I T hath been frequently faid, by many perfons of the beft intelligence, that the unhappy commotions in our American colonies, have been confiderably promoted, if not primarly agitated, by clerical influence: and none of that order have had a greater fhare of it afcribed to them than Dr. Witherspoon, though not credited by many of his favourites in this country. The following Sermon and Address, however, will fully juftify the allegation, and filence the doctor's friends.

In the Sermon the doctor blends the most rebellious fentiments with the most facred and important truths; and hath the audacity to affirm, that not only the temporal but eternal happiness of the revolted colonifts depend upon perfevering in their independency, and undauntedly opposing the arms of their lawful Sovereign. And in the Address to his countrymen, he evidences himfelf to be the most inveterate enemy to his king and country; and ftretches every nerve to induce his countymen to imbibe his political fentiments. And that his rebellious tenets may be diffused through the different colonies, his Sermon and Addrefs must be printed and published, and dedicated to the chief of rebel faction. THE reader will eafily perceive, that the doctor not only exerts his utmost abilities to instigate the deluded colonists to perfevere in their rebellious courses, but laboths to inflame their minds against the determinations of the British parliament. To effectuate this, the best of Kings hath the most vile and unjust epithets ascribed to him: the falutary and equitable acts of the British parliament are pronounced unjust and tyrannical: the bleft of ministers are represented as corrupt, cruel, nd oppressive: the most lenitive measures of adminiftra+ A 2 ftration and government are fluted at, and treated with contempt: the mildest commanders and best disciplined army, are painted out as barbarous, inhumane, and brutal: and the most unexamplified instances of a pacific and forgiving disposition towards the most daring and unprovoked rebels, are rejected in the most contemptuous manner. Whilst, on the other hand, the most wanton cruelties, shocking barbarities, and unheard-of instances of rapine, murder, and devastation, on the fide of the provincial army, have a vail drawn over them.

IT hath been confidently alledged, that though the doctor did not fit as a member of the Congress, he was acquainted with their deliberations, confulted in every emergency, had a hand in the composition of their papers, and gave his opinion in fundry important matters. The truth of these allegations is but too much confirmed by the following performance: and it is even now faid he is admitted a member. IT is not the intention of the editors of the prefent edition of the doctor's Sermon and Address to gain friends to his fentiments; this is not likely to be the cafe with any who will peruse them with attention: but to fhew what artful means, and fallacious arguments have been made use of by ambitious and self-designing men, to stir up the poor infatuated Americans to the prefent rebellious meafures; what an active hand even Dr. Witherspoon has had therein; to convince his friends, in this country, of the truth of his being a chief promoter of the American revolt; and that if he falls into the hands of government, and meets with the demerit of his offence, he hath justly and defervedly procured it to himfelf. It was judged proper to affix fome elucidating foot notes to the present edition; and as the doctor has a few, these now added are marked with S. R. at the end of the paragraph.

PSAL. IXXVI. 10.

Surely the wrath of Man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain.

HERE is not a greater evidence either of the reality or the power of religion, than a firm belief of God's universal presence, and a constant attention to the influence and operation of his providence. It is by this means that the Christian may be faid, in the emphatical scripture language, to walk with God, and to endure as seeing him who is invisible. THE doctrine of divine providence is very full and complete in the facred oracles. It extends not only to things which we may think of great moment, and therefore worthy of notice; but to things the most indifferent and inconfiderable: Are not two sparrows sold for a fartbing, fays our Lord? and one of them falleth not on the ground without your heavenly Father; nay, the very hairs of your bead are all numbered. It extends not only to things beneficial and falutary, or to the direction and affiftance of those who are the servants of the living God; but to things feemingly most hurtful and destructive, and to perfons the most refractory and disobedient. He over-rules all his creatures, and all their actions. Thus we are told, that fire, hail, fnow, vapour, and stormy wind, fulfil bis word, in the course of nature; and even b the most impetuous and diforderly passions of men, bat are under no reftraint from themfelves, are yet erfectly subject to the dominion of Jehovah. They arry his commission, they obey his orders, they are mited and restrained by his authority, 'and they conire with every thing elfe in promoting his glory. There the greater need to take notice of this, that men are not not generally fufficiently aware of the diffinction between the law of God and his purpofe; they are apt to fuppofe, that as the temper of the finner is contrary to the one, fo the outrages of the finner are able to defeat flie other; than which nothing can be more falfe. The truth is plainly afferted, and nobly expressed by the Pfalmist in the text, Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain.

THIS plalm was evidently composed as a fong of praise for some fignal victory obtained, which was at the same time a remarkable deliverance from threatening danger. The author was one or other of the later prophets; and the occasion probably the unfuccessful affault of Jerufalem, by the army of Senacherib king of Affyria, in the days of Hezekiah. Great was the infolence and boafting of his generals and fervants against the city of the living God, as may be feen in the thirty-fixth chapter of Isaiah. Yet it pleafed God to destroy their enemies, and, by his own immediate interpolition, to grant them deliverance. Therefore the Pfalmist fays in the fifth and fixth verses of this plalm, The stout-bearted are spoiled, they have flept their fleep. None of the men of might have -found their hands. At thy rebuke, O God of Facob! both the charic and the horse are cast into a deep sleep. After a few more remarks to the fame purpose, he draws the inference, or makes the reflection in the text, Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath [halt thou restrain: which may be paraphrafed thus, The fury and injustice of oppressors shall bring in a tribute of praise to thee; the influence of thy righteous providence shall be clearly difcerned; the countenance and fupport thou wilt give to thine own people' shall be glorioufly illustrated; thou shalt fet the bounds which the · boldest cannot pass. I AM fenfible, my brethren, that the time and occafion of this pfalm, may feem to be in one refpect ill fuited to the interesting circumstances of this country at present. It was composed after the victory was obtained; whereas we are now but putting on the harnefs, and entering upon an important contest, the length of which it is impossible to forse, and the issue of which it will perhaps be thought prefumption to foretel. But as the truth, with respect to God's moral government, is the fame and unchangeable; as the issue, in the case of Senacherib's invasion, did but lead the prophet to acknowledge it; our duty and interess configure in calling upon us to improve it. And I have chosen to insist upon it on this day of folemn humiliation, as it will probably help us to a clear and explicit view of what should be the chief subject of our prayers and endeavours, as well as the great object of our hope and trust, in our present fituation.

THE truth, then, afferted in this text, which I propose to illustrate and improve, is,—That all the disforderly passions of men, whether exposing the innocent to private injury, or whether they are the arrows of divine judgment in public calamity, shall in the end, be to the praise of God: Or, to apply it more particularly to the prefent state of the American Colonies, and the plague of war,—The ambition of mistaken princes, the cunning and cruelty of oppressive and corrupt ministers, and even the inhumanity of brutal foldiers, however dreadful, shall finally promote the glory of God, and in the mean-time, while the storm continues, his mercy and kindness shall appear in prescribing bounds to their rage and fury*.

IN difcourfing of this fubject, it is my intention, through the affiltance of divine grace,

- I. To point out to you in some particulars, how the wrath of Man praises God.
- II. To apply these principles to our present situation, by inferences of truth for your instruction and comfort, and by suitable exhortations to duty in the important criss.

• Or, with as much propriety the doctrine might have been framed thus: • That the haughty infolence of ambitious and afpiring clergy-men, however • infufferable for a time; the most rebellious measures of unnatural fubjects • against the best of kings and the mildest government; and the most favage • cruelties and unheard-of barbarities of missed and undisciplined rebels, shall, • in the iffue, turn out to the glory of God, and the ruin and disgrace of the • promoters, by having restraints fet unto them, and disappointment written • upon all their designs.' S. R.

I. In the first place, I am to point out to you, in some particulars, how the wrath of man praises God. I fay, in some instances, because it is far from being in my power, either to mention or explain the whole. There is an unfearchable depth in the divine counfels, which it is impossible for us to penetrate. It is the duty of every good man to place the most unlimited confidence in divine wifdom, and to believe that those measures of providence that are most unintelligible to him, are yet planned with the fame skill, and directed to the fame great purposes as others, the reason and tendency of which he can explain in the clearest manner. But where revelation and experience enables us to discover the wifdom, equity, or mercy of divine providence, nothing can be more delightful or profitable to a serious mind, and therefore I beg your attention to the following remarks. In the fir/t place, the wrath of man praifes God, as it is an example and illustration of divine truth, and clearly points out the corruption of our nature, which is the foundation-ftone of the doctrine of redemption. Nothing can be more abfolutely neceffary to true religion, than a clear and full conviction of the finfulness of our nature and state. Without this there can be neither repentance in the finner, nor humility in the believer. Without this all that is faid in fcripture of the wifdom and mercy of God, in providing a Saviour, is without force and without meaning. Juftly does our Saviour fay, The whole have no need of a phylician, but those that are fick. I came not to call the righteous but finners to repentance. Those who are not sensible that they are finners, will treat every exhortation to repentance, and every offer of mercy, with difdain or defiance.

BUT where can we have a more affecting view of the corruption of our nature, than in the wrath of man, when exerting itfelf in oppreffion, cruelty, and blood? It must be owned, indeed, that this truth is abundantly inanifest in times of the greatest tranquillity. Others may, if they please, treat the corruption of our nature as a chimera; for my part, I fee it every where, and I feel feel it every day *. All the diforders in human fociety, and the greatest part even of the unhappines we are exposed to, arises from the envy, malice, covetousnels, and other lufts of man. If we and all about us were just what we ought to be in all respects, we should not need to go any further for heaven, for it would be upon earth. But war and violence prefent a spectacle still more awful. How affecting is it to think, that the luft of domination should be fo violent and universal? That men should fo rarely be fatisfied with their own possessions and acquisitions, or even with the benefit that would arife from mutual fervice, but should look upon the happiness and tranquillity of others, as an obstruction to their own. That, as if the great law of nature were not enough, Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return, they, should be fo furiously fet for the destruction of each other. It is flocking to think, fince the first murder of Abel by his brother Cain, what havock has been made of man by man in every age. What is it that fills the pages of history, but the wars and contentions of princes and empires? What vaft numbers has lawlefs ambition brought into the field, and delivered as a prey to the deftructive fword? IF we dwell a little upon the circumstances, they become deeply affecting. The mother bears a child with pain, rears him by the laborious attendance of many years; yet in the prime of life, in the vigour of health, and bloom of beauty, in a moment he is cut down by the dreadful instruments of death. Every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; but the horror of the scene is not confined to the field of flaughter. Few go there unrelated, or fall unlamented; in every hoffile encounter, what must be the impression upon the relations of the deceased? The bodies of the dead can only be feen, or the cries of the dying heard for a fingle day, but many days thall not

* A truth remarkably verified in the doctor's late and prefent conduct, in acting fo much out of character, in his being fo inftrumental to ftir up and promote the prefent unnatural revolt of the colonies, fo prejudicial to them and difgraceful to himfelf, when now obliged to abandon his habitations, where he enjoyed all manner of external affluence and happinefs. S. R.

put an end to the mourning of a parent for a beloved fon, the joy and fupport of his age, or of the widow and helplefs offspring for a father, taken away in the fulnefs of health and vigour.

