And next, let all our thoughts be wound up to the most deep and intense consideration of our Estates; for if one Sin abounds thus, what Tongue can express, or Heart can conceive their Misery, who to use the Apostle's phrase, 1 Cor. 15. are yet in their Sins? that is, stand bound to God in their own single bond only, to answer for all their Sins themselves; and cannot, in the Estate wherein yet they stand, of impenitency and unbelief, plead the benefit of Christ's Death, to take off and ease them of the Guilt of one Sin, but all their Sins are yet all their own, which to a Man in Christ they are not; for his own Bonds are cancelled, and given in, and Christ entred into Bonds for him, and all his Sins translated upon him.

Now for a proper Character of their Estate, and suitable to this expression:

1. Then a Man's Sins may be said to be still his own, when he committeth Sin out of his own, that is the full frame and inclination of his Heart. Thus the Devil is said to sin, John 8. 44. ἐκ τῆς ἰδίας, out of his own; the whole frame of his Spirits is in it; which a Man in Christ cannot be so fully said to do, for he hath a new Creature in him that sinneth not, 1 John 3. 1, 9. that can say even when he sins, It is not I, but Sin.

And, 2. Then Sin is a Man's own, when he hates it not, but loves it: The World loves his own, saith Christ, John 15. 29. and so doth a wicked Man his Sin, more than any good; which is David's character, Psal. 52. 3.

And, 3. What is a Man's own, he nourisheth and cherisheth; therefore Ephes. 5. 19. No Man hates his own Flesh, but loveth it, and cherisheth it: so do Men their Sins, when they are their own. Those great and rich Oppressors, Jam. 5. 5. are said to nourish their Hearts in wantonness, and in pleasure, as in a Day of slaughter; as living upon the cream of Sinning, and having such plenty, plenty, they pick out none but the sweetest bits to nourish their Hearts withal.

4. So what a Man provides for, that is his own; so says the Apostle, A Man that provides not for his own, is worse, &c. When therefore Men make Provision for the flesh, as the phrase is, Rom. 13. 14. that is, whose Hearts are Carterers and Contrivers of their Lusts, and whose chiefest care is every Morning, what pleasures of Sin they have that Day be to be enjoyed, it is a sign that their Sins are their own.

In a word, 5. When Men live in Sin, 'tis the Expression used, 1 Tim. 5. 6. She that lives in pleasure, is Dead while she lives. When the renews of the comfort of Men's lives come in, from the pleasures Sins afford, and that supplies them with all those necessaries that belong to Life; as when 'tis their Element, which they drink in like Water; their meat, they eat the Bread of wickedness, Prov. 1. 7. and it goes down, and troubleth them not; their sleep also, they cannot sleep till they have done or contrived some mischief, ver. 16. their apparel, as when oppression covers them as a Garment, and Pride compasseth them as a Chain, Psa. 73. their recreation also, It is a pastime for a Fool to do wickedly, he makes sport and brags of it, Prov. 10. 23. yea their health, being Sick and discontented, when their Lusts are not satisfied, as Ahab was for Naboths Vineyard; Ammon grew lean, when he could not enjoy his Paramore.

All these, as they live in their Sins here, and so are dead whilst they live; and so are made the more miserable, in making the greatest Evil their chiefest Good; so when they come to die (as we all must do one Day) and how suddenly we know not; consider we carry our Souls, our precious Souls, as precious Water in a brittle glass, soon cracked, and then we are spilt like water, which none can gather up again; or but as a Candle in a Paper-lantern, in clay Walls, full of crannies, but a little cold comes in, and often blows the Candle out: and then, without a through change of Heart before, wrought from all Sin, to all Godliness, they will die in their Sins. And all, and the utmost of all miseries is spoken in that one word: and therefore Christ, when he would sum up all miseries in one Expression, tells the Pharisees they should die in their Sins, John 8. 28.

Use 2. And let us consider further, that if Sin be thus above measure sinful, that Hell that followeth Death, is then likewise above measure fearful. And so indeed it is intimated to be a punishment without measure, as by the Distinction and difference God puts between punishing his Children and the Wicked in Hell, as we find it, by comparing Jer. 30. 11. with Isa. 27. Have I smitten thee (says God to his Sons) as I have smote them (speaking of wicked Men) ver. 7. No, but I will debate with thee in measure, ver. 8. which difference is also put in Jer. 30. 11. And indeed, Sin being committed against God, the Kings of Kings, it can never be punished enough. But as the killing of a King is amongst Men a Crime so heinous, that no Tortures can exceed the desert of it: we use to say, all Torments are too little, any Death too good for such a Crime. Now Peccatum est Dei-cidium, as I said before, a destroying God, as much as in us lies; and therefore none but God himself can give it as full punishment: therefore it is called a falling into God's hands, Heb. 10. 31. which how fearful is it, as he speaks there. For if his breath blows us to Destruction, Job 4. 9. for we are but dust-heaps; yea, his Nod, he nods to Destruction, Psal. 80. 16. then what is the weight of his Hands, even of those hands, which span the Heavens, and hold the Earth in the hollow of them? and if God take it into his Hands to punish, he will be sure to do it unto the full. Sin is Man's work, and punishment is God's, and God will shew himself as perfect in his work, as Man in his.

If Sin be malum catholicum, as hath been said, that contains all Evils in it; then the punishment God will inflict shall be malum catholicum also, containing in it all Miseries; it is a cup full of mixture, so called, Psal. 75. 8. as in which God hath strained the quintessence of all miseries, and the Wicked of the Earth must Drink the dreggs of it, though it be eternity unto the Bottom.

And if one Sin deserves a Hell, a punishment above measure, what will millions of millions do? And we read that every Sin shall receive a just recompence, Heb. 2. 3. O, let us then take heed of dying in our Sins, and therefore of living in them; for we shall lie in Prison till we have paid the very utmost farthing.

And therefore if all this that I have said will not engender answerable Apprehensions of it in you, (this being but painting the Toad, which you can look upon and handle without Affrightment) I wish that if without Danger you could but lay your Ears to Hell, that standing as it were behind the skreen, you might hear Sin spoken of in its own dialect, by the oldest Sons of perdition there: To hear what Cain says of murdering his brother Abel; what Saul of his persecuting David, and the Priests of Jehovah; what Balaam and Achitophel say of their cursed Counsels and Policies; what Ahab says of his Oppression of Naboth; what Judas of his Treason; and hear what Expressions they have, with what Horrors, Yellings, Groans, Distractions the least Sin is there spoken of. If God should take any Man's Soul here, and as he wrapt his into the third Heavens, where he saw Grace in its fullest brightness; so carry any Soul into those Chambers of Death, as Solomon calls them, and leading him through all, from Chamber to Chamber, shew him the visions of darkness, (and he there) hear all those Bedlams cry out, one of this Sin, another of that, and see Sin as it looks in Hell! ——— But there is one aggravation more of the Evil and misery Sin brings upon Men, I have not spoken of yet, that it blinds their Eyes, and hardens their Hearts, that they do not see, nor lament their Misery, till they be in Hell, and then it is too late.

Use 3. But what, doth Sin so exceed in sinfulness, and is the venom of it boiled up to such a height of Mischiefe, that there should be no Name in Heaven and Earth able to grapple with it, and destroy it? Is there no Antidote, no Balm in Gilead more soveraign, than it is deadly? Surely yes, God would never have suffered so potent and malicious an Enemy to have set Foot in his Dominions, but that he knew how to conquer it, and that not by punishing of it only in Hell, but by destroying it; only it is too potent for all the Creatures to encounter with. This Victory is alone reserved for Christ, it can die by no other Hand, that he may have the Glory of it; which therefore is the top of his Glory, as Mediator; and his highest Title, the memory of which he bears written in his name JESUS, for he shall save his People from their Sins, Mat. 1. 21. Therefore the Apostle Paul, his chiefest Herald, proclaims this Victory with a World of solemnity and triumph, 1 Cor. 15. 55, 56, 57. O Death, where is thy Sting? O Grave, where is thy Victory? the sting of Death is Sin, the strength of Sin is the Law: but Thanks be to God that gives us the Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Which yet again adds to the Demonstration of the sinfulness of it: for the strength of Sin was such, that like Goliath, it would have defied the whole Host of Heaven and Earth. It was not possible the Blood of Bulls and Goats should take away Sin, Heb. 10. 4. Nor would the Riches of the World, or the Blood of Men have been a sufficient ransom; Will the Lord be pleased with Rivers of Oyl? shall I give my first-born for my transgression? No, says he, there is no proportion, for thy first-born is but the Fruit of thy Body, and Sin is the Sin of the Soul, Mich. 6. 7. it must cost more to redeem a Soul than so, Psal. 49. 9. No, couldst thou bring Rivers of Tears instead of Rivers of Oyl, (which, if any thing, were like to pacify God,) yet are they but the excrements of thy Brains; but Sin is the Sin of thy Heart: yea, all the Righteousness that we could ever have done, rap or rend, as we say, cannot make amends for one Sin: for suppose it perfect, (when as yet it is but Dung, Mal. 2. 3. and menstruous Cloth,) yet thou owest it already as thou art a Creature; and one Debt cannot pay another. If then we would think to go a begging to all the Angels, who never sinned, let them lay all their stock together, it would beggar them all to pay for one Sin: no, it is not the merit of Angels will do it; for Sin is the transgression, the destruction of the Law, Psal. 109. 126. and the least Sin is more worth than Heaven, and all that is therein. Onely,

Only, though it be thus unconquerably sinful by all created Powers, it hath not gone beyond the Price that Christ hath paid for it; the Apostle compares to this very Purpose, Sin and Christ's Righteousness together, Rom. 5. 15, 20. 'Tis true, says he, that Sin abounds, and that one Sin, τὸ πᾶσι ἁμαρτία, and instanceth in Adam's Sin, which stained all Mens Natures to the end of the World; yet, says he, the Gift of Righteousness by Christ abounds much more; abounds to flowing over, ὑπερπλεόνασε, says the Apostle, 1 Tim. 1. 14. as the Sea doth above Mole-hills, Mal. 7. 14. Though therefore it would undo all the Angels, yet Christ's Riches are unsearchable, Ephes. 3. 8. he hath such Riches of Merit, as are able to pay all thy Debts the very first Day of thy Marriage with him, though thou hadst been a Sinner Millions of Years before the Creation to this Day: and when that is done, there is enough left to purchase thee more Grace and Glory than all the Angels have in Heaven. In a word, he is able to save to the utmost all that come to God by him, Heb. 7. 5. let their Sins be what they will.

Use 4. But then we must come to him, and to God by him, and take him as our Lord, and King, and Head, and Husband, as he is freely tendered: we must be made one with him, and have our Hearts divorced from all our Sins for ever. And why not now? do we yet look for another Christ? And to allude to what Naomi said to Ruth, Is there yet any more Sons in my Womb, that they may be your Husbands? So say I, Hath God any more such Sons? or is not this Christ good enough? or are we afraid of being happy too soon, in being married instantly to him?

But yet if we will have Christ indeed (without whom we are undone) how shall we then continue in Sin, which is thus above-measure sinful? No, not in one. The Apostle speaks there in the Language of Impossibility and Inconsistency. Christ, and the reign of one Sin, they cannot stand together.

And indeed we will not so much as take Christ, until first we have seen more or less this Vision here, and Sin appear to us, as to him, above measure sinful: naturally we slight it, and make a mock of, and account it Preciseness to stick and make Conscience of it: but if once Sin thus appears to any but in its own Colours, that Man will look upon the least Sin then as upon Hell it self; and like a Man affrighted, fear in all his Ways, lest he should meet with Sin, and starts at the very Appearance of it; he weeps if Sin do but see him, and he do but see it in himself and others; and cries out as Joseph did, How shall I do this, and sin? and then a Man will make out for Christ, as a condemned Man for Life, as a Man that can no longer live, O give me Christ, or else I die; and then if upon this Christ appear to him, and manifests himself, as his Promise is to them that seek him, John 14. 21. his Heart thereupon will much more detest and loath it: he saw it evil before, but then it comes to have a new Tincture added, which makes it infinitely more sinful in his Eyes; for he then looks upon every Sin as guilty of Christ's Blood, as died with it, though covered by it; the Grace of God appearing, teacheth us to deny all Ungodliness and worldly Lusts: The Love of Christ constrains him. Thinks he, Shall I live in that for which Christ died? Shall that be my Life, which was his Death? Did he that never knew Sin undergo the Torment for it, and shall I be so unkind as to enjoy the Pleasure of it? No, but as David when he was very thirsty, and had Water of the Well of Bethlehem brought him, with the Hazard of Mens Lives, he then poured it on the Ground; for says he, It is the Blood of these Men: So this Man, even when the Cup of Pleasures is at his very Lips; It cost (says he) the Blood of Christ, and so pours it upon the ground. And as the Love of Christ constrains him, so the Power of Christ doth change him. Kings may pardon Traitors, but they cannot change their Hearts; but Christ pardons none, he doth not make new Creatures and all old things pass away, because he makes them Friends, Favourites to live with, and delight in; and if Men put on Christ, and have learned him, as the Truth is in Jesus, they put off as concerning the former Conversation the old Man, with the deceitful Lusts; and he ceaseth from Sin, that is, from the Course of any known Sin; they are the Apostles own Words which shall judg us. And if we should expect Salvation from him upon any other terms, we are deceived; for Christ is the Author of Salvation to them only that obey him, Heb. 5. 9.

1 Pet. 5. 1, 2.

*Aggravations of sinning against Knowledge, demonstrated:
And the Reasons assigned, why Sin is thereby aggravated.*

R O M. 1. 21.

Because that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their Imaginations, and their foolish Heart was darkned.

TH E R E are two general Aggravations the Apostle insists on, in these two Chapters, of the Gentiles Sinfulness: 1st, Their Unthankfulness, chap. 1. ver. 21. which afterwards in chap. 2. 4. he enlargeth upon, styling it a despising the Riches of God's Goodness. 2<sup>dly</sup>, Of Rebellion, in sinning against Knowledge: that when they knew him, they glorified him not as God. Both which I shall insist on, in order to the aggrandising the actual Sins of Men unregenerate: (as for the Sinfulness of their Natures and Lusts, I reserve that to another Method.) I begin with this of sinning against Knowledge, because it hath the Priority here in the Apostle's Discourse: For in this first Chapter he indigitateth this as the height of their sinning, that they sinned against Knowledge: for bringing in a long, large, and particular Indictment of many several Sins, as Idolatry, ver. 23. unnatural Uncleanness, ver. 26, &c. and all kinds of Unrighteousness, ver. 29. he doth both in the beginning and end of the Bill, bring in this Aggravation, that they sinned against Knowledge in all these. So ver. 18. there he begins this Indictment and Promulgation of God's Wrath above all, for this, that they withheld the Truth in Unrighteousness; as being as much as all that Unrighteousness they had committed, barely in it self considered: and then again in the end, when he comes to pronounce final Sentence, he comes in with this, after all Particulars had been reckoned up, Who knowing the Judgment of God against those which do such things, yet do them.

Doct. So that this Doctrine is clear from hence, that to sin against Knowledge, either in omitting good Duties, which we know we ought to perform, or committing of Sins we know we ought not to do, is the highest Aggravation of Sinfulness.

I put both in, both Sins of Omission and Commission: for so the particular Sins the Gentiles are taxed for here, are of both sorts; as not glorifying or worshipping God, as well as turning his Glory into a Lie, &c. To omit Prayer, when your Consciences tell you, you ought to perform it: to omit holy Discourse, examining the Heart, when you know you ought to do them, are as well Sins against Knowledge, as to tell a Lie against your Knowledge, or as to steal and forswear, or murder, or be drunk, &c.

Now when I say, it is an Aggravation to these Sins, my meaning is this: That take any Sin thou thinkest most gross, and view it barely in the Act of it, put the Act nakedly in the one Scale, be it a Sin of Uncleanness or Drunkenness; and then put this Circumstance which was added to it in the other Scale, viz. that before and when thou didst it, thou knewest it to be a Sin, this alone weighs as much, yea more than the Sin it self doth: that as it is said of Herod, that he added this to all his other Sins, that he cast John into Prison, who told him of his Herodias, and so it is made as much as all his former Sins. To like purpose is this brought in here, that in and unto all their Unrighteousness, this this was added, they withheld the Truth, that is, the Light of their Consciences (which is as a Prophet from God) they did imprison in Unrighteousness, ver. 18. And therefore when Daniel would convince Belsazzar of his Desertedness to lose his Kingdom, and that he was not able to hold weight in the Ballance, Dan. 5. 22. what puts he into the other Scale against him to weigh him up, and to shew he was too light? ver. 21, 22. he tells him how his Father knew the God of Heaven, and how that his Knowledge cost him seven Years the Learning amongst wild Beasts, and thou (says he) his Son knewest all this, and yet didst not humble thy self. Here is the Aggravation weighs down all: he knew the God of Heaven against whom he sinned, and that Judgment on his Grand-father for his Pride; and then withall he tells him, that this God, in whose Hands is thy Breath, and all thy ways, thou hast not glorified.

I name this Place amongst many others, because it is parallel with this in the Text. I'll name no more, but give Reasons and Demonstrations for it.

1. The Greatness of this kind of Sinning might many ways be made appear; we will demonstrate it only by comparing it with other kinds of Sinning.

To sin, though out of simple Ignorance, when that Ignorance is but the causa sine qua non, of sinning, that is, so as if a Man had known it a Sin, he had not done it, doth not yet make the Fact not to be a Sin, though it lesseneth it: For Luke 12. 48. He that did not know his Master's Will, was beaten, when the thing committed was worthy of Stripes, though he did not know so much, because the thing deserves it: And the Reason is, because the Law being once promulged, as at first to Adam it was, and put into his Heart, as the common Ark of Mankind; though the Tables be lost, yet our Ignorance doth not make the Law of none Effect. For the Law of Nature for ever binds, that is, all that was written in Adam's Heart, because it was thereby then published in him, and to him for us. But positive Laws, as I may call them, as to believe in Christ, &c. a-new delivered, bind not, but where they are published. Josiah rent his Clothes, when the Book of the Law was found, because the Ordinances were not kept, although they had not known the Law of many Years; yet because they ought to have known it, therefore for all their Ignorance, he feared Wrath would come upon all Israel. So also Levit. 5. 17. Sins of Ignorance were to be sacrificed for: yet still however it lesseneth the Sin, therefore he shall be beaten with few Stripes.

And sure if Ignorance lesseneth them, Knowledge aggravates: for contrario-rum eadem est ratio: therefore he that knows, shall be beaten with many Stripes. Yea, such Difference is there, that God is said to wink at Sins of Ignorance, Acts 17. 30. The time of this Ignorance God winks at. Whilst they had no Knowledge, God took no notice: yea, and he abates something for such Sins, because the Creature hath a Cloak, hath something to say for it self; (as Christ says, John 15. 22.) but when against Knowledge, they have no Cloak. Yea farther, Christ makes a Sin of Ignorance to be no Sin, in comparison: So there, If I had not spoken and done those Works never Man did, they had had no Sin; that is, none in comparison, but now they have no Cloak, no Shelter to award the Stripes, or Plea to abate them.

And that you may see the ground of this vast Difference between Sins of Ignorance, and against Knowledge. Consider, 1. that if a Man sin (suppose the Act the same) out of Ignorance merely, there may be a Supposition, that if he had known it, he would not have done it; and that as soon as he doth know it, he would or might repent of it. So 1 Cor. 2. 8. If they had known it, they had not crucified the Lord of Glory. The like says Christ of Tyre, Sidon, and Gomorrhah, That if the same things had been done in them, they would have repented. But now when a Man knows it before, and also considers it in the very committing of it, and yet doth it, then there is no room for such a Supposition, and less Hope. For what is it that should reduce this Man to Repentance? Is it not his Knowledge? Now if that had no Power to keep him from his Sin, then it may be judged, that it will not be of Force to bring him to Repentance for it; for by sinning, the Heart is made more hard, and the Knowledge and the Authority thereof thereof weakned and lessened, as all Power is, when contemned and resisted; Rom. 1. 21. Their foolish Heart becomes darker. Aristotle himself hath a Touch of this Notion in the third of his Ethicks, that if a Man sin out of Ignorance, when he knows it, he repents of it; if out of Passion, when the Passion is over, he is sorry for what he hath done: but when a Man sins deliberately, and out of Knowledg, it is a Sign he is fixed and set in Mischief; and therefore it is counted Wickedness and Malice. And hence it is, that those that have been enlightned with the highest kind of Light, but that of saving Grace, Heb. 6. 4, 5. and Heb. 10. If they sin wilfully after such a Knowledg of the Truth, God looks on them, as those that will never repent. And therefore likewise the School gives this as the reason why the Devils sin obstinately, and cannot repent, because of their full Knowledg they sin with; they know all in the full Latitude that may be known, and yet go on.

2. The vast Difference that in God's Account is put between Sins of Knowledg and of Ignorance, will appear by the different Respect and Regard that God hath to them, in the Repentance he requires and accepts for them; and that both in the Acts of Repentance, and also in the State of Grace; and that Repentance, upon which God accepts a Man, or for want of which he rejecteth him.

1st, When a Man comes to perform the Acts of Repentance, and to humble himself for Sin, and to turn from it, God exacteth not that Sins of Ignorance should particularly be repented of; but if they be repented of but in the general, and in the lump, be they never so great, God accepts it. This is intimated, Psal. 19. 12. Who can understand his Error? Cleanse me from my secret Sins: that was Confession enough. But Sins of Knowledg must be particularly repented of, and confessed, and that again and again, (as David was forced to do for his Murder and Adultery) or a Man shall never have Pardon.

Yea, 2<sup>dly</sup>, a vaster Difference yet will appear between these two, if we take an Estimate of them, by what Consistency they have with the State of Grace: A Man may lie in a Sin he doth not know to be a Sin, and yet be in the State of Grace, as the Patriarchs in Poligamy, and in divorcing their Wives: but to lie in a Sin against Knowledg, is not compatible with Grace; but unless a Man maintaineth a constant Fight against it, hateth it, confesseth it, forsaketh it, he cannot have Mercy; this cannot stand with Uprightness of Heart. A Friend may keep Correspondency with one, he suspects not to be an Enemy unto his Friend, and be true to his Friendship notwithstanding; but if he knows him to be an Enemy, he must break utterly with him in all Correspondencies in such things in which he acts as, or is an Enemy to his Friend; if he will lean to the one, he must leave the other.

Yet farther, in the 3<sup>d</sup> Place, So vast is the Difference, that some kind of Sins committed out of, and against Knowledg, utterly exclude from Mercy for time to come; which done out of Ignorance, remained capable of, and have obtained it; as persecuting the Saints, blaspheming Christ, &c. Paul's Will was as much in those Acts themselves, and as hearty as it is in those that sin against the Holy Ghost: for he was mad against the Church, and set with all his Violence to pursue them; not sinning willingly only, but carried on with Fury, as hot and as forward as the Pharisees that sinned that Sin; only says he, 1 Tim. 1. 13. I did it ignorantly, therefore I obtained Mercy. Though it was ignorantly done, yet there was need of Mercy; but yet in that he did it but ignorantly, there was a Capacity and Place for Mercy, which otherwise had not been. But thus to sin after a Man hath received the Knowledg of the Truth, out of a settled Frame of Spirit so to sin, and with Malice against the Truth; shuts a Man out from Mercy, Heb. 10. and there is no more Sacrifice for Sin, for such Sins; I say, such Sins as these, thus directly against the Gospel, when committed with Knowledg. For Sins against the Law, though against Knowledg, there was an Atonement, as appears Lev. 6. from ver. 1, to 8. where he instanceth in forswearing: But to persecute the Saints and Christ's Truth with revengeful Malice, after Knowledg of it, there is no more Sacrifice: not that simply the Sin is so great in respect of the Act it self of Persecution, for Paul did persecute with the same Acts of Persecution, making havock of the Church, Acts Acts 8. 3. Breathing out Threatnings and Slaughter; Acts 9. 1. and the worst of the Pharisees could execute no more than he intended; but what he did in this kind, he did out of Ignorance: So vast a Difference doth Knowledge and Ignorance put between the Guilt of the same Sin in these Cases.

Chap. 2.

And therefore indeed, to conclude this in the last Place, this is the highest Step of the Ladder, next to turning off; the very highest but of sinning against the Holy Ghost: which must needs argue it the highest Aggravation of Sinning, when it ascends so high; or when it brings a Man to the brink, and next to falling into the bottomless-Pit irrecoverably. And therefore to sin presumptuously (which is all one) and to sin against Knowledge (as appears, Numb. 15. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30.) it being there opposed to sinning out of Ignorance, (such a Sin as David did, of whom it is said, 2 Sam. 12. 9. That he despised the Word of the Lord: which Phrase also is used to express Sins of Presumption, ver. 31. of that 15th of Numbers.) To sin, I say, presumptuously, is the highest Step unto that other: So in David's Account, Psal. 19. 12, 13. for first he prays, Lord keep me from secret Sins, (whereby he meaneth Sins of Ignorance) and then next he prays against presumptuous Sins, (which, as the Opposition shews, are Sins against Knowledge:) For, says he, If they get Dominion over me, I shall not be free from that great Offence: that is, that unpardonable Sin which shall never be forgiven; so as these are nearest it of any other, yet not so as that every one that falls into such a Sin commits it, but he is nigh to it, as the Scripture speaks, nigh unto Cursing. For to commit that Sin, but two things are required, Light in the Mind, and revengeful Malice in the Heart; not Malice alone, unless there be Light; for then that Apostle had sinned it: yet so as Knowledge is the Parent of it, It is after receiving the Knowledge of the Truth, Heb. 10. 17, 18.

These are the Demonstrations of it: The Reasons are,

Reason 1. First, Because Knowledge of God and his ways is the greatest Mercy next to Saving-Grace: He hath not dealt so with every Nation. Wherein? In giving the Knowledge of his ways: and as it is thus to a Nation, so to a Man; and therefore Christ speaking of the Gift of Knowledge, and giving the Reason why it so greatly condemneth, Luke 12. 48. says, For to whom much is given, much is required: As if he had said, To know his Master's Will, that is the great Talent of all other: there is a much in that. Thus it was in the Heathens Esteem also; they acknowledged their foolish Wisdom in moral and natural Philosophy, their greatest Excellency: and therefore Plato thanked God for three things, that he was a Man, an Athenian, and a Philosopher: And Rom. 1. 22. the Apostle mentions it as that Excellency they did profess. And Solomon, of all Vanities says, this is the best Vanity, and that it exceeds Folly as Light doth Darknes, Eccles. 2. But surely much more is the Knowledge of the Law, and of God, as we have it revealed to us; this must needs be esteemed more excellent. And so the Jews esteemed theirs, as in this second Chapter of the Romans the Apostle shews, that they made their boast of the Law, and their Form of Knowledge of it, and approving the things that are excellent. And what do the two great Books of the Creatures, and the Word, and all means else, above all ends else, serve for, but to increase Knowledge? If therefore all tend to this, this is then the greatest Mercy of all the rest.

Reason 2. For, Secondly, God hath appointed Knowledge as the immediate Guide of Men in all their ways, to bring them to Salvation and Repentance, for to that it leads them. It is that same τὸ ἡγεμονικόν, as the Philosopher call'd it: and therefore the Law, Rom. 7. 1, 2. is compared to an Husband, (so far as it is written in, or revealed in the Heart) that as an Husband is the Guide of the Wife in her Youth, so is the Law to the Heart: And whereas Beasts are ruled by a Bit and Bridle, God he rules Men by Knowledge: And therefore if Men be wicked, against or notwithstanding his Light, they must needs sin highly, seeing there is no other Curb for them, as they are Men, but this: If he will deal with them as Men, this is the only way: and therefore if that will not do it, it is supposed nothing will. It

Book XII.

It is Knowledge makes Men capable of Sin, which Beasts are not; therefore the more Knowledge, (if Men be wicked withal) the more Sin must necessarily be reckoned to them: so as God doth not simply look what Mens Actions and Affections are, but chiefly what their Knowledge is, and accordingly judgeth Men more or less wicked. I may illustrate this by that comparison, which I may allude unto; That as in Kingdoms God measures out the Wickedness thereof, and so his Punishments accordingly; principally by the Guides, the Governours thereof, what they are, and what they do; as in the 5th of Jeremy the 4th Verse it appears; where God first look'd upon the poor people, but excuseth them, These are foolish, and know not the Way of the Lord: And therefore God would have been still moved to spare the Kingdom, notwithstanding their Sins: But from them at the 5th Verse he goes to view the Rulers, I will get me to the great Men, for these have known the way of the Lord; and when he saw that these had broken the Bands, then, How shall I pardon thee for this? So is it in his Judgment towards a particular Man, when God looks down upon a Man, and sees him in his Courses exceeding loose and wicked, he looks first upon those rude Affections in him, which are unclean, prophane, debauch'd, greedy of all Wickedness: Ay but, says he, these are foolish of themselves, but I will look upon his Understanding, and upon the superior Faculties, which are the Guides of these Affections, and see what they dictate to these unruly Affections, to restrain them; and when he finds that the Guides themselves are enlightned, and have known the way of the Lord, and that the Will and Affections, though informed with much Knowledge, yet break all Bands; then, How shall I pardon thee? Thee, who art a knowing Drunkard, and a knowing unclean Person, &c. so as thus to sin, aggravates and makes Sin out of measure sinful.

Now that Knowledge and Reason is a Man's Guide, will further appear by this: That even erroneous Knowledge doth put an Obligation, a Bond, and a Tie upon a Man: which can be in other Respect, but because Knowledge is appointed to be a Man's Guide. Thus if a Man thinks a thing (which is in it self common and indifferent) to be a Sin, and forbidden, (as Rom. 14. 4.) although the Law forbids it not, yet to him it is unclean, though in Christ it is not unclean, that is, by the Law of Christ, as there the Apostle speaks. For this his Knowledge and Judgment of the thing, hath to him the Force of a Law: for it propounds it to him as a Law, and as from God; the ground of which can be no other then this, that God hath appointed this Reason of his to be his Guide: and the Will is to follow nothing that is evil, no, not which is represented to it, as evil: this is the Law of meer Nature in all Conditions. Yea if a Man should do an Action which is in it self good, if he thought it to be Evil, he should Sin, and so è contra, for he goes against the dictate of Nature. So that erroneous Knowledge, though against the Law, is a Law to me, though not per se, yet per accidens. Now therefore if to go against a false light of Conscience be a Sin, when yet it proves that the Commandment it self allows the thing which was done, and was for it, then to go against the true light of the Law in a Mans Conscience, how sinful is it?

Reason 3. Again, thirdly, the knowledge of the Law binds the Person so much the more to Obedience, by how much the more he knows it: And so though it would be a Sin, when he knows not the Law to transgress it, yet when he knows it, it becomes a far greater Sin. 'Tis true indeed, that Conscience and the Law, when they thus meet, make up but one Law, not two distinct Laws: and therefore in sinning against Knowledge, though a Man doth not commit two distinct Sins, yet however the Knowledge of it doth add a further degree of Sinfulness to it: As a Cloth is the same Cloth when it is white, that it was when it is dyed with a Scarlet dye; yet then it hath a dye, a tincture given it, which is more worth than the Cloth: and so when you Sin, not knowing the Law, the Sin indeed is the same for the substance of the Act, it would be if you had known it; yet that Knowledge dies it, makes it a Scarlet Sin, as Esay speaks, far greater and deeper in demerit, than the Sin it self: and the ground of this is, because all Laws then come to be in force, force, when they are promulged, and made known; but God's Laws the more or oftner made known, the more still they bind. Therefore Deut. 11. 12. & 3. 8. God straitens the cords more, the binding force of the Law more upon those Jews Consciences, to whom he at first personally with Majesty had promulged it, than upon their Children, though upon theirs also. Now if all God's Laws, being made known to Adam, bind us, and are in force, and this when we know them not; then if we do know them, or might know them, they bind much more: and still the more clearly we know them, the obligation increaseth, and the Guilt insuing with it: and the rather, because now after our fall in Adam, when we come to know them, they are a new promulged, in a way of peculiar Mercy; we having defaced the knowledg of them in our fall.

Reason 4. Fourthly, When the Law, being known, is broken, there is the more contempt cast upon the Law, and the law-giver also; and so a higher degree of Sinning. And therefore Numbers 15. 30. He that Sins out of knowledg, is said to reproach the Lord, and to despise the Word. And therefore Saul sinning against knowledg, Samuel calleth it Rebellion: and though it were but in a small thing, yet he parallels it with Witchcraft. So also Job 24. 13. They are said to rebel, when they Sin against Light; because thereby, Rebellion comes to be added to Disobedience: For Knowledg is an Officer set to see the Law executed, and fulfilled; and makes God present to the Conscience. Therefore Rom. 2. 14. it is called a Witness; and therefore in sinning against Knowledg, Men are said to sin before the Face of the Lord himself; Now what a great contempt is that? Therefore also, Psal. 50. the Hypocrite in his sinning against Knowledg, is said to cast the Law of God behind his back: so as there is a Contempt in this sinning, which is in no other.

Reason 5. Fifthly, The more Knowledg a Man sinneth against, the more the Will of the Sinner is discovered to be for Sin, as Sin. Now, voluntarium est regula & mensura actionum moralium: Willingness in sinning, is the Standard and Measure of Sins. The less Will, the less Sin: at leastwise so much of Sin is added, by how much the Will is more in it: and if so, then it must needs follow that the more the Will closeth with it as Sin, or rather though it be Sin, as it doth, the more it knows it so to be, the more of sinfulness ariseth and is reckoned: and therefore the highest degree of sinning is exprest to us, by sinning willingly, after Knowledg, Heb. 10. Now though an ignorant Man commits the Act as willingly, (as when Paul persecuted the Church) yet he commits it not, considered by him as Sin, till he hath the Knowledge of it: but then when it is discovered to be Sin, and the more clearly it is so discovered, the more the Will may be said to joyn with it as Sin, although not in that degree as it doth in Men that sin against the holy Ghost. Therefore the Apostle says, To him that knows to do well, and doth it not, to him it is Sin, Jam. 4. 17. Because by his knowledg the thing is represented as Sin; and so he closeth with it the more under that Notion and Apprehension.

Reason 6. Sixthly, In sinning against Knowledg, a Man condemns himself: but when out of Ignorance meerly, the Law only doth condemn him. So Rom. 2. 1. A Man having knowledg in that wherein he judgeth another, he condemneth himself. So also Rom. 14. Now as Self-murder is the highest degree of Murder, and an aggravation of it, so Self-condemning must needs be reckoned. God took it as a great advantage over him that hid his Talent, that out of thine own Mouth I will condemn thee, thou wicked Servant.

C H A P. III.

What it is to sin against Knowledge, explained by several Distinctions concerning it, and by setting forth the several ways of sinning against Knowledge. A special application to such as go on in a state of Impenitency against Knowledge.

TH E Doctrine being thus proved ;

First, I will explain, what it is to sin against Knowledge. Secondly, I will give the Aggravation of so sinning. Thirdly, I will give Rules to measure Sins of Knowledge by, and the greatness of them in any Act. Lastly, The use of all.

For the first, What it is to sin against Knowledge.

To explain it, I premise these Distinctions :

The first Distinction, That it is one thing to sin with Knowledge, another thing against Knowledge.

There are many Sins do pass from a Man with his Knowledge, which yet are not against Knowledge. This is to be observed for the removal of a Scruple, which may arise in some that are Godly, who else may be wounded with this Doctrine through a Mistake.

A Regenerate Man is, and must needs be supposed guilty of more known Sins, than an Unregenerate Man ; and yet he commits fewer against Knowledge than he.

First, I say, he is guilty of more known Sins, that is, known to and within himself : For he takes notice of every sinful Disposition that is stirring in him, every By-end, every contrariety unto Holiness, deadness to Duty, reluctance to spiritual Duties ; and every Man when regenerated, beginneth to see and know more evil by himself, than ever he did before : he sees, (as the Apostle says of himself, Rom. 7. 10.) all Concupiscence ; and the holier a Man is, the more he discerns and knows his Sins : So says the Apostle, Rom. 7. 18. I know that in me dwells no good thing : and, ver. 21. I find when I would do good, Evil is present with me : and ver. 23. I see another Law. All these, he says, he perceived and found daily in himself. And the more holy that he grew, the more he saw them : For the purer and clearer the Light of God's Spirit shines in a Man, the more Sins he knows ; he will see Lusts streaming up, flying in his Heart like Motes in the Sun, or Sparks out of a Furnace, which else he had not seen : the clearer the Sun Beams are which are let into the Heart, the more thou wilt see them.

But, in the second place I add, that nevertheless he sins less against Knowledge : For then we are properly said to sin against knowledge, when we do take the fulfilling of a Lust, or the performance of an outward Action, a Duty, or the like, into deliberation and consideration, and consider Motives against the Sin, or to the Duty, and yet commit that sin, yield to it, and nourish that Lust, and omit that Duty ; here now it is we sin not only with Knowledge, but against Knowledge ; because Knowledge stepped in, and opposed us in it, came to interrupt and prevent us in the Sin, or came to stir us up more, and provoke unto the Duty. But now in those failings in Duty, and stirring of Lusts in the Regenerate afore-mentioned, that arise, but are are not deliberated upon, the case is otherwise; they are committed indeed with Knowledge, but not against it: For it is not in the power of Knowledge to prevent them; for motus primo primi non cadunt sub libertatem: but yet though such Sins will arise again and again, yet, says a good Heart, they must not think to pass uncontrouled and unseen: Therefore let not our poor Souls mistake me, as if I meant in what, I have or shall say throughout this Discourse, of all Sins which are known or observed to be Sins by them, but I mean such Sins as are committed against Knowledge, that is, when Knowledge comes and examines a Sin, in or before the committing of it, brings it to the Law, contests against it, condemns it, and yet a Man approveth it, and consenteth to it; when a Duty and a Sin are brought before Knowledge, as Barabbas and Christ before Pilate, and thy Knowledge doth again and again tell thee, such an Act is a great Sin, and ought to be crucified, and yet thou cryest, Let it go, chusest Barabbas rather than Christ: And so for a Duty, thy Knowledge tells thee again and again, it ought to be submitted unto, and yet thou omittest it: These are Sins against Knowledge: now such Sins against Knowledge break a Man's Peace, and the more consideration before had, the more the Peace is broken.

The second Distinction is, That Men sin against Knowledge either directly or collaterally, objectively, or concomitantly, and as a stander-by.

First, Directly, when Knowledge it self is the thing Men abuse or fight against, and so becometh the Object, the Terminus, the Butt and Mark it self shot at; this is to sin directly against Knowledge it self.

The second way, collaterally, is, when Knowledge is but a Circumstance in our Sins; which falls out, when the pleasure of some Sin (we know to be a Sin) is the thing aimed at by us, and our Knowledge steps but in between to hinder us in it, and we commit it notwithstanding, though we do know it; here Knowledge is indeed sinned against, yet but collaterally, and as a stander-by, shot at per accidens, concomitanter, and by the bye; as one that steps in to part a Fray is smitten, for labouring to hinder them in their Sin, as the Sodomites quarrelled with Lot: these two are both found in this Chapter, and therefore come fitly within the compass of this Discourse.

First, This collateral kind of sinning against Knowledge is mentioned in ver. 21. where he says, They knew God, yet they glorified him not: there Knowledge is made but a Concomitant of their sinning; they sinned against it but collaterally. But then that other kind of sinning directly against Knowledge, is mentioned, They liked not to retain God in their knowledge: that is, they hated this Knowledge it self, so as now they did not only love the particular Sin, they knew to be Sin, but also they loved not the knowledge of it; so that because both are thus clearly instanced in, we will speak of both more largely.

Now Sins directly against Knowledge it self are many: I will reduce the chief of them unto two Heads.

First, In regard of our selves.
Secondly, In regard of others.

First, In regard of our selves, five ways we may thus sin against knowledge it self.

1. When we abuse Knowledge to help us to sin: as first, to plot and contrive a Sin, as Judas plotted to betray his Master, if he could conveniently; so the Text says, Mark. 14. 11. he would do it wisely: and thus those that came to intrap Christ with most cunning Questions, did Sin, and those who plot against the Just, as Psal. 37. 12.

So, 2dly, when Men use their Wisdoms to tell a cunning Lie, to cover a Sin; as Plato says, Men of Knowledge sunt ad mendacia potentiores & sapientiores: whereas Fools, though they would lie, yet often tell Truth 'ere they are aware.

Book XII.

But also, 3dly, when they abuse moral Knowledge, which yet, as Aristotle says, is least apt to be (I am sure should least be) abused, so as to make a shew of good Pretences to cover their Sins, and dissemble them; not only by finding out some cunning artificial Colour, as David did in the Matter of Uriah, — Chance of War (says he) falls to all alike: but when Men are so impudently hypocritical, as to make use of religious Pretexts, (as the Devil sometimes doth) as Saul, who pretends to Samuel, I have done the Will of the Lord: and when Samuel told him of the Cattel, O, says he, they are for a Sacrifice; when God had expressly commanded to kill them all: But this shift shifted him out of his Kingdom. Samuel pronounceth him a Rebel in it, Rebellion is sin against Knowledge. Thus also Iezabel coloured over the the stoning of Naboth with a solemn Fast: So Judas fisheth for Money with a charitable pretence, This might have been sold, and given to the Poor. In Sins against Knowledge usually the Mind endeavours to find out a colour, and that provokes God more than the Sin, because thereby we go about to mock him. We see Men cannot endure a Shift, much less the all-knowing God, not to be mocked. And we see it hard to convince such an one. David was fain to be brought to the Rack, 'ere he would confess, when he had a Shift; and Men do seek such Shifts only in case of sinning against Conscience: for else there were no need; they would be sure to plead Ignorance, as Abimelech did.

2. When Men neglect the getting and obtaining of Knowledge, which Knowledge might keep and hinder them from sinning, and which might make them expert in Duties. This is as much as to sin against Knowledge, although the Sins be committed out of Ignorance; yet that Ignorance being through their own Default, it comes all to one: when it may be said of Men, as the Apostle doth of the Hebrews, Chap. 5. 12. That for the time they have had to learn, they might have been such and such proficient in Knowledge. As if a Man had an Apprentice, who through Negligence and want of heeding, and observing what he daily sees and hears about his Trade, might have got for his time much Knowledge in his Trade, whereby he might have saved his Master much, which he now hath lost him; and rid and perfected much Work, he daily spoils him; such careless blockish ignorance, it is just for his Master to correct him for, and to charge on him all that waste and loss, because he might have known how to have done better. And therefore these Gentiles who thought Ignorance in it self no Sin (wherein they yet erred) yet the neglect of Knowledge upon this very ground, is made a great Sin; and so far from excusing their Sins, as that it aggravates them: So here they shall not only be reckoned with, for the actual knowledge they had attained to, and sinned against, but also for what they might have had and have picked out of the Creatures. For to this purpose it is the Apostle brings in this here in the 20th verse, that the Power of God being clearly seen in the Creatures, they neglecting to spell and read it, so much Knowledge as they might have got, God yet would reckon to them, and aggravate their Sins by.

3. (Which is yet much worse,) when Men refuse Knowledge, that they may sin the more freely; and so stop the Ear, lest they should be charmed: As when Men are loth, and afraid, and dare not read such a Book as discovers, or might discover that Truth to them, the submission to which would prejudice them, and this to the end that they may plead ignorance of their Sin. Thus also those that assent not to Truth, when it comes strongly upon them, but seek to evade it. But, 1 Cor. 14. 38. when the Apostle had clearly discovered the Truth in those things controverted, so as who ever was spiritual, or not fully blind, might see, and would acknowledge the Truth: Then he shuts up his Discourse about them, thus, in ver. 27. If any any be ignorant, let him be ignorant: for it is wilful, it is affected; he speaks this, as elsewhere, Rev. ult. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: that is, he that will be unjust, and refuses to turn, let him go on. This is a great Sin: for God, you see, gives such a Man over: one that is but neglectful, or dull of Capacity, God will take pains with him to teach him, bear with him, as Christ did with his Disciples; but if he be wilfully ignorant, he lets him die in his Ignorance, and yet will reckon with him, as if all his Sins had been committed against Knowledge, because he refused to know.

The 4th is, to hate the Light, and to endeavour to extinguish it. This is yet much worse, when Men hate the World, and the Ministers of it, the Examples of God's People, and the Light they carry with them, (they shining as Lights in a crooked Generation, Phil. 2. 15. and Men hate these as Thieves do a Torch in the Night, and fly against the Light, as Batts do; and as the Jews did, John 3. 20.) This, Christ says, is the great condemning Sin of all others. So these Gentiles put Socrates to Death for reproving them. And thus Men sin also, when they labour to extinguish the Light in their own Consciences, and like not to retain God in their Knowledg, ver. 28. but would study the Art of Forgetfulness: when Men have put the Candle out, and drawn the Curtains, to the end they may sin, and sleep in Sin more freely and securely. Thus those also sin in a higher Measure, who have had a clear Conviction, that they ought to be thus and thus strict, and that they ought to sanctify the Lord's Day, and pray privately, but now have lost this Light, and think they need not be so strict: when Men continue not in what they were once assured of, as the Apostle speaks, 2 Tim. 3. 14. these sin against their Knowledg, and are the worst of such Sinners. And this Estate Aristotle himself makes, statum maligni, the State of a wicked one, namely, when the Sparks of Light are extinguish'd or hated. For when any Man's Light is lost, and turned into Darkness by sinning, then, as Christ says, How great is that Darkness? When good Laws are not only not enacted or not imbraced, but repealed also, (it is Aristotle's Similitude to distinguish an incontinent Person, and a wicked Man) this is an high kind of sinning: So of those Gentiles it is said, their foolish Heart was darkned; they had extinguish'd some of that Light God gave them. As some drink away their Wits, so some sin away their Consciences; and thus by Degrees they first sin away the Light of the Word they had; as they in Jude, who were religious once, and then they quench even that little Spark of Nature that is left: also ver. 10. corrupting themselves in what they know naturally.

5. Men sin against Knowledg yet worse, when they hold Opinions against their Knowledg. So many are said to do in 1 Tim. 4. 2. he foretells they should speak Lies in Hypocrisy, and invent Lies that should have a pretence of Holiness; which they know to be a Lie, for else they should not be said to speak Lies in Hypocrisy; but they do it to maintain their Honour and Greatness, which must down if they acknowledg their Doctrine false; and though many are given up to believe their Lies, 2 Thes. 2. 11. as Punishments of their not loving the Truth; yet others of them shall know they are Lies, and yet vent them for Truths. Thus when Men fashion their Opinion to the times and ways of Preferment, and their Dependances on great ones, or to maintain and uphold a Faction, or out of Pride, having broached an Error, maintain it, though the pulling out that one Tile doth untile all the House. These are the two Causes given of perverting the Truth, 1 Tim. 6. 4, 5. namely, Pride and Covetousness, and supposing gain Godliness, and so fashioning their Religion accordingly: when Men are Knights of the Post, that will write or speak any thing whereby they may get Gain and Preferment.

Secondly, Men sin directly against Knowledg in regard of others:

1. By concealing it; The Apostle indeed says in a certain Case, Hast thou Knowledg? keep it to thy self: He speaks it of Opinions or Practices about things indifferent, which might scandalize the weak; but if thou hast Knowledg, which may edify thy Brother, thou oughtest to communicate it. Socrates knowing there was but one God, said in his Apology for his Life, that if they would give him Life, upon Condition to keep that Truth to himself, and not to teach it to others, he would not accept Life upon such a Condition: and I remember he expresseth this Resolution in Words very nigh the same Words the Apostle used, Acts 4. 20. Whether it be better to obey God than Men, judg you. And, We cannot but teach the things we have heard and seen, says Christ: for Knowledg is a thing will boil within a Man for Vent, and would not be imprisoned: It is Light, and the End why Light was made, was to be set up to give Light. And Christ argues from an apparent Absurdity, to put a Light under a Bushel, which may give Light to all the House: Hast thou Know-

Knowledg of God, and of his ways (if withall thou hast but a good Heart) thou canst not but speak, specially where thou hast Freedom and a Calling to do it, as unto those in thy Family thou hast, to thy Wife in thy Bosom, &c. God took it for granted, that Abraham would teach his Children what he should know from him: The same Disposition is in the Children of Abraham.

2. When Men endeavour to suppress Knowledg. As the Pharisees, they kept the Keys of it in their Hands, and would not open the Treasures of it themselves, nor let others do it neither. So they (Acts 4. 16.) could not deny but a great Miracle was done by the Apostles (say themselves) but that it spread no further, let us threaten them, and charge them that they speak no more in his Name. And this they did against their Consciences, by their own Profession, we cannot deny it; as if they had said, if we could we would, but it was too manifest it was the Truth, as the Testimony of the Miracle wrought by God argued it to be. So when Masters keep their Servants from the means of Knowledg, they are thus guilty.

3. When we would make others sin against their Consciences. The Pharisees, when the blind Man would not say as they said, they cast him out; they would have had him say, that Christ was a Sinner, when through the small Light he had, he judged it evident enough, that a Sinner could not do such a Miracle, as was never done since the World began. And so Jezebel made the Judges and Witnesses sin against Conscience, in accusing Naboth. Thus to constrain Men by Club-Arguments, from avoiding Persecution, as those did the contrary-minded, Gal. 6. 12. and not from Evidence of the Truth, or by Reasons that might convince them and their Consciences: therefore he says, they constrained them. The Perswaders might indeed glory, (as there 'tis said) as having their Cause and Side strengthened, but they wan little Credit to their Cause by it; for as the Perswaders Arguments were suited to Flesh, so the others yielding was out of Flesh, and so they glory but in your Flesh and Weakness, says he. As the Papists urged Cranmer, not by Arguments, but Threats and Promises, to recant; this is the greatest Cruelty in the World, to have a Man murder himself, stab his Conscience. To offend a weak Conscience is a Sin, if but passively, when thou dost something before his Face, which his Conscience is against: but if thou makest him wound his own Conscience, and to do an Act himself, which his own Conscience is against, it is much worse: As if thou beest a Master, and hast a Servant who pleaded Conscience, that he cannot lie for thy Advantage in the Shop, or who will not do unlawful Business on the Sabbath-day, and pleads Conscience, wilt thou smite him, and whip him? God will smite thee, thou whited Wall: how darest thou smite him, and so cause him to do that for which God will whip him worse? Shew Mercy to those under you, inform their Consciences, wring them not, you may hap to break the Wards if you do.

1st, Now for Sins committed collaterally, or per modum circumstantiæ, against Knowledg, (which was the second Branch of this Distinction) they are done either when particular Acts of Sin are committed, and Duties omitted, against Light and Knowledg; and so the Saints may and do often sin against Knowledg. Or,

2<sup>dly</sup>, In regard of a known Estate of Sin and Impenitency persisted in, when Men continue and go on in such a State against Conviction of Conscience, that such is their Estates.

For, 1. because particular Acts of Sin committed against Knowledg are infinite, and there will be no end of instancing in Particulars, therefore I will not insist thereon: Only, in brief, this Distinction concerning such Acts may be observed, and the Observation of it may be useful; That some Acts of Sins against Knowledg are merely transient; that is, are done and ended at once. And though the Guilt of them is eternal, yet the Extent of the Acts is finished with the committing it, and reacheth no further: as a vain Oath, Breach of the Sabbath, &c. which Acts cannot be repealed, though they may be repented of. But others there are, which though the Act may be but once outwardly and professedly done, yet have an habitual and continued Permanency, Life, and Subsistence given them, such, as that until a Man doth actually reverse and recal recal them, he may be said continually to renew those Acts, and every Day to increase a new Guilt of them, and to maintain them, and so habitually to commit them. As it is with Laws, which though made but once, are yet continued Acts of the State, whilst they stand in Force unrepealed: so is it in some Sins. For Instance, when a Man doth take Goods from his Neighbour unjustly, the Act indeed is done but once: but till he restores them, he may be said to steal them every Day, every Hour; he continues to do it habitually: So a Man having subscribed to Falshood, or recanted the Truth publicly; the Act, though done but once, yet until a Retraction be some ways made, he continues that Act, and so is daily a-new guilty of it. So if a Man should marry one, whom it is unlawful for him to marry, (as Herod did) though that sinful Act of Espousals, whereby they entred into it, was soon dispatch'd; yet till a Divorce, he lives in a continual Sin. And such Acts (of this latter sort, I mean) against Knowledg are most dangerous to commit; because to continue thus in them, though but once committed, hazards a Man's Estate: And indeed Men find, when they come to repent, the greatest Snare, and Trouble, and Difficulty in such kind of Sins; to extricate themselves out of them by a meet and true Repentance.

But as concerning the first Branch of this Distinction, namely, of particular Acts committed against Knowledg, (which is distinct from the last part of this Distinction thus briefly touched) I will anon give several Aggravations and Rules, whereby to measure the Sinfulness that is in such Acts so committed: but in the mean time, the second part of this former Distinction must be insisted upon, and therefore I will bring in these Aggravations and Rules which concern particular Acts, after I have briefly spoken to this other, which is; That,

2. Their sinning against Knowledg, who go on in an Estate of Sin and Impenitency, which they know to be damnable: As Pharaoh, Exod. 9. 27. who confess'd, that he and his People were wicked, and yet hardened himself in Sin most dangerously: and yet three sorts of Men may apparently be convinced thus to sin.

1st. Those that keep out and withdraw themselves from professing Christ and his Ways, and the Fear of his Name, out of Shame or Fear of Man, or of losing Preferment, or the like worldly Ends, when yet they are convinced that they are God's Ways, and ought to be professed by them. I do not say, that all, who do not come in to profess Christ, and that do not join themselves with his People, that they go on against Knowledg; for many are ignorant and mistaken about them: but when Men are convinced of the Truth, and Necessity of professing and confessing of it even unto Salvation (as the Apostle speaks, Rom. 10.) and yet out of Fear or Shame, keep still on the other side, drawing in their Horns altogether, these go on in an Estate of Impenitency against Knowledg very dangerously unto their own Souls. For put all these together, and it must needs appear to be so: As first, when they are convinced that this is the Truth, and that Salvation and the Power of Religion is only to be found in such Ways, and among such a sort of Men. And secondly, that these are necessarily to be practised and professed. And yet, thirdly, out of Shame, &c. keep still aloof off, and go on a contrary way; these must needs know, that they go on in an Estate of Impenitency against Knowledg. This was the Case of many of the Pharisees, who therefore sinned highly: they believed, and were convinced, that Christ was the Messiah; and if so, then to be confess'd, and followed, and to be cleaved unto: and then also they must needs know, that his Followers only were the Children of God: Yet, John 12. 42. it is said, though they thus believed on him, yet they durst not confess him for fear of the Jews, and of the Pharisees, and of being put out of the Synagogues. At the latter day, Christ shall not need to sever such from the rest, as he will do the Sheep from the Goats; for they willingly have severed themselves, remaining all their Days amongst those whom they know to be Goats, and refuse the Company, and Fold, and Food, and Marks of the Sheep, which they know to be such: they may apologize, and make fair with the Saints, that their Hearts are with them, but they will be rank'd at the Day of Judgment, as here they ranked themselves, with the Workers of Iniquity. Of these doth the Psalmist speak, Those that turn aside by their crooked ways, them shall the Lord leave with the Workers of Iniquity.

Book XII.
 Psal 125. 17.

Those also thus sin, and are to be joined with these, who know the Terms of Salvation, and how they must part with all for Christ, and yet will not come to the Price, such do go desperately on against Knowledge in a bad Estate, and do judg themselves unworthy of eternal Life. Thus the young Man in the Gospel, he was told, that he was to sell all, and he knew Heaven was worth it, and was convinced of the Truth herein, that thus he ought to do, for he was sorrowful, but yet went away: now if he had not known that he went away without Happiness, he needed not have been sorrowful at all; he knew the Bargain of Salvation was not struck up until he should yield unto Christ's Terms proposed, and likewise what it stuck at, and yet still rested in his former Condition, and chose rather to enjoy his many Possessions: This Man now went on in his impenitent State against Knowledge.

2dly. As also those who upon the same or like ground defer their Repentance, these go on in a bad Estate, and must needs know they do so; for in that they promise to repent hereafter, and take up Purposes to do it, when they shall have gone on but a little while longer, to add Drunkenness to Thirst, they do thereby profess that there is a Work of Grace, which they must attain to, e're they can be in the State of Grace: for they would not promise so much hereafter, but that they know not how, without such a Work, they should be saved. Whilst therefore such shall rest without present Endeavouring after it, so long they are judged in themselves to be in a bad Estate at present. When Men know the Curses due to their present Estate, and yet say as he, Deut. 29. 19. I will go on in the way of my Heart, and shall have Peace afterwards. This Man sins most highly, and therefore God's Wrath smoaks against that Man, and he says of him, that he will not be me merciful to him, in that Place.

3dly. Sunk and broken Professors, such cannot but go on in a bad Estate against Knowledge: when either Men are fallen from the Practice and Profession of what is good, which once they thought necessary to Salvation; or when they continue to hold forth their Profession in Hypocrisy. Those that have escaped the Pollutions of the World, through the Knowledge of Jesus Christ, but are returned to their Vomit again. Some of these are ingenuous, and acknowledg both themselves fallen, and their present Estate most miserable, and yet go on in it; and such are to be pitied; and yet are in a most dangerous Condition. Saul when he was fallen away, yet had this Ingenuity a while left, he desired Samuel to pray to his God for him; and told David, that he was more righteous than he; yet still went on in his evil Courses, and in the End (some have thought) sinned against the Holy Ghost: but I cannot affirm that.

But others there are, who though they be fallen from all the inward, powerful and secret Performance of Duties they once did practise, and from all Conscience of sinning, yet retain their Profession, which they know to be but an out-side; these of all others go on against Knowledge; and Rev. 22. 15. they are said to make a Lie; not only to tell a Lie in Words, but to make a Lie in Deeds. Now a Lie is a Sin of all others most against Knowledge, and indeed against a double Knowledge, both facti and juris; and so is this. 1. That they profess themselves to be that they know they are not. 2. That they will not endeavour after that State they know they ought to get into, if ever saved. This is the Condition of many, who having been convinced of the Power of Religion, and have launched forth into a Profession, and hoist up Sail, but now the Tide is fallen, the Spirit withdrawn, the Conscience of Sin extinguish'd in them; yet for their Credit sake still bear their Sails up as high as ever: even as many Merchants do, who are sunk in their Estates, still bear a fair Shew, yea, will seem richer than ordinary, by purchasing Lands, &c. Such a Professor was Judas, he began seriously, and thought to have gone to Heaven, and was earnest in good Duties at first; as they also, 2 Pet. 2. 18. they really, or ὄντως, escaped the Pollutions of the World through the Knowledge of Christ, but in the end Judas became a gross Hypocrite, one that pretended the poor, when he loved the Bag, and on the sudden betrayed his Master: when yet the Disciples knew knew it not, suspected Judas as little as themselves; and the End of those also, in that fore-named Place in Peter, it is said to be worse than their beginning. Now because such sin so highly against Knowledge, therefore their Punishment is made the Rule of all other wicked Mens; thus when it is said, that other Sinners shall have their Portion with Hypocrites: Even the wicked Angels Punishment is made the Measure of Mens, Go ye cursed into the Fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels: so among Men, such gross Hypocrites, their Punishment is made the Rule, and so the chief of all kind of Torments which Sinners of the Sons of Men shall undergo.

Now let me speak a Word to all such as thus go on in a State of Impenitency against Knowledge: this is a high kind of sinning, and of all the most desperate, and doth argue more Hardness of Heart, and despising the Riches of God's Goodness. For if, as in Rom. 2. 4. to go on in a Sin, when a Man [knows not] that is, considers not, that God's Mercy leads him to Repentance, is yet made the Sign and Effect of a very hard Heart, treasuring up Wrath; then much more, when thou knowest and considerest thou art in an Impenitent Condition, and hast many Motions leading thee to Repentance, is thy Heart then much more to be accounted hard. When a Man commits a particular Act against Knowledge, he haply and usually still thinks his Estate may be good, and that he shall not lose God utterly, or hazard the Loss of him; only his Spirit, being at present empty of Communion with him, he steals out to some foreign or stolen Pleasure: but when a Man knows his Estate bad, and that he is without God in the World, and yet goes on, he doth hereby cast away the Lord, and professeth he cares not for him, or that Communion which is to be had with him, as Esau did his Birth-right.

David, though he despised the Lord, yet he did not cast away the Lord, as Saul did: for Saul ventured utterly to lose him, knowing his Estate naught. David, when he sinned, thought God's eternal Favour would still continue, though for the present he might lose the Sense of it, and resolved never to leave God, but return.

But when a Man goes on in a State of sinning, he ventures the utter Loss of God and his Love, and flights it, and knows he doth so: when a Man knows that he is condemned already, as being impenitent, and that all his eternal Estate lies upon the Non-payment of such Duties of Repentance, &c. and that the Guilt of all his Sins will come in upon him, and that a Writ of Execution is out, and yet goes on, this is more than to commit one Act, or several Acts, against Knowledge, whereby a Man thinks he brings upon himself but the Guilt of that one Sin; and upon the committing of which, he thinks not the Mortgage of all should lie, though it deserves it; herein Men shew themselves more desperate.

What it is to sin against Knowledge, further explained by Rules, whereby to estimate the heinousness of particular Acts of sinning against Knowledge, both Before and In committing them.

IN the next place, I come to those Rules, whereby you may measure and estimate sinning against Knowledge in any particular Act of sinning; and they are either before the Sin, or in sinning: three of either, which I make a second Head, to explain this Doctrine by.

First, Before.

The first Rule is, The more thou knowest, and didst consider the issues and consequents of that Sin thou didst commit, the more thou sinnest against Conscience in it. Thus in Rom. 1. ult. Thou knowing (says the Apostle) that those that commit such things, are worthy of Death; that is, thou considerest that Hell and Damnation are the issue and desert of it, and yet committest it; yea, and this when haply Hell-fire at present flasheth in thy face, and yet thou goest on to do it. In this case Men are said to choose Death, and to love it, Prov. 3. 36. When a Man considers, that the way to the Whore-house is the Way to Death, (as Solomon speaks); so when thou, a Professor, considerest with thy self before, This Sin will prove scandalous, and undo me, disable me for service, cast me out of the Hearts of good Men, and yet dost it. Thus that foolish King was told again and again, Jer. 38. 17, 18, 19. that if he would yield to the King of Babel, he should save his Life, and City, and Kingdom, and live there still; but if he would not, he should not escape; but, as Jeremy further told him, ver. 23. Thou shalt cause this City to be burnt with Fire; yet he would not hearken: This is the Word of the Lord, (says Jeremy) and he knew it to be so; and yet being a weak Prince, led by his Nobles, he would not follow his Counsel. And thus Judas fully knew the issue; Christ had said again and again, Wo be to him by whom the Son of Man is betrayed, and yet went on.

The second Rule is, The more Consultations, Debates and Motives against it did run through thy Heart before thou didst it, so much the greater and more heinous is thy Sin. How often did Mercy come in, and tell thee, that if thou lookest for any hope or part in it, thou shouldst not do such an Evil? How often came that in, Shall I do this, and sin against God? Did any Scripture come in to testify against thee in the nick? Did God send in the remembrance of such a Mercy past, to perswade thee? or some Mercies to come, which thou dependedst upon him for? That which made Spira's Sin so great, was such Debates as these before: and this made Darius's Sin, in casting Daniel into the Lions Den, so great; he debated it with himself, Dan. 6. 14. he was sore displeased with himself, and labour'd to the going down of the Sun to deliver him; he considered that he was at his right Hand in all the Affairs of his Kingdom, and a Man entrapped merely for his Conscience, and that to put him to death, was to sacrifice him to their Malice; he knew him to be holy and wise, worth all the Men that sought after his Life, and yet yielded: These Considerations troubled him before, and also after, insomuch as he could not sleep for them, ver. 18. Now because that every such Consultation should set an impression upon the Heart, and countermand the motions of Sin; when therefore thou dost it, manage all such Debates and Motives to the contrary, this is much against knowledge, and very heinous. Therefore the Pharisees, Luke 17. 30. are said to have rejected the Counsel of God, εἰς ἐαυτοῖς, in or against themselves: the Words will bear either in themselves, because they knew it, and took it into consideration, and yet rejected it; and against themselves, because it was their destruction.

The third Rule is, That the more Confirmations any Man hath had of the knowledg of that which he sinneth in, and Testimonies against it, the greater is his Sin: When a Man hath had a Cloud of Witnesses, perhaps made from his own Observations against a particular Sin, and yet doth it, and goes on in it, it is the more fearful. To go on against that one single Witness, the bare light and grudging of natural Conscience only, is not so much, comparatively, as when it is further confirmed, and backed by the Word written, which a Man hath read, in which a Man meets with such Scriptures, wherein again and again such a Practice is condemned, and he observes them; and then also hears it reproved in Sermons; and of all Sins else, perchance heareth in private Conference that Sin spoken against; yea, hath in his eye many Examples of others sinning in the like kind, which have been punished, yea haply himself also: yet to sin against all these, how heinous is it! Sometimes God orders things so, as a Sin is made a great Sin by such fore-warnings: so he contrived Circumstances in Judas his sinning; for Judas knew that Christ was the Saviour of the World, he knew it by all the Miracles he had seen, as also by his gracious Words and Converse; and he professed as much in following of him, and he had the written Word against it, Thou shalt not murder the Innocent, how much less the Messiah. But yet, further, God to aggravate his Sin to the highest, orders it so, that Christ should tell him of it when he was to go about it, pronounceth a Wo to him, John 22. 22. that it had been good for that Man that he had never been born, Mark 14. 21. And the Disciples they were sorrowful at Christ's Speech, that he should suspect any one of them, and shewed their abomination and detestation of such a Fact; and so there was empanelled a Jury of eleven Men aforehand against him; yea, and Judas against himself, he impudently asked Christ himself, if it were he? Yea, and Christ gave him a Sop, and told him, thou hast said it, and do what thou dost quickly: which even then might argue to his Conscience, that Christ was God, and searched and knew his Heart; and yet he went out, and did it immediately. How did he sin against the Hair, as we speak? and how did all these Circumstances aggravate his Sin?

But yet a more clear Evidence of this, is that Instance of Pilate, whom God would have stopp'd in his Sin of condemning Christ, who when examining him before the Pharisees, he could find no fault with him, as concerning those things whereof they accused him, Luke 23. 14. yet to allay their Malice, unjustly scourged him, ver. 16. and further, he sent him to Herod, as being willing to rid his hands of him. Herod also found nothing worthy of Death in him, ver. 15. which was another Witness might have confirmed him concerning Christ's Innocency: Yea, yet further, that the Fact might be more aggravated, a most notorious known Murderer's Life was, by God's disposing it so, put into the ballance with Christ's, and either the one or the other condemned; and when the People yet chose Barrabas, still Pilate stands it out, Why (says he) what Evil hath he done? ver. 22. and then he distinctly considered, that he was delivered up through Envy: Yea, and when he was upon the Bench, and ready to pronounce Sentence, God admonish'd him by his own Wife, Mat. 27. 19. (whom God himself had admonished in a Dream) she in the very nick sending him word, she had suffered many things by reason of him that night, and therefore have nothing (says she) to do with that just Man: yea, he himself, when he condemns him, washeth his Hands of it, to testify he judged him not guilty. And thus it falls out in many sinful Businesses which Men are about, that God often and many several ways would knock them off; and stops them in their way, as he did Balaam; reproves them, as he did him by a dumb Ass, 2 Pet. 2. 16. so these by some silent passage of Providence; and not only so, but by his Spirit also, standing in their way, with the Threatnings ready drawn and brandish'd against them, and set to their Breasts, as the Angel did with a drawn Sword against Balaam, and yet they go on: this is dreadful.

There are three Rules also, whereby the Sinfulness of Sin, as it is against Knowledg, may be measured, from what may be observed In the Act: as,

Book XII.

1. The less Passion, or inward Violence, or temptation to a Sin committed against Knowledge, the greater Sin against Knowledge that is argued to be; for then the Knowledge is the clearer, Passion or Temptation being as a Mist. But then to sin when a Man is not in passion, is to stumble at Noon-day: for as Drunkenness takes away Reason, so doth Passion (which is a short Drunkenness) cloud and mist a Man's Knowledge. And so Aristotle compares the knowledge of an incontinent Person, to the knowledge of one that is drunk. When Peter denied his Master, though he had warning of it before, and so it was against knowledge, and it was by lying, and swearing, and forswearing, which are Sins of all other most directly against Knowledge, yet he was taken unexpectedly, 'twas a surprisal; when that which might stir up Fear to the utmost in him, was in his view; for he was then in the Judgment-Hall, where his Master just before his Face was arraigned for his Life, and he thought he might also have presently been brought to the Bar with him, if he had been discovered to have been his Disciple; so as his Passion being up, his Soul was distempered, Reason had little time to recover it self; and therefore though it was against Knowledge, yet the less against Knowledge, because Knowledge had lesam operationem, it had not its perfect Work upon his Heart: But now Judas, in betraying his Master, had not only warning before, but was not tempted to it, but went of himself, and made the offer to the Pharisees, sought how conveniently to do it, plotted to do it, had his Wits about him, having had time enough to think of it, and therefore it was (besides the heinousness of the Act) more also against Knowledge, and so the greater. David when he went to slay Nabal, was in hot Blood, in a Passion; but when he plotted to kill Uriah, he was in cold Blood: he was drunk when he lay with Bathsheba, but sober when he made Uriah drunk; he went quietly and sedately on in it. And we find David blamed only in the matter of Uriah, not so much for that of Bathsheba.

2. The more Sorrow, Renisus, or Reluctancy, and regretting of Mind there is against a Sin, it is a sign that the knowledge of it is the stronger and quicker, and so the Sin the more against Knowledge; for that gain-saying and displeasure of the Mind against it, ariseth from the strength and violent beating of the Pulse of Conscience, and opposition of it against the Sin; it springs from the greater and deeper apprehension of the Evil in the Action which is then in doing: and though that Reluctancy be a better sign of the Estate of the Person, than if there were none at all, (as there is not in those who are past feeling, and commit Sin with greediness, whose Estate is therefore worse, and more incapable of Repentance) yet the Fact it self is argued to be the more heinous, for it argues it to be against strong, active, stirring Knowledge. This argued Herod's Sin to be much against Knowledge (as indeed it was) in beheading John, Mark 9. 26. the Text says, he was exceeding sorrowful: now sorrowful he was, because he apprehended what a great Sin it was to behead John, who he knew was a just and holy Man, ver. 20. and had preached many a good Sermon to him, and had been in his Heart many a time, and who was one that had a great place in his Estimation, for he observed him; and was wrought much upon by his Ministry; and he knew that he did but sacrifice him to the Malice of a wicked Woman. And in this case the Sin is made so much the greater, in that Conscience doth stir up a contrary violent Passion in the Heart against the Temptation; and therefore yet to do it, when there is such a Bank cast up that might resist it, and then to break all down, such a Sin wastes the Conscience much.

3. On the contrary, the more hardness of Heart there is, and want of tenderness, in committing that Sin, which a Man knows to be a Sin, it is argued thereby to be the greater Sin against Knowledge; not only the greater Sin, but the greater Sin against Knowledge. For hardness of Heart in sinning is an effect of having formerly sinned much against Knowledge before: for as the Light of the Sun hardneth Clay, so the Beams of Knowledge and Conscience, lightning upon Mens Hearts, use to harden them, and do make them in the end past feeling. And therefore in 1 Tim. 4. 2. sinning against Knowledge is made the cause of a fear'd Conscience, and so to Speak Lies in Hypocrisy; that is, knowing that that they are Lies, and such Lies as damn those that receive and entertain them as Truths; that they might all be damned who believe that Lie, (as 2 Theff. 2. 11, 12. the Apostle prophesying of the very same Persons, speaks) and if so, then it is no wonder if it follows, having their Consciences seared with an hot Iron; it is not a cold Iron will sear their Consciences, and make them insensible, but an hot Iron, a burning and shining Light, which once having had place in their Consciences; and being rejected, they begin to be hardened and seared. For Knowledg makes Sins, and the apprehension of them, familiar to a Man, and so less terrible and frightful in the end, as Bears and Lions do become to their Keepers through Custom. Judas had a Heart when he came to betray his Master; surely his Conscience had smitten him at first more for nimming out of the Bag, than it did now for this of Murder: he could never have had such a hard Heart, had he not had much Knowledg. Was it not an hard Heart in him, that when he was challenged to his face, he could set a brazen Face upon it, and had the impudence to ask as well as the rest, Is it I? when also Christ cursed him to his face, and the Disciples all abhorred it. Had not Judas lived under such blessed and glorious Means, and sinned long against Knowledg, all this would have startled him, and have staggered him in his purpose; but he goes on as if it were nothing; though when he had done it, his Conscience was then opened too late. When a Man formerly hath been troubled with a small Sin, more than now with a gross Lie, which he can digest better than once the other: or when before, if he omitted praying, it troubled him; but now he can go a Week without, and is not sensible of it, it is a sign that his Knowledg hath hardened him.

THUS having given such Rules, whereby you may estimate the sinfulness of particular Acts, I shall now proceed to other ways of discovery, namely, Aggravations taken from the kind of Knowledg a Man sins against, viz. to sin against what kind of Knowledg is most hainous and dangerous. And there are five, drawn from the several Qualifications of that Knowledg, and of the Light which Men Sin against. I may say of Knowledg, what the Apostle doth of Star-light, One Star differs from another in Glory; and so do Lights of Knowledg even in Men unregenerate; at least they differ in greater or lesser Degrees. And the greater, or the more strong and efficacious the Light and Knowledg is, the greater still is the Sin of Knowledg thou committest against it. And this I make a third general Head to explain this Doctrine by. All these five Rules being applicable and common both to particular Acts against Knowledg, and also unto lying in an Estate of Impenitency against Knowledg, and all other Particulars which have been mentioned.

First, then, To sin against the inbred Light of Nature, that is, in such Sins, as though thou hadst wanted the Light of the Word in, thou yet wouldst have known to be such: This is a high kind of sinning. Such the Apostle speaks of, Jude 10. What things they know naturally, in these they corrupt themselves, as brute Beasts; putting, as it were, no difference of Actions, no more than Beasts: for it is the Light of Nature puts the first difference between Men and Beasts: and in such kind of Sins it is that the Apostle instanceth, in this first Chapter to the Romans, as namely, that of unnatural Uncleanness, in three particulars: As, 1. Self-uncleanness, ver. 24. ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, that is, alone by themselves, so Beza and Theophilact understand it; which he makes there the first degree of unnatural Uncleanness, which is therefore unnatural, because thou destroyest that which Nature gave thee for propagation, quod perdis homo est. 2. Even their Women did change the natural use into that which is against Nature, ver. 26. Then, 3. the unclean Love of Boys, Men burning in Lust with Men, verse 27. (be it acted in what dalliance it will, though not arising to an act of Sodomy) doing that which is unseemly, verse 27. which he therefore says, is the perverting the use and intent of Nature, and so is a Sin against Nature, leaving the natural use of the Woman. My Brethren, I am ashamed to speak of such things as are done in secret. These kind of Sins, by the Apostle's ranking them, are made a further degree of Unnaturalness, in that they are made the Punishments of other Sins, which yet were against the Light of Nature also: as was that, of their not glorifying God when they knew him: Yet because the Light of Nature was not so clear in their Consciences, as to that point of their Knowledg of God, in comparison to these, in that respect these are made the Punishments of the other, as being more clearly against Nature; so for Men to be disobedient to Parents, stubborn towards them, and without natural affection, as the Apostle says, ver. 30, 31. this is high against Nature. So Unthankfulness, and requiting Evil for Good, is against a common Principle in Mens Minds; Do not the Gentiles do good to those that do good to them? Your Hearts use to rise against such an one, out of common Humanity; or if you see one cruel and unmerciful, which is another Sin reckoned up, ver. 31. there being usually Principles of Pity in all Mens Natures, by Nature; therefore also for one Man to prey upon, and tyrannize over another, as Fishes do over the the small Ones, as Habakkuk complaineth, ch. 1. 4. this is against Nature; which teacheth you to do as you would be done unto. So Covenant-breakers, and Lying, and Forswearing, mentioned, ver. 30. Inventers of Evil, and Truce-breakers, are Sins against Nature, and natural Light: Lying is also against a double Light, both moral, & juris, which tells us such a thing ought not to be done; and facti, whilst we affirm a thing that is not; the knowledg of the contrary Truth ariseth up in us against it, though there were no Law forbid us: of all Sins else, the Devil's Lusts are expressed by these two, Lying, which is a Sin in the Understanding, and Malice in the Will, John 8. 44.

Secondly, To sin against that Light which thou didst suck in when thou wert young, to sin against the Light of thy Education, this is an Aggravation, and a great one. There is a Catechism of a blessed Mother, Bathsheba, which she taught Solomon, when a Child, put in among the Records of Sacred Writ, Prov. 31. wherein she counsels him betimes, not to give his strength to Women; she fore-told him of that Sin: and because it is incident to Kings most, they having all Pleasures at command, she tells him particularly, It destroys Kings, though it destroys others also: And so also, not to drink Wine, was another Instruction there he was forewarned of by her: this aggravated Solomon's Fault the more; for, read the second Chapter of Ecclesiastes, and we shall find there, that he was most guilty in the inordinate Love of these two; but he had not been brought up so, his good Mother had not thus instructed him. And thus also when God would aggravate his own Peoples Sin unto them, he recalls them to their Education-Light, they had received as it were in the youth and nonage of their being a Nation when at first in the Wilderness. So, Jer. 2. 2. Go and cry to them, I remember the kindness and towardliness of thy Youth: he puts them in mind of their Education by Moses their Tutor, and their forwardness then. And so, Hos. 12. When he was a Child, I loved him; and then God had their first Fruits, ver. 3. this he brings to aggravate their back-sliding in After-times, ver. 5. Therefore the Apostle urgeth it as a strong Argument to Timothy, to go on to persevere in Grace and Goodness, That he had known the Scriptures from a Child; and therefore for him to fall, would be more heinous. The Reason is, because the Light then infused, it is the first, and a Virgin-light, as I may call it, which God in much mercy vouchsafed to prepossess the Mind with, before it should be deflowred and defiled with corrupt Principles from the World; and did put it there to keep the Mind chaste and pure: Then, when the Mind was as the Air, free, and not died or tainted with any other Colour, (as Glass often useth to be) and so disposed to receive the Beams of Light more purely and unprejudicedly, whereas afterwards it is misted with Tinctures of Principles from the World; The Heart also being then more soft and tender, and so fitter to receive the deeper impression from such Light. Yea, we see ordinarily in experience, that the knowledg brought then in doth season Men ever after, whether it be for Good or for Evil; it fore-stalls, and prejudgeth a Man against other Principles; and though a Man comes to have more acquired Knowledg and Reason afterwards, put into him, when he is come to perfect Age, yet the small Light of his Education, if it were to the contrary, doth bias him, and keeps him fix'd and bent that way. We see it is thus in opinions about Religion, the Light then entertained, can never be disputed out: so in Mens Ways and Actions, Train up a Child in the Way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it, Prov. 22. 6. To sin therefore against this Primitive Light, (when it is about what is good and Holy,) and to put out the Beams thereof, or defile it, and to wear out the Impressions of it, how wicked is it, and what a Wretch art thou to do so?

Many of you young Scholars have had a good Bathsheba, that instructed you, not to pour out your strength to Drink or Women, but to pray privately, and to fear God, serve and love him; and when you come hither, you have good Tutors also, who teach you to pray; Ministers, who instill blessed Truths into you, from which, one would think, you should never depart; which if you do, the greater will be your Condemnation.

Think

Book XII.

Think how grievous this is: for if it is made an Excuse for many a Man in Sinning, that it answers his Education, that he never knew or saw better; then must needs the contrary be an aggravation of Sinfulness. And therefore as it was Timothy's Commendation, That he knew the Scriptures from a Child; so it will be thy Condemnation, that thou knewest better from a Child, and yet rebelledst against thy Light.

Thirdly, The more real and experimental the Light is Men Sin against Knowledge with, still the more Sin. As when they have learnt it from the Examples of Godly Men, whom they have lived amongst; or the Observation of God's dealings with themselves or others, and not only from the Word notionally. To sin against such Light, this adds a further degree: Not only to sin against the bare Light of Nature, but further, when Nature hath besides lighted her Torch at the Scripture, and then when beyond all this, the real Examples and Observations made of God's dealings with a Man's self and others, shall heighten all this to him, this makes a Man's sinfulness much more grievous: for, as exempla efficacius docent quam precepta; so the Knowledge got by Experiments of Mercies or Judgments, is of more force and evidence. Knowledge learn'd by Experience is, and should be the most efficacious. Therefore Christ himself, who knew all things already, yet learnt (in the School of Experience) by what he suffered. A little of Knowledge distilled out of a Man's own Observation, is most precious every drop of it; therefore the Apostle urgeth it on Timothy, 2 Tim. 3. 14. Continue in the things thou hast learned, and been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them. Wherein there is a two-fold Motive, and both emphatical; First, He was assured in himself; And, secondly, that which strengthened that Assurance, and was a means to work it, was the Example of the holy Apostle, and of his own Parents, knowing of whom thou hast learned them. And so, ver. 10. the Apostle again urgeth his own example, Thou hast fully known my Doctrine, and manner of Life; and then also brings to his Mind the Education of those his godly Parents, who instructed him. Hence also, Isa. 26. 10. it is made an aggravation, that in the Land of Uprightness Men deal unjustly. Thus Light drawn from the observation of God's Judgments upon others, it much aggravates. It is laid to Belsazzar's Charge, Dan. 5. 22. Thou knewest all this, how God dealt with thy Father Nebuchadonzer. So some of you come here, and live in a religious Society, and see sometimes one, sometimes another of your Colleagues turn to Christ, yea, haply Chamber-fellow converted from his evil Courses, and yet you go on; this is sinning against a great Light.

Fourthly, The more powerful the Light is that is in thee, and more stirring in thy Heart, and joined with a taste, the greater the Sins committed against it are to be accounted. The more thou hast tasted the bitterness of Sin, and God's wrath, and hast been stung with it, as with a Cockatrice, the more thou hast tasted God's Goodness; or the more God hath drawn nigh to thee, stirring up thy Affections in Prayer, and in the Ordinances, the more of such a Knowledge, and yet sinnest, the so much worse. In John 5. 35. Christ aggravates the Jews unbelief on himself, and their present hardness, that John was to them, not only a shining, but also a burning Light; that is, they had such knowledge engendred by his Ministry, as wrought Joy and Heat as well as Light; therefore it is added, they rejoiced therein for a season. And thus the fall of those, Heb. 6. is aggravated, that it was such a Light as had tasting with it. For to explain this, you must know, that between ordinary natural Light, or that assenting to spiritual Truths, which is common to Men, from traditional Knowledge living in the Church, that between it and true saving Light, or the Light of Life, there is a middle kind of Light, which is more than the common Conviction Men have, and less than having the Living Light of Life: It is a Light which leaves also some impression on the Affections, makes them feel the Powers of Heaven and Hell, and to be affected with them. Now the more of such Light against a Sin, be it Drunkenness, or Uncleaness, or Oppression, and yet fallest into it again, the more grievous. For this Knowledge adds a high degree, and that of a more precious Light, unto the common and ordinary Knowledge of most Men, and is by a special Illumination mination of the Spirit. And therefore as those Jews, who had not only common means of Knowledge, but Miracles also, and yet believed not, John 12. 17. shall be more condemned; so those who have such tasting Knowledge set on by the Holy Ghost, which is as much, yea more than if a Miracle were wrought, for it is above Nature, a supernatural Work of the Spirit within a Man. And therefore to sin against such Light, and such only, is that which disposeth a Man in the next degree of fitness to sin against the Holy Ghost.

Fifthly, To sin against professed Knowledge, is an Aggravation also, and an heavy one. To sin against a Man's own Principles, which he teacheth others, or reproveth or censureth in others. Titus 1. last, Those that profess they know God, and yet deny him, these are most abominable of all others: For these are Liars, and so sin against Knowledge, as Liars do: 1 John 2. 4. such an one is called a Liar in a double respect, both in that he says he hath that knowledge he hath not, it not being true Knowledge; and also, because he denies that in Deeds, which he affirms in Word, which is Paul's reason to Titus: And this is scandalous sinning. So, Rom. 2. 24. The Jews boasting of the Law, and of having the Form of Knowledge in their Brains; this caused the Gentiles to blaspheme, when they saw they lived clean contrary thereunto. And therefore a Brother that walks inordinately, was to be delivered to Satan, to learn what it was to blaspheme, 1 Tim. 2. 20. that is, to learn to know how evil and bitter a thing it is, by the Torments of an evil Conscience, to live in such a course, as made God and his Ways evil spoken of, as it befel David when he thus sinned. Yea, 2 Cor. 5. 10, 11. though they might keep company with a Heathen, because he was ignorant, and professed not the Knowledge of God; yet if a Brother, one that professed, and so was to walk by the same Rules, did sin against those Principles he and they professed, then, keep him not company, says he. Thus did Saul sin: All the Religion he had and pretended to, in his latter days, was, rooting forth Witches out of the Land: yet in the end he went against this his Principle; he went to a Witch in his great Extremity. And thus God will deal with all that are hollow in the end, and sin secretly against Knowledge: He leaves them to go on against their most professed Principles.

These are Aggravations in general, applicable both to any act of sinning, or going on in a known state of sinning.

Uses. Now the use of all that hath been spoken, what is it but to move all those that have Knowledge, to take more heed of sinning than other Men; and those of them that remain in their natural Estate, to turn speedily and effectually unto God: For if sinning against Knowledge be so great an aggravation of Sinning, then of all Engagements to Repentance, Knowledge is the greatest.

Use. 1. Thou who hast Knowledge, canst not sin so cheap as another who is Ignorant: Therefore if thou wilt be wicked, thy Wickedness will cost thee ten times more than it would another. Places of much Knowledge, and plentiful in the means of Grace, are dear Places to live in, in sin. To be Drunk, and Unclean, after enlightning, and the Motions of the Spirit, and powerful Sermons, is more than twenty times afore; thou mightest have committed ten to one, and been damned less. This is Condemnation (says Christ) that Light came into the World. Neither canst thou have so much pleasure in thy Sin as an ignorant Person; for thy Conscience puts forth a sting in the Act when thou hast Knowledge, which does subject thee to Bondage and the fear of Death. When a Man knows how dearly he must pay for it, there is an expectation of judgment embittereth all. Therefore the Gentiles sinned with more pleasure than we. Therefore, Ephes. 4. 18, 19. the Apostle, speaking of them, says, that through their ignorance and darkness, and want of feeling, they committed Sin with greediness, and so with more pleasure; they not having Knowledge, or Hearts sensible of the Evils that are the Issues and Consequents of such Courses.

Book XII.

Use 2. Thou wilt in sinning against Knowledge, be given up to greater Hardness. If the Light that is in thee be Darkness, (says Christ) how great is that Darkness? Therefore the more Light a Man hath, and yet goes on in Works of Darkness, the more Darkness that Man will be left unto, even to a reprobate Mind in the End.

Use 3. It will procure thee to be given up to the worst of Sins, more than another Man: for God when he leaves Men, makes one Sin the Punishment of another, and so the worse still the Punishment of the former; but above all, reserves the worst for Sinners against Knowledge. These Gentiles, when they knew God, they worshipped him not; God gave them up to the worst of Sins, whereof they were capable, as unnatural Uncleaness, &c. But these are not Sins great enough for thee that are a Sinner of the Christians; to be given up to Drunkenness, or Adultery, &c. otherwise than to discover thy Rottenness, these are too small Sins; but thou shalt be given up to inward Profaneness of Heart, (as Esau was, having been brought up in a good Family) so as not to neglect holy Duties only, but to despise them; to despise the good Word of God and his Saints, and to hate Godliness and the Appearance of it; thou shalt be given up to contemn God and his Judgments, to trample under Foot the Blood of the Covenant; or else unto devilish Opinions. Those other are too small to be Punishments of thy Sin: For still the End of such an one must be seven times worse than the beginning, as Christ says it shall. If thou wert a Drunkard, a Swearer, or an unclean Person before, and thy Knowledge wrought some Alteration in thee, thou shalt not haply be so now, at thy Fall, but seven times worse; profane, injurious to Saints, a Blasphemer or Derider of God's Ways and Ordinances.

Use 4. When thou comest to lay hold on Mercy at Death, thy Knowledge will give thee up to more Despair than another Man. Knowledge, though when it is but newly revealed, it is an Help; yet not made use of, recoils and turns against the Soul, to wound it, and to work Despair: and this, both because we have sinned against the means that should have saved us; as also, because such as sin against Knowledge, sin with more Presumption; and the more Presumption in thy Life, the more Despair thou art apt to fall into at Death. Therefore Isa. 59. 11, 12. what brought such Trouble, and Roarings like Bears, upon those Jews? and that when Salvation was looked for, that yet it was so far off from them in their Apprehensions? Our Iniquities (say they) testify to our Face, and we know them. Now then, Sins testify to our Face, when our Conscience took notice of them, even to our Faces, when we were committing them; and then also the same Sins themselves will again testify to our Faces, when we have recourse for the Pardon of them. Therefore thou wilt lie roaring on thy Death-bed, and that thou knowest them, will come as an Argument, that thou shalt not have Mercy. As Ignorance is a Plea for Mercy, I did it ignorantly, therefore I obtained Mercy; so I did it knowingly, will come in (if God leave thee to the Efficacy of thine own Guilt) as a Bar and a Plea against thee, therefore I shall not have Mercy.

Use 5. Both here and in Hell, it will prove a great Executioner and Tormenter. In this Sense it may be said, Qui auget scientiam, auget dolorem: He that increaseth Knowledge, increaseth Sorrow, as Solomon speaks: for Knowledge enlargeth our Apprehension of our Guilt, and that brings more Fear and Torment. Have they no Knowledge, who eat up my People? Yes, there is their Fear (says David). Therefore Heb. 10. 28. after sinning against Knowledge there remains not only a more fearful Punishment, but a more fearful Expectation in the Parties Consciences. And this is the Worm in Hell, that gnaws for ever. Sunbeams of Light breed these Worms in the stinking Jakes of our Hearts.

But then you will say, It is best for us to be ignorant, and to keep our selves so.

I answer: No, for to refuse Knowledg, will damn as much as abusing it. This you may see in Prov. 1. 23. Ye Fools (says Wisdom) you that hate Knowledg, turn, and I will pour my Spirit upon you, and make known my Words unto you. Well, ver. 24. they refused, and would none of his Reproof: therefore says God, I will laugh at your Calamity: that is, I will have no Pity; but instead of Pity, God will laugh at you; and when your Fear comes, I will not answer, because ye hated Knowledg, ver. 29. so as this is as bad as the abusing Knowledg. There remains therefore no middle way of Escape, to extricate thy self out by, and avoid all this; no other Remedy, but true turning to God: otherwise thou canst not but be more miserable than other Men. Yea, and this must be done speedily also: for thou having Knowledg, God is quicker in denying thee Grace, and in giving thee up to a reprobate Mind, than another Man who is ignorant. He will wait upon another that knows not his Will; and waits twenty, thirty, forty Years, as he did upon those Children of the Israelites that were born in the Wilderness, and had not seen his Wonders in Egypt, and at the Red Sea: but those that had, he soon sware against many of them, that they should never enter into his Rest. Christ comes as a swift Witness against those to whom the Gospel is preached, Mal. 3. 5. he makes quick Dispatch of the Treaty of Grace with them. Therefore few that have Knowledg, are converted when they are old, or that lived long under the Means. And therefore you that have Knowledg, are ingaged to repent and turn to God, and to bring your Hearts to your Knowledg, and that speedily also, or else your Damnation will not only be more intolerable than others, but a final Sentence of it pass out more quickly against you, which is stiled by the Prophet, The coming forth of the Decree. Therefore, as Christ says, John 12. 36. Whilst you have the Light, walk in it: For that Day of Grace, which is very clear and bright, is usually a short one. And though Men may live many Days and Years in Nature after, and enjoy the common Light of the Sun, yet the Day of Grace, and of gracious Excitements to repent, may be but a short one.

Aggravations of Mens sinning against common Mercies: upon a Discovery of the Riches of them. The Goodness of God in them all one with Bounty. The Greatness of it. What Patience superadds to Goodness; and what Long-suffering to Patience.

R O M. 2. 4, 5.

Or despisest thou the Riches of his Goodness, and Forbearance, and Long-suffering, not knowing that the Goodness of God leadeth thee to Repentance?

But after thy Hardness and impenitent Heart, treasurest up unto thy self Wrath against the Day of Wrath, and Revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

THE high and deep Aggravations of the actual Sinfulness of unregenerate Men, is the general intended Scope of these Treatises. Those that greaten Mens sinning against Knowledge are dispatch'd. This either follows, the Aggravations of sinning against common Mercies, leading Men unto Repentance. Which is the second common-place Head, by which the Apostle in his exact Method in this Epistle exaggerates the Heathens sinning in these Words; as he had done by their sinning against Knowledge, in the foregoing part of his Discourse.

To set forth the hateful Iniquity of these Gentiles Sinning and Impenitency in this Respect, He spreads before their View the Riches of that Goodness, Forbearance, and Long-suffering in God; and that as leading every one of them continually unto Repentance, which they in every Sin despised, through the Impenitency and Hardness of their Hearts; and thereby justly stored and heaped up another Treasure of Wrath and Judgment against themselves, equal unto, and proportionable to the Riches and Preciousness of the Mercies expended on them. The great God carefully keeping an Account of, and laying up by him the Remembrance thereof, as Men use to do their precious Treasures against an opportune Season, and a set-Day wherein to bring them forth for their best Advantage. Thus God speaks of what accrues as Forfeitures to his Justice by Mens Sins, Deut. 32. 34. Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my Treasures?

There is another infinitely far surpassing Treasure of unsearchable Riches of Mercy and Grace, which, like those Indies to us, had lain hid undiscovered to these Gentiles for many Ages.—The Mercies of Eternity, the sure Mercies of Christ our David,—which God had begun a-new to break up in those Days, and which are continued down unto us in our Days, and are daily proclaimed unto us. Ho, every one! I will make the sure Mercies of David yours: Seek ye the Lord while he may be found. Let the Wicked forsake his Way, and the unrighteous Man his Thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have Mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. And by the neglecting and despising of this super-excelling Treasure, it is, that our Sins (that live under the Knowledge and Tender thereof) are all aggravated unto a Guilt, and treasuring up a Wrath, as far exceeding that of these poor Gentiles here in the Text, as Heaven exceeds the Earth.

But to the intent that our Thoughts and most serious Apprehensions, may climb up to the View and Sense of the Greatness of our Sinnings in despising these Gospel-

Gospel-Mercies; by a comparative Estimate made and taken, from what Aggravations are found in Mens Siniings against the Riches of common Mercies; common to us with the very Gentiles here: I therefore have singled forth this as the more special Subject, (though about common Mercies) rather than the other, which is deservedly the more usual Theme of Pens and Tongues: This also being subservient to the Illustration of that other.

Now there is not a more ready or direct way to come to understand our Sinfulness herein, than to display the Riches themselves of that Goodness, which Men sin against: And this we see is the Course the Apostle himself here took.

My Purpose therefore is to unlock and carry you first into that more common Treasury of outward Mercies, and lead you through the several Rooms thereof, all which do continually lead you unto Repentance: That then reflecting upon our ungrateful Waste, and Abuse of so many Mercies in sinning against them, our Sins, every Sin, the least, may yet appear more sinful unto us, who are less than the least of all those Mercies. Know then, that besides that peculiar Treasure of unsearchable Riches of Grace laid up in Christ, there is another untold Mine of Riches the Earth is full of, as the Psalmist tells us, and the Apostle here, which these Gentiles only heard of, and which we partake of, all, as much as they. As there are Riches of Grace offer'd to you, which can never be exhausted; so there are Riches of Patience spent upon you, which you will have spent out in the end; the Expence of which cast up, will alone amount to an immense Treasure, both of Guilt in you, and of Wrath in God, as these Words inform us.

To help you in this Account, I shall,

1. Display the Riches themselves.
2. Aggravate your Sinfulness and Impenitency thereby.

To the Discovery of these Riches.

1. In general, shew what this Goodness (or Bounty) here spoken of, and Patience and Long-suffering in God are.
2. That there are an infinite Riches of these spent upon the Sons of Men.
3. That all these lead Men unto Repentance.

1st, That God is said here to be good or bountiful: 2<sup>dly</sup>, Patient or forbearing: 3<sup>dly</sup>, Long-suffering. These seem to note out three Degrees of his common Mercies unto Men. Concerning which particularly,

1. He is a good, or a bountiful God: for so I exegetically expound it. For though it be true, that Goodness and Bounty may differ: yet when Riches of Goodness are said to be communicated, as here, then it imports the same, and is all one with Bounty. And indeed his Scope is here to insinuate, how God that is good, he did good: which is the same, the same Apostle expresth concerning these Gentiles, Acts 14. 17. He left not himself without witness, in that he did good, filling our Hearts with Food and Gladness. Correspondent to which is that Speech also of God's Dealings with those that lived before the Flood, Job. 22. 16. Yet he filled their Houses with good things, ver. 18. so that Goodness here is all one, and to say, God was bountifully good in his bestowing all good things. Now therefore that which I would here enlarge upon, is, how all those noble and royal Qualifications and Properties, which concur to make one truly good and bountiful, do meet and abound in God, in all those good things which he doth bestow; and are found truly in none but in him: so that it may be truly said, that there is none good but God, or bountiful but God, as Christ says of him.

Now this Bounty in the general, which is in God, may be thus described. It is a free, willing, and a large giving of what is merely his own, looking for no Recompence again.

To explain this, that you may see that all these Conditions are required to true Goodness, and all of them to be found in God only.

1. He that is bountiful, he must be a Giver and Bestower of good things; and all he bestows, it must be by way of Gift, not by way of Recompence unto, or by Desert from the Party he bestows all on: Therefore Christ says, Luke 6. 33. that to do good to those who have done, or do good to us, is not thank-worthy; nor is it Bounty. But God is therefore truly good, because he simply, merely and absolutely gives away all which he bestows: For he was not, nor can any way become beholden to any of his Creatures, nor had formerly received any thing from them, which might move him hereunto. So Rom. 11. 35. Who hath first given him, that he may recompence him again? Nay, until he gave us a being, we were not so much as capable of receiving any good thing from him.

2. He who is truly termed good or bountiful, all that he gives away must be his own: And so all which God bestows, it is his own, and he alone is such a Giver. So Psal. 24. 1. The Earth is the Lord's. The Ground we tread on, the Place we dwell in; he is our Landlord. But is that all? for the House may be the Landlords, when the Furniture is the Tenants; therefore he further adds, And the Fulness of it is his also: that is, all the things that fill the World, all the Furniture and Provision of it. Both, all the Moveables, (so Psal. 50. 11, 12.) The Cattel and the Fowls upon a thousand Hills are mine, says he; and also all the standing Goods, the Corn and Oyl (which you set and plant) are mine, Hos. 2. 9. yea, and the Psalmist in the same 24th Psalm, adds further, that they who dwell therein are his also: not the House and Furniture only, but the Inhabitants themselves. And this, by the most sure, and most sovereign Title that can be, better than that of Purchase, or Inheritance of and from another: for he hath made them; All is thine, because all comes of thee, says the same David, 1 Chron. 29. 11, 12. And all things are not only [of him] but [through him] Rom. 11. 36. that is, they cannot stand nor subsist without him. Even Kings (the greatest and most bountiful of Men) their Bounty is but as that of the Clouds, which though they shower down plentifully, yet they first receive all from the Earth below them.

3. He gives largely, it is not Bounty else. Now God is therefore said to be rich in Goodness, because he is abundant in it. So we find it, comparing Psal. 33. 5. which Psal. 104. 24. in which it is said, that the Earth is full of his Goodness, and his Riches; which we may judg of, by what he says in the 27th Verse of that 104th Psalm, of what an Houle he keeps, and what Multitudes he feeds: All these (saith the Psalmist) wait on thee, that thou mayest give them Meat, and thou openest thy Hand, and they are filled with Good. King Ahasuerus, to shew his Bounty, made a Feast to his chief Subjects, but it was but for half a Year, and not to all his Subjects: some few half Years more would well-nigh have beggar'd him; but God doth thus continually, and that to all. The greatest and most bountiful of Men, when they would express the largelt of their Bounty, speak but of giving half of their Kingdom (so Herod, and he did but talk so too) but God bestows whole Worlds and Kingdoms, as Daniel speaks, chap. 4. 35. and gives them to whom he pleases.

4. He that is bountiful, must give all he gives freely and willingly. Which, though I put 'em together, yet may imply two distinct things. As first, that he that gives, must be a free Agent in it, who is at his choice, whether he would give any thing away or no. The Sun doth much Good to the World, it affords a large Light, and even half the World at once is full of its Glory: yea, and all this Light is its own, that is, not borrowed from any other created Light cast upon it, as that of the Moon and Stars is; yet this Sun cannot be called good or bountiful, because it sends forth this Light necessarily and naturally; and cannot chuse but do so; nor can it draw its Beams. But God is a free Giver, he was at his Choice, whether he would have made the World or no; and can yet when he pleaseth, withdraw his Spirit and Face, and then they all perish, Psal. 104. 29. A second Requisite is, it must be done willingly also; that is, no way constrained, nor by extorting, so as to be wrung from him, who is, and will be called Bountiful. A willing Mind in matter of Bounty, is more accepted than the thing, 2 Cor. 8. 12. Now of God it is said, Dan. 4. 22. that he gives the Kingdoms of the World to whom he will, and none sways him, him, or can stay his Hand, ver. 35. yea he gives all away with Delight. So Pfal. 104. 31. having spoken of his feeding every living thing, and of other the like Works of his Goodness, throughout that Psalm, he concludes with this, God rejoiceth in all his Works: that is, doth all the Good he doth to his Creatures with Delight; it doth him good (as it were) to see the poor Creatures feed.

Last of all, looking for no Recompense for the time to come. This is another Requisite in Bounty. Says Christ, Luke 6. 34. If you give, to receive again as Sinners do, this is not thank-worthy: but ver. 25. so doth not your heavenly Father: For, (says he) Do Good, and hope for nothing again; so shall you be like your Father; and then therein you shall shew your selves true Children of the [most high.] In which Word, he insinuates a Reason why God gives all thus: because he is so great and so high a God, as nothing we do can reach him; as David speaks, Pfal. 16. 2. My Goodness extends not unto thee: He is too high to receive any Benefit by what we do. And even that Thankfulness he exacts, he requires it but as an Acknowledgment of our Duty, and for our good, Dent. 10. 12.

And so much for the first, namely, what Goodness and Bounty is: and how God is truly good, and he only so. But this Attribute of his, and the Effects of it, he exerciseth towards all our Fellow-Creatures, and did to Adam in Paradise. But now to us-ward, (as the Apostle speaks) namely, the Sons of Men now fallen, he extendeth and manifests a further Riches, namely, of Patience and Long-suffering, which the Devils partake not of; the good Angels, and other Creatures that sinned not, are incapable of. For in what he bestows on us, he is kind to such as are evil and unthankful, as Christ says, Luke 6. 35. Mercy is more than Goodness, for Mercy always doth respect Misery: and because all the Creatures are subject to a Misery, (Rom. 8. 20, 21, 22.) of Bondage and Vanity, therefore his tender Mercies are over all his Works. But yet, Patience is a further thing than Mercy, (as Mercy is than Goodness) being exercised, not towards miserable Creatures only, but towards Sinners, and includes in it more, and three things further exercised towards them.

1st, Not only that those Persons he doth good unto, do offend, and injure him; but that himself also is exceeding sensible of all those Wrongs, and moved by them, and also provoked to Wrath thereby; it is not Patience else. So in 2 Pet. 3. 9. It is not Slackness, (says he there) God is not slack: that is, he sits not in Heaven as one of the Idol Gods, that regarded not what Acts were kept here below; or took not to heart Mens Carriage towards him; but is long-suffering, or patient; that is, he apprehends himself wronged, is fully sensible of it, and is angry with the Wicked every Day; he hath much ado to forbear, even when he doth forbear, and lets them alone; he exerciseth an Attribute, a Vertue towards them, namely, Patience in keeping in of his Anger; which is as to keep Fire in ones Bosom.

Pfal. 7. 11.

But, 2<sup>dly</sup>, this is not all; He doth not simply forbear and restrain his Anger, but vouchsafeth all that which he forbears them in, that they might repent; and his Mercies as Means leading to Repentance. So it follows in 2 Pet. 3. 9. But God is long-suffering to us-ward, and his long-suffering hath this in it, not willing that any should perish, but come unto Repentance. So also Rev. 2. 21. it is called Space to repent. And all the Blessings he vouchsafeth, he gives them as Means and Guides to lead them to Repentance, as here. And Matth. 18. 29. Have Patience with me, and I will pay thee all, said the Debtor: that is, give me a longer Day and Space to pay the Debt in, and be willing to accept it when I bring it, and let me lie out of Prison, that I may be enabled to pay it.

3<sup>dly</sup>, There is yet a further thing in his Patience, namely, a waiting, and Expectation that Men would come in and repent. So Luke 13. 17. These three Years have I come seeking Fruit, but have found none: There was an Expectation, a Longing, a Desire it would bring forth Fruit; O when shall it once be! says God, Jer. 13. last.

In the last place, that other Attribute of Long-suffering (which is the third) is but as a further Degree of Patience; but Patience lengthned out farther, that is, when God hath been thus patient, long hath forborn and waited for their coming coming in, and that not for three Years, but haply thirty, forty Years, and still they turn not; his Patience then begins (as we would think) to be worn out, and his Anger begins to arise, as if he could forbear no longer; (as it was towards that Tree, Why cumbereth it the Ground? Cut it down) yet he goes on to spare a Man another Year, and many more Years still after that; and endureth, with much long-suffering (as Rom. 9. 22.) the Vessels of Wrath, endures to wonderment above measure, beyond all Expectation, beyond all Patience, as it were; this is Long-suffering.

C H A P. VII.

The exceeding Riches of this common Goodness, Patience, and Long-suffering in God, towards Us as Sinners.

THE second general Head is, That there are [Riches] of this his Goodness, &c. expended on us.
It is a Rich Goodness, Patience, and Long-suffering. Rich in themselves in regard of their Abundance, as they came from him; and rich also in regard of their precious usefulness unto us, as they may be improved by us.

First, In themselves, they are rich: If we consider what is expended all that while. He lays out, not simply his Power to sustain and uphold all things, and to maintain us freely: so to do were nothing to him in Comparison. For whilst he doth but so, nothing goes out of Purse, or is detracted from him, (as I may speak) he feels not the expence either of Power, Providence, &c. All this cost him but words: For he upholds all, creates all by the Word of his Power, Heb. 1. And thus to maintain the Angels, and to have maintained all Mankind before they fell, had been no more. But (my brethren) when now he maintains us Sinners, not simply Power goes forth from him, but his Glory is expended and taken from him, and for the while wasted, detracted from; he loseth at present, every day, infinitely by us, and he is sensible of it; every Sin takes Glory from him, robs him, as he himself complains. In that he who made the World, and upholds it, keeps it together, as the Hoops do the Barrel, it would fall to pieces else, to nothing; in whom all live, as Fishes in the Sea, yea, Upon whom all live) that He should live unknown, unthought of, unserved; yea, disgraced, dishonoured in the World, and have this World lost to him, as it were; and Sin, the Devil, wicked Men, to have all the Glory from him, to be exalted, to carry the whole World before them: This spends upon him, he had need of Riches to bear this.

2. Consider the multitude of Sinners, that thus spend, and live upon these Riches, no less than all the World: He had need of multitude of Patience in him. He forbears not One, but all and every One. We look upon one Man, and seeing him very wicked, we wonder God cuts him not off; we wonder at our selves, that God did not cut us off before this, when once our Eyes are opened: nay, then cast your Eyes over all the World, and stand amazed at God's forbearance towards it. Take the richest Man that ever was, to have Millions of Men in his Debt, it would undo him soon. All the World are in God's Debt, and run still in debt every day, more and more, and yet he breaks not, nay breaks not them.

Nay, 3. To manifest this Abundance yet more, consider not only the Multitude he forbears, but the Time he hath done it. To forbear much, and to forbear it long! Now he hath forborn and been out of Purse from the beginning of the World, since Men were upon the face of the Earth, five thousand and Years and a half already; and how long is it yet to the Day of Judgment, we know not: And yet ye see, He is as Patient, and as bountiful now in the latter days of the World, as he was at the first. Did the greatest Convert that ever was, that had not lived past thirty Years in his sinful Estate (for he was young when he held the Stoners Clothes that stoned Stephen) and yet was the chiefest of Sinners, did he yet (as himself says) think himself a Pattern of Long-suffering, 1 Tim. i. 16. thought it a great matter God should forbear so long? What is the whole World then? if he, being but one small poor Vessel, was so richly laden with the Riches of God's Patience, how is this great Bark of the World then fraught, that hath gone over so vast a Gulf of time? how much of these his Riches have been laden in it?

And then, 4. Add to this the expensive Prodigality of all these Sinners in all Ages; every Sinner spends something. As how lavish are Men of Oaths? All the thoughts of Mens Hearts from their youth up they are evil, and only evil, and continually: and how much then hath every Man spent him? Every Sin is a Debt.

In the second place, This is a rich Goodness and Patience in regard of the preciousness, and usefulness to us.

1. Precious, in regard of what all these Manifestations of his Goodness and forbearance cost, even the Blood of his Son, who as a Lord hath bought and purchased all wicked Men; their Lives, and their Reprieval, all that time that here they live; and all the Blessings and Dispensations of Goodness, which they here enjoy. Christ's Mediation so far prevails with God for all the World, that it puts a stop to the present Proceedings of Justice, which otherwise had pronounced of all, That day thou sinnest, thou diest. So that as Christ may be called the Wisdom and the Power of God; so also the Patience and the Long-suffering of God. For, for his Sake, and through his Means, it is exercised: God would not vouchsafe a Drop of Mercy, but for his Son. Which, I take clearly intimated, in that dealing of his with the Jews, (Exod. 23. 20. compared with Exod. 33. 2, 3, 4, &c.) Immediately after God had given the Law, (by the Rules and Threatnings whereof, God the Father in his Government was to proceed) and after they had transgressed it, He there declares, that he could not go with them: For (according to the Rules of his Government) he should destroy them, but his Angel he would send with them, even Christ, and he might shew them Mercy, for he was to be the Purchaser of it: And that Christ was that Angel, appears, in that God tells them, ver. 21. that his Name was in him, (as by other Scriptures in the New Testament) who also would destroy them, if they turned not and repented, according to the Rules of his Law, the Gospel.

2. And Precious, in regard of the usefulness to us, this his Goodness and Long-suffering tend and serve unto. This makes this Stock of Time afforded you, by God's Goodness, to be Riches indeed, that it is space to repent, Rev. 2. 21. Not a time of Reprieval only, but to get a Pardon in: and this makes all the good things we enjoy to be precious indeed, that they are Means, leading us by the Hand to Repentance. Rich it is, because if your Time be laid out as it ought, you may obtain those far surpassing Riches of Glory reserved for hereafter; Win, and gain Christ by it, and all his unspeakable Riches. All things receive their Worth and Valuation from what they tend to, and from what depends upon them, and the use they might be put to. A Bond, a Man's Will, which in it self (as it is a piece of Parchment) is not worth one Shilling; yet an Estate of many Thousands may lie and depend upon them. And so our Time is not simply precious in it self, but in regard of the Opportunities of it. And accordingly; we do use more or less, to estimate and count Time precious, as the Business allotted to it, is of more or less Consequence: Thus in the ordinary Affairs of our Lives, when a Matter falls out that concerns us, and requires dispatch, and we are cast into straits of time about it, we count every Minute precious: so this Time of ours (which is the chief and principal of that Stock, put into our Hands by God's Patience) being space to repent in, to gain and trade for Heaven with, in this respect every Minute of it, is as much as Heaven is worth; and one Hour of it may be as much in worth, as all the Time you are to spend for ever, after this Life ended: every Minute hath an influence into Eternity. And however you account of it, yet the Ballance of the Sanctuary thus estimates your Time, in calling it your Money: Why lay you out your Money for what is not? &c. (i.e.) this precious Day and Time of Grace; and the Thoughts, Cares, and Endeavours which are brought forth and minted in this Time allotted you, these are your Money to obtain Heaven by. And thus it hath been esteemed by holy and godly Men, who yet had less need to value it, having done the main Business it was allotted for. David in Psal. 39. 13. being brought very low, O spare me a little, that I may recover my Strength, before I go hence, and be seen no more. So Hezekiah, Isa. 38. how did he sue for; and when he had obtained fifteen Years, how did he bless God? ver. 20. of that chapter. Or if by this now said, you yet judge not so, think with thy self, what at the Day of Death thou wouldst account of an Hour, of a Month, a Year? what others, who have lain gasping, who would have given a World for Time again? as I have heard one crying Day and Night, Call Time again! or if not then, O what in Hell?

Book XII.

The third thing I am to shew, is, That all this of Goodness, Patience, and Forbearance, is afforded towards you as a Means, and as an help to bring you to Repentance. Acts 17. 28. God (says the Apostle there) hath allotted to Men, both their Times to live in, and also their Places of Abode and Habitations, all richly furnished with Blessings to uphold their Lives and Beings. And to what end are these thus afforded? That they might seek the Lord, if by groping after him (even as Men in the dark) they might haply find him. But Men being in the dark, and destitute of Guides to bring them unto God, may yet be as far off from finding him as ever: Therefore add but the words of my Text, here, to what the Apostle says there, and we see, that this Goodness of God takes us by the Hand, and leads us to Repentance; to turn from Sin unto God, and so to find him. And thus you are led unto God, by the help of three several Guides, which each after other sweetly lead you and point you out to this.

1. All this Goodness bears witness to your Hearts of a gracious Hand of God's that extends it self in all these; therefore in that 17th of the Acts, he subjoyns, God is not far off from any of us. That there is a good God bestows all things on you, is a thought lies at next Door unto the enjoyment of the Blessings; it is not far off. Yea, and they all (says the Apostle to the same Gentiles, Acts 14. 16.) do bear witness of him, though they went on in their own ways, yet (says he there) God left not himself without Witness; that is, not without some thought and impression on their hearts that his good Hand bestowed all on them, when he filled their Hearts with Food and Gladness.

2. His Goodness having brought thus God to Mens Thoughts, then your own Consciences take you, and lead you down into your selves, and bear Witness, that you by walking in your own Ways, do nothing but provoke and offend this good God. So Rom. 2. 15.

3. And then, there is an indelible Principle common to all Men, teaching them to love those who love them; which therefore, after the two former have brought you hitherto, doth point you to Repentance, as the conclusion. [Shall we go on to sin against this God, so good? return evil for good?] Is not this a natural necessary Consequent out of all these, to say, as they, Let us therefore fear the Lord, who giveth us the early and the latter rain? as it is Jer. 5. 26, 27. And though Men are said not to know this, in the Text, yet the meaning is, they do not thoroughly and effectually consider thus much, so as thereby to be brought to Repentance, yet however there is such a Witness, even of all this, in all Mens Hearts; and thus they are led on unto Repentance, would they but see their Way, and follow their Guide.

C H A P. VIII.

A particular Enumeration of some eminent common Mercies, throughout Mens Lives: And Aggravations of sinning against them.

THE improvement of all this shall be an Expostulation (as here the Apostle carries it) with sinful and impenitent Men, for going on to sin against all this Mercy; together with an Aggravation of their sinfulness hereby. Men, if Young, do usually take the advantage of this their precious Time, (which out of much long-suffering in God is vouchsafed to them) and of all those precious Opportunities and Blessings they enjoy, to improve them only, in reaping and gathering in unto themselves the Pleasures of Sins; making the Time of Youth and middle Age their Harvest of Sinning, and yet think to escape by repenting afterwards: and then when Old, after they have already enjoyed a long and fair Sun-shine Day to have turned to God in, and wherein to have sown much Seed to the Spirit, the comfort whereof they might now have reaped; yet as they have altogether neglected this to do, all their Life, so in old Age they go on to do so still, even whilst they see they have any Day left, be it never so near the setting: and do choose rather desperately to venture their Estate in the World to come, upon the Riches of his Mercy pardoning, (though without all care and endeavour to change their Hearts or Lives) upon the experience they have had of the Riches of his Mercy forbearing them in this World, thinking to find him the same in both. With all such, let me reason a little, and from the Riches of God's Goodness, Patience, &c. spent upon them, at once expostulate with them for their Impenitency, and aggravate to them their Sinfulness, and also, if possible, prevail with them to go on to despise it thus no longer. And if there be any Principle of common Ingenuity, any Spark (I do not say of Grace, but of Goodness of Nature) left unextinguish'd, me-thinks it should affect you, and do some good on you e're I have done.

And to that end, consider a little, and compare together God's loving Kindnesses towards you, and your unkind Dealings towards him.

To begin at the beginning of thy Being: how much Riches of Goodness were there laid and buried in thy Foundation? when the first Corner-stone was laid, when thou wert made a Man, (besides the cost which hath been spent upon this Building since) and cursed as thou art, even that very Foundation was laid in bloody Iniquities, in which thou wert conceived; and the very Materials of Soul and Body, thou consistest of, being tempered with Sin, like the Stone in the Wall, and Beam out of the Timber, cry out every moment to God against thee, Rase it, Rase it, even to the very Ground. Hab. 2. 10, 11.
Psal. 137. 7.

Consider how but the other Day thou wert meer Nothing, and when an infinite number that never were nor shall be, were in as great a possibility of Being as thou (for when he made this World, he could have laid it aside wholly, and created Millions of other Worlds) yet he chose Thee to have a Room in this, but one World, (for he means to make no more) and this World could have stood without Thee, and did before thou wert, and shall do when art gone: yet he called Thee forth out of Nothing, and by his Almighty Power, had thee stand forth when there was no need of thee. I say, he chose Thee to have a Being: for as there is an election of Persons to Salvation, so out of things that were not, and were but entia possibilia, unto Being. And Wretch that thou art, if thou repentest not, thou destroyest what God hath made, and hadst better have kept Nothing still, and never have peept out; or else to skulk into the first Nothing again, for thou art lost; better never to have been born.

2. Consider yet more Goodness. Thou mightest have been admitted into the lowest Form of Creatures, have been a Worm, a Flea, a Flie, which we Men fillip and crush to Death at Pleasure; but to be made a Man, created one of the States, Barons, Lords of the World; the first Hour admitted into the highest Order; crowned a King in the Womb, as David says of Man, Psal. 8. 5. made a little lower than the Angels, but crowned with Glory and Honour; made to have Dominion over all the Works of his Hands. The one half of thee is more worth than a whole World, [thy Soul] as Christ says, that went to the Price of Souls; upon which God hath bestowed an Eternity of being, and made it the Picture of his Essence, his Image, when other Creatures were but his Footsteps. And thy Body that other Piece, and indeed but the Case, the Sheath (as Daniel's Phrase is, and the Chaldee hath it, Dan. 7. 15.) Of thee what a curious Workmanship is it? wonderfully and fearfully made, as David says, Psal. 139. 15. curiously wrought in the lower Parts of the Earth. So there he calls the Womb: because, as curious Workmen, when they have some choice piece in hand, perfect it in private, and then bring it forth to Light for Men to gaze at: And God out of a Tear, a Drop, he hath limned out the Epitome of the whole World; the Index of all the Creatures, Sun, Moon, Stars, are to be found in thee. And yet Wretch as thou art, thou art withal the Epitome of Hell, and broughtest into the World with thee the Seeds and Principles of all the Villanies that have been acted in the World; and if thou repentest not, thou hadst better have been a Toad or Serpent, the hatefulest of Creatures; and wouldst change thy Condition with them one Day.

Ecclef. 12. 2.

3. Being a Man, hast thou all thy Members that belong unto a Man? it is because he wrote them all in his Book, Psal. 139. 16. If he had left out an Eye in his common Roll-Book, thou hadst wanted it; is not that a Mercy? ask the Blind. If thou hadst wanted those Windows to look out at, thy Body would have been a Dungeon, the World a Prison. If a Tongue (which is thy Glory) or an Ear, thou hadst lived among Men, as a Beast among Men. And yet when God gave thee all these, what did he but put Weapons into an Enemies Hand? for hast thou not used all these, as Weapons of Unrighteousness? Inasmuch as the Tongue, but one Member, is by the Apostle called, a World of Iniquity; and if thou repentest not, thou hadst better (as Christ says) have entered into the World without an Eye, an Ear, a Tongue, than with these to go for ever into Hell.

4. When thou wert taken out of the Womb, (where thou didst remain but whilest thou wert a framing) what a stately Palace hath he brought thee into, [the World] which thou findest prepared, and ready furnished with all things for thy Maintenance, as Canaan was to the Children of Israel; a stately House thou builedst not, Trees thou plantedst not, a rich Canopy spangled, spread as a Curtain over thy Head; he sets up a Taper for thee to work by [the Sun] till thou art weary, Psal. 104. 23. and then it goes down without thy bidding, for it knows its going down, ver. 19. then he draws the Curtains over half the World, that Men may go to rest, Thou causest Darknes, and it is Night, ver. 20. An House this World is, so curiously contrived, that to every Room of it, even to every poor Village, Springs do come as Pipes to find thee Water. So Psal. 104. 10, 11. The Pavement of which House thou treadest on, brings forth thy Food, ver. 14. Bread for Strength, Wine to cheer thy Heart, Oyl to make thy Face to shine, ver. 15. Which three are there synecdochically put for all things needful to Strength, Ornament, and Delight. The very Chambers of that House (as David calls them) drop Fatness, and water the Earth, ver. 13. He wheels the Heavens about, and spins out time for thee: every Moment of which time brings forth some Blessing or other, and no one is barren. Therefore Psal. 65. 11. the Year is said to be crowned with Goodness: a Diadem of Goodness encircles it round. And of these common Mercies which the poorest do enjoy, Some understand that Speech of the Apostle, 1 Tim. 6. 17. Who gives us all things richly to enjoy. In the all things, pointing to the general rich Benefits of this Universe, which the living God bestows upon us the poorest Believers Believers as well as rich, whose Pride in Riches he doth by that Consideration quell. And yet thou hast filled this World thou thus art brought into, with nothing but Rebellions, as God hath done with Blessings; and hast piled up Sins to Heaven; and thou hast pressed all these Armies of Blessings thou findest the World filled with, to fight against their Maker, under the Devil's Banner, whom thy Wickedness sets up as the God of this World. And as the Year is crowned with Goodness, so thy Years with Wickedness, and no Moment is barren, but all thy Imaginations are evil continually: Yea, thou hast sinned against Heaven and Earth, having subjected the whole Creation unto Vanity, laden the Earth, and filled it so with Wickedness, that it groans, the Axeltree of it is even ready to crack under thee, and the Ground thou treadest on to spue thee out. Rom. 8.

5. Since thou camest into the World, what a long time hath God suffered thee to live in it; he hath not spared thee three Years only (as he did the Fig-tree) but thirty, forty. And when thou first madest bold to thrust forth thy traiterous Head into the World, Death (which thy Sin brought into the World with it) might have arrested thee, and told thee, this World was no Place for thee, for Hell is only our own Place, Acts 1. 25. thou shouldest have been executed the first Day. And is not so much time of Ease from Punishment infinite Mercy? Cast but your Thoughts upon the Angels that fell, that were cast to Hell upon the first Moment of their sinning; do but think with your selves, what they would give to have so much time cut out of that Eternity they are to run through, and to have it set apart for Ease, and to be void of Torment. If the rich Man in Hell, made it such a great Suit, and counted it so great a Favour to have but one Drop of Water (which could but for a little while, scarce more than a Moment) have cooled and eased, not his whole Body, but the tip of his Tongue only; how much more would he have thought it Mercy, to have lived so many Years again as he had done free from Torment? what is it then for thee, to live so many Years free from the falling of the least Drop of that Wrath, whereof the full Vials should have been poured out many Years ago? The same Law was out against us, which was out against the Angels; that Day thou eatest, thou shalt die the Death: what puts the Difference? the Apostle tells us, his Long-suffering to us-ward: not to them: for in chap. 2. 4. he had told us, that he spared not the Angels which fell, but posted and threw them into Hell as soon as they had sinned. 2 Pet. 3. 9.

6. But further, is this all? hath it been barely a time of Ease given thee, a time of Reprieval? No, it hath been more, Space to repent, and so to obtain thy Pardon in, Rev. 2. 21. And as it hath been more than Ease of Torment unto thee, so also consider it hath been more than Slackness in him that hath afforded it to thee, as the Apostle there doth tell us. It is not that he hath took no notice of thy offending him, but he is sensible of every idle Thought, of every Oath, vain Word, and as the Scripture tells us, he is pained at the very Heart, infomuch as he repents that ever he made thee; he is angry with thee every Day thou risest, every time he looks on thee; when ever he meets thee going into the Tavern to be drunk, the Whore-house to be unclean, when he meets thee reeling in the Streets, he hath much ado to forbear killing thee, as he had to forbear Moses when he met him in the Inn: He is ready to have a blow at thee, and it should not need be any great Stroak, or fetching his Arm about; if he did but blow on thee, thou wert consumed. To suffer thee to live, doth therefore cost him much Riches of Patience; but to cut thee off, need cost him nothing, he can do that with Ease. But further, all is joined with a Willingness that thou shouldst repent, and not perish, as that Place tells thee. Gen. 6. P[sa]. 7. 11.]

