BOOK II: BY WHOM EVIDENCE MUST BE PRESENTED (BURDEN OF PROOF, AND PRESUMPTIONS)

TITLE I: GENERAL THEORY

CHAPTER LXXXVII.

§ 2483. Production of Evidence by the Parties.

§ 2484. Evidence sought by the Judge 'ex mero motu': Questions to Witnesses by the Judge.

§ 2485. Burden of Proof: (1) First Meaning: Risk of Non-persuasion of the Jury.

§ 2486. Same: Test for this Burden: Negative and Affirmative Allegations; Facts peculiarly within a Party's Knowledge.

§ 2487. Burden of Proof: (2) Second Meaning: Duty of Producing Evidence to the Judge.

§ 2488. Same: Test for this Burden.

§ 2489. Shifting the Burden of Proof.

§ 2490. Presumptions; Legal Effect of a Presumption.

§ 2491. Same: Presumptions of Law and Presumptions of Fact.

§ 2492. Same: Conclusive Presumptions.

§ 2493. Same: Conflicting Presumptions; Counter Presumptions.

§ 2494. Same: 'Prima facie' Evidence; Sufficient Evidence for the Jury; Scintilla of Evidence.

§ 2495. Same: Direction of a Verdict, Motion for a Nonsuit, and Demurrer to Evidence.

§ 2496. Same: Waiver of Motion by subsequent Introduction of Evidence.

§ 2497. Measure of Jury's Persuasion; (1) Proof beyond a Reasonable Doubt; Rule for Criminal Cases.

§ 2498. Same: (2) Proof by Preponderance of Evidence; Rule for Civil Cases.

§ 2483. Production of Evidence by the Parties. The apportionment of the task of producing evidence is one of the most characteristic features of the Anglo-American system. It is placed wholly upon the parties to the litigation; it is not required or expected of the judge. In this respect the emphasis is in contrast to the Continental system.<sup>1</sup> Whether the political notions of self-help, self-government, and 'laissez faire' have ultimately here a common source and analogy would be an interesting question. This Anglo-American feature shows itself, in other aspects, in its frequent relegation of the judge to the position of an umpire (ante, §§ 21, 1845), in its abstinence from rules for preferred kinds of witnesses (ante, § 1286), and in its reliance upon cross-examination by the opponent (ante, § 1367). The Continental feature shows itself in its exaltation of the trial judge's function (as 'Untersuchungsrichter' or 'juge d'instruction'), in his responsibility for initiating the search for evidence, and (historically in the past) in its multiplication of artificial rules of measurement for aiding the judge in estimating the evidence (ante, § 2032, post, § 2490). Certainly the vital importance of the burden of proof means something very different for the parties, in our system of procedure, from its meaning in the other. It is this feature, together with that of the jury, which is responsible for the peculiar double aspect of the burden of proof (post, § 2487).

§ 2483. <sup>1</sup> The contrast, in general, may be seen by a perusal of the collections of Continental trials cited ante, §§ 194, 2251, and of the treatise of De la Grasserie, De la Preuve au civil et au criminel (Paris, 1912); O. E.

Bodington, An Outline of the French Law of Evidence (1904), cc. VII, VIII; Hans Gross, Criminal Investigation, transl. J. and J. C. Adam (1907).

§ 2484. Evidence sought by the Judge 'ex mero motu'; Questions to Witnesses by the Judge. So extreme has been the emphasis upon this feature of the production of proof, that even the judge's power to call forth evidence has in modern American practice been at times questioned by the Bar. That he has no burden or duty of doing so is plain in the law. But the general judicial power itself, expressly allotted in every State constitution, implies inherently a power to investigate as auxiliary to the power to decide; and the power to investigate implies necessarily a power to summon and to question witnesses:

1794, Mr. Edmund Burke, Report of Committee on Warren Hastings' Trial, 31 Parl. Hist. 348: "It is the duty of the Judge to receive every offer of evidence, apparently material, suggested to him, though the parties themselves through negligence, ignorance, or corrupt collusion, should not bring it forward. A judge is not placed in that high situation merely as a passive instrument of parties. He has a duty of his own, independent of them, and that duty is to investigate the truth."

1894, Lord ESHER, M. R., in Coulson v. Disborough, 2 Q. B. 316, 318: "If there be a person whom neither party to an action chooses to call as a witness, and the judge thinks that that person is able to elucidate the truth, the judge in my opinion, is himself entitled to call him; and I cannot agree that such a course has never been taken by a judge before."

The trial judge, then, may call a witness not called by the parties,<sup>1</sup> or may consult any source of information on topics subject to judicial

CANADA: Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, § 22 (the Court "may appoint one or more assessors to advise the Court in any matters requiring nautical or other expert or professional knowledge"); the other Canadian statutes declaring the judge's power to call expert witnesses are quoted ante, §§ 563, 1674.

UNITED STATES: Fla. 1886, Selph v. State, 22 Fla. 537, 548 (a judge may "of his own accord, when the interests of justice demand it," call and examine witnesses; the word "not" is apparently omitted by error in the printed opinion); Ga. 1852, Hoskins v. State, 11 Ga. 92, 97 (the trial judge's right of "directing the necessary proofs to be adduced," conceded); Haw. 1919, Kamahalo v. Coelho, 24 Haw. 689 (loan of money; receipts purporting to be signed by the plaintiff were in evidence; after both parties had closed their cases, the trial Court "at his own instance summoned to appear before him one R. W. B., Esq., to testify as an expert as to the genuineness of the signatures," cross-examination by the parties being allowed; held proper; sensible opinion by Edings, J.); Ill. 1902,

Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494, 56 N. E. 32 (State's attorney allowed to state that he did not wish to call a certain eye-witness, and to request the Court to call him, and then to cross-examine him, the defendant also cross-examining); 1911, People v. Cleminson, 250 Ill. 135, 95 N. E. 157 (the trial Court should not call witnesses at the suggestion of the State's attorney, except when they are eye-witnesses and then only in unusual instances; Carle v. People, approved; here three witnesses were held improperly called by the judge for cross-examination by the State's attorney); 1921, People v. Cardinelli, 297 Ill. 116, 130 N. E. 355 (judge may call a witness not called by either party); Mo. 1898, Fullerton v. Fordyce, 144 Mo. 519, 44 S. W. 1053 (here, a physician who had made an examination under order of Court previously made on motion); N. C. 1916, State v. Horne, 171 N. C. 787, 88 S. E. 433 ("It has been the immemorial custom for the trial judge to examine witnesses who are tendered by either side whenever he sees fit to do so; and the calling of a witness on his own motion differs from this practice in degree and not in kind"; here, expert witnesses "who are not desired either by the State or by the defendant"); notice,<sup>2</sup> or may put additional questions to a witness called by the parties,<sup>3</sup> or may 'ex mero motu' exclude inadmissible evidence,<sup>4</sup> or may take a view of a place or thing.<sup>5</sup>

That the trial judge has no power to cause the evidence produced by the parties to be supplemented, never will be conceded, so long as the Bench retains a true conception of its constitutional function and a due sense of self-respect. There could not have been any question on this subject, had not the modern American legal mind been led astray by its habituation to the paralyzing effect of another rule, wholly modern, viz. the rule (post, § 2551) forbidding the trial judge to comment to the jury on the weight of evidence.

P.I. 1907, U. S. v. Cinco, 8 P.I. 389 (judge calling new witnesses after case submitted); 1907, U. S. v. Base, 9 P. I. 48 (similar); Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 2620 (judge may direct inquiry by experts; quoted ante, § 563); Va. 1921, Pendleton v. Com., — Va. —, 109 S. E. 201 (homicide; the Court called a woman as witness who had "refused to talk" before trial, and allowed the prosecuting attorney to cross-examine her; held proper in the trial Court's discretion).

So, too, where the judge sits without a jury: 1883, Badische A. & S. Fabrik v. Levinstein, L. R. 24 Ch. D. 156, 167 (under Ord. 56, Rules of 1883, quoted ante, § 1674).

The appointment of expert witnesses by the Court is one of the expedients proposed for reforming the shortcomings of the present system; see the articles cited ante, § 563, and the statutes there quoted. In Gentry v. Gulf & S. I. R. Co., 109 Miss. 66, 67 So. 849 (1915), where the trial judge had selected two disinterested physicians to examine the plaintiff's injuries, such examination being in that State not allowable, under § 2220, ante, the opinion proceeded: "We cannot admit that physicians, or other experts, appointed by the Court at the request of a party to a lawsuit, are more reliable and more disinterested than are others of like attainments and like professional standing, simply because the others have given expert testimony at the request of a party to the suit"; but this is to be blind to the notorious and repulsive facts of professional experience. In People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148, 129 N. W. 199 (1910), Mich. St. 1905, No. 175, providing that in homicide cases, on issues of expert knowledge, "the Court shall appoint one or more suitable disinterested persons, not exceeding three, to investigate such issues and testify at the trial," without preventing the parties' use of other witnesses, was held unconstitutional, mainly because "the power of selecting and appointing witnesses . . . is in no sense a judicial act." It is a pity that the Court suffered such a severe attack of dikastophobia on the sight of this harmless statute. As the history and authorities of the present subject are ignored in the opinion and as its fantastic logic would hardly be followed elsewhere, no further notice of its contents is needed.

The opinion of Brown, J., in State v. Horne, 171 N. C. 787, 88 S. E. 433 (1916) is refreshingly curt in its affirmation of the trial judge's full power to call expert witnesses.

That the trial Court has inherent power, without express statutory provision, to summon witnesses seems inevitably included in the holding of the Federal Supreme Court that such power exists to appoint an auditor, in an action at law, to hear testimony, make a finding, and present a report on the evidence for consideration of the jury; 1920, Re Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 40 Sup. 543; Mr. Justice Brandeis' masterly opinion states the fundamental postulate thus: "The right of trial by jury does not prohibit the introduction of new methods for determining what facts are actually in issue, nor does it prohibit the introduction of new rules of evidence." A learned Note entitled "Compulsory Reference in Actions at Law" (Harvard Law Review, XXXIV, 321) commenting on Re Peterson, supra, points out the strong foundations of that decision and justly terms it "little short of epoch-making" in its possibilities of greater flexibility in the administration of justice.

<sup>3</sup> 1877, Sparks v. State, 59 Ala. 82, 87 (distinction drawn between the right to propound questions openly to a witness and the impropriety of privately consulting a witness to discover or suggest further testimony); 1884, Littleton v. Clayton, 77 Ala. 571, 575; and cases cited ante, § 784, where the scope of this part of the power, as to-day applied, is fully examined.

<sup>4</sup> 1912, Electric Park Amusement Co. v. Psichos, 83 N. J. L. 262, 83 Atl. 766 (here the judge excluded an incompetent witness though the opponent had made no objection; the party offering the witness made the unconscionable claim that he had a right to put in any illegal evidence if the opponent failed to object; the Supreme Court sensibly refused to sanction this last step in the reduction of the trial judge to the helpless referee of an unscrupulous combat between skill and ignorance).

The judiciary's supine observance of that deleterious principle leads naturally to the extreme assumption that the judge must not reveal to the jurors in any manner his mental attitude towards the trend of the proof on the issues; and that any act of his in calling a new witness or in asking additional questions will thus lay him open to the suspicion of unlawfully expressing himself on the weight of evidence. The morbid jealousy with which some Supreme Courts watch against violations of that rule leads them of course to adopt an attitude of hostility against the trial judge's constitutional power to interrogate witnesses. This attitude will not disappear until, by a healthy reaction, the trial judge's pristine power to act as a thirteenth juror and comment on the weight of evidence is once more restored to him.

§ 2485. Burden of Proof; (1) First Meaning; Risk of Non-Persuasion of the Jury. Since, then, the risk and burden of producing evidence falls upon the parties themselves, how is it to be apportioned between them? In short, which party has the "burden of proof"?<sup>1</sup>

In every attempt to explain the principles of the law as to burden of proof and presumption, two things at least present themselves for consideration, — the general process, logical and legal, involved in determining the parties by whom evidence is to be produced, and the significance and usage of various terms employed and the incidental problems of each part of the process.

The difficulties of such an attempt, almost insuperable, arise not so much from the intrinsic complication or uncertainty of the situation as from the lamentable ambiguity of phrase and confusion of terminology under which our law has so long suffered.<sup>2</sup> At the outset, then, it will be more satisfactory to analyze the logical and legal situation considered in itself and independently of the various usages and terms that chiefly cause the confusion.

(1) Burden of Proof; Risk of Non-persuasion. Whenever A and B are at issue upon any subject of controversy (not necessarily legal), and M is to take action between them, and their desire is, hence, respectively to persuade M as to their contention, it is clear that the situation of the two, as regards its advantages and risks, will be very different. Suppose that A has property in which he would like to have M invest money, and that B is opposed to having M invest money; M will invest in A's property if he can learn that it is a profitable object, and not otherwise. Here it is seen that the advantage is with B, and the disadvantage with A; for unless A succeeds in persuading M up to the point of action, A will fail and B will remain victorious; the burden of proof, or, in other words, the risk of non-persuasion, is upon A. This does not mean that B is absolutely safe though he does nothing, for he cannot tell how much it will require to persuade M; a very little argu-

§ 2485. <sup>1</sup> For an acute and comprehensive examination of the subject of this chapter, see chapters VIII and IX in Professor Thayer's Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, the publication of which in 1898 was epoch-making. Professor Austin Abbott's article in the University Law Review, II, 59, is also enlightening.

<sup>2</sup> The following remark will be thought singular, in view of the condition of the precedents on this subject: "Every student of the law fully understands the exact import of the phrase 'burden of proof'" (1897, State v. Thornton, 10 S. D. 349, 73 N. W. 196).

ment from A might suffice; or, if M is of a rashly speculative tendency, the mere mention of the proposition by A might without more effect M's action; so that it may be safer in any case for B to say what he can on his side of the question; and thus in fact he, as well as A, has more or less risk, in the sense that there are always chances of A's persuading M, no matter how trifling his evidence and argument. [But nevertheless the risk is really upon A, in the sense that if M, after all said and done, remains in doubt, and therefore fails to pass to the point of action, it is A that loses and B that succeeds; because it is A who wishes the action taken and needed as a prerequisite to accomplish the persuasion of M.] The risk of non-persuasion, therefore, i. e. the risk of M's non-action because of doubt, may properly be said to be upon A. This is the situation common to all cases of attempted persuasion, whether in the market, the home, or the forum. So far as mere logic is concerned, it is perhaps questionable whether there is much importance in the doctrine of burden of proof as affecting persons in controversy.<sup>3</sup> The removal of the burden is not in itself a matter of logical necessity. It is the desire to have action taken that is important. In the affairs of life there is a penalty for not sustaining the burden of proof, — i. e. not persuading M beyond the doubting point, — namely, that M will not take the desired action, to which his persuasion is a prerequisite.<sup>4</sup>

Thus, in practical affairs generally, the burden of proof (in the sense of risk of non-persuasion) signifies that upon a person desiring action from M will fall the penalty of M's non-action unless M can be persuaded beyond the doubting-point as to the truth of the propositions prerequisite to his action. What, then, is the difference, if any, between this risk of non-persuasion in affairs at large and the same risk in litigation? In litigation, the penalty is of course different; the action which is desired of M is the verdict of the jury, the decree, order, or finding of the judge, or some other appropriate action of the tribunal. But so also the action differs in other affairs, according as M is an investor with money to lend, or an employer with a position to fill, or a friend with a favor to grant. Is there no other and more radical difference?

The radical difference in litigation, as distinguished from practical affairs

<sup>3</sup> "In Logic, then, when we speak of the burden of proof, we are not speaking of some merely artificial law, with artificial penalties attached to it. . . . No penalty follows the misplacement of the burden of proof, except the natural consequence that the assertion remains untested, and the audience therefore (if inquiring) unconvinced. . . . There is no 'obligation' on any one to prove an assertion, — other than any wish he may feel to set an inquiring mind at rest or to avoid the imputation of empty boasting. It is a natural law alone with which we are here concerned, — the law that an unsupported assertion may, for all that appears, be either true or false" (Professor Alfred Sidgwick, Fallacies, 163).

<sup>4</sup> It is therefore a fallacy to suppose that the necessity of apportioning the burden of proof is a "technical, formal, legal" doctrine, which is due solely to the artificiality of the legal rules of pleading; yet this fallacy has lately made its appearance: 1920, Martin v. Columbus, 101 Oh. 1, 127 N. E. 411 (condemnation of land; held error to charge that the burden of proving value is on the owner; the opinion is fundamentally erroneous however in resting this decision on the notion that "this proceeding does not admit of any definite, formal, technical issue touching value; it therefore does not admit of the technical doctrine relating to burden of proof"; the opinion is by Wanamaker, J.).

at large, is as to the mode of determining the propositions of persuasion which are a prerequisite to M's action. In affairs at large, these are determined solely by M's notion of the proper grounds for his action, — depending thus on the circumstances of the situation as judged by M. In litigation, these prerequisites are determined, first and broadly, by the substantive law, which fixes the groups of data that enter into legal relations and constitute rights and duties, and, secondly and more in detail, by the laws of pleading and procedure, which further group and subdivide these larger groups of data, and assign one or another sub-group to this or that party as prerequisites of the tribunal's action in his favor. Thus, if A were endeavoring to persuade M to assist him with money because M's brother B had cruelly assaulted and beaten A, M might conceivably exact of A that the latter first prove to him — i. e. persuade him — not merely that B had beaten A, but further that B had not done this in self-defence or by A's consent or in ejecting A from B's premises or otherwise for some reason, legally justifiable or not. In a legal tribunal, on the other hand, the substantive law will define and limit, in the first place, the reasons to be regarded as justifiable, and will thus narrow the total of facts that can in any event be involved; and, in the second place, the law of pleading will further subdivide and apportion these facts. It will inform A that he need persuade the tribunal of two facts only, namely, that A was beaten and it was B who beat him;<sup>5</sup> and that, upon persuading the tribunal of these facts, its action will be taken in his favor, and A's risk of the tribunal's non-action will thereupon cease. It will inform B that at this point the risk of non-action will turn upon him, in the sense that he needs the tribunal's action in order to relieve himself from the consequences of its previous action, and that this action (by way of reversing its provisional action in A's favor) will depend upon his persuading the tribunal as to certain specified facts by way of excuse or justification. Perhaps the same law of pleading may further apportion to A a third set of facts to be the subject of a replication, in case B succeeds in obtaining action in his favor on his plea.

But the groupings defined by the substantive law and the further subdivision by the law of pleading do not necessarily end the process of apportionment by law. Even within a single pleading there are instances in which the burden of proof (in the sense of a risk of non-persuasion) may be taken from the pleader desiring action and placed upon the opponent. In criminal cases, for example, though there is no affirmative pleading for the defence, it is put upon the defendant, in some jurisdictions, to prove the excuse of self-defence; in many jurisdictions in which payment need not be affirma-burden, in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion, remains with the defendant throughout the case, [on a plea of self-defence], . . . in view of our decisions, is a question of much difficulty").

tively pleaded to a contract-claim, the burden of proving payment is nevertheless put upon the debtor; and so in many other instances. The difference of effect between an apportionment under this method and an apportionment by requiring a pleading is merely that, in the latter method, all questions of burden of proof might conceivably be disposed of before trial or the entering into evidence;<sup>6</sup> while by the other method the apportionment is not made until the trial proper has begun. The other method is less simple in the handling; but it has come more into vogue under the loose modes of pleading current in modern times in many jurisdictions.<sup>7</sup>

§ 2486. Same; Test for this Burden; Negative and Affirmative Allegations; Facts peculiarly within a Party's Knowledge. The characteristic, then, of the burden of proof (in the sense of a risk of non-persuasion) in legal controversies is that the law divides the process into stages, and apportions definitely to each party the specific facts which will in turn fall to him as the prerequisites of obtaining action in his favor by the tribunal. It is this apportionment which forms the important element of controversy for legal purposes. Each party wishes to know of what facts he has the risk of non-persuasion.

By what considerations is this apportionment determined? Is there any single principle or rule which will solve all cases and afford a general test for ascertaining the incidence of this risk? By no means. It is often said that the burden is upon the party having in form the affirmative allegation.<sup>1</sup> But this is not an invariable test, nor even always a significant circumstance; the burden is often on one who has a negative assertion to prove;<sup>2</sup> a common instance is that of a promisee alleging non-performance of a contract. It is

<sup>7</sup> The result is that what were properly questions of pleading are often discussed in terms of the burden of proof. 1896, Hopson v. Caswell, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 392, 36 S. sometimes said that it is upon the party to whose case the fact is essential. — This is correct enough, but it merely advances the inquiry one step; we must then ask whether there is any general principle which determines to what party's case a fact is essential.

The truth is that there is not and cannot be any one general solvent for all cases. It is merely a question of policy and fairness based on experience in the different situations. Thus, in most actions of tort there are many possible justifying circumstances, — self-defence, leave and license, 'volenti non fit injuria,' and the like; but it would be both unfair and contrary to experience to assume that one of them was probably present, and to require the plaintiff to disprove the existence of each one of them; so that the plaintiff is put to prove merely the nature of his harm, and the defendant's share in causing it; and the other circumstances, which would if they existed leave him without a claim, are put upon the defendant to prove. Nevertheless, in malicious prosecution, on the one hand, the facts as to the defendant's good faith and probable cause, which might otherwise have been set down for the defendant to show in excuse (as the analogous facts in an action for defamation are reserved for a plea of privilege), are here put upon the plaintiff, who is required to prove their non-existence; because as a matter of experience and fairness this seems to be the wiser apportionment. So, on the other hand, in an action for defamation ("false words," in the old nomenclature), it might have been supposed on other analogies that to the plaintiff it would fall to prove the falsity of the defendant's utterance; yet as a matter of fairness, it has in fact been put upon the defendant to prove the truth of his utterance. Thus, no one principle will serve in torts as a guiding rule for the various cases. In criminal cases, the innovation, in some jurisdictions, of putting upon the accused the burden of proving his insanity has apparently also been based on an experience in the abuses of the contrary practice. In claims based on written instruments, experience has led in most jurisdictions to a statutory provision, requiring the execution by the defendant to be specially traversed or else taken for admitted, — a step which stops short of changing the burden of proof, but well illustrates the considerations affecting its incidence. The controversy whether a plaintiff in tort should be required to prove his own carefulness, or the defendant should be required to prove the plaintiff's carelessness, has depended in part on experience as to a plaintiff being commonly careful or careless, in part on the fairness of putting the burden on one or the other, and this in part on the consideration which of the parties has the means of proof more available.

This last consideration has often been advanced as a special test for solving a limited class of cases, i. e. the burden of proving a fact is said to be put on the party who presumably has peculiar means of knowledge enabling him to prove its falsity if it is false.<sup>3</sup> But this consideration furnishes no working rule; if it did, then the plaintiff in an action for defamation charging him to be living in adultery should be required to prove that he is lawfully married. This consideration, after all, merely takes its place among other considerations of fairness and experience as a most important one to be kept in mind in apportioning the burden of proof in a specific case.

There is, then, ~~no one~~ principle, or set of harmonious principles, which afford a sure and universal test for the solution of a given case.<sup>4</sup> The logic of the situation does not demand such a test; it would be useless to attempt to discover or to invent one; and the state of the law does not justify us in saying that it has accepted any. There are merely specific rules for specific cases, resting for their ultimate basis upon broad and undefined reasons of experience and fairness.

§ 2487. Burden of Proof; (2) Second Meaning; Duty of producing Evidence to the Judge. So far as concerns the principles examined above, the matter may have come before any kind of tribunal. The inquiry peculiarly concerns the procedure in legal controversies; but the settlement of it was not affected by the nature of the tribunal. The tribunal might be a judge, or a jury, or both, so far as regards apportioning the risk of non-persuasion. Nothing has been said, or need be, about a distinction between judge and jury. But we come now to a peculiar set of rules which have their source in the bipartite constitution of the common-law tribunal. Apart from the distinction of functions between judge and jury, these rules need have had no existence. They owe their existence chiefly to the historic and unquestioned control of the judge over the jury, and to the partial and dependent position of the jury as a member of the tribunal whose functions come into play only within certain limits.<sup>1</sup>

The treatment of the situation, and the operation of the rules, can best be comprehended by keeping this consideration in mind, namely, that the opportunity to decide finally upon the evidential material that may be offered does not fall to the jury as a matter of course; that each party must first with his evidence pass the gauntlet of the judge; and that the judge, as a part of his function in administering the law, is to keep the jury within the bounds of reasonable action. In short, in order to get to the jury on the issue, and bring into play the other burden of proof (in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion of the jury), both parties alike must first satisfy the judge that the defendant has the burden of proving a license); 1922, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Lahr, — Ind. —, 134 N. E. 657 (insurance); 1920, State ex rel. Woodbury Co. Anti-Saloon League v. Clark, 189 Ia. 492, 178 N. W. 419 (bill to enjoin a house of prostitution; burden of showing want of knowledge is on the owner of the house); 1918, State v. Perello, 102 Kan. 695, 171 Pac. 630 (proving the exceptions in a liquor-prohibition statute); 1921, State v. Falkner, 182 N. C. 793, 108 S. E. 756 (principle held not applicable to the wife's proof of non-adultery on trial of a charge against the husband of deserting the wife, the husband pleading her adultery as an excuse).

<sup>4</sup> The reasoning upon these various proposed tests may be interestingly traced through the fluctuations and conflicts of view in the following New Hampshire opinions: 1866, Kendall v. Brownson, 47 N. H. 186; 1870, Lisbon v. Lyman, 49 N. H. 553; State v. Perkins, 53 N. H. 435; State v. Keggon, 55 N. H. 19; 1920, Spilene v. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co., 79 N. H. 326, 108 Atl. 808.

they have a quantity of evidence fit to be considered by the jury, and to form a reasonable basis for the verdict. This duty of satisfying the judge is peculiar in its operation, because if it is not fulfilled, the party in default loses, by order of the judge, and the jury is not given an opportunity to debate and form conclusions as if the issue were open to them. It operates somewhat as follows:<sup>2</sup>

(a) The party having the risk of non-persuasion (under the pleadings or other rules) is naturally the one upon whom first falls this duty of going forward with evidence; because, since he wishes to have the jury act for him, and since without any legal evidence at all they could properly take no action, there is no need for the opponent to adduce evidence; and this duty thus falls first upon the proponent (a term convenient for designating the party having the risk of non-persuasion). This duty, however, though determined in the first instance by the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion (ante, § 2485), is a distinct one, for it is a duty towards the judge, and the judge rules against the party if it is not satisfied; there is as yet no opportunity to get to the jury and ask if they are persuaded. The judge, then, requires that at least enough evidence be put in to be worth considering by the jury.<sup>3</sup>

(b) Suppose, then, that the proponent has satisfied this duty towards the judge, and that the judge has ruled that sufficient evidence has been introduced. The duty has then ended. Up to that point the proponent was liable to a ruling of law from the judge which would put an end to his case. After passing this point he is now before the jury, bearing only his risk of non-persuasion (ante, § 2485). There is now no duty on either party, with reference to any rule of law in the hands of the judge, to produce evidence. Either party may introduce it, and doubtless both parties will do so; but there is nothing that requires either to do so under penalty of a ruling of law against him. The proponent, however, still has his burden of proof in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion of the jury; i. e. should the jury be in doubt after hearing the evidence of the proponent, either with or without evidence from the opponent, the proponent fails to obtain their verdict upon that issue, and the opponent remains successful. In this second stage of the trial, with the evidence before the jury, the only burden operating is that which concerns the jury, — the risk of non-persuasion; and not that which concerns the judge, — the duty of producing evidence.

(c) Suppose, however, that the proponent is able to go further and to adduce evidence which if believed would make it beyond reason to repudiate the proponent's claim, — evidence such that the jury, acting as reasonable men, must be persuaded and must render a verdict on that issue for the proponent. Here the proponent has now put himself in the same position that was occupied by the opponent at the opening of the trial, i. e. unless the opponent now offers evidence against the claim and thus changes the situation, the jury should not be allowed to render a verdict against reason, — a verdict which would later have to be set aside as against evidence. The matter is thus in the hands of the judge again, as having the supervisory control of the proof; and he may now, as applying a rule of law, require the opponent to produce evidence, under penalty of losing the case by direction of the judge. A duty of producing evidence, under this penalty for default, has now arisen for the opponent. It arises for the same reasons, is measured by the same tests, and has the same consequences as the duty of production which was formerly upon the proponent. There are, however, two ways in which it may be invoked by the judge, differing widely in terms and in appearance, but essentially the same in principle. (c') In the ordinary case, this overwhelming mass of evidence, bearing down for the proponent, will be made up of a variety of complicated data, differing in every new trial and not to be tested by any set formulas. The judge's ruling will be based on a survey of this mass of evidence as a whole; and it will direct the jury on that issue to render a verdict on that mass of evidence for the proponent. The propriety of this has sometimes been doubted by Courts who do not believe the process to be precisely analogous to that of directing a nonsuit for the proponent or of enforcing a presumption, as shortly to be explained (post, § 2495); but the better authority gives ample recognition to this process. (c'') Another mode under which this process is carried out employs the aid of a fixed rule of law, i. e. a presumption, applicable to inferences from specific evidence to specific facts forming part of the issue, rather than to the general mass of evidence bearing on the proposition in issue. If it is a part of the proponent's case, for example, to prove that a person is deceased, and he has offered evidence that the person has been absent, unheard from, for seven years or more, and there is no other evidence on the subject, then the proponent may ask that the jury be directed, if they believe this fact of absence, to take as true the proposition that the person is deceased; if that, moreover, were the only proposition at issue, then the direction would be to find a verdict for the proponent if this fact of absence were believed. The result is the same as in the preceding form of the process (c'), i. e. the opponent loses as a matter of law, in default of evidence to the contrary; in other words, the presumption creates for the opponent a duty of producing evidence, in default of which he loses as a matter of legal ruling, the matter not being open for the jury, and the risk of non-persuasion, which applies only to the jury's deliberations, having ceased to affect the proponent. This particular form of the process, however (c''), happens to have become known as a "presumption."

The term "presumption" is attended by much confused usage. The particular ambiguity which we need here to guard against is the confusion between the inference itself — i. e. the propriety of making the inference from the evidence to the 'factum probandum' <sup>4</sup>— and the effect of the inference in the hands of the judge. So far as "presumption" means anything for the present purpose, it signifies a ruling as to the duty of producing evidence. "The essential character and operation of presumptions, so far as the law of evidence is concerned, is in all cases the same, whether they be called by one name or the other; that is to say, they throw upon the party against whom they work the duty of going forward with the evidence; and this operation is all their effect, regarded merely in their character as presumptions." <sup>5</sup>

(d) Keeping in mind, then, that a presumption signifies a ruling of law, and that to this extent the matter is in the judge's hands and not the jury's, what is the effect upon the legal situation of the opponent if he does respond to this duty and comes forward with other evidence against the fact presumed?— When he has thus fulfilled his duty under the ruling of law, he puts himself out of the hands of the judge and his ruling, and finds himself back again in the hands of the jury. He is precisely where the proponent was in the first place when he fulfilled the duty, then his, of producing evidence and succeeded in getting from the judge to the jury. The case is now open again as to that specific issue, i. e. free from any liability to a ruling of law against either side, and is before the jury, where the original proponent (as ever, when the issue is open to the jury) has the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion of the jury. The important thing is that there is now no longer in force any ruling of law by the judge requiring the jury to find according to the presumption. "All is then turned into an ordinary question of evidence, and the two or three general facts presupposed in the rule of presumption take their place with the rest, and operate, with their own natural force, as a part of the total mass of probative matter. . . . The main point to observe is that the rule of presumption has vanished;" <sup>6</sup> because its function was as a legal rule to settle the matter only provisionally, and to cast upon the opponent the duty of producing evidence, and this duty and this legal rule he has satisfied. <sup>7</sup>

(e) Are there any further stages in this possible shifting of the duty of producing evidence? It is conceivable that the proponent may be able to invoke other presumptions, though this is not common. But may not the opponent go further than to produce evidence sufficient to remove the presumption?

<sup>7</sup> The following passage from Professor Abbott's article, already mentioned, will serve to illustrate the general situation involved in this duty of producing evidence: "To use a homely illustration, a civil jury trial may be compared to a game of shuffle-board. The first and nearest to the player is the field of mere scintillas; if the plaintiff's evidence halts there, he is lost. The next, or middle, field is that of balancing probabilities: if his evidence reaches and rests there, he gets to the jury; but they alone can decide the cause, and they may decide it either way, or may disagree. The third and last field is that of legal conclusion: if his evidence can be pushed into that division, he is entitled to his victory at the hands of the judge, and the jury cannot draw it into doubt; but before the judge can do so, the defendant has a right to give evidence, and that evidence may bring the plaintiff's evidence back into doubt again, and leave the case in the field of balancing probabilities."

May he not only get the issue opened before the jury again, but also go further and raise what may be termed a counter-presumption in his favor, so that the proponent will find himself in his original position at the opening of the trial, namely, subject to the duty of producing sufficient evidence to go to the jury, under penalty, in case of default, of suffering a ruling against him by the judge as a matter of law? This result is possible in principle, and there are instances of it, though rare. For example, a plaintiff, in an action for the burning of his property by the defendant railway-company's negligence, created a presumption of negligence by showing the setting of the fire by sparks from the defendant's locomotive; the duty of producing evidence was thus put upon the defendant, who not only removed it, producing evidence sufficient to go to the jury, but by showing the proper construction, equipment, and inspection of the locomotive was held to have raised a presumption that it had not been negligent, and thus to be entitled to a ruling by the judge against the plaintiff, taking the case from the jury.<sup>8</sup>

The various possible stages in the foregoing process may be illustrated by a diagram; the particular usefulness of the graphic method being that it shows in small compass the relation of the stages and the vital distinction between the judge's and the jury's situation for the two kinds of burdens:

Let  $A$  = the starting-point of the proponent having the risk of non-persuasion on a given issue;

$A'$  = the starting-point of the opponent on the issue;

$Z$  = the point of complete persuasion or proof for the ~~proponent~~ <sup>opponent</sup>;

$Z'$  = the corresponding point for the opponent. The proponent then finds, as soon as he begins his production of evidence, that at any point between  $A$  and  $K$  he is subject to a ruling of the judge defeating him for lack of sufficient evidence. After reaching  $K$ , and obtaining a judicial ruling in his favor as to sufficiency of evidence, he is now free from his duty of producing evidence to the judge, and has only his risk of non-persuasion of the jury. But he may sufficient to go to the jury, but had not raised a counter-presumption requiring a ruling of the judge in his favor.

The best example of this application of the theory is found in the able opinion of Jaggard, J., in Continental Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 97 Minn. 467, 107 N. W. 548 (1906).

be able to reach with his evidence the point P, and invoke again the control of the judge, thus shifting to the opponent the duty of producing evidence. This may be done either by some general rule of presumption that is applicable, or by a specific ruling of the judge upon the mass of evidence adduced. If the duty is thus created for the opponent, he starts from point A' to sustain it. Until he has by some evidence reached point K', he is liable to a judicial ruling defeating him on that issue. If he can reach point K', the duty and liability of satisfying the judge disappears, and he is in the field of the jury again. Here, however, the risk of non-persuasion of the jury is still, as before, upon the proponent for that issue; but neither party has any duty to satisfy the judge. Further, however, the opponent may succeed in reaching point P', at which the judge, either by a general rule of counter-presumption or by a specific ruling on the mass of evidence, will order a verdict for the opponent, unless the proponent comes forward with more evidence. Thus the proponent again has the liability to produce some evidence, and must again attain point K, in order to come into the field of the jury once more. The process, however, seldom reaches these advanced stages. — If the parties cease all production of evidence while the case is between points K and P or K' and P', i. e. when the risk of non-persuasion of the jury comes to be the only and final stage, there are rules for the jury's guidance, namely, the rules for preponderance of evidence and reasonable doubt (post, §§ 2497, 2498).

The important practical distinction between these two senses of "burden of proof" is this: The risk of non-persuasion operates when the case has come into the hands of the jury, while the duty of producing evidence implies a liability to a ruling by the judge disposing of the issue without leaving the question open to the jury's deliberations.

§ 2488. Same: Tests for ascertaining this Burden. As to the tests for determining this second burden of proof, it has already been pointed out that (a) for the one burden (the risk of non-persuasion of the jury) the substantive law and the pleadings, primarily, serve to do this, and, subsidiarily, a rule of practice, within the stage of a single pleading, may further apportion the burden; but this apportionment depends ultimately on broad considerations of policy, and, for individual instances, there is nothing to do but ascertain the rule, if any, that has been judicially determined for that particular class of cases. (b) For the other burden (the duty of going forward with evidence to satisfy the judge) there is always, at the outset, such a duty for the party having the first burden, or risk of non-persuasion, until by some rule of law (either by a specific ruling of the judge upon the particular evidence, or by the aid of an appropriate presumption, or by matter judicially noticed) this line is passed. Then comes the stage in which there is no such duty of law for either party (although, if the proponent has invoked some presumption, this stage is immediately passed over). Then, either by a ruling on the general mass of evidence, or by the aid of some applicable presumption, the duty of law arises anew for the opponent. Finally, it may supposably, by similar modes, be later re-created for the proponent.

There is therefore no one test, of any real significance, for determining the incidence of this duty; at the outset the test is furnished by ascertaining who has the burden of proof, in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion of the jury, under the pleadings or other rules declaring what 'facta probanda' are the ultimate facts of each party's case; a little later, the test is whether the proponent has by a ruling of the judge (based on the sufficiency of the evidence, or a presumption, or a fact judicially noticed) fulfilled this duty; later on, it will be whether the proponent, by a ruling of the judge upon a presumption or the evidence as a whole, has created a duty for the opponent; and still later, whether, for the purposes of the judge's ruling, the opponent has satisfied this duty.

It has been suggested<sup>1</sup> that "the test ought in strict accuracy to be expressed thus, namely: which party would be successful if no evidence at all, or no more evidence (as the case may be), were given?" But it is obvious that this is not a test, in any sense of being a useful mode for ascertaining the unknown from the known; it is simply defining and re-stating in other words the effect of this duty of producing evidence; it says "the burden of proof, in this sense, means that the party liable to it will lose as a matter of judicial ruling if no evidence or no more evidence is given by him"; and this does not solve the main problem of determining in a given case which is the party thus liable to these consequences.

§ 2489. Shifting the Burden of Proof. (a) The first burden above described — the risk of non-persuasion of the jury — never shifts, since no fixed rule of law can be said to shift. The law of pleading, or, within the stage of a given pleading, some further rule of practice, fixes beforehand the issuable facts respectively apportioned to the case of each party; each party may know beforehand, from these rules, what facts will be a part of his case, so far as concerns the ultimate risk of non-persuasion. He will know from these rules that such facts, whenever the time comes, will be his to prove, and not the other party's; and that they will not be sometimes his and sometimes the other's, or possibly his and possibly the other's. The other party and himself will of course have their turns in proving their respective 'facta probanda' (though under a strict system of pleading these turns of proof will be more clearly fixed before trial, and may occur at different stages and not the same stage of the cause); and the putting-in of evidence may therefore "shift" in the sense that each will take his turn in proving the respective propositions apportioned to him. But the burden does not "shift" in any real sense; for each may once for all ascertain beforehand from rules of law the 'facta probanda' apportioned to him, and this apportionment will always remain as thus fixed, to whatever stage the cause may progress.

(b) The second kind of burden, however — the duty of producing evidence to satisfy the judge, — does have this characteristic referred to as a “shifting.” It is the same kind of duty for both parties, but it may rest (within the same stage of pleading and upon the same issue and during one burden of the first sort) at one time upon one party and at another time upon the other. Moreover, neither party can ascertain absolutely beforehand at what time it will come upon him<sup>1</sup> or cease to be upon him, or by what evidence it will be removed or created, — except so far as a presumption has by a rule of law been laid down as determining the effect attached to certain facts. Moreover, in a distinctive sense, this kind of burden “shifts” and the other does not, in that during the unchanged prevalence of the first kind of burden for one party, the second kind may be shared in turn by one and the other, though the first — the risk of non-persuasion of the jury, should the case be left in their hands — has not come to an end:<sup>2</sup>

1920, WALKER, J., in Page v. Camp Mfg. Co., 180 N. C. 330, 104 S. E. 667 (negligence in setting fire): “Instead of charging the jury that when plaintiff made out a ‘prima facie’ case, it was incumbent upon defendant to go forward with its evidence or take the risk of an adverse verdict, the [trial] Court placed the burden upon the defendant to satisfy the jury by a preponderance of the evidence that it was not negligent. This was stating the principle of law much too strongly, and no doubt may have caused the jury to miscarry in their verdict upon the facts. We have repeatedly stated the true rule as formulated by this and other courts. . . . The result of all the decisions upon the question is that the plaintiff’s ‘prima facie’ showing merely carries the case to the jury, and upon it alone they may decide for him; but they are not compelled to do so, and whether there is evidence on both sides, or only on the plaintiff’s, the latter has the burden of proving negligence. . . . The burden to prove his case is always on the plaintiff, whether the defendant introduces evidence or not. Where we have said, ‘It is the duty of the defendant to go forward with his proof,’ it was only meant in the sense that, if he expects to win, it is his duty to do so or take the risk of an adverse verdict, and not that any burden of proof rested upon him. He pleads no affirmative defense but the general issue, and this puts the burden throughout the case on the plaintiff, who must recover, if at all, by establishing his case by the greater weight of evidence.”

§ 2490. Presumptions; Legal Effect of a Presumption. The whole situation is complicated, quite apart from any ambiguity of terms, by the operation of presumptions upon specific fragments of the issue under a single pleading, in combination with the established practice of leaving to the jury for a general verdict the whole of the issues under a pleading. For example, suppose that the whole of the plaintiff’s case and the whole proposition as to which he has

J.); 1884, Zollars, J., in Carver v. Carver, 97 Ind. 497, 510; 1909, Wylie v. Marinofsky, 201 Mass. 583, 88 N. E. 448 (in replevin, the first burden is on plaintiff throughout); 1909, Ginn v. Dolan, 81 Ohio 121, 90 N. E. 141 (notes given for valuable consideration).

the burden of proof in the first sense and the whole of the issue under the pleadings is that A is dead without heirs; suppose that the plaintiff has offered testimony that A has been for seven years absent from home and unheard from, and that there is also testimony in contradiction of these facts from the defendant and also testimony from both sides as to the existence of heirs. Here it is obvious that the case is not in the hands of the judge to order a verdict for the plaintiff, first, because the death of the plaintiff, assuming the presumption from absence to determine this, is not the only proposition essential to the plaintiff's case, and, secondly, because he cannot pass upon the truth of the plaintiff's contradicted testimony as to absence and therefore it cannot then be known whether the fact exists on which the presumption operates; and thus the case is still in appearance in the hands of the jury. Nevertheless, the matter is still in the hands of the judge (in theory of law, at least) as much as it ever was; that is to say, the presumption or rule of law still operates, so that the fact of absence for seven years unheard from is to be taken, by a rule of law independent of the jury's belief, as equivalent to death, in the absence of any explanatory facts to the contrary from the defendant. This rule of law is still applied, notwithstanding the additional elements in the case; for the judge will instruct the jury that if they find the fact of absence for seven years unheard from, and find no explanatory facts to account for it, then by a rule of law they are to take for true the fact of death, and are to reckon upon it accordingly in making up their verdict upon the whole issue.<sup>1</sup> The situation here is even simpler than it is in perhaps the majority of issues in litigation; so that the theoretical effect of presumptions as legal rulings affecting the duty of producing evidence tends to be lost sight of, in that the issue does go to the jury and the case of the opponent of the presumption is apparently not brought to an end by a ruling of the judge. Nevertheless, in theory this legal effect is merely postponed, and will have due place if the jury understands the instructions and does its duty.

§ 2491. Same: Presumptions of Law and of Fact. The distinction between presumptions "of law" and presumptions "of fact" is in truth the difference between things that are in reality presumptions (in the sense explained above) and things that are not presumptions at all. A presumption, as already noticed, is in its characteristic feature a rule of law laid down by the judge, and attaching to one evidentiary fact certain procedural consequences

§ 2490. <sup>1</sup> 1903, Walker, J., in Cogdell v. R. Co., 132 N. C. 852, 44 S. E. 618: "The Court was requested to charge that there was a presumption that the deceased had exercised care, which the Court refused to give, but charged the jury that there was an inference that due care was exercised. The presumption has a technical force or weight, and the jury, in the absence of sufficient proof to overcome it, should find according to the presumption; but, in the case of a mere inference, there is no technical force attached to it. The jury, in the case of an inference, are at liberty to find the ultimate fact one way or the other as they may be impressed by the testimony. In the one case the law draws a conclusion from the state of the pleadings and evidence, and in the other case the jury draw it. An inference is nothing more than a permissible deduction from the evidence, while a presumption is compulsory and cannot be disregarded by the jury."

as to the duty of production of other evidence by the opponent. It is based, in policy, upon the probative strength, as a matter of reasoning and inference, of the evidentiary fact; but the presumption is not the fact itself, nor the inference itself, but the legal consequence attached to it. But, the legal consequence being removed, the inference, as a matter of reasoning, may still remain; and a "presumption of fact," in the loose sense, is merely an improper term for the rational potency, or probative value, of the evidentiary fact, regarded as not having this necessary legal consequence. "They are, in truth, but mere arguments," and "depend upon their own natural force and efficacy in generating belief or conviction in the mind."<sup>1</sup> They have no significance so far as affects the duty of one or the other party to produce evidence, because there is no rule of law attached to them, and the jury may give to them whatever force or weight it thinks best, — just as it may to other evidence. There may be a preliminary question whether the evidence is relevant and admissible as having any probative value at all; but, once it is admitted, the probative strength of the evidence is for the jury to consider. So long as the law attaches no legal consequences in the way of a duty upon the opponent to come forward with contrary evidence, there is no propriety in applying the term "presumption" to such facts, however great their probative significance. The employment here of the term "presumption" is due simply to historical usage, by which "presumption" was originally a term equivalent, in one sense, to "inference";<sup>2</sup> and the distinction between presumptions of fact and of law was a mere borrowing of misapplied Continental terms.<sup>3</sup> There is in truth but one kind of presumption; and the term "presumption of fact" should be discarded as useless and confusing.

Nevertheless, it must be kept in mind that the peculiar effect of a presumption "of law" (that is, the real presumption) is merely to invoke a rule

Burdett*, 4 B. & Ald. 161: "A presumption of any fact is properly an inferring of that fact from other facts that are known; it is an act of reasoning." Compare Professor Thayer's account (p. 317ff.) of the progress in various instances from the mere suggestion of such inferences to the creation of rules of law attached to them. The following cases show the word in the correct sense: 1810, Davis v. Curry, 2 Bibb Ky. 238 ("Two questions are presented by this case; first, whether color and possession afford such a presumption of slavery as to throw the burthen of proof upon the person claiming right to freedom"); 1913, Morris v. Minneapolis St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 25 N. D. 136, 141 N. W. 204.

The following Code passages represent the imperfections of transitional theory as crystallized into the Codes: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1958 ("An inference is a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of law to that effect"); § 1959 ("A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts"); § 1961 ("A presumption (unless declared by law to be conclusive) may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect; but unless so controverted the jury are bound to find according to the presumption"); § 1962 ("The following presumptions, and no others, are deemed conclusive: . . ."); § 1963 ("All other presumptions are satisfactory, if uncontradicted. They are denominated disputable presumptions, and may be controverted by other evidence. The following are of that kind: . . ."); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 7934 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1961); *P. R. of law compelling the jury to reach the conclusion in the absence of evidence to the contrary from the opponent. If the opponent does offer evidence to the contrary (sufficient to satisfy the judge's requirement of some evidence), the presumption disappears as a rule of law, and the case is in the jury's hands free from any rule:

1771, R. v. Almon, 5 Burr. 2686, 2688 (purchase of a libel imprinted with the defendant's name and bought in his shop); Lord MANSFIELD: "This being 'prima facie' evidence of a publication by the master himself, it stands good till answered by him; and if not answered at all, it thereby becomes conclusive so far as to be sufficient to convict him. . . . [It] must stand till contradicted or explained or exculpated by some other evidence, and if not contradicted, explained, or exculpated, would be in point of evidence sufficient or tantamount to conclusive. . . . If it be sufficient in point of law, and the jurymen believe it [i. e. the fact of purchase], he is bound in conscience to give his verdict according to it"; Mr. Justice ASTON "laid down the same maxim as being fully and clearly established, 'that 'prima facie' evidence (if believed) is binding till contrary evidence be produced.'"

1846, Smith v. Asbell, 2 Strobl. 141, 147: "Presumptions . . . are artificial rules which have a legal effect independent of any belief, and stand in the place of proof until the contrary be shown."