BUT if this may be justly faid of all wars between man and man, what shall we be able to fay that is fuitable to the abhorred fcene of civil war between citizen and citizen? How deeply affecting is it, that those who are the fame in complexion, the fame in blood, in language, and in religion, should, notwithstanding, butcher one another with unrelenting rage, and glory in the deed? That men should lay waste the fields of their fellow subjects, with whose provision they themselves had been often fed, and confume with devouring fire those houses, in which they had often found a hospitable fhelter? THESE things are apt to overcome a weak mind with fear, or overwhelm it with forrow, and in the greatest number are apt to excite the highest indignation, and kindle up a spirit of revenge. If this last has no other tendency than to direct and invigorate the measures of self-defence, I do not take upon me to blame it; on the contrary, I call it necessary and laudable. * BUT what I mean at this time to prove by the preceding reflections, and with to imprefs on your minds, is the depravity of our nature. From whence come wars and fightings among you, fays the apostle James +, come they not hence, even from your lusts, that war in your members? Men of lax and corrupt principles, take great delight in fpeaking to the praise of human nature, and extolling its dignity, without distinguishing what it was, at its first creation, from what it is in its prefent fallen state. These fine speculations are very grateful to a worldly mind. They are also much more pernicious to uncautious and unthinking youth, than even the temptations to a diffolute and fenfual life, against which they

* If the calamities of war exhibit fuch an awful feene; if intelline commotions are fo deeply diffreffing; what ftings of confeience may it not juftly give those, who flould be ambaffadors of peace, but yet have an active hand in ftirring up and promoting fuch horrid difafters, and glory in the deed ! are fortified by the dictates of natural confcience, and a fense of public shame. But I appeal from these visionary reasonings to the history of all ages, and the inflexible testimony of daily experience. These will tell us what men have been in their practice, and from thence you may judge what they are by nature, while unrenewed. If I am not mistaken, a cool and candid attention, either to the past history, or present state of the world, but above all, to the ravages of lawlefs power, ought to humble us in the duft. It should at once lead us to acknowledge the just view given us in scripture, of our loft ftate; to defire the happy influence of renewing grace each for ourfelves; and to long for the dominion of righteoufnefs and peace, when men shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning books; when nation shall not lift up sword against nation,

† I cannot help embracing this opportunity of making a remark or two upon a virulent reflexion thrown out against this doctrine, in a well known pamphlet, Common Senfe. The author of that work expresses himself thus, 'If the ' first king of any country was by election, that likewise establishes a prece-" dent for the next; for to fay, that the right of all future generations is "taken away, by the act of the first electors, in their choice not ' only of a king, but of a family of kings for ever, hath no parallel in or • out of scripture, but the doctrine of original fin, which supposes the free will • of all men loft in Adam; and from fuch comparison, it will admit of no o-" ther: hereditary fuccession can derive no glory. For as in Adam all sinned, and as in the first electors all men obeyed; as in the one all mankind were fubjected to Satan, and in the other to Sovereignty; as our innocence was ' loft in the first, and our authority in the last; and as both disable us from ^e re-affuming fome former state and privilege, it unanswerably follows, that " original fin and hereditary fucceffion are parallels. Difhonourable rank ! " Inglorious connection ! Yet the most subtle sophist cannot produce a juster " fimile ".' Without the fhadow of reafoning, he is pleafed to reprefent the doctrine of original fin as an object of contempt or abborrence. I beg leave to demur a little to the candor, the prudence, and the juffice of this proceeding.

1. Was it modelf or candid for a perfon without name or character, to talk in this supercisious manner of a doctrine that has been espoused and defended by many of the greatest and best men that the world ever faw, and makes an essential part of the established Creeds and Confessions of all the Protestant churches without exception? I thought the grand modern plea had been, freedom of sentiment, and charitable thoughts of one another. Are so many of us, then, beyond the reach of this gentleman's charity? I do assure him that such prefumption and felf-considence are no recommendation to me either of his character or fentiments.
2. Was it prudent, when he was pleading a public cause, to speak in such opprobrious terms of a doctrine, which he knew, or ought to have known, was believed

2. The wrath of man praifeth God as it is the instrument in his hand for bringing finners to repentance, and for the correction and improvement of his own children. Whatever be the nature of the affliction with which he visits either persons, families, or nations; whatever be the disposition or intention of those whose malice he employs as a fcourge, the difign on his part is, to rebuke men for iniquity, to bring them to repentance, and to promote their holiness and peace. The falutary nature, and fanctifying influence of affliction in general, is often taken notice of in fcripture, both as making a part of the purpose of God, and the experience of his faints*. Now, no affliction, fays the apostle, for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: Nevertbeless afterward it yieldeth the peacable fruit of righteousness unto them, which are exercised thereby. But what we are particularly led to observe by the subject of this discourse is, that the wrath of man, or the violence of the oppressor, praiseth God in this respect, for it has a peculiar tendency to alarm the fecure conficience, to convince and humble the obfinate finner. This is plain from the nature of the thing, and from the testimony of experience. Public calamities, particularly the deftroying fword, is fo awful that it cannot but have a powerful influence in leading men, to confider the prefence and the power of God. It threatens them not only in themfelves, but touches them in all that is dear to them, whether relations or possessions.

believed and professed by, I suppose, a great majority of very different denominations? Is this gentleman ignorant of human nature, as well as an enemy to the Christian faith? Are men so little tenacious of their religious sentiments, whether true or false? The prophet thought otherwise, who said, Hath a nation changed their gods which yet are no gods? Was it the way to obtain the favour of the public, to defpife what they hold facred? Or shall we suppose this author so astonishingly ignorant, as to think that all men now, whose favour is worth asking, have given up the doctrine of the New-Testament? If he does, he is greatly mistaken. 3. In fine, I afk, where was the justice of this proceeding? Is there so little to he faid for the doctrine of original fin, that it is not to be refuted, but despised? Is the state of the world such, as to render this doctrine not only falfe, but incredible ? Has the fruit been of fuch a quality as to exclude all doubts of the goodness of the tree ?-On the contrary, I cannot help being of opinion, that fuch has been the visible state of the world in every age, as cannot be accounted for on any other principles, than what we learn from the word of God, that the imagination of the heart of man is only evil from his youth, and that continually, Gen. vi. 5.--- viii. 21.

IS)

The prophet Isaiah fays *, Yea, in the way of thy judgments, O Lord, have we waited for thee, - for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness. He confiders it as the most powerful mean of alarming the fecure, and fubduing the obstinate. Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not fee, but they fhall see and be ashamed for their envy at the people; yea, the fire of thine enemies shall devour them t. It is also fometimes represented as a symptom of a hopeles and irrecoverable state, when public judgments have no effect. Thus fays the prophet Jeremiah ‡, O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast confumed them, but they have refused to receive correction : They have made their faces harder than a rock, they have refused to return. We can eafily see in the history of the children of Israel, how fevere strokes brought them to submission and penitence. When he slew them, then they sought him; and they returned and enquired early after God: and they remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their redeemer ||. Both nations in general, and private perfons are apt to grow remifs and lax in a time of profperity and feeming fecurity; but when their earthly comforts are endangered or withdrawn, it lays them under a kind of necellity to seek for something better in their place. Men must have comfort from one quarter or another. When earthly things are in a pleafing and promifing condition, too many are apt to find their rest, and be fatisfied with them as their only portion. But when the vanity and paffing nature of all created comfort is difcovered, they are compelled to look for fomething more durable as well as valuable. What therefore can be more to the praise of God, than that when a whole people have forgotten their resting place, when they have abused their privileges, and defpifed their mercies, they should, by distress and suffering, be made to hearken to the rod, and return to their duty? THERE is an inexpressible depth and variety in the judgments of God, as in all his other works; but we * Ifa, xxvi. 8, 9. + Ver. 11. ‡ Jer. v. 3. 🛛 Pfalm lxxviii. 34. 35.

may lay down this as a certain principle, that if there were no fin, there could be no fuffering. Therefore they are certainly for the correction of fin, or for the trial, illustration, and perfecting of the grace and virtue of his own people. We are not to suppose, that those who fuffer most, or who fuffer soonest, are therefore more criminal than others. Our Saviour himself thought it neceffary to give a caution against this rash conclusion, as we are informed by the evangelist Luke, There were present at that season, some that told him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. And Jesus answering, said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galileans were finners above all the Galileans, because they fuffered such things? I tell you, nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perisht. I suppose we may fay, with sufficient warrant, that it often happens, that those for whom God hath defigns of the greatest mercy, are first brought to the trial, that they may enjoy, in due time, the falutary effect of the unpalatable medicine. I MUST also take leave to observe, and I hope no pious humble fufferer will be unwilling to make the application, that there is often a difcernible mixture of fovereignty and righteousness in providential dispensations. It is the prerogative of God to do what he will with his own; but he often difplays his justice itself, by throwing into the furnace those, who, though they may not be visibly worse than others, may yet have more to answer for, as having been favoured with more diffinguished privileges, both civil and facred. It is impossible for us to make a just and full comparison of the character either of perfons or nations, and it would be extremely foolifh for any to attempt it, either for increasing their own fecurity, or impeaching the justice of the Supreme Ruler. Let us therefore neither forget the truth, nor go beyond it. His mercy fills the earth. He is also known by the judgment which he executeth. The wrath of man in its most tempestuous rage, fulfills his will, and finally promotes the good of his chosen. 3. THE wrath of man praiseth God, as he fets bounds to it, or reftrains it by his providence, and fometimes makes it evidently a mean of promoting and illustrating his glory.