It were much Mercy for a Traitor to be reprieved, to have a Lease of his Life for twenty Years, though there were no Hope nor Means of obtaining his final Pardon after that time spent, and this also, though but for one Treason, and though all that time of his Reprieval he carries and behaves himself never so obediently. But unto thee, this time hath been more than a longer Day of Life, and putting off the Execution (which for the Guilt of that first Rebellion should have been acted on thee in the Womb) it hath been time to repent in. And yet consider if this time of thy Reprieval hath not made thee so much the

the more rebellious? and if thou hast not spent all this time in making up the Measure of thine Iniquity full? and hath it been Willingness only in God that thou shouldest not perish? yea more, joynd with waiting also, when it should once be, thinking the time long, as longing and desiring that thou wouldst repent, that he might pardon thee. Thus Jer. 13. ult. God expresth himself, When shall it once be? yea, and consider how many Days of Paiment have been set, and how many Promises made, and broken, all by thee, and yet still he waiteth unto Wonderment. Thou receivedst Press-Money at thy Baptism, when thou didst promise to forsake the Devil and all his Works, and to begin to serve him, when thou shouldst begin to discern between Good and Evil. But no sooner did the Light of Knowledg dawn in thy Heart, but thou beganst to fight against him; and thy first Thoughts to this Day have been only and continually evil. And then (haply) in thy younger Years, before thou hadst tasted of the Pleasures of Sin, he gave thee an inkling, by means of thy Education, of his Goodness, and of that Happiness to be had in him, and thou hadst the first Offer of him, e're thy tender Years were poisoned by the World; and he hath dealt with thee again and again, both by his Word and Spirit; not waited only, but wooed thee, and hath been a Suiter to thy Heart long: and I appeal to your Hearts, how many Promises you have made him, of turning from all your Rebellions to him, after such and such a Sermon, as were brought powerfully home; In such a Sickness, and in such a Strait, thy Conscience knows full well: And still God hath made Trial of thee, and given thee a longer Day; and though thou hast broke with him again and again, yet he hath forborn thee again and again, and hath waited this twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, sixty Years, when thou shouldest come in, and be as good as thy Word, and still thou hast failed him. And yet behold and wonder, and stand confounded at the Riches of his Long-suffering, that after so many Years Expencc and Promises broken by thee, Expectations failed in him, and many Mockeries of him, after all this, he is yet willing to accept of the Remainder, if thou wouldst spend the rest of the time left thee in the Flesh, according to his Will, as the Apostle speaks, 1 Pet. 4. 3. even to lose Principal, Use and all, for what is past, and requires but the same Composition which was propounded the first Day; yea and not only so, but with Promise to become a Debtor unto thee, to bestow further Riches on thee than ever yet thou sawest, or art able to conceive: yea and all this, when he could have his Penny-worths out of thee another way, and lose not one Farthing by thee, but by punishing thee in Hell, recover all to the utmost Farthing.

7. Neither hath it been barely and simply an Act of Patience and Forbearance, though joined with this Willingness, thou shouldest not perish; or merely a permissive Act of suffering thee to live. But God shews forth yet more Riches of Goodness joined with this Long-suffering; in him ye live, and move, and have your being; And dost thou live in him only? nay thou livest on him also, upon his Cost and Charges; I have hung upon thee (says David) from my Mother's Womb. And consider what thy Life is, that of so small a bottom, he should spin out so long a Thred! Had he not drawn it out by his immediate Power, as the Spider doth her Web out of her own Bowels, it had been at an End the second Minute; to maintain that radical Moisture, that Oil that feeds the Lamp, and Light of thy Life, that radicale Balsamum; this is as great a Miracle as the maintaining the Oyl in the Cruze of that poor famished Widow. And further yet, hath he maintained thee only? Nay more, hath he not defended thee, took thy part, protected thee, took thee under his Wing, as the Hen doth her Chickens, to shelter thee from those many Dangers thy Life hath been exposed unto? Otherwise, how many ways, e're this, hadst thou been snatch'd away out of the Land of the Living? Is thy Case the Case of the Fig-tree only, (which before we mentioned) that when God cried, Cut it down, another cried, Spare it? but there have been many have cried, Cut thee down, and God hath cried, Spare thee: There is never a Minute but the Devil would have had a Blow at thy Life, as he longed to have had at Job's. That thou, a poor lump of Flesh, shouldst walk through, and in the midst of such an Host of fierce and cruel Enemies, whose Hearts are swelled with Malice lice at thee, and God should say to him, concerning thee, as he did to Laban concerning Jacob, Touch not this Man! And yet if thou wert not liable to his Malice and Power, yet, Consider how many Dangers and Casualties besides, which thou hast been kept in, and from; as Falls, Drowning, Killing, many waies: how often have the Arrows of Death come whisking by thee, took away those next thee, (haply of thy Kindred, Brother, Sister, Yoke-fellow, of the same House, Family with thy self) and yet have missed thee? And if we look no farther than these Days of Mortality we have lived in; two great Plagues in this Kingdom, how have the most of us all here survived, and now the third is increasing and growing upon us? To have our Lives in such dear Years of time, when to have our Life for a Prey is Mercy enough, as Jeremy told Baruch. That these Arrows should flie round about us, over our Heads, and miss us! that God's Arrests should seize upon Men, walking, talking with us, and spare us! How often, many other ways, hath thy Neck been upon the Block, and the Axe held over, and yet hath fallen besides! To go no farther than thy own Body, the Humors thereof, if God should not restrain them, would overflow and drown it, as the Waters would the Earth, if God should not say to them, Stay your proud Waves. And when in a Sickness they have been let out, yet God hath kept a Sluce, that so much should break forth, and no more, as should purge and wash the Body, and make it more healthful; as the overflowing of Nilus doth the Ground. And when, at such a time, thy Body hath been brought low and weak, and like a crazy rotten Ship in a Storm, taking in Water on all sides, so that all the Physicians in the World could not have stopt those Leaks; he hath rebuked Wind and Sea, hath careened, mended thee, and launched thee into the World again, as whole, as sound, and strong as ever; and God hath said, as Job 33. that Thou shouldst not die. In a word, if thou consider but what thy Life is, and the Dangers it is subject to, thou wilt acknowledg it is as great a wonder to preserve it, as to see a Glas that hath been in continual use, gone through many Hands, and hath had many Knocks and Falls, to be kept for forty, fifty, sixty Years whole and unbroken: God hath carried thy Life in his Hand, as it were a Candle in a paper Lanthorn in a strong windy Night, and kept it from being extinct, when as we often see in many, that a little Cold comes in, (but at a little cranny) and blows their Candle out, as Job speaks, Chap. 21. 17.

Jer. 45. 5.

And, 8. How have these Years and Hours of thy Time been filled up with His Goodness? and with how many Comforts? For a Traitor to live, though but upon Bread and Water all his Days, what Favour is it? And so hadst thou lived all this time never so miserably, though all thy Days thou hadst eaten thy Bread in Darkness, and hadst had much Sorrow with thy Sickness, (as Solomon speaks.) Some there are, who, as Job speaks, die in the bitterness of their Souls, and never eat with pleasure, scarce seeing a good Day; and if this had been thy case, yet this had been infinite Mercy. Even whatsoever is on this side Hell, is Mercy. In Lam. 3. 22. say they, in the worst estate the Church was ever in on Earth under the Old Testament, It is thy [Mercies,] not Mercy only, but multitude of Mercies are shewn us, that we are not consumed, because his Mercies are renewed every Morning. If at the brink of Hell, and not in, is Mercy. But hath he not all this while filled thy Heart (put for the inwards of Man's Body) with Food and Gladness, as the Apostle speaks, Acts 14. 17? It were infinite to go over the particular Kinds of common Comforts, which God vouchsafes Men here: not half the Riches of Goodness is yet told: It would require an Age to make an Inventory of them.

Ecclef. 5. 17.

Job 21. 25.

Hast thou a House in the World to hide thy Head in, and keep thee from the Injuries of the Weather? (which was more than Christ had) God is thy Landlord, (though it may be thou payest him no Rent;) he it is that builds the House, Psal. 127. 1. Hast thou a Bed to lie upon? he makes it, especially in thy Sickness, Psal. 41. 3. Hast thou Sleep? (which is the Nurse of Nature, the Parenthesis of all thy Cares and Grievs,) he rocks thee asleep every Night; and as he gives thee a House, so he gives thee Rest. It is God keeps off those Gnats of distracting Cares and Grievs, and Thoughts and Terrors of Conscience science would buz about a Man, and keep one continually waking. And when thou sleepest, is thy Sleep pleasant to thee? God makes it so. Hast thou Clothes to cover thy Nakedness? read old Jacob's Indentures, Gen. 28. 20. and thou shalt see by them whose finding they are at; If thou wilt give me Rayment, that is one of his Conditions there mentioned. Yea, do thy Clothes keep thee warm? even this is attributed to him, Job 37. 17. He fills thee, feeds thee, spreads thy Table, serves thee, fills thy Cup, as David describes his Goodness, Psal. 23. 5. and gives thee thy Meat in due season; and hath not failed thee a Meals Meat, but thou hast had it at thy appointed time, as Job speaks. And hast thou Health? which is the Salt to all these Blessings, (without which thou wouldst say, thou hadst no pleasure in them) He is the God of thy Health, and keeps off Diseases. I will put none of those Diseases on thee; I am the Lord who healeth thee; that is, do preserve thee from them, which else would seize upon thee. And these Mercies he vouchsafeth unto you that are the poorest, and loadeth you with these and the like Benefits every day, Psal. 68. 19.

Psal. 127. 2.

Book XII.

Exod. 15. 26.

But hast thou Riches added to these, and Abundance? The Blessing of God maketh rich, Prov. 10. 22. Though thou hadst them by Birth, yet he made those Friends and Parents of thine, but Feoffees in trust for thee; They were no more, it was God who bequeathed them, Eccles. 2. last. Or whether thou hast got them since by thine own Industry, it is he gives thee power to get Wealth, Deut. 8. 18. Prov. 12. 24. and out of a small Estate maketh Men great, Job. 8. 7. It is he that by his Providence hath stop'd the secret Issues and Drains of Expence, at which other Men's Estates run out; hath stop'd that Hole in the bottom of the Bag, as the Prophet speaks. And with these Riches, hath he given thee a Heart to use them? This, as it is a farther Mercy, Eccles. 5. 19. and Chap. 6. 2. so it is said to be from him, as it is noted there.

Rom. 15. 31.

Or, hast thou Credit (which is better than Riches: so says Solomon, Prov. 22. 1.) it is God who gives it, not thy Wisdom, Parts, or Worth: Eccles. 9. 11. Favour is not always to Men of Skill; that is, not acceptance of what they do, without a farther Shine and Blessing from God. Therefore besides the Gift of Wisdom, he gave a further promise of Honour also unto Solomon, 2 Chron. 1. 11. It is God who fashions Mens Opinions. The Apostle prays to God, his Service might be accepted of the Saints, though no Service was like to be more acceptable, for it was the gathering and bringing in of Alms and Relief to them. It is he rules Mens Tongues, bids Men bles, as well as he bad Shimei curse: and he hath kept thee from such gross Sins, which as Flies, would have putrified the Ointment of thy good Name, who also conceals those thou hast committed, and hides thee from the strife of Tongues, Job. 5. 21.

Hast thou Friends, or do any love thee? (wherein much of the Comfort of our Lives consists; and therefore David says of Jonathan, 2 Sam. 1. 26. Thou wert pleasant to me) it is God who gives favour in Mens Eyes; so he did Joseph, Gen. 39. 21. If any Man or Creature doth thee a Kindness, he toucheth their Hearts, (as it is said of the Men who clave to Saul) and visits for thee; He made the Aegyptians to be beyond all reason the Israelites Friends, gave them Favour in their Eyes, as the Text tells us. And hence, Gen. 33. 10. Jacob says, He saw the Face of God, in reconciled Esau's Face, for God's Favour appeared in his Look. He put you into your Callings, Ranks and Stations, gives you all your Skill, Success in them; The meanest of Trades, as to Sow, and Plough, and Thresh, they are from the Lord, who is wonderful in working, (Isa. 28. from 23 to the end) even as well as the Skill of the most curious Ingraver, Limner, or Embroyderer; as of Bezaleel the Scripture speaks; God was his Master, taught him. Hast thou enlarged Parts and Gifts, for higher Employments? it is not thy Birth or Age, hath acquired them unto thee: Job 32. 8, 9. Great Men are not always wise, therefore it goes not by Birth; nor have the Aged always Understanding; nor goes it only by Experience, but it is the Inspiration of the Almighty gives Understanding. And hast a Calling answerable to thy Parts, to be a Scholar, and so hast thy Mind Mind enriched and enobled with the best and choicest Jewel the World hath, Wisdom and Knowledge; whereby the Mind is elevated as much above other Mens, as they are above Beasts? God hath been thy great Tutor. The Mind of Man is God's Candle, and he maketh wiser than a Man's Teachers, as he did Moses in Egyptian learning, Daniel, David.

Chap. 7.

Prov. 20. 27.

To conclude, Hast thou comfort in all these? in Riches, Learning, Credit, Wife, Children, Meat, Drink, &c. He puts in all the Sugar, Delight and Pleasure, that especially depends on him, even to fashion the Heart to all these. As Aire lights not without the Sun, nor Wood heats not without Fire; so neither doth thy Condition comfort thee without God. And therefore, Acts 14. 17. it is said, He filled their Hearts, as with Food, so, with Gladness.

And besides all these, consider the many peculiar Passages and Turnings of his Providence towards thee for thy Good; the Workings of things together, ever and anon to do thee a good Turn; the packing and plotting all for thee, better than thou couldst have plotted for thy self: as thy Relief in many Straits, Success in many Businesses. He works all our Works in us, and for us, as Isaiah speaks, Isa. 26. Thou mayst say he hath taken such special Care and Providence of me, as if he had regarded no Man else in the World.

And now when thou hast considered all, bethink thy self withal a little, of thy dealings towards him: what have been the Effects and Fruits of all this Goodness? hold up thy Head, Man, look God in the Face. It is well yet, that Shame begins to cover thee. How hath that his Patience and Long-suffering, vouchsafing thee space to repent, wrought with thee? how nigh to Repentance hath it brought thee? Such is the perverseness of Man's Nature, as Solomon tells us, Eccles. 8. 11. that because Sentence against an evil Work is not presently executed, therefore the Hearts of the Sons of Men are fully set to do evil: Because God defers Punishing, they defer Repenting: thou thinkest to spend the most precious of thy Time and Strength in Sinning, and to give God the Dregs, the Bottom, the last Sands, thy Dotage, which thy very self and Friends will be weary of. And all these Blessings and Comforts which God hath vouchsafed thee, how hast thou used them against him? This Oil which should have been Fuel to thy Thankfulness, hath increased the Fire of thy Lusts; and thy Lusts have consumed all, Jam. 4. The Riches he hath given, thou hast made Idols of, and sacrificed thy dearest, morning, daily Thoughts and Affections unto, as God complains, Ezek. 16. from the 15, and so on: [His Meat] (as at the 29. ver. there he calls it) thou sacrificedst to thy Belly, which thou hast made thy God; thy Strength to Women: the Wealth he hath given you, you have made use of, but to live at an higher Rate of Sinning, and to procure the sweetest Bits, the daintiest and most costly Sins: The edg of that Sword of Power God hath put into thy Hand, thou hast turned against him and his, haply both his Children and Ministers; so that God, by giving thee all these, hath but made thee the more able to offend him, and hath strengthened an Enemy; and his sparing thee thus long, hath but made thee more bold to do it; all his mercies have but fortified thy Heart against him.

Do ye requite the Lord thus, ye foolish People and unwise? as Moses expostulates the case, Deut. 32. 6. As Christ said to the Jews, For which of all my good Works do ye stone me? So say I to you, for which of all his Mercies is it ye sin against him? What, to fight against him with his own Weapons; to betray all he gives you into the Devil's (his Enemy's) hands? What Iniquity did you ever find in him, thus to deal? God will one Day thus expostulate his Cause with you, and heap Coals of Fire upon all your Heads, (if that you turn not) because you have rendred him Evil for Good: and all these Mercies, thus abused, will be as so many Coals to make Hell-Fire the hotter. And to reason this point yet further with you out of the Text, and from what Arguments it will after all this afford to work upon you.

Book XIII

Consider, first, what it is thou doest: whilst thus thou goest on, thou art a Despiser of the Riches of his Goodness. That which is opposite to Goodness, must needs be transcendently Evil. What, art thou Evil, because God is Good? and so much the more Evil, by how much more he is Good; surely there must needs be an unexhausted Treasure of Wickedness in thee, which will also cause in the end a Treasure of Wrath in him.

What, and sin against Mercy, Patience, Long-suffering, added to Goodness? Mercy of all Attributes, as the richest so the most glorious: for it is that God glories in: in the abusing of which therefore he thinks himself most debased; of all Attributes the tenderest: What, kick against his Bowels? so are his Mercies stiled: Canst hit him no where else but there? To despise a Man's Wisdom, Power, Learning, is not so much as to despise his Love. What canst thou imagine will become of thee, when thou comest to die? What is it thou wilt then come to plead and cry for? O, Mercy, Mercy! why, Wretch that thou art, it is Mercy thou hast sinned against. Riches of Mercy and Patience abused, turns into Fury. I may allude to that speech, 1 Sam. 2. 25. If a Man sin against his Brother, the Judge shall judge him; but if against God, who shall plead for him? So, hadst thou sinned against any other Attribute, Mercy might have pleaded for thee; but if against Mercy it self, what shall?

Well, if thou goest on thus to do so still, thou hast a hard Heart; it argues the greatest hardness of all other; that is the second. You use not (however it comes to pass) to deal thus with the worst of Men, not with Sinners like your selves; but to them that love you, you render Love again, Luke 6. 33. and will you deal thus with God? Is it a small thing to weary Men, but you must weary God also? says Isa. 7. 13. He thought it infinitely less to abuse Men than God; but you carry your selves as Men to Men, but as Devils towards God; herein ye have not the Hearts of Men in you; not Principles of common humanity, whereby ye differ from Beasts. The Cords of Love are called the Cords of a Man, Hof. 11. 6. the Spirit of Man breaks, melts under Kindness. Beasts indeed ye use to prick with Goads, but the Cords of a Man are the Cords of Love; no Principle being more deeply engraven in Mens Hearts than this, to do good to those who do good to you, Mat. 5. 46. Nay, would ye had herein yet but the Hearts of Beasts; The Oxe knows his Owner, and the Ass his Master's Crib; but my People have rebelled against me. A Sin so much against Nature, that he calls upon those Creatures, who have no other kind of being than of Nature, viz. the Heavens to stand astonish'd at it. But as Nature elevated by Grace, riseth higher than it self, so being poisoned with Sin, it is cast below it self; Sins against it self, and the Principles which are begotten in and with it self: if it were not so, how were it possible thou shouldst hate him who never did thee hurt? and go on to wound him, who weepeth over thee? and despise that in him most, which seeks to save thee? and load him with Sins (as Amos 2. 13.) who loads thee daily with his Mercies, Psal. 68. 19.

There is a third Consideration the Text suggests, to shew the fearfulness of thy Sin in this respect; and that is, that thou goest on every Minute, thou continuest in Sin and impenitency, by despising his Goodness, so treasure up Wrath against the Day of Wrath. To sin against Mercy, of all other encreaseth Wrath; thou must pay Treasures for Treasures spent. As thou lavishly spendest Riches of Mercy, so God will recover Riches of Glory out of thee: God will not lose by thee, but will reckon with thee in Wrath for every moment of Patience spent: For every Sand of Long-suffering that runs out, he drops in a drop of Wrath into his Vials, and it will prove a Treasure, such a Treasure as shall bring in an eternal Revenue of Glory unto God, of all his Glory lost, and Riches spent, with advantage; such a Treasure as will ask an Eternity of Time to be spent upon thy Destruction, and yet be never emptied or made less; and the longer thou goest on, the greater heap it will swell unto. And dost thou know and consider how fast this Treasure fills, and how much the longer thou goest on to add to it, still the last Year more than all all the Years before? every minutes Impenitency adding to this Heap and Sum, as new Figures added in a Sum use to do; the first is but One, the second makes it Ten, the third an Hundred, the fourth a Thousand; and what a Sum will this grow to?

Ah but thou wilt say, Tush, I am in Prosperity, in Health, Wealth, and Ease, and to Day shall be as to be as to Morrow, and much more abundant, Isa. 56. 12.

Well, but fourthly, consider out of the Text, that there will come a Day at last, the Morrow whereof will be a Day of Wrath: It is treasuring up now, but is not brought forth till the Day of Wrath, till which Day thou mayest go on and prosper: And thus Job giving us the Reason why wicked Men prosper, says, chap. 21. They are reserved to the *Day of Wrath*s; in the Plural, because Treasures are laid up against them. Thou art yet spared, because thy Sins are not yet full, and so that Treasure is not yet full, as the Sins of the Amorites were not; and so all this thy present Prosperity fits thee but for Hell. So, Rom. 9. 22. they are said to be Vessels fitted for Destruction, by Long-suffering. And so Nahum tells us, they are but as Stubble laid out in the Sun a drying, till it be fully dry, Nah. 1. 10. that it may burn the better; and like Grapes that are let to hang in the Sun-shine till they be ripe, Rev. 15. 16. and so thou for the Winepress of God's Wrath.

But thy senseless Heart may hap to say, I see no such thing, and these are but threats: I think so, therefore it is said in the Text, that it is a Treasure; which, as Treasures use to be, is hid till that day comes, and then revealed, as the words of the Text have it. For though thou seeest not this Day a coming, yet God, who sits in heaven, sees thy Day a coming, as David speaks, Psal. 37. 13. who there is therefore said to see it, to shew that the Sinner himself sees it not. And it is coming faster than thou art aware of it, 2 Pet. 2. 3. Damnation slumbereth not, though thou dreamest not of it; lingreth not: as an Hue and Cry, it is sent out, and is on its course, and will in the end overtake thee; and that when thou least thinkest of it, as a Thief in the Night, when thou art asleep, yet dreamest not of it, 2 Theff. 5. when thou art least prepared for it, as in the old World, when they were eating and drinking: As God watcheth when his Child is at the best and ripest for Heaven, and then takes him to himself; so he will watch thee to take thee at the worst and ripest for Hell, and give thee no time to prepare; They go down to Hell in a Moment, Psal. 73. 9.

In Respect of SIN and PUNISHMENT.

B O O K XIII.

Of the Punishment of Sin in Hell; that the Wrath of God is the immediate Cause of that Punishment.

Heb. 10. 30, 31. For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompence saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judg his People. It is a fearful thing to fall into the Hands of the living God.

Rom. 9. 22. What if God willing to shew his Wrath, and to make his Power known, endured with much Long-suffering, the Vessels of Wrath fitted to Destruction.

C H A P. I.

The Subject and General Division of the Discourse.

WE have seen how sinful and guilty every Man is in his unregenerate Condition; what last remains, is to consider the Greatness of that Punishment, which all this Sinfulness deserves: a Punishment so great, that it cannot be comprehended by our Thoughts, nor ever be sufficiently expressed: For what Hell and Destruction are, is a Mystery, as well as what Heaven is: And the true and proper Notion or Conception of either, are a Riddle to the most of Men. As Eye hath not seen, Ear not heard, nor hath it entered into the Hearts of Man (the Natural ral Man) what God hath prepared for those that love him; so, nor what God hath prepared for them that hate him. For it is the same, and no other Punishment but that which is prepared for the Devil and his Angels, as Christ says. And what it can be that should torment them, or be the immediate Executioner of Vengeance on them, the Imagination of Man confined to worldly Agents and Instruments, cannot divine or take in.

Other Scriptures go Metaphorically to work, in setting out this Punishment by things outwardly, sensibly dreadful. But these Scriptures (of all other) that are my Texts, do more plainly, and without Parables declare it to us, in its immediate Causes, and from them do leave us to infer the Fearfulness.

For instance, other Scriptures set it out to us as a Prison, 1 Pet. 3. 19. large enough, to be sure, to hold Men and Devils, [The Wicked shall be turned into Hell, and all the Nations that forget God, Psal. 9. 17.] As also by their being retained in Chains of Darkness; 2 Pet. 2. 4. where Men must lie till they have paid the utmost Farthing, Mat. 5. 26. where is nothing but Darkness, utter Darkness, Blackness of Darkness, Jude 4. that is, an emptiness of all Good, not a Beam of Light to all Eternity. Also a place of Torment, Luke 6. 48. where there is not admitted one drop to cool ones Tongue (Luke 15.) in the midst of the most raging scorchings. Also, I find it elsewhere expressed by the most horrid Punishments and Tortures that were found amongst the Nations, cutting Men in pieces, dividing them in the midst, (δινοτομῶσαι, Mat. 24. 49, 51.) tearing them in pieces, Psal. 50. last, cutting them up to the Back-Bone, Heb. 4. 12, 13. * drowning Men in perdition, 1 Tim. 6. 9. and that with Millstones about their Necks, as Christ adds, Mat. 18. 6. to make sure they never rise again: also unto a being cast bound Hand and Foot, Mat. 22. 13. into Fire to be burnt alive: a Furnace of Fire, twice in one Chapter, Mat. 13. 42, 49, 50. A Lake of Fire; and so drowned over Head and Ears for ever. A Lake fed with a Stream of Brimstone, which (of all matter that feedeth Fire) is the most fierce. Then again, Eternal Fire, and that never to be slack'd or extinguish'd. And you may with the like Analogy, go over what ever else of torment is most exquisite to outward Sense.

* See for this the interpretation hereof in the Child of Light, &c. pag. 49, 50.

Rev. 14. 10. & 19. 20. & 20. 10, 14, 25. & 21. 18. Mat. 3. 1. & 18. 8. & 25. 41.

But these and all else you can imagine, as but Shadows and Similitudes (as I may self heard one upon the Rack of terror of Conscience cry out, in a like comparison, These are but Metaphors to what I feel) And indeed unto what the thing it self is. As to say of Heaven, there are Rivers of Pleasures: a City, whereof the Streets are of Gold, the Gates of Pearl, and such like; they are but metaphorical Descriptions; for it is God himself that is the Fountain of Life: and oppositely it is said, of the Wrath to come, That God is a consuming Fire, Heb. 12. last.

But these Scriptures which I have read, they all speak Essences, Quintessences. And as Hell is said to be Naked before the Lord, and without a covering; so do these words lay Hell open nakedly (not unto our Senses, but) to the understanding of us, and then they leave us to infer how fearful! And although these Scriptures consist of words that differ, yet they conspire together in the same Scope and matter, viz. to set out Damnation to us in the true and proper Causes, and the real horridness thereof argued from those Causes.

Job 16. 16.

I shall confine my self to two Heads; And in handling thereof, what the one of these Scriptures is wanting in, the other will supply; in what the one is dark, the other explains.

The Heads themselves, I shall take as I find them in the first of these Scriptures, Heb. 10. 31.

First, That God himself, by his own Hands, that is, the Power of his Wrath, is the immediate Inflicter of that Punishment or Destruction of Men's Souls in Hell: [It is a falling into the Hands of God.]

Secondly, The dreadfulness of that Punishment, inferred and argued therefrom; It is a [fearful thing] to fall into the Hands of the Living God. Which

Which two are the Doctrinal parts of this Discourse.

For the first, That God himself is the immediate Inflicter, &c.

For Explication. We must distinguish; how that God performs two parts herein. 1. Of a Judg, to give forth the Sentence by his Authority. 2. Of an Avenger, a party injur'd and provoked, and, as such, the Inflicter. My scope in this Distinction, is, that we may in reading the Scriptures that speak of this Punishment, know how to put a Difference, and not transfer the whole of God's Agency in this matter, unto that of Sentencing it as a Judg only. And besides that many Scriptures do apart shew this Distinction, there are some that still carry along with them both these Agencies, or Hand of God, in it together, and yet as distinct; the one under the Term of Wrath and Vengeance, the other under the Notion of its being a Judgment, [the Judgment of God, and the Judgment of Hell-Fire] * as Mat. 23. 33. Thus first the Text, Heb. 10. terms it some while [Vengeance and fiery Indignation, ver. 30. 27.] then again—Judgment, as ver. 27. a [fearful looking for of Judgment, and ver. 30. The Lord will judg, &c.] The like, Rom. 2. 5, 8, 9. where all is reduced in like manner to these two, God's righteous Judgment, and his Wrath and Indignation treasured up. Also, 2 Thess. 1. [The righteous Judgment of God] ver. 5, 6. there is the Sentence, and [destroyed from the Glory of his Power] as the inflicting Cause, ver. 9. likewise Rom. 9. as Sovereign Lord he shews, ἐξουσίαν Authority in this Punishment, ver. 21. and then as the immediate Inflicter, Wrath and τὸ δυνατὸν, the Power of his Wrath. And ver. 22. that Speech of our Saviour, about this Matter. One Evangelist, Luke 12. 5. records it, Who is able to cast into Hell: * namely, as a Judg who casts a Malefactor into Prison. The other, Mat. 10. 28. Who is † able to kill the Soul, and to destroy Body and Soul in Hell. Noting thereby that he useth his Intrinsic Power and Force as the Inflicter.

* Quid à jullo Dei infligitur. Gerard de inferno. Sect. 30.

* Ἐξουσίαν ἔχοντα. † Τὸν δυνατὸν.

I shall be large in handling and proving this latter, as a great Truth, concerning which I further premise, That I would not be understood to exclude other Miseries as inflicted by Creatures, used as God's Instruments accompanying this, but that which I contend for, is, that principally and eminently above all such, it is the Wrath and Indignation of God himself, working immediately in and upon Mens Souls and Consciences, that is intended in these and other Scriptures. This is the Subject of the first Section of this Discourse.

And let it be noticed now at the entrance, that the same Scriptures and Reasons that shall be brought to prove this in this first Section, will be found again to serve as new Arguments by Way of Inference, to set out and infer the latter also; that is, the Dreadfulness of it, as will appear in the second Section.

The first sort of Proofs from Scriptures: First, those three prefixed as the Texts.

LET us first see what the Scriptures speak more directly to this great Point.
Heb. 10. 28, 29, 30. 31. He that despised Moses Law, died without Mercy, under two or three Witnesses: Of how much sorer Punishment suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the Blood of the Covenant wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of Grace? For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judg his People. It is a fearful thing to fall into the Hands of the living God.

In order to the Proofs, from hence observe the Occasion of the Apostle's mention of this Punishment here, to be his having treated of the highest Sin and kind of Sinners, the Sin against the Holy Ghost. By the occasion of which he gives us to understand what for the Substance is indeed the Recompence of all manner of other actual Sins small and great: the Punishment being in solido, one and the same to all; though with a vast Difference of Degrees. And therefore it is said unto all that are found wicked at that Day, whether of greater or lesser Proportions and Sizes of Wickedness, Go into Fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels. The Devil is the greatest of Sinners, yet all go with him into the same Torment, that is, for Substance the same. And upon the like ground, what is here spoken by way of Eminency concerning the Punishment of these the highest sort of Sinners of the Sons of Men, is true of all others; there being but one common Fire or Punishment, in the Substance of it, for all.

2. Observe the manner of his setting forth the Dreadfulness of that Punishment to us. It is only by way of Insinuation. For seeing he could not express the Soreness of it; he thought fit to suggest only, who is the immediate Author and Inflicter of it: and so leaves it to our Thoughts to infer, how dreadful it is! This in General.

To argue the Point in hand out of this Text, let us take these things along with us.

1. You see he here brings in the great God, as an enraged Enemy, challenging the Execution hereof to himself. This Vengeance belongeth to me; or, as Rom. 12. 19. Vengeance is mine, I will recompense; as if he had said, Let me alone with it.

2. In that when he would set out the Severeness of this Punishment (which is his professed Aim, ver. 29.) as infinitely exceeding all those kinds of corporal Deaths in Moses Law, he inferreth the Soreness of this from God himself as the Avenger: We [know him] that hath thus said, Vengeance is mine; that is, what a great and powerful God he is. The Saints only know God by Faith in Himself, and his Greatness, as Heb. 11. and that so as no other Men in this Life do. And by what we know of him, and the Apprehensions we have of Him, we cannot but forwarn what that Punishment must needs be, when God himself shall thus solemnly profess himself to be the Avenger. 'Tis argued you see both from what this God is, and from that Knowledge the Saints have of Him. They, and they alone know Him in his Love, and have tasted and found that his immediate Loving-kindness is better than Life: and from the Law of Contraries, they know that his Wrath must be more bitter than Death. They are able to measure what he is in his Wrath, by what he is in his Love. And some of the Primitive Saints, especially the Apostles, who had the first Fruits of of the Spirit, knew and had tasted how good the Lord is in his Love, by immediate Impressions of it on their Souls, in Communion with Himself. The like Tenour of Speech has that in 2 Cor. 5. 11. We knowing the Terror of the Lord: It is termed [His Terror] as noting out that which is proper to Him and his Greatness, in his being able to punish and destroy Sinners.

Chap. 2.

Moses, who in the Old Testament had seen the Glory of God the most immediately of any Man (and was therein a Type of Christ) was thereby made sensible of this very thing, as touching this Punishment; and therefore complains in the very like Language, Psal. 90. Who knows the Power of thine Anger? Lamenting how the Generality of Men did not know it, because indeed they knew not God. But we (says the Apostle) have known him, &c.

3. And thereupon he further calls this Punishment, [a falling into God's Hands.] That very Phrase often notes out immediate Execution: as in ordinary Speech it doth. When a Father or a Master threaten a Child, or a young Servant, already corrected by other Hands at their Appointment, yet when either would threaten more severely, they'll say, Take heed how you fall into my Hands, or come under my Fingers, when they mean to correct them themselves.

4. And then that the Apostle thereupon infers from this the Dreadfulness thereof, even from this, It is a fearful thing to fall into the Hands of God. Reason tells us that the Soreness of any Torment, the Fearfulness of any Death, ariseth from the Power, Force, Violence, or Efficacy of that which is the immediate Agent or Cause inflicting it. As why do we argue burning or dying by Fire, a more terrible Death, in respect of Torment, than drowning in Water? But that Fire, being the immediate Agent or Instrument applied to that Execution, hath a more fierce and violent working than Water hath; which dispatcheth a Man more easily. Now therefore the Fearfulness and Soreness of this Punishment (and that with Difference from that by Creatures, compare for this ver. 28, 29.) being here argued, that it is a falling into God's Hands; and we knowing this withal, that he is in himself able to work by his fierce Wrath, more powerfully and exquisitely upon the reasonable Soul of Man sinful, than all created Agents whatever; and the Soul it self being also capable of such a working upon by him. This doth strongly argue his own immediate Execution by his own Hands to have been intended.

5. In ver. 27. he termeth the immediate Cause inflicting this Punishment, a fiery Indignation devouring the Adversaries. Indignation or Wrath is of some intelligent Nature provoked. And whom should this refer to? or whose Indignation can it be supposed, but of this God, who himself (as the Apostle expounds, and comments upon it) hath said, Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord? And this Indignation is called fiery, because it works as Fire; is in tormenting like to Fire; or as a flaming Sword, red hot, when it is made the Instrument of ones Death, which wounds and kills; and doth torment with a superadded Anguish. For the further opening of which, I shall at present only say two things.

(1.) That God compares himself in this respect, unto a devouring or consuming Fire, in this very Epistle, Heb. 12. ult. Our God is a consuming Fire. There are two Creatures which God assimilates himself unto, in contrary Respects. 1. To Light, as often. And God is Love, 1 John 4. and both these are spoken of him in respect of what he is to the Saints in Glory. Light is of all Creatures the most comfortable: And in his Light it is we see Light. And the State of Glory is therefore termed the Inheritance of the Saints in Light, Col. 1. The 2d is to Fire: and this on the contrary, in relation to what he is to Men in Hell. And the Parallel runs upon what he is immediately unto both, by Analogy of Reason. Of all Creatures Fire is the most dreadful, the most raging, subtle and piercing in its Operation; and so God in his Wrath must be understood under that Similitude to be: and therefore it is his Wrath is termed fiery Indignation.

(2.) Those Words in their Coherence, are an Allusion to those extraordinary Punishments executed under the old Law. For in ver. 28. he inforceth his Argument (the Scope of which was to aggravate this Punishment as à minori) from the Instances of those Punishments that did befall Men that died for despising Moses Law; some of them we read were destroy'd by Fire, and therein he more especially refers us to those Examples of Nadab and Abihu, who perished through Fire, Lev. 10. 1, 2. where the very Words the Apostle here cited to set out this Punishment by, are used by Moses, and so more evidently shew the Allusion to be made thereunto. There went out Fire from the Lord, and devoured them, says that Text; and yet he argues from thence the surpassing Soreness of this Punishment above that, from that Fire, though it were a Fire even from Heaven it self that kill'd them. But more of this hereafter.

I come, secondly, to that other Scripture, 2 Thess. 1. 8, 9. In flaming Fire, taking Vengeance of them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: [Who shall be punished with everlasting Destruction from the Presence of the Lord, and from the Glory of his Power.] Where it is to be observed, that though he mentions [flaming Fire] and the Ministry of his mighty Angels, which accompany Christ's appearing, yet he clearly resolves the ultimate and immediate Cause of wicked Mens Destruction, into the immediate Presence and Glory of Christ's Power, ver. 9. Who shall be punished with everlasting Destruction [from the Presence of the Lord, and from the Glory of his Power.] So as herein is set forth:

First, The Punishment.

Secondly, The Causes of that Punishment.

1. For the Punishment, there is, 1st, the Nature of it; it is termed Destruction. 2<sup>dly</sup>, The Duration of it, everlasting Destruction.
2. The Causes of it: From or by the Presence of the Lord, and the Glory of his Power. That Particle  $\alpha\pi\omicron$ , which we translate [from] is causal, imports the efficient Cause, as in all those Salutations, Grace and Peace [from] the Father, and [from] Jesus Christ, it doth, Rom. 1. 7. 2 Cor. 1. 2. that is, as from the Fountain, the principal and sole Authors and Efficients of Grace and Peace. And thus the word is used in Multitudes of Places else. And accordingly we find in other Scriptures also, that God and Christ are the immediate Causes of Peace. Thus 2 Thess. 3. 16. Now the Lord of Peace [Himself] give you Peace, &c. and chap. 2. 16, 17. The Lord Jesus [Himself] comfort your Hearts. Now on the contrary, when in like manner he says, Everlasting Destruction [from] his Face, Presence, and the Glory of his Power; it may, and is to be understood the Lord Himself, personally by his own mere Presence, and by the Strength of his own Power, inflicteth their Destruction for ever: they die by no other Hand. This Particle [from] (as in Speech we often use it) hath led some from the true Intent of the Apostle. They thereupon supposing this the meaning, that they are punished with Destruction [from the Presence] that is, out of the Presence of Christ; as if this were the fulfilling that Speech of Christ, Depart [from me] into everlasting Torment. This, though it be true of this Destruction spoken of here, in respect of Christ's local Presence, consider him as he is Man; yet, as Slater upon the Place well says; "To him that attentively considers the Words, the Causes of Destruction are held forth herein. For, 1st, he says not simply or alone that they are punish'd from his Presence, but further adds [from the Glory of his Power] the same Particle  $\alpha\pi\omicron$  or [from] being therefore in common to be applied to the one as well as the other. Now the Intent of the latter, from his glorious Power, cannot note forth that they were punished out of, or from without his glorious Power, as in respect of Absence; but the contrary, that the Presence and Efficacy of it is to be that which is the Author of their Punishment, so that it imports nothing less than Absence, or a Withdrawment by God, or a throwing them out of his Presence; but positively an Efficiency or Energy put forth by him; and so carries with it the Relation and Influence of an efficient Cause: If indeed he had added instead hereof, either [from his Glory] or [from his Blessedness] unto that other [from his Presence] it might have carried both unto pœna damni, the Punishment of Loss; that is, to note out what they had lost, and wanted the Communication of, and so their Exclusion from the Participation of God's Face and Blessedness, (which is more ordinarily termed his Presence) and together therewith

with had noted out an Exclusion also of this Sense which I argue for ; but his saying also [from the Glory of his Power] manifestly notes Power put forth in Execution, and inflicting that Destruction, and glorifying Himself, on them thereby.

And, 2. further know that the Word here used is not Potestas, as of a Judge, that is, Authority, whereof John 5. 27. The Father hath given the Son of Man Authority to execute Judgment : And in relation unto which in ver. 5. of this Chapter, he had termed it, The righteous Judgment of God. But the Word is ἰσχύς, which signifies inward personal Strength, Vigor, Robur, such as a Giant hath in his own * Limbs. And therefore when their Destruction is said to be from his Power, as thus denoting personal Strength, the Intendment must needs be to denote a putting forth of that Strength which is in himself to destroy them. Parallel with that in Rom. 9. 22. What if God willing to shew his Wrath, and make his [Power] known on the Vessels of Wrath fitted to Destruction; of which anon.

Yea, and 3. even this other Phrase, [destroyed from his Presence] doth likewise as fully close with this Sense, to note the efficient Cause of their Destruction. The Word in the Original is, [from his Face] ἀπὸ τῆς προσώπου: now God's Anger and Wrath is as well, and very frequently expressed by his Face in Scripture, as his Favour useth to be. For the Face as well holds forth Anger and Wrath, as Favour and Grace. Thus Lev. 20. 6. I will [set my Face against] that Soul, and will [cut him off:] that is, I will put forth mine Anger to destroy him. And Lam. 4. 26. where it is translated the Anger of the Lord, in the Hebrew, and in your Margents, it is, The Face of the Lord. As there is the Light of God's Countenance, in which is Life; so the Rebuke of God's Countenance, at which we perish, Psal. 80. 16. Even as the Wax is said to melt at the [Presence] of the Fire, Psal. 68. 2. and often elsewhere.

So then to be destroyed [from his Face and Presence] is all one as to say, from his Anger and Wrath. And we have both exegetically met in one Scripture, Rev. 6. last, They said to the Mountains, Fall on us, to hide us [from the Face of him] that sitteth on the Throne, and [from the Wrath] of the Lamb; and suitably this Destruction here in 2 Thess. 1. is said to be both from God and Christ. Even as the Happiness of Heaven is immediately from the Presence of God and Christ, Rev. 21. 23. And the City had no need of the Sun, neither of the Moon to shine in it: for the Glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof. Thus on the contrary is it in Hell, and so at the Day of Judgment it is the Face of God, and the Face of the Lamb, that the Wicked most of all do dread, as that which is the Inflicter of their Torment.

As for any Objection from those Words, in flaming Fire, &c. I shall answer it afterwards.

The Passage in Rom. 9. 22. explicated, only so far as concerns the Execution. Several Particulars in the Words that shew the Power of God's Wrath to be the inflicting Cause, and immediately inflicting this Punishment. An Explication of a fourth Scripture, Rom. 2. 8, 9. added, for the Confirmation of all.

R O M. 9. 22.

What if God willing to shew his Wrath, and to make his Power known, endured with much Long-suffering the Vessels of Wrath fitted to Destruction.

I shall insist on this Passage but so far as it respects the Execution of this Destruction in Hell, after much Long-suffering passed, and not to touch at all upon any thing of that Point of Rejection from Eternity, whether intended or not. But that the Words should respect the Execution in Hell, (which is the Point only before us) I take that as clear, and much for granted. And the Reason is, because it is the Glory of Heaven, which in the next Words the Apostle joins with it, and sets by it, as Parallels illustrating each the other: So ver. 23. And that he might make known the Riches of his Glory on the Vessels of Mercy, which he had afore prepared unto Glory: In Heaven namely. The only thing which by the way I observe, is, That the Sin of the Creature is that which prepareth or fitteth the Creature for the Execution of this Punishment. And a Difference may be observed in this (though otherwise a Parallel) as put in cautiously by the Apostle; that God himself prepareth the Saints to Glory, ver. 23. but the other are fitted, that is, by themselves, unto Destruction, ver. 22. ere he destroyeth them.

The Point before me is, that God's Wrath and his Power are to be the immediate Inflicters of that Destruction. There are several Particulars in the Words, which taken singly, might perhaps be sufficient to prove this, but laid all together, will become a strong Evident thereof.

1. That God's Wrath and his Power, or the Power of his Wrath, are spoken of as the inflicting or executing Causes, is evident: For it is a Power of Efficiency here spoken of, as whereby God produceth this Destruction, as a Cause doth its proper Effect: and accordingly He is said to make known and shew his Power and Wrath therein; like as the Force and Virtue of an efficient Cause is made known and demonstrated, in and by the Effect it produceth. And so is spoken to the same Effect, with what, in chap. 1. 20. he had said, that his Power and Godhead is clearly seen from the Creation of the World, and understood by the things that are made. He that is, ὁ δυνατός, the Mighty One, (as the Blessed Virgin there, by way of Eminency, styles him) Luke 1. 49. is said to shew Strength with his Arm, ver. 51. And here, to make known τὸ δυνατόν αὐτοῦ, (a Word suited to that other) his τὸ posse, or what is possible to be done by him. It is then a Power of Strength, and Energy, or Efficacy, with his own Hands and Arm, and that according to the utmost of his Ability, as the Word imports: And so the Power here spoken of, is an inflicting Power, that works and effects this Destruction; and not that of Authority only, or a Power of Liberty to do as one pleaseth, as the Potter with the Clay. For that kind of Power he had before ascribed to God in this matter, in the foregoing Verse, which this Word here is distinct from. And this is one Step: unto which add:

2. It is his Power joined with his Wrath; that is, the Power of his Wrath, or his Wrath in the Power of it. For thus Moses, the Man of God, Psal. 90. 11. had long afore put them together, when he speaks of this very Wrath in Hell, of which here the Apostle doth. For after he had, 1. set out the Time and Condition of Man in this Life, The Days of our Tears are threescore Tears and ten, &c. and then, 2. We fly away; so expressing Death, and our going into another World: Then, 3. follows, [Who knows the Power of thine Anger?] as that which succeedeth and seizeth after Death upon the most of Mankind dying in their Sins. The Apostle here mentions Power and Wrath apart; but Moses there maketh Power an Attribute of his Wrath: and so considered, it hath a double meaning, and both serving our purpose: 1. That Wrath stirs up his Power, and draws it out unto this Execution; and therefore Wrath is the first of the two here mentioned. Yea further, that it is his Power, as it becomes heated, inflamed, and intended by Wrath, that inflicteth this. And as a Man in his Anger strikes a greater Blow; so may God be supposed to do, when represented as thus smiting in his sore Displeasure. And 2. That God's very Wrath and Anger, if but shewn and revealed by him to Mens Souls, hath such a Power in it, that that alone is enough to destroy them. The nearest resemblance that the Scriptures make of this Wrath, is that of Fire, (of which anon) and that as Fire melting Wax by the very presence of it. As therefore when we would express the Power of Fire, we say, [the Power of the Heat] that is in Fire, that thus melts and consumes, &c. its Heat being in it self so fierce and vehement a Quality, that when but applied, it thus works. So here, it is the Power of his Wrath; if it be kindled but a little, that destroys, if but made known once, or discovered. And as in the Text, it is a shewing his Wrath, and thereby his Power in destroying is made known. It is but his being angry, and shewing it. And this is the Greatness of God, that his very Wrath discovered, should have this Power. And how receptive the Conscience is of it, I shall after shew. As, in his Favour (if but manifested to Mens Souls) is Life, Psal. 30. 5. So, in his Anger, when discovered by himself, there is Death. If the Wrath of a King be as the roaring of a Lion; and where the Word of a King is, there is Power; then what is the Terror and Power of the Wrath of the Great God, that alone strikes dead? And thus understood, it is an Argument of it self alone, that the Power of his Wrath doth speak an immediateness of God's Execution.

A second Particular is, That that which makes God willing, by reason of Sin, to execute this, is thereby to obtain a Glory unto his Power, by shewing his Wrath. So as, that although he hath already shewn his Power in creating the World at first, and upholding it by the Word of his Power, and other Effects, that yet over and above, and besides all this, he takes the advantage of Sin, to shew (as the Riches of his Mercy in saving from Sin, so) the Greatness of his Power another way, namely, in destroying for Sin. And accordingly in that 2<sup>d</sup> Thess. 1. 9. there is a peculiar Glory attributed unto that Power of his, from or by which Men are destroyed, [punished from the Glory (says that Text) of his Power] or from his Power, giving a Demonstration, or shewing his Glory therein; that is, unto that end, that it might be known how great and powerful a God he is in Himself, by the Judgment which he executes, as the Psalmist speaks.

Now then from hence, were we add the other two Particulars, the Argument riseth thus; That if God should execute this by Creatures only, and not immediately by himself, he attained not the full of this his End; and that upon a double Account.

1. Because, when all had been done that could have been, by his powerful arming and setting on of Creatures to punish the Sinner; yet still himself being able to give a greater Demonstration of Power this way, if Himself would take it in hand; and the Soul of Man being fully capable of his immediate workings upon it, and Sin also deserving it; and the Wrath of God being first or last to come upon impenitent Sinners to the uttermost. Therefore until this Demonstration were given, he had not made a full proof of his Power: Which the Apostle here professeth to be his aim. And,

Book XIII

And, 2. in that after all other Instances and Demonstrations of Power given in Creation, Miracles, in Conversion of Souls, that is, take his creating part in it, &c. all which he hath done, immediately himself, without the intervention of created Influences; that he should, last of all, be willing to give forth anew, or shew forth his Power afresh in this Work also; and yet should not then give a Demonstration of like immediate Power, but execute it only at second Hand by Creatures alone; this would fall short, and hold no proportion with that Power already shewn forth in those fore-past Works: and then this being the last, or one of the last, after all his other Works ended, purposely to shew forth his Power in, it had not been such a Demonstration of Power, as in his last Work (wherein he professeth to shew forth any Attribute) he useth comparatively to give: For still his manner is, in the shewing forth of any Attribute, to give greater Demonstrations thereof in his latter Works than in the former: Of which more afterwards.

Add this to it, which heightens the Argument; That the Apostle specially singleth forth this Attribute of Power, and by way of Eminency mentioneth it, in speaking of this Punishment, as that Attribute, whereof God is willing to give fullest Demonstration in this Work, above any other Attribute, or Attributes, in himself, therein. In all the great Works of God, some one special Attribute hath still the Honour given it, as being in a way of Eminency put forth; as in Man's Salvation, Mercy and Grace, Ephes. 2. 9. in Man's Glorification, Riches of Glory and Mercy, as here, ver. 23. But look down into Hell, and it is his Power, which (as here in difference from those other) is said to be the predominant Attribute, that he would shew forth, and which appeareth there. And the comparing of these two, Salvation and Damnation, as they stand in an opposite Parallel, this in ver. 22. and the other in ver. 23. doth confirm this Observation; taking in withal that other Passage in 2 Thess. 1. 9. where they are said to be punished from the Glory of his Power, which manifestly gives the Glory unto his Power, in this Work, above any Attribute. His Sovereignty and Authority is seen in Salvation as much (if not more) as it is in Destruction. I [will] have Mercy on whom [I will,] &c. But his Power or Omnipotency, that is said to be seen in destroying for Sin. Whereof perhaps one Reason is, because there is shewn in this, a duplicated Power: a contrary Stream of Power running cross and thwart, in its Effects, in this. For at the same Instant (and that lengthned out for ever,) God sets himself by his Power, to destroy the Creature, utterly, in respect of its Well-being: Whilst yet again, on the other hand, as great a Power is requisite to uphold it in Being and Sense, and to prevent its sinking into its first nothing, or from failing before him, in respect of Being to bear it. And in that respect to continue the Creature to be, &c. and to endure the Weight of God's Power in Wrath, to be dry Stubble in a Flame never consumed; this is more than for God to create. This puts the great God upon a double Expence of Power.

A third Particular, in this Rom. 9. 22. that contributes to this, is, That as the Cause inflicting is termed the Power of his Wrath, so the miserable Subjects hereof are denominated Vessels of Wrath: Even as on the other side, those saved, are termed Vessels of Mercy. Common Use of Speech tells us, that Vessels ordained to be filled with such or such Materials, have their Denomination, from that Matter they are ordained to contain, and are filled withal. You say this is a Vessel of Oyl, that a Vessel of Wine; these here you see are said to be Vessels of Wrath. If you demand whose Wrath? God's. What if [God willing to make known his Wrath.] Now as touching its Opposite here, [Vessels of Mercy,] all will acknowledg that when it is spoken of as in relation to Heaven (as here it is) it importeth Souls their being set apart to be immediately filled with the Love and Mercy of God: that as God is Love, so that they, as Vessels, swim in that Ocean for ever: That they dwell in God immediately, and are filled with Fulness of him. And why should not then, this other of being Vessels of Wrath, be intended in the same Sense also, and that Sense be urged accordingly? Especially seeing it is evident that one Scope of the Apostle here, was to make a Parallel between the eternal Glorification of the the one, and eternal Destruction of the other; and accordingly between what are to be the Causes of them. And if so, the Law of this Parallel will also carry it to this, that as the Saints in Heaven have an immediate Participation of God, that likewise in Hell, there shall be oppositely an immediate Participation of God's Wrath. In Heaven they are not said to be Vessels of Mercy, because God shews them Mercy, only, by created Benefits or Gifts bestowed; or because they have God's Mercy communicated by Creatures (though it must be affirmed that there is a Confluence of these) but because God himself appears all in Love, Mercy, and Kindness to them.

And it is not nothing, that, according to the same Analogy of Speech, unto this Particular, in Multitudes of Scriptures in the New Testament. This Destruction is ὀνομαστικῶς, by way of Singularity, Eminency, and simply stiled Wrath; and the Wrath of God. And so it bears away that Denomination from all other Punishments by Creatures (except that by Magistrates in God's stead, and who bear the Image of God, Rom. 13. 5.) so bearing the Name of its immediate Cause.

The Baptist he began that Stile in the New Testament: [The Wrath to come,] Matth. 3. by way of Distinction from all that is executed in this Life. And the whole New Testament afterwards much useth that Phrase. As when the Day of Judgment is stiled the Day of Wrath, Rom. 2. and elsewhere. It is equivalent to say, a Child of Hell, Matth. 23. 15. and a Child of Wrath, Ephes. 2. 3. to say, fitted to Destruction, as Rom. 9. and ordained to Wrath, 1 Theff. 5. 9. to say, Damnation hasteneth, 2 Pet. 2. 3. and the Wrath of God cometh on the Children of Disobedience, Col. 3. 6. As in like manner on the contrary, saved from Wrath, Rom. 5. Delivered from Wrath through Christ, 1 Theff. 1. ult. is all one, and saved from Death and Hell, elsewhere. And this is usually termed the Wrath of God, so Joel 3. ult. Col. 3. 6. and Ephes. 5. 6. Rom. 9. 22.

That which I would observe from both, is, that according to the general Analogy of common Speech in all Languages, the Punishment as the Effect, bearing the Denomination of that, which is the immediate Instrument of the principal Agent in that Punishment, (thus the Torture by the Rack, is called the Rack; Whipping, the Rod: So in Deaths, Crucifying was termed the Cross; Hanging, the Gallows: Thus 'tis in the Punishments which Men execute:) that in like Analogy of Speech, this ultimate Punishment should so generally be termed Wrath, and the Wrath of God, by way of eminency and difference from all other fore-running Effects of Wrath, executed by Creatures in this Life; this still strengthens the former Notion, that it is indeed the Wrath of this God it self, in a way of eminent difference from what by Creatures he doth in Wrath pour out, that is the Inflicter of that Punishment.

I shall for the close of this, cast in one Scripture-Testimony more, both to confirm this Interpretation of Wrath given upon Rom. 9. and the whole of the Point in hand. It is

Rom. 2. 8, 9. — Indignation and VWrath, Tribulation and Anguish unto every Soul of Man that doth Evil, &c.

I observed afore from the second Verse of this Chapter, how that this Punishment was termed both the Judgment of God, ver. 2. as denoting God to be the Judg, and also [VWrath,] as of God the Avenger. Now in these Words, ver. 8, 9. the Apostle pursueth the latter more fully, when he says, Indignation and VWrath, Tribulation and Anguish to every Soul of Man. These are two Pairs or Conjugates of Causes, and Effects. 1. Indignation and VWrath, as the Causes. 2. Tribulation and Anguish, as the two Effects; and that on the Souls of Men, which are the Vessels of this VWrath and Indignation, and Subjects of that Tribulation and Anguish thence arising. And truly his instancing in the Soul, which (though it often signifies the whole Person, yet) here seems purposely done, as being that in or of Man, which alone is immediately capable of this Indignation and VWrath of God, and the Impressions or Effects of Anguish there-from, and is the proper Seat of that Anguish and Tribulation. And that Phrase Phrase of Wrath, its being said to be [treasured up] in the 5th verse, Suits this. For what is the Treasury or Magazine thereof, but the Heart and Bosom of God Himself, in which it lies hid, as Treasures use to do in some Secret place? Even as the Saints Life is said to be hid in God, Col. 3. 3. compare Deut. 32. 24.

Book XIII

I shall but further superadd that noticed saying of Luther, (which, out of deep Experience of the Wrath of God in his Soul, at his first Humiliation and Conversion he had learned) The Wrath of God is Hell, the Hell of Devils and all damned Spirits.

C H A P. IV.

That this immediate Wrath of God is in Scripture set forth unto us under the Similitude of Fire, and fiery Indignation. The Examples of Persons devoured by Fire in the Old Testament, Shadows of this Punishment by the immediate Wrath of God. This the Fire wherein the Devil and his Angels are tormented.

THere hath been nothing more divertive of the Thoughts of Men from apprehending, or so much as imagining God's immediate Wrath to be a Cause of that Punishment in Hell; then that the Scriptures do so often make mention of Fire, &c. as the Instrument thereof, and so Mens conceptions do terminate therein, and go no further.

But I shall rather on the other Hand, make an Argument of it. Namely, that indeed the Scriptures do set out this immediate Wrath of God under the Similitude, Resemblance, and Representation of Fire; and that, sometimes, when Hell-fire is spoken of, the Wrath of God is intended thereby.

Unto which I yet preface this: That I must not, nor dare I say that there is no material Fire in Hell ordained for Punishment to Mens Bodies: but that it is Rational, that the Body having sinned as well as the Soul, it should have a meet Recompence of Reward suited thereto, as well as that the Soul should. But yet so, as either of them have this meted out to them, according to their vastly differing share, and hand, and acting which they had in sinning; in which the Soul is always the principal Actor, and in some Sins the sole Agent and Subject. To be sure in Heaven there is a confluence of created Excellencies, suited to the Bodies of Saints, made Spiritual, as well as God Himself, the Happiness of their Souls; and sure I am that on the contrary, it is distinctly said of each and apart, That God destroys [both Body and Soul] in Hell, Mat. 10. 28. And accordingly, each of them, with a Punishment suited unto each.

The Passage of Scripture, unto which the gathering will be of several others, for the Proof of this my present Assertion, (which is the Subject of this Chapter,) is that of our Apostle in the 28. ver. of this Heb. 10. a little afore my Text; he there setting forth the Judgment to come, in the Causes and Effects of it, to be,

A fiery Indignation, devouring the Adversaries.

I did but touch upon it before, when I drew out other Arguments from this Text, but then reserved a fuller handling of this by it self.

The Original hath it, [The Indignation of Fire.] But Indignation is in, and from the Heart of an intelligent Person provoked, which is God, as the Text shews. Grotius therefore interprets it, The Anger of God, but adds, putting forth it self by Fire: I suppose he means by corporeal Fire, as its Instrument.

strument. But why not rather the Anger of God Himself, devouring his Adversaries as Fire; and so to relate to the manner of his Anger its working, as represented under the Similitude of Fire, seeing God Himself is, in this Epistle, stiled a Consuming Fire? which interprets this.

And in this Expression of [fiery Indignation which devoureth,] he hath particular Reference unto those, of all other, the most extraordinary Judgments upon Nadah and Abihu, Lev. 10. 2. There came out [Fire] from the Lord, and [devoured] them. They are in terminis, the very Words of the Apostle here: And we may take in also (that so we may have two Witnesses too, to confirm this our Interpretation of the Apostle's Allusion) That two hundred and fifty Princes perished by Fire from the Lord, in the Rebellion of Corah, Numb. 16. 35. This as for what Examples is referred unto.

Now to raise up our Thoughts, unto how much a sorer Punishment the fiery Indignation that remained for these Gospel-Adversaries should be, he suggests how transcendently the Gospel exceeds the Ministration of Moses Law, in these Words that follow; He that despised Moses Law died without Mercy, under two or three Witnesses: of how much sorer Punishment ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath troden under Foot the Son of God, and hath counted the Blood of the Covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done Despite to the Spirit of Grace? Moses Law (the old Covenant, as joined with the Law Ceremonial,) was sprinkled, or Consecrated with the Blood of Beasts, Chap. 9. 19, 20, 21. But the Gospel of the New Covenant, and the Persons enlightned thereby, have been sanctified by the Blood of the Son of God. If then such an extraordinary fiery Judgment befall the Despisers of this Moses Law, thus sprinkled, &c. what fiery Indignation proportionably must it be that shall befall the treaders down, both of the Book, Covenant, and sacred Blood of Christ? And in this lies the Weight and Strength of the Apostle's Argument.

That Maxim of the Judicial Law which is annexed, that Despisers died without Mercy under two or three Witnesses, is brought in for that grand Circumstance's sake, whereby the Apostle heightneth both the Iniquity of those Persons, destroyed by Fire, who sinned before many thousand Witnesses, the whole Congregation of Israel: As likewise, this other far transcending Guilt of these Adversaries, who had renounced Christ and his Blood only, before the whole World and Christian Church. So Chap. 6. 6. 'tis said they did put the Lord Jesus to an open shame; and they are the same Persons, whom he threatens this against here, and speaks of there.

But still, by what surpassing Proportion may we estimate, or suppose (as the Apostle calls us to do) how much this fiery Indignation is sorer, than that outward devouring them by Fire. 'Tis certain that Moses Law, and that sprinkling with Beasts Blood, &c. which he argues from, held but the proportion of Types, Figures and Shadows: But the New Covenant, and Christ's Blood, &c. of the Substance and Reality comparatively to these. Then in like manner, his intent in proposing these Examples of Judgments by Fire, was as of those that hold the Proportion but of a Type, a Figure of this fiery Indignation that is to come upon the treaders down of the Blood of Christ. For indeed a meer bodily Death the sharpest (as those by Fire were) is but as the Shadow of Death, unto the second Death (the thing intended here) which is utterly another kind of thing.

In Heb. 10. ver. 1. He says of the Good things of the Gospel, that what the Law held forth, were but the Shadows of those good things to come, as Canaan of Heaven, Chap. 4, &c. the like Col. 2. 17. And why may it not be also said, that as all the good Things under the Law, the best were but Shadows of those good things to come, so that the highest and worst of outward evil things Executed then, were in like manner but Shadows of those Evil things which the Gospel brings to light, as the Punishment of Sin. And we may see in his succeeding Discourse in this same Chapter, how he having first instanced in the Good, he after instanceth in the highest of Evil, in these Words I am upon, ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. And in like manner the like extraordinary Judgments then, are expressly said to have happened so them as rudiores imagines perfectioris.

See Lucan, of the Effects of the stings by African Serpents upon Cato's Soldiers. Lib. 9.

Types, (so in the Greek and Margin) 1 Cor. 10. 11. Types, not merely memory, of like Events, but withal Prefigurative of Punishment of an higher kind, &c. What Death could be outwardly sorer, than to be destroyed of Serpents? ver. 9. and those fiery too, Numb. 21. 6. the Effects of whose Stings are described to be as Dolorous as being burnt alive. But under the Gospel, Sin and the Law, and so God's Wrath, these as the Substance are set out to be the String of that Death to come, 1 Cor. 15. 55. Again, ver. 10. destroyed of the Destroyer. Who was the Destroyer then? Angels. So Heb. 11. 28. And what Destruction or Destroyer under the Gospel is it, that is typified out by these? even God Himself: who, as by Christ, is said to kill the Soul, and destroy Body and Soul in Hell: So, ere the Apostle took off his Pen from prosecuting that Argument, in the very same Chapter, he in full Effect says as much, in setting before them, how it was God's Power and Wrath, instead of those other Destroyers, with which Sinners have now to do. Ver. 22. Do you provoke the Lord to Jealousy? are you stronger than he? I might confirm this Notion from other Types, 1 Cor. 15. 44, 45. This fore-laid.

To approach nearer to our Purpose in Hand, there are two things further to be done. 1. As touching the Type it self, what kind of Fire that was which devoured them: And the manner of their Deaths.

The Fire was another manner of Fire, than this our Elementary common Fire. This was Fire from Heaven, and therefore said to be a Fire [from the Lord] that devoured them; it was such a Fire, as blasts of Lightning are, which strike, and blast, and shrivel the Spirits of a living Body in an instant: which is evident by the manner of their Deaths. The Hebrew Doctors say of it, that it was a Fire which burnt their Souls, not their Bodies; their meaning is, their Bodies were not consumed or devoured by it: for Lev. 10. 5. 'tis said, They carried their Bodies and Goats into the Tent, as untouched. It was therefore such a Fire (as Lightning is from Heaven) which useth to strike, and lick up Men's Spirits in an instant, when yet in the mean Time, it consumes not, breaks not so much as Skin or Flesh; which our Elementary Fire preys first and most upon. It was therefore a far subtiller Fire than Ordinary or Kitchen Fire: which suitably served as the fittest and nearest Type of this fiery Indignation; and of the Vengeance, which it executes. And this was but the shadow.

The second is, What the Substance answering to those Types should be? This I shall set out by two things:

1. What is the thing, or Subject devoured by this fiery Indignation? It is the immortal Souls of Men: these are the Fuel which this Fire doth prey upon. As to the Truth of the thing it self I need not insist on it: But the Analogy of that as the Shadow, and this as typified thereby, that is the matter afore me.—Let it be considered, that the Death and Destruction of the immortal Soul in Man, could not any other way be more lively shadowed forth, than by such a devouring (as Moses word is) or licking up the vital and animal Spirits than run in the Body, when yet the Body it self remains unburnt: Thereby demonstrating, that it was such a Fire as struck immediately at that which is the Fountain of Life it self in the Body, and at that which is the Bond, the Vinculum, the Tye of Union between Soul and Body: for such are those Spirits. And yet not so much, as to singe the outward Bulk or Carcase of the Body. There could have been nothing invented in the whole compass of Nature, to have born a resemblance so near, to shadow forth the Immortal Soul, as those Spirits running in Man's Blood and Arteries, do; which, some affirm to be the very Animal and Vital Soul in Man. Sure I am, they are as the Oyl whereby Life is preserved and fed; and in the Blood is the Life, says Moses, our best Interpreter in this. Neither doth this Shadow hold a Similitude in this particular only, but in another like Case as evidently. The pouring forth of the Blood of the Beasts that were sacrificed under the Old Law, was particularly ordained to signify Christ his pouring forth his Soul unto Death, as Isaiah speaks; As well, as in General, that the Sacrifice of those Beasts did typifie forth Christ's sacrifice, in the whole whole of it. And this was as near a Representation of that Particular, as could any Way be made, by what was Corporeal in Beasts, or else in the whole Creation (for a Sacrifice of Mankind, or the Blood of Men, God liked not to be made to him, in his Worship) could possibly have been found to pourtray it forth.

The second thing is, That the Substance shadowed forth by that Fire, was no other than the Indignation or Wrath of the great God himself, which is termed Fiery Indignation here.

For Proof of which, I insist not, that some Shim thereof this Shadow it self doth cast, in Moses his saying again and again in Terminis, that a Fire [from the Lord,] &c. which hath a great Emphasis and Resemblance of this in it. But for proof I ask,

First, Where shall we find, or how shall we imagine any created Fire so to exceed that Fire from Heaven, recorded in that Story; and so far exceeding it as the Substance doth a Shadow; or such as should melt down Immortal Souls? You may sooner Invent or imagine a Fire, so much comparatively hotter than that of the Sun it self, (which is the contract of Fire and Light) and so much exceeding it, as should be able to shrivel up this Sun into a burnt black Coal: as to imagine any such created Fire, so Transcending this of Lightning from Heaven, as shall thus devour Reasonable Souls and Immortal Spirits; that in the Substance of them (as being Spirits) do bear the Image of God. In what Furnace will you think to find such a Fire? No where but in the Bosom of him, who hath here said Vengeance is mine; even even of God himself.

2. To confirm this. What created Fire can be conceived more subtile or powerful, than the Angels themselves are conceived to be? whom, as Heb. 1. 7. out of the Psalms, the Apostle compareth to Flames of Fire, that is in our (European Language) to Lightning. Now then I ask when Christ says, Mat. 25. 41. Go into the Fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels, (shewing that Man's Punishment shall be from the same Hand, that the Punishment of those evil Angels is;) what Fire can be supposed such, that can Work on Angelical Natures, who themselves have Power over Fire; of Fire of Lightning from Heaven, as in Job's Case was seen: None other but that, which as the Apostle resolves us, (if we will rest in it) That our God is a consuming Fire, Heb. 12. ult. So that consideration the State and Condition of the Devil; I cannot but celebrate that fore-cited conclusive Speech of Luther's, Ira Dei est infernus Diaboli & omnium damnatorum, It is the Wrath of God that is the Hell of the Devil, and of all the Damned: For there can be no other Fire, in which the Devils can be tormented. Outward washings may as soon reach Conscience, as Heb. 9. 9. 1 Pet. 3. 21. as such created Fire to torment an Angel. Rev. 14.

3. Let us consider other Scriptures, which (as I said) do gather about this, to give Testimony to this Interpretation.

First, That of the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 33. 14. The Sinners in Sion are afraid, fearfulness hath surprized the Hypocrites: Who among us shall dwell with the [devouring Fire?] Who among us shall dwell with [Everlasting Burnings?] I shall afterwards have Occasion to take Notice of this Scripture by way of Use. In the mean time, — observe, that it is God Himself, who is meant by this devouring Fire, here. For in a smart and quick Retortion, (and it is a most Elegant one) the Prophet gives Answer: He that walketh Righteously, and speaketh Uprightly, He shall dwell with Him (whom you that are Hypocrites so much dread, and have cause enough to do so) with him shall an Upright Man dwell: Who is, and will be unto you in the State you are in, a Devouring Fire. And thus they are reprov'd, and taught what it is to be Hypocrites, by the opposite Condition of the Upright, and the differing Event of being such. And further, that it is God himself there the Prophet intendeth, as with whom the Upright should dwell: The Words following do also shew, ver. 16. He shall dwell on High (namely with that High and lofty one, that dwells in the High and Holy Place, &c. Do but punctually compare that Isa. 57. 15. with this here) likewise ver. 17. Thine Eye (O thou upright Soul) shall shall see the King in his Beauty; that is, (as Christ says) the pure in Heart shall see God. The Result is, that the same God, who appears all in Flames, and as a devouring Fire, unto Hypocrites in Hell; is all Light and Beauty to the Upright in Heaven. Like as unto a sound and vigorous Eye, It is a pleasant thing to behold the Sun, as Solomon speaks; but to sore Eyes it is a Terror.

Add to this Psal. 21. 8, 9. Thine Hand shall find out all thine Enemies, thy right Hand shall find out those that hate thee. Thou shalt make them as a fiery Oven in the time of thine Anger: The Lord shall swallow them up in his Wrath, and the Fire shall devour them. This the Chaldee Paraphrast interprets of the Fire of Hell. And so you have all meet to interpret this Fire to be meant of the Wrath of God himself. 1st. God a consuming Fire, Heb. 12. ult. Then, 2dly. God himself to be that devouring Fire, Isa. 33. 14. And, 3dly, his Wrath interpreted to be that Fire by the Psalmist. And loe, how these all meet in this one saying, The fiery Indignation that devours the Adversaries! Which the Apostle himself also interprets of God himself, afterwards. We know him that hath said, Vengeance is mine. And it is a fearful thing, &c.

Particularly for that Scripture, even now cited, Isa. 33. 14. If we consult the Context, the occasion of bringing in that horrid Out-cry, Who among us, &c. (as Interpreters agree) was that the Prophet had set forth, in the Verses before, that most wonderful and prodigious Slaughter of the King of Assyria's Host, when an hundred forescore and five thousand (as 2 Kings 19. 15.) were in one Night destroyed by an Angel. And thereupon the Prophet in this Passage is to be understood, either to have related what an Impression of Dread this so unparallel'd a Judgment had made upon, and struck the Hearts of the Hypocrites in Sion with: As that which had made them to cry out thereupon, O how then shall we dwell with everlasting Burnings? that is, with God himself. For they may well be supposed to have reasoned thus with themselves; if one Angel that is but a ministring Spirit to God, is able to blast and consume such a Multitude in one Night; how shall we have to do with God Himself, who is that infinite immense devouring Fire, and all those Angels but as Sparks, and his Ministers. And so according to this Meaning, themselves are brought in, speaking by the Prophet, as the Men of Bethsamesb did upon the like Judgment, 1 Sam. 6. 20. Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God? Or else those Words may be supposed to have been the Prophets own Meditation and Use of Instruction, deduced from that Example; which he uttereth, as forewarning the Sinners in Sion to consider, That if God be so terrible in the Judgments he executes by others, his Angels, who are Flames of Fire; how will you endure to dwell with God himself, and have immediately to do with him forever, who is a devouring Fire and everlasting Burnings? &c. And our Saviour's Speech is not remote from this of Isaiah, when, speaking of Hell, it is the Fire prepared for Hypocrites, (says he) Matth. 24. 51. Even as here, Isaiah professeth to speak this of and unto the Hypocrites in Sion, as the Persons above all other forewarned, when Hell is threatned. Again, as in Isaiah, God himself is called the devouring and everlasting Fire, so here in the Text, his Wrath is termed fiery Indignation devouring. And the Word translated Adversaries here, falls out also to be a Word decyphering Hypocrites or false Professors, everlasting under-hand Enemies: who are also said to look for, in their trembling Consciences, this fiery Indignation: even as of these Hypocrites Isaiah also speaks, as being the Expectants of Hell. And again, our Apostle, chap. 12. 31. Our God is a consuming Fire. So as upon several Accounts it is, that God himself and his Wrath is, more eminently, that Fire in Hell the Scriptures sometimes speak of.

If it be objected out of my Text, Is it not said, He cometh in flaming Fire with his Mighty Angels? Will he not then use corporeal Fire, as also the Might of his Angels, and both as Instruments of his Execution, and their Destruction; and to that very End mention the Might of his Angels?

I answer, 1. This Fire here is not mentioned, as that which is the Cause of their everlasting Destruction: but as that which is a Concomitant of Christ's Appearing; and also a Fore-runner or Harbinger to that Judgment, he comes to pronounce Sentence of, whereof the Destruction that follows is the final Execution. Judges use for Terror, and for a Demonstration of their Authority, Work, and Office they are employed in, to have visible Instruments of Death carried before them, as Ensigns of their Power: A Company of Halberds or the like for their Guard to go before, and environ them round; which yet are not to be the immediate Instruments of the Execution of Malefactors it self, but accompany their Persons at the Examination and Sentence. And as to this or the like Use, is this Guard of Angels, and of flaming Fire mentioned, to be understood to serve: Both these referring evidently unto that his Appearing. Who shall be revealed from Heaven with his mighty Angels in flaming Fire, but not spoken of, as the Causes of the Destruction it self that follows.

The Angels further serve to gather Men from all the four Corners of the World, Matth. 13. 41, 42. to hale and bring them before the Judg; and after Sentence, to cast them into the Place of Torment, called there a Furnace of Fire: but not of their making, but God's. They do but deliver them into the dreadful Place, wherein Execution is acted and performed.

2. This Fire which he appears with, is to burn up this visible World, as a fore-running Sign, to shew the Fierceness of the Fire of that Wrath which shall after prey and seize upon the invisible World; that is, Mens Souls and Devils for ever. Not that Mens Souls are to be burnt up with no other Fire, than what the World is burnt withal, but that which burns the visible World, is an Example and Demonstration of that other Fire, that is kindled in his Anger, that shall in the end, burn to the Bottom of Hell, Deut. 32. 22. This as to what may be objected out of that Place.

3. I deny not from other Scriptures a created Fire in Hell: Let but that also be allowed which some of the Ancients also speak of, that there is a double Fire there: One inward in Mens Souls; another outward. Gerson aptly applieth that Place of the Psalmist fore-cited, Psal. 21. 19. unto that of this inward Fire, Thou shalt make them as a fiery Oven; the Lord shall swallow them up in his Wrath, and the Fire shall devour them. The Fire of an Oven is a fit Similitude of a Fire within, as into which Fire is put to heat it, and the Heat made more intense by the Cavity or Hollowness of the Place. Whereas to be cast into a Furnace of Fire, as Christ speaks, or into a Lake of Fire, as Apoc. imports a Fire without, into which the Matter or Persons to be burnt are cast.

And thus much for bare Scripture-Testimonies. Many other there are which might be here collected to confirm this, but are scattered in several parts of this Discourse in a duer place.

C H A P. V.

A second sort of Proofs. Demonstrations from Instances both of wicked Men and holy Men, who have felt in this Life Impressions of God's immediate Wrath: And that such Impressions are Evidences of what, in the Fulness, is in Hell.

A Second sort of Proofs, are Demonstrations from Instances, in Scripture, of Persons in this Life, who have felt Impressions of this Wrath of God in their Souls, upon God's rebuking them for Sin. And these Instances of Experience, upon Record, being added to those foregoing Scripture-Testimonies, will serve as ruled Cases, joined unto Maxims in Law, alledged both of them for the Proof of one and the same thing; and will give yet more clear Demonstration what is meant by Wrath, and what Hell is in the Fulness of it: And being joined to the former, do altogether give an abundant Evidence of this great Truth.

I say, 1. Of Men in this Life: And if any should deny the Truth hereof, or that which we have been prosecuting, themselves perhaps e're they die may be made miserable Examples, verifying of both; and out of their own woful Experience, live to confess and acknowledg the Truth herein. For God doth in this Life single out some, both of his Children and others, to whom he gives a Taste what the one should for ever have undergone, but that Christ did it for them; and of what the other must undergo for ever, without Repentance. Whereof those Instances that follow, are undeniable Evidences.

And, 2. These Terrors are wrought by God's immediate Hand; and from immediate Impressions and Representations of his Wrath, made by him on their Souls, and to their Consciences. For as God puts Joy into the Hearts of his Children in this Life, by the immediate Light of his Countenance, as Psal. 4. ver. 6. Lord, lift up the Light of thy Countenance upon us: and ver. 7. Thou hast put Gladness in my Heart, more than in the time that their Corn and their Wine increaseth: and again, Whom though we see not, yet believing, we rejoice with Joy unspeakable and glorious, as the Apostle speaks of those primitive Saints: Even so when he is pleased to rebuke Man for Sin, he doth the like, in a way of Contraries, on Men both good and bad; correcting them, by and with Anguishments from the like immediate Stroak of his own Anger. God is the Father of all Spirits: and of the Spirits of his own Children upon a double Creation. And if the Fathers of our Bodies corrected us, and had Power to do it with bodily Punishment, by bodily Instruments; do we think that our Souls which lie naked before God, (Heb. 4. 13.) are not as immediately subject and exposed to his Correction, as a Father of Spirits? And if so, that then he may and doth sometimes chuse to correct even his own Children with no other Rods but of his own? which are the immediate Emanations, Streamings and Dattings of his own Displeasure: which when they feel, they wax pale and wan, and wander up and down, like unto Ghosts in Hell, as if they were cut off by his Hand. And that those Anguishments which either of these feel, are from God's immediate Hand alone; those that have felt the Smart thereof, do readily acknowledg: for it is not in the Power of any Creature to strike so hard a Stroak.

And you shall hear some of themselves by and by, speak out so much, whilst they were under the present Sense thereof. These things premised,

There are two things to make this Demonstration compleat.

First, The Instances themselves of Persons in this Life: On the Evidence of which the main Stress lies, for the Proof of the Assertion.

The

The Second is, That such immediate Impressions of Divine Wrath, are Evidences of what kind of Torment it is, which in the Fulness of it befallerh Men in Hell; and that both proceed from the same immediate Cause.

Chap. 5.

The Instances are of two sorts: That so we still may have under two or three Witnesses, this Word established.

First, Of good and holy Men.

Secondly, Of bad and wicked Men.

1. For Instances of holy Men, there are divers of them. As of Job, see his Complaints, chap. 6. ver. 2, 3, 4, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. The Arrows of the Almighty are within me, the Poison whereof drinks up my Spirit: The Terrors of God do set themselves in array against me. O that it would please God to destroy me, that he would loose his Hand and cut me off! Which with other Passages in that Chapter, I shall after open at large. Again, chap. 13. 24, 26. Thou holdest me for thine Enemy, thou writest bitter things against me, and makest me to possess the Sins of my Youth: also chap. 16. ver. 12, 13, 14, 15. God, he also hath taken me by my Neck, and shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his Mark: His Archers compass me about, he cleaveth my Reins asunder, and doth not spare; he breaketh me with Breach upon Breach, he runneth upon me as a Giant. I shall here only single out that of Heman, which is a most full one, and alone sufficient; and reserve the explicating that of Job's Case, wholly unto the setting forth the Dreadfulness, which is the Subject of the second Section.

Heman complains at the third Verse of that Psal. 88. My Soul is full of Trouble, &c. And what was the matter of that Trouble, and the inflicting Cause thereof? Ver. 7. Thy Wrath lies hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy Waves: Selah. Those Words [Thy Wrath lies hard, &c.] others read, sustains it self, or bears up it self upon me; which is, as if a Giant should with his whole Weight stay himself upon a Child. And thou hast afflicted me with all thy Waves. The Waves of that immense Ocean of Wrath (for unto such Waves he again compares these Terrors in ver. 16, 17.) he says they came over him continually; and overwhelmed his Soul, as Billows of the Sea wallowing and tumbling upon a Japheth cast into them. And ver. 14, 15, 16. he sets out his Condition such, as wherein there was not only a Privation of God's Favour, and that God seemed to reject his Soul, as if he never meant more to look upon it, or regard it; so ver. 14. Why castest thou off my Soul? But further, positively, ver. 15. I suffer thy Terrors. And ver. 16. Thy fierce Wrath goes over me, thy Terrors have cut me off. The Blows which God gave his Soul were so hard and sharp, that to his feeling they not only wounded or cut into, but cut off his Soul at every Stroak. The like follows ver. 17. and this put him into the Condition of Men in Hell. I am free among the Dead, ver. 5. that is, of that Society, Number and Company; and as one of them, that are cut off from thy Hand, or (as the Margent renders it) [by thy Hand.] All which are, as if he had said, they are not the Stroaks of Creatures I feel; or of thine Anger, as conveyed by Creature Distresses, but of thine own immediate Hand; and such, as those that are in Hell it self, do feel from thee. These are Notes and Degrees beyond, and higher than the Ela of Dolours from or by the Hands of Creatures, though set on by God: They are Strains of another Key, the doleful Air of which doth sound another Hand and Stroak, (purely Divine) that did immediately strike upon their Heart-strings that spake these things. These are the Resoundings of Blows and Stroaks which God's own immediate Hand gave upon the bare Spirit, of one wounded by him; he that attentively listens to them, will soon perceive and esteem (as they said) this Man stricken and smitten of God himself. Creature-Distresses give a far less Report.

But that it was God's own immediate Hand, is more plainly by himself expressed, ver. 16. Thy Terrors have cut me off: and ver. 15. while I suffer thy Terrors, I am distracted, and ready to die from my Youth up (as in the same Verse) thy Terrors, to he termeth them (he speaking to God) of the Terrors [of thee] that is, 1st, From Thee efficiently, and from thy Hand setting them on.

And

Book XIII And 2dly, Of Thee, as arising in me from and with dreadful apprehensions and thoughts of Thee objectively, and of Thy fore Displeasure represented to my Soul by Thee. And so God's Terrors are every way set forth in distinction from Distresses from Creatures, or such as are made mediately by or from Creature-afflictions, although they also be from God. Thus in like phrase of Speech it is appositely said, 1 Pet. 3. 14. Be not afraid of their Terror; he speaks it of Men that were Persecutors, and threatned the Saints. Their Terror, objective; that is, the Terror of them, or that Terror which the apprehension of their Power, Greatness, Strength, Threatnings, &c. may possibly work in you. In a like Sense, thy Terror here is spoken of God. And the other great Apostle, speaking of this ultimate Punishment of Hell, he in like phrase termeth it, the Terror of the Lord, 2 Cor. 5. 11. that is, that Terror which is peculiar and proper to him, in and to the Souls of Men, who is the terrible God, (as he styles himself in Moses;) and says Nahum, Who can abide, or stand in the fierceness of his Anger?

There are further two Effects, which Heman there relateth, of this his having suffered these Terrors, or that befel his Spirit whilst these Terrors were upon him. 1. That he was continually ready to die; the Wrath that lay on him was so heavy, as it even well-nigh thrust his Soul out every moment, and made the Spirit to fail. And, 2. It made him not himself (as we say) put him out of his right Mind. Whilst I suffer thy Terrors, I am distracted. For the intention of a Soul taken up with, and extended by the Wrath of God, is such, and is wound up so high, as the String is ready to crack. You usually terms this in such Persons deeply wounded, [Trouble of Conscience] (but that is more common) whereas this Dispensation requires an higher Word, it is indeed the Wrath of God, or the Terror of God in Conscience, making it as a fiery Oven within it self, as the Psalmist speaks. This for the Instances of Good Men.

A second Instance is of Bad and Wicked Men. What was it caused Judas to hang himself? The Prophecy of the Psalmist, and the Apostle's Reference to it, have resolved us, that it was the Curse or Wrath of God entering into his Soul. The Psalm is the hundred and ninth, which was penned on purpose about him; the Apostle's Reference and Application is in Acts 1. 20. — In the Psalm 'tis said, ver. 18. as he loved Cursing, that is, Sin, which is that accursed thing, before God, so the Curse of God came into his Bowels (or Inwards) like Water, and like Oil into his Bones, and filled all within him full of Anguish and Torment: and so was fulfilled that Saying, Indignation and Wrath, namely of God, caused Tribulation and Anguish in his Soul. The Similitudes or Allusions there are elegant; That as there are Spiritual Oils which Mens Bodies being anointed withal, they soak into the Bones, &c. they cool, refresh, and repair Spirits and Strength, and allay fervent Heats and Pains; into which more inward Parts, other Medicines more crasse and druggish, cannot soak, or come. In the way of a contrary vertue or effect, he compares the Curse of God on his Soul, unto a spiritual Oil, of a piercing, penetrating Violence, that strikes in, as Quicksilver, into the Bones and nervous Parts, and fills them with unsufferable Torments. He compareth also this Curse, and the Effects of it, unto such painful Diseases as are caused by sharp corroding Waters in the Bowels; as of the Gout in the Bowels, which when it possesseth those Inwards, is mortal and intolerable. The Apostle's Allusion elsewhere is correspondent to both these of the Psalmist, when he says, The Word of God (through the Power of the Spirit) is a savour of Death unto Death in some Mens Hearts, as of Life unto Life in others, 2 Cor. 2. 16. The meaning whereof is, that look as venomous and sulphurous Vapours and Damps in Mines and Caverns, arising out of the Earth, do strike up such Scents or Smells, as often kill, by extinguishing the Spirits of those that descend into them; such Exhalations of Hell and Wrath, doth the Spirit of God, by the Word preached, exhale and draw forth, and cause to ascend in some Mens Consciences, which gives them the very Scent of Hell it self: They are the Savour or Odour of Death aforehand, [unto Death] and Damnation, and so are Vapours of the same kind, out of the same Matter that is laid up in the Mine or Treasury it self; as those out of the Earth use to be.

The second thing requisite to be added for the compleating the Demonstration, is, That such immediate Impressions of Divine Wrath in this Life, are sure and certain Evidences (I say not as to what Persons, but) of what kind of Torment it is, which in the fulness of it befallerh Men in Hell, and that both do proceed from the same immediate Cause. This needs not much probation, for the Instances afore given, carry their own Evidence with them of this thing to any intelligent Reader. And this general Reason for it, will readily occur to any one's Thoughts, that surely God will not punish them in Hell with a Punishment of a lesser sort or kind, (for we speak not now of Comparisons of Degrees) than what his Dispensation reacheth forth unto some Men in this Life: for that is the proper Day, and Time, and Season of Wrath, and of the Fierceness of his Wrath; in which the Fruits of their own Doings, are every way in their full Ripeness and Maturity to be returned to them; and these Inflictions in this Life are but the Buds and the Blooms that precede, yet both from the same Root and Cause. Now to be punished by God's Wrath but mediately, through the force only of created Instruments, &c. as of material Fire, or the like, (if that were all the Punishment there) this were certainly by a lower kind or sort, than to be punished immediately from the Wrath of God it self; as will abundantly appear in the second Section, when I shall set out the Dreadfulness of such a Punishment.

But let us particularly weigh the Instances themselves, as we have singly and apart delivered them.

1. Those Dispensations to wicked and bad Men, as Judas, &c.
2. The same as they are exemplified in good and holy Men, as Heman, &c.

And either of them will afford an Argument for the proof of this Proposition in hand.

1. These direful Impressions of God's immediate Wrath, when they do befall wicked Men, what are they to them? Not only Pledges or Fore-runners of that Punishment to come, (for such all sorts of Afflictions are unto wicked Men) but further, these are Spices and Grudgings, and lesser intermitting Fits of those future, fiery, burning, and continued Calentures and Fevers; yea, Earnest-pennies of Hell, and so of the same kind with what in full Men shall there receive.

As we use to say and speak of those glorious Joys, which some Saints aforehand have the privilege to partake of, that they are pure Drops of those Rivers of Pleasure, flowing immediately from the same Fountain of Life: So we may as confidently say of those breakings forth of Wrath upon wicked Mens Souls here, that they are the Sippings of that Cup of Wrath without mixture, (as the Revelation distinguisheth it from those in this Life) whereof the Wicked must drink the Dregs, though it be to Eternity, unto the bottom. And therefore we may make a true and warrantable measure, of what all such Men are to look for in Hell, by what some few of them do partake of here.

And the Argument is strong every way, from the one of these unto the other. For as Heaven and Hell are Parallel in a way of contraries, as out of Rom. 9. 22, 23. hath been shewn; so those unspeakable glorious Joys, and these contrary extraordinary Horrors and Anguishes, on the other hand, do hold parallel also, in being (in their several kinds) Prelibations and Tastes of what is to come in the other World. And in this very posture and tendency doth the Apostle set these two Dispensations together in this Life, in a parallel way, (as in Rom. 9. he doth the other) whilst in the same Scripture, 2 Cor. 2. 15, 16. he compares those Joys (common in those Times) in them that are saved, to the breakings forth (at the opening of the Gospel, as of a Box of Spiknard) of a sweet Odour or Savour of Life unto Life, (namely, of the Life to come) aforehand, sensing their Souls with some of those Perfumes that are fetch'd from that Country, and only grow there: and on the contrary, such also he declares those precursory Savours or Odours of Death in their kind to be, which do arise from from the threatenings of the same Word in Horrors upon many that perish, which he pronounceth to be the very Evaporations of that Lake of Fire and Brimstone, which is the second Death, in stiling them the Odour or [Savour of] Death [unto Death] so speaks he. These Men often smell the scent of Hell in their Consciences, and the Spirits of it do strike up into their Souls. The very Ashes and Smoak of that Vesuvius or Aetna of Hell, (I allude unto the last Words of Deut. 32. 22.) do fall upon them, which lightning upon Men in this Life, do, as those Ashes of the Furnace (Exod. 9. 8, 9, 10.) miraculously did, they cause Sores and Blains upon Mens Consciences. And however, if the Apostle did therewithal intend the more common Dispensations by the Word, and so both the Ordinary and Extraordinary, of which we now speak. Yet still take and compare those extraordinary Joys in the one, as a Savour of Life, with the extraordinary Horrors, that are the Saviour of Death, unto the other; and in their Proportion there is still the like Reason of both, as to the matter in Hand; and an alike presignificancy in either of those two eternal Estates.

Again, that each of these are alike, by and from God, and by his more immediate Hand dispensed. This I take from that Phil. 1. 28. and submit the interpretation of it. Where, exhorting Christians unto an holy Courage and Confidence in their appearings (for the Cause of Christ) before their Persecutors Tribunals: In nothing be terrified by our Adversaries, says he. And upon such a Bold undauntedness on their part, two Effects he tells them do often follow; and both from God alike, as two wonderful contrary Effects. First, In themselves, God elevateth and raiseth up that their Confidence of Faith into a glorious Assurance and taste of Heaven and Salvation, whither they are a going; so in these Words, Which is a Token to you (your selves) of Salvation. But on the contrary, which is, an evident token (namely, in their Persecutor's Consciences) of Perdition, if they Repent not, and that (namely, both these Effects) [of God.]

Two things I observe:

1. That these two contrary Effects run parallel still, and that in order to, and of their being Tokens either of Salvation or Perdition; as in that other place, 2 Cor. 2. And so that as the Joys put into the Hearts of these Confessors, are the first Fruits of the Spirit, and therefore of the same kind with what Fruit and Harvest they reap in Heaven; and thereupon also a Spirit of Glory (is said) to Rest upon them in such a Case; it being it self initial Glory, and the first Fruits of Glory, in a Way of Glory. Thus on the contrary, those Terrors God strikes their Adversaries Hearts withal, are like Tokens and Evidences of Hell, no other than the Suburbs, the first Fruits of Hell, and Shadow of Death.

Rom. 2.

1 Pet. 4. 14.

And, 2. I observe, (which is that for which I quote it) that both these extraordinary Effects are alike wrought in the Hearts of either, by the same or like Hand, namely, Impressions from God. The Apostle therefore adds, ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, unto both, [and that of God,] He being the immediate Author of the one as well as of the other; and both unto a like, though contrary purpose. And the Reason why God thus often takes that Season and occasion to put forth his immediate Power in the Consciences of either, at such a Time, is, because his Glory is in no Passages of Providence in and upon Earth so highly interested and engaged, as upon such Trials, wherein both his Truth and Children are brought to the Bar at once, and therefore is then pleased to discover something more than Ordinary (though secretly) in the Spirits of Men. Have they no Fear, says the Psalmist, that Eat up my People like Bread? One would think so, they look so big, and fall too so heartily to devour them: Yes, says the Psalmist, answering it, there were they in great Fear. [There] that is, upon such an Occasion, at such a time; and yet the same Psalmist tells us, that there was no Cause of Fear, (compare for that, Psal. 14. 4. with Psal. 54. 4.) that is, not from Creatures. What was the matter then? or whence comes this great Fear? God is in the Generation of the Righteous, says the Psalmist; thence was their Fear: [and that of God.] So the Apostle in that very Case. God takes part with his Children, and to strikes strikes and Terrifies their Adversaries Souls, as he comforts theirs; and this is to them an evident Token, and as the first Baptisms, Washings or Sprinklings of that Perdition, which their Souls will be everlastingly Drowned in (as the Apostle's allusion is in Timothy) if they turn not.

The and truth real Verification of both these so immediate Effects by God, and from God, (he as with a double-edged Sword striking contrary Ways at once.) Multitudes of Instances of both kinds the Story of the Martyrs doth relate; and particularly in the Examples of those persecuting Emperors Galerius and Maximinus, as Eusebius hath recorded them. Inasmuch as that lamentable out-cry in the sixth Seal, Rev. 6. 16. Which the Kings of the Earth, and mighty Men (the Persecutors) are brought in so loudly uttering, in saying to the Mountains, Fall on us, and hide us from the Wrath of the Lamb. Mr. Mede and others have applied (as the Time and Order of the Visions of that Prophecy require) unto those Great Persecutors in the Roman Empire, whom authentick Antiquity hath related to have been terrified and struck with Horror, by God and the Lamb, in prodigious extraordinary Ways of Confusion; and those Terrors, such as Stories have related them, as were the liveliest Representations of that Great Day of Wrath, ver. 17. And are therefore set out under the Notion thereof, as having been to them the very imperfect beginnings of it. This for the Argument from the instances of wicked Men.

II. The Argument is as strong, though not so direct, from the instances of Holy Men.

For, 1. This Dispensation to them, is not only an Argument in common with other Afflictions of this World, in their being a manifest Token of the Judgment of God; and that therefore a sure and certain Judgment is to come upon the Wicked, as he there argues. But this kind, being a Judgment of a spiritual Nature (as immediate inflictions of Wrath are) and properly belonging unto Souls, as they are the Subjects of the other World: It argues therefore upon a more proper Account, that the Punishment to come is of the same Kind therewith.—And such they must needs be, unless we will suppose, that God whips his own Children in this World with Scorpions, but wicked Men in the other World, but as with Rods in comparison of them. For it must be acknowledged, that these God's own blows, from his own immediate Hand, are forer, and cause Wounds of a deeper Blew, than what are given by him through Creatures. Surely God hath not laid up gentler Rods for the wicked in Hell, then he puts in ure towards his Children: Have I smote them as I smote thee? Isa. 27. 7. I will correct thee in measure, Jer. 30. 1. not so them. The equity of those ruled Cases, (which the Reader may consult) Jer. 25. 15, 16, 17, 28, 29. Luke 23. 31. and 1 Pet. 4. 12, 17. do hold in this, and give us Warrant in like manner to argue, That if his own Children do Drink of so bitter a Cup here: then surely You, the Wicked of the Earth, shall much more Drink of the very same. And these Scriptures alleaded, and the strength of this our Inference, are all resolved into that of Psal. 78. 8. In the Hand of the Lord is a Cup, whereof the Wicked of the Earth shall (finally) drink the Dregs. And the Force therefore lies in this, That if such kind of Judgments and fiery Trials as these (I allude unto that Speech of the Apostle) thus falling upon their Spirits from God himself, do begin at some of the Household of God, then where will the Ungodly and Sinners appear? For his own People do but begin in this Cup to them who are to drink the Dregs, whereof themselves have but the Droppings.

2. This dispensation of Impressions of Wrath, when it doth befall either the Godly or the Wicked, although there are differing Ends and purposes from God towards either; yet as they are one and the same in Substance (as other Afflictions are) so also they meet in this one and the same Issue, namely, to be an Evidence and Demonstration what Hell it self in the Extremity of it is. For as in the Wicked they are imperfect Testimonies of what they shall undergo, to the End they may repent; so in the Godly they are Evidences of what they have deserved in Common with those, and all wicked Men; and to shew that they are alike Children of Wrath, even as others; also unto them, they are sensible Experiments of what they should have undergone, but that Christ hath saved them from the Wrath to come, that so they may be thankful, and love much. And many other holy Ends there are; yet still so, as these contrary Lines do Centre in this, that Hell is prelibated and tasted by the one as well as the other.

Psal. 88.

But for a clear Eviction, that these Terrors in the Godly are no other than the very Shadow of Death, or vive and lively Resemblances of what Men feel in Hell; Hear what themselves say of it, whilst under the Sense thereof. First, Heman for all the rest, while you find him as with his Mouth put in Hell, into the very Dust of Death, bemoaning himself thus, ver. 5. I am free among the Dead, like the Slain that lie in the Grave, whom thou remembrest no more: and that are cut off from, or by thy Hand. When he says [Slain] it is in Language, the same which Christ useth of that Execution, Luke 19. 27. Slay them before me. And the whole of it is all one, as to say, My condition is like unto a Man's that is in Hell; and in some respects the same. Not that it had the same Consequents, all Effects of Despair that Wrath hath upon the Damned: but in respect it is God's hand that inflicteth it, and also the same Wrath it self he felt; And David who had experimented them, expressly terms them the Pains and Sorrows of Hell, Psal. 18. 5. and 116. 3. and elsewhere. And Jonah says the like, whilst he was in the Whale's Belly for his Rebellion against God. Compare for this, Heman's Speeches, Psal. 88. 6, 7, 16, 17. with these of Jonah, chap. 2. 2, 4. And so you have out of their own Mouths this Assertion verified; and the Consequence we have insisted on, confirmed.

C H A P. VI.

A Third sort of Proofs from Reasons. 1. God's Justice. 2. Avenging Wrath, otherwise not satisfied. A Demonstration added.

I Come now to the Reasons of it, which will shew the Necessity of this Course, namely, of God's taking it into his own Hands. It might be wondred at, that the great God having an Host or Army of Creatures ready to be his Avengers, should over and above what they might do, himself set his Hand to this: But God and Christ are so far from esteeming this a staining of their Glory, as earthly Judges think it would be to Execute any themselves, that this being a Trophée of regaining Honour debased by the Creature, they account it a part of their Glory. Thus God here challengeth it to himself, Vengeance is mine, as a Glory he would not give to any other. And Christ is so far from accounting, that he staineth his Raiment with their Blood, Isa. 63. as that he glories to tread the Wine-press of his Father's Wrath alone. He glories in it.

There are two Reasons drawn from the final Causes of this Punishment, which makes this Dispensation necessary: 1. It is for the Glory of his Justice. 2. It is an act of avenging Wrath, retributing Vengeance. Which two do center in this as a third, That it is to be Destruction to the Persons it falls upon, as the Issue of both. All which can never be attained but by an Execution made by God's own immediate Wrath.

I shall found these Reasons, as I did the other Proofs, upon what I find Foundations for in these very Texts I have chosen.

1. It is an Act of Justice; so in this Heb. 10. I will repay; and 2 Thess. 1. 6. It is a righteous thing in God. τὸ δίκαιον ἀναποσθέντα, to repay again or recompence, and vers. 9. οἱ τινες δίκην ἴσθουσιν, who shall pay or lay down a Punishment justly sentenced; which in Heb. 2. 2. is called a just Recompence of Reward. And Rom. 6. last, the Wages or Reward of Sin. And this is the last Paiment, and all that for ever, Sin in them, or God for Sin, shall have; and therefore that whereby the Glory of God is to be fully recovered.

2. It is an Act of avenging Wrath, as in both these places is expressed.

Let us see what evidence of Reason each of these apart do afford, much more put together.

1. Justice. Concerning that the Assertion is, That if there be a Satisfaction made for Man's Sin unto God's Justice, but so far as it may be attained upon the Creature to be punished in Hell, God himself will set his immediate Hand to it, and Justice requires this.

1. I say, A Satisfaction, so far as may be attained upon the Creature that hath sinned, and which is to be the Subject of this Punishment. I put this in, because otherwise it must be affirmed of Christ alone, that he gave full Satisfaction unto God's Justice, in whom there was ἐνδείξις δικαιοσύνης Θεῶν, a Manifestation or Demonstration of God's Justice for Sins that were past: yet Rom. 3. 25. still, as although a full Satisfaction can never be had from or upon the Creature, (therefore in Hell they always Suffer) yet God doth recover what can be had, and paieth himself out of them as far as it will go; as those Phrases, Paying the utmost Farthing, Mat. 5. 26. and, Selling them and all they had to make Money thereof, Mat. 18. 25. do shew.

2. In this Case, that which Justice will require unto any tolerable Equitable satisfaction in this Punishment, is, that as Exact a proportion be observed, as possibly there may be, and as the Subject is capable of. The Justice of God as it is according to Truth, so exactness and Equity: and the work of God

God is perfect in every kind; and performed in due Weight, Number and Measure, but above all else where Justice is professed. You may hear Justice speak in Isaiab, chap. 59. According to their Deeds, [accordingly] he will repay Recompence to his Enemies. There is an [According] and an [Accordingly] to that: So as all due Measures and Rules of Proportion every way shall be observed. Which Measures being set out in this matter, will evidently demonstrate that God's immediate Hand is necessarily required thereto.

1. Let the Demerit of Sin be weighed: And for that in the General, I refer unto the first of these Treatises of the Heinousness of Sin. And we shall find, that although the crasser part of Sin is an inordinate Lusting after, or Enjoyment of things created, or sinful Comforts in Creatures; yet that the great and Foundation-Evil of it lieth in an Aversion or turning off from God, and therein and thereby there is a reflecting upon God an immediate Slight or Undervalue, to an Infiniteness of Dishonour and Contempt cast upon his Goodness, Blessedness, that is to be had in him; as also to his Sovereignty, Prerogative, Supremacy, Holiness, &c. which are shewn forth and laid at Stake of every of his Laws, whereof Sin is the Transgression. Now if indeed it could have been supposed, that Sin were nothing else but that gross and crass Part spoken of, the Injoyment of Creatures, than a Punishment by Creatures only, might equivalently have been even with that its Obliquity of debasing its own Excellency unto Creatures: But it being an immediate Reflection upon God himself, none can fill up the Proportion of a meet and full Punishment, which Justice doth require for this, but God himself. I may make use of El's Speech, 1 Sam. 2. 25. If one Man sin against another, the Judg shall judg him, and revenge it: but if against God, who shall intreat for him? Thus he. And upon the same or like ground of Reason I infer, If one Creature wrong another, a Creature of the same kind can revenge it. If a Man shed Man's Blood, so far as it is wrong to the bare Creature, By Man shall his Blood be shed; so says the Law in relation to Man's Day in this World: But if Man sin against God, who shall recompence it, when God's Day comes wherein he is to be glorified? None, so as to give Satisfaction to his most exact Justice, but God himself.

Yea further, if we retained to that Opinion of many learned Men, That Adam's Injoyment of God for ever, in that holy Estate of Innocency, should have been of God, but as manifested in and by Creatures, and his holy Law, and not as in himself, or as in Heaven, &c. yet this would not serve for a Rule whereby to estimate, or make Proportion, that therefore this Punishment should oppositely be only from God, by and through Creatures. For whatever his Injoyment should have been, whether of God mediately, or of God as in himself immediately, I dispute not: yet to be sure when God was cast off by him, or is by us immediately and directly reflected upon, [even God as God] which is that, whereby every Man's Sin is heightened in Rom. 1. 21. the meaning whereof is, that God as in himself is debased by Sin. So that as the Apostle says in the like Case, Rom. 5. 15. [Not as the Offence, so is the free Gift.] On the contrary, upon the like ground, Not as was the Case or Merit of Adam's Righteousness, so is the Demerit of Sin; and so, nor of Punishment. Because there is so transcendent an Undueness, yea, an Injury done to the great God himself by the Creature in Sinning, over and above the Proportion of all created Grace or Obedience. For all Obedience was due, and all Man's Reward in obeying was from the mere Goodness of God, which he, and his Obedience, and all depended upon: and so the Proportion thereof is no way to be look'd at, either as the Measure of the Evil of Sin, or of what is to be the Punishment thereof. Sin we are sure is so great an Evil, as no mere Creature, but Christ God-Man, and his Obedience or Suffering, could have satisfied God for, in the behalf of another. And why may it not also be said, that as none but he, that was subjective God, could satisfy God for the Demerit of Sin, committed against God objective? so that Sin is such an Evil, as cannot in the Sinner himself be thoroughly punished unto the Satisfaction of Justice, but by God himself efficiently; that is, God to be the Inflicter thereof immediately.

A second equitable Rule of Proportion, that Justice (requiring the fullest Satisfaction that may be had) will exact, is, that the principal Author and Actor in the Sin should principally bear the Punishment. This not only Vengeance (which is the second Topick) doth in a more eminent manner aim at, and affect, but Justice doth call for it also; the Justice both of God and Men. Now the Principal in Sin is known to be the Soul of Man. Which I shall urge, when I come to shew how Vengeance also seeketh to wreck it self thereon. That which serves to my present purpose (which is this, that in the Point of Satisfaction, to be made unto God's Justice, it is most proper for God himself to punish Sin in the Soul) in order thereunto, is, 1st, To enquire, What is it in the Soul or Spirit of Man, which God, when he comes to deal strictly and down-rightly, as a Judg of Mens Souls, hath principally to do withal? All must acknowledg that it is Conscience that hath to do with God as a Judg: for it must be that in Man, which is the most proper Seat of the Guilt of Sin, which Guilt is the Obligation unto Judgment and Punishment. And this to be Mens Consciences, the Scriptures hold forth, and every Man's own Soul feels. Hence also to be purged from an evil Conscience, is all one, and to be perfectly acquitted from the Guilt of Sin. And for God no more to remember our Sins, or to be atoned with us as a Judg; is all one as to say, that we on our parts have no more Conscience of Sins, Heb. 10. 2, 3, 10, 11, 17 Verses compared. Conscience is that part of the Soul, whereby God as the Judg arraigneth every Man. It is the Hand which a guilty Soul holds up at God's Bar for all the rest of Man; and is God's Witness within Man against himself, Rom. 2. 15. and that in order unto Judgment, as follows in ver. 16.

Chap. 6.

Again, 2<sup>dly</sup>, I enquire, when it shall come to the Execution of the Punishment sentenced? What is it in the Soul or Spirit of Man that is most directly and naturally capable of Anguish and Torment, and what that part is, which God may most properly strike a Man's Soul in, when he would rebuke him for Sin? Certainly, still a Man's Conscience. All Beasts have one tender Part above any other, that most grieves them, if smitten: This, in guilty Man is Conscience. We see it in Cain and Judas, God burnt them both in this Hand; in the Hand of Conscience in this World.

Having by these two Enquiries, stated the Principal, both in Guilt, and in being the Seat of the Execution; I shall for the Proof hereof, as also in order to the clearer making forth the Argument before us, namely, That Justice requires God's immediate Hand, &c. I shall in a more ample manner set together these five ensuing Assertions.

1. That Conscience, and the intellectual or understanding Power in Man's Soul, are God's Engagee, and the Principal in a double Respect. 1st, Conscience is responsible for the whole in Man: or if you will, Principal in the Obligation. As being that, which, by its own Acknowledgment of a Judgment made unto God when he shall come to judg, binds over it self, and with it self, the whole Soul for the Payment. And upon that Account is to be reckoned the chief Obligee: and therefore the Execution is justly to be served upon it, and through it upon the whole Soul. 2<sup>dly</sup>, If we take in together with Conscience, the understanding part in Man; the Intelligentia, or the Spirit of the Mind in the Summit of it; that is, really to be accounted also the Principal, in respect of its share in the very Acts of Sinning; so as justly the Guilt of every Act is refunded upon it as the principal Actor. For it is entrusted by God, with the Steering and Management of the whole Soul, with the Conduct of it, as the General. By reason of that Light, God at first seated in it, it was appointed for ever to be the Guide and Leader of the Will and Affections. And therefore God justly requireth the Account, or the Defaults and Miscarriages of the whole, at its Hands. According to the Enquiry of those Rules declared concerning Rulers of the People, Jer. 5. 4, 5. These have known the Way of the Lord, &c. As also from that other like to it, given forth touching the Priests, and which we find so often inculcated in Ezekiel, I will require their Blood at the Priests Hands. And all these founded upon one and and the same common Ground, common unto Conscience with these; namely, Conscience and Knowledg there being the Guides: And yet, in that Conscience gives but an ineffectual weak warning against Sin (which should powerfully sway the whole) and the Spirit of the Mind, or the practick Understanding doth still wickedly give secret Consent unto Sin, &c. Hence therefore that Denunciation in Ezekiel holds, that God will require the Blood of [the Soul] at his Hands. Although the Soul (the Will and Affections) do perish too, in their Iniquity, as it is there spoken. And, for this Cause it becomes Justice to punish this chief Agent and Offender, or this great Minister of State in Sinning, and to make these the Seat of the Execution above any or all other Faculties.

Prov. 1. 32.

2. It will furthermore agree with the Rules of Justice, yea, it will be a special Trophy unto Justice, to have Sin it self in the Guilt of it, made as far as possibly, to be it's own Tormentor, and Instrument of the highest Punishment in and unto the Soul that hath sinned. There is no Sword like unto that, will Justice say, to slay a Sinner withal. It is of all other the most proper and exquisite way of punishing. For the Sinner to eat (for ever) of the Fruit of his own Ways, and to be filled with their own Devices; and their Iniquity to slay them. This is the justest and highest Doom which Wisdom it self can invent, or God's Power execute. The very same doth Jeremy also speak, chap. 2. 19. Thine own Wickedness shall correct thee: know therefore, and see, that it is an evil thing and a bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God. Certainly for the Sinner to feel in the most intimate and immediate manner that may be the Bitterness of the Guilt of Sin; and to find that that, above all other Punishments that can be inflicted, is the sharpest and severest; this is a transcendent Strain of Justice indeed. Now this is most exquisitely accomplish'd through that proper Capacity which Conscience and the intellectual Part in Man have as to this very thing: And in their being the Seat of the Guilt of Sin, they are thereby further fitted to become the Vessel or Receptacle of this the highest Punishment. This is in a great measure verified by that in Isa. 59. 11, 12. We roar all like Bears: And what was it that caused this? For our Transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our Sins testify against us: For our Transgressions are with us; (they dwell with and possess us, and we possess them, as Job also speaks:) And as for our Iniquities, we know them. It was their very knowing of their Sins, as set on by God, that made them thus roar, which is the loudest and wildest Tone of Grief, and Note of insufferable Torment. And observe, how that that Knowledg had two things in Contemplation, which caused the Roaring. 1st. Sin, together with the Wrath of God, our Transgressions are multiplied before thee: And so they had God in their Eye as a Judg; which those Words shew, We look for Salvation, but it is far from us, ver. 11. And, 2dly. They testify against us. This was the Accusation of their own Consciences themselves. So as it was Conscience which was the Seat, the Habitation, (as it were) where these two took up their Dwellings, continually quartered upon, and possessed. Jeremy says the same, To see and know how bitter a thing it is to sin, &c. And though these Scriptures speak not immediately of Hell, yet they do clearly point out to us, what, and wherein the most exquisite Punishment of Sin lieth, and by what effected; namely, Knowledg of Sin and Wrath: whether it be in Men in forerunning Anguish in this Life, or hereafter in Hell in the Fulness of it.

3. It is not, nor can it be the mere spiritual Evil that is in Sin, as Sin is Sin, and an Opposite to true Holiness, and as it stands in a Contrariety to the Holiness and Goodness of God; that is not it which Men in Hell shall spiritually know and see, so as to lay to Heart the Evil thereof in that respect: No, for that is the peculiar Effect of Grace, and proper to the Saints; even as to see the Beauty that is in Holiness as it is Holiness, likewise is——It is therefore Sin in the bitter Effects thereof only, whereby Souls still remaining wholly sinful, (as those in Hell do) can come to know this Bitterness of Sin.

Now to prosecute this: The Evil of Sin is not sufficiently or perfectly felt, no, not in the Effects of it, by the Conscience of a Sinner, (so as it may be) until it be felt in that which is the highest, and most transcendent, and proper, per, most immediate and first-born Effect thereof, of all other. And that is no other than the Wrath and Indignation of the all-powerful God: For that his Wrath shall break in upon the Sinner, and so considered, it is the most proper Effect of all other of the Demerit of Sin, God being stirred up and provoked thereunto by Sin. Do you provoke the Lord to Jealousy? 1 Cor. 10. 22. The like, Jer. 7. 19. Sins are as a Heap of Charcoal, wicked Mens Consciences the Oven, and God's Wrath the Fire: Let this Fire be put into this Coal, and let both meet in a guilty Conscience, and it instantly becomes a fiery Oven within it self. And as concerning all other Punishments, I may say it, That all other, of what kind, or from whomsoever, although they are all the Effects and Deserts of Sin, according to that in Jeremy: Thy Way and thy Doings have procured these things to thee, and this is thy Wickedness; as it follows there in Jer. 4. 18. Yet still these are all of them deficient, and fall short in representing unto the Heart and Conscience the Demerit of Sin, even so far as by the Effects it may be known, and the Soul yet further is capable to feel: But if once the Wrath and Indignation of the Great God come into the Soul and Conscience, this, when felt, doth bear some answerable Proportion, as an Effect, unto so great an Evil as Sin is, which it hath deserved; and when revealed unto and impressed upon the Sinner's Conscience, it hath also the fullest Dimensions of such an Evil (even to the Sinner also) as Sin justly deserveth, as far as any way the Creature is capable. Then it is that the Sinner feels and takes in the Evil of Sin, not as in secondary outward Effects only, (and such all other Punishments whatsoever are in Comparison to the Wrath of God, and therefore fall short) but in this Case it feels immediately the Demerit of Sin, in that which is the Cause, the only Cause, the highest Cause of all other secondary Punishments which Sin hath also deserved, whereof it also is the Cause. And this Dispensation of immediate Wrath riseth up unto the exactest Demonstration of the Evil that is in Sin, which any way from Effects can be made or given unto the Creature.

4. Of this immediate Wrath (as it is an Evil of Punishment) the Conscience and intellectual Part in Man's Soul is not only capable to be made the Vessel, the Receptacle thereof, but it lies immediately exposed unto it. It is bare and naked unto him with whom we have to do, Heb. 4. 13. as in respect to God's Knowledg, so of God's punishing, as I have elsewhere shewn. Conscience is as an open Door or In-let; or as an open Window is to the Sun, so is it to God, for him to come in at any time. That when-ever God will but take upon him to perform and execute the part of a Judg and Avenger, a Conscience that is guilty, lies exposed nakedly and barely unto his Anger, to receive the Strokes and Impressions of it. For I ask, What is God's Justice against Sin, but his just Anger against Sin? (as Rom. 3. 5. the Original hath it.) And what is a guilty Conscience, but that in Man that is naturally suscipient or apprehensive of it? And these two are suited as Faculty and Object, and are (as it were) made one for the other; there needs no third or other thing (if God but please to hold forth his Anger, and apply the Corrosive to the Sore, so this unto the Soul) to convey his own Displeasure by; Conscience hath an Ear to hear what God will speak, without any Medium to convey the Voice. Look as Faith is a Principle peculiarly fitted to take in God's free Grace, and Christ's Righteousness; such is Conscience (when guilty) unto God's Wrath, immediately susceptible of it. If God will but set a Man's Sins in order before him, and withal say unto Conscience, I am angry; yea, look but angrily, and present himself as such; then Conscience instantly, like the sensible Plant, is struck, shrinks, and falls down. For if God be angry but a little, as Psal. 2. last, and rebuke us in his Anger, Psal. 6. 1. then, at the very Rebuke of his Countenance we perish, Psal. 80. And it is most certain that God can reveal his Anger to the Soul immediately, as well as his Favour. And what is this Punishment we are speaking of, but the Revelation of the righteous Judgment of God, revealed, as before others, so principally to a Man's own Soul? as ver. 9. And what is that Judgment, but God's Judgment, expressed, as in sentencing, so in shewing his Anger and Wrath against Sin? as the whole Stream of that Scripture shews. It is therefore the Wrath and Face of God and the Lamb, when discovered, which a guilty Conscience flies from, Rev. 6. 16. That, as Book XIII Luther says, Animus sibi male conscius potius ad Diabolum ipsum ferretur, quam ad Deum accederet; It had rather be brought before the Devil, and see his Face, than see God's. Terror of Conscience, what is it, but all one with God's Wrath in Conscience? See it in its contrary. Peace (which we call Peace of Conscience) which passeth Understanding, is rather denominated the [Peace of God] which passeth Understanding, Phil. 4. 7. than Peace of Conscience, although Conscience be the Subject pacified, and whose Peace and Quietus est it is. And in like manner, Terror is stiled the Terror of the Lord, 2 Cor. 5. 11. And these things may perhaps afford as true a Light towards the understanding of that Maxim of the Apostle, Rom. 2. 8, 9. Indignation and Wrath, (viz. of God) Tribulation and Anguish unto every Soul (as the Seat of their Anguish) of Man that doth evil, as any other: and withal shew how it comes to pass, that this Tribulation is executed from that Wrath, even by the reception of Conscience: For of Conscience also the following Words, ver. 15. do there speak, and that as in order unto Judgment, ver. 16.

5. I add, as a Corollary from this, that Conscience, though it be thus naked and open to God and his Wrath, yet it is so great a Secluse, so fast and privy a Cabinet, so intimate a Power and Principle in and unto the Soul it self, and so entirely reserved unto God himself, who is the Lord thereof, as it is not immediately subicible to, or to be broke open by Creatures; no, not those who are superiour Spirits to it, either Angels or Devils; they are not able to terrify the Conscience, until it hath been first made raw and tender by God. God only made the Heart, and God only knows the Heart, and God only can come at, and strike at the Root of the Heart. The Devils or Angels can come but into an outward Room, the Fancy, and cast in Images thereinto; the Fancy being the Soul's Looking-Glass, wherein it vieweth its own Thoughts, and from which it takes off into it self the Species that are cast in there: Also they may stir bodily Passions, (both which I have elsewhere shewn) but they cannot enter into the Closet of the Soul. God only is intimior intimo nostro, as the Ancients express it; God only is greater than our Hearts, as the Apostle expresseth it. Conscience is a Book so fast clasp'd, as it is God's Prerogative alone to open it, which he then at that Day will do: and thereunto that likewise may be applied, He openeth, and none shuts; and he shuts, and none opens. That Speech holds as true of Conscience, as of any other thing. And as it is a Book which he alone can open, so in which he alone can write over every Man's Sins, not with Ink, but with Wrath, which like Aqua fortis, every Letter of it shall eat into the Soul. According unto that in Job, Thou writest bitter things against me, and causest me to possess the Sins of my Youth, Job 13. 26. Let no Man therefore imagine, that Devils are the greatest Tormentors of Men, or of their Consciences in Hell: Or if any would affirm it, I would demand, Who it is that torments the Consciences of Devils themselves? Certainly none but God. They now believing there is a God, do tremble; but in Hell they fear him, and for ever have to do with him. And it is as sure, that the same God, with whom those Spirits and their Consciences have for ever to do, the Consciences of Men shall also.

And as for all other mediate or outward Ways of Judgments executed, in which the Wrath of God is revealed from Heaven but as at the second hand, take the forest and severest of them that ever God executed by Creatures; yea, suppose all of the several kinds of providential Judgments (I call them such which are executed upon Men in this World afore-hand) which God hath, as Judg of all the World, in his riding Circuit through all Ages since the Fall, revealed his Wrath from Heaven by, against all sorts of Unrighteousness of Men, (as the Apostle speaking of these Judgments, says in Rom. 1. 18.) suppose, I say, they were let fly upon any one Sinner all at once, yet would they not reach or touch that Man's Conscience, further than as God should, over and above the efficacy of them, strike the Conscience it self with his Anger and Displeasure, revealed more or less by himself therewith. And although in all such Judgments, his goings forth are as of a Judg, and he accompanies such Judgments more or less, but as with some ordinary light and glimmerings of an angry Deity; yet his coming as a Judg upon Mens Consciences, at the Day of Wrath, and Revelation of the righteous Judgment of God, (as if he had never revealed his Wrath before) this is another manner of coming, and shewing himself a Judg indeed, rendring Indignation and Wrath upon the Souls of Men: and of that Judgment it is the same Apostle in the second Chapter treats, as of that other in the former.

And I may say of all the former, in comparison to this latter, that they all are but as the Batteries of the Out-works, and as Bullets shot against the Walls in a Siege, which may indeed terrify the Inhabitants, and make them tremble; and so these the Soul, as by remote effects in the Suburbs of it. But the latter is as shooting in of Granadoes, which have been laid up with him in his Treasury, carrying Fire from thence in them, the Fire of his fierce and forest Indignation; and these himself alone can shoot into the Inwards of Mens Souls. And this is as shooting Fire into the very Magazine, into that which is the most inward in the Soul, and fortified against the entrance of all created Powers; the Magazine where all the Gun-powder lies, that is, the Guilt of a Man's Sins; so as there needeth nothing else to blow up all. If his Wrath doth but touch, it takes, and sets all on Fire.

Deut. 32.

Rom. 9.

Yea, give me leave upon the same ground, and by the like reason, further to say, That all the material Fire in Hell, by which the Soul shall and will suffer by way of a Compatibility, (as it is termed) or suffering by and with the Body an unspeakable Torment, and this for the Sins a Man is guilty of; yet these Flames nor these Punishments (taken materially, and abstracted from this Revelation of God's Wrath) would not break into Conscience, not until God did therewithal break in with the Fire of his Wrath, and make the Conscience and intellectual Spirit of the Mind, a fiery Oven within it self, as the Psalmist expresth it in Psal. 21. 9. almost in these very Words.

This being the state of Matters between God the Judg of all, and the Souls and Consciences of Sinners, as touching that due and equitable Punishment for Sin, and the execution thereof, which Mens Souls are capable of; I shall now compleat the Reason why the Justice of God should move him to be willing; yea, and that there is in respect unto Divine Justice a kind of requisiteness (if not necessity) for the Great God to take this course, to punish the Sinner by the Revelation of his own immediate Wrath: and this I shall do, by gathering together what hath been said, from which the Arguments for both these two Assertions that follow, lie fair.

1. That God for his Justice-sake should be willing. For Conscience being the principal Engagee obliged unto God as a Judg, and the understanding Power in Man the eminent Transgressor; and both lying so naked and immediately exposed unto God's Wrath, and capable to receive the Revelation of it. An Anguish made thereby in the Soul, is the most proper, natural, suitable Reward unto Sin, to pay the Sinner home in his own Coin, as also the most ready, direct and short way for God to take.