1906, LAMM, J., in Mockowik v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 196 Mo. 550, 571, 94 S. W. 256: "It would seem from his own testimony that this unfortunate plaintiff foolishly shook dice with danger and lost on the throw; for in his testimony at Savannah he says he made a 'run' to get across, and in his testimony at the last trial he said he 'thought he could make it.' Learned counsel somewhat rely upon the proposition that plaintiff had the right to presume that defendant was obeying the ordinances and governed his actions accordingly. . . . But will the law indulge presumptions where all parties to the actual occurrence are alive and go upon the stand and the facts are fully disclosed? If plaintiff knew of the ordinances and relied on the fact that defendant was obeying their provisions and acted on that reliance, could he not have said so? Under such conditions, reliance would seem to be a fact susceptible of proof as are other facts, and should be proved by the best evidence of which the case would admit. He of all men knew what the facts were; and, having declined to speak, may he invoke the aid of friendly presumptions? 'Presumptions,' as happily stated by a scholarly counselor, 'ore tenus,' in another case, 'may be looked on as the bats of the law, flitting in the twilight but disappearing in the sunshine of actual facts.' That presumptions have no place in the presence of the actual facts disclosed to the jury, or where plaintiff should have known the facts had he exercised ordinary care, is held in many cases."<sup>4</sup>

It is therefore a fallacy to attribute (as do some judges) an artificial probative force to a presumption, increasing for the jury the weight of the facts, even when the opponent has come forward with some evidence to the contrary.<sup>5</sup> For example, if death be the issue, and the fact of absence for seven years unheard from be conceded, but the opponent offers evidence that the absentee, before leaving, proclaimed his intention of staying away for ten years, until a prosecution for crime was barred, this satisfies the opponent's duty of producing evidence, removing the rule of law; and when the case goes to the jury, they are at liberty to give any probative force they think fit to the fact of absence for seven years unheard from. It is not weighed down with any artificial additional probative effect; they may estimate it for just such intrinsic effect as it seems to have under all the circumstances.<sup>6</sup> This much is a plain consequence in our mode of jury trial; and the fallacy has arisen through attempting to follow the ancient Continental phraseology, which grew up under the quantitative system of evidence (ante, § 2032) fixing artificial rules for the judge's measurement of proof.

§ 2492. Same: Conclusive Presumptions. In strictness, there cannot be such a thing as a "conclusive presumption." Wherever from one fact another is conclusively presumed, in the sense that the opponent is absolutely precluded from showing by any evidence that the second fact does not exist,

In Fortier v. Stone, 79 N. H. 235, 107 Atl. 342 (1919), Parsons, C. J., in a carefully reasoned opinion, refers to the "general abandonment of the practice of shifting the burden of proof [i. e. risk of non-persuasion] by legal presumption" in New Hampshire decisions.

The presumption so arising is not a conclusive one, so as to preclude the defendant to rebut it; nor does it take the place of actual evidence of negligence further than to cast upon the defendant the burden of showing by evidence that at the time of the occurrence it was in the exercise of ordinary care in respect to the construction, equipment, and management of the engine. When, by proof, it has so repelled the presumption, the burden shifts to the plaintiff, who must go forward anew with actual evidence to disprove that of the defendant, either directly or inferentially, by showing that a carefully constructed, equipped, and managed engine would not have set fire to the property. When there is no evidence of negligence other than that supplied by the presumption referred to,

In the following case, oddly enough, the opinion commits just the opposite fallacy, i. e. holding that when the presumptive circumstance appears, and opposing evidence is offered, even the presumptive circumstance itself cannot go to the jury, because "the presumption itself is not evidence": 1920, Stack v. General Baking Co., 283 Mo. 396, 223 S. W. 89 (cited more fully post, § 2529).

the rule really provides that, where the first fact is shown to exist, the second fact's existence is wholly immaterial for the purpose of the proponent's case;<sup>1</sup> and to provide this is to make a rule of substantive law, and not a rule apportioning the burden of persuading as to certain propositions or varying the duty of coming forward with evidence.<sup>2</sup> The term has no place in the principles of Evidence (although the history of a "conclusive presumption" often includes a genuine presumption as its earlier stage<sup>3</sup>), and should be discarded.

✓ § 2493. Same: Conflicting Presumptions; Counter-Presumptions. Presumptions are sometimes spoken of as "conflicting." But, in the sense above examined, presumptions do not conflict. The evidentiary facts, free from any rule of law as to the duty of producing evidence, may tend to opposite inferences, which may be said to conflict. But the rule of law ✓ which prescribes this duty of production either is or is not at a given time upon a given party. If it is, and he removes it by producing contrary evidence, ✓ then that presumption, as a rule of law, is satisfied and disappears; he may then by his evidence succeed in creating another presumption which now puts the same duty upon the other party, who may in turn be able to ✓ dispose of it satisfactorily. But the same duty cannot at the same time exist for both parties, and thus in strictness the presumptions raising the duty cannot conflict. There may be successive shiftings of the duty, by — means of presumptions successively invoked by each; but it is not the one presumption that overturns the other, for the mere introduction of sufficient evidence would have the same effect in stopping the operation of the presumption as a rule of law.

✓ This shifting of the duty of production of evidence, by reason of the successive invocation of different presumptions, may create a complicated situation difficult to work out; but it can more properly be spoken of as a case of successive presumptions than of conflicting presumptions; and the ultimate key to the situation is very often found by ascertaining the incidence of the burden of proof in the other sense, i. e. the ultimate risk of non-persuasion.<sup>1</sup>

A counter-presumption is merely that presumption which is available for the opponent when he has not only fulfilled the duty of producing evidence against a presumption, but has gone further and evidenced additional facts which create a new presumption in his favor, and thus restored to the § 2494. Same: Prima Facie Evidence; Sufficient Evidence for the Jury; Scintilla of Evidence. The term "prima facie evidence" or "prima facie case" is used in two senses, and it is often difficult to detect which of these is intended in the passage in hand:

(1) In discussing presumptions, the term "prima facie" is sometimes used as equivalent to the notion of a presumption, even in the strict sense of a ruling of the judge putting upon the ~~opponent~~ the duty of producing evidence.<sup>1</sup> In other words, the term is thus applied to the stage of the case already noted in a preceding section (ante, § 2487) as (c') and (c''), namely, where the proponent, having the burden of proving the issue (i. e. the risk of non-persuasion of the jury), has not only removed by sufficient evidence the duty of producing evidence to get past the judge to the jury, but has gone further, and, either by means of a presumption or by a general mass of strong evidence, has entitled himself to a ruling that the opponent should fail if he does nothing more in the way of producing evidence. Though this usage for the term is less usual, and being ambiguous, is objectionable, yet it serves to subsume under one name the similar legal effects (c') and (c'') produced by a specific presumption or by a ruling on the mass of evidence in the particular case.

(2) But the phrase "prima facie" is also, and clearly enough, found used in a very different sense, representing the stage already noted (ante, § 2487) as (a), namely, where the proponent, ~~having the first duty of producing some evidence in order to pass the judge to the jury, has fulfilled that duty, satisfied the judge, and may properly claim that the jury be allowed to consider his case.~~ This sufficiency of evidence to go to the jury (the significance of which is that the proponent is no longer liable to a nonsuit or to the direction of the verdict for the opponent) is also often referred to as a 'prima facie' case.<sup>2</sup> In this sense the phrase is used to emphasize the insufficiency of

<sup>2</sup> Compare the example cited ante, § 2487, note 8; 1909, State v. Forbes, 75 N. H. 306, 73 Atl. 929 (example of counter-evidence not sufficing to take the case from the jury).

R. 50, 53 ("If he [the plaintiff] makes a 'prima facie' case, and nothing is done by the other side to answer it, the defendant fails"); 1810, Mansfield, C. J., in Banbury Peerage Case, 1 Sim. & St. 153 ("In every case in which there is 'prima facie' evidence of any right existing in any person, the 'onus probandi' is always upon the person or party calling such right in question"); 1849, Best, Evidence, § 273 ("The burden of proof is shifted . . . by every species of evidence strong enough to establish a 'prima facie' case against a party"); 1913, *Lehigh Valley R. W. 41 ("the 'prima facie' case is sufficient and conclusive, unless rebutted by the other evidence in the case"); 1907, Polhemus v. Prudential R. Co., 74 N. J. L. 570, 67 Atl. 303 ("the 'prima facie' evidence became decisive of the issue").

<sup>2</sup> For example: U. S. 1832, Story, J., in Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598, 621 (referring to evidence of a deed: "Whenever evidence is offered to the jury which is in its nature 'prima facie' proof, . . . whatever just influence it may derive from that character, the jury have a right to give it; . . . the law has submitted it to them to decide for themselves"). In the following Irish case, the obscurity of the legal phrase was brought out by a question from an intelligent juror: Eng. 1848, R. v. O'Doherty, evidence which is indeed admissible, so far as the various rules of Evidence might have excluded it, but yet, being all the evidence offered by the proponent, is not enough in quantity to be worth submitting to the jury:<sup>3</sup>

1871, DOE, J., in Gray v. Jackson, 51 N. H. 9 (passing upon the question of a common carrier's implied contract to carry goods beyond his route): "The question whether by an implied contract a carrier undertook to carry goods beyond his route, is a question of fact to be determined upon the evidence by the tribunal authorized to try the questions of fact involved in the issue. How can so plain a question of fact be changed into a question of law? In Muschamp v. L. & P. J. R. Co., 8 M. & W. 421 (decided in 1841, and everywhere accepted as the leading case on this subject), it was held to be a question of fact. A parcel directed to a place beyond the defendants' route, and carried by them through their route and forwarded, was afterwards lost. Baron ROLFE 'stated to the jury, in summing up, that where a common carrier takes into his care a parcel directed to a particular place, and does not by positive agreement limit his responsibility to a part only of the distance, that is "prima facie" evidence of an undertaking on his part to carry the parcel to the place to which it is directed: and that the same rule applied, although that place were beyond the limits within which he in general professed to carry on his trade of a carrier.' The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendants moved 'for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.' In the Exchequer, [it was held that . . . ] there was no misdirection in this case, and that the jury might fairly infer the contract was such as was stated by the learned judge. . . .

"When Baron ROLFE told the jury that the evidence in the case was 'prima facie' evidence of such an undertaking, by these words he held the undertaking to be a matter of fact to be proved by evidence. In saying that the evidence was 'prima facie' evidence of the fact, he merely expressed his opinion of the weight of the evidence, in accordance with the general custom of English judges. In their practice, such opinions are given in various forms. Where we should say, 'There is some evidence to be submitted to the jury,' English judges often say, 'The evidence proves,' or 'The weight of the evidence is,' or 'From the evidence the inference is,' or 'The presumption is,' or 'This is "prima facie" evidence,' or 'This evidence shifts the burden of proof,' or 'This evidence is sufficient to prove the fact unless it is rebutted by the other party.' And when exception is taken to such statements, the point intended to be raised by counsel and decided by the Court is, not whether the judge may rightfully give the jury his opinion of the evidence in such forms (that is taken for granted), but whether there is any evidence for him to give his opinion of, and for the jury to give their verdict upon. . . . The opinions of English judges on the weight of the evidence being constantly given in such expressions as 'From this evidence the inference convey that. But I told you that it was evidence that he did know the contents, and that you were to form your judgment upon the whole of the case, reading the documents and the evidence").

6 State Tr. N. S. 831, 873 (Pennefather, B., charging the jury, in a prosecution for publishing an article with seditious intent: "The publishing them is certainly 'prima facie' evidence against him, as being the registered proprietor [of the newspaper]"; a juror: "There is a difference of opinion among the jurors; some hold that, from your lordship stating there being 'prima facie' evidence of the prisoner's guilt, we should at once go to find him guilty; others receiving the phrase thus, that your lordship did not mean to convey that it was sufficient [to require that finding]"; Pennefather, B.: "I did not mean, gentlemen, to direct you or tell you that in point of law, because he was the publisher and proprietor of the paper, he therefore necessarily knew the contents. I did not mean to

Here is one of the earliest instances: 1637, Hampden's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 825, 972 (Holborne, arguing: "This 'prima facie' hath a fair shew, and may go far; yet I hope to give it a full reply").

<sup>3</sup> As in Benoit v. R. Co., 154 N. Y. 223, 48 N. E. 524 (1897), where it was ruled, the plaintiff having to show the defendant's 'scienter' of a horse's unmanageable disposition, that a single instance of its having run away, though admissible evidence, was not sufficient evidence to go to the jury.

(or presumption) is,' or 'This is "prima facie" evidence,' or other equivalent phrases, these expressions, having been used for ages in the trial of cases by jury, became the common judicial language used in delivering judgment on motions for new trials as well as in summing up to the jury. Muschamp v. L. & P. J. R. Co. is an instance of this practice. . . . But the decision in that case has often been misunderstood. It has been erroneously supposed that the opinions of ROLFE and ABINGER, on the 'prima facie' weight of the evidence, were laid down as law. Through that error, the decision has been taken as the establishment of a peculiar legal principle fixing the liability of common carriers beyond their own routes, although it was held, with remarkable clearness and emphasis, that the whole matter was a question of fact for the jury. By such a mistake, and others of a similar kind, a plain question of fact may inadvertently be changed into a question of law. The mistake in regard to the doctrine of Muschamp's case, on the point of 'prima facie' evidence, was promoted, and another mistake was disseminated, by the reporters who made the head note of the case, by adding to a summary of the evidence this unfortunate statement: 'HELD, that the Lancaster and Preston Railway Company were liable for the loss.' If they had said 'HELD, by the jury, that the company were liable. HELD, by the Court, that there was evidence competent to be submitted to the jury,' they would have made a correct and useful statement of the case. In Angell on Carriers, § 95, it is said that in Muschamp's case 'it was held that the company were liable for the loss,' from which the reader would understand that it was so held by the Court. It has been by no means an unusual thing for fact to be turned into law by the English practice of the judge giving the jury his opinion of the evidence. . . .

"The simple solution of all the difficulties that have arisen on this subject is, not to hold fact to be law, and not to mistake the opinions of judges on the weight of evidence for opinions on principles of law."

The difference between these two senses of the term is practically of the greatest consequence; for, in the latter sense, it means merely that the proponent is safe in having relieved himself of his duty of going forward, while in the former sense it signifies that he has further succeeded in creating it anew for his opponent.<sup>4</sup>

Some of the chief occasions of its use are therefore of an unfortunate obscurity in the significance of the ruling, as in the proof of execution of attested documents,<sup>5</sup> or of the identity of the person signing them,<sup>6</sup> or of the authentication of ancient writings,<sup>7</sup> where it is often difficult to determine whether the effect of the ruling is merely that the document may be read or amounts to directing the jury to take it for genuine.<sup>8</sup>

v. Burdett, 3 B. & Ald. 717-758 (arguments of counsel); 4 B. & Ald. 95-183 (opinions of the judges); Best and Holroyd, JJ., use the term "presumptive evidence" as equivalent to "circumstantial evidence," and their ruling is merely that there was sufficient of it to go to the jury; Bayley, J., held that "in order to warrant a presumption, a 'prima facie' case must at least be made out," meaning the same as above, but on the facts he thought that there was not here sufficient evidence, adding "if they did draw that presumption, they acted, not upon justifiable inference, but upon unwarrantable conjecture"; Abbott, C. J., used the same meanings; "a presumption of any fact is, properly, an inferring of that fact

The question is thus presented, in determining this sufficiency of evidence to go to the jury, whether there are any detailed tests to control or to guide the judge in his ruling. The ruling will, in truth, depend entirely on the nature of the evidence offered in the case in hand; and it is seldom possible that a ruling can serve as a precedent. It has been ruled, for instance, that to show a 'scienter' of a horse's unmanageable disposition, a single instance of its having run away is, though admissible, not sufficient evidence for the jury;<sup>9</sup> mere identity of name has been thought both sufficient and insufficient evidence of identity of person;<sup>10</sup> but even these can hardly be taken as fixed precedents. There is no virtue in any form of words. There was an old phrase that a "mere scintilla of evidence" was sufficient;<sup>11</sup> but this has been abandoned by most Courts.<sup>12</sup> Other varieties of phrasing have sometimes been attempted.<sup>13</sup> In some Courts it is said that the test for the ruling is from other facts that are known; it is an act of reasoning; . . . if the [jury's] conclusion is a reasonable inference from the premises, we ought not to disturb their verdict".

<sup>11</sup> The phrase is mentioned, to be repudiated, in the 1800s: 1857, Toomey v. R. Co., 3 C. B. N. S. 146, 150; 1857, Wheelton v. Hardisty, 8 E. & B. 232, 262, 277; 1868, Ryder v. Wombwell, L. R. 4 Exch. 32; but it is difficult to find any prior time when it was ever a recognized test in England.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1876, Commissioners of Marion Co. v. Clark, 94 U. S. 278, 284; 1897, Taft, J., in Ewing v. Goode, 78 Fed. 442 ("The preliminary question for the Court to settle in this case, therefore, is whether there is any evidence sufficient in law to sustain a verdict that defendant was unskillful or negligent, and that his want of skill or care caused injury. In the Courts of this and other States the rule is that if the party having the burden of proof offer a mere scintilla of evidence to support each necessary element of his case, however overwhelming the evidence to the contrary, the Court must submit the issue thus made to the jury, with the power to set aside the verdict, if found against the weight of the evidence. In the Federal Courts this is not the rule. According to their practice, if the party having the burden submits only a scintilla of evidence to sustain it, the Court, instead of going through the useless form of submitting the issue to the jury, and correcting error, if made, by setting aside the verdict, may in the first instance direct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant.

Hence our inquiry is: Does the case submitted show more than a scintilla of evidence tending to show want of skill or care by defendant, or injury caused thereby?"); 1903, *New York C. & H. R. Co. v. The opinion of Brannon, J., in Ketterman v. R. Co., 48 W. Va. 606, 37 S. E. 683 (1900) is a valuable one, as is also the opinion of Powell, J., in Georgia R. & E. Co. v. Harris, 1 Ga. App. 714, 57 S. E. 1076 (1907).

Couper*, 32 Or. 212, 49 Pac. 959 (either "no competent evidence at all bearing upon the subject," or "so weak that a verdict against the defendant would necessarily be the same as it would be on a motion after verdict to set aside the verdict as being against the overwhelming weight of evidence.<sup>14</sup> Even if this were so, it would not afford any more concrete and tangible guide. But it seems unsound,<sup>15</sup> on principle, to assert such an identity, for two reasons, — in the first place, because the mass of evidence in the two situations is very different (for after verdict the defendant's evidence has to be considered with the rest), and in the next place, because the setting aside of a verdict leads merely to a new trial, while the ruling of insufficiency leads usually to the direction of a verdict for the opponent (post, § 2495), and therefore a total quantity of the proponent's evidence which would justify the former might be more than would justify the latter.<sup>16</sup>

Perhaps the best statement of the question is this: "[The proposition] cannot merely be, Is there evidence? . . . The proposition seems to me to be this: Are there facts in evidence which if unanswered would justify men of ordinary reason and fairness in affirming the question which the plaintiff is bound to maintain?"<sup>17</sup>

Distinguish here the questions whether the evidence is sufficient under the present rule and whether it is sufficient under the rule of conditional relevancy (ante, § 1871); on this § 2495. Same: Direction of a Verdict, Motion for a Nonsuit, and Demurrer to Evidence. It remains to ask, What shall be the form and effect of this ruling of the judge that the proponent's evidence is insufficient to go to the jury? It is commonly said that he "ought to withdraw the question from the jury, and direct a nonsuit or a verdict for the defendant if the onus is on the plaintiff, or direct a verdict for the plaintiff if the onus is on the defendant,"<sup>1</sup> i. e. decide against the proponent having the risk of non-persuasion on that particular issue, whether he be plaintiff or defendant. There are, however, three distinct forms of ruling, which raise different questions:

1. The nonsuit, which has several other applications, may be employed for the present purpose. Its marked feature is that it does not lead to a judgment against the proponent, and (in England) that the proponent's consent is necessary. But the local rules for nonsuit have been so widely varied by modern statutes and practice that generalizations are hardly possible as to its service for the present purpose.<sup>2</sup>

2. The direction of a verdict is the appropriate and most usual form of the ruling.<sup>3</sup> Two main questions here arise: (a) Is there any reason why an order directing a verdict for insufficiency of evidence may not be made in favor of the opponent (i. e. usually, the defendant)? (b) Is there any reason against making it in favor of the proponent (i. e. usually, the plaintiff)?

(a) It is almost universally conceded that the direction of a verdict for the opponent is in general a proper form of ruling. That much, and no less, is the very thing that is signified by this part of the judge's function in the trial.<sup>4</sup> In making the decision, however, the truth of the proponent's testipoint, compare Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 194, 200 (1873). Distinguish also the test for a judge sitting as chancellor with a jury: Fleming's Estate, 265 Pa. 399, 108 265.

<sup>2</sup> The following opinions are useful for the orthodox theory: 1853, Willard, J., in People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 67, 74; 1892, Magruder, C. J., in Joliet A. & N. R. Co. v. Velie, 140 Ill. 59, 29 N. E. 706. The following cases illustrate some of the considerations that may enter: 1898, Williams v. R. Co., 155 N. Y. 158, 49 N. E. 672 (where the testimony at a second trial was so different that it appeared to be manufactured to suit the decision in the former appeal, a non-suit was held improper); 1898, Foskett & B. Co. v. Swayne, 70 Conn. 74, 38 Atl. 893 (applied to a cause tried by a judge without a jury).

<sup>3</sup> This has an equivalent, in some of the Southern States and elsewhere, in a motion to exclude all of the evidence, — an anomalous and misleading term.

257 Fed. 284 (distinguishing the practice where the judge tries without a jury); 1905, Gunn v. Union R. Co., 27 R. I. 320, 62 Atl. 118 (careful opinion by Blodgett, J., full of research); 1919, Riggie v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 93 Vt. 282, 107 Atl. 126 (practice in Vermont reviewed).

So also, of course in criminal cases: 1912, Blankenship v. Com., 147 Ky. 768, 145 S. W. 397.

The contrary rule in a few States is based on some misapprehension of the jury's function; e. g.: 1868, Littlejohn v. Fowler, 5 Coldw. Tenn. 284, 288; 1898, Gannon v. Gaslight Co., 145 Mo. 502, 46 S. W. 968; 1902, Don v. Poplar Bluff, 173 Mo. 39, 72 S. W. 118. This fallacy is dealt with in the following: 1896, Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. E. 797; 1900, Ketterman v. R. Co., 18 W. Va. 606, 37 S. E. 683. In Virginia, where the traditional rule did not permit the direction of a verdict, the growing practice in favor of it was checked in 1912 by a statute expressly prohibiting it: St. Feb. 13, 1912, p. 52; interpreted in Small v. Virginia R. & P. Co., 125 Va. 416, 99 S. E. 525, 1919 (reciting the history of the discussion).

Under the California Code (P. C. § 1118), and its followers, the Court may only advise mony must be assumed;<sup>5</sup> for only the jury could have the right to decide to the contrary upon that material. Moreover, the sufficiency of evidence which will defeat such a motion may be found in the opponent's own evidence (which he himself cannot gainsay),<sup>6</sup> just as the insufficiency of facts which will justify such a direction may be found in the opponent's evidence, provided it is undisputed.<sup>7</sup>

(b) That a verdict may also be directed for the proponent is accepted by the majority of Courts, though it is more plausibly open to dispute.<sup>8</sup> The usual situation is that of a plaintiff who has produced a mass of evidence sufficient to throw upon the defendant the liability of producing some evidence to the contrary, and if this duty is not sustained, it is the judge's function to make the decision (ante, § 2487). The only objection here can be that the judge must not reach his decision by assuming the plaintiff's testimony to be true (because that is the jury's province); yet where the testimony is undisputed, or where in some other way that assumption is unnecessary, this objection disappears. A less common situation is that of a defendant having an affirmative plea (for example, payment of a note, or contributory negligence in personal injury); but here also a verdict may be ordered for the defendant, provided the result can be reached upon undisputed testimony of the defendant, or upon testimony of the plaintiff, which the latter must concede to be true.<sup>9</sup>—It is maintained by most Courts that in a criminal case there can be no direction of a verdict for the prosecution;<sup>10</sup>

the jury to acquit, and the jury need not follow the advice; therefore, a refusal to give such advice cannot be an error of law: 1910, State v. Wright, 20 N. D. 216, 126 N. W. 1023.

and this conclusion is supposed (but erroneously) to follow from the rule of persuasion beyond a reasonable doubt (post, § 2497).

Whether the exercise of this power to direct a verdict can be made by the appellate Court, overriding the trial Court, is a separate question,<sup>11</sup> — a question vital to the success of modern efforts for improving procedure by preventing needless re-trials.

3. The demurrer to evidence is a form of raising an objection of law, which has a history of its own in its original use.<sup>12</sup> But the term and the form came to be used, in some American jurisdictions, as the practical equivalent for the foregoing process, — the motion to direct a verdict for insufficiency of evidence. The chief effect of this has been to introduce a certain confusion into the rulings which deal with the subject of waiver, now to be noticed.

§ 2496. Same: Waiver of Motion by Subsequent Introduction of Evidence. When an opponent, at the close of the proponent's case in chief, has made a motion asking in effect for the direction of a verdict, how is the opponent's situation affected by his subsequent conduct, with respect to a waiver of the motion?

(1) In the first place, the opponent cannot claim a ruling by the judge, as a matter of right, if he makes the motion at the close of the proponent's case in chief without then resting his own case. At that point, he is only invoking the Court's discretion; not until the entire evidence is closed may he demand a ruling as of right.<sup>1</sup>

But when a 'prima facie' case has been made out, as conviction follows unless it be rebutted, the necessity of adducing evidence then devolves on the accused"); 1902, McKnight v. U. S., 54 C. C. A. 358, 115 Fed. 972; 1902, U. S. v. German, 115 Fed. 987; and the cases cited post, §§ 2501, 2512-2514.

Compare also the treatment of this question in the following: 1891, People v. Neumann, 85 Mich. 98, 48 N. W. 290; 1904, People v. Remus, 135 Mich. 629, 98 N. W. 397.

<sup>11</sup> 1912, Slocum v. New York Life Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 264, 33 Sup. 523 (where the trial judge refuses to direct a verdict for the defendant, and the jury finds a verdict for the plaintiff, and the appellate court is of opinion that there was not sufficient evidence for the jury, then the appellate court cannot order a verdict and judgment to be entered for the defendant but can only set aside the verdict and order a new trial; four judges dissenting).

Statutes have attempted to authorize such action by the trial judge, notably in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. The constitutional inhibition, as declared by the majority opinion in the Slocum case, has been ably questioned in the report of a Committee of the American Bar Association (Proceedings, 1913, XXXVIII, 561). The most searching and exhaustive examination of the subject, setting forth both the history and the policy of such a practice, is to be found in Professor Henry Schofield's articles, entitled "New Trials and the Seventh Amendment; Slocum v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co." (Illinois Law Review, VIII, 287, 381, 465, reprinted in his posthumous Essays on Constitutional Law and Equity, 1921). See further: 1913, *Bothwell v. Boston E. R. For the effect of a motion for a new trial upon exceptions to rulings upon specific evidence, see ante, § 20.

(2) In the next place, it follows that the opponent waires no right by going on to put in his own evidence after the judge's refusal to rule against the proponent for insufficiency of evidence at the close of the proponent's case in chief. The opponent may therefore renew the motion at the close of the whole case on both sides, and is entitled to the benefit of the ruling, if in his favor at that time.<sup>2</sup>

(3) Conversely, however, he cannot take advantage of the judge's original erroneous refusal to direct a verdict for insufficiency at the time of the first motion, if he does not renew the motion at the close of all the evidence, or if at the time of the final motion the ruling correctly refuses to order a verdict for insufficiency;<sup>3</sup> the Court is at that time entitled to decide upon a survey

In a few States this right of the opponent to proceed to introduce his own evidence, after the motion refused, was formerly denied, probably on the analogy of a demurrer to evidence; but this has usually been changed by statute; e. g., Barabasz v. E. 953 (construing St. 1897, c. 109; the original error may be reviewed). But the rule was changed by St. 1899, c. 131, amending St. 1897: 1900, Means v. Carolina C. R. Co., 126 N. C. 424, 35 S. The legislative rule is now phrased as follows: Rev. 1905, § 539, Consol. St. 1919, § 567: "Demurrer to Evidence. When . . . the plaintiff shall have produced his evidence and rested his case, the defendant may move to dismiss the action, or for judgment, as in case of nonsuit. If the motion is allowed, the plaintiff may except and appeal to the Supreme Court. If the motion is refused, the defendant may except, and if the defendant introduces no evidence, the jury shall pass upon the issues in the case, and the defendant shall have the

of the whole evidence; and this survey naturally renders any prior error immaterial. This is sometimes put upon the ground of waiver; but it is rather a necessary consequence of the discretionary nature and limited scope of the first ruling.

§ 2497. Measure of Jury's Persuasion: (1) Proof beyond a Reasonable Doubt; Rule for Criminal Cases. After the tribunal having the function of deciding upon facts, i. e. the jury, has retired to reach and frame its decision, a question arises as to the nature or degree of its persuasion. Here, it is to be noticed, we are no longer concerned with the incidence of the duty or burden of proof as between the parties to the cause, but merely with the tribunal's own duty and conduct as to its standard of persuasion.

Now the logical notion involved in the situation is that the tribunal must be persuaded to believe the affirmation of the burden-bearer before it can be asked to act as desired, but that this persuasion or conviction in the mind of the tribunal may have more than one degree or quality of positiveness; and an attempt is made by the law to define the degree of positiveness of persuasion which must exist in order to justify action in the shape of a verdict for the burden-bearer. The attempt to define these qualities of persuasion has great difficulties; and many useless refinements and wordy quibbles have marked the countless and more or less unsuccessful attempts.

(1) In criminal cases a rule has grown up that the persuasion must be beyond a reasonable doubt.<sup>1</sup> This precise distinction seems to have had its origin no earlier than the end of the 1700s, and to have been applied at first benefit of his exception on appeal to the Supreme Court. But after the motion is refused, he may waive his exception and then introduce his evidence just as if he had not made the motion, and he may again move to dismiss after all the evidence on both sides is in. If the motion is then refused, upon consideration of all the evidence, he may except; and after the jury shall have rendered its verdict, he shall have the benefit of such latter exception on appeal to the Supreme Court." This seems to be a fair solution, straightforwardly expressed, and should serve as a model statute in States where similar doubts have arisen. It is applied in the following cases: 1917, State v. Killian, 173 N. C. 792, 92 S. E. 499 (construing Rev. 1905, § 3265a Suppl.); 1917, Cole Mfg. Co. v. Mendenhall, 4th C. C. A., 240 Fed. 641 (applying N. C. Rev. 1905, § 539); Oregon: 1918, Weygardt v. Bartle, 88 Or. 310, 171 Pac. 587; South Carolina: 1904, Koon v. Southern Ry., 69 S. C. 101, 48 S. E. 86; Washington: 1906, Gardner v. Porter, 45 Wash. 158, 88 Pac. 121.

In Illinois, there is a local question whether the motion to direct a verdict must be in writing, under a statute requiring instructions to the jury to be in writing: 1893, Ames & Frost Co. v. Strachurski, supra (undecided); but it is plain that the two are different things.

For the effect of a motion by both parties to direct a verdict, see Wolf v. Chicago S. P. Co., 233 Ill. 501, 84 N. E. 614 (1908).

§ 2497. <sup>1</sup> The Codes usually confirm this rule: Ark. Dig. 1919, § 3184 ("upon the testimony in the whole case"); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1096; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8944; Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2137; Kan. G. S. 1915, § 8149; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 6277, 7163-7166; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, §§ 10831, 10832; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 4874; Utah: Comp. St. 1917, § 8978.

In Georgia alone, it seems, this test does not obtain: Rev. C. 1910, § 5731, P. C. §§ 1012, 1013 (in criminal cases "a greater strength of mental conviction" than preponderance of testimony is necessary); P. C. § 1010 (rule for circumstantial evidence, defined).

In Oklahoma another special phrase was once tried: Rev. L. 1910, § 5876 ("A reasonable doubt is a doubt for which there exists a reason in the minds of the jurors, founded upon the facts and circumstances in proof in the case, and is a state of mind of which an ordinarily intelligent man could readily give an explanation, consistent with the facts disclosed by the evidence, and the law, as given to the jury by the court"). But this was repealed by St. 1915, c. 269, Mar. 30.

only in capital cases, and by no means in a fixed phrase, but in various tentative forms. "A clear impression," "upon clear grounds," "satisfied," are the earlier phrases; and then "rational doubt," "rational and well-grounded doubt," "beyond the probability of doubt," and "reasonable doubt" come into use. Then, in Mr. Starkie's classical treatise, "moral certainty, to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt," is given vogue.<sup>2</sup> From time to time, various ill-advised efforts have been made to define more in detail this elusive and undefinable state of mind. One that has received frequent sanction and has been quoted innumerable times is that of Chief Justice Shaw of Massachusetts, on the trial of Dr. Webster for the murder of Mr. Parkman:<sup>3</sup> "[Reasonable doubt] is that state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. . . . The evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty, — a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment. . . . This we take to be proof beyond a reasonable doubt."

Many others, in varying forms, convey the same notion in more or less well-chosen words; and each Court has its stores of precedents of instructions approved and disapproved.<sup>4</sup> Nevertheless, when anything more than a simple caution and a brief definition is given, the matter tends to become one of mere words, and the actual effect upon the jury, instead of being enlightenment, is rather confusion, or, at the least, a continued incomprehension. In practice, these detailed amplifications of the doctrine have usually degenerated into a mere tool for counsel who desire to entrap an unwary judge into forgetfulness of some obscure precedent, or to save a cause for a new trial by quibbling, on appeal, over the verbal propriety of a form of words uttered or declined to be uttered by the judge. The effort to perpetuate and develop these elaborate unserviceable definitions is a useless one, and serves to-day chiefly to aid the purposes of the tactician. It should be abandoned:<sup>5</sup>

1876, MAY, C. J., "Some Rules of Evidence: Reasonable Doubt in Civil and Criminal Cases" (American Law Rev., X, 642): "It is not at all to be wondered at, that, in criminal cases, it has been the rule to require a greater quantity, weight, or certainty of evidence than in civil cases. As to the mode of proof of particular facts, the rules are substantially the same; but as to the amount of evidence upon which a jury would be justified to find the existence of a particular fact, or the truth of a particular allegation, the rules are widely different. When these rules began to take form and consistency, the penal code of England was a fearfully bloody code. Death, without benefit of clergy, was denounced against a multitude of misdoings which would now be considered, if offences at all, offences of a comparatively trivial character. The consequences of conviction to the unfortunate prisoner were not only fearful, but they were irremediable. No humane judge could help commiserating the situation of the all but foredoomed prisoner. . . . Starkie published his first edition about 1824, we think. This was at the flood-tide of the great revulsion of public sentiment against the inhumanity of that code which Blackstone had eulogized, — a revulsion, which, if not set on foot by the Edinburgh Reviewers, received from them its most powerful impulses, and which was seized upon by Sir Samuel Romilly to work out those wise and beneficent reforms which have made his name so conspicuous in the annals of criminal jurisprudence. Caught by the rising tide of this great reaction, and yielding too absolutely to its generous tendencies, Mr. Starkie was betrayed into an exaggeration of statement which his judgment must have condemned. 'The maxim of the law is,' says that writer, 'that it is better that ninety-nine (that is, an indefinite number) offenders shall escape than that one innocent man be condemned.' The absurdity of this proposition is too obvious to need remark. . . . But then the British ear was at that time occupied by the criers for reform; and the voice of humanity was so much louder than the voice of justice, that, if men could hear, they would not listen to the latter.

"The doctrine of 'reasonable doubt,' as now applied in criminal cases, always invoked by the prisoner and his counsel and enforced by the courts, is one of the modern phases of the tendency to exaggerate the proper signification, and to unduly extend the application of the maxim of which we have been speaking. . . . It was left for Mr. Starkie, . . . to enlarge upon the rule as theretofore stated by the Courts, and, in the attempt to define its scope, unfortunately to introduce, without the authority or sanction of any court, a new term, still less definable, if possible, than the reasonable doubt with which courts and jurors were already sufficiently distressed. The result of the evidence must be, says Mr. Starkie, a 'moral certainty, to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt.' Now, why perplex the administration of justice by interjecting this new element of uncertainty? Why not leave the courts and juries alone to grapple as best they may with the difficulty of determining, without any test, what constitutes a reasonable doubt, without adding to that difficulty the certainly equal difficulty of determining what constitutes a moral certainty? What possible end can such a heaping up of indefinable terms serve, but to confuse and baffle rather than enlighten and aid the average juror? . . . Ostensibly, under the guidance of that old cautionary doctrine, that it is better to err on the side of mercy than on the side of justice, . . . we have come, by a series of glosses and dilutions and limitations, to a doctrine which logically gives justice to nobody, and mercy to those only who show none and deserve none.

"This is no rhetorical exaggeration: it is a melancholy fact. It is to-day the serious obstacle which stands like a lion in the way of the pursuit of guilt; and nothing saves our to confuse the jury"); 1904, State v. Blay, 77 Vt. 56, 58 Atl. 794 ("No definition of the term need be given"); 1903, Meehan v. State, 119 Wis. 621, 97 N. W. 173.

How needless are all these wordy maunderings of the law, for the purpose in hand, may be seen from the brief and pointed terms used by the modern English judges: 1910, Crippen's Trial (ed. Filson Young, 1920, Notable British Trials Series), pp. 161, 183, Charge of L. C. J. Alverstone; 1911, Steinie Morrison's Trial, same series, pp. 266, 276; 1916, Casement's Trial (ed. G. H. Knott, 1917, same series, pp. 178, 196).

criminal courts from a complete paralysis but the stalwart sense of the juror who refuses to adopt methods in the accomplishment of any purpose which seem to him exactly adapted to defeat it. . . . We all know that, when a criminal lawyer has to defend a case where the facts are all against him, his uniform and too often unfailing resource is the law. Upon this he falls back. The doctrine of 'reasonable doubt' is kept always in the front. The reports are ransacked for loose definitions by careless judges in insignificant cases. The extravagant and unsupported 'dicta' of text-writers, made perhaps in support of a theory of what the law ought to be, rather than as proof of what it has been authoritatively declared to be, are hunted up with untiring zeal. These are re-enforced by a series of cases — fabulous and authentic — scattered through the musty annals of crime, in which it is said that innocent persons have been convicted. The whole mass of bewildering definitions, extravagant 'dicta,' astounding facts, or fictions, as the case may be, is then arrayed with greater or less skill, according to the ability of counsel, and paraded before the jury with pathetic solemnity. Of course, the object of all this is to confound and befog; to bring the jury into that state of amazement, apprehension, and uncertainty, which will disqualify them to deal calmly and rationally with the facts of the case before them. . . .

"No man can measure with a rule he does not understand; neither can juries determine by rules obscure in themselves, and made yet more obscure by attempted definition. The law is not so infirm and decrepit as to be inadequate to its purposes, if clearly expounded and firmly administered. . . . We think it high time that a rule invented in a barbarous age for a special and perhaps justifiable purpose, so abounding in absurdity, and so fruitful of mischief, be confined to its original domain, and to the uses and purposes for which it was invented."

1906, Professor William Trickett, "Preponderance of Evidence, and Reasonable Doubt" (The Forum, Dickinson School of Law, X, 76): "A statement of Chief Justice Shaw of Massachusetts has been not infrequently quoted by judges. The jury is to render a verdict of guilty, if it believes the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt; and this is the explanation of a reasonable doubt: It is 'that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the mind of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. . . . The evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty, — certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment. . . . This we take to be proof beyond a reasonable doubt!' The doubt is a 'state of the case'! I had imagined that it was a state of the mind. The state of the case, viz., the state of the evidence in the case, leaves the jurors' minds in a condition. What condition? This, viz., that they cannot say, that they have a conviction. I suppose that, if they cannot say that they have a conviction, it is because they have not the conviction. What conviction? It is an abiding conviction. But, what is that? One that has abode, for a considerable time, or one that is going to abide? How long before rendering the verdict must the conviction expressed by it have been formed? A week, a day, an hour, five minutes? If the abidingness is future, by what faculty does the juror know that it is going to abide? By what quality of the conviction does he recognize its longevity? By its strength? By its defiance of past argument in the jury room? Who knows?"

"But, it is a conviction to a 'moral certainty.' Is the certainty a different state of mind from the conviction, or is the phrase used to mean, a conviction which is a certainty, that is, a very strong conviction? It would be hypocritical to challenge the usage which speaks of a moral certainty, but it is impossible to see how an ordinary juror is to be aided by being told that if he is morally certain of the prisoner's guilt, he is to convict him. . . .

"In order to convict, we are further told, the evidence must produce a 'moral certainty of the guilt.' But this certainty has some very peculiar powers. It 'convinces, and it directs the understanding,' it 'satisfies the reason and judgment.' Certainty is the state of being convinced, but, in Shaw's philosophy, it is the cause of, and therefore different from, the conviction. A moment ago, there was 'an abiding conviction to a moral certainty,' but now it is a certainty generating a conviction! This certainty (which is not a state, but an actor, a cause) has seemingly, three subjects on which to operate. There is an understanding; there are a reason and a judgment! Or are these three names only for one thing? But, that cannot be, for the operations are different. The certainty convinces and directs the understanding. It does no such thing for the reason or the judgment. Its function is, respecting these, humbler, shall we say, or more exalted? It 'satisfies' the reason and judgment! A certainty satisfies! The certainty that one has fallen heir to a million dollars 'satisfies,' but it does not satisfy the reason; only the cupidity, the desire for happiness. The certainty that X the defendant killed Y satisfies the reason! What is this strange, elusive thing called satisfaction of the reason? And what singular thing is reason, that it should be satisfied by a certainty that the defendant has committed an atrocious crime? Perhaps what is satisfied is the desire to find out who committed it, that is, the official curiosity of the jurors; for which 'reason and judgment' are odd names.

"Doing the best possible with Chief Justice SHAW's phrases, all that can be got out of them is this: Before convicting of a crime a juror should be morally certain that he committed it, and this conviction should be the result of a serious consideration of all the evidence."

1899, MARSHALL, J., in Buel v. State, 104 Wis. 132, 80 N. W. 78: "Much discussion is found in the adjudged cases as to whether any attempt to explain it does not tend to confuse rather than to enlighten the jury. It is said that scholastic attempts to explain the meaning of such words, which are more easily understood than explained, are liable to lead such men as commonly make up our juries to think that the ordinary processes of reasoning, by which they are accustomed to come to conclusions in the ordinary affairs of life, are not suitable to the jury room in a criminal case, but that some other process of reasoning is to be adopted which they are to gather from the language of the trial judge, and that they are thereby really weakened in their ability to come to a just conclusion; that it would be better to leave them to exercise their own intelligence in regard to language so plain that it is not easy to make it plainer by explanation. Mr. Justice Newman said, in Hoffman v. State: 'It needs be a skilful definer who will make the meaning of the term ("beyond a reasonable doubt") more clear by the multiplication of words,' while the writer expressed the view, in Emery v. State, that the due administration of justice in many cases requires a careful explanation of the term to be given to the jury, and that without it justice is liable at times, through ignorance, to be defeated, and the efficacy of the law to protect society, and its administration by courts, discredited. In State v. Sauer,<sup>6</sup> Mitchell, J., expressed the opinion that 'most attempts at explaining the meaning of a "reasonable doubt" are made by the use of expressions that themselves need explanation more than the term sought to be explained by them, and that the better way is to omit such attempts, but that if such attempts be indulged in it would be better to adopt those definitions that have received general approval by Courts.' In People v. Stubenvoll, Champlin, J., speaking for all the members of the Court, said: 'We do not think that the phrase "reasonable doubt" is of such unknown or uncommon signification that an exposition by the trial judge is called for. Language that is within the comprehension of persons of ordinary intelligence can seldom be made plainer by further defining or refining. All persons who possess the qualifications for jurors know that a doubt of the guilt of the accused, honestly entertained, is a reasonable doubt.' In Judge Thompson's work on Trials, it is said that 'all the definitions are little more than metaphysical paraphrases of an expression invented by the common-law judges for the very reason that it was capable of being understood and applied by men in the jury box.' Many more instances might be given where judges of appellate Courts and text writers have discouraged all attempts at explanation of what is a reasonable doubt, from the standpoint of a juror. Nevertheless the fact remains that trial judges, at least in important criminal trials, generally take great pains to explain the term so that the commonest understanding can grasp its meaning. The practice in that regard has grown up from frequent observations of the necessity of it. It is considered here that it is proper in all cases to make a careful explanation of the term, and that where the prosecution relies wholly on circumstantial evidence it is the better practice to do so, taking the utmost care, however, to use only expressions that have been approved, particularly by this Court."

It is generally and properly said that this measure of reasonable doubt need not be applied to the specific detailed facts, but only to the whole issue; <sup>7</sup> and herein is given opportunity for much vain argument whether the strands of a cable or the links of a chain furnish the better simile for testing the measure of persuasion.

The truth is that no one has yet invented or discovered a mode of measurement for the intensity of human belief.<sup>8</sup> Hence there can be yet no successful method of communicating intelligibly to a jury a sound method of self-analysis for one's belief. If this truth be appreciated, Courts will cease to treat any particular form of words as necessary or decisive in the law for that purpose; for the Law cannot expect to do what Logic and Psychology have not yet done.

the quality of persuasion necessary. It is said to be that state of mind in which there is felt to be a "preponderance of evidence" in favor of the demandant's proposition.<sup>1</sup> Here, too, moreover, this simple and suggestive phrase has not been allowed to suffice; and in many precedents sundry other phrases — "satisfied," "convinced," and the like — have been put forward as equivalents, and their propriety as a form of words discussed and sanctioned or disapproved, with much waste of judicial effort:

1906, Professor William Trickett, "Preponderance of Evidence, and Reasonable Doubt" (The Forum, Dickinson School of Law, X, 76): "The text-books and authorities usually inform us that in civil cases the decision must be according to the 'preponderance of evidence.' A corollary from this rule would be that the juror or the judge must in many cases decide in favor of A or B, the parties to the suit, that a fact did or did not occur, although he does not believe that it occurred or did not occur. A sues B on a note, whose execution B denies. Six witnesses affirm that the signature is in B's handwriting. Five affirm that it is not. No difference in competence, or trustworthiness, between these witnesses appears. Six, however, are more than five. The ordinary man, juror or judge, would say that the evidence 'preponderated' in favor of A's proposition. But would the ordinary discreet man believe that proposition? Instead of six let us suppose twenty witnesses, and instead of five let us suppose nineteen. Still there is a preponderance towards A's contention. But would a sensible man necessarily believe that B signed the note, when nineteen men, each equally credible with each of the twenty, said that he did not sign it? In such a state of the evidence, the prudent and careful man would remain in a state of doubt. He would say, 'There is one-nineteenth more evidence in favor of B's having signed, than in favor of his not having signed, but I am not convinced that he signed it; I neither believe nor disbelieve that he signed it.'

"If the rule quoted is to be adopted, it follows that a verdict in a civil case need not, and therefore does not, express the belief, opinion, or conviction of the jury as to the existence or non-existence of the facts which form the issue, but simply as to the existence of the preponderance of the evidence, a totally different matter. There can be evidence that fact X occurred, when it did not occur, and evidence that fact X did not occur, when it did occur, and, for the same reason, there can be more evidence that it occurred than that it did not occur, although it in fact did not occur, and to believe that there is this greater degree of evidence of occurrence than of non-occurrence, is not to believe the occurrence rather than the non-occurrence.

"The rule indicated results in palpable absurdity. The object of the law is, or ought to be, to secure the sequence of certain results upon certain objective facts. If B signed the note he ought to be compelled to pay it. It would be, of course, inadmissible to hold that the absolute certainty of the jury that he signed it, should be the preliminary to this compulsion. But would it be too much to hold that the jury should believe, at least in some low degree, that he signed it? Is not the principle abhorrent that B may be coerced into paying a sum of money to A, when the jury does not believe, even in a faint degree, that he promised to pay it, simply because it believes that, of the plaintiff's and defendant's respective pieces of evidence, that of the former is heavier than that of the latter?

"What those who have laid down the principle that 'preponderance' of evidence will justify and require a decision conformable with it, have failed to realize, is that perception of the preponderance of evidence is quite consistent with want of belief. Of two pieces of very weak evidence, one may preponderate. It might be barely enough to convince, had it not encountered the contradictory evidence. Opposed by the latter, it may be insufficient to generate even the lowest degree of belief. To detect a preponderance of evidence that B signed a note, is neither to believe that he signed it, nor to be logically required to believe that he signed it. It would be fatuous to affirm that a man ought to believe, even faintly, everything the evidence for which is, in his opinion, stronger than the evidence against it.

"There is no measure of the weight of evidence (unless the witnesses on the evidential facts are counted) other than the feeling of probability which it engenders."

2. But the chief topic of controversy has been whether in certain civil cases the measure of persuasion for criminal cases should be applied. Policy suggests that the latter test should be strictly confined to its original field, and that there ought to be no attempt to employ it in any civil case.<sup>2</sup> Nevertheless, the effort has been made (though usually without success) to introduce it in certain sorts of civil cases where an analogy seems to obtain:

(1) It is sometimes said that, in general, wherever in a civil case a criminal act is charged as a part of the case, the rule for criminal cases should apply; but this has been generally repudiated.<sup>3</sup>

(2) Nor is such a doctrine better established for individual kinds of cases. It does not apply to an action for a statutory penalty; <sup>4</sup> nor to a plea of truth to an action for a defamatory charge of crime; <sup>5</sup> nor to a plea of arson by the insurer in an action on a policy of fire insurance; <sup>6</sup> nor in disbarment proceedings; <sup>7</sup> nor in an action for support charging the defendant as the father of a bastard; <sup>8</sup> nor in an action for seduction, <sup>9</sup> nor a proceeding for divorce on the ground of adultery; <sup>10</sup> nor in proceedings for contempt <sup>11</sup> or for an injunction. <sup>12</sup>

S. v. Lee Huen*, 118 Fed. 442, 457 ("The general rule is that uncontradicted evidence, free from inherent improbability, when given by disinterested witnesses, and in no way discredited, is conclusive"; yet in the very same opinion the Court inconsistently but correctly says: "It is impossible to prescribe any fixed rule by which the credibility of the witness is to be tested or which shall bind the soundness of this conception has already been noticed (ante, §§ 1013, 2033, 2034).<sup>26</sup>

Moreover, the specific rules about number of witnesses required for the proof of lost wills and other facts, and the rules requiring corroboration for certain kinds of witnesses (ante, §§ 2036-2074) tend to evoke in judicial language frequent reference to the degree of persuasion required; so that those rules and the present one sometimes become hardly distinguishable.

conscience of the Court as to the conclusiveness of the evidence in a given case") ; 1906, Dupuis v. Saginaw V. T. Co., 146 Mich. 151, 109 N. W. 413 (a quibbling opinion).