THERE is no part of divine providence in which a greater beauty and majefty appears, than when the Almighty Ruler turns the councils of wicked men into confusion, and makes them militate against themselves. If the Pfalmist may be thought to have had a view in this text to the truths illustrated in the two former observations, there is no doubt at all that he had a particular view to this, as he fays in the latter part of the verse, the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain. The scripture abounds with instances, in which the designs of oppressors were either wholly disappointed, or in execution fell far short of the malice of their intention, and in fome they turned out to the honour and happiness of the persons or the people, whom they were intended to deftroy. We have an infance of the first of these in the history to which my text relates *. We have also an instance in Esther, in which the most mischievous designs of Haman, the fon of Hamedatha the Agagite, against Mordecai the Jew, and the nation from which he fprung, turned out at last to his own destruction, the honour of Mordecai, and the falvation and peace of his people. FROM the New Testament I will make choice of that memorable event on which the falvation of believers in every age refts as its foundation, the death and fufferings of the Son of God. This the great adverfary, and all his agents and inftruments, profecuted with unrelenting rage. When they had blackened him with flander, when they fcourged him with fhame, when they had condemned him in judgment, and nailed him to the crofs, how could they help effeeming their victory complete? But, oh the unfearchable wifdom of God! they were but perfecting the great defign laid for the falvation of finners. Our bleffed Redeemer, by his death, finished his work, overcame principalities and powers, and made

• The matter is fully stated and reasoned upon by the prophet Isliah, thap. x. from the 5th to the 19th verse. C a shew a flew of them openly, triumphing over them in his crofs. With how much justice do the aposses and their company offer this doxology to God? They list up their voice with one accord, and faid, Lord, Thou art God which hast made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is: Who by the mouth of thy servant David bast faid, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. For of a truth, against thy holy child fesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done *.

IN all after ages in conformity to this, the deepeft laid contrivances of the prince of darkness, have turned out to the confusion of their author; and I know not, but confidering his malice and pride, this perpetual difappointment, and the fuperiority of divine wildom, may be one great fource of his fuffering and torment. The crofs hath still been the banner of truth, under which it hath been carried through the world. Perfecution has been but as the furnace to the gold, to purge it of its drofs, to manifest its purity, and increase its lustre. It was taken notice of very early, that the blood of the martyrs was the feed of Christianity; the more abundantly it was shed, the more plentifully did the havest grow. So certain has this appeared, that the most violent infidels, both of early and later ages, have endeavoured to account for it, and have observed, that there is a spirit of obstinacy in man, which inclines him to refist violence, and that feverity doth but increase opposition, be the caufe what it will. They suppose that perfecution is equally proper to propogate truth and error. This, though in part true, will by no means generally hold. Such an apprehension, however, gave occasion to a glorious triumph of divine providence, of an oppofite kind, which I must shortly relate to you. One of the

Roman emperors, Julian, furnamed the apoflate, perceiving how impossible it was to suppress the gospel by violence, endeavoured to extinguish it by neglect and fcorn. He left the Christians unmolested for sometime, but gave all manner of encouragement to those of oppofite principles, and particularly to the Jews, out of hatred to the Christians; and that he might bring public difgrace upon the Galileans, as he affected to stile them, he encouraged the Jews to rebuild the temple of Jerufalem, and visibly refute the prophecy of Christ, that it should lye under perpetual defolation. But this prophane attempt was fo fignally frustrated, that it ferved as much as any one circumstance to spread the glory of our Redeemer, and establish the faith of his faints. It is affirmed by fome ancient authors, particularly by Ammianús Marcellinus, a heathen historian, that fire came out of the earth and confumed the workmen when laying the foundation. But in whatever way it was prevented, it is beyond all controverfy, from the concurring teftimony of Heathens and Christians, that little or no progress was ever made in it, and that in a fhort time, it was entirely defeated. It is proper here to obferve, that at the time of the Reformation, when religion began to revive, nothing contributed more to facilitate its reception, and increase its progrefs, than the violence of its perfecutors. Their cruelty, and the patience of the fufferers, naturally difpofed men to examine and weigh the caufe to which they adhered with fo much conftancy and refolution. At the fame time alfo, when they were perfecuted in one city they fled to another, and carried the discoveries of Popifh fraud to every part of the world. It was by fome of those who were perfecuted in Germany, that the light of the reformation was brought fo early into Britain. THE power of divine providence appears with the . most distinguished lustre, when finall and inconsiderable circumstances, and fometimes, the weather and seafons have defeated the most formidable armaments, and frustrated the best concerted expeditions. Near two hundred years ago, the monarchy of Spain-was in the height C 2 2 height of its power and glory, and determined to crufh the interest of the reformation. They sent out a powerful armament against Britain, giving it oftentatiously, and in my opinion profanely, the name of the Invincible Armada. But it pleased God so entirely to discomfit it by tempess, that a small part of it returned home, though no British force had been opposed to it at all.

We have a remarkable instance of the influence of fmall circumstances in providence in the English history. The two most remarkable perfons in the civil wars, had earnestly defired to withdraw themselves from the contentions of the times, Mr. Hampden and Oliver Cromwell. They had actually taken their paffage in a fhip for New-England, when by an arbitary order of council they were compelled to remain at home. The confequence of this was, that one of them was the foul of the republican opposition to monarchical usurpation during the civil wars; and the other, in the course of that conteft, was the greatest instrument in bringing the tyrant to the block. THE only other historial remark I am to make is, that the violent perfecution which many eminent Christians met with in England from their brethren, who called themfelves Protestants, drove them in great numbers to a diftant part of the world, where the light of the gofpel and true religion were unknown. Some of the American settlements, particularly those in New-England, were chiefly made by them; and as they carried the knowledge of Christ to the dark places of the earth, so they continue themselves in as great a degree of purity of faith, and strictness of practice, or rather a greater, than is to be found in any protestant church now in the world. Does not the wrath of man in this inftance praife God? Was not the accufer of the brethren, who ftirs up their enemies, thus taken in his own craftines, and his kingdom shaken by the very means which he employed to establish it †.

+ Left this should be thought a temporising compliment to the people of New-England, who have been the first sufferers in the present contest, and have set so noble an example of invincible fortitude in withstanding the violence II. I II. I proceed now to the fecond general head, which was to apply the principles illustrated above to our prefent fituation, by inferences of truth for your instruction and comfort, and by fuitable exhortations to duty in this important crifis. And,

In the first place, I would take the opportunity on this occasion, and from this subject, to press every hearer to a fincere concern for his own foul's falvation. There are times when the mind may be expected to be more awake to divine truth, and the confcience more open to the arrows of conviction than at others. A feafon of public judgment is of this kind, as appears from what has been already faid. That curiofity and attention at least are raised, in some degree, is plain from the unusual throng of this affembly. Can you have a clearer view of the finfulness of your nature, than when the rod of the oppreffor is lifted up, and when you fee men putting on the habit of the warrior, and collecting on every hand the weapons of hostility and instruments of death? I do not blame your ardour in preparing for the refolute defence of your temporal rights. But confider, I befeech you, the truly infinite importance of the falvation of your fouls. Is it of much moment whether you and your children shall be rich or poor, at liberty or in bonds? Is it of much moment whether this beautiful country shall increase in fruitfulness from year to year, being cultivated by active industry, and possessed by independent freemen, or the fcanty produce of the neglected fields shall be eaten up by hungry publicans, while the timid owner trembles at the tax-gatherers approach? And is it of lefs moment my brethren, whether you shall be the heirs of glory, or the heirs of hell? Is you state on earth for a few fleeting years of fo much moment? And is it of lefs moment, what shall be your state through endless ages? Have you affembled together willingly to hear what shall be faid on public affairs, and to join in imploring the bleffing of God on the councils and arms of the united colonies? And can you be unconcerned, what shall become of you for ever, when all the monuments of human greatness shall be laid in ashes? For, the earth itself and all the works that are therein shall be burnt up \dagger .

WHEREFORE, my beloved hearers, as the ministry of reconciliation is committed to me, I befeech you in the most earnest manner, to attend to the things that belong. to your peace, before they are hid from your eyes. How foon, and in what manner a feal shall be fet upon the character and state of every person here present, it is impossible to know, for he who only can know does not think proper to reveal it. But you may reft affured, that there is no time more fuitable, and that there is none fo fafe as that which is prefent, fince it is wholly uncertain whether any other shall be yours. Those who shall first fall in battle, have not many more warnings to receive. There are fome few daring and hardened finners who despife eternity itself, and set their maker at desiance; but the far greater number by flaving off their convictions to a more convenient feafon, have been taken unprepared, and thus eternally loft. I would therefore earneftly prefs the apostles exhortation, We then; as workers together with him, beseech you also, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain: For he faith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of falvation have I fuccoured thee: Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of falvation ‡. SUFFER me to befeech you, or rather to give you warning not to rest satisfied with a form of godlines, denying the power thereof. There can be no true religion, till there be a difcovery of your lost state by nature and practice, and an unfeigned acceptance of Chrift Jesus, as he is offered in the gospel. Unhappy they who either despise his mercy, or are ashamed of his cross! Believe it, there is no falvation in any other.