If therefore we suppose Justice be left to have but its free and full course; if Justice (according to the Prophet's Language, and God's own Rule and Direction given unto us) run down as Waters, and Righteousness as a mighty Stream, in its proper natural Channel, and so as to fall into that most capacious Vessel or Receptacle that is in Man to receive it. Again, if Divine Justice hath a will to put and lay its Charge and Execution where principally it is to be laid, even against the Principal, whether in the Obligation for Sin, or in the guilt of the Act of sinning. Or if it be deemed, that Divine Justice will take a recovery where the fullest and fairest Advantage lies, and recover his principal Debt of that which is the principal Debtor; and from that in Man which is capable to afford the most due Satisfaction and Punishment, as being that which is the Treasury of all the Guilt of Sin, and most exquisitely capable to suffer, and thereby to make fullest payment for all: Then we may conclude that assuredly God is willing to wreck his just Anger, and in his Wrath to break forth upon the Conscience and intellectual Faculty of the Sinner in Hell, by the immediate Revelation of his Wrath, and that upon all the Accounts fore-mentioned, thereby to punish it.—And we may well suppose that his Justice is willing to do this, because God is (as the Psalmist with an Emphasis) Judg Himself, Psal. 50. 6. and judgeth for Himself, Prov. 16. 4. and for the Recovery of his own Glory, and Revelation of his Righteous Judgment. And this Course of immediate Wrath being a way above all other so natural, so ready, so direct, so compendious, and so suited to the demerit of Sin, (as hath been shewn) we may well think that God will be rather willing to shew his Wrath (as the Apostle speaks) this way, (if we could suppose there might be another) because this so falls in with, and agrees unto the Rules and Proportions of Justice fore-mentioned, which are most near and sacred to him.

2. The second Assertion, That it is also requisite, yea, necessary, (I speak it, as in relation to Justice attaining its Ends.) For all mediate Punishments executed by Creatures being deficient, as unto that wherein the very Essence of this Punishment lies, they all not reaching the Inwards of the Spirit of the Mind and Conscience; and seeing that without God's Wrath revealed therewith by God himself, all such Punishments would not compleat the Justice of God in a Punishment in any tolerable measure suitable: Then if Justice will have its perfect Work, and bring its Suit against the Sinner unto the ultimate issue, it is requisite God himself put his immediate Hand to the Execution; otherwise this Work of Justice will not be perfect, (as yet every of his Works in their kind are said to be;) and so he should not only fall short of satisfying his Justice, but also by not doing that towards it which is in his power to do, and which he is Lord of, he should not in any tolerable measure content it: Especially if we further consider, that when all is done that can be, this Punishment will not arise to a perfect Satisfaction, (for the Creature's Punishment will not afford it, and therefore it doth for ever suffer) but only unto what may be had out of them towards it. I shut this Point up therefore with this, that if God be Judg Himself, he will do this Work Himself, which none else can perform for him, and without which all else would be utterly imperfect and defective. For, upon what hath been afore argued, I may say of all other Punishments and Punishers (although set by God upon a Man) what the Apostle says of those legal Ordinances, (though instituted by God for his Worship) That they could not make the Service perfect, as pertaining to the Conscience: So, nor all outward Torments, take them alone without God's Wrath accompanying them, they cannot make a perfect or compleat Punishment as pertaining to the Conscience.

And all this also shews one sufficient reason of Difference, why earthly Kings and Judges leave the Execution of Traitors and Offenders wholly unto others; because they have no more Power, as in respect of Execution, to inflict a condign Punishment than other Men; but others can do it as exquisitely, and their Justice be as fully satisfied thereby: but it is not so here. And for these causes God is so far from staining his Glory thereby, (which other Judges would esteem to be so) as that it is the only way fully to recover his Glory. And so much for that Argument drawn from satisfying of Justice.

A second Reason is drawn from satisfying of Vengeance, or Avenging Wrath as against Enemies, which heightens Justice. Thus in many Places in the Old and New Testament, Dent. 32. Rom. 12. 19. 2 Cor. 10. 6. Rev. 6. 10. in which last place God is stiled both a Judg and an Avenger; [Judg and Avenger] say the Saints there. A Judg most commonly doth Acts of Justice in the behalf of others; but an Avenger is one that doth, or seeks Justice in his own Cause, and in his own Behalf and Interest; therefore the next a-kin, seeking the Life of a Murderer, was termed an Avenger of Blood. Now God is more nearly concerned in this, than any Creatures can be, in what may concern Vengeance in them, for whatever Injury. This is therefore Pana Vindicta, as of one enraged and provoked; Patience having been abused, as Rom. 9. 22. and so is turned into Fury.

Now there are two Properties of Vengeance, from whence I argue this, being put together.

First, That it is the property of Revenge to vent it self upon that which is principal in the Injury, and to make that the Vessel of its Wrath, it will never be be satisfied else. Now that is the Soul of Man, which is the chief Seat and Subject of the Corruption of Sin, the chief Cause of the Act proceeding from thence, and that in which the Guilt arising from both doth principally abide. The Body is but instrumental in what the Soul doth; yea, and in some, and the greatest Sins, the Soul hath the sole and immediate Hand: This Soul therefore which is the chiefest Vessel of Sin, must be the chief Vessel of Wrath: Indignation and Wrath upon every Soul of Man that doth evil, Rom. 2. 8. whereof this undeniable Instance is given by God, that the Soul is it that suffers for the whole Man until the Resurrection, as the Instance of the Rich Man shews: and it must be no less an immediate Sufferer, although not the alone Sufferer; but much more, after the Day of Judgment, unto Eternity.

A second thing which Vengeance affecteth is, that the Person that wrought the Injury die by the Hand of Himself, that is, the Avenger; It loves to do that Work it self. And this especially holds good in this Cause of God; and seeing it is to recover Glory to God by showing Vengeance, He comes to be glorified, rendring Vengeance from the Glory of his Power.

I need not go about to form up any Argument from hence, for these two things, especially the latter, do speak home unto the Point; and being added unto what hath been spoken in the former Head of Justice, may be sufficient.

There is a third thing which (as I said) both Divine Justice and Vengeance do conspire in, and that is, the utter destruction of that which is the principal Offender, (which is the Soul) it is the nature of Vengeance to work the destruction of that it is set against. And in this case of Sin, God's Justice also doth the same; the demerit of Sin is such, as it exciteth Vengeance to it. And therefore in both these places which are my Texts, Destruction is mentioned as the issue and product of this Revenge and Wrath. So in 2 Thess. 1. 6, 7. To render Vengeance on them, who shall be punished with everlasting Destruction: And Rom. 9. 22. To make known the Power of his Wrath on those Vessels of Wrath fitted to Destruction. Destroyed they shall be, though not in regard of Being, for they are to be Vessels of Wrath, and therefore to be still kept whole, in respect of Being, else they could hold no Wrath: and that is another Property of Vengeance, to have the Party made sensible of its Misery, and that his Enemy is even with him. And therefore God upholds their Being, but destroys their Souls in regard of Well-being. Now that is never, till it be stripp'd of every Comfort, and every Corner of the Soul be filled with Misery: for if any Corner be empty, it is not destroyed, it will not die.

Now this third or last thing doth of it self afford at least a Demonstration, ab effectis, from the Event and Effects of this Punishment, That therefore it is God's immediate Hand that inflicts this Punishment: Which Demonstration is to be added unto the former Reason, which was drawn from the Causes of it. For I argue, asking this Question, What is able to fill the Soul of Man with Good or Evil? The Soul which was created in so large a Capacity, as to be filled with God, and with none but God himself; he only is able to fill the vast Corners of it with either. Creatures like it self may afflict and torment it much, especially whilst in the Body, so much, as to cause it to desire Death, and a being out of the Body; but the Soul they are never able to destroy. The Soul is a Castle so strong built, as it can bear the Assaults of all its Fellow-Creatures, and sustain it self, and not sink into Destruction. Nothing can destroy the Well-being of the Soul but God's Power. For it is said, They may kill the Body, but God only can kill the Soul. And else, according to that Argument of Christ, Fear not them that can kill the Body only, &c. they were to be feared as God himself is, if they could kill the Soul, as God can do. For Christ says, God is therefore to be feared, and only to be feared, because he can destroy both Body and Soul. And he redoubleth it with an Emphasis, Fear him, yea, I say unto you, Fear him, Luke 12. 5. Indeed one Evangelist says, Fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into Hell, which expresseth no more but an act of Authority to sentence and cast into Hell, as the Judg doth into Prison. Yet the other Evangelist puts it upon this, because he is able to kill the Soul, and that only he is able to destroy both Body and Soul in Hell. He says not

not barely to cast into Hell as by way of Authority, but adds, kills and destroys in Hell, when they are cast thither; for God is both Judg and Avenger: and therefore if it be Destruction, 'tis evident He only can, and must do the Execution. And therefore in the Text, 2 Theff. 1. 8, 9. their being punished with everlasting Destruction, is attributed to the Glory of his Power. These are some of the Reasons of this great Point.

C H A P. VII.

A fourth sort of additional Confirmations, drawn from the Harmonies that are between it and other Divine Truths.

I Shall in the last place cast in some Harmonies, or Congruities and Correspondencies, which this holds, and makes up with other Divine Truths: and in such Harmonies and Concords, there is much of Reason, at least to confirm, if not demonstrate Truths in Divinity.

1. To begin where I left. Hereby it comes to pass, that as the Souls of Men and other Spirits were immediately made and created by God, (who is therefore in a peculiar respect, and with an opposite distinction to the Fathers of our Bodies, said to be the Father of Spirits, and the God of the Spirits of all Flesh) so that their last Termination or End should be into and by his immediate Hands also; this makes up a congruous and suitable Dispensation. That look as they receive their first Being from him, likewise they should return to him, as Ecclesiastes speaks, as to their sole and immediate Author and Creator; and so receive from him, as a Father of Spirits, their Portion at his immediate Hands. And Man's ultimate End, either way, is called their Portion, Psal. 11. 6. Mat. 24. 51. whether it be in Blessedness as their Inheritance out of his Love, or Misery as the Wages of their Sin. And thus hereby God himself is made the end, and the beginning or terminus, the Alpha and Omega of Souls, to whom be Glory for ever.

2. Thereby also there comes to pass an answerableness and a proportion held between the two Conditions of Heaven and Hell; which the Apostle seems to make the ultimate aim and determination of God's Counsels; unto which all in this World are but Preparations, as he calls them, (thus Rom. 9. 22, 23.) for the shewing forth of his own immediate Glory; What if God willing to shew his Wrath, and to make his Power known, endured with much long-suffering the Vessels of Wrath fitted to Destruction: And that he might make known the Riches of his Glory on the Vessels of Mercy, which he had afore prepared unto Glory?

And thirdly also, It is said, that after that Christ the Judg of All, hath delivered up his Administration and Kingdom unto his Father, then God should become all in all, 1 Cor. 15. 28. (not in respect of Being) that is, not as if the Being of all things shall return into God again, as some have wickedly dreamed; or, that God's blessed Being, and the Creatures should become one; that can never be. 'Tis a contradiction to say, a Creature made out of nothing should come to be of it self; and such God in his Being is, but all in all in respect of immediate Dispensation. And so look as to the Vessels of Mercy, he will then be all in all, so that they shall not need the Light of the Sun and the Moon, &c. (that is, the Comfort of any Creature, though all created Excellencies in the Spirit, and Quintessence of them shall be there) why should it not be also meant that the same God (which makes up a Parallel, seeing Mens Sins deserve it) shall be all in all in Hell too, in a contrary way to the other?

4. And the rather this may be thought, because when God shall have caused this visible World to pass away, the Earth and the Heavens, we now behold (as some judicious Divines have inclined to think from Job 14. 12. and other Scriptures) either by turning them into nothing, or into their first Chaos: and so there being none (that is, of this old World) left, but pure Heaven and Hell.

Hell, (which are as two spiritual Places or Worlds) and therein these two sorts of Creatures rational, either those who are wholly Spirits, (as Angels good and bad) or the Spirits of Men, (whose Bodies are raised spiritual, and so fitted for that other kind of World) both of which are capable of Happiness or Woe from him. That then these two sorts of intelligent Natures, God and they being left thus alone, (the brutish part of the World being done away) should have to do with him for ever immediately, either in a way of Wrath or Blessedness. And so God shall be all in all, in either Worlds; and this to be the final ending, and Catastrophe of all. But these I urge not, but only mention.

Chap. 8.

C H A P. VIII.

The Dreadfulness of this Punishment argued from all and each of the Particulars treated of in the former Chapters. That it is a falling into the Hands of God immediately: That it is the Destruction of the Soul: That it is for the Glory of God, and the manifestation of his Power: That it is Satisfaction of God's Justice and avenging Wrath. The Dreadfulness of it argued also from those Instances of good and bad Men, their having suffered these kinds of Terrors in this Life. And lastly, That it is a falling into the Hands of the Living God.

H E B. 10. 31.

It is a fearful thing to fall into the Hands of the Living God.

THE second thing at first propounded to be handled, was the Dreadfulness of this Punishment. It is a fearful thing to fall into the Hands of the Living God. Which being an Inference from the foregoing Words, and not a simple Affirmation only, do come in with an amazing kind of Implication, wherein the Apostle leaveth it to our own Thoughts to conceive of, and is as if he had said, How dreadful must it needs be! which I leave to your own Thoughts to conceive of, I not being able (says he) to utter or express the Terror of it.

Hence the genuine and natural way of handling this Part, is to set it forth by way of Inference or Corollary, from that former Point, which we have dispatch'd. I shall therefore accordingly draw forth Demonstrations of the Dreadfulness thereof, from those fore-cited Scriptures, or Grounds already laid in the fore-gone Chapter, which doth afford sufficient Topicks unto this Head.

First; Let us take the main Doctrine it self, as in the General it is uttered here, That it is a falling into the Hands of God Himself, and not of Creatures only; and a being punished from his Presence, and the Glory of his Power, immediately, as 2 Theff. 1. 9. And then extend and widen your Apprehensions, to take in how fearful this must be, which I shall demonstrate by a comparative Gradation, raised thus:

I. If it were but a giving us up into the Hands of mere Creatures to afflict, and they assisted by God, but with the common and ordinary concurrence of his his Power, which joins with, and upholds the Agency of all things in their workings; whether in comforting us, or in distressing of us: this the lowest Degree of supposition. And yet consider how dreadful this Supposition would render to our Thoughts, such a punishment to be: if God should be but as the looker-on, and withal the setter of them on: or (as in the Scripture phrase, Mat. 18. 34.) but only deliver us up to these Tormentors. As when it is termed a being cast into a Lake of Fire and Brimstone, suppose it were a Lake of material corporeal Fire only, wherein thy Body is cast; and thy Soul, no otherwise to suffer than by what the Spirits of that Body it is united to, and dwells in, is by that Fire made sensible of. And suppose withal, the Spirits thereof were kept up, in their utmost sensibleness, of what torment that Fire could inflict; and thy Body continually flaming, (as the Bush in Exodus) and yet never burnt up; how terrible is it for Flesh and Blood to think but this of it! Or, to use another Comparison, If a Man were bound Hand and Foot with his Mouth set open, and were cast into a Pit, wherein, as in the Apostles Sheet, let down from Heaven, were all manner of Creeping things, Toads, Serpents of all sorts, fiery Scorpions, Cockatrices, Vipers, Adders, Snakes, &c. Flies, Hornets, Lice, Pismires and Frogs, &c. And that these should bite and sting thee, with exquisite Pain and Torment; also creep in at thy Mouth, down into thy Inwards, gnaw and swell thee there. How did but one sort of these Creatures, when sent by God, afflict Pharaoh and all the Egyptians? A Man in this Case, should endure not only the Pains mentioned, but beyond them the torture which Antipathy, Contrariety and natural Abhorrency works, which is of all other most exquisite, and turns Nature backward (as of Jordan it is said) into a recoil; and wresteth it against it self, and throws it off its hinges. I need not instance, how by this way of Antipathy, a Cock makes a Lion roar, a Mouse the Elephant to tremble, a Serpent or a Toad, a Spider, sets the whole of Nature in Man into an inconsistency; a Man knows not how to bear up, sustain himself, or be himself. But besides what Pains or Torments, these, or any of these, can inflict.

II. Let us proceed in our Supposition a step further. If God should so far further assist, as to set his Wisdom a-work, and that only to find out and invent, what mixture of Torments from Creatures would be most exquisite of all others. As if a King (whose Wrath is compared to the roaring of a Lion, who yet sets but others to Torment) should but order ten Men to invent Torments for one poor Man (as the Sicilian Tyrants did.) Hence, Majus tormentum seculi non invenire Tyranni. And then consider, for the Exaggeration of this unto your Thoughts.

1. That the Nature of Man is so framed, as it is capable to receive discomfort, as well as comfort from every Creature: the least Creature hath a Sting in it, as well as Honey, unto something or other, in Man's Nature, if it be applied and turned against it.

2. God knows all the Ingredients in the Creatures Natures; as also it is said, he knows our Frame, and so therewith the suitableness of Sense in Man's Nature thereunto. Think then what Punishment from their mixture, can he invent and temper; and put all the Venoms, (the dregs) into one Cup, as the Psalmist speaks: And as by some lesser proportion we may estimate this, by what those that know the Secrets of Nature can effect, above what other Men, as Solomon did.

3. Now, raise up your Apprehensions from these two Steps of comparison thus first laid: If, (as the Psalmist says,) He that made the Eye, shall not he see? speaking of that infinite Omniscience in God himself, above what is in the Creatures: Say I then in this Case, if the Creatures that God hath made, may thus be supposed able to work Anguish to a Man, Dolour and Misery: what then can God, the great God, that made all these himself, immediately inflict? As the Prophet Isaiah slighteth the Egyptians and their Assistance, Na. 31. 3. Thus, Their Horses are Flesh, not Spirit, and the Egyptians that ride them are Men, and not God. So we may of all these Suppositions, and still still say, these are but of what Creatures can do; who are Creatures, and not God; Flesh, and not Spirit.

III. That we may yet heighten the dreadfulnes of this immediate Hand of God, let us make a third Supposition, beyond the former; that God not only should use his ordinary Concurrence with Creatures, but (as sometimes he hath done) arm those Creatures with his own Wrath, over and above the Activity of their ordinary Sphere of Workings; heating that Sword of created Powers he strikes with, red hot in the Furnace of his fiery Indignation: And so intending the Power of Creatures beyond their Strength; yet still so as to use them as the sole Instruments of that Anguish wrought: conveying his Anger with them but as at second Hand. And so, as the Man, so afflicted, is sensible, not of the Stroke of the Creatures only, but of God, and his Wrath accompanying and seconding it, through them. This would be yet more Dreadful than the former, and yet still fall short of what the Doctrine hath held forth, that himself is the Avenger, and strikes immediately.

1. This latter is more dreadful to suppose than the former; yea, is not a bare Supposition; for if God conveys his Wrath with the least Affliction, and in his Providences fights against a Man, and the Heart is thereby made sensible of his Wrath therein: this, as it often falls out, so it useth wonderfully to enflame and rage in Man's Spirit: even as a poisoned Arrow useth to do the Flesh, which it self alone would only Pierce and wound, (but as it is an Arrow;) but if further dipp'd in Poison; or, as the Apostle's comparison is, Eph. 6. made a fiery Dart, it works a further Anguish and Torment. Now there is no Creature, but if armed with God's Wrath, or if it be but a Messenger, and a Representor of God's Anger, but it is infinitely more Dreadful than of it self otherwise it is. What is less than the Shaking of a Leaf, which seems it self to Tremble? But if God send faintness of Heart, and Terror with it, and by it, into a Man's Heart, the very Sound of the shaking of a Leaf chafeth them, Lev. 26. 36. Every Grass-blade, furnished with God's Wrath, strikes Terror into the Heart, as that flaming Cherub did into Adam's. This is experimented in Men troubled in Mind, unto whom, Iratumq; refert qualibet herba Deum. Every Creature presents an angry God, and strikes trembling of Heart into them. They fear where no Fear is. The light, which of all Creatures is the most amiable and pleasantest, yet to a Spirit wounded, the Beams thereof are dreadful; and when it is Day, he wisheth it were Night, and that Darknes might for ever cover him; and why should the Light arise, says he, to disclose my Rebellion against my Maker? Thus Job, chap. 4. 20. Wherefore is the Light given to him that is in Misery? Even as on the contrary, to a Soul God's Face shines on, every Creature strikes up Comfort and Gladness into it. He hears the Thunder, (which made Caligala tremble) 'Tis my Father's Voice, says he: views the Stars; these are mine, saith he. The greatest Afflictions to such an one do turn into Joy, knowing he hath a Treasury of Love in the Bosom of his Father that sent them. The perfect contrary is here.

2. This latter Supposal of God's arming the Creatures with his Displeasure, and conveying it by them, falls yet lower, and is less than God's immediate Wrath from himself; even as God's Love conveyed by Ordinances and means, is a far lower Dispensation than the immediate Communication thereof from himself. God's Power, though never so great, yet in working by and through an Instrument, is abated, lessened, stinted in working. You may have read and heard (perhaps) the comparison between God's Power and the Creatures, in respect of Torment, thus expressed: That the one is, but as if a Child should strike a Blow, in comparison of a Giant. But to the case in Hand, I have used to raise it thus: A Giant that can of himself give a great Blow immediately, if he yet should take but a Straw to strike withal, the Stroke would prove but small; and yet it would be greater than if a Child should strike with it; Why? because his Power is limited and enervated by the Instrument he strikes withal. Now what are all the Creatures, though in God's hand, but as Straws in a Giant's? And yet how terrible is his Wrath when conveyed by them? I conclude this, with Allusion to that Speech of Rehoboam, 1 Kings 12. 10. The weight of God's little Finger is heavier than that of the whole Creation: And if they be able, or God by them, to scourge us with Whips, than God himself immediately with Scorpions.

Having thus considered how the immediateness of God's working doth comparatively exceed that of the Creatures, or of himself by the Creatures: In the Fourth place, Let us go on more sadly, in a positive way, to consider, What his immediate Power is; what the Strength of those Hands is which Men must fall into. And how may this amaze you? As it is said of God's Wisdom, There is no end of it, no Searching of his Understanding; so nor of his Power. And how can I discover or unbare that Arm before you? I begin to do it thus: God had begun to enter into a Contest with Job, and touched him but with his little Finger; and Job soon felt him, and cries out: If I speak of Strength, or think that way to grapple with him, He is strong, Job 9. 19. If but his little Finger be so strong, as Job found it, what is his Fist, which Ezekiel next sets forth the Strokes of his Wrath by? And what God himself there speaks, against covetous and bloody Men, Ezek. 22. 13, 14. do you apply to every Sin you live and go on in. Says God, I will strike with my Fist at thy dishonest Gain. And can thy Heart endure, or thy Hands be made strong, in the Day in which I shall have to do with thee? Let every one that heareth or readeth this, who yet go on in their Sins, consider with themselves: Am I able to stand it out, and encounter this God? And encounter him thou must, if thou goest on in thy Sins. Or can my Heart endure? sayst thou. The Apostle puts the very same consideration upon the Corinthians Spirits, when guilty of Idolatry. (And 'tis the same case of Uncleanness, or any other known Sin) Do you provoke the Lord to Jealousy? are you Stronger than he? 1 Cor. 10. 22. As if he had said: Do you not consider what a powerful God you have to do withal, and that immediately? Can you grapple with him, think you? or make your part Good with him? Hear yet further, by what Way it is that the Apostle sets forth to us the Strength of God, and let us make a further Estimate thereby, as to the matter in Hand. The Apostle in the same Epistle, though upon another Occasion, chap. 1. 25. had said, That the Weakness of God is stronger than the Strength of Men. In which Speech, he evidently puts our thoughts upon making of a Measure of what is to be accounted more or less, stronger or weaker in God, in respect of the putting forth his Power by what the Scriptures do express of him, after the similitude of Man, as in Job the comparison is of his little Finger; and in Ezekiel, of his Fist: whereof the one is weaker (in Man) and the other stronger. Now in Man, what is weaker than his Breath? which will scarce blow away a Straw (and his weakness is usually expressed by this, that his Breath is in his Nostrils.) Now estimate the Strength of God according unto what is said in the Scriptures of God, (and that as to this point of destroying us) after the manner of Men. By the very Breath of his Nostrils we are consumed, Job. 4. 9. His Power is such, that he needs put forth no more (as it were) to Destroy us. His very Weakness is enough. Job had in the same verse, first said, by the Blast of him we Perish: but because a Blast imports some forcibleness, the utmost might of what is in a Man's Breath, and it is a Man's putting forth his Breath with a more than ordinary Violence; therefore by way of Diminution and Correction he adds, by the breath of his Nostrils; that is, (still measuring it, as spoken after the similitude and manner of Men) by the most ordinary and weakest putting forth of his Power. And yet we see if he puts forth no more, he blows us to Destruction, when his intent is to destroy: And why? for of us the Scriptures use a comparison suitable thereto, in saying that were are but as the Dust of the Ballance, Isa. 40. 15. Yea, all the Nations (put all together) are but as the small Dust of the Ballance: As that little little that is left in the Ballance, when what is weighed is taken forth, which is easily blown away with a Man's Breath. Again, yet lower, in Man; his Nod is of less Force than his Breath: and yet, Lo, at the Rebuke of his Countenance we perish, Psal. 80. 16. He can look on one that is proud, and abase him; and his Eye can cast about Rage and Destruction, Job 40. 11, 12, 13. He had said before, ver. 9. Hast thou an Arm like God? He riseth from the Power of his Nod, the Weakness of his Power, unto the Power of his Arm: And so may we, from his Looks to his Breath, from that to his little Finger, from that to his Fist, from that to his Arm and Hands, in which his Strength is said to lie, Luke 1. 51. O think how dreadful then it must needs be, to fall into those Hands, (as here in the Text;) into those Hands, I say, that measure the Waters in the hallow of them, that span the Heavens, and at the same time comprehend also all the Dust of the Earth in one Grasp, as one of us doth a little Pibble. And ver. 15. Takes up the Isles as a very little thing; as you would do Hazel-Nut-shells out of a Pail of Water. Now for thee, a poor Grasshopper; to be taken into those Hands, and to be grip'd and crush'd, and squeezed with the Might thereof. But the Scripture-Expressions go further yet, to have this God, like a Mill-stone, fall upon thee with his whole Weight, which is Christ's Comparison, Matth. 21. 44. Thy Wrath lies hard upon me, said Heman. You see in Summer little green Flies, creeping upon green Leaves, which if a Man doth but touch, they die: such a slight Creature art thou in Comparison to this God. Or further, (as Job's Comparison is) that this Great and Mighty God should run upon thee as a Mighty Giant, with his full Force, the utmost of his Force, as a Man doth upon his Enemy; yet so Job speaks of it, chap. 16. 14. And in another Place, the same Job, that he should take thee about the Neck, and throttle thee. O what do we, poor Potshards of the Earth, striving with our Maker? as Isaiah speaks, chap. 45. 9. Or, as Christ spake from Heaven, will Flesh think to kick and spurn against such Iron Pricks and Pikes, which run up into the Soul, whilst it strikes upon them?

And that we may yet further have a through Sensibleness of our Obnoxiousness and Exposedness to this Great God, let us withal consider his absolute Sovereignty over us, as well as his Power. What an inconsiderable Portion doth any one Soul (and every one is singly to deal with him for his own Particular) bear unto this Infinity of Being and Glory? to whom not one Nation, but all Nations; and not only all Nations that are now extant in the World, but that ever have been, or shall be, are counted as nothing, yea, less than nothing. What a little ching is this Island of ours, to the whole Body of Nations? And yet all Isles are to him but a little thing, as Isaiah speaks. Lord, think thou, what am I to Thee! or any Man! that thou shouldest regard him? Yea, and being sinful, why should any Man (as he is of himself) think that God should have any Stick or Demur within him, to withhold himself from destroying him every Moment? For loe, even the greatest of Men, that have been of greatest Wisdom, Parts, (being Sinners) he hath in his Distance and Greatness laid them aside, and regarded them not at all, Job 38. last, He regards not the Wise in Heart. What is all, or any Excellency in thee to him?

There is therefore no way but to turn unto him, and seeing you must fall into his Hands, prevent him by putting your selves into his Hands. This great Arm of his may be held: Isa. 27. 5. Let them take hold of my Strength; Fury is not in me. There is an Arm also of another one, that is, Christ, who can deal with God for thee, and overcome him. [Isa. 53. 1. To whom is the Arm of the Lord (so he termeth Christ) revealed?] Thus you have seen and heard something of the Greatness of this God, and that but in general, as he is the Author of this Punishment, and thereby this Punishment aggrandized unto us, and yet how little do we know of him? as Job speaks.

Secondly; Subjoin hereunto the Consideration of what is the eminent Subject of this Punishment, the Soul of Man; and that the Issue of this Punishment is no less than the Destruction of that Soul. And these two (which I join together) will afford further Reflections, to help us to conceive of the Fearfulness of this Punishment. And the Consideration hereof cometh in most pertinently nently next unto the foregoing, wherein the Power of the Agent was spoken to ; but now in this the Capacity of the Subject or Patient, and the Receptivity thereof of Impressions from this Worker.

That the Soul is the immediate Vessel of this Wrath, that I spake to before, Matth. 10. 28. Fear not them that kill the Body, but are not able to kill the Soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both Soul and Body in Hell. The former Part of which Words evidently import, 1. That the Soul alone, and immediately in it self, and not only in respect of what it suffers with or from the Bodies Suffering, is the Subject of this Punishment, though the Body also is. And, 2. Christ concludes, that it is the Destruction of both Body and Soul.

You know also the Rule, That the Measure of every Agent's working upon another must be taken from the Capacity of the Subject which the Impression is made upon, as well as from the Power of the Agent that works. Fire works more fiercely upon Oyl and Brimstone, than upon Stones, or upon Dust or Sands. You may discern this in the Parts of your own Body: Rhume falling upon the Lungs doth not torture so, as falling upon a Tooth, a Joint, or Eye. How also are the inward Parts capable of more exquisite Torment, as by the Stone, &c. bred in them, than the outward are, by any Cuttings or Wounds?

Now the Soul of Man is capable of more exquisite Impressions from God's Hand, in that it is an intelligent Spirit, and in the substantial Faculties of it assimilated to him, made in his Image, a Spirit as God is, that hath an Understanding, and other Faculties, to receive and take in from him what he is pleased to pour forth into it by them ; and is accordingly more sensible thereof, than the Senses of the Body are or can be supposed to be from Creatures. The Prophet Nabuzz seems to have considered this, chap. 1. ver. 5, 6. When setting out God's Wrath to Men in the Effects of it, he first considers, how it works upon inanimate Creatures, that are at such a Distance (in respect of the kind of their being) from God's: It kindleth a Fire, says he, which maketh the Hills to melt, and the Earth is burnt up at his Presence; yea, the World, and all that dwell therein, (which he will one Day burn up with Fire.) Now from these the Prophet infers and raiseth up our Thoughts. Doth he work thus upon insensible Creatures, as the Hills, and the Earth, and the whole World? Do the Elements melt with fervent Heat? Are the Heavens shrivel'd up as a Scrole of Parchment before him, by the Violence of that Fire which he sends forth? Consider then, O consider, ye Sons of Men, how will the Fire of his Wrath work upon your intellectual Souls? And as unto this Scope and Coherence with the former, I understand what follows, ver. 6. Who can stand before his Indignation? who can abide in the Fierceness of his Anger? He here turneth his Speech, and applieth it to Men. For the Souls of Men being in their Beings and Kind nearer of kin to him, Spirits, as he is the great Spirit, and the Father of Spirits, which were made only for God, and to be filled with God, have accordingly a more intimate Sense of his Workings on them. And 'tis as if he had said, If then he sends forth such a Fire as melts and dissolves the Earth, Mountains of Iron or Brass; how much more will it be able to melt Wax? And such are Mens Souls to God, comparatively to other Creatures. Christ speaking of his Soul, when he had thus to do with God, in the Day of his Anger, Psal. 22. 14. (that Psalm was all made of him) My Heart is melted like Wax, it is melted in the midst of my Bowels. And towards this Sense doth Sanctius seem to understand that Complaint of Job's, uttered to his Friends, concerning those Terrors of God which he felt within him, Job. 6. 4, 11. Verses compared; Is my Strength the Strength of Stones? Or is my Flesh, my Nature or Constitution, of Brass, that I should be able to encounter with this Indignation of the Almighty? Stones and Brass have no Sense in them, (or but a dull Sense, if their Opinion should hold true, de sensu verum,) they have no Blood nor Spirits to make them sensible of these Arrows of God's Anger he had spoken of, ver. 4. Ay, but Job meaneth to say, I have a Soul made of other Metal, suited to God, the great Spirit, whose Arrows I feel, which is exquisitely sensible of all his Actings. Take the Statue of a Man made of Brass, or cut out of Stone, and slash and cut him, and he feels it not; but cut the same Limbs Limbs that answer to these in a living Man, made of Flesh and Blood, with the same Knife, and what Torture is it? You may see this; and aggravate it to your selves, by what inferior Spirits to this great Father of Spirits, as Angels and Devils, can work upon Man's Soul, that is a Spirit like themselves, being yet inferior to them. When Saul had but one evil Spirit sent from the Lord, how distracted and terrified was he, though in the midst of the Enjoyments of a Kingdom? 1 Sam. 16. 14. Also that great Apostle, that had his Spirit fortified, as having been newly feasted with the Joys of Heaven, and that not as at a Distance only, but as a Spectator, that stood by, present there, 2 Cor. 12. Yet one Angel, Satan buffeting him, he was so disturbed and put to it, as he knew not what to do, or how to bear it: only God told him, My Grace is sufficient for thee. Well, but do Mens Souls in Hell fight with Flesh and Blood, yea, or with Principalities and Powers chiefly? No, that is but whilst they are the Rulers of this World, as there 'tis added. And yet if these Spirits have such Power over our Spirits to buffet and terrify them; what hath God the Father of them?

Again, consider how the Soul is capable of more Joys and Sorrows, than the bodily Senses are, and this by how much it doth exceed them in its Eminency and Capacity. The Soul is able to drink up all the Pleasures the whole Creation can afford the bodily Senses, or they bring in: to drink them up (I say) even at one Draught, and yet would in the midst of it, still cry, Give, Give. Now as it is in the Body of a Man, look whatever part is capable of more Pleasure, it is also capable of more Pains: So the Soul proportionably; look how capable it is of greater Joys (as it is from God) it is as much of Sorrows also, unto the same Extention and Intention of them.

Add II. As to this Point, That as the Soul is thus vastly capable of more Sorrow and Anguish: So further, that these Souls to be punish'd are filled with Sin, and in that respect termed Vessels of Wrath fitted to Destruction, Rom. 9. 22. Take a Barrel of Wood; and of it self it will burn as it is Wood: but if withal it be pitch'd within, and full of Tar and combustible Matter, it will burn more rageingly. Of unfruitful Branches, apostatizing from Christ, it is said, John 15. 6. That they are cast into the Fire, and they are burned; that is, they burn to purpose, make a mighty Fire. That Clause [And they are burned] is added by way of Auxesis or Emphasis, else it needed not. We see when Sins were but laid upon Christ by Imputation, who in himself was separate from Sinners, and had no Conscience of Sin, how yet the Anger of God against Sin dealt with him, as undertaking to be a Surety for Sin. And can you drink, says Christ, the Cup that I am to drink of, that is, so as to bear it and not be overcome with it? Now in Luke 23. 31. you may see, how Christ infers from his Sufferings, as being the Sufferings of one who had not been himself personally guilty of Sin; what therefore, with difference, those in whom Sin is inherent, must expect. Weep for your selves (says he) for if they do those things to the green Tree, what will be done in the Dry? that is, who are fit combustible Matter for the Fire; and, as the Prophet says, are as Stubble fully dry, Nahum 1. 10. And of the Terribleness of God's Anger, he had before discoursed (as was even now observed) in all that Chapter.

Again, III. In the Soul, some Faculties are more capable of Anguish from his Wrath than other; even as in the Body some Parts are more of Pain. If a Man would avoid a scalding Drop to be let fall upon any Part, of all other he would fence his Eye. You see how a Mote, a Flie troubleth it; a scalding Drop of Oyl would much more. So it is in the Faculties of the Soul. You read there is the Spirit of the Mind, Ephes. 4. 23. Now God will wound, even that, and aims at it, in this Punishment. A wounded Spirit who can bear? (says Solomon.) If a Man's Flesh be torn and cut, he may yet bear up himself, but if his Bones be broken, Who can stand? Now the immediate Stroaks of God are so compared by David, as unto the breaking of the Bones, in comparison of other Dealings of God with, and Inflictions from God towards us.

The next thing which I mention but as an Appendix to this Head, is, that is the Destruction of the Soul. So Christ and the Apostle again and again.

They

Book XIII

They are said to be lost: and though Men may metaphysically dispute, that it is better to be, though in Hell, than not to be: Yet Christ hath said, It were better not to have been born. I shall say no more as to this Head, than what the Apostle expresseth this by, in 1 Tim. 6. 9. in saying, [That Men are drowned in Perdition and Destruction:] One would think, for him to have expressed Death and Destruction, it might have been enough to have said, that a Man were drown'd, or sunk down to the Bottom of Waters, or the like Materials that would suffocate a Man: But to say he is drowned in Perdition it self, or that Perdition and Destruction are the Pit, the Lake he is plunged into; what can be said beyond it? And yet here he is not content with one single Word to express that by either, as to have said drowned in Perdition, but must double it: and add another Word [Destruction] also. Destroyed, therefore over and over: Drowned over Head and Ears, as we say, and all that is in them, drowned and sunk into Perdition; the whole Soul: yea, the whole Man. No Part above Water. Destroyed with a double Destruction: both for Object double, and also for the Subject of it, both Body and Soul: so Christ says.

The Third Head, that affords matter of Exaggeration to our Thoughts, whereby to infer the Fearfulness of this Punishment, is taken from the Ends, or final Causes mentioned in that first Section. The Ends, I say, which God hath in, and is provoked by, unto this Punishment. And as I then singly argued from each of them the Immediateness of God's Hand therein; so now I shall from each of the same, the Dreadfulness hereof. There were three Attributes of God in special, and his Glory in common, which God aimeth at the Manifestation of, in this ultimate Guerdon or Reward for Sin. 1. The Manifestation of the Glory (that's in common;) then particularly, 1st, Of his Power; 2<sup>dly</sup>, The satisfying of his Justice; 3<sup>dly</sup>, Of his Wrath. The Scriptures I then had Recourse to, do specify all these. I shall speak to these in this Section, and to the other in the following.

1. In General, that he aimeth at his Glory in it (which is God's general Aim, and is common to these and all other Attributes) is evident. His Glory, (as it is to be manifested to us) is but the Result or Shine of all or any of his Attributes, manifested in that Place of Prov. 16. 4. The Lord hath made all things for himself, that is, for his Glory (for that is himself: My Glory I will not give to another) it follows, yea, even the wicked for the Day of Evil. The Day of Evil there, is the Day of Punishment: the Wicked themselves also making and preparing themselves by Sin thereto; but so as thereupon God manifests his Glory upon them, as well as upon all things else; which he hath made in their several seasons and kinds. And Solomon doth mention this of Punishment as one eminent Instance of all things else, whatever, that are for his Glory, and which will be ordered then by him, thereunto in a special manner: And because (it being so great an Evil) Men might think otherwise; Yea, but says Solomon, God seeks and will have a Glory out of this Punishment, as well as out of all things else; of which ye all acknowledg, that God made them for himself. And so in that 2 Thess. 1. 9. They are said to be punish'd from the Glory of his Power, that is, from his Power, glorifying himself on them, as I before expounded it. And as it is for the Glory of this his Power, so by the same Reason of all, or any of those other Attributes, he is pleased to put forth therein.

I shall premise two Maxims, from whence fore-laid the Inference, for the Dreadfulness of this will more readily rise, in an infinite Height, unto our more serious and sober Apprehensions.

The First: That all things which God doth for his own Glory, he will perform them like himself; that is, like God: and so make the utmost of every thing, that that subject Matter, whatever it be, will afford of Glory to him. This Rule is ascertained to us, as from the Nature of God; so from that saying of the Apostle, Rom. 1. 21. where he condemns the Gentiles, that they glorified him not as God, that is, in such a manner as was worthy of him; they came not up to that height of Glory, so great a God must have given unto him from tures. Now if it be the Sin of Creatures, that they fall short in glorifying God as God; then be assured that if God himself undertakes and professeth to do a thing for his Glory, he will, in the whole of it, and Issue thereof, either glorify himself as God, or never begin to essay or meddle with it, but would have let it alone for ever.

2. From hence, take this also along with you, to carry it in your view, through each particular that follows; That then, if God seeks to glorify himself in a way of Punishment, that Punishment must be Answerably great and proportioned to raise up a Glory unto God, such as shall Glorify him, as God, in that way. For it is the Punishment or the Judgment it self which he executes (as the Psalmist says) out of which this Glory must spring. This Punishment, as it is a Punishment, is that, wherein God will be glorified as God. That is, it is the Soil which this Crop of his Glory is to grow up out of, and the Crop or Harvest of Glory can be but what the fertility of that Soil, as such, affords: These things in general fore-laid.

Now, 3. The greatness or vast comings in of that Glory, God reckons upon from this, may rise up in your View, by these Particulars.

1. Had it not been that in comparison of other Works of his, an infinitely exceeding Revenue of Glory would have arisen unto him from this, God would never have set his Heart or Hand to this Work of all other: I say it again, He would never have set his Hand to this Work of all other. For as he is Creator, he hath a Love to all, and hates nothing that he hath made, he loves no such Bloody work for it self; nor would have ever embrued his Hands in the Destruction of his Creature, had it not been for an exceeding weight of Glory; and as being justly provoked thereto, it becometh a just Prize, on that Hand presented to him: which he will be sure withal to manage and perform with the utmost Righteousness. It is certain, that this is to him opus alienum, a work strange to his Nature, as the Prophet speaks. He does not naturally, nor nor willingly (says the Lamentation) afflict, or grieve the Children of Men. Lament. 3. 33. Men's Quarrelings and Cavils hereabout did put him long since to his Oath, and he hath cleared himself by Oath in Ezekiel, As I live I will not the Death of a Sinner; that is, not simply, as if I delighted in it for it self, as a God that is cruel; (which was objected) and therefore I say peremptorily it must be an infinite mass of Glory, after much long-suffering and impenitency of Men, that moves him to it. And if so, then according to the Principles even now mentioned, do you that are impenitent Sinners look to it, for ex vestro cario (I allude to Job's Speech, Skin for Skin) out of the Blood of your Souls, and their Destruction, shall this Tribute and Tax of Glory be raised, according unto what your Sinfulness shall be found to have been. And O then, do you collect how fearful it is like to be! View it in a contrary, and indeed though an Instance far transcending the Proportion of this, yet in respect of holding some likeness to God's proceeding in this, will conduce to heighten our Thoughts about this. It is a Consideration that helps our Faith (and 'tis a great one) that for God to deliver up his own Son to Death, and for himself to bruise him, (you have it all in a short saying, Isa. 53. 10. It pleased the Lord to bruise him) and that this should be the Object of his good Pleasure, there must have been some incomprehensible vast design of Glory to accrue there-from, to be attained by doing it; some high End and far transcending Design that was to be the Issue and Product of it. Which as you know was the Glory of his Mercy and love in the Salvation of Men: Glory to God on high, Good will to Men. And this is as great an Evidence and argument to our Faith, that God is resolved to save Sinners, as can be given. For what hath been thus done to Christ, is past recalling; not to be recompensed any other way than by saving many by the knowledge of him, as God there speaks. Now as this Instance of the highest kind serves to evidence this thing to us, so though in a far lesser Proportion, you may take somewhat alike Illustration at least in the Point in Hand; That certainly it must be a great surpassing Mass of Glory that will come in unto him by this Punishment for Sin, which should any way gain him to be so much as willing to it, against which otherwise he hath so much in his own Nature;

Book XIII

Nature; who had it withal in his absolute Power to have given effectual Grace to all, as well as to some; which latter all acknowledg he hath done. Even as it was in his Power to have saved the World without Christ's Death, Mark 14. 36. Oh! ye Sons of Men, know and understand your God, and be moved thereby to turn unto him: and the more by this, that it must and will prove an infinite Punishment that is coming upon you; because were it not, an immense sum of Glory would accrue to him out of it, and that but upon your final impenitency: He that is a God so good in himself, would never else bring it upon you. And according to that first Maxime premised, it must be the foreness of the Punishment from whence that Glory must arise.

2. Consider herewith, how that he hath reserved this, as his last Work in that other World, when this World shall come to be folded up as a Garment, and a final conclusion be put to all these other Dispensations and Works of Glory that are now on Foot. And as Solomon told us that he hath made the Wicked for himself and for the Day of Evil; So Job also tells us, That the Wicked is reserved to the Day of Destruction, and shall be brought forth at (or to) the day of Wrath: [Reserved] by God, till after all his other Works of wonder are ended and gone, then to be brought forth as a Trophie of his Glory. Both themselves and all their Sins are reserved till then, and laid up amongst God's Treasures, to be then made publick. The Salvation of his Elect, and the Destruction of the Wicked, are the last and only Works that then remain, and do remain, and are purposely kept unto that Time, when he means to shew himself to be God indeed; and to make all Men and Angels know that he is God. It is an Argument of the fearfulness of that Punishment the Devils shall undergoe, Jude 6. 2 Pet. 2. 4. That he hath reserved them in everlasting Chains unto the Judgment of the great Day. It is a certain Rule, that God's latter Works do still exceed and put down the former: So far, as the former shall not in Comparison be remembered, Isa. 65. 17. Jer. 3. 16. When God would make his Apostles (as to this World) the greatest Spectacle of Misery that (excepting what he made his own Son, who was the first-born among many Brethren) he ever put upon Saints, Prophets or Martyrs, that had preceded and were before them. How doth the Apostle express his Design in it, 1 Cor. 4. 9. I think (says he) that God hath set forth us the Apostles [last] as it were Men appointed to Death, for we are made a Spectacle unto the World, and to Angels, and to Men. Alluding to those Gladiators, brought up last upon the Stage, as a Spectacle to the People. The thing I cite it for, is, that the greatest Work in that kind, he appointed to be at last: As also, was that which immediately preceded it, the coming of his Son in the last Days. And but this of punishing the Wicked in his last, and very last, of all that he will do for ever.

3. Especially let us withal, consider besides, how all his Actings and Works whereby to glorify himself for ever, shall be reduced and contracted to these two. He gives over all other of Providence, and Spiritual Dispensations by Ordinances, and sets down and betakes himself to these two alone. God hath nothing else to do in the other World. And he hath no other revenue of manifested Glory that remains Extant; he lives and reigns eternally in or upon these two: And yet this is then, when he is resolved, to the utmost to be glorious. And yet all is but what comes out of these two Works, the Salvation of the Elect, and Destruction of the Wicked.

4. Again, Consider these two are uniform Works, and unvarying; and without Shadow of turning: In this World he makes a Variety and interchange of Providences; which are exercised in such Works as he sometimes takes up, and then lays down again at Pleasure; he sees one thing against another, as Solomon speaks. Every Day and Age produceth a Variety and alteration. And this is, because his Glory, that appeareth but imperfectly in some one (as in this and that particular) may have an additional Perfection in some other; that so, all that Variety, may like small pieces in Tapestry, make that piece of Work compleat. And yet we see how in this Mixture, and often, but in some one single Work or Piece, wrought and done but once, how much of God's Glory appears to the wonderment of Men and Angels. Whereas now this last Work of punishing Wicked Men (as likewise that other of Salvation) are but as one continued Dispensation of one Woof, and uniform for ever, without change, variety or interruption. The whole Stream of God's Activity contracts it self unto, and runs in these two Channels and no more, in omne volubilis ævum: And how strong must you needs suppose these two Streams, each of them to be? when as the Manifestation of the Deity, doth now run so strongly in a thousand Rivolets. This in General, from the Manifestation of his Glory.

I named three Attributes in Particular, which God doth more eminently shew forth in this great, and last Work of his.

Secondly, Justice.

Thirdly, Avenging Wrath, to the end to Gain a Glory to himself out of all these.

First, His Power: That you have in two Places, Rom. 9. 22. What if God willing to shew his Wrath, and to make his Power known? His Power you see, is mentioned Distinct from his Wrath, though indeed it will provoke to be the Power of his Wrath: But I shall distinctly speak of it. You have it also mentioned as that Attribute which shall be most glorified hereby, in 2 Theff. 1. 9. Who shall be punished with Destruction from the Glory of his Power. I afore spake some things of the greatness of God's Power, as in relation to this Punishment, in shewing how fearful it is to fall into the Hands of God, in the first Head or Demonstration in this Section, I shall only here add,

1. This general Rule concerning it, That the drawing forth of Power or Activity by God in any Work, is still, but what is proportionable and Answerable to the Work: that is, the Effect shall be answerable in greatness to the Power that is said to be put forth. It is certain, God over-acts nothing. Now the Effect, wherein this Power of his is put forth, is here said to be Destruction. And therefore that Destruction must be conceived proportioned to the Power, that is said to be exerted. There was never Work which God ever did, wherein he professed to shew forth a transcendency of Power, or of any other Attribute, but it was wonderful and glorious in its kind. All his Attributes are himself, and so as great as himself. This visible World, in its kind, what a glorious Building is it? consisting of Heaven and Earth: And to what end was it that he professed he made it? you have it, Rom. 1. 20. That by the Creation of the World, might be understood his eternal Power and Godhead. And if he that created and raised up such Beings out of nothing, shall profess yet further, to make his Power known, and will use that Power, and put it forth in destroying, to shew forth the Glory of it, how great will that Destruction be, which must bear a Proportion to such a Manifestation? That after God hath in so great and so various Works preceding this, sufficiently (as we might think) shewn himself God, in point of Power, or what a powerful God he is; that yet after all, as if in all these he had not given so full Proof or Demonstration of Power, and as not satisfied with all the former, as not enough, he should be after all, willing, as the Apostle says here at last, to begin a new Work, which should make the Ears of the whole Creation tingle, on purpose to make his Power known! This is it swallows up my Thoughts into Astonishment, knowing both, that according to the Rule before given, his last Works ordained to shew forth any Attribute, must infinitely exceed the former, that served to the making known thereof. And that again puts a new Amazement into my Thoughts, to think how, or wherein so much a greater proportion of Power should be spent. If it were barely to annihilate, and bring the Creature to its first Nothing, there needs not an extension of Power; it were but withdrawing that Word of his Power that holds up, and bears up all things, Heb. 1. 3. and these, as all, would fall to nothing. But over and above, you read here, of such a Destruction, as draws out his Power positively, and makes his Power known afresh. Specially, when again I consider as to this Particular, that to destroy the well-being of any thing, is in the ordinary Experience of us Creatures, more easy than to give being. A Man that cannot make alive the least of Creatures, not the least Fly or Flea, can yet with an easy touch destroy them. I hinted before some Respects, wherein this Destruction might exceed, in respect of Power concurring to it, that of the Creation. In the Creation there was but a single expence of Power, namely, or meerly raising up out of Nothing: But in this a double. For the Wrath of God exerted in the fierceness of it, hath a tendency to bring, and would if no other Power intervened, bring the Sinner unto nothing; as that Speech of Jeremy doth imply, Correct me not in thine Anger, lest thou bring me to nothing; as also that of Nahum, Who can stand in the fierceness of his Anger? so as under this his pressure of the Creature unto nothing, for God to uphold that Creature in being, is equivalent unto a continual educing it out of nothing again. O what Destruction must there then be in the execution of it, in which God will positively put forth more Power than in creating! and thereby after all other works of Power shewn, get himself the Name among the whole Creation, of being a powerful God indeed. But of this Destruction more hereafter. Thus much for that of Power.

Jer. 10. 24.

The second Attribute is Justice, which he will to the utmost shew forth in this Punishment. So in the Text, The Lord shall judg his People. And 2 Thess. 1. 9. διουν τιξασιν, they shall lay down, or pay a Punishment: And ver. 6. It is a righteous thing in God to [recompence] Tribulation, &c. And indeed God's Power herein is not put forth simply out of Sovereignty, or for it self, but is drawn out by Justice and Wrath, to execute what they are provoked unto. I before gave this as one Reason why God himself must Execute this Punishment, because else the Punishment will not come up to satisfy his Justice. But now I make use of the same, to infer the Dreadfulness thereof: That it is the falling into the Hands, as of a potent God, so of a just God recompensing for Sin, and extending his mighty Power to inflict a Punishment, which should in Justice hold proportion with the demerit of Sin, that so the exactness of his Justice might appear.

Now to heighten our Apprehensions of the Dreadfulness of this Punishment, from this particular: Consider,

1. The Infinite demerit of Sin. Which is not enough known or considered by the miserable Subjects thereof; because indeed God himself, in his Holiness, and in his Greatness, is not known by them. Now because Men will not otherwise know, nor be sensible of Sin, in the Spiritual evil of it against God; therefore it is that God is put upon it thus to make Men know it, and what God himself is; for Men to sin against him, by such dreadful Effects, as in Justice shall hold proportion with their Sin, and the Desert thereof. And God professeth, he will herein be exact, Heb. 2. 2. So, as every Transgression shall receive [a just Recompence] of Reward. Not such or such Sins, some few more eminent Sins only, but [every Transgression] shall have a Reward proportionate. He that is the Judg of all the World, shall not he be exact? as Abraham in another Case, Gen. 17. Yes, in this ultimate Punishment he will be sure to be, as Isaiah speaks, Chap. 28. vers. 17. To lay Judgment to the Line, and Righteousness to the Plummets. As Carpenters do, when they would fit things one to another, and make things uniform and correspondent, and square them adequately to an hairs Breadth, as we say. And thus will God do in Judging. He will bring his Line and his Plummets, take measure of the Hainousness of every Sin, and mete a Punishment adequate thereto. And if so, then this Punishment how dreadful will it be? If thou wilt be severe to mark what is done amiss, who will be able to stand? says the Psalmist. The Heinousness of Sin is measured by the Greatness of that Glory whereof it is the Debasing; and that Debasing done to him, further measured by this, that it is, by so mean things, as we Creatures are to God. And so is estimated by the worth of that Person against whom it is committed, which therefore could by no other ther means be expiated, but by the Debasement and emptying of as great a Glory, due to the Person of the Son of God, appearing in our Nature, as one Person therewith. Sin, the Apostle tells us, Rom. 7. 13. is above measure sinful. And hence accordingly this Punishment is estimated to be above measure fearful. Thus Jer. 30. 11. and Isa. 27. 7, 8. God putting this very Difference between his punishing godly Men his own Children, and his punishing wicked Men: Hath he smitten him, as he smote those that smote him? No; for he puts this Difference in the 8th ver. He smites his own in measure. You may then take the Compass, the Magnitude, and Depth of it by this; that therefore oppositely his Punishing the other exceeds all Measure. Sin is the Creatures proper Work, and Punishment is God's Work. [Vengeance belongeth unto me,] says the Text; he challengeth it as his. Now it is certain, God will shew himself as perfect and as Exact in his Work as Man and Satan have been in theirs; he will not be exceeded or out-gone by them. The Lord is known, says the Psalmist, by the Judgment that he executeth, Psal. 9. 16. If the Creature be so wicked, as to bring forth so heinous an Evil (in genere moris) as Sin is, which is Malum Catholicum [a Catholick evil] and accordingly hath the Name of all Evil given it, as virtually and transcendently containing all that God or Man calls Evil; then be assured, that God, who is so just, will be as sure to bring forth, by Way of return upon the Creature, a Punishment, that shall be in genere Pœnae, in it's kind, Malum Catholicum, an universal Evil also. And such Ezekiel terms it, speaking of the Evil of Punishment: It is an Evil, and an only Evil, Ezek. 7. 5. That is, such an Evil as shall be nothing but Evil, and that shall contain the Spirit, the Quintessence of all Evil in it. Therefore, Psal. 75. 8. In the Hand of the Lord there is a Cup, and it is full of Mixture. As if an Artist, that knows the Nature of all Simples, should temper a Cup that is full of all sorts of Poisons, and which is a Compound of the bitterest, loathsomest Ingredients this Earth puts forth. Even thus hath God strained the Quintessence of all Evils into one Cup; and it follows there, The Wicked of the Earth must drink the Dregs of it. Which Phrase also argues such a Mixture as this we speak of; the bitterest of all is at the Bottom; and 'tis Eternity to the Bottom, and they must not, nor shall not leave a Drop, but suck out the Dregs, as the Prophet's Phrase is, Ezek. 23. 34. Thou hast a Cup of Abomination, and when thou hast fill'd up thy Measure, then will God take a measure of thy Cup, and fill the same proportion of Dregs and Mixture to thee, in a Cup of his tempering.

2. Consider, that in the manifestation of this Attribute of Justice, there must of all other (next unto that of Mercy) be a more special Glory intended and designed by God himself, unto which this Punishment must bear an eminent proportion, as being the Matter wherein it appears. I said before, that if God professed to manifest any Attribute of his whatever, it still hath been done in such Effects of Wonder, as all the Creation is set admiring of. Now of all other Attributes, these two of Justice and Mercy are the prime, which he sets the greatest Value upon the manifestation of. And therefore still look how they are more Eminent, or by how much the more Eminently he intends to manifest them above other Attributes; by so much must the Effects, in and by which he manifesteth them, exceed and excel all other Works.

Now that these are the brightest Jewels in that Crown of his Glory, and which he intends most to Embelish, may be seen in this: 1. That he hath chosen the choicest and most excellent of his Creatures, as the Stuff or Materials in which to set these forth; namely, Angels and Men, and Christ himself the Head of all. That look as curious Engravers, when they would shew their best Art, and chiefest Workmanship, they cull out the choicest Materials, as either precious Stones, Cedar, or Marble, to work upon; and so Embroiderers, the finest Stuff or Cloth for the Ground-work, they would embroider Gold or Pearls upon: Thus hath God singled forth Angels and Men, the chief of, and more noble Creatures (in the Stuff they consist of) than the rest of his whole Creation. Power and Wisdom is seen in other

 Creatures, but Vindictive Justice, as also Grace and saving Mercy, only on Men and Angels. And, 2. Although he hath shewn forth more of Wisdom and Power in the Frame and Fabrick of Men and Angels, than in the whole of Heaven and Earth; yet still, comparatively, more of Justice and Mercy in these two, than that all, or any of the other Attributes, shewn forth in and upon them, comes unto. Whereof this is sufficient Evidence, that they have the Name of Vessels of Mercy, and Vessels of Wrath, Rom. 9. You read nowhere, that they are termed Vessels of Power, or Vessels of Wisdom: which is a Token that they are fill'd with these, in that they carry away the Denomination, (which is usually à Principaliori,) as if no Attributes else in Comparison seemed to appear: and yet how much of Power and Wisdom is seen in the Fabrick of Man, David tells us, I am wonderfully or fearfully made. So then, those that shall prove to be the miserable Vessels of this his Wrath and Justice, shall be so fill'd with the Punishment, whereby this Justice is made known, as shall deservedly bear the Name of Wrath and Judgment engraven upon it, of all other Attributes. The Day in which he will judge the World, Acts 17. 31. is elsewhere called, the Day of Destruction, the Day of Wrath, the Day of Judgment, &c. It beareth its Denomination from this very Work we speak of.

And further, consider how he hath given out before-hand, almost six thousand Years before, concerning this Work, above all Works else, and hath posted it upon Enoch's Pillars, (you know the Tradition I allude to) as you use to do Executions, Jude 14, 15. or as you do indicere Diem, set a Day for the most Solemn Works. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied hereof, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all, &c. And further and besides, God speaks of Preparations to have been all along made by him, during the Time of this World, against that Day. The Persons are a fitting, Rom. 9. The Punishment a preparing; prepared for the Devil and his Angels, even from their very first Fall. Now certainly God would never raise up in us, by such Words given out by himself, so great Expectations, if the Reality, the Execution, the Thing it self, should not Answer to all these. Yea, after all his other Works of Wonder finished and perfected, he professeth to come on purpose to be glorified. And in what? as well in rendring Vengeance in the Destruction of Wicked Men, as in the glorifying his Saints, 2 Thess. 1. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God, to recompence Tribulation to them that trouble you: And to you that are troubled, Rest with us. When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from Heaven, with his mighty Angels, in flaming Fire, taking Vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall be punish'd with everlasting Destruction from the Presence of the Lord, and from the Glory of his Power: When he shall come to be glorified in his Saints, and to be admired in all them that believe, in that Day. He carries on the glorifying himself, and of his Power, in the one, as well as in the other.

Yea, and to render the Solemnity of this Work and Day yet greater, he calls a General Assembly of all Men and Angels, that are, or have been, or of Men that yet shall be, in either Worlds, to be present, and see the Execution.

To conclude: It is therefore called the Great Day, as that, Reserved to the Judgment of the Great Day, Jude 6. and other Speeches. And why the Great Day? but from this Work of that Day, that shall be done upon it; which this Day shall then bring forth, and produce. As Days have their Stile and Denomination from the Work of the Day. Opus diei in die suo. So this (as was said) is called the Day of Destruction, Wrath, &c. And so, then that Stile of Greatness must be from the Greatness of the Work that shall be done thereon. And so the Judgment of the Great Day, because great will the Judgment be that is to be executed on that Day.

Lastly; God hath in the mean Time suffered his Glory to be debased, himself to be least regarded in the World, Sin and the Devil to carry all before them, and Sinners to have the Glory: relieving himself in the mean time, that he hath a Treasure of Glory to be broken up at that Day, Rom. 2. 3. When he will come on purpose to be glorious. He hath suffered an Eclipse of six thousand Years, that in the end he may break forth with a redoubled Glory. And all that Glory must come in this Way, even from this Punishment he shall execute. And it must be a recovery of greater Glory, than he should have had by Man's Holiness, in that first State by Creation, or God would never have let Sin have come into the World; he meant not to be a Loser.

I come next to argue this from the third Attribute, his Wrath: or if you will, his Power and Justice, as intended, and heightned to Extremities by Wrath: And though he will be just in what he doth; yet it is Justice put on by Wrath. He recompenseth Sin, not only as Rector Universi, Judg of all the World, and so upon the account of Publick Rules given forth, to vindicate the Equity and Righteousness of which, he punisheth the Transgressions of them; But over and above he doth it, as resenting an Injury, a personal Affront given to himself, his Person; and this draws forth his Wrath and Vengeance on his own behalf.

As it is termed Vengeance, so Zeal, in Heb. 10. 27. and 1 Cor. 10. 22. Do you provoke the Lord to Jealousy? In Nahum 1. 2. See what a Conglomeration there is of Attributes and Effects.

[God is jealous,] that's the first. He compares that in God unto that in Man, which, Solomon tell us, is the Rage of Man, Prov. 6. last.

Again, 2. The Lord revengeth, the Lord revengeth. That is the Effect; and he says it twice, as speaking of one who is enflamed with Anger.

Then, 3. To shew how fiercely in revenging he executes it, even with Fury, he adds, The Lord revengeth, and is furious, who yet professeth elsewhere of himself, Fury is not in me; that is, of my self it is not, Isa. 27. 4. But as he is provoked by Sin and Impenitency, so Fury is in him. The Lord is furious.

Then, 4. Follows the Subject thereof, and what they are to him, whom his Fury waxeth so hot against, Enemies and Adversaries. [The Lord will take Vengeance on his Adversaries, and he reserveth Wrath for his Enemies.] Which accords with this Text: Vengeance is mine, I will recompence the Adversaries, verse 27.

And, 5. If any urge: Yea, but is not God merciful, and slow to Anger? Yes, says he, ver. 3. The Lord is slow to Anger. But he brings it in to shew, that in this Case it is that very Patience of his, which in the issue Works up unto that Fury: Leva Patientia fit Furor.

And then, 6. He further warns them to consider, that in the Execution of this Fury to the utmost, his Power comes to be Engaged: The Lord is great in Power.

And lastly, He will not at all acquit the Wicked, that lives and dies in his Sins: Which is a Clause or Proviso he still puts in, even when he speaks the greatest things of his Mercy. See Exod. 34. 6, 7.

And although the very reading this Description of God, as an Avenger, shews forth alone its own Dreadfulness; yet further to clear, and enlarge upon it, consider,

1. How it is Justice heightned by Wrath to a Fury, and all of these whetting on, and drawing out the Greatness of Power. And to this purpose we find, as was observed, Power and Wrath joined, in Rom. 9. 22. and Psal. 90. Who hath known the Power of thine Anger? His Jealousy draws out his Strength, and his Power works in a way of Wrath. Take a Man, let his Blood, his Fury be up, and thereby all his Spirits are intended and stirred, and he is able to strike a greater and heavier blow than at another time. As Sampson in his Fury against the Philistims, he pulls down the Pillars of the House. Now bring this to God, and though his Power is the same, and not greater, when he executeth Vengeance on his Enemies, than at all other times; yet being attributed to him after the manner of Men, it imports to us something of Analogy, (whereby the working of his Power in such a Case is set out) which it holds with what is in Men in the like Case.

Book XIII

And so shews, (1.) That if ever he did or will upon any Occasion, or can be supposed to shew forth Power and Strength, it will be in this, for he is in Fury; and in that Fury talks of the Greatness of his Power, which in Men in their Fury useth to be at the highest, and they shew forth their Strength in no Acts so much as those which they do in Fury.

(2.) That comparatively therefore unto other Works of his, wherein he shews forth Power, he is to be supposed to shew forth more of Power in this. Consider therefore, if God shewed forth Power in creating the World, &c. Yet according to this Analogy, I may say of all those kinds of Works whatever, (speaking after the manner of Men) that he did them coolly, as it were, but this he doth in Fury, and so may well be supposed to put forth more of Power in these in that Respect, than in those other.

2. Avenging Wrath is more than simply Anger. A Man is Angry with a Friend, and so is God often with his Children. And then he stirs not up all his Wrath, as Psal. 78. But the Butt and Mark, which Revenge shoots its Arrows at, is an Enemy, as both out of Nahum, and the 27th verse of this Chapter, was observed. And not only so, but such as are irreconcilable Enemies: for that is the state of Men in Hell, and the posture of their Spirits there towards God, to be fixed in Malice. Now when Vengeance in God shall be extreme, who shall be able to bear it?

3. Justice hath a mixture of Pity mingled with it, but when 'tis a Case of Revenge, there is a Decorum put upon the extremity of Justice. It is the revenge of an Injury. Which though in the Creature, who it self is a Subject of God's, (who only hath the Sovereignty of Power,) it is therefore inglorious and unworthy, yet in God, who is the Supreme, in Case of wrong and Injury to himself, this hath a Glory in it; Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord. No wonder then if it be termed Severity, Rom. 11. 23. and James 2. 13. expressly, Judgment without Mercy. And perhaps in that Respect also it is, that, Rev. 14. 10. it is termed, Wrath without mixture, that is, pure Wrath which hath no mixture; Not a Drop to cool ones Tongue. And again, Wrath to the uttermost, as 1 Thess. 2. 16. the Apostle speaks of that Wrath, which upon the Destruction of Jerusalem (the Type of the Day of Judgment) befel that Nation. And so it is set forth in the Language of the Wrath at the great Day, as Grotius hath observed, which is Wrath to the uttermost. And as God is said to rest in his Love shewn to his Children; so his Wrath satisfies it self in accomplishing Vengeance, Ezek. 7. 8, 9. I will accomplish mine Anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy Ways, and I will recompence thee for all thine Abominations. And mine Eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompence thee according to thy Ways, and thine Abominations that are in the midst of thee, and ye shall know that I am the Lord that smitteth. And therefore is often called a Sacrifice, as Mark. 9. 49.

Zeph. 3. 17.

Isa. 27. 11.

And this answers an Objection may be made. Did not David expressly choose rather to fall into the Hand of God than Man? 2 Sam. 24. 14. The answer is at Hand in the same place, for his Mercies are great. That is David's Reason for it there. And so indeed the Difference lies in chastising Anger, and avenging Wrath, And David there speaks of God's chastising his Children in this World, but in the World to come you see the Case is altered: It is the falling into the Hands of an Avenger, who in that Execution professeth to shew no Mercy: He that made them, will have no pity on them.

Lastly, consider how Wrath sets all that is in God against a Man, whets and sharpens the whole Activity of every Attribute. What is the reason that in the Text when this dreadful Execution is spoken of, the Attribute of the [living God] is mentioned rather than Power? &c. The Life of God speaks the whole of his Attributes. The whole of his Nature and Godhead, as it is active and working: this Life imports. In Hell God draws out all his Forces, all his Perfections conspire either to stir up and enkindle Wrath, or to assist him in the Execution. How Power is drawn forth and intended I shewed before. Wisdom, that marshals all into Order, sets both thy Sins in order in the view of thy Conscience, Psal. 50. 21. and sets his Terrors in Battel array against thee, 'tis

'Tis Job's Expression, Chap. 6. 4. and the same Word in both places. And as it marshalls all, so whets on to Vengeance, Prov. 1. 25. Ye have set at naught all my Counsel, I will therefore laugh at your Calamity, I will mock when your Fear cometh. 'Tis Wisdom speaks this, ver. 20. Be not deceived (saith the Apostle) God is not mocked, Gal. 6. 7. It imports two things :

1. That Sinners think to illude and deceive God. As what is it else to think to defer Repentance to the last, and then to come and flatter, and look to be saved, as if they had served him from the very first Moment of their Lives? they herein think to go beyond God.

2. That in such cases, God's Wisdom takes it and resents it to the height. Nothing adds unto Provocation more, in a Man that is Wise, than to perceive how another Man thinks to go beyond him, and impose upon his Wisdom. And it is Wisdom in a Man, that makes him he would not be mock'd, deceived or trifled withal; this Principle riseth up in God's Heart, the Judg of all the World. Again, his Holiness crys out to him against the Sinner: Thou art a pure God; and, I can endure to behold no Iniquity; and the Eyes of my Glory have been provoked by this Sinner continually. Then says Justice too, I must be satisfied to the utmost Farthing, and have the last drop of Blood that is in their Souls: and this their Punishment executed on their own Persons, is all I shall have or can recover for all the Dishonour hath been done thee. For Christ, through their unbelief, hath not taken off one Farthing of their Debt, but all is left and remains upon their own Score. And I can no other way recover Glory, but by having it out of them: And therefore it is that an Eternity is required, because, but by an Eternity of Suffering it is that they can come to satisfy. Prov. 27. 20. Hell and Destruction are never full, or [satisfied] as the next Words shew the meaning to be. Then says Truth and Righteousness, their whole Lives have been contrary to my Love, the whole Actings and the Courses of them have been but a making a Lie, a Web of Hypocrisy, continually woven and vended. Rev. 22. 15. That love and make a Lie, and Rom. 3. 13. Their Tongues are full of falsehood and Deceit; and again, give them their Portion with Hypocrites: whom of all else I hate, says Truth. Then boils up Jealousy, every Creature hath been an Idol, and made their God, and set up in God's stead, and they have been enflamed with them (as of Idolaters the Prophet speaks:) Idols of Jealousy have all their Lusts been: and the Glory due to me hath been given to them. But you will say, will not Mercy at last speak a good Word for them? will it not allay and moderate all these? No, but turn as fiercely against them as any other Attribute, and plead; I indeed did a long while restrain all these other Attributes that were provoked every Moment, [Whom God endured with much long-suffering, says Rom. 9. 22.] And that they have lived so long free from Wrath, hath been by means of me, I waiting for their Repentance, which hath cost me Millions. I have spent Riches on them, in forbearance of them: All which now is to be reckoned to them in Wrath. You have it Rom. 2. 4, 5. They have despised the Riches of his Goodness, and Forbearance, and long-suffering, not knowing that the Goodness of God leadeth them to Repentance. But after their hardness and impenitent Heart, treasure up unto themselves Wrath, &c. And says Grace, I was presumed on, and made a stale to, and defender of their Lusts; and was turned into Wantonness, Jude 4.

And thus all in God, is set (as it were) on Fire against a Sinner, and (as I may so speak) do turn all in him into Fury. And look as to God's People, all in God is assimilated into Love towards them, and they live and dwell in Love, and see nothing else, as it were in God, but Love: God is Love (says the Apostle) namely, to his own, 1 John 4. 16. Nothing else appears; or rather, all that is in him, appears in that Hue, under that Die, with that Tincture. So here on the contrary, all in God is turned into Fury: Let a patientia fit Furor. Though he is not so of himself: Fury is not in me, says he, Isa. 27. but Sin hath made him such.

A Fourth head of Demonstrations, is taken from the Instances given both of Good and bad Men. Which Instances, as I then alledged to prove the immediimmediateness of God's inflicting it: So now I shall from thence present some Inferences of the fearfulness hereof. Do but sit down a little with Job and Heman, who were the Instances of Good Men: Or go to that Roll which the Scriptures have recorded of Cain and Judas, and others, or which Ecclesiastical Stories, or present Examples of our Age have afforded, of Men in Horror: weigh and perpend their Crys and Roarings, and consider what a sad Spectacle such Instances afford.

1. Of good Men: Heman I insisted in before, and acquainted you with his Complaints as sad as Man can utter: I reserved that of Job, specially for this Place, as I then professed. All the while that he had but Afflictions common to Men; and although he was every Way surrounded with them, as being visited with a loathsome Disease, his Body fill'd with Dolours and Pains, his Children lost, Servants destroyed by Fire from Heaven; his Estate quite gone unto an Extremity of Poverty; his Wife abhorring his Breath, and tempting him to Blasphemy: All this while the Text tells us, Chap. 2. 10. That in all this did not Job sin with his Lips, but was quiet and Patient, as the Holy Ghost in the New Testament takes notice of him, Jam. 5. You have heard of the Patience of Job. Well, but God himself in the End came in upon him with his immediate Wrath. And now will you hear of his Impatience too? He was not prick'd to the quick till now. But then he begins to Curse the Day of his Birth, Chap. 3. 1, 2, 3. and at that rate talks all along that Chapter. For brevity, let us only consult his Lamentations, in Chap. 6. ver. 2, 3, 4. O that my grief were thoroughly weighed, and my Calamity laid in the Ballances together, for now it would be heavier than the Sand, therefore my Words are swallowed up. The rests that follows, I shall add by and by. What was it caused this sudden Out-cry and Alteration in Job's Spirit, from that still and sedate Frame we left him in before? What was it the thoughts of his lost Estate, Children, Wife's unkindness, or the Pains of his Bones and Body, &c. or his downfall from a petty Kingdom? Did these begin now at length so sadly to return upon him, so as in the end his Spirit should begin to take them in, and lay them at length to Heart, which at first he in an holy Gallantry had made so light of? O no, he had fully concocted and digested all that had been occasioned from all or any of these, and had quieted himself with one or two good Cordials, namely, that the Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, and blessed be the Name of the Lord, Chap. 1. 21. And again, shall we receive Good from the Hand of the Lord, and not evil? Chap. 2. 10. which had carried away all that Sorrow might have been stirring in him from these. What might be the matter then, that was the Cause of these so high Disturbances? The next Words ver. 4. do enform us, For the Arrows of the Almighty are within me, the Poison whereof drinks up my Spirits; the Terrors of God do set themselves in Array against me. Let us go on duly to weigh and consider these Passages of his.

Heman, he in his Horrors had complained, Psal. 88. 7. That God's Wrath lay hard or heavy on him, and says no more of it: But Job here, in like manner feeling the like weight thereof, goes about to express how heavy, and how great the Burthen was of his Grief, that was caused thereby. And he calls for a mighty Scale to weigh it in: Such a Scale as might be large enough to contain all the Sands of the Sea. O that my Grief were thoroughly weighed, and my Calamities laid in the Ballance together! for now it would be heavier than the Sand of the Sea. His meaning is, that to have his Grief and Calamity put in one of the Scales, and the Sand of the Sea in the other, his Calamity would be infinitely heavier. His invention was heightened by what he really felt: The greatness of it made him Eloquent. (For as Love, so deep sense of Misery useth so to do.) And he pitcheth, as you see, upon the weightiness of Sand, to express it by, which is of all things the weightiest, as Solomon tells us, Prov. 27. 3. A Stone is heavy, and the Sand is weighty. Yea, and the Sand of the Sea: which, take both, those Sands within the Sea at the bottom of it, and those also scattered without on the Shoar, they do make an immense Bulk and Body condensed, if they were gathered together into one heap: (as the Waters were into one place, when God made made the Sea.) Job had a most sublime Fancy, as the high strains of that whole Book shew: And this is in view a Comparison vast and great enough, (one would think) as could be used. But yet further, observe how he breaks off that Attempt of his, to express it by this or by any such Comparisons, though in appearance never so hyperbolical. Which breaking off, his next Speech utters: My Words (says he) are swallowed up! As a small thing is swallowed up of a greater, as a drop of the Ocean, as one small scattered Sand would be, in the Bulk of all those Sands of the Sea, when cast in amongst them: So were all these his vast Expressions and Comparisons he had used, although thus great; (which yet from all Rhetoricians, would have had the name of Hyperboles, far exceeding the reality.) But yet in his sense and feeling were swallowed up by the Thing it self. I feel my Words fall short, says he: so Broughton paraphraseth on those Words. And therefore he cuts himself off from using any more or higher Decipherings of it, of any kind, if any could have been found, as being all but meer Metaphors, too light, and holding no Weight with that far exceeding weight of Misery, he felt (as the Apostle on the contrary, comparing present Afflictions and the Glory to come together, speaks) but Job here, he gives it clean over as a thing unexpressible. And in stead of all Essays that way, he chooseth rather to speak and shew the Cause thereof the same, which I in this Treatise have endeavoured to do. And thereby he sets forth in a Reality, the dreadfulnes of it indeed; And more than by all things whatever, that his Grief could have been compared unto. This you have in these Words, [For the Arrows of the Almighty are within me.] He had sores without, in his Body; and Afflictions in his outward Man or Condition; Fears without, and Terrors within; he complains not that you hear of them at all. O, but they are these Arrows that are within me, (says he) the Arrows of the Almighty; that is, which none but an Almighty Hand could shoot, and shoot so deep; such Arrows, as could come out of no other Forge or Quiver. The Soul of a Man is a Spirit of a vast depth, and God, and God alone can shoot up into it, unto the Arrow Head. And yet again, besides the strength of the Arm that shoots them, and the forkedness of the Arrows themselves, they were all, as Arrows that are dipt in Poison, envenomed with the Guilt of his Sins (which as chap. 13. 23. and 26. God had now set on upon his Soul, Thou makest me possess the Sins of my Youth:) Thus it follows in the next Words, [and the Poison thereof drinks up my Spirit.] They do not only let out the Spirits, (which Wounds made by other Arrows use to do) but they drink them up. The Strength and Violence of the Venom of them had such an Efficacy on his very Soul, and the very Spirit and Life thereof, as they drank all up. Again, it follows, [And the Terrors of God have set themselves in Array against me.] God drew forth his Wrath (as it were) into a well-ordered Army, into Rank and File, at once to fall upon him. If one Man had a whole Army set against him, and each armed Man therein were to shoot a Bullet, or an Arrow into him at once; and if withal we could make the Supposition, that that Man should have his Life still renewed after each Wound given, so as never to die; and yet they still to renew to shoot all at once every moment: how dreadful is this to any ones Thoughts thereof? but yet these are but Men, not God, whose Arrows he says these were. O that he would destroy me! (says Job) that is, kill me out-right, so ver. 8, 9. O that I might have my Request! and that God would grant me the thing that I long for! Even that it would please God to destroy me, and that he would let loose his Hand, and cut me off. Well, But Job, canst thou not stir up thy Spirits and harden thy self against all these present Sorrows? The Spirit of Man will bear its Infirmity, if it be steel'd with Resolution. To this Job himself gives Answer by way of preoccupation, to this Effect: That if Death indeed, or a being utterly cut off, should come upon me with all that Host of Fears (whereof elsewhere Job tells us, Death is the King) I could harden my self against that; yea, and to endure the Pains of the most exquisite Tortures any kind of Death could inflict: if thereby God would thus cut me off. Then indeed (if such News of Death were brought me) I should

Book XIII yet have comfort; yea, I would harden my self in Sorrow. So ver. 10. And let it be the worst Death he can put me to, for so it follows, let him not spare. O but they are these Arrows of his own within me! these I cannot bear. So ver. 12. Is my Strength the Strength of Stones, or my Flesh Brass, that I should be able to endure, and bear up my self against these Encounters? O no. Read on those his Expressions further roared forth by him, in Chap. 16. ver. 12, 13, 14. He hath broken me asunder: he hath also taken me by the Neck, and shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his Mark. His Archers compass me round about, he cleaveth my Reins asunder, and doth not spare; he poureth out my Gall upon the Ground. He breaketh me with breach upon breach; he runneth upon me like a Giant. What should I instance in more, or how to comment on them!

That which in the second place, is proper next to be done, is to provoke those that are secure Sinners, &c. and others also that are awakened, to raise but up their Thoughts from the Consideration hereof, to infer and gather how dreadful this Punishment in Hell must be, above all, that these Dispensations can represent unto us. And this is most strongly inferred from these Examples, whether they be the Examples of Good Men, as Job was; or bad Men, as Cain and Judas were, in both which I formerly instanced in.

I shall make Inference from each of these apart, as in the first Section, I also did in arguing from them, the Immediateness, &c.

First, From these of good Men. If you consider that all these Terrors, which Job and Heman endured from God, were yet all in Love, out of so solid and substantial a Love, permanent and abiding in God's Heart, all this while towards them; and that all these were but Chastisings of them for Tryal, and to make them partakers of his Holiness. And besides, what manner of Anger was it towards them? It was but Anger, which Love stirred up: and those his Afflictions were accompanied and joined, all with everlasting kindness and thoughts of Peace all the while. According to that in Isa. 54. 8. In a little Wrath I hid my Face from thee, for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have Mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. Yea, those two known Cordial Recipes, so frequently made use of, and commonly taken by most Christians in their Distresses, and cited by two Apostles, and Christ himself from Heaven, Happy is the Man whom God correcteth: Therefore despise not thou the Chastening of the Almighty; were first spoken and directed unto this our Job, whilst in the midst of these Afflictions, in chap. 5. 17. And are particularly applied to that his Condition, in the worst of it, by the Holy Ghost, Jam. 5. 11. Yea, and all this that was upon Job, was in it self (how great soever it seemed to his sense) but the touch of God's little Finger, Job 1. 11. O think then how great will that Vengeance be, which is pure Wrath, Rev. 14. which is out of Fury, as was shewn; which is, the fiery Indignation of Patience abused, boy'd up into Fury! This that beset them, is said to be but a little Wrath, and for a Moment. And yet (as also it is said, Psal. 2. ult.) If God be angry but a little, who is able to abide it! then what will this last and extream Vengeance reserved for Hell be? These Chastisements of Job's and Heman's were in Comparison of what awaits Men in Hell, but as Rods of Birch or Rushes, which we use to whip our Children withal, Psal. 89. 32, 33. Then will I visit their Transgressions with the Rod, and their Iniquity with Stripes: Nevertheless, my Loving-kindness will I not utterly take from them, nor suffer my Faithfulness to fail. These were all Rods of Mercies own gathering and making, the Stripes whereof are not so deep, but they may be, and were healed again; as in the same Book you also find it, chap. 5. 18. He maketh sore, and bindeth up; he woundeth, and his Hands make whole: and so was Job in the Issue thus healed; and Heman likewise, and made thereby one of the wisest Men in the World. Yea, but these wherewith wicked Men in Hell are eternally lash'd and cut off, are Rods of Revenges making; Rods of Iron (as the Psalmist in that second Psalm speaks) to break them in pieces like a Potters Vessel, never to be set together again or made whole. Again, those those strokes on the Children of God, are in measure, as Isa. 27. 7, 8. but of these in Hell, it may be, and is said, that Wrath cometh upon them without measure. Again, in the midst of these Corrections, he remembers Mercy; but in this of Hell, there is Judgment without Mercy, Jam. 2. 13. In those other Stripes given his Children, God himself is afflicted, and feels every Stroke he gives them, as Jer. 31. 20. and Isa. 64. But in these in Hell, Vengeance and Justice do satisfy themselves in their deserved Damnation. It is stiled a Sacrifice to him. Mark 9. 48, 49. compared, and elsewhere.

Secondly, The same Inference, may be much more raised from those Instances given of bad Men, suffering in this Life the like Terrors, to these mentioned: If we but consider that when they fall and seize upon them in the greatest extremity, that yet then they are in Comparison to what remains to them in Hell, but as the sippings of the Top of that Cup here, the Dregs whereof are reserved for them there, to drink to the Bottom, as Psal. 75. 8. In the Hand of the Lord there is a Cup, and the Wine is red: it is full of mixture, and he poureth out of the same: but the Dregs thereof all the Wicked of the Earth shall wring them out, and drink them. Those Words he [poureth out the same] and [but the Dregs thereof] are an opposition each to other; shewing how that in this Life, God promiscuously poureth forth the same from the upper part thereof, both upon good and bad. And that all that, is but the overflowings of what is uppermost; but the Dregs, the brackish bitter Stuff, is reserved for Hell. And the Truth is, Men can bear but the sippings thereof here. Should they drink but a little deeper, their Souls would be giddy, and reel out of their Bodies in a Moment. As the Joys of Heaven cannot be inherited by Flesh and Blood, so nor the Torments of the fulness of this Wrath. But in Hell their Bodies shall be nealed (as we speak of Glass) that they may endure this Fire. All the Terrors of Conscience here, are as is said of the Joys of the Saints, but the earnest-Pennies, Farthing-Tokens, in comparison to that great, immensely vast Treasure of Wrath to come, you have heard the Scriptures speak of. All here is but the Shadow of Death; and yet if that can wither Men's Souls so, what will the blackness of Darknes do? as the Apostle speaks of this. The utmost threatened here, is, that the Anger of the Lord shall smoke against a Man, Deut. 29. It is but Smoke: but in Hell, it breaks forth into raging Flames * of the fiercest Fires, that fill every Corner, and break out at all the Windows of the Soul.

* Luk. 16. 24.

The fifth and last Head, which represents the dreadfulnes of all this unto an infinity, is, that it is a falling into the Hands [of the living God,] The living God. The former Exaggerations have been raised from falling into the Hands of the Great, Powerful, Just and Avenging God; but this further, of the Living God. Which of all other Attributes, the Apostle hath singled forth to set out the dreadfulnes of it by, and is therefore most of all to be heeded by us; as having as much weight in it, to the thing in Hand, as any of the other. [The living God] notes out, not only God's activity, and how the whole of his Life and being is engaged and active in this Punishment (as was noticed) but further, both, that, 1. He shall execute this to Eternity, and 2. That during that whole space of Eternity, he will permanently continue to inflict it. His being the living God, notes out, 1. Eternity; 2. With a continuation of acting all that while: and so his being the living God, both threatens and effectueth, 1. an eternal, and 2. a continual Death in those that are the Subjects thereof. And to imply so much, it is that he hath that Denomination, specially and so eminently given him here, when this Punishment is spoken of.

First, consider, thy Soul is an immortal Soul, as to the duration of it: and that this great God is the living God. And Sin in thee, and the Injury of it to God, is an eternal Stain, which Hell Fire cannot eat out, or satisfy God for, but in an Eternity of time. And therefore whilst God lives, and thou livest, he will inflict it on thee. That's one meaning.

Again,

Book XIII

Again, God's Life, as it is in himself a continual Act, so in its being attributed to him with respect to this Punishment, it imports his continued acting therein without Cessation or Intermission. For he doth it, as the living God. Job, whilst he endured the Terrors of the Almighty, complains they were so uncessant, that God suffered him not to take Breath, Job. 9. 18. he followed his Stroaks so thick, with one Breach (as he there speaks) upon another.

You have both these set forth in one and the same Scripture, Rev. 14. 10, 11. He shall drink of the Wine of the Wrath of God; and he shall be tormented with Fire and Brimstone in the presence of the Holy Angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoak of their Torment ascendeth up for ever and ever. And they have no rest Day nor Night. First, they have no rest Day nor Night; That shews they have no intermission. And then, that the smoak of their Torment ascends up for ever, shews the Eternity. Yea, and further, to strike our dull Hearts with the sense of this Eternity, if one [ever] be not enough, another is added, [for ever and ever.] Which Eternity, as you know, our Saviour is still careful to indigitate, when he speaks of Hell, in love and warning unto Mens Souls, that they might be moved by the Moment thereof, to endeavour to escape it.

Now it being thus, this infinitely superadds unto all the former. The former Heads have given Demonstration to us, wherein the Substance of this great Punishment consists: and then comes in this, as the fatal and final rolling Stone upon the Grave or Sepulchre of Souls: And with the Grave, Hell is oft parallel'd. Or these two imports thereof, are as two Mill-Stones hung about the Necks of those that are plunged into this Lake, to sink them down for ever: For these two things mentioned, do Work in the Spirits of those that undergoe it, perfect Fear, and perfect Despair. The Effects of both which make up a perfection of Misery in such a State.

1. Perfect Despair. Hope was given to reasonable and intelligent Natures (and in peculiar unto them) to be as a breathing-hole in time of Misery, to keep up Life in such an one, whereby to sustain it self. And the reasonable Soul being in its duration Eternal, and having an Eternity of Time to run through and sail over, hath this Priviledg (denied to Beasts) to take a prospect or fore-sight of Time, that is yet to come, and if it can spy out any space or spot of Time, in which it shall have happiness or Ease, or out-live its Misery, it will not utterly die; yea, it will harden it self against present Misery with this Thought, that however it shall not always be thus with me. But on the contrary here, by Reason of this ability of fore-sight, it comes to pass, that a wretched Soul in Hell, viewing and turning over all the leaves of Time to Eternity, both finds that it shall not outlive that Misery, nor yet can it find one space or moment of Time of Freedom and Intermission, having for ever to do with him who is the living God. And then it dies and dies again, and sinks into a Gulph of Despair for the future, as well as it is swallowed up with present sense of Wrath.

2. Perfect Fear. Which these likewise cause, and keep up within that Soul, and that continually, of all their Misery that is yet to come. And the nature of Fear is, to out-strip a Man's Misery; and to take them up before they come, as Hopes use to do our Comforts: So as by reason thereof, it comes to pass that the Soul is not only tormented by what it at present feels, but with the thought of all that is to come; which still further strikes the Soul through and through. So as this Thought, that it will be with me thus for ever and ever, makes it compleatly miserable. Yea hereby, the Soul doth come all along in every instant to endure and be possessed in Fears and dreadful Apprehensions of all that Woe, that in Eternity is yet to come, as well as that at present.

C H A P. IX.

The Inferences and Uses of the Doctrine. If God punisheth Sins, he is not the Author of it. Let us be firmly perswaded of the reality of this Wrath to come. Let us adore and fear the Greatness of God, and be moved to turn to him. Let us consider what it is to Die, and what the State of the other World is. Let Believers learn highly to value that Salvation which Christ obtains for them.

IF God in his Wrath be the immediate Inflicter of that Punishment for Sin, then certainly he is not the Author of Sin. Fulgentius, among other highly-evincing Demonstrations of it, casts in this: Iniquitatis cujus est Ultor, non est Autor; God is not the Author of Sin, whereof he is the Avenger. Which Maxim is founded upon an high Principle of Reason and Equity. God puts the whole of this matter so far off from himself, that he lays all, both Sin and Punishment, wholly upon Man; so as although the Punishment it self be from his own just Wrath, that is provoked to inflict it, yet even thereof he thus speaks, Do they provoke me to Anger? ('tis true they do;) but do they not provoke themselves, to the Confusion of their own Faces? So as he ascribes his own Wrath, that inflicts that Punishment, wholly to themselves, returns even that upon themselves. As if he had said, I am angry indeed, &c. 'tis true, yet they are more the provoking Causes of that Anger than my self. They spight but themselves, when they sin against me. Like unto which is that Speech also, Rom. 2. 4, 5. Thou treasurest up Wrath unto thy self: [Thou to thy self] although it be God's Wrath in his Breast that is treasured up, yet the treasuring of it up is ascribed unto themselves.

God will send his Son Jesus Christ on purpose to clear all such imaginable Suspicions and Suppositions that Men or Devils can cast upon him, for condemning of Men, or executing this Punishment himself. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly Deeds, which they have ungodlily committed, and of all their hard Speeches which ungodly Sinners have spoken against him. His work at that Day is to convince, (yea, and to convince is named first) as well as to execute Judgment. And it is certain, that in Order thereto he will speak all Fairness, Equity, Justice, and Reason, ('twere not Conviction else); and he will have all his Saints and Angels about him, as Judges and Witnesses. He will have all the World to hear it, and how equal it is for him to execute so fore a Vengeance. And as he will convince them of their Deeds to be ungodly and deserving it, so of their hard Speeches; and that (whatever his Decrees were,) they themselves were ungodly, and their Deeds ungodly, and ungodlily committed. Mark but how he doth ungodly them. And he will convince them, and stop their Mouths for ever. Christ sent him in the Parable speechless to Hell, Mat. 22. 12. And this is one great Service the Man Christ Jesus is to do for God at the latter day: And if he should not do this satisfactorily, and clear all these things, he must shut up his Books, and come off the Bench, and proceed no further, either to Sentence or Execution.

Let our Meditation upon what hath been delivered, be what Moses hath prompted to us; and let us make the same use thereof which he also did.

The 90th Psalm was penned by Moses, (as the Title shews, A Prayer of Moses,

Moses,

Moses, the Man of God) and it was composed by him in his latter Days, after he had seen his forty Years, a whole Generation in a Nation of Men, removed out of this World, and their Carcases fallen in the Wilderness; a Spectacle so sad, as perhaps not any one Man in the World hath seen, or Age afforded, (but at the Flood) before or since, in so short a compass of time. His Song is a Funeral Elegy, or Meditation of Death, made upon that whole Generation, verse 3. Thou turnest Man to Destruction; and sayest, Return, ye Children of Men. And verses 5, 6. Thou carriest them away, as with a Flood. In the morning they are like Grass which groweth up; in the morning it flourisheth and groweth up, in the Evening it is cut down, and withereth. And God from that time began also to stint and limit Man's Years to that measure which it hath held to unto this Day, Verse 10. The Days of our Years are threescore Years and ten; and if by reason of Strength they be fourscore Years, yet is their Strength but Labour and Sorrow: for it is soon cut off, and we fly away. Our Souls fly away like Birds when the Shell is broke; and then Hell follows, (as the Revelation speaks) as in reality, so in Moses's Discourse. And that was it which was the matter of deepest and saddest thoughts in this Meditation unto him of any other. Verse 11. it follows, Who knoweth the Power of thine Anger? Even according to thy Fear, so is thy Wrath.—— Which he utters,

Rev. 5. 2.

1. By way of Lamentation. He sighing forth a most doleful complaint against the Security and Stupor he observed in that Generation of Men in his time, both in those that had already died in their Sins, as well as of that new Generation that had come up in their Room, who still lived in their Sins. O! says he, Who of them knoweth the Power of thine Anger? namely, of that Wrath which followeth after Death, and seized upon Men's Souls for ever; that is, who considers it, or regards it, till it take hold upon them? He utters it,

2. In a way of Astonishment, out of the Apprehension he had of the greatness of that Wrath: Who hath known the Power of thine Anger! that is, who hath or can take it in according to the greatness of it? Which he endeavours to set forth (as applying himself to our own Apprehensions) in this wise, Even according to thy Fear, so is thy Wrath. Where those words [thy Fear] are taken objectively, and so is all one, and the Fear of thee: And so the meaning is, that according to whatever proportion our Souls can take in, in Fears of Thee and of thine Anger; so great is thy Wrath it self. You have Souls that are able to comprehend vast Fears and Terrors; they are as extensive in their Fears, as in their Desires, which are stretched beyond what this World, or the Creatures can afford them, to an Infinity. The Soul of Man is a dark Cell, which when it begets Fears once, strange and fearful Apparitions rise up in it, which far exceed the ordinary proportion of worldly Evils, (which yet also our Fears usually make greater than they prove to be:) But here, as to that Punishment, which is the effect of God's own immediate Wrath, let the Soul enlarge it self, says he, and widen its Apprehension to the utmost; fear what you can imagine: yet still God's Wrath, and the Punishment it inflicts, are not only proportionable, but infinitely exceeding all you can fear or imagine. Who knoweth the Power of thine anger? [It passeth knowledg.]

Now the Use Moses makes of all this Doctrine of Death and Wrath, in the next following ver. 12. is this: So teach us to number our Days, that we may apply our Hearts to Wisdom. This he spake to God in behalf of that present Generation that then survived; and by spreading before them all these Considerations, thereby also exhorteth them to that which is the only true Wisdom, even to turn unto the Lord, so to escape that Wrath that is to come. And he, as an holy Man, that knew the Terror of the Lord, doth thus persuade Men; And O let our Souls be persuaded by it. And to this end,

Use 1. I would first persuade you to believe, that there is this Wrath to come. We knowing the Terror of the Lord; that is, our selves being assured by believing, that such a Wrath is in the Heart and Breast of God against impatient Sinners, as also understanding what and how dreadful that Wrath is, we we do perswade Men, 2 Cor. 5. 11. And for Men to apprehend and believe it, is the first most effectual Engine to perswade them by. God did not, 'ere he placed these Souls of ours in our Bodies, first carry them down to Hell, and then up to Heaven, that so we having a fore-knowledg of either by Sight and Sense, might then be left to act in this World accordingly: But God hath left only the Revelation of both these unto Faith, in this World, by the Word. — Heb. 11. 7. 'Tis said, Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with Fear, prepared an Ark to the saving of his House: By the which he condemned the World, and became Heir of the Righteousness which is by Faith.

You know how the Day of this great Wrath to come (the Day of Judgment) is assimilated by Christ to the Days of Noah, Mat. 24. 37, 38, 39. and that (among other) in respect of the Security and Unbelief that is and will be afore it comes, in the Hearts of Men about it, (which is Christ's special Scope there.) And the Place in the Hebrews cited answerably, reckoneth that Faith of Noah (who being forewarned of the Flood, was moved with Fear, and prepared an Ark to save himself and his Family) amongst those other Instances of Saving Faith, which that Chapter doth enumerate, as that which had this Wrath to come signified thereby in his Eye; shewing withal the Foundation of the Condemnation of that World, to lie in this, That though Noah declared this Wrath to come unto them, by his Preaching and Example, (for as he was a Preacher of Righteousness, so of this Wrath, as Enoch also had been) yet they believed it not, because it was unseen, as the Words of that seventh Verse are. For these things then happened in Types of what was to fall out concerning this great Wrath to come; that Destruction of the old World being but the Shadow of this, as expressly 'tis interpreted to be, 1 Pet. 3. 20. The Spirits in Prison which sometimes were disobedient, when once the Long-suffering of God waited in the Days of Noah while the Ark was preparing. The like Figure whereunto is Baptism, which now also saves us. If the Ark was of Salvation, then the Flood of Damnation; and that, then, as the word [also] now evidently shews. This Wrath, it is a thing to come, as that of the Flood then was to them, stiled therefore the Wrath to come; and so it is a thing not seen, and so is reckoned amongst the Objects of Faith.

Men indeed have some lesser stiches in Conscience afore-hand, both from it and about it, but little do they imagine that these will or should ever become the matter of such torturing Aches, as they rise up to in the end: Men do as little imagine this of these fore-running Warnings, or secret Gripings and Twitches, as the Old World did then, that the usual Clouds of Heaven that caused Storms, would have ever swell'd to the drowning of the World. Nor indeed doth this fall out to Mens Souls, until the Curse or Wrath of God enters, like Oil into their Bones, as the Psalmist speaks of Judas, Psal. 109. 18.

For this Wrath is in the mean time a thing hidden in the Breast and Bosom of the Almighty, and is therefore termed a Treasure of Wrath; a Treasure, because hid, so Treasures use to be; (they are termed hidden Treasures, Prov. 2. 4. and elsewhere.) And for the same reason, the coming of it upon Men, is called the Revelation of the righteous Judgment of God. As the things belonging to Mens Peace, so their Destruction, are hidden from their Eyes. Though Damnation slumbers not, 2 Pet. 2. 3. but is on its March, and proceedeth in its approaches towards them, every Hour nearer and nearer; yet Men slumber in respect of the belief thereof, and not so much as dream of it in their Slumber, 1 Thess. 5. 3, 6, 9. The Apostle's Complaint there, is the same in effect with that of Moses, Who knows the Power of thine Anger, so as to apply his Heart to Wisdom?

The Baptist, who began the publishing of the Gospel, he began it with forewarning Men of this Wrath, and stiled it, the Wrath to come. And Christ, whose Office was to preach that Gospel, seconds him therein, and terms it Hell-Fire, &c. Now observe how he speaks to the Pharisees about it; O ye Generation of Vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the Wrath to come! Mat. 3. 7. 'Tis Vox admirantis; as if he had said, 'Tis strange that the preaching of Wrath to come, should any way startle yours so hardned Hearts, as to see you here attending at my Sermons; and that the Consideration thereof should any way arrest, or make any dint upon your Souls. The reason of his Wonder was, because because indeed Men believe it not, or very slightly. Who hath demonstrated it unto you? as his Word is. And Christ useth the very same Word about this matter, Luke 12. 5. I will forewarn you, (or demonstrate to you) whom you shall fear, even him that can destroy in Hell. All this still tends to shew how hidden it is from the most of Men. The very same Unbelief is more darkly, and in other Terms, expressed in the Old Testament: Deut. 32. 29. O that they would consider [their latter end!] And, Eccles. 11. 8, 9. Remember the Days of Darkness, for they are many: But know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee to Judgment.

Now to help you a little in the belief of this:

Besides what the Scriptures speak hereof:

1. Consult thine own Heart. Thou hast a busy Principle within thee. Conscience, that like a Spy sent in from an adverse Party into anothers Quarters, observes and takes notice of all that passeth; not thy Actions or Speeches only, but what is done in thy Privy-Chamber, or Closet of thy Soul: and not only so, but thou maiest hear the noise of his Pen still a running, and punctually writing that which it observeth; and there is not a Motion, a Lust, a Desire, a Purpose, an End, a flying Thought, but it diligently doth set down, and can give thee the Sense thereof; and thou canst not stop the Course hereof. And what is the meaning of all this? but that thy Judgment is continually a preparing, thine Examination a taking all thy Life long. For, where there is a Register, a Clerk of the Assize thus busy at work, there is a Judg, whose Officer he is. Be wary therefore what thou dost! Thou art surprized and undone, if thou heedest not; for all this is in order unto Judgment. And as Letters written with Onion or Limon Juice, appear not at the present, so may not the Impresses of these sad Lines against thee, yet bring but thy Soul to this Fire we have been speaking of, and every Character, Title, yea, Accent, or Aggravation of Sin, will be made visible and legible: And hence it is the Books are said to be opened, Rev. 20.

2. Again, do you not hear daily the Noise of Cannon-shot from Heaven let off, and the Bullets fly about your Ears, and see them strike this Man and that Man in your view? It is the Apostle's Conviction to the Gentiles, Rom. 1. 18. That therefore there is a Treasury of Wrath to come, which he speaks of, chap. 2. 4. because at present even in this World, The Wrath of God is revealed from Heaven against all Ungodliness and Unrighteousness of Men, that withhold the Truth in Unrighteousness. The meaning whereof is, There is no sort or kind of Unrighteousness or Ungodliness, but in the Instance or Example of some Man or other, God hath by some manifest Judgment shewn his Wrath against it, in the view and Observation of the very Heathens themselves, of and to whom it is he speaks this. There was never a Nation of the Heathens, but the Stories of it would have afforded a Theatre of God's Judgments against all sorts of Evils in one Person or other, singled out by Decimation (as it were) in this World, to shew thereby that there was an hidden Wrath to come in the other World, which would fall upon all the rest, who yet escaped at present. Those few and scattered Instances manifested a Treasury, a Magazine of Wrath in Heaven; his Phrase is, from Heaven, that is, in and from God: which the Heathens also were sensible of, witness their Sacrifices of Atonement directed unto Heaven. And this to be the Apostle's Scope is clearly seen, in that he prosecutes this in the following Chap. 2. ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Therefore thou art inexcusable, O Man, whatsoever thou art, that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thy self; for thou that judgest, doest the same things. But we are sure that the Judgment of God is according to Truth against them which commit such things. And thinkest thou that O Man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the Judgment of God? Or despisest thou the Riches of his Goodness, and forbearance, and Long-suffering? not knowing that the Goodness of God leadeth thee to Repentance? But after thy hardness, and impenitent Heart, [treasurings up] unto thy self Wrath against the Day of Wrath, and Revelation of the righteous Judgment

Judgment of God.] And unto this account you may put the enumeration of those instances of Judgment made by the other Apostles, as those upon the Angels that fell, and on the old World, on Sodom and Gomorrah, Corah, &c. whereof though some were outward and temporal Punishments, yet because they were Evidences of that Wrath to come upon like impenitent Sinners, both these Apostles do to that purpose allege them, and make use thereof to beget this Belief in us. For so expressly the one begin his Discourse thereof: 2 Pet. 2. 3, 4, 5. Whose Judgment now of a long time lingreth not, and their Damnation slumbreth not. For if God spared not the Angels that sinned, but cast them down to Hell, and delivered them into Chains of Darkness, to be reserved unto Judgment; and spared not the Old World, but saved Noah, the eighth Person, a Preacher of Righteousness, bringing in the Flood upon the World of the Ungodly: And turned the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into Ashes, condemned them with an Overthrow, making them an Ensamble unto those that after should live ungodly. Then the other Apostle adds: Jude ver. 7. They suffering the Vengeance of Eternal Fire. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the Godly out of Temptations, and to reserve the Unjust unto the Day of Judgment to be punished. Consider also what his Wrath hath been to whole Nations; and how he says, he will one Day turn all the Nations into Hell that forget God, as the Psalmist tells us, Psal. 9. 7. He hath Prisons large enough, and Chains strong enough to hold them all. When the Jews saw one hundred and eighty thousand of the Assyrians Host killed in a Night, before the very Walls of Jerusalem, Fearfulness surprized the Hypocrites; their Hearts melted with Terror to think what the Wrath of God must be for ever: Isa. 33. 14, &c.

Chap. 9.

Use 2. Then learn to adore and fear the Greatness of our God, to the end to turn to him.

Where he shews Favour, his Favour is Life, Psal. 30. 5. yea, his Loving-kindness is better than Life. Psal. 63. 3. Whom have I in Heaven but thee? There needs no other there.

On the contrary, if he be provoked, there needs no other Judg or Avenger but himself. I may say, the Weapons of his warfare within himself, are mighty to revenge all Disobedience. This great General needs not borrow, nor call in the Aid of his Creatures, (though in respect of their being his Militia, he is stiled the Lord of Hosts;) to make War, and destroy. That very Face of his gives Life, and strikes Dead and kills. In thy Presence is Fulness of Joy, Psal. 16. ult. And from his Presence is Destruction, 2 Thess. 1. 9. O hide us, say they, Rev. 6. 16. from the Face of him that sits on the Throne, and from the Wrath of the Lamb. They point to the Fountain of their anguish, and speak what above all was it they dreaded. It is greatly observable, what and how God talks to Job, to this very purpose: Says God to Job, chap. 40. Wilt thou contend with me? So verse 2. he begins to dare him: Come, says he, let this be among other one Trial of thy Power, (who had been a Prince, &c.) in comparison of mine: Take upon thee, (as I mean to do) and be Judg of all the World: Put on thy Judges Robes, and thy biggest Looks: Thus verse 10. Deck thy self with Majesty and Excellency, and array thy self with Glory and Beauty. And particularly try; try what thou canst do or effect, when thou art most Angry, by thy meer Looks: Cast abroad the rage of thy Wrath, ver. 11. Throw Sparkles of thy most fiery Indignation from thine Eyes. —Canst thou look a Man dead, and cover a Man's Face for ever with Confusion? Look on every one that is Proud, and bring him low: So vers. 12. Hide them in the Dust together, be they never so many; and bind their Faces in secret: that is, cover them with Confusion of Face, with a look or rebuke of thy Face; make them run into Holes, or seek Mountains to cover them, to avoid the Terror of thy Looks. Now all this I can do (says God) with a meer Look, whenever I please: And I can as easily save also, as I can thus destroy, (which thou canst not do thine own Soul) as the next Verse insinuates, Then will I confess thine own Hand can save thee. You see he resolves saving and destroying into the same Power of his, and maketh the same estimate of either; which which the Apostle also doth, chap. 4. 12. There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy.

Book XIII

My Exhortation therefore in fine is, Let us not fear Creatures, but fear Him, and make him your dread: and learn to know what a God ye walk before every Day, and have for ever to do withal. Christ that came out of his Bosom knowing him, doth (Luke 12. 4. & 5. compared with Mat. 10. 26. & 28.) upon knowledg of this God make this same Exhortation; I say to you, (says he) and I will forewarn you, (he says it twice, and it is as if he had said, Take it from me that know him) Fear him that is able to destroy Body and Soul. The Apostle succenturiates, We know him that hath said, Vengeance is mine: so here, Heb. 10. And again, We knowing the Terror of the Lord, 2 Cor. 5. 11. which they know, by an estimate taken from his Goodness, that his Wrath must be answerable. And Moses also, that had seen his Back-parts, and his Glory; He cries out, Who knows the power of thine Anger? Hypocrites and carnal Professors (as those were whom God professedly takes to task Psal. 50.) think to play with the great God, and deal with him any how, (as we say) as with a Man that is their Fellow. They know him not. Psal. 50. 21. These things hast thou done, and I kept silence, and thou thoughtest I was altogether such an one as thy self: And what things they had done and were guilty of (see if thou hast not been guilty of the same or like) the 18, 19, & 20 verses shew; When thou sawest a Thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with Adulterers. Thou givest thy Mouth to Evil, and thy Tongue frameth Deceit. Thou sittest and speakest against thy Brother, thou slanderest thine own Mother's Son. And God was silent or long-suffering. (The like you have, Isa. 57. 11, 12. Of whom hast thou been afraid, that thou hast lied, and hast not remembered me, nor laid it to thy Heart? Have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not? &c.) But mark what is the Issue of all this; in Psal. 50. 21. it follows, But I will reprove thee, and set them in Order before thee. They had never felt the smart of his Anger in all their Lives, and little thought that the Lion was in him: but it follows, Consider this ye that forget God, lest I [tear] you in Peices, and there be none to deliver. O take heed and turn to him, or on the sudden he will start up like a mighty Lion, and tear your Souls in pieces, as a Giant might do Cobwebs, and prey upon the Blood of your very Souls, and break the Bones thereof as a Lion could of the most silly Creature. Add to this,

Use 3. Consider, What it is to die, and what the State and Condition of the other World is. It is to have to do with God immediately, either in Wrath or Love; and from his own Hands, as well as from the immediate Sentence of his Mouth, to receive thy Weal or Woe. — That we come naked into this World, and go as naked out of it, was Job's Meditation first; after that David's, Psal. 49. 15. We shall carry nothing away, that is, of what belongs to this World; then after him Solomon the Son, Eccles. 5. 15. As he came forth of his Mother's VVomb (speaking of Man) naked shall he return, to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his Labour, which he may carry away in his Hand. The Effect of which divine Meditation comes to this, to put secure and careless Man upon the consideration of his immortal Soul's condition, which first cometh into this World naked (as well as his Body :) And poor thing! the meaning of its first cry (if the Soul it self could then speak out its Mind) is, I am an empty thing, and have brought nothing with me; who will shew me any good? But after its being grown up, it begins to find a World richly furnished with all things to enjoy, as the Apostle's Phrase is, 1 Tim. 6. 17. But yet again when he goes out of this World, he is then turned out of House and Home, as perfectly naked as he came into it: and, as Rev. 18. 14. The Fruits that thy Soul lusted after, and all things which are dainty and goodly, are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all. Death is therefore compared unto the breaking or failing of a Merchant or Tradesman proving Bankrupt, Luke 16. 9. That when ye fail, &c. says Christ; of which I have elsewhere spoken.

Now

Now if this be thy Case as to this and that other World, think with thy self what thine eternal Soul must then betake it self unto, and also unto whom in that other World. My Doctrinal part hath informed you that it is God himself, God immediately, — Eccles. 12. 7. The Spirit returns unto him that gave it. To explain which, There was that evident difference put in the making Man's Soul at first from that of his Body, that God made the Body out of the Earth, but the Soul was breathed in by God; and therefore not out of any preexistent matter, as the Souls and Forms of all other living things are. And upon this Dissolution or separation of each from other, it is that Solomon says, Then shall the Dust return to the Earth as it was, and the Soul to God that gave it; that is to say, the same common Law befalls either in their kind, that to other things in their kind; they are reduced unto their first Principles. And so look as the Body is materially resolved into the Earth, which was the first matter of it; so according to some kind of Analogy thereunto, (and so far as the Soul is capable of a like return unto God,) the Soul returns to God that gave it; as having been the immediate Original of it, not materially, as a Spark is out of the Fire, but as the immediate Efficient. It came from God by way of Gift, God gave it; that is, freely and voluntarily produced it by a sole single free Act of his Will and Power, whereby he created it out of nothing; and so in the whole of it, it was an entire and meer Gift of his. And therefore in the beginning of his Exhortation, verse 1. of this Chapter he had aforehand laid this as a Foundation for it, Remember thy Creator, or Creators; and is so stiled, because he is in a more special manner thy Creator, than of our Bodies, or of other Creatures; and that because himself immediately gave thy Soul, in such a manner as he produced not our Bodies, nor material Substances. — And hence it is it returns to him, as the immediate Judg or Arbitrator of its eternal Condition. It returns to Elohim; which, as A Lapide and Ferdinandus have observed in their Comments, signifies also a Judg as well as a Creator, and so was chosen out here, as a word more fitly serving that his scope, than any other Name of God's. Now then think what it is to die; it is to return to God, so as eternally and immediately to have to do with him.

And then withal consider the different Dispensations of this Great God towards you in this World, and that next. In this World Mens Souls having Creature-Comforts, God communicates himself unto them thereby; and by reason of his Patience and Long-suffering to them added hereto, they hear not of, nor from him immediately: the most of Men do not otherwise than in these mediate Ways. I was altogether silent, says God, Psal. 50. He answers them neither good nor bad. And thus though he is not far off from any of us, but Men live and move in him, in respect of his Power to uphold them, as Acts 17. 28. or, as verse 25. He giveth Life and Breath unto all things; (which Clause doth interpret that other, ver. 28.) Yet as to converse with, or intimate knowledg of him, he is the unkown God, ver. 23. and Men live without God (in that respect) in this World, as Eph. 2. 12.

But although Men thus live without God here, they shall not live (I might say [not die] rather, for it is a Death,) without God in the World to come. I beseech you think with your selves, how your Converse with this Great God in this World is (I express it by that of Men with a Lion, comparatively,) but as through a Grate, (as that of the Spouse's with him, is said to be but through a Lettice, Cant. 2. 9.) And he keeps to the Laws of his ordinary Providence: he breaks not forth immediately, but lies still and quiet; and through his Patience suffereth and permitteth Men to walk by him, and do all their Hearts desire, and lets them alone. But, Brethren, when you come to die; it is as if one were turned in unto that Lion with the Grate open; and those Repagula of his Patience removed, your poor Souls, your naked Souls, are upon him immediately, and must (in a clean contrary Way to what the Saints do) dwell with him for ever. — The Consideration of this struck Dread and Horror into the Hearts of the Sinners of Sion, (as it may well do in any Soul that hath not Communion with God.) Isa. 33. 14. The Sinners in Sion are afraid, fearfulness hath surprized the Hypocrites; [who among us shall dwell] with the devouring Fire? Who amongst us shall dwell with everlasting Burnings? (I opened that place before, and shewed that this devouring Fire was God himself: ) These speak one to another as Men affrighted use to do, and as struck on the Sudden with apprehensions of the greatness of that God, whom their Consciences (now awakened) told them they had to do withal for ever. And they look trembling one upon the other, and the common Cry and voice among them thereupon is, Whose Portion will this prove to be? For it will be the Portion of some: or, Who of us, or all Creatures, is able to bear it, or endure it? And upon this Conference (as I may term it) and inquisition among themselves, God by the Prophet steps out and answers them, but in a clean contrary Way, and to their further Confusion, and tells them: There are those that shall dwell with me thus immediately, unto who I will be Glory and Happiness, who shall walk in the comfort of this Fire which you thus dread; and who (like the three Children in that fiery Furnace) shall be refreshed therein. So it follows, He that walks righteously, and speaks uprightly, he shall dwell on high. And therefore it further follows, 1. as a Promise to the upright and pure in Heart, ver. 17. Thine Eyes shall see the King in his Glory. And 2. with a further threatening to the Hypocrites, Thine Heart, who art an Hypocrite, shall meditate Terror, ver. 18.

Amos 4.

Now then again, seeing you have thus to do with the great God alone for ever, let every one of us prepare to meet our God. This necessarily puts you upon seeking of him here in this World, and to seek that Face and Favour of his, in which alone is Life. You must therefore also give up your Souls unto him here, to live in him, as in your chiefest Good, and not in your Lusts; and to live to him, as your highest End and constant Interest; and as whose Glory should act and steer you in all your ways; and not unto your selves. And therefore you, that have neglected this great God, or served him but in Formality and Hypocrisy, (which in Scripture hath the denomination of those that forget God) who never knew what it is to have intimate Communion and Fellowship with him through Faith in Prayer and other Converses, joined with hearty Love unto him, and to the Interest of his Glory: Think, O think with your selves, when you come to die, that you must go to him, and be with him for ever, in that sense I have given. Think with thy self thus: My Soul will be turned naked out of this World, and there is nothing, no not a Rag of any of the Comforts I pursue after here, which shall be carried with it from hence; but it is the great God I must be turned naked unto, and appear before; and if my Soul be found naked of his Image too, (which to have renewed in me was the only Errand he sent my Soul for into this World) and if I bring not that along with me, as my current Token, Ticket, and Pass into the other World, there will not be a dwelling-place of Bliss for me, to receive me into; not such an one as the Apostle speaks of for the Comfort of the Saints, 2 Cor. 5. 1, 3. We know that if our earthly Tabernacle be dissolved, we have a Building of God; if so be we shall not be found naked, ver. 3. that is, devoid of his Image, as also of Christ's Righteousness. But instead thereof this great God will be unto me as a Furnace, and I must dwell with those everlasting Burnings spoken of, even for ever.

Luk. 12. 20.

And then think with thy self again: What Communion or Correspondency hath my Soul kept and held with God? what Acquaintance hath it had with him? For otherwise it will be strange you should commend your Souls into his hands, (as Christ did, and the Saints use to do when they die) and that with a desire and intention to live that Eternity with him which is to come, and yet not to have lived at all with him, or to him here. How dost thou think thou canst look him in the Face at thy first appearance before him? If they should take thy Soul away from thee this Night, as Christ's speech is, how canst thou think God should then at first look on thee, much less take thee into Eternal, immediate Bosom-communion with himself for ever? I pray, upon what acquaintance? And so may God also say unto thee. O therefore remember thy Creator in the Days of thy Youth; learn to know and fear him; Acquaint thy self with him, and be at Peace: Receive the Law, I pray thee, from his Mouth, &c.

Job 22. 21, 22.

Again

Again, think with thy self, What do I pursuing after the things of this Life with my dearest Affections, and utmost Intentions? Alas! I am to live for ever with God, and not with these. The Apostle sets forth a Manifesto upon it, 1 Tim. 6. 7. We brought nothing into this World, and it is certain (or manifest, says he, τὸ δὲλον) we carry nothing out: and thereby provokes them to pursue with might and main after Godliness, which alone is great Gain, and only current Money in the other World. And this is the manifest Coherence of those two Sayings, following immediately one the other in those two verses, ver. 6, 7. But Godliness with Contentment is great Gain. For (says he) we brought nothing into this World, and it is certain we can carry nothing out: the latter being a Motive to the former. And therefore also upon the same ground it follows, Trust in the living God, and not in Riches, (so neither in Learning, Wisdom, Credit, &c.) ver. 17. For why? It is the living God whom you are to have to do withal for ever. Although he hath for the present given you, and provided all things in this World richly to enjoy, (as it follows there) yet he hath reserved himself for you to enjoy in the other World. And it is the [living God] in my Text likewise, into whose Hands you fall as of a Judge and Avenger, if you fall short of Godliness. And it is this living God you must be made Happy in and by for ever. Heb. 10.

The great Theme and Subject of Ecclesiastes, you know, is, that All is Vanity and Vexation of Spirit. Now you may observe, how Solomon upon this very ground and account I have now been pressing, doth set a fresh Stamp upon, and his last Seal unto that Truth, that all is vain, Eccles. 12. 8. even from this ground, That a Man's Spirit returns unto God that gave it, ver. 7. Read and observe the coherence of those two Verses, ver. 7, 8. Then shall the Dust return unto the Earth as it was, and the Spirit shall return to God who gave it. Vanity of Vanities, (saith the Preacher) all is Vanity. He had in the beginning of this Book pronounced them Vanities, chap. 1. Vanity of Vanities, &c. And he had all along proved them vain at the best, as they are enjoyed in this World, unto those who enjoy them most abundantly, most freely. But now when in the conclusion he had brought Man himself, that is, the enjoyer of them, and discoursed him into his Grave, laid him in the Dust, and said thereupon that his Soul must immediately go to God, then he cries out anew, (having reserved it for the conclusion of all, and that also upon an account greater than all the former :) [Vanity of Vanities, saith the Preacher, all is Vanity:] and thereupon infers, as the close, Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, Fear God, and keep his Commandments, ver. 13. For God shall bring every Work unto Judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. You may observe how the Apostle in a parrallel manner also speaks, It is appointed for all Men to die, and after this the Judgment, Heb. 9. ult. just as Solomon here.

Let me next deal strictim, or at downright blows with you. I first serve every Soul here with an Arrest, that he was once a Child of Wrath, Eph. 2. 3. Children of Wrath by Nature as well as others; let every Man clear himself of it unto God as he can; all were born such, and continue such until now, 1 John 2. 9. if they have not become otherwise, by an Escape made (from the sense of this Danger) which is termed by the Baptist a flying from the Wrath to come, Mat. 3. 7. an escaping the Damnation of Hell, by Christ, Mat. 23. 33. As the Murderer did when he ran to the City of Refuge from the attack of the Avenger of Blood, (as in Heb. 6. 18. the allusion is) a flying for refuge unto Christ. Which escape is made by a solid, and serious, and over-powring Apprehension of that Estate to be such, as that a Man continuing therein, he apprehends he is every Moment obnoxious to this Wrath, which drives him unto Christ as a Deliverer from that Wrath, joined with a giving a Man's self up to him: Both which, through the Power of the Holy Ghost accompanying them, do work a change of Heart and Life in him, an actual turning of the Soul unto God from all Sin to Godliness. And until a Man be thus ingrafted into Christ, and thereby made a new Creature in him, All this Wrath, as Christ says, John 3. ult. remains or abides upon him. Which word [remains] imports (as was said) his condition to have been originally, and in in it self, and from the beginning, uninterruptedly under Wrath; until saving Faith, which is accompanied with Regeneration and true Repentance, puts the difference. So as there needs no more to be enquired of such a Man, but what have you to say for the Alteration of your Estate? without which it is one and the same that it was at the first; he continues under Condemnation until now: Wrath remains. As we use to say, an Outlawry, a Sentence of Death remains upon a Man till pardoned. He says not only that the Wrath of God is coming upon such a Man, (as the Apostle's Phrase is) but it abides, &c. the Apostle indeed says, it comes, as in respect to the execution of it; but Christ says, it abides on a Man, in respect of a Man's being bound over unto it, until the Son doth make him free.

Then again think with your selves, how that this Wrath of God is declared to be against all Ungodliness and Unrighteousness of any kind, continued in a way of Disobedience. And be thy Sins small or great, yet whilst thou art in that Estate, this Wrath is in their proportion due unto all that Ungodliness and Unrighteousness in thee, and remains upon thee for them. First, against all Ungodliness, tho it be but in deadness, averfeness unto, and running aside from God unto the Creature: whereupon follow Neglects, Contempts of him, Enmities to him, and thence Omission of Duties towards him, and not glorifying him as God, as there ver. 21. And, secondly, all Unrighteousness unrepented of and continued in; the enumeration of the Particulars of which you may have in the same Chapter, vers. 29, 30. Being filled with all Unrighteousness, Fornication, Wickedness, Covetousness, Maliciousness, full of Envy, Murther, Debate, Deceit, Malignity, Whisperers, Backbiters, Haters of God, Dispiteful, Proud, Boasters, Inventors of evil Things, Disobedient to Parents, &c. And to strike thy Heart yet more, think what Sins the Apostle more especially singleth out, as those for which he specially indigitates that the Wrath of God cometh upon the Children of Disobedience, Col. 3. 5, 6. Even Fornication, Uncleanness, inordinate Affection, evil Concupiscence, and Covetousness, which is Idolatry: For which things sake the Wrath of God cometh upon the Children of Disobedience; that is, that live in them in a Way of Rebellion and Disobedience unto God.