It is now said in Illinois that under some circumstances an instruction as to preponderance is objectionable if it does not state that "the element of numbers should be considered by them with all the other things"; 1907, Elgin J. & E. R. Co. v. Lawlor, 229 Ill. 621, 82 N. E. 407. But the vice of such a rule is the larger one of attempting to lay down rules of law to bind the jury in their exclusive function of estimating the credibilities of the case without any trammels of law. This is the growing danger of the times for the law of Evidence, and it should be opposed wherever it appears.

§ 2499. Introductory.<sup>1</sup> In applying the foregoing principles to the different kinds of propositions presented for proof in litigation, it will be found that the rulings are constantly ambiguous in the language, in dealing with the minute and voluminous details of the particular case, and the judicial language is often ambiguous and dangerous to state concisely; copious statutes, having only rare application in practice, lay down hundreds of rules for 'prima facie' evidence. Some years of additional labor would be required for a complete presentation of the material.

three chief questions arising under those principles. Sometimes the ruling involves the first "burden of proof," i. e. the risk of non-persuasion of the jury (ante, § 2485); this is, in strictness and usually, a question of Pleading rather than of Evidence. Sometimes the ruling involves the second "burden of proof," the duty of producing evidence to the judge, in its initial aspect, i. e. whether there is sufficient evidence to satisfy that duty and enable the party to go to the jury (ante, § 2494). Sometimes it involves the same burden in its ulterior aspect, i. e. whether there is a presumption, which shifts the duty to the opponent to come forward with evidence (ante, § 2487). Any topic of proof may give rise to all three of these questions; and it is often impossible to determine which effect the ruling is intended to have, except after a detailed analysis of the whole opinion, — and sometimes not even then. Moreover, many rulings, though using the language of presumptions, do not mean to do anything more than declare the admissibility of circumstantial evidence (ante, § 2491). This difficulty of interpretation must be kept in mind in any consideration of the precedents.<sup>2</sup>

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1963 ("All other presumptions are satisfactory, if uncontradicted. They are denominated disputable presumptions, and may be controverted by other evidence. The following are of that kind:

"1. That a person is innocent of crime or wrong;

"2. That an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent;

"3. That a person intends the ordinary consequence of his voluntary act;

"4. That a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns;

"5. That evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced;

"6. That higher evidence would be adverse from inferior being produced;

"7. That money paid by one to another was due to the latter;

"8. That a thing delivered by one to another belonged to the latter;

"9. That an obligation delivered up to the debtor has been paid;

"10. That former rent or installments have been paid when a receipt for latter is produced;

"11. That things which a person possesses are owned by him;

"12. That a person is the owner of property from exercising acts of ownership over it, or from common reputation of his ownership;

"13. That a person in possession of an order on himself for the payment of money, or the delivery of a thing, has paid the money or delivered the thing accordingly;

"14. That a person acting in a public office was regularly appointed to it;

"15. That official duty has been regularly performed;

"16. That a court or judge, acting as such, whether in this State or any other State or country, was acting in the lawful exercise of his jurisdiction;

"17. That a judicial record, when not conclusive, does still correctly determine or set forth the rights of the parties;

"18. That all matters within an issue were laid before the jury and passed upon by them; and in like manner, that all matters within a submission to arbitration were laid before the arbitrators and passed upon by them;

"19. That private transactions have been fair and regular;

"20. That the ordinary course of business has been followed;

"21. That a promissory note or bill of exchange was given or indorsed for a sufficient consideration;

"22. That an indorsement of a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange was made at the time and place of making the note or bill;

"23. That a writing is truly dated;

"24. That a letter duly directed and mailed was received in the regular course of the mail;

"25. Identity of person from identity of name;

"26. That a person not heard from in seven years is dead;

"27. That acquiescence followed from a belief that the thing acquiesced in was conformable to the right or fact;

"28. That things have happened according to the ordinary course of nature and the ordinary habits of life;

"29. That persons acting as copartners have entered into a contract of copartnership;

"30. That a man and woman deporting

§ 2500. Sanity: (1) Testamentary and other Civil Causes; Suicide. (a) It seems to be generally conceded that the burden of proof as to a testator's sanity is on the proponent of the will, in the sense that, when the case goes to the jury, he has the risk of non-persuasion; the testator's sanity is a fact essential to the proponent's claim. But there is a difference of views as to the duty of going forward with evidence.<sup>1</sup> According to one view, the themselves as husband and wife have entered into a lawful contract of marriage;

"31. That a child born in lawful wedlock, there being no divorce from bed and board, is legitimate;

"32. That a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature;

"33. That the law has been obeyed;

"34. That a document or writing more than thirty years old is genuine, when the same has been since generally acted upon as genuine, by persons having an interest in the question, and its custody has been satisfactorily explained;

"35. That a printed and published book, purporting to be printed or published by public authority, was so printed or published;

"36. That a printed and published book, purporting to contain reports of cases adjudged in the tribunals of the State or country where the book is published, contains correct reports of such cases;

"37. That a trustee or other person, whose duty it was to convey real property to a particular person, has actually conveyed to him, when such presumption is necessary to perfect the title of such person or his successor in interest;

"38. The uninterrupted use by the public of land for a burial ground, for five years, with the consent of the owner, and without a reservation of his rights, is presumptive evidence of his intention to dedicate it to the public for that purpose;

"39. That there was a good and sufficient consideration for a written contract;

"40. When two persons perish in the same calamity, such as a wreck, a battle, or a conflagration, and it is not shown who died first, and there are no particular circumstances from which it can be inferred, survivorship is presumed from the probabilities resulting from the strength, age, and sex, according to the following rules:

"First. If both of those who have perished were under the age of fifteen years, the older is presumed to have survived;

"Second. If both were above the age of sixty, the younger is presumed to have survived;

"Third. If one be under fifteen and the other above sixty, the former is presumed to have survived;

"Fourth. If both be over fifteen and under sixty, and the sexes be different, the male is presumed to have survived; if the sexes be the same, then the older;

"Fifth. If one be under fifteen, or over sixty, and the other between those ages, the latter is presumed to have survived").

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5736 ("Presumptions of law are sometimes conclusive, and an averment to the contrary will not be allowed. These are termed estoppels, and are not generally favored. Among these are the presumptions in favor of a record or judgment unreversed; of the proper conduct of courts and judicial officers acting within their legitimate sphere; of other officers of the law, after the lapse of time has rendered it dangerous to open the investigation of their acts in regard to mere formalities of the law; of ancient deeds, and other instruments more than thirty years old, when they come from the proper custody, and possession has been held in accordance with them; recitals in deeds, except payment of purchase-money, as against the grantor acting in his own right, and 'sui juris,' and his privies in estate, blood, and in law; the landlord's title, as against his tenant, while tenant in possession; solemn admissions made 'in judicio,' and other admissions upon which other parties have acted, either to their own injury or the benefit of the persons making the admissions; and similar cases where it would be more unjust and productive of more evil to hear the truth than to forbear the investigation").

Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2285 (presumptions of law); § 2288 ("presumptions not established by law are left to the judgment and discretion of the judge," etc.).

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10606 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963).

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7935 (presumptions deemed conclusive; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1962); § 7936 (denominational presumptions; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, adding the following: "41, That the foreign law will be presumed to be the common law in the absence of rebutting evidence; 42, A domicile once acquired is presumed to continue until it is shown to have been changed").

Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 334 (list of presumptions; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, omitting par. 6, par. 17, and par. 39).

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, but omitting par. 26).

Cordray*, 70 Colo. 196, 199 Pac. 481; Connecticut: 1893, Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 27 Atl. 973 (evidence of execution shifts the burden to the contestant; subject, however, to the peculiarity that the attesting witnesses must be called by the proponent and asked as to capacity); 1917, Wheeler v. Rockett, 91 Conn. 388, 100 Atl. 13; Georgia: 1905, Credille v. Credille, 123 Ga. 673, 51 S. E. 628; Hawaii: 1919, Lopez' Estate, 25 Haw. 197 (careful opinion by Kemp, J.); Illinois: 1894, Taylor v. Pegram, 151 Ill. 106, 118, 37 N. E. 837 (the burden is on the contestant, provided the attesting witnesses have spoken to capacity); 1897, Harp v. Parr, 168 Ill. 459, 48 N. E. 113 (the introduction of proper subscribing-witness testimony to execution is sufficient to shift the burden; here one subscribing-witness and the scrivener were called, and a certificate of testimony at the probate was presented); 1898, Slingloff v. Bruner, 174 Ill. 561, 51 N. E. 285; 1898, Egbers v. Egbers, 177 Ill. 82, 52 N. E. 285 (bill to set aside probate; the burden of non-persuasion is said to be on the complainant-contestants, and yet the first duty of production to be on the will's proponents; the opinion is confused); 1899, Entwistle v. Meikle, 180 Ill. 9, 54 N. E. 217; 1900, Johnson v. Johnson, 187 Ill. 86, 58 N. E. 237 (the 'prima facie' case made out by the attesting witnesses' testimony does not fail when one of the witnesses is impeached; "credible," under the statute, meaning merely "competent"); 1901, Huggins v. Drury, 192 Ill. 528, 61 N. E. 652; 1901, Thompson v. Bennett, 194 Ill. 57, 62 N. E. 321; 1903, Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410 (approving Egbers v. Egbers); 1906, Todd v. Todd, 221 Ill. 410, 77 N. E. 680; 1906, Waters v. Waters, 222 Ill. 26, 78 N. E. 1; 1912, Norton v. Clark, 253 Ill. 557, 97 N. E. 1079; 1920, Valentine v. Second Baptist Church, 293 Ill. 71, 127 N. E. 178; 1920, Donovan v. St. Joseph's Home, 295 Ill. 125, 129 N. E. 1 (re-examining the foregoing series of cases, noting the two distinct burdens, and applying the rules to a case involving the presumption of continued insanity); Indiana: 1896, Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 43 N. E. 562 (treating Kenworthy v. Williams, 5 Ind. 375, as overruled, and disapproving the dictum in Durham v. Smith, 120 Ind. 465; the burden is on the contestant, but may shift); 1896, Young v. Miller, 145 Ind. 652, 44 N. E. 754 (the contestant has the burden of establishing insanity; monomania, if shown, raises a presumption of general incapacity and makes a 'prima facie' case; but when the evidence is closed on both sides, the contestant still has the risk of establishing incapacity, and an instruction requiring a preponderance of evidence from the contestee is erroneous); 1898, Roller v. Kling, 150 Ind. 159, 49 N. E. 948 (action to set aside a probated will; the burden of convincing the jury by preponderance of evidence is on the applicant, though evidence of prior persistent insanity may raise a presumption in his favor); 1901, Morell v. Morell, 157 Ind. 179, 60 N. E. 1092; later decisions leave the law of this State uncertain; the ambiguity of the term "burden of proof" seems to be the cause; 1904, Branstrator v. Crow, 162 Ind. 362, 69 N. E. 668; 1907, Steinkuehler v. Wempner, 169 Ind. 154, 162, 81 N. E. 482 (changing the rule); 1909, Hoffbauer v. Morgan, 172 Ind. 273, 88 N. E. 337 (the burden is on the proponents in a proceeding to probate, following Steinkuehler v. Wempner); 1910, Pepper v. Martin, 175 Ind. 580, 92 N. E. 777; 1914, Herring v. Watson, 182 Ind. 374, 105 N. E. 900; 1917, Johnson v. Samuels, 186 Ind. 56, 114 N. E. 977 (Steinkuehler v. Wempner followed); Iowa: 1906, Dunahugh's Will, 130 Ia. 692, 107 N. introduce evidence of insanity. By another view, the evidence of execution does not raise this presumption, and the proponent therefore has the duty of coming forward, as in any other case, with some evidence (it may be but slight) of his 'factum probandum,' i. e. sanity. The subject is further complicated, in many jurisdictions, by the variety of modes of trial and re-trial for a will's validity, and by the presumptive effect sometimes given to the preliminary finding, on a later contest in the nature of an appeal, in a chancery or a jury court; as also by the 'prima facie' effect occasionally given to the oath of the attesting witnesses, and by the rule (ante, § 1873) as to the scope of evidence in rebuttal.

(b) For deeds, however, it is common to find the fact of insanity treated in the nature of an affirmative plea of avoidance, placing the ultimate risk of non-persuasion on the contestant, though the duty to produce evidence may shift.<sup>2</sup>

(c) Suicide is generally conceded to be a circumstance from which (with others) insanity may be inferred (ante, § 228); but it ought not to create a presumption or shift the duty of producing evidence, though the judicial language is here sometimes ambiguous.<sup>3</sup>

W. 470 (the burden of establishing capacity rests on the proponent of the will for probate, and also a preliminary duty to offer some evidence of this; after opposing evidence, the general burden of establishing remains on the proponent); 1907, Powers' Estate, 79 Nebr. 680, 113 N. W. 198 (not clear); New Hampshire: 1894, Patten v. Cilley, 67 N. H. 520, 42 Atl. 47 (burden of non-persuasion is on the executor, no matter how specific the issues, and carries the right to close in argument); New York: 1862, DeLafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, 29, 73, 97; Oklahoma: 1920, Son-se-gra's Will, 78 Okl. 213, 189 Pac. 865 (the burden shifts from proponent to opponent); Oregon: 1903, Mendenhall's Will, 43 Or. 542, 73 Pac. 1033; Texas: 1920, *Day v. case of the prosecution; and the burden of proving it, in the sense of the risk of non-persuasion (ante, § 2485), is on the prosecution; the measure of persuasion required being, as in other elements of a crime, persuasion beyond a reasonable doubt (ante, § 2497); and, as an incident of this view, the general presumption of sanity suffices for the prosecution's duty to produce evidence, and only the duty of producing evidence of insanity is thrown upon the accused. (2) A variation of this view, held by a few Courts, fixes a mere preponderance of evidence as the measure of persuasion required, instead of persuasion beyond a reasonable doubt. (3) But another view, based on judicial experience in dealing with the issue of insanity in criminal trials, and adopted by an increasing number of Courts, is that the accused has the burden of proving insanity, in the sense that he has the risk of persuading the jury to that effect, at least by a preponderance of evidence, and also, of course, has the duty of producing evidence:

1895, HARLAN, J., in Davis v. U. S., 160 U. S. 469, 16 Sup. 353: "Strictly speaking, the burden of proof, as those words are understood in criminal law, is never upon the accused to establish his innocence, or to disprove the facts necessary to establish the crime for which he is indicted. It is on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial, and applies to every element necessary to constitute the crime. Given to the prosecution, where the defense is insanity, the benefit in the way of proof of the presumption in favor of sanity, the vital question, from the time a plea of not guilty is entered until the return of the verdict, is whether, upon all the evidence, by whatever side adduced, guilt is established beyond reasonable doubt. If the whole evidence, including that supplied by the presumption of sanity, does not exclude beyond reasonable doubt the hypothesis of insanity, of which some proof is adduced, the accused is entitled to an acquittal of the specific offense charged."

1904, DOUGLAS, J., in State v. Quigley, 26 R. I. 263, 58 Atl. 905: "The question was settled in England in 1843 by the answer of the Judges to questions propounded by the House of Lords, suggested by the case of Daniel M'Naghten, reported in 10 Cl. & Fin. 200. In that case the law was said to be: That if the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do; and if the act was at the same time contrary to law, he is punishable; in all cases of this kind the jurors ought to be told that every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crime until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction; and that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act the party was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or as not to know that what he was doing was wrong. . . . The question has arisen in almost every State of the Union, and in the courts of the United States, and between the decisions of these courts there is a hopeless conflict. . . . It would be a fruitless task to review in detail the cases where the question has been considered, for they are divided into two classes, which follow substantially the same two divergent lines of reasoning.

"The English rule implies that the question of guilt and the question of insanity raise two distinct issues, and that while both may be involved in the final verdict, the burden of proof upon each issue lies upon different parties. The most complete and forcible statement of the argument in support of this rule which we have found is contained in the opinion of Judge DANFORTH in State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574, 581. The American rule, so-called, holds that in a criminal case there is but one issue and that the burden throughout is upon the prosecution to prove, not only the criminal act, but the capacity of the accused to commit it beyond a reasonable doubt.

"We think the first of these positions is the more logical. Sanity is not an ingredient of crime. It is a condition precedent of all intelligent action, as well benevolent as nefarious. It is a quality of the actor, not an element of the act. It is incumbent upon the prosecution to show the commission of the act, and from this showing and its circumstances to sustain the inferences of malice and such emotions as the particular crime may include. But sanity is not one of these inferences. It is a pre-existing fact which may be taken for granted as implied by law and general experience. . . . It is argued that criminal intent, malice, and premeditation are facts to be proven by the prosecutor; that these can not exist in any insane mind; hence sanity must be proved by the prosecutor. But these are facts of mental condition and action, and they can only be proved by inference from material facts, circumstances, and acts. It is incumbent, therefore, upon the prosecution to prove such material facts, circumstances, and acts as would compel the inference of guilt in a sane person; and this is the limit of his burden. In murder the prosecution must establish the act, and either by inference or additional evidence, malice, and premeditation. If these ingredients of the crime can not exist without sanity, sanity is presumed. All ingredients of the crime must be proved, and as to these we agree the burden never shifts. But as to sanity it never attaches to the prosecutor. The plea of not guilty by itself does not put the sanity of the accused in issue. He must raise the question otherwise, as all agree, if not by special plea, at least by introducing evidence, and this is confession and avoidance."

possible to say that any single circumstance or group of facts is the invariable mark of such a presumption, or that there is any uniform rule capable of application apart from the facts of each case.

§ 2504. Same: (3) Fraudulent Conveyances against Creditors. Conveyances by debtors are attended by circumstances which are often said to raise a presumption of an intent to defraud creditors; but here the distinction between circumstances constituting 'per se' a fraud under the substantive law and circumstances merely evidential of fraud makes the subject inseparable from the whole law of fraudulent conveyances. It is to be noted that at least three distinct presumptions may be involved: (a) the presumption of the grantee's title from his possession (post, § 2515), (b) the presumption of the debtor's fraudulent intent, from his retention of possession,<sup>1</sup> and mony with the appearances of validity may create a presumption as to the lawfulness of the form, the authority of the celebrant, the issuance of a license, and the like; although here much may turn on the circumstances of each case and the additional evidence offered or available.<sup>3</sup>

§ 2506. Same: (2) Capacity, as affected by Intervening Death, Divorce, or Marriage. Supposing a party to a marriage to appear to have been a party to a former marriage with another person, the validity of the later marriage will depend upon whether the prior marriage had been in the meantime somehow dissolved, or whether it was itself void; this will raise the question, for example, whether there has been a death or divorce intervening, or whether the other party to the prior marriage was incapable. In thus determining the validity of the later marriage, will one or another of the above facts be presumed to have existed, so as to throw upon the opponent of the later marriage the burden of producing evidence (or even the risk of non-persuasion) of the non-existence of those facts?

In issues of bigamy and of legitimacy, there is a special temptation thus to aid the later marriage. The situation may be additionally complicated by the invocation of the so-called presumption of innocence (post, § 2511) and of the presumptions of death or of life (post, § 2531). Whether the successive shiftings of the burdens should be worked out with mathematical nicety according to the various presumptions applicable, or whether all should be merged in a general presumption in favor of the later marriage, is a knotty question; and no successful generalization is yet accepted.<sup>1</sup> But it may be <sup>3</sup> With the following, compare the cases cited ante, § 1644 (certificate of marriage), ante, § 2085 (proof by eye-witnesses), and post, § 2535 (presumption of office); 1849, *Piers v. In still other issues a rule of presumption relating to marriage may be recognized: 1861, Erskine v. Davis, 25 Ill. 251; 256 (ejectment, by one showing a deed from H. C., said to be a 'feme sole'; proof of her singleness, held sufficient to raise a presumption of continuance, not overcome by proof of coverture six years later; obscure); 1893, Sturbridge v. Franklin, 160 Mass. 149, 35 N. E. 669 (necessaries furnished to wife; plaintiff must prove not only the marriage but also the separation without fault of the wife).

§ 2507. Negligence and Accident; (1) Contributory Negligence. The fact of contributory negligence, sufficient in law to defeat a plaintiff, is regarded by the orthodox rule as a part of the defendant's burden (or risk of non-persuasion), except in a few important jurisdictions; like so many other instances of that burden, however, this is in reality a question of pleading (ante, § 2485). Yet even by the orthodox rule, the second burden, or duty of producing evidence, may be shifted by facts which raise a presumption of negligence, and these facts may appear (ante, §§ 2489, 2490) from the testimony adduced by the plaintiff himself, or even from the allegations of his declaration, especially under the modern looseness of pleading. Hence it happens that even in the jurisdictions maintaining the orthodox rule, the burden is sometimes said to be upon the plaintiff in certain exceptional cases of the above sort, — the distinction between the two burdens not being strictly observed.<sup>1</sup>

ENGLAND: 1819, R. v. Twynning, 2 B. & Ald. 386; 1886, Wakelin v. London & S. W. R. Co., L. R. 12 App. Cas. 41 (orthodox rule); 1894, Morrow v. Canadian P. R. Co., 21 Ont. App. 149 (orthodox rule).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1893, Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon's Adm'r., 147 U. So that in order to make a 'prima facie' case, and change the onus, he need not go further than to show by evidence one or the other of these two propositions, — either that he was not to blame, or that the company was. § 2508. Same: (2) Loss by a Bailee. Where goods have been committed to a bailee, and have either been lost or been returned in a damaged condition, and the bailee's liability depends upon his negligence, the fact of negligence may be presumed, placing on the bailee at least the duty of producing evidence of some other cause of loss or injury. But the application of this presumption cannot be said to have received definite phrasing for the different kinds of bailees.<sup>1</sup> Where the bailee is a common carrier, acting

W. 613 (same; except that "whenever plaintiff's own case, or the evidence of the defendant or of both, raises a presumption of negligence on his part, the burden of repelling it is at once placed on him"; as here, where the plaintiff was blind and unattended and knew of the dangerous place; good opinion by Beard, J., on the policy of the rule);

Texas: 1895, Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shieder, 88 Tex. 152, 30 S. W. 904 (Denman, J.: "To the general rule imposing upon the defendant the burden of proof on the issue of contributory negligence there appear to be, in the very nature of things, two well-defined exceptions: First, Where the legal effect of the facts stated in the petition is such as to establish 'prima facie' negligence on the part of plaintiff as a matter of law, then he must plead and prove such other facts as will rebut such legal presumption. The plain reason is that by pleading facts which, as a matter of law, establish his contributory negligence, he has made a 'prima facie' defense to his cause of action which will be accepted as true against him, both on demurrer and as evidence on the trial, unless he pleads and proves such other facts and circumstances that the Court cannot, as a matter of law, hold him guilty of contributory negligence. When he has done this, he has made a case which must be submitted to the jury. For instance, if plaintiff's petition shows that he was injured by defendant's cars while on the track, under circumstances which in law would make him a trespasser 'prima facie,' then the law would raise a presumption of contributory negligence against him, for which his petition would be bad on demurrer; and it would be necessary for him to plead some fact or circumstance rebutting such presumption, — such as that he was, after going upon the track, stricken down by some providential cause, — in order to save his petition, and on the trial the burden would be upon him to establish such cause. Second, When the undisputed evidence adduced on the trial establishes 'prima facie' as a matter of law contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, then the burden of proof is upon him to show facts from which the jury upon the whole case may find him free from negligence; otherwise the Court may instruct a verdict for defendant, there being no issue of fact for the jury");

Wisconsin: 1893, Welsh v. Argyle, 85 Wis. 307, 311, 55 N. W. 412 (orthodox rule).

So, too, the burden of proving assumption of risk is on the defendant under the U. S. Employers' Liability Act: 1919, Crugley v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 79 N. H. 276, 108 Atl. 293; 1913, Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Moore, 228 U. S. 433, 33 Sup. 580.

§ 2508. <sup>1</sup> In the following illustrations, it will be seen that there may be a further variance as to successive shiftings of the burden: CANADA: 1908, Gremley v. Stubbs, 39 N. Br. 21 (bailee returning horse); 1911, Pratt v. Waddington, 23 Ont. 178 (death of horse in bailee's hands).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1920, Kohlsaat v. Parkersburg & M. S. Co., 4th C. C. A., 266 Fed. 283 (lease of a boat; the risk of non-persuasion is on lessor to show negligence, though the duty to go forward is shifted by showing delivery to lessee and failure to return); Alabama: 1896, Higman v. Camody, 112 Ala. 267, 20 So. 480 (after the bailor shows the loss, the bailee must show 'vis major' or the like, and then the bailor must show a negligence in not avoiding the 'vis major'); 1898, First Nat'l Bank of B. v. First Nat'l Bank of N., 116 Ala. 520, 22 So. 976 (loss of certificates left with a bank; showing the loss raises a presumption of negligence); California: 1904, Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 683, 77 Pac. 664 (warehouseman of goods destroyed by fire); Columbia (Dist.): 1914, Sims v. Roy, 42 D. C. App. 496 (horse); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 3469 (bailees in general); Louisiana: 1822, Nicholls v. Roland, 11 Mart. La. o. s. 190; Maine: 1897, Buswell v. Fuller, 89 Me. 600, 36 Atl. 1059 (the risk of non-persuasion is on the bailor to show culpable loss, but proof of demand and refusal without explanation of the loss shifts to the bailee the duty of producing evidence); Maryland: 1909, Baltimore Refrigerating & H. Co. v. Kreiner, 109 Md. 361, 71 Atl. 1066 (cold storage); Michigan: 1897, Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9, 69 N. W. 92 (the risk of non-persuasion is on the bailor throughout; but proof of failure to deliver shifts to the bailee the duty of offering evidence); Minnesota: 1897, Davis v. Printing under the customary exemptions as to 'vis major' and the like, or under express contractual exemptions, it is generally conceded that the carrier has even the first burden (or risk of non-persuasion) of establishing the fact constituting the exemption;<sup>2</sup> but this involves the analogy of the contract-rule (post, § 2537).

§ 2509. Same: (3) Defective Machines, Vehicles, and Apparatus. With the vast increase, in modern times, of the use of powerful machinery, harmless in normal operation, but capable of serious human injury if not constructed or managed in a specific mode, the question has come to be increasingly common whether the fact of the occurrence of an injury (unfortunately now termed "accident," by inveterate misuse) is to be regarded as raising a presumption of culpability on the part of the owner or manager of the apparatus. "Res ipsa loquitur" is the phrase appealed to as symbolizing the argument for such a presumption.

In England and Canada, a rule of that sort has for a generation been conceded to exist, for some classes of cases at least.<sup>1</sup>

In the United States, the rule has spread rapidly, although with much looseness of phrase and indefiniteness of scope; as against a common carrier, the presumption against a bailee (ante, § 2508) has perhaps helped to confirm the rule where injury to goods or passengers is involved. But whether the rule creates a full presumption, or merely satisfies the plaintiff's duty of producing evidence sufficient to go to the jury, is not always made clear:<sup>2</sup> defendant owned or controlled the thing which, when properly constructed, maintained, or operated, did not, in the ordinary course of events, so act as to injure those near by, proof that damage was caused by such thing affords reasonable evidence that the injury was occasioned by want of ordinary care. 'Prima facie,' that want of due care should be referred to him under whose management and control the instrument of injury was found. The jury would not be warranted in reasoning, in a strictly logical form: 'Buildings do not collapse without negligence. This building collapsed. Therefore there was negligence,' — for buildings do fall without any one being to blame, and as a result of flood and storm. But ordinarily extraordinary and external causes may be treated as the exception, to be established by the defendant. All that the plaintiff should be required to do in the first instance is to show that the defendant owned, operated, and maintained, or controlled and was responsible for the management and maintenance of, the thing doing the damage; that the accident was of a kind which, in the absence of proof of some external cause, does not ordinarily happen without negligence. When he has shown this, he has cast a burden on the defendant, who may then proceed to show that the accident was occasioned by 'vis major,' or by other causes for which he was not responsible."

1905, CONNOR, J., in Ross v. Cotton Mills, 140 N. C. 115, 52 S. E. 121: "The underlying reason for the rule is that usually the chief evidence of the true cause of procedure is practically accessible to the defendant, but inaccessible to the person injured. It is for this reason that in some cases the Legislature has made the fact of injury 'presumptive evidence' and in others a 'prima facie' case. . . . To prevent any misconstruction of the circumstances under which or the manner in which this principle applies in the trial of causes, we wish to restate: . . . It does not in any degree affect or modify the elementary principle that the burden of the issue is on the plaintiff. WALKER, J., in Stewart v. Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 60, clearly states the law in this respect: "The doctrine does not dispense with the requirement that the party who alleges negligence must prove the fact, but relates only to the mode of proving it. The fact of the accident furnishes merely some evidence to go to the jury which requires the defendant "to go forward with his proof." The rule of 'res ipsa loquitur' does not relieve the plaintiff of the burden of showing negligence, nor does it raise any presumption in his favor." The suggestion has been made in argument of cases at this term that, when the rule applies, it is the duty of the Court to instruct the jury that proof which calls the rule into action constitutes a 'prima facie' case, or raises a presumption of negligence. This is a misapprehension both of the principle upon which the rule is founded and its application. . . . The law says that the plaintiff is entitled to have a jury pass upon the physical facts and condition, and to say whether in their opinion he has made good his allegation of actionable negligence. The defendant may, or may not, introduce evidence as it is advised. By failing to do so, it admits nothing, but simply takes the risk of non-persuasion. This is what is meant by 'going forward' with testimony. He, by this course, says that he is willing to go to the jury upon the plaintiff's evidence."

What the final accepted shape of the rule will be can hardly be predicted. But the following considerations ought to limit it: (1) The apparatus must be such that in the ordinary instance no injurious operation is to be expected unless from a careless construction, inspection, or user; (2) Both inspection and user must have been at the time of the injury in the control of the party charged; (3) The injurious occurrence or condition must have happened irrespective of any voluntary action at the time by the party injured. It may be added that the particular force and justice of the presumption, regarded as a rule throwing upon the party charged the duty of producing evidence, consists in the circumstance that the chief evidence of the true cause, whether culpable or innocent, is practically accessible to him but inaccessible to the injured person.

In some jurisdictions there is a rule of substantive law to be distinguished for some classes of injuries. For example, the setting of fire to adjacent property by the emission of sparks from a railway locomotive may be deemed to raise a presumption, by the present rule (either under statute or by judicial decision); but it may also be made 'per se' a cause of action, irrespective of actual negligence, and the course of legislation in the different jurisdictions has to be ascertained. So, too, the killing of live stock, or

(c) If death by a specific cause only—usually, by accident—has been insured against, the contract-principle leads to the reverse of the foregoing conclusion, i. e. it leads to placing the burden on the insured to show that the specific condition precedent on which the liability is contingent has taken place.<sup>3</sup>

§ 2510a. Same: (5) Ownership and Agency of Vehicle. The responsibility of a defendant for injury caused by negligence often depends upon his connection as owner with the vehicle causing the injury, and as principal with the driver of it as his agent. This connection, though often virtually beyond dispute, is a matter of which the plaintiff has usually scanty means of evidence as compared with the defendant. It is therefore a fit subject for presumptions based on common experience, and such presumptions are often recognized.

(1) The name borne on a vehicle may raise a presumption of its ownership by that person; so also the number of a tag, under a registry system, or of a brand for cattle.<sup>4</sup>

(2) Where damage is done by the tortious act of the driver of a vehicle, and the injured person sues the owner of the vehicle, who was not the driver, it is a necessary part of the plaintiff's case that the driver was an agent of the owner and was acting at the time within the scope of his employment. May these two facts be presumed from the fact of ownership? The answer should be affirmative, if we consider the relative facility of proof as between the parties, the ordinary habits of owners of vehicles, and the wisdom of placing the risk of not obtaining evidence upon the person who owns a valuable and dangerous apparatus and therefore should take special precautions against its misuse by irresponsible persons. The reckless irresponsibility of motorists in general, their notorious selfishness in monopolizing the highway against pedestrians, and the prevalence of homicide by motorists who set no value on the lives of others in comparison with their own convenience, all these modern facts demand that the present rule, and every other applicable rule, be employed to improve the standard of care obeyed by vehicle owners.

Nevertheless, Courts have here taken opposite views; some Courts tossing upon the innocent pedestrian the entire burden of producing evidence, in general, the Courts are here apt to take an unsympathetic, inhuman, and over-cautious attitude.<sup>5</sup> caution (which is perhaps only an implied corollary to the other) to consider, in the material-for-their-belief, nothing but the evidence, i. e., no surmises based on the present-situation of the accused. This caution is indeed particularly needed in criminal cases:

1877, Anon, Scintille Juris, 28:<sup>2</sup> "The truth is that, although the law pays a prisoner the compliment of supposing him to be wrongly accused, it nevertheless knows very well that the probabilities are in favor of the prosecutor's accusation being well founded. . . . Those who think thus [that a prisoner is more likely to be acquitted than a civil defendant, because of the reasonable-doubt rule] have failed to notice that it is more important to a man to look innocent than to be 'prima facie' thought so. No [civil] defendant is brought through a hole in the floor; he is not surrounded by a barrier, nor guarded by a keeper of thieves; he is not made to stand up alone while his actions are being judged; and his latest address is not presumably the jail of his county."

1884, Anon., Ten Years a Police Judge, by Judge Wiglittle, p. 207: "The presumption of innocence. It is greatly to be feared that the so-called presumption of innocence in favor of the prisoner at the bar is a pretence, a delusion, an empty sound. It ought not so to be, but — it is. Rufus Choate said that 'this presumption is not a mere phrase without meaning'; that 'it is in the nature of evidence for the defendant'; that 'it is as irresistible as the heavens till overcome'; that 'it hovers over the prisoner as a guardian angel throughout the trial'; that 'it goes with every part and parcel of the evidence'; that 'it is equal to one witness.' This is just what it should be, but this is just what it is not. Practically it is of no avail whatever in the trial. The jury tread it under foot; the judge the same moment he admits it in theory forgets it in argument. It is a dead letter. Nay, so far from being merely inoperative, it is not hazardous to say that in the trial the presumption is reversed. By court and jury, by prosecution, police, and the public the accused is presumed guilty. Let every one, as he looks upon a prisoner in the dock, carefully inquire of himself and answer if this be not so.

"The reason is plain. The whole course of criminal procedure, from inception to close, is designed to shut out presumptions of innocence and invite presumptions of guilt. The secrecy of complaint-making at the magistrate's office, the mysterious inquisition of the grand-jury room, the publicity of the arrest, the commitment to the lock-up, the demand of bail, the delay of trial, the enforced silence of defence till prosecution has done its worst, are all so many steps and strokes to blacken the accused before he is permitted to open his mouth with a syllable of evidence to break the force of the damning array of circumstances. To suppose that the presumption of innocence, which unbiased nature prompts, is not before this time choked and strangled to death is an absurdity too gross to dispute.

"The treatment itself of the prisoner negatifies the presumption. If he is presumed innocent why is he manacled? Why is he put in jail? Why is he let out only on bail? Why, when he is put on trial, is he put in the dock? Why does he not have place with the by-standers who are simply presumed innocent? The 'presumption,' in the presence of such things, is a contradiction of terms. How can a person be presumed innocent who is presumably guilty? The fact that he is restricted to his silence presumes guilt. There is no other compensation to be placed on the restraint. Human nature is not capable of any other. Yet human nature ought to presume innocence till the contrary is proved. What chance shall the weak or timid or persecuted applicant suspected violation of law have? What chance shall the noblest human nature have to be acquitted? How can it be acquitted? It object to be attained is worthy a good deal of experiment at the risk of a good deal of havoc of old-time forms and proceedings."

So far, then, as the "presumption of innocence" adds anything, it is merely a warning not to treat certain things improperly as evidence.

2. As to the second fallacy, it seems to have been mainly propagated by the passage of Professor Greenleaf,<sup>3</sup> declaring that "this legal presumption of innocence is to be regarded by the jury, in every case, as matter of evidence, to the benefit of which the party is entitled." But it cannot be regarded as "matter of evidence." No presumption can be evidence; it is a rule about the duty of producing evidence (ante, § 2490). This is, in itself, only a matter of the theory of presumptions, and to that extent may be regarded as a mere question of words, — of the way of phrasing a rule upon the substance of which there is no dispute. But when this erroneous theory is made the ground for ordering new trials because of the mere wording of a judge's instruction to a jury, the erroneous theory is capable of causing serious harm to the administration of justice. And, because of a temporary aberration of doctrine in the Federal Supreme Court, in Coffin v. United States, such harm was for a time impending.<sup>4</sup> A notable academic deliverance, however, by a master in the law of Evidence,<sup>5</sup> laid bare the fallacy with keen analysis; and it was soon afterwards discarded in the Court of its origin.<sup>6</sup> In some State Courts the contagious influence of the original error was for a time noticeable;<sup>6</sup> but few Courts seem to place upon the accused the burden of showing that he acted in self-defence.<sup>2</sup> (c) It is generally conceded that the accused does not have the burden of proving an alibi.<sup>3</sup> (d) In sundry other instances, to "satisfactorily establish his defence"); 1915, Dorak v. State, 183 Ind. 622, 109 N. E. 771; 1898, Herman v. State, 75 Miss. 340, 22 So. 872 (the burden of proving an excuse is not on the defendant); 1908, Com. v. Deitrick, 221 Pa. 7, 70 Atl. 275; 1920, Com. v. Tompkins, 267 Pa. 541, 110 Atl. 275 (homicide; the burden of proving first degree is on the State).

<sup>2</sup> The judicial language is seldom entirely clear as to the nature of the burden. The following cases illustrate both views: Federal: 1903, Rutherford v. Foster, 60 C. C. A. 129, 125 Fed. 187 (in a civil case, the burden is on the defendant); 1915, U. S. v. Rohrer, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 515 (homicide); Alabama: 1892, Roden v. State, 97 Ala. 54, 57, 12 So. 419 (assault with intent; the burden is on the defendant); 1893, Boulden v. State, 102 Ala. 78, 83, 15 So. 341 (similar); 1895, Dent v. State, 105 Ala. 14, 17 So. 94 (the burden is on the prosecution); 1896, Scheerer v. Agee, 113 Ala. 383, 21 So. 79 (the risk of non-persuasion beyond reasonable doubt is on the prosecution); 1907, McEwen v. State, 152 Ala. 38, 44 So. 619 (former instructions reviewed); Arizona: 1904, Anderson v. Terr., 9 Ariz. 50, 76 Pac. 636; California: 1898, People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833 (the burden is on the defendant); Colorado: 1905, Zipperian v. People, 33 Colo. 134, 79 Pac. 1018 (prosecution has the burden entirely); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8952 (homicide); Iowa: 1898, State v. Shea, 104 Ia. 724, 74 N. W. 687 (the burden is on the prosecution, nor has the defendant a duty of producing evidence); 1905, State v. Morris, 128 Ia. 717, 105 N. W. 213; Louisiana: 1911, State v. Ardoin, 128 La. 14, 54 So. 407 (the burden is not on the accused); Maryland: 1899, Tucker v. State, 89 Md. 471, 43 Atl. 778 (the burden is on the defendant to persuade by a preponderance); Mississippi: 1897, Strother v. State, 74 Miss. 447, 21 So. 147 (the burden is on the prosecution); 1897, King v. State, 74 Miss. 576, 21 So. 235 (same); Nebraska: 1894, Gravely v. State, 38 Nebr. 871, 57 N. W. 751 (the burden is on the prosecution, without shifting); North Carolina: 1894, State v. Barringer, 114 N. C. 840, 19 S. E. 275 (the defendant must prove it "to the satisfaction of the jury"); 1919, State v. Little, 178 N. C. 722, 100 S. E. 877 (burden is on accused to "satisfy the jury"); North Dakota: 1907, State v. Hazlet, 16 N. D. 426, 113 N. W. 374 (careful examination of the cases, in the light of the peculiar State statute); Pennsylvania: 1895, Com. v. Mika, 171 Pa. 273, 33 Atl. 65 (if a killing by the defendant is proved, the prosecution has the burden of raising it to the first degree, and the defence that of reducing it below the second degree); 1908, Com. v. Palmer, 222 Pa. 229, 71 Atl. 100; 1911, Com. v. Colandro, 231 Pa. 343, 80 Atl. 571 (the defendant must prove by a preponderance); South Carolina: 1904, State v. McDaniel, 68 S. C. 304, 47 S. E. 384; South Dakota: 1899, State v. Yokum, 11 S. D. 344, 79 N. W. 835 (the burden is on the defendant); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8986; Virginia: 1894, Vance v. Com., — Va. —, 19 S. E. 785; 1894, Myers v. Com., 90 Va. 705, 19 S. E. 881; Washington: 1915, Welch v. Creech, 88 Wash. 429, 153 Pac. 355 (civil case; burden is not on defendant; unsound; three judges diss.); West Virginia: 1895, State v. Zeigler, 40 W. Va. 593, 21 S. E. 763 (doubtful).

But in civil cases, a plea of self-defence of course places and keeps the burden on the defendant; ante, §§ 2485, 2486.

<sup>3</sup> Alabama: 1896, Towns v. State, 111 Ala. 1, 20 So. 598 (the defendant must produce evidence, but the prosecution has the risk of non-persuasion beyond reasonable doubt); 1897, Pickens v. State, 115 Ala. 42, 22 So. 551; James v. State, 115 Ala. 83, 22 So. 565; Arizona: 1898, Schultz v. Terr., — Ariz. —, 52 Pac. 352 (the defendant has no burden); 1906, Barton v. Terr., 10 Ariz. 68, 85 Pac. 730; Arkansas: 1920, Morris v. State, 145 Ark. 241, 224 S. W. 724 (but the defendant must introduce some evidence); California: 1898, *People v. a naturally affirmative defence is sometimes apportioned to the accused's burden.<sup>4</sup> production, but not the risk of non-persuasion, is on the defendant); Nebraska: 1897, Beck v. State, 51 Nebr. 106, 70 N. W. 498 (the defendant need not persuade by a preponderance); 1898, Peyton v. State, 54 Nebr. 188, 74 N. W. 597 (burden of proof remains on prosecution throughout); New Jersey: 1921, State v. Parks, — N. J. L. —, 115 Atl. 305; New Mexico: 1896, Borrego v. Territory, 8 N. M. 446, 46 Pac. 349 (the defendant need not persuade by a preponderance); 1915, State v. Smith, 21 N. M. 173, 153 Pac. 256; North Carolina: 1919, State v. Bryant, 178 N. C. 702, 100 S. E. 430; North Dakota: 1908, State v. Nelson, 17 N. D. 13, 114 N. W. 478; Oklahoma: 1897, Wright v. Terr., 5 Okl. 78, 47 Pac. 1069 (the burden is on the prosecution); South Dakota: 1897, State v. Thornton, 10 S. D. 349, 73 N. W. 196 (the defendant has the duty of producing evidence; but the prosecution's case must still be made out to the jury beyond a reasonable doubt); Tennessee: 1903, Legere v. State, 111 Tenn. 368, 77 S. W. 1059; Virginia: 1922, Draper v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 471.

§ 2513. Same: (4) Possession of Stolen Goods. One of the most troublesome and fruitless controversies has been whether under certain circumstances the accused's possession of stolen goods raises a presumption that he was the thief. It had long been customary in England to use the language of presumptions for such a situation;<sup>1</sup> but whether the language was intended merely to mean that the specific fact alone was sufficient evidence on which the jury might reach a conviction if they desired (ante, § 2494), or whether it meant that the specific fact alone created a presumption, i. e. placed on the accused a duty of producing evidence, so that if he failed to do so (that is, to offer any "explanation") the jury must convict (ante, § 2490), was seldom made clear. This obscurity continued in the judicial rulings in the United States. But the general trend is to repudiate any rule of presumption in the strict sense:<sup>2</sup>

Contra: 1917, U. S. v. Olais, 36 P. I. 828 (Street, J., diss.).

<sup>4</sup> For example, in the illegal dealing with liquor, the defendant must prove a license: 1920, U. S. v. Turner, D. C. W. D. Va., 266 Fed. 248 (transporting liquor without a permit; burden of showing permit is on defendant); 1896, Hornberger v. State, 47 Nebr. 40, 66 N. W. 23; 1897, Durfee v. State, 53 Nebr. 214, 73 N. W. 676 (the mere possession, irrespective of explanation, raises a presumption of guilt, and shifts the "burden . . . to establish" lawful possession); 1898, Parker v. State, 61 N. J. L. 308, 39 Atl. 651; 1897, State v. Shelton, 16 Wash. 590, 48 Pac. 253. In some cases, the burden is clearly stated to be merely the second kind, i. e. the duty of producing evidence: 1897, State v. Lee, 69 Conn. 186, 37 Atl. 75 (under a statute making an abortion criminal, unless necessary to save life, the necessity must be evidenced by the defendant).

On a charge of keeping liquor for sale, after proof of keeping, the burden of proving no sale-intent is not on defendant: 1917, State v. Bean, 175 N. C. 748, 94 S. E. 705 (Clark, C. J., diss.).

Duress should be likewise treated: 1911, State v. Sappienza, 84 Ch. 63, 95 N. E. 381 (duress "is an affirmative defence," to be established by a preponderance of evidence).

that 'the State has not actually proved either possession by the respondent of the articles alleged to be stolen, or occupancy of the room in which they were found, much less exclusive possession;' and that the Court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, as requested, that the evidence was not sufficient to authorize a verdict against him. It has been generally understood, that the prisoner's exclusive and unexplained possession of stolen property recently after the theft, raises the presumption that he is the thief, and that this presumption takes the burden of proof from the prosecutor and lays it upon the prisoner. When the defendant's possession of stolen property has been the only evidence relied upon to convict him, judges have directed an acquittal because they held the possession was not recent, or was not exclusive, or was explained. Trials have proceeded upon the ground that it was for the Court to determine whether the possession proved was recent enough, or exclusive enough, or explained enough, to shift the burden of proof, and that, if the burden of proof was not thus shifted by the Court, the defendant was entitled to an acquittal. The Court has decided, not whether there was any evidence, however slight, to be submitted to the jury, but whether there was a presumption which shifted the burden of proof. This practice was formerly so common, that it came to be regarded as the application of a rule of law, and is so laid down in many books of high authority.

"In this case, the defendant claims that the evidence does not bring him within the supposed rule in relation to possession of stolen property, and that the Court should have ordered his acquittal. It becomes necessary, therefore, to inquire whether there is any such rule of law as has been supposed, and what the rule is, if there is one, and whether this case comes within it.

"It is obvious, at the outset, that if there is such a rule, the presumption which it draws from the evidence must be a presumption of law declared by the Court, as distinguished from a presumption of fact found by the jury. The first practical difficulty in the way of making it a presumption of law is the impossibility of inventing a rule by which to determine whether the possession is recent or not. Cockin's Case, 2 Lewin C. C. 235, was an indictment for stealing two sacks, found in the defendant's possession about twenty days after they were missed; COLERIDGE, J., said to the jury 'If I was now to lose my watch, and in a few minutes it was to be found on the person of one of you, it would afford the strongest ground for presuming that you had stolen it; but if a month hence it were to be found in your possession, the presumption of your having stolen it would be greatly weakened, because stolen property usually passes through many hands.' . . . It is useless to call such a presumption a presumption of law. Call it what we may, it is a presumption of fact. . . .

"These [precedents cited] are mere instances and illustrations of the general [English] practice of the judge giving to the jury his opinion on the facts; and this general practice, probably, is the chief origin of the supposed legal presumption drawn from the possession of stolen property. When judges, following the common practice of giving the jury their opinions of the facts and the weight of the evidence, had charged juries year after year, for the great length of time, that possession of stolen property was presumptive evidence of guilt, or raised a presumption of guilt, this form of judicial instruction finally came to be considered as the law of the land. Whether it was matter of fact or matter of law was practically immaterial, the influence of the Court upon the jury being then generally overwhelming in cases that touched no political prejudice or sympathy. Being constantly repeated by the Court, it naturally acquired the position and strength of an established dogma. . . . To whatever extent matter of fact involved in the issue is held to be matter of law, to that extent the constitutional system of trial by jury is destroyed; and when part is destroyed, the remainder is put in jeopardy. One precedent is held to justify another. Every matter of fact turned into law, opens the way for a further annexation of the province of the jury to the province of the Court, and a gradual absorption. None the less dangerous is the process because it has been going on for a long time. . . .

