in the course of business. A third theory invokes the ordinary Exception (ante, § 1523) for regular entries in the course of a business or occupation:

1865, GRAY, J., in Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 All. 161, 167: "In the United States the law is well settled that an entry made by a person in the ordinary course of his business or vocation, with no interest to misrepresent, before any controversy or question has arisen, and in a book produced from the proper custody, is competent evidence, after his death, of the facts thus recorded. . . . An entry made in the performance of a religious duty is certainly of no less value than one made by a clerk, messenger or notary, an attorney or solicitor or a physician, in the course of his secular occupation."

There seems to be no difficulty in accepting the principle of that Exception as applicable. The regular entries of a minister or a physician, concerning the services performed as a part of his occupation, fulfil adequately the demands of that Exception. Its peculiar limitation, however, is that the entrant must first be accounted for as deceased, out of the jurisdiction, or otherwise unavailable; and this is in the present class of cases a cumbersome and unnecessary burden. This theory may of course be availed of for admitting registers otherwise not sanctioned by either of the foregoing theories.

[2] This date seems incorrect; compare the statute of 1753, cited post, § 1644, note 1.

(4) Theory of regular entries, modified. A fourth theory accepts such registers unreservedly, without requiring either the sanction of an official or statutory duty (as under the first and the second) or the unavailability of the entrant (as under the third theory). This result is strictly not supportable under the Exception for Regular Entries (ante, § 1523), which is based fundamentally upon the impossibility of securing the entrant's testimony upon the stand. Nevertheless, it is to be regarded as based on that Exception, with a modification resting upon grounds of practical convenience. It is expounded in the following passage:

> 1887, CAMPBELL, C. J., in Hunt v. Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671, 674, 31 N. W. 576: "The rule laid down in England, and followed until recent times, which recognized none but registers and similar records of churches of the established religion, has been abrogated there by statute, so as to open the door to many other records which all churches keep, and which are quite as likely to be as accurate as those of an established church. Those registers . . . in this country are fairly to be dealt with as equivalent to corporation records, which are generally evidence of such matters as are recorded in the usual course of affairs. . . . There is no more reason to suppose these entries will be incorrect or falsified than any other. Fraud is possible anywhere; but it cannot be presumed in records of churches any more than in any other documents preserved for similar purposes. The rejection of such proofs would be disastrous. They are relied on by the whole community."

This rule has little acceptance; but it has attractive features, for, in spite of its anomalous principle, it will often serve to relieve from those hardships which our lack of proper administrative provisions must frequently cause. As the basis of a system of legislation, this principle has no merits; but, as a makeshift to remedy the consequences of defective legislation, it seems a worthy expedient. Perhaps its value as a working rule will depend chiefly on experience. If the principle of the foregoing (third) theory were liberally carried out, by recognizing absence from the jurisdiction as equivalent to death (ante, § 1521), there would be little occasion to resort to the present form of rule.

(5) Finally, express statute in many jurisdictions declares certain kinds of registers admissible, — usually the registers of State and municipal officers, but sometimes also church registers of every sort. Such statutes, so far as they go, remove almost entirely the necessity for judicial construction of the principles involved.

§ 1644. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. (1) In England and Canada, the long line of judicial rulings and statutes covers a period of more than three centuries.[1] Several general features may be noted:

§ 1644. [1] The statutes and rulings are as follows:

Statutes (for the earlier church ordinances, see the next two notes):

ENGLAND: 1695, St. 6 & 7 W. & M. c. 61, § 24 (registers first required by parliamentary statute to be kept); 1753, St. 26 Geo. II, c. 33, §§ 14, 15 (marriage register to be "preserved for public use"; entries to be made "in order to preserve the evidence of marriages, and to make the proof thereof more certain and easy"; the statute applying throughout to registers in a "parish church or public chapel," i. e. apparently to the dissenting chapel as well as to the established church); 1781, St. 21 Geo. III, c. 53, § 3 (registers, in churches or chapels, of certain marriages performed without publication of banns, "shall be received in all courts of law and equity as evidence of such marriages in the same manner" as those of marriages lawfully performed); § 4 (chapel registers to be removed to parish churches in certain cases); 1804, St. 44 Geo. III, c. 77 (similar curative act); 1808, St. 48 Geo. III, c. 127 (similar); 1823, St. 4 Geo. IV, c. 76, §§ 5, 6 (duty of keeping marriage-registers extended to licensed chapels of dissenting churches); 1836, St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 86, § 37 (general system provided for the official registration, in a special office, of births, marriages, and deaths; "all certified copies of entries purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal of the said register office shall be received as evidence of the birth, death, or marriage to which the same relates"); 1840, St. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 92, §§ 6–17 (certain non-official registers of births, marriages, deaths, etc., having been examined and authenticated by a commission, those deposited in official custody are made admissible, with certain limitations); 1858, St. 21 Vict. c. 25 (St. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 92, admitting non-parochial registers, enlarged in scope); in addition, there are a number of minor statutes dealing with colonial and sundry registers.

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 984 (to prove the age of a child or young person, on certain charges, on entry, or record by an incorporated society, etc., having care of children, etc., is admissible); Alta. St. 1916, c. 22, § 38 (vital statistics; the registrar-general's certified extract of "original entries of all births, marriages, and deaths," to be 'prima facie' evidence); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 22, § 11 (registrar's certified copies of entries of birth, marriage and death, to be evidence of the facts stated); c. 151, § 22 (certificate or copy of any registration or document under this Act, certified by the clergyman or registrar is 'prima facie' evidence of "all the matters and things contained therein"); Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 203, § 53 (certain religious bodies' records, deposited in the department, are "declared to be authentic and to be the official registers"); § 6 (certificate "of the details of any birth, marriage, or death of which there is a record," given by the Minister of the Department or the inspector of vital statistics, to be evidence of "the facts certified to be recorded"); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 40 (clerk of the peace's or registrar's certified copy of the recorded certificate of marriage is "evidence of the marriage"); c. 54, § 19 (registrar's certified copy of a register-entry of birth, death, or marriage, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); St. 1910, 10 Edw. VII, c. 43, § 3 (certified copy by the diocesan registrar of Fredericton, admissible to prove documents of church history deposited with him); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 121, §§ 5, 9 (register of marriages, kept by celebrant or by Colonial secretary, to be evidence of "the celebration of any marriage in this colony or dependencies"); N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 14, § 20 (certified extracts of registry of births, marriages and deaths, to be evidence of the facts stated); N. Sc. St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 1, § 31, St. 1919, c. 3, Vital Statistics, § 8 (certificate of registrar of births and deaths, to be evidence "of the facts certified to be recorded"); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 49, § 7, St. 1919, c. 23, § 7, Vital Statistics, § 7 (registrar-general's certificate "of the details of any birth, marriage, or death" recorded, to be evidence "of the facts certified to be recorded"); P. E. I. St. 1889, § 22 (a certificate of marriage, baptism, or burial, out of the province, under the hand of the officiating clergyman or officer, or an extract from a register certified by the clergyman or officer "being the legal custodian," is evidence "of the contents thereof"); St. 1919, c. 10, Vital Statistics, § 5 (like Ont. R. S. c. 49, § 7); Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 26, § 7 (commissioner of vital statistics; his certificate of "the details of any birth, marriage, or death, of which there is a record in his office," admissible); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 8, § 20 (certified extract of returns of births, marriages, and deaths, by the registrar of vital statistics, "shall be evidence of the entry and 'prima facie' evidence of the facts therein stated").

Judicial Rulings: ENGLAND: 1595, Vicary v. Farthing, Cro. Eliz. 411, Moore 451 ("to prove the nonage of the plaintiff, . . . a churchbook was given in evidence"); 1608 (?), Tyrwhite v. Kynaston, Noy 146 ("Note by Cooke, C. J., that the keeping of a church-book for the age of those which should be born and christened in the parish began in the 30th year of H. VIII, by the instigation of the Lord Cromwell"); 1658, Dudly's Case, 2 Sid. 71 (perjury for falsifying a parish register; Glyn. C. J.: "A register-book for the entry of mar-

(a) In the first place, no statute, until 1836, expressly declared any registers admissible. In that year a general system of secular registration was first riages, births, etc., is an evidence by our law, and the falsifying of it, whether it be by conspiracy or not, ought not to be unpunished"); 1695, Stayner v. Droitwich, 12 Mod. 86, Skin. 623 ("[There have been admitted] register-books of parishes in christenings and marriages, though no law for it; for the nature of the thing requires it"); 1737, May v. May, 2 Stra. 1073 ("the general register of the parish," admitted to prove legitimacy; "this register, the clerk said, was a book into which the entries were made once in three months, out of the day-book, wherein the entries are made immediately after the christening, or next morning"; but the day-book, by two judges to one, was excluded, since "there could not be two registers in one parish"); 1779, Birt v. Barlow, 1 Doug. 174 (Mansfield, L. C. J.: "The registers [under the marriage act, St. 26 Geo. II] were directed to be kept as public books and accompanied with every means of authenticity. . . . A copy is proof of a marriage in fact"); 1786, Huet v. Le Mesurier, 1 Cox 275 (Guernsey register of baptisms, excluded); 1798, Leader v. Barry, 1 Esp. 353 (register in a foreign chapel, excluded); 1811, Newham v. Raithby, 1 Phillim. Eccl. 315 (register of dissenting chapel, admitted); 1820, Ex parte Taylor, 1 Jac. & W. 483 (register of dissenting chapel, excluded); 1824, Bain v. Mason, 1 C. & P. 202 (parish register, admissible); 1830, Whittuck v. Waters, 4 C. & P. 375 (register of a Wesleyan chapel, excluded); 1834, Doe v. Wollaston, 1 Moo. & R. 389 (Denman, L. C. J.: "It is the clergyman's duty to enter the marriage correctly"; parish register admissible); 1839, Malone v. L'Estrange, 2 Ir. Eq. 16 (marriage record of a Catholic priest, excluded); 1839, O'Connor v. Malone, 6 Cl. & F. 572, 576, 583 (register of marriage in a Catholic chapel, admitted, and justified by counsel on the principle (ante, § 1523) of regular entries by a deceased person; but the Court did not notice the point); 1841, Athlone Peerage, 8 Cl. & F. 262 (entry of marriage in a register kept at the house of the British Ambassador in Paris by his chaplain, excluded, as "not like a parish register"); 1844, D'Aglie v. Fryer, 13 L. J. Ch. 398 (register of a Catholic chapel, excluded); 1844, Davis v. Lloyd, 1 C. & K. 275 (register kept by the chief rabbi at a synagogue, containing an entry of the circumcision of the plaintiff, excluded); 1846, Parkinson v. Francis, 15 Sim. 160 (register of the General Register Office, admitted, under statute, to prove death); 1848, Dufferin and Claneyboye Peerage, 2 H. L. C. 47 (entry in a register of baptism in a parish church in Ireland, from a certificate of a chaplain to the British minister at Florence, "not deemed sufficient, under the circumstances"); 1848, Perth Peerage Case, 2 H. L. C. 865, 873 (French registers of marriages, births, and deaths, kept at the town hall, according to French law, admitted; register of deaths kept in a nunnery at Antwerp, admitted); 1853, Stockbridge v. Quicke, 3 C. & K. 305 (register kept apparently privately by a clergyman of the established church in Ireland, excluded); 1857, Shrewsbury Peerage Case, 7 H. L. C. 1, 14 (register of a Catholic chapel at Bristol, deposited with the general registrar under statute, admitted); 1859, Ratcliff v. Ratcliff, 5 Jur. N. S. 714 (register kept by the authority of the East India Company having governmental powers in India, admitted as an official register); 1860, Abbott v. Abbott, 4 Sw. & Tr. 254 (register of marriage, kept in Chile according to requirement of local law, admitted); 1879, Queen's Proctor v. Fry, L. R. 4 P. D. 230 (register of baptisms in India, kept by Government order, admitted); 1889, Burnaby v. Baillie, L. R. 42 Ch. D. 283, 291, 296 (French register of marriage, kept at the mayor's office, admitted); 1900, Whitton v. Whitton, Prob. 178 (certified copy of a marriage-register in the Mariners' Church, Kingston, Ire., admitted, under certain statutes); 1902, Wigley v. Solicitor, Prob. 233 (Scottish marriage registry, admitted); 1904, Goodrich's Estate, Prob. 138 (certified copy of an entry of "a register of births" for 1844, admitted, as "evidence of its contents"; here, to show the date of birth of defendant); 1912 Drew v. Drew, Prob. 175 (divorce for desertion; marriage proved by a registrar's certified copy from the register of marriages in Edinburgh, under St. 1856, 19–20 Vict. c. 96, § 2); 1913, In re Woodward, Kenway v. Kidd, 1 Ch. 393 (registers of the Society of Friends, prior to 1837, deposited at the General Registry office under St. 3–4 Vict., 1840, c. 92, were offered to be proved by certified extract from the Society's unofficial digest kept at its own office, because no index was available at the government office; excluded; this is not in keeping with the liberal informality which the Judicature Act was supposed to install); 1920, Best v. Best, Prob. 75 (divorce for adultery during husband's absence in military service; birth of a child may be evidenced by a certified copy of the official register of births, "with evidence identifying the respondent's signature as informant in the register"); 1920, Perry v. Perry, Prob. 361 (restitution of conjugal rights; marriage proved by a copy of a register certified by an assistant priest of St. George's Cathedral in Cape Town, Cape Colony, without evidence as to the validity of the marriage or the local law of Evidence).

CANADA: 1884, Sutherland v. Young, 1 Manit. 38 (baptismal certificate under the hand of the custodian of the parish register, admitted under statute); 1912, Zdrahal v. established. In the Marriage Act of 1753 words had been used which clearly implied admissibility, but the Courts seem not to have acted under them.

(b) The admissibility thus depended on the existence of a duty to keep the register. But, as to the source of this duty, the important inquiry cannot be definitely answered whether the duty was implied from the nature of the office or was solely the creature of the statute. The registers were originally kept under ecclesiastical ordinances [2] having the effect of law, and the early decisions are all subsequent to these ordinances. From the time of the Restoration (1660) to the first parliamentary statute, in 1695, these ordinances ceased apparently to be in force; [3] but during that interval there are no decisions; and the statutory duty of 1695, reënforced by later statutes, underlay all subsequent decisions.

(c) It might therefore be argued that the judicial admissibility of such registers rested on the statutory duty to keep them. Against this, however, are two circumstances. First, their admission was not placed upon that ground until 1779, in Birt v. Barlow, by Lord Mansfield, and even thereafter it is rarely mentioned. Secondly, as early as the Marriage Act of 1753 (26 Geo. II), the statutory duty was imposed equally upon the ministers of "public chapels" (i. e. dissenting churches) as on the rectors and curates of parish churches; and, if the statutory duty was the ground of admission, it would thereafter have sufficed equally to admit the registers of dissenting chapels. Yet in the subsequent rulings such registers were almost uniformly excluded. From these circumstances, and from the general tenor of the decisions, the English judicial attitude appears to have had this anomalous feature, that it received the registers by virtue of an official duty which had a purely statutory origin, and yet ignored the statute so far as it applied to any but officers of the ecclesiastical establishment. The result was practically to place the admission on the ground of an official duty, not an express statutory duty; and this is seen in the recognition accorded to foreign registers kept according to official duty.

(d) In 1836, admissibility was expressly granted to registers to be kept by secular officials according to the system then established; and in 1840 a large collection of dissenting registers, approved by a commission and gathered into official custody, was made admissible. Alongside of these statutory Shatney, Man., 7 D. L. R. 554 (criminal conversation; a purporting official certificate of marriage in Hungary, with no evidence of authenticity nor of the law of Hungary, excluded; too strict); 1839, Montgomery v. McLeod, Ber. N. Br. 375 (certificate of marriage, duly filed, admitted, under a local St. 52 Geo. III, c. 21); 1913, R. v. Hutchins, Sask., 12 D. L. R. 648 (marriage in Minneapolis, proved by certified copy of clerk's record of marriage license, etc.); 1915, Chiniquy v. Begin, 24 D. L. R. 687, Que. (marital authorization; certificate of marriage by the clerk of the county court at Kankakee, Ill., admitted; also certificate of baptism by the pastor of a church at St. Anne, Ill.); 1920, Robson v. Thorpe, 55 D. L. R. 139, Sask. (crim. con.; registry of a marriage in England, proved by certified copy signed by the purporting superintendent registrar for the district, held admissible under St. 6–7 Wm. IV, c. 86, § 33, and St. 14–15 Vict. c. 99, § 14).

[2] Beginning with 1539; see the quotation from Gilbert, ante, § 1642.

[3] They are to be found in Scobell's Ordinances; in Hubback on Succession, pp. 470, 503, 516, is given a full account of them and also of the history of the different kinds of registers.

provisions, the principle already established by judicial practice remains apparently still in force.

(e) In one respect a distinct exception (now of purely historical interest) was made to the general principle. In the populous precints of the Fleet prison there lived a number of persons, convicted of crime or abandoned in character, who still were (or pretended to be) ordained clergymen; and some of these were accustomed to keep registers of marriages. These Fleet registers, if kept by clergymen of the established church still in orders, would presumably have been admissible, and originally they seem to have been received like others.[4] But they came to be known as notoriously fraudulent and untrustworthy, and by the beginning of the 1800s they were refused recognition.[5]

(2) In the United States, the laws of the various jurisdictions are in a state of variegated inconsistency.[6] Not only does each one of the five theories

[4] 1706, Fielding's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1352, 1367.