And consider, they are not Heathens only, whom the Wrath of God is poured forth upon; though so, Psal. 79. 6. Pour out thy Wrath upon the Heathen that have not known thee; and Psal. 9. 17. All the Nations that forget God shall be turned into Hell: But it is also those that live under and obey not the Gospel; and those especially. In 2 Theff. 1. 7, 8, 9. The Subjects of this Wrath are reduced to these two, those that know not God, they were these Heathens; and those that obey not the Gospel, that is, who professing it, and living under the means of it, even the Children of the Kingdom, (as they are called Mat. 8. 12. and Mat. 13. 41.) there shall be gathered out of the Kingdom (that is, the visible Professors of Religion in the strictness of it) all things (that is, Persons) that do offend, and do Iniquity, or are workers of it. Those first and especially, that have given scandal by doing Iniquity openly, and repented not, and then those that secretly [do Iniquity;] that are found workers of it in any kind, they shall be gathered (says Christ) and cast them into a Furnace of Fire; and Hypocrites especially, they are made the measure and standard of all other that are cast into it, both by Christ and the Prophet Isaiah.

But not only these, but in Mat. 12. 22. He that but wanteth the Wedding-Garment; not the positive doers of Iniquity only, but that want true Grace, Sincerity of Faith, and Love unto Jesus Christ; the wanting all those Graces, Col. 3. 12. Gal. 6. 15. which as a Garment he should have put on (as in those places) that came to such a Wedding, the Wedding of so great a Person. And when there, he says to such an one, Friend, (it is an upbraiding Speech, such an one as Christ used to Judas, Mat. 25. 40. because he had professed himself to be a Friend, but is discovered to be a false and feigned one) how comest thou hither? here is no room for thee. And though Christ is said to spy out but one such among that Company, yet it is the case of many: For, that the conclusion of that Parable, vers. 14. importeth, Many are called, few are chosen: and so that one Person is professedly made but the Instance or Ex-ample ample of what Christ will do with all others that are such; who will prove many. And it is said that he was speechless, or strangled as with an Halter (as the original word signifies) through obtusefaction of Spirit. Now of this Man, and all other such, Christ the King saith, ver. 13. Bind him Hand and Foot, (that he may not be able to help himself, or deliver himself) and cast him into outer Darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of Teeth. And the true reason is, because if Mens Estates be found unrenewed or unregenerate, (as this Man's was through want of true Grace) then the Sins of their whole Lives do abide upon their score, and are charged upon them. And every such an one, even the finest-spun Hypocrite, hath Sins enough (if he had no other) in those very deficiencies and fallings short of true and spiritual Grace, which he wholly wants. And the highest and most sublimated work of the Spirit, which a Man remaining unregenerate is any way capable of, through heavenly enlightnings, and tastings of the Powers of the World to come, stirring up but Self only, and the Affections thereof towards Spiritual Things, is capable of being discovered, not only that it is a deficient Work, and short of true Holiness at that day: but also when all the inward Obliquities, Motives, Ends, Purposes, Affections, that are in such Mens Hearts; that were the Influencers and Guides of their Ways and Actions, are discovered, it will be found that they all are matter of Wrath, as truly as their other Sins: And their Persons will be proved to have continued under the Wrath of God abiding on them, as well as grosser Sinners. And that there will be the discovery of these things in such Men, is the genuine scope of that Passage, Heb. 4. 13, 14. The Word of God (understand it whether of Christ, or the Word of Christ) is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged Sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of Soul and Spirit, and of the Joints and Marrow, and is a Discerner of the Thoughts and Intents of the Heart: Neither is there any Creature, (that is, of the Heart of Man) that is not manifest in his Sight with whom we have to do. For unto such Professors among the Jews, as had been enlightned, &c. as chap. 6. of whom you also read up and down in that Epistle; and yet still remained in real and spiritual unbelief, as ver. 11. of this very Chapter compared with Jude ver 5. is this Passage particularly directed, and of them intended.

Consider moreover, that the longer thou goest on in this Estate, or in thy Sin, the more of Wrath thou treasurest up unto thy self, as Rom. 2. Every Moment Sins do add unto that heap. And all thy Sins are barrel'd up in thy Conscience, as Gun-powder fully dry; and an answerable Proportion and Measure of Wrath is laid up in God's Heart; and when these meet, and that it comes to pass that the Fire of God's Wrath breaks forth out of his Heart into thine, then thy Soul is blown up in an instant, and a Fire kindled that burns for ever in Hell.

And meditate also how frail thy Life is, how thin and slight a Skreen of Flesh there is betwixt all this Wrath and thy bare Soul; which if worn, or any way sliced through, the Soul runs out. Nay, that venomous Spider, thy Soul, dwells but in a Cobweb, which if broken, or any violence be done it, it instantly flies away into the other World. — Job, in several places, delights to compare our Lives and Condition in this World unto a Candle or Lamp: Now let the Candle be let alone to burn it self out fairly to its full length, yet some last but a very little while, and those of the greatest size cannot long. Oh, but how many intervening Casualties are there, that afore do put it out? The Candle of the Wicked shall be put out, and Destruction cometh upon them, Job 21. 17. that is, ab extrinseco, from without. How many Thieves in the Candle, or fatal Accidents do Men meet with, that unawares consume it? Immoderate Sorrows and Cares swale it; Intemperance, like too much Oil poured thereon to feed it, choaketh and extinguisheth it; Too much Intention of Mind turns the Flame downwards upon it self, and so it evaporates. Often another Man's Breath in Seasons of Malignity (which fall out more or less every Year) blows and puffs it out. A Friends breath comes in with an infectious Vapour, and throws his Soul out who visits him: Yea, an unskilful or else a mistaking hand of a Physician, who undertakes to snuff and and brighten it; unwarily clean snuffs the Candle out. — Yea, Men strong and vigorous go to the Grave in a Moment, as in the same 21st Chapter of Job, ver. 13. Yea, as Psal. 55. 15. they go quick to Hell: it is an allusion to Corah, Dathan, &c. Numb. 16. 30, 33. of whom 'tis said twice, They went alive to Hell. Many die so suddenly, that they are in Hell in a trice, and as it were ere quite dead. And truly the most of Men live in this World like silly Sheep in a Pasture, as David's Similitude is Psal. 49. 14. They are put into Hell like Sheep, (so some:) It notes out their Security in respect of that slaughter which comes upon them. This Man dies, then that, then another, and they regard it not; even as the Sheep do not, when the Butcher (as his Pleasure is) takes out first one, then another, and carries them to the Shambles, whilst the rest feed on; and know not that themselves are a fattening to the Day of Slaughter also.

See Ainsworth.

Let us consider also, what millions of Transgressions are we guilty of in one Day? O then what in thy whole Life? And what a reckoning will the Sins of thy whole Life come to, when every Commandment shall bring in their Bills? and that thou hast to do with a God, who,

1. Hath all thy Sins before him, Isa. 65. 6. Behold, it is written before me, but I will recompence, &c.
2. That will never forget any one of them, Amos 8. 7. The Lord hath sworn, Surely I will never forget any of their Works.
3. With a God who will bate thee nothing, Every Transgression shall receive a just recompence of reward: He spared not his own Son. Rom. 8. and will not thee, unless by regeneration thou hast a Portion in his Son. Think with thy self what a case thou art in, if thou must answer Justice for all and every one of these.

The most of these things hitherto by way of Use spoken by me, are no other than what David himself spends one whole Psalm together upon; it is Psal. 49. and styles it, The Meditation of his Heart, ver. 3. which caused me to entitle that former about what it is to die, a Meditation rather than an Use; as I had done that of Moses also, Psal. 90. This of David's I shall here add, to set the deeper Seal and Weight upon all that hath been treated.

He begins the Psalm, and shews the Moment of these matters, though in view but ordinary, with as solemn a Preface and Proclamation, calling upon attention and heed hereto, as any where we find in Scriptures.

1. In the first verse he summons all the World into a Ring about him, Hear ye this all the People; give Ear all the Inhabitants of the World.
- And, 2. Particulariseth forth his Auditors into all sorts of Conditions, ver. 2. Both low and high, Rich and Poor together. For why? what he was to utter to them, did as much concern the one as it did the other, and behoved them all alike to look to; as being that which especially concerned them in respect unto their Being in the other World, how different soever their Condition was in this.

And, 3. He cries up the matter it self, as the greatest Wisdom, ver. 3. and a deep mysterious Parable and dark saying, verse 4. My Mouth shall speak of Wisdom, and the Meditation of my Heart shall be of Understanding: I will incline mine Ear unto a Parable, I will open my dark saying upon the Harp. — Now what should this matter be? It was to declare two things, which take up that whole Psalm.

The first, how in the style of a Be it known to all Men, (for we have seen he publisheth it to all) he aloud declares, I for my part am not afraid to die, and go into that other World. Which confidence of his he greatens by this Supposition superadded: That if, when he should come to die, all the Sins of his whole Life were presented before his view, yet notwithstanding he should not be afraid: thus ver. 5. Wherefore should I fear in the Days of evil, when the Iniquities of my Heels shall compass me about? A strange confidence! which yet he found reason for from God: For he challengeth all or any thing to bring in reason to the contrary; let them all say, [Wherefore should I fear?] And

And yet his other Psalms, as well as his Story, tell us what an infinite number of Sins were upon his score, and how sensible he was thereof. — And that this bold Speech of his relates specially to the day of Death, or days wherein he might have cause to fear it, (though I will exclude no other times of Trouble, that were yet to come before, in this Life, to be intended by him; which Interpreters wholly carry it unto.) That this is his Scope, I shall make appeal to the whole drift of what follows throughout the Psalm: which concerns the state of wicked Men in their Death, (which I shall by and by shew:) But specially I argue it from the reference and correspondency this Speech hath with and to ver. 15. God will redeem my Soul from the Power of the Grave, for he shall receive me. Selah. There you have the reason or ground of this his Confidence, which he had at first uttered in ver. 5. perfectly expressed, as that which he opposed unto all Therefore's or Wherefore's to the contrary; yea, though they should be fetch'd from his very Sins, that might (if any thing) make him afraid. But there in that resolve of his, ver. 15. he centers, and landeth this which he had so confidently uttered in ver. 5. And all the rest of his discourse that comes between, is apparently about the opposite condition of wicked Men; as that they must die, and what their Estate is in and after Death; all which was but to illustrate this Confidence of his.

He plainly in this ver. 5. puts himself into the supposition, as if he were then to Die, and as if Death (the King of Terrors, Job 18. 19.) were setting down his siege about him, and that all the Iniquities of his heels or Ways, (which are Deaths strongest Forces, The Sting of Death is Sin, and the strength of Sin is the Law, 1 Cor. 15. 5, 6.) were as an Army formed up, encompassing him round, (which out of Psal. 40. 12. I have shewed to have been his Case, and the very Metaphor he there also useth.) But now David was so steeled, as though he placed himself (thus aforehand) in the full view and face of all these, single and alone in the midst of them; he yet outdares them all, as the Apostle did Rom. 8. ult. strengthened with this, for the Lord will receive my Soul; which Phrase of Speech to be the same that a dying Saint useth, you all know.—And this part of his Speech, ver. 5. might have come in as comfortable an Use as any other, of that former Doctrine, [the innumerable number of Sins;) but that this other part that now follows doth properly belong unto what hath been now last insisted on; and so I rather placed both here.

The second thing is, The opposite state of wicked Men in their Lives, and in relation to their dying, and also at and after Death; by which he both illustrates and expounds his meaning in ver. 5. to be to utter his own blessed condition at his Death, ver. 15. and to that purpose it is, he further delates upon the Death of wicked Men in the rest of the Psalm: And which is indeed a kind of Summary of what in the former Meditation I have prest.

During their Lives, they trust in their Wealth, and boast themselves in the Multitude of their Riches, ver. 6. and yet they see (as the word is, ver. 10.) that they cannot redeem their own or others precious Souls from bodily Death, or obtain of God by a Ransom, that they should live for ever. For he sees the wise Man die like as the Fool, and so leave their Wealth to others: Thus in ver. 7, 8, 9, 10. That which therefore (miserable Wretches) they relieve themselves with against this, is, Their inward thought is, that their Houses shall continue for ever, and their Dwelling-places to all Generations: They call their Lands after their own Names, and their Posterity approve their Sayings, ver. 13. Though when he dies, he shall carry nothing away, his Glory shall not descend after him, &c. And whither goes he when he dies? His Soul (so 'tis in the Original, and varied in the Margin,) shall go to the Generation of his Fathers, (to the Company of those Giants of the Old World, from whom Hell hath its Name so oft in the Proverbs.) And where are they all? The Spirits in Prison. So the Apostle resolves us, speaking of the Men of the old World, 1 Pet. 3. 19. And they shall never see Light or comfort more, says the Psalmist. But as for me (says David, ver. 15.) God shall receive me into the bosom of his Love and Bliss.—And then again upon their dying, They are laid as Sheep in the Grave; Death shall feed on them, and prey upon them: The first Death upon their Bodies in the Grave, the second Death upon their Souls. And their Beauty shall consume in the Grave: so as at the morning (as there) of the Resurrection, the greatest Personages, that have had such a Gleam of Glory to attend them whilst they lived, accompanied perhaps also with dominion over others, thers, shall then rise such ugly shabby Death-eaten and Hell-eaten Creatures, (as we use to say, Moth-eaten) all their Beauty being preyed upon, (that's his word) and consumed: And such shall they appear in Judgment, where the upright (whom they despised) shall have Dominion over them, ver. 14. But (says David) God shall redeem my Soul from the power of the Grave: For he shall receive me. Selah.

And for the further illustration of all this, and how it relates unto Death, I shall only cast in a manifest parallel between what David here had meditated about the condition of wicked Men at Death, with what our Lord himself hath seconded it withal, in expressions fully herewith agreeing, treating of wicked Men's dying also; Luke 12. 16. unto ver. 21. 'Tis the Parable of that rich Man, whose Soul was taken away that night. 1. Says David, Their inward thought is, &c. ver. 11. And says Christ, He thought within himself, so ver. 17. 2. Whilst he lived he blessed himself, so David ver. 18. namely, in those his inward Thoughts about his Goods and Posterity: And the like speaks Christ, to be the inward speech and applauding himself, of his rich Man; He says to his Soul, Soul, thou hast much Goods laid up for many Years, take thine ease and be Merry. Again, 3. Of this Man Christ says, Thou Fool, this night, &c. ver. 20. And David of his, This their way is their Folly, ver. 10. 4. And finally, the reason of that their Folly, which both Christ and David give, do center in one and the same: This Night thy Soul shall be required of thee, then whose shall these things thou hast provided be? Thus Christ, ver. 20. and David correspondently, His Soul shall go, &c. They shall never see Light, ver. 19. and he shall carry nothing away, but leave his Wealth to others, verse 10, 17.

But still withal, let us remember what David's conclusion is concerning himself at his Death, and which he placeth in the midst as the center of his Discourse, which hath all this other about wicked Men round about it, to the end to magnify the Mercy thereof to himself; But God shall redeem my Soul, and shall receive me. Selah. The Mercy of both which the last Use of all, that next follows, doth concern; and so shuts up this Discourse.

Use 4. Let all Believers from hence learn, how to set a due and full value upon that Salvation, which they profess to expect, and which God hath designed to give them.

Our great and gracious God, the more to bind and oblige the redeemed of the Sons of Men unto himself, hath twisted their Salvation of a double Cord of Love. 1. A privative one, seen in what they are snatcht out of, which is termed a being saved from Wrath, Rom. 5. A delivering from Wrath, 1 Thess. 1. 10. An escaping the Damnation of Hell, Mat. 23. 33. A not (so much as) entering into Condemnation, John 5. 24. 2. The other a positive part, The Glory to be revealed; the greatness of which no Tongue can utter, or Heart conceive. That Blessedness or Glory conferred on the elect Angels, and that favour shewn them, hath not this privative part of Salvation to greaten it; further than as by Way of prevention, in that God upheld them from falling into the Merit or Desert of it. Whereas we Men are all become guilty before God, were actually under Wrath, Children of Wrath even as others, one as well as another, Ephes. 2. And the weight of this he in that Scripture would have them put into the Scale whenever they thought of Salvation; By Grace ye are saved: so as with a Note of Remark it follows, ver. 8.—God hath thus doubled the Mercy of Salvation to us, on purpose to make it Salvation indeed; So great Salvation! as the Apostle speaks, Heb. 2. which duplication is seen in all parts of our Salvation as well as this, as might be largely shewn.

There are many gracious Saints that have had no Impressions of Wrath, no fears and terrors of Hell, set upon their Souls in their first Humiliation; nay, the Consideration thereof hath had but small influence into their Hearts by way of Motive, in turning them unto God; but it hath been pure free Love hath taken their Hearts, and swallowed up their thoughts. Yet mark what I shall say unto thee in this Case, although indeed the less thou hast been moved in thy turning to God with such fears or impressions of Hell, it be in some respect the better, for the more kindly hath God's Work been in that respect upon thee; and it also argues a special tenderness in God's Heart towards thy Soul, to have restrained the Roughness of the East-Wind from blowing on thee, as the Prophet speaks. Yet let me me withal say, That the more any one hath (after Conversion) taken into consideration this Wrath, (I do not mean by Terrors, but) by a practical meditation of it, and his own desert thereof; the more (when joined together with the former, of God's pure Love) it will move his Heart to Thankfulness to God for saving him. And the more thine Heart hath this way been enlarged, the more of God's Love, which thou art either assured of, or relieft upon, must needs be greatned to thee; yea, and prove the higher incentive of Love unto God again from thee. Whereas on the contrary (that I may give a Caution) because there seemeth to be such an Ingenuity in Grace its working in that first respect mentioned, that Wrath hath had no influence at all. Hence such Persons are apt too much to neglect, or not to mind the Consideration of God's Wrath at all; no not so much as in this latter way mentioned; but thinking to keep up an Ingenuity of Love, they entertain not this at all in their Meditations. But sure this is far more blame-worthy than that other is commendable; and that by how much there comes thereby to be a Loss, of so much and of so great a part of God's Love purposely thereby designed to be shewn: (I term it a Loss, for what is not seen, and the Heart considers not, nor is sensible of, is as if it had not been.) And further I add, that this valuing of God's Love herein shewed, at its own full rate in both respects, is a matter of greater moment than the working of thy Love to him, in so ingenuous and kindly a Way, (as thou supposest) without all or any consideration of Hell or Wrath, can arise unto. And this by how much God's Love to us, in the full latitude of it, is a thing more precious than our Love to him. Of the two, God had rather have us apprehend his Love towards us in the utmost extent thereof, than have our Love, or Love from us to him, to work but in that one way of Ingenuousness: yea, and in the Issue you will all find, that if you join the Considerations of both together, they will concur to work an higher Ingenuity of Love, than that other way alone can do.

If we will come to comprehend with all Saints the Height, and Depth, &c. of the Love of God and Christ, in all the dimensions of it, we must take that Course and way in our Meditations about it, which God himself hath laid out and designed on purpose to set it forth and greaten it unto us by. Which he hath done as well by so great a deliverance from so great a Wrath due to us, as by conferring so Rich an Inheritance of Glory upon us. And look as God hath two such vast Contrivances, of infinite Weight each of them, the one in his right Hand, the other in his left, for the manifestation of his Love; so we should have two Scales in the Hand of our Faith to weigh each by: And of the two it may perhaps be hard to say which is the more massy, that is, in the Apprehensions of some of those who have been deeply humbled for Sin, and under sense of Wrath, (though I think Glory carries it by far.)

I observe that our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ himself, though but made a Surety for Sin, and though it was impossible he should be holden of Wrath or any thing he was to suffer, Acts 2. 24. yet he doth consider, as well for his blessing God, as also to his own Comfort, in Psal. 16. 7. and 10. (a Psalm made wholly of him) and magnify the delivering part of Salvation; Thou wilt not leave my Soul in Hell, nor suffer thine Holy One to see Corruption: I say, he considers this as well as the Joy which followed thereon: which yet also follows there, ver. 11. Thou wilt shew me the Path of Life. In thy presence is fulness of Joy; at thy right hand are Pleasures for evermore. He reckons up both, as two distinct parts of Favour shewn in that Salvation of his, which is both the Cause and Patern of ours. And that it was to bless God for both these, which he thus distinctly and apart mentions, his Preface to both, ver. 7. I will bless the Lord, &c. shews. Thus as Man. And there is this further evidence of it, That look as what any one exerciseth Faith for, and prays for much before it is obtained, that proportionably he is thankful for after. And the same is seen in Christ in this very particular. For as we read in that Psalm, that he exercised Faith for this Deliverance as well as for that Glory: So in like manner, Heb. 5. 7. That he offered up Prayers and Supplications, with strong crying and Tears, unto him that was able [to save] him from Death, and was heard in what he feared. And hence it came to pass, that we find him after his Deliverance so greatly blessing God for it. So you read of his praising God for the same in Psal. 22. from ver. 2. to the end, and in exprefs words, ver. 25. even as well as you may read his Prayer for this Deliverance in the former part of that Psalm.

If He, who (but for us and our sakes) needed no deliverance; then how much more lies this upon us, the Persons saved, and unable to save our selves, distinctly to remember both these parts of our Salvation with infinite Praise and Blessing of God's great Name? Bless the Lord, O my Soul; and all that is within me bless his holy Name, and forget not all (that is, not any of) his Benefits, says the Psalmist Book 1; mist in his own Person, Psal. 103. 1, 2. And what sort of Benefits were they? it follows ver. 3, 4. Who forgiveth all thine Iniquities; Who redeemeth thy Life from Destruction; there is Salvation from Sin and Hell, the privative part: Who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender Mercies, (over and above deliverance) and satisfieth thy Mouth with good things; there you see also is the positive part. You might observe the very same in this 40. Psalm, Thou shalt redeem me, &c. and, Thou shalt receive me.

By all that hath been spoken (although you are saved from it, yet) look down into Hell a little, as it hath been set out to you; And think with your selves, Hath God delivered me from so great a Death, and given me such a deliverance as this, from a Death so dreadful and eternal also? How would the Devils and Spirits in Prison prize an escape and deliverance from Wrath present and to come, if they could be supposed capable thereof; yea, if they had no more? A Nobleman or Favourite that hath run into great and high Treasons, to have but meer Life given him, how would he value it, though he never saw the Court more, nor were never restored unto his Estate and Dignities, had he but wherewithal to live? If a Man were in Danger to be drowned, and a Rope were thrown him and a Crown, and bidden take his choice; with promise, Thou shalt be King of all the World, if thou come to shore safe with the Crown on thy Head: of the two he would in this Case take hold of the Rope, and refuse the Crown. And why? because it is Salvation and his Life. But for a Man to be both wasted safe to the shore, and then arriving there, to have this Crown besides, how great Salvation would this be valued! stupendous Grace and Love!

These things the Saints should consider chiefly unto two ends and purposes;

1. To be thankful to God and Christ.

2. To comfort their own Souls.

I. To be thankful both to God and Christ.

1. To God the Father. It was his part to contrive the whole design of our Salvation, to the end to set forth his Love to us. And the Scripture spreads before us the Love of the Father herein upon this double consideration; 1. That he appointed us not to Wrath, (which otherwise we should have in the Issue and execution, by reason of Sin fallen under.) 2. That he ordained us to Salvation. You have an express Scripture for both these, setting forth the Love of God the Father hereby; 1 Thess. 5. 9. God hath not appointed us to Wrath, but to obtain Salvation. Here are first, two parts of the Mercy vouchsafed, 1. Deliverance from Wrath. 2. Salvation. Then the Love of the Father in his not appointing us to Wrath, (and so not to leave us under it) as well as appointing us to Salvation; and both as Appointments of God, the one as well as the other.

And then in the second Epistle, Chap. 2. ver. 13. he provokes them unto thankfulness for this; But we are bound to give thanks always unto God for you, who hath from the beginning chosen you unto Salvation, through Sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the Truth: which he speaks with reference to what was done to others, (ver. 12. compared.) Let me speak to you then in the Apostle's Language; O what thanks are your selves then bound (if the Apostle gave them for others) to give unto God for your selves, to whom God hath given Faith and Holiness, upon both these respects?

2. To Jesus Christ, for that Hand which he had in this our Deliverance from Wrath: thus expressly, 1 Thess. 1. ult. Ye wait for his Son from Heaven, even Jesus, who delivered us from the Wrath to come. Here again you have these two parts of Salvation set together. 1. His coming from Heaven, which they waited for, with hopes of his carrying them thither, as he tells them Chap. 4. ver. 17. We shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the Air; and so shall never be with the Lord. Then 2. (which the Apostle adds with an Emphasis) even Jesus, who delivered us from the Wrath to come. Take in that too, says he, and forget it not, to endear your Jesus to you: and for ever know him by this Character, [It is that Jesus who delivered you from the Wrath to come.] It was the Father's work indeed to appoint and ordain this Deliverance, and us unto the benefit of it through Faith; but it was our Jesus, his Son's work, to effect and accomplish it; 'twas his Soul that paid for all.

And the manner or Way how he delivered us from this Wrath, heightens this his Love yet more; for he delivered us from it by being made himself a Curse for us, Gal. 3. 23.

The second thing I propounded was, To comfort your Souls in the consideration of this Salvation and Deliverance. Thus Christ, Psal. 16. 9, 10. for his Deliverance, Therefore [my Heart is glad] my Flesh also shall rest in hope; for thou wilt not leave my Soul in Hell, thou wilt shew me the path of Life, &c. And David in the 49. Psalm, which led on to this, doth comfort himself also ver. 15. when of wicked Men he had said, Like Sheep they are put into Hell, (as some read it) Death shall feed on them: He then for his own particular comforts himself with this, But God shall redeem my Soul from the power of Hell, for he shall receive me. And the Apostle to the Thessalonians, Epist. 1. Chap. 5. having ver. 9. set before them (as was before opened) that God had not appointed them to Wrath, but to obtain Salvation; he joins, ver. 11. Wherefore comfort your selves together.

A DISCOURSE

Of the several parts which the Three Persons of the God-head bear, in the accomplishment of our Salvation, and that they have taken on them several Works appropriate to them therein. And the distribution of our Salvation into three parts, according to the number of the Three Persons, and the part which each of them have taken therein, viz. the Father in Election, the Son in Redemption and Justification, the Holy Ghost in Sanctification and Application.

CHAP. I.

The Design of the Discourse. The two Texts of Scripture explain'd.

Col. 2. 2. That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ.

1 Joh. 5. 6, 7, 8.

This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ: Not by water only but by water and blood, and it is the spirit that beareth witness, because the spirit is truth: for there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the Water, and the blood, &c.

1. WE have heard of the Estate of holiness Man was Created in.
2. Of the Estate of Sin and Misery, he is fallen into. Now follows,
3. His Restauration, or that part of the Gospel which contains the Doctrine of our Salvation, and Redemption out of Sin and Misery, in all the particulars of it.

Chap. 1. And this I shall divide into three parts, according to three distinct works of the three Persons for the accomplishment of it: which division is natural and genuine, and suited to the things themselves, according to the division of these as the causes of them; for Mans Salvation being the highest stage in and on which God shews himself, and all in himself, the Three Persons of the Trinity have in their infinite love to Mankind discovered themselves, and appeared therein, not only taking the effecting of it in common among them, (as in all other works they have done) but severally and apart undertaking to act distinct parts therein, sharing the works thereof unto three eminent Acts or Scenes by which the whole is fully accomplished and perfected.

The method therefore which I shall pursue, shall answerably be so to handle the Doctrine of our Salvation, as withal to glorifie these three glorious Persons in their several agencies therein.

The first of these Texts, Col. 2. 2. makes God as the Father together with his Work, and Christ as the Son, together with a Work of his likewise, to be both of them the subject of that Mystery—the Gospel, which in the first Chapter he had been so much extolling; and as he there attributeth to the Doctrines revealed therein, a riches of glory, so the very knowledge of this mystery in us, he in this place dignifies with the same Titles, calling it all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; so parting and dividing the Doctrine thereof according as these apart are the eminent subjects, unto which all therein may be and are to be reduced.

1. [Of God] the Gospel being that mystery which displays; in Mans Salvation, all the Attributes of the God-head.

2. [And of the Father] considered as the first Person (distinct from the Son) and also from God as here taken for the God-head, as common to all three Persons, and in saying [the mystery of God, and of the Father,] he means that besides the manifestation of all the divine Attributes of the God-head which is one distinct part of the mystery; the Father hath as the first Person apart discovered the glory of his Person in a glorious Design and Agency, in the work of our Salvation proper unto him, which collected out of the Scriptures and put together, makes up the deepest mystery.

3. [And of Christ] he also, as a distinct Person from the Father, hath both in his Person as God-man, and in execution of his Fathers design in his work committed to him, all treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge objectively for us to know him by, and subjectively in himself.

4. The Holy Ghost the third Person, though not mentioned here, yet elsewhere hath frequently assigned unto him a third work.

It is the work of Salvation as it hath been transacted by the three Persons is the subject afore me.

I come therefore to that other Text of the first Epistle of John chap. 5. ver. 6, 7, 8. there we find all Three brought in together as distinct Witnesses unto Mans Salvation, or as v. 11. that God hath given Eternal Life unto us that are of the Sons of Men. They are indeed brought in as Witnesses also to another grand matter, which he mentions in the verses before and after, viz. that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, but yet withal, the same verses all along do tell us, that the end of that their Witness to that great truth about Christ (as it is revealed to us) was, in direct order unto that other about our Salvation in him, and to draw us on to believe it, and give credit to it, and this is the record, that God hath given, to us Eternal Life. and this Life is in his Son; he that hath the Son, hath Life; and he that hath not the Son, hath not Life, these things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have Eternal Life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God. So that in the issue of all it's, our Salvation that is made the great business and matter the three Persons do appear as distinct Witnesses unto here in this place,

Now how do they Witness thereto?

I answer, Both by their contributing their Symbol each of them a part to the effecting it ( as will anon appear ) and then by bringing it home unto our faith and assurance as, verse 13. shews.

Chap. 2.

There are two things which I insist on out of this Scripture.

1. That they are set forth unto believers by the Apostle, as three distinct Persons in the Nature of one God.

2. That in the matter of mans salvation they have appeared to be three Persons in their becoming three distinct Witnesses thereunto, and that they are three distinct Witnesses, in being three distinct Workers and Operators therein.

CHAP. II.

That there are three Persons in the God-head who have undertaken distinct Offices in the Work of our Salvation.

THOUGH I have already handled this great fundamental point, That in the essence and nature of our one God there are found thus plurality of Persons. Yet I shall, both for the explication of this Text in this Epistle of John, and for the making my way clearer to the understanding of the Reader unto the second point which is the main subject afore me, now add, what was then reserved for this place. I then balked any handling of this Scripture which in that Article of the Trinity is made by all Divines, the eminentest and most proper seat for the handling the Doctrine of it; but I saw it would be behoveful, that when this great point of the three works of these three Persons should in their due place come to be discoursed of, that something to prove that there are three such Persons in the God-head should immediately before precede, and revive the Doctrine thereof, in order to the clearer understanding of this about their several Works. And finding that this Scripture in John gave a foundation for both, I chose to set both together, so far as this one Scripture at once gives a bottom unto both; rather than part the one so far from the other as I should have done if I had treated of the Trinity of Persons as this Scripture holds it forth; these and this other of their several works out of this same head, in this place only.

In his discourse of the knowledge of God the Father, &c. Book 1. Vol. 2. of his Works.

1. Then I shall give the proof of the Trinity of Persons in the one Nature of God, who have such distinct Works in our Salvation.

The Apostle to evidence Christ to be the Son of God, and the salvation of us men in him, produceth two Trinities of Witnesses.

1. Three on Earth, which witness but as things or evidences use to witness: I say as things use to be evidences: as a bloody knife, &c. is of Murder; or as effects are of their causes: Thus the blood of Christ is one of the witnesses on Earth, as being sprinkled on the Conscience and pacifying of it, is an evidence that Christ alone is that Messiah and Son of God; his blood having such an effect: So Water (the second) or sanctification wrought and inherent in us witnesseth as an effect useth to do its cause: And so the seal of the spirit which is the third Witness on Earth leaving the impress of it self on the hearts of men on Earth, witnesseth as a seal useth to do: according to that in Ephes. 1. After ye believed ye were sealed with the holy spirit of promise.

2. But then there are three in Heaven; and these do witness as Persons use to do, the Father, the Word, the Spirit; of which three he affirms that they are one, namely in Nature, and also concurring in Testimony: And then concludeth concerning this thing, a Truth witnessed unto by these latter three: verse 9. If we receive the witness of men, (as when two or three men come in as witnesses to a thing it is accounted valid) the witness of God, ( that

Chap. 1.

(that is, of God one in Essence being these three in Persons, and each of them God; and each three giving their distinct witness) this witness is greater, because it transcendently containeth at once all that may be required in any sufficient Testimony, according to the rules whereby men do estimate the validity of a Testimony: and it is the Testimony of God himself to boot.

1. Verity and faithfulness is required to a sufficient Testimony: that the Persons witnessing be of credit, and reputation, and fide digni, Worthy to be believed; and this is superabundantly found here, in that it is the Testimony of God, verse 9. This is the witness of God, says he, and verse 10. He that believeth not God hath made God a liar: which to do was to deny the whole of Religion: God is of known repute with all Nations, it being a received Maxim, God cannot lye, Titus 1. 2.

2. But besides, in this Testimony of God there is found a plurality of Witnesses, there being three in that one Nature of God: And a plurality doth according to the Laws of men found a validity, In the mouth of two or three witnesses every Word is established: And this validity as from a plurality of witnesses the Apostle had in his eye appears in his using the plural when he speaks of the witnesses of men in the plural (as will more fully appear after) no one single Testimony of one man, though of never so good repute, is received: and both these do in the coherence, and the Apostles knitting things together, seem manifestly to have been his scope, if we narrowly do eye and put all together in the foregoing 7. verse with verse 9. for first, he had numbered and counted them three several witnesses and yet of those three (though three as witnesses) he says they are but one, and that oneness he means, is not barely, in respect of their concurring in witnessing one and the same thing: for he by this doth distinguish this Oneness of theirs from that of the witness on Earth, that they indeed agree in one, but of those he further says that they are one: Now what one thing is it that they should be said to be but their being one God, for the Father who is the first of the three, he is acknowledged by all to be God, and that to be his Nature; if therefore the other two and he are but one, then they are one God in Nature with him, and so it necessarily, follows they are but one God, and yet three distinct witnesses, and so it comes to pass there is both the highest verity; [God,] and a full plurality of [three] in God testifying the same thing, they being one God; now he having premised and forelaid these two assertions thus in the 7. verse he then brings down and contracts the strength of both into the 9. verse, thereby to urge and exact Faith from us, in these words, If we receive the witness of men, (in the plural) the witness of God is greater, wherein his scope is to greaten (as the word is) this Testimony of the three, which is it he is now upon; for the clearing of which look what the one part of the sentence is not explicite in, the other part containeth and supplies, (as the use and manner of the Scriptures is, when it sets things out by oppositions and comparisons made between two things, which is found in the Proverbs almost every verse) and thus by that rule there are two arguments to greaten this Testimony suggested and involved in these two sentences, the one from the comparing a Testimony of man with this which is Gods: the other couched in that he says of men in the plural, in which his perfect reference and aspect is unto the plurality of those witnesses he had spoken of and counted three, verse 7. and so his drift is to set the number also of the three witnesses (there spoken of) in opposition to, and comparison with a plurality of men that use to come in as witnesses, which plurality is that which makes their Testimony with men to be received, and so the 7 verse comes down into this of the 9th, and falls with this infinite and irresistible weight upon our faith, that if the witnesses of two or three men, who are but men, is received, how much more should the record of three such witnesses in Heaven who are God, be received, by being so much greater, as witnesses that are God, are greater then man or all men?

It may be objected that the next words that follow (For this is the witness of God) which he hath testified of his Son, being spoken particularly of the Father ther (to whom as a Father it only is, that Christ bears the relation of being a Son) that therefore the sense of those foregoing words in verse 9. [The witness of God is greater] is wholly contracted unto the particular Testimony of the Father, and so are understood of the Fathers single Testimony, whom all acknowledge to be God; to which I answer;

Chap. 2.

1. That this prejudiceth not, but strengthneth rather this our interpretation of that former passage, for it was necessary that the Fathers Testimony should be in a particular manner on this occasion specified, because the thing or matter in a special manner Testified unto by all was, that Jesus Christ was his Son; and so his relation as a Father unto him as his Son, and his Testimony thereby to own him (as his Son as in such a case it becomes a Father to do) was in a singular way requisite to be added to the other. And thus the witness of the Word and Spirit is still involved in this of the Fathers, in that he in this his single Testimony of his Son is brought in but as the fore-witness of the other two namely to utter the Matter it self which they all joyntly witnessed to, which was that Christ was his Son, and so we find at his Baptism (unto which this whole passage of our Apostle doth point) the voice uttering it, was the Fathers only in saying, this is my well beloved Son, (for he only could say it and own him as his Son) but the Holy Ghost shewed his consent unto it, in descending as a Dove, and the Son of God himself owned it by his receiving Baptism upon it; and so there was the Testimony of more Persons then one, even the whole three, as John here had said afore that they were witnesses, as well as the Father, and that these three are one; and so still the first passage or sentence in verse 9. if we receive the witness of men, of a plurality of men, the witness of these three, who are one God, is greater, holds still good, yea is confirmed thereby.

2. But 2. I answer, By calling in the help and light of another Scripture, which evidently speaks to this sense I have given of the Words, ver. 9. and the comparing thereof with this hath greatly confirmed me, both in this assertion in hand, and in this interpretation given of this place. And it is a Scripture in which Christ himself, in his arguings with the Jews by way of conviction who and what manner of Person he was, speaketh the same things, that we have heard John doth here; and both having been recorded by one and the same Pen, namely of this our Apostle, have the more evidence by comparing one with the other: and become more fully explicative one of the other; and what the one is obscure in, the other clears.

Now these passages of Christs which I mean to hold this intelligence with, these here are in the 8. and 10. Chapters of the Gospel of John.

In the 8th. Chap. verse 17, 18, 19. It is also Written in your Law that the Testimony of two men is true: I am one that bear Witness of my self, and the Father that sent me leareth Witness of me: then said they unto him, Where is thy Father? Jesus answered, Ye neither know me nor my father: if ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also.

The Parallel between these two Scriptures of Christs and John's Epistle here runs thus along.

1. As in the Epistle of John, &c. the thing witnessed unto is, that the Person of Christ is the Son of God the Father: so in this of the Gospel of John, verse 12. I am the light of the World: though I bear record of my self, yet my record is true: I know whence I came, and whither I go: and verse 19. If ye had known me you should have known my Father also. and verse 24. If ye believe not that I am He (the great He, and only Messiah, Son of God) ye shall die in your sins: they said, Who art thou? Jesus saith, The same that I said unto from the beginning, even the very Son of God: For that was it he had all along said, and from the beginning averred in the substance of it; yea to his now very end also: and they understood him well enough so to mean, as appears by their quarrelling with him for it here, and by the question is ask'd him at his Death by their high Priest: so from the beginning to the end it was that which he held forth.

Chap. 2.

2. As in the Epistle the Apostle puts a weight upon the plurality of these witnesses for this matter witnessed; so Christ in that part of that Gospel, ver. 14. doth just the same: Though I bear record of my self, yet my record is true: ver. 16. For I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me: and verse 18. I am one that bear witness of my self; and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me: yea and expressly in the 5th. Chapter speaking of his Father as a witness, he says, verse 32. There is another that beareth witness of me, and I know the witness which he witnesseth of me is true: now these two the Father and himself here, are two of, yea the very same witnesses mentioned in the Epistle here: The Father, and the Word: therein then both places they agree.

3. These witnesses do witness as distinct Persons in both places: and therein especially doth one place clear the other, as to this point you see I drive at: For in this latter (the Gospel) Christ plainly, and purposely pleadeth the validity of this Testimony of his Father and himself, upon this very ground (which the Jews would all acknowledge) It is written in your Law that the Testimony of two men is true: verse 17. and then subjoyns verse 18. I am one that witness of my self; and the Father that sent me another: So then these two do witness as Persons: and so he expressly argueth the validity of their Testimony, he argues from this that they were two Persons, and that in as great reality and truth as that two men (that come in for witnesses) are I say two Persons; for upon that ground it is that the Testimony of two men is received as valid: we use to say there are two Persons that witness: And doth not the Apostle here in the Epistle as plainly enforce and intend the very same plea, and allegation which Christ used; when here he says if we receive the witness of men verse 9. of men in the plural; and that when two men at least come in and affirm the same thing; we are to receive it as legal, and of force.

So as the Argument holds strong from the comparing these two Scriptures together either way, 1. That these being such witnesses as men are in Law Cases, that therefore they are distinct Persons, and do witness as Persons, and not as things use to be evidences of a matter so or so. And 2. That the ground why they are (even according to mans own rule and Law) to be acknowledged Authentick witnesses, is because they are two distinct Persons, and as really such, and therefore are to be denominated and called Persons, and esteemed by us, as such as really as two men are, and thereupon their witness is admitted; now when unto these two witnesses, the Father and the Son, the Apostle adds a third, the Spirit, his meaning must be that he is also a witness of the same rank and sort, and hath the same station and rank in Heaven that the other two have, the same order that they two were off: and therefore is another distinct third Person, together with them, in that he is a witness together with them: and his witness alleged to all intents and purposes as the same that the others, both Father and Son are, so that here is an invincible Warrant to Style these three in Johns Epistle by the name of three Persons after the sense and usage of man in speech) for they could not have been alleged and cited as a plurality of three legal witnesses else, nor are they witnesses in reality and truth further then in reality they are Persons.

4. We find in another altercation Christ had with the Jews, John 10. 30. him to affirm: My Father and I are one; those then whom in this 8. chap. he had declared so manifestly to be two, as witnesses, and so also Persons, the same two in the 10. ch. he as manifestly professeth to be but one: and doth not the Apostle here in the Epistle speak just the same? There are three witnesses in Heaven, and these three are one; only what is defective in Johns speech, Christs speech supplies, [are one] the Apostle had not that word are, though it is necessarily and ordinarily understood. John wrote both these passages, and uniformly pursued the same drift and intent in either; and look in what sense or purpose Christ uttered the one and the other of these two Passages, in the same sense the Apostle did also in his Epistle; and what was it the Jews themselves understand by his saying my Father, and I are one? but that as verse 33. he that was but a man, made himself God. And so plain it is that in Scripture Language (and

(and not in the reality of the thing it self only) and in terminis you have, one God, and three Persons, and that in two several Scriptures thus at once compared. Yea and in this 8. chap. he doth in other large expressions affirm no less than in that 10th. Chapter he had done, for, verse 19. if ye had known me, ye should have known my Father. Take two men (unto whom in respect of Testimony Christ had compared himself and his Father, as they are two witnesses and two Persons) and they are such two Persons as are not one and the same man, and yet they may and ordinarily do concur in Testifying one and the same thing, and their Testimony is received, and yet he that knows the one, doth not necessarily (or perhaps not at all) know the other, for every man bears the nature of man apart to himself, and dividedly from the other; but here these, though distinct, as Persons, (as being distinct witnesses) yet in nature they are altogether one; in that he that knows the one must necessarily know the other, and in the Epistle the Apostle shews plainly that they are not one only, in respect of agreeing in one, in witnessing the same thing (as those 3 on Earth are said to do) but as noting a nearer oneness, he speaks thus of these three in Heaven, that these three are one, and so are one in nature.

5. The last Parallell and conclusion of the whole is, that both Christ and John do alike urge and infer and set out the high validity of the Testimony of these Heavenly witnesses in both, yea all respects, as infinitely Transcending that of two or three that are but men, when witnesses, which will appear by the comparative of the one with, or rather taken from the other. First Christ urgeth indeed the plurality of his own and his Fathers witnesses, but with all the Transcendency of them, as such my Father, says he, you all acknowledge to be God, therefore if I should alledge him only, it would infinitely excell any plurality even of all men, for let God be true and all men lyars, and would weigh down the ballance in which all men put together are found to be too light; if God were but one Person only, this were superabundant if he Testified it, but Christs intent is to urge his own Testimony of himself to be valid as a witness with his Father, I am one that bear witness of my self, and my Father that sent me. Now in the Law (which he had alledged in the verse afore for the value of a Testimony) a mans own witness of himself, if he were a meer man was to be reckon'd as no witness at all, as Christ speaks, John 5. 31. and here verse 14. does imply; yea it is then rejected with scorn, and had he been but a meer man, or so intended it, it must have been esteemed such and no other, how came it to pass then, and why then doth he urge the Law of two witnesses, when himself was one of them; yea further had he been but a meer man, it had been the greatest presumption, yea impudence that ever had been shewn to have yoked himself thus as a witness with God himself, and to have offered, to have come in, and set himself down with God in this matter; his meaning therefore plainly was, and must be understood to be: that himself was a Person as creditable as God himself, and that he was God as well as his Father, and not a meer man, and as such it was he stood forth, yea stands out with the Father, as equal with him in witnessing, because in Nature equal with him, and as truly God as he, and he stands upon it, verse 14. and out-dares also all such allegations and exceptions against his Testimony, on his own behalf with these words; Though I bear record of my self, of my self (which in no case useth to be admitted) yet my record is true, for I know whence I came, and whither I go; as if he had said, I my self know what a Person I am, and know my Original out of Gods Essence and Bosom, and that I am the Son of the living God, and so equal with my Father as such, and so my Testimony is equal to that of my Fathers, and verse 16. I am not alone, but I and the Father (which is as high as Ego & Rex meus.) And hence it is that Christ argues the Transcendent weight of his Testimony joyned with his Fathers, that here is a plurality, a two of Persons, that are both of them God. And now let Christ go on as he doth, verse 17. It is written in the Law, that the Testimony of two men, though but meer men, (so the opposition runs) is true, his inference insinuated is from this comparative of that of Men as the lowest to rise to this as the highest, how much more, or infinite.

 Chap. 3. ly much more than must the testimony of two such Persons, as I and my Father, yea of two Persons that are God, one God, be of validity with you. And therefore he boldly further goes on in v. 18. I am one who testifie of my self, and the Father that sent me, beareth witness of me; and look as he is God, so also am I my self, and therefore if you received according to your Law the Testimony of two men that are but Men ( that are or may be liars ) how much more of two Persons that are God, thus Christ argues here in the Gospel.
 Now go to the Epistle, doth not the Apostle speak the very same intendment and inference, and almost the same words, for having first said, There are three that bear Record in Heaven, the Father, Word and Spirit, and these three are one, v. 7. he closeth upon it, and infers and presseth upon our Faith, v. 9. if we receive the witness of men (of two or three men that are but men) the witness of God, ( viz. in these three several Persons, who are one God, as v. 7. ) must be greater. And is not this effectually the same you heard Christ himself even now to say? And so these two Scriptures fall in every way parallel, and give light to each the other. And both for the confirmation of my first assertion propounded, the Trinity of the Persons. Than which thus enforced there is not found a greater.

CHAP. III.

The common concurrence which the Three Persons have in other Works, besides our Salvation. That being one in Essence they join in the operation of all External Works.

I come now to shew how these Three Persons have for the discovery of themselves undertaken several works for the effecting our Salvation: which is the thing inferred out of the Text; and may be the subject of the rest that follows.

For the foundation of it out of this text, I shewed before, how Mans Salvation was one main thing set out by the Apostle in this chapter; as that unto which these three were Witnesses, as well as that Christ was the Son of God: and they are termed Witnesses to it by a real setting their several Hands unto it, that is, to the effecting of it; the main object of our Faith ( which John here would confirm ) lies in this persuasion that God hath perfectly prepared and really, and cordially given Eternal Life to the Sons of Men: To verifie the infinitely serious, and real intent of God therein; he alledgeth these three Witnesses, who are not Verbal Witnesses only, in averring of it in words to our hearts, and in the Scriptures, but real Witnesses, that witness by what they have done; that are and have been at infinite cost and pains to accomplish it: and not in common only, but all three singly and apart; Christ in shedding his Blood, the Holy Ghost in applying it, and Working in our Hearts all that is requisite to estate us in it, and to assure us of it. And such real testimonies in working our Salvation in us and for us, are the strongest and weightiest kind of testimony, Christ says, John 10. 37. If ye believe not me, believe the works, and 38. a Testimony by works is the most valid testimony of all other; and it shews that God is most full and intense, and hearty in it; when we shall hear how all that is in God, Persons, as well as Attributes, have engaged and set themselves a work about it.

My method in handling this great point shall be.

1. To clear the eminently distinct Hand each Person hath in this sole work of our Salvation, by setting by it, and concurring with it, that common concu-rence,

rence and concealed (as to us) which they have in all other their works, besides in other things.

2. To give proofs to their distinctly eminent Hand in this Work.
For the first I shall speak to two things.

1. In general how in all other works, besides this of our Salvation, they have a joynt concurrency, yet not any visible appearance in any one; not of one Person more than another held forth to us; although therein they have really and invisibly a distinct hand, as in the works of Creation and Providence, &c.

2. How besides this distinct co-operation in such works in common alike to them, that yet in the Works of our Salvation they have declaredly some one work Attributed to one more than to another, and so have by parts the whole distributively, and by parts shared among them; both which propositions put together do wonderfully set forth that peculiar glory which is designedly made to appear in the Work of our Salvation.

1. As for all other works, besides this of our Salvation in common to them, every one hath a joint Hand, and yet distinct in each: which that place confirms, John 5. my Father works hitherto, and I work, and yet concealed as to us.

The explanation of this I dispatch briefly in these four assertions.

1. As things are in being so in working; which axiom holds in God himself as well as in his Creatures; hence, that as all Three Persons have in common but one Essence; so one equal Hand in works. For all Operations flowing from Essence, therefore when the Essence is but one, the Operation must needs be one and the same, which here must be understood quoad substantiam operis, for the substance of the work; and hence as their Essence is equal, so their concurrence is equal in this respect, even in the Work of Redemption, which yet is appropriated in a more especial manner unto Christ.

2. Yet though they be but one Essence, yet they are three distinct Subsistencies or Personalities, and still that Axiom follows us, that the Operation of each follows the distinction of their Existences. and bears the resemblance of them; and look what order or distinction they have in subsisting, they have in operation to accompany it, but the distinction of their personality (if abstractly considered from the essence) being but modus essendi; therefore in like manner the distinction of their operation and concurrence, is but modus operandi, a distinct manner of concurring.

3. Hence look what order and dependance they have and hold in their Subsistency, the same they have and hold in their Working: hence as the Father is the Fountain of the other two Subsistencies begetting the Son, and breathing the Holy Spirit, so he is in like manner the Fountain of all action, and Operation, John 5. 19. The son can do nothing of himself but what the Father shews him, and he sees the Father do; the Father begins, the Son carries on the motion, the Holy Ghost from both perfects, consummates, and executes the work, 1 Cor. 8. 6. the Father of whom are all things, the Son, by whom are all things, the Holy Ghost through whom, thus in Creation the ultima manus, the last hand is attributed to him, by his Spirit he hath garnished the Heavens, Job 26. 13. garnishing is the ultimate work, the consummating of all; and is therefore made his: so the forming the Creatures into their perfect forms out of that rude Masse is attributed to the Spirit of God.

But 4. Although there be this order and distinction in their concurrent operation between themselves, yet in all those ordinary works ad extra, common to them all, this is not made to appear to us by any discernable characters, Christ says indeed, in John 5. My Father hitherto works (speaking of those of Creation and Providence) but there is nothing in the Works themselves that manifests any appropriation, of what the hand of the one is more peculiarly than of the other, when God goes to make Man, he may say as he did, Let us make Man, which imports an [ Us ] a plurality of persons to have concurred in it, yet the distinction of that Us appears not in any distinct works that that went to the perfecting of that workmanship, the making of the Soul is not attributed especially unto one, and of the body unto another: no nor yet in the whole frame of Heaven and Earth. In the Creation God indeed manifested his Attributes, as his Eternal Power and Godhead, Rom. 1. 20. and yet but in scattered beams, and not all, as you heard, but there are not so much as vestigia Trinitatis footsteps of the Trinity, or of that distinction in the Persons shines in them.

compare d.

And though in Adam some Schoolmen have endeavoured to demonstrate a shadowing forth the Trinity in the faculties of the Soul, yet it is at the best and utmost of it (if so much) but such a shadowing this forth, as when we use to fetch similitude from things created, to express things Divine by: and thus things Earthly serve (as Christ says) by way of Parable or Similitude to shew forth Heavenly, as the first Birth shadows forth, the new birth which he had been discoursing of then; yet they are remote enough from holding forth as proper effects, or being characteristical demonstrations of them: thus when some would argue this same from the distinction of those three powers of the Soul, the Understanding, Memory and Will, fancying the Memory in Man should peculiarly resemble one Person, suppose the Holy Ghost; and the Understanding the Son; and the Will the Father: others that in Mans Soul the Understanding, the Will, and the power to act, and put forth the acts of these, are lively characters of the Persons: but these all are so obscure and uncertain in their evidence or character of these three Persons and their distinction; as they all vanish as shadows, when wisely pried into, and most narrowly searched into when applied.

I dare not be too definitive concerning his works of Grace towards the Elect Angels, who besides that unto them the three Persons may be supposed to be made known by Revelation, yet not in them, at or from their Creation, but what may have further been from Gods Election of them, which is a supercreation Grace, and which was the Fathers work on them, even as the election of us Men is the Fathers also; or what from their Union with Christ, as their Head, may have had, and doth appear of these Persons to them thereby; and what other work in them should answer to the Holy Ghost, and his order and distinction is not so fully revealed to us.

This for their conjunct Operation in common works as they may be compared with those of our Salvation.

CHAP. IV.

Chap. 4.

Of their distinct appearance in the Work of Mans Salvation. And that their several works bear the resemblance of their several Personalities.

BUT God resolving to manifest all that was in himself, or he would not manifest himself at all, for he will be glorified as God to the utmost; these three glories or Persons therefore designed and contrived among themselves such works as should severally and apart, serve to make known that there were three Persons as well as several Attributes, that so all of God, and the whole that is in him might be manifested to his Creature.

And this is disposed of so by them, that their several works bear the resemblance of their several subsistences, as far as possible this was representable unto us, in and by outward works and effects: in that they should be such as should have the impress or print of the distinction of these Persons, together with the order of their subsisting in a more conspicuous way upon them.

And how ever it is in the works of Creation of the World, and of Man and of the Angels in this respect, yet we may be sure that the clearest compleat Revelation and Manifestation of these three Persons, their distinction, order of Personality, was by God himself reserved until the Gospel should be Preached, and that Christ his Son should appear, and be made manifest to the World, when it was that Mans Salvation came first upon the stage, to the end that Mans Salvation, and the works thereof, might have the most eminent, and peculiar honour of this thing: and this first manifestation of those persons then was accompanied with a prodigy of the most pregnant, and high significancy that ever was or could be given; The Heavens opened, which was the greatest visible wonder shewn in the Heavens, that had been from the Creation: even as the Earths opening her Womb was the greatest wonder that this terrestrial Globe ever did afford, and the significancy of it was that the revelation of it was only from Heaven: and that the witnesses then appearing, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost were in Heaven, a mystery that would never have been understood, and entertained but by such a means; and this manifestation of it did then refer to our salvation, as well as testify to Christ's being God's Son; for it closeth with this, hear him, as in whom I am well pleased; namely, with you of Mankind: Where we have 1. The Names of the three in their distinction recorded; first, the Father, who says, This is my Son; secondly, the Son, to whom and upon whom Heaven opened, and the Holy Ghost descended; thirdly, the Holy Ghost: Their distinct names are express. 2. Their distinction is manifested by three different outward Symbols, the Father in a voice, to shew that God is invisible, the Son manifested in Flesh, praying upon the banks of Jordan: the Holy Ghost descending on him in the likeness of a Dove. Three differing actions of each: the Father with an open publick voice, to the hear-say of all, speaks and calls from Heaven, This is my Son; the Son he Prays, ('tis here said,) the Holy Ghost descends.

And these are the three Witnesses in Heaven, which the Epistle of John speaks of as Witnesses to this truth, that Christ is the Son of God, so to us and our Salvation, that we are the Sons of God; and as this Θεοφανια (as they call it) or appearance was made in three outward different Symbols at Christs Baptism; so our Baptism is sealed up to us (to be manifested in us) the three works of Father, Son and Spirit, namely, of Election, Redemption, and the Application of both, which is the special work of the Spirit. And therefore fore

Chap. 4. fore we are Baptized in the names of all three, Father Son and Holy Ghost, so as although in other works these Persons act really as three distinct Persons among themselves; and are known unto themselves to do so; yet in this great business of our Salvation they become three distinct Witnesses or discoverers of themselves unto us, and whereas afore, and in other works, their order in working in every work, was known but among themselves, now in these salvation works they visibly appear; and distributively in several works proper unto each, through the works bearing the proper Character of their Personality; and so evidencing their distinction, and order, TO U S.

Look then as great Persons when they are Witnesses, or would confirm a matter, have their distinct seals; and their Names set to in such a distinct Character as the hand and seal of each may be differenced from the other; so it is here, and as Mens seals bear their Coat of Arms Engraven on them often, bearing the memory of some eminent exploit they have done, whereby their Houses, and Antiquity is known; so it is here, as there are three Witnesses, or Persons witnessing, so three works in our Salvation, which bear the Impres, Stamp, and Similitude of their subsistence apart; and the order, and rank of their distinct subsistings.

And though all concur to set on the Stamp of each, even of these, yet the stamp it self impressed in each work, bears the Character of one Person more than of another, I shall manifest this in the particular instances of each of these works.

1. There is Eternal Election, or setting forth the Persons that shall be saved, and the benefits, &c. which is the entrance, the ground work, the Foundation (as 2 Tim. 2. 19. it is called the foundation of the Lord. Hence this is peculiarly attributed to the Father, whose Person is the Original, the Fountain of the other two, and who is the first both in subsisting and working.

2. There is Redemption, which is the next and second work in this, which supposeth Election, depends on it, and flows from Gods decree, and speaking to his Son, and this is appropriated to the Son, which work bears the impres and likeness of his subsistence, and the order of it, as also of his working with the Father, for as his Person is from the Father, so this work Committed to him is from that other, the Fathers work, and the Father is said to send him.

3. There is the application of both. And this is ascribed to the Spirit more eminently; for as his subsistence proceeds from both, so this work springeth both from Election and Redemption, and is the last, as his subsistence is. God the Father he set out the benefits to be bestowed, made the Will what he would have bestowed, and how much, and upon whom; God the Son he undertook to be the Executour, sees it disposed of; And God the holy Ghost he is as the Agent or Attorney whom both use to convey all to us: God the Father was as David; God the Father drew the Platform of the Temple, and left the materials; but God the Son, as Solomon he builds it, rears it according to the pattern; & God the Holy Ghost he is the overseer of the Work, and gives Graces and Gifts to build it. Which when it is built they dwell in it all of them in Glory, when God will be all in all. As the Physician prescribes, the Apothecary Tempers, and his Servant applies the Physick as a Plaister or the like, so God the Father prescribes all, Christ made a Plaister of his Blood, and the Spirit he applies it and sprinkleth that Blood on our Consciences. And 2dly, for the similitude and allusion I used of three seals shewing the distinction or priority of these Persons, the Scripture Warrants it.

1. The Fathers seal and impres you have, 2 Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of the Lord remains sure, having this Seal, The Lord knows who are his (whom he foreknew he predestinated, &c.) and in the seal of Election you may read the similitude of his personality engraven.

2. Jesus Christ in redeeming is said to have his seal also, as in expressions tantamount and equivalent you have, Heb. 9. 15, 16, 17. for comparing the Gospel to a Covenant, a Testament, which is in force upon the death of the Testator

Testator, he withall insinuates his Blood shed and sprinkled to be his seale to it, shewing, verse 17, 18, 20. that the Old-Testament was confirmed by blood. He took the Blood and sprinkled both the Book and all the People, saying, This is the blood (for the seal) of the New-Testament which God hath made with you and enjoyned unto you, even as Christ also said, this is the blood of the New-Testament, but if you would have a place which in terminis gives it, look Daniel 9. 24. It is said Messiah should be cast off for the sealing up of iniquity (as it is varied in your margents.)

3. The Spirit he hath his seal, Eph. 4 30. Grieve not the holy spirit by whom you are sealed to the day of Redemption. Sealed in Regeneration which conveys the Image of God, sealed again in the work of assurance, as a comforter, both which make up application.

And as their seals, so their several names and hands are set, Matth. 28, 29. Go teach all Nations, Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Baptism, though it be peculiarly the Seal of Regeneration, yet withal of the whole of salvation and of all that ever God did for us, or will do in us, from first unto the last. There is one Faith, one Baptism, one Hope of your calling, Eph. 4. Baptism is adequate to set forth the whole Object of our Faith and Salvation, and so is the seal of all, and because the whole of our salvation is transacted as by parts, by the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, therefore says Christ of that Ordinance, Baptize them distinctly and distributively in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and not in their name in Common only; and the distinctiveness is imported both in the Article put to each τῷ πατρὶ of the Father, τῷ υἱῷ of the Son, τῷ ἁγίῳ, πνεύματι, of the Holy Ghost; But in the particle καὶ, as distinctly put to each, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And that this is further the import of Baptism as holding forth the total Object of our faith, and salvation in the parts thereof, by enumerating the name of these three Authors thereof, that foremention'd, Ephes. 4. confirms there is one spirit, verse 4. one Lord, verse 5. one Father, verse 6. as one Baptism, verse 5. that seals up all.

The Reasons of the Three Persons making such a distinct discovery of themselves in this Work of our Salvation rather than in any other.

I Come now to assign the reasons why the three Persons chose this work of our Salvation, above, all their other works, wherein to make such a distinct discovery of themselves.

1. Because as the mystery of the Trinity is that great mystery of all other, the mystery of God, and the Father, and of Christ, Col. 2. 2. the highest of all things to be known of God; so this of mans salvation was the chiefest of all his ways and works, the greatest and utmost Stage to display his Glory on.

In this Channel the love of God did run most strongly, as being that wherein God would shew his Love and Grace, which is the intimacy of his Heart most, 'tis therefore eminently called Love to mankind.

3. Gods Love is herein shew'd to his own, and therefore each Person was desirous, yea zealous to appear, that the love of each might be discerned and acknowledged, and that we in a special and peculiar respect might be obliged unto each Person and bound to praise and glorifie them accordingly, to honour the Son, and the Holy Ghost, as well as the Father. In giving proofs from Scriptures of this partition, I shall not alledge all such as scatteredly attribute Election to the Father, Redemption to the Son, Sanctification to the Spirit, for such proofs would be inefficacious in this respect, that we find such works wherein they have a common hand scattered attributed unto each; when we are converted we are said to hear the voice of the Son of God, John 5. 25, 26. to be begotten of the Father, Jam. 1. 17. and born of the Spirit, John 3. 6. so Creation is scatteredly attributed to them all, and therefore to alledge any one place singly for any such work, should but prove that that Person is supposed to have an hand therein, such as the rest have, but if we find any Scriptures at once and together distinctly mentioning all three persons, and withal mentioning these three works, and then withal attributing one work to the one, another to another Person, in this case we may conclude, that comparatively among themselves, one work is more eminently and properly to be ascribed to that Person it is given to, rather than the other, and that they have sorted and distributed these three among them. Now for Scriptures I shall name but two.

In the First Chapter to the Ephesians, Election is attributed to the Father of Jesus Christ, who hath chosen us in him before the World was, verse 4. and who hath set forth all those spiritual blessings we are blest withal verse 3.

2. In the 7th verse, Redemption is attributed to Christ as the Author thereof, whereas in Election, he was made as the subject in whom we were chosen, but verse 7. In whom we have Redemption through his Blood, as shed by him, and so the principal Author and Efficient of it; then the application and sealing up of all is attributed to the Spirit, verse 13, 14. In whom after ye believed, ye were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise, who is the earnest of our inheritance, &c.

The next Scripture is, 1 Pet. 1. verse 2. Eleēt according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through Sanctification of the Spirit unto Obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Christ.

The Apostle Peter to endear the hearts of all Saints he wrote to, unto these three Persons, singly shuts up their distinct agencies in our great and common salvation in as few words as was possible to utter them in. Salvation was the

the subject he was to write to them about, he in the front placeth and sets up the Coat of Arms of these three blessed ones, as the joynt founders of our Salvation, emblasning what each did contribute thereunto. Chap 5.

1. Here are the three Persons by name mentioned, Father, Spirit, Christ.
2. Here are three works mentioned, Election, Sanctification, Blood, both shed and Sprinkled.
3. And here is Election attributed to the Father, Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father: Sanctification to the Spirit, and the blood said to be Jesus Christ, which is the foundation of Redemption, which is his work, as you heard, Ephes. 1. 7. In whom we have Redemption through his Blood, &c.

I observe that in mentioning Election here, he doth not (as elsewhere) make mention of Salvation as the end or designed scope of it, which yet is usual every where else, Salvation, which as the ultimate end or terminus of all (as verse 9. he terms the end of your Faith, the Salvation of your Souls) is in common the result of the work of all three, and in the verses following he speaks of it as such, again and again, begotten to an inheritance, verse 4. kept to salvation, verse 5. and so verse 9, 10. this is the end of ends. But he mentions such intermediate works between Election and Salvation, as are necessary and preparatory thereunto, as those which the Persons undertook amongst them as means through which Salvation is to be obtained, as, 2 Thes. 2. 13, 14. the words evidently import, that whereas Gods ordination was that without Holiness no man should see God, Heb. 12. and without shedding blood there should be no remission, Heb. 9. 22. These Persons among them took upon them those works, the Father he electeth and electing ordaineth holiness, and blood as the means through and by which we are to obtain salvation, elect in or through, or unto Sanctification, &c. The Spirit undertaketh Sanctification call'd, therefore Sanctification of the spirit, you shall sanctify, said the Father to the Spirit, and to the Son concerning his blood, It shall be you blood that shall redeem them, said the Father, in electing of us. To clear and open these things a little as they are set down:

1. Election which is there said to be according to foreknowledge is not vocation in time, but that choice made from everlasting as those two parallel places shew, whom he foreknew, he predestinated, Rom. 8. 29. which is all one as here, he elected according to foreknowledge, and together here with that other, 2 Thes. 2. 13. He hath chosen you from the beginning, that is, from everlasting, according to foreknowledge, is added, to shew the moving cause of Election, to exclude all other accordings of works, not according to works, 2 Tim. 1. 9. as elsewhere, nor of Holiness, or faith foreseen, for he hath chosen us that we might be Holy, Ephes. 1. 3, 4. not because we were Holy; in Holiness, or through Holiness to obtain salvation, 2 Thes. 2. 13, 14. As a means requisite to it. And so here it is not according to foreknowledge of our Sanctification, but according to foreknowledge in and through Sanctification, it is then the foreknowledge simply of our Persons abstracted from all condition joyned with and importing special Love and dearest Affection; for words of knowledge import and declare affections in Scripture Phrase, depart from me (says Christ) ye workers of Iniquity, I know you not, that is, I regard you not; answerably it is attributed to express Gods knowledge of us with special Love and regard, Rom. 11. 2. God hath not cast away his People whom he foreknew, that is, Loved, and out of Love chose them.

2. For those other that follow, for the order of them as they are here ranged there is a seeming difficulty, some understand them as set in order, as they succeed one another in the execution of the electing Decree, namely that Sanctification, whereby is meant the working all the principles of habitual Grace (which we call Regeneration) by the Spirit should be the first and immediate medium of Election according to that order or Chain, Rom. 8. Whom he predestinated he called, under which Sanctification is intended, as the first and next to Predestination, and so then unto Obedience and sprinkling of Christ's

Christ's blood comes in as the immediate consequents of that sanctification first wrought; and so Sanctification is the first most immediate designed fruit of Election, though as a medium God hath Elected or ordained us unto Obedience and sprinkling of Christ's Blood. Now how Obedience should follow upon Sanctification habitual, so as it might be said, we are elected through habitual Sanctification unto Obedience, understanding it of Obedience in our whole course to the whole Will of God, is easily understood, and granted by all to be the end of habitual Grace, as Operations are of their proper habits, but then how the sprinkling of the Blood of Christ should be the consequent of Sanctification, so as we should in like manner be said to be elected through Sanctification unto this sprinkling of Christ's Blood, this contradicts the received Opinion, i.e. that justification should rather be the medium of Sanctification, and in order go afore it. And that by the sprinkling of Christ's blood here, the application of his Blood to us for the forgiveness of sins should be meant is evident, for as the shedding of his Blood was the work of Redemption, as by him performed on the Cross, so the sprinkling of his Blood is a work done upon us when we actually come to believe, and is the actual application of it.

Now yet this might stand, if as Learned Mr. Pemble and others assert. Sanctification doth in order of Nature precede justification, and which to me seems not remote from Truth, or prejudicial to the Grace of justification at all, and withal Consonant to right reason, for if (as all grant justification be upon an act of Faith on Christ for justification, and that not until then we are justified, as all do and must acknowledge that hold justification by Faith, according to the Scriptures, and that an act of Faith must proceed from a principle of Faith habitually wrought, then necessarily Sanctification, taking it for the principles of habitual Sanctification, must be in order of Nature afore justification, for the seed and principle of Faith, is a part, and a principal part of Regeneration or Sanctification, as taken in that sense, for the working the principles of all grace, and so is agreeable to that order and chain, Rom. 8. 29. where called is put before being justified, as predestination is put before being called, understanding calling of the working the principles of Regeneration.

But for the agreeing of this dispute as from this place, we may easily accord it, if (as Paræus) we say that all these three, Sanctification, Obedience and sprinkling of Christ's Blood are not mentioned here in any subordination of the one to the other, as a precedent & medium thereunto, but all of them alike directly and equally to relate to Election as the immediate thing designed, & so these two particles ἐν ἀγιασμῷ and εἰς ὑπακοήν, come both to one as in Scripture they are used to do, and so they should be read, as also the Vulgar reads them in Sanctificationem & Obedientiam, Elect unto Sanctification unto Obedience and sprinkling of the Blood of Christ Thus much as to the order of the things here mentioned, supposing by Obedience here to be meant the whole Course of a Christians Life in Holiness.

But Secondly for the things themselves, I prefer another Interpretation above all other which doth give this account of the Apostles scope to be to enumerate two more eminent effects of Election, namely, Sanctification, and Justification, whereof the first is attributed more specially to the spirit, the other to Faith, and the Blood of Christ; as in like manner, Rom. 8. 29. calling and justification, are only enumerated of the benefits in this Life that followed Predestination; Whom he hath Predestinated, them he hath called, them he hath justified: But then how should Obedience be interpreted, so as to appertain unto justification, which if meant of actual Holiness of Life, it is opposed rather thereunto according to Protestants Doctrine. The Papists that close with this interpretation of justification to be intended in the Yoaking Obedience and Christ's Blood together, greedily catch hold of it, that therefore our good works and actual Obedience is an ingredient matter of our justification, as well as the Blood of Christ. And you all know they make our Obedience to halve it and bear a share of that Glory with the Blood of Christ, but they fall short of their aim in it, in this, that according to their Doctrine, habitual tual Sanctification is to come in also, as an Ingredient with it; as that which helps to constitute us righteous, whereas in the Apostles speech Obedience and the sprinkling of Christs blood, as they are linked one to another, so they are separated both from the sanctification of the spirit.

Others of our Protestant Divines do therefore refer these two to justification, as the two parts thereof, the imputation of the Active and Passive Obedience of Christ, and so as that part of justification [the sprinkling of Christs Blood] which is the Imputation of it to us, is expressly mentioned: so that by Obedience should be intended by an Ellipsis the imputation of the Obedience of Christ, namely the active Obedience coupled with his Blood, this interpretation (as I remember) Bishop Downam glanceth at in his Treatise of Justification, where I first met with it, but I meet with it hinted also in Commentators, In Obedientiam Jesu Christi & aspersio-nem sanguinis ejusdem Jesu, says Astius, unto the Obedience of Jesus Christ, and sprinkling of the Blood of Christ; his meaning is that the first branch is to be made out and supplied by the analogy of the latter, as is often in Scripture, that as therefore it is expressly said to the sprinkling of the Blood of Jesus: so it should be in like manner supplied, to the imputation or benefit of the Obedience of Jesus Christ imputed, this, if there be not Harshness or Violence in it, I should wish might stand, because it helps out the active Obedience to be the matter of our justification. And truly the Argument of some against it, that we are not said to be Elected unto Christs Obedience, so understood, but rather by it, or through it, moves me not, because Christs merits were not the foundation or motive to Election, nor are we any where said to be Elected through Christ, or for Christ, so as notwithstanding that interposed scruple, this might well stand.

Astius was a Papist and intended not our Justification by either, yet it in this his reading he would give us light therein, we may receive it.

But there is another reason which is more plausible, and which gives as just an account why Obedience is cast into and linked thus with Christs Blood, as appertaining unto justification, and as requisite to it as Christs Blood is, and that is that Peter understood Obedience of justifying Faith, as it embraceth, receives, and submits unto Christs Blood, and the imputation of it for justification before God, and so this act of Faith as it is abstracted from Sanctification and Works, as Viewing and Eyeing and submitting unto Christs Blood, and Obedience only for justification is therefore joyned therewith, in the work of justification here intended; and truly the Reasons on this hand rise up to a great evidence, if not certainty, that Peter should so mean.

1. For first, It is not only call'd Obedience to the Faith as, Act. 6. 7. in the Dative case, as noting out Obedience to the Doctrine of Faith, but it is expressly termed ὑπακοὴ πίστεως, the Obedience of Faith in the Genitive case as noting out the act of Faith, its being termed by way of eminency, Obedience so, Rom. 1. 5. and Chap. 16, 26. yea in Chap. 10, 16. Obedience to the Gospel is interpretatively and exegetically made all one, as to believe in these words, They have not all Obeyed the Gospel, for Isaiab says, Lord who hath believed our report? where he interprets our report to be the Gospel, or glad-tidings and believing to be all one with Obedience to it. And indeed for Men to renounce their own Righteousness past, present, and to come, and betake themselves wholly unto, or (as the Apostles word in the same Chapter is) to submit themselves to the Righteousness of God, this is the greatest and highest Obedience, and deserves the name καὶ ἔξοχὴν, and the Apostle having deciphered it forth as so great a submission, in the beginning of that Chapter, under those terms, might well call it Obedience in the following part: and he evidently speaks of justifying Faith in opposition unto works, as is evident by the 5. & 6. verses, and so in like manner when in Chapter 1. he calls it Obedience, he means that Faith by which the Just do live, v. 17. of which he treats in the whole Epistle.

2. That which confirms this interpretation that by Obedience should be meant the act of justifying Faith, is that in that parallel place, 2 Thes. 2. 13. we are said to be elected through Sanctification, or [in] or [unto] Sanctification, and

and belief of the Truth. Faith is joyned with Sanctification there, when Election to the medium of Salvation is spoken of.

3. And thirdly, As Paul, so Peter himself also in this Chap. termeth faith Obedience; You have purified your Souls by Obeying the Truth, and so look as Paul calls it belief of the Truth, Peter terms it Obeying the Truth, and as Paul calls it Obedience simply, so Peter here also. And that in this speech [Ye have purified your hearts by Obeying the truth] he means Faith, as eyeing justification or Christs Blood, in the Gospel, for cleansing and purifying the Conscience from the guilt of sin, is evident by Peters own speech elsewhere, in that great Synod, Act. 15. 9. God hath purified their Hearts by Faith, which he by the coherence evidently speaks of viz. justification by Faith, for whether we were justified by faith only, or by observing the Law, was the point in question there, as in like manner in the Epistle to the Galatians, which also that of Heb. 9. 10, 13, 14, 15. &c. confirms.

4. Fourthly, Faith as justifying is eminently call'd Obedience in the point of justification coupled with Christs Blood here, and the imputation of it, as the proper Object of that act, and the true effect or consequent of that act, according as you have it, Rom. 3. 25. God hath set forth Christ as a propitiation through Faith in his Blood.

And thus understanding these words, we may by [Sanctification of the spirit] understand, habitual Sanctification in the heart, and take in actual Sanctification in the Life as included therein, as it is usually taken, and in that 2 Thes. 2. 13. forecited, and then Faith justifying as the act, under the name of Obedience and Christs Blood, as the Object thereof, and the sprinkling or application of it by the Spirit upon that act of Obedience.

And thus all three persons come in, in their proper work for us (which is the thing I aim at) 1. The Father in Election, 2. The Son, as shedding whose Blood it is, The Blood of Jesus Christ, and that first shed for our Redemption or Justification from sin, in whom we have redemption through his Blood the forgiveness of sin, as, Eph. 1. 7. and who by his own Blood obtained eternal Redemption for us, Heb. 9. 12. and although the sprinkling of this Blood to the purifying our Hearts by Faith is a work of the Spirit, as well as Sanctification is said to be, and this in Peters intentment, for, ver. 22. he says having purified your Souls to the obedience of the Truth by the Spirit, yet the first shedding of that Blood (which sprinkling thereof necessarily supposeth) was by Christ himself; and by his Blood as shed by him it is we are justified, when it comes to be sprinkled on us or applyed unto us. The efficacy, and the Virtue of it, lay, in that it was his Blood, and shed by him to that end, therefore, Heb. 9. where this matter is handled and opened out of the type, having v. 24. said he sprinkled the Blood, in the 22. v. he adds, Without shedding blood there is no remission, so as the Emphasis here lyes in the Blood of Christ, even as shed, but now applyed and eyed by Faith, and so the proper eminent work of the second Person, the Son, is held forth as well as of the spirit, and thus all here falls in with what you have, 1 Cor. 6. 8. But now you are washed, which is the general to the two parts of purification that follow, But ye are Sanctified, but ye are justified, where Justification follows after Sanctification here. And here he attributeth these two works unto these two Persons the Son and the Spirit, justified in the name of the Lord Jesus and Sanctified by the spirit of our God; Sanctification being by the spirit, as justification, in the name of Jesus Christ, or by the spirit as the author of both, but by Christ as the purchaser and meritorious cause of either in the name or Virtue of Christ [and of our God] comes in as having an hand in both. And thus much for the confirmation of this great point, which withall hath took in the opening of this obscure and difficult place.

CHAP. VI.

The Uses. See the great Love of God, that all that is within him, all his Attributes, and all his Persons should concern themselves in our Salvation. Since Salvation is so great a work, in which the whole Deity is employ'd, let us not neglect it. Let us think how welcome these three Persons will make us at our arrival in Heaven.

IS it thus that all three Persons joyntly, and severally have their hands thus in mans Salvation, have shared it amongst them into so many works, and took them on them, as so many Offices, & vouchsafed to bear a Title of Honour there from, as you have heard you that love God, see & acknowledge the infinite overflowing love of God therein; God hath loved us (you see) with all that is within him; Content nor satisfied was he, to shew forth all his Attributes therein, and those which had not been in the least discovered in the Creation, as Grace and mercy, &c. but he wou'd have the Persons also set a work, and employed therein, and thereby manifested to us. Oh! let us love God with all that is within us, Bless the Lord, Oh my Soul, says the Psalmist, and all that is within me bless his holy name, Psal. 103. 1. let all thy faculties come forth as the Stars in their courses to celebrate his name; if you pray, pray with the spirit, pray with understanding also, if you sing, sing with the spirit, and sing with the understanding also as the Apostl. speaks upon another occasion. and let nothing be untuned or unstruck in this Consort; God the Father became our God, and Ordained to give himself to us from everlasting in Election, and delighted to chuse us, as the Phrase is, Deut. 10 15. He gave his Son, and he gave Himself both to us, and for us, and both gifts are invaluablely infinite, and because he had no more left, he hath given his spirit also, as, 2 Cor. 5. ye have it; when man was first made, then only God laid, Let us make Man, this was spoken, say some, with a farther eye and foresight than to the Creation, this counsel expressed what special care they each should have unto the like piece of workmanship, was then afore them. even unto the Gospel state: I will chuse him to Life, saith the Father, but he will fall, and so fall short of what my Love designed to him: but I will redeem him, says the Son, out of that lost Estate: but yet being fallen he will refuse that grace, and the offers of it, and despise it, therefore I will sanctify him, saith the Holy Ghost, and overcome his unrighteousness, and cause him to accept it. And having this Council and resolution about him, they still said however, Let us make him, and thereupon fell to making him, and have since done all this for him.

1 Cor. 14, 15.

Use 2. Salvation is a great work, and shall we neglect it? The three persons have been employed about it, and that from everlasting, and will not you work out your own Salvation? it is your own; do you think to do that in a trice, they have been doing from eternity? or do you think to do it when you will? Salvation is lock't up by a door of Faith as it is called, Acts 14. 27. & to that door there are these 3 Keys of these 3 Persons and all must, and do concur in it, when 'tis effected, and think'st thou to have these States of Heaven to come together at thy beck & at thy call? thou mayst sooner think to order the great conjunction of the Stars, and Planets, Job 38. 31. Canst thou bring forth Mazoreth? Knowest thou the Ordinances of Heaven? Or canst thou set the Dominion thereof upon the Earth? That is, canst thou order their motion so as that their conjunctions or meetings should fall out when thou pleasest? which when they meet have special influences upon this lower World; canst thou set that Clock? and thinkest thou (that canst not move a mans heart on earth) to call the Trinity together, when thou pleasest, to dispatch thy business for thee? Be sure therefore that thou take their time when thou feelest the spirit moving thee, then all those Wheels are a moving, and then take thy season.

Use 3. Think how welcome we shall be when we come to Heaven, 'tis said in the Parable, that when men fall, there are friends made with Unrighteous Mammon which will then receive you. But here is a higher company and fellowship of friends to us, Father, Son, and Holy-Ghost, the three Witnesses in Heaven that are and have been, (as you see) so great friends to us, and each love us for his Works sake on us & cost and labour of Love bestowed: Artifex amat Opus; so do each of these love their own Work in us; saith the Father, This is the Soul which I chose from Everlasting, and set my Heart upon so long agoe; saith Christ, This is that Man that I represented upon the Cross, and the Welcome Day now comes, that I have return of the Travel of my Soul, the Spirit of my Blood; And I (says the spirit) have took infinite pains with him to keep him, and to bring him to this. And thus all rejoyce and glory in it.

Use 4. That these three Glorious Persons thus equally share this Work of so much Glory unto God in the highest, amongst them, and one doth not take upon him all, but each bears his part, that each may be Honoured as the other, yea, are jealous of the glory of each other herein, as much as of their own, this may teach us poor narrow Creatures, humility and mutual condescension, that no man should do or have the honour of all the Work, or strive for it, God hath shared his gifts, made diversities of Operations, and worketh as, and in what measure, and by whom he pleaseth; if there had been contending amongst these Persons, who should have the Glory of all, or who should be the first or second, this work had stood still, and man had not been saved, but they willingly share it, according to their Order and Priority of subsisting, and involve our Salvation with their Glory.

THE CONTENTS OF THIS TREATISE.

BOOK I.

God the Fathers Eternal Counsel and Transactions with Christ, to undertake the Work of Redemption for Man, consider'd as Fallen.

Chap. I. THe Exposition of the Words of the Text. What is the great Design of the Gospel. The Excellency of the Knowledge of it. The highest attainment is to see the Gospel in its Original, those Eternal Transactions between God the Father, and God the Son, for the Salvation of Man.

Chap. 2. Some Observations premised. That it is to the Father the Reconciliation is made, and to Him the Affair is chiefly Attributed.

Chap. 3. What as to our Salvation was done by God the Father from all Eternity. The meaning of that Phrase God was Reconciling us in Christ. That God took up a strong Resolution and Purpose to reconcile some of the Fallen Sons of Men to himself. His Motives were not any thing in us, but purely his Love, and his Delight in Mercy. His Love in thus designing Salvation to us magnified by several Considerations.

Chap. 4. That God in pursuance of his Gracious Design to save Sinners, exercised his Wisdom to contrive the fittest means of Accomplishing it. Though God might have pardoned Sin without satisfaction, yet he would not, and the Reasons of it.

Chap. 5. To the effecting of all the Designs both of Justice and Mercy, it was necessary that a full and compleat satisfaction should be made, which we being unable to pay, Divine Wisdom thought of another Person to undertake, and to do it for us. That Gods Justice is contented with this Commutation of the Person, since hereby that Attribute is more glorified, and all the ends of the Law answer-red, than if we the Offenders had in our own Persons suffered the due punishment of Sin.

Chap. 6. The great Difficulty was to find out a Person of Strength equal to so high an Undertaking. Neither Angels nor Men could have found out, or presented a fit Person. God manifest in the Flesh for Redemption of Man, was a Mystery above all the Thoughts of Angels or Men; and was worthy only of Gods Wisdom to find out.

Chap. 7. When Gods Wisdom had found out a fit Person, yet since this must be his only Son, here was a greater Difficulty for him to overcome, How to give him for us. The depths of Gods Love here, as of his Wisdom before, seen in not sparing his own Son, but exposing him to all the Rigours of Justice, which would not make the least abatements. It was of Free Choice that he made thus of his Son to be a Redeemer, to which he was not Obliged or Necessitated. He appointed his Son to Death for us, and laid his Injunction and Charge on him to perform this his Will.

Chap. 8. Christs Acceptance of the Terms which God the Father propounded to him for Mans Redemption. That his willingness in the undertaking proceeded not only from the Love he had for us, but from that which he did bear unto his Father, and his desire to Obey him, and to perform his Will. That the Eleët Redeemed by Christ were first God the Fathers, and by him given in Trust and Charge to Christ to Save them.

Chap. 9. That upon Christs Accepting this Agreement, God the Father to Reward him, engages to bestow all the Blessings which he should Purchase to those Redeemed by him. That all these Blessings of Grace, and Eternal Life, were promised to us in Christ from all Eternity.

The Contents.

Chap. 10. What is the Reason that though we receive all these Blessings by Christ, and on the account of his Merits, yet they are said to be given to us of pure Grace.

Chap. 11. That upon the Conclusion of this Agreement or Covenant of Redemption, there was the greatest Joy in Heaven. The Divine Persons exulting in the delightful Thoughts, that so many wretched lost Creatures should be effectually Saved.

BOOK II.

The sole, and peculiar Fitness of Christs Person for the Work of Redemption.

Chap. 1. The Fitness of Christs Person for the Work of a Mediator, bath a great Influence to make it Successful and Prosperous.

Chap. 2. That it was necessary for our Mediator to be God. He could not otherwise have been present at the making of the Eternal Covenant of Redemption: None but God could have the Power to bestow such great Blessings as are those of the Covenant: None but God could be the Object of our Trust, Faith, and Hope, and Obedience. None but God could be sufficiently able to succour us at all times.

Chap. 3. Of the Three Persons in the Godhead, the Son is the fittest to be Mediator. What are the Reasons of it.

Chap. 4. That it was necessary our Mediator should be Man. The Reasons why the Angelical Nature would not have been proper for this Work; and therefore why Christ assumed not that, but the Nature of Man.

Chap. 5. That it was fit that our Mediator should be both God and Man in One Person, that so he might partake of the Nature of both Parties, and be a Middle Person between them, and fill up the distance, and bring them near to one another. That he might be in a better Capacity to communicate unto us his Benefits, and that he might be capable of performing what our Redemption requir'd.

Chap. 6. How the two Natures, the Divine and Humane, which are so different, are united into One Person, Christ, God-Man. That the Son of God did not assume an Humane Person, but the Nature. The Reasons why an Humane Person could not have been assumed. It was our whole Nature which the Son of God took, both Soul and Body. The Reasons which made this necessary.

Chap. 7. That it was not only fit that Christ should be Man, but such a Man, as to be like us in the Matter and Substance of his Body; And to be like us in his Production and Birth, to be born of a Woman as we are. What are the reasons of this. What is the reason why Christ though born of a Woman is yet without Sin. Why he is Man, and of the Jewish Nation.

Chap. 8. The Uses. Since God hath thus fitted us with a Mediator, we may be assured that he will fit us with all other things. Let us choose Christ to be our only Saviour, and trust in none but him. Is he God? Let us not then fear, or doubt. Hath he taken our Nature? Let us admire his Love in this, and consider our own Priviledge. Let us endeavour to fit our Natures all that we can for Fellowship with him.

BOOK III.

The Fulness of Abilities which are in Christ, to accomplish the Work of our Redemption, which are impossible to be found in any other Person.

Chap. 1. The All-sufficient Abilities to accomplish our Redemption, demonstrated from God the Fathers calling him to it, which he would never have done, had not he known him able. From Gods engaging also to furnish him with Abilities. From Christs undertaking it, which he did upon the Knowledge which he had of himself, as equal to the great Performance. From the Greatness and Excellency of his Person, who being God-Man, is able to do any thing. The Reasons which induced God to fix on this way of Salvation, to be by the Blood and Sacrifice of his Son. An Answer to that Objection, How God is said to pardon us freely by his Grace, when yet he requires full Satisfaction to be made.

Chap. 2. That in Christ alone there was sufficient Ability to take away Sin. The Weakness and Insufficiency of any Creature for this Work demonstrated. That it is for the greater Honour of Christ to Effect that, which none could do besides him. The Insufficiency of any Creature proved by an Enumeration of Particulars. That the Blood of all Sacrifices could not have such an Efficacy. That we were unable to satisfy God by any thing which we could suffer, or do. That all the Saints are as unable to help us in this Case. That it is beyond the Power of Angels themselves.

Chap

The Contents.

Chap. 3. That the most perfect Creature, though having all the Perfections of Christ and Humane Nature, yet could not be our Redeemer. The utmost extent to which the Power of any Creature can reach to save either himself or others, which yet all fall short of that which was to be performed for our Redemption.

Chap. 4. The Inability of the Creature to redeem us demonstrated from the Nature of the Satisfaction. First, That which the Law required, a Creature could not answer for us, neither in obeying the Precept, nor suffering the Penalty.

Chap. 5. That no Creatures could make that Satisfaction which an injur'd God required. They cannot compensate the wrong done to him by Sin, nor repair the loss of his Honour.

Chap. 6. That Christ hath made full Reparation of all which was lost by Sin. The Glory of the Law which Sin had darkned, is by him perfectly recover'd. And Gods Image, which Sin had defaced in Man, is more fully restored in him.

Chap. 7. That Christ hath repaired the Loss of Honour, which God sustained by Sin. Satisfaction in point of Honour being to be measur'd by the Excellency, Dignity, and Reputation of the Person satisfying. Christ being God-Man, in this respect makes the greatest which could be.

Chap. 8. What this Excellent and Glorious Person did for satisfaction brings more Honour to God, than ever Sin had done dishonour. The Glory which redounds to God from this Persons condescending to assume Humane Nature, and that too in such a low Condition, and meanest Circumstances.

Chap. 9. The principal matter of Christs Satisfaction was not only in a Diminishing of his Glory, but Despoiling him of it. And that he did this willingly, he humbled himself. And that his Person was the subject of this Debasing and Humiliation.

Chap. 10. The Greatness and Supereminent Worth of this Satisfaction as performed by such a Person. That hence the Acts of his Obedience exceed in Goodness all the Evil that is in Sin, and that therefore they make full Reparation since they honour God more than ever Sin had dishonoured him.

Chap. 11. That upon the whole it is evident, That there is all in the Satisfaction made by Christ, which Justice can require. An Enumeration of the several Pleas which may be fram'd against the Sinner, and how they are all answer'd by what our Redeemer hath perform'd.

Chap. 12. That all the Pleas which the Law can make against a Sinner are by this Satisfaction of Christ also fully Answered.

BOOK IV.

Christs Willingness to the Work of Redemption from Everlasting, till he accomplished it.

Chap. 1. That there are two things to be considered in the Obedience which Christ performed, The Will, and the Deed. That from all Eternity he Expressed his willingness in his consent to undertake the Work.

Chap. 2. That Christ renewed his Consent as soon as he came into the World. That his Humane Nature from his first Conception agreed to it. That this is apparent from the Scope and Intent of the Twenty Second Psalm.

Chap. 3. Shewing the Mystery of that Appellation given him, Jesus the Nazarite, to have been, that he was thus dedicated from his very Conception to this great work.

Chap. 4. That Sampson, and other Nazarites of the Law, were Types of Christ the great Nazarite, who Dedicated him to the Holy Work of Redemption. By what Rules and Reasons we may judge that Christ was in this respect typified by those Nazarites.

Chap. 5. How Christ was presignified as a Nazarite by these Types. The Parallel between him, and Sampson. How God having thus in the Type foretold, That Christ should be a Nazarite, so wisely order'd it, that both his Conception and Education should be there, that so that Name Nazarite, as an Inhabitant of that City, might belong to him.

Chap. 6. How God wisely ordered it, that the Jews should call Christ a Nazarite, though he was not really born in that City.

Chap. 7. That another Prophecie of Christ Isa. 11. 1. Jer. 23. 5. and Zech. 3. 8. is fulfilled in Christ a Nazarite, or Inhabitant of that City.

Chap. 8. That as Christ expressed his Will and Consent in the Dedication of himself to the Work, so he shewed his chearful Willingness in all the parts of the performance.

Chap. 9. That he did not shrink at the approach of his greatest Sufferings, his Death, but shewed a chearful resolution to the very last moment.

BOOK V.

Christ's Actual Performance of our Redemption. In the General, He gave himself for us. The particular Parts of our Redemption are, That he was made Sin, and a Curse; and by his Death obtain'd a Victory over Satan, whereby he delivers us from his Slavery: And hath perform'd all Righteousness which might answer the Law for us. And that Christ as our Great Shepherd takes care to preserve and secure us safe thus Redeem'd, and freed by Him.

Chap. 1. That God presently on Mans Fall making the Discovery to him of a Redeemer, Adam transmitted the Knowledge of him to his Posterity, and he was accordingly propos'd to the Faith of the Patriarchs.

Chap. 2. That Christ gave himself for us, to redeem us. What is implied in that Expression. We should duly consider the Greatness and Value of such a Gift. Christ giving himself is a High Testimony of his own peculiar Love to us.

Chap. 3. It is proved in the General, that Christ was made Sin, and a Curse for us, because he redeeming us who were under the Law, must become that, which we were in the Account, and Judgment of the Law. That Christ was made Sin for us demonstrated, and explained in what respect he was so. Uses drawn from the Doctrines.

Chap. 4. How Christ was made a Curse for us. That it was the curse of the Moral Law, and the whole substance of what it threatned. Arguments to prove that Christ suffered it.

Chap. 5. An Enumeration of the Particulars of the Curse which Christ endured. That assuming our Nature, he took also those Infirmities which Sin hath brought upon us. That a painful wretched Life being the Curse of our first Fathers Sins, the Life of Christ answerably was filled with Miseries and Sorrows.

Chap. 6. What were the Sufferings of Christ, as bearing the Curse of our Sins, more immediately foregoing his Crucifixion, Described in an Exposition of the first One and Twenty Verses of the Eighteenth Chapter of Johns Gospel. A Garden was the Place where he had his first Agonies, and was Apprehended. The Reasons why such a Place was Appointed and chosen by him. The first Nine Verses explained and Observations raised from them.

Chap. 7. The Tenth and Eleventh Verses Explained with suitable Observations raised from them. The willingness which Christ expressed to come to die, and be made a Sacrifice, and would have nothing to hinder it.

Chap. 8. How Christ was taken and bound by those who came to Apprehend Him, and was thus led away by them as the Victims, or Sacrifices used to be to the Altar. That even this his binding hath an Influence on our being loosened from those Chains, wherein Sin hath fetter'd us.

Chap. 9. Peter's Denial of Christ. That this was an Addition to his Sufferings.

Chap. 10. The Account of Christ's Examination before Caiaphas, in the Nineteenth, Twentieth, and One and Twentieth Verses of this Eighteenth Chapter of John. We now come to the other part of Christ's Sufferings recorded in this Chapter, and that is a strict Examination of him.

Chap. 11. The last Sufferings of Christ coming to his Death. Both the shame and torments are to be considered in them.

Chap. 12. The Extremity of pain which Christ our Redeemer indured in his Body. His being harrassed day and night without a moments rest. His being Crowned with Thorns, torn with Rods, and at last Crucified.

Chap. 13. The greatest of all Christ's Sufferings were those of his Soul. What were the Causes of those Sorrows. The Greatness of those Sufferings. Wherein they did consist. How it could consist with his being the Son of God, to be forsaken of God, and to bear such extremity of his Fathers Wrath.

Chap. 14. Uses of Christ's being made Sin, and a Curse for us. We see herein God the Fathers Love, and his own. We should not regret to suffer any thing for Christ. Let us obey and worship Christ in Soul and Spirit. The troubled in Soul should be comforted. We see the hainousness of Sin by the greatness of Christ's Sufferings, and the Misery of being without an Interest in Christ. We should charge our Sins upon our selves for Humiliation. We should mourn for them, and hate them.

Chap. 15. The Victory which Christ gain'd over Satan by his Death. The Glory of this Victory displayed by the Consideration of the Greatness of that Power which the Devil had over us.

Chap. 16. How it was Christ's Great Concern, and Interest, to Destroy the Power

The Contents.

Power of Satan. The Conquest which he had over him by his Death, and his open, and Glorious Triumph after the Victory, expressed in Colossians 2. 15.

Chap 17. The Victory which Christ obtains over the Devil, in us, and by us. How he not only Redeems us, but Delivers us from his Dominion, and Power. That not only Christ in his own Person should Conquer the Devil, and break his Power, but that we should bear a part in it with him, is implied in that first Promise in Gen. 3. That the Seed of the Woman should break the Serpents Head. That in all the several parts of that Power which Satan hath, and Acts in the World, Believers by the Virtue and Strength of Christ are Conquerors over him. That in the Issue they Conquer him, as to that Power which he hath to Tempt them to Sin. The several Ages of Christians considered from 1 John 2. 13, 14. That by Christ Believers prevail against Satan as to the Accusations of them, which he brings before God. That Christ, and the Saints at last defeat Satans designs, and Projects, and Enterprises, as he is Prince of this World.

Chap. 18. The last and compleat Victory which Christ and his Saints have over the Devil, both before, and at the Day of Judgment.

Chap. 19. Christs Fulness for our Justification. His Fulfilling the Law for us. That Justification doth not consist only in Pardon of Sin, and therefore it is not Christs Passive Obedience alone which is imputed to us. That the whole Righteousness which is in Christ is imputed to us for his Righteousness.

Chap. 20. That the perfect Holiness of Christs Nature is imputed to a Believer to justify him against the Condemnation of Original Sin.

Chap. 21. That not only our Legal but our Evangelical Righteousness is excluded from bearing any part in our Justification. Phil. 3. 9. explain'd and prov'd, that the Apostle there renounceth not only his Legal and Pharisaical, but his Evangelical Righteousness.

Chap. 22. That God Appointed Christ to be the Great Shepherd, to take care of the Elect Souls given to him. The mighty care and diligence which Christ exercises in discharge of this Office.

BOOK VI.

Of Christ our High Priest, as entred into the Holy of Holies in the Heavens. How we are to Treat, and Converse with God, and Christ Jesus under the Notion of his being our High Priest, and being entred into the Holy of Holies. And of our having liberty to enter thither to him, and to Converse with him there through Faith in Prayer.

God the Fathers Eternal Counsel and Transactions with Christ, to undertake the Work of Redemption for Man, consider'd as Fallen.

C H A P. I.

The Exposition of the Words of the Text. What is the great Design of the Gospel. The excellency of the Knowledge of it. The highest attainment is to see the Gospel in its Original, those Eternal Transactions between God the Father, and God the Son, for the Salvation of Man.

2 C O R. v. 18, 19.

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. To wit, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself; not imputing their trespasses unto them, and hath committed to us the word of reconciliation.

TH E S E Words do summarily tell us, what is the Argument of that great Mystery of the Gospel, as it concerneth Sinners; viz. Reconciliation: Therefore he styles it the Ministry of Reconciliation: that is the Title he gives the Doctrine of it; and withal further explains this: To wit, says he, That God was in Christ reconciling the world; and so the foot of the Angels Evangelical Song, wherein they sung forth the main end of Christs Nativity, was Reconciliation, Luke 2. 14. Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men. This Reconciliation consists of two parts, Peace and good Will.

The full scope of the words you may conceive, as I have cast them into this frame; and withal, what also is the summe of all the Discourse upon them.

First, The word Reconcile imports the whole of Mankind to have been once Created in an estate of Amity and Friendship with God: For to Reconcile, is to make Friends again, and argues former Friendship. And this sets and limits the Subject of these Eternal Transactions between God the Father and the Son, to have been Man consider'd as Fallen.

And Secondly, The whole lump of Men being fallen off from God into a deep rebellion, and become of the Devils side and faction: God who is infinite in Love, and rich in Mercy, bearing everlasting and secret good Will to some of these, now become Rebels; in all Ages hath maintained certain Leiger Embassadors in the World, to treat with this rebellious Rout, and to conclude a Peace betwixt them and him: 2 Cor. 5. 20. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christs stead, be ye reconciled to God. And hath furnished them, (as all other Embassadors use to be) with a large and gracious Commission; the Title of which is, The Ministry of Reconciliation: And hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; ver. 18. The summe of which Commission hath these two principal Parts.

1. On the Part of him; to publish and proclaim his Royal and Gracious Intentions towards them: For when two are at Variance, there can be no hope of Peace and Reconciliation, unless the Party wronged and injured shew an inclination (at least) to listen to an agreement. Now as to that, he hath impowered and commanded them with all confidence and credence to declare;

First, That whereas they might conceive him most justly to be averfe to the very motion of it; that yet he, for his part, is not only contented, and inclined to listen to an Agreement; but is and hath been ever so fully willing and desirous of it, that he hath made it as it were his chief business, and as that which he hath plotted to bring about; and that he for his part hath been Reconciling the World to himself by Christ. God [was in] Christs reconciling; yea, and from everlasting hath been. And though all things else are of him, as Verse 18. he Prefaceth unto this; yet this mainly above all other things. Take the whole of them, [All things are of God who hath reconciled us] he hath been (as it were) totus in illo, wholly bent upon this of all things else. And whereas it might yet be thought, that he being so Just, and having declared himself so Jealous a God, sensible of the least Injury, so tender of his Glory, and Jealous of the least Violation or Wrong done thereto; that he therefore would require and propound, to have full Satisfaction from them first, as the Condition of his and their Accord and Agreement; which that they, or any other Creature for them, either were able or willing to perform, was utterly out of all hope. Therefore,

Secondly, He bids his Embassadors declare, that as to that Point, Men need not trouble themselves, nor take care about it; for he himself hath further been so Zealously affected in this business, that he himself hath made full Provision, and took Order for that aforehand, and done it to their hand: He hath been in Christ reconciling the world: That is, in him and by him, as a Mediator, and Umpire, and Surety between them and him, this great matter hath been taken up, and accorded: For he and Jesus Christ, his only Son, have from all Eternity laid their Counsels together (as I may so speak with Reverence) to end this great difference; and they both contriv'd and agreed, that Christ should undertake to satisfie his Father for all the Wrong was done to him, all which he should take upon himself, as if he were guilty of it; He was made sin, 2 Cor. 5. 21. that is, a Surety and a Satisfaction for it: And God the Father upon it, is so fully satisfied, as he is ready not only not to impute their Sins to them, Verse 19. but to impute all all Christs Righteousness to them, and to receive them into favour more fully than ever they were. He was made Sin, that they might be made the Righteousness of God in him. Chap. 1.

2. The second part of our Commission is what concerns Men, the Parties to be Reconcil'd; and God hath given us his Embassadors, full Power and Authority to deal with men about it, and to strike up the compact, and perfect this agreement unto a full and final issue and end, with charge to tell this Message, indefinitely to all, and every Man in the World; and that founded upon this ground, that Reconciliation is to be obtained from God, for some in the World: And thereupon to exhort all and every one that hears it, to be Reconciled; and Men accordingly are to seek it as thus revealed to them by us; and these Exhortations are to be entertained by them, as if God had exhorted and perswaded them thereunto. So Ver. 20. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christs stead, be ye reconciled to God.

And this (my Brethren) is the Gospel, which is the best News that ever Ear heard, or Tongue was imployed to utter; which took up Gods Thoughts from all Eternity, and lay hid in his Breast; and which none knew but his Son and Spirit; a News so blessed and worthy of all acceptance: which as soon as it brake out, Heaven and Earth rang with joy again: The Angels could not hold; but as ambitious to be the first relaters of it, posted down to Earth, to bring the News of it: Luke 2. 13, 14. And suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men.

And this being committed unto us to be the dispensers of it, this makes our very Feet beautiful in the eyes of broken-hearted Sinners: Rom. 10. 15. And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! This makes our Calling envied, (if possibly it were Envy should befall those blessed Spirits) envied of the Angels themselves, to whom God hath not betruſted this Glorious Embassy, the most Honourable Imployment that ever Creature dealt in. Heb. 2. The law was given by Angels, ver. 2. but God hath not put into subjection to the Angels the world to come, whercof we speak; (speaking of the Gospel, ver. 5.) for which Paul brings in that long and famous Thanksgiving, 1 Tim. 1. 11, 12. According to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust. And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry. He accounted that the greatest Mercy which Jesus Christ (next his own Salvation) had shown him, and wherein he made him a pattern of his super-excelling Grace, that he committed the Gospel to his trust; which of all other Doctrines, tend the most to the good of Men. 1 Tim. 1. 15. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. Tit. 3. 7, 8. That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works: these things are good and profitable unto men. What things? See ver. 4. even this Doctrine of Salvation; and these things, saith he, I would that thou affirm constantly, ver. 8. For this is the power of God unto Salvation; as Rom. 1. 16. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. i. e. It is the most powerful and prevailing means to subdue the rebellious hearts of Men, and overcome them: And whereas the Preaching of the Law makes Men often sturdy, this proclamation of Pardon and Reconciliation, brings men in as volunteers, and that by troops. Luke 16. 16. The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, (that is the Gospel) and every man presseth into it: Intimating that before, when the Law was most Preached and the Gospel but sparingly, (and but as a Parenthesis as it were) there were few brought in : But the Gospel brought them in by heaps and multitudes, for so the opposition there stands, with which Men were so taken and affected, that glad was he that could get in with pressure and crouding.

And therefore we likewise freely profess to you, that these things we would affirm constantly, (were men fitted, broken and humbled) and preach in a manner nothing else, for it is the summe and upshot of our Ministry; as the Title is given it in the Text, The Ministry of Reconciliation. And we would desire to know nothing among you but Christ; as Paul speaks to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 2. 2. For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified : And this chiefly, Christ as Crucified to Reconcile you; Crucified before your eyes in the Gospel. Gal. 3. 5. He therefore that ministrereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? And as for you, your Work ἡ ἔργον is to Believe; This is the work of God, (sayes Christ) John 6. 29. to believe in him whom God hath sent : So our ἡ ἔργον, our Work, is to Preach him to you whom God hath sent, that you may believe in him, and therefore we account it our misery, that we are faine to spend the most of our time in making our selves work, as in Preaching the Law we do; and are faine to come with the great hammer of the Law, and break all your bones in pieces, that we may then, as it is in Esa. 61. 1. Preach the Gospel, and bind up the broken-hearted. It is tiresome to us, that we must take Men by the throats, and arrest them by the Law, (as we do) in the name of the great God, and hale them to Prison, and there shut them up under the Law, as the Apostles phrase is, Gal. 3. 23. that then we may bring them Christs bail, and by Preaching the Gospel, proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound : As the allusion is, Esa. 61. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek, he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.

And we do withal protest before God and Men this day, that when we come to Preach it, we yet tremble to do it more than any Doctrine else: for we are afraid that Men should lye still in their Sins; those that are Drunkards should be Drunkards still, and unclean still, and least those who with-hold the Truth in Unrighteousness, (their Consciences telling them that they live and lye in known Sins) least they should go on to do so still after the delivery of it; which if they shall do, they had better have been in Hell than in the Assembly of Saints to hear the Gospel. We tremble therefore at it, as knowing that Men cannot hear it, and disobey it, but under an extraordinary Curse, oftentimes a final one, and such a one as Christ cursed the Fig-tree with, when he said, Never Fruit grow on thee more.

But to come unto that which is my main and principal Intendment and Scope of this Text, and which is the first and original part of the Gospel, viz. The Everlasting Transaction which the Father had with his Son, in calling him to the Work of Redemption of us Men, considered as Sinners. Other pieces of the Gospel; As those on Christs part, his Fitness for the Work, his Ability and Performance in being made Sin and a Curse, do in their due place follow upon other Texts. But attend at present unto the Fountain and Original of them all, unto that which sets all the Wheels going from Eternity; the Story of which, were it but for the Antiquity thereof, is well worth the hearing; being with all the greatest Entercourse and Treaty about the greatest Affair, between Persons of the highest Sovereignty and Majesty, that ever was Transacted either in Heaven or Earth, or ever will be. And accordingly, the highest form or rank of Christians termed Fathers, have for their attainments this Mark and Character set upon them, To know him that was from the beginning, as the highest pitch of all: 1 John 2. 14. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. The Apostle speaks with some allusion to what is the Glory of Old Men, and so suitably of Old Men in Christ. They use to boast of knowing things that are of Antiquity and of elder years, as having fallen under their observation; as it is the property of Young Men to boast of their Strength and Vigour. Prov. 20. 29. The glory of young men is their strength, and the beauty of old men is the gray head: i. e. Their Wisdom, which lyes in their Grey Heads, and which ariseth from their having the prospect of former times. John therefore correspondently commends strong men grown up in Christianity for their strength, as the peculiar excellency of that Age in Christ. You are strong (sayes he) and have overcome the wicked one. But he commends Fathers in Christ for their Knowledge in things most Antient; and because the Story of him that was from the beginning, is the Ancientest of all other that ever was, it is therefore made their Excellency to know it, and is commended to their study; and the Knowledge of the Eternal Transactions of God the Father for Mans Salvation, is the highest of their attainments.

C H A P. II.

Some Observations premised. That it is to the Father the Reconciliation is made, and to Him the Affair is chiefly attributed.

ERE I come to the Particulars of these Transactions between God the Father and the Son for our Salvation, I will premise some General Observations out of the Text, which shall make way for what follows.

The great business of Reconciliation (as I said) is both the subject of the Gospel and of this Text, which tells us of those two great Persons, by whom this great business was transacted, and brought to such a pass, as Men may come to be Reconciled, and friends with God again; and what they are, that is God the Father, the Party wronged and injured, and Christ the means of Reconciliation, the Umpire and Mediator between both: God was in Christ reconciling the world.

By God is therefore meant a distinct Person from Christ; for in the former words it is said, That he hath reconciled all things to himself by Christ: And that Person is the Father, as other Scriptures tell us.

Obj. 1. That the Father is the Person to whom Reconciliation is made. Not but that it is made to the rest also: But

First, Because he being the First Person, the Suit against us runs in his Name especially, though it be the Quarrel of all the rest of the Persons, and the Injury done against all the rest. Thus in Colledges, and such common Societies, their Suits against others are commenced in some ones Name, as the Masters or the like, whose Name is used for the whole, and so this common Quarrel and Suit of Trespas which the whole Trinity hath against us, is commenced in God the Fathers Name for all the rest; and therefore Christ is said to be an Advocate with the Father, 1 John 2. 1. as the Party betruſted to take the Atonement; and make an end of the Quarrel in the Name of all the rest. And

Secondly, Because as Creation is attributed to the Father especially, so the Covenant of Works, the Law, the Covenant we were Created under being a Covenant made especially with the Father in the Name of the rest; therefore Sin, which was the transgression of that Covenant, is said to be as it were especially against him; for in the dispensation of that Covenant he ruled immediately: and as the Sins against the Second Covenant are said to be in a more especial manner against Christ and the Holy Ghost, so those against the First which occasioned the performance of Reconciliation, are said to be against the Father: Because therefore the transgressions of the First Testament, as they are called Heb. 9. 15. are especially said to be committed against him, therefore he takes upon him as the Person especially aggrieved, and so the Reconciliation is said to be made to him.

Thirdly, And further, because the other two Persons have other distinct Offices in the work of Reconciliation. The Son he is to transact the part of a Mediator, as the Person by whom Reconciliation is to be performed; and the Holy Ghost, he is to make report of that Peace and Atonement made and shed abroad the love of both. Rom. 5. 5. And hope maketh us not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us. He speaks of Gods Love in Reconciling us, Ver. 8. 9, 10. But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ dyed for us. Much more then being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son: much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. Therefore, the Father he bears (if any such part) the part of him that receives into favour, and to whom we are to be Reconciled.

To illustrate this, we are in the same sence and respect said to be Reconciled to the Father, in which we are taught especially to pray to the Father, Our Father, &c.: For the Son and the Spirit do bear other parts in our Prayers; the Son, he is the Master of Requests, the Intercessor, in whose Name therefore our Prayers are to be made: The Holy Ghost, he is the Inditer of our Prayers, and Helper of our Infirmities: Rom. 8. 26, 27. Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit it self maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the Saints according to the will of God. Therefore the Father, he is expressed as the Party we pray unto; and thus it is in like manner in the business of Reconciliation: It is the Father to whom it is and was to be made, and therefore by him to be first promoted and set on work.

Obs. 2. Observe in the Second place, that as he is made the special Person to whom the Reconciliation is made, so the whole business is in an especial manner attributed to him.

Though it be done and performed wholly by Christ as the Mediator, yet the Father is he who sets all on work, and is said to reconcile by Christ to himself. It is not only that Christ hath been about Reconciling us to him, but that he hath been a Reconciling us to himself, and that in Christ, as having the first, and chief, and main hand in the work, as well as being the Person, to whom Reconciliation is made.

God the Father was not as other Parties injured, that use to carry themselves as meer Passives in an Agreement when it is to be wrought; who though they are at length brought to it, yet they will not seem to consent to have any hand in it, or to be the first movers or the seekers of it: But God the Father carried himself otherwise in the Reconciling of us; he is active in it, he moves it and sets it on foot, and useth his interest in his Son for the effecting of it. In general he is said especially to do two things.

First, He it is that draws the platform of all the works that the other two Persons do put their hand to effect: Christ says, That he himself doth nothing, nothing but what he sees the Father first do ; John 5. 19. Then answered Jesus, and said unto them, Verily verily I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do : for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. So that he, the Father, the great plotter and contriver, that draws the Draught ; for it is added, He shoves all to the Son : Ver. 20. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doeth : and he will shew him greater works than these, that ye may marvel. As David the Father drew, and gave Solomon the Son, the Pattern of the Temple which he was to build : So God gave Christ the Platform of Reconciliation, of the Temple his Church, when he would have it built : the Platform is especially attributed to him, the effecting of it to the Son ; and therefore Christ calls them the Works which the Father had given him to finish. John 5. 36. But I have greater witness than that of John : for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

And Secondly, He not only draws the Platform of them, how he would have them done, but the first purpose and resolution to have them done, that is attributed to him also : Therefore Christ resolves all into his Fathers Will ; Even so Father it seemed good in thy sight. Matth. 11. 26. And so this Mystery and Draught of Reconciliation is called the Mystery of his Will : Eph. 1. 9. Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself. The Mystery because he draws the plat, and of his Will, because he resolves thus and thus to have it done ; who is said, Ver. 11. To work all things according to the counsel of his will. His Counsel draws the Draught, and his Will resolves thus to have it done ; and all this is there especially attributed to the Father.

Obj. 3. That he is not only made to have the first hand in it, but an universal hand in it also. All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself : And all things in the business of Salvation and Reconciliation are from him : That as it is said of Christ in the matter of Creation, That all things were made by him, and without him nothing was made, &c. John 1. 3. So Christ sayes, That he can do nothing, but what the Father first doeth. John 5. 19.

So as we find, that all in the matter of Reconciliation is attributed both to Christ, and also to God the Father, which makes it indeed a great Mystery, that all should be attributed to both ; so that we are beholden to both for all.

Christ is said to be all in all unto us, Col. 3. 11. and yet all that he is to us, he is to us of the Father. 1 Cor. 1. 30. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption :

As First, All Blessings and Benefits we have by Christ are of the Father as the first donor and giver, though by Christ ; as Paul blesteth him for Blessing us with all Spiritual Blessings in Christ. Eph. 1. 3. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. Christ is indeed Wisdom and Righteousness, which contains all that our needs require. But who made him all these ? He is not any of these, not the least of these, but as the Father hath made him unto us Wisdom, &c. 1 Cor. 1. 30. Who is made to us of God, &c. So as all is to be attributed as much to him as to Christ.

Yea all we have, and all we are in Christ, is said to be of him : Of him ye are in Christ Jesus. In the same place, we are indeed in Christ, but yet of God in Christ. He gives all the being we have in Christ, all our subsistence in him, to which those Blessings belong, that we are first in Christ, and then have all Blessings in him : He attributes all this to be of the Father.

Now how all this is to be attributed to both, St. Paul hath elsewhere taught us, using this very distinction, 1 Cor. 8. 6. The Father, of whom are all things, and we in him ; and one Lord Jesus Christ, as Mediator, by whom are all things, and we by him. By and of puts the distinction, which we have observed.

Yea,

Yea, and Thirdly, Jesus Christ as Mediator, is all and wholly of him the Father, and by his appointment. Whatsoever he is or hath as Mediator, is ordained to him by the Father : Therefore Christ is said to be his King ; Psal. 2. 6. Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. And Christ is called his Servant too, Esa. 42. 1. Behold my servant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my soul delighteth : I have put my Spirit upon him, he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. And it is said also, that God the Father appointed him a Priest ; Heb. 3. 1, 2. Wherefore holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and high priest of our profession, Christ Jesus ; Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house. And it was God the Father who raised him up as a Prophet, Deut. 18. 15. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me ; unto him ye shall hearken. And therefore too Christ is stiled an Heir of his appointment ; Heb. 1. 2. Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds.

Yea Fourthly, Whatever Christ did for us in doing or suffering, it was what his Father appointed him : All that he was to do, Luke 2. 49. and all he was to suffer, Acts 2. 23. it was his Fathers Cup, and he mingled it.

Yea Fifthly, All the Glory he hath as Mediator, the Father is said to give him : John 17. 22. And though it be no robbery for him to be equal with God ; yet that Great Name he hath, God is said to have given him. Phil. 2. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God : But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men : And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name : That at the name of Jesus every knee should bowe, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth ; And that every tongue should confess, that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

And the reason of all this is, that which is given there, even the Glory of the Father. The end of Christs great Name, and all that Honour we are to attribute to him is, To the Glory of God the Father. Ver. 11. Though Christ hath a Name above every Name, which we are to magnifie and adore ; yet all this his Name is to the Glory of the Father, who hath the Revenue of all : And therefore when the Lord Jesus Christ gives up his dispensatory Kingdom to his Father as Mediator, God shall be all in all. 1 Cor. 15. 28. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all. Why ? Because all was originally from him, therefore all shall end in him, and he shall be all in all.

C H A P. III.

What as to our Salvation was done by God the Father from all Eternity. The meaning of that Phrase God was Reconciling us in Christ. That God took up a strong Resolution and Purpose to reconcile some of the Fallen Sons of Men to himself. His Motives were not any thing in us, but purely his Love, and his Delight in Mercy. His Love in thus designing Salvation to us magnified by several Considerations.

TH E S E things being premised, we come now to shew what God the Father hath done towards this business of Reconciliation, how far he hath advanced it, and set it forwards.

Now the main of his Work was transacted secretly from Everlasting, as we have it here also expressed to us, 1 Cor. 5. 19. God was in Christ, he had said in the former verse, He hath (actually) reconciled (us) believers by Jesus Christ, but yet least they should think that this was a business begun of late to be done by him, then when Christ dyed, and they were converted; He further saies, That he hath made it his main business from all Eternity, God was in Christ, reconciling the World.

And to this purpose the alteration of the Phrase is observable, that speaking of actual Reconciliation, as performed by Christ, and applyed to them who were now Believers, he saith, He hath reconciled us by Jesus Christ, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, but speaking of this transaction from Everlasting, he saies ἐν Χριστῷ God was in Christ reconciling the World.

And it is the Observation of a great Divine *, though not upon this Text * sanctly. yet putting the difference between these two Phrases, of what God is said to do in Christ and by Christ, as in many places they are used; That when God is said to reconcile in Christ, or the like, it implies and notes out those immanent Acts of God in Christ. The preparation of all Mercies and Benefits we have by Christ, from him, and laying them up in him really, for us in Christ, as in our Head, in whom God lookt upon us, when we had no subsistence but in him; when God and he were alone plotting of all, framing of all that was after to be done by Christ for us, and applyed unto us: But the Particle, by whom, imports the actual performance of all this by Christ, and application of it to us, Eph. 1. 3, 4. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: ver. 4. According as he hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love. We are said to be blessed with all Spiritual Blessings in Christ, so that God was then a justifying us in him, a reconciling us in him.

And further to enlarge this Notion we may observe these Three Phrases severally used, in Christ, for Christ, and through Christ.

- I. In Christ, as here and elsewhere.
- II. For Christ, as to you it is given to suffer for Christ, Phil. 1. 29. For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake.

B

III. Through

III. Through Christ, as I am able to do all things through Christ, Phil. 4. 13. I can do all things through Christ which strengthneth me.

1. When he sayes in Christ, he speaks of Christ as of a Common Head, whom God lookt at as such, when he endowed us with all Blessings in him, by way of a Covenant with him for us.

2. For Christ notes out Christ as the Meritorious Cause, for whose sake we obtain those Blessings, for he was to purchase them.

3. And the Third notes out Christ as the Efficient Cause, that dispenseth that Grace as a King to us.

Let us therefore first begin with what God the Father hath done who was the chiefest in that secret Transaction between him and Christ from Everlasting, which is the ground work of all in the Gospel, which is therefore said to have layn hid in God, Eph. 3. 9. And to make all Men see, what is the fellowship of the Mystery, which from the beginning of the World, hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ.

And we will begin at that which was the Spring and first moving cause of all in him, and that is his will and good pleasure.

First, He took up a strong purpose and resolution to reconcile some of the Sons of Men to him, though they would or should turn Rebels against him, and this purpose began from him, and in him first: Hence the gathering together of all in one, That is the uniting and knitting his Church to himself in one head, who were scattered from him. The gaining and winning them in again, is said to be the Mystery of his Will, and attributed to his good pleasure, whereof he gives no reason, but a purpose taken up in himself, even according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself, Eph. 1. 9, 10. Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself: ver. 10. That in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him: Which he hath purposed in himself, i. e. whereof there is no other Motive nor first Mover or Occasioner, but himself, and this is there attributed chiefly to the Father:

To say no more, This he resolved upon, and would have effected, and this with infinite delight in the project of it, so as he should be gladder to see this business effected, and brought about then any that ever he should set his hand unto, his Heart was more in it than in all things else; All things are of God, but this above all:

And it was a great matter that he should pitch so peremptorily and resolutely on this course rather than any other, for he might have took up other purposes enough suitable and advantagious to his ends, but this pleased him above all other, Col. 1. 19, 20. For it pleased the Father, that in him should all fulness dwell, ver. 20. And (having made peace through the blood of his cross) by him to reconcile all things unto himself, by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. For these Enemies he could have destroyed, and have been glorified in their just destruction. He was able enough to bear the loss of Souls, What is it to him that the Nations perish? He should not have weakned himself awhit by cutting off all the Rebels, as Kings do, whose Glory consists in the multitude of their Subjects. Neither had he any need of Friends, he was happy enough afore they were, and could be as happy still without them: And if he would have Friends, had he not the Angels? that were constant Friends to him, to delight in. One would think he should have prized their Friendship more for the faithfulness of it; and if he had a mind to others, he could have created new ones. But out of these very Stones he would have a new Generation raised up, A Seed of Well-willers, or, a Generation of Children to Abraham: And yet as God offer'd to Moses he might have done in this our case, Numb. 14. 12. I will smite them with the pestilence.

pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation, and mightier than they. God might have made the offer of all Greatness and Glory to Christ, and as for us, might have destroyed us one and all, and have packt us all to Hell for Rebels; He had Prisons enough to have held us, which Kings often want in a General Rebellion, yea, and he would have been glorified in that our just destruction also. There was therefore no necessity put him upon this resolution, but his good pleasure, which was in himself, which made him say within himself of the Sons of Men, as in allusion to what is in Jer. 8.4. Shall they fall and not arise, shall he turn away and not return? His mind lingered after them, and he is glorified more in their Services than the Sufferings of Men, and he had Angels enough already, thousand thousands, and ten thousand times ten Thousands, and he would have some Men that should see his Glory, bless him, and be blest of him: He loves variety, to have two Witnesses at least, he creates two Worlds, Heaven and Earth, in them two several sorts of reasonable Creatures as Inhabitants, upon them he would shew two several ways of Salvation, and all to shew his manifold Wisdom, Eph 3. 8, 9, 10. Unto me who am less than the least of all Saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; ver. 9. And to make all men see, what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world, hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: ver. 10. To the intent that now the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God. And if you would further know, What should be the reason of this strange Affection in our God, Why? The Scripture gives it.

Our God being Love, even Love it self, 1 Joh. 4. 16. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Our God loving where he sets his Love with an Infinite Love as himself is, which love of all things else in him he loves to shew the utmost of, and of all works, works of Love have the most delight in them, therefore Mercy is called his Delight, his Darling: Micah 7. 18. Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy. Our God thus being Love, and Mercy his Delight, he would gladly shew how well he could love Creatures, he was most glad of the greatest opportunity to shew it, therefore he resolves upon this course, to reconcile Enemies, whatsoever it should cost: And the more they should cost him, the gladder should they be. The making of a Thousand new Friends could not have expressed so much love as the reconciling one Enemy. To love and delight in Friends, who had never wronged him was too narrow, shallow, and slight a way; He had heights, depths, breadth of Love, Eph, 3. 18. May be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth and length, and depth, and height: Which heights and depths of Love he would make known, and which nothing but the depths of our misery could have drawn out.