"Whether the defendant, in this case, had any possession of the watch and chain, at any time, either when they were found or before; whether his possession, if any he had, was recent enough, or exclusive enough, or unexplained enough, to raise a presumption of guilt, — were questions of fact for the jury. There was some evidence to be submitted to the jury on those questions. If the jury found the defendant had the property in his possession after it was stolen, that fact was evidence against him. If they found an absence of explanatory evidence on his side, under circumstances which tended to show he could furnish such evidence, that fact was additional evidence against him. But if those facts were found, there was no presumption of law, nor was the burden of proof shifted. The State, in the indictment, made an affirmation of the defendant's guilt which the defendant traversed in his plea. The State had the affirmative, and the burden of proof which belongs to the affirmative. The question, from the beginning to the end of the trial, was, whether the affirmative allegation of guilt was proved by the testimony introduced on both sides, and by the evidence which consists of the non-production of testimony, not including the refusal of the defendant to testify, if there was such a refusal. The Court rightly refused to instruct the jury as requested."

1902, WEAVER, J., in State v. Brady, — Ia. —, 91 N. W. 801: "The use of the terms 'presumption of guilt' and "'prima facie' evidence of guilt' with reference to the possession of stolen goods has perhaps been too long indulged in by Courts and text-writers to be condemned; but we cannot resist the conclusion that, when so employed, these expressions are unfortunate, and often misleading. In a civil proceeding, when a plaintiff makes a 'prima facie' case, the burden is shifted, and, in the absence of any countershowing, he is entitled to recover as a matter of law. This rule is understood by the average intelligent layman as well as by those learned in the law; and when, in a criminal case, an instruction is given that the showing of a specific fact is 'prima facie' evidence of guilt, jurors may very naturally conclude that the establishment of such fact has the effect to cast upon defendant the burden of proving his innocence of the charge against him. . . . 'Presumptions' of guilt and 'prima facie' cases of guilt in the trial of a party charged with crime mean no more than that from the proof of certain facts the jury will be warranted in convicting the accused of the offense with which he is charged."

If no rule of presumption is to be accepted, specific limitations are hardly of any consequence, for the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury will usually depend on the variant circumstances of each case. But the follow-sion of forbidden articles, such as game or liquor;<sup>8</sup> but these rules involve closely the substantive law of the respective crimes.

§ 2514. Same: (5) Capacity (Infancy, Intoxication, Coverture). Capacity is naturally a part of the first burden of proof for the prosecution, although the second burden might well be aided, in the appropriate classes of cases, by a presumption of capacity (ante, § 2487). For infancy, the so-called conclusive presumption of incapacity of criminal intent under the age of seven is of course genuinely a rule of substantive law that the infant "cannot be guilty of felony," as Blackstone correctly puts it.<sup>1</sup> The rule that incapacity is presumed between the ages of seven and fourteen, for sundry crimes,<sup>2</sup> and for rape in particular,<sup>3</sup> is more correctly stated as a presumption of capacity above the age of fourteen. For insanity, the incidence of the burdens has already been considered (ante, § 2501). For intoxication, no doubt the second burden (of producing some evidence) is on the accused;<sup>4</sup> though the first burden (or risk of non-persuasion) remains on the prosecution.<sup>5</sup> For coverture, the coercion of the husband, which in Blackstone's correct phrase may be "an excuse for criminal misconduct" of the wife, may be presumed from the husband's presence; this then creates for the prosecution a duty of adducing evidence of the wife's willing participation; the risk of non-persuasion remaining throughout upon the prosecution.<sup>6</sup>

§ 2515. Ownership; (1) Possession of Land and Personalty. Where title to land becomes material, the fact of present possession alone may serve to create a presumption of ownership;<sup>1</sup> the emphasis being on the occupation,

Statutes have sometimes abolished this rule; e. g. Can. Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 21.

The same principle is sometimes applied in civil cases; but the jurisdictions differ: 1915, Millar v. Hilton, 189 Mich. 635, 155 N. W. 574 (promissory note).

§ 2515. <sup>1</sup> The inference rests on the general principle of Relevancy examined ante, § 148. To the following cases, add those cited ante, § 1789, where this presumption comes into play: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1963, pars. 11, 12 (it is presumed "that things which a person possesses are owned by him," and "that a person is the owner of property, from exercising acts of ownership over it, or from common reputation of his ownership"); 1903, Cahill v. Cahill, 75 Conn. 522, 54 Atl. 201 (land); 1917, Davis v. Sim, 100 Kan. 66, 163 Pac. 622; Or. Laws 1920, § 799, pars. 11, 12 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 334

or appearance of ownership, and not on the documentary sources of claim;<sup>2</sup> and the rule serving merely to shift to the opponent the second burden, or duty of producing some evidence to the contrary.<sup>3</sup>

The same rule serves in the evidencing of ownership of personalty, particularly in cases of larceny or robbery, where a real dispute of ownership is rare.<sup>4</sup>

§ 2516. Same: (2) Possession of Negotiable Instrument. Subject to some discriminations, the same presumption may be applied to the possession of a negotiable instrument, especially to one indorsed in blank or to bearer.<sup>1</sup>

(like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); 1905, Manila v. Del Rosario, 5 P. I. 223; 1907, Ayala de Roxas v. Case, 8 P. I. 199; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); 1893, Teass v. St. Albans, 38 W. Va. 1, 22, 17 S. E. 400 (land); Sedgwick & Wait, Trial of Title to Land, § 717.

Distinguish the presumption of a lost grant from long-continued possession (post, § 2522).

<sup>3</sup> This is connected with other rules of substantive law, such as the rule that in ejectment the claimant must recover on the strength of his own title and not the weakness of his opponent's; e. g., Richmond v. Jones, 1910, 111 Va. 214, 68 S. E. 181 (ejectment; defendant set up a prior grant; burden of proof held to be on plaintiff throughout).

There are also occasional rules as to the shifting of the second burden in evidencing the various elements under an adverse possession: 1842, Brown v. King, 5 Metc. Mass. 173 (writ of entry; a title by disseisin being set up, held, that mere possession by the claimant did not suffice to put the burden of proof on the titular owner to show that possession to be permissive; the burden of showing adverseness was on the claimant throughout); 1894, Skinner v. Skinner, 38 Nebr. 756, 766, 57 N. W. 534 (the exclusive possession of land with the titular owner's knowledge may create a presumption of his permission); 1866, Leport v. Todd, 32 N. J. L. 124 (a plaintiff in ejectment resting on adverse possession has the burden of showing that a possession originally permissive became adverse).

Such a presumption is sometimes applied to include prior instalments of the same obligation: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1963, par. 10 (it is presumed "that former rent or installments have been paid when a receipt for later is produced"); 1853, *Hodgdon v. instrument after maturity is usually said to raise a presumption of payment; the inference being based on the principle of Relevancy already considered (ante, § 156); but there are various limitations laid down, in particular, concerning the obligor's opportunity of surreptitious access to the obligee's papers.<sup>2</sup>

§ 2518a. Same: (3) Delivery of Money. Where money, or its equivalent, is handed by one person to another, and is accepted by the latter, the transaction may be a bailment, or a loan, or a gift, or discharge of a debt; the latter two transactions would leave the receiver without any further obligation to restore the money. In an action by the payor, therefore, alleging the transaction to be a bailment or a loan, it is fair and natural that the presumption arising from the mere fact of delivering and receiving the money is that of a discharge, rather than a creation, of an obligation; i. e. the presumption is one of payment, not one of loan.<sup>1</sup>

§ 2519. Execution and Contents of Document: (1) Letters and Telegrams. The act of writing a letter or sending a telegram, and the addressee's receipt of the letter or telegram, give rise to questions both of the admissibility and the sufficiency of evidence. The same evidence is also sometimes said to ENGLAND: 1816, Gibbon v. Featherstonhaugh, 1 Stark. 225 (drawee's possession of a bill, held to be sufficient evidence); 1816, Brembridge v. Osborne, 1 Stark. 374 (possession of a note, said to "turn the scale"); 1816, Shepherd v. Currie, 1 Stark. 454 (possession of an order to deliver goods to bearer, held to shift the burden).

UNITED STATES: Ark. 1894, Excelsior Mfg. Co. v. Owens, 58 Ark. 556, 563, 25 S. W. 868 (presumption applied to a note possessed after maturity); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1963, pars. 9, 13 (it is presumed "that an obligation delivered up to the debtor has been paid," and "that a person in possession of an order on himself for the payment of money, or the delivery of a thing, has paid the money or delivered the thing accordingly"); 1904, Sarraille v. Calmon, 142 Cal. 651, 76 Pac. 497 (note); Ill. 1894, Grimes v. Hilliary, 150 Ill. 141, 149, 36 N. W. 128 (son taking care of demented payee-father; presumption not applied); Nebr. 1893, Smith v. Gardner, 36 Nebr. 741, 55 N. W. 245 (maker's possession of a note does not raise a presumption, but is merely sufficient evidence); N. Y. 1832, Alvord v. Baker, 9 Wend. 323 (like Shepherd v. Currie, supra); N. C. 1898, Poston v. Jones, 122 N. C. 536, 29 S. E. 951 (presumption applied to a note);

1902, Vann v. Edwards, 130 N. C. 70, 40 S. E. 853 (bond found after the death of the payee's administrator in the maker's possession, presumed paid); Pa. 1893, Collins v. Lynch, 157 Pa. 246, 256, 27 Atl. 721 (joint occupation of land by husband and wife; presumption not applied); 1899, Wilkinson's Est., 192 Pa. 117, 43 Atl. 466 (check and note of deceased husband found in a wife's possession; that she was executrix, held to raise no presumption that she had taken them from his possession after death and therefore that they were paid); 1916, Wick v. Roop, 253 Pa. 264, 98 Atl. 555 (bond); Or. Laws 1920, § 799, par. 9, par. 13 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 334, par. 8, 12 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); Vt. 1898, Bates v. Cain's Estate, 70 Vt. 144, 40 Atl. 36 (possession of a note by a joint promisor is not presumptive of sole payment by him); Wash. 1893, First National Bank v. Harris, 7 Wash. 139, 143, 34 Pac. 466 (presumption applied to a maker's possession of a note after its issue into circulation).

Conversely, the creditor's possession may raise a presumption of non-payment: 1916, Toribio v. Foz, 34 P. I. 913; but this could hardly apply where the debtor, as ordinarily, has the burden of proving payment.

raise a presumption. It is probable that no real presumption is meant to be predicated in the majority of these instances. For example, the receipt by Doe of an answer, through the mail or the telegraph, to his prior communication to Roe, is usually treated as sufficient evidence of Roe's authorship of the answer (ante, §§ 2153, 2154); and the mailing or depositing of Doe's letter or telegram to Roe is usually treated as sufficient evidence of Roe's receipt of it (ante, § 95); but it is seldom, except in the latter class of cases, that a burden of proof is deemed to be affected.<sup>1</sup>

§ 2520. Same: (2) Execution of Documents (Delivery, Date, Seal, Consideration). (a) In view of the importance, in early times, of the formality of delivery for a deed (ante, §§ 2405, 2408, 2426), it was natural that the evidence of it should be strictly insisted on.<sup>1</sup> But there came gradually to be conceded some sort of rule of sufficiency or presumption, based on evidence of the signing only;<sup>2</sup> the inference being based on principles of Relevancy already considered (ante, §§ 92, 102). But the diminished importance of delivery as a formality has also been marked by other rules, more genuinely rules of Presumption, and resting on a somewhat different principle of Relevancy (ante, §§ 148, 157); the grantee's possession may raise a presumption of delivery,<sup>3</sup> and the registration of the deed, based as it is on § 2519. <sup>1</sup> The cases are collected in the places above cited. Compare also § 2135, ante (authentication as a rule of presumption). The following cases illustrate the judicial looseness of language: 1828, McCourry v. Suydam, 10 N. J. L. 245 (mailing a notice of trial raises a presumption and "stands for proof" of service; but an affidavit of non-receipt "destroys the presumption"); 1897, State v. Howell, — N. J. L. —, 38 Atl. 748 (notice of claim; the above language quoted, with the extraordinary addition: "Of course, if there is such a presumption as is assumed, it is one of fact for the jury," and then declining to hold that a refusal to charge such a presumption is erroneous, but recommending attention to "the foregoing deliverance in this Court"; if they had recommended a page from the Sibylline books, they could not have left the trial judge in greater perplexity); 1899, Fairfield P. Co. v. Ins. Co., — Pa. —, 44 Atl. 317 (no presumption of receipt ordinarily from the mailing of a letter; but the opinion inconsistently says that (1) there is no presumption except for notices of commercial paper, and (2) there is no presumption for a notice of insurance loss, if there is rebutting evidence; is there then a presumption, or no presumption, where there is no rebutting evidence?).

(proof of handwriting raises a presumption of sealing and delivery); 1840, Burling v. Paterson, 9 C. & P. 570, 572 (the witness could recollect seeing the signing only; an inference of sealing and delivery was allowed).

This was applied also to an act of criminal publication: 1839, R. v. Lovett, 3 State Tr. 1177, 1181 (seditious libel; proof of handwriting is presumptive evidence of publication).

Conversely, a forging may be presumed from an uttering: U. S. 1899, State v. Williams, 152 Mo. 115, 53 S. W. 424.

Contra: 1897, Bergere v. U. S., 168 U. S. 66, 18 Sup. 4 (possession of papers of grant by a grantee, held not to raise a presumption of delivery by the official having authority to grant).

For the rule as to the presumption of delivery to aid a voluntary deed between family members or confidential parties, see the following: 1905, Henry v. Henry, 215 Ill. 205, 74 N. E. 126 (deed found in the grantor's custody after death); 1905, Coleman v. Coleman, 216 Ill. 261, 74 N. Calhoun*, 216 Ill. 161, 74 N. E. 775 (similar; here a deed to an adult son).

Where a deed is found in the grantor's possession, the presumption is the opposite: 1905, Cribbs v. Walker, 74 Ark. 104, 85 S. W. 244; 1911, Cassidy v. Holland, 77 S. D. 287, 130 N. W. 771; 1916, Tweeddale v. Barnett, 172 Cal. 271, 156 Pac. 483.

Whether possession of a negotiable instrument indorsed raises a presumption of genuineness of the indorsement is another question: Minn. Gen. Prince, 188 Ala. 559, 66 So. 27 (a good example of the perverse readiness of present-day judges to let Law go counter to Justice, as slaves to a barren logic; any one who desires a text for a sermon against the Lawyer's idea of Justice will find this case a rewarding one).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1654 (admissibility of the registry of a deed); the substantive law, and statutory regulations, are here much involved.

So, too, the registration may raise a presumption of execution generally; compare the cases cited ante, §§ 1651, 1676, with the following: 1918, Gardner v. Hughes, 136 Ark. 332, 206 S. W. 678; 1898, Anderson v. Cuthbert, 103 Ga. 767, 30 S. E. 244; 1909, Hansen v. Owens, 132 Ga. 648, 64 S. E. 800 (where a recorded deed bears the purporting signature of one proved to have been an illiterate, but the authority of the illiterate to another person in law might make the signature valid, the presumption of genuineness ceases; on the evidence the jury decides); 1898, Flynn v. Sullivan, 91 Me. 355, 40 Atl. 136.

So also the statutory certificate of acknowledgment alone: 1907, Tucker v. Helgren, 102 Minn. 382, 113 N. W. 912 (giving effect to Rev. L. 1905, § 4710); 1920, Mumpower v. Castle, 128 Va. 1, 104 S. E. 706 (acknowledgment for record, held not to raise a presumption of delivery, on the facts).

Compare here the rule for admissibility of certified copies and certificates of acknowledgment (ante, §§ 1676, 1680).

For the burden of proof under statutes requiring a sworn denial of execution, see post, § 2596, ante, § 2146.

(b) The date of the signing may be presumed from the purporting date of the document,<sup>5</sup> as also the date of the delivery;<sup>6</sup> though this might not always be made a rule of presumption.

(c) The authority of an agent, purporting to execute for his principal, is not presumed.<sup>7</sup>

(d) The official seal on a document is not only evidence of the authenticity of the seal and the authority of the person affixing it, but is commonly held to create a presumption of these facts (ante, §§ 2161–2169), and sometimes even an official signature alone is given the same effect (ante, § 2167). Whether a certified copy of an official or registered document can raise a presumption that the original bore a seal is a question which has led to difference of judicial opinion (ante, § 2108).

(e) Whether a negotiable instrument raises a presumption of a consideration,<sup>8</sup> and whether a subsequent recorded deed raises a presumption of purchase for value without notice of a prior unrecorded deed,<sup>9</sup> and whether the purchase for value of a negotiable instrument raises a presumption as to absence of fraud,<sup>10</sup> are questions which are inextricably entangled with the substantive law.

as sufficient evidence for the jury (ante, §§ 2137-2146); and the language of presumption is also frequently applied by Courts to the same group of circumstances.<sup>1</sup>

§ 2522. Same: (4) Lost Grant; Lost Documents in general. (a) When a specific document not produced is offered to be proved by copy, the fact of loss may be evidenced in various ways, and occasionally the force of a presumption is attributed to some of them (ante, § 1196).

(b) When a title to land is to be proved, the execution, contents, and loss of the appropriate document of grant may be presumed from certain circumstances; the inference resting on a principle of Relevancy already considered (ante, §§ 148, 157). Those circumstances are the long-continued possession of the land (or an appurtenant right) by a party claiming as owner, the non-claim of possible opponents, and such other varying circumstances of the particular case as increase the probability of an origin of grant for the situation as a whole.<sup>1</sup> The situation is in essence the same as that for which the statutes of limitation have been provided. But these statutes did not wholly obviate the occasion for such a presumption, partly because they were at first limited in the scope of rights barred by them and were extended only by gradual stages, and partly because their originally lengthy periods still left room for a presumption based on a shorter period of possession. For appurtenant rights (such as easements or fisheries), and rights transferable at common law by deed of grant without livery, this presumption had formerly a great vogue; and it remained supplementary to statutes of limitation. But the systematic extension of the principle of acquisition by limitation, the reduction of the required possession to short periods, and (in the United States) the practice of compulsory registration of deeds of conveyance, have left little scope for the presumption. How far it had progressed as a rule of presumption is not always clear; in some opinions it appears as merely a rule of sufficiency of evidence for the jury (ante, § 2494), in others it is a genuine presumption (ante, § 2490), and in still others it is apparently a rule of substantive law equivalent to a statute of limitation. Its bearings in a given jurisdiction are more or less dependent on the analogies of the local statutes.<sup>2</sup>

§ 2523. Same: (5) Will (Execution and Revocation). (a) The execution of a will may be evidenced by the testimonial assertion of the attestors, implied from their signatures, even when they themselves cannot be brought to the stand (ante, §§ 1511, 1512). This is often spoken of as a presumption, though probably no more than a rule of sufficiency of evidence is intended.<sup>1</sup>

(b) The revocation of a will by destruction may be inferred, on a principle of Relevancy already considered (ante, § 160), from the fact that it once existed but cannot be found at the testator's death. particularly of a document (ante, § 291), has always been conceded to be a circumstance against him, and in the case of a document, to be some evidence that its contents are as alleged by the first party. But that a rule of presumption can be predicated is doubtful.<sup>1</sup>

§ 2525. Same: (7) Alteration of Documents. It used to be sometimes said that an alteration (i. e., by erasure or interlineation), if apparent on the face of an instrument, placed on the offering party the burden of explanation by evidence. It was also (but inconsistently) said by some that the alteration was to be presumed innocent, i. e., made before execution, unless particular circumstances of suspicion were apparent. For wills, again, it was sometimes maintained that, by exception, alterations should be presumed to have been made after execution. But the modern tendency is to avoid stating the problem in the form of such rules with exceptions, and, in particular, to abandon the so-called presumption against fraud and in favor of innocence, by which the alteration of a deed is presumed to have been made before execution; and to raise no genuine presumption in that regard (ante, § 2485). The first burden would thus be determined by the pleadings; and the question would usually go to the jury, upon all the evidence, whether the party claiming a specific tenor for the document has proved his case; although the second burden (ante, § 2487), i. e., of producing evidence, might be shifted by particular circumstances, under the ruling of the judge as to a sufficiency of evidence or a presumption:<sup>1</sup>

§ 2524. <sup>1</sup> The cases are collected in the places above cited. The following illustrate the use of language of presumption: 1895, Fox v. Mining Co., 108 Cal. 369, 41 Pac. 308 (the method of a trespasser's dealing with ore wrongfully mined was held not to be such as to raise this presumption against him so as to entitle the plaintiff to reckon the value by a particular standard); 1857, Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Ind. 323, 331 (presumption not conclusive); 1856, Hunt v. Collins, 4 Ia. 56, 62; 1918, Union Tanning Co. v. Com., 123 Va. 610, 96 S. the husband of the plaintiff, and had been by him transferred to the defendants' testator, and later transferred by him to the plaintiff in settlement of matters between them. To sustain her allegations the plaintiff offered in evidence a typewritten instrument bearing the signature of the defendants' testator of the following tenor:

"Machias, M., April 11, 1907.

"This is to certify that I have this day, in a settlement of business transacted with Mary E. Foss, conveyed and sold to her a lot of notes for which I have received payment in full. And will guarantee them.

(Signed) Asa T. McRae.

Witness: M. E. McRae."

The defendants had seasonably given written notice to the plaintiff of their denial of the execution of this instrument, and at the trial the subscribing witness, who was one of the defendants' executors, testified that at the time of the execution and delivery of the instrument it did not contain the last four words, "and will guarantee them." There was also evidence upon both sides of this issue. The plaintiff contended that upon this issue the burden of proof was upon the defendants; but the presiding justice instructed the jury as follows: "So the question is narrowed right down to this: Were those words, the final four words in this paper, written on there when Mr. Asa T. McRae signed that paper? And the burden is upon the plaintiff, Mrs. Foss, or her agents, who conduct the suit, to convince you by the evidence that in fact and in truth those words were upon that paper when signed by Asa T. McRae; and has she done so? She claims that she has, and she first relies upon the circumstances that the words are found to be on the paper now. That is prima facie evidence that they were there when it was signed, but only prima facie. By 'prima facie' we mean that, if nothing more appeared, if that was all there was, just the paper itself, with no contradictions, it would be taken as sufficient evidence that they were there when signed; but, it appearing that it is disputed that they were there, and there being some evidence to the contrary, the burden is still upon the plaintiff throughout to convince you by evidence that, upon the whole, you believe the words were there when signed."

SPEAR, J. (after stating the case as above) . . . "The instructions were correct. The plaintiff, under the notice and rule, was required to prove the execution of the instrument upon which she sought to recover. To accomplish this the subscribing witness was put upon the stand. His evidence clearly developed the real issue in the case. When he had testified to the execution of the paper, as we presume he did under the notice, the plaintiff had established a prima facie case, as the words in dispute appeared upon the face of the paper whose execution had been proven. Had the case stopped here, the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover. This is precisely what the presiding justice instructed the jury at this stage of the proceedings. But the case did not stop here. The very witness the plaintiff relied upon to prove execution testified that the disputed words — the substance of the plaintiff's case — were not upon the instrument when he witnessed the defendant's signature. Again, it is apparent, if the case had stopped at this point, the defendant would have been entitled to the verdict, as the testimony of the witness, showing a material alteration, is undisputed, and must therefore prevail. Hence it follows that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff, to entitle her to recover, to proceed further and introduce evidence tending to overcome the testimony of the attesting witness. The issue of alteration now having been raised, it became her duty to assume the burden upon all the evidence of persuading the jury that the words of guaranty were upon the paper when it was executed. Now, while the burden of evidence may be said to have shifted from the plaintiff to the defendant, when she had made out a prima facie case, and from the defendants to the plaintiff, again, when their evidence had overcome the prima facie case, the burden of proof had not changed at all. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff, in the end, upon all the evidence, however it may have shifted from one side to the other, to establish the truth of the allegation upon which she sought to recover, that the instrument contained the disputed words.

"'Burden of proof' and 'burden of evidence' are often confused. The phrase 'burden of proof' is, in fact, more philosophical than practical. It means generally that a plaintiff, however often the evidence shifts, must, upon the whole, persuade the jury, by legal evidence, that his contention is right. The risk of nonpersuasion is all the time upon him. If he fails to persuade, he loses his case. The risk of nonpersuasion is the burden which he must assume."

§ 2526. Gifts and Trusts (Wife's Separate Estate, Child's Advancement, Child's Services, etc.). The pecuniary transactions between members of a family are sometimes made the subject of presumptions, based on the probable motive and intent. It can hardly be said that these rules are uniform, or are universally recognized. Examples of them are the presumption of a gift (instead of a trust or loan) of separate estate handed by a wife to her husband;<sup>1</sup> of an advancement (in anticipation of succession after death), or

P. § 1963, presuming that money paid is money due, held not conclusive); 1921, Dorian v. Dorian, 298 Ill. 24, 131 N. E. 129; 1893, Clark v. Patterson, gift, in a transfer from a parent to a child;<sup>2</sup> of a gift, or mere performance of duty, in services rendered by a child to a parent;<sup>3</sup> or of a contribution to support of a relative under industrial compensation systems, from the mere fact of a payment of money;<sup>4</sup> of community-ownership of property acquired during marriage;<sup>5</sup> of intent to defraud creditors in a transfer to a wife by an insolvent husband;<sup>6</sup> and of fraudulent concealment by a husband in an ante-nuptial agreement barring dower.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>4</sup> 1919, Peabody Coal Co. v. Industrial Commission, 289 Ill. 330, 124 N. E. 603 (to establish the fact of deceased's contribution to relative's support, the mere fact of a payment of money to an aged father raises no presumption; this seems unsound).

Conversely, in the common-law system (as distinguished from community-property system) the very opposite may be presumed, i. e. the husband is presumed to have title to all the property in the wife's possession during coverture: 1916, Johnson v. Ables, 119 Va. 593, 89 S. E. 908.

E. 712 (bill for partition by heirs, making the widow a defendant and alleging an ante-nuptial agreement as barring dower, etc.; held, that on proof by the defendant that the sum accepted was disproportionately small, the presumption of fraudulent concealment is raised, and the husband must show knowledge by the wife of his estate's extent).

The large subject of resulting trusts, presumed where a transfer is made without consideration, under certain circumstances (Ames, Cases on Trusts, 1st ed., 262, 291), belongs also in this place.

§ 2527. <sup>1</sup> These have been carefully examined, for England, in an exhaustive treatise by Sir H. Nicolas (1836), on Adulterine Bastardy; Mr. Hubback has also considered them in his treatise (1840) on Succession, part II, c. 5, and Mr. Hargrave, in his Note 189 to Coke on Littleton.

The best opinions on the policy of the rule are those of Lord Erskine, in the Banbury Peerage Case, infra (at pp. 466, 470), and of Martin, J., in Matthews' Estate, N. Y., infra.

In the Continental civil law, this subject has had a long history: Bonnier, Traité théorique et pratique des preuves, 5th ed. by Larnaude, 1883, § 205; Baudry-Lacantinerie et al., Traité théorique et pratique de droit civil, 2d ed. 1902, vol. III, "Des personnes," § 671, "Recherche de la paternité."

it seems now to occur only when actual intercourse of the husband has been established; i. e., the fact of "non-access" during period of gestation may always be disputed.<sup>2</sup> In the United States, the Courts have probably not all reduced the rule to this attenuated form.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The following are the leading modern English cases: 1810, Banbury Peerage Case, in App. to Le Marchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 435, 489; 1825, Gardner Peerage Case, Le Marchant's Rep. 232; 1827, Morris v. Davies, 3 C. & P. 215, 217; 1903, Gordon v. Gordon, Prob. 141 (the passage from Nicolas approved, and said "to represent accurately the law").

§ 2528. Chastity; Sterility (Child-bearing); Impotency. It is sometimes said that there is a presumption of chastity, or of chaste character.<sup>1</sup> But commonly in such cases the result is really determined by the incidence of the first burden of proof (ante, § 2485); for example, it falls to a party impeaching a witness' or complainant's character for chastity to prove the unchastity, and it falls to a party alleging the seduction of a woman of chaste character to prove that character.<sup>2</sup>

There is in the law of real property a rule by which, for the purpose of dealing with estates of remainder and the like, a woman past some limit of age (usually fifty years or more), is regarded as incapable of bearing children, or before that age will not be considered as incapable; it is often spoken of as a conclusive presumption; but no fixed age is taken as the standard.<sup>3</sup>

Marital impotency of the husband, or of the couple, may also be presumed in certain circumstances.<sup>4</sup>

§ 2529. Identity of Person (from Name, etc.). In regard to the supposed presumption of identity of person from identity of name, three things are to be premised. (a) "A concordance in name alone is always some evidence of identity; and it is not correct to say with the books that, besides proof of the facts in relation to the persons named, their identity must be shown, implying that the agreement of name goes for nothing; whereas it is always a considerable step towards that conclusion."<sup>1</sup> (b) In the greater number of cases the ruling is merely that identity of name, with or without other evidence, is or is not sufficient evidence to go to the jury or sufficient to support a verdict, on the general principle of sustaining the duty of producing evidence (ante, § 2494). The oddness of the name, the size of the district and length of the time within which the persons are shown to have coexisted, and other circumstances, affect this result differently in different cases. (c) Often a genuine presumption is enforced by the Courts, in the sense that the duty of producing evidence to the contrary is thrown upon the opponent (ante, § 2487). But these rulings cannot be said to attach a presumption to a definite and constant set of facts; they apply the presumption upon the circumstances of the particular case.

It is thus necessary, in ascertaining the state of the law in a given jurisdiction, to examine the facts in each case. There is, moreover, some difference in the strictness with which the evidence of identity is treated for different sorts of documents or persons. There was perhaps a greater traditional strictness shown in dealing with the identity of a person named as the signer

Evans*, 4 Q. B. 626, 632 (Lord Denman, L. C. J.: "In cases where no particular circumstance tends to raise a question as to the party being the same, even identity of name is something from which an inference may be drawn. If the name were only John Smith, which is of very frequent occurrence, there might not be much ground for drawing the conclusion"; Williams, J.: "That it is a person of the same name is some evidence till another party is pointed out who might have been the acceptor"); 1844, R. v. Dalmias, 1 Cox Cr. C. 96 (conversations between the deceased and one alleged to be the defendant were received, after "a correspondence in dress and in general appearance" had been shown); 1844, R. v. O'Connell, 1 Cox Cr. 405 (to prove against "C. G. Duffy, late of the Rathmines," an admission in writing of the authorship of a newspaper signed by "C. G. Duffy of the Rathmines and Trinity-street," it was held that "some evidence of identity must be given"; but under St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 76, § 8, concerning newspaper publishers, the admission was subsequently held receivable without such proof).

CANADA: Man. 1894, Simpson v. Stewart, 10 Man. 176, 181 (grantee and testator); Ont. 1859, Wilson v. Thorpe, 18 U. C. Q. B. 443 (affidavit in malicious arrest); 1861, Nicholson v. Burkholder, 21 U. C. Q. B. 108 (grantor and grantee); 1870, Brown v. Livingstone, 29 U. C. Q. B. 520 (grantee and ancestor); 1873, Wallbridge v. Jones, 33 U. C. Q. B. 613 (grantee and ancestor); 1875, Gallivan v. O'Donnell, 36 U. C. Q. B. 250 (same).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1892, Taussig's Ex'rs v. Glean, 2 C. C. A. 314, 51 Fed. 381 (identity of a stock subscriber); 1905, Fowler v. Stebbins, 136 Fed. 365, C. C. A. 209 (parties to a judgment); 1906, McInerney v. U. S., 145 Fed. 729, 739, C. C. A. (immigrant); 1918, Lee's Will, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 699 (inheritance; the Chinese name "Alla Lee," presumed to signify the same person); Alabama: 1913, Swindall v. Ford, 184 Ala. 137, 63 So. 651 ("B. M. Ford" presumed the same, in a deed acknowledgment); 1921, McMillan v. Aiken, 205 Ala. 35, 88 So. 135 ("Baudin," "Beaudin," and "Baudan," in an ancient deed);

Arkansas: 1899, Driver v. Lanier, 66 Ark. 126, 49 S. W. 816 ("Felix R. Lanier," in two actions, presumed the same person);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1693, par. 25 ("identity of person from identity of name" is presumed); 1897, Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 51 Pac. 549 (mortgagee and notary, "W. H. Lee," in the same county, presumed the same); 1900, Woolsey v. Williams, 128 Cal. 552, 61 Pac. 670 ("William Frederick Williams"; two persons presumed the same, on the facts); 1906, People v. Wong Sang Lung, 3 Cal. App. 221, 84 Pac. 843 (not presumed where there are other persons of the same name in the neighborhood); 1908, Napa S. Hospital v. Dasso, 153 Cal. 698, 96 Pac. 355 ("Tasso" and "Dasso" presumed the same, in an order of hospital commitment);

Columbia (Dist.): 1893, Scott v. Hyde, 21 D. C. 531, 535 (grantee and ancestor; John Willis, presumed the same, there being no evidence of another person); 1902, Crandall v. Lynch, 20 D. C. App. 74, 84 (deeds);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5765 ("concordance of name alone" is some evidence of identity); 1883, Millery v. Hamilton, 71 Ga. 720 (identity of a legatee said to have survived the testatrix; sameness of name, his conversation and knowledge of family affairs, etc., held sufficient under the circumstances); 1890, Swicard v. Hooks, 85 Ga. 580, 11 S. E. 863 (deed);

Illinois: 1864, Brown v. Metz, 33 Ill. 339 (identity of name of grantor and succeeding grantee; identity of person presumed); 1884, Heacock v. Lubukee, 108 Ill. 641 (a plaintiff relying on a title established in a former suit; identity shown by a correspondence of all the other features of the suits except that the name of the plaintiff was "Lubeke" instead of "Lubukee"); 1921, Drda v. Drda, 298 Ill. 278, 131 N. E. 595 (grantee, father and son having the same name);

Indiana: 1883, Aultman v. Timm, 93 Ind. 158 (identity of a maker of a note and an intestate whose property the defendants had received; correspondence of name held 'prima facie' sufficient); 1896, Mode v. Beasley, 143 Ind. 306, 42 N. E. 727 (the presumption not held to apply where J. S. testified that he had not signed a petition which bore his name, but two or three thousand in all had signed and they were not so classified as to "reduce the probability of any persons of the same name");

Iowa: 1889, Gilman v. Sheets, 78 Ia. 499, 502, 43 N. W. 299 (identity of name of grantee and next grantor 'prima facie' sufficient);

Kentucky: 1805, Nicholas v. Lansdale, Litt. Sel. C. 21 (to show the identity of S. N., a plaintiff, said to be dead, the fact of the death of one S. N. who had sailed from Baltimore and died in Madagascar, was held insufficient); 1847, Cobb v. Haynes, 8 B. Monr. 137, 138 (William Haynes, defendant and surety on a bond, presumed the same on the facts); 1820, Cates v. Loftus, 3 A. K. Marsh. 202 (two land-certificates in the same name; identity presumed);

Massachusetts: 1862, Webber v. Davis, 5 All.

393, 396 (magistrate's surname with initials of the first names, sufficient); 1899, United States N. Bank v. Venner, 172 Mass. 449, 52 N. E. 543 ("United States National Bank" and "United States National Bank of New York, N. Y.," sufficiently shown the same); 1899, Dolan v. M. R. F. Life Ass'n, 173 Mass. 197, 53 N. E. 398 (identity of name, with description of person, 'prima facie' evidence of identity of person);

Michigan: 1881, Campbell v. Wallace, 46 Mich. 320, 9 N. W. 432 (foreign judgment; identity of names sufficient);

Minnesota: 1888, State v. Sannerud, 38 Minn. 229, 36 N. W. 447 ("Bert Samrud" and "Bernt Sannerud," in a liquor license, sufficient evidence on the facts);

Missouri: 1833, Birch v. Rogers, 3 Mo. 227 (assignment of a note; "Charles R. Rogers" and "C. R. Rogers," some evidence of identity); 1853, Flournoy v. Warden, 17 Mo. 435, 441 (title-deeds of "John Smith"; sameness of names sufficient to go to the jury, and sufficient to create a presumption, semble, if no evidence is opposed; the mere fact that there is another person of the same name in the region does not prevent the question from going to the jury); 1853, Gitt v. Watson, 18 Mo. 274, 276 (title-documents; sameness of names puts on the opponent the duty of "showing" that they are not the same); 1885, Long v. McDow, 87 Mo. 197, 202 (grantee and ancestor, "Ira Nash" and "H. San Ari," presumed the same on the facts); 1904, Martin v. Brand, 182 Mo. 116, 81 S. W. 443 (land-patent entry);

Nebraska: 1892, Rupert v. Penner, 35 Nebr. 587, 594, 53 N. W. 598 ("Arch. T. Finn" and "Archibald T. Finn," in a deed, presumed the same);

New Hampshire: 1849, Jones v. Parker, 20 N. H. 31 (action on a contract; there were two persons of the name of the promisor; the correspondence of the defendant's name, and other circumstances, held sufficient to "put the burden on the defendant" and sustain a verdict for the plaintiff); 1854, Mooers v. Bunker, 29 N. H. 420, 432 (title; "a jury is not at liberty to presume that a person of even so peculiar a name as Timothy Mooers is the same person as a man of the same name");

New Jersey: 1849, West v. State, 22 N. J. L. 212, 238 (whether a witness' name was forged; testimony that the "C. S." was not the writing of a certain C. S., received, its weight depending on the subsequent evidence of identity); 1899, Green v. Heritage, 63 N. J. 455, 43 Atl. 698 (judgment debtors, presumed the same);

New York: 1816, Jackson v. Goes, 13 Johns. 518 (land-patent to "Peter Schultze," said to be the plaintiff's lessor; the sameness of name taken as 'prima facie' evidence of identity of person, semble; evidence admitted to show that the patent was really given to another than the plaintiff's lessor); 1825, Jackson v. King, 5 Cow. 237 (land-patent to "William Appel," said to be the ancestor of the plaintiff's lessor; per Curiam: "I have never known a case where a plaintiff having the name of a patentee or grantee was required to go farther than the production of his deed or patent"; the defendant having "the burthen of disproving" identity; semble, that to show the existence of another person of the same name would lift the defendant's burden of going forward); 1828, Jackson v. Cody, 9 Cow. 140, 148 (land-patentee "William Patterson" and grantor "William Petterson," presumed the same, no other person of the same name and description being shown to exist; so also for "John Blanchard"; but an intimation is made that mere identity of name creates a presumption, which stands till another person of that name is shown not only to have existed but to have been the patentee); 1830, Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 283 (an obligor of a bond and a subscribing witness, of the same name, not presumed identical); 1838, Kimball v. Davis, 19 Wend. 437, 442 ("Francis Legge," patentee and grantor, presumed the same); 1839, Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. 561, semble (here the name was "S. A. Cunningham" in New York City, and the defendant was Samuel A. Cunningham of that place; the lack of other persons of the name must be shown); 1840, Brown v. Kimball, 25 Wend. 259 (same as Kimball v. Davis, supra, on error from the Supreme Court; judgment reversed, 11 to 9 apparently on the ground that while the sameness of name raises a presumption, yet suspicious circumstances about the documents, or other evidence, may remove the presumption, and that in this case there was not sufficient evidence of identity to sustain the burden of proof); 1858, Hatcher v. Rocheleau, 18 N. Y. 87, 92 ("Joseph Rocheleau," defendant in the case and in a foreign judgment, presumed the same person, in the absence of evidence of two such persons); North Dakota: 1915, State v. Kilmer, 31 N. D. 442, 153 N. W. 1089 ("H. E. Kilmer" in a liquor license); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 799, par. 25 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, par. 25); Pennsylvania: 1845, Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Pa. St. 182 ("Jacob Sailor," said to be the defendant's grantor; Gibson, C. J.: "Identity of name is ordinarily, but not always, 'prima facie' evidence of personal identity"; and because of the lapse of time, and in spite of the oddness of the name, he required "some preliminary evidence, however small," for going to the jury); 1854, Balbec v. Donaldson, 2 Pa. 459 ("Mrs. Eliza Braceland," said to be the plaintiff's mother-in-law; case given to the jury with additional evidence, and no rule laid down); 1865, Philadelphia v. Miller, 49 Pa. St. 440, 448 (evidence for the identity of assessed land); 1866, Burford

v. McCue, 53 Pa. 427, 431 ("Patrick O'Neil" and "R. P. O'Neil" as grantee and grantor; the identity held not sufficiently evidenced to go to the jury); 1867, Lyman v. Philadelphia, 56 Pa. 488, 499, 503 (like Philadelphia v. Miller); 1868, Glass v. Gilbert, 58 Pa. 266, 290 (same; the question how uncertain a description must be to avoid an assessment is the main one in these preceding three cases); 1871, McConeghy v. Kirk, 68 Pa. 200 ("John J. Kirk" as indorser of a note to "J. J. Kirk"; the correspondence held 'prima facie' evidence of identity); 1871, Brotherline v. Hammond, 69 Pa. 128, 133 ("Daniel Kladder" and "Daniel Kritler"; the identity not sufficiently evidenced to go to the jury); 1884, Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577, 601 ("Conrad Gehr," claimed as identical with the defendant's ancestor in 1739; the rule in Sailor v. Hertzogg, supra, approved; here the lapse of time was held to require additional evidence before going to the jury); 1895, Mason F. J. Co. v. Paine, 166 Pa. 352, 31 Atl. 98 (one uttering an admission must be identified); Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 334, par. 23 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, par. 25); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); Rhode Island: 1852, Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319 ("Bridget Flynn," said to be the defendant's wife; mere sameness of name not sufficient to show that the person was unavailable through interest); 1897, Liscomb v. Eldredge, 20 R. I. 335, 38 Atl. 1052 ("Harriet Richmond Eldredge," presumed identical with "Harriet R. Eldredge"); Texas: 1921, Dittman v. Cornelius, — Tex. —, 234 S. W. 882 ("Sheldon E. Bell" and "E. S. Bell," in deeds of land); Vermont: 1857, Bogue v. Bigelow, 29 Vt. 179, 182 ("Aaron I. Boge," said to be the plaintiff's ancestor "Aaron Jordan Bogue"; Redfield, C. J.: "In tracing titles . . . it is always regarded as 'prima facie' evidence of identity; while in cases involving charges of crime . . . some further proof is required"); 1873, Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14, 18 (grantee and grantor, E. G., but living in different States and thirty years apart; "parties in successive deeds constituting a chain of title, of the same name, are presumptively the same person"); Virginia: 1847, Pollard v. Lively, 4 Gratt. 73, 76 ("Benjamin Pollard," grantee and ancestor, presumed the same; evidence of the existence of two persons, received in rebuttal); West Virginia: 1897, Sweetland v. Porter, 43 W. Va. 189, 27 S. E. 352 ("John S. Sweetland" and "J. S. Sweetland," presumed the same); Wisconsin: 1902, Sandberg v. State, 113 Wis. 578, 89 N. W. 505 ("probably neither rule is universal"); Wyoming: 1916, Harris v. State, 23 Wyo. 487, 153 Pac. 881 (cattle brand: "Curtis E. Griffin" and "Curtis E. Griffin, Jr.").

are more frequently found enforcing a genuine presumption. Beyond this no general rules or tendencies seem traceable; except that where the two persons of the same name are father and son, the name is commonly presumed to have been used of the father.<sup>6</sup>

The identity of objects or persons from clothes, features, marks, and the like, may become the subject of a real presumption, though rarely. What is usually signified is either that the evidence is on the whole sufficient to go to the jury (ante, § 2494), or that specific facts are admissible.<sup>7</sup>

§ 2530. Continuity: (1) in general (Ownership, Possession, Residence, Insanity, etc.). It is often said that when a person, or object, or relation, or state of things, is shown to have existed at a given time, its continuance is presumed. In reality, however, a genuine rule of presumption is seldom found; the rulings usually declare merely that certain facts are admissible,<sup>1</sup> or that they are sufficient evidence for the jury's finding (ante, § 2494).<sup>2</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Eng. 1849, Stebbing v. Spicer, 8 C. B. 827 (promissory note payable to J. H., and indorsed by J. H. to the plaintiff; plea that J. H. did not indorse it; there were two persons, father and son, of that name; the indorsement was by the son; upon the question whether the real payee was the father or the son, held that the defendant could employ the presumption that it was the father, and the plaintiff had the burden of giving evidence that it was the son, but that there was some evidence to go to the jury upon that point); U. S. 1878, Graves v. Colwell, 90 Ill. 612, 615 (ejectment by one claiming through T. C. Sr. against one claiming through T. C. Jr., the grantee in the deed being described as T. C.; held, that the presumption gave the plaintiff a 'prima facie' case, that the defendant had removed it by counter-evidence, and that the case was properly before the jury, but in their doubt the legal presumption should prevail); 1921, Drda v. Drda, 298 Ill. 278, 131 N. E. 595 (cited supra, n. 5); 1838, State v. Vittum, 9 N. H. 519 (indictment for adultery with L. W.; the father presumed). Similarly, the following rule has been declared: 1873, Cross v. Martin, 46 Vt. 14, 18 (grantor and grantee of a deed, E. G., and E. G., Jr., presumed to be father and son).

ENGLAND: 1858, R. v. Britton, 1 F. & F. 354, Watson, B. (highway robbery; correspondence of boot-impressions, being "the main evidence," held not sufficient).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1853, Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44, 48, 68 (that shoes taken from the feet of the horse ridden by the defendant on the morning of the killing "seemed to fit in every particular" the tracks near the place of killing, admitted); Mass. 1867, Com. v. Bentley, 97 Mass. 552 (identity of a bottle of liquor sent and a bottle received and testified to; similarity as to size, wrappings, seal, label, and time of sending, held sufficiently shown to authenticate the bottle testified to); 1876, Com. v. Tolliver, 119 Mass. 312, 316 (identity of bank bills charged as stolen; partial correspondence with bills found on the defendant, held sufficient to go to the jury); 1883, Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 534 (in authenticating a cipher-letter alleged to have been written by the defendant, the fact that his cipher-key fitted it, and that it contained expressions peculiar to the defendant and his situation, were regarded as sufficient); 1889, Com. v. Finnerty, 148 Mass. 165, 19 N. E. 215 (authenticating beer-bottles found in a yard as the defendant's; similarity of marks to those of bottles within her building, and absence of liquor in adjacent houses, sufficient); Mich. 1895, People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367, 65 N. W. 216 (the condition and doings of one of three robbers, of whom defendant was alleged to be one, after the robbery, admitted as a means of identifying the defendant); Tex. 1920, Wayland v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. App. 522, 218 S. W. 1065 (burglary and larceny of automobile casings; identity of casings not sufficiently evidenced).

The rules of admissibility of evidence of Identity have been already considered (ante, §§ 410-416).

§ 2530. <sup>1</sup> The rulings plainly of this sort are placed under the various topics of Relevancy (ante, §§ 51-464).

Ownership (compare § 382, ante): 1894, Brown v. Castellaw, 33 Fla. 204, 214, 14 So. 822 (title by tax-deed, presumed to continue two years later); 1898, Coleman & Burden Co. v. Rice, 105 Ga. 163, 31 S. E. 424 (title sometime previous to a judgment, presumed to continue); 1901, State v. Dexter, 115 Ia. 678, 87 N. W. 417 (personalty; ownership not presumed at an earlier time); 1893, Lind v. Lind, 53 Minn. 48, 54 N. W. 934 (ownership of land in 1874, presumed to continue to death in 1888); 1893, Chapman v. Taylor, 136 N. Y. 663, 32 N. E. 1063 (ownership of bonds, presumed to continue from 1881); 1920, Gandia v. Porto Rico Fert. Co., 28 P. R. 516 (title to shares of stock).

§ 2531. Same: (2) Life and Death. (a) It is not possible to say that there is a genuine presumption of life, with a uniform application. The state of the pleadings will show whose duty it is to prove life at a certain time; and upon his showing life at a preceding time, the Court will usually leave it to the jury to say whether he has proved his case, but may sometimes apply a genuine presumption, shifting the duty of producing evidence, upon the circumstances of the particular case.<sup>1</sup>

Possession (compare § 382, ante): 1893, Hollingsworth v. Walker, 98 Ala. 543, 13 So. 6 (possession of land, presumed to continue during a gap of two years).

Authority (compare § 377, ante): 1893, Hensel v. Maas, 94 Mich. 563, 568, 54 N. W. 381 (authority as agent to sell land six months before, presumed to continue).

Insanity (compare §§ 233, 1671, 2500, ante): Fed. 1815, Lessee v. Hoge, 1 Pet. 183 (general insanity, presumed to continue); Cal. 1895, People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 48, 39 Pac. 204 (different phrasings cited); Fla. 1892, Armstrong v. State, 30 Fla. 170, 204, 11 So. 618 (permanent insanity, presumed to continue); Ill. 1894, Taylor v. Pegram, 151 Ill. 106, 119, 37 N. E. 837 (similar); Ind. 1904, Branstrator v. Crow, 162 Ind. 362, 69 N. E. 668; Ia. 1903, Kirsher v. Kirsher, 120 Ia. 337, 94 N. W. 846; Kan. 1896, Rodgers v. Rodgers, 56 Kan. 483, 43 Pac. 779 (the presumption of insanity from an adjudication for commitment in 1883, held overthrown in 1886 by the other evidence); Oh. 1905, State v. Austin, 71 Oh. 317, 73 N. E. 218.

Residence (compare §§ 89, 94, 377, 382, ante): Ill. 1920, Hoy v. Kuhn, 295 Ill. 33, 128 N. E. 829 (number of village voters in April and in August); Ia. 1893, Botna v. S. Bank v. Silver C. Bank, 87 Ia. 479, 54 N. W. 472 (residence presumed to continue; here, for nine days); Me. 1872, Ripley v. Hebron, 60 Me. 379, 393 (in establishing a continuous residence of a pauper for five years, as legally required, an interval of some weeks' absence appeared; held, that the burden of explaining this absence remained on the party alleging the settlement); Mass. 1841, Kilburn v. Bennett, 3 Metc. 199 (assumpsit for taxes; residence before the assessment date being shown, it was the defendant's duty to show a removal before the date arrived); N. Dak. 1910, Holtan v. Beck, 20 N. D. 5, 125 N. W. 1048 (residence for six months in the same precinct, not presumed on the facts); Pa. 1893, Price v. Price, 156 Pa. 617, 626, 27 Atl.