There is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved. Unless you are united to him by a lively faith, not the refertment of a haughty + monarch, but the fword of divine justice hangs over you, and the fulness of divine vengeance shall speedily overtake you. I do not fpeak this only to the heaven-daring profligate, or grovelling fenfualist, but to every insensible fecure finner; to all those however decent and orderly in their civil deportment, who live to themfelves, and have their part and portion in this life; in fine, to all who are yet in a state of nature, for except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. The fear of man may make you hide your profanity; prudence and experience may make you abhor intemperance and riot; as you advance in life, one vice may supplant another and hold its place; but nothing lefs than the fovereign grace of God can produce a faving change of heart and temper, or fit you for his immediate presence. 2. FROM what has been faid upon this fubject, you may fee what ground there is to give praife to God for his favours already bestowed on us, respecting the public cause. It would be a criminal inattention not to obferve the fingular interposition of providence hitherto, in behalf of the American colonies. It is, however, impossible for me, in a fingle discourse, as well as improper at this time to go through every step of our past transactions; I must therefore content myself with a few remarks. How many difcoveries have been made of the defigns of enemies in Britain and among ourfelves, in a manner as unexpected to us as to them, and in fuch feafon as to prevent their effect? What furprizing fuccefs has attended our encounters, in almost every instance? Has not the boasted discipline of regular and veteran foldiers been turned into confusion and difmay before the new and maiden courage of freemen, in defence of their property and right? In what great mercy has blood been fpared on the fide of this injured country? Some important victories in the fouth have been gained with fo little lofs, that enemies will probably think it has been diffembled; as many, even of ourfelves thought, till time rendered it undeniable. But thefe were comparatively of fmall moment. The fignal advantage we have gained by the evacuation of Bofton, the fhameful flight of the army and navy of Britain, was brought about without the lofs of a man. To all this we may add, that the counfels of our enemies have been vifibly confounded, fo that I believe I may fay with truth, that there is hardly any ftep which they have taken, but it has operated ftrongly againft themfelves, and been more in our favour than if they had followed a contrary courfe. *

WHILE we give praife to God the fupreme difpofer of all events, for his interposition in our behalf, let us guard against the dangerous error of trusting in, or boasting of an arm of fless. I could earnessly with, that while our arms are crowned with fuccess, we might content ourselves with a modest as given me a great uneasiness to read some oftentatious, vaunting expressions in our news papers, though happily, I think, much restrained of late. Let us not return to them again. If I am not mistaken, not only the holy softent in general, and the truths of the glorious gospel in particular, but the whole course of providence feems intended to abase

* Has not the doctor, in the whole of this paragraph, begun too foon to boak, seeing the harness was not yet put off? [1 Kings xx. 11.]-Where were shefe furprizing fuccesses that attended the encounters of the rebellious colonists? Were they in the doctor's imagination, or in the American news-papers? -Where, and at what time, did the maiden courage, as the doctor is pleafed to term it, of the provincial army, turn into confusion and difmay the discipline of his Majesty's regular and veteran foldiers? Was it in Canada, at Long-Illand, New-York, King's-bridge, Fort-Washington, the Jerseys? Gr. & c.-Where were the counfels of our King's ministers, or his commanders, visibly confounded? Was it by the aid the doctor gave to the congress; or in the pulpit at Prince-town, on the 17th of May last, when he sounded the alarm of war, and publicly recruited for the rebel army? S. the pride of man, and lay the vain glorious in the duft. How many inftances does hiftory furnish us with of those who, after exulting over, and despising their enemies, were fignally and shamefully defeated *? The truth is, I believe, the remark may be applied universally, and we may fay, that through the whole frame of nature, and the whole system of human life, that which promises most, performs the least. The flowers of finest colour feldom have the sweetest fragrance. The trees of quickest growth or fairest form, are feldom of the greatest value or duration. Deep waters move with least noise. Men who think most are feldom talkative. And I think it holds as much in war as in any thing, that every boaster is a coward +.

' PARDON me, my brethren, for infifting fo much upon this which may feem but an immaterial circumstance. It is in my opinion of very great moment. I look upon oftentation and confidence to be a fort of outrage upon providence, and when it becomes general, and infules itself into the spirit of a people, it is a forerunner of destruction. How does Goliath the champion, armed in a most formidable manner express his disdain of David the strippling with his sling and his stone? And when the Philistine looked about and saw David, he disdained him: for he was but a youib, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance. And the Philistine said unto David, Am I a dog, that thou comest unto me with staves? And the Philistine cursed David by his gods; and the Philistine faid to David, Come to me and I will give thy flesh unto the foculs of the air, and to the beasts of the field. But how just and modest the reply? Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield, but I come unto thee in the name of the

• There is no ftory better known in British history, than that the officers of the French army, the night preceeding the battle of Agincourt, played at dice for English prisoners before they took them, and the next day were taken by them.

† Has not this been remarkably verified in the fhameful flight of the doctor from his pleafant habitation, on the approach of His Majefty's troops? Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied*. I was well pleased with a remark of this kind thirty years ago in a pamphlet \dagger , in which it was observed, that there was a great deal of prophane oftenation in the names given to softwar, as the Victory, the Valiant, the Thunderer, the Dreadnought, the Terrible, the Fire-brand, the Furnace, the Lightning, the Infernal, and many more of the same kind. This the author confidered as a symptom of the national character and manners very unfavourable, and not likely to obtain the bleffing of the God of Heaven[‡].

3. FROM what has been faid you may learn, what encouragement you have to put your truft in God, and hope for his affiftance in the prefent important conflict. He is the Lord of hofts, great in might, and ftrong in battle. Whoever hath his countenance and approbation, shall have the best at last. I do not mean to speak prophetically, but agreeably to the analogy of faith, and the principles of God's moral government. Some have observed, that true religion, and, in her train, dominion, riches, literature, and arts, have taken their courfe in a flow and gradual manner, from east to west fince the earth was fettled after the flood, and from thence forbode the future glory of America. I leave this as a matter rather of conjecture than certainty; but obferve, that if your caufe is just,---if your principles are pure, the multitude of opposing hofts.

* 1 Sam. xvii. 42, 43, 44, 45. † Britain's Remembrancer.

† I am fenible that one or two of thefe were thips taken from the French, which brought their names with them. But the greateft number had their names imposed in England; and I cannot help observing, that the Victory often celebrated as the finest thip ever built in Britain, was lost in the night without a florm, by fome unknown accident, and about twelve hundred perfons, many of them of the first families in the nation were buried with it in the deep. I do not mean to infer any thing from this, but, that we ought to live under the practical perfuasion of what no man will doctrinally deny, that there is no warring with the elements, or him who directs their force, that he is able to write difappointment on the wifest human fehrmes, and by the word of his power to frustrate the efforts of the greatest monarch upon earth. [] It is an old and common faying, that if's and and's have spoiled many a good charter. Were we to judge of the goodness of the American cause by the effects which have attended it as yet, the doctor himself may by this time set.

IF your cause is just-you may look with confidence to the Lord and intreat him to plead it as his own. You are all my witneffes, that this is the first time of my introducing any political subject into the pulpit. At this feason, however, it is not only lawful but necessary; and 1 willingly embrace the opportunity of declaring my opinion without any hefitation, that the caufe in which America is now in arms, is the caufe of justice, of liberty, and of human nature. So far as we have hitherto proceeded, I am fatisfied that the confederacy of the colonies, has not been the effect of pride, refentment, or fedition, but of a deep and general conviction, that our civil and religious liberties, and confequently in a great meafure the temporal and eternal happinefs of us and our posterity depended on the issue *. The knowledge of God and his truths have from the beginning of the world been chiefly, if not entirely confined to these parts of the earth, where some degree of liberty and political juffice were to be feen, and great were the difficulties with which they had to ftruggle form the imperfection of human fociety, and the unjust decisions of usurped authority. There is not a fingle instance in history in which civil liberty was lost, and religious li-that their cause is neither just, nor their principles pure, nor has their conduct been prudent, otherwse such a train of disappointments and unsuccessful attempts, would not have so repeatedly marked their undertakings S.R.

* Will the doctor's ipse dixit, that the cause in which America is now in arms, prove that it is the caufe of juffice, of liberty, and of human nature? Will his politively averring, that the confederacy of the colonics, is not the effect of pride, refentment, or fedition, gain credit with any but the deluded colonist, and these disaffected to our civil administrations? How will the doctor be able to instruct, that not only the civil and religious liberties, but the temporal and eternal happiness of the Americans depend on the successful iffue of their independent confederacy? Can paying a fmall, necessary, and equitable taxation, in order to support and defend the Americans in their rights and privileges, ever affect either their civil or religious liberties, or yet their temporal or eternal happines? Tho' the doctor, and his partizans, may alledge, the Americans being taxed at all, is an incroachment upon civil property. how will they be able to instruct, that their religious liberties have in the least been invaded; or that either their temporal or eternal happiness depend on the issue ?---Many of the Americans have indeed, by their folly, endangered their temporal happiness by their revolt, the doctor himself not excepted : But if the eternal happiness of them and their posserity depend on a successful issue of it in their favours, it is to be feared they will have but a very precarious title to iternal felicity, even though they have the doctor himfelf on their head. S. R. berty D_2 berty preferved entire. If therefore we yield up our temporal property, we at the fame time deliver the confcience into bondage.

You shall not, my brethren, hear from me in the pulpit, what you have never heard from me in converfation; I mean, railing at the king perfonally, or even his ministers and the parliament, and people of Britain as for many barbarous favages. Many of their actions have probably been worfe than their intentions. That they should defire unlimited dominion, if they can obtain or preferve it, is neither new nor wonderful. I do not refuse submission to their unjust claims, because they are corrupt or profligate, although probably many of them are fo; but becaufe they are men, and theréfore liable, to all the felfish bias infeparable from human nature. I call this claim unjust of making laws to bind us in all cafes whatfoever, becaufe they are feperated from us, independant of us, and have an interest in opposing us. Would any man who could prevent it, give up his eftate, perfon, and family, to the difpofal of his neighbour, although he had liberty to chuse the wifest and the best master? Surely not. This is the true and proper hinge of the controverfy between Great-Britain and America. It is however to be added, that fuch is their diftance from us, that a wife and prudent administration of our affairs is as impossible as the claim of authority is unjust. Such is and must be their ingnorance of the state of things here, fo much time must elapse before an error can be feen and remedied, and fo much injustice and partiality must be expected from the arts and misreprefentation of interested perfons, that for these colonies to depend wholly upon the legislature of Great-Britain, would be like many other opprefive connexions, injury to the master, and ruin to the slave *.