[5] 1795, Read v. Passer, 1 Esp. 215; 1803, Cooke v. Lloyd, Peake's Evidence, App. 74; 1815, Lloyd v. Passingham, Cooper 155, 16 Ves. 63; 1824, Nokes v. Milward, 2 Add. 391; 1838, Doe v. Gatacre, 8 C. & P. 578. The reporters of the last case give the following explanation, from Burn on Fleet Registers: "There were in the neighborhood of the Fleet prison about sixty marriage-houses; some of which were also public-houses, others not. They were known by having a sign-board with joined hands, in addition to the public-house sign. At the doors of these houses persons called Pliers solicited the passers-by to come in and be married, and at these houses persons who were or pretended to be clergymen performed the marriage ceremony, and made entries in registers that were kept at the respective houses. There is little doubt that many entries had false dates, that persons who were married personated others, and that women who wish to plead a plea of coverture or to hide their shame by a Fleet marriage certificate were here married." In Walter Besant's novel, "The Chaplain of the Fleet," is an interesting picture of one of these Fleet parsons.

[6] Where a ruling is apparently based on a statute, it is so noted; statutes which deal with certified copies, as a substitute for the original, are also noted post, § 1680, with other statutes of the sort; statutes and rulings on certificates, involving the question of § 1645, post, are placed here, for convenience of comparison.

Federal: 1831, Lewis v. Marshall, 5 Pet. 469, 476 (register of burials in Christ's Church, Philadelphia, admitted "in a case like the present"); 1851, Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 472, 513, 522, 569 (an ecclesiastical record of proceedings for bigamy in the Catholic church court was admitted on the footing of a judgment; but Wayne, J., diss., treating it as a register, held that American church registers, not being official, are in general inadmissible; a certificate by a deceased Catholic priest in New York, made in 1806, of a marriage celebrated in 1790, excluded, partly because of lack of identity of parties, partly because it was made so long after the purported fact, and partly because "if it were allowable in this country to give such certificate in evidence, where every clergyman of all denominations can perform the ceremony of marriage, and where it is performed by justices of the peace in many of the States, it would open a door to frauds that could not be guarded against"); 1865, Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 175, 182, 183, 189, 191 (baptismal register of a Catholic church in Washington, required by church usage to be kept, held admissible as "entries made by the writer in the ordinary course of his business"; the private memorandum or register of another priest of the same church at a prior time when no official register was kept, held admissible, the entrant being in France); 1917, Young Ti v. U. S., 3d C. C. A., 246 Fed. 110 (birth certificates of Chinese from the Chicago vital statistics department, admitted, but disregarded); 1918, Phelan v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 250 Fed. 43 (failure to register under the Selective Service Act; the defendant's age being in issue, a Catholic baptismal record, verified by the testimony of the priest, was admitted); 1918, Lee's Will, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 699 (inheritance, certificate of baptism from the parish register of a church in St Louis, "authenticated by the priest in charge," admitted);

Uniform Acts: Uniform Vital Statistics Act, 1920, § 23 (copy "of the record of a birth or death" registered under this Act, "when properly certified by the State registrar, shall be 'prima facie' evidence in all courts and places of the facts therein stated");

ib. § 7 ("the certificate of death shall contain the following items, which are hereby declared necessary for the public health, welfare and above mentioned (§ 1643) find support in one or another jurisdiction, but it is often difficult to determine in any one jurisdiction the precise effect of deciconvenience, and for legal, social, and sanitary purposes, which are hereby declared to be subserved by registration records:

1. Place of death, including state, county, township, village or city. If in a city, the ward, street, and house number; if in a hospital or other institution, the name of the same to be given instead of the street and house number. If in an industrial camp, the name of the camp to be given.

2. Full name of decedent. If an unnamed child, the sur-name preceded by "Unnamed."

3. Sex.

4. Color or race — as white, black, mulatto (or other negro descent), Indian, Chinese, Japanese, or other.

5. Conjugal condition — as single, married, widowed or divorced.

6. Date of birth, including the year, month and day.

7. Age, in years, months and days. If less than one day, the hours or minutes.

8. Occupation. The occupation to be reported of any person, male or female, who had any remunerative employment, with the statement of (a) trade, profession or particular kind of work; (b) general nature of industry, business or establishment in which employed (or employer).

9. Birthplace; at least state or foreign country, if known.

10. Name of father, provided that if the child or person is illegitimate, the name or residence of or other identifying details relating to the father or reputed father shall not be entered without his consent; [provided further, that whenever a judgment has been entered determining the paternity of an illegitimate child, the clerk of the court where entered shall report the facts to the State Registrar who shall record the name of the father and sufficient data to identify the judgment, in connection with the record of the death of the child appearing in his office. A report by the clerk of any court subsequently vacating such judgment shall be made and recorded in like manner].

11. Birthplace of father; at least state or foreign country, if known.

12. Maiden name of mother, provided that if the child or person is illegitimate, the name or residence or other identifying details relating to the mother shall not be entered without her consent; [provided further, that whenever a judgment has been entered determining the paternity of an illegitimate child, the clerk of the court where entered shall report the facts to the State Registrar who shall record the name of the mother, and sufficient data to identify the judgment, in connection with the record of the death of the child, appearing in his office. A report by the clerk of any court subsequently vacating such judgment shall be made and recorded in like manner].

13. Birthplace of mother; at least state or foreign country, if known.

14. Signature and address of informant.

15. Official signature of registrar, with the date when certificate was filed, and registered number.

16. Date of death, year, month and day.

17. Certification as to medical attendance on decedent, fact and time of death, time last seen alive, and the cause of death, with contributory (secondary) cause of complication, if any, and duration of each, and whether attributed to dangerous or insanitary conditions of employment; signature and address of physician or official making the medical certificate.

18. Length of residence (for inmates of hospitals and other institutions; transients or recent residents) at place of death and in the state, together with the place where disease was contracted, if not at place of death, and former or usual residence.

19. Place of burial or removal; date of burial.

20. Signature and address of undertaker or person acting as such.

The personal and statistical particulars (Items 1 to 13) shall be authenticated by the signature of the informant, who may be any competent person acquainted with the facts.

The statement of facts relating to the disposition of the body shall be signed by the undertaker or person acting as such.

The medical certificate shall be made and signed by the physician, if any, last in attendance on the deceased, who shall specify the time in attendance, the time he last saw the deceased alive and the hour of the day at which death occurred. And he shall further state the cause of death, so as to show the course of disease or sequence of causes resulting in the death, giving first the name of the disease causing death (primary cause); and the contributory (secondary) cause, if any, and the duration of each. Indefinite and unsatisfactory terms, denoting only symptoms of disease or conditions resulting from disease, will not be held sufficient for the issuance of a burial or removal permit; and any certificate containing only such terms, as defined by the State Registrar, shall be returned to the physician or person making the medical certificate for correction and more definite statement. Causes of death which may be the result of either disease or violence shall be carefully defined; and if from violence the means of injury shall be stated, and whether (probably) accidental, suicidal, or homicidal. And for sions and local statutes in combination, for the rulings have seldom been frequent enough to develop a general principle. Moreover, the statutory deaths in hospitals, institutions, or of non-residents, the physician shall supply the information required under this head (Item 18), if he is able to do so, and may state where, in his opinion, the disease was contracted;"

§ 14 "The certificate of birth shall contain the following items which are hereby declared necessary for the public health, welfare and convenience, and for legal, social, and sanitary purposes which are hereby declared to be subserved by registration records:

1. Place of birth, including state, county, township or town, village or city. If in a city, the ward, street, and house number; if in a hospital or other institution, the name of the same to be given, instead of the street and house number.

2. Full name of child. If the child dies without a name, before the certificate is filed, enter the words "Died unnamed." If the living child has not yet been named at the date of filing certificate of birth, the space for "full name of child" is to be left blank, to be filled out subsequently by a supplemental report, as hereinafter provided.

3. Sex of child.

4. Whether a twin, triplet, or other plural birth. A separate certificate shall be required for each child in case of plural births.

5. For plural births, number of each child in order of birth.

6. Whether legitimate or illegitimate.

7. Date of birth, including the year, month and day.

8. Name of father, provided that if the child or person is illegitimate, the name or residence of or other identifying details relating to the father or reputed father shall not be entered without his consent; [provided further, that whenever a judgment has been entered determining the paternity of an illegitimate child, the clerk of the court where entered shall report the facts to the State Registrar who shall record the name of the father and sufficient data to identify the judgment, in connection with the record of the death of the child appearing in his office. A report by the clerk of any court subsequently vacating such judgment shall be made and recorded in like manner].

9. Residence of father.

10. Color or race of father.

11. Age of father at last birthday, in years.

12. Birthplace of father; at least state or foreign country, if known.

13. Occupation of father. The occupation to be reported of any persons, male or female, who had any remunerative employment, with the statement of (a) trade, profession or particular kind of work; (b) general nature of industry, business or establishment in which employed (or employer).

14. Maiden name of mother, provided that if the child or person is illegitimate, the name or residence or other identifying details relating to the mother shall not be entered without her consent; [provided further, that whenever a judgment has been entered determining the paternity of an illegitimate child, the clerk of the court where entered shall report the facts to the State Registrar who shall record the name of the mother, and sufficient data to identify the judgment, in connection with the record of the death of the child, appearing in his office. A report by the clerk of any court subsequently vacating such judgment shall be made and recorded in like manner].

15. Residence of mother.

16. Color or race of mother.

17. Age of mother at last birthday, in years.

18. Birthplace of mother; at least state or foreign country, if known.

19. Occupation of mother. The occupation to be reported if engaged in any remunerative employment, with the statement of (a) trade, profession, or particular kind of work; (b) general nature of industry, business or establishment in which employed (or employer).

20. Number of children born to this mother, including present birth.

21. Number of children of this mother living.

22. The certificate of attending physician or midwife as to attendance at birth, including statement of year, month, day (as given in Item 7), and hour of birth, and whether the child was born alive or stillborn. This certification shall be signed by the attending physician or midwife, with date of signature and address; if there is no physician or midwife in attendance, then by the father or mother of the child, householder, owner of the premises, or manager or superintendent of public or private institution where the birth occurred, or other competent person, whose duty it shall be to notify the local registrar of such birth, as required by Section 13 of this act.

23. Exact date of filing in office of local registrar, attested by his official signature, and registered number of birth, as hereinafter provided;"

Alabama: Code 1907, § 3978 (registers of marriages, births, and deaths, "kept in pursuance of law or any rule of a church or religious society," are to be presumptive evidence of "the facts therein stated," when certified by the custodian); § 4886 (probate judge's record of marriage licenses issued by him is "presumptive evidence of the facts"); § 4887 ("all persons or religious societies solemnizing marriage in virtue of a license or according to their peculiar forms must within one month thereafter certify the fact in writing to the judge of probate, setting forth the names of provisions of the various jurisdictions differ widely in their scope. The Uniform Vital Statistics Act will in the course of time eliminate uncertainty from the parties and the time and place of celebration thereof"; the certificate to be recorded and a certified copy to be "presumptive evidence of the fact"); § 4882 (clerk's or minute keeper's record of marriages solemnized by religious city, or a sworn copy, is "presumptive evidence of the fact"); 1876, Beggs v. State, 55 Ala. 108, 109 (marriage evidenced by the probate judge's record of a justice of the peace's certificate); 1889, Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 69, 7 So. 302 (the statute applies to registers kept out of the State); 1900, Eldridge v. State, 126 Ala. 63, 28 So. 580 (certified copy of license, with certificate of celebrant, admitted under Code §§ 2846, 2847); 1918, Darrow v. Darrow, 201 Ala. 477, 78 So. 383 (rival widows; a Georgia marriage record in the court of ordinary, offered by copy, admitted); St. 1919, No. 658, p. 909, § 13, sub. 21; amending Code 1907, § 711 (vital statistics; State registrar's record of birth or death, admissible by certified copy, to prove "the facts therein stated");

Alaska: St. 1913, April 25, c. 35, § 1 (Territorial registrar of vital statistics, covering birth, death and marriage; "all records made under the provisions of this Act" to be 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts purporting to be set forth therein");

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1716 ("any certificate of marriage executed in accordance with the laws of this State, or the record thereof, or a duly certified copy of such record" is 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts stated therein"); § 3843 (marriage ceremony must be witnessed; "and a certificate, evidence of such marriage, must be signed by at least two such witnesses"); § 4426 (State registrar of vital statistics, certified copy of register of birth or death, to be 'prima facie' evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1920, Ford v. State, 21 Ariz. 567, 192 Pac. 1117 (bigamy; Mexican official marriage certificate, admitted);

California: Pol. Code 1872, § 3083 (State registrar's record of marriage or birth to be 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts therein stated"); § 2984 (same provision applied to record of death); St. 1905, c. 498, P. C. 269 b (open adultery; "a recorded certificate of marriage or a certified copy thereof, there being no decree of divorce, proves the marriage of a person for the purposes of this section"); St. 1915, p. 575, May 19, § 21 (State registrar of vital statistics; certified copy by State or local registrar of record of birth or death, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1886, People v. Stokes, 71 Cal. 263, 12 Pac. 71 (recorded certificate of marriage, made according to law, admitted);

Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 5562 (county recorder's book of marriages, admissible); 1874, Kansas P. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 453, 462 (extracts from a German parish register of baptisms, found in the deceased's effects, admitted as statements of family history, under the rule of § 1480, ante, apparently without regard to the present question); § 990 (State registrar's certified copy of register of birth or death, admissible);

Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1295 (record of marriage licenses and certificates kept by clerk of supreme court; a copy of "any license and certificate of marriage so kept and recorded," certified by the clerk under seal, is admissible);

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1887, § 2788 (town registrar's or officiating person's certificate of marriage, to be evidence of the facts stated); 1794, Huntly v. Compstock, 2 Root 99 (minister's record of baptisms, admitted); 1810, Swift, Evidence, 5 ("Courts have permitted marriages to be evidenced by the certificate of the magistrate or minister who performed the ceremony. On principle, it should be under oath and not by certificate; but we [in Connecticut] have experienced no inconvenience from the practice, and it has continued so long that it seems to have become common law"); 1885, Northrop v. Knowles, 52 Conn. 522, 525 (certificate of marriage by a magistrate, received, following "in this jurisdiction from the earliest times the practice" to do so, on proof of genuineness); 1892, Erwin v. English, 57 Conn. 562, 19 Atl. 238, 61 Conn. 502, 23 Atl. 753 (marriage certificate of a minister in Ohio, admitted; abstract of a marriage register of a Roman Catholic chapel in Ireland, excluded because imperfect); 1902, Murray v. Supreme Lodge, 74 Conn. 715, 52 Atl. 722 (city registrar's record of marriage license, marriage certificate, and birth certificate, admitted, the record being a part of the statutory duty of the officer);

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 2171 (religious society's register of marriage, birth, death, or burial, admissible); § 805 (record certified copy of record of birth, marriage, or death, by State registrar or county recorder, admissible to prove "the facts therein stated"); § 2996 (marriage record book of county clerk of the peace, admissible); St. 1921, c. 182, § J (substituting a new § 2996 in Rev. Code; marriage record book kept by county clerk of the peace "shall be a public record. . . and shall be admitted as evidence for the facts therein contained");

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2091 (State registrar's certified copy of record of birth or death, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 3936 (the original license and certificate "shall be filed as evidence of the marriage" with the county judge); § 3937 (if no license or certificate is available, proof by most parts of the field; but that legislation affects only records kept since the installation of the uniform system. The different theories (ante, § 1643), recorded affidavit is allowable; cited more fully post, § 1719);