291 (domicile presumed to continue fifteen years till death); Vt. 1877, Rixford v. Miller, 49 Vt. 319 (plea of Statute of Limitations; reply, non-residence of defendant; evidence offered of non-residence at the time of origin of the cause of action; the duty held to fall on the defendant to show cessation of non-residence); 1907, State v. Jackson, 79 Vt. 504, 65 Atl. 657 (domicile of an ancestor).

Sundry instances (compare § 437, ante): Eng. 1840, Scales v. Key, 11 A. & E. 819, 822 (a custom of election shown to exist in 1689, presumed in law to continue, there being no evidence to the contrary); U. S. 1919, Davis' Will, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 844 (non-marital status, presumed to continue); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1963, par. 32 (it is presumed "that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with a thing of that nature"); 1863, Murphy v. Orr, 32 Ill. 489 (a decree of chancery presumed to continue in force, until shown to be overturned); 1898, McCraw v. McGraw, 171 Mass. 146, 50 N. E. 526 (divorce; confirmed habits of intoxication five years before, presumed to continue); 1848, Mullen v. Pryor, 12 Mo. 307 (action by an indorsee against an indorser, alleging insolvency of the maker of the note; upon a showing of insolvency at maturity, the presumption of continuance applied); Or. Laws 1920, § 799, par. 33 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 334, par. 30 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); 1905, Friend v. Yahr, 126 Wis. 291, 104 N. W. 997 (possession of documents, presumed to continue).

§ 2531. <sup>1</sup> ENGLAND: 1802, Wilson v. Hodges, 2 East 313 (death of a debtor before return of the 'capias': Ellenborough, L. C. J., said that "where the issue is upon the life or death of a person once shown to be living, the proof of the fact lies on the party who asserts the death"); 1869, Phené's Trusts, L. R. 5 Ch. D. 139 (whether N. P. M., a legatee, had survived the testator, F. P., so as to be entitled to share in the estate; F. P. died on Jan. 5, 1861, and N. P. M. was last heard of in New York on June 16, 1860; held that the burden of proving N. P. M.'s life on Jan. 5, 1861, was on his representative, and was here not sustained); 1905, Re Aldersey, 2 Ch. 181 (Keke-wich, J.: "Phené's Trusts is not precisely this case, though it is not very far from it");

(b) But there is a genuine presumption, of universal acceptance (on the principle of § 158, ante), to aid proof of death. It is generally said to arise from the fact of the person's continuous absence from home, for seven years, unheard of by the persons who would naturally have received news from the absentee. The phrasings differ, however; sometimes the absence is stated to be from the jurisdiction; sometimes the element of non-receipt of news is not noticed;<sup>2</sup> moreover, the practice is not uniform in defining the precise point, or combination of facts, at which the burden of producing evidence shifts to the opponent. But the general presumption is unquestioned.<sup>3</sup> The rule of the presumption, however, extends merely to the fact of

St. 1915, 5 & 6 Geo. V. c. 70, Execution of Trusts (War Facilities) Amendment, § 5 (a trustee or infant to whom the Act applies is to be "presumed to remain alive until definite news of his death has been received or such death has been presumed by a court of competent jurisdiction").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1844, Gilleland v. Martin, 3 McLean, 490 (declaring a real presumption upon proof of life within seven years); Cal. 1916, Wilcox v. Wilcox, 171 Cal. 770, 155 Pac. 95 (annulment of marriage); Ill. 1867, Whiting v. Nicholl, 46 Ill. 230 (instructive case; apparently sanctioning a real presumption); 1900, Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. Keegan, 185 Ill. 70, 56 N. E. 1088 (deed by E., of June 15, 1865, under power of attorney from A. dated April 3, 1860; A. presumed to have been alive at the former date); 1919, Keystone Steel & Wire Co. v. Industrial Commission, 289 Ill. 587, 124 N. E. 542 (the existence of a dependent beneficiary in August, 1915, being material, the fact that the deceased's wife and mother were alive in Servia in November, 1912, was held not to raise a presumption of their survival till August, 1915).

ENGLAND: 1763, Rowe v. Hasland, 1 W. Bl. 404, Lord Mansfield, C. J. (ejectment; to prove a branch of a family to be extinct, evidence was received, as to a person alive sixty years before, that he "has not been heard of for many years"; which would be sufficient "to put the opposite party upon proof that he still exists"); 1802, Bailey v. Hammond, 7 Ves. Jr. 590 (bequest of money on the death of a brother, who had not been heard of for twenty years; bequest paid over); 1805, Doe v. Jesson, 6 East 80, 84 (ejectment; the plaintiff's lessor claimed under a deceased brother; she was required by law to enter within ten years of his death and the removal of her disability; he was last heard from in 1778; the presumption of death applied in 1785; her disability ceased in 1792; thus an ejectment in 1804 was too late; but it was apparently not held necessary for the jury to apply the presumption; the case at most decides that the burden of conviction, not the duty of going forward, was on the lessor; there was "fair ground for the jury to presume" death after seven years from being last heard of, in the absence of later evidence of life); 1821, Doe v. Deakin, 4 B. & Ald. 433 (ejectment; T., born in 1759, had been absent from his relatives from 1787 to 1804, when he returned and shortly departed again; since then he had not been seen in the neighborhood; the jury were told that this was "'prima facie' evidence from which they might presume T.'s death"; the defendant contended "that this was not even 'prima facie' evidence"; per Curiam: "The evidence unanswered was sufficient to found a presumption of T.'s death," approving the seven-year presumption laid down in Doe v. Jesson); 1844, Watson v. England, 14 Sim. 28 (a young person abroad, not presumed dead after seven years); 1844, Dowley v. Winfield, 14 Sim. 277 (presumption in a similar case, apparently enforced); 1877, Prudential Assurance Co. v. Edmonds, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 487 (presumption applied; the element as to "not being heard from," examined).

IRELAND: 1911, Allman v. M'Cabe, 2 Ire. 398 (a lease made in 1822 for the term of 21 years after the death of the survivor of three persons, D. C., then aged 11, B. T. aged 15, R. F. aged 9; B. T. was proved to have died in 1888; a witness testified that he had lived in the town for 18 years prior to 1888 and had inquired for D. C. and R. F. but never heard of them; the trial took place in 1910; held, that D. C. and R. F. were presumed to have died before 1888, and that the 21 years began to run in 1888).

CANADA: 1908, Re Ancient Order of United Workmen and M. A. Marshall, 18 Ont. L. R. 129 (husband disappearing after entering a sailboat); 1914, Wilcox v. Wilcox, 16 D. L. R. 491, Man. (conveyance to wife; presumption not applied to a person absent 16 years, on the facts); 1914, Hedge v. Morrow, 20 D. L. R. 561, Ont. (time of death, in an action for recovery of land under a will); 1914, Duffield v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 20 D. L. R. 467, Ont. (time of running of statute of limitations on life insurance claims, under R. S. Ont. 1914, c. 183, § 165); 1915, Re Pinsonneault, 25 D. L. R. 790, Ont. (insurance policy). The following statute is peculiar: Ont. St. 1920, c. 36, § 3 (administration of an absentee's property; an absentee is "one who, having had his usual place of residence or domicile in Ontario, has disappeared, whose whereabouts is unknown, and as to whom there is no knowledge as to whether he is alive or dead").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1894, Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 41 (here the presumption was not allowed to prevent the overthrow of a probate decree based on it, where the supposed deceased afterwards returned alive); 1902, Fidelity Mutual L. Ass'n v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. 662; 1912, Fuller v. New York Life Ins. Co., C. C. A., 199 Fed. 897 (excellent opinion by J. B. McPherson, J.); Code § 10233 (claims filed under the pension laws);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 728 (seven years);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4111 (absence from the State "for five years successively" raises a presumption);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1963, par. 26 (it is presumed "that a person not heard from in seven years is dead");

Colorado: 1915, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Holek, 59 Colo. 416, 151 Pac. 916; 1921, Modern Woodmen v. White, 70 Colo. 207, 199 Pac. 965 (presumption does not apply unless there has been diligent search to ascertain the person's whereabouts);

Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 252 (seven years); 1897, Posey v. Hanson, 10 D. C. App. 497, 506;

Delaware: Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 128 (on absence from the State "for seven years together, and no evident proof be made of his life in any inquest," "he shall be accounted dead");

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3714 (proceedings to declare a person dead and distribute his estate);

Georgia: 1898, Watson v. Adams, 103 Ga. 733, 30 S. E. 574; 1909, Hansen v. Owens, 132 Ga. 648, 64 S. E. 800; 1920, Rudolph v. Brown, 150 Ga. 147, 103 S. E. 251 (inheritance; there must have been diligent inquiry without results in news);

Illinois: 1867, Whiting v. Nicholl, 46 Ill. 230 (dower); 1897, Hitz v. Algreen, 170 Ill. 60, 48 N. E. 1068 (mere absence is not sufficient; diligent inquiry at the last place of residence and among those likely to hear from him is necessary); 1910, Kennedy v. Modern Woodmen, 243 Ill. 560, 90 N. E. 1084 (neither a mere rumor that the alleged deceased has been alive in the interval, nor the party-claimant's failure to follow up such a rumor by inquiry, suffices to prevent the operation of the presumption);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 3137 (wills; presumption after five years' absence from usual place of business and departure to parts unknown, upon publication of notice in newspaper, etc.); St. 1915, Mar. 3, p. 98 (similar, for trusts under wills); Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2748 (administration of absentee's estate; presumption arises in 5 years);

Iowa: 1897, Sherrod v. Ewell, 104 Ia. 253, 73 N. W. 493; 1909, Magness v. Modern Woodmen, 146 Ia. 1, 123 N. W. 169 (here the rule is stated rather too strictly for raising the presumption); 1918, Richey v. Sovereign Camp, 184 Ia. 10, 168 N. W. 276;

Kansas: 1905, Modern Woodmen v. Gerdorn, 72 Kan. 391, 82 Pac. 1100 (interesting opinion by Burch, J., emphasizing the necessity of inquiry and of consequent lack of news);

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1639 (the fact of a resident's leaving the State and not returning for seven successive years, raises a presumption of death); § 1609 (owner of property in the State, when "not known to be living for seven successive years, and no account whatever can be given" of him, is presumed to have died without heirs and his property vests in the State); 1900, Mutual B. L. I. Co. v. Martin, 108 Ky. 11, 55 S. W. 694 (the seven years dates from the last hearing from the person); 1918, Prudential Ins. Co. v. Gratz, 182 Ky. 218, 206 S. W. 299 (there must have been diligent search); 1921, Glasscock v. Weare, 192 Ky. 654, 234 S. W. 216 (inheritance; Stats. § 1639, applied);

Louisiana: 1906, Iberia Cypress Co. v. Thorgeson, 116 La. 218, 40 So. 682 (disappearance for seven years, not sufficient on the facts, under the peculiar language of the Louisiana Civil Code, art. 70; the opinion ignores the reasoning of the common-law rule); Massachusetts: 1831, King v. Fowler, 11 Pick. 302 (writ of right, one claiming under S. K. produced deeds from one of the six children of S. K., and offered evidence that the other five had not been heard of for over seventy years; the jury were instructed that the plaintiff was "entitled to recover"; held, that "the legal result was such as the jury have found," "especially as there was no evidence to rebut that evidence," on the part of the defendant); 1840, Loring v. Steineman, 1 Mete. 204, 211 (administration of an estate); 1881, Bowditch v. Jordan, 131 Mass. 321 (a plaintiff proving title through D.; evidence that D. sailed for foreign parts in 1840, and nothing had since been heard of the vessel, "justified and required the inference of her death");

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1914, Hem. § 1574; 1896, Manley v. Patterson, 73 Miss. 417, 19 So. 236 (rule held not to apply to children of seven years and under who were under the control of adults and had not volition as to their movements);

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, §§ 264, 5396; 1905, Chapman v. Kullman, 191 Mo. 237, 89 S. W. 924 (statute applied);

Nebraska: 1914, McLaughlin v. Sovereign Camp, 97 Nebr. 71, 149 N. W. 112 (here the death from and after the end of the period; it is not understood to specify anything further, — for example, the time of death within that period,<sup>4</sup>

Court rather loosely refers to the presumption as depending "largely upon the circumstances and conditions of each particular case";

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Death, § 1 (presumption after seven years, wherever death may come in question); St. 1911, Apr. 27, c. 255 (administration of absentee's estate; seven years' absence raises a presumption of death);

New York: St. 1918, c. 318, amending C. C. P. § 841 (administration of estate of absentee); C. C. P. 1877, § 841, C. P. A. 1920, § 341 (remaining without the United States, or absenting himself anywhere, for seven years together, is sufficient); § 1065 (unknown heirs to realty unclaimed; presumption upon 25 years after payment of proceeds to State);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7921;

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 799, par. 26; § 1309-5 (determination of heirship); § 1309-7 (administration of absent person's estate);

Pennsylvania: St. 1917, June 7, § 6, Dig. 1920, § 8409, Decedents' Est. (seven years' absence); 1897, Francis v. Francis, 180 Pa. 644, 37 Atl. 120 (W. had gone to live in a colony in Patagonia, and was there heard from in 1876, but not since; held, that no absence from his last known domicile was shown, and thus a party claiming that his wife in Pennsylvania in 1884 was single, at the time of making a will, had raised no presumption); 1917, Maley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 258 Pa. 73, 101 Atl. 911;

Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 334, par. 24 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, par. 26); § 656 (for administering an estate, 15 years' absence); Civ. C. §§ 184, 191 (similar to P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 3177, 3190);

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 3177, 3190 (after 7 years' absence, the presumptive heirs may be put in possession; after another 15 years, or after 90 years from the absentee's birth, the Court shall declare "that he is presumably dead" and distribute the property); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2729 (where issue of property depends on life of a person, and he "remains without the U. S., or absents himself in the State or elsewhere, for seven years together, such person must be accounted naturally dead," unless sufficient proof of life be made);

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 5707 (seven years); 1903, Latham v. Tombs, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 270, 73 S. W. 1060 (absence of news is essential);

Virginia: Code 1919, § 6239 (the departure from the State and failure to return within seven successive years, by a person residing in the State, raises a presumption of death);

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 86, § 12, as added by St. 1917, c. 27 (administration of absentees' estate; seven years); c. 130, § 44

(like the Virginia statute); 1898, Boggs v. Harper, 45 W. Va. 554, 31 S. E. 943;

Wisconsin: 1900, Wisconsin Trust Co. v. Wisconsin M. & F. I. Co. Bank, 105 Wis. 464, 81 N. W. 642; 1909, Miller v. Sovereign Camp, 140 Wis. 505, 122 N. W. 1126 (diligent search is not necessary).

<sup>4</sup> The effect of this rule as developed in later cases, is to direct the jury that they should not from mere absence presume death at any earlier time, unless the facts show "that the individual was at some particular date in contact with a specific peril as a circumstance to quicken the operation of time." But in a few States this rule is repudiated, and the jury is left free to reach a conclusion of earlier death on any circumstances:

ENGLAND: 1833, Doe v. Nepean, 5 B. & Ad. 86; 1837, Nepean v. Knight, 2 M. & W. 894 (ejectment, for property held by long adverse possession, the plaintiff claiming under M. K.; the question being whether the plaintiff's lessor had begun the action, under St. 3 & 4 W. IV, c. 27, within twenty years since his right accrued, i. e. since the death of M. K., it was held that the plaintiff had the burden of evidencing this; M. K. having gone to America in 1806 or 1807, and being last heard from by a letter received in May, 1807, and the suit having been begun on Jan. 18, 1834, less than seventeen years later, it was held that there was no presumption that M. K. died not before the end of the seven years, or died at any specific time; and that the plaintiff's burden had therefore not been sustained); 1880, Corbishley's Trusts, L. R. 14 Ch. D. 846; 1902, Re Benjamin, 1 Ch. 723; 1905, Re Aldersey, 2 Ch. 181, 185 (rule of Nepean v. Knight applied).

CANADA: 1848, Doe v. Strong, 4 U. C. Q. B. 510, 518, 8 id. 291 (good opinions).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1878, Davie v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 628, 634 (leading opinion, by Harlan, J.; adopting the "specific peril" doctrine); 1902, Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. 662 (repudiating the specific peril doctrine, defined in Davie v. Briggs, as an exclusive rule); 1917, Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Searing, 3d C. C. A., 240 Fed. 653 ("those firmly established Pennsylvania cases, Burr v. Sim," etc.; here the plaintiff was a Pennsylvania citizen); California: 1921, Lesser v. New York Life Ins. Co., — Cal. App. —, 200 Pac. 22 (collecting authorities to date; approving the rule in Tisdale v. Ins. Co., Ia.); Illinois: 1920, National Zinc Co. v. Industrial Commission, 292 Ill. 598, 127 N. E. 135 (whether deceased employee left beneficiaries living; G. left Poland in July, 1914, leaving a father of 60 years, a mother of 40 years, and brothers and sisters; a witness saw mother, father, and or the celibate or childless or intestate condition of the person at the time of death.<sup>5</sup>

(c) On similar considerations of experience, the loss of a ship, in insurance cases or the like, may become the subject of a presumption or a 'prima facie' ruling, after a long absence from port without news.<sup>6</sup>

a sister there in August 1915, the brothers having gone to the army; held, without other evidence, that the relatives' survival on Oct. 24, 1917, would not be presumed, owing to the war-conditions affecting that region in the meantime); Iowa: 1868, Tisdale v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 26 Ia. 70 (leading case, repudiating the specific peril doctrine); Kansas: 1913, Caldwell v. Modern Woodmen, 89 Kan. 11, 130 Pac. 642 (the jury may infer a death before that time, on the circumstances); Maryland: 1897, Schaub v. Griffin, 84 Md. 557, 36 Atl. 443 (property went by S's will in remainder to his four children; one of them C., married K., and had a son, who disappeared in 1881, C. dying in 1888; C.'s administrator was sued by the other three children for her share, their inheritance depending on whether her son predeceased her; held, that the burden of showing his predecease rested on the plaintiffs, a part of whose case it was; that the seven years' presumption had not begun to operate; and that thus there was no aid to be had from it in determining that the son had died at any particular time, so that the duty of producing evidence of survival did not shift to the defendant); Minnesota: 1906, Spahr v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 98 Minn. 471, 108 N. W. 4 (the defendant's policy on S.'s life lapsed on June 1, 1898; on April 4, 1898, S. left his home, and was never again seen or heard of; on July 7, 1905, this action was begun; held that S. was presumed to be dead, but not to have died at any particular time before or after June 1, 1898); 1922, Eklund v. Supreme Council, — Minn. —, 187 N. W. 826 (but here the special circumstances sufficed); Mississippi: 1917, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Brame, 112 Miss. 828, 73 So. 806; New Hampshire: 1903, Poff v. N. E. Tel. & Teleg. Co. 72 N. H. 164, 55 Atl. 891 (in an action for death by wrongful act, the burden of showing the death to have been within the statutory period is on the claimant); Pennsylvania: 1838, Burr v. Sim, 4 Wharton 150 (absence in South America; leading case; Gibson, C. J., phrases the "specific peril" doctrine, as quoted above); 1896, Re Mutual Benefit Co., 174 Pa. 1, 34 Atl. 283 (Burr v. Sim approved); Texas: 1916, Sovereign Camp v. Robinson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 187 S. W. 215 (rule of Tisdale v. Ins. Co. apparently adopted); Wisconsin: 1920, Maine v. Maryland Casualty Co., 172 Wis. 350, 178 N. W. 749.

A careful study of the subject has been made by Mr. Chas. B. Welliver, "Proof of Death" (Proceedings of Association of Life Insurance Counsel, 1921); see also a useful note, "Presumptions of the Time of Death of One Presumed to be Dead after Absence of Seven Years" (Va. L. Rev. III, 451).

<sup>5</sup> Eng. 1812, Doe v. Griffin, 15 East 293 (ejectment; the plaintiff's lessor, who claimed through the same collateral ancestor as the defendant, was held to have the burden of proving that the ancestor had died without issue, but was held to have placed upon the defendant the duty of going forward by evidence that the ancestor had never been heard of as married); In re Jackson, Jackson v. Ward, [1907] 1 Ch. 354 (no presumption of death without issue); U. S. 1897, Still v. Hutto, 48 S. C. 415, 26 S. E. 713 (no presumption that a man, unmarried when last heard from, died childless).

Contra: 1908, Barson v. Mulligan, 191 N. Y. 306, 84 N. E. 75 (B., unmarried, having disappeared 37 years ago, his death was presumed (1) without issue and (2) intestate).

<sup>6</sup> 1777, Green v. Brown, 2 Str. 1199 (insurance; a ship sailing to America in 1739 had never been heard from; the defendant objected "that as captures and seizures were excepted" from the policy, "it lay upon the assured to prove the loss happened in the particular manner declared on." i. e. by foundering; but "the Chief Justice said it would be unreasonable to expect certain evidence of such a loss," and left it to the jury); 1809, Twemlowe v. Oswin, 2 Camp. 85 (insurance; a ship sailing from Liverpool April 14, 1807, to the Gulf of St. Lawrence and thence to Hayti; evidence that she had not been heard from up to March 1, 1809, was admitted, but held not sufficient); 1815, Watson v. King, 1 Stark. 121 (trover; a ship carrying M., one of the owners, last seen in a hurricane on March 7, 1814, near Jamaica, sailing from England; several others of the fleet foundered, and this one had never been heard from up to Dec. 14, 1815; Ellenborough, L. C. J., told the jury "it might be assumed that at that time M. was dead; but that it was for their consideration whether he was dead on the 8th of June, 1814," when his share of the ship was sold); 1816, Houstman v. Thornton, Holt N. P. 242 (insurance; a ship leaving Havana in August, 1815, bound to Holland or Flanders; up to Easter, 1816, she had not been heard from; Gibbs, C. J., "There is no fixed rule of law upon this subject"; and he left the case to the jury, expressing an opinion that the ship was lost); 1826, Koster v. Reed, 6 B. & C. 19 (insurance; a ship sailing from Leghorn to Lisbon in April, 1821;

(d) Moreover, there is a distinct presumption of death from lapse of lifetime, — not reducible to a fixed period, but exempt from any requirement as to absence from home or lack of news.<sup>7</sup>

(e) Since the presumption of death after seven years' absence may be fraudulently taken advantage of, as experience has shown, by persons who insure their lives and then elope and conceal themselves for a long period, thus enabling the beneficiary (perhaps collusively) to claim and obtain the sum payable on death, a contractual clause establishing a longer period for raising the presumption of death is often inserted in policies as a reasonable precaution. The validity of such contracts has been examined ante, § 7a.

§ 2532. Same: Survivorship. Where two or more persons have perished in the same calamity, there is no presumption of law that either survived the other, or that all perished at the same time.<sup>1</sup> The burden of proving that one survived another will commonly be on any claimant for whom that fact is essential to his own chain of title.<sup>2</sup> If there is evidence, from the age, sex, or physical condition of the persons who perished, or from the nature of the accident and the manner of death of the parties, which tends to show that some one did in fact survive the others, the whole question is one of fact, to be decided in each case by the jury, according to the incidence of the first burden of proof (ante, § 2485); but without any rule of presumption.

But in escaping the artificial rules prescribed by the Continental law, and by a few of our own Codes,<sup>3</sup> our Courts have left many difficulties unsolved, evidence that she never arrived; held, that the fact that she had been rumored of as foundered was equivalent to "never having been heard of," and that in any case there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 158.

<sup>4</sup> As in Wing v. Angrave and Newell v. Nichols, supra. The following decisions are commendable instances of a refusal to accept such a result: 1903, Young Women's Christian Home v. French, 187 U. S. 401, 23 Sup. 184 (the testatrix' intention sought and carried out; "we do not feel compelled . . . , by accepting so technical and literal a view, to reach an adverse result on the theory of a change in the burden of proof, or of an accidental omission to prevent it"); 1918, Re Fowles' Will, 222 N. Y. 222, 118 N. E. 611 (here the testator in his will asked the Court to "deem that I shall have predeceased my wife," as the solution of the dilemma; both were drowned in the despicable destruction of the Lusitania, May 5, 1917; rational and liberal opinions by Cardozo, J., and Crane, J.); 1916, Fitzgerald v. Ayres, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 179 S. W. 289 (mutual wills; "the primary devisee will be treated as not surviving, and the gift to the secondary or substituted devisee shall take effect").

<sup>5</sup> In view of these sinister possibilities of judicial decision, and of the contingencies created by the transmarine voyage annually taken by thousands of families, it may be suggested that the only safe form of will, for a married pair having identical testamentary wishes, must consist in a devise to a trustee, in trust, first, to accumulate the income for six months, next, to transfer the estate to the wife (or husband) if living at the expiration of the six months, and next, if not then appearing to be living, to the desired secondary devisees.

has given rise occasionally to a presumption of due performance. This presumption is more often mentioned than enforced; and its scope as a real presumption is indefinite and hardly capable of reduction to rules. It may be said that most of the instances of its application are found attended by several conditions; first, that the matter is more or less in the past, and incapable of easily procured evidence; secondly, that it involves a mere formality, or detail of required procedure, in the routine of a litigation or of a public officer's action; next, that it involves to some extent the security of apparently vested rights, so that the presumption will serve to prevent an unwholesome uncertainty; and, finally, that the circumstances of the particular case add some element of probability.<sup>1</sup>

The same principle has sometimes been extended to acts which ought to have been done by a private person in the course of business;<sup>2</sup> but this seems unlikely to be common. Furthermore, it has been often extended to include the truth of an official certificate or other assertion;<sup>3</sup> but although

The regularity of a tax-title has been a frequent field of controversy under this presumption, depending more or less on the requirements of the local statute: 1894, Clarke v. Mead, 102 Cal. 517, 519, 36 Pac. 862 (tax-deed; presumption made by statutes of regularity of steps in prior proceeding); 1826, Waldron v. Tuttle, 3 N. H. 340, 344 ("Very few of those sales have been found to be legal; the presumption is in fact against their validity; . . . in all cases enough of the proceedings should be shown to render it not improbable that the proceedings may have been regular," and this, with possession, may suffice); 1889, Blackwell, Tax Titles, 5th ed., §§ 1098, 1140.

<sup>2</sup> 1802, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in *Williams v. E. I. this consideration serves in part to justify for such statements the exception to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1630), it is only occasionally (as in a certificate of acknowledgment) that the force of a real presumption can be expected.

§ 2535. Same: (2) Appointment and Authority of Officers; Incorporation. There is a rule of substantive law that for some legal purposes a 'de facto' incumbency of a public office suffices; the 'de jure' appointment would then not be in issue. But supposing that it is, the rule of Evidence, requiring production of documentary originals (ante, § 1178), would call for the original document of appointment; unless, under that rule, an exception can be found for them. Such an exception, for reasons already noticed (ante, § 1228), is recognized for many classes of cases.<sup>1</sup>

Assuming, then, that the 'de jure' incumbency of office by a particular person is to be shown, and that the document of appointment need not be produced, there may then come into play a well recognized presumption of incumbency, based on the person's prior notorious action as such officer. In strictness, there are here two elements, the course of action and its notoriety;<sup>2</sup> but the former alone is commonly mentioned. For public officers, the scope of the presumption depends more or less on the issue of substantive law involved, because other evidence may be demanded where the title to the office is the essence of the controversy; moreover, the rule of the sufficiency in substantive law of a 'de facto' incumbency (above noted) tends to be confused with the present evidential rule of presumption.<sup>3</sup> Occasionally the rule is rebutting evidence"); 1898, Peyton v. Morgan Park, 172 Ill. 102, 49 N. E. 1002 (the commissioners' certificate of benefit under Rev. St. 1874, c. 24, § 147, raises a presumption); 1896, Albany Co. S. Bank v. McCarty, 149 N. Y. 71, 43 N. E. 427 (a certificate of acknowledgment creates a presumption, under C. C. P. § 935, when nothing more is offered, of the truth of the facts stated; when disputed by evidence, the jury is to decide; here the question was whether the deeds were in fact signed or executed; the opinion collects the cases); 1898, Rogers v. Pell, 154 N. Y. 518, 49 N. E. 75 (a certificate of acknowledgment, on the fact of its venue, goes to the jury "against evidence in rebuttal, whatever it may be"); 1903, Pine Tree L. Co. v. Fargo, 12 N. D. 360, 96 N. W. 357 (a city treasurer's credit of assessment-receipts, presumed correct).

Compare the cases cited ante, §§ 1347-1344 (conclusive documents) and §§ 1630-1684 (admissibility of official documents), where the statutes often declare such a rule for those documents.

The following ruling perhaps belongs here: 1898, Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 245, 41 Atl. 803 (whether the defendant's cancellation of his signature to a contract was authorized; his admission of the cancellation, held not to put on him the duty of producing evidence of authority).

the statutory admissibility of reputation alone (ante, § 1625) would probably be deemed also to create the force of a presumption.

It may be added that many instances, in which this presumption might be brought into question, are otherwise disposed of through the rule of authentication of documents under seal, presuming the incumbency of the sealing officer (ante, §§ 2161-2169), and by the doctrine of judicial notice of public officers (post, § 2576).<sup>6</sup>

§ 2536. Similarity of Foreign Law. Whether a foreign rule of law is to be adopted as applicable to any part of the litigation before the Court, depends upon principles of substantive law. Supposing the foreign rule to control, then it is to be noted, with reference to ascertaining the terms of the foreign rule, that the Court does not know it judicially (post, § 2573) and that it must therefore be proved like any 'factum probandum' (post, § 2558), and that in aid of such proof a presumption may within certain limits be resorted to, as follows:

If it is the law of a State possessing the English common law as the foundation of its system, in particular, one of the United States, it is generally said to be presumed to be the same as that of the forum; even if it involves the existence of a statutory enactment altering the common law, the same rule is often applied (i. e. by presuming that the statutory alteration in the forum has been repeated in the other State by a similar process of evolution), though many Courts draw a distinction here and confine the presumption to the common or judicially-declared law. But if the foreign State is not one whose system is founded on the common law, the presumption will probably not be made, unless the principle involved is one of the law merchant common to civilized countries.

Story, J.; Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 4227 (bank's incorporation, provable in criminal proceedings by reputation or by the issuance of notes as a bank); Illinois: 1858, President, etc. of Mendota v. Thompson, 20 Ill. 197 (here a peculiarly strict rule; the production of the charter, and proof of acts done under and in conformity with it, suffices); 1884, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 617, 625 (similar); Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, § 486, St. 1889, June 3 (user is to be 'prima facie' evidence of corporate existence, in criminal prosecutions); 1914, People v. Novick, 265 Ill. 594, 107 N. E. 138 (arson to defraud an insurance company; the incorporation "was assumed by both parties"; "the corporate existence, if no objection is made, may be proved by oral testimony"; the opinions in these two cases were filed on the same day but written by different judges); 1914, People v. Fryer, 266 Ill. 216, 107 N. E. 134 (larceny of chattels of a corporation; the incorporation not sufficiently evidenced by the assertions of a member and an employee); Massachusetts: 1876, Merchants' National Bank v. Glendon Co., 120 Mass. 97 (banking corporation, in an action on a note); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12535; New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 274, § 7 (offences involving counterfeit bank-notes; currency of the notes, "or other proof," is sufficient to show the bank's establishment); Tennessee: 1900, State v. Missio, 105 Tenn. 218, 58 S. W. 216 (larceny; example of the doctrine of the sufficiency in substantive law of a 'de facto' corporation); Vermont: 1834, Barnes v. District, 6 Vt. 388, 393 (organization of a school district, proved by action as such and reputation); Washington: 1893, Yakima Nat'l Bank v. Knipe, 6 Wash. 348, 350, 33 Pac. 834 (national bank).

The incumbency of a corporate officer will sometimes be noticed: 1827, Bank of U. S. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 64, 70, per Story, J.; 1870, State v. Cleavland, 6 Nev. 181, 185 (forgery).

<sup>6</sup> For the rule of presumption as to the incumbency of the celebrant of a marriage, see ante, § 2505; the question is complicated by two additional ones, namely, whether a 'de facto' clergyman sufficed at common law, and whether the opponent by his conduct has admitted the legality of the celebrant's appointment.

It has been suggested that in reality there is no presumption, and that the true process is merely that of refusing to recognize a presumption that the foreign State has a different law,<sup>1</sup> and no doubt this will sufficiently describe the situation in many cases; but in point of principle it is not tenable. The proper phrasing depends upon the state of the burden of proof in the case in hand.

The following summary of the different rules as recognized (the first one named being substantially like the rule stated above) is worthy of careful judicial consideration:<sup>2</sup>

CANADA: 1903, Meritt v. Copper Crown Co., 36 N. Sc. 383, 393 (rules of construction by West Virginia law, presumed the same).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1904, The Matterhorn, 128 Fed. 863, 63 C. C. A. 331 (maritime law of another country; its difference must be proved); 1918, Panama El. R. Co. v. Moyers, 5th C. C. A., 249 Fed. 19 (personal injury in Panama; action brought in the U. S. Canal Zone court; law of Panama required to be evidenced as a fact); Ala. 1906, Southern Express Co. v. Owens, 146 Ala. 412, 41 So. 752 (common carrier's contract; common law of South Carolina presumed the same); 1907, Watford v. Alabama & F. L. Co., 152 Ala. 178, 44 So. 567 (personal injury received in Florida); Ga. 1904, Rooney v. Southern B. & L. Ass'n, 119 Ga. 941, 47 S. E. 345 (Alabama contract; common law as to usury presumed); 1904, Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Evans, 121 Ga. 391, 49 S. E. 308 (statute of Florida as to signals at crossings, not noticed); 1906, Thomas v. Clarkson, 125 Ga. 72, 54 S. E. 77 (Alabama law as to usury; the common law presumed to obtain there, but the Alabama judicial rulings were not to control in its interpretation); 1906, Ellington v. Harris, 127 Ga. 85, 56 S. E. 134 (marriage); Ida. 1910, Maloney v. Winston Bros. Co., 18 Ida. 740, 111 Pac. 1080 (mining law); Ill. 1904, Sokol v. People, 212 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 382 (marriage in Turkey); 1905, Scholten v. Barber, 217 Ill. 148, 75 N. E. 460 (extension of time to a surety on a note made in Missouri; common law assumed to be the same); 1905, Leathe v. Thomas, 218 Ill. 246, 75 N. E. 810 (action on a Missouri judgment; the Missouri statute upon set-off, not noticed); Ind. 1903, Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Hollenbeck, 161 Ind. 452, 69 N. E. 136 (wage-claim, already paid under garnishment in Kentucky; the Indiana statute of exemptions not presumed to be adopted by statute in Kentucky); 1908, Wabash R. Co. v. Hassett, 170 Ind. 370, 83 N. E. 705 (personal injury and death); Ia. 1904, Banco de Sonora v. Bankers' M. C. Co., 124 Ia. 576, 100 N. W. 532 (law of Mexico as to age of majority, not presumed to be the same); 1906, Westheimer v. Habinek, 131 Ia. 643, 109 N. W. 189 (shipment of liquor; presumption of similarity for Missouri law, not enforced "if the assumption would impose a penalty or work a forfeiture"); 1908, Varner v. Interstate Exchange, 138 Ia. 201, 115 N. W. 1111 (foreclosure of trust deed by sale by sheriff in Missouri; bill in equity being required by law in Iowa, the Missouri law was presumed the same); Kan. 1904, First Nat'l Bank v. Nordstrom, 70 Kan. 485, 78 Pac. 804 (note payable in Iowa; law of Iowa presumed the same); 1906, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson, 74 Kan. 83, 86 Pac. 156 (death in Indian Territory; common law presumed the same); 1915, Newton v. New York Life Ins. Co., 95 Kan. 427, 148 Pac. 619 (insurance policy made in Illinois); Ky. 1904, Klenke v. Noonan, 118 Ky. 436, 81 S. W. 241 (common law as to marriage, presumed to obtain in Ohio); 1910, Yellow P. L. Co. v. Ford, 141 Ky. 5, 131 S. W. 1010 (personal injury law); La. 1904, State v. Allen, 113 La. 705, 37 So. 614 (bigamy; the Indiana law of validity of a marriage presumed to be the same as in Louisiana); Mass. 1904, Callender, M. & T. Co. v. Flint, 187 Mass. 104, 72 N. E. 345 (guaranty; Rhode Island); 1904, Cherry v. Sprague, 187 Mass. 113, 72 N. E. 456 (note; South Dakota); 1906, Farmers' Nat'l Bank v. Venner, 192 Mass. 531, 78 N. E. 540 (default of a N. Y. note; the law of N. Y. presumed the same); 1907, Demelman v. Brazier, 193 Mass. 588, 79 N. E. 812 (days of grace in New York law); 1907, Com. v. Stevens, 196 Mass. 280, 82 N. E. 33 (Georgia statute as to marriage, not presumed the same); 1908, Gordon v. Knott, 199 Mass. 173, 85 N. E. 184 (English contract); 1913, Holden v. McGillicuddy, 215 Mass. 563, 102 N. E. 923 (Vermont law as to negligence per se, presumed the same); 1914, Lemieux v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 219 Mass. 399, 106 N. E. 992 (Vermont employers' liability act; burden is on the plaintiff to prove it); Mo. 1912, Hartwell v. Parks, 240 Mo. 537, 144 S. W. 793 (regularity of a probate record); Mont. 1905, McKnight v. Oregon S. L. R. Co., 33 Mont.

1906, Professor Albert M. Kales, "Presumption of Foreign Law" (Harvard Law Review, XIX, 401): "There are three possible rules for determining when the Court of the forum will make a presumption as to the law of the foreign state, and what presumption if any it will make; or as I would prefer to say, there are three possible rules which indicate when the Court of the forum will shift the burden of going forward with evidence as to the foreign law upon the party not having the burden of proof of the whole issue of which the foreign law is a part.

"The first position is as follows: When the Court of the forum takes judicial notice that the foreign state has fundamentally the same system of law as that of the forum, the Court of the forum will presume that the law of the foreign state is the same as that of the system of law (exclusive of statutory changes) fundamentally common to both; otherwise there is no presumption at all.

"The second position is that the law of the forum (even though it be statutory) is always applicable, in the absence of proof of the foreign law. In the application of this rule it is entirely unnecessary to make the slightest distinction between whether the foreign state is one which has fundamentally the same system of law as the forum or not. . . .

"The third possible position is a combination of the first and second. It is like the first when the Court of the forum takes judicial notice that the foreign state has fundamentally the same system of law as that of the forum. It is like the second when the court of the forum takes judicial notice that the foreign state has fundamentally a different system of law from that of the forum. . . .

"In conclusion, then, upon the entire subject; The third position is one the existence of which may fairly be doubted, and which, if it does exist, is an irrational and inconsistent development, heaping an unjust burden upon one who ordinarily does not have to go forward with proof in the first instance. The second is extreme but consistent, and has some advantages of certainty in its application. Its fault is that it also, without any adequate ground, places a burden of going forward with evidence upon the party who ordinarily does not have to do so. The first position, on the contrary, presents a rational and logical development of the law. It does more accurate justice between the parties by leaving the natural burden of going forward with evidence where it belongs unless there is a good reason for changing it. It has also, it is submitted, the support of such eminent judges as Lord Eldon, Chancellor Kent, and, more recently, Mr. Justice Holmes."

§ 2537. Contracts. In evidencing the issues of fact arising under a contract right or liability, the first burden of proof (ante, § 2485) is almost

E. 63 (Virginia contract; common law as to usury presumed, and the statute not presumed to be the same as in N. C.); S. D. 1904, Baird v. Vines, 18 S. D. 52, 99 N. W. 89 (non-negotiable note; law of Montana presumed the same); 1905, Iowa L. & T. Co. v. Schnose, 19 S. D. 248, 103 N. W. 22 (mortgage in Iowa; law of Iowa presumed the same); Tex. 1904, Ex parte Latham, 47 Tex. Cr. 208, 82 S. W. 1046 (community property in Oklahoma; law of Oklahoma presumed the same); Va. 1905, Frank v. Gump, 123 Va. 205, 51 S. E. 358 (Maryland contract; common law presumed the same); 1907, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Denny's Adm'r, 106 Va. 383, 56 S. E. 321 (statutory action for death); Wis. 1905, *Edleman v. always determined by the rules of pleading, or is directly deducible therefrom; the chief class of questions here, the performance of a condition, is included plainly, in common-law tradition, within the sphere of pleading;<sup>1</sup> though in more recent times, under looser methods of procedure, the relaxation of boundaries between affirmative and negative pleas has tended to obscure the old landmarks of discussion. So, too, under the second burden of proof (ante, §§ 2487, 2494), so far as there are rules of 'prima facie' sufficiency or of presumption, relieving or shifting the duty of producing evidence, they seldom concern facts peculiar to the domain of contracts alone; and any of the preceding presumptions may become applicable.<sup>2</sup>

§ 2538. Statute of Limitations. The first burden of proof (ante, § 2485), affecting the loss of a right by limitation, was at common law usually placed upon the plaintiff, i. e. to show that the period of limitation had not elapsed between the accrual of his right and the institution of his suit;<sup>1</sup> this seems to have been due to the peculiar wording of the earliest statutes, whose analogies were afterwards repeated. But the more natural and just view is to treat the fact as one of defeasance, like a release, and thus to place on the opponent the burden of establishing it; this is the result accepted in probably most jurisdictions to-day, either by statute<sup>2</sup> or at common law;<sup>3</sup> in any event, it is in strictness a question of the law of Pleading, not of Evidence. Where the plaintiff's declaration exhibits in itself the lapse of the barring period, a further question arises (not necessarily dependent on the rule for

Warranties or conditions in an insurance policy: 1896, Penn. M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. S. B. & T. Co., 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. 413, 441 (the burden is on the insurer to show materiality and fraudulent intent of a false representation; nor does knowledge of the falsity of the same representation in another policy raise a presumption as to knowledge on this occasion); 1902, Hennessy v. Ins. Co., 74 Conn. 699, 52 Atl. 490; 1904, Vincent v. Mutual R. F. L. Ass'n, 77 Conn. 281, 58 Atl. 963 (age); 1903, Supreme Tent v. Stensland, 206 Ill. 124, 68 N. E. 1098 (life).

Exemptions in a bailee's contract: ante, § 2508.

Reservations in a deed: 1897, Harman v. Stearns, 95 Va. 58, 27 S. E. 601 (deed with reservations; the claimant must prove that the land claimed is not within the reservations).

Payment of the premium of an insurance policy: 1904, Thomas v. Northwestern M. L. Ins. Co., 142 Cal. 79, 75 Pac. 665.

Payment in general: 1920, Illinois Steel Bridge Co. v. Wayland, 107 Kan. 532, 192 Pac. 752 (burden of proving payment is not shifted by producing a receipt in full);

<sup>2</sup> The following are some of the rare instances: Shipper's assent to the terms of a bill of lading received: 1896, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Simon, 160 Ill. 648, 43 N. E. 596 (the carrier must show that limitations of his common-law liability are brought to the shipper's notice); 1866, Boorman v. Express Co., 21 Wis. 152, 158 (delivery to the shipper raises a presumption of assent); Partnership books: 1897, Wilson v. Potter, — Ky. —, 42 S. W. 836 (partnership books are presumed correct; and in attacking them the specific items must be pointed out beforehand).

§ 2538. <sup>1</sup> Eng. 1817, Hurst v. Parker, 1 B. & Ald. 92 (trespass to a mine); 1837, Nepean v. Knight, 2 M. & W. 894 ("the 'onus' is also cast on the lessor of the plaintiff of showing that he has commenced his action within twenty years after his right of entry accrued"); U. S. 1897, Leigh v. Evans, 64 Ark. 26, 41 S. W. 427 (administrator's account); 1897, Graham v. O'Bryan, 120 N. C. 463, 27 S. E. 122.

burden of proof) as to the mode of taking advantage of this admission; in some cases a demurrer, or its equivalent, may suffice; <sup>4</sup> in a jurisdiction where the burden is on the defendant, it would be proper to raise thereby a presumption in his favor, shifting to the plaintiff the duty of producing evidence of some exception; <sup>5</sup> though here again the rules of pleading should furnish the proper mode of determination.

§ 2539. Malicious Prosecution. In an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff is anomalously required to plead and to prove facts which are otherwise regarded as matters of excuse or privilege, i. e. the termination of the prior proceeding in his favor, the lack of probable cause for it, and the malice; <sup>1</sup> this being prescribed for him by the rules of pleading. In the course of sustaining this first burden (ante, § 2485), he may sometimes avail himself of rules of presumption or 'prima facie' sufficiency (ante, §§ 2487, 2497) or be met by counter-presumptions for the defendant; for example, by a rule that the magistrate's discharge, <sup>2</sup> or the suffering of a nonsuit, <sup>3</sup> is 'prima facie' evidence, or raises a presumption, of lack of probable cause, or that the defendant's receipt of advice from counsel is sufficient evidence of probable cause. But in these and other instances the rule is frequently intended to be one of substantive law, i. e. that the fact in question is or is not 'per se' probable cause; and the details of substantive law thus become inextricably mingled with the rules of presumption.

§ 2540. Sundry Burdens and Presumptions. In sundry multifarious cases, more or less casual, rules of presumption have been recognized; <sup>1</sup> and experi-

Before examining the answer to this question, certain principles, superficially related, must be discriminated:

(a) The judge's control over the burden of proof. As a part of the rules regulating the burden of proof, the party on whom rests for the time being the duty of coming forward with evidence may be required to offer not merely any evidence whatever, but a sufficient amount to be worth considering, before he is regarded as satisfying this rule; in other words, he cannot go to the jury unless his evidence is sufficient, by this test; and it is the judge that applies the test. In this sense, then, the judge may be called upon to rule whether the evidence is sufficient, i. e. sufficient to go to the jury; if it is, they then solely determine whether it is sufficient, i. e. to convince them. This has been already examined (ante, §§ 2487, 2494).

(b) The judge's discretion, or final determination of a question either of fact or of law (ante, § 16). The ruling of a trial Court on preliminary questions of fact relating to admissibility is often held to be not subject to review, i. e. the trial Court is said to have "discretion"; the instances have been mentioned under the various heads of evidence.

(c) The judge's application of a rule defining the legal consequences of a fact. So far as the substantive law gives certain facts 'per se' a legal consequence (as when it makes, for example, the consultation of counsel 'per se' sufficient for good faith, in an action for malicious prosecution), the judge applies the rule, and the case is in this respect beyond the control of the jury. This principle becomes especially important in issues of negligence (post, § 2552).

§ 2549. <sup>1</sup> EXPLANATORY NOTE. The explanations made ante, § 2499, note 1, as to not presenting a complete array of authorities, apply to this Chapter also.

(d) Finally, the present subject, i. e. the respective functions of judge and jury, in the ultimate decision of the different issues that arise; upon this apportionment of function depends the question, To whom is the evidence to be regarded as offered by the parties?

Taking up the last question, then, we find it usually said that questions of fact are for the jury,<sup>2</sup> or in the Latin phrase employed by Coke,<sup>3</sup> 'Ad quæstionem facti non respondent iudices, ad quæstionem juris non respondent juratores.' But this conventional brocard cannot be taken as a trustworthy guide to the solution of any particular controversy on the subject:

1898, Professor James Bradley Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 185, 202: "Courts pass upon a vast number of questions of fact that do not get on the record or form any part of the issue. Courts existed before juries; juries came in to perform only their own special office; and the Courts have always continued to retain a multitude of functions which they exercised before ever juries were heard of, in ascertaining whether disputed things be true. In other words, there is not, and never was, any such thing in jury trials as an allotment of all questions of fact to the jury. The jury simply decides some questions of fact. . . . The allotment to the jury of matters of fact, even in the strict sense of fact which is in issue, is not exact. The judges have always answered a multitude of questions of ultimate fact, or facts, which form part of the issue."<sup>4</sup>

It is therefore of little service to seek for guidance as to the limits of these questions by defining "law" and "fact"; the inquiry is rather as to the kinds of questions of fact which are to be determined by the judge. Moreover, this inquiry in effect concerns the respective division of functions between judge and jury, — a larger subject, and one not so much a part of the law of Evidence as of the law of Trial-Procedure in general; and the matter is thus complicated by other inquiries as to the general powers of the judge in supervising and controlling the jury, — inquiries which must be distinguished from the specific one whether the evidence on a certain point is to be addressed to the judge or to the jury as the functionary immediately concerned with its determination. It is here possible only to indicate the trend of some of the main subjects of controversy or difficulty.

<sup>2</sup> The various Codes usually declare this principle: Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1065 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 135); Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. §§ 1066–1068; Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1126; C. C. St. 1918, § 5785; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5856 ("The competency of a witness must be decided by the Court"); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 2435;

§ 2550. Admissibility of Evidence. The admissibility of a given piece of evidence is for the judge to determine. This general principle is not disputed; its application to the various kinds of evidence — qualifications of witnesses, absence of a hearsay deponent, voluntariness of a confession, condition of a dying declarant, and so on — has already been considered under the various heads of evidence. It follows that, so far as the admissibility in law depends on some incidental question of fact — the absence of a deponent from the jurisdiction, the use of threats to obtain a confession, the sanity of a witness, and the like — this also is for the judge to determine, before he admits the evidence to the jury.<sup>1</sup>

§ 2550. <sup>1</sup> ENGLAND: 1843, Bartlett v. Smith, 11 M. & W. 483 (whether a document is inadmissible through default of stamps; leading case); 1847, Doe v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 314, 323.