* The doctor, in this paragraph, does not only flyly infinuate, but cut deep. The King, his ministers, and the parliament, are represented, many of them at least, as unjust, corrupt, and profligate, if not even barbarous favages: a dialect, it feems, he accustomed himself to out of the pulpit, as well as in it. If the distance of Britain from North-America renders a prudent administration impossible, and justifies their revolt; then, upon the same principles, and with much more propriety, the inhabitants of South-America and the East-Indies schoold revolt from their respective forceigns.—Has the British claim of au-

THE management of the war itself on their part, would furnish new proof of this, if any were needful. Is it not manifest with what abfurdity and impropriety they have conducted their own defigns? We had nothing fo much to fear as diffension; and they have, by wanton and unneceffary cruelty *, forced us into union. At the fame time to let us fee what we have to expect, and what would be the fatal confequence of unlimited fubmission, they have uniformly called those acts Lenity, which filled this whole continent with refentment and horror. The inneffable difdain expressed by our fellow fubject, in faying, " That he would not hearken to America, till she was at his feet," has armed more men, and infpired more deadly rage, than could have been done by laying wafte a whole province with fire and fword. Again, we wanted not numbers, but time; and they fent over handful after handful, till we were ready to oppose a multitude greater than they have to fend +. In fine, if there was one place ftronger than the reft, and more able and willing to refift, there they made the attack, and left the others till they were duly informed, completely incenfed, and fully furnished with every instrument of war ‡.

thority over the Americans become unjust, fince the doctor took up his refidence mong them? Can Britain be more ignorant of the state of things among the Americans now than formerly?—Had the doctor kept his place in Beith, or even in Paisley, it would have been more happy for the poor infatuated and keluded Americans to-day than it is.—

* What wanton inftances of cruelty can the doctor mean? On the fide of he King's troops we have not heard of any; but by the provincials, very many. When the doctor wrote this paragraph, had he no mind of the barbarous culom of taring and feathering, practifed by the provincials on his Majesty's cell-affected subjects; and their clearing fome of their just debts with a brace f bullets through the head? I MENTION these things, my brethren, not only as grounds of confidence in God, who can eafily overthrow the wildom of the wile, but as decifive proofs of the impoffibility of these great and growing states, being fafe and happy when every part of their internal polity is dependent on Great-Britain. If, on account of their distance, and ignorance of our fituation, they could not conduct their own quarrel with propriety for one year, how can they give direction and vigour to every depart. ment of our civil conflitutions from age to age *? There are fixed bounds to every human thing. When the branches of a tree grow very large and weighty they fall off from the trunk. The sharpest sword will not pierce when it cannot reach. And there is a certain distance from the feat of government, where an attempt to rule will either produce tyranny and helpless fubjec. tion, or provoke resistance and effect a separation. I HAVE faid, if your principles are pure—The mean ing of this is, if your prefent opposition to the claims of the British ministry does not arise from a seditious and turbulent spirit, or a wanton contempt of legal authority; from a blind and factious attachment to particular perfons or parties; or from a felfish rapacious disposition on, and a defire to turn public confusion to private profit-but from a concern for the interest of your country, and the fafety of yourfelves and your posterity On this fubject I cannot help observing, that though would be a miracle if there were not many felfish per fons among us, and discoveries now and then made of mean and interested transactions, yet they have been comparatively inconfiderable both in number and effect In general, there has been fo great a degree of public spirit, that we have much more reason to be thankful for its vigour and prevalence, than to wonder at the few appearances of dishonesty or disaffection. It would be very uncandid to ascribe the universal ardour the

* It is more than probable the doctor will now be convinced, though the late, that matters have been conducted with as much propriety by Britain, if he himfelf had been at the helm; notwithstanding their great difference, a all that ignorance and flupidity he would have them to be poficified of. has prevailed among all ranks of men, and the spirited exertions in the most distant colonies to any thing elfe than public fpirit. Nor was there ever perhaps in hiftory-fo general a commotion from which religious differences have been fo entirely excluded. Nothing of this kind has as yet been heard, except of late in the abfurd, but malicious and detestible attempts of our few remaining enemies to introduce them. At the fame time I must also, for the honour of this country observe, that though government in the ancient forms has been fo long unhinged, and in fome colonies not fufficient care taken to substitute another in its place; yet has there been, by common confent, a much greater degree of order and public peace, than men of reflexion and experience foretold or expected. From all these circumftances I conclude, favourably of the principles of the friends of liberty, and do earneftly exhort you to adopt and act upon those which have been described, and refift the influence of every other. ONCE-more, if to the justice of your cause, and the purity of your principles you add prudence in your conduct, there will be the greatest reason to hope, by the bleffing of God, for profperity and fuccefs. By prudence in conducting this important struggle, I have chiefly in view union, firmnefs, and patience. Every body must perceive the absolute necessity of union. It is indeed in every body's mouth, and therefore inflead of attempting to convince you of its importance, I will only caution you against the usual causes of devision. If perfons of every rank, instead of implicitely complying with the orders of those whom they themselves have chofen to direct, will needs judge every meafure over again, when it comes to be put in execution. If different classes of men intermix their little private views, or clashing interest with public affairs, and marshal into parties, the merchant against the landholder, and the landholder against the merchant. If local provincial pride and jealoufy arife, and you allow yourfelves to speak with contempt of the courage, character, manners, or even language of particular places, you are doing doing a greater injury to the common cause, than you are aware of. If such practices are admitted among us, I shall look upon it as one of the most dangerous symptoms, and if they become general, a presage of approaching ruin.

By firmness and patience, I mean a resolute adherence to your duty, and laying your account with many difficulties as well as occasional disappointments. In a former part of this difcourfe, I have cautioned you against oftenation and vain glory. Be pleafed further to obferve, that extremes often beget one another; the fame perfons who exult extravagantly on fuccefs, are generally most liable to defpondent timidity on every little inconfiderable defeat. Men of this character are the bane and corruption of every fociety or party to which they belong; but they are efpecially the ruin of an army, if fuffered to continue in it. Remember the vicifitude of human things, and the usual course of providence. How often has a just cause been reduced to the lowest ebb, and yet when firmly adhered to, has become finally triumphent? I fpeak this now while the affairs of the colonies are in fo profperous a state, lest this prosperity itself should render you less able to bear unexpected misfortunes—The fum of the whole is, that the bleffing of God is only to be looked for by those who are not wanting in the difcharge of their own duty. I would neither have you to truft in an arm of flesh, nor fit with folded hands and expect that miracles should be wrought in your defence.—This is a fin which is in fcripture ftiled tempting God. In opposition to it, I would exhort you as Joab did the hoft of Ifrael, who though he does not appear to have had a fpotlefs character throughout, certainly in this instance spoke like a prudent general and a pious man. Be of good courage, and let us behave ourfelves valiantly for our people, and for the crities of our God; and let the Lord do that which is good in his fight *. I SHALL now conclude this difcourfe by fome exhortations to duty founded upon the truths, which have been illustrated above, and fuited to the interesting state of this country at the present time; and,

1. SUFFER me to recommend to you an attention to the public interest of religion; or, in other words, zeal for the glory of God and the good of others. I have already endeavoured to exhort finners to repentance; what I have here in view is to point out to you the concern which every good man ought to take in the national character and manners, and the means which he ought to use for promoting public virtue, and bearing down impiety and vice. This is a matter of the utmost moment, and which ought to be well understood, both in its nature and principles. Nothing is more certain than that a general profligacy and corruption of manners makes a people ripe for destruction. A good form of government may hold the rotten materials together for some time, but beyond a certain pitch even the best conflitution will be ineffectual, and flavery must enfue. On the other hand, when the manners of a nation are pure, when true religion and internal principles maintain their vigour, the attempts of the most powerful enemies to opprefs them are commonly baffled and difappointed. This will be found equally certain, whether we confider the great principles of God's moral government, or the operation and influence of natural caufes. WHAT follows from this? That he is the best friend to American liberty, who is most fincere and active in promoting true and undefiled religion, and who lets himfelf with the greatest firmness to bear down prophanity and immorality of every kind. Whoever is an avowed enemy to God, I fcruple not to call him an enemy to his country. Do not suppose, my brethren, that I mean to recommend a furious and angry zeal for the circumstantials of religion, or the contentions of one fect with another about their peculiar diffinctions. I do not wish you to oppose any body's religion, but every body's wickednefs. Perhaps there are few furer marks of the reality of religion, than when a man feels himfelf more joined in spirit to a truly holy person of a different denomination, than to an irregular liver of his own. is

is therefore your duty, in this important and critical feafon, to exert yourfelves every one in his proper fphere to ftem the tide of prevailing vice, to promote the knowledge of God, the reverence of his name and worfhip, and obedience to his laws.

PERHAPS you will afk, what it is that you are called to do for this purpofe farther than your own perfonal duty? I anfwer, this itfelf, when taken in its proper extent, is not a little. The nature and obligation of vifible religion is, I am afraid, little underftood, and lefs attended to.

MANY from a real or pretended fear of the imputation of hypocrify, banish from their conversation and carriage, every appearance of refpect and fubmiflion to the living God. What a weakness and meanness of spirit does it difcover for a man to be ashamed in the prefence of his fellow finners, to profefs that reverence to almighty God which he inwardly feels? The truth is, he makes himfelf truly liable to the accufation which he means to avoid. It is as genuine and perhaps a more culpable hypocrify to appear to have lefs religion than you really have, than to appear to have more. This falfe fhame is a more extensive evil than is commonly apprehended. We contribute conftantly, though infenfibly, to form each others character and manners; and therefore, the usefulness of a strictly holy and confcientious deportment is not confined to the possessor, but spreads its happy influence to all that are within its reach. I need fcarcely add, that in proportion as men are diffinguished by understanding, literature, age, rank, office, wealth, or any other circumstance, their example will be useful on the one hand, or pernicious on the other. BUT I cannot content myfelf with barely recommending a filent example. There is a dignity in virtue which is entitled to authority, and ought to claim it. In many cafes it is the duty of a good man, by open reproof and opposition, to wage war with profaneness. There is a scripture precept delivered in very fingular terms, to which I beg your attention; Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, but shalt in any ways rebuke him, and not suffer fin upon kim. How

How prone are many to reprefent reproof as flowing from ill nature and furlinefs of temper? The Spirit of God, on the contrary, confiders it as the effect of inward hatred, or want of genuine love, to forbear reproof when it is neceffary, or may be ufeful. I am fenfible there may, in fome cafes, be a reftraint from prudence, agreeably to that caution of Solomon, Ca/t not your pearls before fwine, left they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you. Of this every man must judge as well as he can for himfelf; but certainly, either by open reproof, or exprefive filence, or fpeedy departure from fuch fociety, we ought to guard againft being partakers of other mens fins.