Georgia: St. 1914, No. 466, p. 157, § 20 (vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of a birth or death, to be evidence "of facts therein stated");
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 1140 (record of birth, marriage, and death, kept by the board of health, admissible to prove "the facts therein contained"); § 177 (Territorial secretary's certificate of Hawaiian birth, or any such certificate issued under prior law, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 2607 (certificates of Hawaiian birth, issued by U. S. department of commerce and labor, admissible); § 2912 (certificate of marriage, by person solemnizing, delivered to the parties, to be evidence "of the fact of marriage"); St. 1915, Apr. 6, No. 48, amending Rev. L. § 1133 (registrar's record of births "reported later than 6 months after the date of said birth," not to be admissible "as evidence of any statement made therein"); 1852, Whittit v. Miller, 1 Haw. 82 (certificate of marriage, not required by law to be given, held not admissible, in crim. con., to evidence a domestic marriage; otherwise of the marriage registry or a copy of it); 1896, Republic v. Waipa, 10 Haw. 442 (marriage record of a Roman Catholic Church in Maui, admitted, being required by law to be kept; marriage certificate of the same priest, not decided); 1905, Kapiolani Estate v. Thurston, 16 Haw. 471 (a "book of marriage records," kept by a minister, recording marriages among his parishioners, admitted); 1906, Godfrey v. Rowland, 17 Haw. 577, 581 (baptismal record by a clergyman in Australia, admitted); 1920, Akona v. Kalnai, 25 Haw. 392 (ejectment; marriage record book of the Catholic Church at Halawa, required by R. L. 1915, § 2912, to be kept, admitted);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 4617 (county recorder's "books of marriages" to be "evidence in all courts"); § 1644 (certified copy of record of birth or death by department of public welfare to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 4608 ("original certificate and record of marriage made by the judge, justice, or minister, as prescribed in this chapter," and the county recorder's record on certified copy thereof, admissible as "presumption evidence of the fact of such marriage");
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 89, § 12 (county clerk's registry of a certificate of marriage by the celebrant, or "such certificate or a copy of the same," admissible "as evidence of the marriage of the parties as therein stated"); St. 1915, June 22, p. 660, § 20 (vital statistics; copy of record of "a birth, stillbirth, or death, when properly certified to by the State board of health or the local registrar or the county clerk, shall be 'prima facie' evidence . . . of the facts therein stated"); 1840, Jackson v. People, 3 Ill. 231 (marriage license and certificate of domestic justice of the peace, proved by certified copy, admitted); 1886, Tucker v. People, 117 Ill. 91, 7 N. E. 51 (marriage register, admissible only when kept under statutory duty); 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 592, 13 N. E. 809 (like Jackson v. People, under statute); 1901, Howard v. Illinois T. & S. Bank, 189 Ill. 568, 59 N. E. 1106 (physician's return of birth, made under statute, receivable; here excluded because it was impeached by both parties as knowingly falsified by the maker); 1904, Sokel v. People 212 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 382 (marriage record of N. Y. City health department, not shown to be official, excluded; but a marriage contract purporting to be by the law of Moses was admitted); 1904, Murphy v. People, 213 Ill. 154, 72 N. E. 779 (N. Y. Catholic church register excluded because the priest's handwriting was not proved);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 7596 (State board of health's record of birth or death, by secretary's certified copy, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 8374 (marriage certificate recorded with county clerk; the "record, or a copy thereof," admissible);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 3146, Comp. Code, § 6590 (court clerk's register of marriages, not expressly declared admissible; this provision supersedes Code 1873, § 2197, under which some ensuing cases were decided); Comp. Code, § 1373 (State registrar of vital statistics; his certified copy of "the record of a birth or death," to be 'prima facie' evidence); St. 1921, c. 222, § 21 (State registrar of vital statistics; his certified copy of a record of birth or death to be 'prima facie' evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1862, Niles v. Sprague, 13 Ia. 198 (certified copy, by an Ohio clerk, of his record-memorandum, and not of the recorded certificate of marriage itself, excluded); 1866, Verholf v. Van Houwenlengen, 21 Ia. 429, 430 (marriage register, received under statute); State v. Matlock, 70 Ia. 229, 30 N. W. 495 (county marriage record, admitted under statute); 1903, Casley v. Mitchell, 121 Ia. 96, 96 N. W. 725 (parish register of St. Just, Cornwall, kept by the vicar, as required by law, admitted); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7281 ("When by ordinance or custom of any religious society or congregation in this State a record is required to be kept of marriages, births, baptisms, deaths, or interments," such register is admissible); § 10167 (registration of vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of birth or death, to be evidence of "the facts stated therein"); § 6143 (State registrar's certified copy of marriage records, admissible); § 6152, St. 1867, c. 84 ("the books of record of marriage licenses issued," kept by the county probate judges, "shall be evidence in all courts"); 1905, State v. Miller, 71 Kan. 200, 80 Pac. 51 (copy of a Russian parish record, excluded, because not shown to be official);

considered together with the rulings and statutes in each jurisdiction, will perhaps suffice to unravel the law in a given jurisdiction of the United States.

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 2062 a, par. 21 (vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of birth, sickness, or death, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); § 1638 (certified copy of "any register of births and marriages" in any "State, nation, province, colony, city or town, out of the United States," "if the same shall have been registered in due form according to the laws of such sovereignty," is admissible); St. 1916, Mar. 18, p. 162, Stats. 1915, § 4526 c–6 (age for school attendance; "a passport, a duly attested transcript or the certificate of birth or baptism, a certified copy under oath of a record in the family Bible or other religious record, showing the date and place of birth of such child, shall be produced as evidence"; if not available, "the record of the age stated in the first enrollment to be formed shall be considered as evidence thereof; if there be no school enrollment showing such fact, other evidence as to the age of such child shall be considered"; it is fortunate that so crude a type of legislative drafting does not appear to have been followed in other States); St. 1921, Mar. 23, c. 76, amending Carroll's Ky. Stats. 1900, § 6062 a (quinquennial index of births and deaths, published by the State board of health; "the information contained . . . shall . . . be accepted as 'prima facie' evidence of facts"); 1892, Faustre v. Com., 92 Ky. 34, 17 S. W. 189 (register of marriages by registrar of an Ontario town, not admitted, for lack of evidence that the marriage "was registered in due form according to the laws of that sovereignty"; the certificate of the officer reciting the Ontario law not being sufficient; unsound); 1912, Apkins v. Com. 148 Ky. 662, 147 S. W. 376 (bigamy; record of marriages in Illinois, proved by the deputy county clerk on the stand, admitted); 1912, Royal Neighbors v. Hayes, 150 Ky. 626, 150 S. W. 845 (Irish parish priest's baptismal record, dated 1844, not admitted under Stats. § 1638; it is odd that it was not ruled in on the principle of § 1523, ante);

Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 193 (filiation of legitimate children, provable "by a transcript from the register of birth or baptism, kept agreeable to law or to the usages of the country"); §§ 194–196 (quoted ante, § 1606) St. 1877, ex. sess., No. 80, § 12 (registration of marriage in deputy recorder's office of State board of health in parish of New Orleans; certificate of marriage celebrated prior to date of act and recorded here, provable by certified copy); St. 1914, No. 60, § 4 (State or local registrar or other custodian of vital statistics records; certified copy of record of birth or death, to be 'prima facie' evidence, "of the facts therein recited"); St. 1918, July 11, No. 257, § 21 (vital statistics, copy of the record of a birth or death, certified by the State or local registrar or his deputy, of parish of Orleans and city of New Orleans, to be 'prima facie' evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1881, Hebert's Succession, 33 La. An. 1099, 1105 (marriage register kept by law, admitted); 1896, Justus' Succession, 48 La. An. 1096, 20 So. 680 (German official parish register, admitted); 1920, State v. Bischoff, 146 La. 748, 84 So. 41 (bigamy; certified copy of county clerk's record of marriage in Texas, admitted); compare also the citations ante, § 1336, as to the conclusiveness of the register of civil status;

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 64, § 12 (record of marriage, in town clerk's office, admissible by copy by town clerk, "as evidence of the fact of marriage"; State secretary's license to solemnize marriages, admissible, or provable by certified copy); § 15 (copy of record of marriage, attested or sworn to by justice of the peace, commissioned minister, or town clerk, admissible to prove "the fact of marriage"); § 37 (town clerk's record of any birth, marriage, or death, or a duly certified copy, admissible as evidence of "such birth, marriage or death"); 1824, Sumner v. Sebec, 3 Greenl. 225 (town clerk's record of births, etc., admitted); 1829, Damon's Case, 6 Greenl. 148, 149 (certified copy of justice's recorded certificate of marriage, admitted); 1830, Wedgwood's Case, 8 Greenl. 75 (same as Sumner v. Sebec); 1841, Jones v. Jones, 18 Me. 308 (justice certificate, admitted); 1921, Reed v. Stevens, 120 Me. 290, 113 A. H. 712 (crim. con., to prove the marriage a document was offered purporting to be a certificate of marriage, naming the parties and celebrant, and ending, "State of New Hampshire. I hereby certify that the above marriage record is correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. Fred E. Quimby, clerk of Dover, N. H. [Seal]"; held (1) that the Maine statute making such records and copies admissible did not apply to records out of the State; see ante, § 1633; (2) that the document did not satisfy the Federal statute; see post, § 1680; (3) that no other mode of validation was satisfied; the opinion candidly admits that "this decision may seem in these liberal days to be ultratechnical", which it assuredly is, i. e. it sets up an artificial formula for performance by the plaintiff on the pretext of establishing truth, instead of asking whether the fact was really disputed at all); 1921, Smith v. Heine S. B. C., 119 Me. 552, 112 Atl. 516 (widow's claim for compensation; certificate of marriage purporting to be made by

In general, the courts do not show sufficient liberality in recognizing such records.

J. M., justice, in Pennsylvania, held admissible "without authentication");
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 62, § 9 (certified copy of recorded marriage license and certificate, under hand of clerk of circuit or common pleas court, and seal of court, admissible); Art. 43, § 18 (State registrar of vital statistics; certified copy of record of birth or death, to be 'prima facie' evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1879, Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 709, 720 (entries of baptism and marriage in a Lutheran church in Baltimore, admitted as regular entries receivable after the entrant's death; here the clergyman was alive, but by agreement his calling was dispensed with);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 207, § 45 (record of marriage kept by law by the person solemnizing, or by a city or town clerk or registrar, or a certified copy thereof, admissible); c. 207, § 46 (record or certificate of U. S. consul or diplomatic agent, admissible to prove a marriage solemnized by him); c. 46, § 19 (town clerk's record relative to a birth, marriage, or death, shall be evidence of the facts recorded; certificate thereof, by himself or assistant, admissible); 1810, Milford v. Worcester, 7 Mass. 48, 56, semble (recorded certificate of marriage as required by statute, admissible); 1813, Com. v. Norcross, 9 Mass. 493 (town record of marriages, admitted under statute); 1814, Ellis v. Ellis, 11 Mass. 92 (certificate of marriage not sufficient on charge of adultery; on the principle of § 2085, post); 1818, Com. v. Littlejohn, 15 Mass. 163 (obscure; similar to the preceding case); 1848, Com. v. Morris, 1 Cush. 391 (adultery; a "certificate, purporting to be a marriage certificate made by a clergyman of another State," excluded because not authenticated); 1918, Re Derinza, 229 Mass. 435, 118 N. E. 942 (death of an alien employee; purporting copies of certificates of marriage in Italy, not received on the facts; the opinion critically points out the several defects, but proceeds "it is not necessary to decide just what formalities would have been required to render them competent evidence"; this was an unsound and reprehensible attitude; first, because scientifically the court could not possibly have criticized the offer without having some definite standard by which to criticize, and this standard could have been revealed instead of being kept secret; secondly, sound judicial administration permits and requires a Supreme Court to instruct the bar how to practice correctly and not merely to penalize them for an error; this would-be Jovian aloofness "we are not called upon now to decide," etc., is misguided, for even Jove himself descended in time of need from Olympus to interfere actively among men); 1922, Taylor v. Whittier, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 346 (probate of a will; a birth certificate not described, admitted);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 5607 (register or certificate of death, authorized by law, admissible); § 11375 (county clerk's record of marriage, or minister's or justice's lawful certificate of marriage, admissible); § 5621 (State secretary's certified copy of record of birth, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 11738 (St. 1915, "affidavits as to the birth, marriage, death, name, residence, identity, and relationship of parties named in deeds, wills, mortgages, and other instruments affecting real estate," recorded with the register of deeds, admissible in all proceedings affecting such real estate); § 12530 ("the original certificates and records of marriage made by the minister, justice, or other person authorized to solemnize marriages," admissible, also the county clerk's certified copy, as "presumptive evidence of the fact of such marriage"); § 12531 (county clerk's record or certified copy of license to marry, admissible); St. 1921, No. 170, p. 349 (powers of State secretary as to giving certificates of birth, etc., transferred to the State commissioner of health); 1858, People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 364 (excluding a marriage certificate made by a clergyman in New Jersey); 1875, Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126, 129 (entry in a register of marriage in a Lutheran church in Germany, admitted); 1882, People v. Broughton, 49 Mich. 339, 13 N. W. 621 ("a recorded marriage certificate," admitted to prove marriage); 1886, Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471, 475, 28 N. W. 521 (records of baptism of a German Lutheran church in Detroit, admitted; objection being not properly taken); 1887, Hunt v. Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671, 31 N. W. 576 (sworn copy of entry in a parish record of a Catholic church in Ontario, admitted to prove baptism; quoted supra); 1894, Tessman v. United Friends, 103 Mich. 185, 188, 61 N. W. 261 (certificate of baptism and certificate of marriage, from Prussia, signed by the parish priest, and certifying the facts "upon the basis of the registry"; the register or "the actual contents," if proved by copy, said to be admissible, but the certificate of contents excluded, on the principle of § 1678, post); 1896, People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819 (Baptist minister's certificate, admitted; explaining away People v. Lambert); 1896, People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250, 68 N. W. 157 (domestic certificate admissible, but not a foreign one); 1897, Mead v. Randall, 111 Mich. 268, 69 N. W. 506 (marriage certificate, and record, admitted under statute); 1906, Krapp v. Metrop. L. Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 369, 106 N. W. 1107 (certain certificates of death and cause of death, admitted under Comp. L. § 4617, supra); 1920, Boyce v. McKenna, 211 Mich. 204, 178 N. W. 701 (annulment; record of Catholic marriage in Ireland, admitted by certified copy);

§ 1645. Same: Certificates of Birth, Marriage, or Death. For admitting certificates in general (post, § 1674) no implied authority of office seems

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8458 (certificates and records of marriage, made as prescribed by law, admissible to prove marriage); § 8431 (official record of death of a joint tenant or person on whose life any title is limited, to be evidence of "the death of such person and the termination of such joint tenancy," or other estate, when recorded by certified copy in the county registry of deeds); § 4661 (vital statistics; State or local registrar's certified copy of record of "any birth or death recorded under the provisions of this Act" to be evidence of "the facts therein stated");
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1966, Hem. § 1626 (certificate of marriage, "signed and transmitted to the circuit clerk of the proper county by the person, officer, or clerk of the religious society celebrating the same," admissible); § 1954, Hem. § 1614 (foreign registers; quoted post, § 1680); § 3246, Hem. § 2553 (exemplification of marriage certificate recorded by clerk issuing license, to be "evidence of the marriage"); St. 1912, c. 149, p. 158, Mar. 11, § 5, Hem. § 4872 (vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of birth, sickness, or death, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated");
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5352 ("When by the ordinance or custom of any religious society or congregation in this State a register is required to be kept of marriages, births, baptisms, deaths, or interments, such register shall be admitted as evidence"); § 5392 (recorders' books of marriages kept according to law, admissible); § 5393 (recorded marriage contracts, admissible); § 5816 (vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of "any birth or death registered under the provisions of this article" to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); § 7307 (certificate of marriage by the person solemnizing, stating names, residence, and date, admissible to prove "the facts therein stated"); § 10614 (lost marriage record; recorded affidavits of eye witnesses may be admitted); § 10617 (celebrant's recorded certificate of marriage, made to take the place of a destroyed marriage record, admissible); 1852, Childress v. Cutter, 16 Mo. 24, 31, 46 (ordinary church-register of marriages in Louisiana, not kept by law, excluded); 1871, Morrissey v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 47 Mo. 521 (register of baptism kept by church rule in a Catholic church in New York excluded, because in this country "all church registers are unauthentic and are not regarded as public documents"; the Missouri statute held not to apply to foreign registers); 1905, Collins v. German-Amer. M. L. Ass'n, 112 Mo. App. 209, 86 S. W. 891 (certain Roman Catholic registers in Ireland, deposed to be admissible by Irish law, received; Childress v. Cutter and Morrissey v. W. F. Co. are presumably but not expressly overruled; the opinion makes an extraordinarily confusing mixture of the Exceptions for pedigree statements, shop-books, and public documents, and is calculated to discourage any further scientific study of the Hearsay rule in this State); 1915, State v. Hamilton, 263 Mo. 294, 172 S. W. 593 (Missouri Baptist Orphan's Home register of births, kept by ordinance of the society, admitted under Rev. St. 1909, § 6297, R. S. 1899, § 3101, supra; the extent of either the hopeless ignorance or effrontery of counsel nowadays on points of Evidence may be judged from the circumstance that the brief in this case, contending that the admission was erroneous, cited Childress v. Cutter and Morrissey v. Ferry Co., supra, in the face of the above statute);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 5720 ("the original certificate of marriage," as prescribed in the Code, and the district court clerk's record or his certified copy, to be "presumptive evidence of such marriage"); 1914, State v. Vinn, 50 Mont. 27, 144 Pac. 773 (statutory rape; county school census, required by law to be kept, admitted to prove the age of the girl);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 1504 ("certificate and record of marriage made by the minister, officer, or person, as prescribed in this chapter," admissible; probate judge's record of marriages, admissible); § 1562 (county judge's record of Indian agent's record of Indian marriages, admissible);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 2340 (county clerk's certificate and record of marriage, made as prescribed in statute, admissible to prove marriage); § 2350 ("original certificate and record" made by person solemnizing and recorded, and the county recorder's record thereof or his certified copy, to be presumptive evidence); § 2971 (vital statistics; secretary of the State board of health's certified copy of the record of birth or death, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated");
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 173, § 10, c. 174, § 14 (town-clerk's record of birth, marriage, or death, admissible); c. 174, § 14 (duly officiating person's certificate of marriage, admissible); 1838, State v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 515 (town-clerk's record of marriage, admitted; "the Legislature, in requiring marriages to be recorded by the town-clerk, intended the record should be evidence of the fact");
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence §§ 28, 29 (return of death, marriage, or birth, by a "physician, clergyman, or other person," according to law, admissible); Gen. St. 1896, to have been recognized at common law; certificates differing remarkably in this respect from registers. It might therefore be assumed that, in the Birth D. & V. S. § 18 (records of marriages, births, and deaths, kept heretofore and prior to St. 1888, Feb. 15, by the Secretary of State, made admissible "to prove the facts therein contained"; as also a copy certified by the medical superintendent of the State bureau of vital statistics); Birth D. & V. S. § 10 (certified copy of certificate of birth or death, by medical superintendent of State bureau of vital statistics, to be admissible "to prove the facts therein contained"); Marriages, § 15, St. 1912, c. 199, p. 306, § 15 (vital statistics; certified copy by medical superintendent of State bureau of vital statistics, of original "certificate of marriage, marriage license, and consent to the marriage of minors," to be evidence "of the facts therein contained"); Labor § 19 (violation of child labor laws; copy of baptismal record, certified by custodian, admissible, on certain conditions); St. 1920, Apr. 6, c. 99, § 29 (State registrar of vital statistics; his certified copy of record of "a birth or death," to be 'prima facie' evidence); 1896, Royal Society of Good Fellows v. McDonald, 59 N. J. L. 248, 35 Atl. 1061, semble (Irish parish-register excluded, because not shown to be kept by law; opinion not clear as to the principle adopted); 1902, Hancock v. Supreme Council, 67 N. J. L. 614, 52 Atl. 301 (entry of baptism in a Catholic parish-register of Ireland, admitted); 1907, Sparks v. Ross, 72 N. J. Eq. 762, 65 Atl. 977 (a certain marriage record from a county clerk's office; its standing doubted on the facts); 1918, Schaffer v. Krestoonikow, 88 N. J. Eq. 523, 103 Atl. 913 (a purporting parish record of baptism from Russia, under U. S. consular attestation from Odessa, and with testimony from a Russian lawyer attached to the Russian consulate in New York rejected, on various grounds as to the insufficiency of proof of custodianship of record and insufficiency of authentication; the full terms of the document and the opinion must be consulted for details; the opinion is one of those that sadden the practical mind with obstructive logical niceties; if our law of Evidence, after a century of development in precedent and statute, really could provide no better rule of proof than this, it would deserve to be discarded);