CANADA: 1920, F. v. F., 52 D. L. R. 446, 455, N. B. (divorce for adultery; the admissibility of a letter depended on whether it had been in defendant's possession; but here that fact was held to be the main issue in the case, and therefore properly left to the jury).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1913, Gila Valley G. & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 232 U. S. 94, 34 Sup. 229 (whether a person speaking was so near H. as to be heard by H. thus admitting what the person said: "the finding of the trial judge upon such a preliminary question of fact is not subject to be reversed on appeal or error if it be fairly supported by the evidence"; this phrasing seems to accord little enough credit to the trial judge; why cannot the Federal Supreme Court lend its aid to restore the trial judge from a marionette to a Minos? See the comments of Professor Henry Schofield, on the desirability of letting the rules of procedure encourage trial judges to be strong, in his article "New Trials and the Seventh Amendment" (Illinois Law Review, VIII, 287, passim, reprinted in his Essays in Constitutional Law and Equity, 1921).

F. Co.*,

This principle, one of the foundation-stones of our law, has countless applications under the various rules of admissibility.<sup>2</sup> In more recent times, however, a heterodox practice has appeared, in places, of leaving some questions of admissibility to the jury.<sup>3</sup> No doubt the judge, after admitting evidence, leaves to the jury to give it what weight they think fit, for they are the triers of the credibility and persuasive sufficiency of all evidence which is admitted for their consideration (post, § 2551). But to hand the evidence to them, to be rejected or accepted according to some legal definition, and not according to its intrinsic value to their minds, is to commit a grave blunder. It is an error of policy (as well as a deviation from orthodox principle) for several reasons; in the first place, it is a needless abdication of the judicial function — of which humility we have already too much; furthermore, it adds another to the exceptions to the general rules; and finally, it cumbers the jury with legal definitions and offers an additional opportunity for quibbling over the tenor of the instructions.

In the appurtenant corollaries of this function of the judge, it may be noted that he may of course hear evidence on both sides for determining the facts on which the rule of admissibility turns;<sup>4</sup> that during this process the jury may be retired out of hearing;<sup>5</sup> and that the judge's determination on this question ought to be final, beyond review by appeal, and is so by the whole-some rule of a few Courts.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The detailed applications of it are more conveniently considered under the various rules; in particular, compare the following places: ante, §§ 110, 247, 248 (overt act preliminary to proof of deceased's character or threats in homicide), § 487 (testimonial qualifications in general), § 497 (insanity of a witness), § 503 (infancy), § 561 (expertness), § 587 (interest), § 861 (confessions), § 1192 (production of documentary originals), § 1385 (cross-examination), § 1451 (dying declaration), § 1820 (capacity to take an oath), § 1883 (order of evidence), § 2020 (genuineness of handwriting-specimens), § 2060 (accomplice's corroboration), §§ 2271, 2322 (privilege).

<sup>3</sup> Mass. 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 ("If in a criminal case the decision is against the defendant, he has another chance before the jury, so far as it depends upon a question of fact"); Mich. 1877, Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502, 504 (the trial Court allowed to leave to the jury to exclude communications if they believed that the relation of legal adviser existed; "it does not properly belong to a judge to decide upon the truth of matters which have come out during the examination of witnesses who conflict"); N. H. 1856, Bartlett v. Hoyt, 33 N. H. 151, 165 ("whether a witness is interested upon this or that given state of facts is a question of law for the Court; whether the facts exist as claimed by one party or the other is a question of fact, which, when presented in the form of the preliminary inquiry as to the competency of witness, may be determined by the Court, or, in the exercise of their discretion, by the jury"); N. Dak. 1904, King v. Hanson, 13 N. D. 85, 99 N. W. 1085 (privileged letter, whose authenticity was denied; the letter left to the jury to decide upon).

Other examples may be seen in the various passages cited supra, note 2, especially in §§ 487, 497, 587, 861, 1385, 1451.

<sup>4</sup> 1852, Parke, B., in Cleave v. Jones, 7 Exch. 421, 425; and cases cited ante, § 497 (insanity), § 861 (confessions), § 1385 (cross-examination), § 561 (expert witness' qualifications).

<sup>5</sup> 1893, State v. Shaffer, 23 Or. 555, 558, 32 Pac. 545 (dying declarations); and cases cited ante, §§ 861, 1451, 1808.

<sup>6</sup> 1844, Foster v. Mackay, 7 Metc. Mass. 531, 537; 1888, Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571, 16 N. E. 452; and cases cited ante, §§ 16, 496, 507, 561, 862, 1194, 1312. Here the principle of Discretion, or Finality (ante, § 16) is involved. The more recent doctrine in Massachusetts seems to have abandoned this pristine attitude; 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (not citing Com. v. Robinson).

Other issues of fact may be for the judge:

§ 2551. Sufficiency of Proof. When evidential facts are once admitted by the judge, their individual and total weight or probative value is for the jury. This signifies, first, that there are no rules of law to bind them on the subject, though Courts occasionally attempt to formulate some,<sup>1</sup> and, secondly, that the judge's own view of the weight of the evidence is not to be stated to the jury. The latter rule (which obtains by Constitution or statute in almost every State,<sup>2</sup> but not in the Federal Courts<sup>3</sup>) is an unfortunate departure from the orthodox common-law rule. It has done more than any other one thing to impair the general efficiency of jury trial as an instrument of justice.<sup>4</sup> Since it remains the law by grace of statute only, in most States, it can and should be readily abolished. A new birth of long life will then be open for the great and beneficent institution of Trial by Jury.

§ 2552. Negligence. The application of the general principle (ante, § 2549) suffers a few apparent or real exceptions in certain kinds of issues; and in particular, in an issue of negligence.

When the question is whether a person has been guilty of negligence, i. e. whether he has used due care under the circumstances, or has acted as a prudent man would have acted, or whatever the form of phrase may be, the evidence is to be addressed to the jury, as upon other issues, because the question is for them to determine. But from this rule must be distinguished several kinds of judicial utterances, closely connected in practice, and superficially though not in truth involving an inconsistency with this principle or a limitation of it:

(a) Where for the kind of case in hand a definite rule of law, more precise and concrete, has been framed for determining the effect of the person's con-

1909, Waller's Case, 3 Cr. App. 213, 222, 1 K. B. 364 (under a statute permitting proof of former convictions to affect sentence, with consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions, the proof of such consent is a matter of fact for the judge).

The rule of reasonable doubt (ante, § 2497) has here no possible application; though such a notion has been advanced: 1898, Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 23 So. 210 (the facts must be proved to the judge beyond reasonable doubt; said here as to dying declarations, but the majority do not entirely agree on the doctrine). Contra: 1888, Com. v. Robinson, Mass., supra.

§ 2551. <sup>1</sup> This question has been considered ante, §§ 29, 1013, 2033, 2034, 2498, in various aspects.

The veteran Chief Justice Ruffin, in State v. Moses, 2 Dev. N. C. 452, 458 (1830), comments on this degenerate rule with his usual keenness; it seems to have originated in his State. Compare the remarks in Thayer's Preliminary Treatise, 188.

In New Jersey the orthodox rule bravely survives: 1920, State v. Schilling, 95 N. J. L. 145, 112 Atl. 400; 1921, State v. Randall, 95 N. J. L. 452, 113 Atl. 231.

<sup>3</sup> 1886, Vicksburg R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 545, 553, 7 Sup. 1; 1892, Simmmons v. U. S., 142 U. S. 148, 155, 12 Sup. 171; 1919, Schulze v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 259 Fed. 189; 1922, Little v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 276 Fed. 915.

<sup>4</sup> Some practical comments on the operation of this rule in experience will be found in Mr. (Assistant District Attorney) Arthur Train's valuable book, "The Prisoner at the Bar" (1906), pp. 180-189.

In U. S. v. Foster (1910), D. C. W. D. Va., 183 Fed. 627, McDowell, J., sets forth with admirable clearness and good sense the attitude to be taken by the judge in charging the jury upon the facts. As one reads his opinion, the reflection cannot be avoided that all lawyers who would ponder it would heartily join to restore in the State courts that practice which it was intemperate folly to abandon. Were Judge McDowell's principles in general force, the jury system would be freed from much of the ground for criticism so often heard nowadays.

duct, this rule of law may, in the hands of the judge, conclude the question, and it may cease to be a question of fact for the jury to the extent that the rule of law applies. Thus, a defendant's conduct in carrying a loaded gun on his shoulder in a city street may be ruled by the Court to be "negligence 'per se,'" or, in a common phrase, he may be held to have acted "at peril" of answering for the harmful consequences; so that the question of fact for the jury is merely whether he carried the gun in that way, and the question whether he acted with due care ceases to be a question for them, because it is covered by a specific and concrete rule of law. Similar rules are constantly laid down for various situations, — leaving a horse unhitched in a street, running a train at a speed in excess of a statutory limit, storing gunpowder in a populous quarter, and the like. So, also, a concrete rule of this sort may be laid down for a plaintiff whose contributory negligence is pleaded, and it may be ruled that his conduct in thrusting his head out of a railway car-window, or in failing to stop, look, and listen at a railway crossing, is "negligence 'per se.'" Whether such a rule should be laid down is a question of the detailed substantive law appropriate to the situation; and, wherever such a rule of law appears, the matter ceases, as of course, to that extent, to be a question of fact for the jury.<sup>1</sup>

(b) In pursuance of the rules regarding the burden of producing evidence, and of the judicial function thus called into play (ante, §§ 2487, 2494), it is in every case for the Court to say whether there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury; and so also in a case of negligence. Thus the Court has constantly, in revising the results of a trial, to ask whether there was any evidence of negligence proper to be left to a jury; and occasionally a more detailed test is attempted for thus exercising this power of revision and determining whether the party has fulfilled the duty of producing sufficient evidence.<sup>2</sup>

(c) Another form of utterance, sometimes and properly treated<sup>3</sup> as another way of phrasing the preceding principle, but often treated as if independent of it and as if forming an exception to the first general principle above stated, is that the question of negligence goes to the jury unless the facts are undisputed and fair-minded or reasonable men could draw but one inference from them.<sup>4</sup> So far as this phrase (almost universally used, in one form or another) is intended to mean that the Court would, if the above condition were fulfilled, either declare the evidence of negligence insufficient to go to the jury (if that were the Court's interpretation of the conduct), or set aside, as against the weight of evidence, a verdict finding no negligence and order a new trial or even cause a new verdict to be entered (if that were the Court's interpretation), the phrase is in effect only a more detailed statement of the test to be adopted by the Court in its supervisory right, just alluded to, to say whether there is or is not sufficient evidence for the jury or whether a verdict is or is not against the weight of evidence (ante, § 2494).

§ 2552. <sup>1</sup> The nature of such rules is explained in Holmes, Common Law, 150, 152; and in an article by the present writer, An Analysis of Tort Relations, Harvard Law Review, VIII, 389, and in his Summary of Principles of Torts (Appendix A to Select Cases on the Law of Torts, 1912).

<sup>4</sup> This is sometimes expressed in the disjunctive, i. e. facts undisputed or open to one inference only.

(d) But so far as this phrase is intended to mean that, if the specified condition is fulfilled, the Court will take the question into its own hands and say, as a matter of fact to be decided exclusively by the Court itself, that there was or was not negligence, upon facts undisputed and inferences alone conceivable,<sup>5</sup> then the result seems to be in effect an exception to the general principle first above stated, i. e. it defines an excepted case in which the question of negligence is to be determined, for that litigation, by the judge and not by the jury. This, however, is unsound.

It is often difficult to ascertain what is the precise nature of the principle involved in this phrasing.<sup>6</sup>

§ 2553. Reasonableness. There are many situations in which the issue of reasonableness of conduct presents itself. In general it is recognized as an issue of fact for the jury.<sup>1</sup> Here there has been a more or less definite change from an earlier attitude of the Courts, when such questions were usually treated as questions of law, in the sense that the judge determined whether the conduct under all the circumstances was reasonable, or gave instructions

In a few States, the Legislature has purported to hand "all questions of negligence" over to the jury, e. g. Miss. St. 1910, c. 135, Hem. § 503.

§ 2553. <sup>1</sup> 1894, Gerdes v. Iron & F. Co., 124 Mo. 347, 25 S. W. 557 (obstructions to highway by merchandise for an unreasonable time); 1898, Chesterfield v. Ratliff, — S. C. —, 30 S. to be applied by the jury to the facts that might be found by them; and instances of this older treatment are to be found to-day.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, an intermediate form appears, reserving the question for the judge where the facts are undisputed.<sup>3</sup>

But from these real variations in the attitude toward the present subject are to be distinguished the instances of the Court's resort to the two other principles already noted in speaking of the question of negligence; (a) the question may, by the development of the substantive law, have ceased to be a broad and open one of reasonableness and have become reduced to detailed and concrete rules of thumb, — as in several instances in the law of negotiable instruments;<sup>4</sup> here there is a rule of law, more or less definite, and the jury are to that extent limited in their inquiry; (b) the Court's supervisory right, upon the present issue as upon others, to declare that there is not evidence sufficient to go to a jury or that a verdict is against evidence (ante, § 2494), may be exercised by ordering a nonsuit or setting aside a verdict, without denying the general question to be one of fact for the jury.

§ 2554. Same: Malicious Prosecution. The question whether a defendant in a case of malicious prosecution or false arrest had "reasonable and probable cause" for the suit or arrest, although it may be in the broader sense a question of fact, has nevertheless been retained in the hands of the Court as a matter for its determination.<sup>1</sup> The Court should properly instruct the jury "in the concrete and not in the abstract," by instructions adapted to cover the possible findings of fact.<sup>2</sup> It is sometimes said that the question is for the judge if the facts are undisputed and are open to but one inference;<sup>3</sup> but this fails to recognize the right of the judge, even where the facts are disputed, to submit instructions appropriate to the possible findings.<sup>4</sup>

§ 2555. Facts Judicially noticed; Trial by Inspection; Nul Tiel Record; Constitutional Considerations. (a) On such matters as the Court notices judicially (post, § 2567), it would seem that the judge's ruling does not determine the matter, and the jury need not take it from him as a decided point, unless it concerns something that would otherwise not come to them as matter of fact.

(b) There was once recognized a form of trial by inspection, i. e. by the judge's own observation of the fact in court.<sup>1</sup> But this is rather to be considered as a survival, in distorted form, of some of the earlier methods of proof prevailing before jury-trial;<sup>2</sup> and no recognition would probably be given to it to-day,<sup>3</sup> except in the ensuing instance.

(c) A judicial record, when its existence in a certain tenor is denied, was said to be tried by inspection of the judge, on production of the alleged original record before him; and the plea of nul tiel record was coextensive with this class of cases.<sup>4</sup> A foreign judgment, however, being evidenced by copy only, fell without this rule.<sup>5</sup>

(d) Where a legislative act is argued to be unconstitutional, and this is to depend upon the unreasonableness, or lack of possible reasonableness, of the law in its purpose or operation, and thus the external facts furnishing the

Fairbanks, 11 Pick. 368, 370 (whether certain things were shingles or mere chips; "it was ruled that, as the point was clear upon inspection, it was to be decided by the Court"; ruling held improper). One of the rare instances is the following, which however falls rather under the principle for documents (post, § 2556): 1836, Cromwell v. Tate's Ex'r, 7 Leigh 301, 303 ("the existence or non-existence of the seal [on a deed] is to be ascertained by an appeal to the senses; and when that is the case, the judges of the Court shall decide"; citing Blackstone).

<sup>4</sup> 1628, Co. Litt. 260a ("If such a record be alleged, and it be pleaded that there is no such record, it shall be tried only by itself"); 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 330 ("Where a matter of record is pleaded in any action — as, a fine, a judgment, or the like —, and the opposite party pleads 'nul tiel record' . . . the trial therefore of this issue is merely by the record; . . . it shall not receive any trial by witness, jury, or otherwise, but only by itself"). Accord: 1824, State v. Graton, 3 Hawks 187; 1824, State v. Isham, 3 Hawks 185; 1833, Adams v. Betz, 1 Watts 425, 427.

A judge's finding of the proceedings before himself may be decisive: 1920, State ex rel. Brown v. Lyons, 106 Kan. 860, 189 Pac. 976 (motion to vacate a judgment against a minor; the trial judge's memorandum as to the fact of a prior motion to appoint a guardian, this fact being in dispute, held decisive).

<sup>5</sup> Eng. 1778, Walker v. Witley, 1 Doug. 1, 7, per Buller, J. ("It is to be tried by the country . . . and not by the Court"); 1804, Collins v. Mathew, 5 East 473; U. S. 1820, Baldwin v. Hale, 17 Johns. N. Y. 272.

The exception for judgments of another of the United States "proved the rule": 1818, Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cr. 481, 485 (under the constitutional clause requiring full faith for a judgment of another of the United States, 'nul tiel record' becomes the proper plea of denial; "it may be proved in the manner prescribed by the Act, and such proof is of as high a nature as an inspection by the Court of its own record"; Johnson, J., diss.). Accord: 1828, Hall v. Williams, 6 Pick. Mass. 232, 237 (useful opinion); 1905, Clark v. Eltinge, 38 Wash. 376, 80 Pac. 556.

Contra: 1835, Carter v. Wilson, 1 Dev. & B. 362.

possible legislative motive or the possible actual effect must be considered, this incidental question of fact is not for the jury, but for the Court. Hence, no testimony, of experts or others, would be admitted for the jury.

But by what theory or method shall the Court receive information of the alleged facts? This is an interesting inquiry, hitherto not carefully worked out by the Courts. The principle of judicial notice has usually been loosely invoked.<sup>6</sup>

§ 2556. Construction of Documents. The construction of all written instruments belongs to the Court.<sup>1</sup> It may become necessary to hear evidence of the surrounding circumstances that fill out the meaning of the words, as well as of any local or commercial meanings attached to particular words by usage (ante, §§ 2461-2478); and the ascertainment of this is for the jury.<sup>2</sup> But, subject to the amplification or precision of the meaning thus ascertained, it is the duty of the jury to take the construction of the instrument from the Court:<sup>3</sup>

<sup>6</sup> See some searching comments on the question in Professor Henry Schofield's article, "New Trials and the Seventh Amendment" (Illinois Law Rev., VIII, p. 403, n. 65, reprinted in his Essays on Constitutional Law and Equity, 1921); also the following modern cases: 1910, Ritchie v. Wayman, 244 Ill. 509, 91 N. E. 694 (female labor law; the Court noticed the "general consensus of opinion" as to the justifiable conditions leading to such a law, namely, woman's physical organization, her maternal functions, the rearing of children, and the maintenance of home; in truth, the Court found this consensus in passages quoted in a voluminous brief of one of the parties); 1912, People v. Elerding, 254 Ill. 579, 583, 98 N. E. 982 (labor law; repeating the expression, from Ritchie v. Wayman, that "the Court would take judicial knowledge" as to woman's health being subject to be affected by hours of labor); 1903, *Pittsburg, C., C. & St. Louis R. Co. v. 1839, Hutchison v. Bowker, 5 M. & W. 535, 541; a contract for sale of barley referred to "good barley" and "fine barley"; these were trade terms, and the jury was told to determine their meaning; there was also a question as to the parties' understanding each other's usage. Sir F. Pollock (W. H. Watson) with him: "It is admitted that when the words of a contract are clear and unambiguous, it is for the Court to put a construction upon it; but where the words are either unintelligible, or have both a popular and a technical meaning, it is for the jury to say whether the words were used in a technical or ordinary sense." Lord ABINGER, C. B. . . . "It appears to me that the question as to the interpretation of this contract is a question entirely for the Court, and not for the jury. That they should ever be the judges on such a matter was founded on this, that there might be technical words used in a contract, which the jury might understand, and the Court might not; but it would be contrary to all practice to say, after the terms are explained to the satisfaction of the Court, that the jury are to have the interpretation of the contract, and not the Court." . . .

PARKE, B.: "I am of the same opinion. . . . The law I take to be this — that it is the duty of the Court to construe all written instruments; if there are peculiar expressions used in it, which have, in particular places or trades, a known meaning attached to them, it is for the jury to say what the meaning of these expressions was, but for the Court to decide what the meaning of the contract was. It was right, therefore, to leave it to the jury to say whether there was a peculiar meaning attached to the word 'fine,' in the corn market; and the jury having found what it was, the question, whether there was a complete acceptance by the written documents is a question for the judge."

Where a contract is entirely oral, or partly in writing and partly oral, it is usually said that its terms, if disputed, are to be tried by the jury as a question of fact, subject to instructions as to the legal effect of the words.<sup>4</sup>

§ 2557. Criminal Intent. In the definition of crime, certain more detailed rules have from time to time been laid down, as rules of law, defining the nature of malice and of the other states of mind that are to be taken as constituting that criminal intent which is one of the elements of the offence. So far as limited by these rules, the question of intent ceases to be one of fact and is one of law.<sup>1</sup>

For the practice in determining the meaning of a libel, see Capital & Counties Bank v. Henty, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 741 (1882); 1921, People v. Taylor, 187 Cal. 378, 203 Pac. 85 (rule for libel applied on a charge of criminal syndicalism).

competition and collision the respective functions of judge and jury, was the question whether, in a criminal prosecution for libel, the malicious or seditious intent was an inference of law to be made from the words published and the averments and innuendoes, as found by the jury and spread upon the record, or whether it remained as an inference of fact to be found by the jury. The practice of the English judges in the eighteenth century had not been entirely consistent in maintaining the former view,<sup>2</sup> and the latter view was finally after much popular agitation sanctioned by the Legislature.<sup>3</sup>

§ 2558. Foreign Law. It is generally held that a foreign law is a matter of "fact," i. e. its existence is to be determined by the jury.<sup>1</sup> But the only sound view, either on principle or on policy, is that it should be proved to the judge, who is decidedly the more appropriate person to determine it.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The arguments and opinions in the great Trial of the Dean of St. Asaph's, 21 How. St. Tr. 946, 968, 978, 1039, 3 T. R. 428 (in which Erskine was of counsel for the defendant, and Lord Mansfield delivered the opinion), contain the data on both sides; the answer of the Judges to the Lords, in 1789, 22 How. St. Tr. 296, 301, finally dealt with the matter.

<sup>3</sup> 1792, St. 32 G. III, c. 60, known as Fox's Libel Act. For the law in the United States, see Thompson on Trials, § 2025; 1885, Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray Mass. 185 (giving the history in England); 1910, Oakes v. State, 98 Miss. 80, 54 So. 79; 1902, Jones v. Murray, 167 Mo. 25, 66 S. W. 981.

The Codes usually declare this rule: Cal. P. C. 1872, § 251, § 1125; Del. Const. 1897, Art. I, § 5; Ia. Code 1919, § 8899; Kan. G. S. 1915, § 3772; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 131, § 6; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8464; Mo. Const. 1875, Art. II, § 14; Rev. St. 1919, § 3616; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 8075, 9005.

Distinguish here, also, however, the question (ante, § 2494) whether in a civil case there is any evidence upon which a jury might find a libel: 1882, Capital & Counties Bank v. Henty, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 741.

§ 2558. <sup>1</sup> The statutes which provide that foreign law may be "proved as facts by parol evidence" (quoted ante, § 1271) seem to mean to adopt the unsound rule that the proof is to be made to the jury: Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1736; Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 499, 500; Ia. Comp. Code 1919, § 7359; Md. Const. 1867, Art. XV, § 5; Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12515; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, §§ 8413, 8417; N. Y. C. C. P. 1920, § 391; Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11499; S. C. C. C. P. 1922, § 707.

In the following Canadian statute the same principle is assumed: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 60 (the judge may express his opinion to the jury on the construction of any foreign statute).

the principle of the Court's construction of documents (ante, § 2556) while recognizing the jury's function of crediting the evidence; but there is no necessity for here conceding anything to the latter; with the following rulings compare those cited post, § 2573 (judicial notice of foreign law), and ante, §§ 1271, 1953 (expert testimony to foreign law): Federal: 1902, Mexican N. R. Co. v. Slater, 53 C. C. Works*, 223 Ill. 142, 79 N. E. 97 (cause of action in Indiana; the statutes and decisions of Indiana held to have been properly introduced and read "before the Court and out of the presence of the jury"); Massachusetts: 1868, Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 253 (foreign law is matter of fact, except for the construction and effect of a written document forming the entire evidence); 1887, Gibson v. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729 (same); 1898, Hancock Nat'l Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 39, 51 N. E. 207 (a question of law when consisting entirely of statutes or decisions; of fact, where decisions are conflicting or inferences of fact are to be drawn); 1901, Cook v. Bartlett, 179 Mass. 76, 61 N. E. 266 (the tenor of the law is a question of fact, but the construction of the language in statutes and decisions not conflicting is for the Court); 1906, Mercantile Guaranty Co. v. Hilton, 191 Mass. 141, 77 N. E. 312 (here the Court went to the pedantic length of refusing to consider New York decisions, cited in argument but not offered at the trial, upon the interpretation of a New York statute; because "this is here a question of fact"); 1909, Electric Welding Co. v. Prince, 200 Mass. 386, 86 N. E. 947 (stating new shadings, which exhibit the irrational nature of the rule leaving foreign law to the jury); Missouri: 1857, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 25 Mo. 465, 473 (for the Court, so far as it is a statute, or decisions, experts, or writers resorted to for interpretation; but perhaps for the jury where it is merely un-

Moreover, proving to the jury the law of another State of the American Union, when the law is not presumed (ante, § 2536), becomes a peculiarly absurd process:

1857, Hooper v. Moore, 5 Jones L. (N. C.) 130: PEARSON, J. . . . "What is the law of another State, or of a foreign country, is as much a 'question of law,' as what is the law of our own State. There is this difference, however: the Court is presumed to know judicially the public laws of our State, while in respect to private laws, and the laws of other States and foreign countries, this knowledge is not presumed; it follows that the existence of the latter must be alleged and proved as facts; for otherwise, the Court cannot know or take notice of them. This is familiar learning. In order to give effect to this presumption of a knowledge, on the part of the Court, of the public laws of our State, it is provided that the persons who are entrusted with the administration of justice as a Court, shall be men learned in the law. . . . When an issue of fact involves a question of law, the jury are not entrusted to decide it; but it is the duty of the Court to give to the jury instruction in regard to the law, and it is the duty of the jury to be governed by such instructions. In this way as much accuracy, and as great a degree of fixedness, in respect to questions of law, is secured, as the nature of the subject admits of. Such being the case in respect to questions arising about our own laws, it would seem as a matter of course to be likewise so in respect to questions arising about the laws of other States, or of foreign countries, whenever, in the administration of justice, our Courts are called upon to deal with them.

"The assertion of a contrary opinion is met at once by these considerations, which, as it seems to us, cannot be answered: i. e., if juries are incompetent to decide questions in regard to our own laws, and the Court is required to give them instructions in respect thereto, are they any more competent to decide questions in regard to the laws of other States, or foreign countries? and do not they stand equally in need of instructions in respect to them? If such questions are to be decided by the juries, their decisions cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court, and where is the security either for accuracy or fixedness? A jury is not a permanent tribunal, and no memorial is kept of its action, except the general conclusion — a verdict; which is binding only between the parties to the particular case.

"But it is said our Courts are not presumed to know the laws of other States, or of foreign countries. Admit it; still can it be questioned that the Court is more competent to ascertain and understand such laws, than the jury? or that the jury stand as much in need of instruction in respect thereto, as in respect to our own laws?

"Again, it is said the existence of such laws must be alleged and proved as facts. Admit it. But how are they to be proved? To the Court, or to the jury? Surely to the Court, because they are 'questions of law.' We are aware that an impression prevails to some extent, that the proof is to be made to the jury. This originated from the expression 'to written); 1862, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 33 Mo. 194, 200, 201 (unwritten law proved to the jury; English decisions, etc., read to them); New Hampshire: 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152, 169 (for the Court, where merely preliminary to the legality of a document); 1917, Hansen v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 78 N. H. 518, 102 Atl. 625 (Canadian law is a question of fact for the trial judge, not reviewable; prior cases explained); North Carolina: 1857, Hooper v. Moore, 5 Jones 130 (quoted supra); South Dakota: 1920, State v. Morgan, 42 S. D. 517, 176 N. W. 35 (foreign law is a question of fact); Vermont: 1888, Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Wright, 60 Vt. 522, 12 Atl. 103; Washington: 1916, Bogitch v. Potlatch Lumber Co., 93 Wash. 585, 161 Pac. 487 (law of Idaho, held

"a question of law for the Court and not the jury"); Wisconsin: 1912, Hite v. Keene, 149 Wis. 207, 134 N. W. 383 (Swiss law; a code section, as interpreted by experts, held to be for the jury).

The following method should be adopted in American courts: Eng. St. 1859, 22-23 Viet. c. 63 (to ascertain the law in another part of the British Dominions, the opinion of the Court there may be obtained and such opinion may either be adopted as law or "submitted to the jury with the other facts of the case as evidence, or conclusive evidence, as the Court may think fit, of the foreign law"); St. 1861, 24 Viet., c. 11 (laws of foreign countries; similar to St. 1859, c. 63, but omitting "as evidence or").

be proved as facts,' and many loose dicta are to be met with, scattered through the books, in which these words have been inadvertently added to, so as to make the expression 'to be proven as facts to the jury.' . . . If the law be written, and its existence is properly authenticated, the Court, availing itself of the aid of the judicial decisions of the country, puts a construction on it, and explains its meaning and legal effect, and the jury have nothing to do with it, save to follow the instructions of the Court, as if it was our own law. If the law is unwritten, and its existence is presumed or admitted, then the jury have nothing to do with it. For example, if it be presumed, or admitted, that the common law prevails in the State of Virginia, and has not been altered by statute in respect to the particular question, our Court decides what the common law is. . . . But if the existence of an unwritten law of another State, or foreign country, is not presumed or admitted, then its existence must be proved by competent witnesses, and the jury must then pass on the credibility of the witnesses, and it is the province of the Court to inform the jury as to the construction, meaning, and legal effect of the law, supposing its existence to be proven; and to this end, the Court should avail itself of the judicial decisions of the State or country."

§ 2559. Local Law. The doctrine has obtained in a few jurisdictions that the jury, in dealing with the local law applicable to the case, have in criminal cases a legal right to repudiate the instructions of the judge and to determine the law for themselves.<sup>1</sup> But this ill-advised doctrine, defiant of the fundamentals of law, has only a narrow acceptance.

§ 2559. <sup>1</sup> For the jurisdictions in which this view is taken, see Thompson on Trials, §§ 2132-2148; 1909, State v. Daley, 54 Or. 514, 103 Pac. 502; 104 Pac. 1.

For a vindication of its orthodoxy and an examination of the rule in the various jurisdictions, see the opinion of Gray, J., in Spart v. U. S. (1895), 156 U. S. 51, 110, 15 Sup. 273.

For an examination of its probable origin, see Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 253.

1. General Principles

§ 2565. Theory of Judicial Notice.<sup>1</sup> Of the propositions involved in the pleadings, or relevant thereto, proof by evidence may be dispensed with in two situations: (1) where the opponent by a solemn or infra-judicial admission has waived dispute, and (2) where the Court is justified by general considerations in declaring the truth of the proposition without requiring evidence from the party. The former is considered under the head of Judicial Admissions (post, §§ 2588-2596). The latter is the process most commonly meant by the term Judicial Notice.

There are various senses in which the term Judicial Notice is used. In the orthodox sense above noted, it signifies that there are certain 'facta probanda' (ante, § 2), or propositions in a party's case, as to which he will not be required to offer evidence; these will be taken for true by the tribunal without the need of evidence. This general principle of Judicial Notice is simple and natural enough.

§ 2566. Anomalous Meanings of the Term Judicial Notice. The term Judicial Notice has many applications, distinct from those peculiar to the present purpose. Some of these are traditional, and therefore perhaps not to be termed incorrect; others are merely loose ways of naming some process or rule already properly known under another name. The essential thing is to distinguish these applications from the chief one, here involved, i. e. the acceptance of a matter as proved without requiring the party to offer evidence of it.

(1) A usage extending far back in our annals is to apply the term where the question is whether a certain pleading, or a certain averment in a pleading, or greater particularity of averment, is necessary.<sup>1</sup>

(2) Whether a Court, for the purposes of ordering a new trial or otherwise, may give effect to a matter capable of being judicially noticed — i. e. assumed without evidence — but not referred to in the record,<sup>2</sup> or falsely alleged in the pleading,<sup>3</sup> is a question of the power and duty of the Court; but this term has been applied to it.

(3) Whether a Court will take judicial notice of the existence of a foreign State is really a question whether, as a matter of substantive law and judicial functions, a foreign State will in domestic Courts be treated as existing only so far as the Executive so treats it; here it is conceded that the Executive's recognition is the determining element.<sup>4</sup>

§ 2566. <sup>1</sup> Thayer, ubi supra, pp. 281-286; 1899, Nichols v. Bardwell Lodge, 105 Ky. 168, 48 S. W. 426, 1091 (under C. C. P. § 119 and Rev. St. c. 35, § 1); 1897, Wikel v. Board, 120 N. C. 451, 27 S. E. 117 (declaring unnecessary a supplemental plea alleging the repeal of an act); 1897, Douglass v. K. & M. R. Co., 44 W. Va. 267, 28 S. E. 705 (holding it unnecessary to allege the defendant to be a corporation).

In such cases, a ruling that no averment is necessary would usually imply a judicial notice of the fact if it were averred in pleading, and in the ensuing topics are instances of this; but it does not follow that a ruling requiring an averment implies that the fact would not be noticed if duly averred.

<sup>2</sup> Thayer, ubi supra, pp. 283, 288; 1897, Steenerson v. R. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713 (the Supreme Court, reviewing a finding of the Railroad Commission as to reasonable rates, conceded some weight to the experience of the Commission; Cauty, J.: "[The Commission] should be thoroughly familiar with the many financial and economic problems which enter into the business of constructing and operating railroads. How is a judge, who is not supposed to have any of this special learning or experience, and could not take judicial notice of it if he had it, to review the decision of commissioners, who should have it and should act upon it? It seems to us that such a judge is not fit to act in such a matter. . . . We see no way of disposing of this question except to hold that on appeal from the commission the Courts should, to the best of their ability, take judicial notice of all such technical learning, knowledge, and information of a general character as should be known and understood by the commission").

<sup>3</sup> Eng. 1828, Taylor v. Barclay, 2 Sim. 213 (where a pleading alleged that a certain government was recognized by H. M. government, and the Court treated this as incorrect; "notwithstanding there is this averment in the bill [demurred to], I am bound to take the fact as it really exists, and not as it is averred to be"); U. S. 1897, People v. Oakland Water-Front Co., 118 Cal. 234, 50 Pac. 305 (declaration alleging title in certain lands; demurrer; a statute incorporating a city declared its title to lands alleged in the declaration as the plaintiff's; the Court took "judicial notice" that this allegation was incorrect; but either it was a question of law, in which case a demurrer does not admit propositions of law, or it was a question whether certain statutory boundaries included the plaintiff's private land, in which case the ruling seems wrong as a matter of judicial notice).

<sup>4</sup> ENGLAND: 1894, Mighell v. Sultan of Johore, 1 Q. B. 149, 158 (certificate of the Secretary of State for Colonies as to defendant's being an independent sovereign power; "this letter is conclusive"); 1900, Foster v. Globe Venture Synd., 1 Ch. 811 (boundary of a foreign State); Statham v. Statham and Gaekwar of Baroda, [1912] P. 92 (like Mighell v. Sultan of Johore, supra). In Taylor v. Barclay, supra, note 3, it was decided merely that the allegation in a declaration that a certain foreign State was recognized as such by the King could be found untrue by reference to the Foreign Office; in Yrisarri v. Clement, 1825, 2 C. & P. 223, 225 ("If a foreign State is recognized by this country, it is not necessary to prove that it is an existing State; but if it is not so recognized, such proof becomes necessary"), the latter clause seems misleading.

(4) Certain rules of Evidence, usually known under other names, are frequently referred to in terms of judicial notice. Thus, the admissibility of almanacs is mainly a question whether an exception to the Hearsay rule can be made in their favor;<sup>5</sup> but a Court occasionally makes this exception by saying that the almanac is to be judicially noticed; although the term is properly applicable only where the Court declares the day of the month, or other fact, not to need evidence,<sup>6</sup> and then consults the book to inform itself; the practical difference being that in the former case it goes to the jury, but in the latter not.<sup>7</sup> Again, it has been said that judicial notice will

UNITED STATES: Federal: The doctrine of the following cases is that a foreign State will or will not be so considered by the Court according as it is or is not recognized by the Executive: 1817, U. S. v. Hutchings, 2 Wheel. Cr. C. 543; 1808, Rose v. Himely, 4 Cr. 241, 272; 1818, Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. 246, 324; 1821, The Nueva Anna, 6 Wheat. 193; 1839, Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 13 Pet. 415, 421; 1852, Kennett v. Chambers, 14 How. 38, 51; 1889, Re Baiz, 135 U. S. 403, 431, 10 Sup. 854; 1890, Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 202, 212, 11 Sup. 80 (conclusive); 1897, Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U. S. 250, 18 Sup. 83; 1891, U. S. v. Trumbull, 48 Fed. 99, 104; 1893, The Itata, 56 Fed. 505, 510; 1918, Detjen v. Central Leather Co., 246 U. S. 297, 38 Sup. 309 (purchase in Mexico; noticed that since the time in issue "the government of the United States recognized the government of Carranza," etc., which is a strange way to state it); 1920, The Rogdai, D. C. N. D. Calif., 278 Fed. 294 (action in rem for possession of a steamer, by the "Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic"; the libellant not recognized, upon a "suggestion" by B. B., with certificate of the U. S. State Department that B. B. is recognized as the Russian representative and that the so-called Republic has not been recognized; the certificate held to be proof, but "logically the representations made in the 'suggestion' should come through the appropriate executive channels of the American government; . . . the Courts should be advised of the Executive will directly and from an authoritative source"); 1922, The Penza, D. C. E. D. N. Y., 277 Fed. 91 (the "Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic," not recognized, because not recognized by the U. S. State Department). In U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 610, 634 (1818), the ruling seems merely to concede (and properly) that a defendant denying a piratical intent may plead the authority of a revolutionary government having a colorable existence, in which case its actual recognition is immaterial. New York: 1921, Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Govern- ment v. Cibrario, Sup. App. Div., 191 N. Y. Suppl. 543 (action for an accounting; objection that the purporting plaintiff had no capacity to sue, not being recognized as a sovereignty, this objection being a virtual denial of one of the assertions in the declaration; held that the sovereignty was a matter for judicial notice; and a letter was used from the Secretary of State of the United States to the U. S. Alien Property Custodian, without date mentioned, stating that the U. S. had not recognized the Government in question); 1922, Savie v. New York, Sup. Sp. T., 193 N. Y. Suppl. 577 (action by a consul-general; his status determined by a letter-patent from the President revoking the exequatur; "such action . . . is a final and conclusive determination").

For a full collection of diplomatic and judicial authorities, see Professor Charles Cheney Hyde's International Law chiefly as Interpreted and Applied by the United States (1922), I, § 41.

<sup>7</sup> The following instances show the correct treatment: 1792, Attorney-General v. Castplate Glass Co., post, § 2569; 1898, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brinkerhoff, 119 Ala. 606, 24 So. 893 (here the Court intimated that an almanac, offered to show the time of sunset, was not improperly excluded, as there was no need of evidence).

So also mortality tables are sometimes said to be judicially noticed: 1894, Lincoln v. Power, 151 U. S. 436, 441, 14 Sup. 387 (notice taken of Carlisle Tables, in estimating length of life, whether offered in evidence or not); although in strictness they are evidence admissible under an exception to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1698); the following case shows the correct treatment: 1901, Western & A. R. Co. v. Hyer, 113 Ga. 776, 39 S. E. 446 (on exceptions, a statement in the brief of evidence that a mortality table was introduced does not authorize the Court to notice it, though it is stated to have been published in a volume of official reports; Simmons, C. J., and Lewis, J., diss.); furthermore, it seems equally incorrect to notice the duration of life without some evidence from tables or the like, but be taken of the correctness of the photographic process; <sup>8</sup> which is merely another way of saying that properly verified photographs are admissible evidence.<sup>9</sup> In the same way, to take notice that "mere pasturage upon these western lands is very slight evidence of possession,"<sup>10</sup> is to measure evidence. The so-called judicial notice of certain seals<sup>11</sup> is merely a rule that the production of something purporting to be a seal shall be in these cases sufficient evidence of genuineness to go to the jury or shall suffice to raise a presumption of genuineness. Whether a Court will take judicial notice of the contents of legislative proceedings may be properly a question of the present sort;<sup>12</sup> but the same form of expression is also occasionally used where the real inquiry is whether, as evidence of the statute's terms, or of its passage, the journals are to be preferred to the official certificate appended to the enrolled act.<sup>13</sup>

(5) Other loose applications of the term, sometimes dealing with matters of substantive law,<sup>14</sup> sometimes with matters of procedure, will occasionally be found.

It is unfortunate that the phrase should be so often loosely employed, especially as the legitimate doctrine "is an instrument of great capacity in the hands of a competent judge, and is not nearly as much used, in the region of practice and evidence, as it should be."<sup>15</sup>

§ 2567. Effect of Judicial Notice; (1) not Conclusive. (a) That a matter is judicially noticed means merely that it is taken as true without the offering of evidence by the party who should ordinarily have done so. But the opponent is not prevented from disputing the matter by evidence, if he believes it disputable.<sup>1</sup> It is true that occasionally a Court is found declaring a thing judicially noticed and at the same time refusing to listen to evidence to the contrary;<sup>2</sup> but usually this is in truth laying down a new rule of sub-this was done in Nelson v. Bradford L. & W. Co., 75 Conn. 548, 54 Atl. 303 (1903).

Again, certain official interest tables are sometimes made evidence by statute (ante, § 1672); but this does not signify that they are to be judicially noticed: 1886, Camp v. Randle, 81 Ala. 240, 2 So. 287.

<sup>14</sup> E. g. 1896, Southern R. Co. v. Covenia, 100 Ga. 46, 29 S. E. 219 (the declaration in an action for loss of a child's services alleged the services specifically, and gave the age of the child as 1 year, 8 months, and 10 days; the Court took "judicial cognizance of the fact that a child of this tender age is incapable of rendering such services" as justify recovery).

<sup>15</sup> Thayer, ubi supra, p. 309.

45 Pac. 860; and this seems implied throughout, particularly by the doctrine of § 2569, post.

Since judicial notice is an expedient for hastening the trial and eliminating superfluities, it would be proper to prevent the party in whose favor the fact is noticed from offering evidence of it: 1898, State v. Chingren, 105 Ia. 169, 74 N. W. 946 (that it is customary to mark up the price of land to be sold, not noticed).

And where no contrary evidence is offered, the Court may properly withdraw the fact from submission to the jury as part of the issue and ~~may instruct the jury as matter of law~~: 1920, Seebach v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 262 Fed. 885, semble (state of war noticed).

<sup>2</sup> E. g. 1889, Com. v. Marzynski, 149 Mass. 68, 72, 21 N. E. 228 (indictment for illegally selling cigars on Sunday; "the Court has judicial knowledge of the meaning of common words, and may well rule that guns and pistols are not drugs or medicines, and may exclude the opinions of witnesses who offer to testify that they are").

stantive law by declaring certain facts immaterial; whenever a Court forbids the production of evidence, it removes the subject from the realm of the law of evidence properly so called.

(b) The process of taking judicial notice often may imply incidentally a ruling as to the respective functions of judge and jury. Does it signify that the settlement of the matter rests with the judge and not with the jury, that the jury are to accept the fact from the judge, and that so far as any further investigation is concerned, it is for the judge alone? Such is the view sometimes found, in decisions<sup>3</sup> as well as statutes.<sup>4</sup> Yet it seems rather that the jury are not concluded; that the process of notice is intended chiefly for expedition of proof; and that since the fact is disputable by the opponent (supra, par. a), it remains possible for the jury to negative it. In those classes of facts, however, in which the judge has the function of decision and not the jury (ante, §§ 2549-2559), it would be true, so far as any such facts were capable of notice, that the judge's determination is exclusive; but this would not be by virtue of the doctrine of judicial notice.<sup>5</sup>

§ 2568. Same: (2) Notice must be requested; Pleading a Statute. Judicial notice being a dispensation of one party from producing evidence, it would seem that the party must, in point of form, make a request for it.<sup>1</sup> Upon this request, the Court is bound, it is sometimes said, to declare the fact noticed,<sup>2</sup> or at least to make that investigation (post, § 2569) which it deems necessary. No doubt, in most instances, the rule of law has the plain consequence of compelling the judge to declare the dispensation; not to do so would be to err, precisely as under any other rule of law. But it must not be supposed that this is universally true; the decisions demonstrate that there are numerous topics, near the line of doubt in their feature of notoriety, of which the Court may, but not must, take notice. No definite distinction is

<sup>3</sup> Conn. The first case is presumably now not law; 1841, Kilgore v. Bulkley, 14 Conn. 362, 387 (conflicting decisions in another State, submitted to the jury); 1843, Hale v. N. J. S. N. Co., 15 Conn. 539, 549 (by statute, reports of decisions in other States are to be judicially noticed; a Court therefore may hold the law to be as therein decided without submitting it to the jury); 1847, Lockwood v. Crawford, 18 Conn. 361, 370 (same); 1897, State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 37 Atl. 80 (excluding from the jury's consideration certain evidence as to a contagious tree-disease; leading opinion, by Baldwin, J.); Minn. 1893, Thomson-Houston El. Co. v. Palmer, 52 Minn. 174, 177, 53 N. W. 1137 (proof of foreign law; official copies of decisions of foreign Court not received, the question being for the Court).

In State v. McCredit (1921), 149 La. 825, 90 So. 210 the doctrine about the judge not commenting on facts to the jury (ante, § 2551) was invoked to confuse the subject, in opinions which should not be given any weight.

Laws 1920, § 1543); § 1065 (like ib. § 136); *Cal. C. C. recognized; but it is plain that many of the rulings merely authorize the Court to notice a fact, without requiring it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 2569. Same: (3) Judge's Private Knowledge; Judge may Investigate. (a) There is a real but elusive line between the judge's personal knowledge as a private man and his knowledge as a judge. The latter does not necessarily include the former; as a judge, indeed, he may have to ignore what he knows as a man, and contrariwise.<sup>1</sup> The dilemma sometimes thus presented has given rise to much discussion over extreme cases, — particularly the celebrated problem once put by a King of England, whether a judge could lawfully respite a convicted person whom he personally knew to be innocent.<sup>2</sup> But it is now well enough understood that there is here no impracticable dilemma. If the judge, as a man and an observer, has any personal knowledge, he may (and sometimes morally must) utilize it by taking the stand as a witness and telling in that capacity what he knows (ante, § 1909); this solves

<sup>3</sup> E. g. 1902, Re Osborne, 52 C. C. A. 595, 115 Fed. 1 (a court's own records; the Court is not obliged to notice them); 1913, Line v. Line, 119 Md. 403, 86 Atl. 1032 (if below no request for notice is made, on appeal notice need not be taken; here, of a date making a bond invalid); 1889, Hunter v. N. Y. O. & W. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 615, 621, 23 N. E. 9 ("Courts are not bound to take judicial notice of matters of fact. Whether they will do so or not depends on the nature of the subject, the issue involved, and the apparent justice of the case").

It would of course be unsound to declare a trial Court in error for affirmatively noticing a foreign law which it need not have noticed, as long as no contention is raised as to the incorrectness of the Court's finding as to tenor of the law; yet this has been done: 1915, Yam Ka Lim v. Insular Collector, 30 P. I. 46 (law of China).

§ 2569. <sup>1</sup> The following jest of Lord Eldon's illustrates this: 1782 (?), Lord Eldon, in Twiss' Life, I, 130: "We had an amusing case at York. Stakes for a race had been deposited in the hands of one party, to be paid to the owner of the horse that won; but then there was a condition that each horse was to be ridden by a 'gentleman'; and it was disputed whether the horse that did win was ridden by a 'gentleman' or not. This action was to ascertain this point. . . . Well, we had a great deal of evidence, and then we came to the summing up of the judge, who addressed the jury in these words: 'Gentlemen of the jury, when I see you in the box, I call you "gentlemen," for I know you are such; custom has authorized me; and from your office there I know you are entitled to be called "gentlemen." But, out of that box, I do not know what may be deemed the requisites that constitute a "gentleman"; therefore I can give you no direction.' The jury returned a verdict that he was not a 'gentleman.' Well, the next morning he challenged both Law and me, who were conducting the cause against him, for saying that he was no gentleman; we sent him this answer, that we could not think of fighting one who was pronounced by a solemn verdict of twelve of his countrymen to be no gentleman."