To this let me add, that if all men are bound in fome degree, certain classes of men are under peculiar obligations to the difcharge of this duty. Magistrates, minifters, parents, heads of families, and those whom age has rendered venerable, are called to use their authority and influence for the glory of God and the good of others. Bad men themselves difcover an inward conviction of this, for they are often liberal in their reproaches of perfons of grave characters of religious profession, if they bear with patience the profanity of others. Inflead of enlarging on the duty of men in authority in general, I must particularly recommend this matter to those who have the command of foldiers inlifted for the defence of their country. The caufe is facred, and the champions for it ought to be holy. Nothing is more grieving to the heart of a good man, than to hear from those who are going to the field, the horrid found of curfing and blafphemy; it cools the ardour of his prayers, as well as abates his confidence and hope in God. Many more circumstances affect me in fuch a cafe, than I can enlarge upon, or indeed eafily enumerate at prefent; the glory of God, the interest of the deluded finner, going like a devoted victim and imprecating vengeance on his own head, as well as the caufe itself committed to his care. We have fometimes taken the liberty to forebode the downfall of the British empire, from the corruption and, degeneracy of the people. Unhappily the British foldiers E 2 have have been diffinguished among all the nations in Europe, for the most shocking profanity. Shall we then pretend to emulate them in this infernal distinction, or rob them of the horrid privilege? God forbid. Let the officers of the army in every degree remember, that as military subjection, while it lasts, is the most complete of any, it is in their power greatly to restrain, if not wholly to banish, this flagrant enormity.

2. I EXHORT all who are not called to go into the field, to apply themfelves with the utmost diligence to works of industry. It is in your power, by this means, not only to fupply the neceffities, but to add to the strength of your country. Habits of industry prevailing in a fociety, not only increase its wealth, as their immediate effect, but they prevent the introduction of many vices, and are intimately connected with fobriety and good morals. Idlenefs is the mother or nurfe of almost every vice; and want, which is its infeparable companion, urges men on to the most abandoned and destructive courses. Industry, therefore, is a moral duty of the greatest moment, absolutely necessary to national profperity, and the fure way of obtaining the bleffing of God. I would also observe, that in this, as in every other part of God's government, obedience to his will is as much a natural mean, as a meritorious caufe of the advantage we wish to reap from it. Industry brings up a firm and hardy race. He who is inured to the labour of the field, is prepared for the fatigues of a campaign. The active farmer, who rifes with the dawn, and follows his team or plow, must in the end be an overmatch for these effeminate and delicate foldiers, who are nurfed in the lap of felf-indulgence, and whole greatest exertion is in the important preparation for, and tedious attendance on, a masquerade, or midnight ball *.

* It is probable the doctor is, by this time, thoroughly convinced, that the British troops can exert themselves, in another manner than he here represents them, when they have an occasion put into their hand in the field. And it, would, no doubt, be very mortifying to the doctor, to see these allive farmers, whom he fays would be an over-match for these effeminate and delicate foldiers, difguatefully, on every occasion, flying before them, and the doctor himself obliged to bear them company. . . . S. R.

3. IN

3. In the last place, fuffer me to recommend to you frugality in your families, and every other article of expence. This the state of things among us renders abfolutely necessary, and it stands in the most immediate connection both with virtuous industry, and active public spirit. Temperance in meals, moderation and decency in drefs, furniture, and equipage, have, I think, generally been characteristics of a distinguished patriot. And when the fame fpirit pervades a people in general, they are fit for every duty, and able to encounter the most formidable enemy. The general fubject of the preceding difcourse has been the wrath of man praising God. If the unjust oppression of your enemies, which with holds from you many of the usual articles of luxury and magnificence, shall contribute to make you clothe yourfelves and your children with the works of your own hands, and cover your tables with the falutary productions of your own foil, it will be a new illustration of the fame truth, and a real happiness to yourfelves and your country. I COULD with to have every good thing done from the purest principles and the noblest views. Consider, therefore, that the Christian character, particularly the felf-denial of the gospel, should extend to your whole deportment. In the early times of Christianity, when adult converts were admitted to baptifm, they were afked among other queftions, Do you renounce the world, its shews, its pomp, and its vanities? I do. The form of this is still preferved in the administration of baptifin, where we renounce the devil, the world, and the flesh. This certainly implies not only abstaining from acts of grofs intemperance and excefs, but a humility of carriage, a reftraint and moderation in all your defires. The fame thing, as it is fuitable to your Christian profession, is also necessary to make you truly independent in yourfelves, and to feed the fource of liberality and charity to others, or to the public. The riotous and wasteful liver, whose craving appetites make him conftantly needy, is and must be fubject to many masters, according to the faying of Solomon, The borrower is fervant to the lender. But the frugal and moderate perfon, who guides his affairs with difcretion, is able to affift in public counfels by a free and unbiaffed judgment, to fupply the wants of his poor brethren, and fometimes, by his estate, and fubstance, to give important aid to a finking country.

UPON the whole, I befeech you to make a wife improvement of the prefent threatning afpect of public affairs, and to remember that your duty to God, to your country, to your families, and to yourfelves, is the fame. True religion is nothing elfe but an inward temper and outward conduct, fuited to your flate and circumstances in providence at any time. And as peace with God, and conformity to him, adds to the fweetnefs of created comforts, while we poffets them, fo in times of difficulty and trial, it is in the man of piety and inward principle, that we may expect to find the uncorrupted patriot, the useful citizen, and the invincible foldier. God grant that in America, true religion and civil liberty may be infeparable, and that the unjust attempts to destroy the one, may in the issue tend to the support and establishment of both.

(39) A_N DRE S S. D A TO THE NATIVES OF SCOTLAND, refiding in AMERICA.

Countrymen and Friends,

S foon as I had confented to the publication of the 1 foregoing fermon, I felt an irrefiftible defire to accompany it with a few words addreffed to you in particular. I am certain I feel the attachment of country as far as it is a virtuous or laudable principle, perhaps it would be nearer the truth to fay, as far as it is a natural and pardonable prejudice. He who is fo pleafed may attribute it to this last when I fay, that I have never feen cause to be ashamed of the place of my birth; that since the revival of arts and letters in Europe, in the close of the fourteenth and beginning of the fifteenth century, the natives of Scotland have not been inferior to those of any other country, for genius, erudition, military prowefs, or any of those accomplishments which improve or embellish human nature. When to this it is added, that fince my coming to America at an advanced period of life, the friendship of my countrymen has been as much above my expectation as defert; I hope every reader will confider what is now to be offered, as the effect not only of unfeigned good-will, but of the most ardent affection.

It has given me no little uneafinefs to hear the word Scotch used as a term of reproach in the American controverfy, which could only be upon the fuppofition that strangers of that country are more universally opposed to the liberties of America than those who were born born in South-Britain, or in Ireland. I am fenfible that this has been done in fome news-papers and contemptible anonymous publications, in a manner that was neither warranted by truth, nor dictated by prudence. There are many natives of Scotland in this country, whose opposition to the unjust claims of Great-Britain has been as early and uniform, founded upon as rational and liberal principles, and therefore likely to be as laft. ing, as that of any fet of men whatever. As to Great-Britain itself, time has now fully discovered that the real friends of America in any part of that kingdom were very few; and those whose friendship was disinterested, and in no degree owing to their own political factions, still fewer. The wife and valuable part of the nation were, and as yet are, in a great measure ignorant of the state of things in this country; neither is it eafy for the bulk of a people to shake off their prejudices, and open their eyes upon the great principles of universal liberty. It is therefore at least very disputable, whether there is any just ground for the distinction between Scots and English on this subject at all.

This difpute, however, I do not mean to enter upon, becaufe it is of too little moment to find a place here, but fuppofing that, in fome provinces efpecially, the natives of Scotland have been too much inclined to fupport the ufurpations of the parent ftate, I will first endeavour to account for it, by alligning fome of its probable caufes; and then offer a few confiderations which should induce them to wipe off the afperfion entirely, by a contrary conduct.

As to the first of these, I will mention what I suppose to have been the first and radical cause, and which gave birth to every other, of the disaffection of some of the natives of Scotland to the just privileges of America. What I have in view was the friends of liberty in many places of America, taking the part of, and seeming to consider themselves as in a great measure engaged in the fame cause with, that very distinguished person, John Wilkes, Esq; of London. This was done, not only in many writings and news-paper differtations, but one or or two colonies, in some of their most respectable meetings, manifested their attachment to him, and seemed to consider him as their patron and friend. N° 45, which was the most offensive number of a worthless paper, was repeated and echoed, by the most filly and ridiculous allusions to it, through every part of the country, and by many who could not tell what was fignified by the term.

It will not be neceffary to fay much on the prudence of fuch conduct, because I suppose those who expected Wilks's mob would pull down the parliament-house, or that there would be infurrections all over the kingdom in behalf of America, are by this time fully fatisfied of their miftake. It appears now in the clearest manner, that, till very lately, those who seemed to take the part of America in the British parliament, never did it on American principles. They either did not understand, or were not willing to admit, the extent of our claim. Even the great Lord Chatham's bill for reconciliation would not have been accepted here, and did not materially differ from what the ministry would have confented to. The truth is, the far greatest part of the countenance given in Britain to the complaints of this country, was by those who had no other intention in it than -to use them as an engine of opposition to the ministry for the time being. It is true, fome of them have now learned to reafon very juftly, and upon the most liberal principles; but their number is not great, and it was not the cafe with any one speaker or writer, whose works I have had the opportunity of perusing, till the very laft stage of the quarrel. What effect this Wilkifm (if I may fpeak fo) of many Americans may be supposed to have had upon the minds of gentlemen from Scotland, it is not difficult to explain. That gentleman, and his affociates, thought proper to found the whole of their opposition to the then ministry, upon a contempt and hatred of the Scots nation; and by the most illiberal methods, and the most fcandalous falsehoods, to stir up a national jealousy between the northen and fouthern parts of the island. There was not a vile term term or hateful idea, which ancient vulgar animofity had ever ufed, 'though long union had made them fcarcely intelligible, which he did not rake up and attempt to bring into credit, by writing and conversation. The confequence of this is well known. Wilks and fome others were burnt in effigy in Scotland; and it produced fo general an attachment to the king and ministry, as has not yet spent its force. In these circumstances is it to be wondered at that many who left Scotland, within the last fifteen years, when they heard Wilks, and those who adhered to him, extolled and celebrated by the fons of liberty, should be apt to confider it as an evidence of the fame spirit, and that they were engaged in fupport of the fame caufe. Perhaps we may go a little higher with this remark, in tracing political appearances to their fource. It is generally faid, that the King himfelf has difcovered a violent, rancorous, perfonal hatred against the Americans. If this be true, and I know nothing to the contrary, it may be eafily accounted for upon the very fame principles. I am far from fuppofing that this was a good reafon for any man's being cool to the American caufe, which was as different from that of Wilks, as light is from darknefs. It was indeed doing great diffionour to the noble struggle, to suppose it to have any connection with who should be in or out of court-favour at London; and therefore it was always my opinion, that those who railed against the King and ministry only, did not carry the argument home, nor fully understand the nature of their own plea. In order to justify the American oppofition, it is not necessary to shew that the persons in power have invaded liberty in Britain; it is fufficient to fay, that they, with the concurrence of the whole nation, have refused to fuffer it to continue in the colonies. This leads me to the fecond part of my defign, which was to lay before you the reafons which, I think, fhould induce every lover of justice and of mankind, not only to be a well-wisher, but a firm and stedfast friend to America, in this important contest. . It has been often faid, that the prefent is likely to be an