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2186 ("all church records," proved genuine as ancient documents under the rule of § 2137, post, receivable to show date of birth, baptism, marriage, or death);

New York: Cons. L. 1909, Domestic Rel. § 23 (record of marriage, "including the license and certificate," provable by county clerk's certified copy); Penal § 817 (age of child; "a copy of the record of baptism of any child in any parish register, or register kept in a church, or by a clergyman thereof, or a certificate of baptism duly authenticated by the person in charge of such register, or who administered said baptism, and also a transcript of the record of birth recorded in any bureau of vital statistics or board of health, duly authenticated by its secretary or under its seal, and the entries made in a family Bible, shall also be competent evidence upon the question of the age"); C. P. A. 1920, § 372 (minister's or magistrate's certificate of marriage within the State, or municipal clerk's entry of marriage, admissible); St. 1913, c. 619 (amending Consol. L. c. 45, Public Health, by inserting a new § 391; State commissioner of health's certified copy of record of birth or death, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1818, Jackson v. Boneham, 15 Johns. 226 (town records of births, etc., admitted); 1825, Jackson v. King, 5 Cow. 238, 241 (church register of baptisms, etc., admitted); 1918, People v. Todoro, 224 N. Y. 129, 120 N. E. 135 (rape under age; a purporting transcript of official record of birth from Italy, excluded, on the pettiest technical grounds); 1921, Grills v. Sherman-Stalter Co., Sup. App. Div. 186 N. Y. Suppl. 810 (employee's dependents; certain birth-certificate, etc., from Italy, held not sufficiently authenticated under C. C. P. §§ 952, 953, 956; unsound);

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 7111 (record of birth or death, under State registration system; copy "properly certified by the State registrar, admissible as evidence "of the facts stated therein"); 1819, Jacock v. Gilliams, 3 Murph. 52 (register of births, etc., kept by law, admitted); 1891, State v. Davis, 109 N. C. 780, 783, 14 S. E. 55 (justice's license and certificate, admitted); 1897, State v. Melton, 120 N. C. 591, 26 S. E. 933 (county record-book of marriages, with filed justice's certificate, admitted);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 4367 (record books of marriage licenses and certificates, kept by county judge, admissible); § 454 (vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of a birth or death, to be evidence "of the facts therein stated");

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 231 (record of birth or death in office of State registrar of vital statistics, by certified copy, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); 1827, Richmond v. Patterson, 3 Oh. 370 (town record of marriages, etc., kept by law, admissible); 1867, Stanglein v. State, 17 Oh. St. 453, 463 (record of foreign marriages, not shown to be kept by law, excluded);

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 646 (record of "marriages, births, baptisms, deaths, or interments," required "by ordinance or custom of any religious society or congregation in this Territory" to be kept, admissible); § 7498 (certified copy by county judge, under official absence of an express statutory duty to give a certificate of marriage, the certificate of the celebrant of a marriage, even though he were an signature and seal, of marriage record kept by him "shall be received as evidence");

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 8507 (vital statistics; certified copy of record of any birth or death, by State registrar or county clerk, to be evidence of "the facts therein stated"); 1898, State v. Isenhart, 32 Or. 170, 52 Pac. 569 (certificate required by law, but not expressly made evidence, admissible);
Pennsylvania: St. 1700, Dig. 1920, § 10349, Evidence (registry kept by any religious society, of marriage, birth, or death within the province, receivable); St. 1837, Mar. 31, § 20, Dig. § 10351, Evidence (registry of burials of any religious society or corporate town in places out of the United States, 'prima facie' evidence of the death and the time of interment of the person); St. 1838, Mar. 17, § 5, Dig. §§ 10353, 10354, Evidence (registry of baptism or marriage by a domestic bishop, receivable as if made by the clergyman of the church); St. 1885, June 23, § 6, Dig. § 14560 (certified copy of record of marriage license and certificate by clerk of orphans' court under court seal, admissible); St. 1915, June 7, § 21, Dig. § 9005 (State registrar of vital statistics takes over all records formerly required to be kept by boards of health etc.; his certified copy of "the record of a birth, death, or marriage," to be 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts therein stated"); 1759, Hyam v. Edwards, 1 Dall. 2 (birth-and-death register of Quakers in England, received to show pedigree); 1814, Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. 416 (registry of German Reformed Congregation at Easton, Pa., admitted to prove death, under St. 1700; the Court saying, "This act is in conformity to the principles of the common law"); 1823, Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. 383, 387 (parish-register of marriages, etc., kept by the rector, from the Barbadoes, admitted); 1843, Clark v. Trinity Church, 5 W. & S. 600 (minister's record of baptisms, admissible under statute); 1875, American Life Ins. Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507, 515 (register of births, etc., kept according to law by a parson in Germany, received); 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577, 600 (register of domestic Evangelical Lutheran church, admitted to show death and burial); 1901, Yung's Estate, 199 Pa. 35, 48 Atl. 692 ("a certificate of inheritance," by the judge of a court in the Grand Duchy of Oppenheim, admitted; approving Hyam v. Edwards);
Philippine Isl. Civ. C. §§ 53–55 (register of civil status; like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 3389, 3390, quoted ante, § 1336); to the following citations should be added those collected ante, § 1336 (conclusiveness of registers); 1906, U. S. v. Orosa, 7 P. I. 247, 250 (bigamy; canonical certificates of marriage recorded in parochial books prior to Dec. 18, 1899, the date of Gen. Orders No. 68 concerning marriage, are public official books; certified copy by the parish priest as custodian is admissible); 1908, U. S. v. Arceo, 11 P. I. 530, 536 (bigamy; similar certificates admitted, to prove a marriage in 1897); 1909, U. S. v. Ibanez, 13 P. I. 686 (bigamy; similar certificates admitted to prove a marriage in 1893); 1912, Adriano v. De Jesus, 23 P. I. 350 (baptismal certificates of Bulucan, issued "during the former sovereignty," admissible); 1915, U. S. v. Evangelista, 29 P. I. 215 (bigamy; church registrars of birth, marriage and death, since Gen. O. 68 and Act No. 190, are private writings, and must be evidenced as such under C. C. P. § 324, quoted ante, § 1290);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 3223–3225 (quoted post, § 2085); §§ 3389, 3390 (register of civil status; quoted ante, § 1336); the judicial decisions are placed ante, § 1336, where the question of the conclusiveness of the register of civil status is considered;
Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1919, c. 121, § 16 (municipal clerk's record of marriage, birth, or death, admissible); 1902, Rhode Island H. T. Co. v. Thorndike, 24 R. I. 105, 52 Atl. 873 (English marriage certificate and birth register, admitted);
South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, § 5747 (marriage certificate, or a copy, signed by celebrant, and certified by the clerk of court or judge of probate, to be evidence "of the contract of marriage between the parties therein named");
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 9913 (certified copies of "any certificate or record" in the office of the State superintendent of vital statistics, to be evidence); § 127 (clerk of court's "entry in the marriage register, or a duly certified copy thereof," to be evidence "of the marriage and of the facts therein contained"); 1910, State v. Walsh, 25 S. D. 30, 125 N. W. 295 (original certificate required by law, admitted, although Civ. C. § 55 mentions only the record or a copy as admissible; the opinion does not discuss the principle);
Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3118*a*38 (vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of birth or death shall be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1846, Rice v. State, 7 Humph. 14 (county court marriage license and return, admitted under statute); 1904, Murray v. Supreme Hive, 112 Tenn. 664, 80 S. W. 827 (records of a board of health, admitted to show age);
Texas: Rev. P. C. 1911, § 491 (adultery; marriage may be proved by the "production of the original marriage license and return thereon, or a certified copy thereof"); 1846, Smith v. Smith, 1 Tex. 621, 625 (record-certificate from Missouri, not admitted without a showing as to its legal sanction in that State); 1907, Burton v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 196, 101 S. W. 226 (bigamy; rule of § 2085, post, applied ecclesiastical officer, would be inadmissible. Such seems to have been the common law.

But in order to interpret the rulings aright, the distinction between a certificate proper and certain other things must be kept in mind. (1) A bishop's certificate of marriage or divorce is sometimes mentioned in the older books. This, however, was not regarded as a form of evidence, but as judgment under another mode of trial. The ecclesiastical officers in former times had jurisdiction to try matters matrimonial and testamentary (post, § 2250); to a recorded marriage certificate); 1918, Ford v. State, 82 Tex. Cr. 639, 200 S. W. 841 (assault to rape under age; "register of the birth and baptism of the girl in St. Joseph's church in Oklahoma," admitted);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 5058 (certified copy of the State registrar's "record of a birth or death" shall be 'prima facie' evidence "of the facts therein stated"); 1912, State v. Springer, 40 Utah 471, 121 Pac. 976 (adultery; certified copy of the marriage record, admissible, without noting any of the above distinctions);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3798 (marriage record made by person required at time of marriage to make and keep record; copy certified by him or by town or county clerk or State secretary if custodian, admissible); St. 1919, Mar. 27, No. 72 ("record of a birth, death, or marriage in another State or foreign country," provable by certified copy under oath by legal custodian, reciting that "the laws of such State or foreign country require such birth, death, or marriage to be recorded"); 1878, State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 291, 295 (town clerk's record, not made in accordance with the statute's terms, excluded; original marriage "certificate," returned by the minister to the town clerk, semble, admissible, if duly authenticated); 1879, State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 38 (town clerk's record, admitted as properly made);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 5098 (books of clerk of county and corporation court, registering marriages, births, and deaths, admissible to prove "the facts therein set forth"); § 1580 (State registrar of vital statistics; certified copy of record of "any birth or death," to be evidence "of the facts therein stated"); § 6207 (registers of birth and marriage without the U. S.; quoted post, § 1676); 1838, Moore v. Com., 9 Leigh 639, 642 (county court's records of marriage returns, admitted under statute);
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 5442 (vital statistics; State registrar's certified copy of record of birth or death, to be evidence "of the facts therein certified"); § 2153 ("A recorded certificate of marriage, or a certified copy thereof, there being no decree of divorce, proves the marriage of a person" for incest, adultery, or bigamy);
West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 63, § 27 (county court clerk's books of registry of marriages, births, and deaths, to be "'prima facie' evidence of the facts therein set forth in all cases"); c. 130, § 21 ("register of births and marriages in any place out of the U. S.," provable by certified copy, authenticated as in § 1680, post); St. 1921, c. 137, § 20 (State registrar of vital statistics; his certified copy of record of a birth or death to be 'prima facie' evidence of "the facts therein stated"); 1887, Blair v. Sayre, 29 W. Va. 608, 2 S. E. 97 (ejectment; county clerk's certified copies of a record of marriage and a record of births in West Virginia, admitted under the statute);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4160 (record of marriage, birth, or death, kept in the office of the register of deeds or of the Secretary of State, pursuant to statute, admissible; "any church, parish, or baptismal record, and any record of a physician or a person authorized to solemnize marriages, in which record are preserved the facts relating to any birth, marriage, or death, including the names of the persons, dates, places, and other material facts," are admissible to prove such facts; "but such record must be produced from its proper custody," with the lawful custodian's oath of genuineness); § 4172 ("official certificates of births, marriages, or deaths, issued in foreign countries in which such births, marriages, or deaths have occurred, purporting to be founded on books of record, and authenticated by the signature of any United States minister, secretary of legation, or other diplomatic officer, or by a consul of the United States accredited to or appointed for the foreign country," are admissible to prove the facts stated); § 4073 (compulsory education: provision for the use of baptismal or birth certificate and school enrollment, as evidence of a child's age in certain cases); 1902, Sandberg v. State, 113 Wis. 578, 89 N. W. 505 (Stats. § 4160, applied);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4970 ("original certificate and record of marriage," made as prescribed, "and the record thereof," or a certified copy, admissible to prove "the fact of such marriage").

For the use of certificates of marriage at common law, see the next section.

For the question whether a certificate or a register is essential in certain criminal cases, see post, § 2085.

For the statutory use of recorded affidavits by witnesses to a marriage, see post, § 1710.

and it was not infrequent, when an issue involving marriage arose in a common-law court, to accept the bishop's lawful finding, as to the fact of marriage, in the form of a "certificate." This was not evidence to the jury, but was a finding under a mode of trial independent of jury trial; and trial by certificate is enumerated in the books, down to the end of the 1700s, as one of the several modes of trial.[1] This early use, then, of the bishop's certificate of marriage does not afford any precedent for the use of an ordinary clergyman's certificate. (2) The word "certificate" was probably sometimes used to signify merely a certified copy, by the ecclesiastical custodian, of an entry in the marriage register. This, however, merely presents in effect the marriage register as the evidence, the original being exempted from production on general principles (ante, § 1218). No new question as to certificates proper is raised. (3) Where a secular register of marriages is kept, it is usually based in part upon returns made to the municipal officer by the actual celebrant; his return (sometimes, but less properly, called "certificate") is filed or recorded with the registrar, and a copy of the record is furnished to the parties. Here again, the use of the recorded original, or of a certified copy of the record, involves merely the use of a register authorized by law, and raises no new question. In some of the decisions and statutes the word "certificate" is clearly applied to this registered document or entry; and its possible use in others renders their significance uncertain.[2]

The new question is raised only when the document offered in evidence is an original separate paper, given by the celebrant into the custody of the parties themselves, and certifying the performance of the ceremony by him. This, as already suggested, would on general principles at common law not be admissible, since no duty to give it can be implied from the office and no early statute in England ever created such a duty. In England, the later decisions seem to admit such certificates,[3] but it is likely that the term was used in one or the other of the last two meanings above noted. In § 1645. [1] See a further explanation ante, § 1336.

[2] Such rulings are placed ante, § 1644.

[3] 1620, Alsop v. Bowtrell, Cro. Jac. 541 (legitimacy; "in this case the marriage betwixt them being at Utrecht beyond seas, and certified under the seal of the minister there, and of the said town, and that they cohabited for two years together as man and wife, was a sufficient proof that they were married"); 1744, Willes, C. J., in Omichund v. Barker, Willes 538, 549 (disapproves in part of Alsop v. Bowtrell; "to admit the certificate of the minister of the fact of the marriage at a place where there is no bishop" might be allowable, but not to admit "the certificate of their cohabiting together"; i. e. to admit the certificate only as to the act of official duty as done by the celebrant); 1773, Anon., Lofft 328 ("Certificate of marriage not evidence, unless it be shown as a copy from the parish register"); 1849, Piers v. Piers, 2 H. L. C. 331, 335, 362 (certificate of marriage by a clergyman of the established church, admitted without question); 1853, Stockbridge v. Quicke, 3 C. & K. 305 (certificate by a clergyman of the established church in Ireland, admitted); 1864, Sichel v. Lambert, 15 C. B. N. S. 781 (certificate of marriage in a Catholic chapel in London, admitted, but apparently not as evidence of the ceremony); 1885, Glenister v. Harding, L. R. 29 Ch. D. 985, 988 (marriage certificate, and baptismal certificate, apparently by the parish rector, held admissible); 1899, Westmacott v. Westmacott, Prob. 183 (certificate of marriage from the India Office, received); 1900, Cooper-King v. Cooper-King, Prob. 65 (certificate of marriage from the Registrar-General at Hong-Kong, admitted).

the United States, there is little common-law authority, and that not harmonious.[4]

No doubt such certificates, or their equivalent, ought to be furnished, for convenient use in evidence by the parties to a marriage, especially in this our country of numerous jurisdictions and migratory population. A certificate given directly by the celebrant is in the lapse of time difficult for honest persons to authenticate and easy for dishonest ones to fabricate; a certified copy from the permanent municipal register is for both these reasons the only satisfactory form of evidence suitable to be taken into possession by the parties. But in view of the hardship involved to innocent parties, and in spite of the risk of occasional falsification, it seems wiser to adopt a liberal principle, and to recognize the admissibility of certificates, in the strict sense of the term. Statutes in a few jurisdictions have sanctioned their use, either by creating a duty to give them or by expressly making them admissible.[5]

A certificate of marriage, however (in the strict sense), may nevertheless sometimes be available, not under the present Hearsay exception, but by virtue of other rules of Evidence:

(1) If it has been signed or used by the adverse party, it may be receivable against him as an admission.[6] (2) On a principle of circumstantial evidence (ante, § 268), the conduct of persons comporting themselves as husband and wife is always admissible as evidence of their marriage by consent. Among other acts available in this way, the possession of a marriage certificate, purporting to declare them married, may amount to holding themselves out as married, and may therefore, with the other conduct-evidence, be used in that aspect. This seems to be what is meant in a few decisions which declare marriage certificates, especially when coming from the possession of one of the parties to the alleged marriage, receivable as "corroborative" evidence.[7]

[4] The cases have been for convenience placed ante, § 1644, n. 6.