And that this is the reason, see Rom 5. 8, 10. But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ dyed for us, ver. 10. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son: much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his Life: God commends his Love towards us, that whilst we were yet Enemies, he gave his Son for us, not to be born only, but to die: Both our being Sinners, and his giving his Son, commends, or sets out his Love, and that he might commend it, he pitcheth on this course. And that this Love should be pitched upon Men, not the Angels that fell: It yet further commends his Love. There were but Two sorts of Sinners whose Sins could be taken away; and of the twain who would not have thought but the fallen Angels should have been propounded first, and have passed more easily, they were fairer and better Creatures than we, and if he regarded Service, one of them was able to do him more than a Thousand of us, when he had bought us, he must be at a great deal of more trouble to preserve and tend us, than we were able ever to requite in Service and attendance upon him: He must allow us much of our time to sleep, and eat, and to be idle in, to refresh our Bodies, and tend us as you would tend a Child; rock us asleep every Night, and make our Beds in Sicknes, Psal. 41. 3. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness: And feed us himself in due season: Whereas the Angels they could stand in his presence Day and Night and not be weary: And besides, the Nature of the Angels had been a fitter Match a great deal for his Son: They are Spirits, and so in a nearer assimilation to him. Who ever thought he should close to match so low as with us? All this makes for us still the more love, for it was the more free: And the more unlikely it is that he could love such as we, the more his Love is commended. The less we could do for him or for our selves, the more it would appear he did for us. He is Honoured more in our Dependance than our Service; He hath regard to the lowness of his Spouse and Handmaids, and lets the Mighty go, Principalities and Powers: he loves still to prefer the Younger, and make the Elder serve them, Rom. 9. The Angels are ministring Spirits for their good: Among Men, he culls out still the Poor, the Foolish, not many Wise or Noble, and he makes as unlikely a choice amongst his Creatures.

C H A P. I V.

That God in pursuance of his Gracious Design to save Sinners, exercised his Wisdom to contrive the fittest means of Accomplishing it. Though God might have pardoned Sin without satisfaction, yet he would not, and the Reasons of it.

AS Gods purpose was thus strongly bent upon the Salvation of Men, so his Wisdom and Council were exercised about the means whereby it might be effected, and it is a business that requires the depths of his Wisdom. We silly Men set upon many projects, which at first view delight and affect us; and we are hot upon them, which yet upon consultation we find not feasible, and so leave them, meeting with such difficulties in them, as we know not how to compass them: Though when the Heart is fully set upon any business, it will set Wit and Invention a work, to find out all means that Wit can reach to.

Now as Gods strong purpose and delights were in this great Work, so also his Depths of Wisdom were in it also. Therefore, Gods will is said to have Council joyned with it, to work all by Council, Eph. i. 11. He works all by Council to effect and bring to pass what his Will hath pitched upon, and the stronger his Will is in a thing, the deeper are his Councils about it, and this business as he resolves to have it carried, will prove such as will draw out his depths of Wisdom.

And therefore as you have seen his Will thus strongly pitcht upon it, as his highest and deepest project to manifest the dearest Affection in him to the utmost, so you shall now see his Wisdom soar as high (indeed infinitely) out of our Sight, Thoughts, and Imaginations, to find out a correspondent means, not only to effect it, but in effecting it, to shew both Love and Wisdom, and give full satisfaction to his Justice, which was infinitely beyond the reach of any created Understanding to have found out.

There was one way indeed which was more obvious, and that was to pardon the Rebels, and make no more ado of it; for he might if he had pleased have ran a way and course of meer Mercy not temper'd with Justice at all, he might have pardoned without satisfaction, I will not now dispute it; only this I will say for the confirmation of it, To punish Sin being an Act of his Will, as well as other Works of his ad extra, may therefore be suspended as he himself pleaseth. To hate Sin is his Nature, and that Sin deserves Death, is also the Natural and inseparable Property, Consequent and Demerit of it; but the expression of this hatred, and of what Sin deserves by actual punishment, is an Act of his Will, and so might be suspended.

But besides, That this way would not manifest such depths of Love, though thus to have pardoned one Man had shewn more Love than was shewn to all the Angels who never sinned: It also was not adequate and answerable to all those his Glorious Ends, and Purposes, and other Resolutions in this Plot, which he will be constant unto, and make to meet in it; (and it is the proper use of Wisdom to make all ends meet) and God will not break one Rule or Purpose he takes up; and he hath other projects afoot besides: For,

First, He meant to give a Law, whereof he will not have the least iota to perish or be in vain, Matth. 5. 18. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Which Law might both discover what was Sin, and what an heinous thing thing it was, and shew by a threatenng the punishment which it naturally doth deserve, and what the Sinner might expect in Justice from him, this was necessary; for vvhhere there is no Lavv, there is no Sin, Rom. 5. 13. Sin is not imputed where there is no law: And othervvise there should have been no Sinner actually capable of punishment.

Secondly, Giving this Lavv, he takes upon him to be a Judge, and the Judge of all the World: For in the very making of the Lavv, he declares himself to be so.

Thirdly, If so then he is engaged upon many strong Motives, to shew his Justice against Sin in that punishment he threatned; Though still in that he is Judge of all the World, and the Maker of the Lavv, he could if he pleased forbear to execute those threatenngs, (seeing a Note of irrevocation vvvas not added to them;) for he that made the Lavv may repeal that part of it, yet most strong Motives these are to execute them.

For is he not the Judge of all the World? And is it not a Righteous thing vvwith God to render vengeance, 2 Thess. 1. 5, 6. Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer: ver. 6. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you: And shall not the Judge of all the World do right, Gen. 18. And is he not therefore to set a Copy to all Judges else, being Judge of all the World: Primum in quolibet genere, est mensura reliquorum, and is not he an abomination to him that justifies the Unrighteous, and condemns the Innocent, Prov. 17. 15. These may not dispense vvwith the Lavvs, because they are but his Justices, and though he might dispense being the Supreme Judge, yet if all the World be his Circuit, and he means to condemn the Angels by the Lavv, and shew his Justice on them, how vvwill he clearly overcome vvwhen he judgeth them as it is in Rom. 3. 4. Stop their mouths, as it is at the 19. verse, if he shewvs not his Justice against those Sins he pardons. And though he might say to them, Pay vvwhat you ovve, vvwhat is that to you: Yet even the Men he pardons, and pardons to that end to shew his Mercy vvould esteem Sin less, and pardon less if it vvvere procured and obtained lightly, and should Sin vvwhich is the greatest inordinacy, and vvould not be brought in compass in his Government, vvwhich doth order all things, be left to its extravagant course, and passed unregarded, and escaped as free as Holiness.

And again are not all his Attributes, his Nature, his Justice, as vvwell as Mercy? His Hatred of Sin, as vvwell as the Love of his Creature, and is not that Nature of his pure Act, and therefore active, and therefore provokes all his Will to manifest these his Attributes upon all occasions, doth not justice boyl vvwithin him against Sin, as vvwell as his Bowvvels of Mercy earn tovwards the Sinner: Is not the Plot of Reconciliation his Master-piece, vvwherein he means to bring all his Attributes upon the Stage; and should his Justice, and this expressed by a Lavv keep in and sit dovvn contented, vvwithout shewving its self? No, and therefore he resolves to be Just, and have his Justice, and Lavv satisfied as vvwell as to justify the Sinner, Rom. 3. 26. To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. And as to run a course of meer rigorous Justice pleased him not; so likewise nor to stretch the pure absolute prerogative of Mercy: vvwherefore some of the Fathers, have after the manner of Men brought in Mercy and Justice here pleading; the project of Mercy vvvas his delight, as Mercy is, Micah. 7. 18. And he had resolved above all to shew it; but then Justice also is his Scepter, vvwhereby he is to Rule and Govern, and Judge the World; vvwherefore his Wisdom, as a middle Attribute steps in, and interposeth as a means of Mediation between them both, and undertakes to compound the business, and to accommodate all, so, as both shall have their desire and aims, their full demonstration and accomplishment.

C H A P. V.

To the effecting of all the Designs both of Justice and Mercy, it was necessary that a full and complete satisfaction should be made, which we being unable to pay, Divine Wisdom thought of another Person to undertake, and to do it for us. That Gods Justice is contented with this Commutation of the Person, since hereby that Attribute is more glorified, and all the ends of the Law answered, then if we the Offenders had in our own Persons suffered the due punishment of Sin.

THIS Accomplishment of all the designs both of Justice and Mercy must be by satisfaction, by full and adequate ransome, ἀντίλυτρον, 1 Tim. 2. 6. Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time; which is redditio equivalentis pro equivalenti, which the Sinner of himself would never have been able to perform, there is no thinking of it, Rom. 5. 6, 7, 8. For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. ver. 7. For scarcely for a righteous will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die ver. 8. But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. We are said to be without strength, and it is there brought in, as the great demonstration of Christs love in dying for us, when we were yet without strength: And if nothing we are, much less any thing we have or can offer; the blood of Bulls and Goats are not able; It is not possible to take away Sin by it, Heb. 10. 4. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats, should take away sins: Add to them all the Creatures that are the appurtenances of Man which man hath to give, as Gold, Silver, pretious Stones, not the whole World of them would do: For nothing less Noble than Man can be a sufficient surety for Mans Life which Sin deprives us of. All such things are not worth a Soul, which is to be lost for sin, said he that paid for one, Matth. 16. 26. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole World, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? And as it is in Micah 6. 7. Will the Lord be pleased with rivers of oyl, nay with thy first born of thy body for the sin of thy soul. There is no proportion, God would never have turned away so fair a Chapman, if his Justice could afford so cheap a commutation. And as not Rivers of Oyl, so nor Rivers of Tears, which (as all other actions that come from us) are defiled, and become but as puddle-water.

His Wisdom therefore thought of a Commutation, so as that that satisfaction should be performed by a surety in our stead, who might be a Mediator, and Umpire; and who might take our Sins upon himself, and upon whom God might lay the iniquity of us all, Isa. 53. 6. and exact the punishment as Junius reads it, that might become a surety, Heb. 7. 21, 22. For those priests were made without an oath: but this with an oath, by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. ver. 22. By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament. That might make satisfaction, being made sin, 2 Cor. 5. 21. For he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. That being made of a woman might be under the Law, Gal. 4. 4. But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law, and who so might give and expose himself as a ransom and ἀντίλυτρον, a sufficient adequate satisfaction.

And his Justice will be content to admit of such a Commutation, and that such a satisfaction should be performed by a surety in our stead: For when all Parties are satisfied, and no wrong is done to any, Justice may well be satisfied. For if the Parties undertaking it be willing, Volenti non fit injuria; and the great Undertaker having power over that thing which he offers to lay down for satisfaction, being Lord of it, no other one is wronged.

Neither is the Party to be satisfied wronged, if he that undertakes it be of ability fully to satisfy and to fulfil what he desires, and if being the Law-giver he be willing to assent to this act of his, and to accept it: For, being Lord of his own Law, he may dispense with the Letter of it, if so be those Holy ends, which his Council had in making it, be accomplished, and attained; and if the reason of the Law and Law-giver be satisfied, then is the Law. Now the ends and grounds of giving Gods Law were to declare and shew forth his Justice, and hatred against Sin where ever he found it. Now his Justice and hatred of Sin is as fully manifested when punishment is executed upon a Party, and assuming our sins on himself, and undertaking to be a Surety, as if the Sinner himself were punished, if not more in that [he] doth but undertake it for another, and yet is not spared. As God is said to hear our Prayers, and fulfil his promise; when he answers to the ground of our Prayers, though not in the thing: So are the cries of Sin, or Justice against the Sinner answered, and Gods threatenings fulfilled when another is punished, because all the ends of the Lawgiver are fully accomplished. It is true, the Tenor and Letter of the Law is dispensed with, but not the Debt, that is as fully exacted as ever; 'tis but a dispensation of the Party obliged, not of the obligation it self, or of the Debt, or of the reason why the Debt is exacted: It is not wholly secundum legem, nor yet contra, ἐδὲ κατὰ νόμον ἢ δὲ κατὰ νόμον ἀλλὰ ὑπὲρ νόμον καὶ ὑπὲρ νόμου, 'Tis a laying no less solid than elegant, and therefore the more elegant, because it was anciently used in another case. And although the Law doth not mention or name a Surety, and the Malefactors single Bond be only mentioned therein, and the threatening directed against him, and his Name is only in the project, because the Law in it self supposeth as yet none else guilty, and can challenge none else: Yet if some other that is Lord of his own action, subject himself to the Law willingly, which Will of his is a Law to him; and the Law-giver himself that is Lord of the Law accepts this, as seeing the same ends shall be satisfied, for which he made the Law; in this case the Law takes hold of the Surety or Undertaker; and he may let the Malefactor go free.

And now that his Wisdom hath found a course and way of Mediation, between his Justice and his Mercy; yet vvho is there in Heaven and Earth should be a fit Mediator, both able and vvilling to undertake it, and faithful to perform it?

C H A P. VI.

The great Difficulty was to find out a Person of Strength equal to so high an Undertaking. Neither Angels nor Men could have found out, or presented a fit Person. God manifest in the Flesh for Redemption of Man, was a Mystery above all the Thoughts of Angels or Men; and was worthy only of Gods Wisdom to find out.

TH E difficulty is still behind; a Mystery so great as would have nonplust Heaven and Earth, Angels and Men, Nodus Deo vindice dignus: So as if God had referred it to a Consultation of Men and Angels, and impannell'd all intelligible Natures upon this Grand Jury for to save Men, and offered but thus fairly; though none of you can do it, yet find you but out the way and Person, and I will set my power to the effecting of it, they would have returned in a verdict and Bill of ignoramus. After millions of years consultation their thoughts would not have presumed to have waded into this depth, so far as to think that Justice might dispense in the least measure with so Holy a Law, and admit a Commutation.

But impossible it was they should have thought of the Person that should give full satisfaction to his Justice, it passed all created Powers to perform it (as I shall shew, when I shall shew Christs ability to this work;) and as it passed their power to effect it, so their skill and reach. We who could never have found out a remedy for a cut finger, had not God prescribed and appointed one, could much less for this, it being a case of such difficulty. The Devils they could not imagine any way no more for us than for themselves; and therefore tempted Man, thinking him when he had sinned sure enough, and Hell Gates so strongly lockt, that no Art could find or make a Key to open them, or Power to break them open. Adam, poor Man, he trembled, and knew not which way to turn him, and thought God would have flown upon him presently; The good Angels they know it but by the Church, Eph. 3. 10. To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God. In this streight God himself aforehand set his depths of Wisdom a work to find out one, in and by whom all things might be accommodated; and out of those Infinite depths found out and invented a way and means of effecting our Reconciliation, even in the incarnation and death of his own Son: Before the wound given he provided a Plaister: And to allude to Abrahams Speech, provided a Sacrifice unknown to us, and a sufficient remedy to salve all again; which otherwise had been past finding out.

For the assumption of our Nature into one Person with the Son of God, was a thing thought credible when revealed, because possible, yet hardly so conceived, even by Mary, when it was told her by the Angel, Luk. 1. 34. How can this thing be? saies she. There is nothing in all the Works of Nature to make a correspondent Example for it; yea Nature denies such a Composition, to confound Heaven and Earth; all other Religions abhor it: It was the great stumbling-block of the Jews as they object it to him, John 10. 33. The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy, and because that thou, being a man, makest thy self God.

Book I.

But suppose that Myſtery had been made known, as ſome ſay it was, to the Angels, That Chriſt in our Nature ſhould be a Head, a Mediator of Union; The ſtomaking of which, ſay ſome, was their fall: Yet to have imagined him a Mediator of Reconciliation; and that he ſhould ſatisfie God for us, and be made Sin and a Curſe, they would have trembled to have thought it, if God had not firſt ſaid it. Nay when Chriſt told his Apoſtles what he was to ſuffer, their thoughts ſeemed to abhor it: Maſter ſpare thy ſelf, ſays Peter, Matth. 16. 21, 22 From that time forth began Jeſus to ſhew unto his diſciples, how that he muſt go unto Jeruſalem, and ſuffer many things of the elders, and chief prieſts, and ſcribes, and be killed, and be raiſed again the third day: ver. 22. Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, ſaying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this ſhall not be unto thee.

This Invention therefore Gods Wiſdom alone is to have the Glory of, and therefore it is called, The hidden wiſdom of God, as in a myſtery, 1 Cor. 2.7. But we ſpeak the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, even the hidden wiſdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory. The chief piece of which Myſtery is God manifeſt in the Fleſh, 1 Tim. 3. 16. And without controverſie, great is the myſtery of godlineſs: God was manifeſt in the fleſh, juſtified in the ſpirit, ſeen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory: Which had God not revealed, none could ever have reacht; for it lay hid in God, Eph. 3. 9. And to make all men ſee what is the fellowſhip of the myſtery, which from the beginning of the world, hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jeſus Chriſt.

And which when revealed is without controverſie, ſo great a myſtery, 1 Tim. 3. 16. that the very Revelation of it is the greateſt Argument that can be brought to prove the Truth of our Religion; for all Men that underſtand it, muſt and will with amazement, acknowledge and confeſs, That ſo great a Plot could not have been hatcht in the Womb of any created Underſtanding. As Sin was our invention, Eccl. 7. 29. ſo Chriſt alone was Gods, and therefore Chriſt is called, The Wiſdom of God; which is not ſpoken of him Eſſentially as Second Perſon, but manifeſtative, as Mediator; becauſe in him his Wiſdom to the utmoſt is made manifeſt.

C H A P. VII.

When Gods Wisdom had found out a fit Person, yet since this must be his only Son, here was a greater Difficulty for him to overcome, How to give him for us. The depths of Gods Love here, as of his Wisdom before, seen in not sparing his own Son, but exposing him to all the Rigours of Justice, which would not make the least abatements. It was of Free Choice that he made thus of his Son to be a Redeemer, to which he was not Obligated or Necessitated. He appointed his Son to Death for us, and laid his Injunction and Charge on him to perform this his Will.

NO W the Person is found out, and the way clear how it should be done, which Difficulty his Wisdom hath expedited; yet the finding out the Person hath brought a greater with it; for if none but he that was his Son could do it, and though a Son, yet if he become a Surety, Justice will not have him spared. He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Justice would abate nothing; without Blood there is no remission, and not the best Blood of his Body would serve, but of his Soul too: He must bear our Sins; Isa. 53. 5. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. He must pay God in the same coyn we should, and therefore must make his Soul an offering for sin; Isa. 53. 10, 11. Tet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many: for he shall bear their iniquities. And if he be made Sin, he must be made a Curse; and which is more than all this, God himself must be the Executioner, and his own Son the Person who suffers, and no Creature could strike stroke hard enough to make it satisfactory. Many a tender Mother hath not the heart to see her Child whipt, much less to whip it her self, although she knows it to be for its own profit and good, when it is in fault; but God, here in this case, must put his Son to Grief. Isa. 53. 10.

To find out the way to accomplish it, and the Person by whom, drew out but the depths of his Wisdom; but now if the business go forward, it will draw out the depths of his Love. It cost him but his Thoughts afore, now it must cost him his Son, the Son of his Love. If it were to sacrifice Worlds for us, he could have easily created Millions, and destroyed them again for us; as he gave Nations for their sakes; Isa. 42. 1. but what? to sacrifice his only Son, here was the Difficulty.

And if this be the only way (God might have said) bury the invention of it in eternal silence; let it never be made mention of, or come to light, that ever there were such a thing; let it here dye, rather than Christ dye; and therefore though his heart was much set upon this project, yet this might likely have dash'd all, that nothing should serve but the Death of his Son:

His Will might be more set upon this business of Reconciling us, than ever in any; but yet not upon such terms as these: He might be glad to see it done, yet not to cost so dear.

Behold therefore and wonder, and stand agast! He takes this way to choose, and chooseth Christ to this Work; and thus to choose him was God the Fathers Work, and indeed a Work of Wonder. Isa. 42. 1. Behold my servant, whom I uphold, my elect in whom my soul delights. And so Matth. 12. 18. Behold my servant whom I have chosen, in whom my soul is well pleased. That ever these two should be put together in one sentence: Scilicet. In whom my soul delights; with this, Behold my servant whom I have chosen to such a harsh and difficult a business; yet that was the very Reason of this choice, therefore he chooseth him, and therefore it is mentioned with it; for the more he loved him, the more Love he should show in giving him for us.

And observe it. It is made an Act of Choice in him, Full and Free: He had other ways; at least, he was no way necessitated unto this. He might have Destroyed us, and lost nothing by us: He might have Pardoned us, and shown more Love therein than unto Millions of new created Friends. Yea, suppose a Creature could have satisfied, yet he takes this way to choose; it suits with the utmost extent of all his Ends. If the Sacrifices of Bulls and Goats could (as they could not) have taken away Sin, yet these thou wouldst not, says Christ, Heb. 10. 8. but a body hast thou fitted me. He takes away the first, (says the Apostle) Heb. 10. 9. that he may establish the second. That is, he layeth aside all other means, (if other could be supposed) and chooseth this, and however resolves to take this course ex abundantia: And as in making his Promises, it is said, Heb. 6. 17. God being willing more abundantly to shew to the heirs of salvation the immutability of his counsel, confirms them by an oath, which puts an end to all controversies. Ver. 16. And because he can swear by no greater, he swears by himself. So say I in this: What if God, ex abundantia, if upon supposition other means could have done it; yet out of his abundance of Love to us, whom he thinks he can never Love enough, nor to shew his Love, do too much for; what if he means to give his Son because he cannot give a greater, and so at once to give the greatest instance of his Love and Justice: Of his Love, in that he is not only content to commute the Punishment, but lay it on his Son. Of his Justice, in that he will not only punish Sin in us but even in him: He will not spare his own Son, Rom. 8. 32. and so he will make sure work indeed, and put an end to all suppositions, fears, yea possibility of miscarriage: A way whereby to accommodate all things so fully, as all conveniences requisite to this Work should concur, yea abound indeed in Christs alone Mediation; the demonstration of which doth depend upon the second part of the Story, when we hear what Christ did do to the effecting of it.

So as it is, and may be a great Question, whether God hath shown more Love in pitching on this way, when by other means he might have saved us, if he would: Or if no other means could be had, and God was confined to this, yet that God would do so much rather than we should not be saved. We could have had Pardon without Christ, yet to have not Pardon only but Christ also, this is infinitely more. The Pardon of Sin is a greater Gift than millions of Worlds, but to have Pardon through Christ, and Christ with the Pardon, though but of one Sin, is more than the Pardon of worlds of Sins.

And further consider what he chose Christ unto; He appointed him to death, as the Apostle says of himself in another case: Therefore Peter, 1 Pet. 1, 18, 19. speaking of our Redemption by his Blood; which (says he) was verily fore-ordained before the foundation of the world: So as he chose him not as a Head only, but as a Lamb to be slain. Rev. 13. 8. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

I have elsewhere shewed how he was appointed to be an Heir; but there is some Dignity in that, and yet it was an Humiliation in him, to take that by Appointment which was his own by Natural Inheritance; but to be appointed to Death so long afore, and to such a Death; and there was not a circumstance in it but his Father appointed it, That it should be thus shameful, thus painful. &c. This was Love indeed: Acts 2. 23. Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel of God, ye have crucified and slain. All was done by the determinate Counsel of God. He not only secretly determined it, but which is more, called him to it, moved him in it himself to undertake to do all this; for Calling and Election of us are two distinct things, and so in the designing of Christ to this Office they are to be considered apart.

Now the Father was not only the contriver and designer, but had the Heart (such was his Love to us) to be himself the first propounder also of it to him, and withal to tell him he was to be the Executioner, or he should not be satisfied by him for Sin. And who should break this to Christ, and persuade him, or bring him off to be willing to it? No Creature had interest enough in him, to be sure. None of us did ever speak to him to dye, nor no Creature mention'd it for us; for none durst so much as to think it: Who did then? His Father owns it as his own work; Isa. 42. I have called thee in righteousness; and it was necessary he should: Both because,

First, Christ was not to begin to offer it of himself. That conceit of Bernards, bringing Christ in offering himself for poor Man, (as he doeth) saying, Take me, Sacrifice me for them, hath no ground; for, he doeth nothing but what his Father propounds: John 5. 19, 20. Then answered Jesus, and said unto them, Verily verily I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doeth: and he will shew him greater works than these, that ye may marvel. He is the Second Person, and all motions are to begin and come from the Father, who is the First Person: And as to this particular, Christ speaks in this wise; John 8. 42. I came from God, neither came I of my self, but my Father sent me.

Secondly, It being an Office, and an Office of Priesthood, he was to be appointed to it. Heb. 5. 4, 5. No man takes this honour to himself, but he that was called of God, as was Aaron: So also Christ (though he had all Excellencies and Abilities in him) glorified not himself, to be made an high-priest for us.

God therefore called him to it; and this, as making it his own business, as he was pleased to account it, and as such, commended it to Christ; and therefore Christ calls it his Fathers business, Luke 2. 49. And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Fathers business?

And now will you see how, and in what manner it was, he called him, and be amazed at it, to see how earnest he is in it. See his own words, (as the Holy Ghost, the great Secretary of Heaven, who alone was by at that great Counsel, hath recorded it) Heb. 5. 5, 6. So also, Christ glorified not himself, to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: Where we find the very words, he spake to him, recorded, He that said to him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; sayes in another place, which records another passage then spoken, Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec. The Holy Ghost brings in both these, and joyns them together, and brings that which was in the first as the Argument or Motive which God used to him to persuade him, when he moved him to it: He that said, Thou art my Son; sayes, Thou art a Priest also, to shew the ground of Authority which he urgeth in it : He that was his Father, and so had power to appoint his Son his Calling, (as other Parents have) appointed him as his begotten Son thus to be a Priest : And therefore he tells him in the first Speech ; That he is his Son, and he begat him ; and therewithal woes him, that as he was his Son, and he his Father ; and puts him in mind of all that mutual Love which was between them upon so high a relation ; and so much the higher, by how much the thing communicated was greater, in that he was God by his begetting him ; that therefore and thereupon he would take on him this so hard and harsh an undertaking. He calls him indeed, and speaks (as if he meant not to be denyed) in the highest Language of a Father ; and useth his whole interest in that ; mentions the deepest obligation ; and he notes out the time, it was on his Birth-day ; This day have I begotten thee : As Parents often dedicate their Children, when first born to such and such a Calling, as Hannah did Samuel to the Priesthood, so doth God his Son : Yea, he is yet more earnest, he laid his expresse command on him, John 10. 18. though the other mentions the most commanding argument and relation of all other, viz. As he was his Son. All Obedience as due on Christs side, and Authority on his Fathers, are spoken in such a Word. Yea, and yet to shew more vehemency and earnestness, he adds an Oath to it, Heb. 7. 21. He swore he should be a Priest, and vwhen he hath done, records it. It is written of me, and that ἐν κεφαλῇ τῆς βιβλίου, in the first Page, or beginning of the Book of his Decrees : Yea, and puts his Seal to it, Him hath the Father sealed, John 6. 27. By all vvhich he precludes him from a refusal, to prevent all supposition of denyal.

God the Father you see, hath done all that lyes in him, and yet no more than vvas necessarily required to this Work, as vvas in part said before, and may be further observed out of the 10th Verse of the 10th Chapter of the Hebrews ; vvherein he sayes, We are sanctified through his will, through the offering of the body of Christ ; having reference to that his Will of calling him, before exprest in that 5th Chapter, vvhithout vvhich Christs offering had not been satisfactory, or of force to sanctifie us.

C H A P. VIII.

Christ's Acceptance of the Terms which God the Father propounded to him for Mans Redemption. That his willingness in the undertaking proceeded not only from the Love he had for us, but from that which he did bear unto his Father, and his desire to Obey him, and to perform his Will. That the Elect Redeemed by Christ were first God the Fathers, and by him given in Trust and Charge to Christ to Save them.

NOW the next thing to be considered, is, how this motion takes with Christs Heart, which his Father makes, and what he sayes to it; how he answers it again, and how willingly. And this is as necessary as the former; for besides that it could not be forced on him: For John 5. 26. The Father hath given him to have life in himself, and so to have power over his life. John 10. 18. I have power over my life, and none can take it from me: Besides that, if it came not of him freely, it had not been satisfactory: For Satisfactio est redditio voluntaria, it must be a voluntary payment; and as our Disobedience was free, so must his Satisfaction be. Though he had at last yielded, yet if he sticks at it, we are undone; if he makes but an objection. And is it not infinite Love he should not? being he was the Party to undergo so much debasement. How did the eldest Sons stomach rise, when but the fat Calf was killed for the Prodigal? But the eldest, only begotten Son of God, must sacrifice himself for Enemies, (not the sacrificing of Worlds would serve, whereof he could have created enough) and yet not a thought did arise contrary to his Fathers Will; so his own words, in answer to the former call of his Father, do shew, Lo, I come to do thy will oh God. Heb. 10. 7. The Psalmist, from whence the words are borrowed, hath it, I delight to do thy will: Psal. 40. 8. Lo I come, (sayes Christ) I am as ready, as forward oh God, as thou to have me; not willing only but glad, I delight to do thy will. As the Sun rejoyceth to run his race, so the Sun of Righteousness to run his; for he was anointed with the oyl of gladness above his fellows. Psal. 40. 7. He was as glad to do this Work, as ever he was to eat his Meat; John 4. 34. Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work: With desire (saith he) have I desired it. Luke 22. 15. And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer. He longed as much, and was as much pained, as ever Woman with Child longed to be delivered, till this Work was accomplisht. Luke 12. 50. But I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitned till it be accomplished?

It was well for us that his Father struck thus strongly in: For take the Business in it self, you know how unwelcome it must needs be to Christ: Father, if it be possible, (sayes he) let it pass; yet because 'twas his Fathers Will, he submits, Not my will, but thine be done. Mat. 26. 39. As it was his Fathers Will he had no reluctancy, neither would simply all our cries or mediation have ever moved him, no more than Straws can move a Mountain, but that it was his Fathers Will, it was enough. For besides that Reason for it, John 10. 30. I and my Father are one, (saith he) and so have one Will and agree in one, there is another thing in it most prevalent, seeing that his Father intreats him thus to do it. The Father resolves to hear him him in all things; and should not he then hearken to his Father, especially when his Request is made upon his Birth-day, (This day have I begotten thee) when all Requests are rendered more easie and facile to be granted; as Herod on his, would give to the half of his Kingdom: What, and as he was his Father and he his Son, [Thou art my Son] this overcame him. John 10. 17, 18. Though he had life in his own hand, yet (sayes he) I lay it down because my Father loves me. Surely his Father being so earnest in it, he would not deny him; especially when he added a command to it. This is the Reason he likewise gives, John 10. 18, 19. I have power to lay down my life, and this command I have received of my Father. It had stuck with him from the first, and he remembered it still. His Father had Power (as other Fathers have to dispose of the calling of their Sons) to dispose of him; and though he was so great a Son, equal to so great a Father, yet being a Son he is not exempted from Obedience. Phil. 2. 8. And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Heb. 5. 7, 8. Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard, in that he feared; Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience, by the things which he suffered: And when his Father shall add an Oath to it also, (that is an end of all controversies between man and man, Heb. 6. 8. much more between the Father and Son,) and last of all sets his Seal to it. It must stand good, for his Seal stands sure, 2 Tim. 2. 19. there is no breaking of it, and therefore all these made Christ fully willing.

And this is therefore to be in a more especial manner taken notice of; that we may consider for whose sake principally Christ did dye, and undertake it, and thus see whom so much we are beholden to. Though Christ did it out of Love to us, yet chiefly for his Fathers Entreaty and Command, and out of Love to him: So Christ sayes, John 14. 31. That the world may know that I love the Father, and that as he gave commandment, so I do. He spake this when he was to go to suffer, (For saith he) Arise, let us go hence.

In the sixth place, as his Father recommended the Business to him, so also he gave especial recommendation of the Persons for whom he would have all this done; for he gave those of the Sons of Men unto Christ, whom he would have Reconciled, and this with a charge to bring them to Salvation.

Hence Christ when he was to offer up himself, he commits and commends them at his Death again to his Father, and to his Love, upon this great ground and motive, that he himself gave them first to him; alledging that he himself came to have a share in them, by his gift and commendation; John 17. 6. Thine they were, and thou gavest them me. A strange gift it was which he must yet pay for, and must cost more than they were worth, and yet he takes them as a gift and favour from his Father; which also when he had bought, he likewise begged at his Fathers hands, in John 17. 20, 21, 24.

And observe, that they were first his Fathers; first thine and then mine by thy gift; and this was not a late or new acquired propriety of Gods in them, but an antient one, which Christ puts him in mind of, thine they were: So that as the Father gave him his Work he was to do, Verse 4. so he gave to him the Persons for whom he should do it; Ver. 6. so as both things and persons; All things whatsoever thou hast given me, are of thee: Ver. 7. As he doeth nothing of himself, but what he sees the Father do; so as Mediator (and though Mediator) he saves not a Man but whom his Father did give him, nor puts a Name in more than were in his Fathers Bill. John 6. 37, 38. I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me: And this is spoken in relation, not to the Business only he was to do, but of the Persons also that were to be Reconciled: For it follows, Verse 39. This is his will, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose none: And they are not said to be then given to Christ only when they are called and begin to believe, but before, even from everlasting; (of which transaction we now speak)

(speak) for John 6. 37. All the Father giveth me, shall come to me; therefore they are not then said first to be given when they came but before

And hence by reason of his Fathers giving of them to him, he calls them his Sheep, and that before they are called, which as yet were not of the fold, but which were yet to bring in: John 10 16. And other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd. Yea, and he calls himself such a Shepherd, whose own the Sheep are; John 16. 2, 3, 4. They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service. And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me. But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And these things I said not unto you at the beginning, because I was with you. Ver. 11, 12. Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged. I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. He was owner of them (as all Shepherds are not) and delighteth to use a phrase of propriety. His own Sheep they are; how his own? but by Gift from his Father, and by special Love and Care of his own, and their Names he knows. John 10. 14. I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. As God by Name is said to know who are his; and therefore their Names are said to be written in the Lambs Book as well as in his Fathers, Rev. 13. 18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred threescore and six; yea, they are written in his Heart: And as the High Priest had the Names of all the Tribes written on his Breast-plate, so had Christ, the Names of all his written in his Heart, by a Pen of a Adamant, by the Will of his Father, written with ever-living and everlasting Love; so as the Letters can never be worn out.

And as he gave them to be his, so also with a special charge to bring them to Salvation, to lose not one of his tale and number. John 6. 38, 39. This is my Fathers will, who sent me, (sayes Christ) for which I came down from heaven, that of all that he hath given me, I should lose nothing. As Laban required his tale of Jacob, so doth God of Christ. When he sent him he gave him that Charge, This is the will of him that sent me. I come with this Errand, Charge and Message, which therefore Christ had still in his eye; yea and looks at it, as a Duty enjoyned him, Them I must bring, sayes he; John 10. 16. which hath relation to that Command laid on him.

And as Judah became a Surety to Jacob his Father for his younger Brother Benjamin, to bring him safe to him out of Egypt, Gen. 43. 9. I will be a surety for him, and if I bring him not unto thee and set him not before thee, let me bear the blame for ever, so did Christ for his younger Brethren, whom God, through him as their Captain and chief Leader, would bring to Glory: Heb. 2. 10, 11. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren. Who therefore had the charge of conducting them, and to that end he took Flesh, and in regard to it, gives an account to his Father of them; Behold I and the children which God hath given me. And you may observe how careful he was in this his account, and how punctual in it: John 17. 12. Those thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition. He is exact in his account, as appears in that he gives a Reason for him that was lost, that he was a Son of Perdition, and so excuseth it; and to this end God also gave him, as he was Mediator, power over all Flesh, that he might be enabled to give Eternal Life to those God gave him. John 17. 3. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

C H A P. IX.

That upon Christs Accepting this Agreement, God the Father to Reward him, engages to bestow all the Blessings which he should Purchase to those Redeemed by him. That all these Blessings of Grace, and Eternal Life, were promised to us in Christ from all Eternity.

CH R I S T thus willingly undertaking to dye, and to fulfil his Fathers Will, his Father to gratifie him enters into a Covenant with him, and binds himself to him to bestow the worth and value of all his Obedience in all Spiritual Blessings (both of Grace and Glory, which that his Death should purchase) to those whom he had given him, and that he and his Children should have it out in everlasting revenues of Grace and Glory. As Christ undertook to God, so God undertakes to Christ again, to justifie, adopt and forgive, sanctifie and glorifie those he gives him. All the Blessings his Love intended, Christ was to purchase them; and all the Blessings Christs Death did purchase, he promiseth Christ to bestow on those whom he purchased them for, so as his labour should not be in vain.

This you may observe out of many places; as in general, Isa. 53. 10, 11, 12. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied, by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justifie many: for he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong: because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbred with the transgressours, and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressours, where God makes a promise unto Christ that he should see his seed, and see the travel of his soul, and should be satisfied; for my righteous servant shall justifie many, and this because he underwent so much Sorrow and Grief so willingly, as it is in the former part of the Chapter, and the joy of this was it, that made him undergo it so willingly; Heb. 12. 2. Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God: And that his joy was this, That he should prolong his days, and though he dyed in the travel, yet should see the travel of his Soul. As though a Woman be in great pains, yet her joy is, that a Man-child is brought forth into the World; and so it was with Christ, his joy is, that many Children should be brought to Glory, and by this he should be satisfied; namely, That many should be justified by him, as it follows there, (for nothing else will satisfy Christ) and that he should divide the spoil with the strong; because he poured out his soul to death: Ver. 12. That is, he triumphed over Hell and Death, and by the Conquest spoiled Principalities and Powers, and obtained Heaven and Everlasting Righteousness, by which himself is not of himself made the richer; God therefore allows him to divide it, and give it away to others. And God considered also, how that in this Work he was his Servant, My righteous servant (says he) shall justifie many. He was his Servant, and did his Business in it, and should he have no Wages, nor Rewards? Yes he should, and the only Reward he seeks for, is the Salvation and Justification of his Elect, and of those whom God hath given him: And therefore we find this very Covenant bargain-wise struck up; and by way of a most elegant Dialogue expressed to us Isa. 49. which which Chapter is, as I may call it, the Draught of the Covenant, or Deed of Gift, betwixt Christ and his Father for us; wherein Christ first begins, and shews his Commission as the ground of the Treaty between them; intimating unto his Father, that he had called him to this great Work, Ver. 1. Listen, O isles, unto me, and hearken ye people from far, The Lord hath called me from the womb, from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name: And fitted him for it, Ver. 2. And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword, in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft, in his quiver hath he hid me. He therefore expects what Fruit and Reward he should have of all his Sufferings.

His Father offers (as it were) low at first, and mentioneth but Israel only as his Portion; Thou art my servant, oh Israel, in whom I will be glorified. Ver. 3. Then he as thinking them too small an Inheritance, too small a Purchase for that great Price, foreseeing the hardness of their Hearts, and how few of them would come in, not worth his coming into the World for, so that if the gleanings of them were all, he saies, He should labour in vain, and spend his strength for naught: Ver. 4. Though however he satisfies himself with this, My work is with thee, O Lord, &c. Namely, that his main end of undertaking it was for his Fathers sake, and in Obedience unto him.

God therefore answers him again, and enlargeth and stretcheth his Covenant further with him; (saies he) It is a light thing that thou shouldst be my servant, to raise up the tribes of Israel, &c. I will give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation to the ends of the earth, Ver. 6. And Ver. 8. I will give thee for a covenant to the people, &c. God you see makes this Covenant with him, to save both Jewes and Gentiles, as the Reward of his Death.

And this Compact you have also exprest; Psal. 2. 7, 8. where after he had called him to this Office, (which there he calls the Decree, I will declare the decree, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee) he subjoyns this Covenant made upon it, Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. And this was shadowed out by that famous Covenant made with David for his Seed, for an Eternal Kingdom; Psal. 89. 4, 5. Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Selah. And the heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord: thy faithfulness also in the congregation of the saints: And Ver. 28, 29. My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven: Which Covenant was made with David, as a Type of Christ, and is to be meant as spoken of Christ; and that Covenant too made by God with him for his Spiritual Seed. That Covenant is called the sure Mercies of David, and is applyed to Christ as that Spiritual David; Acts 13. 34, 35, 36, 37. And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. Wherefore he saith also in another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine holy One to see corruption. For David after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption: But he whom God raised again, saw no corruption: Who therefore is called David, as here and elsewhere; and that Oath God made to David, shewed the everlasting Oath and Covenant made to Christ for his Seed. Psal. 132. 10, 11. For thy servants Davids sake, turn not away the face of thine anointed. The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it, Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne.

And hence further to confirm this, we find Titus 1. 2. That eternal life is promised afore the world began; which is to be understood in relation to this Covenant. A Promise then was made; that is, an expression of an engagement, which is more than a Purpose, for a Promise is an expression of a Purpose; and to whom can this be understood to be made so long afore, but to our Head Christ, and we were then lookt at by God, only as in him; to whom therefore for us he promised to give Eternal Life, as the Fruit of his Death. This very Covenant therefore, that God struck with Christ for us, this was the Promise meant; which was, That as he should dye, so he would as certainly bestow the Fruit and Revenue of his Death in Glory on those he gave to him.

So as though God had never expressed any Promise unto us, yet having made it to Christ for us, he would have performed it; therefore he adds, God that cannot lye hath made this Promise; and further sayes, That as before all Worlds he made this Promise and Covenant with Christ, so in due time he hath further manifested this his Word by Preaching, &c. All the Promises that now are revealed, are but the manifestation of that grand Promise; but Copies as it were of that which was made to Christ, in whose Breast the Original of our Records are kept, and the application of those Promises to us, is but the writing out the Counter-pane of what was done in Heaven. As all Promises are made in him, so all Promises were first made to him, and to us as one with him: Therefore sayes the Apostle, Not to seeds as of man, but to seed, as of one which is Christ; Gal. 2. 16. who in our Name, and for us took a Deed of Gift from God the Father, for all Blessings we are to enjoy, before the World was: And therefore also 2 Tim. 1. 9. Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began. There is Grace (spoken of) as given us in Christ ere the World began; which place explains the former; for as the former sayes it was promised, so this, that Grace was given us, and as then promised to Christ for us, so then also given us in Christ, God looking on us as one with Christ: Which Promise is made upon that his Promise to his Father, To give himself for us. The summe of all is; His Father promiseth to him to give all Spiritual Blessings in him, and then makes a Deed of Gift to him for our good and use; even as Goods may be given to, and by a Coffe in trust for one that is yet not born. And so our Life is said to be hid with Christ in God; and so it was from everlasting there laid up, by God with Christ.

And hence also we find that all Blessings which God in time bestows, are said to be given in Christ, ere they are actually to us. So Eph. 1. 3. God hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ. So his Purpose of saving us, is said to be purposed in Jesus Christ: Eph. 3. 10, 11. To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord: So to be Reconciled in Christ here in the Text: So speaking of our Redemption, he sayes, which is in Christ Jesus. Rom. 3. 24. Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. So all Grace is said to be given in Christ, 2 Tim. 1. 9. before the World was. So 2 Tim. 1. 1. Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life, which is in Christ Jesus. The Promise of Life is said to be in Jesus Christ: Now the Phrase notes out a transaction, an endowment of all these on us, not first immediately in our selves, but in Christ for us, and on us in him.

Hence likewise in Scripture we read of Promises, not only Conditional, That he that believes and repents shall be saved; but also Absolute; as that in Jeremiah, This is my covenant to give them a new heart, and a new spirit, and they shall walk in my commandments, Jer. 31. 33. wherein he undertakes to fulfil the Conditions themselves, and that Covenant must needs be made with Christ first and mediately for us, (and he only knows for whom it is made) even for those his Father gave him.

C H A P. X.

What is the Reason that though we receive all these Blessings by Christ, and on the account of his Merits, yet they are said to be given to us of pure Grace.

AND upon this Covenant made with Christ, and Compact between God and him for us, comes it, That all things we have by Christ, though purchased by him, are yet said to be by Grace as well as by Christs Merits, because they are bestowed by a Compact with Christ; by vertue of which Compact his Merits are accepted for us: So that though Christ layed down a Price worth all the Grace and Glory we shall have, yet that it should be accepted for us, and all that Grace bestowed on us, comes from this Compact and Covenant made by God with Christ, to accept it for us; and the acceptation of it for us, depends as much on that Covenant made with Christ as on his Merits: Therefore Heb. 10. 10. our Sanctification and Salvation is ascribed as much to Gods Will and Covenant with Christ, (of which he spake Ver. 7.) as to Christs offering himself; for he sayes, By which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Christ: And therefore, as it is said that Christ dyed, so also it is God that justifies: Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay a y thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that justifieth: Justifies freely by his Grace: Rom. 3. 24. Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. Though Christ hath laid down a sufficient Price, and equal to the guilt of our Sins, yet that God justifies us for it, is an Act of Grace: Why, because the acceptation of it for us was out of Covenant; and therefore our Divines say against the Jesuits, that his Merits are Merits ex Compacto, and not which absolutely could oblige God to us: Though they be equal to our demerits by Sin, yet it is only that relation they had to this Covenant made with Christ, which gave acceptation to them for us.

And the Reason is; because to satisfie for another, especially in Corporal Punishments, requires the compact and willingness of the Party to be satisfied, to accept it for him that should else undergo it. Let the Satisfaction be never so equivalent to the Wrong, yet without a Covenant of the Party to be satisfied, it may be refused: Therefore Umpires use to bind the Parties in Bond to stand to their Word; Quando aliud offertur quam est in obligatione, satisfactio est recusabilis, say the School-men. So though Ahab offered Naboth as good a Vineyard as his own, yet he might refuse it, as he did. This Covenant therefore which God made with Christ, to bestow all the Merits of his Obedience on us, which he called him unto, is the main foundation of all our Happiness. As it obliged and engaged God firmly to us in Christ, so it makes all that Christ purchased to be of Grace. Though he paid an equivalent Price to what we should have done, and much more, yet it is accepted for us out of a Covenant of Grace: And therefore in Rom. 5. 17. though the Apostle shews and proves, that there is more Merit in Christs Obedience to justifie, than in Adams Sin to condemn; yet the imputing of it to us, he calls abundance of Grace, and the gift of Righteousness. Though it was an abounding Righteousness, yet there was an abounding of Grace to accept it for us, and it is derived by way of Gift.

And the ground of all is, because of this Covenant made by God with Christ for us, upon which the acceptation of all depends.

C H A P. XI.

That upon the conclusion of this Agreement or Covenant of Redemption, there was the greatest Joy in Heaven. The Divine Persons exulting in the delightful Thoughts, that so many wretched Lost Creatures should be effectually Saved.

AN D now our Reconciliation being brought to this blessed issue by God the Father and his Son, their greatest Delights have been taken up with it, ever since ; so as never in like manner with any thing else. There was never such Joy in Heaven, as upon this happy Conclusion and Agreement. The whole Trinity rejoiced in it, (which is the last thing, and the Coronis of this Discourse) they not only never repented of what they had resolved upon, he swore and would not repent ; Heb. 7. 21. But further, their chiefest delights were taken up with this, more than in all their Works, ad extra. Gods Heart was never taken so much with any thing he was able to effect ; so as the thoughts of this Business, ever since it was thus resolved on, became matter of greatest delight unto them.

This you may see, Prov. 8. 30, 31. Then I was by him, as one brought up with him : and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him : Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth, and my delights were with the sons of men. Where you have that curious Question in part resolved ; What God did before the World was made ? How that Eternity was run out, and what the thoughts and delights of the great God most ran on ? You have it resolved by one that knew his Mind, and was of his Council, the Mighty Counsellor, as being the Wisdom of his Father, as he is there stiled, that was before God made the World ; Prov. 8. 22, 23. The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning or ever the earth was. Then was I (sayes he) Ver. 30. all the while by him ; that came out of his Bosom, John 1. 18. and who therefore compares himself in this Prov. 8. to a Child brought up by the Parent, so was I (sayes he) brought up with him. And what did they together ? Two things.

1. They delighted one with and in another ; the Father that he was able to beget such a Son like him, and of equal substance with himself ; I was daily his delight, and he mine, rejoicing always before him : And this was, and would have been delight enough to them, though no Creature had ever been made.

2. But Secondly, next to that, what did they delight in most ? It follows, Rejoicing in the habitable parts of his earth, and my delight was with the sons of men. And observe it, That next to those Internal, Essential and Personal delights each in other, the greatest and dearest unto those two Divine Persons were their delights in the sons of men, of all Gods Works ad extra, in these they most took pleasure.

Now what is it, concerning them, should afford God and Christ such thoughts so long aforehand ; but this plot concerning them of Reconciling them again ? For to look and foresee them all at one clap, turn'd Rebels against him, and view them mustering together in troops against him : This could minister none but sad and disconsolate thoughts, and it pained him at the Heart to think of it : Gen. 6. 5, 6. And God saw that the wicked- earnestness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. What was it delighted him then? Men delight only in their Friends not Enemies; Was it in them then as they were at first Created in a state of Friendship, that God was pleased? No then there were but a couple to delight in; but this delight is said to be in the Sons of Men, all the Earth over, in the habitable parts of the earth; which implies, he had some in all parts inhabited, who were the desire and delight of his eyes: And besides, that first Friendship, was not worth the thinking of, it lasted so little while, and ended in so great and general a breach. These delights then were most in this, to think that he should win to him, and gain the love of these accursed Rebels, whom he himself loved so dearly, and that he should shew that his Love, by an unheard of way, that should amaze Angels and Men, to take away their Sins, and Reconcile them to himself again by the Incarnation, and Death of his Son; and tye them to him by an everlasting knot, which their Sins should not untye again, nor separate from that his Love. This took up his delights in the Plural; he delighted to think of it again and again; his double delights (as some Paraphrase it) were in this, inasmuch as he glads himself with the continual thoughts of it again and again: Which may appear by another Scripture added unto this, which tells us how his thoughts did run upon this so dear a Design to him (speaking after the manner of men) above all else, and that they were taken up with it; as it useth to be with us, when we are deeply affected with any thing. So Psal. 40. 5. Many (says he) are the wonderful works that thou hast done, and thy thoughts to us ward cannot be reckoned. His Mind hath ran on them from everlasting, that his thoughts cannot be numbred. There are many Works of Wonder which he hath done for us, which hath exercised these his thoughts towards us, but above all in this we have been speaking of; therefore he passeth by all other Works, and mentions this very Transaction, and Calling of, and Covenant with his Son, which we have all this while been speaking of, as that wherein these his thoughts have been most spent and exercised with delight. So Ver. 6. 7, 8. Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire, mine ears hast thou opened, burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required. Then said I, Lo I come, in the volume of the book, it is written of me; I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea thy law is within my heart.

And by all this you see that our Salvation was in sure hands, even afore the World was; for God and Christ had engaged themselves by Covenant each to other for us, the one to dye, the other to accept it for us.

And though Christ was yet to come and dye; yea, and though there were not one word of Promise written that was made to us, expressing Gods Mind, yet this everlasting Obligation made all sure, that it should be done.

So as had I no other News to tell you, and could but secretly assure you of these passages from everlasting, they might be enough to perswade and over-perswade you to come in, for Mercy and Grace with him; but much more when it shall be further told you, what Christ hath done to the accomplishment of all this, and what fulness was in him for it, which makes up the Second Part of this Glorious Story.

BOOK II.

The sole, and peculiar Fitness of Christ's Person for the Work of Redemption.

H E B. ii. 16, 17.

For verily he took not on him the nature of angels ; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.

Ver. 17. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren ; that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest, in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

C H A P. I.

The Fitness of Christs Person for the Work of a Mediator, hath a great Influence to make it Successful and Prosperous.

IN the First Chapter the Apostle shewed that our Mediator was God, and the Son of God : In this Second he shews that he is Man also ; and a Man made of the same lump with other Men, and Flesh and Blood as well as we. And he knitts up all with this, That thus it behoved him to be, that he might be a Priest to reconcile us to the Father. That therefore which these Two Chapters drive at, is to shew the Personal Fitness in all Relations and Respects that was in Christ for the Work of Mediation between God and us. A Point therefore to be insisted on, because it is the drift of these Two whole Chapters, and is indeed the Foundation of all that follows, concerning his Offices and Works : Which therefore he mentions not here only, but had intimated it before, in ver. 10. To which we may add, that in Heb. 7. 26. For such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens.

E

heavens. So that his singular fitness for this Work is a thing that the Scriptures would have us to take special Notice of, and which God aimed at in choosing him unto it :

For,

First, (In general to give a Reason or two of it :) Fitness in the Person that goes about a matter of Reconciliation, is more behoveful and available to further it, than all the means and satisfaction besides that can be made. For Reconciliation is a matter of Friendship, and therefore is to be wrought in a friendly way; And a word from a Fit Person will oft times more prevail to effect it, than a great Ransom from, and much entreaty by another. How forcible are right words (as Job saies)? Fit words, rightly placed and ordered; but especially when from a Fit Person: The Person adds Grace and Acceptation to them.

Secondly, In reconciling us God likewise had a special regard to this; He aimed not only to have satisfaction made to his Justice, and so to be sure to have an equivalent Ransom; but that he might be fully pleased. He would have it carried on in the most pleasing and suitable way that might be, that so his Mind might receive full content in it, and that his Love might rest in it with delight; and that his Wisdom also might infinitely please it self in the sweet Harmony, the Convent, and the fit Accommodations of all things in it; to see all aptly meet and accord for the making of his Covenant, as it might be sure, so ordered in all things (as the Phrase is, 2 Sam. 23. 5.) But above all, That this confluence of Fitness should be especially in the Person that was to perform it; one that should be most pleasing to himself, and most fit for the business; even so fit, as none fitter. Thus the Apostle in the Text giving the Reason why God made him the Captain of our Salvation, and appointed him to suffer: It became him (saies he) for whom and by whom are all things in bringing many Sons to glory, to make the Captain of their Salvation perfect through sufferings: That is; Seeing this Work of Redemption was the grand Plot and Master-piece of him who is both the Efficient, and End of all things, and that the bringing of many Sons to glory was of his Works and ends the Master-piece; it became him therefore to take such a course to do it, as was worthy of him, and as might most of all and best of all suit with all his ends, and with that work which contains all his other works eminently in it. And therefore it was meet for him to make choice of the fittest Person that could be found in Heaven or Earth to be his Captain, and to make him in saving us, as perfect as was possible, as full and compleat a Saviour in his Person and in his Works as could be. And that nothing might be wanting in him which might be thought fit for him who was our Saviour, to perform; he was to suffer the utmost of sufferings, rather than he should not be a full, perfect, and complete Saviour: God made him perfect through sufferings: For (as Christ tells his Disciples, Luke 24. 4.) It behoved him thus to suffer: And it was his Speech to John, Matth. 3. 15. Thus it becomes us to fulfil all righteousness. And surely, that God, who did all things else in a due proportion, in Weight and Measure; and this, in his works of an inferior Kind and Mould, the works of Creation; (wherein we yet see, he hath artificially suited one thing to another) will much more in this Transcendent Work of Redemption cause the greatest Harmony to meet in the Plot and Contrivance of it.

And so I come to the Point delivered, namely,

That there is a Fulness of Fitness in the Person of Christ for this great work of Reconciliation between Us and God.

First, I say, [In the Person of Christ.] For although in the works of his Mediation there may a great correspondent fitness be observed, and a harmonious proportion both in relation to the benefits they are to procure for us, and and between themselves, (as was before observed,) yet we must now in this Head-bound our selves only to the fitness in his Person; and therein also carefully sever such Considerations as tend to discover his fulness of Abilities for this work; many of which are apt to fall under this Head: Which notwithstanding we will keep as immixt as we can from these which argue his Fitness, and reserve those other for a second Head.

Secondly, There is not only [a Fitness] but a [Fullness of Fitness]; So that suppose others besides him had been able, yet none so fit, or in whom there is an Universal concurrency both of Fitnesses and Abilities. And therefore he is designed out for this work with an Emphasis, Col. 1. 20. And (having made peace through the blood of his cross) by him to reconcile all things unto himself, by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. [By him, by him, (I say);] And so [in him] is with the like Emphasis repeated, as denoting him to be eminently fit above all others, in Eph. 1. 10. That in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him.

This premised, we will proceed by degrees; and we shall find, that there was nothing in his Person but what fitted him for this Work.

1. Consider what he was, before he took our Nature; what this [He] was, mentioned in the 16. ver. [He took, &c.] For he was a Person of himself ere he took our Nature. And this refers to the First Chapter, where the Apostle shews, that he was God, and the Son of God, Heb. 1. 3, 5. Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high: ver. 5. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And thus it behoved him to be, that was our Priest:

1. It behoved him to be God. It was not fit that any meer Creature should have the Honour to be the Mediator and Reconciler. Could we suppose that a Creature had been able to have performed it, yet it had been no way fit. The Honour of this Place and Office was too Transcendent for any meer Creature; and nothing is more unseemly and uncomely than an Office of Dignity and Honour misplaced (as Solomon tells us :) And this Crown of Honour would not have fitted and sat well on any Creatures Head. And so we call this Office, and that, the most Transcendent; for, to be a High Priest, was to be taken out, and separated from, and above other Men, to be brought to God for them: *Heb. 5. 1. For every high priest taken from among men, is ordained; & men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins. And therefore it is such an honour (saies he at the 4th. ver.) as no man takes to himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. And what was the High Priesthood of Aaron in comparison with this; a Type of it; not so much as an Image of it, as is said of the Types of the Law, *Heb. 10. 1. For the Law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered yearly year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. It was but as the shadow of a King at Arms in comparison of a real King indeed. And therefore this Priesthood to offer real satisfaction is accounted such a Glory, as Christ himself, (though full of all Infinite Perfections, and in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwells) took not upon him till he was called; as chap. 5. ver. 5. So also Christ glorified not himself, to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. The Phrase used is, That he glorified not himself to be made an high priest, &c. It is not an Honourable Office only this (by which Phrase Aarons is expressed to us :) But it is a great Honour: He being to be not an High Priest only, but to be a great High Priest: *Chap. 4. 14. Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. Yea, it is

Book II. so glorious as is fit for none but the King of Glory, who is the only Wife God. Which therefore as it is so glorious, as Christ till called unto it, takes it not on him; so it is so Transcendent a Glory, as God will not bestow it on, or call any to it but him who is God. My glory (saies God) I will not give unto another; Isa. 42. 8. And this Office he accounts part of it. Read the words going before, (and which occasioned that Speech) and you shall find, that they are spoken of the bestowing this Office upon Christ, and the glorifying him by calling him to it, ver. 6, 7. I the Lord have called thee, and will give thee for a Covenant, &c. And then follows, My glory will I not give unto another. As God will not give his Praise and Worship to Graven Images; (as in the words following) so nor this Glory to any Creature, not to any other but to one who is God equal with himself. And consider but that one main end and consequent of his Mediation, there expressed, That he was to be made a Covenant for the People; that is, the Founder and Striker up, and Mediator of a New Covenant for us, (as he is called, Gal.
9. 15.) Yea a Surety, (not only of a New Covenant, (when an Old one is made void) but) of a better Covenant (as he is called, Heb. 7. 22.) established upon better promises, (as it is, Heb. 8. 6.) a better Covenant than the Angels stand under, who yet are the most glorious of all the Creatures: And therefore he hath obtained (saies the Text there) a more excellent ministry, by how much he is the Mediator of a better Covenant: Not brought into a better Covenant, or made under a better Covenant (which is our happiness) but the Maker of that better Covenant it self, yea so as to be made that Covenant; and it will be evident that it was not fit for any meer Creature to undertake so great an Office.

C H A P. II.

That it was necessary for our Mediator to be God. He could not otherwise have been present at the making of the Eternal Covenant of Redemption: None but God could have the Power to bestow such great Blessings as are those of the Covenant: None but God could be the Object of our Trust, Faith, and Hope, and Obedience. None but God could be sufficiently able to succour us at all times.

THAT Christ the Son of God was the only fit Person to be the Mediator, will appear plainly to us upon these Considerations:

I. If you consider, That it was fit that he who thus made a Covenant for us, should be present at the making of it, and at the first striking of the bargain, and should be privy to the Plot, and know the bottom of Gods Counsel in it, and the depth of all his Secrets, and should know for whom, and what he was to purchase, and upon what Conditions. Now then this Plot and Covenant having been as Ancient as Eternity, even an Everlasting Covenant; and it being requisite that God should have our Mediator by him from Eternity, with whom he might strike it for us; and also that he should know all Gods secrets, and be admitted into all his Councils from Eternity; therefore no Creature could be capable of this. For who of them hath been his Councillor? And who knows his depths of Election, which are past finding out, as Rom. 11. 33, 34. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his wayes past finding out! ver. 23. For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counsellor. God may say to all the Creatures as he said to Job, Where were you when the Plot of Redemption was laid? And the Platform thereof drawn? And the Book of Life penned, and the Names of my Redeemed ones put in? None but he whose Name is Wonderful Counsellor, the Mighty God, and everlasting Father; as Isa. 9. 6. was capable of all this, which Names of his are put into that Promise of him as Mediator, because it was requisite that our Mediator should be all this. And now he being the Mighty God, he might be of Council with God from Eternity; he was present at the first pricking down our Names, and foreknew all Gods choice. He stood at Gods Elbow and consulted with him, whose Names to put in: (Then I was by him, saies he) Prov. 8. 30) And so became their Everlasting Father: begetting them in the Womb of Eternal Election.

II If we consider the Conditions of the Covenant, no meer Creature was fit to undertake them; neither those on Gods part, nor those on ours.

1. Not those on Gods part. Was it fit that a meer Creature should be Gods Executour, and have power to leave such Legacies, as the Promises of Heaven, Pardon of Sin, &c. are? Without whom, and without whose Blood all those Promises had been of no force, but had been nothing worth; as Heb. 9. 15, 16, 17, 18. And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance ver. 16. For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. ver. 17. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise otherwise it is of no strength at all whilest the testator liveth. ver. 18. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. Was it fit that a meer Creatures Hand and Seal should be required to Gods own Will and Testament, or else it could not be of force? Certainly it was too much: And therefore the Apostle, ver. 14. having shewed how Christ by the Eternal Spirit offered up himself; (that is by his Godhead, &c.) he adds, ver. 15. For this cause he is the Mediator of the New Testament: Hence it was that he became the Founder of it, that he was The Eternal Spirit, God Immortal: Else he had not been capable of being Mediator of such a Testament; A Testament also, whereby he not only was to undertake to make satisfaction, and to make good all Gods Legacies; but to make good in us, the Conditions on our part, by writing the Law in the heart: For that is the New Covenant, as Heb. 8. 10, 11. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. ver. 11. And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. And if the Mediator had not ingaged to do this, God would not have dealt with him; for he will make sure work in the Covenant, since it was to be a Covenant ordered in all things, and sure; 2 Sam. 23. 5. Although my house be not so with God; yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure: for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow. And what Creature could do this? Or was it fit that God should put so much trust in any Creature, who finds folly in his Angels, and puts no confidence in his Saints! God would not vouchsafe to Treat or Trade with any meer Creature, upon so high and deep engagements, nor enter into Partnership with them, to share alike, as in that Covenant thus made, God and the Mediator of it were to do.

2. The Part which we bear in the Covenant, and our Actings in it rendered it unmeet, that any but the Son of God should have the Administration of it committed to him.

For,

First, If we consider what is the Business and Acts of our Faith, it will be evident, that it was fit and requisite that our Mediator should be such a one, as we might rely upon, and trust in: Now was it fit that any meer Creature should be made and set forth to us as the Object of our Faith? And yet it is that Faith which is the most suitable Condition for the Covenant of Grace: (as Rom. 4. 16. It is therefore of faith, that it might be by grace, and sure to all the seed:) And that Faith must pitch upon our Mediator, as upon a Corner Stone laid by God, as a sure foundation, (as Paul and Peter speak) so as he that believeth might not come to be ashamed, 1 Pet. 2. 6. Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-stone; elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Would it then have been, or could any Arm of Flesh have thus secured us, or underpropt our hearts? Or was it fit that any Creature should be propounded to us, as the Object of our Faith as Justifying, and so be set forth as a Propitiation through faith in his Blood, and Mediation; and so we to be Justified by Faith in him? (as the Apostles Expressions are, in Rom. 3.) No, this is an honour not fit to be put upon any Creature; no, not on all the Angels and Saints. Take, not Peter only, (on whom the Papists say the Church is built) but the whole Church and Family of God in Heaven and Earth; and we say indeed, That we believe the Catholick Church, but not in the Catholick Church; We believe only in God, and in Jesus Christ. Any Creature had been too weak a foundation to build the Faith of the Church upon; they could not have borne the weight of it. And therefore, 1 Tim. 3. 16. when the Apostle had said [God manifested in the flesh] he adds, [believed on in the world] for if he who was manifest in the flesh had not been God, he could not have been the Object of Faith. And indeed, it was fit for us that we should have one whom we might fully trust, trust, and whose sufficiency might answer all our fears; for if a Creature had been our Mediator, we would have been afraid of a miscarriage in the business, as there was such a cause of fear whilst the concern was in the Hands of our Father and Head, Adam; and we should still have feared, that the Devil might overcome us and him again; and though he had held out many years, yet we would have been afraid that one day he might fail and have perished. Besides, we should continually have feared, that the guilt of our sins would revive again in our Consciences; for Conscience being subject to God only, no meer Creature therefore could still it, or purge it; but it is the Eternal Spirit alone that can do it, as the Apostle shews, Heb. 9. 14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God. And it is God alone that can subdue iniquities, Micah 7. 18, 19. Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy. ver. 19. He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us: he will subdue our iniquities: and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. Therefore to take away all fears, it was fit that our Reconciler should be God: And therefore Isa 35. (throughout which the coming of Christ is foretold,) ver. 3. Strengthen you (saies the Prophet) the feeble hands, &c. — say unto them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not: Behold, your God will come with vengeance, (namely to destroy the enemies of your salvation) (he saies it again) God will come with a recompence; (and then again he speaks it) he will come and save you, and he goes on to shew his Kingdom, ver. 5, 6, 7. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. ver. 6. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert ver. 7. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes. Any other Saviour would have needed Salvation himself, except him who is Salvation it self, and so Christ is called, Luke 2. 28, 29, 30. Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, ver. 29. Lord now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word. ver. 30. For mine eyes have seen thy salvation.

The Second Condition is Obedience, even that we should wholly give up our selves to his Service for ever; which also comes in in our Indentures, and is mentioned in the Covenant on our Parts, and which out of thankfulness we could not but performe, as a Due to him that should be our Mediator. For he that should have reconciled us, must have bought us, and so delivered us from Death and Hell; and if so, we must then by all right and equity have been his Servants for ever. Now surely, God would not have us so obliged to any meer Creature, as wholly to serve and obey it; and therefore it was fit that none but God himself should save and buy us out, 1 Cor. 7. 23. Ye are bought with a price: be not the servants of men: To prevent which inconvenience, God himself would redeem us, that we might serve none but him: [Him only shalt thou serve] for it is his due. The Apostle also judgeth it an equal thing that Men should live to him, who dyed for them, to redeem them from Death. Thus 2 Cor. 5. 14, 15. We thus Judge (saith he) that in that he dyed for all, they who live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who dyed for them. It was therefore no way fit that any meer Creature should be employed in this Work: It was fit that none should do so much for us, but only he who made us; for to justify us, and to restore us out of this miserable lost condition, was more than at first to create us. For our Misery was worse than a not-being; and should it ever be said, that a Creature had done as much for us as God did at the first!

Thirdly, Besides all this: Would we not have had such a Saviour (to choose) as might know our hearts, and be able to succour us? On whom we might rest securely, that he knows Gods mind, and searcheth the deep things of him, and who is his Counsellor. And therefore when he speaks to us kindly, we may be sure God means us good, and in whose Face we may read Gods mind. Would we not have such a Saviour as might have an unlimited Power over all Flesh, to defend us so, that nothing should be able to withstand our Salvation; as John 17. 2. As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. Now such an one must be God, who can save, not only the Body, but the Soul too. All the Creatures, as they can destroy the Body only, so they can save the Body only; and of the two it is more easie to destroy than to save. When the People of Israel were to be led into Canaan, and so to be carried thorough the Wilderness, and through many Enemies and Difficulties; they hearing (Exod. 32. 2.) that an Angel should go before them, and drive out the Canaanites (ver. 3.) and that God would not himself immediately go up with them; it is said, that all the people mourned because of this; yea, and Moses also (at the 12. ver.) was fearful of a meer Angels conduct; his heart was not secured thereby, as it would have been, if God himself would have been pleased to go with them: And therefore he saies to God, Thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me; And yet God had told him that an Angel should: But Moses seemed not to understand God, but would have had another Answer. Thus, When we are fearful, and cannot trust to the Conduct or Undertaking of one imployed for us, we use to say, To a Friend that putts it off, and sends another. You leave me, and send I know not whom with me; that is, one that I am not secure of, one in whose sufficiency I cannot rest for the performance: And this therefore, (ver. 4.) is called evil tidings. In Exod. 23. 20. before this, there was an Angel promised to go before them, Namely Christ the Angel of the Covenant, who indeed was God: (for ver. 21. he saies, My name is in him) And then the Peoples hearts were quieted. So that some think, that this other Angel in the 23th Chapter was but some meer created Angel, whom when they heard to be substituted in Gods stead to be their Leader, then they mourned; and then Moses also complained. However if it were the same Angel, yet they understood it and conceived of it to be a Creature, and not the Son of God. By which you see, that the People desired that no Creature, no not an Angel should be their Leader, (though one Angel could destroy an Host of Men in a Night) but they would have God himself, or none. And so if we had been to have chosen a Captain of our salvation, a Head and Governour to bring us unto glory, (as the Apostle speaks; Heb. 2. 10) and withal had known, that there was speech in Heaven of, (and so a possibility) of having the Son of God for this our Captain; how would we have said as he did of Goliaths Sword, there is none like to this Saviour? Or as they of Joseph, Can we find such another one as this? And on the contrary, if God had instead of him sent but an Angel to redeem us, how would we have mourned, as the People there did, and as John did, Revel. 5. 4. and have said as Moses, We know not whom thou wilt send with us? We will therefore conclude with that which God speaks, Isa. 43 11. I am the Lord, and besides me there is no Saviour.

C H A P. III.

Of the Three Persons in the Godhead, the Son is the fittest to be Mediator. What are the Reasons of it.

WE have seen 'twas meet our Redeemer should be God, and the Godhead it self cannot become a Redeemer but as subsisting in a Person, One of the Three; now which of the Three so fit as is the Son? The Oath and Decree of God makes the Son to be appointed to this Office. And the Reasons of the Fitness and Meetness of this Second Person are;

First, If we consider the Relations of the Three Persons among themselves, he is of all the fittest to undertake this Work.

1. It was meet the ἰδιώματα, or the proper Titles by which the Persons of the Trinity are distinguished, should be kept and preserved distinct, and no way confounded. He that was to be Mediator, it was meet he should be the Son of Man, the Son of a Woman as his Mother; (as I shall shew anon) And this Title and Appellation will fittest become him that is a Son (though of God) already; and it was not fit there should be Two Sons or Two Persons in the Trinity, to bear the Relation or Title of Sons: For instance, That the Father should in any respect be said to be a Son, or to have a Mother, or call David or Abraham Father, was most improper; so as this would not become him: And so in like manner, it was as unfit for the Holy Ghost, who himself was to have the hand in his Conception, to be called a Son; but that the Son of God should, is not improper; for he is a Son already.

2. It was meet that the Son of God should be this Mediator, that the due order that is between these Three Persons be also kept. The Father is the First, the Son the Second, the Holy Ghost the Third; and he that is to be Mediator must be called to it, and sent by another Person, therefore the Father is not to be Mediator; for both the Son and the Holy Ghost being from the Father in subsisting, are not to send the Father, who is the First. And as is the order of their subsisting, so of their working, and therefore for the Holy Ghost, he likewise being the Third Person, cannot so fitly be Mediator; for though he might be sent from the Father and the Son, as he proceeds from both, yet his Work and Task is to work from the Son, and to take off his work wrought first, as the Son is to take from the Father: John 5. 19, 20. Then answered Jesus, and said unto them, Verily verily I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doth, these also doth the Son likewise. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doth: and he will shew him greater works than these, that ye may marvel. And as in order of subsisting the Person of the Spirit proceeds from him, so in order of working, his Work is from the Sons Work; He shall take of mine (sayes Christ) and shew it to you: John 16. 13, 14, 15. Howbeit, when he the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you. All things that the Father hath, are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you. And therefore he that is to be Mediator to Redeem, must be the Son, who may send the Holy Ghost to apply his Work, who being the last Person is to appear last in the World, and take the last Work, which Redemption is not, but the Application of it: And therefore,

3. The Father is the Person to whom the Redemption is to be paid in the Name of the Persons, to whom the Reconciliation is made by the Redeemer; and the Holy Ghost is he that most fitly should apply that Redemption unto us the Redeemed: Therefore the Redemption it self fitly falls to the Sons share.

And Secondly, As thus to preserve the due Decorum among the Persons, so also in respect of the Work it self, it was most proper to him.

1. He being the Middle Person of the Three, bears the best resemblance of the Work, to be a Mediator, to come between for us, to the other Two. Herein the Work and the Person suit. He was from the Father, and the Holy Ghost from him, and it is he in whom as it were the other Two are united, and are One, and so he is not able to lay his hands on both. As the Nature of Man is a Middle Nature between the whole Creation, Earthly and Heavenly; and as for one and the same Person to be both God and Man, was a Middle Rank between God and us Men: So is the Son of God a Middle Person between the Persons themselves.

2. It best suited all the particular benefits of Redemption, and the ends thereof. Many Divines, for the demonstration of this, alledge that the Second Person being that Word by whom all things were made, as Heb. 1. 2. and John 1. 3. that therefore it was fit for him to restore all; and it is certain, that in those places his working all things is alledged on purpose to shew 'twas meet he should be the restorer of them: It becomes him who hath such an interest in the first building that he should found them a new, and repair them. It is alledged also that he was the Life of Man in Innocency; John 1. 4. In him was life, and the life was the light of men; and therefore he was fittest to restore that new Life. Eph. 2. 1. And you hath he quickned who were dead in trespasses and sins. Ver. 5. Even when we were dead in sins hath quickned us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved). Also that he being the Image of God, therefore to restore it in Man when 'twas lost, the best way was to set forth the Original Image, and to bring our decayed Image to this to be conformed. But I alledge not these to this purpose, as not being certain whether these things are spoken of him, considered simply as Second Person, or as foreseen and decreed to be God Man, (as I have elsewhere shewn) which design, besides the Work of Redemption, served to all these ends and purposes: But I shall mention one which is the main end of his being Mediator, and for the bestowing which, Redemption maketh way, that is Adoption and making us Sons; which is made one of the greatest benefits of all other; Eph. 1. 5. Now it is certain, that to convey this to us, of all Persons the Son was the fittest; Gal. 4. 4, 5. God sent forth his Son made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons: Where there is a double Antithesis or opposition: 1. Christ a Son, to make us Sons: 2. Christ made under the Law to redeem us that were under the Law. We were Slaves under the Law, who then was so fit to redeem us as the Kings Son? We were Servants, who then so fit to convey Sonship as the Eldest Son? And to Sinners convey Sonship he could not, till they were Redeemed, as that place shews. God was to be a Father to us, and in whom or for whose sake so fitly as for his Sons, thorough our Union and Marriage with him? Heaven and the Glory of it is called Adoption, Rom. 8. 23. And not only they, but our selves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we our selves groan within our selves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body; and to bestow this on us by a right of Inheritance, for whom was it so proper as for Gods own Son, the Heir of all things? This is manifest further by these Scriptures: John 20. 17. I go to my Father and to your Father; and In my Fathers house are many mansions: John 14. 2. As if he should have said, I am his Eldest Son, I can bid you welcome thither: And so in Rom. 8. 17. Ye are heirs and coheirs with Christ; and in many the like places.

In the Discourse of the Knowledge of God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ. In a Vol. of his Works

Some Divines say that no Person else could have been Mediator, because Sonship was to be derived to us; for nothing, say they, is communicated by Grace to us but is first in the Godhead, or in some Person in the Godhead, who is made ours, and so it is derived thorough Fellowship with him. Thus we are made Wife because God is Wife, Holy because God is Holy, and we made partakers of the Divine Nature, which is the Image of what is in God. Now therefore in like manner if we be Sons, it must be thorough a Sonship found in one of the Persons, and our communication with that Person, and so we are made Sons because he is: I will not say it could not have been otherwise; sure I am 'twas fittest and comeliest it should be so.

And also that we should be accepted graciously, and beloved of God, which of our selves, without a Mediator, we could not be; who so fit as the Son to make us thus accepted, who is the first beloved, the Son of his Love, as he is called Col. 1. 13. Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son: But the Holy Ghost proceeds from both per modum amoris, and so is rather the reflexion of Love of both wherewith God loves his Son and himself also.

Then the Son was fittest to be the Mediator in respect of all those Offices that belong to the performance of this great Work.

As First, If we regard the Office of High Priest, who so fit as the Son, the Eldest Son, to be so? It being the Birth-right of the Eldest in the Family, by the Law of Nature, to be the Priest: Therefore Heb. 5. to prove that he was a Priest, the Apostle presently cites that saying out of the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, as being all one with that other which follows, quoted out of Psal. 110. Thou art a Priest for ever: And especially when the Work of our Salvation and his Mediation was to be transacted by Intercession; none so fit to be an Advocate with the Father, (as John speaks) as Jesus the Son. 1 John 2. 1. My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous.

Secondly, If we consider the Office of being a Prophet, none so fit for this as the Word and Wisdom of the Father; therefore Heb. 1. 1. it is said that in the last dayes God hath spoken by his Son; who so fit to break up Gods Counsels, as the Mighty Counsellour, and next in Counsel to himself? None hath seen God at any time; but it follows, The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him. Job. 1. 18.

And so Thirdly, for the Kingly Office, none so fit as the Heir, as Sons use to be; none so fit to have all Judgment and the Kingdom committed to him as Gods Son.

And last of all, if we consider the Inauguration into these Offices and Work of Mediation, it was by an Anointing (as all those Offices of old were. He was to be the Messiah, and Gods Anointed; now the Father (as was meet) was to be the Anointer, so Acts 4. 27. For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel were gathered together: and the Holy Ghost was to be the Oyl, with which he was to be anointed above his Fellows; as it is expressly, Acts 10. 38. How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the holy Ghost, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: for God was with him. So as in this respect none but the Son was capable of these Offices, and to be Messiah or the Anointed one; and so accordingly he was Consecrated a Priest for ever.

C H A P. IV.

That it was necessary our Mediator should be Man. The Reasons why the Angelical Nature would not have been proper for this Work; and therefore why Christ assumed not that, but the Nature of Man.

THAT which next is to be demonstrated, is, That if Christ be a Mediator, he must be something else than meer God or Second Person, as the Text saith, He took to himself the seed of Abraham.

For First, If he be a Reconciler he must become a Priest, and offer up something by way of satisfaction to God; so Heb. 8. 3. Every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore of necessity he must have somewhat to offer; and that which he offers must needs yet be greater than all things, but God: For nothing else would be a Sacrifice great enough to expiate Sin; and therefore that which he offers must some way be himself; for otherwise there could nothing be greater than all things, and yet withal, something else than God. And therefore still it is said, He offered himself. But if he be God only, he cannot be sacrificed nor offered up.

And again Secondly, If he be God only, he should Reconcile us to his own self, but he that is a Reconciler must be some way made divers from him unto whom the Reconciliation is made, for he is to be a Surety to him; and therefore Christ being made Man, he as οικονομικῶς, or Ministerially considered, is divers from himself as φυσικῶς considered, viz. as he is the Son of God, and so is fit to become a Party between us, and to Reconcile us to himself.

And Thirdly, If he be a Reconciler and Mediator, he must become some way subject to God, and less than God ratione Officii; As he saies, My Father is greater than I; John 14. 28. for he must subject and submit himself, and be obedient, and be content to be arrested by the Law. He must become an intercessour and intreater, and so become subject, as Christ did, who when he was equal with God humbled himself. Phil. 2. 6, 7, 8. Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

Now then, if he must take up some Creature or other, it must be a Rational Creature; and therefore there being but two sorts of Creatures Reasonable, Angels and Men, they are both mentioned in the Text, as those that only were capable and fit for this assumption. The disputes of some Schoolmen, that the Son of God might have assumed any Creature, though Unreasonable, into one Person with himself, are in a manner blasphemous: And to be sure if such an assumption had been possible, yet unfit.

First, For his Person, for which see the Reasons of the Schoolmen, for there was reason that he that is taken up to this Glory should be capable of knowing and loving God.

And Secondly, And above all for this Work, for he must be holy. Heb. 7. 26. For such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens: Such an High Priest became us as was holy; he should not fulfil the Law else. He must love God, for Love is the fulfilling of the Law. He must have an Understanding and a Will.

Will. He must be full both of Grace and Truth ; of Truth in his understanding part, of Grace in his Will ; and he was to become obedient to God for us, and to have an holy Will, for the Will of the Godhead could not have become subject.

Now then, seeing there are but two Rational Natures, Angels and Men, that can stand for this place, it is to be considered which of these two is the fitter ?

Now consider this fitness as it relates to the Person of the Son of God simply so considered ; and so the Nature of Angels was a fairer match for him by far. But an Angel though a more fit match for him who is a Spirit, and they Spirits, and so there is a nearer assimilation, and which he would have assumed and united to himself (for his Soul when separate was still united to him) yet it was not so fit for this business to Reconcile us, therefore he says Heb. 2. 16. at no hand he took their Nature. He supposeth it possible, he would not else have instanced in it, but he by no means supposeth it as fit ; for it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren.

First, It was not so fit for us, that he should assume the Angelical Nature ; it was not so fit.

1. That we being the Persons to be Reconciled should be beholden to a Stranger, but to a Kinsman of our own Nature. It was a Law in Israel that their Prince should not be a Stranger, and it was meet to take place in this, that one should not be a Mediator who is a Stranger.

2. That the relations that were to be between us and him might be founded upon the greatest nearness, and so more Natural and kindly, it was meet that the Mediator should be of the same Nature with us.

(1.) He that Reconciled us was to be Head to us, and it was fit the Head and the Body should be as near as could be of the same Nature, Homogeneous, not diverse, else there would be a monstrosity in it.

(2.) We were to be made Sons in him, and he to be our Brother, and therefore to be of the same Nature, Cant. 8. 1.

(3.) He was to be an Husband to us, and Man and Wife must be of the same Nature, that she may be Bone of his Bone, and Flesh of his Flesh.

3. That he might more Naturally love us more, and we him, it was fit that he should take our Nature Likeness is the cause of Love ; Brethren that are like each other, love more than the other of the Brethren use to do ; therefore God made Man in his Image at first, that so he might be the nearer object of his Love ; but if he will take up our Nature also to himself, how will this raise his Love yet higher ? His end in Reconciling was to make us like himself, and therefore he made himself like to us, and we being to partake of a Divine Nature from him, he partakes of an Humane Nature with us ; and therefore he was made in the likeness of Man. Kings, whom they love they use to apparel like themselves, their Favourites were so of old. As Men are to love Men better than Angels because made of one Blood, and God did it on purpose ; so Christ seeing his own Nature in us, and that we are given him, cannot but love us the better, he cannot be averse to his own Flesh and Blood.

Secondly, An Angels Nature would not have been so fit for the Business or Work it self : For,

1. Seeing that Justice permitted a commutation, it was but comely that yet Justice might be satisfied in all other points as near as possibly might be. It was but fitting that satisfaction should be made in the sameness of Nature at least, seeing it could not be by the same individual Persons. This Reason seems to be rendred Rom. 8. 3. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh : He took the likeness of sinful flesh to condemn Sin in the flesh. Also this was meet, that the very same Nature that was contaminated and defiled might be cleansed and purified, that they who are sanctified and he that sanctifieth might be of one Nature. Heb. 2. 11.

For

For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one : for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren.

And 2. Seeing that we fell by the Sin of a man, God (that in his Wisdom and Justice loves like proportion to be made up, himself making all things in due order and measure) ordained that we should be Redeemed by a Man. This Reason is intimated 1 Cor. 15. 21. Since by man came death, by man also the resurrection of the dead ; and so by the like parallel Reason, seeing by Man came Sin, by Man came Redemption ; the like proportion the Apostle also holds forth, Rom. 5. 15, 16, 17, 18. But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one, many be dead ; much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many. And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift : for the judgment was by one to condemnation ; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. For if by one mans offence, death reigned by one ; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation : even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life.

Thirdly, If we consider the Obedience which the Mediator was to perform for us, it was not fit he should be an Angel. For,

1. He was to fulfil the whole Law, and every Iota of it, and that in a double respect :

- (1.) For our Righteousness.
- (2.) For our Example.

Now in either of these respects an Angel was not so fit, for the Angels were not capable of fulfilling so many parts of the Law as an Humane Nature is. An Angel could not perform the Ceremonial, as to be Circumcised, &c. ; nor half the Moral, as to be subject to Parents, to be temperate, sober, to sanctifie the Sabbath, &c. But it became him that was our Mediator (as far as possibly might be) to fulfil all (that is every part of) Righteousness.

2. He was to fulfil all this Righteousness by way of Example : Socinus he would make it all the intent of Christs coming into this World ; (but blasphemously) yet this was requisite that Christ should set us the greatest example of Holiness. 1 Pet. 2. 21. He left us an example that we should follow his steps, who when he was reviled, reviled not again, nor was guile found in his mouth. He was to be a visible Example ; now so an Angels obedience could not have been. He was to be a perfect Example and Copy (Follow me as I follow Christ, sayes Paul, 1 Cor. 11. 1.) now so an Angel could not have been. All Duties of Obedience that are performed in the Body, as we are Men, they are not capable of ; the Second Table is cut off to them, their Obedience is only Spiritual, and the Duties of the First Table.

As thus an Angels Nature only could not have fulfilled that Law we were to have fulfilled ; so much less could it have suffered what was requisite : They could have indured Gods Wrath indeed, but not that other Curse which went out in the Letter against us ; they could not dye, not return to dust, and Bodily Death was threatned, To dust thou shalt return : They had no Body and Soul to be separated by Death, and therefore could not be a Sacrifice for Sin ; for without Blood there is no remission ; Heb. 9. 22. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood ; and without shedding of blood is no remission ; for without Blood it had not been extensive, a full Redemption. Now the Angels have no Blood to lay down nor shed.

Lastly, It was not so fit that we should be Reconciled by Angels, but by one in our own Nature, that so the Devils might be the more confounded. Now seeing the Devil had out of Malice ruined Mans Nature, God would have Mans Nature to destroy the Works of the Devil, as 1 John 3. 8. He that that committeth sin, is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. And God to the Devils confusion would have him led captive by one who is Man. So Heb. 2. 14. He took the nature of man, that he might by death destroy him that had the power of death; it is a Reason given of his assuming it. If this great Act had been done by an Angel, the Devil might have said he had met with his match, and so was foiled; but to have it done by a weak Man, one that was once a babe, a suckling, this was a mighty confusion of him. And thus it is noticed in the 8th Psalm, which is applyed to Christ, Out of the mouths of sucklings thou hast ordained strength, that thou mightest still the enemy and avenger: Psal. 8. 2. And this very confusion and revenge upon Satan, who was the cause of Mans fall, was aimed at by God at first, therefore is the first Promise and Preaching of the Gospel to Adam brought in rather in sentencing him than in speaking to Adam, That the seed of the woman should break the serpents head; it being in Gods aim as much to confound him as to save poor Man.

C H A P. V.

That it was fit that our Mediator should be both God and Man in One Person, that so he might partake of the Nature of both Parties, and be a Middle Person between them, and fill up the distance, and bring them near to one another. That he might be in a better Capacity to communicate unto us his Benefits, and that he might be capable of performing what our Redemption requir'd.

WE see then how much it behoved Christ to be Man as well as God, and indeed both; for a Mediator is a Mediator between two, Gal. 3. 20. and those two between whom a Mediator must go, were God and Man; and therefore it is said that there is but one Mediator between God and Man, the Man Christ Jesus. 1 Tim. 2. 5. And this was most fit: For,

First, Hereby he participates of both Natures, and so his Person doth bear a resemblance of the work in general. Mediation was the business, and who so fit as a middle Person? Therefore first he became medius, a middle Person, and then a Mediator; first medius, then medians. A middle Person in regard of Participation of both Natures, and then a Mediator in regard of Reconciliation and Reconciling both Natures. And a middle Person not in order only, as Men are between Angels and Beasts, and as a middle rank of Men are between those above them and under them, but of participation, as having the Natures of both. A middle Person not in place only, as Moses when he stood between God and the People, Exod. 5. 5. but in Person. A medium, not only between God and us, but one with God and us, and symbolizing with both. Therefore our Divines say, that Mediatio operativa is founded, and hath influence from his Mediatio substantialis, that his Works of Mediation, whereby he Mediates for us, ariseth from his Person, that they arise from both Natures, so as both Natures have an influence into

Book II. into all his Works, and they are the Works of both, that so he might be totus Mediator, a whole, entire Mediator in his Person, and in his Works.

And Secondly, Hereby he is of equal distance and difference from both, as he is God he differs from us, as he is Man he differs from God : Yea, and as he is Mediator he takes on him a differing Person as it were from himself, and what he is essentially, as being only the Son of God ; for he became lesser than himself in his Office, and emptied himself, and so is a fit Mediator between us and himself also, as he is the Son of God, Differt Filius incarnatus, ὁμοουμιως, a seipso ἑσσυμιως. The Son incarnate differs Ministerially from what himself is Naturally. As we say in Philosophy, Una & eadem res a se ipsa diversa est, modo & ratione. One and the same thing is differenced from it self by a different modus, or manner of existing.

Thirdly, Hereby he is indifferent also between both, so as not to take part with the one more than with the other, ready to distribute to both with unequal hands their due, and be faithful to both. Heb. 2. 17. That he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the people. Lo here are the matters both of God and Man referred to him, for the cause of both was to be committed to him, ἑαυτου and ἑαυτου, therefore he partakes of both, and is distant from both, a middle thing participates of both extreams, and toucheth both.

Fourthly, He was to make Peace between both, and take away Hostility, therefore he takes Pledges both out of Earth and out of Heaven. He takes the chief Nature on Earth and the chief in Heaven, thereby to still the enmity, and to part us who were fighting each against other ; we against God and God against us. Now having our Nature and Gods, he had two hands able enough to part us, he could take hold of Gods strength, and hold his hands, as it is Isa. 27. 5. and so make Peace, and having our Nature he had a hand to take hold of our hands also.

Fifthly, He is hereby able to draw near to both, and bring both together, and so make us one, for is not he fit to do this that is both God and Man ? He joyns our Nature first with God in his own Person, and makes both one there, that so God and Man becoming One in Person he might the easilier make God and Man one in Covenant. God and Man were at division, and when he would make utrumque unum, he becomes & unum ex utroque : He by this means is in a friendly way able to treat with both, and hath an hand to shake with both. He is become the Man Gods fellow ; Zach. 13. 7. if he had been Gods fellow only, and not the Man Gods fellow, he might have drawn near to God, and yet we have been never the nearer, and yet if not more than Man and so Gods fellow, (which no meer Man could be) he could not have approached to God ; as Jer. 30. 21. And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governour shall proceed from the midst of them, and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me : for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me ? saith the Lord. Who but he could have engaged his heart, or assumed the boldness to have drawn near to God ? And yet withal he being the Man Gods fellow, we may draw nigh to him, and come to God by him, as the phrase is in the Epistle to the Hebrews, for why he comes out of the midst of us, as in the same, Jer. 30. 21. thus Heb. 4. 15, 16. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities ; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. And Heb. 10. 21, 22. And having an high priest over the house of God : let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

Sixthly,

Sixthly, He could hereby communicate the benefit of all he did for us unto us, which without it had not been done, Participavit de nostro ut communicaret suum : He partakes of ours, that he may communicate to us his. We are to participate the Divine Nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. and therefore he takes part of ours. If we were to have Righteousness from him, it was fit our own Nature should be the fountain ; John 17. 19. For their sakes I sanctify my self, that they may be sanctified : [ I ] that is my Deity, sanctifies [ my self ] that is my Humane Nature, which he calls himself, because it was one in Person with himself : It was fit that that Nature that sinned should be sanctified to condemn sin in the flesh, Rom. 8. 3. And hence it is the benefit of his Righteousness is not extended to Angels, because he that sanctifies and them that are sanctified, are of one, Heb. 2. 11. which he and Angels are not ; and therefore his Merits reach not in a proper and direct way unto them : The intense worth indeed of his benefits ariseth from his abilities and sufficiency Personal, but the extension from his so proper fitness that he was a Man ; and therefore reacheth only to Men.

Seventhly, That which he was to do for us required he should be both God and Man : For consider but the principal parts of the Work that he was to do, and it was fit that he should be both, that what did not become the one Nature, the other might do.

1. He was to keep and fulfil the Law, and be subject to it, and to merit by keeping it : Now if he had not been Man he could not have been subject to the Law, therefore he was made of a Woman, and made under the Law ; first therefore made of a Woman, that so he might be under the Law : Gal. 4. 4. But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law. And if he had not been God he could not have merited for us by that his keeping the Law, for he had done but what was required, and what was a due, and so it could have reacht but to himself : For all Creatures, when they have done all they can, are but unprofitable servants ; and he that merits must do it by his own strength, for otherwise what hast thou that thou hast not received ?

2. He that is our Mediator must dye and overcome Death, for he was to rescue us from Death, and destroy him that had the power of it. Now if he had not been Man he could not have dyed, therefore he took such a Body as we have that he might dye, he could not have tasted of Death else. Heb. 2. 9. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour ; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. Ver. 14. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same : that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. And if he had not been God he could not have raised himself ; Rom. 1. 4. And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead : Therefore John 10. 18. I lay down my life (saith he) and take it up again.

(1.) He had not had a Life to lay down if he had not been Man, for the Godhead could not dye.

(2.) If he had not been God he could not have merited by laying it down, it must be his own, not in the dominion of another ; now the Lives of Creatures are not their own, and therefore their laying of them down cannot merit.

(3.) He must have it in his own power ; if another could take it away he could not have merited, for it must be a voluntary laying it down, and there is no meer Man but another may take away his Life from him if God prevent not ; but Christ having his Life wholly in his own power, resign'd it, therefore that Centurion said he was God. Mat. 27. 54.

(4.) He could not else take it up again. None ought to dye but Man, none could give up his Life, and reassume it, but God ; he had the passive power to dye as Man, the active power to dye of himself as God.

G

(5.) And

Book II.

(5.) And so for enduring the Wrath of God, if he had not been Man he had not had a Soul to be heavy to the Death ; and if he had not been God it had dyed through heaviness, if the Godhead had not upheld him that upholds all things.

(6.) Also he was to be a Judge, and that he could not be unless he had been God : And also an Advocate, and that he could not be, unless he had been Man.

CHAP. VI.

How the two Natures, the Divine and Humane, which are so different, are united into One Person, Christ God-Man. That the Son of God did not assume an Humane Person, but the Nature. The Reasons why an Humane Person could not have been assumed. It was our whole Nature which the Son of God took, both Soul and Body. The Reasons which made this necessary.

AND now that we have the Reasons that he was to be both, you will ask how can this be that he should be both ? The Text resolves it, and says, He took to himself : Heb. 2. 16. The meaning is, he did take Mans Nature into One Person with himself : He not only took on him, but to him, ἐνδραμεσάνειαι assumpsit ad ; Assumpsit non Hominem Personam, sed Hominem in Personam : He took not the Person of a Man, but Man to be One Person with himself. He took the seed of Abraham, to himself, that is, to subsist in himself, not of it self, and to have his subsistence communicated to it ; this Nature being as an appendix, as a part of him subsisting in him, but communicating the subsistence of that Divine Person to the Humane Nature, that they are Personally one, as truly as Soul and Body joyned become one Man ; and therefore the phrase is, that this Second Person was made Flesh. John 1. 14. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth. Though God dwells in the Saints in Heaven, and fills them with his fulness, as a cause efficient of all their glory and their chiefest good, yet they are not so united as that God can be said to be made the Saints, but Christ may be said to be made Man, and to be as essentially Man as he is God ; made not as the Water was made Wine, and ceasing to be Water ; but both Natures remaining distinct, are made One Person, so as both became One Lord and One Christ ; there is One Lord, 1 Cor. 8. 6. But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him : God and Man personally One : So 2 Cor. 5. 14. For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one dyed for all, then were all dead. One is said to have dyed for all, that is, but One Person, though there were Two Natures, God and Man, yet but One Person of both. That as in the Trinity there are Three Persons in One Nature and Godhead, so here are Two Natures, One in Person and Subsistence (the manner of which union hath no similitude in Nature to express it by) so as in the concrete the Man Christ may be called God, and the Son of God, (so

(to Luke 2. 35. That which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God) though the Manhood cannot be called the Godhead. And then this Second Person is said to dwell in that Nature, Coloss. 2. 9. The fulness of the Godhead is said to dwell in him bodily; and so notes out a permanent union, not God to dwell in him only by his Graces, but the Godhead is said to dwell in him, and the fulness of the Godhead to fill that Humane Nature, as Fire fills the Iron that is in it; (And not to dwell in him as in the Saints by Grace, and as being their portion, uniting himself to them as an Object they love, as God is said to be all in all in the Saints in Heaven, and as the Spirit dwells in us, sanctifying &c. and as the same Spirit dwells in Christ) substantially dwelling in him, σωματικῶς; that is, not only in a Body, noting out the subject in which; but the manner, Personally, Bodily: Now the Grecians put σῶμα to express a Person, σώματα πολλά τρέφει: And so Thucydides, σώματι περιεμῆν: As the Hebrems put Soul for Person; Exod. 15. the Souls came out of the Loins of Jacob; the Grecians use the word Body, so that Bodily is Personally.

God communicates his Presence to all Creatures, his Grace to the Saints; but the Son of God communicates his Personality, his Subsistence to the Man Christ Jesus: (This is the highest communication: For his Nature is communicable to none but the Three Persons) So as our Nature and Christs Person is One; not in Office only, as two Consuls or Bayliffs in a Town, that have a joynt Commission; not as Man and Wife only, who are in a relation one flesh; not Spiritually only, as Christ and we his Members are one Spirit, as the Head and Members are one; but they are Personally one: So as when we see a Man, we say, there is such a Man, such a Person; so when you shall see Christ at the latter day you may say as John doth, 1 Joh. 5. 20. This is the true God and eternal life.

God is the Principium of Subsistence to all, but in Christ he is the Terminus subsistendi, not yet so as if the Personal property were communicated, that is incommunicable, as to be begotten of God, and to subsist of it self, but that the Second Person becomes a foundation of subsistence to the Humane Nature of Christ, as an Oak is to the Ivy.

Now to shew the grounds why this was fit, (which is the proper scope of this Discourse) why this union was requisite, and fitted him for the Work of Mediation. Had he not been thus God and Man he could not have been Mediator. For,

1. It being necessary he should be God and Man, and remain perfectly God and perfectly Man, and the Son of God and the same Person that he was, therefore they could no way else be united to do us good; for they could not the one be changed into the other, for God was immutable; and it was impossible that the Nature of Man should become the Nature of God, since the Essence of the Godhead is incommunicable: And if they had been so united as that a Third Person out of both had been made, as when the Elements are made one in a Mans Body, as the Soul and Body make one Man, besides the impossibility of it, it had not served this turn: For he that redeems us must be God and Man, therefore there is no way but that the Personality of the Second Person be communicated to the Humane, both Natures remaining united in One Person; it cannot be more nor less. If the Personality of the Son of God had been communicated only by Power and Grace, &c. then his Actions had been of God as the Author or Efficient; but not Actions of the Person of the Son of God, as his Personal Actions; which should have received a worth from him.

And 2. This will fit us well, for now all that Christ as God doth, the Man Christ shall be said to do for us, that so it may be ours; and all that Christ Man doth, Christ God shall be said to do, that it may have an infinite merit in it: For as there is a communication of the Personality of Christ to the Manhood, so of acceptance of all the Humane Nature doth: 1 Pet. 3. 18. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, (that Book II. he might bring us to God) being put to death in the flesh, but quickned by the Spirit : And therefore the Blood shed shall be called the Blood of God, as well as the Man is called the Son of God ; so Acts 20. 28. Take heed therefore unto your selves, and to all the flock, over the which the holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood : And so the Lord of glory is said to be crucified, 1 Cor. 2. 8. Which none of the princes of this world knew : for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. And as the Person is One, so the Redemption and all that both did, became one Work of Mediation, and One is said to dye for all, Christ as One, God and Man, so as when he offered up the Humane Nature as a sacrifice he may be said to offer up himself, for it is himself, and he poured out his own Soul, &c. Heb. 9. 14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? Isa. 53. 12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong : because he hath poured out his soul unto death : and he was numbered with the transgressours, and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressours.

Now then, if this Manhood be assumed into One Person with the Son of God, then it could not remain a Person of it self, and so the Text also intimates, calling him the Seed, Heb. 2. 16. as not a Person, but an Humane Nature ; so as though he took our Nature, and an individual particular Nature, yet that Nature was not a Person. Therein indeed his Humane Nature differs from ours ; but that difference is not in any part of the substance of our Natures but only in a complement of being, or rather a modification of being, a difference in the manner of subsisting, it is no more.

(1.) The Nature is the same for being and substance.

(2.) It is an individual Nature.

But (3.) It is not a Person of it self apart for subsistence ; for that is properly called a Person that subsists in it self, though we all have our being in God, and exist by him as in a cause thereof, yet we do not subsist as one with him as a Person ; that is, we are Persons apart and alone of our selves, and God and we are two Persons, but our Nature in Christ is one with God, and in God.

The Reasons of this are two.

1. It was not indeed possible that a Person (as the Second Person was) should assume another Person subsisting of it self into Personal Union with him, it had been a contradiction, and therefore it is impossible : For that Two Persons remaining Two should become One is a contradiction, even as to say of an accident (the nature of which is to subsist in a substance) that it subsists in it self is a contradiction. Now to be a Person of it self is to subsist of it self alone ; this is the condition of its subsisting as it is a Person, and therefore here in the 16th Verse of this Heb. 2. when he speaks but by way of supposition of the Second Persons assuming the Nature of Angels, he doth not say, he took not on himself an Angel, but not of Angels, that is, the Nature of Angels ; for to have assumed the Person of an Angel had been a contradiction, and so such a phrase of speech was not fit to have been used so much as in a supposition.

2. As it was not possible that the Second Person of the Godhead should take the Person of a Man into Union with himself, so it was not fit (the demonstration of which is that which I in this Discourse did aim at) for the Work of Mediation. For although it was necessary for that Work that he should be an individual particular Man as we are, particularly existing, for else he could not merit, nor act, nor suffer, for all merits and actions are of individuals ; yet if he had subsisted of himself, and been a Person of himself as Man, all that merit and actions of Obedience would have been but for himself. If he had been a Person of himself apart, so his merits would have been for himself apart, and he subsisting in his own bottom, and in himself as a Person, must have stood by his own Obedience, and so all his Obedience would have been but enough for himself, and have been shut up in himself, and and confined to himself. But he having an individual Nature of Man as we all have, without a propriety of subsistence, all his Obedience may be common for all others, and as many as he shall please to communicate it unto may have a share in it; it may be a common Salvation, as it is called Jude 3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation: it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. For our Nature in him as it is Humane is not circumscribed or inclosed with a proper subsistence of its own, but lies like a field uninclosed, not hedged in with Personality as all our Natures are.

And to this purpose observe the phrases whereby the Scripture expresseth this Nature assumed by the Son of God, which are such as do imply, that that which was assumed was only a Humane Nature and not a Person: As when it is said, He took the seed of Abraham, Heb. 2. 16. not a Person, but the Seed, our Nature, semen est intimum substantie, the quintessence of Nature, but notes not out a Person. So the Word is said to be made flesh, that word Flesh noteth out but one Nature assumed, not a Person; and therefore the Apostle speaking of Christ, he makes him the Person, and his Flesh or Humane Nature but as an appendix, Rom. 9. 5. Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen. And so in Luke 1. 35. And the angel answered and said unto her, The holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God. The Angel there speaks of Christs Humane Nature which was to be born of Mary, not as of a Person but as of a thing, in the Neuter Gender, That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God: And besides he the Man Christ could not have been called the Son of God, if he had been a Person apart of himself, for one Person is not predicated of another, the Husband cannot be called the Wife though most nearly united, for they are two Persons: And therefore likewise Christ himself when he was to take our Nature, speaking of that which was to be assumed, saith, Heb. 10. 5. A body hast thou fitted me: [Me] notes out the Person, the other is but a Body assumed, so he calls it, because himself as God was the Person; this was not a Person but the Nature of Man, therefore he calls it a Body, and so Col. 1. 22. In the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable, and unreprouvable in his sight: It is ἐν τῷ σώματι τῆς σαρκός, in that Body of his Flesh.

But though he subsisted not as an entire Person, yet it was fit and necessary that he should be an whole and perfect Man entire; so as though he took not a Person on him, yet he took our whole Nature for substance, every way as perfect as ours, in all the parts of it, both of Soul and Body. He was made like us in all things, sayes the Apostle, Heb. 2. 17. There was nothing wanting essential to either, or for the perfection of either part of our Nature, for he will be like us in all things, in all Members of our Bodies, and Faculties of our Souls. It is called Flesh indeed and a Body, but yet left only a Body should seem to be meant, he elsewhere is called A man, the man Christ Jesus, as having all belonging to a Man, and he is called that Man, in Acts 17. 31. Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead. He had a perfect Body as ours, and a Soul, and both united, and so was a whole Man.

1. For the Body, Col. 1. 22. 'tis called the body of his flesh: They thought he had been a Spirit, but in opposition to their conceit, It is I, sayes he, Mat. 14. 27. and feel sayes he, hath a Spirit flesh, and bloud, and bones? Luke 24. 39. And this was fit, that the similitude of our Union might be the nearer, and that we might be truly called Members of his body, as being of his flesh, and of his bones; as Eph. 5. 30. For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. Also because he was to Reconcile us in the body of his flesh through death, Col. 1. 22. by bearing our Sins upon his Body on the Tree: 1 Pet. 2. 24. Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness : by whose stripes ye were healed. If he had not had the Body of a Man, he could not have been fastned to the Tree, nor endured our Sorrows, the pains of Death. And again, as all our Members are weapons of Unrighteousness, therefore he was to take them all to sanctifie all to God, and make them weapons of Righteousness.

And that Body did not want a Soul, for his Soul was heavy unto death, Mat. 26. 38. And it was meet it should be so, for first the chief fruit and threatening for Sin was against the Soul, The soul that sins shall dye, Ezek. 18. 20. therefore he must pour out his soul to death, Isa. 53. 12. and it is the Redemption of the Soul that is precious, Psal. 49. 8. For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever ; that is the chief thing to be redeemed, and that is so precious, as nothing but a Soul could be a fit price. He was made like us therefore, that he might succour us in all respects. Heb. 4. 15. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities ; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Heb. 2. 17, 18. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren ; that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest, in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people : For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted. And now our greatest temptations are in our Souls, and therefore he had a Soul to be tempted in all things, Sin only excepted, and so he knows how to pity our Souls, and the distress of them, and he joyes to be a Shepherd of our Souls, 1 Pet. 2. 25. For ye were as sheep going astray ; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your Souls.

And then 2. Both Body and Soul must be united, else the Body could not dye, for Bodily Death is the separation of Soul and Body, and that was threatned against us, and therefore to be executed on our Mediator ; and therefore when he dyed, it is said, He gave up the ghost. Mat. 27. 50.

And he must be a whole perfect Man, for this Reason too, because he was to be a Priest and a Sacrifice both, and the Priests in the Law were to be perfect Men in all parts of their Bodies, if they had any blemish they were not to be Priests, and so the Sacrifices were to be whole Burnt-offerings, therefore a whole Man was to be offered up by the Son of God.

And he being to redeem the whole Man, it was fit he should take the whole Humane Nature. All that was lost was to be saved by him, Luce. 19. 10. He came to seek and to save that which was lost : There was not that thing in Man that was lost (as all was) but he saved it, and therefore took the whole of Man into Union with himself.

C H A P. V I I.

That it was not only fit that Christ should be Man, but such a Man, as to be like us in the Matter and Substance of his Body ; And to be like us in his Production and Birth, to be born of a Woman as we are. What are the reasons of this. What is the reason why Christ though born of a Woman is yet without Sin. Why he is Man, and of the Jewish Nation.

NO W seeing he was thus to be a Man : Let us consider what manner or kind of Man every way qualified was fittest in this business, and we shall find that such a Man did God every way make him, for he must have an Humane Nature fitted for him on purpose, Heb. 10. 5. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me. A Body hast thou fitted me, so some read it, adaptasti, fitted him with a Body for the purpose. And indeed if for all other Works God chooseth out fit Instruments, then surely for this great Work of all Works else, and accordingly Divines call his Humane Nature Instrumentum Deitatis, the Instrument of the Godhead. It is not every kind of Body will fit him for this purpose of reconciling. Some Schoolmen have thought that not any other Humane Nature but that which was assumed could have been assumed ; sure I am a greater fitness could not have been in any, and all to make up this his Personal Fitness for a Mediator full, that in him all fulness might be found to dwell.

Now concerning what Qualifications are to be in him for this Work, we have this general Rule given us here in Heb. 2. 17 That it became him in all things to be made like to us who were his brethren : So as the liker he should be to us, the fitter Mediator he should be for us, and that for the very reason before-mentioned, that because Justice admitted of a Commutation, it would yet come every way as nigh to have a full and proportionable satisfaction as could be : As satisfaction must be made in a Nature of the same kind by Man, not an Angel, so in such a Nature a Man as should be as near a kin to us, and like us as the matter would possibly permit, so as the business of Reconciliation be not hindered nor evacuated by it, for then he should have lost his end.

First, Whereas he might have been a Man of the same Nature with us, consisting both of Body and Soul, and yet have been created immediately as Adam was out of nothing, yea, or out of Matter in Heaven (as some do dream) as his Body it self is now Heavenly and Spiritual, and therefore called the heavenly man, 1 Cor. 15. 48, 49. Yet that he may be like to us, he will take Humane Nature of the same lump with ours, and out of which ours is taken ; so here in Heb. 2. 14. He took part of the same ; the same Flesh and Blood that we have ; and again, ver. 11. Both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified are all of one ; he saies, not only that both are One for Nature and kind, but all are of One, that is One Lump and Mass, that so he might be a little the more akin to us, our Countryman, being made of the same Earth we are of : If he had been made of Heavenly Matter, he had been Countryman to the Angels rather, for Heaven is their Country, yea he had been utterly a Stranger to us though of the same Nature, as a Man dropt from Heaven would be, as some conceive Melchisedec his Type to have been. And the the reason there given is proper and pertinent, for he was to sanctifie us, and he that sanctifies and they that are sanctified, it is meet they should be [of One.] The ground of this Reason is taken from that of the Levitical Law, by which the first Fruits sanctified the whole Lump or Mass which those Fruits were taken out of, and they by this sanctified the rest, because they were of the same Lump or Mass as it is expressed, Rom. 11. 16. For if the first-fruits be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches. They were not only of the same Species of Creature that the rest were of, but growing out of the same Earth that the rest of the Fruits did. Now Christ as he is called the [Fruit] of the womb, Luke 1. 42. so the first Fruits, 1 Cor. 15. 20. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept: Which though spoken of the Resurrection only, yet holds in all even to his very Nature, he is in all things wherein he is like us the first fruits, and therefore is to be made like us in all, that he might be the first Fruits. And he was to sanctifie others of Mankind, and this he had not so fitly and correspondently according to the Law of Nature done, had not both they and he been all of one: And besides God meant not to create anew any of Mankind, and therefore he made woman of Man rather than of nothing, intending to make out of Adam all which he meant to make, even Christ and all.

But then

Secondly, He might have been made of the same lump if made of some Man in that manner as Eve was out of Adam, made of a Rib, or some such part of Mankind; but he resolves to come nearer yet, and to be made as like in all things as may be, and therefore he will be made of the same kind of Matter that we all are made of, even of Seed which is the quintessence, the Elixir of Mans Nature, Intimum substantie, and therefore the first Title and Appellation he was known by unto the Sons of Men was the Seed of the woman; Gen. 3. 15. And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. So Acts 17. 26 God hath made Mankind all of one Blood, that so they might love one another; and he will have this Man that is to be our Redeemer to be of the same Blood, that is, of Seed, which is the Blood of Man concocted to an height, and therefore he is not only called a Man, but the Son of Man; Mt. 17. 12. Eve though made out of Man was not filia hominis, a Daughter of Man, nor Adam though a Man, yet not a Son of Man, no. In the Genealogy, Luke 3. 38. Adam is called the Son of God; but Christ is to be the Son of Man as well as Man, and that by being made of Seed, which all Men are made of, and so in Heb. 2. 16. He took not the nature of Angels, but the [seed] of Abraham: And the reason is given in the next verse here, that he might call us Brethren, and not be ashamed of us: A Brother is more than of the same Nature, it notes one made out of the same Blood; and God would have the same Blood run in his Veins that runs in ours: And this fitted him the more to be a Redeemer, and to have Right to do it by the Levitical Law also, for it was proper to a Brother to redeem, and a Stranger could not, Levit. 25. 25. If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold. So that the Church comes to have her wish,  Cant. 8. 1. Oh that thou wert as my brother, &c. For so Christ is.

Yea,

Thirdly, He will come yet nearer, even in the manner of his production or being made a Man, as like as may be to that of ours, as near as possibly might be, so as not to take infection. He will be made of Seed even by a conception, and lye in the Womb and grow up there from a Tear, a Drop, by degrees as Man doth, and be born, and be a Suckling as we, as Psal. 8. 2 speaks of him, and therefore he is called the Fruits of the Womb, Luke 1. 42. And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb: And more expressly, Luke 1. 31. Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son; speaking to Mary. You see Christ is like to

to us in being produced both by the same way, and to lye in the same place, that secret and dark Chamber that all Mankind lyes in. Conception is the Groundfeil (as I may call it) of our Nature, which sin had infected, and it was rotten and corrupted, and from it the Leprosie was spread over all the Walls of this Building, In sin my mother conceived me, says David, Psal. 51. 5. and Christ coming to repair and restore us from the very foundation, sanctifies that very way of production, conception, and consecrates the curious Room and Privy Chamber that all Mankind lies in. Man is said by the Psalmist to be curiously wrought in the lower parts of the earth, Psal. 139. 15. and Christ Descends even thither, that so he may Ascend the Higher; he takes his flight thus low, in that he Ascended he Descended first into these lower parts of the Earth, which surely is part of the Apostles meaning in comparing it with that Psalm, Ephes. 4. 9, 10 Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? ver. 10. He that descended, is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things. And that we may be where he is, as he prays, John 17. 24. He will condescend for a while to be where we were, enclosed in the Womb: And that we may come to his Place, his Mansion-House in Heaven, his Fathers House, he will first come down to our Place, our Mothers House, for such is the Womb: And therefore he is still called The seed of the woman, and made of a woman, Gal. 4. 4, 5. But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law, ver. 5. To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. To the end that he might be fitted to redeem us: This reason is expressly added there, that he might redeem us that were under the law: And this Woman was yet a Virgin, as you shall see by and by, A Virgin shall conceive, Esa. 7. 14. Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign, Behold, a Virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. One reason of it besides that which I shall anon give, might be, that God would take a new course in the rearing up this Humane Nature differing from what was taken afore. If he had made him out of Man, or the Rib of a Man, so he had made the Woman before; if out of nothing, so he had made the first Man before. But to make him of a Woman, and the Seed of the Woman, by Conception, without Man; this was a new thing in the Earth, as the Prophet speaks, Esa. 43. 19. And God herein kept some further correspondency also with Mans sinning, that (as was observed before) as by a Man came Death, so by Man should come the Resurrection, God observed a proportion in it. So here, a Woman afore destroyed us, and was first in the transgression; nevertheless both she and we shall be saved by her Child-bearing, or that Child-bearing (as some interpret that place. 1 Tim. 2. 15.) And Adam layd all the blame on the Woman (reflecting withal on God,) Gen. 3. 12. And the man said, The woman, whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat. And therefore God presently to meet with him, says, The seed of the woman, not the man, shall break the Serpents Head, as if he had said, Thou hast laid the fault on me for giving thee a Woman, because she hath been the occasion of thy Fall, but I will be even with thee; (but 'tis in Mercy as Gods revenges on his Children are.) Thou shalt have cause to thank me more for this Woman, than thou now hast done, for the seed of the woman shall break the serpents head, and so doth God reprove him, and for his unthankfulness puts the Honour upon the Woman.

Objection, Yea but now in the fourth place, you will say, This Kindred is too nigh, he had better have marryed our Nature further off, and at a greater distance; for thus he is in danger to be made sinful. Doth not the Psalmist say, In sin my mother conceived me, Psal. 51. 5. Doth not the Apostle say, And such an high priest became us as was separated from sinners? Heb. 7. 26. Why then the work of our Redemption will be spoyled by this way of Conception of Christ, and he be unfitted for the Work.

But for Answer, though there is a concipiet, yet not a genitus est, though there is a Conception, yet not a Generation: It is Conception upon Generation defiles, Man begets in his Image, but Christ was not begotten but conceived only, he comes so neer you see that 'tis but the cutting of a hair keeps him from being infected, and so though he will have the same substance, yet separate from Sinners, as there the separation means, quantum ad culpam, as to sin; non naturam, as to Nature; and therefore though he will be conceived in the same place we are, and be of the same substance with us, yet not after the same way; and it is not the substance that defiles, or the place, but the way of framing our Natures, we are framed by generation of Man and Woman, he but by Conception only of a Woman, but made by the Holy Ghost, so in our Creed conceived by the Holy Ghost, so in Luke 1. 35. The Holy Ghost shall overshadow thee, and Matth. 1. 20. That which is conceived in thee is of the Holy Ghost: Not σπερματικός, but δυναστευτικός, as the Builder framing and forming his Body; Therefore it is not said he was begotten of a Woman, but made of a Woman, non genitus sed factus, and therefore he is called The Man from Heaven, though the matter of his Body was from Earth, 1 Cor. 15. 47, 48. And to this purpose 'tis observable, that Heb. 10. 5. is with difference spoken of Christs Humane Nature and ours, A Body hast thou prepared me, that is God did it, and not Man by Generation, which is the ordinary way of producing Men, and the only way of conveying Sin. The Parents they are therefore said to beget a Man, not because they afford matter and stuff, but because there goes a forming Power, vis plastica as Philosophers call it, that doth prepare the Matter, form it, and to use the word, which is here, doth ὑποτίθει articulate it for the Soul, which is the utmost they do, and for which they are said to beget, and wherein the very Formalis ratio of Generation lyes. Accurately therefore to distinguish this production of the Humane Nature of Christ from the ordinary, though he useth the same word that signifies the manner of making our Bodies by way of articulation, yet he expresseth it as done by another hand, [Thou hast prepared it] the Holy Ghost performing that which the vis plastica or forming power in all other Generations useth to do. Luk. 1. 35. And the Angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God. That though the Matter is the same, and this formed by articulation as ours is, yet it is done by the Power of the most High, and therefore exempted from Sin; therefore he adds, That Holy One that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. For because Generation by Men is the only way of conveying Sin, and the formalis ratio of Generation lyes in that vis plastica, whereby a Parent forms the birth, (as Philosophy teacheth) therefore his Body though made of the same Matter, Seed, that ours is, and that Seed articulated into the same shape ours is, yet because by another hand, the power of the most high, therefore he is a Holy one, separate from Sinners, his Body being a Tabernacle which God pitcheth, not Man, Heb. 8. 2. Not of this Building, not built as Mans is, not by the same hands, as Heb. 9. 11. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building: Man reared it not, nor joynted it, nor framed it, but a Body hast Thou (O God) prepared. And therefore this Body was of a Virgin without a Father, that as Melchisedeck is said, Heb. 7. 3. to be without Father and Mother; So Christ as Man was without Father, and as God without a Mother; who is therefore the Stone cut out of the same Quarry with us, but without hands, Dan. 2. 45. that is the help of Nature or by a Man. And it was necessary:

For,

1. Otherwise his Humane Nature had been a Person (the inconvenience of which you heard afore) for terminus generationis est persona. What is produced by Generation is a Person.

And,
2. He had otherwise had two Fathers, which Nature abhors that one Person should have two Fathers.

And in preparing this Nature of Christ, the Holy Ghost sanctified that Matter, and purified it as Goldsmiths do Gold from the Dross. And his business being to part Sin and our Flesh, it was fit he should take such Flesh as though once sinful, yet now Sin was parted from it. It is Generation defiles, for that which is born of the Flesh is Flesh, John 3. 6. and that as from a Man, by whom Sin is conveyed; but it follows in the same place, that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit. Now of Christ it is said that which is conceived in thee, is of the Holy Ghost, Matth. 1. 20. But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the holy Ghost. It is not the matter nor the place we are conceived in defiles, but the being begotten by a Man in the ordinary way of Nature, upon which the Law of Nature seizeth, by which a Man is to beget in his own likeness. And therefore the difference of the Phrase used here in Heb. 2. 11. of Christ and us, and that in Rom. 5. 12. speaking of our coming from Adam is observable. Here in Heb. 2. 11. Christ and we are said to be of One, that is of one lump, but the phrase that is used, Rom. 5. 12 when the Apostle speaks of the propagation of Original Sin runs thus, By one Man sin entered, because all came by and of that one Man; And therefore though Christ be made a Son of Adam, Luke 3. 38. as made of that substance and matter derived from him, yet not in regard of the same way of conveying that matter, by fleshly Generation of a Man, which is the Natural Channel of conveying his Image and Original Sin.

Fifthly, To make up this disproportion, he will in all other respects be yet the more like to us, and seeing he must not take sinful flesh, yet he will take the likeness of sinful flesh, as Rom. 8. 3. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh. He partakes of Flesh and Blood, Heb. 2. 17. And by Flesh and Blood are meant Infirmities of all sorts, he excepts Sin only, a Body passible, he might have had a Body exempted, from all Sufferings, or Misery, but he would not. And this assumption of frail Flesh was the first part of satisfaction for Sin, and the condemning Sin in our Flesh is attributed to it, Rom. 8. 3. He took not indeed Personal Infirmities, as Sicknes, but what were common to Mans Nature, he did bear Dolores nostros our griefs, not of John or Peter, not such evils as came from the particular sins of Men, but such as flowed from the common sin of Man, nor such as do spring from sin, as not despair, though fear, and those he took was to shew his love, and as they were part of the Curse, that he might be able to pity us, and that he might suffer and dye and feel the pains of Death, in all which he was left to infirmity as you have it, 2 Cor. 13. 4. For though he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God: For we also are weak in him, but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you. And so in this Text he was partaker of Flesh and Blood that is of the infirmities of Mans Nature as well as of the Nature, that through Death he might destroy him that had the power of Death, that is, the Devil: If he had not taken this frail Flesh, he could not have dyed.

Hitherto you have heard every way what manner of Man he was, and such as in all respects was fittest for him to be, in all things. But there are two things yet to be added, and both such as will yet make him fitter. I add them that you may every way see a fulness in it.

Therefore,

Sixthly, Mans Nature you know was diversified into two Sexes, Male and Female; Now which of the two was the fittest for him to assume? And this is a distinct consideration from all the former. Of the two a Male was fittest, and such was he. It is not so directly in the Text, and yet all that is spoken of him runs in the Masculine Gender, Him and He, and so this is included. Matth. 1. 21. Thou shalt bring forth a Son, and ver. last. She brought forth her first born Son, and so Luke 2. 22. For he was to be our High Priest and consecrated to God as Holy, and so thereby to sanctify his Brethren, as Heb. 2. 11. hath it, and so was the first Male Child by the Law, which is on purpose noted, Luke 2. 22. Every Male that openeth the Womb shall be called Holy to the Lord. And again all his other Offices required it, he was to be a Prophet and to teach Gods Will first, Heb. 2. 2, 3. and for ever to be in the great Congregation, and a Woman is not to teach in the Church. He was to be a King, and to rule his Church, and a Woman is not to Usurp Authority over the man. He was to be an Husband and his Church a Spouse, and only a Male could fitly bear that Relation. And besides all this there was this further Harmony in it, that as by the Male, the Man not the Woman, sin is said to enter into the World, Rom. 5. 19. So by the Man we should be restored: And thus indeed both Sexes came to share in this Honour, the Male, in that Christ himself is a Man, the Female, in that she yet was the Instrument of bringing him forth into the World. He is of the Womans Seed, but of Mans Sex, that so both Male and Female might be all one in Christ Jesus.