(* 43) an important æra to America. I think we may fay much more; it is likely to be an important æra methe history of mankind. In the ancient migrations, a new country was generally fettled by a fmall unconnected, and often an ignorant band. The people and the foil were alike uncultivated, and therefore they proceeded to improvement by very flow degrees; nay, many of them fell back and degenerated into a ftate vaftly more favage than the people from whence they came. In America we fee a rich and valuable foil, and an extensive country, taken pofferion of by the power, the learning, and the wealth of Europe. For this reason it is now exhibiting to the world a fcene which was never feen before. It has had a progrefs in improvement and population, fo rapid as no political calculators have been able to afcertain. I look upon every thing that has been faid upon this fubject to be mere conjecture, except in fuch places as there has been an actual numeration. When men fay that America doubles its number in fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five years, they fpeak by guefs, and they fay nothing. In fome places that may be under or over the truth; but there are vaft tracts of land that fill every year with inhabitants, and yet the old fettled places still continue to increase. It is proper to obferve, that the British settlements have been improved in a proportion far beyond the fettlements of other European nations. To what can this be afcribed? Not to the climate; for they are of all climates: Not to the people; for they are a mixture of all nations. It must therefore be refolved fingly into the degree of British liberty which they brought from home, and which pervaded more or lefs their feveral conffitutions. It has been repeated to us, I know not how often, by the mercenary short-sighted writers in favour of submission to, or re-union with Great-Britain, that we have thriven very much in past times by our dependence on the mother-country, and therefore we should be loth to part. These writers forget that the very complaint is, that she will not suffer us to enjoy our ancient rights. Can any past experience shew that we shall thrive under ´F2 new new impositions? I should be glad any such reasoners would attempt to prove that we have thriven by our dependence, and not by the degree of independence which we have hitherto enjoyed. If we have thriven by our dependence, I conceive it is a neceffary confequence that those provinces must have thriven most which have been most dependent. But the contrary is felf-evident. Those which have hitherto enjoyed the freest form of government, though greatly inferior in foil and climate, have yet outstripped the others in number of people and value of land, merely because the last were more under the influence of appointments and authority from home.

When this is the undeniable state of things, can any perfon of a liberal mind with that these great and growing countries should be brought back to a state of subjection to a distant power? And can any man deny, that if they had yielded to the claims of the British parliament, they would have been no better than a parcel of tributary states, ruled by lordly tyrants, and exhausted by unfeeling penfioners, under the commission of one too diftant to hear the cry of oppression, and furrounded by those who had an interest in deceiving him *. It ought, therefore, in my opinion, to meet with the cordial approbation of every impartial person, as I am confident it will of posterity, that they have united for common defence, and refolved that they will be both free and independent, because they cannot be the one without the other.

As this meafure, long foreseen, has now taken place, I shall beg leave to fay a few things upon it; in which

* The doctor, in the whole of this Address, as well as in fundry passages in the preceding Sermon, has given uncontested evidences of his being an implacable enemy both to his King and country. In the prefent paragraph, and p. 42. and in Serm. p. 9, 23, 28, 36. he speaks with the utmost indignity of his lawful superiors. Could even Wilks himself, that arch enemy to his lawful Sovereign, and to the prudent measures of the British parliament, have uttered himself with more contempt and disdain? Is it possible for the most stench friends of the doctor, to offer any apology for the fide he has now taken, and the part he is at prefent acting? Does it at all comport with his former principles and protection to act the part of a traitor to his King, an enemy to his country, and a fower of fedition and rebellious courses among his fellow-subjects, which the Spirit of God declares to be as the fin of witchcraft? S. R. I mean

I mean to show, 1. That it was necessary. 2. That it will be honourable and profitable. And, 3. That, in all probability, it will be no injury, but a real advantage, to the Island of Great-Britain.

1. It had become absolutely necessary. All reconciliation, but upon the footing of absolute unconditional submission, had been positively refused by Great-Britain; unlefs, therefore, the colonies had refolved to continue in a loofe and broken state, with the name of a government which they had taken arms to oppose, the ftep which they have now taken could not have been avoided. Besides, things had proceeded so far, and such measures had been taken on both fides, that it had become impossible to lay down a fcheme by which they should be fure of our dependence, and we, at the fame time, secured in our liberties. While things continued in their ancient state, there was perhaps a power on the part of each, of which they were hardly confcious, or were afraid and unwilling to exert. But after the encroachments had been made and refifted, to expect any thing elfe than a continual attempt to extend authority on the one hand, and to guard against it on the other, is to difcover very little knowledge of human nature. In fuch a fituation, though every claim of America should be yielded, she would soon be either in a state of continual confusion, or absolute submission. The king of England, living in his English dominions, would not, and indeed durst not, assent to any act of an American legiflature, that was, or was supposed to be hurtful to his English subjects. This is not founded on conjecture, but experience. There is not (at least Dean Swift affirms it) any dependence of Ireland upon England, except an act of the Irish parliament, that the king of England shall be the king of Ireland. This last has a feperate independent legislature, and in every thing elfe, but the above circumstance, seems to be perfectly free; yet if any man should affert, that the one kingdom is not truly fubject to the other, he would, in my opinion, know very little of the state and history of either.

2. A state

2. A state of independency will be both honourable and profitable to this country. I pass over many advantages in the way of commerce, as well as in other respects, that must necessarily accrue from it, that I may dwell a little on the great and leading benefit, which is the foundation of all the reft. We shall have the opportunity of forming plans of government upon the most rational, just, and equal principles. I confess I have always looked upon this with a kind of enthusiastic fatisfaction. The cafe never happened before fince the world began. All the governments we have read of in former ages were fettled by caprice or accident, by the influence of prevailing parties or particular perfons, or preferibed by a conqueror. Important improvements indeed have been forced upon fome conftitutions by the Spirit of daring men, supported by successful insurrections. But to fee government, in large and populous countries, fettled from its foundation, by deliberate counfel, and directed immediately to the public good of the prefent and future generations, while the people are waiting for the decision with full confidence in the wildom and impartiality of those to whom they have committed the important trust, is certainly altogether new. We learn indeed from hiftory that fmall tribes and feeble new fettlements, did sometimes employ one man of eminent wifdom, to prepare a fystem of laws for them. Even this was a wife meafure, and attended with happy effects. But, how vaft the difference, when we have the experience of all past ages, the history of human society, and the well-known caufes of profperity and mifery in other governments, to affift us in the choice *? The profpect of this happy circumstance, and the possibility of losing it, and fuffering the season to pass over, has filled me with anxiety for some time. So far as we have hitherto proceeded, there has been great

* It would have quite exceeded every degree of modefty for the doctor to have here mentioned bis own affiftance; though, no doubt, it was the thoughts of being employed to plan a fystem of government, and form a cod of laws for the regulation of the revolted provinces of America, that filled him with kind of enthusiastic fatisfattion, to use his own phrase, at the present scheme of independency, as this would confiderably gratify his ambitious mind. S. R unanimity unanimity and public spirit. The inhabitants of every province, and perfons of all denominations, have vied with each other in zeal for the common interest. But, was it not to be feared that fome men would acquire over-bearing influence? that human weaknefs and human paffions would difcover themfelves, and prevent the finishing of what had been fo happily begun? In the time of the civil wars in England, had they fettled a regular form of government affoon as the parliament had obtained an evident fuperiority, their liberties would never have been shaken, and the revolution would have been unneceffary. But by delaying the thing fo long, they were broken into parties and bewildered in their views, and at last tamely submitted, without resistance, to that very tyranny against which they had fought with fo much glory and fuccefs. For this reason I think that every candid and liberal mind ought to rejoice in the measures lately taken through the states of America, and particularly the late declaration of independence, as it will not only give union and force to the meafures of defence, while they are necessary, but lay a foundation for the birth of millions, and the future improvement of a great part of the globe.—I have only further to obferve, 3. That I am confident the independence of America will, in the end, be to the real advantage of the Island of Great-Britain. Were this even otherwife, it would be a weak argument against the claim of justice. Why should the fecurity or prosperity of this vast country be facrificed to the supposed interest of an inconsiderable fpot? But I cannot believe that the mifery and fubjection of any country on earth, is neceffary to the happinefs of another. Blind partiality and felf-intereft may reprefent it in this light; but the opinion is delufive, the fupposition is false. The fuccess and increase of one nation is, or may be, a benefit to every other. It is feldom, indeed, that a people in general can receive and adopt these generous sentiments; they are nevertheles perfectly just. It is industry only, and not possessions, that makes the strength and wealth of a nation; and this this is not hindered, but encouraged, provoked, and rewarded by the industry of others *.