[5] These statutes have been for convenience placed ante, § 1644, n. 6. Statutes providing for military and naval officers' certificates of death in service are placed post, § 1675 a.

[6] Eng. 1911, Bellis' Case, 6 Cr. App. 283 (rape under age; "a birth certificate" admitted); U. S. 1909, People v. Le Doux, 155 Cal. 535, 102 Pac. 517 (said obiter that on a charge of bigamy, a duly certified copy of a county record of marriage in Arizona, together with the minister's certificate of indorsement on the original license, would be inadmissible without other evidence of the minister's authority and of his execution of the license and certificate; unsound; but here the defendant's affidavit applying for the license was held enough, the bigamy not being essential in the trial for murder); 1906, State v. Rocker, 130 Ia. 239, 106 N. W. 645 (murder; certificate of defendant's marriage in Germany, formerly exhibited by him as genuine, admitted in evidence against him); 1859, Hill v. Hill, 32 Pa. 511 (domestic marriage certificate, held not admissible "by itself," but received here because the husband, opponent's intestate, had once read it as his certificate); and cases cited ante, § 1073.

[7] Eng. 1824 (?), Dallas, C. J., in Beer v. Ward, unreported, but quoted in Hubback on Succession, 258 ("A certificate of a marriage, if proved to have been kept in the custody of a person whom it affects and produced from proper custody, may be read as collateral proof"); Can. 1845, Doe v. McWilliams, 2 U. C. Q. B. 77, 80 (justice's certificate, admitted "as corroborative," being an official's declaration which he was "specially authorized" to make); United States: 1886, Camden v. Belgrade, 78 Me. 204, 211, 3 Atl. 652 (certificate in the possession of a party to the marriage, admissible); 1880, Gaines v. Green P. I. M. Co., 32 N. J. Eq. 86, 95 (certificate, produced by the woman, mother of the plaintiff, and proved by the celebrant's oath, admitted as "corroborative of her testimony"); 1894, State v. Behrman, 114 N. C. 797, 807, 19 S. E. 220 (marriage certificate of a Russian rabbi, held admissible as "corroborative, not as substantive evidence";

This phrase is in itself meaningless, as affording a ground for admission; but the principle just noted serves apparently to support these rulings, and is unquestionably a legitimate ground for admission.

Certain other principles affecting the use of marriage and death certificates need to be discriminated: (1) Whether proof of the official character of the celebrant and of the genuineness of the signature is necessary, is a question of Authentication, dealt with elsewhere [8] (post, § 2161). (2) Whether the identity of names is sufficient evidence of the identity of the persons or needs to be reënforced by other evidence, is a question of the presumption elsewhere considered (post, § 2529). (3) Whether a certificate of marriage is indispensable in certain criminal cases is a question of the required quantity of evidence (post, § 2082). (4) Whether a certificate of marriage may be used in a criminal case, in violation of the rule entitling the accused to be confronted with witnesses, has already been considered (ante, § 1398). (5) Whether a physician's certificate of death is admissible may raise a question of privilege (post, § 2385*a*).

§ 1646. Same: Personal Knowledge is required in such Registers (Age, Cause of Death, etc.). The question whether personal knowledge (ante, § 1635) is essential on the part of the officer making the record is a difficult one, as to principle, precedent, and policy alike. It arises usually with reference to the uses of entries of baptism as evidence of the date of birth, but it may be raised also for other kinds of facts. The argument for excluding the use of entries except for facts necessarily within the entrant's personal knowledge has been stated as follows:

1834, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Doe v. Wollaston, 1 Moo. & R. 389: "The clergyman must be present . . . and this fact of the time [of the marriage] is within his own knowledge. In the case of the registry of baptism, the time of the birth must generally be taken by the clergyman from other people. . . . The registry of the marriage being made evidence, I think it is so for the purpose of proving all the facts there stated necessarily within the knowledge of the party making the entry."

The argument for receiving such entries as evidence of all facts required to be recorded has been thus stated:

1850, PATTESON, J., in Doe v. France, 15 Q. B. 758 (admitting entries of death, in a church-register, appearing to have been copied from a workhouse-register by a clerk at 3d. a thousand): "Must we not take it to be the act of the incumbent, who, however he got his information, had satisfied himself of the fact before he sanctioned the entry?"; WIGHTMAN, J.: "Surely the Court must give credit to a public officer for having taken proper precautions to secure accuracy in the registration."

the opinion confuses half a dozen principles); 1898, State v. Isenhart, 32 Or. 170, 52 Pac. 569 ('res gestæ' phrase, applied to a marriage certificate as evidence of marriage); 1903, Dailey v. Frey, 206 Pa. 227, 55 Atl. 962 (certificate of marriage "procured from the custody of the plaintiff's father and claimed by him as the certificate of his own marriage," admitted, "though not in itself evidence").

[8] Some cases involving this principle will also be found in § 1644, n. 6; it is not always possible to determine just what principle controls in the decision.

(1) As to precedent, it can only be said that no final settlement was ever reached at common law in England; and, even under the statute expressly making the registers admissible to prove the data of birth (ante, § 1644), there have been conflicting rulings.[1] In the United States, the same lack of harmony is found in the decisions; it can hardly be said even that the weight of authority definitely accepts either view.[2]

§ 1646. [1] 1737, May v. May, 2 Stra. 1073 (on the production of the parish register, in an issue of legitimacy, "the defendants asked him [the clerk] if any notice was taken of bastards; and he said their method was to add 'B. B.' which stood for 'base born'; and then they offered the day-book, from whence the other entry was posted, in which 'B. B.' was inserted"; but the Court, by two judges to one, thought the day-book was not admissible like the register); 1821, Wihen v. Law, 3 Stark. 63 (register of christening, not admitted to show the date of birth, since the entrant "had no authority to make inquiry concerning the time of birth, or to make any entry concerning it in the register"; though if it had been made by the mother's direction, it might have been read to corroborate her); 1826, R. v. Petherton, 5 B. & C. 508, 510 (register of baptism, not evidence of the place of birth, unless with evidence of the extreme infancy of child, or other evidence); 1828, Morris v. Davies, cited in 1 Moo. & Rob. 271, Gaselee, J. (the following entry admitted: "Evan Williams, a base child, was baptized 11th of January, 1793," with a note as to the supposed father); 1828, Doe v. Bray, 8 B. & C. 815 (Bayley, J., rejecting an entry, by a later incumbent, of a baptism by his predecessor: "He was recording a fact, therefore, not within his own knowledge, but one of which he received information from the clerk"); 1829, R. v. Clapham, 4 C. & P. 29 (entry of baptism is not evidence of age); 1883, Cope v. Cope, 1 Moo. & Rob. 269, Alderson, J. (the following baptismal entry admitted: "1794, Dec. 7, Willis, illegitimate son of Elizabeth Cope"); 1834, Doe v. Wollaston, 1 Moo. & Rob. 389 (quoted supra); 1834, Burghart v. Angerstein, 6 C. & P. 690, 696 (register of baptism, not admitted to show the date of birth); 1850, Doe v. France, 15 Q. B. 758 (quoted supra); 1870, In re Wintle, L. R. 9 Eq. 373 (though the registrar was required to make entry of the date of birth, the entry was held admissible only to show the fact that the child was alive at the date of registration); 1873, R. v. Weaver, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 85 (official register of births, received to show the exact age); 1885, Glenister v. Harding, L. R. 29 Ch. D. 985, 988 (baptismal certificate, admitted to show the date of birth as entered, partly because the issue was of pedigree; following Morris v. Davies, Cope v. Cope); 1886, Londonderry Case, 4 O'M. & H. 96 (certificate of birth of an illegitimate child, admitted to show the date of birth); 1904, Goodrich's Estate, Prob. 138 (cited ante, § 1644, n. 1); 1918, Bird v. Keep, C. A., 2 K. B. 692 (cause of workman's death; entry in the register of deaths, under St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, quoted ante, § 1644, held not evidence of the cause of death); 1918, Brierly v. Brierly and Williams, Prob. 257 (divorce for adultery; to prove the adulterous birth of a child, the register of birth was admitted, signed by the mother, showing the mother's name given but the father's name left blank; In re Wintle, supra, disapproved; such a rule would "impair and restrict the utility of the Statutes").

[2] Federal: 1865, Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 175, 182, 189 (baptismal entry as follows: "1837, July 30. G. T., son of T. B. C. and E. T., his wife, born 7th of September, 1836," not admitted as evidence of the child being lawful, "without further evidence"); California: 1920, Robinson v. Western States G. & E. Co., 184 Cal. 401, 194 Pac. 39 (State registrar's certified copy of medical certificate, under St. 1907, p. 300, § 15, admitted to evidence the cause and not merely the fact of death); Connecticut: 1902, Murray v. Supreme Lodge, 74 Conn. 715, 52 Atl. 722 (city registrar's record of marriage and of birth, admitted to show the age of the wife and the age of the mother respectively, these facts being a required part of the registrar's duty to ascertain and record); 1919, Hellman v. Karp, 93 Conn. 317, 105 Atl. 678 (bastardy; physician's certificate of birth, made under authority of law, admitted to evidence paternity); Illinois: 1901, Howard v. Illinois T. & S. Bank, 189 Ill. 568, 59 N. E. 1106 (physician's return of birth, not receivable to prove the child to be the second of that mother; "the return is not evidence of matters of mere hearsay gathered up by the physician, of which he knows nothing"); Indiana: 1910, Brotherhood of Painters v. Barton, 46 Ind. App. 160, 92 N. E. 64 (in an action on a fraternal benefit policy, to show the cause of death, the record of the board of health of a city, based on the physician's report required by law to be filed, was held inadmissible, two judges diss.); Louisiana: 1896, Justus' Succession, 48 La. An. 1096, 20 So. 680 (entries in an official parish register of Germany, containing an entire family tree, admitted, because recorded "in conformity with the rules of the registering church"); Maryland: 1894, Metropolitan L. I. Co. v. Anderson, 79 Md. 375, 378, 29 Atl. 606 (city register of deaths, not admissible to show the cause of death); Massachusetts: 1898, Com. v.

(2) As to principle, it would seem that where the registrant has authority to record only the performance of a ceremony, his record would be admissible to prove only what he has done; thus, an entry of baptism would not be receivable to prove the date of birth. On the other hand, where the reg-

Phillips, 170 Mass. 433, 49 N. E. 632 (certificate of birth, admitted under statute to show age); 1922, Broadbent's case, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 632 (death of an employee; medical examiner's certificate of cause of death, admissible under Gen. L. 1920, c. 46, § 19, cited ante, § 1644); Michigan: 1886, Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471, 475, 28 N. W. 521 (baptismal record is not evidence of age, though receivable for such weight as it deserves); 1906, Krapp v. Metrop. L. Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 369, 106 N. W. 1107 (physician's official certificates of death, admitted to show cause of death); 1915, Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers, 188 Mich. 466 N. W. (physician's official death certificate, assigning abortion as the cause, and adding "said to have been performed by Dr. ——" excluded as to the last clause only); Minnesota: Houlton v. Manteuffel, 51 Minn. 185, 53 N. W. 541 (certificate of baptism, not received to prove infancy); Missouri: 1922, Simpson v. Wells, — Mo. —, 237 S. W. 520 (death by wrongful act; certificate by a physician as deputy coroner, held admissible to show cause of death, under Rev. St. 1919, § 5802, being Rev. St. 1909, § 6670; distinguishing R. S. 1919, § 5803, R. S. 1909, § 6671, as applied in Schmidt v. Supreme Council, 207 S. W. 824); New Jersey: 1896, Royal Society of Good Fellows v. McDonald, 59 N. J. L. 248, 35 Atl. 1061 (parish register of baptisms, not admitted to show the date of birth; ignoring the equal availability of the baptism-date, in this case, to determine age); 1899, State v. Snover, 63 N. J. L. 382, 43 Atl. 1059 (rape under age of consent; to show the woman's age, a clergyman's baptismal certificate stating the date of birth was not admitted); 1901, Hickey v. Morrissey, — N. J. Eq. —, 50 Atl. 182 (register not receivable to show the precise date of birth, unless perhaps the date of birth mentioned in the record is proved to have been inserted on the statement of the father and mother); Oregon: 1909, State v. McDonald, 55 Or. 419, 104 Pac. 967 ("Official registers are competent evidence of the facts properly recorded therein, although they relate to matters not within the personal knowledge of the officer making them"); Pennsylvania: 1843, Clark v. Trinity Church, 5 W. & S. 266, 269 (church register, not admitted to prove the date of birth); 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577, 600 (ordinary church-register held "competent to show the death and burial of these ladies, but what the pastor put down in the book as to their parentage and the time and place of their birth, was incompetent, for the plain reason that it was no part of his duty to make such entries"); Porto Rico: 1906, Aguayo v. Garcia, 11 P. R. 263, 270 (heirship; certificates of baptism and of marriage, held not evidence of the "filiation or civil status of the person baptized or married" as stated therein); 1912, Rodriguez v. Rodriguez, 18 P. R. 478 (like Aguayo v. Garcia); 1913, Figueroa v. Diaz, 19 P. R. 683, 690 (similar); 1913, Gonzalez v. Lopez, 19 P. R. 1056 (similar); South Carolina: 1921, Williams v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 116 S. C. 277, 108 S. E. 110 (under St. 1914, a medical certificate of death, by a physician in attendance from Nov. 18 to Nov. 30, was held inadmissible as to the duration of the illness, in so far as it covered a period prior to Nov. 18; unsound); Utah: 1921, Bozicevich v. Kenilworth Merc. Co., — Utah —, 199 Pac. 406 (a physician's certificate of death, admitted to evidence cause of death, under Comp. L. 1917, § 5045; careful opinion by Frick, J.); Vermont: St. 1902, No. 44 (no public record of births, etc., shall be competent evidence "to prove any fact stated therein, except the fact of birth, marriage, or death"); 1902, McKinstry v. Collins, 74 Vt. 147, 52 Atl. 438 (town-clerk's record of physician's death certificate, admitted to show the cause of death, this fact being required by law to be entered); 1904, McKinstry v. Collins, 76 Vt. 221, 56 Atl. 985 (assault; the same certificate as in McKinstry v. Collins, 74 Vt., supra, not admitted to show the cause of death; St. 1902, supra, having intervened between the two trials); Washington: 1916, Armstrong v. Modern Woodman, 93 Wash. 352, 160 Pac. 946 (misrepresentations as to age of insured; Missouri record of marriage made by the county recorder, and proved by certified copy, admitted to evidence age, the Missouri statute making it the duty of the recorder to state that the husband was over 21 years of age); West Virginia: 1887, Blair v. Sayre, 29 W. Va. 608, 2 S. E. 97 (county clerk's record of births, admitted to prove the date of birth of a minor; his record of marriage licenses, admitted to show the age of the wife, since the statute made it "the duty of every clerk . . . to ascertain . . . their respective ages"); Wisconsin: 1875 Herman v. Mason, 37 Wis. 273 (church register, not admitted to show the date of birth); 1889, Lavin v. Mutual Aid Soc'y, 74 Wis. 349, 43 N. W. 143 (action for a death benefit; a Prussian certificate of baptism, not received to show the date of birth under a statute making certificates of birth admissible; but the ruling singularly ignores the availability of the baptism date, for in this case it was only necessary to show the person to have been alive at the time named).

istrant — as is usually the case for secular official registers — is authorized to record the fact itself of family life, and not merely a ceremony, the entry would on principle be evidence of the fact recorded.

(3) So far as policy and practical safety are concerned, it is at first sight unsatisfactory to accept an entry as evidence of a fact not occurring within the personal knowledge of the entrant. At the same time, there are reconciling considerations. In the first place, there is in the vast majority of instances no controversy at the time and no motive to deceive the official; his record is, on the whole, of sufficient trustworthiness to be at least worth receiving in evidence. In the next place, the secular registers must in any case be founded on the testimony of some one else; and a discrimination between entries founded on the reports of physicians, midwives, undertakers, and ministers, and entries founded on the reports of parents or other family members, would be out of the question. Finally, in strictness, the registrars do not have personal knowledge of even the most fundamental facts, of which their entries are now accepted without cavil; for example, how can a minister always say with personal knowledge that the persons married by him were M and N, or how can a registrar usually have personal knowledge that the child registered was actually born to S, or was a boy or a girl? If we are to insist with pedantic strictness upon the entrant's personal knowledge, it will be found that the registers will cease to be of much practical service for any purpose.

On the whole, then, it is sound policy to receive all such registers as evidence (a) first, of the facts required by law to be recorded, and (b) next, if no law specifically provides for the contents of the register in question, of the fundamental facts customarily entered in such registers directly on the faith of other persons having personal knowledge, — namely, in birth or baptism registers, of name, sex, parentage, and date of birth; in marriage registers, of name, age, residence, and date of ceremony; and in death of burial registers, of name, sex, age, residence, date of death, and cause of death. Under the modern Vital Statistics acts, numerous varieties of facts are required to be reported and entered. It is sensible to admit all such entries for what they may be worth; in the occasional controverted cases, other evidence is usually available. A main purpose of the system would be defeated if the records were not liberally available in litigation.[3]

(4) In the use of death certificates, other rules of Evidence may also be involved. (a) Distinguish the question whether a contract to accept a particular kind of evidence is conclusive (ante, § 7*a*). (b) Distinguish the question whether the physician's certificate furnished with proofs of death under an insurance policy amounts to an admission by the beneficiary (ante, § 1073). (c) Distinguish the question whether physicians' certificates of death, made admissible by the present group of statutes, are nevertheless liable to exclusion on claim of privilege for communications to a physician (post, § 2385*a*).