There is now but one thing left, and that is, seeing God hath appointed several Bounds to Mans Habitation, though all are made of one Blood, of what Countrey or Kindred of Men was it fittest for our Redeemer to be of? God pitcht it on what of all was fittest, that he should be of the Seed of Abraham. This Heb. 2. 16. you see also hath it. and so I could not but take notice of it. As he took the Nature of Man not of Angels, so he took the Seed of Abraham more eminently than of any other Nation, although he had by some of his Progenitors Gentiles Blood in him, yet he was of Abraham in a lineal Descent, Rom. 9. 4, 5. Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises. ver. 5. Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen. I will not mention any other reason of this, but what is proper to set out his fitness the more for this Work. It was well for us that he took Abrahams Seed, for so in him all Nations were blessed as was the promise, Abraham being Father of all the faithful: But especially he was thereby engaged to keep the whole Law for us; for Abrahams Seed were all to be circumcised, and he that was circumcised was a Debtor to the whole Law, Gal. 5. 3. For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law And so the Law will take hold of him, and so hereby he was made under the Law; And this was one reason why he was a Male Child also, for they only were circumcised. Thus you see Christ hereby engaged to keep the Law for us, yea, to satisfy for Sin; for the Ceremonial Law was a Bond against us, which he must cancel and destroy.

C H A P. VIII.

The Uses. Since God hath thus fitted us with a Mediator, we may be assured that he will fit us with all other things. Let us choose Christ to be our only Saviour, and trust in none but him. Is he God? Let us not then fear, or doubt. Hath he taken our Nature? Let us admire his Love in this, and consider our own Priviledge. Let us endeavour to fit our Natures all that we can for Fellowship with him.

WE will now come to Uses of all this: And surely the Doctrine of Christ will afford many: For his Person is the most Useful of any in Heaven and Earth. I deferred the Uses until the last, that so you might view the Frame of the Doctrinal Part as set together without separation.

The First Uses shall be from this, That God chose him to be Mediator, because of his Fitness above all other.

I. Hence learn, and be assured, That that Love which thus fitted thee with a Saviour, will much more fit thee with all other things which thou hast need of. Thou shalt have the fittest Condition, the fittest Calling, the fittest Yoak-Fellow, the fittest Estate [food convenient] as Agar speaks: God will fit thee in every thing. Thus he sought out a meet help for Adam; Gen. 2. 20. The Fulness of Fitness in Christ to be a Saviour is a Pawn for fitting and suiting thee with all things else, for he that gave Christ, gives all besides, Rom. 8. 32. He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things. And believe that as all things do meet in Christ, and nothing is wanting that may make him a fit and meet Saviour for thee, so all things shall conspire, all things shall suit and kiss each other; Sins, Afflictions, Mercies, yea, all Gods Dealings shall work together for thy good. Be quiet therefore and trust him 'in all; Lean not, (as Solomon saies) to thine own wisdom, Prov. 3. 5. Thou knowest not what is fittest for thee, as the Sons of Zebedee did not when they asked for a Place that was not fit for them. The Physitian knows what is fit for his Patient, better than he himself does, and so does God: He takes measure of thy Spirit, and knows the Composition of it; and so orders his Prescripts accordingly. We cannot judge what is fit for us, God only can. If thou hadst seen Christ in the Flesh, poor and despised (as he was whilst on Earth) thy Carnal Heart would have judged him as unlikely and as unfit a Man to be the Saviour of the World, as the Jews did; Isa. 52. 14. (his countenance was so marred) Thou wouldst never have thought that a Carpenters Son should build God a Church; that a Man unlearned should be the Prophet of Gods People. The Jews refused him as an unfit Stone to be laid in their Building whom God had yet hewn out on purpose, as being only fit to be made the head stone of the corner, as a Stone Elect and Pretious, Isa. 28. 16. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth; shall not make haste. 1 Pet. 2. 6, 7. And as much mistaken are Men in judging of their own Condition.

Book II.

II. Is Christ every way so fit a Saviour? then choose him, and rest in him alone. It is necessary that a Saviour you should have; for otherwise you perish; and it is as necessary that you should have Jesus Christ, or else you must have none: For there is, there can be no other. But yet, suppose you should have your choice of many, nay, suppose there were as many Saviours as Men to be saved (as many as the Papists would make) yet he so transcends, that if ye all knew him, you would all make choice of him, and refuse all others. As who is a God like to our God! So, Who is a Saviour like to our Saviour! Isa. 43. 11. There is none besides him. What do you therefore mean to stand demurring and deliberating whether you should take him, or no, for your Lord and King (as the most Men do?) Do you look for any more such Christs, or can you have a better, a fitter Saviour? Let this encourage you also to be willingly subject to him: What greater Motive can there be to this, then that of all Princes he is the fittest to be thy King, (and none fit to be King of Saints but he) and of all Husbands he is the fittest to rule over thee? It grieves no Man, nor do any think much to be subject to such a Governour, as all Men with one consent acknowledge to be most fit for them. The People rejoyce (saies Solomon) when the righteous are in authority, Prov. 29. 2. Now that the Lord Christ is King, Let the earth rejoyce, and the multitudes of the Isles be glad, Psal. 97. 1.

The Second sort of Uses may be taken from this, That our Saviour is God.

1. Is he who is thy Saviour, God! Then fear not to commit thy self to him: Thy God is thy Saviour. If God will justifie (though there were no Mediator) who should lay any thing to thy charge? Rom. 8. 33. Surely none would open their mouths against you; The Lord that chooseth Jerusalem rebuke thee, (saied the Angel unto Satan, Zach. 3. 2.) but if God will also be thy Mediator, and dye for thee; then much more art thou safe: Who shall condemn (as the Apostle saies) it is Christ that dyed. Do you know and consider, Who he is that dyed for you? It is even Christ that dyed; (Rom. 8. 34.) who in the beginning of the next Chapter he tells them, Is God over all, blessed for ever. In his dayes Judah shall be saved, Jer. 23. 6. It shall be so (saies the Prophet) for his Name is Jehovah our righteousness. Say to the feeble of heart, fear not; for your God will save you; Isa. 35. 4. When Princes will themselves in Person go into the Field, how doth it encourage their Subjects and Soldiers? Now Jesus Christ who is God, came down into the Field himself: Who is this that comes from Bozrah? (Isa. 63. 1.) It is I (saies Christ) that am mighty to save. The Heathens thought, that if their Gods should but come down, they were sure of the Victory. Now God came down, and was found amongst us as a Man, and is become a Captain of Salvation, Heb. 2. 10. therefore let fear have no entertainment with you.

Only in the Second Place,

2. If he be God; although this may raise your hearts not to fear discouragements (I speak to you whose hearts are set to be saved) yet it may withal strike the greatest and most awful dread upon your Spirit, and provoke you to fear this your Saviour, and not to deal presumptuously with him, nor to slight him, and play fast and loose with him, thinking you may have Salvation at any time: No, he is God; and God will not be mocked, Gal. 6. 7. You must carry your selves towards him, as towards God himself. Because Christ came to be a Saviour, and hath a Nature so full of Meekness, therefore Men think to deal with him as they please. But (as God elsewhere saies, Psal. 46. 10.) Be still, and know, that he is God. Therefore when God sent him before the Israelites, Exod. 23. 21. He bad them beware of him, and provoke him not, for (saies he) he will not pardon your transgressions, (that is, he will not pardon you upon any other than Gospel terms and limits,) for my name is in him: That is, he is God as well as I, and therefore will not suffer you you to lie in such Sins as cannot stand with the Rules in his Word, and yet pardon you: Think not to deal so with him: He will save you upon no other terms than I my self would by him. And therefore the Apostle, when he had shewn how Christ was God, as well as Man, in the First and Second Chap. to the Hebrews, to the end that He might be a faithful high priest to God, as well as a merciful high priest to men, (ver. 17. of the Second chap.) that is, such a Saviour, as was not so made up, all of Mercy to Men, but that withal he is as faithful to God: From this therefore the Apostle in the 3. chap. makes this use, and bids them consider what an high priest they have, (ver. 1.) who was, and will be faithful to God that appointed him, ver. 2. And he bids them to consider this, to this end, not to neglect the present opportunity of Salvation, and think to put Christ off for the present, and come in to him when they please, in that he is so merciful a Saviour: But (saies he ver. 7.) Consider, that as the Holy Ghost saies, To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, so take heed how there be in you an evil heart to depart from him, he being the living God; ver. 12. Remember how he dealt with the Israelites in the Wilderness (his Fathers Name being in him) and how he swore against them, and said, They should not enter into his rest. Read the whole Chapter, and you will find this use made of it, as by the Apostle elsewhere it is: So 1 Cor. 10. 4, 5, 6. I would have you Brethren (saies he, ver. 1.) to consider, that Our Fathers had Christ for their Captain, as we have, (ver. 4.) and they had him offered unto them in the Ordinances: But they tempting him, with many of them God was not well pleased; that is, Christ was not well pleased, (for ver. 9. they are said to have tempted Christ) and he being God, destroyed them in the wilderness: For in that he was God, he would not be so dealt withal by them: These things therefore are examples unto us, (as he there concludes that Discourse) that we may know and consider, what a Saviour we have to deal withal: Who, as he is Man, (and therefore you might expect all Mercy from him) so he is God also, and will be faithful unto God to save Men, but this, upon his Fathers own Conditions: And if we seek not Salvation according to his own Rules, he will take part with his Father against us, for his Fathers Name is in him.

And yet,

3. Withal we may fetch this ground of Encouragement against the guilt of great Sins for time to come, that he is God, therefore able to pardon us. Were he meer Man, though he had our Nature, yet he would not endure us: So much Mercy as serves to pardon us, never entered into the heart of any meer Creature: [I am God, not Man, therefore you Sons of Jacob are not consumed.] But the Humane Nature of Christ being United to the Son of God, his Will in pardoning doth accompany the Divine Will, and goes along with it: And as in all Acts else, so in forgiving it is able to hold pace with him.

A Third sort of Uses are taken from this, That he who is God hath took our Nature, our whole frail Nature unto himself, in that humbled way mentioned.

1. Admire we the Love of God towards us; which (if ever it was shewn in any thing) is shewn in this; and therefore this is made the great Act of Love, his emptying himself, and becoming nothing as it were, that he being equal with God, took upon him the form of a Servant Solomon made a wonder of it, That he whom the heavens of heavens cannot contain, should vouchsafe to dwell in Temples made with hands, 1 Kin. 8. 27. But this is nothing to his being Personally United to the Humane Nature, and to dwell Bodily and Personally in it, and so to be made one with the House in which he dwells, and which he himself built; that is, He to be made a Creature who made all Creatures. It is to be admired, that God would ever have it said, That a Creature was God, and that God is become a Creature; yet so it is said, John 1. 18. [the word was made flesh.] For him to be made a Creature is more more then for us to become nothing, or for an Angel to become a Worm. It is therefore made a Myſtery, a great Myſtery that all ſtand agaſt, at, as well Angels as Men, (and this [ὁμολογεῖ μὲν] even with one conſent) that God ſhould be manifeſt in the Fleſh: 1 Tim. 3. 16. And without controverſie, great is the myſtery of godlineſſ: God was manifeſt in the fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit, ſeen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory. And if he be made a Creature, let him be made the beſt of Creatures, an Angel, there being ſuch Nobleneſſ in them above what is in us. Their Perfections are the Meaſure of ours, and our Perfection is expreſſed but by being like to them. Our Eſtate in Heaven is to be [ὡς ἄγγελοι,] as the Angels. Likewise the chiefeſt Wiſdom in any Man is but as an Angels (as it is ſaid of David.) They for their ſubſtance are Spirits, and therefore in a nearer degree of aſſimilation unto God; they are the fitter Matches for him who is a Spirit. Again, if he will aſſume any thing of ours, let it be our Souls only, for our Bodies are vile Bodies, Phil 3. 21. But ſuch was his Love to us, that he will take both, becauſe he means to redeem both, and to make our Bodies glorious, like his own Bodie. And how doth the Apoſtle in this Heb. 2. 16. ſet forth his Love in this, that [\ δὴνα*] at no hand he took upon him the nature of Angels, though he could have done it eaſily, and with more Perſonal Honour; but he would [in no wiſe] entertain a thought of it. Such was his Love to us, that he reſuſed that Match, his heart being fixed on us. He lets Principalities and Powers go, and hath reſpect to the lowneſſ of his Handmaid, Luke 1. 48. the mean Eſtate of our Nature. But yet, if he take our Nature let him take it at its beſt, whilſt in a State of Innocency; let him marry it in its prime, and (as the High Prieſt was to do) when it is a Virgin uncorrupted, unpolluted with Sin or Miſery; or rather, let him take it ſuch as it is now in Heaven, all glorious. But he will out of his Love to us, take our Nature on him when it is at the worſt, and then make it glorious, and us like him: When we are Traitors and out of Favour, he will marry Fleſh and Blood out of our Stock and Kindred, ſo to bring us into favour again. Was it not unparallel'd Love in Jonathan then to love David when he was in diſgrace with his Father? Much more would it have been for him out of his love to David as then to have married one of his Children. How exceeding much more then is the love of Chriſt towards us?

For all which as we ſhould admire his Love, ſo withal we ſhould conſider our Priviledge by having our Nature ſo advanced. What a Pawn and Pledge of Love is it to us, to have one of theſe Bodies of ours made more Glorious than all the Angels? To whom Charge is given when he comes into the World to worſhip and adore him; Heb. 1. 6. Who is to have them, and all things elſe put under his feet, and is to be their Lord and Judge; and they all but to be his Guard. What a Prerogative is it that our Nature ſhould be in him made higher in Court than any Queen can be in the Court of any King; and thus it is, ſeeing he is one in Perſon with God, not in Conjugal Relations only; and the reſt of his Brethren are advanced to be his Queen, and the Angels to be but his and her Guard and Servants. And as this is the Priviledge of Our Nature, ſo ſome of the Antients have thought, that the revealing of Gods purpoſe in it unto the Angels before their Fall, was the occaſion of the ſame, and that their caſting out of Heaven was a puniſhment of their proud ſtomaching of the Honour done unto our Nature, that it ſhould be advanced ſo far above them, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Eph. 1, 21.) And it ſhould teach us not to diſhonour and defile this Nature, (which God hath ſo honoured) with Intemperancy, Uncleanneſſ, or any baſe or noyſom Luſts. It alſo may encourage us to come with boldneſſ to the Court of Heaven and Throne of Grace, for that our Nature is chief in favour there: Heb. 4. 14. Seeing we have ſo great an high prieſt paſſed into the heavens, let us hold faſt our profeſſion: And ſeeing he was Man toucht with our infirmities; let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may find grace and mercy in time of need. When one of a Kindred is advanced and made a Favourite at Court, how will every one of his allyance, (though never ſo far off) challenge Kindred of him, him, and seek favour by him, and hope to be advanced too? And Christ is not ashamed of us his poor Kindred: But being allyed to us by his Nature he dares to call us Brethren, and is grieved that we come no oftner to him, with Petitions of favour to be put up by him. And he not only called us Brethren, when himself was with us in a poor Estate here below, and lived in our Houses amongst us; but likewise when he was risen again, and thereby entred into possession of his Kingdom. Even then the first Message that he sent, and the first words that he spake, were those in John 20. 17. Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, &c. You see, his Preferment alters him not; after his Resurrection he calls them Brethren. We should therefore improve this our Affinity and Kindred with him: He took it on him for that very purpose.

And

III. In that he took upon himself such a Humane Nature as should be every way fit for the business of Mediation that he was to perform for us; let us endeavour to fit our selves all that we can, for Communion and Fellowship with him. The reason why we live here absent from him so long, though contracted to him already is, to be fitted for his Bed in Heaven, and for Everlasting Embraces: Even as Esther was a long while preparing for Abashuerus his Bed; so are we here, in preparing for glory; as it is, Rom. 9. 23. And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of his mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory. The Bride dresseth her self here in this life, Revel. 19. 7. Let us be glad and rejoyce, and give honour unto him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made her self ready; and prepares to meet her Lord, with whom she must live for ever. And look as he took our Nature, let us take his; labour we to be changed into his image, being made partakers of the divine nature: As he took our whole Nature, to save the whole of it; so let us consecrate the whole to him, and be sanctified throughout in body, soul and spirit; as 1 Thess. 5. 23. Cleanse we our selves from all pollution of flesh and spirit; Soul and Body, 2 Cor. 7. 1. And as he came as near in likeness to our Nature (as was shewn) as possibly he could, in Conception, in Birth, and in every thing, yet so as he might avoid Sin; so should we come as near to him as is possible: Be we like him in all things: In his Power and Prerogative indeed we cannot; they are as incommunicable to us, as our Sin was to him; but in Graces and in Holyness we may, in Meekness and Humility we may. And as he took up our Infirmities, so take we up his Cross; be we willing to be made conformable to him in sufferings for him. And as his Humane Nature subsists wholly in the Second Person, losing its own proper Personal subsistence to be one with him, and to become a fit Instrument together with him of our Salvation; so be we content to lose our selves and our own Personal Proprieties, to subsist only in him and to him, and to be for ever serviceable unto his Glory.

The All-sufficient Abilities to accomplish our Redemption, demonstrated from God the Father's calling him to it, which he would never have done, had not he known him able.

able. From Gods engaging also to furnish him with Abilities. From Christs undertaking it, which he did upon the knowledge which he had of himself, as equal to the great Performance. From the Greatness and Excellency of his Person, who being God Man, is able to do any thing. The Reasons which induced God to fix on this way of Salvation, to be by the Blood and Sacrifice of his Son. An Answer to that Objection, How God is said to pardon us freely by his Grace, when yet he requires full Satisfaction to be made.

HA V I N G at large laid open that sole peculiar Fitness which is in Christ for the Work of Reconciliation: We will now come to discover likewise that Allsufficient Fulness of Abilities in him, for the accomplishment of this great Work in all particulars required to it. Which First in the General, your Faith may be helpt in the persuasion of, by these Demonstrations

Demonstration 1. Because God the Father did call him to this great Work: And had not Christ been fully able to bring you to Heaven, without all possibility of miscarriage; God would never have pitcht upon him. Men may sometimes choose one for a Place of Office and Honour, who yet is not sufficient to discharge it, because they are mistaken in Mens Abilities: but God could not be mistaken, but must needs know, that Jesus Christ was able to go through without miscarrying, and therefore he pitcht upon him. In Psal. 89. 19. Thou thou speakest in vision to the holy one, and saidst, I have laid help upon one that is mighty: I have exalted one chosen out of the people. That whole Psalm is a Prophecie of Christ, under the Type of David, and hath in it much of the Gospel, which is called the sure mercies of David. The state of the People of Israel when David came to the Crown (if you take the Psalm of the Type David) was a shattered state; Israel was a wrackt People, all was distracted, tottering and broken; Saul their King and Jonathan his Son slain, themselves overcome and routed by the Philistims; their Religion, State, and all were desperate and staggering: but God chose David, an able Governour, to restore all; and so laid help on one that was mighty. In Psal. 75. David speaking of his coming to the Government and Kingdom, when I shall receive the congregation. Nor. 2. Adds; Ver. 3. The earth (namely, The Land of Judea) and all the inhabitants thereof are out of course: I bear up the pillars of it. Now he therein was a Type of Christ, (who often in the Prophets is called David) for when we were without strength, being Captiv'd by Satan, forlorn and undone, and no Creature able to help us; then did God lay help on one that was mighty: That is, He laid the Task of Saving us upon Christ who was able to do it. Thus also Heb. 7. 16. He was made a Priest, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life; that is, He was armed with Power to execute the Office of Priesthood for ever, and to overcome all Difficulties; and therefore he is said to have been made after the power of an endless life, and not after the law of a carnal commandment, as other Priests were. And Ver. 18. the Apostle layes, Their Office was weak, and not able to bring things to perfection: Those Priests were not able to satisfy God, nor to carry on the Work; but Christ had the power of an endless life, because Christ had power to lay down his life, and take it up again, to survive the encounter of his Fathers wrath, and then to live for ever, and Intercede for for us, and so to go through-stitch with the Work, and without once fainting, much less succumbing or sinking under it, or failing in bringing it to its full perfection. Chap. I.

Demonst. 2. In that God called him, he undertook to make him able; for besides that God knew Christ to be able, and therefore call'd him, it may be further said, that in Calling him, he undertook to make him able. Men if they find one not able for an Office to which he is called, cannot give him Abilities; but God when he gives a Call, gives likewise Abilities. Thus of Christ it is said, *Isa. 42. 1. 4, 6. Behold my servant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my soul delighteth: I have put my spirit upon him, he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not fail, nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law. I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles. Behold my Servant whom I uphold, (saith he) mine Elect whom I have called in righteousness: That is, I have both call'd him to this Office, and that in Righteousness. I have not forced it on him, nor put him upon this hard Task unwillingly. 1. He is my Elect: I chose him of all that ever were or shall be. 2. I have called him in righteousness; that is, he being not unwilling to undertake it, but consenting to it. And 3. I promised faithfully to stand by him, and not to leave him in it. And 4. He being my Servant in it, therefore certainly I will uphold him through it, as it is Ver. 6. God promiseth that he will hold his hand, that he sink not, (even as Christ held up Peter by the hand, from sinking) and will keep him so, as (Ver. 4.) he shall not fail or fall short to accomplish the Work of Mediation, in the least tittle; nor shall he be discouraged, or (as it is in the Original) broken (and yet he was to undergo that, which would have broken the backs of Men and Angels, and have pusht them all to Hell) but he shall be backt with all the Power that God hath, even that He hath who made the Heavens, (as it followes, Ver. 5.) which he mentions as engaging all that Power in it.*

Demonst. 3. Christ was willing to undertake it, and therefore surely he knew himself able to go through with it; for otherwise he would never have undertaken it. A Wise Man will not undertake an enterprize which he is not able to manage and go thorough with; and Christ much less, he being the Wisdom of his Father: He will not do as a foolish builder, that sets upon a work which he is not able to finish. What wise Man will enter into Bond for an other, for more than himself is worth, and so run a hazard of lying in Prison all the dayes of his life? Surely no wise Man will do this; and much less would Christ undertake to be our Surety, if he had thought himself insufficient to pay; therefore certainly he knew that he was able to perfect, and consummate the great Work of our Reconciliation, before he took it upon him.

Demonst. 4. In that he is God as well as Man, therefore he must needs be able for any undertaking, be it never so hazardous. If it had been possible for his Father to have forsaken him (as he complained that for a time he did) and afford him no succour, no support; but leave him to himself, nay do his utmost against him, and make known against him the power of his wrath, (as indeed he did) yet he is able alone to uphold himself, for that the Fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily in him; Coloss. 2. 9. and therefore there was an impossibility of miscarriage, as you have it, Acts 2. 24. It was not possible that he should have been held under the pangs of death. If any thing would have held him, it would have been Death and Hell; for then his Power was put to it, to raise himself; but it was impossible that he should be held by them, because he was God. It is one of his great Names, Isa. 9. 7. that he is the mighty God: therefore he is mighty and able to save himself and others.

Now

Now the Particulars of all that Salvation whereunto this All-sufficiency of his is required, are many; as (not to name all) to make your Peace, pardon your Sins, bring you into favour, send his Spirit into your Hearts, to change them and dwell there for ever, to subdue your Enemies, defend and keep you blameless unto the Great Day, and then to raise you up, and glorify you for ever.

But the Foundation of all these lies in that All-sufficiency that was found in Christ to satisfie for sin and to justify sinners; for by that Satisfaction Sin was removed, which before did separate between God and us, and was an hinderance of all Blessings from descending upon us: for there cannot be so much as Peace whilst Sin remains; and by Christs Satisfaction Sin being removed, then likewise all the Blessings wherein Salvation consists, and which Gods free Favour intended to bestow, were also purchased by him. And however that the Application of all be performed by degrees; yet the Purchase of all was laid in that one Satisfaction of his, ere he offered to see a foot out of the Grave. And therefore Heb. 10. he is said by that one offering (which was the great and last Payment) to have for ever perfected those that are sanctified: That is, to have done all that which was to be done for that blessed estate of Perfection which he was to bring them unto. The All-sufficiency of which Satisfaction is that particular Subject that we are now to handle. The opening of which we reduce to these two Heads.

- I. More Generally, That in Christ, and him alone, there was an All-sufficiency or Fullness of Abilities to be found, to satisfie for Sin, and to justify Sinners.
- II. More Particularly, That all the several particular parts of, and what is requisite to compleat the Justification of a Sinner, are fully found in Christs Satisfaction: So that there is in it a Fullness and Perfection of Parts also.

For the First of these; viz. That in Christ, and in him alone there is an All-sufficiency to satisfie for Sin, and to justify Sinners, I will (as a ground for it) take for my Text Heb. 10. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats, should take away sins. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me: In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure: Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Above, when he said, Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin thou wouldst not, neither hast pleasure therein (which are offered by the law,) Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

For the opening of this Point out of these words we will proceed by degrees, first premising such Observations as shall make way for the clearing of it.

Observation 1. You see that the Project that he mentioneth, is the taking away of Sins; and nothing had been more easie for God to have done. He might have taken away the Sins by taking away the Sinners, and so have made short work of it, taking them both out of the way at one stroak, by which course he might have caused Sin to cease, as Ezekiel speaks Ezek. 23. 48. But this is not his meaning; for his purpose is, so to take away Sins, as the Sinners might stand still; that is, that they might stand in judgment, and be justified in his sight. There are some even among Sinners whom he bears a secret good will unto, and hath done so from everlasting: but their Sins have separated between him and them, and he would fain separate their Sins as far off from them, that so he might draw near to them, and communicate himself fully and freely unto them. And because Sin is a burthen which they can neither stand under, nor throw from off themselves: A wounded Spirit who can bear? And further, they can never give thanks enough for his benefits received, much less, satisfy for Sins, therefore he resolves to have them took off, as the word [ἀποποιεῖν] seems to signify.

But then again, For to take away Sins only, is but half the Design. The 4th Verse indeed mentions no more, because the blood of Bulls could not do so much; yet that same Will of God mentioned in the 7th Verse had a further aim, not only to take away Sins, that he might not hate us, but further to give us such a Righteousness, as for which he might have more cause to love us than ever, and loving to delight in us. His Will meant not only Peace or Pardon to us, but Grace and Favour: It was, as they sang, Luke 2. 14. Good will towards Men, as well as peace on earth. His Will is to have us adopted and graciously accepted, as well as pardoned: Eph. 1. 5, 6. Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beginning.

But then again, thus to have taken Sins off from them, might have been done by a sole, free Act of Pardon past from him, and he needed not to have made any more ado about it. I dare not say the contrary, as some are bold to do; for this Reason sways with me, namely, To punish Sin, being but an Act of his Will, (as all his other Works ad extra are) and not of his Nature; for what is the reason else that he sometimes suspends the punishing of wicked Men, out of the riches of his forbearance! it is because to punish them is but an Act of his Will. If it were an Act of his Nature, then whosoever sinned, should dye for it immediately, but it being an Act of his Will he may suspend it, as he oftentimes doth. And if for a while he thus forbears, why might he not have done so for ever, and so wholly Pardon? Surely there is no reason to the contrary. To hate Sin indeed, is an Act of his Nature, but to express his hatred by punishing, is an Act of his Will; and therefore might be wholly suspended. And that which yet further confirms me in it is, that Christ when he prayed that the Cup might pass from him; Mark 14. 36. useth this Argument, all things are possible to thee. The thing he entreated for was, that the Cup might be taken away; and he intimates this as the ground of his Prayer, that it was possible to God, that notwithstanding he was resolved to have the Word saved, yet to have that end of his brought about another way, though in view there is none that we know of but this. Now there was a truth in this; else Christ would not have used it as an Argument to this purpose. The impossibility lay only in Gods Will to have it done by Christs Satisfaction, and no way else; which therefore Christ submitted unto (not my will, but thine be done) only Nature in him, to shew its averfeness to that Cup as simply in it self considered, sought a diversion. And to shew that there was another way, he useth this as the greatest Argument, thereby the more to set forth his and his Fathers Love, that he yet underwent this most difficult one.

Observ. 2. Therefore Secondly, Observe in the General, that for to take away Sins, God takes Means into consideration. Why else do Bulls and Goats come into consideration here? He means not to use his sole Prerogative in it, but to do it fairly; and though by a bare Act of his Will he might have done it, yet his Will working by Counsel, Eph. 1. 11. he thought it not so fit to do it. The Apostle therefore speaks of Blood here, and in Heb. 9. 22, 23. he also says, that without blood there is no remission. He will have Blood for Satisfaction; and Ver. 23. the Apostle makes it a necessity that there should be Sacrifices, yea better sacrifices than the blood of Bulls and Goats. It was necessary (says he) not absolutely, but in regard of Gods resolution to satisfy Justice. And therefore the Heathens offered Sacrifice to pacify their incensed Gods; this thought being innate in every Mans Nature, that God must be satisfied; the Reasons of which (namely why God required Satisfaction) I shewed in that first Part of the Story of the Gospel, (in Gods Eternal Transactions with Jesus Christ) only I will now but use the ground of it which lies in the Text it self.

Book III.

1. Consider that the Project is, to take away Sins, (as hath been shewed) and then for to make way for the manifestation of this, it was necessary to give a Law, which might both discover what Sin was, and how hainous; and also shew by a Threatning annexed, that Punishment which it naturally deserves, and what the Sinner might in Justice expect from God. This was necessary; for otherwise, where there is no law, there is no transgression; at least wife Sin is not imputed, where there is no Law; Rom. 5. 13. and then there would have been no Sins actually capable of Mercy, or none to Pardon. Now then, upon Gods giving this Law, he ipso facto takes upon him to be a Judge, and the Judge of all the World; for in the very making of the Law he declares himself to be so. So then, he is engaged upon many strong Motives to shew his Justice against Sin in punishing it according as he had threatened (as I then shewed).

2. Consider, that if he hath Satisfaction, it must be perfect and full; for why else is the Blood of Bulls and Goats here rejected, and that with an [impossibility] (It is not possible that they should take away sins) but because his end was for to have perfect Satisfaction! 'Tis true, he might have accepted of that for an Acceptilation (as they call it) which should not so fully have answered his Justice; for if he might have Pardoned without any Satisfaction at all, then certainly he might have accepted of so much, or so little: If he might wholly Pardon, he might then abate, and take but something. And the Reason of it is the same with the former; for it being an Act of his Will, he might (as Christ said) do what he would with his own; he might forgive all, or require all; forgive part, or require but part. Though full Satisfaction be not given, yet the Laws of Men use to give some Damgages, though never so little, unto the Party wronged; though not for Satisfaction, yet for an acknowledgment of the Injury: But God will have Satisfaction to the full, or none at all. He stands upon it; and therefore it is that the Apostle saith, that the Blood of Bulls and Goats cannot possibly take away sin. If God had only required an acknowledgment of that Satisfaction which a Sinner was to make him, he might then have accepted of the Blood of Bulls and Goats to satisfy his Justice. But on the contrary, in Rom. 3. 26. he declares himself to have set forth Christ as a Propitiation that he might be just, and a justifier of him that believes in Jesus: And if he speaks of Justice in it, surely an imperfect Satisfaction is not worthy to have that name put upon it. In like manner, the Scripture speaks of a Price paid to Redeem us; which argues it to be special Justice; the word [Redemption] it self (which is so frequently used) doth likewise argue it: and it differs from Buying but in this, that it implies a Buying anew that which was ones own before, but yet, by a Price: so that this Justice of God came to set a Price that it would have; and if Justice sets a Price, it will have a full one. We use to say, What I give I give, but what I sell I sell. When Men indeed are streightned for lack of Money, they will sell their Goods at any under rate; but God was no way necessitated; he could have improved his Glory another way, and in the mean time have lost nothing by us. Therefore if God will sell, and his Justice sets the Price, he then will have his full Price; he will make a wise Bargain, and not see our Ransom undervalued. That Phrase in 1 Cor. 6. 20. [Bought with a price] may seem to be a Tautology, and as if one should say, He speaks with his Mouth: for if they be bought, they must needs be bought with a Price. But there is an Emphasis in the Phrase: the word [Price] is added, to note, that he hath bought them indeed, and over-bought them, and that he hath paid for them, and that, a full Price. Therefore 2 Tim. 2. 6. it is called [ἀντίλυτρον] that is, a Ransom every way answerable and adequate. And besides these Reasons intimated, add these:

(1.) All Gods Works are perfect in their kind: Deut. 32. 4. God loves not to do things by halves, if therefore he goes about to shew his Justice, he will do it perfectly, or not at all.

(2.) If God should have required something that was not fully satisfactory; then the Sinners relieved would have been apt to have thought and spoken of it as if it had been fully such; and would have been ready to have upbraided braided God therewith, as being not so much beholding unto him for cutting off part of the Payment due. We see how conceited proud Nature is of its own performances; and notwithstanding that God, to convince it of its own inabilities, hath set forth his Son as making so transcendent a Satisfaction; yet it would needs esteem that little which it is required to do, merely as an acknowledgment of thankfulness, to be in lieu of Satisfaction, and accordingly it stands upon it; and we have much ado to break our selves of this conceit. How much more then would we have done this, if God had required no other.

(3.) As to prevent the false conceits of our Hearts, so also for the full quiet and security of our Spirits, God did ordain that there should be a full Satisfaction made; that so we might have perfect Peace in our Spirits, as it is Ist. 26. 3. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee; and trust perfectly upon it, as 1 Pet. 1. 21. If it had been an imperfect Satisfaction, the Soul of Man would still have been solicitous and doubting, it would still have been prying and questioning, whether God would have accepted it or no, fearing it had not been full enough. Wherefore, as to take away our unthankfulness, so to prevent our Infidelity, it was to be a perfect Satisfaction, even such as his Justice shall require no more at our hands.

Quest. But a Question may here arise: How can God be said to Pardon freely by his Grace, when yet his Justice requires a full Satisfaction?

Ans. The Answer is, that both may well stand together. And therefore we have both joined together, Rom. 3. 24, 25. Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ. And clearly to solve this doubt, Consider,

1. That it is of Grace that this Satisfaction is transmitted, and translated from us unto another: which Satisfaction when it should come from another for us, God was no way bound to accept of: and yet he doth accept it freely. To illustrate which; there is this difference between Satisfaction for damage in Goods, and for Injuries in point of Honour (which is the thing wherein God accounts himself mainly wronged): That Satisfaction for Goods (which we call Restitution) may be performed for the Debtor by another Person, and stand as good and valid as if himself had done it: But if it be to be made in point of Honour, or that the Punishment be to reach the Life of the Party wronging; then to commute, or transmit it, it was a matter of Free Grace and Pardon.

2. It was Free Grace unto us however, because we were wholly spared: All is freely remitted to us, although he spared not his own Son; as it is said, Rom. 8. 32. and especially in that this was done to this end, that he might spare us. A Type of this were those two Goats in the Old Law, whereof the one was sacrific'd, and the other let go free, and was called the Scape-Goat. And although Mercy would not have been so much shewn in accepting what was a defective and imperfect Satisfaction from our selves, as if Mercy had wholly and alone supplied and made up all; yet it was shewn as much in accepting what another performed for us (though that Satisfaction was never so perfect) as if it had wholly forgiven it.

3. If furthermore we consider, that it was his Son from whom this Satisfaction was exacted, one so dear to him, and one who of himself was free from all such Obligations, and put upon it by God, the more to shew his Grace; this makes it to be meer Grace; and indeed the more Grace, by how much the Satisfaction was greater. And therefore God is said to commend his love in this, that Christ dyed for us: Rom. 5. 8. And Eph. 1. 7. we are said by him to have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Had Christ been one nearer to us than to him, or had he been wholly a stranger to God, it might then have been esteemed to have less of Grace in it; but in that he spared not his own Son, that he might spare us; this makes Grace the more to abound in it, though the Satisfaction be never so perfect.

C H A P. II.

That in Christ alone there was sufficient Ability to take away Sin. The Weakness and Insufficiency of any Creature for this Work demonstrated. That it is for the greater Honour of Christ to Effect that, which none could do besides him. The Insufficiency of any Creature proved by an Enumeration of Particulars. That the Blood of all Sacrifices could not have such an Efficacy. That we were unable to satisfy God by any thing which we could suffer, or do. That all the Saints are as unable to help us in this case. That it is beyond the Power of Angels themselves.

TH E S E Observations having been sent before to make way ; We come now to the main Point at the first propounded ; viz. That in Christ and in him alone, there is an All-sufficiency of Abilities to take away sins ; and that seeing God stood upon a full and perfect satisfaction, He alone was able to effect it. Which Proposition we will branch out into Two ; and those both of them founded upon the Text.

I. That it was not possible for any of the Creatures to have made satisfaction, and to have taken Sins away.

II. That in Christs Offering up himself as a Sacrifice, there was an All-sufficiency to do it.

I. The Creatures could not satisfy God, nor take away Sin. The handling and proving of this tends so much the more to set forth, and advance Christs All-sufficiency. As therefore in shewing his Fitness, we made it appear, that his Office was fit for no Creature, but only for himself : So now in declaring his Abilities for this Office, we will shew that none besides him was able to perform it. And for proof of this, we need go no further than the apparent drift and scope of this Text, and of this Epistle, which as it is to shew the Perfection of Christs Oblation once offered ; so it was withal to shew the weakness of all other Offerings ; even of those appointed by God himself under the Old Law ; and to that end, comparing them all along, with this Sacrifice of his Son. In which comparison you may observe,

1. That a sufficient worth and value was the thing that God stood upon, (as hath been said) So Heb. 9. 23. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these ; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. The Apostle speaks of the worth and betterness of Sacrifices, [better sacrifices than these.] So he speaks of a Sacrifice that should perfect them for whom it was offered, Heb. 10. 14. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. And chap. 7. 26, he mentioneth Abilities to save, as being required in him who was our High-Priest, Heb. 7. 25, 26, 27. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. ver. 26. For such a high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens. ver. 27. Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the peoples: for this he did once, when he offered up himself.

2. You may observe, All other Sacrifices were laid aside as weak, and wanting of this worth and value. So the Apostle saith, The law made men high priests who had infirmities; Heb. 7. 28. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore. There was an infirmity and a weakness that accompanied all the Sacrificers and Sacrifices. And for this weakness of theirs, there was a disanulling of that commandment for the weakness and unprofitableness of it, ver 18. And Heb. 9. 9 He tells us, They could not make him perfect who did the service, and also that all those Sacrifices as they could not make the Offerer himself that did the Service perfect; much less could they make them perfect for whom they were offered, Heb. 9. 9. Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience. Heb. 10. 1. For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. All which argues, that God would have such a satisfaction as should make Men perfect, that is, should be fully able to satisfy his Justice, and their Consciences. And therefore also here in the Text God is brought in, consulting about, or considering, and weighing all other Sacrifices; and when he had found them all too light, the Text saies, he laid them all aside, and pitcht upon, and established this of Christ. And therefore you see, this proffer of Christ [Loe I come] comes in after Gods refusal of all others as ineffectual: [then said I, loe I come] Heb. 10. 5, 6, 7. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and Offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me. ver. 6. In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure: ver. 7. Then said I, Lo, I come (In the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Thus Galat. 3. 21. If there had been a law that could have given life, righteousness had been by the law: The Apostle speaks as if God would have taken that, or any other course, if it could have been sufficient. And Gal. 2. 21. Do I frustrate the grace of God, (saies he)? If righteousness be by the law, then Christ dyed in vain. What he saies of the Law may be said of all means else, if any other could be supposed. The same Reason that is there given, against the Law, (namely, that the Grace in Christs Dying, and Justifying us, would be frustrated) holdeth as well, to exclude the supposed possibility of any other means to make us Righteous. For by that reason it appears, that Gods aim and end in Christs Dying was to advance the Glory of his Grace, which consists in having the Monarchie and sole Prerogative in saving Sinners. attributed unto it. The height of whose Honour and Eminency is this; That it alone Reigns, and hath nor could have any Competitor therein. And therefore if there could be supposed to be any other means, Christs Death would then lose something of its peculiar Glory; which if it should, he would account himself to have dyed in vain, for the Glory of his aim had been defaced and frustrated, and his end in his account as good as lost. As it is the Excellency of God, that he is God alone, and there is none besides him; so of Christ, that he alone in our Saviour, and that there is none besides him. But take this as still spoken is opposition to all Creatures only: For otherwise, that former supposition that God could have pardoned us by a meer Act of Grace without Christs satisfaction, doth not detract from this Glory of Christs Death, which is not to take away from Free Grace, and to be accounted in comparison of it, the Principal and only Saviour. Christ is content that the Free Grace of his Father should share with him in it, and himself to be in this work Gods Servant, But this Competition of Christ is with all other means by Creatures; the excluding the possibility of which to perform our Redemption, makes Christ sole Heir to this Kingdom and Monarchie of Grace which is destructive of the Dominion of Sin; and so endears his Death to us. He hath a priesthood that passeth not away; Heb. 7. 21. as the High-Priest did by reason of Death: But he dies not; and his

Book III.

Office is such, as if he should lay it down, there is not any Creature in Heaven or Earth that could take it up. The fullest Tryal and Manifestation of this is made in a case of less difficulty; (which evidently reacheth this of satisfaction) in the Fifth Chapter of the Revelation; where, as a Prologue to that ensuing Prophecie (which begins Chap. 6.) there is a solemn Proclamation made by a strong Angel, who spake with a loud voice, ver. 2. (as that which might come to the hearing of all Creatures) and the Matter of this Proclamation was this Challenge, Who is worthy to open the Book, (namely of the Revelation, which was Sealed in the Hand of God, that sat upon the Throne, ver. 1.) and to loose the Seals thereof? And there was none (so it is in the Original) that is, no reasonable Creature (we read no Man, but that is too much limited) Man or Angel, in Heaven, or in Earth, or under the Earth, that was able to open the Book, or so much as to look thereon. And John was at this discouraged, and wept much, ver. 4. as thinking, here must be an end of all, and that he should have no further Vision. But God did promise this, on purpose to shew the difficulty of the Work, and to spoil all Creatures of the Glory of it; and the more to set off, and make illustrious the sole Power and Worth that was in Jesus Christ for this Work. Even as Men in their Fictions use to do, when they would Greaten some one Man, whose Story they write. For after this non-plus and dejection, a Star lech, comforts him, and bids him not weep; for lo, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, had obtained to open the book, &c. And presently a Lamb comes, approacheth the Throne, and takes the Book out of his Right Hand, ver. 6, 7. And upon that all the Chorus of Twenty Four Elders and Four Beasts (who are there the Church representative of Saints on Earth) do fall down before the Lamb, and set this Crown of Glory upon his Head alone, with this new Song and Shout, Worthy art thou, &c. and thou alone; unto which the Angels give a Respond of Praise, ver. 11, 12. and Heaven, and Earth, and all Creatures eccho to it, ver. 13. Now how much more might all this Solemnity have been used about satisfaction to be made for Sin? To approach the Throne, and take the Book, and open it, was far less than to have the heart to break through an Army, and approach God in his fury and fullness of Wrath for Sin, and to sustain that Wrath, and satisfy it by overcoming it. And this is more then intimated in that very Chapter: For (ver. 9.) the Elders in their Song do attribute this Power of Christ to open the Book, unto the Merit of a far greater Work done, even this of our Redemption, and Christs Satisfaction for Sin; [Thou art worthy (say they) to take the Book, because thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy Blood:] And how far off then will all Creatures be found to be, and how short of Worth and Power to redeem a Sinner by their Blood, who were all not worthy so much as to look on that Book, much less to open it, not worthy to reveal this Redemption, much less to effect it? Then which there cannot be a stronger proof for this my Assertion. Thus much in General.

Now Secondly.

II. To demonstrate this by an Induction and an Enumeration of all particular means, which may be any way supposed able to help us.

First, Take the Blood of Bulls and Goats, and add to them all the Creatures which Man is lord of, and which are his to give; yet this whole World of Creatures would not be a sufficient Sacrifice for Sin. In Micah 6. 7. there is one comes off with a good round Price, [Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of Rams, or with thousands of rivers of oil: Or shall I give my first-born for my transgression?] And Nature is apt to be thinking of such Sacrifices; But if Justice could have afforded it so cheap, God would not have turned away so fair a Chapman; yet he there turns him away: One reason for which is there intimated, namely, That Sin is the Sin of the Soul, but all these are but the appurtenances of, or at the highest, but Fruits of the Body: Shall I give the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? The Soul which is lost and forfeited by Sin is (as Christ saies) more worth than a whole World.

Matth. 16. 26. Yea, the Life of the Body is more worth in a Mans own estimation than all that he possesseth; [All that a man hath will he give for his life;] Job 2. 4. but the Redemption of the Soul is yet much more pretious, as the Psalmist speaks, Psal. 49. 8. And as a Kings Ransom is more than another Mans; so is the Redemption of the Soul, which in worth exceeds all Creatures, more than of all other Creatures besides. And yet further, the Sin of the Soul cannot be recompenced by the loss and Sacrifice of the Soul it self; for by Sin the Glory of God suffers detriment, but by a Souls loss the good of a Creature only is damaged. It is a Rule currant in cases of Morality and Justice, That the injury of a supreme Order is not made good by things of an inferiour Rank unto it. What recompence will the forfeiture of a Murderers Goods give to a Man for his Life, or for that of his Friends? What satisfaction can Money give for a dishonour cast upon a Mans good Name, which Solomon saies, is better than riches? Prov. 22. So what is the fruit of a mans body (as it is in Micah 6. 7.) to the sin of his soul? Verily there is no proportion: Yea it falls short in the estimation of a Mans own Conscience.

Unto this disproportion the Apostle adds another, Heb. 9. 23. That the Blessings to be purchased and obtained by this satisfaction, are heavenly: But all such Sacrifices as these, are but things earthly; and therefore better Sacrifices than these are required. All such External Sacrifices are but enough, (if enough) to sanctifie the pattern of heavenly things; that is, the Types of the Law; and this too, but only as they were shadows of things to come: Wherefore it was necessary that the heavenly things themselves (the substance) should be purified with better Sacrifices than these. Now Grace is Heavenly, and pardon of Sin must come from Heaven, even out of Gods bosom, and will God (think we) exchange Heavenly Commodities for Earthly Treasures.

Again the Apostle adds a third disproportion unto these, Heb. 9. 14. All such sacrifices cannot reach to the Conscience. We have Consciences to be purged, and what are such outward things to purge a Mans Conscience? As Plaisters outwardly applyed cannot reach to benefit the Heart or Lungs; so neither can these reach the Conscience. They might sanctifie the outward Man (as he there speaks) to purge away a Ceremonial outward Uncleaness, but not the inward, Jer. 2. 22. Though thou wash thee with nitre, thy iniquity is open before me, saies the Lord. All these could not satisfie a Mans Conscience, much less Gods Justice. Therefore those that were exercised in Sacrifices their Consciences were unquiet, as both the Jews and Heathens were.

2. As for our selves, there was no hope that ever we should satisfie God, by ought that either we can do or suffer.

1. Not by suffering any thing, And for this, take the highest instance; If there were any hope to satisfie by sufferings, it would be by the sufferings of Men in Hell, because they are the utmost and the most extream punishment that are threatned as the reward of Sin; and whereby God recovers all that may be had out of the Creature. A man would think, that after Millions of years expired, the Torments which Men there suffer, should satisfie for Sin; but they do not. Those Eternal Flames in which their Souls are scorched, do nothing purifie, or diminish the stain of one Sin: They may indeed destroy the Sinner, but they can never take away the Sin; for therefore it is that they shall for ever suffer. He must for ever remain to be punished, because for ever he remains a Sinner. And it is also a certain and sure Rule, that Nulla pana Nocentis est peccati Deletiva, No punishment of a Person Nocent, is Deletive of Sin: The Sin can never be taken away or blotted out by it.

2. Nor by doing: For,

(1.) We are not able by all our Works to satisfie our own Consciences, which still prick us in the midst of them; much less can we satisfie God, who who is greater then our Consciences. In Rom. 5. 6, the Apostle gives us all up for desperate, and past recovery; When we were without strength (saies he) Christ dyed for us. We had no strength left us wherewith to do any thing; neither could all the strength that the Law could put into us, by quickning and exciting our Consciences to do good works, any thing avail us. So Rom. 8. 3. the Apostle tells us, that what the Law could not do, for that it was weak through the flesh, that Christ came to do. If any thing had been done by us, it must have been by the help of the Law in our Consciences, directing, inciting, and carrying us on to Obedience: But (saith he) our corruption still weakneth the power of the Law, that it cannot do any good upon us, in us, or by us. As when Nature is spent, Physick is said to do no good through the weakness of the Patient; so nor the Law through the weakness of the Flesh. And therefore it follows, there being no help in our selves, God sent his Son in the similitude of sinful flesh, and condemned sin in the flesh.

Neither,

3. Are we thus weak only, but also ungodly; and so are all our Works. There is not only a weakness in all that the Flesh can do, but also a Wickedness, or Enmity; so that they who are in the flesh can never please God; as Rom. 8. 8. Yea, it is impossible they should, for their Works are all defiled; and though they were good,

Yet,

4. They could not bring our Persons into favour. For Sin breaking the first Covenant, by the Tenour of which our Works did keep our Persons in favour; hence we have forfeited all Honour to our Persons for ever, and so unto all our Works also, that look as Traitors when their Persons are condemned, all their Works are void in Law, so are ours: So that if we could suppose our selves to love God, yet Dilectio illa nos quidem faceret dilectores sed non dilectos; though thereby we might be called Lovers of God, yet they could not make us beloved of him again.

5. As we have forfeited all favour to our Persons for ever; so we have forfeited too the having any Graces or Gifts of Grace, whereby we might be supposed to come into favour. For Sin hath put in a bar against us; this being the Eternal demerit of it, that the former Grace be never more bestowed upon any of that former interest; for it is wholly made void unto all ends and purposes. And therefore ere ever new Grace be bestowed, the guilt, and forfeiture and desert of Sin must be forgiven: And how can we ever come to obtain that for our selves?

6. If that demerit be cut off by free Pardon, and Grace be anew bestowed, then that Grace becomes a new favour, for which alone we can never be thankful enough by the Power of all the Grace we receive. We run into a new Debt which we can never requite or satisfy for, much less by that can we pay our former Debts.

Therefore,

Lastly, Grace received anew, though in, and through Christ, it may indeed come to please God, as a token of our thankfulness (and so it doth) yet can it never so much as justify us. The Graces of Godly Men made perfect in Heaven shall (it may be) be as much and more then that of the Angels. Now then, suppose it such in this Life, yet all that Grace would not justify us, because we once forfeited all of it, and the receiving of it now were a new Mercy. The Grace of them who are in Heaven may indeed please God, but it cannot justify them; and therefore much less could it ever come to satisfy God for sin. And besides, Debitum peccati est infinitum, The Debt and Guilt of Sin is Infinite, because against an Infinite God. Graces would be but finite because in us, and because ours, who are finite Creatures, as our Graces also are. So then you see, Our selves could not make God any satisfaction.

3. If you go to all the Saints, they are unable to help you; Matth. 25. 1. 2, 8, 9. Then shall the Kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. ver. 2. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. ver. 8. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oyl, for our lamps are gone out. ver. 9. But the wise answered, saying, Not so, lest there be not enough for us and you: but go you rather to them that sell, and buy for your selves. The Foolish Virgins go to the Wise, and say, Give us some of your Oyl: That is, of your Grace: They would have had some of the others Graces to help them; but the Wise Virgins answered, No, lest there be not enough for us and you, but go you rather and buy of them that sell. The Saints then (you see) have Grace little enough for themselves; all the Grace they in Heaven have is little enough to save them; and all the Grace they have is borrowed, and cannot justify themselves; much less therefore can it satisfy for another. The Papists who so much extol Works, though they say indeed, that good Works do merit for the Saints themselves, yet not that they can satisfy for another.

4. Go from them to the Angels. If they were a grain lighter, they would be found too light, and their Kingdom would depart from them, and themselves would be stript of all their happiness. They need Confirmation in their Estates themselves; it is well that they keep their own standing, and their heels from being tript up. All they can do in Obedience to the Law, they owe it; and how can one Debt be paid with another. God saies of them, Job 4. 18. That he finds folly in them. If Gods curious Eye enquire and search into them, they will be found defective of that Holyness which he desires, though they be the works of his hands, and though they have such a Holyness, as is the perfection of their Natures; and (so far as such Creatures can be,) they be perfectly righteous: But yet if they be compared to that Holyness wherewith God is delighted, and that which the curious Eye of his Purity would require; he finds a folly in them. And therefore they need, not only a Mediation of Union to confirm them in Grace; but further for this end, that God may be pleased with them and their Works; He being so curious, that but for a Mediator (whose Holyness wholly satisfies his exact eye) he would be pleased with no Works of his own hands whatever; but would rend, and tear, and throw all away, as not yet worthy enough of him; even as Curious Artists do their best Draughts, as not satisfied with them. Yea, if the Angels were but one grain wanting, scruple not to say, They would be cast down, yea, fall down, and become Devils. And therefore how can all that they can do be able to help you, seeing they have little enough for themselves.

So you see upon a Survey of all particulars, that no Creature could make satisfaction to God for Sin.

C H A P. III.

That the most perfect Creature, though having all the Perfections of Christs Humane Nature, yet could not be our Redeemer. The utmost extent to which the Power of any Creature can reach to save either himself or others, which yet all fall short of that which was to be performed for our Redemption.

ADD to all these the utmost Supposition that can be made of the most transcendent Perfection of Grace that may possibly be bestowed upon any mere Creature. Take the Supposition which some of the School-Men have made: That as God appointed Adam a meer Creature to convey and derive Grace to all his Posterity; so if we wish them suppose; First, Some one mere Creature as a Head, appointed to satisfy for Sin, and convey Grace to Sinners (as Christ doth): And Secondly, Suppose this mere Creature filled with as much Grace Habitual as Christ had, as much Love, Humility, &c. only that Grace of Union to a Divine Person set aside, which so transcendently elevates all in him above Created Perfections; and then, such a Supposition cannot be denied. Thirdly, Suppose a transcending degree of Favour and Glory appointed as the reward of that Grace, more then is borne towards all other Creatures. Yet though this Creature should lay down all that Glory, quit it self of all that Happiness, and subject it self to all those torments which Christs Soul underwent for us, to the end that our Punishment might be cut off, and we brought into Favour; all this could no way deal with Justice to satisfy for Sinners, and restore them to Favour. Which now we will endeavour to make good from those more near and intimate Demonstrations, which hold forth in them the true grounds why no meer Creature can satisfy for Sin, upon no Supposition, how high soever. By all which the superabundant Grace and Glory of Christ will the more appear, whose Cause herein we plead, and who pleadeth ours in Heaven.

And,

First, To make the clearer entrance, and the better explication and stating of this Point; let us consider and examine how far the Graces of a mere Creature how great soever, have gone, or can go to advantage and promote either the owner of them, or another, in the way of Salvation; and so see the utmost extent of their abilities, and where they have, and must fall short: Which will likewise afford us evident Demonstrations, how far short they come of Satisfaction for Sin, or Justifying of a Sinner.

I. Let us see what they can do for the owner and possessor of them.

1. They can, and do justify the possessor of them, if he have never sinned. Thus the Grace and Works of the Angels do justify them before God; which yet is much for God to accept of; for he seeth folly in his Angels; yet this privilege he vouchsafes to their own Grace. And thus to be justified, is no more then to be accounted Righteous, before Gods Tribunal, and so worthy to live in his sight, and by means of it to enjoy their present condition of Happiness. And thus Adams Grace in Innocency did justify him; God by his Law and Ordination pronouncing him Righteous by it, (whilst he continued in it) as wanting nothing which his Law required in him for Happiness

Happiness and Life. And though Grace in Adam and in the Angels, did by a Natural Law and just Ordination of God, justify them before him, so as, God looking on their Works, did pronounce them Righteous in his sight, according to his Law; yet this Law or Ordinance was founded upon no other Obligation from God than the Ordinances and Laws of Providence towards other Creatures; even such as the Ordinances of Day and Night, (as he speaks of them) and so it was but such as when God saw all the Creatures which he had made, keep the Ordinances which he had set them in, he pronounced that they were all good, namely, in their kind, Gen. 1. 31. they continuing (as the Psalmist says, Psalms 129. 91.) according to their Ordinances. So whilst Man continues in the Ordinances which God hath set him in, he pronounceth him good in his kind; that is, Righteous; Righteousness being his proper goodness, and such to him, as the proper goodness of all Creatures are in their kind unto them. And as this Righteousness was due to him, and so created in him, not by Merit, but as the Native Perfection without which he could not be a Man: So was this pronouncing of him Righteous (and to be in Gods Favour whilst he continued in that goodness) not due of Merit; (for what can we do towards it) but only as a due approbation and suitable reward and consequence of his goodness, meet for God to bestow, according to that special Law of Nature, which God had Created him in. And so I understand that same ex debito, Rom. 4. 4. where the Apostle speaking of the Covenant of Works, (which was the Covenant of Nature) he says, The reward was of debt, not of grace: That is, there was a Reward, that was a Natural Due to it (which is opposed to meer Grace) which notwithstanding is not of Merit, nor could that deserve it at Gods hands; only it was meet and due in a Natural way that God should so reward it.

2. The Grace of such a mere Creature can preserve it self, and increase it self. Therefore Christ compares it unto Mustard-seed, the least of all Seeds, which yet grows up to be a great Tree; and so the stock that Adam had, he might have kept, by the power that God had given him. As Adam might have maintained his Bodily Life unto Eternity, by Food, so his Spiritual Life by keeping the Law, [do this and live.] So that Grace in a pure Creature before the Fall might possibly have kept its station:

Yct

3. It could not, nor cannot absolutely confirm, and establish such a Creature in a state of Justification; which is a further thing then simply to Justify; as, to give Perseverance in Grace is more than to give Grace. Thus the Angels, though alwayes they be justified by their own Grace; yet no Acts of their own did, or could procure a confirmation in that Grace, or strength and security that they should not, nor could not fall. It is an incommunicable property of Jehovah, not to change, and to have no shadow of turning, James 1. 17. It is therefore judged by all Divines that this benefit they have by Christ.

4. Much less can the Grace of a meer Creature (or ever could) merit a higher condition; (to do which, is more than to confirm the continuance of the present condition) Adam could not earn a condition of a higher Rank, nor by all his Works have bought any greater Preferment, then what he was Created in: To compass it, was ultra suam Spheram, above his Sphere, he could never have done it. As for instance, He could not have attained that state in Heaven which the Angels enjoy: What says Christ! When you have done all you can, say, you are unprofitable servants. Luke 17. 10. This he could no more do, then other Creatures by keeping those their Ordinances, can merit to be translated into the glorious liberty which they wait for, and shall have at the latter Day. The Moon, though she keep all her Motions set her by God, never so regularly, yet she cannot thereby attain to the Light of the Sun, as a new reward thereof. And thus no more can any pure Creature.

Book III. } ture, of it self, by all its Righteousness, obtain in Justice a higher Condition to it self. And therefore the Angels by all their own Grace, have not to this day earned a better Condition than they were Created in. And yet, all this falls short of satisfying for Sin; as we shall see anon.

II. We have taken a view of all that which all the Grace of a mere Creature can do for the owner of it: Let us now Secondly see what it can do for another:

And
First, We may safely say, it can avail less for another, then for the Person himself. For what it doth for another, it doth by vertue of what it first doth for it self. If it brings another into Favour, it must needs be much more beloved it self.

Secondly, We grant, that it might have been a means of conveying Righteousness through Gods goodness and appointment of it unto another. For so Adams Grace should have done to all his Posterity. For as he falling, we now inherit his Sin; so if he had stood, we by the same Law should have had his Righteousness conveyed unto us; and so much indeed may the grace of a Creature (that never fell) do for another. But then, take in these Cautions with it.

1. That other must be one who also never fell, it could not do thus for those that were once Sinners, though it might convey Righteousness to another that never sinned.

2. Though a Creature that never sinned, might have a stock of Righteousness conveyed from another, (as we should have had from Adam) yet that Creature must still continue to be justified by its own Righteousness, besides by what was conveyed from that other, (even as well as the conveyer himself was by his own Righteousness to have lived) and so might notwithstanding have fallen away. For Adams Righteousness, and the imputation of it, would not alone have been sufficient to justify us eternally; but our Justification must have been continued by our own Righteousness. For as although we have Adams Sin conveyed to us, yet we are condemned for our own Sins besides, and not only for his: So Adams Righteousness being conveyed to us, we must afterwards have had, and must have continued to work a Righteousness of our own. He was only a means to give us a Stock wherewith to begin, all which we might have spent, and it was likely we should.

So that in the last place, to draw up all, by a comparison from the less to the greater, it will appear how far short the power of Grace in meer Creatures doth come, of satisfying for anothers Sin. You see how little it can do for its self; and it must needs be able to do less for another then for it self, and less for a Sinner then for either. It may justify it self; and the possessor of it may actually live by it, but not so another. For though that other may have Righteousness conveyed to him at first; yet he must ever after live upon his own. The Creatures Grace cannot confirm it self in a perpetual state of Justification for time to come, much less, merit a better condition. But to satisfy for Sin is beyond all these; it is as much as to merit a better condition, and more.

(1.) It is as much: For Satisfaction hath to do with Justice as well as Merit; for to Merit, is to do that which Justice it self shall count truly worthy of such a reward: And so, to satisfy, is at least to offer that for a Satisfaction, which Justice it self offended cannot but think worthy to be accepted in recompence. The one undertakes to deserve of Justice rewarding; the other to pacifie and fully content Justice offended.

And

(2.) It is more : And therefore the Papists themselves, who say that a Mans own Grace may merit for himself, yet deny it to be able to satisfie for anothers Sin. And Reason is for it.

For,

1. In meriting a better Condition, a Man earns but of anothers Goods, and undertakes to do something worthy of a better reward : and there is in it but comparatio rei ad rem. But in satisfying for Injuries, he undertakes to repair Personal Wrongs ; which it is so much harder to repair, as Men love their own Persons more than their Goods. A poor Man may earn some of a Noble Mans Goods by a Dayes work ; but can never satisfie him for a Disgrace.

2. To satisfie for Sin, is more than to do something worthy of a higher and better condition ; because there is a greater distance between a Sinners estate, and Justification to be attained, then is between the estate of one already justified, and a higher condition of favour ; such as was between the estate of Adam, and that of an Angel. There was not such a gulf (as Christ says) or distance between Adams Earthly State and theirs, as is between an Offendour, and the favour of God ; which by his Offence is wholly forfeited. He when Innocent was much nearer the most glorious condition which any Creature was capable of. Even as a good Subject, though never so poor and mean, who yet never offended, is nearer the Dignity of a Duke, and more capable of it, then one who is a Traytor, and so hath forfeited not only his Honour, but his Life and the Priviledge of a Subject.

C H A P. IV.

The Inability of the Creature to redeem us demonstrated from the Nature of the satisfaction. First, That which the Law required, a Creature could not answer for us, neither in obeying the Precept, nor suffering the Penalty.

THIS premised, we will now more distinctly consider whereunto satisfaction must be made, wherein it must consist, and according to what it is to be proportioned.

There are two to be satisfied before ever a Sinner can be justified; viz. God, and the Law. For as the evil of Sin is expressed by its enmity unto both these, (as Rom. 8. 7. where the Flesh is said to be enmity against God and his law) so answerably may the Satisfaction that is to be made for it, be measured out by both. I confess that both come to one; for satisfy the Law, and you satisfy God, and so e contra: yet we may take the distinct consideration of each as an help in the search, and for the finding out wherein true Satisfaction for Sin is to consist.

First, For the Law: No meer Creature could satisfy that for us, or make compensation for Sin, as it is the transgression of it.

I. In General, Let us measure Satisfaction by the worth of the Law, and of every Iota of it, which Sin doth what in it lies, to make void and of none effect. In Psal. 119. 126. They have willingly (says David) destroyed thy law: That is, what they did tended to destroy it; though yet it doth it not: for not one Iota of it shall pass. Now seeing, Satisfaction is redditio equivalentis pro equivalenti; that which is given in way of Restitution must be of an equivalent worth to that which is endamaged; what therefore can any mere Creature have, to render to God, equivalent to this his Law? For is not the least tittle of the Law worth Heaven and Earth, and so all in it, even Saints and all, because Gods Prerogative lies at stake in it? Is it not the Regula, the Pattern, yea the Original Copy of all the Grace which the Saints have: (For all Grace is but the Copy of the Law) and doth it not command all that is in them? What have they then to be deprived of, that is worth it?

II. Let us more Particularly consider those special Debts which the Law requires Satisfaction in and for; which according to the two main parts of the Law, are answerably two. As all Laws, so this, hath

First. A Preceptive Part, Do this and live; and this requires exact Obedience to every tittle of it.

Secondly, A Penal Part. If we trespass in the least, it exacts a Punishment; and that is, Eternal Death.

I. Now therefore when we transgress in the least, we hence first grow into a double Debt, and become Debtors to both parts of the Law, and the Reason hereof is, because all Laws require both. So the Laws of Men do oft times require not only Restitution and Satisfaction to be made to the Party wronged; but they enjoyn a further Punishment as a Satisfaction to the Law it self, which was contemned and broken. And therefore in many Cases Cases though no hurt be done, the trespasser failing of his purpose; yet the Law takes notice of the attempt, and punisheth him for it; because therein the Law is contemned. For in such trespasses against Men there is a double wrong; the one to the Party injured, whose Goods or Honour is impaired; and the other to the Law, which is scandalized by it. And so he is not only to satisfy for the Personal Damage, but also for the Publick Offence, and the vitiosity of the act in breaking Order; and so, a double Satisfaction is to be made. Thus also it is in Debts; for there is both the Principal, and the Forfeiture also. So likewise in the Levitical Law, when a Man had wronged his Neighbour in Goods, he was to do two things; not only to make restitution due to the Party wronged, and that double at least, as part of a Punishment also, but he was to satisfy the Law besides, and to offer Sacrifice. And in case of Debt; before instanced) until a Man hath paid it, he is to lye in Prison, to satisfy the Law.

2. We having Sinned, do owe Satisfaction to God in respect of his Law; and that, in a double relation and respect: First, On our parts: Secondly, On Gods part.

First, On our own: As we are Creatures we owe him Service; and as we are Sinners, we owe Punishment.

And Secondly, On Gods part: We owe Satisfaction to him, both as he is our Lord, our Creator and Owner that hath right to us; and also as he is our Law-giver.

1. As he is our Lord he hath a right to us, and as a Creditor he gave us our Selves and Graces: and we are his Goods; and so do owe him Active Obedience.

2. As he is our Law-giver, so he hath the right of a Judge, to whom for our neglect we do therefore owe Punishment. For God hath over us, both Jus Crediti or Dominii, and Jus Reſtoris; he is Lord of his Law, and Lord of us; and we are his Subjects, and also his Servants; and there is in equity very good grounds for both Debts. For we owe him subjection for his Benefits bestowed, although there were no Law: but then in regard of his ~~excellency~~, his transcendent Excellency, he is our Law-giver and Judge; and so he might give us these Laws, though it could be supposed that we had no such benefit from him.

Object. And 3. Whereas it may be said, that the bearing the Punishment due to the Offence against the Law, may seem to stand for that Debt of Obedience to the Law.

Answer. The Answer is, that it is clean otherwise; for we owe both Punishment for Sin past, and Obedience also. And the Reason is evident, namely, in that Punishment for Sin is but an Appendix to the Law, and not that which the Law chiefly intends; for it principally aims at Obedience, and does therefore indeed threaten Punishment to keep the Creature to Obedience, and therefore to endure the Punishment is no Satisfaction to the Law. As though a Debtor should live in Prison all his life-time, yet he should be in Debt still; and therefore could not be said to satisfy the Law, because the principal intent of the Law is to recover a Mans Goods. So that we are for ever bound to God by a double Debt, a Debitum Paenae, a Debt of Punishment, and a Debitum Negligentiae, a Debt of Neglect; both which are to be satisfied for.

Now for neither of both these Debts can either we our selves, or any Creature for us, ever satisfy God.

(1.) Not we our selves; for we can never discharge the Debt of Active Obedience, though God should exact no more; for part of it is neglected already; and you may as well call back time that is past, as satisfy for what is past, because we are bound to God for our whole time, even to Eternity. If an Apprentice were bound to his Master for ever, and he run away at any time, he can never satisfy his Master for his time lost. If he were bound indeed but for seven years, then he might afterwards serve out his time, though he ran away for a while.

(2.) Not

Book III.

(2.) Nor can any meer Creature be ever able to give satisfaction in our stead, upon the same grounds. 'Tis true indeed, that a meer Creature might perform and undergo this and all other kind of Obedience that the Law requires, both Active and Passive; but not so, as that both, or either of these Obediences so performed by it, should be satisfactory to the Law for us, or stand us in stead. We will prove this, of each severally, and of both jointly: And first of either of them singly.

I. The Active Obedience performed by any meer Creature for us could not discharge or satisfy that Debt of Active Obedience which we owe to God, so as we should have any benefit by it. Such a Creature may indeed perform it, so as to profit himself, (as Job speaks, Job 35. 8.) but not so as to profit us and himself by way of satisfaction. The Reasons of which are,

I. Because his whole self, and all he can do, is in all respects wholly and altogether subject to the Law already for himself, and he can plead no privilege of exemption whereby he should be any way free from this total subjection to the Law: And therefore the Law commanding him, and all the Relations and Respects that are in him, all that he can do is little enough for himself, to satisfy the Law. This is the Reason which the Saints themselves give to put others off with, (for I would not give you School-Reasons herein, but Scripture-Reasons) Matth. 25. 8, 9. The Wise Virgins said to the Foolish when they came to them for Oil, We have little enough for our selves. All the Money which any Creature can make, will but serve to satisfy what the Law requires for himself; and he hath nothing over and above what the Law can challenge to benefit another. Do this, and live, saies the Law to all that are under the law, and altogether under it; And it is as much as they can do to live by the Law themselves: They have little enough for themselves, and nothing over. And this Reason holds as fully in the best Creature that can be supposed to have never so much Grace (set that of Hypostatical Union aside, which is Christs sole Prerogative) as it doth in that Creature that hath never so little: For all the Grace that any Creature hath, be it of never so large a Revenue, he holds by the same Tenure, namely, the Tenure of the Law, that one of never so low a degree of Grace doth hold his by: And the Law doth as fully exact all he can do, as being his own Debt, as it doth the others. Even as a Man that hath never so much Land; if his Tenure from the Lord in chief be the same by the Law, with that of another Man, who possesseth but a Cottage; and the Conditions of both are to pay the whole Revenue (their own meer and bare subsistence set aside) the former is as much disabled to pay anothers Rent as the latter, though he hath never so great Revenues. In this case he that hath the least, hath no lack; for God accepts what a Man hath, and he that hath never so much hath nothing over: There is an Equality or proportion as the Apostle speaks in another Case.

II. If we consider the ground of the Laws thus requiring the whole; it will afford a further reason. The Ground why the Law requires this, lies in two things:

1. That whatever the Creature hath, it hath received it from God: And
 2. So received it, and upon such terms, as to give an account of it: So as after it is given, God still challengeth a Right in it, as being wholly his. Hence all that a meer Creature hath, or can have, it owes to God.

I. Because it hath it wholly from God; and therefore God challengeth all again, and obligeth the Creature as a Debtor to him for the benefit received. And then withal there cannot any respect of propriety be found, which a meer Creature can challenge, in what it hath received, as having a Title to it, distinct from that which God claims to himself; but all is wholly and alone his. And therefore the Creature can never lay out any thing for another, which it can call its own stock, and say, this is mine to dispose of, and I have

I have enough besides to account with God for my self, another way; For what hast thou (saies the Apostle) which thou hast not received? 1 Cor. 4. 7. Chap. 4.

And 2<sup>ly</sup>. It receives all from God so as to give an Account as a meer Steward unto him: So the Apostle Peter speaks, A Steward of the manifold grace of God, 1 Per. 4. 10. and so accountable to him for all. Now it is as impossible for a meer Creature to satisfie God for anothers Debt, or he is as unable to do it, as a Steward can undertake to pay his Master for his Fellow-Servants Debt out of the Money his Master had betruſted him with. For what can be in this caſe given is the Maſters own already, and in having all reſumed the Maſter hath no more then what he ſhould have; this being a certain Rule and Principle in equity, that it is impossible to ſatisfie another Man with what is wholly his own already. And upon this ground doth the Lord reſuſe Sacrifices for Sin, even becauſe they are all his already; All the beaſts of the foreſt are mine, Pſal 50 8, 9, 10, 11. I will not reprove thee for thy ſacrifices, or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me, ver. 9. I will take no bullock out of thy houſe, nor he-goats out of thy folds, ver. 10. For every beaſt of the foreſt is mine, and the cattle upon a thouſand hills, ver. 11. I know all the fowls of the mountains: and the wild beaſts of the field are mine. Therefore David, 1 Chron. 29. 14. acknowledgeth it Mercy enough that God would but accept of their Offerings for themſelves: What are we that we ſhould offer thus freely even for our ſelves? He conſiders both Gods Tranſcendent Excellency in himſelf, and that total dependance which they had on him for all; as it follows of thine own have I given thee, and how can that ſatisfie the Debt? Sin indeed is our own, which we owe for; but Obedience, that is not our own, but comes from the grace of God and from his enabling. Indeed, if God had given us Grace, as Friends give Gifts each to other, to do what they pleaſe with them, without requiring any account of them, then we might have payd him with that which he hath given us. But he gives Grace to us as he does Talents unto Servants: And therefore he requires answerable Service and Improvement of thoſe Talents, of which he takes account according to the number given; and if they be not well uſed, he takes them away. And when we have done whatever we can, we are unprofitable Servants too, Matth. 25. 14, to 30. And it is impossible for one who is wholly a Servant, to ſatisfie his Maſter for the Debt of another. Inter Servum & Dominum nulla intercurrit juſtitia, (ſaies Aristotle, ſpeaking of meer Servants as in thoſe times,) becauſe ſuch a Servant is pars Domini, Part of his Maſters Goods. And herein let the ſuppoſition made hold good, as, Let the Creature have never ſo much Grace, ſo much the more is he diſenabled to ſatisfie for another; for the more Grace he hath received, the more Service is required from him: Much is required from him to whom much is given, Luk. 12. 48. Yea the Obligation upon himſelf is the greater, and binds him to do ſo much the more; and therefore he can as little, yea leſs ſpare any thing for another, as he that hath leſs.

II. In the Second Place, For Paſſive Obedience, that cannot be ſatisfactory for another. For,

I. Even ſo much Paſſive Obedience as any Creature can undergo, is in it ſelf in ſtrict terms of Juſtice due unto God from the Creature, though not as a Punishment, yet as a Tryal of Obedience. if he ſhould be pleaſed to lay it upon the Creature. How elſe could Paul wiſh himſelf accuſed from Chriſt for his kinſmen and brethren the Jews? Rom. 9. 3. and this, as a Duty ſurely! For he did not ſuper-erogate therein, nor do more than God might require: It was no more than what was due unto him.

2<sup>ly</sup>. Both of theſe Obediences muſt be joyntly performed by him that undertakes to ſatisfie; and it is impossible for him ſo to perform both.

∴ Both

Book III.

1. Both must be performed joyntly : For Passive Obedience alone would never pay both Debts. To cast a Man into Prison payes not the Creditor; and Punishment is required by God as he is the Judge of the World; it is Jus Reëtoris, and we owe Obedience to him besides, as he is a Creditor. And though God be content with Passive Obedience from those in Hell, because it is all he can get of them; yet he is not satisfied with it; and therefore they are for ever to abide there. Its true, that he improves it to his Glory, in that it shews the various ways of his manifestation of his Attributes upon Creatures; but yet, simply, in it self it would not satisfy it. Furthermore, the threatning of punishment is (as was said) but the Appendix of the Law; not the Primary intent of the Law-giver: And therefore God doth not simply delight in it, nor is he satisfied with it.

2dly. There is an impossibility that any Creature should perform both of them joyntly and together; which it must do, if it satisfy: For from that Creature, though never so Excellent, an Eternity both of Active and Passive Obedience would be exacted; and he could not dispatch or end either, nor perform both together. If the Obedience that is set him might be ended, or if both could be performed together, he might satisfy; but the Law exacts both for ever of us: And therefore the Psalmist makes the Redemption of the Soul too pretious for any Creature to meddle with; Psal. 49. 8. giving this reason why a Man cannot redeem his brother; so pretious is the redemption of a soul, and it ceaseth for ever; that is, it shall never be accomplished; so the Phrase is taken elsewhere. The Work is so pretious, as it requireth Eternity to do it in. So that that which the best of Creatures should do, or suffer for us, in any finite term of time would not satisfy for what was due from us to Eternity; but it doth require yet a further, and infinite worth in the Obedience to be added to supply that Eternity, and it is an utter impossibility to perform both together for ever. Look as it is impossible to serve two masters, but that a man must lean to the one, and neglect the other; Matth. 6. 24. so it is impossible for the Creature to carry along both these Obediences together: For when he were obeying the whole Law, How could he at the same suffer? And when he were suffering, how could he obey the whole Law? All the Graces then exercised would have been only Patience, and all little enough to afford him that; there would have been no room for the exercise of other Graces. And as God calls us not to do, and suffer, at the sametime; for both cannot stand together, so neither could any Creature do and suffer at the same time for us. If indeed he could first dispatch the Active part, and then encounter the torments due unto us, and dispatch them also; then there might be hope: but this he cannot; and to performe both to Eternity is impossible.

But yet by making as free and large concessions as are imaginable, further to shew the impossibility of it; Suppose that Passive, Obedience, and Sufferings for us would stand for both Debts; and suppose also, that if their Lives went for ours, they then might satisfy as well as we can; seeing theirs are as good as ours, and therefore, if Eternal Death in us be a satisfaction to Gods Justice (which if it be not so, God then loseth by Sin, and then he would not have let it come into the World) then it might be so in them for us, and we be freed; yet consider the inconveniences that will follow:

1. They must alwaies be satisfying, and it could never be said, it is finished. They must lie by it till they have payd the uttermost farthing; which they can never do, no more than we our selves can; and so they could not take away Sins from us; for we could not have an Acquittance till the Debt were payd; we could not be justified till our Suretie were acquitted. Therefore if Christ had not risen (saies Paul) we had yet been in our sins, 1 Cor. 15. 17. And therefore the Psalmist saies, of the Redemption of the Soul by any Creature, Psal. 48. 9. it ceaseth not for ever; that is, shall never be accomplished, but shall alwaies be a doing, and never ended, and so, we never be the better, nor the nearer having our Bonds cancelled, And this is the reason why
Sacrifices

Sacrifices were rejected, even because every year they were still forced to offer them: Heb. 10. 1, 2, 3, 4. For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. ver. 2. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged, should have had no more conscience of sins. ver. 3. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. ver. 4. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. And ver. 11. it is said, That they stood daily offering the same sacrifices.

2dly. Suppose yet further, That God, to whom Eternity is but as one instant, should therefore give us in our Bond, when the other had entred in his; because though it be to Eternity a paying, yet to him it were as good as payd in hand presently. Suppose this; yet notwithstanding, one Just Man or Angel could satisfie but for one of us: Life could go but for Life, and a tooth for a tooth, (as the Law runs) and so he must sacrifice as many Creatures as good as we are for ever, as he meant to save of us Men. That one Creatures Obedience would not as Adams Righteousness have extended to many; for that was a favour, but this a Debt. And we cannot pay many Bonds with one Summ which is due for one; for every one is a distinct Debt and Obligation.

3dly, If we grant all this, yet what Creature would have had so much love in it towards us as willingly to sacrifice it self for us? Which it must fully do, or else it cannot be satisfaction; for satisfactio est redditio voluntaria, saies the School. The Apostle Rom. 5. 7. saies that peradventure for a good man some would dare to die: Mark it; he makes a [peradventure] of it; and it must be for a good man; that is, one profitable to him (as they expound it) and seeing Death is ποσεισμων ποσεισμων, or he must be very hardy, and daring, that would do it. But to encounter Gods Wrath, Who dares do it? Jerem. 30. 21. And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governour shall proceed from the midst of them, and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord. The Prophet there making a Promise of Christ to be a Mediator, and one that should be able to draw nigh to God, he gives this reason; For who is there that engageth his heart to draw nigh to me? As if he had said; None else durst have stept in, to encounter me for you; especially, not for Enemies both to God and themselves. There is need of a Mediator to reconcile us and the Angels; as that place in the Ephes. 1. 10. may seem to imply, where the Apostle saies, That God made known unto us the mystery of his will, that he might gather together in one, all things in Christ, which are in heaven and earth. Making us as Friends to himself, so one to another; and if so then antecedently, they could not be the Reconcilers; And further the holier they were, the less must they needs love us, and so not of themselves would they ever undertake such Work for us.

4thly, Suppose yet further, That any had so much love, or would have been so hardy to venture, as with Paul to wish they may be accursed; Yet if they were in Hell but half an hour, they would repent themselves, and wish themselves out again; and so it had been spoiled for ever being satisfaction, which must throughout be voluntary, as our Disobedience was. And therefore God would not trust to their help in so weighty a business, wherein his own Will was so engaged. It is said in Job 4. 18. Behold he puts no trust in his servants: Which though he might, in ordinary works of Obedience, yet he will never rely on them for so great a matter. He finds folly even in the Angels; They are mutable. He trusted one Man once for all, only in matter of Obedience to his Law, which was casie and sweet to him; but see how he fail'd, and left all, and that upon no great or strong temptation. He therefore will never hazard the Second Adam to be a meer Creature in a matter of Punishment; which that Book III. which that he may be willing to undergo, he must be fed with some delight or hopes of ease : No, he will make sure work now.

Fifthly and Lastly, Suppose any Creature had been so full of Excellency, as that the Sufferings of it alone could have been satisfactory for all that God meant to save, and according to the supposition formerly made, that he having more Grace than all Mankind ; and so, being made Heir to more Glory than all Mankind besides, would have been content to lay all aside, and to have subjected himself for ever to undergo all our Punishments ; yet considering all this must have been done by him, in obedience unto God, and for his sake, (for otherwise it could not have been accepted, in that satisfaction for another must be voluntary on both parts, both on his that undertakes it, and also by the consent and acceptation of him that is wronged :) If the Case had thus stood, then this Inconvenience would have followed, that a Creature should have been Obedient unto God, yea, and performed the highest Obedience unto God, whom yet God never should have had an opportunity to reward, because he was to be in Hell for ever : And God will never be so behind-hand with any Creature that shall do him service, much more, so great a Service as this would be.

C H A P. V.

That no Creatures could make that Satisfaction which an injur'd God required. They cannot compensate the wrong done to him by Sin, nor repair the loss of his Honour.

WE have seen what Satisfaction the Law requires, and how far the Creature would fall short of that : Let us Secondly, now see what Satisfaction God requires. And although re ipsa, in the thing it self it comes all to one, to satisfy God, and to satisfy his Law, and both these Heads be really co-incident : Yet our Understandings may take a distinct consideration from each ; which will serve the better to clear this Point.

Now to make way for the Demonstrations I intend, let us define in general, what Satisfaction is, and wherein it is to be made.

Satisfaction in general is, when so much clear emolument ariseth to the Party wronged, as was impaired by the trespass committed. Now all such Damages to be repaired, do usually consist, either in Goods, or Honour ; and Satisfaction for Goods is usually called Restitution ; but Satisfaction for Honour is it which is more properly called Satisfaction.

Now we may consider a Wrong done to God both these wayes, and an answerable Satisfaction requisite.

First, For that of Goods ; though it be a thing which God doth not much reckon, yet something is considerable about it ; and therefore the Prodigals wild course is expressed and aggravated by this, that he spent his Fathers goods and substance in riotous living ; Luke 15. 13. Therefore also God compares himself to a House-holder, who commits Goods and Talents unto his Servants to be by them improved ; Mat, 25. 14. and who, when he reckons with them, doth count up their waste and expence thereof upon their Lusts : and therefore they are said to consume them upon their lusts ; Jam. 4. 3. that is, so to engross them to themselves, and as it were consume them, that God gets nothing by the things which he hath made. By reason of Sin he hath no profit by those Creatures which Sinners have committed to them ; and the World becomes loss unto him. And though God stands not much upon this (as neither will I stand long upon the handling of it) yet thus much is soon demonstrated, that no Creatures were ever able to make Satisfaction for losses of this kind : they are not able (as Hester said in another Case) to make good, or countervail the Kings loss. Esth. 7. 4.

Now to instance in some Particulars.

1. Sin by a forfeiture had quite destroyed this World, if Christ had not upheld it : And can all the Graces in the Creatures make another, or uphold this from falling ? Surely no.

2. It blotted Grace out of the heart of Man, and can the power of all the Creatures make one dram of Grace ? Yea could we so much as have lighted our Candles that were blown out at their Tapers ? Surely no.

3. By Sinners the Law was destroyed also ; Psal. 119. 1, 26. They have destroyed thy Law. Now if you would set a Price upon the Law, one tittle of it is more worth than Heaven and Earth.

4. Through Sin was much Service due unto God lost. For that we may reckon amongst Goods ; as a Master doth the Service of an Apprentice. Although all Sinners should presently cease to offend God any more ; yet still God hath lost so much Service from them for the time past. Now all mere Creatures being Gods Servants, and owing all their endeavours and services unto him for themselves : No one of them therefore can do two Mens work, because they owe all they can do, for themselves ; and so they can never repay that loss of Service past. God did hire Mankind into his Vineyard for all Eternity ; and though we could suppose they had not committed any positive Sin, yet if God had but only lost so much Service from them, and the Sin of that neglect had annihilated them (and it doth as good as annihilate them to God, and therefore he accounts and calls them lost ; as the lost Sheep, the lost Son, &c.) and then, if God had come to have entred into terms with any mere Creature for these losses, and should have said, Give me but the Creatures you have spoiled, make me a new World, for your Sin hath spoiled this, and subjected it to vanity ; had any of them power to have done it ? Surely no. When God would confute Jobs contending with him, he doth but ask him, whether he could make the least Creature, yea, or being made, command it : Thou ! (sayes God) where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth ? Job 38. 4. Hast thou commanded the morning since thy dayes, or caused the day-spring to know its place ? Ver. 12. Out of whose womb came the ice ? Ver. 29. Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds, (and bid them rain) that abundance of waters may cover thee ? Canst thou send lightnings that may go, and say unto thee, here we are ? Ver. 34, 35. And though thou canst do none of all this, yet dost thou contend with me ? Let me see (sayes God) what thou canst do, Job 40. 7, 8, 9. If thou couldst make, or command the least Creature, then I will confess to thee that thine own right hand can save thee ; Ver. 14. Can all the Angels in Heaven (as powerful as they are) make one hair of thy Head ? Can they set ordinances in Heaven ? Job 38. 33. The Philosophers feigned them to be but the Movers of those Wheels and Orbes, not the Founders of them. They cannot set the Clock, much less, make it. And can they make Grace, or can they make the Law whole again, which Sin had broken ?

But the truth is, that herein God expecteth not, nor is he capable of any Satisfaction or Restitution of Goods ; for none can be profitable to him ; Job 22. 2, 3. When that Formalist thought to oblige God by Sacrifices ; If I were hungry (sayes God) would I tell it thee ? Psal. 50. 12. The world is Gods, and the fulness thereof (sayes the Apostle, 1 Cor. 10. 26.) And again, Who hath given to him, and he shall be recompenced ? Rom. 11. 35. No, it is Glory only that the Creature is capable to give him : So it follows there in Psal. 50. 15. Thou shalt glorifie me. God is not as a King, whose Tribute lies as well in Goods, as in Honour ; but all the Tribute he expecteth or exacteth from the Creature, consists in Honour, for that is the end of all his works ; he made all things for his glory ; I formed it (sayes he in the Prophet) for my glory ; Isa. 43. 7. Of whom and to whom are all things, to whom be glory for ever, sayes the Apostle, Rom. 11. 36. And herein also, though it be most true, that the Creature can contribute nothing to Gods Essential Glory ; yet to his Manifestative Glory it may, and doth ; at least the Creature may take from it, as by Sin it doth ; and the Reason is, because this kind of Glory is revealed in, and by Creatures. Now it is in this that God expects Satisfaction ; and that this Satisfaction in point of Honour does much more infinitely transcend the power of any Creature, is the thing which I am now to demonstrate.

Let us therefore in like manner come to the Particulars wherein Gods Honour suffers by Sin, and shew how irrecompenceable the injury therein is by Creatures.

1. If it were no more than to satisfie for that Tribute of Honour left behind-hand unpaid ; for the neglect of that Homage due to God, and which is to come in by our Service of him ; what a Quarrel must it needs breed, not to be composed, or taken up by any Creature ? You know, Kings that have Homage due to them from other Kings their equals, though the Tribute it self, or thing to be paid, be small ; yet if it be neglected, what Wars and stirs hath it bred, merely because it is a matter of Honour neglected ! Hence also the neglect of paying a small acknowledgment (suppose a Peppercorn, or the like) or of doing some petty Service yearly, do oftentimes forfeit great Estates; because they are acknowledgments of Honour to the Lord of whom the Tenants hold; and so being omitted, they are neglects of an Honour that is due: Now the like slight being offered towards God, how great a wrong doth he account it, if no more yet because there is a neglect of his Honour in it? If indeed the terms of our Service between God and us, did stand upon free mutual conditions of bargain, as when Freemen are hired, and work only for Wages, who if they neglect a Dayes-work, it is but calling in so much of their Wages, and they are even again with him that hired them. If it were thus between God and us, the matter were easier to be reconciled; but it carries a Dishonour with it, such as are those neglects of Service to a great Prince, which Service is not due by any bargain for Wages, but out of Subjection, or as to a Lord by way of Knight-service, not out of Love only and Liberty, but out of Respect and Homage. God is desirous of nothing but Honour from you; and all the Honour the Creatures can give him, is too little for him; it satisfies not, neither answers to his vast Desires of being glorified, nor to the Dues of his most glorious excellency. And therefore, if any be behind-hand unpaid by any of his Creatures, it is a loss by Creatures irreparable, for they render no over-plus to make it up; and he cannot but account it so much loss to him, and should they now do what they can, still God would want of his Due.

2. Satisfaction is to be made for Honour debased also; for Sin casts a foil of disgrace and debasement upon the Honour which God hath, and goes about to dispoil, and rob him of it. It is said, Rom. 2. 23. In breaking the law thou dishonourest God; there is a Dishonour cast upon him by it, yea it toucheth upon the height of his Honour; which will appear,

(1.) In that every Law of his is backt with his Prerogative, and is a note of his absolute Sovereignty; Jam. 4. 12. There is one Law-giver who is able to save and to destroy; that is, he is the supream Potentate of all the World, the absolute Lord Paramount; and this is shewn and declared in giving his Law: And is therefore answerably denied by the Creature in every breach of every Law; to which every Sin is an affront.

Now as amongst Men, Kingly Authority being the Summity, the Supremacy, the Transcendency of all Honour, therefore the Law hath so fenced it, that whatsoever is immediately directed against it, or is a denial of it, is Rebellion, and Crimen lese Majestatis: and to disgrace a Kings Personal Perfections is not so much, nay to speak dishonourably of the Personal Imperfections of a King, dishonoureth him not so much as to oppose his Kingly Power and Dignity: As to say that Kings are not so Learned, or so Valiant as many other Men; this is not in account so high a dishonour to them, because it toucheth not upon their Sovereignty and Princely Dignity, for they may notwithstanding be acknowledged and obeyed as Kings: But whatever tends to impair and blemish that their Prerogative and Dignity, is held to be the height of Dishonour, as Kingly Authority is the sublimity and top of Honour: So now in breaking the least Law of God, we do deny the Sovereignty and Kingly Authority of God. To despise any of Gods works, and slight them, is a dishonour to the Maker, as Solomon sayes; but to slight his Law is more, because that his transcendent Excellency and Kingly Authority is thus engaged in it. Some of the School-Men fondly reason to diminish and lessen the hainousness of Sin, saying that all the evil of Sin lying simply in this, that it is the breach of Gods Law, therefore it is not properly an Injury to God; no otherwise then as a thing contrary to his Will: As when a Master commands a Servant to do a thing, and he doth the contrary, and so, though indeed he displeaseth his Master thereby (as doing a thing contrary to his command) yet (say they) it is no Injury: But they do not consider, that not only Gods Will is engaged in his Law, but also his supream Authority; the Law being made by his Prerogative, and by the same Prerogative backt and commanded. Kings indeed in their Laws do not lay all the weight of their Authority upon every Law; but God doth: And therefore every Sin is not only a transgression of his Will, but a debasement of the Sovereignty of his Will.

Will. Hence in the promulgation of Gods Laws, there runs this Preface, I am the Lord thy God; therefore do this. Exod. 20. 1. So that his Sovereignty is sleighted in every Sin, and in it there is a contempt of his Crown and Dignity.

Book III.

Sin is not only a dishonour to him simply as he is a supream Law-giver, but unto all his other Personal glorious Perfections. Every contempt of the Authority of a Prince reflects not upon his Personal Vertues; but Sin reflects upon all Gods Excellencies; as upon his Goodness, &c. for Men seek that happiness and goodness in the Creature, which is to be had in God alone, and so profess him not to be the chiefest Good. There is no Attribute upon which a disgrace is not cast by the Sins of Men; yea, and therefore they tend to make him no God; Titus 1. 16. In their works they deny God. Traytors may aim to unking a Prince, and to that end rebel against him, and yet their Treason not reach unto his Life. But Gods Sovereignty, and Perfection, and Glory are himself, and his Life; the least detraction from which, is to destroy the whole; for quicquid est in Deo Deus est, whatever is in God, is God himself. It is true indeed, that in the event those hurt not God: no more than Snow-balls thrown against the Sun can hurt it. God dwells in light which darkness cannot approach or touch. Sin hurts him no more than Grace benefits him. But yet, injuries and dishonours are not measured in Morality, by the event only, but by what is the Terminus, the thing they tend to; which is, to un-God the great God, and despoil him of all his Titles. To resolve to kill a King, is accounted Treason, as well as to do it, and to punish for such; therefore Solomon did put Adonijah to death. Even as he who hates his Brother, is counted a Murtherer, 1 John 3. 15. so he who hates God, is a Murtherer of God: Now every Sinner is said to hate God, Rom. 1. 30. Peccatum est Dei-cidium. It is true, that Physically Sin is but Privatio boni finiti, of that good which we might have in God, not boni infiniti, or Dei, not the Privation of God as in himself; but as he is to be participated by us. Yet as the Astronomers call the Interposition of the Moon between the Earth and the Sun, the Eclipse of the Sun; though the Sun doth really lose no light by it, but only the Earth; yet because it makes the Face of the World below to be as if there were no Sun, it is therefore commonly called, the Eclipse of the Sun, and not of the Earth, so may it be said of Sin: It is in the guilt of it a Privation of God, and of his Glory, and of his Law: Because though indeed and in truth we only are the losers; yet it makes to us as if there were no God, as if God had no being; and so it may be said to be the Eclipse of his Being, viz. to us. Therefore Men are said to live without God in the world; Ephes. 2. 21. and without the Law; 1 Tim. 1. 9. and to be deprived of the glory of God, as being not manifested in them nor by them; Rom. 3. 23. Now if it be so that the sinfulness of Sin thus lies in so great a dishonour to so great a God; what Satisfaction can then be made for the demerit of it, by all the Creatures? For in this respect it transcends in evil, and outweighs all the goodness that is either in the Persons or Graces of all the Creatures. Indeed it is true, if we take Sin Physically, as it is a privation of the contrary Habit of Grace and of our good only, that then it hath no more evil in it than Grace hath Goodness; for as Sin separates from God, your iniquities have separated you from me; Isa. 59. 2. so Grace draws the Soul nearer to God, and so makes a Man as happy, as Sin makes him miserable: To draw near to thee is good, sayes the Psalmist, Psal. 73. 28. But this is not that special evil in Sin, for which Satisfaction is required; as neither is it the chief matter of our Repentance for Sin: for no Man satisfies for an evil done to himself; neither is it Sins having so much evil in it against us, that hinders a meer Creature from satisfying; which notwithstanding was that that misled some of the Antient Schoolmen, who upon that ground thought a Pure Creature might satisfy for Sin; all their Reasons running upon the evil of Sin as a Privation of Grace, and of God to us only, and as he is our good; not considering, that over and above it is an evil against God himself; Jer. 2. 19. It is an evil and a bitter thing to forsake God: And Sin is accordingly called enmity against God, Rom. 8. 7. and a provoking the eyes eyes of his glory. Isa. 3. 8, It is likewise said to be against him : So sayes David, Psal. 51. 4. Against thee, thee onely have I sinned : He lookt not so much at the wrong to Bathsheba and Uriah, as at the dishonour done to God ; and this is the eminent evil to be considered in Sin ; for as God is the chiefest good, so himself is the measure of all other good and evil. Now then, the evil of Sin lying thus in so great a dishonour unto God himself ; no Creature can make amends for it. For,

1. Dishonour which reflects upon a Person of worth, cannot be satisfied for but by a Person equally worthy and honourable ; for the Satisfaction must be made by restoring of Honour again, and that will depend upon the honour and worth of the Party honouring. The restoring of Honour is to be measured by the same Rule, and weighed at the same Ballance that the Honour of the Person dishonoured is measured by : As therefore, Honour is in it self a Personal thing, so the repairing of it again depends upon the Personal worth of him that goes about to repair it. Were we and God equal, so as there were as much worth in us to honour him withal, as our dishonouring of him comes unto ; then indeed if we went about some way to restore again, that Honour that was impaired by us, we might perhaps satisfy for it : (And yet the Law is so tender of dishonour, that in case of Defamation, it is not enough for a Person equally Honourable to submit, and to say as much for a Man as he hath said against him ; that is accounted Satisfaction ; but the Law enjoins a Penalty besides) But however, the restoring of Honour being a thing Personal, doth therefore depend upon the honour of that Person who is to restore it ; for Honor est in honorante, Honour is in him that honours ; the meaning of which Saying may well be this, that Honour depends upon the worth of the Party honouring. Therefore we see that honour from a mean Peasant is not esteemed or accounted of by one that is highly Noble : And hence it is, that Wrongs in point of Honour, offered by Inferiours to Superiours, do oftentimes transcend Satisfaction. It is not so in Goods ; a Poor Man may satisfy a King in Goods, in case he be able to restore as well as another. And the Demonstration of this is, that the best way of Satisfaction to be made by such Inferiours, being to submit themselves, and that submission being a Due from them already, and no more than the distance of their Ranks call for ; it therefore reacheth not to Satisfaction. And thus it is in common esteem, and that founded upon what is in the things themselves, and not upon common opinion only. And therefore it is evident, that though the Creatures should do that which might bring in as much glory to God as was lost ; yet because of the distance and disproportion that is between the Persons, it would never satisfy. The aggravation of a dishonour ariseth not so much from the fact, as from the disproportion between the Persons ; for Honour is not inter Res, but Personas ; it concerns not Things, but Persons. To strike, or offer to strike at a Magistrate (though we hurt him not) the hainousness of the fault lies not so much in the Fact, as in the Disproportion between the Persons. Therefore though in the Old Law, a Tooth for a Tooth was Satisfaction enough between Private Men ; yet not so in case of hurting a Magistrate, or striking a Mans Parent, which was Death by that Law, because of the Dishonour done to them thereby. So upon the same ground, for a mad Man to strike the King, is Death by our Laws, not in respect of the Fact, or of his Intention ; but in regard of the transcendent Honour of the Person of a King ; and the disproportion and inferiority that is in him that strikes him. Now the disproportion between God and us is so infinite, that it makes our sinning a Dishonour altioris Ordinis, of a higher kind then is recompensable by Creatures:

And to enlarge this Demonstration further : If no Creature can make unto God a reparation of Goods (as was shewn) then much less can it make Satisfaction for his Glory impaired. For Goods are extrinsecal to a Mans Person, and therefore the loss of them a Man less regards ; yea the greater Spirit a Man is of, the less he cares for Goods ; and indeed the wrong therein becometh cometh less : Even as to wrong a Poor Man in his Goods, is worse (because of his need) then to wrong a Rich Man ; but the greater any one is in Spirit, the more he regards Honour, and that far above his Goods. Men will lose their Blood rather than suffer a hair of Honour to perish ; which Disposition though it be often set wrong in Men, yet it is a spark of Gods Image, and a resemblance of what is in him. God can bear the loss of Creatures and Worlds, and never be toucht with it ; but he will not lose one ray of Honour. For Glory is a Personal thing ; it is the Lustre of his Person which he carries and wears about him ; and is intrinsecal to him, which Goods are not ; and therefore God is willing to lose Creatures, thereby to gain the more Glory. So he casts away the most of Men and Angels for his own Glory. My glory (sayes God) I will not give to another ; Isa. 42. 8. But his Goods he doth ; He gave the earth and all the fulness thereof, unto the Sons of Men. Psal. 115. 16. He gives Worlds and Kingdoms away even to the basest of Men, (sayes Daniel, Dan. 4. 17.) but he will part with none of his Glory that is proper to himself, unto any of them. Of all the Goods he possesseth, his Children are the dearest to him ; he gives Nations for them, Isa. 41. 2. and once he gave his Son for them ; they are the apple of his eye ; and he that toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye : But his Glory is dearer to him than all his Children, for he formed them for his glory, (as the same Prophet there also sayes) Isa. 43. 7. How hard is it to pacifie Jealousie, when a Mans Spouse is deflowred, It is the rage of a man, and he will not regard any ransom ; (as Solomon sayes Prov. 6. 34, 35.) How hard then must it needs be, to pacifie God, who is said to be jealous of nothing but his honour.

Again, 2. Though it be but the manifestation of Gods Glory, which hath a foil and a reflexion cast upon it by Sin, not his Essential Glory, (which loseth nothing by Sin, as it gains not, nor is encreased by all the works that Christ, or God himself hath done) ; yet not all that the Creatures can do is worth the least beam of that his Glory as it is to be manifested. For that is the end for which they were all made, and is therefore better then they. And besides, all they can do to the advancing of it, they do owe it already, and God stands not in need of them to manifest it ; he could have let them remain in the womb of nothing, and have raised up others to glorifie him.

3. In that Sin strikes at Gods Being, what is there in the Creatures that can make amends for it, they being but shadows of his Being, and he the substance ; whose name alone is [I am]. The over-shadowing therefore, or the eclipse of his Being, is more than the destruction of ours.

Object. Yea, but you will object, and say, that the Grace of a meer Creature may seem to vye with all the evil that is in Sin ; and this, in point of Honour. For as Sin is against God, so Grace though but in an impure Creature, can say, I am for God : and as Sin sets up another God ; so this Grace glorifies God as God. Now God being the Object of both, why should they not alike set a worth, or a demerit upon what is done, and God accept of Grace, which is for him, as much as condemn and punish Sin, the aggravation of the sinfulness of which is, that it is against him !

Ans. For Answer unto this :

1. Though it be true that Sin hurts him no more than Grace benefits him ; (in that God is capable neither of benefit nor hurt) even as Clouds take no more from the Sun than Candles add to it. And therefore in Job 35. 6, 7. it is said, What dost thou to him if thou beest righteous, or against him if thou sinnest ? For nothing is opposed to God immediately, but only to him in his Works : As no darkness can obscure the Sun it self, though his beams it may intercept ; so Sin may dim the manifestative glory of the Father of lights. Yet, as we measure not kindneses or injuries by the event, but by what they are in the acts themselves (as Treason is not punished according to the event, but according to the nature of the act plotted or purposed) so are we to do by Sin. And

And 2. If we compare the ingredient qualifications considerable in the one, and in the other, as the one is an Injury, and the other an Act of Obedience; we shall find a great disproportion between them. For,

Chap. 6.

(1.) If an injury is accounted more evil and blame-worthy than all kind-nesses praise-worthy and to be accepted; then when the injury is an undue act of us, unworthy of all the obligations between us and another whom we wrong; when 'tis causless; and when the kindneses we do are all due from us; herein lies the disproportion which makes the obliquity of the injury of Sin the more transcendent. All the Obedience we perform is due from us to God: You do (sayes Christ) what you ought to do: Luke 17. 10. But in this (as Christ again sayes) we hate God without a cause; John 15. 24, 25. And what iniquitie have you found in me (sayes he) and for which of all my perfecti- ons or kindneses to you, do you sin against me? John 10. 32. Now it is this inequality that lies between the one and the other, that makes the obliquity of the one to exceed the goodness of the other. As for Example: For a Child to love his Father, though it be good and commendable, yet in so doing he doth but his Duty, and even what Nature teacheth to do; therefore this is not so praise-worthy, as to hate his Father is odious; for he therein goes against his kind; there is an unnaturalness in it; and therefore we see, that one such act does more discommend one to Men, than all former acts of dutiful and loving Obedience do, or can commend him. The being Due does diminish of the praise and commendation of what is good: If you love those that love [you] (sayes Christ Luke 6. 33, 34.) what thank have you? No reward attends such a love although it be good; because it is a due and suitable act; but love your enemies (sayes he); unto whom (in regard of any obligation to them) nothing is due; and then your reward shall be great; this is praise-worthy indeed. I may turn this speech, and say, that to obey God, and love him, and exalt him as God; though it be good, yet what is it but what is due from you, and that which all Obligations tye you to? What does God require of thee O man, (sayes Moses) but to love and fear him? Deut. 10. 12. He requires but what is reasonable and due. Now to do all this is not thank-worthy; for if you knew him, you could not choose but love him; but to be rebellious to him; to be an enemy to one so good and so glorious; and one unto whom you are so much beholding; this is unsufferable.

(2.) As in regard of the undueness of the act, as from [us] to God, there is a greater obliquity in Sin, than goodness in Grace; so in regard of [God] also. Though the act of a Creature obeying God doth intend Glory to him, as much as a Sinner doth intend Dishonour to him; yet the Sin is more; and that in regard of him who is the Object of both: For,

1. All the Honour which we can give God is but his due already. We do but attribute that to him which is his own already, and that independantly, without us. What do we in being holy and obedient? We exalt him as God; why, he is God already, whether we exalt him or no; yea, what we can do this way, falls short of that which is his due, in himself; for Nebem. 9. 5. He is above all blessings and praises. But the very formalis ratio of sinning against him, is to set up another God, and so to attribute that to him, which is not, or that which is below him, that is thereby to affix a new Title of Dis-grace upon him, utterly unworthy of him. As for the Eye to call the Light beautiful and glorious, and to admire it, what is it, but only to speak that of it which it is already? But for the Eye to call Light Darknes, this is de novo to coyn and put a disparagement upon it, and Sin is a new invention of our own, as Ecclesiastes speaks, Eccles. 7. 29. to dishonour God. Thus Unbelief makes God a Liar; and what a wrong is that? It is not recompensable by all our acts of Faith in believing that he is true; for to believe so, is but to declare what is his already; but the other is the invention of a falshood ob-truded upon him by Men. For one to speak Truth, is but little or no com-mendation; for a Man speaks but what is; but to tell a Lye, is to invent a new thing, that is false: and therefore how odious and shameful is it? Now every Sin is a Lye concerning God, changing the truth of God into a lye, Rom. 1. 25 It declares that of God, which is not: And to be the Inventor of new Gods, or of false things of God, what an evil is it? Again to love God, and honour him is a thing due to his Name, Give him the praise due to his name, Psa. 29. 2. and his Excellency challengeth it. Now to love goodness, what is it! So, to love God; but what in incongruity is it to hate goodness? For Subjects to honour their King whose Title and Prerogative is independant upon them, is not so much to him, as it is a dishonour for one Man to disparage his Title, and to go about the setting up of another King. Now Gods Glory is in, and from himself; and therefore he hath reason to account it more dishonour to him, that one Man should rebel, then honour to him, that all should obey him. When I honour him, his Honour ariseth from himself, not me; as the Glory of the Sun shining in the Water, is not from the Water, but from the Sun: So when we reflect Glory on God, that Glory ariseth not out of what we do, but is in himself already. But the Dishonour of him is wholly in us: We are the sole Inventors of it; and there is no such thing extant, except in a Sinners heart.

Add to this; That all the Grace wherewith we glorifie God, is not a Mans own; but Sin is wholly his own; so John 8. 44. when he sins, he sins ex se ipse from his own; and so in Jude 16. their Lusts are called their own; and Eccles. 7. 29. they are said to be our inventions.

Again 3dly. If the compass and measure be taken, of that Dishonour which Sin tends unto; there will be found a wider distance between the two terms of its reach, then there is of the Honour that the Creature can give to God, or then it doth extend it self unto: For the measure and compass of the Dishonour is plainly this, To make the great God no God; these are the terms the least Sin stretcheth it self unto, in the Scope and tendency of the Act, though not in the event, nor in the intention of the Sinner. But when the Creatures glorifie God, though they should glorifie him as God as far as the Creatures can do it, yet if you take the measure of the utmost Elevation of his Glory by them, there still remains an infinite distance between the Honour which they aim to give him, and what is in himself; so that it falls so far short, that it is infinite goodness in God to accept it.

As the Conclusion therefore of this Answer, and closure of this Discourse, I will super-add these few Demonstrations drawn from the Effects, to shew clearly, and confirm this, That the least sin transcends in evil the worth of all created Graces, which puts all out of Question, and makes the whole Demonstration undeniable; for satisfaction being reductio ad equalia, a reducing of things to an equality; 'Therefore if all their Graces cannot make so much goodness as shall counterballance the evil of Sin: It is impossible they should ever satisfy: Now that they do not, appears by these Demonstrations.

First, One Sin when it is committed by the best of Creatures, prevails more with God, to condemn him, then all his Righteousness to justify him. If one of the Angels did never so much, so great, so long service, yet if after Millions of years he sinned in the least; all the fore-past Service would be forgotten: As a Favourite that hath done much Service at Court, or in the Wars; if after all he should be found guilty of one Treason, that one Act would put a blot upon all his former Services, and render them nothing-worth. If a Man doth not all things, yea, (more then that) continues not in all things, he is accursed: Gal. 3. 10. Now if Sin were not more evil in Gods Judgment, (whose Judgment is righteous) then all Obedience is good, then this could not be. It is not as the Pharisees dreamed, that Men should be justified, if their good works were more than their Sins; as if their good works being weighed, and found exceeding the other in number, they should therefore carry it; no, a world of good works will be found too light for the least dramme of Sin.

Secondly, The Demerit of Sin is more than the Merit of Goodness can be, for that the evil that is in Sin does truly deserve Death; not only in relation to, or by virtue of a Pœnal Law arbitrarily given, or out of a voluntary compact and agreement between God and the Creature, but in its own Nature. That threatening thou shalt dye the death is not added ex pacto only; neither depends it meerly upon an outward Declaration of Gods Will, but further Sin is such an Evil as in the Nature of the thing deserves Death; and that immutably. Therefore that δικαίωμα τῆς θανάτου, that Judgment of God written in all Mens hearts, saies, that they who do such things are worthy of death; Rom. 1. 32. and so also, Rom. 6. 23. The wages of sin is death. But if you put all the Grace in the World together, it cannot merit at Gods hands his favour: God may out of his bounty oblige himself by a promise to reward it, but it is not out of the worth of the thing. So it follows there, in that Rom. 6. 23. The gift of God is eternal life, you see what an apparent difference the Apostle puts between the one and the other. In like manner, Luk. 17. 10. it is said, When you have done all, if you could suppose you had done all, yet, you are unprofitable servants: For Gods Right over us is founded upon his Excellence; and accordingly, our Obligation to serve God, is not from his benefits only, but from a Due unto his own Excellencies: And therefore although there were no reward for our Service, yet Service were due from us. So saies Aristotle: If any Man transcendently excell all others, that Man is to be King over them, and they are bound to serve him. Yea, and therefore the Priviledge to justifie a Man is separable from our Graces (as in Men sanctified by the Gospel) but so is not condemnation, from Sin: And therefore although Sin in the world redounds not in the event, to the Persons to condemn them, by reason of Christs Righteousness imputed; yet all that Righteousness makes not but that Sin in its own Nature deserves Death; and so, they are to judge themselves for it, as worthy to be destroyed. But all the Grace that is in them, doth not only not justifie them ipso facto; but it hath wholly and for ever lost that Priviledge. Which argues, that it is not seated in the Nature of Grace, to justifie as to demerit Death is seated in the Nature of Sin: For then, though the effect might be retained, yet that property would be inseparable from it.

And Thirdly, That the strength of Sin is greater then that of Grace, appears by this also, that it is able to expel Grace out of the Heart; as it did out of Adams; but all the Grace of all the Creatures could not restore it.

Fourthly, It is counted more Mercy to pardon one Sinner, than goodness to reward and save all the Angels. More Riches are attributed even to Gods Mercy and Patience towards Wicked Men, then to his simple goodness towards other Creatures innocent, though never so Holy.

C H A P. VI.

That Christ hath made full Reparation of all which was lost by Sin. The Glory of the Law which Sin had darkned, is by him perfectly recover'd. And Gods Image, which Sin had defaced in Man, is more fully restored in him.

WE have seen the Power of all the Creatures set up, and at a loss as to this the greatest and most difficult business that ever was set on foot, viz. the taking away of sins ! Let us now come to lay open that Fullness that is in Christ, for this Work ; before which all these Difficulties that have been put, and all our Sins likewise will vanish and melt away as Clouds before the Sun. A Fullness it is, that answers to every defect, and to every particular Objection made. I will begin with that satisfaction that is to be given to God ; for in the wrong to him doth the principal knot and difficulty lie.

First, If God should stand upon satisfaction to be made, in point of Goods (which yet, as I said, he doth not) Christ hath therein abundantly made amends : Which although he reckons not as any part of his satisfaction, which only consists in his obedient humbling of himself, yet it may be considered as part of the surplussage and redundancy of it. Let Justice come and bring in her Bill of Damages ; and see if Christ hath not abundantly given satisfaction for them : As,

I. Will the complaint be, of the loss, spoil, and waste made of the World, and of all the Creatures therein, and of the unjoynting that Frame unto the danger of the Destruction of it, which no Creature is able to repair, or to uphold : Then let it withal be remembred, that he that had undertook to satisfy God, had his hand in making this old World, and without him it had not been made ; John 1. 10. It is a consideration that both that Evangelist, and the Author to the Hebrews (Heb. 1. 2.) as likewise the Apostle to the Colossians, (Col. 1. 16.) do all suggest to this very purpose, thereby to shew Christs Abilitie to satisfy for Sin : And if God would yet further desire new Worlds to be made him for satisfaction, Christ could make enough. And it may be further pleaded, that this World (as we see) stands and continues still, notwithstanding all the sins committed in it, and that Justice had destin'd it to present ruine the first day that Man should sin. Now whose power is it that upholds it ? Is it not Christs, whose very Word is able to underprop it, so Heb. 1. 3. upholding all things by the word of his power, who with one hand holdeth his Fathers hands from destroying this World, and with the other upholds it from tottering. Yea, if it were no more but this, that he who made the World would vouchsafe to admit himself into it, and become a Part of it ; and that he whom God did never make nor create, but from Eternity begat, would be made flesh, and become a Creature and Servant (which was an addition to Gods Goods, and worth all that he had made besides) this might make reparation for all such Damages. And again, at whose Expences are all things here maintained ? Are they not at Christs ? The Father did as it were deny to lay out any more Power, or Patience in upholding the World, till he should be paid for it ; and did not Christ undertake this, and at his due time lay down a Price that fully bought it ? Who is therefore called the Lord that bought, 2 Pet. 2. 1. as wicked men, so all the World. And that he who made the World, and is Joint-Heir with God, and and hath as much right to it as He, should to satisfy him, lay down his Right, put himself out of all, and then take it up upon a new Title, when it was his before, so buying what himself made, and what was his own: That he should become poor, even not worth the ground he went on when he came into the World, and should suffer himself not to be owned, (as John speaks) yea to be cast out of the vineyard as one that had nothing to do with it; will not all this make amends, will not this Poverty rise to great Riches? The Apostle Paul tells us so, Wherefore this may well make satisfaction to God for Goods lost.

2dly. If Justice complain of the Law defaced, and as it were abolished by Sin; if she plead that through it the Righteous Law is made void, and of none effect; and so bring it in, in this Inventory of wasted Goods, considered only as it is a Copy of Gods Will, an Expression of his Holyness, an Effect of his Wisdom, and Monument of the same, the least iota of which is so pretious, as not all in Heaven and Earth can make amends for its loss: Should Justice make this complaint, then let the Reply be, that our Redeemers Head was in the making of that Law; and that the hand of him who is the Mighty Councillor, did guide the Pen that wrote it in Adams heart at first; and further that himself is the substantial Image of God, and the επιτομή of the Law: And besides, when it was lost, and no Copy on Earth to be found, he it was that wrote it in the Consciences of Men fallen. In which Sence the Apostle John saies, that it is he who enlightens every man that comes into the World, John 1. 9. And because that was but an imperfect Copy, it was he that farther delivered the Law, of which David sayes, 'twas perfect, Psal. 19. 7. The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. And renewed it on Mount Sinah, Galat. 3. 19. And in the fulness of time himself came, and vindicated it from all corrupt glosses, in his Preaching, fulfilled it in his Life, and in fulfilling it, writ it out again with his own hands, and so set a more perfect Copy, then ever was extant, in the hearts and Lives of Angels. I came not to destroy the law (saies he) but to fulfil it. Yea, and if all the Copies of the Law that are in the World were burnt, they might be all renewed in his Story; infomuch that he is reckoned a New Founder of it. A new commandment (saies the Apostle, 1 John 2. 8.) write I unto you; and so the Apostle Paul speaks of fulfilling the Law of Christ, Gal. 6. 2. Bear ye one anothers burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Yea, and suppose, that that Covenant (which is the first Story and Copy of Gods Will and Wisdom) had been utterly lost (like as some of Solomons Books were) yet he by his Works of Mediation makes a new Story of another Wisdom infinitely more glorious, viz. the Gospel, (whereof he is the Sole Founder, and of whom it is written as being the Subject of it) the least Line of which is worth all the Law; so that the Angels stand amazed at the Treasures of Wisdom that are to be found therein, being deeper than ever were revealed in the Law. The Law, That came by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, John 1. 17. A new Volume of Truths, which had not been true, if he by his Blood had not made them so.

3dly. Though Gods Image be lost by Sin, yet he is such an Image of him, as the very sight and beholding of him renews it, and changeth men into the same image, 2 Cor. 3. 18. But we all with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord. Yea, The Image which he renews is a better Image than that of Adams; it is of a higher Strain and Key, and raised by higher Motives.

4thly. As for loss of Service to repair it, He took on him the form of a servant, Phil. 2. 7. And such a Servant he was, as was not to have been hired amongst all the Creatures. They all could not do the work that he did; The government of the whole world is upon his shoulders, Isa. 9. 6. He caseth his his Father of it for the present, and when he had brought him in infinite Revenues of Glory, he will at last deliver up the Kingdom to him, 1 Cor. 15. 24. with a greater surplufage than else would have been had out of that begun course of Providence taken up at the Creation. And if you will not reckon that, as part of satisfaction, yet consider the Service he did in the Priests Office, wherein God acknowledged him his Servant: He dispatcht more work in those Thirty Three Years wherein he lived, yea, in those three hours wherein he suffered, then ever was, or will be done by all Creatures, to Eternity. It was a good Six-dayes work when the World was made; and he had a principal hand in that; neither hath he been idle since; I and my Father work hitherto, saies Christ, John 5. 17. But that three-hours-work upon the Cross, was more, than all the other. Eternity will not have more done in it, then vertyually was done in those three hours; so as that small space of time was in vobis aternitatis. As they say of Eternity, that it is all Time contracted into an Instant, so was all time past, and to come, into those few hours, and the merit of them: For he then made work for the Spirit, and indeed, for all the Three Persons, unto Eternity: He then did that, which the Spirit is writing out in Grace and Glory for ever, yea, and all that ever was or will be done towards the Saints, was then perfected: He perfected for ever them that are sanctified, by that one offering, Heb. 10. 12, 14. But this man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God: ver. 14. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.

C H A P. VII.

That Christ hath repaired the Loss of Honour, which God sustained by Sin. Satisfaction in point of Honour being to be measur'd by the Excellency, Dignity, and Reputation of the Person satisfying. Christ being God-Man, in this respect makes the Greatest which could be.

BUT the greatest Evil of Sin lies in the injury by it done unto the Honour, and Sovereign Glory, and to the Person of God himself; which is the thing that makes Sin so hainous, that the Difficulty of satisfying God herein is insuperable by all the Creatures (as hath been shewed) unto which notwithstanding we shall see Christ is as much enabled, as we have seen him to be unto the former, to make amends for the Dammage which God sustained.

Honour (as was said) being a Personal thing, and a due resulting out of Personal Perfections; answerably therefore satisfaction therein is fundamentally to rise out of, and to be measured by the Personal Worth, Dignity, Excellency, and Reputation of the Person who undertakes to satisfy. Wherefore, as the foundation of this great Demonstration, let us consider briefly the Personal worth of Christ our Surety, as from whence all his satisfaction receives its force and value; and so we will go on, to shew what his Person hath done to make amends therein; and then by comparing (as we go along) both what he is, and what he hath done to satisfy, with what is in the dishonour done to God by Sin (which is the thing to be satisfied for) you will see all the disproportions that have been mentioned, and can be thought of, to make Sin so above measure sinful, exceeded, and wholly overcome. Now as a Ground-work to this, I will take but that one place

P H I L. 2. 6, 7, 8.

Ver. 6. Who being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God.

Ver. 7. But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men.

Ver. 8. And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

A place full, and adequate to my scope; wherein (you see) the Apostle argues the Efficacy of Christs Merit, and the worth of it, from hence, that being equal with God, viz. in Glory, (as the opposite to [he humbled himself] shews) he should be humbled: and that he should humble himself, and become obedient, &c. and all for the Glory of God the Father. Every word is weighty, and speaks satisfaction; and that he, so great a Person, for greatness of Glory equal with God, for right to Glory, one that thought it no robbery to challenge it; for the kind of Glory which was his due, it was not accidental, but substantial [being in the form of God] that he should be emptied of all, and lay aside that Honour, which was due unto him, yea, suffer all his Glory to be debased, and his Honour laid in the dust, and himself to be humbled to the greatest and basest of Evils, Death, and of all Deaths the most shameful, the Death of the Cross, and not humbled Passively only, but that he should voluntarily humble himself, and become obedient; and that the Object of this Subjection should be but Actions only, not himself, his Person.

so as, all that he did, or suffered, reflected on himself, and his Person was humbled in all, and all this, to recover Gods Honour lost; it was to the glory of God the Father (as the closure of all hath it) surely all this (as you will see) must needs make a full amends.

Now for the clearing of this Point and Demonstration, whence it is, that this satisfaction ariseth, I will proceed by degrees, until a full satisfaction shall rise up to all your apprehensions, in a way of just Reason, as there did unto God himself by that one Oblation of Christ himself for us.

And First, Let us consider the worth of the Person, upon which, the worth of the satisfaction doth depend. And to the manifesting of this, consider we first, that Christ had an Essential Glory, as he is God which was the Foundation and Ground-work. This I need not insist upon, all knowing it, and taking it for granted, though divers Interpreters judge it not to be, That Glory which the Text doth directly and in the first place intend, yet to be ultimately supposed, as that which is the Original Ground of all that Oriental Transcendent Glory, which as God-Man he parted withal, for satisfaction to God. And though it be true, that this Glory of his, as he is meerly God, cannot be debased, or diminished, and so can never properly become the Matter of satisfaction for Sin, but it is another Glory, (which I shall speak of presently is the Matter of it) yet this is it that was the Cause and Rise of that God-Mans Glory, and that doth give the Original worth and value to all that Christ did, or suffered. You shall still find, that the Scripture puts the Efficacy of his Actions upon the worth of his Person; for indeed, it is the Dignity of the Person that dignifies the work. God had respect first, to Abel, then to his Sacrifice, for the sake of Abel. Therefore in a proportion the more worth and esteem the Person is of with God, the more worth the Actions are. And therefore, as the worth of Christs Person was Infinite, so must the worth of his Actions be. His Person raiseth his Actions in statum sibi similem, unto a state suitable to himself, as a King doth his Children to a state answerable to his own. And as the Humane Nature being Personally united to the Godhead is raised unto a Transcendent Priviledge, by vertue of that Union, which no other Creature hath; so the Actions thereof do by vertue of the Godhead, come to have similem statum; they are raised to a proportionable state also. And as the Humane Nature is sanctified through that Union with the Divine, with a sanctification beyond that of habitual Graces (as the School-Men have rightly observed and descried) so the Actions thereof are Deitate perfusa, they have a Divinity in them. As the Humane Nature of Christ, by reason of its Union with the Godhead, hath more worth and dignity communicated to it, then is, or could be in all Creatures (in all things he had the preheminnence, Col. 1. 18.) and therefore when he comes into the World, it was said, Let all the Angels worship him, which Honour no Creature must have, so his Actions and Graces are translated into as high a Rank of Dignity above the Graces and Actions of Creatures, and this by his Person, even as his very Humane Nature is exalted above the Rank of all Creatures. And this makes his Blood to be pretious Blood indeed, in that it is the Blood of God, Acts 20. 28. The worth of this Person being substantial, it doth se totum transfundere, it transfuseth or rather casts its whole worth upon his Actions, to the utmost of it. And as all the subness of the Godhead is said to dwell in, Col. 2. 9. and to be Personally communicated to the Man-hood, making it as Glorious as a Creature can possibly by God be made; so the whole Person doth cast a glorious brightness, or lustre, and reflecteth upon the Actions he doth in that Nature, all that Personal worth that is communicable. And surely this will equal the proportion of Evil that is in our Sins; for as the Offence was against an Infinitely-Glorious God; so the Works done to take away the Offence, were wrought by one as Infinite. And as the chiefest Accent of the Offence lies in this, that it was against an infinite Majesty; so the greatness of the satisfaction made lies in this, that it was performed by the Mighty God; which proportion could never have been filled up by any Creature who was not God; satisfaction in point of Honour depending upon the equal worth of the Person honouring, and the Person dishonoured. And though the Humane Nature (which is in it self finite) be the Principium quo, and the Instrument by which, and in which the Second Person doth all that he doth; and therefore answerably the Physical being of those Actions is but finite in genere entis: Yet all those Articles being attributed to the Person who is Principium quod, the Principle which doth, and unto which all is to be ascribed (for Actiones sunt suppositorum, Actions are attributed to the Persons, because that is said only to subsist) therefore the Moral estimation of them is from the worth of the Person that performs them. And thus, though the immediate Principle, the Humane Nature be finite; yet the Radical Principle, the Person, is Infinite. And both Natures being one in Person, what the one is said to do or suffer, the other is said to do and suffer; and therefore his Blood is called the Blood of God. Yet this is not so to be understood, (nor was it necessary unto satisfaction to God) as if the worth of the Actions of this Person should be as infinite as the Person is, essentially and substantially; for Christs Merits could not be Infinite, as Gods Attributes are; but it is enough to satisfaction, that they might be valued such in a Moral estimation; for thereby it holds an answerable proportion unto the evil of Sin. For as the evil of Sin is said to be infinite Morally only, and in Repute, and Objectivè, as it is against an Infinite Person, and not essentially infinite, as the object of it is; so answerably the satisfaction that it requires to be made for it, needs not to be Essentially and Physically infinite, (for that were impossible) but it is enough if it be as Sin it self is) Morally such, and in its value such; which then it will arise to be, when the Person that performs it is infinite; and so, this will come to be subjectively infinite, as from an infinite Person, as Sin is objectively Infinite, as against an Infinite God: And such a Person is the Second Person in the Trinity, and such therefore is his Righteousness, it being the Righteousness of him who is God.