<sup>2</sup> 1406, Y. B. 7 H. IV, 41, pl. 5 (in arguing a question as to the duty of the Court not to have rendered a certain judgment, counsel put this case: "Sir, let us put the case, that one man kills another in your presence, you observing it, and another who is not guilty is indicted before you and is found guilty so as to incur the penalty of death; you ought to respite the judgment against him, for you are knowing to the contrary, and should make further report to the King, to give him pardon; no more should you give judgment in this case, before causing those to appear by whose hands the King was paid"; Gascoigne, C. J.: "Once the King himself asked of me the very case that you have put, and asked me what was the law, and I told him just as you say it, and he was well pleased that the law was so"); 1578, Plowden's Commentaries, Partridge v. Strange, Plowd. 83 (mentioning, in Saunders' argument, the case in 7 H. IV with apparent approval); 1588, Coke, as counsel in Marriot v. Pascal, 1 Leon. 159, 161 (re-stating the case from the Year-book: "The judge he ought not to carry himself according to his private knowledge which he hath of the said fact, scil. to acquit the prisoner, but all that he can do is to respite judgment"; it may be noted that Coke mistranslates the word 'veiant' in the original, and the story has been sometimes mistold, through him).

Professor Thayer (Preliminary Treatise, 291) has an interesting note on the earlier literature of this problem.

the dilemma without either injuring justice or violating principle.<sup>3</sup> It is therefore plainly accepted that the judge is not to use from the bench, under the guise of judicial knowledge, that which he knows only as an individual observer.<sup>4</sup> The former is in truth "known" to him merely in the peculiar sense that it is known and notorious to all men, and the dilemma is only the result of using the term "knowledge" in two senses. Where to draw the line between knowledge by notoriety and knowledge by personal observation may sometimes be difficult, but the principle is plain.

(b) But the subjects of knowledge which raise the foregoing problem are obviously those "facts," in the ordinary sense, which are ascertainable by personal observation; belonging as they do to the jury's ultimate determination, it is obvious that the judge must in their regard be merely an ordinary witness to the jurors. There are, however, facts of "law" which are for the judge's own ultimate determination, — such as the tenor of foreign or local law (ante, §§ 2558, 2559) and the meaning of a document (ante, § 2556). Since these are to be decided by the judge, he is at liberty to investigate the facts for himself, in addition to receiving the evidence which the parties may offer. This is done, however, not by virtue of the doctrine of judicial notice, but by virtue of the judge's exclusive function, as against the jury, to try the

<sup>3</sup> 1696, Sir John Fenwick's Trial, before the House of Commons, 13 How. St. Tr. 663, 667 (Mr. Hawles, Sol. General, on Mr. Newport having cited the above story of Gascoigne: "It is said, though a judge do think in his conscience a person guilty, yet he ought not to make use of that private knowledge; and a case was quoted out of Henry IV. But I think that judge might have behaved himself something better than he did; and sure I am, now, he would be blamed. I do not say that a judge upon his private knowledge ought to judge; he ought not. But if a judge knows anything whereby the prisoner might be convicted or acquitted (not generally known), then I do say he ought to be called from the place where he sate, and go to the bar and give evidence of his knowledge; and so the judge in Henry IV's time ought to have done, and not to have suffered the prisoner to have been convicted and then get a pardon for him; for a pardon will not always do the business").

State*, 9 Ga. 373, 376 (refusing a continuance; the judge's personal knowledge of a witness' lack of credit, held improper to be used; good opinion, by Nisbet, J.); 1854, State v. Edwards, 19 Mo. 675, 676 (conviction of a witness before the same judge in another county; notice not taken); 1809, Rosekrans v. Antwerp, 4 Johns. N. Y. 239 (a statute forbade an appearance by attorney in a justice's court, unless the party was prevented by sickness or by absence from the county, of which proof was to be made; "the justice cannot act from his own knowledge and call that knowledge proof"); 1920, Gibson v. Von Glahn Hotel Co., Sup. App. T., 185 N. Y. Suppl. 154 (loss of plaintiff's goods at defendant's house, said to be a hotel; defendant's counsel maintained that it was only a rooming-house; the Court said: "I know the V. G. hotel as well as the witness does himself; I will give you a ruling now, It is a hotel"; held, erroneous); 1870, State v. Horn, 43 Vt. 20, 23 (marriage certificate by a justice in another domestic State; judge's own knowledge of law of that State not to be used); 1900, Shafer v. Eau Claire, 105 Wis. 239, 81 N. W. 409 (a witness to a bridge's bad condition was excluded by the trial judge, because the offer was "contrary to what I know to be the fact from my own personal knowledge"; held erroneous); 1921, Tullgren v. Karger, 173 Wis. 288, 181 N. W. 232 (value of architect's services; judge's own experience, not to be used in determining value; the Wisconsin cases infra not cited).

Occasionally, however, this is allowed to slip in: 1907, State v. Porter, 76 Kan. 411, 91 Pac. 1073 (value of attorneys' fees taxable in a case tried before the judge); 1880, Wisconsin Central R. Co. v. Cornell Univ., 49 Wis. 162, 164 (condemnation of right of way; the trial judge's "great familiarity with that portion of the State," considered in not reversing the judgment); 1881, Halaska v. Cotzhausen, 52 Wis. 624, 9 N. W. 401 (action for services as counsel, tried before a judge; the judge's observation of the services as he "saw and knew" them, allowed to be used).

fact (ante, § 2549). These investigations are frequently to be observed in rulings upon the recognition of a foreign State,<sup>5</sup> the tenor of foreign law,<sup>6</sup> and the meaning of words.<sup>7</sup>

(c) Finally, there is a process of investigation by the judge prior to a ruling of judicial notice upon a question of fact determinable by the jury. For example, when the Court is asked to dispense the party from evidencing the fact that the Mississippi joins the Missouri above the city of St. Louis, or that the first of January, 1904, fell on a Friday, i. e. to take judicial notice of these facts, he may resort to a map or a calendar, before making the ruling. This process is common enough;<sup>8</sup> but it is distinct from the two preceding ones. It is not a search for evidence to establish the fact; because the fact is plainly of a kind within the province of the jury, not of the judge. Nor is it a contribution of personal testimony, for the judge does not know it by his own observation, nor need he take the stand to testify. It is merely an occasional measure, taken in discretion, to satisfy the judge that he is justified in making the desired ruling for dispensing with evidence. He perceives that the fact probably cannot need evidence; he merely seeks to define the precise tenor of the fact about which he will make his ruling. The fact will still be in theory disputable before the jurors (ante, § 2567); the judicial investigation is made, not in order to establish the fact in their stead, but to make a ruling dispensing one party from offering to them evidence of the fact. This process, moreover, though permissible, is not compulsory upon the judge,<sup>9</sup> inasmuch as judicial notice at large is itself more or less optional (ante, § 2568).

§ 2570. Judicial Notice by the Jury's Own Knowledge. In general, the jury may in modern times act only upon evidence properly laid before them in the course of the trial. But so far as the matter in question is one upon which men in general have a common fund of experience and knowledge, through data notoriously accepted by all, the analogy of judicial notice obtains to some extent, and the jury are allowed to resort to this information in making up their minds. This doctrine, of course, has several aspects. From the point of view of the jury's duty, it appears as an exception to the rule that they must act only upon what is presented to them at the trial. From the point of view of the Hearsay rule, it may also be thought of as a partial exception to that.<sup>1</sup> But additionally it must be considered from the present point of view, for it authorizes the party to ask the jury to refer to their general knowledge upon the matter in question, and thus in effect and to that extent makes it unnecessary for the party to offer such evidence:

1878, Hunter's Trial, N. J., 13 Amer. St. Tr. 57, 151; murder of Armstrong by Graham, at Hunter's instigation; a witness as to their doings placed Hunter on the Philadelphia ferry-boat on the evening of the murder. Mr. George R. Robeson, for the accused, arguing against this witness' credibility: "As to the testimony of Mrs. Auvache, think of the brilliancy of memory of a witness who could come into court five months after the 23d of January and positively identify Hunter as a man at whom she had taken a passing glance on the evening of that day. And her entry in the diary of her trip to Philadelphia on that day, only two other entries being made in the whole book! She insisted that the ladies' cabin on the boat she came over on was on the left-hand side of the boat, although the ladies' cabin is on the right side of the boat."

Mr. Jenkins [for the State]: "Is there any proof in this case as to what side the ladies' cabin is located?"

Mr. Robeson: "Does the prosecutor dispute that fact?"

Mr. Jenkins: "I dispute that it is in testimony."

Mr. Robeson: "I don't care whether it is or not. I think Moore testified to the fact, but it does not matter; the Court knows, the jury knows, the people know, and the prosecutor knows, that the ladies' cabin on the boats of the Camden ferry is on the right-hand side. I gave Mrs. Auvache every opportunity to rectify her statement by asking her every form of question about it, but she stuck to her falsehood."

1884, LYON, J., in Washburn v. R. Co., 59 Wis. 364, 370: "A jury is not bound to give and cannot give any weight to testimony which, although undisputed by witnesses, is contrary to what every person of ordinary intelligence knows to be true. To illustrate, should a witness testify that at Boston on a certain day the sun arose at midnight, or that the Mississippi river empties into Lake Michigan, or that white is black, the testimony would be rejected at once. . . . Beyond this the jury cannot properly go. To allow jurors to make up their verdict on their individual knowledge of disputed facts material to the case, not testified to by them in court, or upon their private opinions, would be most dangerous and unjust. It would deprive the losing party of the right of cross-examination and the benefit of all the tests of credibility which the law affords. Besides, the evidence of such knowledge or of the grounds of such opinions could not be preserved in a bill of exceptions or questioned on appeal."

<sup>9</sup> E. g. 1853, Littlehale v. Dix, 11 Cush. 364 (magistrate's certificate that a deponent lived more than thirty miles from the place of trial, and no contrary evidence; the Court held not bound to learn what the distance was).

§ 2570. <sup>1</sup> Ante, § 1900 (jurors having personal knowledge must take the stand and state it publicly as witnesses subject to cross-examination). Distinguish, however, the propriety of knowledge acquired at a view (ante, § 1168).

1895, HACKNEY, J., Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448 (permitting the use of "your experience and relations among men" in judging of the credibility of witnesses): "It is argued that such a rule would permit the disposition of a cause upon the whims of jurors, rather than upon the law and the evidence as they were learned in the trial. Jurors should be, and, as a rule, are, selected because of their extensive experiences among men. The school of experience which men attend in their varied relations among men imparts a keenness of mental vision which enables them the more readily to see the motives and to judge of the selfish or unselfish interests of men. This education, be it much or little, is a part of the juror, and should not, if possible, be laid aside in passing upon the inducements which may surround a witness to speak falsely. It is this education which to a great extent enables a juror to discover in the faltering manner or the downcast eye whether the statement of the witness is made in modesty or in the guilt of falsehood. The value of experience is not to be given up when the man becomes a juror, and is required to apply the tests of credit to the heart and mind of the witness, but whatever qualification that experience gives should be employed to the end that the whole truth may be known and acted upon."

1921, BURNETT, C. J., in Rostad v. Portland R. L. & P. Co., 101 Or. 569, 201 Pac. 184: "The personal knowledge of any juror concerning any probative fact involved in the case under consideration is not to be used in deciding the case. Such a juror should communicate his information to the Court, and if he is not excused from service and it is deemed proper to use his cognizance of such a fact in the trial, he must be sworn as a witness and examined, subject to cross-examination by the adverse party, the same as any other witness. But any juror must consider the testimony in the light of that knowledge and experience which is common to all men. For instance, it is a matter of common knowledge that a bullet piercing the brain of a human being will in all likelihood prove fatal. It is common knowledge, also, that a forest tree cut nearly in two at the butt will fall, if a high wind blows against it. If a witness should testify to the contrary to these ordinary phenomena, the common knowledge of the juror derived from his experience in such matters would naturally compel him to discredit that witness. Many illustrations might be given where men are normally and legitimately influenced in considering testimony by their general knowledge and experience. . . . It is utterly impracticable in the administration of courts of justice to secure a juror whose mind is totally blank as to questions involved in the ordinary transactions of life. Triers of fact cannot, in the nature of things, be divested of general knowledge of practical affairs. The Court cannot do otherwise than to direct them to use such experiences as are common to all men in the decision of questions of fact. It is part of the jury system which cannot be dispensed with."

But the scope of this doctrine is narrow; it is strictly limited to a few matters of elemental experience in human nature, commercial affairs, and everyday life.<sup>2</sup> Thus, the natural instincts of human conduct, with reference

<sup>2</sup> In the palmy days of special juries (Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, pp. 94-97) this class of facts must obviously have been of broad range. But their gradual disuse seems to have been marked by a judicial inclination to disparage a resort to even that special knowledge for which they were first sought: 1836, R. v. Rosser, 7 C. & P. 648 (value of a watch; Vaughan, J.: "Any knowledge you may have on the subject you may use; some of you perhaps may be in the trade"; Parke, B.: "If a gentleman is in the trade, he must be sworn as a witness. The range of such general knowledge is not precisely definable.<sup>9</sup> But in play was for value, yet the jury was allowed to use its "experience" to infer that the bone-counters represented money).

<sup>8</sup> 1895, Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448 (jurors may use general experience in judging of witnesses' credibility; quoted supra); 1854, Schmidt v. Ins. Co., 1 Gray 529 (jurors may act on information which may "fairly be supposed to be within the common knowledge of all the jurors"; but "any particular knowledge of any facts, such as respecting the general infamous character of any of the defendant's witnesses . . . not being open to comment on the part of the defendant's counsel or to instruction on the part of the Court, but which was in possession merely of some one or more, but not the whole of the jury, could not fairly be taken into view by the jury"); 1876, Wharton v. State, 45 Tex. 2, 4 (the jury asked the trial judge: "Can we judge a witness just by what he says on the stand, and not by what we know of him privately?" held, that the answer should have been in the affirmative); 1895, Johnson v. R. Co., 91 Wis. 233, 64 N. W. 753 (the jury's knowledge of character of a particular witness is not to be used).

In Georgia, this result was at first not accepted: 1881, Anderson v. Tribble, 66 Ga. 585, 589 (a charge that a witness' character for veracity, if they knew it, might be considered, was approved); 1881, Head v. Bridges, 67 Ga. 227, 237 (same; the ruling defended in an able opinion by Crawford, J.); 1884, Howard v. State, 73 Ga. 83 (same ruling); 1892, Chattanooga R. & C. R. Co. v. Owen, 90 Ga. 265, 284, 15 S. E. 853 (preceding cases overruled; similar charge disapproved); 1894, Collins v. State, 94 Ga. 394, 19 S. E. 243 (same); 1908, Georgia R. & E. Co. v. Dougherty, 4 Ga. App. 585, 62 S. E. 157 (same).

In South Carolina the earlier theory of a jury's knowledge long persisted: 1834, M'Kain v. Love, 2 Hill 503 (the jury may act, "in some degree, from their own knowledge of the character of the parties and their witnesses; it is for this reason that the jurors are drawn from the vicinage").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1920, Schaefer v. U. S., 251 U. S. 466, 40 Sup. 259 (false reports with intent to aid the enemy in time of war; the jurors allowed to use their "general information" as to "what was necessary for the spirit and effective conduct of war, and how far a false cast to the dispatches received was depressing or detrimental to patriotic ardor"); Alabama: 1905, Ward v. State, — Ala. —, 39 So. 923 (default of duty as road overseer; common knowledge as to the condition of the county roads, not available); Arkansas: 1852, Houston v. State, 13 Ark. 66 (larceny of a horse; though there was no evidence of its value, the jury's "knowledge and experience" was held to justify inferences that the defendant would not have borrowed it, as alleged, if valueless, etc.); Illinois: 1906, Hayes v. Wagner, 220 Ill. 256, 77 N. E. 211 (the jury may weigh the evidence "in the light of their common observation and experience"); Iowa: 1912, Downing v. Farmer's M. F. Ins. Co., 158 Ia. 1, 138 N. W. 917 (whether a mare was killed by lightning; the jury not allowed to consider "their own observation and experience, if any, with reference to losses of that nature"; and thus the law on the one hand proceeds to eliminate the use of such intelligence as the jury has, while on the other arise lamentations over its lack of intelligence); Massachusetts: 1834, Parks v. Boston, 15 Pick. 198, 199, 209 (a fact personally known must be testified to; but this does not include the knowledge obtained by a view, nor the common experience of judicial notice); 1898, McGarrahan v. R. Co. 171 Mass. 211, 50 N. E. 610 (the jury may employ "their knowledge and experience of affairs"); Mississippi: 1897, Illinois Central R. Co. v. Greaves, 75 Miss. 360, 22 So. 792 (principle acknowledged; but a general instruction, without specifying the matter so to be known, was held improper); New Jersey: 1920, State v. Elliott, 94 N. J. L. 76, 110 Atl. 135 (manslaughter by driving an automobile; the jury allowed to consider "general characteristics incidental to verbal proof, such as demeanor," and "such other considerations that may be evolved from experience or which the jury may deem proper under the circumstances"); Oregon: 1896, Wills v. Lance, 28 Or. 371, 43 Pac. 487 (whether a meteorological wind-record should be believed, against numerous eye-witnesses; jurors may use "such general practical knowledge as they may have upon the subject"); 1921, Rostad v. Portland R. L. & P. Co., 101 Or. 569, 201 Pac. 184 (personal injury by a street-car; an instruction to "bring to your assistance your experience as men of affairs," held proper; quoted supra); Wisconsin: 1911, Solberg v. Robbins Lumber Co., 147 Wis. 259, 133 N. W. 28 (but this knowledge need not be common to all the jurors; here the jurors were allowed to use their understanding of the construction of the machines in issue, in weighing the evidence; sensible opinion, by Barnes, J.).

The following ruling would probably not be

these days when too much emphasis is placed, in the selection of jurors, on the blankness of their mental tablets, there can be no harm in the liberal application of the present principle.—As a natural part of its doctrine, of course, these matters may be referred to by counsel in their arguments.<sup>10</sup>

2. Specific Facts Noticed

§ 2571. Scope of Principle. The scope of facts that may be noticed includes:

(1) Matters which are so notorious to all that the production of evidence would be unnecessary;

(2) Matters which the judicial function supposes the judge to be acquainted with, either actually or in theory;

(3) Sundry matters not exactly included under either of these heads; they are subject for the most part to the consideration that though they are neither actually notorious nor bound to be judicially known, yet they would be capable of such instant and unquestionable demonstration, if desired, that no party would think of imposing a falsity on the tribunal in the face of an intelligent adversary.

It is hardly feasible, however, in enumerating those matters, to follow strictly this or any other classification.<sup>1</sup> accepted to-day: 1816, R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532, 537, 542 (riots against weaving machines; the judge told the jury that they might refer to their personal knowledge of the riotous acts; held not improper, because he "did not advise them to rely on that as a source of information on which they were to found their verdict, but only that it might make the proof more satisfactory to their minds if they knew what had passed").

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1875 ("Courts take judicial notice of the following facts:

1. The true signification of all English words and phrases, and of all legal expressions;

2. Whatever is established by law;

3. Public and private official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of this state and of the United States;

4. The seals of all the courts of this state and of the United States;

5. The accession to office and the official signatures and seals of office of the principal officers of government in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of this state and of the United States;

6. The existence, title, national flag, and seal of every state or sovereign recognized by the executive power of the United States;

7. The seals of courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and of notaries public;

8. The laws of nature, the measure of time, and the geographical divisions and political history of the world.

In all these cases the court may resort for its aid to appropriate books or documents of reference");

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5734 ("The existence and territorial extent of States, their forms of government, and symbols of nationality, the laws of nations, and general customs of merchants, the admiralty and maritime courts of the world and their seals, the political constitution and history of our own government, as well as the local divisions of our own State, the seals of the several departments of the government of the United States, and of the several States of the Union, and all similar matters of public knowledge are judicially recognized without the introduction of proof");

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7933 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1875);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10532 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1875);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7937 ("No evidence of any fact of which the court will take judicial notice need be given by the party alleging its existence, but the judge upon being called upon to take judicial notice thereof may, if he is unacquainted with such fact, refer to any person, document or book of reference for his satisfaction in relation thereto, or may refuse to take judicial notice thereof unless and until the party calling on him to take such notice produces any such document or book of reference. Courts will take judicial notice of the following facts: 1. Official acts of the judicial department of this state and of the United States. 2. The seal of all the courts of this state and of the United States, and the signatures of the judges and clerks thereof. 3. That tribunals are established in the several states for the adjudication of controversies and the ascertainment of rights. 4. Of the external boundary lines of its jurisdiction and that an act or a crime committed at any given place within such boundaries is within such jurisdiction. 5. Of the acts of the legislature and decrees of courts fixing such jurisdiction. 6. That a court is a court of record and who are its officers. 7. Of all persons who have been appointed deputies by the clerks of such court. 8. Appellate courts will take judicial notice of inferior courts and who are their judges, and the rules thereof. 9. Of its own authority. 10. Of the time of holding the various courts of the state, of the history of the country at the time of holding court, and the seats of justice. 11. Of the commencement and duration of the terms of the supreme court, and the district courts, and all the other courts of record. 12. That the terms of court were held at the times and places prescribed by law. 13. Of all prior proceedings in the case pending. 14. That the case before the court had connection with one formerly decided by it. 15. Of the fact that a former adjudication had been reversed. 16. Of attorneys who have appeared in the case. 17. Of the pendency of another action in the same court. 18. That the facts left in issue, being facts of which the court will take judicial notice, are deemed part of the pleadings and not matters of evidence. 19. Of its own records and judgments. 20. Of the genuineness of its own records and the signatures of its officers"); § 7938 ("The courts will take judicial notice: 1. Of the facts stated in the almanac and the days of the week, as shown thereby. 2. Of the day of the week upon which any particular day of the month falls. 3. Of the recurrence of the day on which general elections are held. 4. Of the time the sun and moon rise and set on the several days of the year, and when they rose and set on a certain day. 5. The magnetic variation from the true meridian. 6. Of the unvarying occurrences of the climate and seasons. 7. Of the course of the seasons and of husbandry. 8. Of the succession of the seasons as in relation to vegetables and animals, and the general course of agricultural crops, matured so as to be severed. 9. That there are facilities for business, by railroad, telegraph and telephone, between two certain places. 13. Of the distance of a place from the county seat or the capital of the state. 14. Of the limits of a county, and the fact that a place proved was within such limits. 15. Of the lines of the counties, and the towns, villages and cities contained therein. 16. Of the location and distance between well known places within a county. 17. Of the places of intersection of certain streets and alleys in incorporated towns, cities and villages, and the names and numbers thereof. 18. Of the incorporation of towns, cities and villages, and the acts of the legislative assembly under which they were incorporated. 19. Of the fact that a county has adopted township organization. 20. Of the official acts of public officers. 21. Of the officers in the county in which they are holding their sittings. 22. The genuineness of signatures of public officers and those of such deputies as the law authorizes. 23. Of the time at which an officer's term of office expires. 24. Of the official acts and certificates of notaries public, made in the performance of official duty. 25. Of who are justices of the peace for the county in which the court is held, and the time at which their terms of office will expire. 26. Of the civil divisions of the state, such as cities, towns, counties and incorporated villages, and that the state is divided into eight judicial districts, and that each is a distinct organization. 27. Of the counties constituting a judicial district. 28. Of the election of state officers, held at the same time as the election of representatives in congress, and what the ballots offered at such election should contain, and of the changes made in the executive department of the state and of the United States. 29. Of the universal usage of merchants and ordinarily of a common law custom. 30. Of whatever ought to be generally known within the limits of the court's jurisdiction. 31. Of the general certainty that matter carried through the mail will, in spite of imperfection in the address, reach its proper destination. 32. Of transactions and objects which form a part of the history and geography of the country. 33. Of matters of public history affecting the whole people. 34. Of the times and such occurrences as constitute a part of the history of the state and of the United States. 35. Of the history of a country, its topography and general condition. 36. Of the boundaries of the state and the navigability of its large rivers. 37. Of the geographical position of towns in the county. 38. Of the taking and result of the employ that evidence which the judge (ante, § 2569) would in theory seek for himself.<sup>1</sup>

There are, however, certain natural limitations, by which Courts customarily abdicate their responsibility of knowing or of seeking for themselves:

(a) In the first place, the doctrine applies at common law to public or general statutes of the Legislature only.<sup>2</sup> But the distinction between a public or general act and a private or special act is, in the United States at least, not always easy to make. It may be said that a restriction of locality does not prevent an act from being public, provided the law is general in its application to persons; e. g., a law regulating within certain districts the right of fishing,<sup>3</sup> or the right of navigation,<sup>4</sup> or the lumber trade,<sup>5</sup> or the sale of liquor.<sup>6</sup> Acts incorporating municipal corporations, even by special charter, are usually regarded as public,<sup>7</sup> as also acts incorporating State banks,<sup>8</sup> and acts incorporating railways by general provisions,<sup>9</sup> though not by special charter.<sup>10</sup> Moreover, an act declared by the Legislature itself to be deemed a public act will be so treated;<sup>11</sup> and of course an amendment of a

§ 2572. <sup>1</sup> 1840, Baron Parke, in Frost's Trial, Gurney's Rep. 168, to counsel: "For the future, it would save time if, when you founded an objection upon an Act of Parliament, you had the Act here; for, though we are supposed to keep the statutes in our heads, we do not."

How slender, in earlier formative days of legislative method, was the foundation for attributing to the King's judges a necessary knowledge of statutes, may be seen in Mr. Plucknett's interesting monograph, "Statutes and their Interpretation in the First Half of the 14th Century" (1922), p. 103, (Cambridge Studies in English Legal History, No. II).

1898, Miller v. Matthews, 87 Md. 464, 40 Atl. 176 (notice taken of a statute chartering a company to be sole surety on official bonds).

private act by a public one,<sup>12</sup> or any amendment of a public one,<sup>13</sup> will be noticed.

In many States, by statute, the sensible rule has been adopted that all private acts are to be noticed.<sup>14</sup>

(b) The ordinances and regulations of local government boards and councils are usually not noticed.<sup>15</sup>

(c) The regulations of executive departments or administrative bureaus are sometimes, but not always, noticed.<sup>16</sup>

§ 2573. Same: (2) Foreign Law. The laws of foreign nations and States—not being laws of the forum at all, except by casual adoption—will not be noticed.<sup>1</sup> But here some further discriminations are necessary:

(a) Admiralty law, so far as international and therefore common to all States, may be noticed.<sup>2</sup>

(b) The State law of another of the States of the United States is in theory that of an independent sovereign; hence its law, equally with the laws of other nations, will in theory not be noticed by the Courts of another of the United States.<sup>3</sup> But this theory is now antiquated hypocrisy, as applied in office regulations not noticed; “it is a hopeless task for an appellate court to determine what such regulations were at any particular time [without formal pleading and evidence]; it must either accept counsel’s statement, or itself make inquiry of the particular department; neither of which practices is to be commended”; why not ask the opposing counsel if he disputes the text?); 1912, Robinson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 222 U. S. 506, 32 Sup. 114 (a statute making admissible the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission’s decisions does not oblige a trial court to take judicial notice of such decisions; but surely the learned Court should have guarded its opinion against leaving the impression that it sanctioned the petty and unpractical view that the decisions of such a national body were not justly noticeable by the common law principle); 1918, *U. By statute the rule has sometimes been changed: Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12513 (constitution, laws, and resolutions, of another U. S. State or Territory, or of any foreign state, may be judicially noticed); § 12515 (similar, for unwritten or common law); Miss. Code 1906, § 1015, Hem. § 735 (law of “any foreign country” shall be noticed); *W. this field, and there is a wholesome tendency to abandon it.<sup>4</sup> Where the law of another of the United States is involved, the presumption of similarity of the foreign law (ante, § 2536) may render assistance. The Courts have failed to work out a theory of the relation between that presumption and the present principle of judicial notice.<sup>5</sup> There is much apparent inconsistency, and yet both principles have a legitimate bearing.

(c) The Federal laws of the United States (as well as of Canada) are equally the laws of each State, and hence the Courts of one of the States notice them, whether ordinary public acts of Congress<sup>6</sup> or treaties.<sup>7</sup> They are of course noticed by the Federal Courts.<sup>8</sup>

(d) Since the judicial powers of the Federal Courts extend to many cases arising under the laws of the various States of the Union, such State laws are for the purpose in hand part of the law of the Federal Courts, and will therefore be noticed by them.<sup>9</sup> Extending this principle, it has been held by State Courts that in cases where appeal may be made to the Federal Courts on questions of Federal law, — e. g. the effect of a judgment in another State Court — the law of such other State may be noticed.<sup>10</sup>

(e) So far as by subdivision or amalgamation the former laws of another sovereignty have to any extent become a part of the law of the forum, such former law of the other sovereignty may properly be noticed. <sup>15</sup> The correct principle was long ago expounded by Mr. (later C. J.) Piggott, in his

All the foregoing quiddities are thoroughly unpractical. The judges manipulate an esoteric logical dream-machine which has caused them to forget the world of reality. Judicial power should be used to get at the facts more directly and candidly.

§ 2574. Political Facts: (1) International Affairs; Seals of State. The external political facts of international affairs, as distinguished on the one hand from the common international law (ante, § 2573) and on the other hand from the domestic political facts of the forum of the Court (post, § 2575), cannot be said to be the subject of judicial notice.<sup>1</sup> In the chief instance likely to come into litigation, namely, the existence of a particular foreign State as independent among nations, the Court follows the action of the Executive of the forum; it recognizes this action, not as an international fact, but as a domestic political fact (ante, § 2566, par. 3). In another instance sometimes considered to fall under this head, namely, the authenticity of a purporting seal of a foreign State or judge, the process is in truth one of presuming genuine the specific seal-impression offered (ante, §§ 2163-2166); for although it might be possible to predicate judicial knowledge of a seal's design, it is preposterous to say that a judge can know whether a specific impress is genuine or who affixed it. Still another fact sometimes here classed, namely, the existence or effect of a foreign judgment is either a question of substantive law, not of evidence (ante, § 1347), or a question of proving the foreign record by ordinary means (ante, § 1681).

§ 2575. Same: (2) Domestic Political Organization; Boundaries, Capitals, etc. So far as the facts of political organization and operation of the State are determined in the law, they are judicially noticed as a part of the law masterly treatise on Extra-Territoriality; it is now recognized in the British decisions:

England: 1901, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs v. Charlesworth, App. Cas. 373 (land taken for public purposes in Mombasa, Zanzibar, where extra-territorial jurisdiction obtained; the consular Court held entitled to take judicial notice of Zanzibar Mohammedan law, since the extra-territorial judicial authority is a delegation by treaty of Zanzibar sovereignty to the foreign consul acting as a Zanzibar judge); 1904, Macdonald v. Anderson, H. B. M. Supreme Court for China, 1 U. S. Extra-territorial Cases 77 (Lobingier). North China Herald, LXXII, 247, Jan. 16, 1904 (British judges in China notice Chinese law, on the theory of Secretary of State v. Charlesworth, supra);

United States: 1875, Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 13 (extra-territorial jurisdiction in Egypt, laws and usages of Turkey not noticed); 1914, Bahlke v. Brown, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extra-terr. Cas. 340 (lease by Germans in China; the German law not noticed); 1914, U. S. v. Armstrong, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extra-terr. Cas. 349 (opium-importation; law of China noticed, on the theory of § 2574. <sup>1</sup> Except such facts as fairly fall within the principle of common notoriety (post, § 2580) or Executive action (ante, § 2566); e. g., a state of war: 1797, Maclean's Trial, 26 How. St. Tr. 797; 1805, Dolder v. Lord Huntingfield, 11 Ves. Jr. 283, 292 ("that France is now at war with Austria," not noticed otherwise of being at war with England); 1814, R. v. De Berenger, 4 M. & S. 67, 69 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., said "there were so many statutes which spoke of a war with France that it was impossible for the judges not to take judicial notice of it"); and this includes a civil war, as well as insurrection in some forms: 1862, Prize Cases, 2 Black U. S. 635, 667 (civil war with the Southern Confederacy); 1904, LaRue v. Kansas M. L. Ins. Co., 68 Kan. 539, 75 Pac. 494 (insurrection in the Philippines before 1901).

Otherwise of the date of ending of a war: 1922, Palmer v. Pokorny, — Mich. —, 186 N. W. 505 (contract of employment: "the question of [sic?] when the war closed is not a judicial one, but one to be determined by the political department of the government."

(ante, § 2572). The chief difficulty comes in distinguishing between what is contained solely and abstractly in the law, and what depends more or less on specific official acts done under the law or upon the application of the descriptive terms of the law to concrete things. Courts are apt to be extremely liberal in drawing the line so as to favor judicial notice.

In regard to the territorial descriptions in political law — boundaries, capitals, surveys, roads, and the like —, it is difficult to make any generalization; in the liberal application of the principle, exact consistency is hardly possible.<sup>1</sup>

State*, 90 Ark. 596, 119 S. W. 1116 (location of a city in a county, noticed);

California: 1893, People v. Etting, 99 Cal. 577, 579, 34 Pac. 237 (that a certain town is within a county and is its county-seat, noticed); 1894, Rogers v. Cady, 104 Cal. 288, 38 Pac. 1 (government survey, noticed); 1895,

DeBaker v. R. Co., 106 Cal. 257, 39 Pac. 610 (the course of a river frequently mentioned in statutes, and the boundary of a city, noticed); 1895, Schwerdtle v. Placer Co., 108 Cal. 589, 41 Pac. 448 (that certain land is within the public domain, not noticed); 1895, Diggins v. Hartshorne, 108 Cal. 154, 41 Pac. 283 (that a mapped space is correctly located, i. e. that boundaries actually run at a given spot, not noticed); 1896, People v. Faust, 113 Cal. 172, 45 Pac. 261 (that a town is a county seat, noticed);

Connecticut: 1856, State v. Powers, 25 Conn. 48 (that Stonington is in New London county, noticed);

Georgia: 1901, Perry v. State, 113 Ga. 936, 39 S. E. 315 (on evidence that a town is in the State, the county of its location will be noticed);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 3793 (county court to take judicial notice of first class city within the county); § 3859 (similar, for second class city);

Illinois: 1832, Ross v. Reddick, 2 Ill. 73 (the boundaries of a county, noticed); 1873, Gooding v. Morgan, 70 Ill. 275 (similar); 1876, Gardner v. Eberhart, 82 Ill. 316 (the subdivision of town and city property into blocks and lots, etc., noticed); 1897, Sever v. Lyon, 170 Ill. 395, 48 N. E. 926 (a homestead covering more than one lot; notice taken of the block and lot subdivision); 1898, Gilbert v. Nat'l C. R. Co., 176 Ill. 288, 52 N. E. 22 (that an incorporated town is in a given county, noticed); 1900, McCoy v. World's Columbian Exposition, 186 Ill. 356, 57 N. E. 1043 (location of the Exposition in Chicago, noticed); 1901, Gunning v. People, 189 Ill. 165, 59 N. E. 494 (that the "Reliance Building" is located in the town of South Chicago, not noticed);

Indiana: 1877, Steinmetz v. Versailles & O. Turnpike Co., 57 Ind. 457 (that a road between two towns would lie within a county, noticed); 1877, Murphy v. Hendricks, 57 Ind. 593 (Congressional survey of Northwest Territory, noticed); 1897, Board v. State, 147 Ind. 476, 46 N. E. 908 (the area and boundaries of a county, noticed);

Kansas: 1906, Topeka v. Cook, 72 Kan. 595, 84 Pac. 376 (location of an alley within city limits, not noticed); 1906, State v. Ricksecker, 73 Kan. 495, 85 Pac. 547 (that C. was a city

§ 2576. Same: (3) Domestic Officials, their Identity and Authority; Genuineness of Official Documents. It is the law that creates certain offices, and attributes certain duties and authorities to the incumbents; but whether the incumbent at a given time and place is a specific person depends on external political action, sometimes recorded or notorious, but sometimes neither. Courts have solved this application of the principle by considerations of practical good sense and convenience; which are, however, difficult to

Louisiana: 1921, State v. McCredit, 149 La. 825, 90 So. 210 (that certain towns are in a certain parish, noticed);

Maine: 1855, Ham v. Ham, 39 Me. 263 (county lines, and the towns therein, noticed); 1863, Martin v. Martin, 51 Me. 366 (that a town is within a certain county, noticed); 1897, State v. Simpson, 91 Me. 83, 39 Atl. 287 (the town of Waterville, noticed to be in the county of Kennebec);

Massachusetts: 1869, Com. v. Desmond, 103 Mass. 445 (that Suffolk county is a county of Massachusetts, noticed); 1894, Com. v. Wheeler, 162 Mass. 429, 38 N. E. 1115 (the county within which a town lay, not noticed); Michigan: 1864, Cummings v. Stone, 13 Mich. 70 (that not all of the St. Clair river is in Michigan, noticed);

Minnesota: 1888, Quinn v. Champagne, 38 Minn. 323, 37 N. W. 451 (the general system of governmental surveys, noticed); 1896, Baumann v. Trust Co., 66 Minn. 227, 68 N. W. 1074 (location of a city within a given county, noticed); 1898, Kretzschmar v. Meehan, 74 Minn. 211, 77 N. W. 41 (that a piece of land is in a certain county, not noticed);

Missouri: 1894, State v. Pennington, 124 Mo. 388, 27 S. W. 1106 (county-seat, noticed); 1904, Stealey v. Kansas City, 179 Mo. 400, 78 S. W. 599 (that a certain avenue was within five miles of the city limits, not noticed);

New Hampshire: 1860, Winnipiseogee Lake Co. v. Young, 40 N. H. 420, 429 (counties and towns, noticed);

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2963 ("organization and existence of any irrigation district" to be noticed, after filing of a copy of Board's order);

North Carolina: 1896, State v. Snow, 117 N. C. 774, 23 S. E. 322 (county-names, noticed as such);

Oklahoma: 1909, Rea v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. 281, 105 Pac. 386 (that no county of Pontotoc existed before State organization in 1907, noticed);

Philippine Isl. 1912, U. S. v. Chua Mo. 23 P. I. 233 (survey of city into blocks, etc., noticed); 1918, U. S. v. Alabot, 38 P. I. 698 (location of a municipality within the jurisdiction);

Rhode Island: 1855, State v. Dunwell, 3 R. I. 127 (the boundaries of the State as claimed by it, recognized, but not the boundary 'de jure');

Texas: 1866, Wright v. Hawkins, 28 Tex. 452, 472 (county-boundaries, noticed); 1880,

Solyer v. Romanet, 52 Tex. 562, 568 (that the city of Galveston is in the county of Galveston in Texas, noticed); 1896, Hambel v. Davis, 89 Tex. 256, 34 S. W. 439 (that a town is the county-seat, noticed); Whitner v. Belknap, 89 Tex. 273, 34 S. W. 594 (same); 1904, Baker v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 482, 83 S. W. 1122 (Government ownership of a Federal fort on a city line, noticed, but not the precise boundary on the ground);

Utah: 1898, McMaster v. Morse, 18 Utah 21, 55 Pac. 70 (that a certain city was surveyed into lots, blocks, and streets, noticed);

Virginia: 1902, Anderson v. Com., 100 Va. 860, 42 S. E. 865 (unincorporated town, not noticed);

Washington: 1905, West Seattle v. W. S. L. & I. Co., 38 Wash. 359, 80 Pac. 549 (location of land within a city two-mile limit, not noticed); 1919, Schmidt v. Powell, 107 Wash. 53, 180 Pac. 892 (manner of survey, location of base lines, etc., noticed);

Wisconsin: 1859, Atwater v. Schenck, 9 Wis. 160 (the legal subdivisions of public lands, noticed).

Distinguish the question whether the fact will be noticed that there is only one town of a given name in existence or in a particular country: Eng. 1819, Kearney v. King, 2 B. & Ald. 301 (bill of exchange, declared on as drawn and accepted at Dublin for £542; the question being whether it was drawn for Irish or English money, the Court declined "to take judicial notice that there is only one Dublin in the world"; this was correct; but the Court should have presumed that a bill purporting to be in Dublin was in the Dublin of Ireland, on the same principle as the presumption of dating (ante, § 2520); this result is plain, and it is curious that the Court could not find a principle on which to reach it); U. S. 1849, Andrews v. Hoxie, 5 Tex. 171, 182 (promissory note payable in New Orleans; that this was in Louisiana, probably not noticed; here the proper solution was the same as in the preceding case).

reduce to a definite rule. All that can be said is that the incumbencies of the more important and notorious offices are judicially noticed, and that many of the lesser and local ones are not.<sup>1</sup>

But the field for the present principle, applied without other complications, is after all limited. In the first place, the authentication of official documents involves usually the additional element of the presumption of genuineness of the seal or signature; this has been elsewhere dealt with (ante, §§ 2161-2167); the pure question of judicial notice arises here only when the signature or seal is otherwise evidenced and the incumbency of the person remains alone to be proved. Again, the presumption of office from a notorious acting of a person in the office (ante, §§ 2168, 2535) does not rest on the present principle; it is invoked only when the present principle fails to aid the purpose.

§ 2576. <sup>1</sup> To the following cases add most of those cited ante, §§ 2163-2168, where the same principle is involved; some of the following cases belong there also, but are here placed as illustrations of the usage:

ENGLAND: 1705, Elderton's Case, 2 Ld. Raym. 978, 980, semble (the authority of certain officers as justices of the peace, noticed); 1809, R. v. Jones, 2 Camp. 131 (the signatures being proved, the incumbency of persons signing as lords Commissioners of the Treasury was presumed).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1854, York & M. R. Co. v. Winans, 17 How. 30 (the incumbency of the acting commissioner of patents, noticed); 1899, Smyth v. New Orleans C. & B. Co., 35 *C. C. § 2579. Same: (2) Records of Proceedings. The proceedings in a Court are constituted by the record, and this record originally took its name from the judicial memory ('recordari') which could be invoked for recalling those prior proceedings.<sup>1</sup> Nevertheless, it seems to-day unreasonable, having regard to the general principle of judicial notice (ante, § 2565), to predicate an actual judicial knowledge of the proceedings in specific prior litigations (for they are commonly neither notorious, nor within the judge's duty of knowledge), or to expect the Court to make its own researches into the mass of the records for the purpose of informing itself. Accordingly, it may be said generally that a Court is not by any rule bound to take notice of the tenor of any legal proceedings (other than those transacting at the moment in its presence). Indeed, this much is assumed in the conceded rules of law which require the original of a judicial record to be produced in proof, and define the exceptions by which a copy is allowed to be used instead (ante, §§ 1215, 1216).

However, for reasons of convenience, where controversy is unlikely and the expense of a copy would be disproportionate, Courts are often found taking notice of the tenor or effect of some part of a judicial proceeding, without requiring formal evidence. Since this dispensation is not obligatory on the part of the Court, and since it must depend more or less on the practical notoriety and certainty of the fact under the circumstances of each case, little uniformity can be seen in the instances. It is often done for a part of the record in the same proceeding, or in a prior stage of the same § 2581. Same: (2) Times and Distances. Among the common instances, under this miscellaneous class, are the facts of time or season<sup>1</sup> and of distance;<sup>2</sup> though here also the quality of notoriousness will naturally vary with the place and the epoch, as well as with the greater or less accuracy involved in the facts desired to be noticed.

§ 2582. Same: (3) Meaning of Words; Names of Intoxicating Liquors. Another common class of instances, subject to the foregoing general considerations (ante, § 2580), is that of the meanings of words and phrases and written symbols. So far as these are notorious and unquestioned, they are constantly found noticed. Here, too, the local circumstances and the usage of the time must more than ever control the ruling. The popular familiarity with the fable of the Frozen Snake, and therefore the general understanding of the meaning of that epithet, may well be noticed in one period and community,<sup>1</sup> yet not in another. So much of special usage in commerce, religion, and industry, and of social life in general, is involved in the meanings of words, that no generalizations are practicable. The rulings must depend upon good sense rather than upon precedent.<sup>2</sup>

A difficult case is presented when the word in question is used in more than one notorious meaning, particularly when it has by custom come to be applied artificially or evasively to objects not strictly entitled to it. Common instances of this sort are the names of intoxicating liquors. The true solution here is rather to be found in the theory of presumptions (ante, § 2490); first, because judicial notice becomes inappropriate as soon as a fact is in any manner practically dubitable, and, next, because the fact really sought in many such instances is the meaning or use in a concrete instance which could not be notorious. Of various possible meanings, one may be presumed to apply. There is naturally some variance of ruling. Apart from particular local circumstances, it would seem to be proper to hold that "alcohol" or "whiskey" or "gin" may be assumed to signify an intoxicating liquor,<sup>3</sup> and that a liquor termed "brandy" is intoxicating,<sup>4</sup> and even that "wine,"<sup>5</sup> or malt or hop liquors,<sup>6</sup> are intoxicating. But "beer" is a term applied to so many non-

§ 2583. Future of the Doctrine of Judicial Notice. The doctrine of Judicial Notice contains the kernel of great possibilities, as yet not used, for improving trial procedure in the courts of to-day. Professor Thayer pointed this out many years ago:<sup>1</sup> "Courts may judicially notice much which they cannot be required to notice. That is well worth emphasizing; for it points to a great possible usefulness in this doctrine, in helping to shorten and simplify trials. It is an instrument of great capacity, in the hands of a competent judge; and it is not nearly as much used, in the region of practice and evidence, as it should be. . . . The failure to exercise it tends daily to smother trials with technicality and monstrosly lengthens them out."

Why has this principle not been adequately used by judges?

One reason is that they apparently forget that (as Professor Thayer says) they may notice much that they cannot be required to notice by general rule made in advance. E. g., a rule requiring them to notice always the incumbency of a sheriff's office might go too far; but they may in a given case be justified in declaring a specific sheriff to be notorious; and so on, in a thousand classes of facts.

Another reason is that they apparently forget that the principle allows them to notice in specific cases, even though no general rule for the whole class of such cases could be laid down. This is because notoriety in fact is the principle, and facts are not susceptible of inflexible rule. The precedents of former judges, in declining to notice or assenting to notice specific facts, do <sup>7</sup> Differing views have been judicially expressed, but usually declining notice: Ala. 1876, Adler v. State, 55 Ala. 16, 23 (that lager beer is a malt liquor, noticed); Colo. 1915, Moffitt v. People, 59 Colo. 406, 149 Pac. 104 (that "beer" is intoxicating, noticed); Ga. 1892, *Bell v. § 2583. <sup>1</sup> "Preliminary Treatise on Evidence" (1898), 300.

Coleridge, J., in Lumley v. Gye (1853), 2 El. & Bl. 266: "Judges are not necessarily to be ignorant in Court of what everybody else, and they themselves out of Court, are familiar with; nor was that unreal ignorance considered to be an attribute of the Bench in early and strict times. We find in the Year Books the judges reasoning about the ability of knights, esquires, and gentlemen to maintain themselves without wages; distinguishing between private chaplains and parochial chaplains from the nature of their employments; and in later days we have ventured to take judicial cognizance of the moral qualities of Robinson Crusoe's 'man Friday' (1 Dow P.C. 672) and Æsop's 'frozen snake' (12 Q. B. 624)."

not restrict the present judge from noticing a new fact, provided only that the new fact is notorious to the community.

The following controversy, now of historic interest only, serves to illustrate the above general truth:

1908, People v. Schmitz, 153 Cal. xviii, 94 Pac. 1908. In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge. Eugene E. Schmitz having been convicted of extortion, and the conviction having been reversed by the District Court of Appeals on his appeal, the People apply to the Supreme Court for a hearing and determination of the appeal. Application denied.

PER CURIAM. "This is an application by respondent for a hearing and determination of this appeal by this Court, after decision and judgment by the District Court of Appeal for the First District. . . . The Court is unanimous in the opinion that the District Court of Appeal was correct in its conclusion that the indictment was insufficient, in that it did not show that the specific injury to the property of the restaurant keepers threatened by the defendant was an 'unlawful injury.' . . . § 520 of the Penal Code provides that the threat must be such as is mentioned in the preceding section, and the preceding section, in subdivision 1 (the only subdivision here applicable), says that the threat must be one 'to do an unlawful injury to the person or property of the individual threatened, or to any relative of his, or member of his family.' . . . What is meant by the term 'unlawful injury'? Giving to such term the broadest meaning possible under the authorities, it can include no injury that is not of such a character that, if it had been committed as threatened, it would have constituted an actionable wrong. . . .

"Applying this to the case at bar:

"It was within the lawful power of the police commissioners of San Francisco to withhold from the restaurant keepers a license to sell liquors at retail in their restaurant, no matter how great the pecuniary loss thereby caused to the business. It was also lawful for any person, by legitimate persuasion or argument, to endeavor to prevail upon the commissioners to refuse the license, although such person was actuated by a malicious intent to injure the restaurant keepers and cause them pecuniary loss. The conjunction of the lawful persuasion, inducing the lawful refusal of the license, with the malicious motive instigating the persuasion, would not convert the lawful act of refusing the license into an unlawful one, nor make the resulting injury unlawful or actionable. . . . In this case the indictment charges that the defendant threatened the restaurant keepers that, if money was not paid him, he would prevent them from obtaining or receiving a retail liquor license and thereby destroy or render unprofitable their restaurant business, of which the sale of liquors at retail formed the remunerative part. It is not stated how the defendant proposed to do this, or how it was understood by the parties that he would accomplish it, whether by fair persuasion and lawful influence over the commissioners, or by duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence exercised upon them. This is not a case where it is sufficient to charge an offense in the language of the statute defining it. The Court cannot assume, in the absence of any averment to that effect, that Schmitz was mayor of the city and as such in a position to exercise power and undue influence over the members of the board of police commissioners; or that Ruef, his co-defendant, was a person in practical control of the city government because of his political activity and influence, or otherwise able to exert an undue influence over the board; nor can it be inferred, or presumed, when it is not so charged, that the defendant threatened to prevent the issuance of the license by unlawful means, and not solely by lawful and innocent persuasion and argument. . . .