[3] See the admirable opinion of Frick, J., —, 199 Pac. 406, cited supra, note 2. in Bozicevich v. Kenilworth Merc. Co., — Utah

§ 1647. Registers of Land-Title; Shipping Registers; Timber-Marks and Stock-Brands. (1) The law might conceivably authorize an administrative officer to investigate a title to property and to record the results of his investigation, and the authority thus given might suffice to admit his record as evidence of the title. This, however, the common law has not done. There are judicial investigations and findings, in specific litigations, by judicial officers appointed for the purpose; but their findings stand on the footing of the report of a master in chancery, and are merely stages in a judgment upon the litigation in hand. They are not evidence, but are preliminary forms of a judgment; and the conclusiveness of a judgment rests on other principles (ante, § 1347).

In several jurisdictions, however, a rational system of registration of land-title has been introduced from Australia. But these registers, again, are not evidence; they are either judgments, or are the very documents of title, or operate by a rule of prescription. The title (in a sale, for example) is constituted by the combined act of the transferor, the transferee, and the official; and the register cannot be disputed. To refer to the register is not to use evidence, but to offer some constitutive act of title. The theory of these registers is elsewhere briefly considered (ante, §§ 1225, 1239, post, § 2456). They have no significance under the present exception.

There are, however, two sorts of registers, in vogue in many jurisdictions, which purport to be in some respects registers of title, without being in any sense the constitutive and indisputable acts of title. These are registers of ships and registers of stock-brands and timber-marks.

(2) A register of ships is usually a register purporting to record for each ship the kind of vessel, the nationality, the tonnage, the master, the names and the shares of the owners, and sundry other items, and based upon a sworn statement as to these facts by a person declaring himself to be one of the owners. This register is of chief use for administrative and police purposes; but the attempt has often been made to employ it for evidential purposes also. The question thus usually presented is whether the official register, stating the ownership of the vessel, is admissible as evidence of the ownership. The judicial reasoning on this question is illustrated in the following passages; and in considering them, it should be borne in mind that the registrar makes no investigation as to the title, and merely records the sworn statement of a person claiming to be an owner:

1809, MANSFIELD, C. J., in Fraser v. Hopkins, 2 Taunt. 5: "To suppose the effect of the Act to be such as is contended, would be to impute madness to the Legislature. It supposes that, without proof of any bill of sale to the defendants, or any act done by them, or any connection shown between them and the officer, a letter written by a custom-house officer, and an entry made in London in consequence of that letter, will make the defendants liable to all the world as owners of the vessel. The entry is evidence of the registration; it is not evidence of the transaction of sale. I never yet knew an instance where the act of any one man could charge another unconnected with him."

1854, BLACK, C. J., in Lincoln v. Wright, 23 Pa. 76, 81: "A vessel may be sold . . . and the register be left unchanged; for these reasons a certificate of the register is no evidence in favor of the person therein named as owner, nor in actions between other parties. It will not establish an insurable interest in the registered owner as against an underwriter, nor will it disprove such interest in the assured where the policy has been taken for the benefit of other persons. Neither would it be any defence whatever, in an action for supplies against one for whose profit the ship is navigated, to show that she is registered in another name. But all this does not prevent us from saying that a man's declaration on oath is some evidence against him of the fact therein asserted."

It would seem, on principle, that the solution of the four chief situations presented is as follows:[1] (a) Where the register is offered by a person claiming to be owner, either the one whose sworn statement was recorded or one § 1647. [1] The decisions are as follows; they are not harmonious:

ENGLAND: 1802, Bucher v. Jarratt, 3 B. & P. 143 (the shipping register admitted to prove the existence of the certificate of registry); 1809, Stokes v. Carne, 3 Camp. 339 (N. P.; action for goods supplied to the ship; register admitted to prove defendant's ownership, where defendant had not given notice in pleading that he denied it); 1809, Fraser v. Hopkins, 2 Taunt. 5 (C. P.; action for goods furnished the ship; register not admitted to show a transfer to the defendants); 1811, Tinkler v. Walpole, 14 East 226 (K. B.; action for goods sold; same ruling, "notwithstanding the practice may have prevailed for a long time to receive ship's registers as evidence, without more, of the property being in the persons therein named"); 1812, Pirie v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 652 (C. P.; action on a policy; plaintiff not allowed to prove ownership by the register; Gibbs, J., said that it had been "a thousand times received," but merely to save time); 1812, M'Iver v. Humble, 16 East 169 (K. B.; action for goods sold; register admitted, but not as evidence of ownership); 1812, Flower v. Young, 3 Camp. 240 (register not evidence to show owners); 1813, Smith v. Fuge, 3 Camp. 456, semble (same); 1814, Teed v. Martin, 4 Camp. 90 (same); these rulings are now apparently superseded by the Merchant Shipping Act; St. 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, § 107 (shipping register, and certificate of registry, stating the owners, master, etc., is to be "'prima facie' proof of all matters" contained in it).

CANADA: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 39 (British ship register or certificate is admissible to prove the facts recited); 1916, Boddington v. Donaldson Line, 31 D. L. R. 520 N. B. (injury to ship's employee; certified copy of the ship's registry, held admissible to prove ownership under Eng. Merchant Shipping Act 1894, c. 60, §§ 64, 695, and also under Can. Evid. Act, § 39); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 8 (like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 39; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900. c. 163, § 15 (like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 39); P. E. I. St. 1889, § 26 (like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 39); Yukon: St. 1904, c. 5 (like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 39).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1833, Jones v. Pitcher, 3 Stew. & P. 135, 145, 152 (action for negligent carriage; register not admitted to prove ownership, even against the person in whose name the registered affidavit of ownership ran); Cal. 1899, Moynihan v. Drobaz, 124 Cal. 212, 56 Pac. 1026 (registry not admitted to show ownership); Haw. 1855, Post v. Schooner Lady Jane, 1 Haw. 162 (admissible, but of little weight); Ill. 1887, Merchants' Nav. Co. v. Amsden 25 Ill. App. 307 (action for personal injury; defendant's ownership evidenced by shipping-register entry in the customs department); La. 1859, Sampson v. Noble, 14 La. An. 347 (certified copy, by a deputy collector, of the vessel's enrolment and bill of sale, admitted); Mass. 1829, Bixby v. Ins. Co., 8 Pick. 86, 88 (it "might be evidence" in an action contested by the apparent seller's creditors); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 5395 (certified copy of enrolment of a steamboat in the custom house or office of the customs surveyor and inspector, admissible to prove ownership "as against the persons described as owners of such steamboat in such enrolment"); N. H. 1833, Hacker v. Young, 6 N. H. 95 (copy of record of enrolment of a vessel, evidence of the defendant's admission on oath of ownership); N. Y. 1817, Sharp v. Ins. Co., 14 Johns. 201 (action to recover premium: register not admitted for plaintiff to show him not to be owner); 1817, Coolidge v. Ins. Co., 14 Johns. 308, 314 (register is "good evidence of the facts it sets forth"); 1818, Leonard v. Huntington 15 Johns. 298, 302 (action for work done on the ship; register said not to "determine the ownership"); Pa. 1854, Lincoln v. Wright, 23 Pa. 76 (action for goods sold, etc.; register admitted, where defendant's taking the oath of ownership was proved; quoted supra).

therein stated to be another owner, it is obvious that the register is of little more weight than the claimant's own testimony, because it is merely either his own statement out of court or that of his agent. The registered publicity of the claim, to be sure, counts for something; but this seems hardly sufficient. In this case, it is generally agreed, the register is inadmissible. (b) Where the register is offered against a person not making the sworn statement, to prove that he is not the owner — as in the case of an alleged assignment by the opponent — the result will be the same; for the register is merely evidence that somebody else claims to have bought from the opponent. This and the preceding situation will usually in effect arise on the same state of facts. (c) Where the register is offered against a person named in the sworn statement as one of the owners, to charge him with liability as owner — for example, for goods supplied — the result should be no different; because the register is evidence of no more than that somebody else stated the opponent to be an owner. This conclusion also is generally agreed upon by the Courts. (d) Where the register is offered against the very person purporting to have made the sworn statement as an owner, the register evidences in effect his admission that he was owner, provided only the genuineness of the sworn statement be assumed. Yet, since the registrar appears not to be charged with the duty of ascertaining (by notary's certificate or otherwise) the identity of the person presenting the statement, it seems necessary that other evidence of the opponent's identity (or, what is the same thing, of the genuineness of the affidavit) should be furnished. This conclusion also is accepted by most Courts.

No doubt it is unfortunate that a document so much relied upon as the shipping register should not be available as a convenient mode of proving ownership. But the proper remedy for this is an improved statutory system of registration. No doubt, also, that the publicity given by registration, even under the present system, is in practice a great safeguard, so that the registered ownership is in most instances a fact not open to real dispute; and this may be the reason why the modern British statute, returning to the common understanding and practice before the 1800s, expressly makes it admissible in evidence. But while the rule may be unnecessarily strict and technical, it is not improbable that a more liberal rule — so long as the looseness of the registration system continues — would be taken advantage of for fraudulent purposes.

Some other uses of the register, as affecting ownership, must be distinguished, since they involve no question of evidence. The effect by way of estoppel of a registration as sole owner [2] concerns a question of substantive law. The conclusiveness of the registry for purposes of administrative law is a matter of that law. The use of the registry to prove nationality [3] is apparently not a question of evidence, or at any rate not a different one; because nationality signifies either the fact of American registration, which is to be gathered merely from the existence and tenor of the entry, or the ownership by American citizens, which involves merely the same evidential question as that above examined. The liability of the registered owner for the acts of the ship's employees raises sometimes, but in appearance only, a question of evidence.[4]

[2] 1817, Weston v. Penniman, 1 Mason 306 (action for money had and received; defendant claimed a credit for money spent on behalf of a ship jointly owned; effect of defendant's registration as sole owner, considered).

[3] 1893, St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 151, 14 Sup. 1002 (certificate of registry, admissible to show nationality of vessel).

(3) In a number of jurisdictions where the wealth consists largely of cattle and of timber, a system of registration of stock-brands and timber-marks is provided for by statute; the method being usually to record in a public office the marks and brands appropriated by the different owners and to vest the registrar with authority to receive only patterns of a certain description, to refuse duplicates, and to sanction the use of the registered mark. It is clear that under such statutes (as often expressly provided) the register sufficiently evidences the right of a certain person to use a given mark.[5] But the question often arises judicially, and the statutes sometimes deal also with it, whether the presence of such a registered mark on a log or an animal is admissible to show that the registered appropriator of that mark has title to the log or the animal found bearing it.[6] This, however, is not a question of the admissibility of the register; for the register-entries take no cognizance of specific animals or logs. The type of mark, as the subject of a right to use it, is shown by the register to be M's; but whether M or any one else actually placed such a mark on the log or the animal cannot possibly be evidenced by the register. The question is really one of circumstantial evidence, i.e. whether the presence of that mark is evidence of the fact that M placed it on the log or the animal, and, next, whether the placing of it by M indicates that M was the owner; the only real difficulty being with this last step of the inference. This question has already been examined (ante, § 150).

§ 1648. Registers of Conveyances; General Principle; Mode of providing Proof of Genuineness, or Execution. No officer at common law had an implied authority of office to record deeds of conveyance; so that the question of the extent of an implied authority (the chief difficulty in many of the foregoing instances) does not here arise. But statutes have in every jurisdiction given

[4] That is, there is a question of substantive law whether ownership is equivalent to or is 'prima facie' evidence of liability as employer for the acts of the ship's employees; if it is, then in effect the registration is equally evidential, wherever by statute it is evidence of ownership. In many shipping cases, however, in which this question of owner's liability as employer is involved, the opinions occasionally speak of the register as evidence of that liability; this is merely an elliptical form of speech. A leading case illustrating this usage is Hibbs v. Ross, L. R. 1 Q. B. 534.

[5] The statutes are collected ante, § 150. Some statutes merely declare the register admissible, without declaring for what purpose, e. g.: Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 88, § 3 (county clerk's record of stock brands and marks, admissible). See also the statutes for certified copies, cited post, §§ 1674, 1680.

[6] Occasionally also the same question arises for other property used by recorded license: 1814, Strother v. Willan, 4 Camp. 24 (an official book of licenses of stage-coaches, kept under a statute, not admitted to show ownership of a coach); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 1747*a*–1 (certified copy, by register of deeds or Secretary of State, of registered trademark, to be evidence of ownership of the mark). Compare the statutes collected post, § 1680.

express authority to certain officers to record deeds of conveyance (and sometimes other classes of deeds) presented to them by private persons for the purpose; and the question presented is, Whether, assuming that the non-production of the original is sufficiently accounted for (ante, § 1224), this official record (or a copy) is admissible as evidence of the deed, i. e. of its contents and its execution.

1. If the question had been merely of the deed's contents, no difficulty would probably have been felt; for the authority to record 'verbatim' the terms of the deed might easily have been construed as sufficient, under the general principle (ante, § 1639) to render the record admissible, being a record kept under an express official duty.

2. The real obstacle came from the consideration already discussed (ante, § 1635) that, as regards the execution of the deed by the purporting grantor, the registrar would ordinarily have no personal knowledge whatever. He would sufficiently enter, as of his own knowledge, the terms of the writing presented to him; not even his testimony on the stand could be any stronger evidence than his contemporary transcription of the document lying before his eyes. But how could he know that it was in fact executed, as it purported to be, by J. S., and, therefore, how could his entry to that effect be admissible? Could the statutory authority to record, even when expressly given, suffice to admit his entry, not merely of the document's terms as seen by him, but of a fact which he did not see and apparently had no means of knowing?

So far as any general principle affected the situation, it would prescribe merely this (as already noted in § 1635), viz. that the statutory authority to record would not suffice to admit the record to prove a matter occurring without the officer's personal knowledge, unless the statute also directed or implied that the officer should be furnished with the means of knowing, or should make some investigation of the facts, and should record only after taking such means of adequately informing himself.

3. It is in harmony with this general principle that the Courts dealt with the admissibility of the record of a deed. Where the statute had provided the registrar with the means of informing himself, before registration, of the authenticity of the deed, this was regarded as a sufficient authority to admit the record, though not made on personal knowledge, to prove the execution; and where the statute had failed to provide such a means and to impose such a duty (as usually with chattel-mortgages), this was regarded as a fatal objection. The express authority to record was universally regarded as intended by the Legislature to furnish, not merely a notice of claim of title, but also a means of evidencing the deed, and the inclination was therefore to receive the record; the only obstacle felt was as to the propriety of receiving the registrar's entry of a fact (viz. execution of the deed) not personally known to him; and this obstacle disappeared where the statute authorized and required a means of sufficiently informing the official on this point.

In the legislation of the newer jurisdictions, and in the newer legislation of some of the older ones, the statutes expressly declare the record admissible, and thus the question is there no longer a judicial one. But the theory upon which the Courts treated the earlier statutes has usually served as the foundation of the newer legislation. In the following passages various phrasings of it are found:

Circa 1658, Sir MATTHEW HALE, L. C. J., in his "Treatise showing how useful, safe, reasonable, and beneficial the Inrolling and Registering all Conveyances of Lands may be to the Inhabitants of this Kingdom," printed in "Two Tracts," [1] p. 29: "If every man that brings a deed should have it inrolled without acknowledging it by him that made it, any forged deed may be inrolled, and men in a little while may lose their estates by the countenance that a forged deed shall receive by the being enrolled among the public records of the office."

1864, SAWYER, J., in Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 405 (repudiating the argument that a deed without acknowledgment is a nullity even between the parties): "The acknowledgment is only the mode provided by law for authenticating the act of the parties, so as to entitle the instrument to record and make it notice to subsequent purchasers, and to entitle it to be read in evidence without other proofs. If purchasers neglect to have their deeds properly authenticated and recorded, they will be liable to have their title divested by subsequent conveyances to innocent parties, and to the further inconvenience of being compelled to prove their execution when called upon to put them in evidence. By sections 10, 11, 14, and other sections of the Act, the execution of the conveyance may be proved [to the officer] by the subscribing witnesses; and when the subscribing witnesses are dead or cannot be had, the end may be accomplished by proving the handwriting of the party and of the subscribing witnesses by other witnesses; and upon such proof the officer may make his certificate thereof, and the instrument thereafter becomes entitled to record and to be read in evidence without further proof; and this may be done years after the actual making of the deed, and even after the parties and witnesses to it are dead. . . . The question is in our opinion one of preliminary proof. If acknowledged or proved [to the officer] in pursuance of the statute, the instrument is admissible without further proof; if not, it must be proved [to the Court] according to the ordinary rules of law applicable to the subject."

1870, MCCAY, J., in Eady v. Shivey, 40 Ga. 684, 686: "Why should not the existence of a proper record be evidence of the existence and contents of a lost original? To go to record, a deed must be probated, either executed or acknowledged before a magistrate, or proven by the affidavit of one of the witnesses. The very object of the record is to preserve a copy of the deed to be used if the original is lost or destroyed; and it would largely lessen the uses of a record if it were necessary before it could be used to prove the existence of the original by other evidence. . . . Unless there be forgery or false swearing, nothing but a genuine existing deed can go upon the record properly, and the copy will show upon its face if the requirements of the statute have been complied with. We recognize fully the rule that the genuineness and existence of an original must be shown before the contents of it can be shown by secondary evidence. But in our judgment this is done by evidence that there is a duly executed record of what purported to be an original duly probated according to law."