But Secondly, Although this Essential Glory of the God-head gives the worth and value to all the Actions that Christ did; yet in it self it was not capable of being debased, nor he of being emptied of it; nor could this therefore properly become the Object Matter which should be offered up to God for satisfaction. For as in our sinning Gods Essential Glory is not, nor cannot be injured by us, but it is wronged only in the shine and lustre of it, in the putting of it self forth before us Creatures, or the manifestations of it (wherein though the Essential Glory of his God-head is not obscured, but the manifestation of it only, yet the injury reflects upon that his Essential Glory, because that was it that was manifested) so in like manner is it in Christs satisfaction. Christs Essential Glory as he is only God, could of it self alone never have satisfied for Sin; for satisfaction in point of Honour being to be effected by the lessening of Glory in the Satisfier to give Glory to him that is to have satisfaction; Thence therefore the Essential Glory of the God-head (which cannot be empaired of it self,) if it remained unmanifested, it could never satisfy. But if this Second Person putting himself forth to be manifested will suffer himself to be obscured in that Glory which is due to him when he comes to manifest himself, this indeed will come in to be fit matter for satisfaction.

For, Thirdly, If the God-head of Christ had gone about to manifest it self in Works only, or such wayes as are common to the other Persons of the Trinity with himself, as by creating of Worlds, making of Laws, &c. He had not by those wayes satisfied neither; because the other Persons had had as joint an Interest in all such kind of manifestations as himself had, and the obscurement of him in such manifestations had reflected equally upon the other Two Persons as upon himself. Wherefore over and above that his Essential Glory, he must have a Manifestative Glory, an outward, visible brightness of Glory, and that also such as must become Personal, and proper, and peculiar to him, so as to none of the other Persons; that as it may be capable of being obscured, so also that obscurement of it may reflect upon his Person, and upon it alone.

Therefore Fourthly, The Son of God, if he make Satisfaction for Sin, must necessarily be supposed first to take, or to have taken on him the Nature of some Reasonable Creature, either of Mankind, or of the Angels, into Personal Fellowship with himself; which would be both a peculiar way of manifesting himself and of his Glory not common to the other Two Persons, and would also draw in all his Personal Excellencies into such an engagement, as that both in the manifestation of himself in that Nature assumed his Personal Glory may be interested, and also in the obscurement and clouding of himself in that manifestation all these his Excellencies may be said to be abased likewise, and so come to reflect upon the whole Person himself, who is thus glorious, and upon all that is in him: And thus fitly come to make a full Satisfaction.

Now in the Fifth place, Let us consider what a Manifestative Glory is due to the Son of God, if he assume a Creature into One Person with himself. And herein consider we, that that Nature or Creature which he shall assume (be it Man or Angel) must by Inheritance exist in the form of God; Phil. 2. 6. which [form of God] I here take not to be put for the Essence of God, as neither is [the form of a Servant] in the following Sentence, taken for the Nature of Man simply considered; but for that debased appearance in which he in our Nature came into the World, not as a Lord, Glorious, but covered with Infirmities; and this Expression seems to be all one with that, Rom. 8. 3. He came in the likeness of sinful flesh: And so in like manner the [form of God] here, is that God-like Glory, and that manifestation of the God-head, which was, and must needs be due to appear in the Nature assumed; for [form] is put for an outward appearance and manifestation; in respect of which Christ as God-Man is call'd the brightness of his Fathers Glory, Heb. 1. 2. Brightness (you know) is not the substance of Light, but the appearance of it. And so also he is called, the image of the invisible God, Col. 1. 15. The meaning of which is this, that whereas Gods Essential Glory is invisible, (For he dwells in light that no Man can approach unto, 1 Tim. 6. 16.) Christ assuming our Humane Nature, becomes the Image of it, and so makes it visible to us, God having stamped all his glory upon his face; that we might see it in him, 2 Cor. 4. 6. For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ. So that if the Son of God, will assume our Nature; then it will follow that unto that Nature there is due a God-like Glory, so much transcending all Creatures, that all might plainly see and say, certainly that Nature is United to God; surely that Man must needs be God as well as Man: Hence,

1. He was to be endowed with Priviledges answerable to the Dignity of the Person assuming that Nature, For if that Nature becomes one in Person with the Son of God, he becomes one in the Priviledges of the Person also, and so that Nature is to have a Glory, as of the only begotten Son of God, (as the Evangelist speaks, John 1. 14.) proper and peculiar to him. And so besides that Essential Glory of his God-head, there will necessarily be due to that Person in that Nature assumed a more Manifestative Glory shining forth, then could have arisen to God any other way; for God manifested in the flesh Personally, must needs have (as his due) more Manifestative Glory, and so, manifest more of the Essential Glory of the God-head, then God manifested in all his other Works, be they never so transcendent: Even as there is more Honour due unto a King if he in Person shew himself, then if his Arms only be set up, or Proclamations be made in his Name. And in this respect Christ God-Man may be said in a safe Sense to be equal with God; that as here in the Text, not in Essence, but in a Communication of Priviledges, that as God hath life in himself alone, and it is a Royalty incommunicable to any meer Creature, so this Son of Man, when once united thus unto the God-head, is also said to have Life in himself, John 5. 26. this Equality, or equality, not being to be understood of equality in proportion, but of likeness; and all one with that which Zachary speaks of his Manhood, when he calls him the man Gods fellow, Zach. 13. 7. one in joint Commission with him. And thus Christ himself interprets it, John 5. when the Jews looking at him as a meer Man, had objected it unto him as blasphemie, that he made himself equal with God; ver. 18. (it is the same Word that is here used in the Text) Christ answered them, ver. 19. And you find that his Answer runs upon this, that even as he was Son of Man (which was it that made them to stumble so at his former words) his Priviledges were such by the Union with the Second Person, that he had a true kind of Partnership with God the Father in his Priviledges, and such as did arise to a likeness, though not to an Essential Equality: So ver. 19. 'Tis true (saies he) The Son can do nothing of himself but what he sees the Father do; and yet whatever things he doth, these also doth the Son likewise: And so, he goes on to shew, that he could do like things to his Father, and how he was to be honoured as his Father, ver. 23. and had life in himself, as his Father had, ver. 26. and had all judgment committed to him, &c. And that he might be understood to speak this of himself as God-Man; he expressly adds, Because he is the Son of Man, ver. 27.

And hence Secondly, Unto the Son of God thus dwelling in an Humane Nature, (when it shall be first assumed,) all this Honour and Glory is due; it is proper to him; and therefore it is here said in the Text, He thought it no robbery for him to challenge it. Yet of all things God is tender of his Glory; I will not give my glory to another, Isa. 42. 8.] But Christ God-Man dares challenge such a Glory (as we have been speaking of) as his due; and it is no robbery for him to do it, because it is his Right. As, Is Worship to be performed unto God? So it is to be given to Christ as dwelling in an Humane Nature, Psal. 45. 11. He is thy Lord, worship thou him: Yea, let all the Angels worship him, when he comes into the World, and so as considered with his Man-hood, Heb. 1. 6. and worthy art thou (say the Saints and Angels, and all Creatures) to receive Honour and Glory and so they fall down before him, Revel. 5. 12. And therefore this high character of him is put in, 1 Cor. 2. 8. that they crucified the Lord of Glory. He was Lord, and Possessor of all the Glory that God hath, for as his Father hath given him to have Life, so Glory in himself also, as in that John 5. And here in the Philippians he is said to exist in this Glory, Phil. 2. 6. not that his Humane Nature had this Glory actually put upon it at first: (for he was born as we are, and took upon him the form of a Servant) but because thus to exist in this Glory was his due, from which he could not be put by; so as, if God would ordain him to subsist Personally in an Humane Nature, it was his due to have existed thus gloriously in the form of God, and not in the form of a Servant which is put in to shew how the form of a Servant was meerly Arbitrary in him, in that another Form was due to him: And in respect of that dueness is accounted as really existent with an existency of Right, (for it should so have done) which is a real existency; even as one that is born a King, though he for some end take on him a mean Condition, yet he being born a King, does so exist, and it prejudiceth not his Right all that while; for it is innate and bred with his existing. And therefore the Scripture speaks of Christ even as Son of Man, as if as Son of Man he had been in Heaven, and had come down; not that actually he had been there, but because it was his Right to have been there the first moment of the assumption of that Nature. Thus John 3. 13. And no man hath ascended up to Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, even the Son of Man who is in Heaven, He (you see) saies, that He is in Heaven.

Thus much shall suffice to have shewn the Foundation of satisfaction, from the Qualifications, and requisites in the Person.

C H A P. VIII.

What this Excellent and Glorious Person did for satisfaction brings more Honour to God, then ever Sin had done dishonour. The Glory which redounds to God from this Persons condescending to assume Humane Nature, and that too in such a low Condition, and meanest Circumstances.

NOW to come to the Second Head proposed, namely to shew what it is in, or of such a Person, that may become, or is the Matter of, this satisfaction offered up to God, for the debasement of his Glory by Sin: To clear this, I will first shew what it is, that God reckons not upon, for satisfaction in this Person; what God cuts off from the Account, because he would be sure to have full satisfaction in specie, in kind, which will also serve the more to set forth the Fullness, the abundancy of Christs satisfaction, when God accepts not of what might have been so accounted, but stands upon more; which Christ performs to him.

As, 1. The very condescending of the Second Person, who Natively and Essentially is so great, to assume Mans Nature, although in this Form of God described, invested with all that Manifestative Glory spoken of, and this, from, and upon the first moment of his assuming it; if this Act of Assuming had been done, and undertaken principally in Order, and with intention to satisfy God, by bringing in a new Glory to him, greater than that which he lost by him, and this without the least humbling of himself; I ask, why might not this in just reason have been accounted satisfaction?

For, 1. He had thereby lessened himself to give Glory to God. For in that Assumption, and in that Communication of himself to a Creature, he takes on him such relations as do in some respects abate of the height of his Native Personal Glory, as he is considered meerly as Second Person: And in respect to this Assumption, he is made less than what before he was. For now it may be said of him, as it was by himself, that his father is greater than he, Joh. 14. 28. whereas he might have kept himself in a full equality to him in all respects for ever, and to have had no such diminishing respect affixed to him.

And, 2. By this voluntary Act alone, he had brought in unto God a new and further revelation of the God-head, then ever was obscured by Sin; and it is certain, that he had never assumed Mans Nature, and thus lessened himself, but that so he might manifest the Glory of the God-head in such a manner, as otherwise it never should have been. Therefore for him thus to lessen himself to the end to manifest and exalt the Glory of the God-head the utmost way it could be, or more than otherwise it should have been, might not this make amends for the Glory that Sin would take from God? And the reason of this is, that satisfaction being a return of as much Glory as was lost, and that by this means (if no other were added) more manifestative Glory would come in unto God, then either was, or ever could have been debased or impaired by Sin; why therefore might it not have been accounted satisfactory, if it had been ordered simply unto this end. And further also even this would have served to fill up many of those disproportions found in the Evil of Sin. For as the Evil of Adams Sin (which was the first Sin) lay in this, that he who was a Creature, affected and aspired to be as
Cel

God (He is become as one of us, said God, Gen. 3. 22.) so Christs Obedience in assuming our Nature would herein have answered it, that he that is God, becomes a Creature, and on the other side, is become as one of us, Men, so to bring in a new Honour unto God. So that, look how high our Nature would have ascended, so low doth he descend; and as Sin is a turning from God to the Creature, so in this Act the Creator descends from the height of his Glory to become a Creature, and joyn himself in a nearer Union with us then wherein we in sinning affected to joyn our selves to the Creator.

And then again, 2. All the Works and Actions which in that Nature thus assumed in this height of Glory that becomes due to it he will set himself about, to work, and to shew forth the Glory of the God-head of his Father, and of himself; even these also, by reason of that worth which his Personal Perfections do contribute unto them, might haply be estimated sufficient to give satisfaction in point of Honour, though no further debasement be laid upon our Nature in him. As suppose, that he would have done nothing therein, but work Miracles, utter his Treasures of Wisdom, shew forth his Holyness and Power, &c. Yet these being from a Person so Infinitely Glorious, have therefore an Infinite Worth in them all, even as all his Actions now he is in Heaven, have; for the Person is Infinite, and he it is that gives this acceptance and this lustre to them. And these would also have brought more Glory to God, than was lost, and so would have countervailed our Sins. For all the Actions that he doth, and all the Glory that he hath now he is glorified, are all to the glory of God the Father, (as this Text hath it) and therefore if in all that he had ever done he had as directly glorified himself, as now in Heaven, yet all of those Actions being further and besides, to the glory of God the Father, they might superabundantly have made amends for the dishonour that Sin brought him.

But God reckons all this not as any part of that satisfaction which we are seeking after. He accepts not simply the Assumption of our Nature, though never so glorious, and he accepts it not although it were a lessening of the Second Person. In the Scripture I find nothing for it, and what God reckons not satisfaction to him, we must not account such. Neither do I affirm it; having only pleaded what might be argued, (and what haply God might have reckoned) thereby the more to advance that satisfaction which Christ hath performed in this Humane Nature; the like whereof I did when I discoursed the point of satisfaction for Goods. It is indeed the foundation of satisfaction, and makes way to it, but is not a part of it. And so the Actions of him now glorified in Heaven, though they have so much worth in them, yet God reckons them not to be a part of satisfaction; for that was all finished here in his Humbled Estate, ere ever he ascended.

And the Reason of this, why this Assumption of our Nature in a Glorious Condition, or the Actions thereof are not mentioned in Scripture, as any part of satisfaction, may be; both because the sole end of Christs assuming our Nature, quoad substantiam mysterii, for the substance of this mystery, was not (as I have elsewhere shewed) the Redemption of Man; but there were other ends which taken all together are as great as this, if not greater; as, the Manifestation of God to the utmost: God could not have been manifested to the utmost, but by lessening one of the Persons of the Trinity by an Hypostatical Union; as also because God would make the Subject of all the parts of satisfaction to be Christ God-Man, and not the Second Person simply so considered, and therefore he must be supposed ordained to assume Mans Nature, ere he becomes a fit Subject for satisfaction. But the Act of assuming our Nature is the Act of the Second Person meerly so considered; and so, though done in order to satisfaction, as being the Foundation of it, yet is not a Part of it. And thus all this Glory spoken of being due to the Person in this Nature, and so, to shine forth in this Nature; for him to lay it aside when he assumes this Nature, and for him then to take the form of a Servant, instead of this glorious Form and Manifestation of the God-head; this draws the Man-hood also into the Merit of such a Debasement, because a greater

In the Discourse of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, Book III. chap. 1, 2, 3, 4 in the second Volume of his works.

Book III. a greater Glory was due unto him ; and he might be truly said to exist in his Glory, when ever that Nature was assumed, for so he ought to have done, and it might have been stood upon.

So then, the first Ingredient into this satisfaction lies in the laying aside the Glory due to the Second Person when he should dwell in an Humane Nature; and instead thereof, taking on him the form of a Servant, and the likeness of Men, or of sinful flesh, as Rom. 8. 3. that is, frail flesh, subject to infirmities, and miseries as ours is here. And so, the total Summ of that satisfaction which God reckons of as such is here also cast up first and last to have been, the taking the form of a Servant, humbling himself, being emptied, or of no reputation, and becoming obedient in his Life, and this, to the death of the Cross, as being the last part of this payment. And this (you will see) will in so great a Person amount to, and become the Matter of a full and just satisfaction indeed, even to a flowing over. Which is the Second thing in this head we enquire and seek for.

In the Second place therefore, positively to lay down and define where-in Christs satisfaction unto God for Sin, in point of Honour, lies ; it is in brief this, viz. Christs voluntary laying aside all the Glory that was due to his Person in his Humane Nature assumed, and his submitting himself to the utmost debasement due to Sinners, in pure Obedience to his Father; thereby to restore and return Glory unto God for the diminishing of it by Sin. This God required, and this Christ performed, and this is satisfaction indeed, even to flowing over. God in his demanding satisfaction stood so much upon his Glory, That,

1. He would not be contented with the meer lessening of this great Person, in assuming our Nature glorious ; but he will have him take upon him as this Text hath it) the form of a Servant, and be found as Men here on Earth, even cloathed with the same frail Condition of passible Nature that sinful Men are found in : Nor,

2. Will he be contented with such Actions from Christ in that Nature debased, whereby Christ might seek and shew forth his own Glory immediately and directly (I seek not my own glory (saies Christ, John 9. 50. (but the glory of him that sent me ; ) but he will have him perform such Actions, and submit to such sufferings, as shall take away Glory from him, and obscure and vail his Glory due to him. He will have him take the form of a (meer) Servant, and become (wholly) obedient, and not be for himself at all ; who yet might think it no robbery to seek his own Glory directly with Gods. Nor

3. Will God be satisfied to have this his Glory a little veiled, and in some parts clouded ; but he will have him robbed and spoiled of all Manifestative Glory whatsoever due unto him. He will have him emptied or made of no reputation, (as it is here) the Messiah shall have nothing left (as Daniel speaks. Dan. 9. 26.) not a Grain, or Mite of the Riches of his Glory, which he could call his own, as God doth. Yea, if there be any debasement worse than other, he will have him obedient to it, even to death ; and if any Death be more shameful than other, he will have him submit to it, even the death of the cross. And,

4. God will have all this come from him willingly, heartily, and freely. He is not only thus to be humbled, but he must humble himself (as the Text also hath it ; ) who indeed was so great, that no other could do it, without his own free consent : And all this, to the glory of God the Father.

And ere we go any further, do but think with your selves that if a Person, such as in the first head hath been described, who is equal with God in Glory, will to glorifie God and exalt him, not only condescend to lessen himself, and that so much, as to have it said, The Second Person is made a Creature ; But will further, at the Command of his Father, lay aside even that Glory which is still due to him when thus made Man, yea, even empty himself wholly of all that Clory Personally due to him, and take on him the form of a Servant instead thereof ; and yet further, will actually become obedient in the performance of all such Actions, not only which it was meet so great a Person glorified in Heaven should imploy himself in, and shew his own, and his Fathers Glory jointly in, but such as Men on Earth shew their subjection in, both as mere Creatures and as Sinners ; yea, and not only so, but will be obedient to the utmost of Sufferings, even to Death, and to the most shameful and ignominious Death, the death of the Cross ; and will perform all this voluntarily, with an intention of Mind and Will, directing all to this sole end, so to make God alone glorious by, and through his own utter debasement and obscurement, falling down thus low to exalt and set God up thus high, by his having so great a Person, and in himself so glorious, thus obedient to him, and lowered for his Glories sake ; I appeal even to the Justice that is in all Mens hearts, if it doth not both equalize the Dishonour done to God by Sin, and also bring in a greater over-plus of Glory than was taken from God by it ; and so make a full amends.

Chap. 9.

CHAP. IX.

The principal matter of Christs Satisfaction was not only in a Diminishing of his Glory, but Despoiling him of it. And that he did this willingly, he humbled himself. And that his Person was the subject of this Debasement and Humiliation.

BUT to speak yet more distinctly : The Matter of his Satisfaction lies in these Three Things principally ; all which are in the Text.

- I. That it was not only a Lessening of his Glory, but a Despoiling and Emptying him of it, or a making him of no Reputation.
- II. That this was voluntary in him : [He humbled] Actively ; it is not said [He was humbled] Passively.
- III. That the Subject of this Humbling was himself, considered both as the Subject Author of all this Obedience ; and also as the Subject Matter involved in this Obedience and Debasement ; [He humbled himself].

I. It was an Emptying himself of Glory to glorifie God : which in the strictest way that Justice can require, becometh properly and truly Satisfaction in point of Glory debased. To clear this, let us consider the difference between giving Honour simply, and giving Satisfaction for Honour. We give mutual Honour to one another without Debasing our selves, as Inferiours to Superiours, and Superiours to Inferiours by mutual uncovering of the Head each unto other. But if Satisfaction in Point of Honour be strictly stood upon, then some Acts of Humbling are exacted from the Party that is to satisfy, even a taking down of the Glory of the one, to restore it to the other : Examples whereof we often see, by the Sentence of such Courts as deal in Point of Honour and the restitution of it. Now to make use of this in the Point in hand ; a meer Creature indeed cannot give the simple Tribute of Glory that is due unto God, but by humbling it self some way, either in Obedience or Worship ; all the Acts of which have an humbling of the Creature in them. Thus the Angels cover their Faces, and cry, Holy, Holy, Holy, &c. and the Elders cast down themselves and their Crowns, and cry, Worthy art thou to receive honour and glory. And the Reason is, because of the transcendent dent distance and disproportion between God and mere Creatures; his Glory being so high and sovereign, that they cannot shew forth the greatness of it, but by vailing their own Glory before him. Thus the distance between Kings and ordinary men, being in the institution of it so high and sovereign, the greatness of their Majesty and Glory cannot be held forth but by their Subjects debasing of themselves, and falling down before them. And in this respect, the Creatures debasement could never have satisfied for Gods Honour lost and impaired; because all its debasements are but suitable wayes to give and shew forth that Glory of God which is simply due from them, although they had never sinned. But Christ, though he were lessened indeed (as became God-Man) yet still this Man being one Person with God, and so God, as well as Man, and so, being by right of Inheritance, in joint Commission with his Father, and set up in such a kind of equality as hath been shewn; hence, as two Kings in joint Commission for the Government of a Kingdom, and by a like Right, though they give Glory each to other, yet not by debasement of their Glory: so nor was Christ to have done, as now in Heaven he doth not; where though he interceeds for us, yet more regio, as a King; sitting (not kneeling, as on Earth) at Gods right hand; and sesto regio, in the Language of a King, [Father, I will] as John 17. 24. It is not performed in a way of an humbling debasement, though in a way that argues a lessening of him. And thus he might have kept his State and Majesty, as now in Heaven he doth, and have given Glory to God for ever, upon such terms, and by such wayes, as should withal have held forth his own Glory jointly and as directly as his Fathers. Thus at the latter day, when he comes to judge the World, he will come in his fullest Glory, and every knee shall bow to him, to the glory of God the Father; this being his due, that he should be honoured together with his Father; that all should honour the Son (sayes Christ, speaking of that Judgment committed to himself) even as they honour the Father. John 5. 22, 23. Thus indeed he might (as now he doth) have glorified God: But then all this in him would not have been satisfaction for the empairing and diminution of Gods Glory by Sin: This is no way to be effected (no, not by Christ) but by an humbling, a lowering, a debasement, an emptying himself of Glory, to restore it to his Father. For look, as in Point of Goods, Restitution is not made but by a parting with some of that Mans Goods, that is to satisfie, to be added to his, who is to be satisfied: so in Point of Honour, if Satisfaction for Dishonour (which is a taking away of Honour, or reflecting disparagement on him who is dishonoured) be to be performed; there must in like manner be a taking away of, or a parting with Honour and Glory in the satisfier done for the injured Persons sake, to give again unto the dishonoured; so as his Glory shall be made up, or shewed forth by the others debasement. For else, it ariseth not to a Proportion: which is the Rule of Justice in such cases. Therefore nothing but a debasement can make a full amends for a debasement; but when so, then a Proportion is observed; and Honour can never be repaired, but out of anothers Honour impair'd, for it must be paid in its own Coyn: and in this case you cannot repair a loss to the one, but you must empair it to the other. And this is the true Reason why Christ now he is glorified in Heaven, though he be as full of Action and Employment as ever, and all to the Glory of his Father, as much as those Actions were which he performed here below; yet all that now he doth in Heaven hath not a Meritoriousness in it, nor is it accounted of as being Satisfactory for Sin, as what he did here below, was: yet all those Actions have an infinite worth in them, in respect of the Person performing them, considered meerly as an Agent and efficient Cause of them: and they are infinitely acceptable to God (as glorifying him) to other ends: but still they arise not to answer the proportion that in Justice, Satisfaction requires. For though they are the Actions of Christ considered as an Inferiour, and one made less, and that in order to the glorifying of God; yet so, as he still having a right to be glorified with God in all, jointly, and as directly as God himself is to be glorified, and accordingly all these Actions as immediately mediately holding forth his own Glory as his Fathers; therefore though God reckons, and accounts of them as a glorifying of himself; yet not as a Satisfaction to himself for his Glory empai'd; because Christ is not humbled in any of them, so as by a debasement in them to give Glory unto God, but does now share with God in the Tribute of Glory that comes in, as being his due. But here on Earth he abated of, and hid his Glory: He was emptied of it, to the end that thereby what was lost to him might accrue unto God; which debasement does truly and properly become fit matter for Satisfaction.

II. That which gives worth and acceptation to this debasement of his, to make it satisfactory, is, That himself or his Person (so great a Person) is included in it: He humbled himself and became obedient; and so, this Obedience of his being in such a way of debasement does draw and take into it all his fore-named Personal Perfections, to contribute an infinite dignity, worth and satisfactoriness unto all he did, or suffered; and this, from the consideration of [himself] as being included therein, and so in a double respect and relation giving a double gilt unto this Obedience, as I may so speak.

1. If his Person be considered as the Worker and Efficient Cause of all he did or suffered, and withal, as the Root from whence it sprung, and as the subject Author of all those Graces and Self-denials; this gives a worth to his Obedience and Sufferings.

2. As his Person and all his Excellencies are yet further involved as the Materiale, the subject Matter it self of this his Obedience, as that which he offered up in all that he either did or suffered; so the Honour of his Person not only gives an influence of worth into his Works of Obedience, as he is the Efficient of them; but further, in that his Honour was reflected upon in them all, and he debased himself therein. And thus his Person is doubly wrapped in all he did: and therefore in the Text it is said, He humbled himself and became obedient; that is, in his Actions of Obedience himself was humbled and made subject. There is a Reduplication [he] and [himself] noting that they came from his Person, and that they again reflected upon his Person; and were not only proceeding from Persona infinita, in an infinite Person, but are circa Personam infinitam, concerned about him.

Now for the First: Consider him but as the subject Author of them; and yet even so, all his Graces and Actions in his Person thus humbled, receive an infinite value and worth from him. Therefore the efficacy of his Righteousness is put upon this, that it was the righteousness of God, and our Saviour; that is, our Saviour who was God: So 2 Per. 1. 1. Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ. And tho' this relation of his Actions unto his Person simply and alone considered in Christ as glorified, God accounts not Satisfaction; yet they coming from Christ as humbled, he accepts of all his Graces and Actions, not only as having an infinite worth in them, but also as part of Satisfaction. And to that end he considers this in them, that they are all from a Person so infinite, and in that respect they add a distinct worth to that Satisfaction, which thus humbled he performs from this other that follows; which is,

2<sup>dly</sup>, That his Person is further to be considered as the Materiale, the Matter of all his Obedience; namely in this respect, that his Person was debased in all that Obedience of his; so that it came to pass, that this his Obedience was not only accepted because the Offerer of it, the Sacrificer, was a Person of that worth, but also in that himself and his Glory became the Sacrifice and Offering it self. He not only gave Honour to God by his Actions, and with his Graces; but did also therein give away his own Honour, the Honour of his Person. I will make this plain to you by a place of Scripture, namely, Heb. 9. where that that gives weight and efficacy to his Blood to purge our Consciences (which all the Sacrifices in the World could never have done, as the Apostle sayes, ver. 13, 14.) is made to be this, that through the eternal Spirit he offered up himself (as the 14th Verse concludes) whence observe, that he, viz. his Person with his Godhead, was considered not only as the

the Offerer, (which those words import through the eternal Spirit) or as the Author of that Action of Sacrificing, as the Priests were of those Sacrifices of the Law; (which is the first consideration mentioned in the former part of this distinction) but besides, himself was the thing offered, as those words shew, offered up himself. So that that Action had a double respect to his Person; both as the subject Author, and as the Matter; both as the Sacrificer, and as the Sacrifice. The Priests, they offered indeed, but it was the Gifts which People brought, so as therein the Priest was one thing, and the Sacrifice an other; but here Christ was both Offerer, and the Offering: there the Giver was one thing, and the Gift another; but here Christ was both the Giver and Gift: Ephes. 5. 2. Who hath loved us, and given himself for us, an Offering and a Sacrifice to God. And this is that which the Scripture mentions to have given a further infinite over-ballancing weight of Merit and Satisfaction, and distinct from the former, unto all that Christ did; namely, that in all he still gave away himself. They were not meer Actions from him and in him, but such as included himself as given, and humbled in them. This, as the places above-mentioned, so that in Heb. 1. 3. does plainly shew; [having by himself purged our sins] mark it; not by Actions meerly from him, but by himself humbled in these Actions and Sufferings. And therefore the same Author to the Hebrews puts the main value upon himself considered as the Person offered, and not only on himself considered as the Offerer; and indeed, he distinctly mentions both. For throughout the 7th Chapter, he shews that it was necessary, that he should be the Priest, the Offerer, that should Sacrifice, and so appease Gods Wrath; shewing oppositely, the insufficiency of the Levitical Priests, although their Sacrifices had had no defect; and so concludes, that such an High-Priest became us, &c. ver. 26, and yet because all the Merit lay not in the bare Person of the Priest as an Offerer, had not the Sacrifice it self been answerable; therefore he further shews in the 9th and 10th Chapters, the worth of that Sacrifice also which by this our High-Priest was offered; which was no other than himself. And this the Apostle shews as considered apart by it self from the former consideration; and therefore in like manner he oppositely shews the weakness and unworthiness that was in all the Levitical Sacrifices, and things offered, as he had formerly done of those Offerers, Chap. 7. still mentioning the worth of that one Sacrifice of himself; shewing that he was also the Person offered, and that that was it which gave that super-eminent worth to his Offering, to take Sins away. And it is plain, that the Apostle considers both these; for he argues the perfection of his Satisfaction from both.

Now to clear this distinction by comparing an instance or two together; when Christ wrought a Miracle, turning Water into Wine; this was an action from him meerly as the Author of it, and wherein he humbled not himself; which therefore made up no part of Satisfaction. It was from him, but it reflected not thus upon, nor included his Person thus in it; but when he was Circumcised, and became obedient to his Parents, and to the Law; all these Actions, as they were from his Person, so also they included in them the Humiliation of himself, and had therefore the whole worth of the Person who did or suffered them, communicated unto them, as being included in them, and as reflecting upon the whole honour of his Person in a way of debasement, for his Glory is himself. Therefore in all his Obedience, doing, and suffering, his Glory being reflected upon, or debased, his Person is said to be involved in the Matter of it; as a Kings Honour is, when he doth an Action that debaseth himself.

Or if you will yet more accurately consider how many wayes himself, or his Person was included in this; then in a word to sum up all.

1. His Obedience was from an infinite Person as the Cause thereof.

And 2. Performed likewise in himself as the immediate Subject thereof: the difference between which two is evident; for the Holy Ghost who is God, when he prays in us, and helpeth our infirmities, and makes Intercession for us, though he be the efficient of the Prayers made, yet these are not wrought in himself, but in us as the Subject of them, and therefore are called called our Prayers : And hence these Actions of his in us have not this great worth in them, though he be the Author of them. But Christs Satisfaction and Intercession were not only effected by him, but further, were performed in himself as the Subject in whom the Action doth reside, and to whom it appertains for ever.

3. It was not only performed by him, and in him, but himself was the Matter of the Obedience ; [he gave himself.] And so near an alliance of his Obedience unto his Person, must needs every way add an infinite worth unto it. Thus much for the Second requisite to the Matter of Satisfaction:

III. Now in the Third Place add this other also, That all this Obedience and Humiliation was Voluntary and Arbitrary.

1. Voluntary, [He humbled himself] which I know is included in what hath been even now said in that Second Head fore-mentioned, yet something there is, that the distinct notion of it addeth to all the former ; and it is a necessary requisite in Satisfaction, which cannot be without it. Wherefore all that Christ did, was voluntarily done by him ; [He humbled himself] : For Submission and Obedience forced, or to give Honour to another out of constraint, can never satisfy, but rather prejudiceth it. And as Honour sought for by the Person himself who is to be honoured, is not Honour (as Solomon saith) so constrained Submission in the Person honouring another, redounds not to the Honour of him who is to be honoured, and so not to Satisfaction. And therefore among other defects in the Satisfaction to arise from the Punishment of Men in Hell, this is justly to be reckoned one, that all that Submission and Punishment of Men and Devils is not voluntary, but forced. But now, this of Christs was voluntary : He became obedient.

Yea, and 2. It was voluntary in a further consideration than can be attributed to the Obedience of any Creature, in that it was arbitrary in Christ as well as voluntary. He might have stood upon it by reason of his Prerogative and Equality with his Father, and was at liberty whether he would do that which he did, or not do it. And this the Text intimates, when it premiseth unto this his Obedience, That he was existing in the form of God, and equal with God ; that is, he might have stood upon his terms not to have subjected himself in any such way of Humiliation ; yet he humbled himself, and became obedient. The Creatures Obedience, though never so voluntary, cannot thus be said to be arbitrary ; A necessity lies upon me to preach, (says Paul) and woe unto me if I do it not ; and yet he Preached willingly. It is a due from them, but not so from Christ. And this added unto it, makes it fully and properly Satisfaction. And thus much for this Second Head, the Matter of this Satisfaction.

C H A P. X.

The Greatness and Supereminent Worth of this Satisfaction as performed by such a Person. That hence the Acts of his Obedience exceed in Goodness all the Evil that is in Sin, and that therefore they make full Reparation since they honour God more than ever Sin had dishonoured him.

NOW having thus seen the Excellencies of the Person who was to satisfy, Christ God-Man; which Excellencies have an influence into the Worth and Merit of this satisfaction made: and having also viewed the Ingredients into the Matter of this satisfaction for the Dishonour done unto God; I will now come to rear upon these as Foundations, Demonstrations of the super-eminency that must needs be in the Materials of such a satisfaction performed by such a Person. Which makes the third and last head propounded. And whereas there were presented many insuperable Mountains of difficulty that lay in the way of all the Creatures, to satisfy for Sin, which they could never pass over, or remove; and such vast gulphs of disproportions between Gods Dishonour and Debasement by Sin, and all the Creatures Abilities to repair and restore it, by reason of the distance between God himself and them, such that nothing in, or from them could ever make up, or fill; you shall now see all and every one of those Mountains overtopped and levelled, and before this our Mediator, Christ God-Man, become a Plain, all those Chasmaes and Chinks being filled up, and the way of satisfaction made so even, and plain, that our Faith may pass over it, and walk in it, assisted and supported even with Reasons deduced from Principles of Justice and Equity; and so, all the Principles of Understanding in us may come to see and receive full satisfaction in this satisfaction of his.

In making of this Reddition, I shall not be able exactly to keep unto the same Method I held in the beginning of this Discourse, viz. to bring in the mention of every particular of this satisfaction, in the same Order that I marshalled each of those Particulars of the Creatures non-satisfaction; so, as to set the one against the other in a Parallel Rank. For the disposing of such Materials as do follow in the way of a Natural Consequence one from the other, must be suited unto the Matter it self, not in an Artificial, but according to the Natural dependance wherein one thing may appear to arise from another. Hence therefore, when I was to shew the Creatures Unabilities, I so ranged and placed those things that should demonstrate, and in such an Order, as might by the consequence that one thing held upon another, best set forth the Creatures Insufficiencies; which therefore was most suitable to that Subject. And accordingly now that I am to speak of the Abilities that are in Christ, I must present the fullness of them in each of those Particulars so as will best suit with this Subject; by setting forth one particular after another, as they arise from, or depend each on other; arguing in an orderly way from what is to be considered in him, that makes this satisfaction to make it by degrees rise up to its height and fullness; Yet so, as there shall be no particular ground of difficulty that made it impossible for the Creatures to satisfy, that shall be lett out unsatisfied in these Demonstrations of the fullness of Christs satisfaction, although not in the same Method that in the former part was observed.

The first and lowest Consideration from whence I shall begin to argue this satisfaction of his is that which was in the former head given; viz. That himself, or his Person is to be considered as the Subject of all his Graces, and Obedience. And let us first see how much even this will contribute towards the satisfactoriness of his Obedience, and equalize the Evil and Dishonour by Sin; and how far it will carry this on.

Chap. 10.

You may remember how in the first part of this Discourse, viz. The demonstration of the Creatures inability to satisfy, I shewed both how far short the Graces of a meer Creature never so pure and innocent do fall, as not having any worth in them, more than to justify themselves, and that by Gods appointment too, and likewise how much Sin exceeded in evil the goodness and worth of all meer Creatures Graces, and that they did no way so much honour God as Sin dishonoured him. Now let us from this first consideration, that so infinite a Person is the Subject of Grace and Obedience, shew both,

1. How much their Graces are exceeded : And,
2. Also the Evil of Sin thereby.

1. These his humbling Graces (as I call them) for such only are matter of satisfaction, and his Actions of Obedience springing therefrom, infinitely excel those of meer Creatures, conceive them never so vast and large. That which makes Grace more excellent than any other Creature, and so is the true measure of the greater, or lesser worth in Grace, or Holyness, is, that it is the participation of the Divine Nature. Now take but an estimate in your thoughts of the vast difference between the participation of the Divine Nature in Christ, which makes his Graces and Obedience accepted, and that in meer Creatures. The participation of the Divine Nature in the Grace of Creatures, is but by way of a meer shadow, likeness, or similitude, something resembling, and so the worth thereof is but such as you would have of the picture of a King, that is somewhat like him: But the Grace of Union (as Divines call it, and that in way of distinction from Christs own Graces habitually considered, as well as from those in meer Creatures) which derives worth into Christs Graces and Obedience, is a kind of Communication of the God-head it self personally united, and so diffusing answerable worth and acceptance afore God into the Actions of Humane Nature thus united. The difference herein is such, that whereas in meer Creatures standing afore God under a Covenant of works, and the Covenant by meer right of Creation is no other, it is meerly their Graces and Actions that make their Persons accepted in such a Covenant, and they have no worth from the Person at all whose Graces they are, but the Person from them: Now contrarily, the Graces and Actions of Christ do not dignifie the Person so much, as the Person them. So that look in a proportion how much his Person exceeds all the Creatures, so much in their capacity, and measure, and in a Moral value, must his Graces and Actions of Obedience excel all theirs. 'Tis true, that for kind his Grace and ours are and would be the same, for of his fulness we receive Grace for Grace, John 1. 16. But look as what a transcendent distance there is between the worth and excellency that is put upon the Body, and the Actions thereof in a Man, (by reason of that Eternal Soul that dwells in it, and is substantially united to it) and the Actions of a Beast, so that one and the same kind of Earth is made capable of, and is to be a Partner of Eternal Life, and of Heavenly Glory, by reason of the Soul in a Man, whereas that in a Beast is ordained but to a Life of Sence. Look in like manner how those Actions are enobled (comparatively to those of Beasts) wherein the Members of Mans Body are employed as Weapons of Righteousness, so that they are Actions of Eternal consequence, and acceptance with God: Now an infinitely greater transcendent distance is there between the worth which the Person of Christ doth communicate to the Humane Nature, and the Actions thereof, or of his Person therein, (it being thereunto substantially united) and the worth which the Person of meer Creatures, though though supposed to be as full of habitual Grace, as Christ himself can communicate to their Actions. Though for Metal they had been the same that Christs were, yet wanting this Royal stamp of the Deitie upon them, they had not been Coyn that would have past for payment and satisfaction. His Glory is substantial, and communicates its worth to the utmost to all, and every Action so far as the Act is capable, even as the whole Kings Image is stampt upon Three-pence as well as Six-pence, yet Six-pence is of more value because the matter is capable of more, and so one Action of Christ was capable of more worth than other, yet so as in them all there was an Infinite Moral Dignity from the Person. And again as all the Godhead in all his fulness is said to dwell in him, and his Person, so all the whole worth that the substantial Excellency of the Person can transfuse is in like manner stampt upon all his Actions. And though the Humane Nature, which in it self is finite, be the Principium quo, the Instrument of all, by whom, and in whom the Second Person doth all he doth, and therefore answerably the Physical being of those Actions is but finite, in genere entis, take them as created productions; yet all Christs Actions being attributed to the Person, who is Principium quod (for Actiones sunt suppositorum, Actions are attributed to, and said to be of the Persons that perform them, because that is said only to subsist) therefore the Moral estimation of them is infinite. And though the immediate Principle, the Humane Nature be finite, yet the radical Principle, the Person is infinite, and they being one in Person what the one is said to do, the other is said to do also; and therefore Christs Obedience is called the Righteousness of God, and the Obedience of God.

Yea, Secondly, His Graces do for this respect so far exceed any that are in Creatures, that their goodness (as Psal. 16. 2. it is called) equals the utmost Evil can be supposed in Sin: For as the Offence is against an Infinite Glorious God, so the Holy Works are wrought by one as Infinite. And as the highest accent of the Essence of Sin lies over this head, that it was against an Infinite Majesty, so the greatness of the satisfaction herein lies, that it was performed by the Mighty God. Which proportion could never have been filled up by any Creature who was not God; satisfaction in point of Honour depending upon the equal worth of the Person honouring, and disgraced.

Yet it is not so to be understood, nor was it necessary, that the worth of the Actions should be as Infinite as the Person, Essentially and Substantially. For Christs Merits could not be Infinite as Gods Attributes are, nor so loved by God as his Attributes are, but that they are so in a Moral Estimation was enough. For look as though Sin was Infinite, yet not so Essentially, so Justice required not an Obedience Essentially and Naturally Infinite, but Personally Infinite, which Christs, is, it being the Righteousness of him that is God.

The Second thing propounded to be proved was, That his Graces and Actions of Obedience did exceed in goodness the utmost Evil that was in Sin, which we saw no Creatures Graces did, or can be valued to do.

1. In the general, The Evil of Sin lies in this, That it is committed against the great God, and that God is the Object of it: So as the utmost aggravation of the Evil of Sin is taken at the highest but from the worth of the Object, God and his Glory, against whom it is committed; but the worth of all his Graces and Actions being taken from the Person, the Subject, the Efficient from whom they do proceed; look how much more reason there is that the Person who is the Author and Subject of his Actions should convey more worth to his own Actions than a Person who is but an Object of anothers Action can do to the Action of that other, so much doth his Graces having a Person that is God, for the Subject of them, exceed the Evil of Sin, that is against God, the meer Object thereof. For the Subject conveys worth to his own Actions, as the Father conveys nobleness to his Child; his Child inherits it from him, and so an Action doth worth from the Person from whom it is Natively derived, but that worth, and so that evil too, which it hath from the Object is but extrinsecal and borrowed, and therefore the denomination of Actions is taken rather from the Subject than the Object. As when a Man understands an Angel never so perfectly as the Object of his Understanding, it is called Humane knowledge, because Man is the Subject of it, and it is his knowledge; though the Object it is conversant about be an Angel, it is not called Angelical knowledge: So by the same reason Actions derive more proper Worth and Merit (for both Worth and Denomination arise from the same Root) from the Person from whom they come, and in whom they are, than from the Person unto which they tend. And therefore though Sin be done against God as the Object, and so is hainous, yet because this satisfaction was made by God as the Subject of it, therefore it is more meritorious than Sin can be demeritorious. This satisfaction sucks more Nobleness from the Subject of it, which is the Root it grows upon, than Sin can take evil and blackness from the External Shadow the Father of Lights casts upon it by the Sinners Eclipse of him. And the reason is, because all participation is founded upon Union, mutual Relation and Conjunction, and the more remote and further off the Union and Relation is, the less a thing participates from it. Now the Relation and Conjunction between the Act and the Object is but extrinsecal, it is an External Conjunction that is between them, such as is between a Mans Eye and the Sun, they remain Strangers still, but the Relation, Conjunction and Kindred that is between a Person and his Actions is nearer, it is intrinsecal, such as is between the Sun and the Beams that flow from it, which is yet nearer, when the Person himself is included in the Matter of the very Action, as in this of Christ it is; whose Person is intrinsecally included as the necessary part of the satisfaction it self. Now if this, that God is but the Object of Sin doth cast such an heinousness upon the Acts of it which come from us, if such a remote, far off, extrinsecal Relation and Conjunction brings forth so much demerit, and makes Sin to abound in sinfulness, what will the satisfaction which comes from so great a Person as Christ, God-Man; and includes that Person as a part of the satisfaction it self, how will this nearer Union and Relation between this Person and his Actions beget Worth and Dignity in them?

But then add to this further that other Consideration mentioned which will make a Second head of this Demonstration, that himself was not only the Subject of his Graces and Actions of Obedience, but that himself and his Personal Worth were included and involved therein as the matter also of the satisfaction (as I shewed at large;) hereby it comes to pass that the Evil of Sin is again afresh exceeded to a flowing over. For as the Relation between the Act and the Subject from whom, and in whom, is more near (as is said) than between the Act and the Object, so the subject matter, the materiale of the Action circa quam hath a nearer affinitie than the Subject in quo, for it includes it, inwraps it into it self. And so did all Christs Obedience inwrap his Glory in it, and robb'd him of it, and so he sacrificed it to God, and hereby God comes to have Honour payd him double, over and over, not only Honour returned him from a Person as Honourable and Glorious as himself, which makes it Infinite, and more than ever Sin took from him, (for Honor est in honorante, Actions of Honour take value from the Person, and as one King may render Honour to another when as yet he keeps his State, so might Christ have honoured God manifesting himself in a glorified Condition,) but God hath not this single, but a double Subsidie and Tribute of Honour, he will have Christ lay down his Glory to glorifie him, he will have the Forfeiture, and not the Principal Debt only. And as Christs Obedience reduplicates upon his Person, he humbled himself, so the Honour due to God is reduplicated also, so that as the Apostle sayes, there is superfluity in his satisfaction, 1 Tim. 1. 14. For as if when he who was the Lord of so many Worlds became poor for us, it must needs purchase Infinite Riches as the Apostle speaks, so if he who was equal in Glory to God, will debase himself at Gods command to glorifie and give Honour to him, and give up his own Glory to add as it were to his Fathers ; what Honour must needs redound to God thereby ? John 17. 3, 4. Father (sayes he) give me the glory which I had ere the world was, I have glorified thee on earth ; as if he had said, I have laid aside the Glory which I had afore the World was all this while, and which was all this while my due, have left Heaven and come to Earth, and all to glorifie thee on Earth, Now glorifie me, &c. Christ reflects upon, and drawes and includes all his Glory to contribute and impute this double Worth and Satisfaction to his Obedience.

And to make this demonstration the more full and satisfactory, let us more particularly consider what was that special damage and injury Sin did unto God. It was (as I shewed) the obscuring of the glory of God, and reflecting dishonour to him. Now then let us but weigh together as it were in two scales, that exceeding weight of the glory of Christ, who was debased, with the glory of God the Father, which was obscured by Sin ; satisfaction being a reducing things to an equality, and a making of amends in what is lost or endamaged ; and if it be in point of honour, it is requisite that as much and as great an honour be debased to make restitution as was reflected upon or taken away. And here you may remember that Satisfaction in point of Honour doth depend upon the worth and reputation of the Person that satisfies for it, and what was the worth of Christ in his Personal Dignity, I have spoken to, what is meet for the point in hand. And from thence it is evident that such worth of the party honouring, equally ballances all the dishonour, which Sin had thrown upon God.

But 2dly, As was also shewed, this Satisfaction of Christ is not simply a giving Honour to God, but a giving away his own Honour to make Gods Glory the more illustrious. Now therefore Christ made all his Honour a Sacrifice to God (I shewed how himself was the matter of the Sacrifice) and therein indeed might especially be said to sacrifice himself, and to humble himself, and it is the principal meaning of those expressions, for his Glory is himself : As a King, consider him as a King, and his Glory is himself, for his being a King is wholly matter of Honour and consists in nothing else ; and therefore we use the word His Majesty, for the King ; so God is called the God of glory, Acts 7. 2. and the Father of glory, Ephes. 1. 17. and Christ, the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. 2. 8. and the Jewes paraphrastically use to say, the glory of God, to express God himself ; and we also in ordinary speech, speaking of a man of worth, doing any thing dishonourable or unworthy of him, we say, he doth below himself, for his Honour is himself ; and to any Spirit that is Noble, it is a nearer thing than Wives, Children, Goods, or whatever. Now all this in Men is but a spark of that Image in God and Christ ; and in Scripture phrase it is said of God, that he made all things for himself, that is, for his Honour : And though the Honour that he hath by it, is but a manifestative Honour and extrinfecal, yet because himself is interested in it, and it is his, therefore it is called himself, and he is as tender of it as of himself, My glory I will not give to another, Isa. 42. 8.

Now therefore let us come to weighing, and put these two Glories in the Scales, Gods obscured by Sin, and Christs debased for Sin.

A double Glory God hath.

1. The one Essential, the Glory of the Godhead in it self.
2. A manifested Glory unto us : And the first is reflected upon by Sin, the other detracted from.

And Jesus Christ, the Second Person, God-Man, hath answerably a double Glory, as was shewn, the one essential and equal to that of his Father ; the other due to be manifested in and upon his assumption of our Nature. Now look whatever can be said of the proportion of dishonour done to either of these Glories by Sin as concerning God, the like may be said of the debasement done to and performed by Christ, in respect of both those his Glories also.

And

And first compare we the reflexion and shadow cast upon their Essential Glory on either side, and at least the Scales will be even. The Essential Glory of God, although it cannot really be empaiied by Sin, yet it is reflected on by Sin, and so that that Glory which is empaiied, (as his Manifestative is) being a peculiar belonging to his Person, and indeed is himself, (as was said); hence all the Essential greatness that is in God, is taken in to aggravate the guilt of Sin, and hence there is a denomination given to our acts of Sinning, as if they were destroying and dishonouring the Godhead, as Rom. 1. 23. speaking of the Sin of Idolatry, They changed (sayes he) the glory of the incorruptible God into the image of a corruptible man, and creeping things: He speaks as if they had utterly destroyed the Godhead, and turned him into a Creature; thus a denomination is given to Sin, as reflecting on the Eternal Godhead and the Essence of it.

Now then to answer this evil in Sin, and make all even, it must be remembered what was afore said, That Christ that was debased was God, and his glory Essentially equal to his Father, and that though that his Essential glory was not empaiied, yet all the debasement of his Person in the Humane Nature, reflected as much upon that, as that of Sin doth any way upon Gods. When he appeared in our flesh, I may say, he changed the glory of the incorruptible God into the Image, yea the reality of a crucified Man, a Malefactor, the scum and dung of the Earth, yea, a Worm and no Man. And as Sin hath a denomination, as if it did thus and thus to the Essential Deity it self, so hath Christs Sufferings a denomination of reflecting on his Godhead in all his Sufferings; it is called the blood of God, Acts 20. 28. and God may be said to have dyed, and to have been crucified; and so it is said, They killed the Prince of life, Acts 3. 15. and crucified the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. 2. 8. Now then all that substantial glory of his comes in (as was said) as the foundation, to give worth to all he did or suffered, as reflected upon thereby. For as no Creature could have satisfied, because they have no radical internal worth to fill up this disproportion, theirs is but a borrowed and extrinsecal glory; so if Christ had had no other, if indeed his glory had been but a borrowed glory, extrinsecal and but by representation, and but as called God, as Kings are in name, not really and substantially (as the Arrians and Socinians teach) then his being himself made of no reputation, when his glory lay but in reputation, would have had no satisfaction in it. God who had a substantial glory reflected on by Sin, would never have regarded or accounted of receiving any Honour from the humbling of such an one: What is it to have a King at Arms, or one that doth but personate a King, crouch unto a King? What glory is it to the Sun to have the Stars to pull in their glory, and be put out, and not to shine, when as all their glory is borrowed from it self? The Creatures, although they may rob God of Glory, and reflect Dishonour upon God, and seem to eclipse him by Sin, yet they can add no Glory to him, as the Moon which receives light from the Sun, may interpose between it and the Earth, but she can no way add to the Suns brightness, or make it more illustrious, no not although she disappears in the presence of him, and looks pale; and no more would all the debasements of the Creature, though directed and intended to give glory unto God. But if there were another Sun as glorious as this, and you should see it hide its brightness in this Suns presence, as if not worthy to shine together with it, that the Sun might alone appear: Or if you should see a King as great in Majesty as ours, come and leave his Kingdom and Royalty, and debase himself to honour our King; what an Honour adds this to the King, when as it would not be so much for a Subject to do this. And this makes the Popes glory so extravagant and transcendent, that Kings give their glory and power to him, and kiss his feet. Now so did Christ lower his glory to Gods, when he was equal in substantial glory to him. All the glory of the Creatures is but accidental, put upon them as garments are, they shine alienis radiis as Stars with anothers beams. Thus in Kings, all their glory is accidental to their Persons, therefore Christ sayes, the glory of the Lillies exceeded that of Solomon, Matth. 6. 29. because it was native and inbred in comparison of his; but Christs is glory substantial, tial, residing in his Person, as Light in the Body of the Sun. Accidental Glory, such as in Kings, doth not give a worth to all their Actions, they sleep, eat, drink, &c. as other Men, and these Actions are no more Royal in them than in other Men, they do not all they do as Kings, but where substantial Glory dwells it transfuseth a value into every thing that is done; and therefore Christs Glory being his Essence (as he is God) it diffuseth a Royalty on all his Actions, and so the least debasement of him to give Glory to God, how infinite a value must it put upon it! He having (as I shewed out of the Text) an equal Glory to his Father, and so his condescension makes at least the Scales even.

But then there are even in this respect some Considerations, that make the reflection of Dishonour on Christs substantial Glory, greater than that by Sin on Gods, and so to outweigh it.

1. Because the Creatures Act is but a tendency, or at most, an attempt to eclipse this Glory of God, and therein falls short in comparison; for it is but as if a Moat should go about to eclipse the Sun, when the Sun shines round about it still; But these debasements of the Sun of God, equal with God, are Real, and they being Arbitrary and done by himself, and from himself, are therefore greater and deeper than what the Creature could any way effect, for he himself that is God, debaseth himself.

Yea, And Secondly, There is a Personal Glory proper to the Second Person as such which was lessened and reflected on, besides his Essential Glory, as I may so distinguish it. For there is an Essential Glory common to all Three Persons, the Glory of the God-head, which is properly the Object of Sin; and few or no Sins are peculiarly against that proper Personal Glory of any of the Persons apart. When we sin, we sin no more against the Father, than against the Son, and Holy Ghost; and even that Sin against the Holy Ghost is rather against the Effects of the Holy Ghost, than against his Person distinctly considered of by the Sinner. Now then in this debasement of Christ, there was not only a Reflection on his God-head, as it is common to him with the other Two Persons, but that Personal Glory proper to him, as he was the Second Person, was in a further peculiar manner reflected on, and this in every debasement of his Yea, That Personal Glory was in some respect lessened; For besides that his Father was greater than he in a true sense, upon the assuming of Mans Nature; He was also made less than other Men, and the Terminus or Subject of this lessening or diminution was truly the Son of God. For although it cannot be said that the God-head suffered, yet of the Second Person it may now truly be said, he suffered as well in, as that he was made Flesh. Now the Personal Glory of the other Persons is not debased or lessened by Sin, because they do not Personally manifest themselves; but the Second Person did Personally manifest himself, and present himself to Men, and his Person was made the sole Butt, Mark, Subject, Terminus of all the Dishonour done the Godhead in him, his Person was singled out to bear it, and be the sole Receptacle thereof; so as he being thus debased, this Dishonour reflected on his Person and the Glory thereof, besides what in common fell upon his Essential Glory, his God-head, and so he came to have a further, and more special debasement than the God-head had by Sin.

But then in the Second place let us make the comparison between the obscuring the manifested Glory of God detracted from by Sin, and the Dishonour done to Christs manifested Glory, which is the Second thing, and you will find his losses in that manifestative Glory that was due to him to exceed Gods losses in the dishonour done to his. For as was said, the manifestative Glory due to Christ at his appearing in the Flesh personally, must needs be more than what the God-head any other wayes could have ever manifested in Effects, be they never so transcendent. As more Honour is due unto a King if he appears in Person, than if his Arms only be set up, or Proclamation be made in his Name, or than unto his Picture or Coyn; so by the like reason unto God manifested in the flesh (as it is said of Christ, 1 Tim. 3. 16.) a greater manifestation of Glory is due then unto God, but manifest in his works, as Rom. 1. 19, 20. and so more was to have shone in Christ the express Image of the Invisible God, (as Colos. 1. 15. and Heb. 1. 3.) than in Gods Works, which are but the foot-steps of the invisible things of God, or in his Law, which is but the shadow of his Glory, Heb. 10. 1. For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. Now that manifested Glory of Gods (of which alone properly and really Sin is the Obscurer and the Detracter from) is but that which shineth in in his Law, which we sin against, or as he is manifested to us in his Works; and this Glory due to shine in Christs Person manifested in the Humane Nature, must needs infinitely transcend the Glory of all those, yea, and in his Person doth now shine more of the God-head dwelling in him, than in all his own Works of Redemption wrought by himself, which yet exceed those of Creation wrought by God. And therefore that he should empty himself of all that Glory due to him the first Hour he assumed our Nature, he must needs lose more than God either did, or ever can come to lose by Sinners, and so the satisfaction in that respect doth super-abound. Yea, and this manifestative Glory was as truly his due, as his Fathers Glory was due to him, or ought to have been given the Father by us his Creatures, either upon the manifestation of his Glory in his Works or Holy Law, in which the God-head shined; for because such a Glory was his right, therefore all that great Name or Dignity he hath above the Angels he is said to have by Inheritance, Heb. 1. 4.

C H A P. XI.

That upon the whole it is evident, That there is all in the satisfaction made by Christ, which Justice can require. An Enumeration of the several Pleas which may be fram'd against the Sinner, and how they are all answer'd by what our Redeemer hath perform'd.

NOW these general grounds of satisfaction for Sin being laid, if Justice will yet contend, or Satan, or the Sinners Conscience dare to avouch or produce any of those particulars which were found in Sin so transcendently sinful as exceeded all the Creatures satisfaction; I make Proclamation here in open Court, and do challenge Heaven and Earth, things visible and invisible, to bring in their Bills and Aggravations of a Sinners sinfulness; and they shall see a just and full, and particular discharge unto highest satisfaction: And for a Tryal we will go over all those particular Damages in Honour, which afore were mentioned and require satisfaction for them, and you shall see that what Christ hath done, will in all things punctually and particularly make amends for them.

First, If we reckon Honour due to God left behind unpayd, which all the Creatures are never able to restore, because all they can do is due for themselves, and therefore they cannot afford an over-plus of Glory to repay what is lost: Yet Christ is able to make amends. For he who was thus glorious to the highest degree, (and it was his due by Inheritance) he layd aside his Honour, made himself of no Reputation, so the Text saies, yea, emptied himself self of all, became vain, left himself disrobed and despoiled of all, I am a worm and no man, saies the Psalmist Psal. 22. 6. of him, he made himself nothing, became nothing, not in Being or Substance, but in Account and Reputation. It is said of Herod and his Men, they did set him at nought, made no body of him, and when we saw him we esteemed him not, saies the Prophet, speaking concerning the Jews usage of him, Isa. 53. 3. Yea, they call'd it Blasphemy in him when he but meekly challenged his own, and told them for their good he was the Son of God. If God should reckon what manifestation of Glory all those that have, or shall sin against him had been able, or ought to have brought in to him, and which thorough their Negligence and Omission is now for ever lost, it will be found to hold no proportion unto what was to have been manifested in Christ God-Man the first hour of his Assumption. For when he had assumed our Nature Personally, there must needs be a greater brightness (as the Author to the Hebrews stiles it, Heb. 1. 3.) a more glorious gleam or issuing forth of splendor was to accompany and shine forth in that Nature so united, than could possibly result to God out of all other wayes of revealing himself whatever. Because they all are of a lower kind, and inferiour unto this, this is a manifestation of the God-head altioris ordinis of a Superiour Kind and Order to all other. If himself personally appears, his Glory must also appear as the Glory of the only begotten Son of God. But he suffered all this utterly to be veild and clouded, though sometime perchance as it were a beam broke forth through a cranney, that as John sayes, We saw his glory as the only begotten Son of God, John 1. 14. Which yet was rather to make them believe what he was, than any way to glorifie himself; but otherwise he stole into the World as a Prince disguised, and lived as an Exile, debarred and kept from wearing that Crown of Glory which should have been set upon his Head the first hour. He stood out of his Glory for Three and Thirty years which was due to him as soon as he was conceived, therefore it comes in, Jesus was not yet glorified, John 7. 39. What not yet, not after Thirty Three years dwelling in flesh and debasement? Why to stay for his Crown one hour, in that one hour he should lose more than ever God could lose, in all that the Creatures could afford him in all those wayes he had manifested himself to them by, unto Eternity, or in any other way than by the Assumption of a Creature he could ever shew. And yet I say this Glory was his due the first minute, for when he came into the World, when he first landed, it is proclaimed, Let all the angels of God worship him, Heb. 1. 6. and even as much was due then, as he now wears in Heaven, or as he put forth on the Holy Mount. He hath not increased his Personal Glory by his own Merits, nil meruit sibi, in that respect he deserved as great and high a Name for Personal Glory as he hath now in Heaven, for the great Name he hath by Inheritance, Heb. 1. 4. I say Personal Glory as much was his due the first day: For I confess there is a glory shines out of his works of Mediation and a Glory of his Offices which is additional to his Personal Glory due unto his Person. If a meer Creature that had done never so much Service to God, had been content to have stood out of that Glory, which as a reward God had promised unto him, this would not have satisfied for Gods loss of Honour by Sin as this of Christ doth; For besides that, the loss of the Creature had not been equal to what God lost, as his was (as hath been shewn) even more than God could otherwise expect in his manifestation in his Works; the Glory due to that Creature as a reward of its Service, being but by promise, out of favour, could never have come up to satisfaction: But the Glory due to Christ was by Inheritance descended to him, when once united to God by Natural Right, so as though he was Man, yet that Man being one in Person with the Son of God, is not to be reckoned the Adopted Son of God, but the Natural Son of God, and so his Glory was answerable, not borrowed, but Natural to him and by Right, not as one who holds it by promise only, but as inheriting it. We saw his glory as of the only begotten Son of God, John 1. 14. a Glory that was proper to him, such as he who was the Son of God must necessarily have, and that by Inheritance, as his Right. Thus much for the first part of the Bill, Honour lost to God. Well

Well, but Justice will plead yet further damage, not only of Honour omitted and neglected to be given, but of Honour robbed, stolen from God and given away to Creatures, and so debased; changing the glory of the incorruptible God, into an image made like to corruptible man and fowls, &c. Rom. 1. 23. Now behold, Christ did that which well may make amends, for he not only emptied himself, and stood out of Honour, but humbled himself to the death of the Cross; which besides the pain had also the highest shame accompanying it, put upon his Person in it; therefore we find both joyned, Heb. 12. 2. He endured the cross, and despised the shame. And now bring in all the Objections and Aggravations of Dishonour done to God, and see them all equal'd and exceeded in his debasement.

First, Doth the evil of Sin lye in a dishonour done by such base Creatures as we are, to a God so glorious; and is it indeed the infinite disproportion between him and us makes the guilt thereof so hainous? Why if this Person so great as Christ was, and whose essential glory is equal with his Father, if he will subject himself to the lowest debasement that is possible, so as between that his glory, the glory of his Person, and this his debasement, shall be as great a distance every way found as between the Creatures and the glory they are able to give to God, or God to receive from them; this must needs answer to, and fill up the disproportion. But there was a greater distance; for he that is equal with God, takes upon him the form of a Servant, and will subject himself to God, and if that be not low enough, he subjects himself to the basest of Creatures, yea and will fall lower yet, to the basest condition of Creatures, yea as low as Hell it self, and for substance endure the same anguish which the damned there do, and shall not this make amends? If Sin hath offended Gods glory as far as he can be offended, quantum offendibilis est, he subjects himself quantum subicibilis est, as far as he can be subject. If Sin exalts a Creature above God, in lieu of it, God will debase himself below all Creatures, and of all conditions take the basest, will not this his falling so low rise up in all apprehension to highest satisfaction?

Again Secondly, If you say Gods Prerogative and Sovereignty is affronted by every Sin; Christ though he can stand upon his Prerogative as much as God, being equal with him, yet he lets it fall, layes it down, yea stands and holds up his hand at a bar as a Malefactor. Yea it is that very Prerogative of his, and his being a King, that was the greatest exception which they had against him, gloria fit crimen, his glory is turned into his shame; he is condemned to death for an Usurper and an Impostour, for saying he was the Messiah, and King of the Jews. It was written as the Title on his Cross, of what he suffered for; and though he tells them that he was a King, and above a King, which was that good Confession which Paul puts Timothy in mind of, which he made afore Pilate, yet Pilate thinks himself a better Man than he, Have I not power to condemn thee? And will not Christs thus divesting himself of all his Royalty in like manner make amends?

Thirdly, Is not only Gods Prerogative, which he backs his Law with, contemned, but all his glorious Perfections slighted and denyed, as his Wisdom, Holiness, &c.? So were all the Excellencies in Christ debased.

1. His Person was debased, He said he was the Son of God; let God save him if he will have him, say they of him when he hung on the Cross. Matth. 27. 43.

2. All his Offices are blasphemed.

(1.) Prophetical; Prophecie to us, say they in a jeer when they buffeted him, Matth. 26. 68. and tell us who it was that smote thee: He will one day tell him that did it, at the day of Judgment.

(2.) Also his Kingly Office, Matth. 27. 42. If he be the King of Israel let him come down; and they mocking him.

And (3.) His Priestly Office also; He saved others, himself he cannot save, say they in despite. Matth. 27. 42. They say this when he was doing that very thing they mockt him for, namely saving others, it was his business he hung upon the Cross to finish.

Book III. As thus his Person and Offices, so all his Attributes suffered contempt. Though he was the Wisdom of his Father, and discovered more than appears in all the Works of Creation and the Law, yet how is he slighted as unlearned? He knowes not letters, (say they, John 7. 15.) And who are his followers? None but the People that know not the Law. Job. 7. 49. And how is Moses preferred before him; John 9. 29. As for this fellow, we know not whence he is: So how do they scoff at his Omniscience, Tell us who it is that smote thee? Matth. 26. 68. As if when they had blinded him, and covered his Eyes, they thought they had hood-winked his All-seeing Eye also. He that is Truth it self is counted a deceiver of the people; yea he that is Holiness it self is reckoned amongst transgressours, Isa. 53. 12. yea the greatest of Sinners; and this not by Men only but by God himself, by whom he was made sin that knew no sin, 2 Cor. 5. ult. so that by imputation, he was the greatest Sinner that ever yet the World had, as Luther used to speak. He was made as it were, a sink into which the guilt of all Sin was drained; The iniquities of us all did meet in him. Isa. 53. 6. His Body on the Tree was made the Centre of all Sins, as so many Lines coming in upon him from the circumference of all Ages. Yea, and he was not only to be accounted a Sinner by others, but he was himself to do such Actions whereby he ipso facto acknowledged himself such, as to fulfil the Ceremonial Law, to be Circumcised, &c. which was our Bond, whereby we acknowledged our selves Debtors to the Law, and he set his hand to it, as acknowledging the Debt. And now methinks he that was Holiness it self should least of all have brooked this dishonour, what made SIN! Why? 'Tis that which he only hates, which his pure Eyes abhor to look upon, and yet he must quietly bear the name of it, and take upon him the guilt of it, as if it were his own; a greater indignity than for the chasteest Woman to be called a Whore. I will say no more but this; He that was the great God was called Devil, and content to put it up.

Lastly, The Being and Life of God makes Sin most odious, as being that which Sin in the nature of the Act tends to take away from God: For (as was said) as he that hateth his Brother is a murtherer, 1 John 3. 15. so he that hateth God is a murtherer of him, (though it doth him no hurt) in the attempt or rather tendency of the Act, though not in the attempt or intention of the Sinner, and therefore the life of all meer Creatures will never make amends, no more than the life of a Traytor ever can for murthering his Prince, only it is all the satisfaction that can be had: And so in Hell God takes their lives for it, because it is all that can be gotten. But now come we to Christ, he of whom it is said, that he hath life in himself, John 5. 26. and is the living God, is content really to be murthered, and put to death: Murtherers (sayes Peter to the Jews, Acts 3. 15.) ye have killed the Prince of life; and Paul sayes, They crucified the Lord of glory. And though it was but in the Flesh that he was Crucified, as Peter elsewhere distinguisheth, yet the Life he laid down was the Life of his Person; and as it is called the Blood of God which was shed, so this was the Life of God which was taken away; therefore John 10. 17, 18. Christ there calls it his Life, I have power to lay down my life, and take it up again. None could say so much, but he who was God, but he who is the Lord of Life; and it is more plainly expressed, 1 Joh. 3. 16. Hereby we perceived the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: It was the Life of God, and that in so true and real a sense, as therein the utmost of his Love appeared. Yea further, he not only dyed, but Death held him a while under it, as a Conquerour of him; therefore Romans 6. 9. Death is said to have once had dominion over him. Now this true and real laying down of his Life must needs be more satisfactory unto God, than the attempt or rather tendency that is in the Act of Sin to take Gods Life away; can be reputed heinous.

You may remember when we did set forth (in that First Part of this Discourse) Sins sinfulness, and the evil of it against God, wherein it was that it exceeded all the goodness of the Creature (which yet was for God, as well as Sin is said to be against God) we pitch it upon this, The undueness of the act of dishonour done to God by the Creatures; whereas all the honour their Graces bring in to him, is due from them towards him: Now therefore let us see if even in this particular, the evil of Sin be not exceeded by Christs Satisfaction also, that nothing may be omitted that may satisfy a Sinners reason about the allsufficiency of this Satisfaction. This undueness of the act of dishonour was the highest and utmost aggravation of Mans sinfulness, and did cast the ballance, and was found to weigh heavier than all the Creatures goodness. Now let us put Christs debasement of himself into the ballance with it, and we shall see it far over-balanced even by this, that all this debasement of his to glorify God was infinitely more undue, which naturally riseth thus to all Mens apprehensions.

1st. In that it was such a way of giving Honour to God by him, as God himself could no way challenge as his due from the Second Person towards him, for he was equal with him. He did owe indeed (as all the Persons do one to another, a mutual Honour) an Honour unto God, even as Kings mutually Honour one another, yet still but as equals use to do. And if as Man, being made inferiour to God, he owed Subjection, yet still not in this way of debasing himself. He honoured his Father, and his Father the Son from all Eternity; for as they Love one another, so they give Honour one to another: But that God should have Honour this way by having his Son, a Person his equal, become inferiour to him, and obedient, and that so far as to Death, and to profess that he did it freely at his Command, this was in it self more than could be challenged as due from him by God, and therefore must needs be a full amends for any dishonour thrown on him by Sin. It is as if the King of Spain should come out of his own Kingdom, and admit himself into this of ours, and subject himself to our King and his Lawes, thereby to make our King seem greater; what an Honour were it to him? More than all his Subjects can do to him all sorts of wayes, in which they can be subject.

And 2<sup>dly</sup>, As Christs debasement was thus undue in respect that God could not exact it from him but by his own voluntary compact; so most of all undue it was, if we consider that which so often hath been inculcated; viz. the glory that himself could challenge as his due, and that by right of Inheritance, and how great that was, and how due it was, hath been declared; and for him to be so debased, how infinitely undue was it in this respect also? Of Sins undueness it may be said, Hear oh heavens and hearken O earth; that men should sin and rebel against the great God, so undue an act it is and unworthy of the Creature: But when we think or speak of this debasement of the Son of God, equal with God, to whom so much glory is due: Oh stand astonisht at it all you Angels, and Men; and with meer amazement fall and shrink into your first nothing, to think that ever it should be said, and be a truth, that the great God, the Lord of Glory should be crucified, the Lord of Life killed. I appeal to you all, if this be not an act infinitely more unworthy and as much out of course, more horrid to the thoughts of Men and Angels than Sin can be supposed to be. That a base Creature should sin against God, it is a thing to be wondred at indeed as a strange indignity; but yet the Creatures, if they know themselves, may well know, yea and fear, that they being but Creatures, they may do it too soon, as the best of them did, and it was a wonder rather that any stood: But that the Lord of Glory should be thus debased and killed, no Creature durst have thought it, if they had conceived it possible; but it is so abhorrent as it could never have entred into their thoughts had not God done it, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

And 3<sup>dly</sup>, That Sin may have nothing left to boast of, and that we may omit nothing that may, or hath been any way pleaded about Sins sinfulness, but see it out-pleaded, and cast, and exceeded by this Satisfaction of Christs: Let us put into the ballance likewise those evil effects mentioned also in that first part of this Discourse, whereby the heinousness of Sin was demonstrated to transcend the goodness of the Creatures Graces in any effects of their goodness:

Book III. goodness: You shall find the effects of Christs Righteousness to abound far above them.

For First, His Actions, by reason of the Dignity of his Person, do please God more than Sin can displease him. For if our Works, although full of Sin, are yet by reason of our union with Christ as our Head, made so acceptable as to please God more than the Sin in them doth displease him; how must his own Works be accepted wrought in himself in our Nature hypostatically united to him.

Secondly, And therefore if Sin hath that inseparable evil (as was said) in the Nature of it, that where it is found it condemns all, though the Creature had been in former times never so Righteous, nor never so long such; So hath Christs Righteousness that inseparable Royalty to save and justify, though Sins be never so great and many; so Rom. 5. 17. he compares both the one and the other; If condemnation came by one mans disobedience; how much more shall by an abundance of his righteousness justification be unto life; so as if he will impute this Righteousness, and account it to the ugliest Sinner in the World, then by vertue of the imputation he cannot but justify him, and pronounce him as worthy of Eternal Life as the greatest and the holiest Angel in Heaven; for this Righteousness claims it by the Merit of it, when once the Sinner can call it his. And although one Sin spoils and makes void all the good in any Creature, though it hath been of never so long continuance; yet his Righteousness on the contrary is Sin-proof for time to come, and hath the worth of his Person, who is the great God, to give power to it to prevail against all Sins past, present and to come; it is an everlasting righteousness, Dan. 9. 24. such as which Sinners can never spend or evacuate: And if Sin take away the justifying power from Grace, his Righteousness takes away the condemning power from Sin: There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ; for it condemneth sin it self. Rom. 8. 1, 3. There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Ver. 3. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh.

CHAP. XII.

That all the Pleas which the Law can make against a Sinner are by this Satisfaction of Christ also fully Answered.

AND now we have shown such abundant Satisfaction given to God in point of his Honour, the Law methinks may well set down and never so much as mention the Debt that is its due; yet if the Law will needs bring in her Bill also, there will be found Satisfaction full enough for its claim also.

And First in general, What is the Law? The Will, Word and Command of the great God: Well but Christ is the Word of his Father in an higher and more glorious sense; the Original of this Word and Law. This is but the Copy of what is substantial in him, he is therefore called ὁ λόγος, the Word. John 1. 1. Yea, and is not Christ the maker and the giver of that Law, Gal. 3. 19.? And if he that made the Law will be made under the Law, as Gal. 4. 4. he was, and enter into bond to the Law, and give the Law power over him, as a Servant and an Apprentice to it; make himself a Debtor to it and fulfil it, will not this make amends? We might make very short work with the Laws Suit but by calling for her Bond which once she had to shew against those Christ dyed for; Therefore let the Law shew and bring in that Bond into open Court; She returns Answer, That she hath it not; we find then that it is taken out of the way, Colos. 2. 14. But how, and by whom, not surreptitiously and by stealth, or by force and violence, but openly in the face of the Court of Justice, and by whom? Christ blotting it out, nailing it to his Cross, and triumphing openly, saies the 15. verse, and before the Judges Face. The Moral Law that was the Creditor, and the Bond which God appointed the Jews to give in, whereby to acknowledge the Debt was the Ceremonial Law, therefore sayes the Apostle, he that is circumcised (upon which the Bond was Entred into, and Sealed) is a Debtor to the whole Law. Now in token that the Debt is paid, we find the Bond cancelled, and now she hath nothing to shew against Believers so as to condemn us, and this is Evidence sufficient. But yet if the Law, or any Legal Conscience would notwithstanding have further satisfaction, and put us to prove and shew how the particular Debts due thereunto were payd and discharged, both that of Service to be done, and fulfilling all the Law, by Active Obedience, and then by Passive Obedience also, and know how the Punishment and Curse threatned was undergone: The particular discharge is yet upon Record; Christ hath done both fully; and what he hath done and suffered hath that in it which the Obedience and Sufferings of no pure Creature could have had, nor could have satisfied as his hath done. It is a point I shall speak of after, when I shall shew the fulness of parts that is in his Obedience, yet I shall say a little now, and enough to stop the Laws Mouth, for this is but a ruder draught of what more particularly we will fill up.

First, He fulfilled the Law in Service and Obedience performed unto it for the space of Thirty Three years, John 8. 29. I do alwayes the things that please him. The Text too sayes, He was a Servant, and obedient usque ad mortem, until Death, Phil. 2. 8. and therefore all his Life. He there mentions that Obedience in lieu of Service due by us; and although Creatures could fulfil the Law, yet they could not perform it for us, and for themselves too, because the Law requires all they can do for themselves, and what they do, is not their own, but what Christ doeth shall stand for both. To go no further now than the Text for clearing this.

First, Though as Christ was Man, the Law required Obedience of him for himself, when once he is become a Man, and had once assumed our Nature, yet being before his Assumption equal with God (which the Text on purpose mentions to shew the worth of his Obedience) and at his choice to have continued free for ever from all subjection; that he should take upon him voluntarily this condition of a Servant (as the Phrase he became obedient importeth, and he was Servus factus, non natus, so Gal. 4. 4. made under the law.) This Act of such a Person and thus free, doth make all the Obedience he upon this performed to stand both for himself and for others also; For the Righteousness the Manhood performed, his Person had no need of. And then again the Assumption of this Nature was agreed on by Covenant, and this by a more Ancient Law and Decree made in Heaven ere there were any Creatures extant to give the Moral Law unto; whereby it was agreed that the Service he did in that Nature should justifie others; so Isa. 53. My servant shall justifie many, though a Servant, yet his Service was not for himself, but others. And again, though as a Man he is subject, yet that Man is personally united to the Godhead, and so partakes of all his Royalties, whereof one is to be Lord of the Law, Matth. 12. 18. and therefore his fulfilling the Law is truly the Obedience of God the Lord thereof as well as his Blood is the Blood of God. The Creatures have no Relation or Priviledge whereby they can plead Exemption from the Law, but so can he, but all that the Creatures have is necessarily and wholly subject, and therefore all which they can do is only for themselves. But his Person is equal with God, and in that Relation (which over-ballanceth all other) is free and subject not necessarily but voluntarily, and that by a Covenant made on purpose, the Condition whereof was to assume the Nature and the Form of a Servant in it, meerly to justifie others, and therefore will stand good for us against the Law Jehovah that hath no need of acquiste Righteousness, is our Righteousness Jer. 23. 6. And,

Secondly, Though Creatures could not by their Active Obedience satisfie for another, because what they did was not their own, nay, it was but borrowed; yet he could say his Soul was his own (as we use to speak) and that his Life was his own, which no Creature could say, they cannot say their Service is their own, and Grace their own. And this propriety in what he had, did, or suffered, the Scripture often puts an Emphasis upon, as that which conduceth to satisfaction, as when it is said he washt us with his own Blood, Rev. 1. 4. And I will lay down my Life and take it up again, and John 16. 14. He shall receive of mine. And though as some of the Schoolmen object, Christs Humane Nature and all his Actions were sub domino Dei under the Dominion of God, as Creatures, and God, had an Interest in them, yet this Humane Nature and all that it could perform was in another Relation so peculiarly the Second Persons own, as it was not the other Persons, namely his own by Personal Union, which propriety was incommunicable to the other Persons. Habitual Grace, though it was the work of the Holy Ghost, Luke 1. 35. yet due unto the Humane Nature when united as its own; and as the Humane Nature was to be called not the Adopted Son of God but the Natural, so the Grace in that Humane Nature might be called now it is united to the God-head connatural to him. And though the first Grace of Union was meer Grace, yet that Grace was touch-fused to the Humane Nature, not the Divine, subsisting in the Second Person, who as such is the Person who owneth all both Graces and Actions in the Humane, and is the Proprietor of them, and he it was who was lessened by that Assumption. Yea and besides, When once that Humane Nature is assumed, then all the Dues and Rights of that Person, as to be full of Grace, and Lord of Glory, &c. was due and proper to him as the only begotten Son of God, John 1. 14. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth. And Grace was not given to him as a meer Servant to give Account of, but he entred upon it as a Lord, for if he be the Lord of glory, as 1 Cor. 2. 8. then the Lord of Grace too, and he is not as Moses, as a Servant, but as a Son in his own House, Heb. 3. 5, 6. and so there are these great and just respects upon his Obedience that it was free, and his Person not subject to that Law which he fulfilled.

And whereas the Creatures must have gone over their Works again and again to Eternity, done nothing but written the blurr'd Copy of their Obedience, Copy after Copy in their Lives, and so have made nothing perfect; there is in Christ a fulfilling of it but once by him which will serve for that Eternal Debt of Active Obedience: And as by once offering of himself, Heb. 10. 14. so by one Righteousness and Obedience, Rom. 5. 18. that is, once gone over, he is able to justifie us for ever. And therefore he tells his Apostles a little afore his Death, that he had now but one thing to do, and that was to drink of the last Cup, and how do I long sayes he, till it be accomplisht! And at his Death he tells his Father, John 17. 4. I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And so he having dispatcht the Active part, he had space enough left to undergo the Passive, which as I shewed in the first part of this Discourse, no Creature was capable of. Nay further, he can do both at once, in obeying, suffer; and in suffering, obey; and each successively, so as God shall be no loser by the one or the other; and in the end can say of both, it is finished. Thus much for the Debt of Active Obedience.

Now if we come to Passive Obedience, we shall find that he was able so to undergo it, as shall put that worth into it, as it shall soon be finisht, and be yet satisfactory.

First, Whereas no Creature could have so much as borne the imputation of Sin (which yet was necessary to satisfaction) for it would have withred and shrivel'd up all their Grace, because their Grace is all but washy stuff, and but as a gilding by Gold slightly overlaid; now Christs Grace is substantial, it was as Gold it self, therefore it was Sin-proof. He can be made sin, and yet his Grace continue, as ours doth not, when Adams Sin is imputed. Grace maintains it self in him not by a Covenant of Works, but by the Personal Union and the Rights thereof, and so can bear the guilt of all our sins, and his Grace never a whit the worse for it; his Person is unpeccable, and so uncapable of hurt by the imputation of Sin.

Secondly, The Life and the Comforts thereof which he layes down, and sacrificeth, is his own. His Life is not due to God, as is to the Creatures, for it is given him to have life in himself, John 5. 26. And I have power over my life to take it up and lay it down, saies he. God that hath power over Life and Death, hath not power over his, John 10. 17, 18. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. ver. 18. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of my self: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father So as whatever he loseth in suffering for us shall be his own, he will not borrow any thing to suffer with, but all he offers is his own, as it must be, if it be a mediating Death. He was able to offer up himself, and so be his own Sacrifice, Altar and Priest; he borrowed nothing, and this all at once, and this no Creature could do.

1. He being God, was able to be his own Priest, and in dying offered up himself to God, and needed no other Priest; so Heb. 9. 14. thorough his Eternal Spirit he offered up himself. Yea, And

2. He finds a Sacrifice also, which was in a true respect his own, a respect wherein it was not Gods, himself, offering up his Body, Heb. 10. 10. and pouring forth his Soul an Offering for Sin, Isa. 53. 10 And,

3. He is the Altar him himself, Heb. 13. 10. We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat, which serve the tabernacle. And so he offers all upon his own cost, and borrows nothing.

Now in the last place, Let us take a brief survey of all those inseparable inconveniencies (mentioned in the first part of this Discourse) which we found to attend upon, and clog the Passive Obedience of all meer Creatures, if they should presume to undertake it, and you shall see them all to melt away. and come to nothing before his fulness. As,

First, The Creatures would very hardly have so much as dared to die and undergo it for us, Rom. 5. 7. For a good man peradventure one would dare die, Jer. 10. 31. Who hath engaged his heart, saies God, to draw nigh unto me? No Creature durst do it, but only this one that shall come out of the midst of you; (as there) he shall draw near to me; He durst encounter with his Fathers wrath; He hath the hardiness to encounter with it, and to bear it and not be broken. The wrath of God it broke the backs of Angels, but Iza. 42. 14. My Servant, saies he, whom I uphold, shall not be broken. Again,

Secondly, Will he be overcome with it, or always satisfying? No, whereas if any of the Creatures had had the boldness to undertake it, yet they must have been always satisfying, and so we should never have come to have our Bond out; But Christ will bear it, so as to come at last to say, It is finished, as he did say at his Death. He that was to be our Mediator, was to rise again as a Conqueror over Death, to overcome Hell, Gods Wrath, and not lye wrestling under them to Eternity; for if he had layn by it, and had been kept in Prison, so long the Debt had not been paid. If ever therefore he will justify us by his Death, he must overcome and rise again, else we should still be in our sins, as 1 Cor, 15. 17. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; you are yet in your sins. And this no Creature could ever do, Gods Wrath would have held them tugging work to Eternity, and they never have risen again from under it. He that overcomes that, must be as strong as God himself; Yea, and he must do this himself, by his own Power too. 'Twas not enough to be raised up as Lazarus was by the Power of another, that will not serve to satisfy for a Sinner: For that Power that raised him, must first satisfy and overcome Gods Wrath, eluctate, and break open the Prison Doors. Now if another Power than his own had done it, that Party that helpt him had been in part the Mediator, and so not he. But Christ being God, he is able to do all this, and to do it by his own Power: For,

1. Being God, he was backt with that Power that was able to raise him up and to loose the pains of Death; yea and it was impossible he should be held thereof, says Peter, Acts 2. 14. Those pains of Death there mentioned were from the Wrath of God, which would have sped all the Creatures in the World for ever rising; and the place implies that those pains would not have let him go till they were loosned and overcome; for if possible, they would have held him, but being he was God, it was not possible; but he takes Hell-Gates like another Samson, and throws them off their Hinges, carries them away, and swallows up Death in Victory.

2. He could raise himself up, Destroy this Temple, says he, John 2. 19. and I have power to raise it up, I my self; The Body could not raise it self, nor the Soul have joynd it self to that Body; therefore if he had been but meer Man, he could never have done it, but that Spirit the Eternal God-head could, 1 Pet. 3. 18. He was put to death in the flesh, that is, his Humane Nature, but quickned in and by the spirit, that is, his God-head united thereunto: And he will thus overcome, not by meer Power, by Force, but in a way of Justice, so as Justice it self shall willingly let him go free, as being it self first satisfied. Yea, he will overcome upon such terms that it shall be unjust to hold him any longer, unjust and so impossible in that sense also; for he will in a few hours pay the whole Debt, undergo the whole Wrath due; that which the Creatures strength could endure but by drops (and therefore endures it ever) he will be able to bear at once, so as Justice it self shall say it is finished, and I am satisfied.

And further, When he hath dispatcht it, there will be time enough left, even an Eternity of time to reward him in, and to be glorified with the Glory he had before the World was. This was another inconvenience attended the Creatures satisfaction, that it must alwayes be a satisfying, and so should never have been rewarded; which God would never put any Creature to, for then he should require and accept the highest Obedience from a Creature whom he should never have time to reward for it. But Christ can so satisfy as there will be time enough to reward him in: Yea, and he needs but a little time to satisfy in, and then he will survive and live again to call for his reward, He shall prolong his days, and see his seed, and be satisfied, Isa. 53. 11, And therefore in this Text we read of a great Name above every Name, which as a reward God gave him for his being Obedient unto Death, Phil. 2. 9. And,

Thirdly, Will his satisfaction serve but for one Sinner? (as also I shewed would be the case if Creatures had performed it; yea, God must have sacrificed as many Innocent Creatures as he meant to save Sinners :) No, Christs satisfaction will serve for Worlds, Rom. 5. 17, 18. He is able to bring in such abundance of Righteousness as abounds to many.

And in the last place, To Crown the Conclusion of this Discourse with an Additional weight of Glory, that is more than all that hath been spoken. What will there be but just enough in this his Obedience to make satisfaction for Sin, and procure peace for Sinners? The Creatures they could not have done so much; No! But his will not only satisfy and make Peace, but also reconcile, make Friends, Colos. 1. 20. And (having made peace through the blood of his cross) by him to reconcile all things unto himself, by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. His Righteousness will not only pacifie vengeance, but there is enough in it to bring us into favour with God. The Worth and Grace of his Person is such, and he so beloved, as it makes makes us though Sinners graciously accepted in his Beloved, Eph. 1. 6. brings us into a degree of favour infinitely greater than ever, and more lasting. He is the Natural Son of God, the Beloved in whom Gods Soul is well pleased, and his Love being conveyed to us through him, it falls upon us with more strength and fervour than ever: And also this offering up himself was so sweet a smelling Sacrifice to God, as Eph. 5. 2. That although God expressed never so much anger against Christ, as when he hung upon the Cross, yet he was never so well pleased by him as then; nay, he was more pleased than he had been displeased with all the Sins the Creatures have or can commit. The Damned Spirits their punishment satisfies not, Vengeance can never suck out Blood enough; and yet if what they did could satisfy, it would never rise so high as to please God, never be of worth enough to bring them into favour again. But here when first Vengeance had sucked its fill, and falls off satisfied, then the favour of his Person, the willingness of his Obedience, purchaseth an over-plus, a redundancy of Merit, a surplussage of Riches, unsearchable riches, Eph. 3. 8. not only able to pay our Debts the first day (and that is the least part of the benefit by it) but enough besides to purchase Heaven it self as a Portion for us, the favour of God; Yea, as much there is of it as we can spend or take out in Glory to Eternity. God had large thoughts of great and glorious Blessings to be bestowed upon his People, and the Righteousness of Christ is as large in Merit, as Gods Heart in Purposes, adequate thereto; therefore the Apostle makes Gods Grace and Christs Righteousness of equal extent, so that what God intended to be bestowed, his Righteousness hath purchased, Rom. 5. 17, 18, 19, 20. For if by one mans offence, death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one Jesus Christ. ver. 18. Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation: even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. ver. 19. For as by one mans disobedience many were made sinners: so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. ver. 20. Moreover, the law entered, that the offence might abound: But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. Yea, the merit of this his Obedience is so great as it shall never be rewarded to the full, the Saints shall not have to Eternity the full worth of it out in Glory.

Christs Willingness to the Work of Redemption, from Everlasting, till he accomplished it.

H E B. x. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.

For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats; should take away sins.

Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me.

In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure :

Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.

Above, when he said, Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein (which are offered by the law,)

Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.

By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

C H A P. I.

That there are two things to be considered in the Obedience which Christ performed, The Will, and the Deed. That from all Eternity he expressed his willingness in his consent to undertake the Work.

AS in all our Obedience there are two Principal Ingredients to the true and right Constitution of it, The Matter of the Obedience it self, and the Principle and Fountain of it in us ; Whereof the one, the Apostle calls the Deed, the other the Will ; which latter God accepts in us often times without, alwaies more than the Deed or Matter of Obedience it self : Even so in Christs Obedience, which is the Pattern and Measure of ours, there are these two eminent parts which compleat it.

I. The

Book IV.

I. The Obedience it self, and the worth and value of it, in that it is his, for great a Persons.

II. The Willingness, the readiness to undertake, and the heartiness to perform it. The Dignity of the Person gave the value, the Merit to the Obedience performed by him: But the Will, the Zeal in his performance gains the Acceptance, and hath besides a necessary influence into the worth of it, and the vertue and efficacy of it to sanctifie us. All which you have in the Text. The Offering up the Body of Jesus, there's the Matter. The Obedience of him to Death, then there's the Will by which he offered it up: [By which Will] As calling not only for a distinct, but a more eminent Consideration; and both necessarily concurring to our Sanctification and Salvation. By which will we are sanctified. Now the Story of his willingness to redeem and save, or the Will by which we are sanctified, is a story of four parts.

1. Of his Actual Consent and Undertaking the Work made and given to his Father from Everlasting.
2. The continuance of that his Will to stand to it from Everlasting, unto the time of his Incarnation and Conception.
3. The renewal of this Consent when he came into the World.
4. The stedfast continuance of that Will all along in the performance, from the Cradle to the Cross.

And 1. As to his voluntary undertaking it afore the World was. In the handling and discovery of those Transactions of God the Father with him about the Work of Redemption, I have spoken something of Christs Willingness and Consent, as it was there necessary; for else I could not have set forth the issue and conclusion of that Treaty made by the Persons shewing themselves; yet so as I reserved enough to make it a distinct Head, when I should come to Christs part: And so I here begin with it; for it was then, as was said, left by God the Father with him, and did wholly lye upon him.

It was necessary that Christs Consent should be then given, even from Everlasting; and that as God made a Promise to him for us; so that he should give Consent again unto God. Yea and indeed it was one reason why it was necessary he that was our Mediator should be God, and existent from Eternity; not only to the end he might be privy to the first Design and Contrivement of our Salvation, and know the bottom and the first of Gods mind and heart in it, and receive all the Promises of God from God for us: But also in this respect, that his very Consent should go to it from the first, even as soon as his Father should design it: And it was right meet it should be so; for the performance and all the working operating part was to be his, and to lay all upon his Shoulders to execute, and it was an hard task, and therefore reason he should both know it with the first, seeing he was extant together with his Father; and should also from the first contrivement by his Father give his Consent to it. It was fit that both his Heart and Head should be in with the first: And you have all in one Scripture, Isa. 9. 6. where when Christ is promised, Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given: Observe under what Titles he is set forth unto us; Counsellour, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father: Where Everlastingness which is affixed to One, is yet common to those other Two. The Everlasting Counsellour as well as Everlasting Father: For he was both Counsellour and Father, in that he was the Mighty God, and all alike from Everlasting: For being God, and with his Father as a Son from Everlasting, he must needs be a Counsellour with him, and so privy unto all God meant to do, especially in that very business; for the performance of which he is there said to be given as a Son, and born as a Child; and the effecting of which is also said to be laid wholly on his shoulders. Certainly in this case, if God could hide nothing from Abraham he was to do; much less God from Christ, who was God with him from Everlasting. And as he was for this cause to be privy to it for the cognizance of the matter; so to have given given his Actual Consent likewise thereunto : For he was to be the Father and Founder of all that was to be done in it. And in th t very respect, and in relation to that Act of Will then passed, whereby he became a Father of that business for us, it is he is stiled, the Everlasting Father, and that from Everlasting a parte post. For it is in respect of that Everlastingness he is God, and so Father from Everlasting as well as God from Everlasting ; a Counsellour for us with God, a Father of us, and our Salvation. Gods Counsellour because his Wisdom was jointly in that plot and the contrivement of it ; and Father both of us and this design, because of his Will in it, and undertaking to effect it. In that his Heart and Will were in it as well as the Fathers, he was therefore the Father of it as well as God, and brought it to perfection.

I acknowledge the Scripture is more sparing in recording that Hand and Will that the Son of God had in it as from Everlasting. And I have long apprehended this to be the reason of it ; because his Will is so necessarily and naturally resolved into his Fathers Will, they having but one Will between them, (as I have elsewhere alledged it upon this very Argument) : But chiefly, because what was done as in the point of our Salvation from Everlasting, it is and was the proper Honour of God the Father ; and so the concurrence of the Son is swallowed up in the Fathers contrivements about it ; and the rather also, because the Son hath manifested his willingness so abundantly in the very performing it ; which necessarily imported and required this everlasting Consent of his, and argues it. Hence so little is explicitly said of it : But as the Work of Redemption performed in time is attributed to the Son ; so these Works from everlasting to the Father. And therefore all the speech is of what he then did ; how he made promise to Christ, and blest us in him with all Spiritual Blessings, and sware he should be Priest upon the very day he begat him, in Heb. 5. which refers both to his Eternal Generation and Call to the Office of Priesthood, from the same everlasting as well as to that in time.

Yet there are two things said elsewhere, that imply Christs full Consent given from everlasting, in answer unto that Oath of God. For it is not barely said as in that place, that he was made a Priest passively, as dedicated only by his Father to the Priesthood, that might have been supposed to have been without his own actual Consent given. Like as Parents, from the Births of their Children, have dedicated them to the Ministry, or the like Calling ; as Hannah did Samuel without his knowledge : And thus also Sampson was a Nazarite : But it was not so here ; that his being made a Priest then by his Father, is elsewhere interpreted by his being made a Surety of a Covenant. So Heb. 7. by comparing the 21th and 22th Verses together. In the 21th Verse, that Oath is mentioned, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a Priest, And this is interpreted by an inference from it, Ver. 22. By so much was Jesus made surety of a better testament. Now this Oath, though it was recorded and uttered by David, Psal. 110. after Moses Law supposed given, as the last Verse of that Chapter insinuates ; yet we elsewhere find this Covenant to be called an everlasting Covenant, and the everlasting Gospel, as Rev. 15. as that which had been made and lain hid in God from everlasting, a parte post : As the Apostle speaking of the Gospel, plainly insinuates, Rom. 16. 25, 26. The mystery kept secret, since the world began ; but now is made manifest according to the commandment of the everlasting God : Which special Attribute of Eternity is there given God, to signifie that though he had kept it secret since the world began, and but [now] revealed it ; yet he had framed and contrived it from everlasting, and afore the world. And it is certain, that as all Promises in the Word are but the Copies of Gods Promises made to Christ for us from everlasting, so these Oaths and Covenants recorded in the Word are but the Copy of that Oath and Covenant struck betwixt God and Christ from everlasting : These the Extracts, those the Original.

Now then if the intent of Gods Oath was to make a Covenant of it, and not only a Promise but a Covenant, then Christs Consent is manifestly imported : If it had only been called a Promise from God, that would not necessarily have implied Christs Consent, though it would have implied his

Book IV.

Existence or Being then, as I have used to argue from that place, Titus 1. 2. In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lye promised before the world began. But it being called further a Covenant, it doth import two; for as a Mediator is not of one but two; so a Covenant is alwayes the Consent of two, and not of one only; it cannot be a Covenant else. You use to say, to every bargain two words must go; the meaning is, the Consent of two Parties: So to every Covenant; it had not been a compleat Covenant else. If God had sworn to it; yea if Christ himself had been secretly willing; yet if by his Consent expressed it had not been struck up, it had not been a Covenant. A Purpose also it might have been called, but not a Covenant.

Yea, and let me further improve it. If Christ had not fully and perfectly Consented, it had not been a perfect Covenant. Yea, and if he had not at first propounding of it (which was from everlasting) come off to it, without taking any time to deliberate, it had not been an everlasting Covenant; that is, from everlasting.

But (which is more) the Second Person did so fully engage himself, that God calls him not only his Covenant, but his Covenant. 'Tis in that place, Isa. 49. 8. out of which I have elsewhere shewed, how the Covenant was struck Dialogue-wise. You may see there how it was driven; and after he had shown upon what Considerations Christ came off to it, he thereupon in the 8th Verse calls him his Covenant.

And if it be Objected, that a Covenant may be made without the Consent of both Parties: For God sayes, This is my Covenant, when he promiseth to give to us (who had not then consented) a new heart, &c.

Yet for Answer: Consider that this Promise alledged was necessarily made first to Christ for us, and was driven Covenant-wise with him; and in that respect it is that it becometh to be called a Covenant; as thus, it respects us, because indeed made with him for us first, and so made known unto us: The meaning is, that therefore it is that God promiseth on his part to give us a new Heart, because Christ promised afore to him, for his part, to work Redemption for us, otherwise it could not have been called a Covenant till we had consented.

Then 2. The Word, He was made a surety, doth argue it also; for that evidently imports an undertaking on Christs part: And so as the Oath was Gods; so the Suretyship was Christs. And a Surety ἑγγυητής is a plighter of his Troth, by striking hands, as the Phrase in the Original. Prov. 22. 26.

Now 2. For the Second Interval of the continuance of that his Willingness from Everlasting unto the time of his coming to perform it, that is as evident also out of Prov. 8. 30. which shews how his delights were in it all the while; and therefore his Heart was more especially set upon it than all works else. But this I have also spoken unto elsewhere.

C H A P. II.

That Christ renewed his Consent as soon as he came into the World. That his Humane Nature from his first Conception agreed to it. That this is apparent from the Scope and Intent of the Twenty Second Psalm.

H E B. x. 3. 4, 5.

But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.

For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats, should take away sins.

Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me.

TH E other two parts of his Willingness come now to be handled.

I. His Willingness and Consent renewed, when he came into the World, to perform what he had undertaken and Covenanted for from Everlasting.

II. The constant and fixed posture of his Will and heartiness in the Work all along, during his Life time, and in his Death, till he had finished it. John 13. 4. I shall not need to pursue this any further than unto his Death, for the rest of his Work in Heaven was pleasant Work, and but as the reaping the joyful harvest of his Seed sown in tears.

The First I call the Will of Dedication or Consecration of himself by a Vow to this great Work, then solemnly made and given when he came into the World. The latter the Will of Execution or Performance. The first is like the Dedication of the Temple, which was his Type, and was a most glorious Action and Fundamental to all that followed; and calls for an answerable regard and observation from us. The Dedications of the outward Temple, the Type of his Body, the Tabernacle made without hands, were the most solemn Actions recorded in the Old Testament. And the first Dedication had to accompany it the greatest Hecatombs and Sacrifices that ever were afore or after, joyned with a large, set and powerful Prayer, composed by Solomon and upon record. The other by Zerubbabel had a Yearly Feast, called the Feast of the Dedication, to celebrate the Memorial of it: But a greater than Solomon is here, and a more glorious Dedication of that Temple, which was the glory of that second, as Haggai had foretold, Haggai 2. 9. What Sacrifices of Prayers should we then offer up to God upon the news thereof?

For the First, Christ's Willingness, and renewed Consent when he came into the World. These words hold forth eminently two things concerning it.

1. The time of Christ's dedicating himself.

2. The Dedication it self.

1. The time you see is at the very instant of his coming into the World to undergo this great Work and Service. When he comes into the world, he says, &c. This must needs be observed (as it is) a great and mighty secret, That the very words that God the Son then used to God the Father, at the moment of his Incarnation, (when he was to take our Nature, to become Flesh and appear in this World as a part thereof,) should be recorded, which words were before known alone to the Three Persons; which yet the Holy Ghost, the great Secretary of Heaven, hath vouchsafed to reveal unto us; for the great concernment of them as to our Salvation, so to our Knowledge thereof. The words were first uttered by David Prophetically of Christ, Psal. 40. 6, 7. and the Apostle not only interprets them of Christ, but adds that which David mentioned not. David speaks not a word of the time that the date of this Speech should be at, viz., when he should come into the World. No, This is one of Paul's secrets revealed to him by the Holy Ghost, and could have been known from no other hand. You have the like Speech recorded of the Fathers to Christ, when he came first to Heaven, by the same David, though the time thereof is more clearly hinted there, in the words themselves Psal. 110. 1. The Lord said to my Lord, sit thou on my right hand till I make thine enemies thy footstool.
 S 2 inere

The great inquiry next will be, who this [I] was, in Heb. 10. 7. that should then utter it? Whether the Second Person only, as now being to take up our Nature, or withal, the Humane Nature concurring with him in that Consent.

1. That it was the Speech of the Second Person, then existing, is evident: For it was spoken when the Holy Ghost was framing the Body, or Humane Nature, in the Womb. A Body hast thou fitted me; Lo I come. For he is the Person, the [ME] and the [I], that took up that Body into One Person with himself. He was more concerned than that Humane Nature, and gave more away by his Incarnation and the Sufferings that followed: and therefore his Willingness was the more requisite and eminent, and to that end recorded for our comfort; thus at the instant when the Humane Nature was a making, and so was not capable as yet to give Consent; yet had the great and total summe of Glory due to it upon its union with that Person, given away for thirty three years to come; by him that was indeed the Person that assumes it: Then did the Second Person (that is the Person to whom all Actions are attributed) express his readiness and willingness, Lo I come. And to shew he did it the most deliberately, and consulted, as we say; it is prefaced how he had taken aforehand consideration of all wayes else: and now that his Father had took a summary of all other means, that might be in pretence to redeem Mankind, and how all would prove invalid; giving one instance for all the rest, as of which the experiment fully has been made; namely, Sacrifices and Burnt-Offerings: And so by that one instance, for all other, at once declaring that all Creature-Sacrifices would be too light, and of no value; Sacrifices and burnt-offerings thou wouldest not. And he speaks withal, as one who had consulted his Fathers Decrees, the volume of that Book written in Heaven, wherein all our Names are written, Heb. 12. 23. and had there seen all the whole Work set down, and every tittle of Gods Will he was to perform or suffer. And now when it was come to the very moment of time set down, the fullness of time, Christ the Son offers himself to perform every jot of it; and doth not so much as stay expecting his Fathers answer in return, or that he should speak anew to him about it, or move him in it, but prevents him: He says, Lo I come; as carrying all this in his Heart written there, and precisely remembering the time, the moment; for you see himself is only here to speak to his Father.

So then you have the Speech which at that instant not only the Angel spake to his Mother on Earth, Luke 1. 28, to 38. but here also that which the Son spake in Heaven: And it speaks all Willingness, yea Heart and Zeal not to fail a moment, Lo I come to do thy will O God. And 'tis with an Ecc. Lo and behold how ready I am to do it.

2. It is worth our next Enquiry, what Consent and when it was that the Humane Nature, that Body which he assumed actually did first give.

1. It was necessary that this Humane Nature should likewise consent and be willing; for as it was a distinct Nature from the Divine, so it had a distinct Will, and also it was concerned, being to be made the subject of all the Sufferings.

Sufferings, the Sacrifice to be given away and offered up, as the 10th Verse hath it. It is necessary that it consent too, when it is able to put forth an Act of Consent, and of a deliberate Will. The Fundamental Consent was the Divine Persons, and the Act of assuming our Nature, and coming into the World, and writing his Name among Creatures, was solely and singly the Act of the Divine Person: But yet there is to be an necessary Consent of the Humane Nature, now married into One Person with the Divine, concerning this.

2. The Question will be about the time; whether at his first coming into the World this Consent was actually given: Or, that the Consent of the Humane Nature was included as of one under Age in the Consent of the Divine Person, the Son of God.

For Answer how soon, and when first the Humane Nature gave his Consent, is hard to say.

1. This may safely be affirmed, That as soon as, or when first he began to put forth any Acts of Reason, that then his Will was guided to direct its aim and intentions to God as his Father, from himself as the Mediator. And look as in Infants Hearts, if they had been born in Innocency, there would have been sown the Notion of God, whom they should first have known in and by whatever they knew else: And the Moral Law being written in their Hearts, they should have directed their Actions to God and his Glory, through a Natural Instinct and Tendency of Spirit; the principal Law written in their Hearts then, and wherein Holiness consists, being to direct all to God and his Glory. Thus it was in Christ when an Infant, and such Holy Principles guided him to that, which was that Will of God as to him, and to be performed by him; and which was to sway and direct all his Actions and Thoughts that were to be the matter of our Salvation and Justification, which were to be exerted according to the capacity of Reason, as it should grow up more and more. Hence therefore this Law, from the very first of his acting intelligently, must move and predominantly carry all along with the motion of it, as the Primum Mobile doth all the rest of the Spheres. And look, as it would have been necessary that the Law of Love to God, and aiming at his Glory, should have acted all thoughts and imaginations rational in Infants in Innocency, or they had not acted holily, as parts and pieces of Mankind ought to do, when they acted; so Christ being not only a Man that had the Law of Holiness in him, but also the Messiah or Mediator by special Office and Calling; and accordingly had that special Law of his Office written in his Heart: It was as necessary to the performance of that Office, that all thoughts and acts of understanding, &c. should be directed to God by him from the first, as works and parts of his Mediation, as it was for him, as a Man, to address them all unto Gods Glory, as parts of Holiness or Righteousness; for else he had not discharged his Office and Calling from the first, nor had those first dawns and actings of his Will, Thoughts and Affections, been involved and included as parts and pieces of his Mediation, as the other parts of his Obedience afterwards were. But now what Christ did when a Child, hath a Meritoriousness in it as well as what he did when he was a Man grown; and also what he suffered, his very Circumcision is made Influential into our Sanctification, through the Merits and Vertue of it, as well as his after being Baptized when thirty years old. And therefore for certain his Actions, which proceeded from Will and Understanding from the first, had in their proportion the same Meritorious Influence.

The Twenty Second Psalms, which was peculiarly made for, and in the Name of Christ, doth expressly and directly tell us not only that God took him out of the womb, and that he was cast upon God from the womb, ver. 9, 10. The latter of which may be passively understood of Gods Care of him; But further, Thou didst make me hope when I was upon my mothers breasts, ver. 9. And thou art my God from my mothers belly: Or, As Ainsworth reads the words, The Maker of me to trust at my Mothers Breasts. Which words cannot be understood only in a Passive Sense, but do import Acts of Faith miraculously drawn forth from him to God as his God: As also those words:

words [Thou art my God :] may well be taken to import how he had owned and relyed upon him as his God from his Mothers Womb ; shewing how that then he had owned him as his God, with an Act of Faith as truly, as in ver. 1. When he cryed out, My God, My God, &c. when on the Cross.

But that I insist on is to observe to this purpose the Coherence of his words all along afore, as also in this passage. Christ had pleaded their Fathers trusted in thee, and were delivered, ver. 4, 5, and ver. 8. He alledged how that that his Faith upon God as his God, and as a Father to him, as his only begotten Son, and the Messiah and Saviour of the World was the thing he was reproached and upbraided with now when on the Cross, ver. 7, and 8. All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, He trusted on the Lord that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him: I say, this was the reproach cast on him in particular, viz. How that he had with Confidence given out and taken upon him, as being the Son of God and Messiah; And for his trusting on God under that special Relation to him was the thing they jeered. Thus it is expressly in the citing of that place by Matthew, Matth. 27. 43. He trusted in God, let him deliver him now if he will have him: for he said, I am the Son of God. Now then, in the next verses of the Psalm, he alledged in Answer to his Reproach Thou didst make me hope at my mothers breasts. Which in its Coherence is as if he had said, Did the Fathers trust thee with that Faith, as Men thine Elect use to trust thee withal? Why, Loe Lord, I began to trust thee sooner than ordinarily any of them do, or ever did, even at the Breast when an Infant; And Lord, Thou hearest them mock me, that I trusted I was thy only begotten Son, and now Lord this was the very thing thou causedst me to trust and to have assurance of, when at my Mothers Breast. Yea, and I did it then in that Sense, and with that Faith I now on the Cross do call thee my God withal, as being that beloved Son of thine, my Father and my God in whom thou delightest: And with this Faith it hath been that I have owned thee as my God all along even from the very Womb.

Now then if Christ had an Actual Faith then on God as his God. answerable to his Personal Interest in and relation unto God, as his God, and so in his proportion such as Holy Men have in their measure, and from their Interest in God as Adopted Sons suitably to their Condition and Estate when they come first to believe: Then that Faith in him must needs in time rise up to Faith and apprehension of him, as a Father to him, as the only begotten the Messiah. For else his Faith, had fallen short of that Object of it which was proper and peculiar to him, and his State and Condition. And if this be at all wondrous at, that Christs Humane Nature should do it so soon: Christ himself tells it here as a wonderful work of God towards him in that Humane Soul of his, in that he celebrates God as the Maker of him to trust, or thou causedst me to trust then, and thou that drewest me out of the Womb, and didst miraculously form me there, didst draw my Soul then to believe in thee as my Father.

Neither are these mine Apprehensions alone upon this place, but the same I have found to be in one late Learned Commentator on the words, who says, Nos hunc versum de Christo interpretamur, in quo cum ab instanti Conceptionis fuerunt omnes thesauri sapientiae & Scientiae absconditi, Potuit ab instanti Conceptionis omnem suam curam & spem ut homo in uno Deo figere & locare. Christ having in him from the instant of his Conception all the Treasures of his Wisdom and Knowledge hidden in him, it might be so, that from the instant of his Conception, he as a Man might fix and place all his care and hope in God alone: And to that end he quoteth also this place, Heb. 10. 7. my Text; When he came into the world, he sayes, &c.

Now there are two Speeches in the 40th Psalm, more proper to apply to the Soul of that Humane Nature assumed.

1. My Ear hast thou boared through, is applyable more properly to the Humane Nature, than to the Divine; and so to be understood to be the Voice of the Humane Nature, rather than of the Divine.

Now

Now what is it to have an ear boarded through? It is to be made willing and obedient to do Gods Will as a Servant is to do his Masters. You know how that one that was purely a Servant, and for ever such; He had his Ear boarded, Exod. 21. 6. This was Typical. He that had his Ear boarded through, gave his consent first, which is implied in those words: And if the Servant shall plainly say, I love my Master, my Wife, and my Children, I will not go out free. If he would be free, he was to forsake his Wife and Children, which were a Motive to many to live as a Servant with them. The Humane Nature now united might have stood upon it, not to enter into any Service, that is, as in respect of his own Prerogative, being taken up into an equality with God. But saies Christ, I love my Father, and therefore I will serve him in the work of Redemption, John 14. 31. That the World may know that I love the Father, and as the Father gave me Commandment, even so I do. He also loved his Wife, his Spouse, his Church, &c. He will have her live with him, he must serve for her Company, and he loves his Children particularly (as that Speech imports, Lo here am I, and the Children thou hast given me) This moved Christ to serve as Jacob did Laban, Eph. 5. 26. Husbands love your Wives, even as Christ loved the Church, and gave himself for it. He should not have her Society else, as himself speaks, John 12. 23, 24. Except the Son of Man die, he must abide alone; or be in Heaven alone without his Churches Company. Neither is it the Phrase only that complies with this Sense, but you have another Scripture doth manifestly apply this Phrase to Christ in this Sense of willing Obedience, Isa. 50. 5. The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. Do you know his Voice that speaks it, and about what? 'Tis your Saviours, I will give you a comfortable token you shall know it by, ver. 4. The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary. He wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned. You know who afterwards said of himself, Come to me all ye that are weary, and I will ease you, Math. 11. 28. as you have it in the Margent. And will you know what the Work was, for which God had opened his Ear, And I was not rebellious, saies he? It was the hardest piece of it; to which of all other, if to any he should have been unwilling. It follows, ver. 6. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair, I hid not my face from shame and spitting. Read Matthew the 26, and 27. Chapters. But is that all, that he was not rebellious or refractory to it, his Ear was boarded, he drew not his back away? No, I gave my back to the smiters, &c. 'Twas his own free Act, as elsewhere it is said, Gal. 2. 20. He gave himself. And whereas the Servant in the Type had but one Ear boarded through: Of Christ the Psalmist sayes in the Plural, My Ears, (so it is in the Original,) hast thou boarded through, to note an Abundance, an Over-plus of willingness; as when we say, a Man hears of a thing with both Ears, it notes he hears of it, and hears of it again. Christ was all Ear to shew he vvas all Obedience. His Ear boarded is put for the vvhole, as the Apostle interprets it, A Body.

2. There is another Speech argues this consent to have been the Humane Natures also, vvhhen he saies, speaking of his vvwillingness, Thy law is in my bowels, vvwritten there habitually from the Womb, vvhich cannot be meant of the Divine Nature. And yet even vvhhen he assumed this Humane Nature, the Law of God, and this special Law of the Mediatorship vvas vvwritten there. That Phrase shewvs (as I said at first) that it vvas by instinct, such as Naturally it vvwould have been in Infants in Innocency. Novv this is more than simply to have an Ear boarded, to give consent; it is to have his Law made Natural to him. And it is in the midst of the Bowels, in the Will, the Affections that are the Center of the Soul, and the middle of it. But the Apostle speaks this of him vvhhen coming into the World. And these Speeches being manifestly proper to the Humane Soul and Will, And being compared with these passages of the 22. Psalm, they all together do strongly argue, that in a Miraculous way the Humane Soul of Christ did then give up it self to this whole Work. And

Book IV.

And so to conclude this, look as his Mother consented to the Angels Message before she conceived of him, Luke 1. 31. saies the Angel, Thou shalt conceive, and shalt call his Name Jesus. And in the middle of his Delivery of it, she had not as yet conceived him, for ver. 35. he saies still in the future, The Holy Ghost shall come on thee, and shall overshadow thee, &c. And when the Angel had done his Message, ver. 38. Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord, (I give my self up to him) be it unto me according to thy word. And so thereupon she conceived of him; for Luke 2. 21. 'tis said, his Name was called Jesus, Which was so named of the Angel before he was conceived in the womb. And therefore till the Angel had done his Message she conceived not of him, and so not till her own consent was given. And as God had hers that she might be freely the Mother of him, so in like manner, God it would seem, had the consent of that reasonable Soul of Jesus presently after his coming, and being made the Son of God. And so was fulfilled that which in the Prophecie was foretold he should utter, Isa. 49. 1. God hath called me from the womb, as well as made mention of his Name (Jesus) from his Conception as it follows there, From the bowels of my mother he hath made mention of my Name. Which though spoken of others (as of Cyrus) it imports but Gods ordaining him from that time to that Work; yet we may apply it to Christ, considering all that is said afore; as also that this is not passively spoken of him as that of Cyrus and others, but is recorded as to be utter'd by himself, The Lord hath called me from the womb, &c. It may import more, even how Christ did then answer his Call, and gave up himself to this Work, but of this more anon.

And thus again as his Conception was at Nazareth, Luke 1. 26. So he was every way Ναζαρενιός, A Nazarite given up to God from the Womb, given up by the Second Person that assumed that Nature, given up by the Humane Nature, the Soul of it assumed, by a miraculous work of God, as was his Conception it self, given up by his Mother also, who assents to all that the Angel said of him, to have such a Child to be conceived in her, Be it according to thy word, said she, Lastly. A Nazarite by Gods own Dedication and Separation of him then to it in the Message of the Angel which was sent by him.

C H A P. III.

Shewing the Mystery of that Appellation given him, Jesus the Nazarite, to have been, that he was thus dedicated from his very Conception to this great Work.

M A T T H. ii. 23.

And he came and dwelt in a City called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.

TH E R E was no Name more ordinarily and familiarly given to Christ, and that by all sorts of Persons, than this Jesus of Nazareth, and Jesus the Nazarite. It was given him by the Jewes: John 18. 5, 7. Matth. 26. 71. By Angels; 1. the bad, Mark 1. 24. 2. the good, Mark 16. 6. Yea, this Appellation obtained so among all, that it was put by Pilate, the Roman Governour, into the Supercription upon the Cross, in all three Languages, Jesus the Nazarite, John 19. 19. And was further used by his Apostles, as glorying to own him under that Title after his Ascension; so Acts 2. 22. and Chap. 6. 4, 8, 10. Yea, and himself after his Ascension, doth from Heaven decipher himself thereby, Acts 22. 8. I am Jesus ὁ Ναζωραῖος the Nazarite.

Now so it fell out, in the Providence of God guiding the Idiom or manner of Speech in that Language, that a Nazarene or Nazarite, signified both an Inhabitant of the City Nazareth, as also one that by Profession and Vow was peculiarly separated and dedicated to God.

The Jewes, as they gave this Name unto Jesus, intended no other thing thereby, than that he was an Inhabitant of, and Dweller in the City of Nazareth; as you say a Londoner, noting out an Inhabitant of the City of London. And so it is given to Christ, Ναζαρινός Luke 4. 34. compared with John 1. 45. where it is ὁ Ναζαρεθ, that is, one of the Inhabitants of Nazareth.

But Matthew tells us that God had a further design in guiding those Jewes to this Appellation, to hold forth an higher Mystery; namely, that this was the great Nazarite, vowed and separated unto him, of whom all the Votaries or Nazarites of the Old Testament were Types. And therefore he is termed by Matthew and others, ὁ Ναζωραῖος, the great Nazarite; those having been his Shadows, even as he is called the last Adam, 1 Cor. 15. 43. the true David, Acts 13. 34.

The words of Matthew to this purpose are these, Matth. 2. 23. And he came and dwelt in a City called Nazareth; which was the only occasion why the Jewes termed him Jesus the Nazarite or Nazarene; but it had this Mystery further in it, That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophets, of him that was to be the Messiah, that he shall be called, that is, be a Nazarite.

Now under the Old Testament, the Writers of which are generally called the Prophets, all that were Dedicated or Consecrated unto God by Vow of their Parents from their Birth, or that separated themselves unto God in a special Vow of Holiness and Obedience above others of their Brethren; these were termed Nazarites; as Joseph, Gen. 49. 26. The blessings of thy Father have prevailed above the blessings of my Progenitors, and to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren: And Sampson also; Judg. 13. 5. For

Book IV.

For lo, thou shalt conceive and bear a son, and no rasure shall come on his head: for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb: And whoever he was that Vowed his Person to God, and not his Goods only, was by the Law called a Nazarite; Numb. 6. 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves to the Lord. All which were acted as Types and Shadows of the Dedication of himself, to be after this made by this great Votary, who was the substance of them in this particular, as in all things else he was, of all his other fore-running Types, in what was attributed to them.

There may other Royal Qualifications and Characters of Christ the Messiah fall into this, that he was called a Nazarite (as will in the current of this Discourse appear) but this of his being Vowed to God was the great and main thing intended thereby, as Joseph and Sampson, and others were.

The main difficulty herein is, how the Examples and the Law of those Nazarites should be esteemed Prophecies of him, as Matthew here says, That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophets?

It is a known, and a taken-for-granted truth, that those names and things, spoken of the eminent Types of Christ, are by the Evangelists and Apostles given unto Christ whom they Prophetically signified, as more truly, and in a more transcendent manner belonging to him than unto the Persons themselves to whom they were first given unto; as eminently fulfilled in him, yea and as more really intended of him than of them, as appears by many instances of the like kind.

Thus when Paul to the Hebrews would prove Christ to be the Son of God in that peculiar manner, as never Man, yea nor Angel, ever was. Heb. 1. 4, 5. Being made so much better than the Angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the Angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? He would here prove that Christ's Name given him in the Old Testament, was the Son of God, and so the Son as no Angel. He cites a Speech spoken of, and to Solomon, And again I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son. Now where are these words to be found, or how come they to be meant of Christ? The words are only found 2 Sam. 7. 14, 2 Chron. 22. 10. No way can be devised but this, that what God speaketh of Solomon is more properly intended of Christ. De Solomone vero, more than de Solomone mero. David's Son was but his Shadow. Yea and which is stranger, he quotes it to prove, that Christ the Messiah was the Son of God in such a transcendent manner as Solomon was not, even that he was the only begotten Son, whereof Solomon's Sonship was but a Shadow: This and many the like, must be resolved into this general Rule, That what is attributed to the Type his Shadow, must needs be in a more divine and supereminent manner, ascribed to him the Substance: For if so excellent Persons in their highest Excellency were but his Types, then what are those Excellencies in him a Person so Divine? I might exemplifie all this more clearly in the Apostles quoting, and that as a proof too, what was said of the first Adam, That he was an Earthly Man, a living Soul, to fore-prophecie Christ's super-excelling Dignity of his being the Lord of Heaven, a quickening Spirit, a second Adam; 1 Cor. 15. 44, 45. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickning Spirit. And multitudes of other instances might be given; as that in Hosea 11. 1. Out of Egypt have I called my Son; quoted by Matthew in this Chapter 2. Verse 15. Now then parallel this of Matthew, concerning Christ his being a Nazarite, with that of his being a Son under the Type of Solomon, and a second Adam, &c. and you will readily say as Matthew here, This name of Nazarite was commonly given him, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophets, He shall be called a Nazarite. So as although there were no other Scriptures in the Prophets to fore-signifie this thing thing than these which were his Types, yet that alone is sufficient to call for Matthews  $\alpha\lambda\epsilon\gamma\omega\delta\tilde{\nu}$ , that it might be fulfilled: Yea, and the name and thing more eminently fulfilled in him than it was in them: And he a more transcendent Votary, made more holy and more sanctified than they all.