But to leave the general principle, or rather to apply it to the cafe of Great-Britain and America: What profit has the former hitherto received from the latter? and what can it reasonably expect for the future? Only its trade, and fuch part of that trade as tends to encourage the industry and increase the number of the inhabitants of that Island. It will be faid, they intend to raife a large, clear, net revenue upon us, by taxation. It has been shewn by many, that all the taxes which they could raife, would only ferve to feed the infatiable defire of wealth in placemen and penfioners, to increase the influence of the crown, and the corruption of the people. It was by the acquisition of numerous provinces that Rome haftened to its ruin. But even supposing it otherwife, and that without any bad confequence among themselves, they were to acquire a great addition to their yearly revenue, for every shilling they gained by taxes, they would lose ten in the way of trade. For a trifling addition to the fums of public money to be applied or wasted by ministers of state, they would lose ten times the quantity distributed among useful manufacturers, the strength and glory of a state. I think this has been fometimes compared to the difference between draughts of fpirituous liquors to intoxicate the head or weaken the ftomach, and cool refreshing food to give foundnefs, health, and vigour to every member of the body. The trade, then, of America, as foon as peace is fettled, will be as open to them as ever. But it will be faid, they have now an exclusive trade, they will then but share it with other nations. I answer, an exclusive trade is not eafily preferved, and when it is preferved, the restriction is commonly more hurtful than useful. Trade is of a nice and delicate nature; it is founded upon interest: It will force its way wherever interest leads, and can hardly by any art be made to go in ano-* See David Hume's Essay on the jealousy of trade.

ther direction. The Spaniards have an exclusive trade, as far as they pleafe to confine it, to their own plantations. Do they reap much benefit from it? I believe not. Has it made their own people more industrious at home? Just the contrary. Does it, in the natural course of things, make a people less careful to work as well and as cheap as others, to procure voluntary purchafers, when they know they can fend their goods to those who are obliged to take them? Does it not both tempt and enable great merchants in the capital, to import from other nations what they can export to fuch a forced market, to advantage? By this means a confiderable profit may come into the coffers of a few particulars, while no effential fervice is done to the people, and the ultimate profit is carried to that country where the goods are produced or fabricated. It has been repeatedly faid, by political writers in England, that the balance of trade is against that country to every nation, excepting Portugal, and their own plantations. I will not answer for the truth or universality of this affertion; but if it is true in any measure, I will venture to affirm, upon the principles of general reason, that the cause which produces it is no other than the exclusive trade they have hitherto enjoyed to the American fettlements. But the circumftance which I apprehend will contribute most to the interest of Great-Britain in American Independence is, its influence in peopling and enriching this great continent. It will certainly tend to make the American States numerous, powerful, and opulent, to a degree not eafily conceived. The great and penetrating Montesquieu, in his Spirit of Laws, has shewn in the clearest manner, that nothing contributes so much to the prosperity of a people, as the state of society among them, and the form of their government. A free government overcomes every obstacle, makes a defart a fruitful field, and fills a bleak and barren country with all the conveniencies of life. If fo, what must be the operation of this powerful cause upon countries enjoying, in the highest degree, every advantage that can be ~ derived from fituation, climate, and foil? If the trade of

of America has hitherto been of fo great benefit to England, how much more valuable may it be when these countries shall be still more highly improved, if she shall continue to enjoy it? This argument is liable to no objection but what may arise from the loss of an exclufive trade, which I have already confidered. It may be added, however, that there is not now, nor ever has been, any aversion in the Americans to the people of Great-Britain, so that they may be sure of our trade, if they treat us as well as others; and if otherwise, they do not deferve it.

I might illustrate the argument, by stating the probable confequences of a contrary supposition. If Great-Britain should prevail, or overcome the American states, and establish viceroys, with absolute authority, in every province, all men of spirit and lovers of freedom would certainly withdraw themfelves to a corner, if fuch could be found, out of the reach of tyranny and oppression. The numbers of the people at any rate would fenfibly decrease, their wealth would be speedily exhausted, and there would remain only a nominal authority over a defolate country, in return for a vaft expence laid out in the conquest, and in place of a great and profitable trade, by which both nations were made happy. One of the arguments, if they may be called fo, made use of against this country, and on which an obligation to obedience has been founded, is taken from the expence they have been at in blood and treafure for our protection in former wars. This argument has been often answered in the fullest manner; but if they shall continue to urge it, how fearful to think of the obligations we shall be under, after this war is finished? Then shall we owe them all the sums which they shall have laid out in fubduing us, and all that we have fpent in attempting to prevent it; all the blood which they fhall have shed in attacking us, and all that we shall have spilt in our own defence *. There is unquestionably a lofs to

• The time has been when the doctor would have thought all this highly just and equitable; and no doubt right in thinking fo. May not this afford a melancholy to Great-Britain, by the one fide of the account as well as the other; and it tends to fhow, in the clearest manner, the unspeakable folly, as well as great injustice, of the promoters of this war.

Thus I have stated to you, though very briefly, the principles on which I think the American caufe ought to be pleaded, and on which it ought to be espoused and supported, by every lover of justice and of mankind. But though the general plea in justice were less clear than it is, there is a light in which the conduct of the opposers of it has always appeared to me unreasonable and ungenerous to the highest degree. That resistance to Great-Britain has been determined on, in the most resolute manner, through all the colonies, by a vast majority, is not only certain, but undeniable. In the beginning of the controversy, some writers, with an impudence hardly to be paralelled, called the fact in question, attempted to deceive the people in this country, and effectually deceived the people of England, by making them believe, that it was only a few factious and violent men that had engaged in the conteft *. It is not very long fince a writer had the courage to affert, that, " nine tenths of the people of Pennfylvania were against independence." The falfehood of fuch mifreprefentations is now manifest, and indeed was probably known from the beginning, by those who defired to have them believed. Taking this for granted, then, for an inconfiderable minority, whether natives or strangers, melancholy reflection to the doctor himfelf, and the other leaders of the American rebellion? What blood and treasure have already been expended, in this ruinous and expensive war! and who can tell how much more may yet be added to the account, before a period is put to it? Who can be blamed for it, but the promoters of the rebellion? The leaders of this people have caufed them to err, and brought them into deep waters. S. R. * Admitting it to be, even as the doctor would have it, that a vaft majority through all the colonies were for relifting the authority of Great-Britain, would. it at all justify the atrocious crime, or excuse these factious and felf-deligning men, who primarly agitated the revolt, and inflamed the minds of the deluded populace? Would it be a fanction for iniquity, though the greatest part of the world were become irreligious and profane ?-But we are credibly informed, by fundry perfons who have left the respective colonies fince the revolt took place, that the infurrection in America is far from being general. The kindly reception his Majelly's forces have met with, justifies the affertion. S. R. G 2 tø to fet themfelves in oppofition to the public councils, is contrary to reafon and juffice, and even to the very first principles of the focial life.

If there is any principle that was never controverted upon the focial union, it is, that as a body every fociety must be determined by the plurality. There was a time when it was not only just and confistent but necessary, that every one should speak his mind freely and fully of the neceffity or expediency of refifting the authority of Great-Britain: But that time is over long ago. The measures being resolved upon, and the conflict begun, one who is barely neuter can fcarce be forgiven; a fecret plodding enemy must be confidered as a traitor *. Every perfon who continued among us after the decifive refolutions formed by all the colonies, ought to be confidered as pledging his faith and honour to affift in the common caufe. Let me try to illustrate it by a fimilar cafe. Suppose that a ship at sea springs a leak; which exposes the whole company to the most imminent danger of perifhing. Suppose a counfel is called of all the perfons on board to determine what port they fhall endeavour to gain. Then it is not only the right, but the duty of every one to fpeak his own judgment, and to prefs it upon others by every argument in his power. Suppose a great majority determines to push for a certain place, and to go to the pump by turns every quarter of an hour; but that two, or three, or one, if you pleafe, is of opinion that they should have gone another course, because of the wind, current, or any other circumstance, and that it would be best to change hands at the pump only every half hour. All this is well. But if after the determination, this fame gentleman, becaufe his advice was not followed, fhould refuse to pump at all, fhould flily alter the ship's course, or deaden her way by every means in his power, or even should only, by continual complaints and despondent fears, discourage others on whose activity the common fastety depended. I desire to know what treatment he would receive or deserve? Without doubt he would be thrown over board in less time than I have taken to state the case. I am not able to perceive the least difference between this supposition and what takes place in America at the present time.

• If a fecret plodding enemy, according to the doctor, must be confidered as a traitor, and no doubt punished as such; what shall be said of an open and avowed enemy; and what examplary punishment is due unto him? In the year 1745 and 1746, when the last rebellion took place in Scotland, the doctor was then of opinion, that the rebels had justly forfeited His Majesty's clemency and protection, and deferved to be examplary punished as enemies to their king and country. Will he not also think, that the American rebels have incured His Majesty's displeasure, and finould be punished as traitors? S. R.

If this argument is just with respect to every inhabitant of the country, it ought to have fome additional weight with those who are not natives, and whose residence is not certain, or has not been long. There is a great degree of indecency in fuch taking any part against what the majority of the inhabitants think to be their interest and that of their country. Were they even wrong, their mistake should be lamented, not refifted; on the contrary, it would be the part both of generofity and juffice to support them effectually in a contest which wisdom would have declined. We see indeed every day melancholy instances of a base and selfish temper operating different ways. Many when they do not obtain that rank and honour which their pride and partiality think their due, or if there advice is not followed, immediately renounce the fervice of their country, and it may go to destruction for them. In opposition to this, let me recommend the example of the illustrious Fabius of Rome. He had given strict orders to all his officers not to engage the enemy, but to keep at a distance. Unluckily his lieutenant-general, by his own rashness, got entangled with a part of the army under his command, and was engaged. Fabius, preferring his country's good to fame, rivalship, and fafety, came immediately to his support with all expedition, and thereby gained a glorious and complete victory. I hope you will take in good part the above reflections, which, I think, contain nothing that is virulent or indecent indecent against any man or body of men *. They are the effects of judgment and conviction. The Author, as is probably known to many of you, has been perfonally abused in news-papers at home for the part he was supposed to have taken in the American cause, which was in some degree indeed the motive to this address. He hopes that an honest and faithful support of liberty and equal government in this part of the world, will be na just reproach to his character, either as a scholar, a minister, or a christian, and that it is perfectly confistent with an undiminished regard for the country which gave him hirth.

The above is submitted to your candid perusal, by Gentlemen,

Your fincere friend, and

Obedient humble servant,

The AUTHOR.

It is not a little furprising to fee what degrees of infatuation, even men of figagity and penetration will be left to fall into, and how much they will be prejudifed in favours of their own schemes and sentiments, however ridiculous and abfurd. Will any but the doctor himself, or such as have drunk as deep in the political delution, be of opinion, that there is nothing virulest or indecent in this addrois ?-Is not the King represented as a haughty monarch, difcovering a violent rancourous hatred to America ?-Is not the British parliament charged as usurping an unjust claim over the Americans, and invading their liberties ?-- Is not the ministers, the governors, and people of Britain accufed as mercenary and corrupt; and all the taxations laid on the Americans fid to he defigned only to feed the infatiable defire of lordly tyrants, unseeling ponfigners, wealthy placemen, and to increase the influence and corruption of the crown, and to be wasted by ministers of state ?----Is there nothing wirvlent or indecent in all this?