1872, GRAY, J., in Gragg v. Learned, 109 Mass. 167: "[The reason for admission is that] our statutes allow no deed to be recorded until it has been acknowledged by the grantor or proved by subscribing witnesses before a magistrate."

§ 1648. [1] Cited post, § 1650.

4. The mode of informing the registrar (commonly termed "proving" or "probate"), as provided by the earlier statutes, was twofold, — either the acknowledgment of the grantor or the testimony of an attesting witness, each to be given before the registrar personally. It will be seen that by the former method — acknowledgment — the registrar does obtain a personal knowledge; for the acknowledgment is in truth, not merely an admission, but an adoption of the deed as his act; as an admission, it might be regarded as available only against himself and his privies,[2] but in its true aspect as an adoption, it is virtually a reëxecution of the deed;[3] and the registrar could testify to the execution from personal knowledge as well as if he had seen the signature written. By the other method — the attesting witness' oath — the registrar acts upon virtually the same kind of evidence that would have sufficed in court; so that the registrar's entry is after all based upon no mean quality of evidence. In most statutes, other sources of evidence, analogous to such as would have sufficed even in court (ante, § 1511) — for example, testimony to the signature of a deceased grantor or witness — are authorized for the registrar.

By another type of statute, common in the newer jurisdictions, and based in part upon the inconvenience of travelling long distances to make acknowledgment or proof to the registrar in person, the proof or acknowledgment is authorized to be made before some other officer — usually a notary or a magistrate; and this is the general rule for deeds executed out of the jurisdiction. But the principle is here no different; the registrar's functions are merely (as it were) subdivided. The registrar does not himself take the proof or acknowledgment; but he cannot record until it has been taken by some one; and as long as a means is provided for satisfying the registrar that such proof or acknowledgment has been made to a proper officer, it is immaterial that it is not made to the registrar. Hence the statutory machinery which provides for the authentication by seal, or the like, of the certificate of proof or acknowledgment by the notary or magistrate. The two officers speak together in the record; the registrar's function has been delegated, but this delegation is merely a convenient modern expedient for providing in the register-book an official testimony, based on personal knowledge or on lawful evidence, to the execution of the deed.

So the sum and object of these provisions, which occupy so much space in the statutes, is the building up, in the register-book, of a trustworthy official statement, based upon personal knowledge or its equivalent, that the deed purporting to be executed by J. S. was in fact executed by him.

It will be seen, in the rulings to be cited in the ensuing sections, that the [2] This was the attitude taken in some of the English rulings.

[3] 1882, Woods, J., in Nye v. Lowry, 82 Ind. 316, 320: "The signature of a grantor in a deed, written by another at his request, or though written without his knowledge, if adopted by him as his own, has the same validity as if written by his own hand; indeed, within the meaning of the law, it becomes his proper handwriting, and the deed so signed is of the same validity as if written by his own hand."

steady inclination of the Courts (when not controlled by express statute) is to admit the register, as evidence of execution, whenever some statutory means is provided for informing the recording officer, and to reject it, when no such means is provided. It is this general principle which serves alike as the key to the admissibility of registers of deeds and to the inadmissibility of shipping registers (ante, § 1647), of registers of patent assignments (post, § 1657), and of records of chattel-mortgages (post, § 1651). In some form or other, it must be invoked in any efficient system of evidencing the execution of documents by official records.

5. It is impossible, in this place, to examine the voluminous details of the statutes providing for acknowledgment and probate before registrars, as provided in the different jurisdictions for different classes of documents. The subject is after all one of substantive law; for the primary object of the registration system is to provide notice of claims, and to validate titles with reference to the recording of the muniments of title; and the provisions concerning acknowledgment and proof raise primarily the question whether a deed has been lawfully recorded. The inquiry here concerns the subject of evidence offered in court, and not the matter of "proof" before a registrar or a notary. It is enough to have noted here that the general principle upon which Courts have proceeded is that the registrar's entry, to be admissible, must have been founded on adequate sources of knowledge, specified by the administrative law and authorized to be employed by him.

§ 1649. Same: Register admissible only to prove Deeds lawfully Recorded. The registrar's entry is admissible only because he had authority to enter certain things (ante, § 1632), and this authority (as already noted) he here derives entirely from statute. The statute specifies the kind of document that may be recorded, the time for recording it, and (if acknowledged or proved before another officer) the various certificates, seals, and the like, which it must bear when presented to him for record. So far as the registrar records a document not fulfilling the statutory description, he acts without authority. Accordingly, the register or record of a document not authorized by statute is not receivable as evidence of its execution:

1813, OWSLEY, J., in Eastland v. Jordan, 3 Bibb 186, 187: "It is clear the clerk had no authority to admit the deed to record unless it had been acknowledged by the party or proven by two witnesses at least. He having therefore certified its admission to record upon the oath of one witness, it is evident he exceeded his authority, and no advantage can be derived from its being recorded. The deed could not therefore have been used as evidence unless [other] proof had been made of its due execution."

1821, MILLS, J., in Womack v. Hughes, Litt. Sel. C. 291, 294: "The Acts directing the mode of recording deeds do not direct that they shall thereafter be given in evidence in any court on the trial of an issue without any other proof than the 'ex parte' authentication which entitles it to a place on its own record; nor is there any statutory provision which so directs, within the recollection of the Court. But the common-law principle relative to enrolled deeds has been uniformly applied by this Court to deeds recorded according to our statutes. It is not, however, every placing a deed upon record which makes it a recorded deed. The statutes usually point out the officer or Court before whom the deed is to be acknowledged, what the acknowledgment shall consist of, and how and to whom it shall be certified, and they are equally positive as to the time in which the different acts shall be done. Within these periods the recording officers have authority to record the instrument; afterwards, such authority ceases."

1860, HANDY, J., in Lock v. Mayne, 39 Miss. 157, 164: "The object of statutes authorizing a deed to be acknowledged or proved is, not to establish the instrument as the deed of that party for all purposes, but to entitle it to be recorded. If that object is carried out by having it recorded, the deed is thereby so solemnized as to make the record original evidence without further proof of its execution upon an issue of 'non est factum.' But if not recorded, it is not clothed with that solemnity, the purpose of the acknowledgment not having been consummated; and it stands as matter in pais, and must be proved according to the general rules of evidence."

Whether the deed has been in every respect lawfully recorded depends upon the provisions of the administrative law prescribing the recorder's duties, — a subject beyond the present purview. The principle, as expounded in the above passages, is everywhere unquestioned, and is constantly illustrated in its application to various details (post, § 1651).

With this survey of the general principle, there come now to be considered, first, the state of the law in the various jurisdictions, and, next, sundry minor questions involving the use of deed-registers.

§ 1650. Same : History of the Law in England. No general system of registration of deeds was ever adopted in England down to the end of the 1800s.[1] But statutes of a narrow scope had existed for several centuries. These statutes, seven in substance, covered, first, all deeds in the ancient form of bargain and sale, and, next, all deeds whatever for the counties of York § 1650. [1] Under the Commonwealth, it is true, this reform, with many others, had been proposed and nearly achieved; indeed, these proposed reforms, long afterwards effected, would have gained nearly two hundred years for England in many parts of the law (as noted post, § 2036, n. 20). But the Restoration of Charles II repudiated their results or blocked their beginnings. The following bill was based on the deliberations of Whitlocke, Lisle, and Lane: 1658 (?), Draught of an Act for a County Register; printed in "Two Tracts on the Benefit of Registering Deeds," 1756 (all deeds of certain sorts are to be registered, after being acknowledged before a justice of the peace, who "shall either know the party so acknowledging or be informed by credible witnesses that such party is the same mentioned in the deed"; and "every deed or bond indorsed, registered, and attested by the stamp of the registry, shall and may be given in evidence upon all occasions, as any deed enrolled in a court of record, without further proof"; and if the original is "lost or mislaid, so as the same cannot be produced," then "a copy of the same deed or bond so registered" may be used "as if the said deed or bond were produced under the hand and seal of the party that acknowledged the same"). The debates on this proposal are mentioned in Oldmixon's History of England, II, 409; see also Sir Matthew Hale's Treatise, quoted ante, § 1648; and Mr. Robinson's "Anticipations under the Commonwealth of Changes in the Law" (Juridical Society Papers, III, 567), now printed in Vol. I of Select Essays on Anglo-American Legal History, 1907).

One of the reasons for the long opposition to a registration system in England is noticed elsewhere (post, § 2219).

On the Continent, the relatively early existence of a system of municipal registration of deeds was due to special historical influences; compare Schroeder, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, 1902, 4th ed., p. 702; Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre, 1889, I, pp. 551–555; Stobbe, Handbuch des deutschen Privatrechts, 3d ed., § 67; Aubert, Grundboegernes Histori i Norge, Danmark, og tildels Tyskland, in Zeitschr. f. Savignystiftung, XIV, 1; Brissaud, History of French Private Law, 1912, § 502 (Continental Legal History Series, vol. III).

and Middlesex and certain Crown lands. In some of them a means of probate by witnesses before the registrar was provided for, and in some of these the grantor's acknowledgment was also sanctioned; in two alone (the North Riding of York and Crown lands) was it expressly declared that the registry copy should be admissible to prove (apparently) the deed's execution, and this only where the original was accidentally destroyed.[2] There was therefore ample opportunity for the judicial development of a principle to test the admissibility of such registers as evidence of the recorded deed's execution.

But the rulings unfortunately present only a perplexing conflict. Up to the middle of the 1700s, it may be gathered that the enrolment (or registry) of a deed belonging to the class authorized or required to be enrolled was regarded as admissible. But it was otherwise for deeds enrolled (as was not uncommon, for example, for safe custody in a court) without statutory authority; although, even for these last, the enrolment was receivable as against the party enrolling, because it virtually contained his admission.

[2] 1535–36, St. 27 H. VIII, c. 16 (no estate, etc., to take effect by bargain and sale, unless in writing and enrolled; "to thentent that every partie that hath to do therewith may resort and see theffecte and tenour of every suche writing so enrolled"); 1703, St. 2 & 3 Anne, c. 4 (West Riding of York; a "memorial" of deeds and wills of land to be registered; the memorial to be "put into writing" under the hand and seal of a grantor or a grantee, and an attesting witness to prove the "signing and seal of the said memorial and the execution of the deed or conveyance mentioned in said memorial" before the register; the deed, conveyance, or will to be produced to the register and indorsed by his certificate, which is to be "evidence of such respective registryes"); 1706, St. 5 & 6 Anne, c. 18 (same district; statute extended to bargains and sales acknowledged by the bargainor before the register and indorsed and enrolled by him; all such deeds so indorsed, and all copies of the enrolment, to be "as good and sufficient evidence" as any enrolled at Westminster); 1707, St. 6 Anne, c. 35 (East Riding of York; foregoing statutes extended to this district); 1709, St. 7 Anne, c. 20, § 1 (Middlesex; any deed or will may be put into a "memorial" and registered, if an attesting witness prove an oath before the register or a Master the execution of the deed and of the memorial, or, if a will, of the memorial; the memorial for a deed to contain the principal items of it, and to be executed by a party or representative, and attested, etc., and for a will, by an heir, etc.; the deed or will itself to be produced to the register at the time of recording, who is to indorse upon it a certificate of recording, "which certificates shall be taken and allowed as evidence of such respective registries in all courts of record"); 1711, St. 10 Anne, c. 18 ("for supplying a failure in pleading or deriving a title" under bargain and sale according to St. 27 H. VIII, supra, "where the original indentures of bargain and sale, to be shewed forth and produced, are wanting, which often happens," especially where part of the land has gone to different persons, it is enacted that whenever such deed is pleaded with profert, it shall be sufficient to produce "a copy of the inrollment of such bargain and sale; and such copy, examined with the inrollment, and signed by a proper officer having the custody of such inrollment, and proved upon oath to be a true copy, so examined and signed, shall be of the same force and effect" as the profert of the deed itself); 1734–35, St. 8 Geo. II, c. 6 (provisions of the above York statutes extended to the North Riding thereof; with the addition that the person signing the memorial may make proof by acknowledgment of the deed before the register; by §§ 22, 23, any deed, etc., after a specified date may be enrolled in full and proved by a witness and indorsed as in case of a memorial, and then copies signed by the register and attested by two witnesses shall be "good and sufficient evidence" of such deed, etc. "destroyed by fire or other accident"); 1821, St. 2 Geo. IV, c. 52, § 8 (Crown lands; leases, etc., are to be enrolled, with the same effect as if in a court of record at Westminster); 1832, St. 2 W. IV, c. 1, § 26 (enrolment of Crown possessions; the memorandum of the Keeper of the Records shall be "sufficient proof of the deed, etc., having been duly executed, etc.," by the purporting parties).

No attempt is here made to present the provisions of the modern English acts for registration of title (culminating in St. 1897, 60 & 61 Vict. c. 65).

This much is fairly to be inferred from the somewhat obscure rulings;[3] and it is clearly laid down, in accordance with strict principle, by Chief Baron Gilbert, writing in the early 1700s:

Ante 1726, GILBERT, C. B., Evidence, 24, 97: "Where the deed needs enrolment, there the enrolment is the sign of the lawful execution of such deed, and the officer appointed to authenticate such deeds by enrolment is also empowered to take care of the fairness and legality of such deeds. . . . But where a deed needs no enrolment, there, though it be enrolled, the 'inspeximus' of such enrolment is no evidence; because since the officer hath no authority to enrol them, such enrolment cannot make them public acts."

It will be noticed that, in the foregoing passage, the author, intent on stating his general principle, omitted to note that the enrolment even of a deed not required to be enrolled might still be admissible against the enrolling party as embodying his own admission of execution. Forty years later, Mr. Buller (afterwards Justice), having apparently in mind this passage of Chief Baron Gilbert's, wrote, in his Trials at Nisi Prius (which is indeed based largely on the other writer's text[4]) as follows:

1763, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 255: "It has been said that a deed of bargain and sale enrolled may be given in evidence without proving the execution of it, because the deed by law does need enrolment, and therefore the enrolment shall be evidence of the lawful execution; but that where a deed needs no enrolment, there, though such deed be enrolled, the execution of it must be proved, because since the officer is not intrusted by the law to enroll such deed, the enrolment will be no evidence of the execution. . . . However, the law may well be doubted. . . . [It seems] absurd to say that a release, which has been enrolled upon the acknowledgment of the releasor, should not be admitted in evidence against him, without being proved to be executed, because [i. e. for the alleged

[3] 1441, Anon., Y. B. 19 H. VI, pl. 11 (Newton: "For the enrolment of a deed is for no other purpose than that the party whose deed it is cannot deny the deed after enrolment; for if I enrol my deeds of record, and I lose them, I shall not have advantage of the record"; which was conceded by the whole Court); 1613, Read v. Hide, 3 Co. Inst. 173 (discharge of tithes offered to be proved by an exemplification, under the great seal, of a copy of the Pope's bull of discharge in a volume of monastery records; "by the opinion of the whole Court, . . . neither deed, charter, or other writing, either sealed or without seal, ought to be exemplified under the great seal or any other seal in court of record," and "therefore where this statute [of forgery, 5 Eliz. c. 14, not extending to exemplifications] or any other statute or book speaks of an exemplification . . . of a deed, etc., it must be intended of a deed inrolled . . . which is of record"); 1661, Eden v. Chalkill, 1 Keb. 117 (enrolled deed other than one of bargain and sale not provable by enrolment-copy "because it was needless," i. e. not required by law); 1667, Kirby v. Gibs, 2 Keb. 294 (an 'inspeximus' of a lease, excluded, "being a private deed and may be forged"; otherwise of a record); 1684, Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 595 (deed enrolled, proved by examined copy); 1694, Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (a deed of bargain and sale acknowledged by the bargainor and enrolled was given in evidence without any proof of the bargainor's sealing and delivery; admitted, "for the acknowledgment of the party in a court of record, or before a master extraordinary in the country (as this was), is good evidence of it being sealed and delivered; . . . it is the acknowledgment which gives it credit"); 1697, Taylor v. Jones, 1 Ld. Raym. 746 (a deed declaring the uses of a fine; enrolled copy sufficient, "because inrolment was at common law, and that for some purpose"); 1702, Holcroft v. Smith, 2 Freeman 259 ("A difference was taken where the estate passeth be the inrollment," in which case the enrolled deed "is an evidence"; but otherwise where it is only enrolled "for safe custody," in which case it is receivable only against the party and his privies); 1707, Combs v. Dowell, 2 Vern. 591 (a deed declaring the uses of a fine, and enrolled "for safe custody," allowed).

[4] For an account of the composition of that book, see Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 471.

reason that] such release does not need enrolment; and in fact such deeds have often been admitted."