"The attorneys for the respondent . . . introduce their application with the statement that they are convinced that upon a full discussion of the case 'it will be found and decided by this Court that levying blackmail upon licensed businesses by the mayor and the political boss of a metropolitan community is a crime under the law of California, and should not go unwhipped of justice.' This is a gross misstatement of the case and of the question to be decided, as presented by the indictment. We again emphasize the fact that the indictment does not aver that Schmitz was mayor, or that Ruef was a political boss, or that either of them had any power, or influence, or control over the police commissioners, or that they threatened to use such power, influence, or control in preventing the issuance of a license. . . .

"The application for a hearing and determination of this appeal by this Court, after decision and judgment by the District Court of Appeal of the First District, is denied."

Letters on the Case of People v. Schmitz:

(1) Chief Justice BEATTY. Letter in the Sacramento Bee (April 29, 1908). . . . "Though the facts that Schmitz was Mayor and Ruef the political boss of the city may have been as notorious in San Francisco as the fire or the earthquake, no lawyer would contend for a moment that they were facts of which a Court could take judicial notice, in passing upon the sufficiency of the indictment. If these facts [that Schmitz was Mayor and Ruef the political boss] had been alleged in the indictment, then indeed the Court could have considered in that connection the provisions of the charter of San Francisco which empowered the mayor to appoint and remove at will the members of the board of police commissioners, and which invest that board with discretion to issue or refuse licenses to sell liquors at retail. And if by means of these allegations or otherwise it had been made to appear that the defendants had caused the applicants to believe that they could and would influence the police commissioners to reject their application regardless of its merits, I have never doubted that the indictment would have been sufficient. For this would have been a threat to do an unlawful injury — an injury which by reason of the corrupt abuse of official power employed to accomplish it would have been actionable. But the Court, being obliged, as I have shown, to look exclusively to the force of the indictment in determining its validity, and seeing only a charge against two private persons, could see nothing unlawful in the threatened injury. For it could not be assumed that such private persons could prevent the issuance of the license otherwise than by adducing good reasons why, in the exercise of their discretion, the Police Commissioners should refuse it, — as, for instance, that the applicants were unfit persons, or their house an improper place. To oppose and prevent the issuance of a license on such grounds would be perfectly lawful, in the absence of a corrupt or malicious motive. And therefore the question finally resolved itself into this: Did the purpose of the threat (the extortion of money) convert into an unlawful injury that which in the absence of such motive would not have been criminal or actionable?"

"Why, it has been asked, could not the Court have taken into consideration the notorious facts that Schmitz was Mayor of the city and Ruef the political boss of the party in possession of the city government? The answer to this question is that . . . the Legislature of California, by a constitutional law, has enumerated the facts of which Courts may take judicial notice in the absence of proof, and by necessary implication has excluded all others, including the fact that any particular person is Mayor or political boss of any particular city. Necessarily, facts which must be proved, where they are matters of proof, must be alleged where they are matter of allegation, as in an indictment."

(2) Francis J. Heney (Assistant District Attorney of San Francisco). Letter in the San Francisco Bulletin (October 31, 1908). "In the opinion of Chief Justice BEATTY in People v. Schmitz, and his subsequent letter, . . . it is thus, in fact, conceded by the learned Chief Justice that if the indictment had alleged that Schmitz was mayor, it would have been sufficient, because the Court could then have taken judicial notice in that connection of the influence which the mayor possesses officially over the board of police commissioners, and that, therefore, when Schmitz threatened the French restaurant-keeper that he could and would prevent him from securing a license, the intended victim was justified, as a reasonable man, in believing that Schmitz possessed the power, through his official position, to influence the police commissioners, whom Schmitz had appointed and over whom he possessed the power of removal, to reject the French restaurant-keeper's application for a license, regardless of the merits of the application.

"Yet the Court's refusal to take notice in this case ignores the plain language of the Code of Civil Procedure, § 1875, subdiv. 5, enumerating the kinds of facts of which judicial notice may be taken: 'The accession to office and the official signatures and seals of office of the principal officers of government in the legislative, executive and judicial departments of the State and the United States.' The Political Code, § 343, provides, 'The number and designation of the civil executive officers are as follows: A governor; . . . such other officers as fill offices created by or under the authority of general laws for the government of counties, cities and towns, or of the charters and special laws affecting the same.' Surely the Mayor of the City and County of San Francisco, the largest in the State, is a 'principal officer' of the executive department of this State, as thus defined. Moreover, in a decision of this Supreme Court rendered in 1896, the broad principle is stated that 'the judicial notice which Courts take of matters of fact embraces those facts which are within common knowledge of all, or are of such general notoriety as to need no evidence in their support.' . . .

"Furthermore, the opinion of the Court indicates that the justices did look into the record of the case to some extent and consequently the Court must have known that the defendant Schmitz was fully apprised, at the time of the trial, of the fact that he was charged with having used the prestige of his official position, together with the prestige of Abe Ruef as political boss, to extort money from the French restaurant-keepers under a threat to prevent them from securing the liquor licenses. The case was tried on behalf of the defendant by able and learned attorneys upon this very theory. It cannot be possible, therefore, that any substantial injustice was done the defendant by not alleging these evidentiary facts in the indictment. Surely no substantial injustice was done to the defendant by failing to inform him in the indictment that he was the mayor of this city and county at the time he is alleged to have made the threat and to have extorted the money. He could not have been taken by surprise by our failure to allege that fact, for he is presumed to be sane and to be gifted with at least ordinary senses of sight and hearing and at least an ordinary memory."

(3) John H. Wigmore. Letter in the Liberator (Vol. I, No. 8, San Francisco, Jan. 30, 1909). "I have read the letter of Mr. Heney, and the letter of the Chief Justice, and have re-read the opinion of the Court in People v. Schmitz. The Chief Justice's letter and Mr. Heney's reply turn largely on the legal rule of judicial notice. The learned Chief Justice finds himself iron-bound by the rules of that subject. But the whole spirit of the rules is misconceived by him. Their essential and sole purpose is to relieve the party from proof, — that is, from proof of facts which are so notorious as not to need proof. When a party has not averred or evidenced a fact which later turns out, in the Supreme Court's opinion, to be vital, the rule of judicial notice helps out the judge by permitting him to take the fact as true, where it is one so notorious that evidence of it would have been superfluous. Now these helping rules are not intended to bind him, but the contrary, i. e., to make him free to take the fact as proved where he knows the proof was not needed. Moreover, it follows, since these rules cannot foresee every case new times and new conditions will create, that they can always receive new applications. The precedents of former judges, in noticing specific facts, do not restrict present judges from noticing new facts, provided only that the new fact is notorious to all the community. For example, the unquestioned election of William H. Taft as President of the United States is notorious; but no man named William H. Taft has ever before been elected President, and no judicial precedent has noticed the fact. Yet no Court would hesitate to notice this new notorious fact. . . .

"If, then, a man named Schmitz was notoriously Mayor of San Francisco, and a man named Ruef was notoriously its political boss, at the time in question, that is all that any Court needs; and the doctrine of judicial notice gives it all the liberty it needs. It is conceivable that a trial judge might sometimes hesitate in applying this doctrine of notoriety, because the trial Court might fear that the Supreme Court would not perceive the notoriety.

But there never need be any such hesitation in a Supreme Court, if that Court does see the notoriety.

“And this is just where the learned Chief Justice is to be criticised. He does not for a moment ask or answer the question, ‘Did we actually, as men and officers, believe these facts to be notoriously so?’ but refers to certain mechanical rules, external to his mind. What that Supreme Court should have done was to decide whether they under the circumstances did actually believe the facts about the status of Schmitz and Ruef to be notorious. In not so doing, they erred against the whole spirit and principle of judicial notice. And Mr. Heney’s demonstration that there is nothing in the codes to forbid them is complete: for, of course, the Code of Procedure, in telling them (Section 1875) that ‘the Courts take judicial notice of the following facts,’ simply gave them a liberty of belief as to those specified facts, and did not take away their liberty as to other unspecified facts. . . .

“We do not doubt that there are dozens of other Supreme Justices who would decide, and are to-day deciding, in obscure cases, just such points in just the same way as the California case. And we do not doubt that there are hundreds of lawyers whose professional habit of mind would make them decide just that way if they were elevated to the bench to-morrow in place of those other jurists who are now there. The moral is that our profession must be educated out of such habits of thought. Such disputations were the life of scholarship and of the law three hundred years ago. They are out of place to-day. There are enough rules of law to sustain them, if the Court wants to do so. And there are enough rules of law to brush them away, if the Court wants to do that.

“ALL THE RULES IN THE WORLD WILL NOT GET US SUBSTANTIAL JUSTICE IF THE JUDGES HAVE NOT THE CORRECT LIVING MORAL ATTITUDE TOWARD SUBSTANTIAL JUSTICE.”

With these aspects of the principle in mind, a large field opens for reducing the tedious proof of notorious facts. The principle is an instrument of a usefulness hitherto unimagined by judges. Let them make liberal use of it; and thus avoid much of the needless failures of justice that are caused by the artificial impotence of judicial proceedings.

TITLE II: JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS

CHAPTER XCI.

§ 2588. Theory of Judicial Admissions.

§ 2589. Distinction between Judicial Admissions, Pleadings, Demurrers to Evidence, and Estoppels.

§ 2590. Effect of Judicial Admissions: (1) Conclusive upon the Party making.

§ 2591. Same: (2) Prohibitive of Evidence by the Party benefiting.

§ 2592. Same: (3) Validity as a Waiver of Unconstitutionality or other Illegality.

§ 2593. Same: (4) Effect on Subsequent Trials.

§ 2594. Form of the Admission; Who is authorized.

§ 2595. Avoiding a Continuance by Judicial Admission; Testimony of an Absent Witness of the Opponent.

§ 2596. Admissions of the Genuineness of a Document.

§ 2597. Future of the Doctrine of Judicial Admissions.

§ 2588. Theory of Judicial Admissions. An express waiver, made in court or preparatory to trial, by the party or his attorney, conceding for the purposes of the trial the truth of some alleged fact, has the effect of a confessory pleading, in that the fact is thereafter to be taken for granted; so that the one party need offer no evidence to prove it, and the other is not allowed to disprove it. This is what is commonly termed a solemn — i. e. ceremonial or formal — or judicial admission, or stipulation. It is, in truth, a substitute for evidence, in that it does away with the need for evidence.<sup>1</sup>

This judicial admission is sharply marked off from the ordinary or quasi-admission — which indeed does not deserve to bear the same name. The latter is merely an item of evidence, available against the party on the same theory on which a self-contradiction is available against a witness. The distinctions between the two have already been examined (ante, §§ 1048, 1057). It is enough to note that, as to the effect, the latter is not conclusive; while § 2588. <sup>1</sup> Ante: Eng. 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 103 ("The consent of the parties concerned must be sufficient and concluding evidence of the truth of such fact, for they [the jury] are only to try the truth of such facts wherein the parties differ"); U. S. 1896, Prestwood v. Watson, 111 Ala. 604, 20 So. 600 (Brickell, C. J.: "Agreements of this character, intelligently and deliberately made, — whether made by the parties in person, or by their attorneys or solicitors of record, — are encouraged and favored. Their purpose, generally, is to save costs, and to expedite trials, by relieving from rules of practice which in the particular case are deemed mere hindrances, or the dispensation with mere formal proof, or, as in the present case, the admission of uncontroverted facts, of the existence of which the parties are fully cognizant"); 1855, Com. v. Desmond, 5 Gray Mass. 80, 82 (Thomas, J., referring to the prosecuting attorney's admission on trial that a witness was an accomplice: "Admissions made in the course of judicial proceedings are substitutes for, and dispense with, the actual proof of facts"); 1916, Baldwin v. McDonald, 24 Wyo. 108, 156 Pac. 27 (citing the above text with approval).

In Louisiana the Continental law has left its mark: La. Rev. Civ. C. 1888, § 2291 ("Judicial confession is the declaration which the party, or his special attorney in fact, makes in a judicial proceeding. It amounts to full proof against him who has made it. It cannot be divided against him. It cannot be revoked," unless made through error of fact, but not for error in law).

as to its form, it may be either implied or express, and need not be either written or made in open court.

§ 2589. Distinction between Judicial Admissions, Pleadings, Demurrers to Evidence, and Estoppels. The effect which a judicial admission produces is of course an effect shared in common with certain other legal acts. In the first place, a pleading may by confessing a fact place it beyond the range either of needing evidence or of permitting dispute; and an omission to plead in denial may have the same consequence. The distinction between a pleading and a judicial admission seems to consist in the circumstances that the latter may be made after issues joined or trial begun, and may thus counteract or diminish the effect of a pleading; that it is not a part of the required statements defining the parties' issues; and that it is therefore not subject to the rules of time, form, amendment, and the like, which govern the allegations of pleading.

Furthermore, a demurrer to evidence, the object of which is to raise a question of law, will like other demurrers have the effect of admitting the facts conclusively (ante, § 2495). It has the further common feature, frequent in a judicial admission, that it is made after issues formed and trial begun; but nevertheless it is in this respect, like a motion to arrest judgment, merely a postponed pleading.

Finally, an estoppel has the similar effect of concluding all dispute of the fact. But here the distinction is that the estoppel is an obligation made by a rule of substantive law, of the same general class as contracts and representations;<sup>1</sup> that it requires some additional act of detriment on the part of the obligee; and that it is absolute as regards the permanent legal relations of the parties, and not merely hypothetical or relative to the procedure of a particular litigation between them.

§ 2590. Effect of Judicial Admissions; (1) Conclusive upon the Party making. The vital feature of a judicial admission is universally conceded to be its conclusiveness upon the party making it, i. e. the prohibition of any further dispute of the fact by him, and of any use of evidence to disprove or contradict it.<sup>1</sup> In view, however, of the commendable purpose which leads (or ought to lead) to the voluntary making of admissions, it is always and properly said that the trial Court may in discretion relieve from this consequence:<sup>2</sup>

§ 2590. <sup>1</sup> Cases cited ante, § 2588, and the following: Fed. 1880, Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, 263 ("Any fact, bearing upon the issue involved, admitted by counsel, may be the ground of the Court's procedure equally as if established by the clearest proof"; here the counsel's opening statement of the issues was taken as sufficient for directing a verdict for the defendant); Ala. 1896, Prestwood v. Watson, 111 Ala. 604, 20 So. 600; Conn. 1905, State v. Marx, 78 Conn. 18, 60 Atl. 690 (Oscanyan v. Arms Co., U. S., approved);

Mont. 1920, Lewis v. Lambros, 58 Mont. 555, 194 Pac. 152 (stipulation as to title to a building, the subject of false representations; Hurley, J.: "This Court, as well as the trial Court, must be bound by the stipulations of the parties"); N. Y. 1868, Paige v. Willet, 38 N. Y. 28, 31 ("A party who formally and explicitly admits by his pleading that which establishes the plaintiff's right will not be suffered to deny its existence or to prove any state of facts inconsistent with that admission").

<sup>2</sup> 1918, Larson Jr. Co. v. Wrigley Jr. Co., 7th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 914 (unfair trade; quoted supra); Prestwood v. Watson, Ala., 19.8, BAKER, J., in Larson Jr. Co. v. Wrigley Jr. Co., 7th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 914 (unfair competition by imitation of trade-label; each party claimed priority, and also asserted damage by confusion to customers): "In support of the counterclaim, no proof was made of actual confusion. Counsel, however, contend that an inference to that effect may be drawn from Larson's testimony that after 'Doublemint' appeared his sales of 'Wintermint' materially decreased. True, but a falling off in business may result from fair as well as from unfair competition. — Insistence comes to be centered on the proposition that the trial Court was not at liberty to determine the question of actual or probable confusion from a comparison of the packages and from the lack of direct testimony, but was bound to take that issue as settled by Wrigley's averments and admissions in court; and counsel cite many cases as supportive of their contention.

"Undoubtedly a litigant has no cause for complaint if the Court accepts his solemn and sworn admissions in pleadings and testimony as true. But we must reject the contention that his adversary has the right to compel the Court to do so. Otherwise a Court could be forced by parties to decide moot, feigned, and collusive cases, or a Chancellor might be made to proceed with an equitable accounting between partners who had stolen the property they brought into court. But the present case on the counterclaim is not moot, nor feigned, nor collusive, and it presents a question of Larson's legitimate property rights. . . . From a comparison the learned District Judge found that the distinctive words and marks were so dominating that the careless purchaser, desiring 'Larson's Wintermint,' would not be misled into taking 'Wrigley's Doublemint.' With nothing before us but the packages, we would be inclined to concur in the finding. But the record contains also Wrigley's averment in his bill that confusion had arisen. There was no proof to support that averment and Larson's parallel averment. But Larson's counsel may have relied on the stipulation of fact in bill and counterclaim to save hunting up and bringing in witnesses of wrongful sales. Furthermore, Wrigley and another interested with him gave testimony as experts in the gum business that confusion was likely to result from the similarities; and so there is a basis for at least the possibility that Wrigley's averment of fact and his expert opinion may be true, and that Larson's diminished sales came from Wrigley's simulation of the 'Wintermint' package.

"In such a situation, the rule, in our judgment, is this: In a real and legitimate controversy, a party should be left within the knot of his averments in pleadings and admissions in testimony, unless the Court can find an absolute demonstration from other evidence in the case, or from facts within judicial notice, like the laws of physics, etc., that under no circumstances could the averments and admissions be true."

§ 2591. Same: (2) Prohibitive of Evidence by the Party benefiting. A fact that is judicially admitted needs no evidence from the party benefiting by the admission.<sup>1</sup>

But his evidence, if he chooses to offer it, may even be excluded; first, because it is now as immaterial to the issues as though the pleadings had marked it out of the controversy (ante, § 2); next, because it may be superfluous and merely cumber the trial (ante, §§ 1863, 1904); and furthermore, because the added dramatic force which might sometimes be gained from the supra, note 1; 1913, McCarty v. Kepreta, 24 N. D. 395, 139 N. W. 992, 1005 (affidavits of the defendant and his attorney, filed with a motion to remand after the record had gone up on appeal, held a judicial admission, but subject to the appellate court's discretion to relieve from the ordinary consequences); Seely v. Cole, Oh., post, § 2594, note 2.

Under the Louisiana Code, quoted ante, § 2588, the rule may be different: 1842, Kohn v. Marsh, 3 Rob. La. 48, 49 (consent to an order appointing experts; opinion not clear).

§ 2591. <sup>1</sup> 1897, Charlton v. Kelly, 24 Colo. 273, 50 Pac. 1042, semble (if complete, serves to dispense with production of affidavit required).

examination of a witness to the fact (a force, indeed, which the admission is often designed especially to obviate) is not a thing which the party can be said to be always entitled to. Nevertheless, a colorless admission by the opponent may sometimes have the effect of depriving the party of the legitimate moral force of his evidence; furthermore, a judicial admission may be cleverly made with grudging limitations or evasions or insinuations (especially in criminal cases), so as to be technically but not practically a waiver of proof. Hence, there should be no absolute rule on the subject; and the trial Court's discretion should determine whether a particular admission is so plenary as to render the first party's evidence wholly needless under the circumstances.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The rulings have naturally been variant: Federal: 1898, Jones v. Allen, 85 Fed. 523, 29 C. C. A. 318 (admitted); Alabama: 1890, Dean v. State, 89 Ala. 46, 8 So. 38 (absent witness's testimony, excluded); Columbia (Dist.): 1921, McHenry v. U. S., — D. C. App. —, 276 Fed. 761 (murder; not decided; here the offer was not broad enough); Delaware: 1905, State v. Powell, 5 Pen. Del. 24, 61 Atl. 966 (photographs of wounds on the deceased, shown, though the defendant admitted the location and character of the wounds); Illinois: 1920, People v. Munday, 293 Ill. 191, 127 N. E. 364 (knowing receipt of deposits in an insolvent bank; the defendant having admitted the facts that on the date named the bank was insolvent and that he knew it, nevertheless "he could not prevent the introduction of competent evidence to prove every element of the crime charged by admitting a part of them"); Iowa: 1908, State v. Lewis, 139 Ia. 405, 116 N. W. 606 (homicide; the accused having admitted the killing on the ground of self-defence, the State was allowed to prove the nature of the wound); 1918, State v. Strum, 184 Ia. 1165, 169 N. W. 373 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; former acts, excluded where defendant admitted that whatever was done was done intentionally); 1903, State v. Vance, 119 Ia. 685, 94 N. W. 204 (indecent exposure; former acts, excluded, where defendant admitted that the act, if done at all, was done intentionally); 1918, State v. Strum, 184 Ia. 1165, 169 N. W. 373 (receiving stolen machinery; defendant having admitted formally that "whatever act he did with which he is charged he did it designedly; that it was not accidental or unintentional or through inadvertence; and that whatever he did he did knowingly," a prior similar act was held improperly admitted; this case illustrates the preposterously artificial application of the principle); 1920, State v. Kappen, 191 Ia. 19, 180 N. W. 307 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; defendant's admission of knowledge and intent, construed as to its effect in excluding the prosecution's evidence; impolicy of the above two rulings here revealed; State v. Strum and

State v. Vance repudiated; "the majority of the Court are not satisfied as to such holding"; Salinger, J., diss.); Maine: 1897, Dunning v. M. C. R. Co., 91 Me. 87, 39 Atl. 352 (Savage, J.: "It does not lie in the power of one party to prevent the introduction of relevant evidence by admitting in general terms the fact which such evidence tends to prove, if the presiding justice, in his discretion, deems it proper to receive it. Parties, as a general rule, are entitled to prove the essential facts, — to present to the jury a picture of the events relied upon. To substitute for such a picture a naked admission might have the effect to rob the evidence of much of its fair and legitimate weight"); Massachusetts: 1849, Com. v. Miller, 3 Cush. 243, 250 (other forged notes, to show guilty knowledge, the knowledge being admitted); 1876, Com. v. Costello, 120 Mass. 358, 364, 369 (an admission in Court of the fictitious nature of a name on an appeal bond); 1896, Stetson's Will, — Mass. —, 44 N. E. 1085 (admission of a will's execution does not prevent the calling of the subscribing witnesses as such); 1898, Whiteside v. Lowney, 171 Mass. 431, 50 N. E. 930 (in the trial Court's discretion the evidence may be excluded); Michigan: 1912, Eesley Light & P. Co. v. Commonwealth P. Co., 172 Mich. 78, 137 N. W. 663 (certified copy of articles of incorporation, admitted, though incorporation was conceded); Oregon: 1916, State v. Finnegan, 81 Or. 538, 160 Pac. 370 (ownership of personality; other evidence received); Pennsylvania: 1917, Com. v. Wendt, 258 Pa. 325, 102 Atl. 27 (murder; defendant's admission of a former crime, evidencing motive, held not to preclude proof by the prosecution); South Dakota: 1920, State v. Morgan, 42 S. D. 517, 176 N. W. 35 (incest; defendant's admission of an illegal marriage, held not to exclude other evidence of it, under the circumstances); Texas: 1920, Hardy v. State, — Tex. Cr. App. —, 217 S. W. 939 (murder; defendant's statement, "I killed two men, and twelve men will try me; and if they convict me and don't watch me, I will get some of them"; the defendant having admitted the killing in his testimony, his above utterance was excluded;

§ 2592. Same: (3) Validity as a Waiver of Unconstitutionality or Other Illegality. The effect of an admission being to remove the fact from controversy, precisely as if no plea or demurrer had raised the issue, it follows that any fact whatever may be the subject of an admission, provided only that the fact does not require the Court to violate those rules of public policy which even a contract could not override or displace:<sup>1</sup>

1885, EARL, J., in New York, L. & W. R. Co.'s Petition, 98 N. Y. 447, 453 (stipulation as to commissioners of valuation): "Parties by their stipulations . . . may stipulate away statutory, and even constitutional rights. . . . All such stipulations not unreasonable, not against good morals or sound public policy, have been and will be enforced; and generally, all stipulations made by parties for the government of their conduct or the control of their rights, in the trial of a cause or the conduct of a litigation, are enforced by the Courts. . . . So it is not true that parties cannot enter into stipulations which in some sense will bind and control the action of the Courts."

1905, HAMERSLEY, J., in State v. Marx, 78 Conn. 18, 60 Atl. 690: "It is true that in the trial of capital offences the Court will and should exercise care and discretion in respect to admissions made by the accused or by his counsel in open Court, and that every conviction should be supported by some evidence produced in Court, and so even a plea of guilty will not ordinarily be accepted. But it is not true that an accused cannot, either by himself or his counsel, in his own interest, admit some facts which, though necessary for the State to establish, may be consistent with his innocence and the defence he maintains. Subject to the reasonable discretion of the Court in the protection of the accused against improvidence or mistake, admissions during the trial by the accused or his counsel as to the genuineness of a document; admissions as to the testimony a witness not produced would give if present, or the fact his testimony would establish, voluntarily made for the purpose of preventing a postponement of the trial; and admissions in the interest of the accused limiting the issue to the material facts upon which alone his successful defence depends, have long been permitted under our practice, and we think their lawfulness and propriety rest upon sound reason."

Consequently, the admission may relate to a fact proved by evidence otherwise inadmissible (by virtually waiving objection to it);<sup>2</sup> or to a fact which the the reasoning by which this conclusion was reached must be read to be appreciated; it required the quotation of poetry to justify it); Washington: 1903, Smith v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 481, 74 Pac. 674; Wisconsin: 1913, Serdan v. Falk Co., 153 Wis. 169, 140 N. W. 1035 (employer's knowledge of employee's incompetence; reputation admitted).

If admitted, however, it may of course not be sufficient ground for a new trial: 1898, Davis v. Emmons, 32 Or. 389, 51 Pac. 652.

§ 2592. <sup>1</sup> Judicial admissions are of course equally effective in criminal cases as in civil cases (apart from such questions as the waiver of jury trial): Can. Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 978 ("any accused person," by himself or counsel, "may admit any fact alleged against the accused so as to dispense with proof thereof");

U. S. 1905, State v. Marx, 78 Conn. 18, 60 Atl. 690 (quoted supra); 1901, Com. v. McMurray, 198 Pa. 51, 47 Atl. 952. The contrary has been declared: 1878, Clayton v.

State, 4 Tex. App. 515, 519; but this is carrying tenderness for the accused too far.

<sup>2</sup> 1921, Kinley v. Largent, 187 Cal. 71, 200 Pac. 937 (waiver of surviving opponent's incompetency); 1896, Brady v. Nally, 151 N. Y. 258, 45 N. E. 547, 549 (the argument that "in view of the conclusive nature of the presumption that the written agreement embraced the entire contract, the parol evidence, although received by consent, cannot overcome that presumption," rejected); 1903, Thompson v. F. W. & R. G. R. Co., 31 Tex. Civ. App. 583, 73 S. W. 29 (hearsay admitted by stipulation); 1910, United States, for use of E. L. C. Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & G. Co., 83 Vt. 278, 75 Atl. 280; 1914, Newberry v. Watts, 116 Va. 730, 82 S. E. 703 (said of a failure to object; here, to hearsay).

The statutes for depositions (ante, §§ 1380, 1411) frequently assume this. Compare also the citations ante, § 13 (waiver of objection).

In Shaw v. Roberts (1818), 2 Stark. 445, Abbott, C. J., acknowledged that an "admis-

Court might have noticed as non-existent;<sup>3</sup> or to a rule of Evidence constitutionally sanctioned for the benefit of the waiving party;<sup>4</sup> or to some other rule constitutionally protected, in particular, to the failure to observe the requirements for legislative proceedings in a statute's enactment.<sup>5</sup> Any other result would seem to be inconsistent with the general spirit and practice of our litigation, which judicially leaves to the parties the framing of their pleadings and issues and determines no objection not expressly raised by one of them. Moreover, unless the admission is expressly rejected at the outset by the opponent, the judicial refusal to recognize it would often permit unseemly breaches of faith by counsel who have agreed to the admission.

Whether by contract before litigation arisen a party may provide for the non-enforcement of a rule of Evidence, or for its wavier, or for the adoption of a stricter rule than the usual one, is considered ante, § 7a.

sion of particular facts" was to be enforced; his further remark, that "it was the business of the Court to guard against the reception of improper evidence, independently of any admissions whatever, and it was the duty of the Court to reject illegal evidence, although the parties on both sides should agree to it," was ill-worded or ill-reported; what he meant was that one counsel's introduction of improper evidence was not such an acknowledgment of its propriety as disentitled him to object to further inquiries on that subject; i. e., the principle of curative admissibility (ante, § 15).

But the present principle does not mean that a party can force the trial judge to admit illegal evidence simply because the opponent fails to object: 1912, Electric Park Amusement Co. v. Psychos, 83 N. J. L. 262, 83 Atl. 766 (cited more fully ante, § 2484).

Thomas*, 63 Okl. 219, 164 Pac. 120 (personal injury; stipulation at a former trial, waiving conditionally plaintiff's privilege against physical examination, held not to be a complete waiver for the second trial); Pennsylvania: 1900, Acme Mfg. Allen, 1 Tyl. 4 (admission of execution on a former trial, "when not attached to the record," insufficient).

Whether, though not binding, they are at least receivable as ordinary admissions (as laid down in some of the rulings above) depends on the general principles applicable to the use of pleadings as ordinary admissions (ante, §§ 1063-1067).

Of course the admission would not bind between other parties: 1847, Holman's Heirs v. Bank of Norfolk, 12 Ala. 369, 408 (admission by stipulation of the present complainant's counsel in a prior suit over the same mortgage on a bill by other parties against the present complainant, held not binding here; "it would be a most alarming doctrine that an admission made by counsel in the progress of a cause was proof of the fact so admitted through all future time"); 1863, Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 231, 238 (action for medical services to an injured person; defendant's attorney's admission of the correctness of the plaintiff's bill, in an

It is true that the pleadings of the parties continue to be binding (subject only to the usual rules for amendment); but the very distinction between pleadings and judicial admissions is that the latter are not subject to the fixed requirements of the former (ante, § 2589). On the other hand, a regard for fairness of practice indicates the opposite result; for after the case of the party benefiting by the admission has been exposed at the first trial, the party making the admission may discover that the proof of the fact would have been difficult or onerous, and by withdrawing the admission he may thus obtain a factitious advantage which the law hardly contemplates as the consequence of a new trial. Moreover, the ignorance which may have led to an ill-advised admission is no more a cause for revoking it at the second trial than at the first; and in any event the judge's discretion may grant relief (ante, § 2590) in the one instance as well as the other. It would seem, having regard to the voluntary and contractual nature of the act, that the duration of its effect, no less than its scope, depends, after all, on the intent of the parties; that this implied intent may vary with the circumstances; and that where no special circumstances indicate the contrary, the intention should be implied to extend the effect of the admission to all subsequent parts of substantially the same litigation between the same parties, including a new trial:

1896, BRICKELL, C. J., in Prestwood v. Watson, 111 Ala. 604, 20 So. 600: "Such agreements are sometimes made to avoid continuances, or for some specific purpose, and, by their terms, are limited to the particular occasion or purpose, and, of course, lose all force when the occasion has passed, or the purpose has been accomplished. But if by their terms they are not limited, and are unqualified admissions of facts, the limitation is not implied, and they are receivable on any subsequent trial between the parties. . . . And when made in open court, and reduced to writing, intended to be used, and used, as an instrument of evidence, and is without limitation as to time or occasion, it cannot be withdrawn or retracted at the mere will of either party. The presence of witnesses to prove the facts stated is waived. If the witnesses had been produced and testified, and they died, or became insane, or removed without the jurisdiction of the court, on a subsequent trial evidence of their testimony would be admissible. The admission of the facts dispensing with evidence, if it could be disregarded by either party on any subsequent trial, in the event of inability to produce witnesses to establish them, would often convert such admissions into instruments of fraud and injury. When they are made deliberately and intelligently, in the presence of the Court, and reduced to writing, they are of the best species of evidence; and parties cannot be permitted to retract them, as they are not permitted at pleasure to retract admissions of fact made in any form. If they are made improvidently and by mistake, and the improvidence and mistake be clearly shown, the Court has a discretion to relieve from their consequences, — a discretion which should be exercised sparingly and cautiously."

§ 2594. Form of the Admission; Who is Authorized. (1) It is sometimes declared, in statute, court-rule, or decision, that all agreements between attorneys or counsel, including presumably judicial admissions, must be in action by the defendant against the tortfeasor before arbitrators for the injury, excluded).

The following ruling seems unsound: 1857, Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Ind. 323, 333 (con-clusiveness not given to those made "pending the suit," but only to those "made in court for the purposes of the trial").

writing, in order to obtain enforcement from the Courts;<sup>1</sup> and no doubt, for admissions made out of court, or at least prior to trial and out of court, the rigid policy of the law should look only at written admissions, even though professional honor could not suffer such a distinction. But that policy need not apply to admissions made in court, where the memory of the judge and the presence of other members of the bar could be trusted for verification in case of misunderstanding and the oral habit of the proceedings is inconsistent with such an exception.<sup>2</sup>

(2) It is of the nature of an admission, plainly, that it be by intention an act of waiver, relating to the opponent's proof of the fact, and not merely a statement of assertion or concession, made for some independent purpose;<sup>3</sup> in particular, a statement made for the purpose of giving testimony is not a judicial admission.<sup>4</sup>

P. 1872, § 283 ("An attorney or counselor shall have authority to bind his client in any of the steps of an action or proceeding by his agreement filed with the clerk or entered upon the minutes of the court, and not otherwise"); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 4955 (authority to make "any agreement in relation to the cause, made in writing"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 6573 (like Cal. C. C. P., § 283); Me. 1878, *Holley v. The authentication of the attorney's signature may be aided by principles already considered (ante, §§ 2167, 2578).

<sup>2</sup> 1896, Prestwood v. Watson, 111 Ala. 604, 20 So. 600 (Brickell, C. J.: "That the agreement was not signed by the parties or by the counsel was not of importance. Their signatures were not necessary to impart to it validity. Private agreements between parties or their attorneys, relating to the proceedings in a pending cause, — agreements not made in the presence of the Court, — the rules of practice require, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be bound thereby. The rule has never been supposed to have any application to agreements or admissions made in the presence of the Court. Upon such agreements or admissions, made verbally, every court is necessitated to act daily. The refusal to recognize and act upon them would delay the transaction of business, and entail upon counsel and parties much unnecessary labor. The purpose of the rule is to relieve such admissions or agreements from the infirmative considerations attaching to mere oral admissions of facts imputed to the one party or the other, and to avoid the unseemly wrangles, disputes, and contradictions which would ensue if they rested only in memory. Where the agreement or admission is made in the presence of the Court, it is without the purpose or reason, if not without the letter, of the rule"); 1921, Rich Hardware Co.'s Assignment, 21 Ariz. 394, 188 Pac. 875 (judge's written recital of an oral stipulation, held conclusive); 1919, Storey v. U. S. Fidelity & G. Co., 32 Ida. 388, 183 Pac. 990 (Comp. L. § 3998, requiring attorney's agreements to be filed or entered, held not applicable to a stipulation in another action not commenced); 1834, Seely v. Cole, Wright Oh. 681 (an oral admission, made in court on the opponent's offer of a witness, not allowed to be retracted, unless by leave of Court).

Sometimes a larger scope may be conceded: 1892, Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 287, 30 Pac. 529 (an oral stipulation, not filed or entered under C. C. P. § 283, supra, is nevertheless binding if it has been so acted upon that it would be inequitable to disregard it).

<sup>3</sup> 1901, Cramer v. Truitt, 113 Ga. 967, 39 S. E. 459 (admission of attorney in private conversation with the judge out of court, not sufficient).

<sup>4</sup> 1900, Owen v. Palmour, 111 Ga. 885, 36 S. E. 969 (a party testifying at a former trial, the brief of evidence therein having been agreed to by counsel and approved by Court, is not estopped from testifying contrary thereto); 1898, Smith v. Olsen, 92 Tex. 181, 46 S. W. 631 (answer by way of discovery). Contra, but unsound, 1901, Feary v. R. Co., 162 Mo. 75, 62 S. W. 452 (a statement made on the stand while testifying, held conclusive; Valliant, J., diss.).

That the "proofs of loss," in insurance, are judicial admissions has sometimes been argued, but not with good reason (ante, § 1073).

The payment of money into court was formerly a common type of judicial admission,

But an admission made in the counsel's statement of the case may be treated as binding.<sup>5</sup>

(3) Judicial admissions are usually made by the party's attorney or counsel. It is settled that the general authority to conduct the trial implies the authority to make such admissions.<sup>6</sup>

§ 2595. Avoiding a Continuance by Judicial Admission; Testimony of an Absent Witness of the Opponent. When a continuance, or postponement, of the trial is applied for on the ground of the present impossibility of securing the attendance of a material witness, the granting of the application, by orthodox practice, lies in the Court's discretion, i. e. subject to no mandatory rules, provided certain fundamental conditions exist as to materiality, diligence, and the like. Assuming, however, that they exist, and that the Court would by them be justified in ordering the continuance, the opponent may attempt to remove these grounds for granting it, by making a judicial admission either that the witness would if present testify as affirmed by the applicant, or that the tenor of the desired testimony is true. The earlier practice seems for a time to have left in the Court's discretion the propriety of recognizing this as sufficient to avoid the continuance. But statutes have now come, in most jurisdictions, to prescribe a rule, declaring that one or the other kind of these admissions will 'per se' avoid the continuance, and (sometimes) that, conversely, an application based on specified grounds shall be granted unless one or the other of these admissions is made.<sup>1</sup> more allied to a pleading; it is briefly noticed ante, § 1061, and more fully in Greenleaf, Evidence, § 205; statutes and rules of court often regulate it.

<sup>5</sup> 1880, Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, 263 (cited ante, § 2590); 1921, People ex rel. Brundage v. Hill Top M. M. Co., 300 Ill. 564, 133 N. E. 303 (statement of facts made by defendant's counsel at the trial and incorporated into the record, held an admission); 1895, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Rooker, 13 Ind. App. 600, 41 N. E. 470 (the incidental statement of counsel, in opening, that he intended to prove the fact in question).

Contra: 1910, Pietsch v. Pietsch, 245 Ill. 454, 92 N. E. 325 (forcible detainer; defendant's counsel's statement of the facts constituting his defence, made at the close of plaintiff's counsel's opening statement, held not sufficient to base a ruling ordering a verdict for the plaintiff; Oscanyan v. Arms Co. distinguished, but not successfully; see the comments on this case, in the Illinois Law Review, V, 319); 1913, Cornell v. Morrison, 87 Ohio 215, 100 N. E. 817 (counsel's opening statement is ordinarily to be treated as a judicial admission of facts not denied, and thus a nonsuit may be immediately based thereon).

A change of attorneys does not abrogate an admission originally binding: 1892, Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 289, 30 Pac. 529.

For an infant's guardian ad litem the counsel's stipulations would bind: 1911, Byrnes v. Butte Brewing Co., 44 Mont. 328, 119 Pac. 788, semble. Compare the rule for extrajudicial admissions (ante, § 1053).

Distinguish those statutes by which a continuance is granted on condition that the applicant assent to the taking and using of depositions of witnesses now present for the opponent; e. g. Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 596; Utah Rev. St. 1898, § 3134; these merely avoid the necessity of notice and other conditions precedent ordinarily to the use of the deposition (ante, §§ 1378, 1415).

<sup>2</sup> 1904, Gregory v. State, 140 Ala. 16, 37 So. 259 (impeachment of general character, allowed); 1910, Zobel v. Fanny Rawlings M. Co., 49 Colo. 134, 111 Pac. 843 (here the absent witness was himself called by the opponent and his testimony partly contradicted the affidavit); 1881, Powers v. State, 80 Ind. 77 (the truth of an absent witness' testimony admitted by the prosecution to avoid postponement; impeachment forbidden; but not in civil cases, where merely the fact of testifying is admitted); 1878, State v. Miller, 67 Mo. 604, 608 (by statute); 1878, State v. Thomas, 68 Mo. 605, 615. The statutes frequently declare this expressly.

So also the right remains to exclude specific inadmissible parts of the testimony: 1904, State v. Leuhrman, 123 Ia. 476, 99 N. W. 140.

In any event the opponent ought to be allowed to show that the applicant's sworn statements as to the grounds for using the absent witness' testimony are false; compare § 278, ante.

that the rule for self-contradictions raises here a special problem;<sup>3</sup> but the second kind obviously precludes him from any impeachment of credit, since the facts to be testified to are judicially admitted.<sup>4</sup> But he cannot be forced to make either kind of admission (by an order directing the trial to proceed and receiving in evidence the applicant's statement of the testimony or the facts); for this would be to deprive the opponent of his right to cross-examination.<sup>5</sup> The opponent, however, even though a defendant in a criminal case, may of course waive this right, by a voluntary admission of the testimony or the facts.<sup>6</sup>

For the applicant, who is refused a continuance when the opponent makes one of these admissions, the difference between the two kinds is obviously a radical one. Whether the Court should require the more stringent of the admissions, i. e. of the facts as established, not merely of the testimony as uttered, and should, in default of it, as a rule of law grant a continuance otherwise sufficiently grounded, has been one of the controverted questions in judicial opinion.<sup>7</sup> Regarded as a matter of common-law practice or of legislative policy, it seems to rest ultimately on local experience. If either rule is found, in a particular community, to work detriment to the safety of innocent accused persons in general or of the State's justice in general, it should be abandoned. Thus far the common experience has been that the requirement of an admission of facts, not merely of testimony, has served to add a powerful weapon of chicanery to the armory of unscrupulous counsel defending hardened villains.<sup>8</sup>

The constitutional objection, it is true, has been raised against the use of the less stringent form of admission, i. e. the objection that to refuse a con-

<sup>5</sup> Ante, § 1384; 1882, Wills v. State, 73 Ala. 362 (leading case). This would be equally true in civil cases; unless a statute prescribed a contrary rule; for no constitutional clause would there prevent such a statute.

<sup>6</sup> 1917, People v. Schultz-Knighten, 277 Ill. 238, 115 N. E. 140 (a third person's statement read at the inquest and admitted by stipulation); 1884, State v. Fooks, 65 Ia. 452, 21 N. W. 504 (collecting authorities).

Of course an admission of the truth of the facts would suffice: 1889, Pace v. Com., 89 Ky 204, 207, 12 S. W. 271 (leading case); 1857, Browning v. State, 33 Miss. 47, 71. Contra, but anomalous: 1838, Goodman v. State, Meigs Tenn. 195.

<sup>8</sup> The opinion of Grace, J., in Adkins v. Com., supra, forcefully shows this for Kentucky. In Illinois and Indiana the same stages of experience have developed.

tinuance, if the prosecution admits merely that the proposed testimony would have been given, would deprive the accused of his right (ante, § 2191) to compulsory process for his witnesses. In spite of the sanction given by some Courts to this objection, it seems to be totally devoid of grounds.<sup>9</sup> The constitutional provision for compulsory process, as the history of that right shows, was designed merely to give equally to the accused (beyond the power of legislative change) the aid of the State's subpoena. The contrast marked by that right is that, without it, the accused must depend (as at common law) solely on his own persuasion and the witness' choice, for securing his witnesses' attendance, but that, with it, the accused, like the prosecution and like civil parties, may invoke the State's compulsive power, whatever that may avail. But the constitutional provision does not have anything to say about the time of holding trial; which is the only question here involved. Much less does it pledge absolutely to the accused the presence of all desired persons, or any other superhuman feat. The Constitution cannot raise witnesses from the dead, nor spirit them from beds of illness or kennels of concealment. To interpret the Constitution into any such pledge is to invent (as experience has shown) a guarantee that no determined offender shall be tried for his crime until he himself pleases. Whether the one or the other kind of admission should be required may depend on the circumstances of each community and each case; but it is impossible to regard the constitutional clause as being in any way involved.

§ 2596. Admissions of the Genuineness of a Document. In probably most instances where a document is material under the pleadings, or is evidentially used, its genuineness is not doubtful. Yet the proof of that genuineness may be onerous and expensive. The opponent's admissions, judicial or extrajudicial, are receivable for the purpose (ante, §§ 2131, 2132), and may suffice; but it is only casually and seldom that they would be available to the party desiring to make the proof; and for lack of them at common law, the usual evidence must be resorted to, however needless. It would therefore be the part of common sense to recognize the needs of the situation by some expedient for facilitating the proof.

The appropriate remedy seems naturally to lie in securing some sort of judicial admission, by rule of pleading or otherwise, where the circumstances justify it. It was Bentham (as usual, one might say) who seems first to have proposed this measure.<sup>1</sup> Almost immediately his proposal bore fruit in one of the Hilary Rules of 1834. By this Rule the opponent was made to take the risks of paying the costs of proof, if after having a prior opportunity to satisfy himself he declined to admit judicially in writing the document's genuineness.<sup>2</sup>

This rule was preserved in later British legislation,<sup>3</sup> and furnished one of the two chief types for statutes in the United States.

The other common expedient, now in vogue in perhaps the majority of jurisdictions of the United States, takes the form of a rule of pleading,<sup>4</sup> by requiring a special denial on oath (either in the formal plea or in a separate affidavit) of the genuineness of the document; in default of this denial, the genuineness cannot be put in issue. This form is adapted especially to documents named in the pleadings as a foundation of the claim or defence; the other is applicable to any document whatever. In a few jurisdictions, both measures have been separately recognized; in others, the statute combines features of both.<sup>5</sup>

W. 872 (distinguishing this rule from that which requires a specific traverse of execution in order to put execution in issue; Canty, J. diss., on the ground that the signature purported to be by an agent, and that the authority of an agent could not be presumed); 1898, Fitzgerald v. English, 73 Minn. 266, 76 N. W. 22 (does not apply where the alleged signer is dead or is not a party).

In Georgia and in Texas a statute forbids the use of deed-copies from the registry if an improvement and expansion. Here, as everywhere, the time has not come when the law can afford to consider as closed that great period of rational advance which owed its first marked impulse to the caustic preaching of Bentham.

§ 2597. Future of the Doctrine of Judicial Admissions. The doctrine of Judicial Admissions has a large future before it, if judges will but use it adequately. In the first place, the judge should apply it to all informal, as well as formal, admissions by counsel during trial. In the next place, the judge should freely call upon counsel to state whether a fact is in good faith disputed, i. e. should require admissions to be made, where it seems probable that the fact is not actually-disputed. By this method, the presentation of evidence will be confined to those matters of fact alone which the parties do dispute.

It is easy to see how large a mass of needless skirmishing would thereby be eliminated, how much time would be saved, and how much confusion of the jury would be avoided. And this would be attained by the mere application of an existing principle. Already, in England, the principle is so used, on a large scale, in the modern practice of settling issues before masters. But it can also be used by the judge at the trial.<sup>1</sup>

How unappreciative are many judges of the possibility and propriety of such a use of the principle may be seen from a modern case,<sup>2</sup> in which the Supreme Court, refusing to give force to a counsel's admission during argument, put the following illustration as a 'reductio ad absurdum': "It would be a still more expeditious method, and equally conducive to the ends of justice, for the Court to call up the attorneys, and examine them and decide the case on what they say [i. e. admit], before calling a jury, whereby much time, labor, and expense would be saved." Precisely. Yet the learned Court is apparently unaware that the method which they ironically describe as absurd is in truth a natural and practical method, applicable with great advantage in thousands of cases, — as practitioners, on reflection, can hardly doubt. It was the method of the common law, some centuries ago, with jury trial in the height of its prestige. It is the method of England and Canada to-day. It must become our own method in the future.

affidavit denying the original's genuineness is made; but this is construed as still permitting a forgery to be shown, even though the sworn denial is omitted (ante, § 1651).

In several jurisdictions there are statutes exempting from proof of deeds prior to a common source of title, unless the opponent makes a sworn denial; e. g., 1884, Thatcher v. Olmstead, 110 Ill. 26; compare ante, § 2132.

In New Mexico, an account verified by the claimant's oath is sufficient to entitle to judgment unless denied by the opponent's oath; the practical utility is said to consist in obviating the need for introducing books of account in evidence: N. Mex. Annot St. 1915, § 2176.

Provisions similar to those of note 5 above have been in some States extended to telegraphic copies of documents; e. g. Or. Laws 1920, § 6018.

§ 2597. <sup>1</sup> Compare what is said on this subject ante, § 8a (shortcomings of the law of Evidence).

LIST OF CASES CITED

[In the following Table, all titles of criminal cases in England are entered under "R. v.," even though commonly known as "Anderson's Trial," "Anderson's Case," "The King v. Anderson" or the like; except in those earlier reports in which it does not plainly appear whether the case was a criminal one. In the United States, similarly, criminal trials, by whatever name known, are entered under "U. S. v.," "Com. v.," "State v.," etc., according to the local term of the jurisdiction. But wherever in a ruling made on appeal a case becomes officially otherwise designated, the entry is here made by that title, e. g., "Anderson v. U. S.," "Smith's Case." Accordingly a criminal case not found in this Table under one of these titles may be discovered under the other.]

INDEX OF TOPICS

INDEX OF TOPICS

By HARVEY C. VOORHEES, Esq., of the Boston Bar and revised by the Author for the Second Edition

Refer also to complete table of contents, volume one, or part thereof at beginning of each volume, or at head of each chapter.

SCOPE NOTE. — The fact that in the older works on Evidence, such as those of Starkie and Greenleaf, extra volumes were added to cover numerous points of substantive law and procedure arising at trials in the shape of offers of evidence, should not lead the practitioner to consult this work for such extraneous subjects. The bulk of the modern law of Evidence, in the strict sense, makes their inclusion nowadays impossible. In § 2 of this work will be found a further explanation of its scope. For example, the question whether in burglary there must be "evidence" of an entering of a dwelling house at night time is a question of the substantive criminal law.