Now the truth seems to be that "the law" which Mr. Justice Buller here thought "may well be doubted" was not Chief Baron Gilbert's general statement as to the admissibility of enrolments required by law, but his failure to make the qualification that even an enrolment not required by law was admissible to prove the deed as against the particular person acknowledging it. The context, when properly read, fairly indicates this to be Mr. Justice Buller's meaning; and it thus stands in harmony, not only with the tenor of previous rulings, but also with Chief Baron Gilbert's rule, for which it merely points out the correction of an obvious omission. Nevertheless, the language of Mr. Justice Buller's exposition was capable of a misunderstanding; and he seems to have been misread in later times as asserting that "the law" of Chief Baron Gilbert's main proposition "may well be doubted," i. e. as doubting whether the enrolment of a deed legally required to be enrolled may be given in evidence "without proving the execution of it." Buller's book was much in vogue in the next fifty years; and it is probably something more than a mere coincidence that doubts arose in that period as to the correctness of the sound principle so clearly laid down by his predecessor. At any rate, by the beginning of the 1800s the rulings bear increasingly against that proposition.[5]

By the end of the first half of the 1800s the opinion seems clearly to prevail in England that it is not the law; as the following passages indicate:

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 412: "It would be manifestly inconsistent with the plainest principles of justice to admit such enrolments to be evidence against those who have not acknowledged them, without proof of the execution of the deeds; . . . and although it appears that an opinion once prevailed to this effect, yet it seems to be so destitute of principle that it is not probable it would now be acted upon."

1847, Doe v. Clifford, 2 C. & K. 448, 452; a copy of the registry-memorial of a Mid-

[5] 1803, Hobhouse v. Hamilton, 1 Sch. & Lefr. 207 (attested copy of recorded memorial of lost deed of assignment of judgment, not admitted to prove contents, the original memorial being required; but admitted to prove the fact of assignment, because the record was conclusive under St. 9 Geo. II, c. 5; Redesdale, L. C., "compared it to the case of enrolment of a deed, the office copy of which is evidence against the party, because the statute makes it evidence; and in that case if a person not the attorney of the party acknowledges a deed in his name, and it is enroled on that acknowledgment, the enrolment binds"); 1809, Mansfield, C. J., in Fraser v. Hopkins, 2 Taunt. 5, 6 (rejecting a ship's register to prove ownership: "In all cases of enrolments, the deed itself, and not the enrolment, is evidence);" 1811, Baikie v. Chandless, 3 Camp. 17 (enrolled annuity; copy examined with the enrolment, admitted; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "The act of Parliament requires the memorial carried in to be inrolled correctly, and I must presume that those concerned do their duty under the act. The inrolment is a sort of statuteable record"); 1811, Tinkler v. Walpole, 14 East 226, 231 (ship's register not admitted to show ownership; Ellenborough, L. C. J., remarking that "the case of inrolments stands upon a particular statute," viz. 10 Anne); 1812, Gibbs, J., in Pirie v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 652, 656 (referring to a ship's register: "It resembles the case of enrolling a deed; a person cannot by enrolling it prove that he has a good title"); 1825, Jenkins v. Biddulph, Ry. & Mo. 339 (an enrolment under a statute 2 Geo. IV, c. 52, § 8, making such enrolments "as good and available" as if enrolled in a court of records, etc., held not to dispense with proof); 1838, Collins v. Maule, 8 C. & P. 502 (examined copy of a Middlesex registry of deed, objected to because "not evidence of the deed as against third persons," in the absence of statutory sanction; admitted by Tindal, C. J., with some hesitation).

dlesex deed was offered, the original deed being unavailable; Mr. Knowles (opposing): "The Stat. 7 Anne, c. 20, does not, by any express enactment, make these memorials evidence," ALDERSON, B.: "Then the memorial is only evidence against the persons who register the deed and persons claiming under them. . . . If there is no clause in the act of Parliament making the memorial evidence, . . . then the memorial amounts to this: 'A. B. states the contents of a deed which he has executed,'" and is evidential against himself only.

Mr. Starkie's statement as to the understanding of the profession in his time seems to represent accurately the final attitude of the English courts on this subject. But his concession that "an opinion once prevailed" to the contrary seems equally correct, in the light of the evidence just considered. An interesting corroboration of this appears in the circumstance that the earliest American rulings (representing the understanding and practice brought over from England) harmonize with this view, and reproduce, in dealing with our early registration systems, the very principle so lucidly laid down by Chief Baron Gilbert.[6] The language of these earliest rulings, moreover, indicates that the result is reached in a natural manner, through custom and professional tradition, and not as a matter of original reasoning. The principle of Chief Baron Gilbert was to our early judges an inherited common-law principle, and is constantly thus referred to in their opinions.[7]

The orthodox principle, then, of the common law on this subject is to be found carried out in the earlier English practice and the subsequent American practice; it is in the English doctrine of the 1800s that a break occurs in its continuity.

§ 1651. Same: State of the Law in the United States and Canada. The history of the registry-system in the colonies and the original States is an interesting subject.[1] In every jurisdiction where the inquiry came before the Courts,[2] the conclusion was reached that the register was admissible on common-law principles as evidence of the execution and contents of the recorded deed.[3] In only a few of the earlier States was this result expressly provided for by statute. But as time went on, and other States were formed, express statutory declarations became common; and now in virtually every jurisdiction [4] such provisions exist.

[6] Compare the passage of Gilbert, supra, with the quotations ante, §§ 1648, 1649.

[7] See, for example, Womack v. Hughes, quoted ante, § 1649, Knox v. Silloway, Barbour v. Watts, in § 1651, post, under Maine and Kentucky, and the quotations given under § 1224, ante, where the rule about producing the original is dealt with; see also the early cases in South Carolina and Virginia, cited in § 1225, ante.

§ 1651. [1] The earliest act judicially cited seems to be that of South Carolina in 1698 (1 Bay 37). John Locke's charter of 1669, for the Carolinas, had contained such a provision. But it is known that a registration system was also a feature of the law of the colonies of Plymouth, Virginia, and Maryland, before the end of the 1600s. These probably all had their origin in the public discussion of the subject under the Cromwellian Commonwealth. But it is noticeable that Royalist and Puritan colonies alike adopted the expedient. See Professor Joseph H. Beale's article on the Origin of the System of Recording Deeds in America (Green Bag, 1907, XIX, 335).

[2] Except California, Louisiana, Michigan, and Missouri.

[3] Though in many courts only when the original deed was shown unavailable; the history of that other rule is briefly examined ante, §§ 1224, 1225.

[4] There remain only Connecticut, Maryland (domestic deeds), Massachusetts, and apparently Virginia.

For judicial rulings, then, the field is now restricted chiefly to two classes of questions, — the kind of document thus provable, and the regularity of the recording under the statutory requirements. The general principles (ante, §§ 1648 and 1649) serve still as the foundation of decision for cases not expressly covered by statute; but the mass of decisions are concerned with the details of registration-requirements, and are therefore without the present purview, both as dealing with substantive law and as concerning the verbal interpretation of local statutes. It is enough here to note the terms of the statutes that declare a rule of evidence and the decisions illustrating the general principle.[5]

[5] In the following list are placed, first, the statutes, and, next, the decisions; but a detailed examination of the statutory history is here impossible, so that it must be understood that many of the decisions antedate the statutes or at least the statutes in their present form, and only in special instances can the relation of statute and ruling be noted.

In this list the rulings given without detailed notes of their terms signify rulings declaring the register (or a certified copy; see § 1655) admissible provided the instrument is lawfully recorded or inadmissible because the instrument is not lawfully recorded; and no attempt is made to note the particular irregularity (defective acknowledgment, wrong county, period for record expired, etc.) causing exclusion, for here the countless details of local statute and substantive law are involved; except that a ruling affecting a class of documents (e. g. chattel mortgages) is so noted, when it involves the general principle (ante, § 1648) requiring the record to be based on a system of acknowledgment or proof. In almost all the instances the evidence admitted is a certified copy of the register, but this involves the same principle (as explained post, § 1655).

The statutory provisions are here summarized without noting their terms as to accounting for non-production of the original; on this point they are summarized ante, § 1225. Moreover, general statutes declaring the record admissible are alone noted, omitting minor statutes declaring documents of certain kinds or of certain districts entitled to record or curing defects of record under earlier laws. Statutes sanctioning the use of records reestablished in place of lost records are noted post, § 1682. Statutes authorizing the recording of abstracts of title ("burnt record" acts) are dealt with post, § 1705. Statutes authorizing the use of copies of a registered title are placed here, but their principle is explained ante, §§ 1239, 1647. Statutes allowing the execution of the original deed to be proved by the certificate of acknowledgment appended are dealt with post, § 1676.

CANADA: Dominion: R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act § 27 (similar to Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 33, 34); § 28 (reasonable notice, not less than ten days, required before using such copies); 1910, Musgrave v. Anglin, 43 Can. Sup. 484 (certified copy of will by Quebec notary; stated more fully post, § 1681).

Alberta: St. 1906, c. 24, § 17 (land-title registry; the registrar's exemplification or certified copy of "any instruments affecting lands which are deposited, filed, or registered in his office" is admissible "in the same manner and with the same effects as if the original was produced"); St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, §§ 36, 37 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, §§ 33, 34); ib. c. 3, §§ 48, 49 (instrument deposited, kept, or registered with the registrar or deputy registrar of land-titles, provable by certified copy under seal; except that "where a public officer produces upon subpoena an original document, it shall not be deposited in court unless otherwise ordered," but a copy certified by the producing officer shall be filed).

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 38 (like Dom. Evid. Act § 27); § 39 (like ib. § 28); § 45 (for certified copies of registered instruments, ten days' notice at least must be given to the opponent, and the certified copy shall then suffice unless the opponent within four days after receipt gives notice of intention to dispute the original's validity); c. 127, § 145 (registrar's certified copy of any recorded instrument, except a will, admissible "without further proof"); c. 78, § 44 (certified or exemplified copy, under seal of the registrar, of any instrument deposited or registered in a land-office or registry of a county or the Supreme Court is admissible as evidence "of the original," without proof of the registrar's signature or seal); c. 127, § 9 (registrar's certified transcript of all instruments, etc. "made for the purpose of the establishment of district offices" of land registry admissible); c. 127, § 147 (quoted ante, § 1225, n. 1); St. 1914, 4 Geo. V, c. 26, § 2 (amending Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 50, by substituting "twenty-five" for "ten"); 1899, Pavier v. Snow, 7 Br. C. 81 (certain certificates, etc., admitted under R. S. 1897, c. 135, § 98, without notice).

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1914, c. 171, § 169, Real Property Act (a certified copy, by the district registrar under official seal, of a certificate of land title or any instrument deposited or registered in such office, is admissible to prove "due execution of the original," and "without proof of the signature or seal" of office of the district registrar); Registry Act, c. 172, § 50 (registrar's certificate of registration of an instrument shall be evidence of the registration "and due execution of the instrument," without proof of the signature of the registrar); § 51 (registrar's certified copy of a registered instrument, with the exception of crown grants and other specified instruments, shall be evidence "of the contents of and of the execution of the original instrument"); § 76 (registrar's certified copy under seal of an instrument duly registered shall be evidence "of the facts and matters therein stated, without proof of the registrar's signature or seal"); § 77 (registrar's certified copy under seal of an instrument duly registered shall be receivable "without proof of the due execution of the original, as 'prima facie' evidence of the original instrument and the due registration," without proof of the registrar's signature or office); c. 17, § 19 (clerk's certified copy under court seal of bill of sale or mortgage of chattels is to be evidence of the registration only); c. 65, § 18 (Quebec notarial instruments; like Dom. Evid. Act, § 27); § 22 (like ib. § 28).

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 33 (Crown grants made before the erection of the Province, provable "as hereinbefore provided"; compare § 1680, post); c. 127, § 71 (registrar's certified copy of a filed bill of sale is to be evidence of the filing and the time thereof); c. 127, § 48 (a deed or will registered in the sheriff-court books of Scotland is provable by certified copy of the custodian under the sheriff's seal, if accompanied by affidavit of comparison with the original and of the genuineness of the seal); c. 127, § 69 (notice of sale under mortgage, provable by certified copy; cited ante, § 1225); c. 151, § 57, St. 1920, c. 6, § 57 (all certified copies by the registrar of instruments duly registered "shall be allowed"); c. 127, § 63 (registered instruments, other than wills, are provable by certified copy; cited ante, § 1225); c. 127, § 70 (instruments filed under the bills of sale act of 1893 are provable by certified copy; quoted ante, § 1225); c. 127, § 32 (plan or record of survey on file in the Crown Lands office, provable by surveyor-general's or deputy's certified copy, without proof of official character or seal); c. 127, § 62 (any decree etc. qualified for registry and registered under the Registry Act, and any certified copy by the registrar, is admissible); 1844, Smith v. Millidge, 2 Kerr 408, 413; 1857, Doe v. Rideout, 3 All. 502; 1892, Doe v. McLean, 31 N. Br. 474 (requirement of notice construed).

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 22 (a duly registered "deed or document" may be proved by the registry or a "certified copy thereof by the registrar, without further proof"); St. 1921, 12 Geo. V, c. 21, § 27 (certificate of title after proceedings to quiet title; certified copy of record, admissible).

Northwest Territories: Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 43, § 30, c. 44, § 9 (execution and contents of mortgages and sales of chattels are provable by the registration-clerk's certified copy).

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 20 (crown grants; duplicate original provable by certified copy of the commissioner of crown lands; books of registry provable by certified copy of the registrar of deeds; special provisions for plans not annexed); § 21 ("any deed, or any document from the books of registry," is provable by the registrar's certified copy); § 23 (for copies under § 21, ten days' notice and a schedule of documents must be given, unless the Court dispenses); § 24 ("every bill of sale or other document, filed in any registry of deeds, may be proved" by certified copy of the registrar of deeds); § 25 (the registration is provable by the registrar's indorsement on the deed or copy); § 27 (Quebec notarial instruments; substantially like Dom. Evid. Act, § 27, omitting the proviso); 1905, Bartlett v. Nova Scotia S. Co., 37 N. Sc. 259, 264 (certified copies of a plan found in the Crown land-office, not admitted, under Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 20; the Court's hostility to the statute, "of which I confess I knew nothing until the present argument," is so strong that its ruling is not to be wondered at); St. 1910, 10 Edw. VII, c. 28 (amending Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 27, by requiring ten days' notice of the intention to use such a document, if a will or a deed, unless the judge dispenses); 1905, McDonald v. McDonald, 38 N. Sc. 261, 278, 290 (the execution of the original deed need not otherwise be proved when a certified copy of the registry is offered under the Evidence Act, Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 21).

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, §§ 33, 34 (a "notarial act or instrument" in Quebec, filed, enrolled, or enregistered, is provable by certified copy of the notary possessing the original; but it may be "rebutted or set aside" by proof that the document is one not lawfully to be taken or filed by a notary, or that it is not a true copy, etc.); § 46 (an "instrument or memorial" is provable by exemplification or certified copy under the hand and seal of office of the registrar, etc. in whose office the same is registered, etc.); § 47 (certain notice required for such copies; cited ante, § 1225); c. 122, § 2 (contracts for sale of land; quoted ante, § 1225); c. 123, § 126 (registered titles); c. 125, § 37 (chattel mortgage or bill of sale filed; a certified copy by the clerk under seal of Court shall be evidence that the instrument was received and filed).

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, § 42 (duly registered deed or mortgage is provable by the registrar's certified copy, as "evidence of the contents of the original"); § 44 (public lands commissioners' duplicate deed, deposited in his office, is provable by a certified copy under seal by him or the assistant, as evidence "of the due execution and of the contents of the original"); § 45 (registered plan, provable like a deed); § 46 (Surrogate's registered license to sell real estate, provable by the Surrogate's certified copy under seal); § 49 (filed bill of sale or mortgage of chattels is provable by certified copy of the custodian under seal of the Supreme Court, as "evidence of the contents" and the filing).

Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 67, § 20 (land-titles; like Alb. St. 1906, c. 24, § 17); c. 44, Evidence Act, § 21 (any instrument filed or registered in a land registration district, provable by the registrar's certified copy); c. 44, § 18 (Quebec notarial act; like Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 33, 34); c. 200, § 36 (chattel mortgages; like Yukon Consol. Ord. c. 7, § 30).

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 7, § 30 (registered bills of sale and mortgages of personalty; the registration clerk's certified copies shall be "'prima facie' evidence of the execution of the original instrument," and of the date, etc.); c. 30, § 11 (grants, etc., quoted post, § 1680); ib. §§ 19, 20 (provisions for proof of copies of town-site allotments, Crown grants, etc.; compare N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 20); ib. § 21 ("A copy of any deed, or any document on file in the land-titles' office, certified under the hand of the registrar, or proved to be a true copy taken therefrom, shall be taken in evidence in place of the original"); ib. § 23 (similar to N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 23, but requiring only five days' notice); ib. § 24 (similar to N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 24, for the Gold Commissioner's office); ib. § 25 (similar to N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 25); ib. § 26 (similar to N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 25, for the Gold Commissioner's office).

UNITED STATES: Federal: Code. § 9060 (U. S. internal revenue collector's record of sale of land, provable by certified copy, to be evidence "of the truth of the facts therein stated"); 1802, Edmondson v. Lovell, 1 Cr. C. C. 103; 1809, M'Keen v. Delancy, 5 Cr. 22; 1816, Sharpless v. Knowles, 2 Cr. C. C. 128; 1826, Peltz v. Clarke, 2 Cr. C. C. 703; 1830, Beall v. Dick, 4 Cr. C. C. 18; 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 81 (for New York law); 1835, Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 677; 1850, New York Dry Dock v. Hicks, 5 McLean 111, 112; 1858, Thomas v. Lawson, 21 How. 331, 338 (for Arkansas); 1865, Secrist v. Green, 3 Wall. 744 (for Illinois and New York); 1869, Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. 513, 530 (same); 1897, Union P. R. Co. v. Reed, 25 C. C. A. 389, 80 Fed. 234 (power of attorney to convey Nebraska land; record-copy does not dispense with other proof apart from statute; this seems to ignore the preceding rulings; see especially Winn v. Patterson).