Chap. 4.

CHAP. IV.

That Sampson, and other Nazarites of the Law, were Types of Christ the great Nazarite, who Dedicated him to the Holy Work of Redemption. By what Rules and Reasons we may judge that Christ was in this respect typified by those Nazarites.

TWO things here are to be further enquired into.

I. By what it doth appear that Sampson and Joseph, and those by the Law of Vowes that were Nazarites under the Old Law, were therein Types of our Jesus tearmed the Nazarite.

II. How he being a Nazarite, or a devoted Person from his very Conception and Education, in his younger years was fore-signified, and how fitly and correspondently his being tearmed a Nazarite from the City Nazareth (which Matthew affirms) falls in herewith: As also by what a wonderful Providence it came to pass that this great and important title of the Christ Nazarite, should commonly and ordinarily be given him by the Jewes themselves, they intending it only to signifie, that he was an Inhabitant of the City Nazareth, and but to vilifie him; but God intending it further to signifie his Dedication and Consecration to the Work of Redemption from his Conception, and all along in his Education, Nazareth being the place of both.

To clear the First; viz. How Sampson and other Vowed Nazarites, appear to be Types of Christ.

1. In general; even by the same rule that we know Adam and Solomon to have been Types of him, and that what was said of them is to be applied to him, who yet are no where in the Old Testament call'd his Types. And as we receive the testimony of Paul that so applies it from them; so we may here do this of Matthew by the same warrant; though we had no other special application of these types unto Christ in the Old Testament.

The general rule which the Apostles went by, and which the Jewes themselves assented unto, and their teachers taught them, was, that whatever eminent and extraordinary Excellency was found in any of their Ancestours renowned in the Old Testament, or in the Ceremonial Law; that all such fore-signified the Messiah to come as the perfection and centre of them. This themselves acknowledge of David, who yet was not stiled a Saviour or Deliverer, as Sampson and Joseph are expressly tearmed, which was also the eminent Character and Work of our Jesus; this I say they acknowledge of Melchisedeck, David, Solomon, the High Priest among the Jewes, their Kings, &c. then if it be so, that special institution of the Nazarite must mean the like. And the Reason is undeniable; for what Excellency was it that a Nazarite, a Votary under the Old Law, took upon him the profession of? Why a peculiar liar and more singular Holiness, Separation, Consecration of their Person unto God, in some special service which they were by Vow or Dedication obliged unto above their Brethren, which they expressed by a peculiar strictness in abstaining from Wine, and the like, which others did not: Thus Numb. 6. 2, 3, 4, 5. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves unto the Lord. He shall separate himself from wine, and strong drink, and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moist grapes or dried. All the dayes of his separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the vine-tree, from the kernels unto the husk. All the dayes of the vow of his separation, there shall no rasour come upon his head: until the dayes be fulfilled in the which he separateth himself unto the Lord, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow. He shall be holy; that is, peculiarly, singularly holy. Now then if Civil Excellencies in publick Persons were types of him, as Kings, &c. then Sacred much more, and that of special Holiness and Consecration to God above any other.

Peculiar Holiness, whether Real or Ceremonial, did make a Nazarite; therefore in Numb. 6. 8. He is called holy to the Lord. And a Nazarite is translated by the Septuagint ἅγιος an holy man, especially they were termed such when these were joyned with their being Saviours and Deliverers of the People of God. All such were eminently, and must be acknowledged types of him that was to be the great Saviour and Deliverer whom the Jewes expected.

2. Particularly, to give the Reasons for it.

[1.] Joseph, both for his excelling in Holiness above his Brethren, as also his eminent advancement over them, was an apparent type of Christ.

1. For Holiness. It might seem by the Story he was devoted thereto from his younger years, when his Brethren were vain and wicked, which is discovered in the Story by this, that when he was seventeen years old, he detesting their sinful ways, brought the report thereof unto his Father, being a Reprover of his Brethren, for which his Brethren hated him. That other of his Dignity is more apparent. For these Reasons he is twice call'd a Nazarite.

(1.) By Jacob his Father in his Prophecie, for so that his last speech concerning his Son was, Gen. 49. 26. The blessings of thy Father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitours, unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills; they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren. In the Original it is, That was a Nazarite among his brethren.

(2.) And then by Moses it is again repeated, as of mystical importance: Deut. 33. 16. And in this last place, the Septuagint hath it δοξασθῆναι ἐν ἀδελφοῖς, He was glorious above his brethren. And added unto this was (as you all know) Joseph his being a Saviour, and so acknowledged by Jacob: And he was so upon record in the bringing the first fruits acknowledged by all his Posterity: My Father was a Syrian ready to perish, and who saved them? Joseph. And the Gentile Egyptians they also acknowledged it, Gen. 42. 2. Thou hast saved our lives. And he was one separated, singled out by God, and sent afore to save them. Joseph was beloved of his Father, so Christ is the beloved. Joseph was blessed above all, and his house in him, Gen. 49. 26. Deut. 33. 16. so we are blessed in Christ. Eph. 1. 3. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. Joseph was carried into Egypt, so Christ too: Matth. 2. 15. Out of Egypt have I called my Son. Joseph sold to the Gentiles, was a Saviour to the Jewes and Gentiles, so Christ too. Joseph was suddenly advanced out of Prison, Christ in Prison, Isa. 53. 8. taken out of Prison, and then ascended. Joseph in his advancement forgives, so Christ on the Cross; and when he came first to Heaven, as a testimony thereof, he converted three thousand of the Jewes that had Crucified him. Josephs Brethren bow to him, and of Christ it is said, All knees shall bow to him.

And because that this title Nazarite was, in Josephs example, used to design and note out one that excelled his Brethren, and was a Ruler over them, as Joseph was; hence further, the word Nezer and Nazer was after used to express the Oyl and Mitre that Consecrated the Priest; also the Crown that was set upon their Kings: So as their Kings, Prophets and Priests, were Nazarites all of them in the Type. Thus the Mitre on the High Priests head, in which Holiness to the Lord was written, Exod. 29. 6. is called Nizvi; and Chap. 39. 30. the Oyl that anointed his head, Levit. 21. 12. is called the holy oyl; and the word for holy there is Nezer: And the Diadem of the King is termed by the same name Nezer, 2 Sam. 1. 10. Psal. 89. 4. and Psal. 132. 18. as being a sign of his separation from his brethren: So then this name seems to set the Mitre and Crown upon Christs head. In plain words they were all Nazarites, Kings, Priests and Prophets. Now take in all these, and I am sure you must have Prophets enough that came in to call him Nazarite in recording the stories of these his Types. Those that call him Holy, holy, holy, as Angels do, Isa. 6. or seeing his Glory, as Dan. 9. call him most holy. Those who call him separated; Heb. 7. 26. Anointed (as Joseph) with oyl above his Brethren. Heb. 1. 9. A person sanctified to his Work, as he speaks of himself, when to dye. John 17. 19. What need I quote any more? All these express his being a Nazarite.

[2.] Of Sampson, it is yet more expressly said, Judg. 13. 5 that he should be called a Nazarite to God from the womb. And to what end was that separation of his from the Womb made, and he markt out thereby? It follows; He shall begin to save or deliver Israel out of the hands of the Philistines their enemies: And he killed these Enemies, and delivered that People without weapons, by the Jaw-bone of an Ass, a contemptible Instrument for such a slaughter; and at last dyed out of an Heroickness of Spirit by an extraordinary warrant, for it was effected by an extraordinary strength renewed upon him; and so as he was a greater Conquerour in his Death, than in all his Life. You know how easie and natural it is to find all these in our Jesus: But how his being Consecrated from the Womb was a Type of Christ, (that is the main intended by me) I shall explain in the Second Head.

In the mean time the result of these two Types is to represent Christ as a Nazarite, eminently for these three things.

1. Excelling Holiness and strictness of Life, which was the Law of Nazarites.

2. Dominion or Rule over their Brethren, as their Kings and Priests were, and Joseph and Sampson Judge of Israel.

3. Being a Saviour and Deliverer from Death and Enemies. Sampson begun to deliver, &c. Judg. 3. 15.

Now all these are found to have met in our Christ, as is the import of that ordinary Appellation given him, Iesus Nazareus, Jesus of Nazareth, or the Nazarite, which are usually coupled together.

1. Jesus is the Name of Saviour given him at his Conception, Mat. 1. 21. Thou shalt call his name Jesus: For he shall save his people from their sins. And then Nazarite imports his being separated to that work, namely to save; as in that speech of the Angel he was declared to be, whilst his Conception at Nazareth was effecting in the Virgins Womb.

2. For Holiness. The first time that we read of, wherein he was called Jesus the Nazarite, was by Satan, Mark 1. 24. and Luke 4. 34. And there, by the Providence of God this is added and confessed by that evil Spirit: I know who thou art, the holy one of God, that eminent holy one, of whom all other eminent holy ones were Types; which was the import of the Name Nazarite. Now compare this with what is said of Sampson his Type, Judg. 13. 5. He shall be a Nazarite unto God, or of God. And the Septuagint translates Nazarite sometimes ἅγιος, one holy; and so to be an holy one of God, and a Nazarite to God is all one. But of Sampson his being his Type in his Conception, more hereafter.

3. His being King. Go to the Cross, you find it written there, Jesus of Nazareth, or, the Nazarite King of the Jewes.

C H A P. V.

How Christ was presignified as a Nazarite by these Types. The Parallel between him, and Sampson. How God having thus in the Type foretold, That Christ should be a Nazarite, so wisely order'd it, that both his Conception and Education should be there, that so that Name Nazarite, as an Inhabitant of that City, might belong to him.

NOW follows the Second Head, which hath two things in it.

1. How his being a Nazarite, or Devoted Person from his very Conception and Education in his younger years was foresignified in any of these Types.

2. How it came to pass that though he was called a Nazarite by the Jews as in their Common Language, noting forth only an Inhabitant of Nazareth, as Matthew tells us, this should yet withal fall in and serve to fulfil Gods intention of his being called a Nazarite, as was by these Prophetical Types foresignified, And by what a wonderful Providence this was brought about so to fulfil the Prophecie.

For the first, Take the Type of Sampson, and see how exactly parallel it falls out, to foresignifie Christs being a Nazarite from his Conception. Let us but seriously compare the History of both.

Of Sampson, Judg. 13. 2, 3, 5. And there was a certain man of Zorah of the family of the Danites, whose name was Manoah, and his wife was barren and bare not. And the Angel of the Lord appeared unto the woman, and said unto her, Behold now thou art barren and bearest not, but thou shalt conceive and bear a Son. For lo, thou shalt conceive and bear a Son, and no Rasour shall come on his head, for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb, and he shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines.

Of Christ, Luke 1. 26, 27, 28, 30, 31. And in the sixth moneth the Angel Gabriel was sent from God, unto a City of Galilee, named Nazareth, To a Virgin espoused to a man, whose name was Joseph of the house of David, and the Virgins Name was Mary. And the Angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: Blessed art thou among women. And the Angel said unto her, fear not Mary, for thou hast found favour with God. And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his Name Jesus.

1. Observe Sampsons wonderful Separation from his Conception. An Angel is sent to foretel it, The Prophecie of an Angel is recorded: So it is in Christ.

2. Both Appearances of the Angels are afore the Conception of either.

3. As the Angel is sent to a Woman utterly barren to shew Sampsons Conception should be extraordinary, as to an extraordinary end, So Gabriel is sent to a Virgin, who without Mans Copulation with her had a Womb far more barren and incapable to conceive a Child than Sampsons Mothers was. And therefore to strengthen her Faith the Angel tells her, ver. 36, 37. Behold thy Cousin Elizabeth, she hath also conceived a Son in her old age; and this is the sixth moneth with her who was called barren. For with God nothing shall be impossible.

4. The Messages sent at and before their Conception, to both concerning these their Sons are parallel.

1. That he be a Nazarite of God, that is Holy and Consecrate to God from the Womb (yea, from his Conception, and therefore his Mother was warned not to drink Wine nor strong drink from this time afore his Conception, nor whilst she bore him) unto the very day of his Death. Now of Christ, It is at and from his Conception, Luke 1. 35. The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee; Therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God. Now a Nazarite of God; and one Holy unto God were all one as hath been said.

2. In that the Work which each of these were separated unto is declared alike at their Conception, as to be Saviours of the People; of Sampson it is said, he shall begin (as being Christs Type) to save Israel out of the hands of the Philistines, And as expressly of Christ it is said by the Angel, Matth. 1. 21. She shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call his Name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins. Not to insist on this Addition which some make, That Herod a Philistine was then King, and the Jews subject to Christ, when this Message was delivered of Christ, as in Sampsons time they also were.

And lastly, How Christ was a Nazarite until the day of his Death from the Womb, as of Sampson it is said, I need not shew, That one Text speaks it, Obediens usque ad mortem, Obedient until Death all his life long. Phil. 2. 8. Only take this, That at his Conception at first, those three fore-mentioned Characters or Designments of a Nazarite were declared by the Angel.

1. Jesus a Saviour. 2. The Holy one of God. 3. His Dignity and pre-eminence over all, Luke 1. 31, 32. Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his Name Jesus: And he shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David. To which the Types both of Sampson the Judge, and Joseph the Ruler do fully answer. Thus also again at his Death, those all meet in the Inscription on the Cross, Jesus the Saviour of Nazareth or Nazarene, the Holy one, King of the Jews.

For the Second particular, viz. how it was ordered by God, that the Jews should call Jesus a Nazarite, Three things are worthy our Notice in it.

1. That God in his All-wise Council so ordered it, That the Name or Title Nazarite which in the Greek is Ναζωραῖος should be used in the Common Language of the Jews to express an Inhabitant of the City Nazareth, which word also had been singled forth by God to express a Nazarite to himself, one holy and consecrated to himself. It was as many other words are, vox equivoca, that had two Senses equally and vulgarly in use. Fuit tum nomen Gentilitium, tum Religiosum, As Latinus, or Λατῆνιος signified both an Inhabitant, or one born in Italy, an Italian, so denoting a Mans Countrey; and was anciently used to signifie one that adhered to, and was one of the Popish Religion as distinguished from that professed by the Greek Churches, or now by the Protestant. And this was foretold by Irenaeus as the Title of Antichrist his Followers long before that Division was made; he thus interpreting the Mystery of the Number 666, Rev. 13. 18. So now Romanus a Roman may and doth import one either dwelling, or born at Rome, or one of the Romish Religion. Or as if a Child of an Englishman that had been of the Separation at Amsterdam, and educated or born there, should be termed an Amsterdambian, it would import at once both the place whence he came and where he dwelt; as also (as commonly it doth) that he was of that Profession which the English Separatists did hold forth there. Multitudes of such Instances are producible, and thus it fell out here.

Now that this word Ναζωραῖος was then used to express both, I judge more evident.

1. In that we are sure that Ναζωραῖος imported an Inhabitant of Nazareth; for Matthew, who gives him that stile, directly pointeth us unto that sense and signification of the word: For he sayes, He came and dwelt in Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled. He was called a Nazarite, as being vulgarly so stiled from that City; yea and therefore it was that the Jews in scorn so called him, to defame him from that City, which was so vile and mean, as no good good was thence expected, and therefore much less he that was to be the Messiah should come forth from thence. Also this appears in that in another Evangelist, speaking at a time afore that Name was given, he is called  $\text{ὁ ἐκ τῆς Ναζαρέθ}$ , One of the City of Nazareth.

Then 2. The Scripture or Prophets no where speaking of Christs dwelling in the City Nazareth, the fulfilling of the Prophecies must be found in this, that this word  $\text{Ναζαερίθ}$  hath some other Mysterious signification, which should be proper and eminent in him that was the true Christ. Now this title  $\text{ὁ Ναζαερίθ}$  is in the same Letters and Syllables thereof a Nazarite, or one holy and separate to God : For the Septuagint translating the Hebrew word for Nazir or Nazarite into the Greek, do still use this word with the same Syllables and Letters, only they sometimes use ( $\alpha$ ) ( $\zeta\alpha$ )  $\text{Ναζαερίθ}$ , sometimes ( $\eta$ ) or ( $\zeta\eta$ )  $\text{Ναζηερίθ}$ , whereas Matthew ( $\omega$ )  $\text{Ναζωερίθ}$ , and that is all the difference.

And this those of an opposite Opinion object, That because Matthew useth the Letter ( $\omega$ ) whereas the Septuagint useth ( $\alpha$ ), that therefore it is not the same word which they use to signify a Nazarite by : To which the Answer is ready.

For 1. In that the Septuagint themselves do vary it ; sometimes writing it with ( $\alpha$ ), sometimes with ( $\eta$ ), yet in each they alike intended to signify a Religious Nazarite : I say, if they alter ( $\alpha$ ) into ( $\eta$ ), in either intending the same word and the same signification ; it may bear as well this other alteration of ( $\omega$ ), it being but a matter of divers pronounciation, as Grotius observes, and not a diversity of the word it self, which in differing Dialects when the word is the same, is ordinary in Languages, as we see in the Scottish and English Tongue, (which I mention for vulgar illustration) : Yea the Ancient Fathers make another alteration, writing it with ( $\iota$ ) : So Eusebius, Epiphanius and Nazianzeen, terming them Nazireans or Nazirites.

But 2. We all know, that nothing is more usual, than in Translating a word out of one Language into another, to change a letter ; as Miriam in the Hebrew, the Greeks into Maria, Schemuel, Samuel, and the like. And the Syriack, which was the Language Christ and the Jewes did then speak, did ordinarily in pronouncing the Hebrew, turn  $\alpha$  into  $\omega$  : So as Nazaroth after the Hebrew pronounciation, was Nazoreth in the Syriack. Now Matthew in the Greek did incline and conform the termination or sound of the word to the Syriack rather than to the Hebrew, the Syriack being then in use. And so Nazorean or Nazorite, is all one with Nazarite.

3. I omit to retort, that those of the other Opinion that would have Christ here called by Matthew  $\text{Ναζωερίθ}$ , from Netzer, the title in Hebrew which Isaiab gives to Christ, Isa. 11. 1. Of the branch, is far remoter in sound and letters by far. And besides, that that is a Substantive word, this of  $\text{Ναζωερίθ}$  is an Adjective. But of this afterwards.

It is Objected 2. That Christ is also called Jesus  $\text{Ναζαρηνός}$ , the Nazarene, as well as  $\text{Ναζαερίθ}$ , the Nazarain. But Nazarene was not used (say they) to signify a Nazarite.

And it is Answered again, That if Nazarene and Nazaraian (that I may in the English variation express it) signified both one where his Cities name is intended, as 'tis evident they did : Then why not both these words also be as promiscuously used for a Religious Nazarite, when 'tis evident that one of them was used to express it ; viz. his being a Nazarite. There is nothing more usual in all Languages than to make such variations in names of Religion as well as other ; and yet so as they are still but one word in signification. As we say sometimes a Grecian, sometimes a Greek, and both signifying either his Religion, or his Country. A Roman, a Romanist, a Calvinian or Calvinist ; so if you will, a Nazarite a Nazarene is all one.

And 2. Matthew that holds out to us this Mystery, he calls him Nazarain, or Nazarite, not Nazarene ; so in this place, and so constantly else-where. And thus the Inscription on the Cross (as in John also) and not the other word Nazarene at all. So as Matthew intended to hold forth his being a Nazarite, as well as of the City Nazareth.

The Second thing to be noted is, That as Christ was to be a Nazarite from his Conception (as in his Type of Sampson it was fore-signified) and also in his younger years of Education, as well as when he dyed, so God in his Providence ordered it, that the City Nazareth, from whence he should by the Jews be called a Nazarite, was not only the very place of his Education, but also of his very Conception, and this is sedulously noted (to complete this Mystery) unto us in the Story of his Conception. Luke 1. 26, 27. In the sixth moneth the Angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a City of Galilee, named Nazareth, To a Virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph of the house of David, and the Virgins name was Mary So then though Bethlehem was the place of his Birth, yet this Nazareth, from whence he had his Name of Nazarite was the Place of his Conception, to shew he was a Nazarite from his very Conception, which hath been the point I have pursued. And as it was the place of his Conception, so of his Abode and Education, until he put himself forth into the world, and appeared as the Messiah. This you have, Matth. 2. 22.

Now yet further to add unto Matthews μαθησῶν, and to make up his fulfilling of Prophecies yet more full, It was foretold by the Prophet Jeremy, that his Conception should be in one of the Cities of the Ten Tribes, which the story here in Matthew tells us was Nazareth. The Prophet Isaiah had before *Jeremiab*s time foretold that the City of his Birth should be Bethlehem, which the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin gloried in, and therefore despised the other Ten. The Pharisees understood this as you read in the Evangelists, when Herod puts the Question to them: But that any of the Cities of the Twelve Tribes should have any Honour of his Residence, much less the greatest Honour of the laying the Foundation of this Tabernacle, which God, not Man rear'd, viz. his very Conception, they never so much as dreamt of this, especially not of that Region, or part of the Ten Tribes Galilee; and above all the Cities in Galilee not out of that barren desert place of all other, viz. Shall Christ come out of Galilee, say they, John 7. 41. And again, ver. 42. Hath not the Scripture said that Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the Town of Bethlehem where David was? And again, ver. 52. Search and look, for out of Galilee ariseth no Prophet. Not so much as a Prophet, much less the Messiah, the great Prophet. And yet it was apparent, That one of their Prophets, Jonah was a Galilean, 2 Kings, 14. 25. Gath-hepher was a City of the Tribe of Zabulon, compared with Jshua 19. 13. which Zabulon was a part of Galilee, Isa. 9. 1.

But as for that City of Nazareth they are yet more confident, that Christ should not come thence, John 1. 46. Can any good come out of Nazareth? And out of this Confidence it is as that they stiled him so ordinarily Jesus of Nazareth in scorn, as imagining, that alone did carry a Confutation and Evidence in it, that this Man of all else could not be the Messiah. So confident are Men often of some one unanswerable Argument against a great truth, when on the contrary it proves to be the greatest Evidence of that truth, as in this case it fell out. But loe how Jeremy had foretold, how though Bethlehem was to be the place of his Birth; yet one of the Cities of the Ten Tribes, and that in Galilee should be the place of his Conception (which is the thing in hand) as Isaiah had also that Galilee should be of his Preaching. Read Jeremiah 31. 21, 22. Set thee up way-marks; make thee high heaps: set thine heart towards the high-way, even the way which thou wentest: Turn again, O Virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy Cities. How long wilt thou go about, O thou back-sliding daughter? for the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man. Jeremy as you know lived till the Babylonish Captivity: And had foretold how the Captive Jews should again have Liberty by Cyrus his Proclamation to inhabit their own Land, when Cyrus should give them liberty, as Isaiah had foretold, and as he promiseth Judah, ver. 23, 24. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, as yet they shall use this Speech in the Land of Judah, and in the Cities thereof, when I shall bring again this captivity, The Lord bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountains of Holyness. And there shall dwell in Judah it self, and in all the Cities thereof, together husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks. Also God courteth

Ephraim or the Ten Tribes, who had been long afore dispersed, to return with the Tribes of Judah into their Cities also, which they should then have free liberty to do. And to invite and allure them to it, they had the Prophecies of their Messiah to them both, the Delight and Joy of each, Mal. 3. 1. and Glory the People of Israel: And how each should come to have a share in him, the one in his Birth, the other in his Conception.

1. Of his Birth, That it should be in those parts the Two Tribes inhabit he prophesies, Jer. 31. ver. 15, 16, 17. Thus saith the Lord, a voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping: Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her Children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord, Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord, and they shall come again from the land of the enemy: And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border. Now this properly and exactly relates to the story of his Birth, for being born in Bethlehem, which was on the Confines of Judea, near Ramah, his Birth there was the occasion of the Slaughter of many of Rachels, the Mother of Benjamin, her Great Grand-Children there in Ramah, and also of Judah in Bethlehem. You all know how Matthew applyeth this to his Birth, Matth. 2. 16, 17, 18. Herod sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the Prophet, saying, In Rama was there a voice heard, Lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not. And to comfort her, he tells her, that together with these Lamentations and Throws of hers, the Messiahs Birth (who was the hope of Israel.) should be attended into the World, which would sweeten these Sorrows in the end or issue, to the hearts of the rest of the Elect, which were to come out of their Loins in those times, and then to dwell in those Cities. And so this Birth of the Messiah to be in their Quarters was worth this Sorrow, and abundantly recompensed it, and was a sufficient invitation for Benjamin and Judah to return to their Cities.

Then Secondly, He applies himself to Ephraim, or the other Ten Tribes, as it is expressed, ver. 18, 19, 20. And invites them by this Argument to turn again with Judah into their Cities, That the Conception of the Messiah should be in their Quarters, and in one of their Cities, as his Birth was to be in the other, ver. 21, 22. Turn again O Virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy Cities. How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter? for the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, a woman shall compass a man. His meaning is, that this share and interest they and their Regions should have in the Messiah, that in one of their Cities, this strange and unheard of thing in the Earth, and which the first Creation knew not, should be a woman, and a Woman alone without a Man should encompass a Man in her Womb, and conceive that Gebar, that strong Man, that Son of Man, the Christ. Now this he alleadging as an Argument to return unto their Cities, his Scope must be, that in one of their Cities this great thing should be done. Now then turn we again to Luke 1. 26. And the Region, Province or Shire in which this fell out was Galilee, and the City in that Countrey this of Nazareth. In the sixth moneth the Angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a City of Galilee, named Nazareth. So then in a manifest contradiction to the Jews, here is some good thing, yea, our chiefest good comes out of Galilee, and Nazareth, it was the place of his Conception.

Yea, and to view how all things meet yet more fully; as Sampson was from his Conception proclaimed a Nazarite, and the Eminent Type of Christ in this of his: So as in allusion thereunto, the word which Jeremy there useth of Christs Conception hath an eye unto Sampson his Type herein. It is not simply, that a Woman shall conceive a Man, but Geber, a Strong Man, that Strong Man of whom the strongest Man that ever the World had, Sampson was but the Shadow, a Man filled with strength to overcome all our Enemies, and to lift Hell-Gates off their Hinges, and to carry them up the Mountains as Sampson did. Thus much for the second thing.

C H A P. VI.

How God wisely ordered it, that the Jews should call Christ a Nazarite, though he was not really born in that City.

THE next thing to be noticed, is, that God having in these Types foretold, he should be a Nazarite; and also in his wise disposal forelaid it, that an Inhabitant of Nazareth, and a Nazarite devoted to be more eminently holy and a Saviour, should by one and the same word be signified in vulgar use: Yet further stand and admire that wonderful Providence of his, whereby he brought it about; that the Jews themselves should upon occasion of this City come unawares to give him this Name; so to fulfil the Prophecies which themselves read, and understood not.

Let it be 1. considered, That our Christ was not to take up the outward Legal and Ceremonial profession of a Nazarite among the Jews, which his fore-runner John Baptist, and Sampson did. No, as he professed not himself to be Legally a Priest, that is, after the Order of Aaron; so nor to be a Nazarite, having a Vow upon him according to the tenour of their Law; but came secretly and unknown to fulfil the substance and reality of both. Now how should this Name then come vulgarly to be given him? No other way but by his having had his known and constant abode from his Infancy in that City Nazareth. Then,

2. Consider how contingent a thing that was to fall on't. The seat of the Seed, and progeny of David by Inheritance, and according to their Genealogy, was Bethlehem by Jerusalem, far removed from Nazareth in Galilee: But Herod then Reigning, who was jealous of all that might pretend to be Heirs of that Crown he then wore, these the true Heirs, Joseph and Mary, were forced to skulk and retire themselves to these remoter parts of Galilee, as the seat of their dwelling; and hence it fell out that this his Conception fell out to be in Nazareth. Well but

3. That his Conception (so secret a matter) was at Nazareth, the Jews ordinarily would not have known or considered; nor was it (as it is not) the manner of Men to give the name of ones Country to the place he was Conceived: Yea God ordered that so (as had not Matthew related it) the Jews nor we would never have heeded it; for as soon as she had Conceived, the Angel having told her, to the end to confirm her Faith, that her Cousin Elizabeth, who had been so long barren, had also Conceived a Son. Luke 1. 36. And behold, thy cousin Elizabeth, she hath also conceived a Son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren. It is said at Ver. 39. 40. That Mary arose in those dayes, and went into the hill-country with haste, into a City of Juda, and entred into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elizabeth. And this they did to rejoyce and congratulate each the other. But this performed, Mary returned to Nazareth as intending to lye in there, but was just against the time of her delivery hurried to Bethlehem, by reason of a Decree that came forth from Augustus the Emperour, That all the world should be taxed. Luke 2. 1. And the Law of that Nation was as Ver. 3. All went to be taxed, every one into his own City. Hence therefore it came to pass, as Ver. 4. 5. That Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the City of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the City of David, which is called Bethlehem, (because he was of the house and lineage of David) to be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child. And this Providence was to fulfil the Prophecie of the place of his Birth at Bethlehem; which yet not being their constant place of abode, and his coming thither but transient, it still cast a blind amongst the Jews, that though he was so born at Bethlehem, they accounted him as a constant Inhabitant bitant of the other place Nazareth: For we read, Ver. 39. That when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee to their own City Nazareth.

Well but 4. There is yet a far greater contingency falls out, utterly to prevent his being called a Nazarite from this City, though hitherto the City of his Parents abode: For unless they had abode there, and he with them the greater part of his Life, the Jewes had never come to have given him this Name. Herod being disappointed by the Wise Men to bring him word of the Town where he was born, meant to make the most exact enquiry after this Child, that the power and sagacity of so subtle a King could make to find him out to destroy him. And so, no sooner was Joseph returned to his City Nazareth, Matth. 2. 13. But an Angel appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. Which indeed further strengthens the point in hand, and shewes him to have been that true Nazarite, of whom Joseph was the Type, in this respect, that when young he was driven into Egypt as Christ also was. And then again in his return, to fulfil another Prophecie spoken of by Hoseah, Out of Egypt have I called my Son. Luke 1. 15. But when in Egypt Joseph's heart was weaned from Nazareth, which was a place of his abode but out of necessity and fear of Herod: And the Angel having told him, that they were dead which sought the childs life; he came as is evident by ver. 22. with a purpose to go into Judea; but hearing that Archilaus, and not his Brother Herodes, had obtained the rule thereof, and knowing him to be bloody as his Father, 'tis said Ver. 22. But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his Father Herod, he was afraid to go thither. And then also being over and above this fourth time warned (as it follows) by God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee, clean beyond his intention and inclination. And upon this occasion, and this alone, it was that, as it follows, He came and dwelt in a City called Nazareth, and so from that time made his constant abode there; that by this means this might be fulfilled (we have all this while been treating of) which was spoken by the Prophets, He shall be called a Nazarite.

For Lastly, Upon this occasion, this City being now his continued seat of his Education and Life till he was thirty years old, the Jewes who enquired, and were curious and diligent enough, and did know from whence he came, they out of scorn and malice did give him this Title, Jesus, Jesus the Nazarite, or of Nazareth: And this they gave him in contempt, as being in their account, a base and unworthy place, so barren, as it was a Proverb among them, Can any good come out of Nazareth? And the Devil he stirred them up to it; himself (say some) first giving him that title, Mark 1. 24. howsoever he with the first seconds it; and he did it on purpose to divert the thoughts of the Jewes from enquiring after his Birth at Bethlehem, they all crying it up to have been at Nazareth. Then it was generally given out thus by the People; Mark 10. 47. Luke 18. 37. and as his Fame grew, this Name spread also. And that it was out of scorn appears also by this, That as Tertullian saith, unto his time they called the Christians Nazarites, as also Galileans. But so, what Satan and the Jewes designed out of the greatest Malice; God made use of the Malice of Man to attribute to him one of the greatest Characters of his being the Messiah, which was to be a Nazarite, and holy unto God, by a Vow from his Conception, which had been wrought also in that City. Thus also he ordered Caiphas, out of Malice, to say, One man must dye for the people, to hold forth a just acknowledgment, that Christ by his Death should be the Saviour of that People, and of all the Elect of God in the World. He ordered Pilate to say and not recall it, That he was King of the Jewes; which he did in scorn, but God thereby proclaimed him his King to all the World in these three general Languages, Greek, Latin and Hebrew.

Some Object against this Interpretation given, That it is no where written he should be called a Nazarite; nay, nor were Joseph and Sampson so called.

The Answer is, That these two phrases in Scripture are all one to be, and to be called. So when 'tis said, He shall be called the Son of the most high; that is, He shall be the Son of the most high. He shall be called the Lord our righteousness. And so it was true both of Sampson and Joseph, that they were Nazarites; and are expressly said to be separated; and it is more true of Christ, that he was such.

Again 'tis Objected, that Matthew says by the Prophets: Whereas Moses that wrote Josephs Story and the Law, is distinguished from the Prophets: Nor was he that wrote the Story of Sampson in Judges a Prophet: And therefore this allusion cannot be to these.

The Answer is easie.

1. That although in stricter sense only they are termed Prophets that wrote those Books of Prophecie, as Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the small Prophets; hence you read of Moses, the Law, and the prophets, as distinguished; yet again in other Scriptures, the title of prophet is given to all the Sacred Writers of the Old Testament. 2 Pet. 1. 19. The whole is termed a word of Prophecie. And ver. 20. 21. 'tis stiled prophecie of the Scripture, as inspired by the Holy Ghost: So as all Scripture inspired immediately by the Holy Ghost is termed Prophecie. So Heb. 1. 1. God spake in old time by the Prophets: And then cites the Books of Samuel and Chronicles, ver. 5. I will be to him a Father, &c. Acts 3. 24. Samuel who wrote a Story is termed a Prophet; and all the Writers of Scripture from his time are termed Prophets; and ver. 21. all are called holy prophets, which have been since the World began.

2. And as to this particular, the thing in hand, it is evident, that both Jacob and Moses, whilst they spake this of Joseph the Type of Christ, were then a Prophesying as truly as any of the Prophets: Jacob professeth so to do in the beginning of his Speech, Gen. 49. 1. That I may tell you what shall befall you in the last dayes. And as evident it is, that Moses in that his repetition of Josephs being separated from his Brethren, Deut. 33. 16. did then also by the Spirit of Prophecie, bless and foretel what should befall him. And then for that other of Sampson, it is delivered as a plain Prophecie, even before his Conception, how he should be a Nazarite, who was therein a Type of Christ. And this though uttered by an Angel is recorded by a Sacred Writer that records it as a Prophecie afore-hand given. And thus much of Christs being Vowed and Consecrated from his Conception.

C H A P. VII.

That another Propheſie of Chriſt Iſa. 11. 1. Jer. 23. 5. and Zach. 3. 8. is fulfilled in Chriſt a Nazarite, or Inhabitant of that City.

I Must not conceal to Ingratiate this, another known fair and pregnant Interpretation or Allusion held forth by many Interpreters to another Propheſie of him : And I would there were a Thousand of them more, if poſſible, to fall in into every thing about him. For the more ſuch Lines of Propheſie about our Jeſus meet in any one Center, the more aſcertained we are that he is that Meſſiah that was then to come, and the Scriptures are thereby diſcovered to be the more Myſtical and himſelf Illuſtrious. It is evident that Matthew whiſt he ſaies that he was ſpoken of by Prophets, not Prophet had more in his eye than one, yea, and Propheſies perhaps more than of one ſort ; and ſo there will be a πληρωθη, as Brugensis obſerves.

Now this other Interpretation affirms this Name Nazaraian to be an alluſion to that Myſtical and Metaphorical Name of Netzer ; that is the Plant or Branch given him by Iſaiah. Chap. 11. 1. And there ſhall come forth a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch ſhall grow out of his roots. Seconded by Jeremiah, Chap. 23. 5. Behold, the dayes come, ſaith the Lord, that I will raiſe up David a righteous branch, and a King ſhall reign and proſper, and ſhall execute judgment and juſtice in the earth. And Chap. 35. 15. And thirded by Zachary in two places, Chap. 3. 8. Behold I will bring forth my ſervant the B R A N C H. And eſpecially Chap 6. 12. Thus ſpeaketh the Lord of hoſts, ſaying, Behold the man whoſe name is the B R A N C H : He ſhall grow up out of his place, and he ſhall build the temple of the Lord. And the name ſay they of the City Nazareth in Hebrew was Netzer, or Natſoreth, a City of Plants, (that abounded there ſay they) as Jericho was called a City of Palms. So this of Griffs. And an Inhabitant of it in the Syriack Language then in uſe was Noſeraio : So then let us make an Apoſtrophe unto the Jewes. You might Oh Jewes come to ken and know your Meſſiah, among other accompliſhments of Propheſies, by this one, That he whom your Prophet calls the Plant, the Branch ; it comes to paſs to fulfil that Propheſie, that he dwelt at Nazareth, which hath its name from Plants ; ſo on purpoſe afore-deſigned by God, becauſe it was to be the renowned Habitation, and place of Education and Conception of him whom your Prophets had proclaimed the top Branch of all your Iſrael : And the ſame Providence ſo diſpoſing it, that whiſt you call him Nazarene, and Jeſus of Nazareth, you thereby fulfil this Propheſie, (though not aware of it) owning him, that thereby he ſhould be the Branch ; The Plant Gods own right hand had planted : By which name the Prophets had foretold he ſhould be made famous by your ſelves, whiſt you ſtiled him, A man of Nazareth. Yea, and the Prophet Zachary ſeems, under that his Name the B R A N C H, to point us withal to this place where this Branch ſhould grow ; The man whoſe name is the B R A N C H, ſhall grow out of his place, meaning this City Nazareth, where he had his Conception, and growing up ; referring to his Education, which was there alſo until he went forth to Preach : And that foretold too in theſe following words, And he ſhall build the Temple of the Lord ; (ſpeaking to Zerubbabel his Type, who built the ſecond Temple) fulfilled in our Chriſt, who ſaies, I will build my Church of the new teſtament : Which when he went firſt to lay the foundation of by Preaching the Goſpel, Providence diſpoſed ſo of it, that he went out from Nazareth, his place and City, as the 4th of Matthew hath it. So then what Matthew here ſaies, He dwelt in Nazareth, that it might might be fulfilled. He shall be called a Nazarite, a Dweller in a Branch Town, answers to what Zachary saies, Chap. 6. 12. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold the man whose name is the branch, and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the Temple of the Lord.

But this Interpretation hath its Lameness, so as though it may be taken in as an allusion, yet not so literally, as the former, much less only or adequately fitted to Matthews quotation here. For,

1. It cannot undoubtedly be proved, that the City Nazareth had its Name from Netzer Plants, For that Town was so obscure as the Name of it is not recorded in the Old Testament, which should decide it. Nor doth Zachary here use the word Netzer for Branch, as Isaiab doth, and that but once, as prophesying of the Messiah. He useth the word [Semab] as also those other Prophets mentioned do. So as if we should entertain that to be Matthews whole or main Scope we put our selves upon but one Scripture or Prophesie, namely, that of Isaiab, who in the Letters doth only use that word Netzer, all the rest a far differing word. Now when Matthew here saies, That by being called a Nazarean from the City Nazareth, the Prophecies were fulfilled: It is a matter of lameness of Names or Words that must be intended to be found in those Scriptures which are thus said to be fulfilled. Now the Name or Word Netzer is no where else given him but in Isaiab.

Again, That word is used by the Prophet of him is a Noun Substantive (as we say) A Plant or Branch, But the Title here mentioned by Matthew to be found in the Scripture answering to it is a Noun Adjective, signifying an Attribute or Qualification belonging to him.

But my Brethren, is it not pity, That these two Interpretations should strive in the Womb of this Text, the one against the other, if it were possible to reconcile and take in both. For then you will be sure to have Prophets enough wait and attend upon the accomplishment of it.

There have been of those of old, and of late have endeavoured to take in both and reconcile them, whilst others argue wholly for the one to exclude the other. So A Lapidus, Cartwright, and Jackson and Hieron of old, as appears by comparing his Comment on Matthew 2. last, and Isa. 11. 1. So as that if we respect the Name Nazoraios, as Matthew gives it in the Letters and Syllables thereof, that of Christ being a Nazarite doth carry it clear: Yet so as withal there may be an allusion to make it the more full unto Isaiabs Net, for or Christs being the Branch; especially considering the Name of the City was obscure, and not mentioned in the Old Testament, and so uncertain, whether written by T, or Z, by Tsade, or Zayn, Notsereth, or Nazareth primitively in the Hebrew. And if written by T, yet that Letter T being often turned in Pronunciation and Writing into Z, whereof Drusus and Grotius and others give many instances; and so in that respect well serving, or complying with either Interpretation. And it being the Holy Ghosts manner in things of this Nature to have a vast and comprehensive aim, and by way of allusion in fulfilling Prophecies to take more wayes than one, I confess, I am therefore easily induced to eye and give an ear to both.

Only I must withal put in this Profession or Caution as to my Judgment, That if these two cannot be found to stand together, (which I see not but they may) that if I must lean to one Interpretation rather than the other, I should unto the first, as I have presented it of Christ his being a Nazarite, the Holy one of God, or Consecrated unto God. And I do prefer upon all accounts that unto the other for these Reasons, besides what hath been afore argued and said.

1. He is called a Nazarite from the City, which is evident by Matthew and other Evangelists testimony. If the Question came, whether of the two, that Cities name was Notseroth of Nazareth, so whether taken from Netzer, signifying the Branch or Griffe, or from Nazari, signifying a Person vowed to God, It is clear that the latter carries it both in that first of Matthew, and the other Evangelists who write the Name of that City in the Greek with na, not naareth, and not Nasareth, or Notseroth. And Secondly, That it is as evident, that if according to the Analogie of each of those Tongues you would would translate that word from Hebrew into Greek, if in the Hebrew that City's Name had been Nasereth or Nesereth (from Griffs and Plants) then in Greek it must have been written Nasareth with s, or double ss,  $\sigma\sigma$ ; for [ $\tau\varsigma$ ] in the Hebrew is in the Greek rendred by S, not Z, that is by  $\sigma$  or  $\sigma\sigma$ , not by  $\zeta$  as Melchisedec in Hebrew is rendred Melchisedech, By Paul to the Hebrews, Tzion is translated in the Greek, Sion; so Tsabboth is Sabbath, &c. whereas all the Evangelists do constantly write the name of that City [Nazareth] with z, but not one Nasareth. And again on the other side, when the Hebrew word is with Zayn, then the Greek writes  $\zeta$  or z, as in the words Zabulon, Zacharias, and Beelzebub.

See Heinfius

And again, that this City should have its Name from Plants or Trees growing there, and to be eminently renowned for such is more improbable, because Zabulon in which it was seated, was a deserted place in Darkness (as the Prophecy and Evangelists tell us.) And on the contrary renowned for such by the Jews, as that usual Proverb of theirs shews, Can any good come out of Nazareth, a place so barren and vile above all other places, as that no good, no not of any kind was growing there, or expected thence. For which cause perhaps, this flourishing Plant, the Messiah is said by Isaiah to grow out of a dry ground, Isa. 53. 2. even with an eye to the unfruitfulness of this Place and City.

2. If the Importance of these two Mysteries pleaded for on each side be weighed, this of his being a Nazarite in the sense given to have been intended, Dignius est, (As A lapide sayes) is of the more worth in the importance of it, that only referring to a Metaphorical Expression of his being a Branch, and at the highest notes out our ingrafting into him as Branches into a Graffe: But this other denotes his Personal Holyness as God-Man, his being Dedicated and Consecrated to God, separated, and Sealed by God to the work of Redemption, which is the Foundation of all, and many other Mysteries, as his Kingly and Priestly Offices, all far more Glorious than the other, as in the sequel will appear. This will be found most comprehensive, and to take in all the Prophets.

3. If we regard the Prophecie it self, this Name of his, Nazarite is not in Metaphorical words but in clear and express Types, vvhio as being his Types, and for that very end vvere called  $\text{Ναζαρηται}$ , Nazarites, as Men in a special manner above the rest Holy, Separate, Dedicated, and Consecrated to God; or Men crowned with a peculiar Excellency above others. And so the Septuagint sometimes translate it  $\alpha\gamma\iota\omicron\iota\varsigma$ , sometimes  $\alpha\phi\omega\epsilon\iota\sigma\mu\epsilon\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma$  separated,  $\epsilon\sigma\epsilon\phi\alpha\upsilon\omega\epsilon\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma$ , Crowned. Now if they which were his Types were called so in all these Senses Nazarites, then he in them was much more styled so, and signified thereby to be the Reality, the Substance, of what they were shadows.

But still I conclude, as I said before, That I wish and hope that both may stand, and I would there were a thousand more such of so great a Variety and Comprehensiveness.

C H A P. VIII.

That as Christ expressed his Will and Consent in the Dedication of himself to the Work, so he shewed his chearful Willingness in all the parts of the performance.

YOU have had the former part of this great Story, His Dedication of himself at his Conception: The last part followes, to see how he made good his Vow from the first to the last Act thereof, Obedience to the Death. I need take no Text for it, the New Testament gives every where testimony thereof. It were infinite to give you all the passages that argue this his Willingness and Zeal throughout the whole of his Life and at his Death. I shall lay afore you but some more eminent and obvious.

It is observable that the very first words you have recorded as uttered by himself, and that when a Child, at twelve years old, yea and that but one speech neither; and this that I am now speaking, was the summe and eminent import of it. Luke 2. 48. His Mother seems to chide him, that without their privy he had stayed behind, and put them to that sorrow and trouble in seeking him, and not knowing what was become of him. What is Christs Answer? Ver. 49. Wist ye not that I must be about my Fathers business? As if he had said, 'Tis true ye are my Parents, and I have been subject to you hitherto in your particular affairs, but do not you know I have another Father higher than you? Who hath commanded me by vertue of my Office of Mediatorship, other manner of business to be done by me, than to attend on you, and wherein I am not to take Counsel or Direction from you, or ask leave of you; for I am not an ordinary Son. Wist ye not I was about my Fathers business? ἐν τοῖς τοῖς πράγμασι καὶ ἰσχυροῖς τῶν πραγμάτων in the things or affairs of my Father, who is my Father after another manner then you are, and therefore my business is an other manner of business than of other Children. I am the Christ the Messiah, and at these years do understand my self well enough to be so; and I have a Spiritual Work to do, enjoyned me by my Father, which all other obligations, though at these years, must give way to: And as elsewhere it is, As the Father commands me, so do I; as John 14. 31. His Will and Law is written in my Heart from a Child; I am engaged to do his Will, to perform the Office of a Mediator, the Messiah, whereof one part is the Prophetick Office, to teach and to instruct. And to give a Specimen or an Evidence of it, I have now by his Command (this being my first coming up to the Temple, my Fathers House where I am to Preach hereafter many a Sermon) been among the Doctors arguing with them; ver. 46. It would seem the first time he came, according to the Law, to the Feast; the manner being at twelve years to put a difference between a Child and a Youth, that the Males at that Age should go up to the Temple. Malachi had told he should, as a Messenger of the Covenant or Prophet, suddenly come to his Temple. Mal. 3. 1. Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple: even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. And when he comes first, he will come as a Messenger or Declarer of the Covenant, though but at twelve years of Age. As God shewed Moses that he himself was that Deliverer to his People (long afore he delivered them) by one Act of Vengeance upon an Egyptian: So God gave demonstration that this was the Angel of the Covenant in the Temple, almost twenty years afore he came to exercise that Function ordinarily. But that which I observe out of it is to the point in hand, that at twelve years old, and long afore, the Humane Nature understood full well his Office, and his being the Mediator, and did direct his Actions to that aim and level. He acted as the Messiah unto his Father, as his Father in another manner, than he is the Father of Men or Angels, and had the Law written in his Heart at his Conception in his Eye. To do his Will he was careful of, yea delighted to do that Will, I was about my Fathers business; yea, I ought to be, (sayes he). This is the original obligation and undertaking my Ear was long since bored through to do, viz. this his Will. I am not mine own, nor yours, but his Servant; I must be in his business. And though now you have a more eminent instance of it at twelve years, you might have perceived it long ago, if you had observed my carriage, and how I have directed my aims; therefore you see he blames them: Wist you not I was in my Fathers business; and the word ἐν τῷ πατρὶ, to be in the things of his Father, imports his being wholly in them. And though his Father did not ordinarily, or perhaps had not afore this his appearing at the Temple, set him about business extraordinary, or other than such as a Child subject to Parents useth to be, (as ver. 51. it is after this said of him, that he was subject to them) yet he had been in all his course in the things of his Father, and had carried himself as one that walkt by an higher principle of Obedience to God, than other Men were bound to. And this they might have observed, else he would not have blamed them for not considering it. And the word ἐν τῷ πατρὶ is to be wholly and continually given up to it, as Men in an Office ought to be. As Rom. 12. 7, 8. Or ministry, let us wait on our ministring; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness. 1 Tim. 4. 15. Meditate upon these things, give thy self wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. That which we translate, and rightly too, Give thy self wholly to them, is the like phrase, ἐν τῷ πατρὶ ἰσθί, Be in these things. So then Christ, as now, so from his Infancy had been wholly in the things of his Father; and as Mediator, directing all Obedience as such to him; and not only acting holily as a Child sanctified from the womb, but Mediator-like, and he delighted to do it, and shewed so much at his first undertaking. This is the first speech, and it is an early one you have of him, and it imports it. In a word, (Christ sayes) He that sent me is with me, namely alwayes. And I do alwayes those things that please him. John 8. 29. And he had done so alwayes from his Infancy, and directed all to him as a Father that had sent him on that Spiritual Work. And the Father hath not left me alone, but guided me from the first thus to do, (sayes he) for of his guiding him to do his Will he there speaks.

Why should I be large in rehearsing to you all his other speeches, which might argue this, how that it was his Meat and Drink to do the Will of God? John 4. 34 Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work. He was hungry, and yet zeal and desire to do Gods Will in saving of Souls, swallowed up the sense of that hunger and faintness. He delighted to do Gods Will more than ever hungry Man did to eat his Meat; and not only at this time, and for this fit, but to do all the rest of the Work to the last, to perfect and to compleat every part of it. So it followes, [And to finish or perfect his work]. So then, all his time afore, he had made it his Meat and Drink, as much as now, and for all years to come the same Zeal was in him, even to the whole from first to last, as the word perfecting impleyeth. And in all this he still directed his Obedience as Mediator, looking at all he did, not only as Obedience due in common as from other Men, but as it was the Work designed by him that had sent him, and sealed him to this Work. See John 6. 38. For I came down from Heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. Still you see he fulfills that primitive obligation of his; I delight to do thy will, Oh God. Yea, it is not only said, as here, that it was more to him than meat meat to do his will ; but further to exprefs his Zeal in it, in another place at another time, this his Zeal is faid to have eaten him up, his Strength, and Spirits and all. He was eaten up, and devoured thereby : It swallowed up all his intentions ; as the wrath of God is faid to have drunk up Jobs Spirits, Job 2. 17. The zeal of thy house (and of thy Glory concerned in it) hath eaten me up ; faves Christ.

Chap. 9.

C H A P. IX.

That he did not shrink at the approach of his greatest Sufferings, his Death, but shewed a chearful resolution to the very last moment.

LET us instance further, in that which was the hardest piece of his Work and the finishing of all, his Sufferings at his Death.

1. Afore he came to undergoe it a good while, see the frame of his Spirit ; Luke 12. 50. I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitned, till it be accomplished. He knew the bitterness of that Baptism to be such as no Creature was able to be Baptized with it : Matth. 20. 22. But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with ? They say unto him, We are able. Yet faves he, How am I straitned till it be accomplished ? How much I cannot exprefs ; and I am straitned that my desire and longings are delayed, and they straiten and contract the Heart. Never Woman desired more to be delivered, than he to have finished that Work ; to have gone over that Brook, that Sea of Wrath, he was to be sunk over head and ears into.

Upon a time when Christ began first to declare the greatness of his Sufferings ; Matth. 16. 21. From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the Elders and chief Priests and Scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day. Peter took him, (that is aside, as a friend out of love) and began to rebuke him, that he would spare himself, and not provoke the Pharisees by Zeal ; and be it far from thee Lord ! (faves he) that never deservedst it, that art the Saviour of Men, goest up and down doing good, this shall not be to thee. But how did Jesus take this ? One would have thought he should have taken it lovingly. Absolutely, we never did see Christ so angry, and take a thing so ill. It is said, Ver. 23. But he turned, and said unto Peter, get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me ; for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men. The word seors, translated he turned, it imports not so much the turning of his Body to him, as the turning and change of his Countenance unto a paleness or redness, as when a Mans blood is up, or when he is moved with Anger and Indignation. And what said he ? Get thee behind, Satan. There was never such a word came forth of those Lips afore or after, given to a Saint as Peter was. All was because he toucht him in what his Spirit was most eager for ; as Anger swells and riseth against what comes in the way and current of Mens desires, even as a strong stream streams against what would stop it. And Christ adds, Thou art an Offence unto me! An Offence is properly an occasion of stumbling: Now Christs Holy Nature was not capable of such an occasion of stumbling or being drawn to Sin, as ours is, Yet Peters Speech had that tendency in it to divert him from that great work his heart was intent upon. Then at another time Peter would be meddling to rescue him by the Sword, John 18. 11. And though he then received a milder Answer from Christ, Put up thy Sword into its sheath; yet still you may thereby see, how strongly his heart continued set upon the work of Redemption that was undertaken by him, and designed to him. The Cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink? Every word speaks the eagerness and strength of his Will and Resolution therein. Interrogations in that case argue the greatest vehemency: But this belongs to the next particular: Namely,

When he came to perform that last part of his Obedience, his sufferings to Death.

1. As the time drew nearer and nearer for him to take his last Journey to Jerusalem, not having many Moneths or Dayes to live, and knew also all that would befall him there, as he had told Peter and his Disciples. The Evangelist Luke saies of him, chap. 9. 51. When the time was come, he should be received up (namely by means of that cruel Death) unto glory, he stedfastly set his face to go up to Jerusalem. I will not Dispute, whether it was his last Journey (which I rather think with Grotius) or that it was half a year afore as others, but two Journeys to Jerusalem are afterwards mentioned by Luke, (which yet argue not that this Disposition here recorded occasionally should not be intended of his last Journey:) For Luke tells things not strictly in order of time, but of occasions (as Grotius hath observed;) However this all do, and must acknowledge, That the Scope of this passage was to shew that Christ now toward his end hardned himself, and in all his Deportment (which is expressed by Face there) set himself to manifest so much, that nothing did or should divert him. Yea, and this was observable in him more than at former times: For ver. 53. It was observed by a whole City of the Samaritanes, who therefore received him not. And they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem.

Hence the Exhortation from Christs Example suffering resolutely for us, Ephes. 4. 1. is this, Forasmuch as Christ hath suffered for us in the Flesh, Arm your selves likewise with the same mind: A strong Resolution, causing a Mans Mind as boldly and ventrously to encounter difficulties, as strong Armour doth embolden a Mans Mind to rush into Battel. So then Christ Armed himself, steeled his Heart, as we use to speak.

And then when he was to eat his last Supper, to eat his last (as we use to speak,) so it is called Luke 22. 16. See what vehemency of desires he utters, ver. 15. With desire have I desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer: That is, How have I longed with the most passionate desire for the arrival of this last Night and Meal that I must make, that it would come and hasten, as all Men are apt aforehand to do for that which their Hearts are set upon. And that to have been his Reason is evident by what follows, ver. 16. For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine until the kingdom of God shall come: The thing signified by the Passover, the Redemption of the World by my Death. This is to be my last Drink I shall drink with you; and now my Death comes on by which you and the World shall be saved and redeemed.

And again, when he knew Judas was to go out to betray him, he said, Do what thou dost do quickly, John 13. 27, 30. As soon as thou wilt, for I am ready, and resolved: He dares him, and hastens him to it to shew his own resolvedness. And when he was gone out, he claps his hands (as it were) for joy, and utters his Joy and Triumph in it, ver. 31. Therefore

Therefore when he was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in him. For he reckoned the stroke now as good as struck, the thing now as good as done, that he should be Crucified. For the Instrument that was to set all a work was gone out about it, and he calls it his Death, his being glorified, because it was the Foundation of all that Glory himself and his Elect were to have. How bitter soever it proved afterwards, his Heart at present was filled with Joy for the thoughts of the approach of it, he looks upon it as his Wedding Day, his Coronation Day, (as in more respects than one it proved,) As Solomons Heart is said to be fill'd with joy in the Day wherein his Mother Crowned him: And that so he esteemed it, you have another place to the same purpose, John 12. 23, 24, 28. Now the hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified: Which is spoken out of the same Passion of Spirit as the former; as if he had said, Now, even Now is the time, the longed for hour, so long longed for, come wherein I shall be glorified; and do that most glorious work for which I came into the World. (For this Hour I came into the World, as ver. 27.) And this he speaks in relation to his Death, so in the 24th. verse, as also ver. 27, 28, and 32. evidently shew. 'Tis true, he was struck with Terrour and Trouble at his entrance into it, (for here the first Thunder-clap that struck him did begin,) so ver. 27. Now is my Soul troubled, and so troubled, as he adds, What shall I say, Father save me from this hour? But withal he renews and recovers that which had been his constant resolution and pursuance. But for this Cause came I to this Hour. It was a Consideration he took in to hearten himself unto it. That he had gone so far, and was now come to it; and should I now recoil? And what was it did glad him, even in the midst of this his Trouble? 1. That his Father should be glorified. Father glorifie thy Name: Then came there a voice from Heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorifie it again. 2. That thereby Souls should be saved, which in ver. 24. he gives this account of, Except a corn of wheat (to which he compares himself who was to be the Root of Multitudes to spring up out of him) dye, it abides alone; as he otherwise must have done in Heaven. But if it dye, it bringeth forth much fruit: Which further, ver. 32, 33. he expresth, I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to me. This he said, signifying what death he should die.

After this he maketh a long Sermon to his Disciples, when Judas was gone forth to Act his fatal Design, and Christ to lose no time in the mean while enters into a long and large Sermon to hearten his Disciples recorded in the ensuing Thirteenth and Fourteenth Chapters of John. And it is greatly observable, how that in the midst of his Sermon in the Tenour of his Discourse coming to that which most of all did move him to that work, namely, his Fathers Love, you have the passage, John 14. last. But that the world may know that I love the Father, and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do; Arise, Let us go hence. He would needs in all the haste be gone, as if he had overslipt his time of Judas his meeting him with his Trained Bands, and so they would miss of him. He sits upon thornes (as we use to say of one that thinks the time long) for he breaks off in the midst of a Discourse which he assumes again (as if he had forgotten himself) though two Chapters afterwards, the Fifteenth and Sixteenth. Of all works else Preaching, and Preaching his last too, his heart was most in; and yet he makes a start in the midst of a Sermon to be gone. To be taken and Crucified; Arise, Let us go hence. He lookt on the Glass, and saw it was not yet run out, and he sits down again, and Preacheth another Sermon of the Vine and of the Branches occasioned by what he had been Administring, the Sacrament of his Supper, his Blood, so signified by the Blood of the Vine. Well, when that Sermon and his latter Prayer, Chapter 17. was done, it came to the very point of his bitter Execution, he staies not till their Pursévants and Judas with his Trained Bands should find him out; but

Book IV. as the Eighteenth Chapter tells us, he offers himself as a Sacrifice into their hands (for so all Sacrifices were to be brought to the Door of the Temple by the Person that sacrificed) and so to be offered up. And all this he did willingly and knowingly afore-hand of what should come to pass, Chap. 18. 4. And these things the Eighteenth Chapter of John doth punctually and setly relate from the first verie to the ninth. When Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his Disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entred, and his Disciples.

And Judas also which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jesus oft-times resorted thither with his Disciples.

Judas then having received a band of men, and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns, and torches, and weapons.

Jesus therefore knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

They answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also which betrayed him, stood with them.

As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

Then asked he them again, Whom seek ye? and they said, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he. If therefore ye seek me, let these go their way.

That the saying might be fulfilled which he spake, Of them which thou gavest me, have I lost none.

We had sinned against knowledge, and he suffers with a full Cognizance, and an afore-hand Deliberation of all that was to befall him. And further, (to make us apprehensive of this his Will in it) he tells Peter when he would needs vainly and weakly attempt to rescue him, Matth. 26. 53. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of Angels. Alas! He needed not so great a Party, his own word (I am he) John 18. 8. struck them all backward, and might have done dead, and ver. 11. The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

He never shewed any sign of Reluctancy, till in the Garden he saw what was indeed in that Cup his Father did present him with, even his Wrath, and being made a Curse. And to shew what the Nature of a Man in it self might in such a Case do; namely, shew his abhorrency of so high an endurance, and meerly to let us understand so much, to the end we might see his Love: For it was meet we should by something understand how much he was put to it, he thereupon cries out, Father if it be possible, let this cup pass. But as he had John 12. 27. So here his Fathers will quiets all again. And the whole mind of this passage is but to shew,

1. His averfeness as to the thing in it self simply considered, because of the bitterness of it. And,

2. That the whole ground of his submitting notwithstanding thereunto was his Fathers Will. And,

3. How that notwithstanding his Will stood to it as high as ever, yet only upon that ground, Not my will, but thy will be done.

When they had him in the High Priests Hall scorning and buffeting of him: As he had set his face as you heard afore his Sufferings to go to Jerusalem; So now the Prophets uttering it in his Person, tells us how he steel'd his heart thereagainst also. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting.

For the Lord God will help me, therefore shall I not be confounded: Therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

lastly, When he hung upon the Tree, and had enough to have provoked so great a Spirit, so empowred as he was with the Sovereignty of Heaven and Earth to have relieved himself, and to have commanded those Nails to have have given way : He could have taught them better Obedience than to de-taign their Lord in so great sufferings a moment, and that which did and might have provoked him farther to have shown his Power to rescue himself, was their cruel Mockings of him added to all his sufferings, Come down (say they) thou that savest others, and we will believe thee. Well he still hangs quietly there. He endured the cross (Paul saies) and despised the shame, Heb.

12. 1. When in the Grave all the Power of Death could not keep him there, for he had done his work. But love kept him on the Cross, and nailed him there with stronger Nails than Men or Devils could have driven in.

Alas! He could as Sampson, whilst they mockt him, have broke down the Pillars of Heaven about their Ears, and himself have stood Erect from out the ruines of it. In the Sixteenth Psalm (made of him) he blesteth God for having given him that Counsel to persist in his Resolution to dye, and keeping the purpose of it fixt in his heart during all those Nights in which he had to do with his Father afore his sufferings. If he, I am sure we much more have cause to bless God for giving it, and him for following it. Even so Jesus blessed, Amen.

Christ's Actual Performance of our Redemption. In the General, He Gave himself for us. The particular Parts of our Redemption are, That he was made Sin, and a Curse; and by his Death obtain'd a Victory over Satan, whereby he delivers us from his Slavery: And hath perform'd all Righteousness which might answer the Law for us. And that Christ as our Great Shepherd takes care to preserve and secure us safe thus Redeem'd, and freed by Him.

That God presently on Mans Fall making the Discovery to him of a Redeemer, Adam transmitted the Knowledge of him to his Posterity, and he was accordingly proposed to the Faith of the Patriarchs.

THough Believers before the Coming of Christ had in their Faith but some obscure Glimmerings of Christ the Redeemer, yet they had real Apprehensions of such a Person to come. And there were certainly some outward Glimmerings and Rayes, in the things appointed to represent Christ shining through that Vail: For the difference that the Apostle puts, when he handles and compares the point of both and each of those Dispensations; Ours and theirs; seems to import so much in saying, that we behold with open face the glory of the Lord; 2 Cor. 3. 18. Implying that they had some darker, obscure, confused gleams and apprehensions darted into their their minds thereof. 'Tis true, the person was then veiled indeed; and hid in cloudy, and dark Expressions, and Representations; that were but shadows; Even as we read of Moses that his Face was covered with a Veil; to signify thus much. And Moses being as their Mediator then; and Face being put in Scripture for Person; we may say that Christs Person was then obscured; and yet with such a Veil as did not utterly darken all perceivance of his Glory. 'Tis true indeed, that they knew not the Individual person, who He was to be; as now we do; and is necessary for us to do; as Christ told the Pharisees, (who lived under the light of his Gospel and Miracles) unless you believe that I am He, you shall die in your sins. But that there was one of the sons of man that was to come who should be a deliverer, this the Saints that were saved, generally then knew: Although the Vulgar Jew stuck in the Letter, as at this day, the veil being on their hearts; as 2 Cor. 3. 15. It is not now on Christs Face, Chap. 4. 4, 5. but upon mens Hearts.

I shall begin my proof with the first Promise in Paradise; which apparently was, that a Son of Eve, the seed of the woman was to come, that should have power to break the Serpents Head: That is in plainer Language now said, who should destroy the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 8. or as it is in the Epistle to the Hebrews, Chap. 2. 14. Who should destroy him that had the power of Death; and save and deliver from him that had just that very day brought sin and death into the World, and thereupon had the power of death. And therefore also That Person promised was to be more than a meer Man, or meer Creature: For how otherwise could he have power to overcome and destroy and break the power of those fallen Angels: Yea and which was more of Gods Law that threatened death; Now are we to be saved by the knowledge, and Faith of this Person, as Eve (to be sure) first was by the faith on Him, and then we. And the necessity to Salvation of that knowledge appears, in the Case of our first Parents: For why else did God thus hastily in the cool of the Evening of that very day wherein they had sinned, discover this; but that the knowledge of it was necessary to their salvation. And the same necessity must be supposed to hold for the salvation of others, that were to be saved after them; And therefore the knowledge of a Redeemer was delivered unto them to be transmitted down to their posterity. Adam also living Nine Hundred and Thirty Years and upwards into that first World; and a Godly Seed and Race being reckoned from him unto the Flood, and those our first Parents being Godly, and having been the Causes of transmitting sin to all their Posterity; were the more engaged and obliged, and accordingly zealously moved to derive down the knowledge of that means, whereby themselves had been recovered, by the which their Posterity might be saved also; and it were strange to think that they should not. And that de facto they did so deliver it besides what the Story in Genesis doth relate of the Religion propagated in those times; There were some footprints remaining among the Heathen of Eves Fall by name; of the Serpents Venome and Infection; For which they made a Collision and bruising of Serpents; and of a Seed, Jovis Incrementum as Virgil calls him, who should be a Restorer, and Confounder of the Devil. Such Memorials were left and found among the Heathens, tho' so defaced, as they could not be saved by them, they wanting a spiritual Light to accompany that Knowledge. It would be therefore (I say) unreasonable to think that those who after were to be saved, should be utterly kept by God from the Inking and Knowledge of that first promise; For there was no other promise (which we read of extant,) whereby those might be saved that were saved.

Now that which I would have observed upon that original promise, is, that there are but two eminent things that promise consists of. First, The deliverance and salvation from the Serpents power: which is the breaking the Serpents head. And the second is, That a person, one of the Sons of Men, should effect this; and break his head: Concerning which my present Argument proceedeth.

The All-wise and Gracious Lord first saw, and conceived the knowledge of such a person necessary for the bringing the Sons of Men in to him; as well as of his Grace to save them; And therefore contented not himself to make barely a promise of deliverance. And the necessity lies in this; that the

Guilty

See an unregenerate Mans guiltiness, &c.
Book 9. Chap. 4.

Guilty Conscience of the Sinner, rightly apprehensive of what the heinousness of sinning against God is; and of Gods Wrath for sin is; even a Consuming Fire; hath not the boldness to approach to God in its own person, in its own sin; but hides himself, as Adam did: Nor would man dare to approach to him, without a Mediatour promised to him. As is evident from the people of Israels desire, that Moses should approach to God for them; and upon which Moses received the promise of Prophet to come after him, like unto Him. This also caused Job to wish a days-man betwixt God and him; Job 9. 33. And how natural Conscience awaken'd dictates to men the necessity of a Mediatour, We have an Instance in that Highlander, who hearing Mr. Robert Bruce inveighing against those sins, of which he knew himself Guilty, his Conscience being deeply touched, said; Iſe give him twenty Cows to Gree God and me. Poor Man he felt the power of Gods Word on his Soul from that Mans Ministry; And he thought him to have acquaintance with God; and thought that he might be able to reconcile God to him again. Thus the first Grand Charter granted to Adam held out the Person of Christ, as a potent Victor over Satan; and Mediator for Man.

Now this was also succeeded with Sacrifices offered to God: Witness Abel, of whom you read, Heb. 11. Which way of Worship to God sin alone brought in, and which the state of Innocency knew not of. And these pointed unto an Atonement: And by the saving faith upon the Messiah, to come; who had been held forth in the afore-said promise; was Abel accepted: which Cain wanted, Heb. 11.

C H A P. I I.

That Christ gave himself for us, to redeem us. What is implied in that Expression. We should duly consider the Greatness and Value of such a Gift. Christ giving himself is a High Testimony of his own peculiar Love to us.

I HAVE at large shewn the Free Willingness that was in Christ to perform the work of a Redeemer for us, which also these words sufficiently import, He gave himself. He was not passively given up by his Father; but it was a free Act of his own, and so gifts are.

We have likewise discoursed the fulness of his Abilities and Capacities to make satisfaction, and purchase Redemption which no meer Creature was capable of, but that his power being God-Man was as great, as his heart was free. Let us now come to the performance, the price, the Ransome it self; as it is here declared to be, a giving Himself. Towards the general opening of this, we may observe.

I. How Paul delights in this expression he gave or offered himself up both in the frequency of using it, Eph. 5. 2, 25. Titus 2. 14. Heb. 9. 14. offered himself, and Heb. 1. 3. purged away our sins by himself. Phil. 2. 7. emptied himself: As also in that, when that Holy Apostle with Application speaks of Christs love unto himself, and would set it out to the highest Elevation to affect his heart most deeply, he then useth this Expression, Who loved me and gave himself for me, Gal. 2. 20.

II. That what other Scriptures do parcel forth in particulars of what Christ gave, this one summs up in this total, as comprehensive of all else. The Scripture elsewhere, yea the Lords Supper doth set it forth by piece-meals, his Blood in in the Wine, his precious Blood shed to redeem us, 1 Pet. 1. 18. His Body in the bread, this is my Body which is given for you, Luke 22. 19. his Flesh or whole man, I give my Flesh for the life of the World, John 6. 51. His Life: I give my Life for my sheep, John 10. 15. His Soul poured out as an offering for sin, Isai. 53. 10. His giving up all his estate and riches, and becoming poor, 2 Cor. 8. 9. His leaving Father and Mother, Eph. 5. 31, 32. compared. Whatever, I say, other Scriptures on the Lords Supper do by parcels inventory forth to us; All and each of these, this one word, he gave himself, doth at once, by the great, summarily comprehend: For to say Himself, to be sure was his All.

III. [He Gave :] he gave away; For what is given as a Price, or Ransome (as this in the Text) as also to give himself as a Sacrifice, as Eph. 5. 2. This is purely a giving away, whereby the Giver suffers so much real loss and damage to purchase that Redemption. And so the Sacrifice was burnt and consumed to Ashes, there was perfectly so much loss to him that offered it, as what is given comes to, and so in giving away his riches, he is said to have become poor thereby, 2 Cor. 8. 9. and to have nothing left to himself, Dan. 9. 26. and that he emptied himself, Phil. 2. 7, 8. There was nothing that was gain to him but he suffered for the present loss of it, as to his present use and advantage.

IV. [Himself :] was that which was given away. Not [his] only, or what was his; but himself, not sua but se (as Paul said, I seek not yours but you) so here Christ gave away not only τὰ ἴδια what were his own, (as proper Goods and Chattels are said to be a man's own) extrinsecal to him (and thus the whole creation is said to be to Christ, John 1. 11.) but it is himself, his very person, or what was personally his, whatsoever was most intrinsecally his own, Intimum form, and what was as himself unto himself most dear and precious, and unate. This is therefore an extensive word, and draws in all of himself (as we shall see anon) the whole of himself, all that could be made of himself, all that he could rap or rend, as we say, that could possibly any way be made away from himself, this in the general. As for particulars, I shall confine my self to such things onely, as are in Scripture or common speech termed ones self; and which according to the dialect of the Scriptures about Christs Person. are in a more special manner deemed himself: Now what is it that may be, and usually is called a mans self.

1. A Persons Doings, Works, Operations, and Actings, which are the fruits that proceed from, and grow upon ones self; these are reckoned a Mans self. Thus when a Servant gives up all his actions and service, all his time, and what he can do, that all this should be to his Masters use, though suppose that Master hath not power over his life, or Goods, yet in that case he is said to let himself; to sell himself; to give himself up to that mans use and service, to be managed all by his Masters Appointment and Command. Or if (suppose) out of Love and Friendship to another, one imployes his whole Time and Labours, and suffers all his Actions to be ordered for the other, though not in way of Service but as a Friend; yet in this Case he may be said to give up himself, when he is all that while of no use to himself, or to his own private and personal Advantages; Whereas otherwise it is the nature of Self to work for it Self. In this case a Man is rightly said to give over himself, when his operations are thus to be disposed of by another; the Philosopher says that, that Day a Man is made a Servant or Slave to another, he loseth half of himself, half of his Reason and Thoughts; (such was the condition of Servants then, especially Slaves) they being ordered, disposed of, and subjected to anothers Will. When Ahab is said to have sold himself to work Wickedness; It was by giving up his Works and Actions, and Ways to the Dominion and power of sin, as a Lord and Master over him: And on the contrary, the obedience we owe to God in keeping his Commandments is called, the whole of Man, Eccl. 12. 13. because it exacts and takes up the strength and might, and the whole in Man, as given up in it, if rightly performed as it ought. Now in this sense, the Whole of Christ might be justly said to be given away, and he to have given himself: for all his Actions, and whatsoever he did were wholly at the direction of another for, and on our behalf, and not not his own: and accordingly were wholly directed by him to that end; to serve us according to his appointment: I came not (says he) to do mine own Will: but the Will of him that sent me, John 6. 38. The Father gave him every jot of his Works; And I have finisht it (says he:) it is his speech at the last of what he had done in this World from first to last, in John 17. 4. And so in doing onely such Works as the Father gave Him, He gave away himself to his Father first; And therein to us also: For that Work being all in the earnings of it, wholly for our behoofe and advantage, he is withal as truly said to have given Himself for us. He was hereby a perfect Servant to his Father for us; yea and ours also: And this also doth Christ in that one single passage, Mat. 20. 28. give us the sense, and Interpretation of: The son of man came not to be ministered unto (as Lord of all) but to minister; and to give his life (as in and by dying, so through the whole Course of his Life by serving) a ransom for many; that is, for us: He professeth every where that he was not at his own dispose, and so not his own: I came not to do my own will, how often do you meet with it from him; He was not his own, or himself (as we use to speak in that case) in any thing he did here; who yet was himself (by his Native Right) most free; and had the Prerogative to act all for himself, and of glorifying himself another way, then this: but this priviledge he laid down wholly at his Fathers Feet, and took up all by a New Commission from him, to act All according to his Will, and not his own in order to our Salvation: And therefore when he came to die, he says, As the Father giveth me Commandment, so do I; arise let us go hence, John 14. 31.

2. A Person may be said to give himself, when he gives up the Comforts of his Life; and therefore denying a Mans self is interpreted by Christ, a forsaking Lands, Houses, Father, Mother. And Life is put for the Comforts of Life, as when it is said, that Life lies not in abundance, the meaning is the Comfort of Life doth not. Now all the Comforts of this and the other Life did Christ part withal first or last, even unto the Light of the Sun it self, the common Priviledge of Mankind, which was darkened when he was a Crucifying. And then all the Joys, and Comforts of the other World Christ parted with for a time. When it was his due to have been in Heaven Glorious, he left Heaven and all its Glories. And then Death, which is, as we know, a privation of all Worldly things, put a period to all his Enjoyments of this Life.

3. His Manhood or Humane Nature consisting of Soul and Body, is called himself; and is meant by giving his Flesh for the life of the World, Joh. 6. 51. that is, the whole Humane Nature in distinction from his Godhead, and second Person as God, as is noticed in those very Words, my Flesh, which I will give; and the giving of the Life thereof, as Joh. 10. is justly termed the giving himself: And so Heb. 9. 14. the sacrificing thereof (which was a whole Burnt-offering) is termed the offering up himself. He offered up himself by the eternal Spirit, that is, by his Godhead, who is that Spirit which quickneth that Humane Nature: This Spirit was the Offerer, and the Manhood the Sacrificer, and yet that Sacrifice is called himself: Even as the body of a man is called the Man, so in vulgar speech: and Mary, Joh. 20. 2. calls the body of Christ which she thought dead, the Lord. But then the Soul is much finer styled the Person; but take body and soul both as united into one Man, and the offering of both as so united, that to be sure is the offering of ones self. And in this sence the Scripture, especially that Epistle to the Hebrews, opposeth [that himself] that is, his humane Nature, to all other Sacrifices wherein Priests offered up things that were not themselves, but things extrinsecal to their Persons; as the blood of Bulls and Goats; and as when the idolatrous and superstitious Jews offered up their Children to Moloch, the fruit of their Bodies; the offering up of such things was not in any sence a sacrifice of themselves. But God being made flesh, that is, the second Person, the Son, taking an humane Nature unto one person with himself; hence, though he offered but that humane Nature, yet in opposition to such Forreign Offerings, he is said to have offered up himself, though the Godhead were not offered up; even as the Soul or the Person of a Man might be said to do, that offers up but his body as a sacrifice, and so but his bodily Life, though his Soul he doth not, and cannot offer, and in this opposition to things Forreign to a Person, it is said Heb. 9. 14. compared with verses 11, 12, 13. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal Redemption for us, for if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the Flesh. How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered [himself] without spot to God, &c. Wherein he doth compare Christ, who was Gods High Priest with their High Priests, saying that they offered but the blood of Bulls and Goats; things that could in no sence be called themselves, but he offered up himself; and more clearly, ver. 25. where his offering himself is opposed to the High-Priests offering other Creatures and not Themselves, in these words, nor yet that he should offer [himself] often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year [with blood of others, αἷμα ἄλλότριον, others blood.] So that the blood of Bulls and Goats, or by the same reason, the blood of other men (if there had been such Sacrifices) as suppose of Children, offered up by Father and Mother (which God required not, though the Idolatrous Jews practised it) yet all still had been but the blood of some other thing than himself, αἷμα ἄλλότριον; but this offering of Christ in opposition was of himself, as that Text hath it αἷμα ἑωυτοῦ, as also Rev. 1. 5.

Now then if you ask what that was which was the sacrifice, and yet is reckoned himself; 10 chap. to the Hebrews v. 5. resolves us that it was that body or humane Nature both soul and body prepared to be that sacrifice; Wherefore when he cometh into the World, he saith, Sacrifice and Offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me. So then this is a third sence wherein he offered himself.

Use. Let us set a Value upon this Gift and Ransome according to the Dignity of it. It was the greatness of the price is set forth hereby, (that he gave himself, which is the expresse scope of this Text in Tim. and Mat. 26. 28.) to shew the inestimable Value of the Gift. It was once said of a great Bargain, or Sale, and Purchase made by the Great, and in the Lump, between two great Personages, that the one bought, and the other sold, they knew not what: And truly although God knew, and Christ knows, what the Price comes to, yet we for whom it was given can never know nor estimate it to all eternity; Oh never! nor can we comprehend what this reacheth to, Christ gave himself: It is an unknown Gift and Ransome this. What is his Name, or his Sons Name, says Agur, Prov. 30. 4. Canst thou tell? And as little canst thou tell, what this [Giving himself] amounts to; thou maiest as well bind the Waters in thy Garment, and ascend to Heaven, &c. as Agur there speaks, as fathom to the bottom this depth and found what an infinite Treasure lies sunk therein. It is himself; None but himself that disbursed and parted with it knows what of himself went from him, when he gave himself. None knows the worth of himself, but himself, Rev. 19. 12. His Name is such, as 'tis said, none knows but himself; None but himself that disburseth it can tell what of himself he parted with, and went from him to make up this payment, none I say but he and his Father unto whom it was he gave himself, and who set and took the Price and made the Bargain for our Redemption, know the value. We use to set out things of the greatest worth and the vastest sums amongst Men, by a Kings Ransome. It is worth a Kings Ransome; so you use to say, in saying which you suppose to your selves some great King taken Captive and Prisoner by a potent Enemy able to retain and keep him; and how that then his whole Kingdom (as the Law and manner is) contributes and gives a Ransom worthy to restore him to his Throne again: And that is estimated also according to what proportion his Kingdom may be judged to be in Riches, or their Prince in Glory and Dignity. Oh! what a value then would be set upon a Kings becoming a Ransome himself, yea, of the great God made one Person with our Nature, and of his giving himself a Ransome, who is the King of Kings. If God sets a value upon each hair of his Childrens head; (which to expresse with esteem, they are said to be numbered by by him) then of what esteem with him (think we) must needs every thing of Christs, every hair of his head be, who is the head worth all the Saints themselves, all the Saints together, who are but the Body to Him.

There is yet a more special Reflection in this speech he gave himself, as it is in a special manner a setting forth the proper and peculiar love of Jesus Christ himself in this matter, proper I say to himself, as distinguished from the Father, and his love in giving him also. Nothing is or could be more expressive of a love and the greatness of it, then to say, he gave himself. You may therefore observe that they are often joyned together, and where this of giving himself is mentioned; there the other his love also is spoken of; Yea and this is purposely mentioned as the greatest thing by which his love could be set out. This Conjunction we find again and again, Eph. 5. 25. As Christ loved his Church, and gave himself for it. And a second time by Paul, Gal. 2. 20. Who loved me and gave himself for me. The highest Signification and Evidence of Love that is found amongst Men, is that in an Husband towards a Wife, that he gives himself to her, and so giving himself he gives all things with himself, that there needs no more be said or added to signify love. But lo! here is more, not onely Christ giving himself, his whole self to his Church, as an Husband doth: But a giving himself for his Church, as a Saviour, as Eph. 5. 23, 25. And that is it the Apostle would make impression of upon us, as the greatest Demonstration of his love to his Church; That when she was captived to sin and everlasting Misery, then he gives himself for her [to save her] as it follows there. We adore and admire his love; His love in giving himself to us, when by the Application of Redemption he is made ours by Grace. And how great a Favour is this to the Saints that live in Communion with Christ dayly, which they feel in the sweets of a real Enjoyment of such a Person, so great, so lovely, which they accordingly take in by the most exquisite spiritual sense, that the presence and Gift of such a Person requires of them. Oh but how great must his love be in giving himself for them so long ago, before they were; although the Application of him to them was the end of it. And whereas this transaction of giving himself, they know but by hear-say, and relation of the Scriptures; It was what he did for them in himself, (as the Phrase is, Col. 2. 15.) And so they take it in but by faith; yet when Christ himself is applied to thy Soul, then put but both together and let the distinct apprehension of each meet in any ones heart, that hath a principle of love to Christ in him; And what an infinite of love to us will the joynt stream of them arise to? Himself given, his whole self, yea and doubly given; Given to us in Application, and that not enough, but given for us; first, in Redemption; And so given over and over: Each of which Givings is enough to overcome and confound (with a loves confusion) the stoutest, hardest heart of any, yea of all Believers, when they come to comprehend these things. And it was Paul's Prayer for the Ephesians, chap. 3. 17, 18, 19. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by Faith; That ye being rooted and grounded in love may be able to comprehend with all Saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height: And know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge. Some Interpreters would have it, that the Apostle should speak all that of the height and depth, &c. of the love of Christ to us, because that doth follow so immediately; (I dispute not that now) but this I will say, that although the Fathers love in other respects exceeds, and is therefore to be extolled for the height and depth, &c. of it; and is in other Scriptures set forth accordingly; In that it was the Original of all: (for it was he that made choice of the Persons that shall be saved, contrived and designed all the grace and glory which each person so chosen shall have; yea and his love is also commended to us, in that he gave his onely begotten Son, &c. Rom. 5. 8. John 3. 16.) Yet still let me say it, that Christs love hath this whereby it excels; and which is peculiar to him in this matter, that it was he alone that gave himself, the Father gave not himself: He gave but a Son indeed, yet as a Person distinct from himself: And for a Father to give a Son who is dear to him, is love; but for him that is given to give himself, this in that respect speaks higher: That speaks a strain of more intimacy of love, then the Fathers is in that respect; although his son were never so dear and near to him, and inward with him. But on Christs part it was himself, and what was proper to himself in distinction from the Father, that that was given by

by himself. It was he that bare the brunt, that paid the price out of what was not his only as Appurtenances of him, but even out of himself. As therefore when God would swear, because he could swear by no greater, he swore [by himself]; So Christ when he would give a Gift to express and shew his love; because he could give nothing greater, he gives away himself, and that over and over. We are to render to each of those Persons, that Love and Honour which is due to them, (as the Apostle speaks of Men, in another case, Rom. 13. 7.) And look in what particular thing or respect the love of each of them is proper to each, our Affections of Love and Honour should accordingly uprise and apply themselves to render a suitable Return, that is, to give to the Son, what is the Sons: And to the Father, what is the Fathers. Let us therefore bring all of what Christ hath done home to our Hearts under that very Respect and Consideration, That it was he that gave himself, &c. And then withal, let all that can be said to commend the Fathers Love; let it all come in upon our hearts; as his giving a Son, an only begotten Son, one in Essence and Eternal Fellowship with himself, as he is God with him; (my Father and I are one;) and then let us meditate on Gods giving his Son, consider'd as he is God-Man, in that God chose and designed him as such chiefly and principally, and in the first place for his own peculiar delight, as he saies of him, Isa. 43. 10. Mine Elect in whom my Soul delights. Even that Glory which was to be in him, as God-Man, was an object in its self more lovely and dearer unto God for him to please himself with, and to take delight in, than Millions of Worlds, yea than all that which he could have made. And therefore for God the Father to part with such a Son, to give such a Son and all the glory of his, in which he so much delighted, was infinite Love. But yet still even all this will serve the more to commend the Love of Christ the son to us, that himself was given by himself; I say in that respect it will be the more heightened on his part also, that he should part with such a Father that so loved him; and his own Glory at once. In and from the Old Testament we find the love of the Father is greatened to us by giving Men or Nations; when yet they were most wicked, and so most hateful to God of themselves: To give them for a Ransome for his People: And it is used by God himself as an Argument of infinite Love, Isaiah 43. 4. So as still his Love is greatened to us by all; and it is he, and none other, even this Christ (who is God) of whom Isaiah speaks these very things, both in the one place and the other which I have cited: It is he of whom he saies, that All the Nations are but as the drop of a Bucket to him; Compare for this but verse 3, 9, 10, 11. of that 40 Chapter, with the 12, 15, 17. Verses: And you will see all these Words are spoken of him. Oh what a gift was this then! How much more cause have we to say, then the Apostle of the Corinthians Collection for the Saints; Oh! Blessed be God for this unspeakable Gift.

C H A P. I I I.

It is proved in the General, that Christ was made Sin, and a Curse for us, because he redeeming us who were under the Law, must become that, which we were in the Account, and Judgement of the Law. That how Christ was made Sin for us, demonstrated and explained in what respect he was so. Uses drawn from the Doctrines.

IT is said Gal. 4. 4, 5. That God sent his Son made under the Law to redeem them that are unær the Law; Now whatever Christ redeemed us from; he was himself made for us; redeeming us from it by being made it. He that made the Law was made under it for us. Both he and we were under the Law; but with this difference; we were born under it, but he was made under it, by a voluntary Covenant freely undergoing it. To be under the Law is to be subject to all that the Law is able to say or do. So we use to express the condition of a Subject, saying he lives under the Laws. And so the Apostle expresseth it, Rom. 3. 19. What the Law says, it says unto them that are under the Law. So that whosoever is under the Law, whatever the Law is able to say and exact, to him it says, and of him it requires it. And if Christ will be made under the Law for Sinners, the Law will have full as much to say to him, as unto Sinners themselves: that is, as he is their Undertaker.

And the Law hath more to say to Sinners then to any other Creatures.

1. It can accuse them, and call them Sinners to their Faces: It can arraign them and lay all their Sins to their charge, and will not leave out one tittle in that Inditement. It can say, thou art a Blasphemer, thou an Adulterer, thou a Drunkard, &c. It does not, it will not spare at any time to speak this.

2. It can call them curst for all these Sins, Gal. 3. 10. Curst is every one, &c.

There is the accusing power of the Law, and there is the condemning power, as appears by the Law in our own Consciences, Rom. 2. 15. it accuseth, and Verse 1. it condemneth: And so you have both a Witness to accuse, and a Judge to condemn, in your own Breasts, which (as the Apostle saith) shews but the effect of the Law, which in it self it will do, much more to them that know it in the rigour of it: If therefore he who is our Redeemer, will come under the Law for Sinners, the Law will say as much to him, as it had to say to us; give him as ill Language, exact as hard measure from him as from us. The Law is backt with Gods Justice, and so will not respect or spare the greatness of Christs Person, if he once come under it. As we are Creatures, and he our Surety, it will as boldly command him to keep the Commandments on our behalf, as it would us. Look what it would have said to us as we were Sinners, it will as boldly and as freely speak, and speak out against him, onely with this differing respect of Reverence to him, as by himself voluntarily made under it, whereas we were born Slaves under it.

That therefore this clamour of the Law might be fully stopt, and we redeemed and freed from what ever the Law had to say against us, Christ was made all that we had made our selves.

As 1. were we Sinners? Christ that was made under the Law, was made Sin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. That sin might not be imputed to us, ver. 19 Again, were we accurst? Christ is made a Curse for us, to redeem us from the curse of the Law, Gal. 3. 13. That so, by his being made Sin, we may say, Who shall lay any thing to our charge? Rom. 8. 33. and by his being made a curse, we may as triumphantly say, Who shall condemn? Christ hath dyed, Rom. 8. 34. So as, though but the one is here mentioned, yet we will handle both. We will both shew how he was made Sin for us, and how he was made a Curse for us. Indeed neither of these Places do mention both distinctly; but yet either place includes and supposeth both. He had not been made a Curse, if he had not first been made Sin: He could not be made sin, but he must likewise be made a Curse, the consequent of Sin. They are two strange Words to be spoken of Gods Son, and such, as it had been blasphemy for us to speak, if God himself had not spake them first. And now that he hath spoken them, we had need take them in a right sense, or else they will be blasphemy in our thoughts still.

1. Christ was made Sin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. By sin some have understood onely an Offering for sin; and then to be made sin there, and a curse here, comes all to one. I confess it is sometimes so taken; as the Offerings in the Levitical Law are called Sin: but it is not so here; but truly and more plainly, for the guilt of Sin. And the reasons why it must be so meant here, are, first, Because that which sin is here opposed unto is Righteousness: He was made Sin, that we might be made the Righteousness of God in him. Now by the Righteousness of his made ours, is here meant, not onely the benefits which his Righteousness deserved and purchased, but his very fulfilling the Law: So Rom. 8. 4. That the Righteousness of the Law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Therefore (as the Law of Opposition carries it) his being made Sin is not onely his being made the Punishment, the Curse that sin had deserved, but even the very guilt and breach of the Law it self was made his; even as his Righteousness was made ours. And how this came about, we shall shew presently.

2. He was made Sin which he knew not: that is, not experimentally, he was not conscious and guilty of it in his own Person. He was made Sin, who knew no sin. Now if onely Punishment for Sin were here meant, this were not true: For he experimentally knew what punishment for sin was, as fully as we do, Heb. 4. 15. We have an High-Priest that was [toucht] with the feeling of our Infirmities, and toucht to the Quick too. His Soul knew full well what it was to suffer for Sin; but he knew not what Sin the breach of the Law was: He knew not what it was to act Sin; and yet this which he knew not he was some way or other made, even made the guilt of Sin.

'Tis time to explain how, least any of your thoughts run to far. The Text helps us in it: As we are made his Righteousness, so he was made our Sin. Now we are made his Righteousness meerly by imputation; That is, all his Obedience to the Law is accounted ours, is reckoned ours, even as if we had fulfilled it; Though we knew none of it. It was fulfilled, not by us, but in us, Rom. 8. 4. He fulfilled it, not we: So that there was an exchange made, and all our breaches of the Law were made his; Our Debts put over to him, that is, reckoned to him, put upon his Score. That is all, Let your Thoughts therefore go no further. It was we that like Sheep went astray, and not he, and yet the Lord laid on him the Iniquities of us all, Isa. 53. 6. And to be made Sin in this sense, is but to be charged and accused as a Sinner, and not made really so by committing it. As we use to say, when we would accuse and prove one to be a Thief, we say, I will will make a Thief of you: that is, not make you steal, but prove you to be such. So this making here is but Gods reckoning him as a Transgressor. That Phrase is used ver. 12. of Isaiah 53. He was numbred amongst the Transgressors: Reckoned such by God and Men. By Imputation then he was counted as one that hath broken the Law. And yet (to free your Thoughts from the least mistake) though by Imputation, yet not such as whereby we were made Sinners in Adam, which was by Imputation but Originally. Now Christ was not so made our Sin. That which is imputed may be said to be imputed, either by Derivation, or else by voluntary Assumption, or willing taking it upon one: Now Adam's Sin though it was but imputed to us, yet it was by Derivation, and by a natural and necessary Covenant. But our Sin though to Christ it is imputed, yet not by Derivation, but by a willing, free Undertaking or taking them off from us, and by a voluntary Covenant. So that although he was made Sin, yet in that he was freely made so, therefore that Imputation stained not him, nor his Nature, but he remained holy, undefiled, and separate from Sinners; Whereas the Imputation of Adam's

Adam's Sin stained and depraved us his Posterity. For though that Sin of his was but Imputedly made ours, yet so, as we being one in him, are truly said to have sinned in him; and therefore his Sin is ours, because we committed it, and sinned in him, Rom. 5. 12. But of Christ we must abhor to think so; Nay, in this doth the Imputation of his Righteousness to us differ from the Imputation of our Sins to him, that his Righteousness is so imputed to us, as we by reason of that Covenant between God and him, may be said to have fulfilled the Law in him, and the Law is said to be fulfilled in us, because we were in him, but not so are our sins imputed to him. It cannot be said in any sense, he was made Sin in us, but for us onely: or the sin which was committed first in us, and by us, considered in our selves, was made his; for though we were in him, yet not he in us: for the Root bears the Branches, and not the Branches the Root.

Having thus shewn how it was, and in what sense; we will now shew,

I. By Scripture.

II. By Reason.

I. By Scripture. And here take the Instance of the Scape-Goat, over whose head the Sins of the People were confest (Levit. 16. 21.) by Aarons putting his hand upon it; therein acting the part of God the Father, laying the Iniquities of us all upon Christ, and translating them from the People. To which those Phrases in Isaiah 53. do refer. And this was in respect of leaving the guilt of their sins, not the punishment of them upon him. For to express and hold forth Christ as made an Offering for sin, that other Goat was sacrificed: but the Scape-Goat was ordained to hold forth Christs bearing the Guilt of our sins; for that Goat was carried away into a Land of Separation, or a place inaccessible. And so Christ (whom John saw as the Lamb of God bearing the sins of the World) carries away our sins, to an utter abolishing of them from before the Face of God: so that (as it is in Jer. 50. 20.) They shall be sought for, but not found, they being taken away, (as the Phrase of the New Testament is.) Christ had them upon him, when he was Baptized [ἀρσῶν, suscipiens, portans, aufrens] and principally, when he was upon the Cross, as 1 Pet. 2. 24. Who his own self bare our sins on his Body (that is his Humane Nature) on the Tree. So Heb. 9. 28. Christ was once offered to bear the Sins of many; and he shall appear the second time without sin. Therefore now this time he appeared (to John) carrying the sins of the World: but being risen, justified from all those sins, he shall appear without the guilt of them lying upon him. And accordingly when we was in this life, he demeaned himself as one that had been a Sinner, as in appearance such: The flesh he took had the likeness of sinful flesh, Rom, 8. 4. The Fore-skin of his flesh was circumcised, as if he had been born in sin. So his Mother was purified, Luke 2. 23, 24. and offered an Offering, as if she had conceived him in sin; And Levit. 12. 2, 6. this was a Sin-Offering, namely, for that sin which their Seed was brought forth in. And as in those Rites at his birth, so in his whole life he submitted to the Ceremonial Law; the intent of which was to be Publica Confessio, and like to Penance, whereby they were to profess themselves Sinners, and to stand in need of a Mediatour, and so thrice a year he came unto the Temple, &c. All which, if he had not some way been made a Sinner, he ought not to have done; for he should thereby have professed that which was not. Yea, in those Confessions, those passionate Psalms made for him, we find him acknowledging of sin as his own. This will appear by some passages in those Psalms, which are Prophetically made of Christ, and utter the inward addresses of his Soul unto his Father. And of all the Psalms, or other Prophecies of this Nature, there is no one except the Twenty second, which can challenge more passages in so small a space, applyed expressly unto Christ in the New Testament, then the Sixty Nine Psalm. In verse 4. we have it, They hated me without a cause. This we find applied by Christ himself, as Prophecied of himself, John 15. 25. Again we have it verse 9. of that Psalm, The Zeal of thine house hath eaten me up. This we have in like manner, John 2. 19. applied unto Christ: Moreover the next words of that 9th ver. The Reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me. Lo you have them applied by Paul as expressly unto Christ, Rom. 15. 3.

Again, that Passage, verse 21. They gave me Gall for my Meat, and in my thirst they gave me Vinegar to drink. You know both the story and the application of it, by the Evangelists Matthew, Mark, and John, Then that other passage that follows, Let their Table be made a snare, you have it applied accordingly unto the Jews that crucified him for their crucifying of him, Rom. 11. 9.

Now then so many of these being so applied, why should not those other also be so applied? as when it is said, ver. 4, 5. Then I restored that which I took not away, Oh God thou knowest my foolishness, and my Guiltiness is not hid from thee. How fitly do these words express the imputation of sin to him. It was a proverbial speech, when a Man suffer'd innocently as to his own person, to say that, He restored that which he took not; and so Christ on the Cross is brought in here speaking. For as Isaiab tells us, He bore our sins: with Oh in the next verse of the Psalm he confesseth as his own, having taken them upon him. Oh God thou knowest my foolishness, (that is my sin, as foolishness it is usually taken) and my sins are not hidden from thee. Which is plainly in other words that which the Apostle says of him, 2 Cor. 5. He that knew no sin, was made sin. The like you have in the 40th Psalm, Sacrifice and Burnt-offering thou wouldst not; Lo I come, &c. ver. 6, 7. which how it is applied to Christ you may read in Heb. 10. neither can it well be applied to any other. Yet ver. 12. he saies, My Iniquities take hold of me: He calls them his, not by perpetration, but by a voluntary assumption, and by imputation reckoning them as his. So Isaiab 53. 6. [He laid on him the Iniquities of us all] In the Hebrew 'tis, He caused to meet in him the Iniquities of us all: He was made the great Ocean, into which the guilt of all our sins did run.

Now second for the reason of it.

I. He was not only an Inter-nuncius, (as Socinus would have him) or one that came as an extraordinary Messenger between God and us; but he was Sponsor, a Surety. So Heb. 7. 22. Such as Judah undertook to be for Benjamin, Gen. 43. 9. I will be Surety for him and bring him to thee, or let me bear the blame for ever. Or such as Paul was to Onesimus, Philemon 18, 19. If he hath wronged thee, or owes ought, (says he) put it on my account; I will repay it. Just so doth Christ engage himself unto his Father for us: If they have wronged thee in any thing, put it on my account, reckon it to me, and I will repay and satisfy for it. A Surety whose Name is put into a Bond, is not onely bound to pay the Debt, but he makes it his own debt also, even as well as 'tis the Principals; and he may be sued and charged for the debt as well as he. And so Christ when he once made himself a Surety, he thereby made himself under the Law, and so put himself in the room of sinners, that what the Law could lay to their charge, it might lay to his.

And, Secondly, There was a necessity, that if he would take our punishment upon him, and so satisfy Justice, he should first take on him the guilt of our sins, For the Judgment of God is according to truth. The Party whom God punisheth for sin, must be some way found guilty of that sin, or else Judgment proceeds not according to right rules: Guilty, not by inherency, yet by imputation and account. For as we can have no Interest in any benefit merited by Christ, but we must first be partakers of the Righteousness that purchased it; that must first be made ours, and then his benefits; so if Christ will be made a Curse for us (which is the demerit of sin) he must first be made sin. And therefore Isaiab in the 53 Chap. of his Prophecy, when at the 4. and 5. Verses he had said that Christ our Surety was not punished for himself, but bore our griefs, &c. That is, those that we should have borne; and was wounded for our Transgressions, &c. He then goes on to clear it, how it was done: we (says he) as sheep had gone astray, but God laid upon him the iniquity of us all: That is, he having first charged upon Christ our sins, which we in our Persons committed, when once they were thus laid upon him, Gods Justice then wounded him for them. Unjust it is not, that a Person righteous should suffer for an unrighteous Man; (Peter affirms it, 1. Pet. 3. 18.) but then the unrighteousness of that Man must be laid upon him and made his.

Thus in General.

But when we say, Christ was made sin; what sin is it that he was made, and that was thus imputed to him! was it sin in the General onely, and in the abstract evil of it? Surely more; for how that should be imputed in the universal notion of it, is hard to conceive, though 'tis true, that he apprehended the evil thereof more fully than all Man-kind ever did, or shall do. The Scripture seems to speak more; and as if he bore particular sins; so all these fore-mentioned Places have it. As 1 Pet. 2. 24. He bare our [sins] in his own Body on the Tree, that we being dead to sin, &c. So over the Scape-Goat were the particular sins of the Congregation confest. And so in those fore-mentioned Psalms he speaks as of multitudes of Iniquities, and innumerable evils that compassed him about and came over his head. And as Christ bare sins (in the Plural;) and innumerable sins; so he bare the sins of all, and every particular Man he died for: So Isaiah 53. 6. God caused to meet in him the Iniquities of us [all:] He being made as the common drain and sink into which all the sins of every particular man do run, and the Center in whom they all meet: and that meeting implies an assembly of particular sins.

Again, if he bare the particular sin of every man he dyed for; what were they gross sins onely, and those which were more eminent for guilt? why, not all and every one, both small and great! for where shall we set the limits? why may it not be thought, that as there was a Bill of all the Persons he died for given him, (for Christ died not for Propositions onely, to make them true, but for Persons, and therefore is said to know his sheep by Name, John 10. 3.) so also that he had a Bill of their particular sins, so as not one sin was left out unreckoned to him. Adam had not a Bill of our Persons; for his sin is naturally derived to as many as shall come of him: but Christ dyed out of love to Persons, and that out of a voluntary Covenant; and so it was necessary, that all their Names should be enrolled and given him, as himself says, John 17. 6. These they were, and thou gavest them me: And as their Persons, so all the sins of all those Persons they were all to meet in him, and to be laid to his charge. And there are these reasons for it:

1. God was to deal in Justice with him (as was said) and as a Surety he was to satisfy to the uttermost farthing: And if so, it was meet he should have an Account, and know the several Items of what he paid for.

2. Therein it was, that he shewed more love in dying for one than for another: As for Mary more than another, because he bare much for her, and more then for another; which caused her to love him more. And how is it that a great sinner is more beholden to Christ for his dying for him, then a small sinner is, but by his bearing more sins for the one then for the other, and so suffering more for him? which if it had been carried in a confused and general manner, and as it were in a Summa Totalis without the distinct reckoning of particulars, is hard to conceive how it should be.

3. It was needful, that so a sinner might say with boldness, as Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay anything to my charge: Ne aliquid, not the least, because that Quicquid what ever it was, it was laid to Christs charge.

And if it now be askt, how this could be, that so many Millions of sins should be distinctly considered by him in his sufferings. I Answer.

1. He that is פְּלִמְוִי (as Daniel calls him, Dan. 8. 13.) Is qui habet omnia in numerato, He who hath all things before him at his fingers ends, and as it were in ready Coin ready told over; could easily keep a distinct account of all our Sins.

2. He who now is in Heaven, knows all that is done here below as a Man, and hath all the businesses of the World in his head and guides them, and hath all the Accounts of the World by heart, so as he is able (as at the latter day he will) as Man exactly to give unto every Man his Accounts, both Receipts and Expences, and that to the utmost farthing! for every work shall come into Judgment before the Man Christ Jesus, be it good or evil. And Peter tells us, he is ready to judge both quick and dead, all that are alive, and all that are dead. He who can do all this, is able to keep a particular account of all the sins which he expiated; and if he did not as Man know all things here below (which in them-themselves are but finite, though to us innumerable) how as Man were he experimentally able to compassionate all his Saints upon all occasions, and in all their sufferings, (as he is said to do, Heb. 2. ult. and 4. ult.) If now in Heaven his Understanding as Man be thus enlarged and vast, why, when he descended into Hell (as when our sins were reckoned to him he did) should he not be able as well to take in all and every particular sin of his Elect for whom he dyed? Yea, this stretching of his Understanding then, thus to take in all mens sins, did prepare it for that vastness which it now hath in Heaven, even as our Humiliation makes way for comfort and consolation. Lastly, if Satan could shew him all the glory of the World in the twinkling of an eye as it were; why might not God shew him all our sins in as full a manner, and set them in order before him?

Use. 1. See the immense Love of Christ unto his Elect, in that he would not onely be made a Curse, but sin too for them; which he being Holiness it self, must needs be most abhorrent of such an Imputation, that which we most hate, how do we abhor the imputation and name of! That excellency which we most affect, what an insufferable injury do we count it to be blemish in! For a chaste and undefiled Maid to be counted an Whore, how nearly would it touch her, how deeply affect her! But for Holiness it self to be numbred among Transgressors, for God to be called Devil, yea, Prince of Devils, how beyond all expression insupportable must it needs be!

2. Learn we to confess and take upon us our sins in particular. Mens sorrow for sin is usually General and confused: They acknowledge they are Sinners, &c. but Jesus Christs Soul could not escape with a General Charge: (as that he stood in the room of sinners) but the particulars are charged on him. As he says of our Persons to his Father. Thine they are, and thou gavest them me: So maiest thou say to him as concerning thy sins, Mine they are, and thou tookst them on thee. And if Christ took them on him to satisfy for them, thou must at least take them on thee, to humble thee.

3. If thou canst not confess all thou art guilty of; (as thou canst not) yet comfort thy self with this, that Jesus Christ knew all particulars to satisfy for them; and so entreat the Lord to cleanse thee from thy secret sins, which were not hid from him. What the Apostle speaks to terrify Hipocrites, That God is greater then their Hearts, and knows more by them then they can do by themselves; that may we consider to our comforts, that Christ is greater then our Hearts, and knows more of our sins by us then all we do, yea, and knew them, to take them off from us.

4. Make use of Christs Blood and satisfaction, not for thy sins in the lump, but for particular sins, because he satisfied for Particulars. Not onely spread the Plaister over all, but lay particular Plaisters of his Blood, to particular sins. And as in crossing a Writing which you would not have read, you not onely draw lines but also race and scratch out every word in particular, that it might not be read: so apply Christs satisfaction, and his being made sin to every tittle and circumstance in sins more hainous, and go over them again and again with cross lines of Christs Blood, especially in two Cases.

1. When anew sin is afresh committed. Christ is a Fountain to wash us every day (Zach. 13. 2.) from those daily pollutions that befall us. This was Typified out in the old Law, when they brought Sacrifices upon every particular occasion. Even so should we (not offer up as the Papists in the Masses) but put God in mind of Christs Sacrifice for particular sins committed. So 1 John 2. 1, 2, 3. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, and he was the Propitiation for those Sins. Or,

2. When a sin stares a Man in the Face much, as  Davids Murder did in his, when it said it was ever before him. In this case have recourse to this, That Christ did bear it, and apply Christs bearing of it, unto the Guilt still as it riseth: And as you lay Aqua fortis upon letters of Ink to eat them out; so still be a dipping the hands of thy Faith in Christs blood, and through Faith applying of that blood to the sin. This do in every Prayer and in every Sacrament; and thou shalt secretly find the horrour of it diminish, and those Letters of guilt wherewith it was written in thy Conscience, grow paler and dimmer till they vanish.

5. It may serve to strengthen thy Faith against particular sins, by this, that Christ bore them. Say and plead to Christ when thou beggest pardon, Was not this sin in the number? And as we make it a great up-holding to Faith; to consider that God knew afore what we would be, and that we would sin, and yet chose us; and that therefore no sins will put him off; so we may as well make use of this like consideration, That Jesus Christ also when he dyed for us, knew what we would be, and what our sins would be, and yet refused not our Bill of sins, nor our Names given in to him, but bare all those sins of ours in his Body on the Tree. And if he had meant to have refused thee for thy sins, he would have done it then. When a new sin is committed, we are apt to be amazed and to call all in question: If indeed thou couldst commit a sin which God and Christ had not known; If any sin were or could be now new unto Christ, then it might trouble thee; but there is none that is so; but even this sin that troubles thy Conscience so, was amongst the rest.

6. See the fulness and compleatness of Justification, together with the way of dispensing it.

1. The way of dispensing it. We think with our selves, How shall the Righteousness of Christ come to be made mine: shall I a sinner ever become Righteous? O what a Wonder were this! Yet behold, a greater Wonder is here; Christ who is Righteousness it self, was made sin, that so we might be made the Righteousness of God in him.

2. See here the compleatness of Justification: All sins are laid to Christ, that we might say, Ne aliquid, not the least thing shall be exacted of us (Who shall lay any thing, &c. Rom. 8. 33.) and that we might with boldness come to a particular reckoning with God, nothing fearing that any exception can be made, or that the least sin was left out of the Catalogue which Christ had of them, that should yet remain unpaid for. We may see here the absoluteness of Gods Pardon, in that to make sure work Christ was made sin, and took upon him the guilt of all our Transgressions to answer for them: so that God gave us an absolute discharge: Thus ver. 21. [not imputing their Trespases to them] but looking for payment at Christs hands, who was made sin for them. In Law both the Principal and the Surety use to stand bound; but God here did from everlasting secretly (as it were) cancel our Bond, and keeps Christs onely; and therefore it stands Christ in hand to see our sins answered for: And in that he shall appear without sin, it should comfort us that we shall do so in like manner.

7. It may teach us how to Mourn and be Troubled; not for punishment onely, but for sin as sin also. Christ in satisfying for them, not onely bare our punishment, but our sins also; which are things distinct from our Sorrows: And therefore we in sorrowing for sin should as distinctly mourn for sin as for misery the effect of it.

8. Those that are the greatest sinners should mourn most for sin, and love Christ most; and this, because he hath borne their sins, and more of their sins then of others. They are to love much, not simply because to them much is forgiven, or that Christ pardons them much, and so passeth a greater Act of Grace in pardoning them then he does to others; but because Christ paid more for them, he underwent and suffered more that their sins might be forgiven then for other Men. Mary loved much because much was forgiven her, Luke 7. 47. But Paul goes farther, thereby exalting the Grace of Christ, that he came into the World to save sinners, whereof I am chief (says he, 1 Tim. 1. 15.) As a natural Son is more bound to a Mother then an adopted Son can be, because he besides his Education and Inheritance was moreover born in her Womb, and she underwent many painful throws for him (and the harder her Labour is with any, the more they should love her;) So we are bound to love Christ, not simply for forgiveness, but also for that he bore us in his soul, and our sins; and had a harder labour of it with some of us (who were greater sinners) then he had with many others.

C H A P. I V.

How Christ was made a Curse for us. That it was the curse of the moral Law, and the whole substance of what it threated. Arguments to prove that Christ suffered it.

WE have seen how Christ was made sin; let us now see how he was made a Curse: The other was but by Imputation, but this by Infliction: He was made sin who knew not what it was to sin; but in being made a Curse, he knew it to his cost; it entered into his Soul and Bowels. To explain this a little;

1. This Curse was not merely the Curse of the Judicial Law, or of a Malefactor, hanging upon a Tree: For the Curse which he was to Redeem us from, was the Curse of the Moral Law, not of the Judicial. It was not the Curse of such a Malefactor's death before Men, but before God; for from that Curse we were to be redeemed; and therefore that Curse was he made. And Gal. 3. 10, 13. we have it expressly thus; The Law says, Cursed is every one, &c. It's true, that this hanging on a Tree (on which Judicial Punishment a Curse was pronounced) was made the figure of Christs being Cursed with the Curse of the Moral Law; but that was the Curse which Christ was made; and therefore Deut. 21. 22. God afore-hand Typically accursing that Death (as aiming at his Son) says of him that hangs on a Tree, that he is accursed before him. So that, his Son whom this aimed at, was not onely cursed before Men, in that he was put to such an accursed death; but was also cursed before God, with the Curse of the Moral Law; whereof the Apostle brings this as the sign and proof, that that death which in the Judicial Law onely was accursed, was executed upon him.

2. The Curse of the Moral Law spoken of, ver. 10. is opposed to Blessing: And as the Blessings of God are the matter of his promises, so Curses are the matter of his Threatenings. Blessings are conveyed by Promises, Curses by Threatenings; the Threatenings of the Law are the Cannons, and the Curses in them are the Bullets. And as whom God blesteth, he blesteth with all Blessings; so whom he curseth, he curseth with all Cursings. As there is a fulness of Blessings in the Gospel, (as Rom. 15. 29.) so the Moral Law is full of all Curses; which notwithstanding Christ underwent.

3. The Curse contains in it the avenging Wrath of God; and is more then a bare punishment from God: As Gods Favour is the Life of all Blessings; so Gods avenging Wrath gives weight to all Curses. The Saints are punished in Anger, but not cursed in their Chastisements, because they are inflicted on them out of love. But here we must warily distinguish between loving the person punished, and punishing that beloved Person out of love. God though he loved the Person of Christ when he punished him, yet he punished him, not out of love, but wrath. When he punisheth the Saints, he both punisheth Persons beloved, and also out of love, which stirs up anger. But he punisheth Christ out of wrath; and therefore he was made a Curse. His Person was beloved; but he being made sin to that end to bear the full punishment due to sin; God therefore out of wrath punisheth sin imputed to him. Not Gods wrath, but an anger arising from love, is it that chastiseth us: but it is not so with Christ; the wrath of God was poured forth on him. Which yet differs from his punishing of wicked Men, whose Persons he hates; and whom he punisheth out of wrath also. But though he loves Christs Person, yet he punisheth sin in him, out of pure wrath, and lets Justice fly upon him to have its full Penniworths out of him, he lets wrath suck the blood of his Soul, till it falls off, as the Leech when it is filled, and breaks.

So that put all these three considerations together, that Christ was made the Curse of the Law Moral, not Judicial onely : that the Curse thereof contains in it all Curses ; and that those Curses are laid and set on with Gods Wrath ; and this will be the Doctrine.

Chap. 4.

That the whole Curse that our Persons were Subject unto from the Law Christ underwent to redeem us from it. For,

1. That Curse which we were redeemed from he was made ; but we were redeemed from the whole Curse ; therefore he was made, or underwent the whole Curse.

2. That Curse which contains all Curses in it Christ was to be made for us ; Now such is the Curse of the Moral Law. For as the least breach of the Law is Copulative, and he that offends in one, is guilty of all ; so are the Curses of the Law ; he that is cursed with any one, is cursed with them all. As there is a fulness of Blessings, so of Curses ; As therefore a blessed Man is called Vir Beatitudinum, a Man of Blessednesses, Psal. 1. 1. as being blessed with all Blessings, Eph. 1. 3. Being Heir of all the Promises. So he that is Cursed is exposed to all Curses ; and so was Christ ; and therefore he is called Vir Dolorum, a Man of Sorrows, as being the Center of them, (Isa. 53. 3.) And as all our sins met in him, so all our sorrows ; and from his Birth all the great Ordinance of Gods Curses were ready charged with wrath and bent against him, and were all in their order discharged, and lett off upon him. And therefore, not his suffering, but his sufferings are mentioned by Peter, 1 Pet. 4. 13. Being tempted (not in one, but) in all things wherein we were, Sin onely excepted, Heb. 2. 18. In universali Hominum miseria, immersus, says Bernard : τῶν ὅλων τὰς πάντας κατὰ εὐς διαδέχεται, says Justin Martyr : He wholly took upon him all the Curses of all ; he was wholly and fully Cursed.

Justin Martyr contra Tryphonem.

Now to give some Reasons of it ;

1. The first shall be, because he was become a Debter to the whole Law by voluntary suretiship (as was said) for us. And therefore was circumcised, and so made under the Law ; and therefore that whole Curse and punishment which the Law required, he was to undergo, ere the Law would free him. And for this reason, when he was to suffer any thing, as well as to do any thing, you shall find him speaking in the Language of a Debtour that could not now evade it. So John 3. 14. The Son of Man must be lift up : thus likewise Mark 8. 31. Luke 24. 26. and Mat. 26. 54. These things (says he) the Son of Man ought to have suffered : He was now entered into Bond, and it was his duty to pay even the utmost farthing. It is not the custom or manner of the Law to abate any things ; and therefore he undergoes the whole Curse, or we are not freed.

2. God dealt with him in Justice, and Justice was that which he was to satisfy ; which could not be till he had borne the whole Punishment due to sin, Rom. 3. 25. 26. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God. ver. 26. To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness : that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Compared with Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the Charge of Gods elect ? It is God that Justifieth. This Justice is shewn in our Redemption : for Christ redeemed us not Vi sed Justitia : so in that Rom. 3. 25. and not Potestativè, out of his Prerogative and Greatness, bearing us out by meer favour, without satisfying Justice ; but rationabiliter, by a way of Equity, Salvis Justitiæ regulis ; by paying ἀντίλυτρον, a Correspondent Ransome even in Proportion ; a Tooth for a Tooth as the Law required, 1 Tim. 2. 6. He was not onely to make Intercession, but Satisfaction. As he is called an Advocate ; 1 John 2. 2. so also a Propitiation : he has paid for the favour which he now intercedes for. And as he is called an Intercessor, so (Rev. 5. 6.) a Lamb slain : and by bearing our whole punishment, he made his Intercession more prevalent. Yea, I will lay down this for a Conclusion, ere I go any farther : That Christ was dispensed with in nothing. Justice abated him nothing of that punishment which was due to us : It regarded not the Greatness or Dignity of his Person, to spare him in the least. So that if there had been any thing necessarily to have been undergone for satisfaction, which was not compatible with his Person, he must not have undertook it. For Justice (if God go that way) will have its full due, or nothing: And the reason is evident; for if Christ had been abated in any thing, he might have been abated in one thing as well as in an other, and so in all: but he says, it was necessary for him to suffer; and the same necessity lay on him to suffer all that was due, as well as any thing at all.

But you will say; did not the Dignity of his Person avail to some abatement, so as one Drop of his Blood might have served? The Answer is, That indeed the Dignity of his Person did add an infinite Merit to every thing he suffered; but not so, that any particular should be abated. Again, This his Dignity conduced to the acceptation of his Sufferings for many Persons; that what that one Person did should be for many; (as Paul says) but it struck off no part of the Debt, or of the things to be paid. It caused that that one Payment should stand for Many; but not that a farthing of that Payment should be wanting. But ere we go over any of the Particulars, we must answer an Objection, which is this, That there were many particular evils of Punishments which were Ingredients in many of our Cups, which yet he never tasted of, as Sicknes, and Distempers of Body; for his Body saw no Corruption, neither before Death nor after. And many like particular branches of the Curse which befall Men for Sin, he met not with; Not a Bone of him was broken. How then did he satisfie for the whole Curse? Yea, Hell it self, and the Eternity of its Punishments, the Worm of Conscience, Despair, &c. he endured not; how then underwent he the whole Curse following upon sin? I Answer,

1. (In General) Know, that the Wrath of God is the whole Curse; it is the Total Summ of all Curses, it is the Curse in Solido, in Grosse: And as a payment consisting of many Farthings, may be made in one piece of Gold; so all particular Curses may be undergone in bearing that one great Curse, the Original of Curses, for otherwise the Angels now in Hell should not undergo the whole Curse; seeing many miseries that befall Men here they are not capable of. The wrath of God is either exprest Mediatly, in Particular Punishments, or Immediately upon the Soul. Now this Immediate wrath eminently contains all Mediate Crosses in it. The Cup of the Lords wrath which Christ drank up, is said to be full of Mixture; for all evils were strained into it. If therefore it can be proved, that Christ underwent the whole wrath of God, it may be said, That he underwent all Curses, although he had endured none of the miseries of this Life. Which (among other Interpretations I have elsewhere given) may perhaps be the intendment of those Words, Mat. 8. 17. where the Evangelist quotes out of Isaiah, That Christ bare our Sickneses; and so by vertue of that his bearing them, he healed them. The meaning whereof is not, That he bare the Sickneses of the Body; but that he sustaining the Wrath of God, which was more then the Gout, Stone, or what ever else, might be said virtually to bear them all, and by vertue of that heal them. And so in that place, Isa. 53. 10. The Phrase translated [bruising him] is by some read, [He or his Soul was made sick.]

2. It is in his Passive Obedience as it is in his Active, when it is said he fulfilled every Jota of the Law; the meaning is not, that he performed every Duty; for he performed not the Duty of a Husband to a Wife, or of a Magistrate, &c. in this World; but in fulfilling the Law of Love (which was the summe of the Law) he fulfilled all. So in his Passive Obedience, by undergoing the Wrath of God he underwent the summe of the Curse, the Curse in Solido.

3. It is in Temporal Curses as in Temporal Blessings. Many particular good things may be with-held, when yet God with-holds no good thing from his Children, in that he vouchsafes them his Favour which is better then all; and so makes up all Temporal Promises an hundred-fold. Thus is it in Temporal Curses; it was not necessary that Christ should endure each particular, if he endured Gods Wrath; he fulfilled the whole in undergoing that.

C H A P. V.

An Enumeration of the Particulars of the Curse which Christ Endured. That assuming our Nature, he took also those Infirmities which sin hath brought upon us. That a painful wretched Life being the Curse of our first Fathers Sins, the Life of Christ answerably was filled with Miseries and Sorrows.

NOW for the particulars of this Curse, it were endless to go over all those that he endured. We will therefore have recourse to, and instance onely in that first Curse which was laid on that first Adam, and in his Name, upon all his Posterity, as we find it recorded, Gen. 3. 17, 18, 19. And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy Wife, and hast eaten of the Tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the Ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy Life. ver. 18. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee: and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. ver. 19. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return. Compared with Chap. 2. 17. But of the tree of the Knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely dye. And to shew how all the particulars of the Curse there mentioned were by him undergone, will suffice; that Curse being indeed the Summe and Epitome of Curses, as the Lords-Prayer is of Prayers.

It consists of Three Parts;

1. The Frailties Mans Nature became subject to, tending in themselves to Death and Dissolution; [Dust thou art, &c.] The Curse then seising on him wasted his Body and Spirit, and made both subject unto frailties, and to be of a mouldering Nature; Thou art dust (says God) and to dust thou shalt return.

2. The Miseries and Sorrows which Mans Nature meets with, untill he returns unto dust; which are either,

1. The Labour and Travail he must take to get his Living; expressed by eating his bread in the sweat of his brows; sweat being put (by a Synechdoche) for all the Labour and Travail that Man is born unto, as the sparkes fly upwards, Job 5. 7. Or,

2. The sad and cross Events and Accidents which befall Men from the  Creature in the Course of Occurrences and various Passages of Gods Providence; in that all Creatures are at Enmity: The Earth brings forth Thorns, the Forrest Wild-Beasts, &c.

The third part of this Curse is Death; both Bodily, [to dust thou shalt return] and of the Soul, [dying thou shalt dye.]

Now to go over all these, and shew how they were undergone by Christ, and how from the Cradle to the Cross the Curse followed him.

It seised on him in the first Assumption of the Humane Nature: which was Dust as well as our Nature is, and subject to the same frailties. The simple Assumption of the Humane Nature was no part of the Curse, and therefore is nowhere represented to us as such in the Scripture. It was a condescending indeed to take it, though at first it had been as glorious as now it is in Heaven; but it was no part of the Curse. And therefore when the Scripture speaks of his abasement in assuming our Nature, it speaks of it under the investment of frailties;

ties; as in Philip. 2. 7, 8. where it is said he humbled himself, &c. in taking the form of a Servant, that is, the Nature of Man as now made servile, and debased; which is therefore expounded in the next Words [and was found [as a Man,] in the likeness of Man. And so being found, he humbled himself, &c. and therein, in that he was not only a Man, but such a Man as we, his Body of the same Metal, Mouldrie and weak as ours is; herein became his Humiliation. So likewise Rom. 8. 3, 4. in that God sent his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh; it is indeed made part of his satisfaction, so to condemn sin in the flesh. But otherwise simply to assume our Nature, though it was the foundation of all his satisfaction, yet it was not reckoned as a part of it; and though it was that which formerly gave the value to it, yet was it not part of the Discharge. I confess it to have been a Minoration or Lessening of him in some respects: for let him take our Nature how he will, never so glorious, yet then it will be said of him my Father is greater than I, which cannot be said of the Holy Ghost: yet this is not satisfaction; the assuming our Nature simply considered is not part of the Curse. Again, that it was an Action meerly of the second Person: but satisfactory Acts are of Christ God-Man, and so he must be supposed to be God-Man first: That the second Person would undertake to lower himself so that he might be capable of making satisfaction, (which without assumption had not been) is the foundation of the merit of it; but materially is no part thereof. But in that this flesh assumed was frail, that makes the Assumption of it to be satisfactory; in that he was found hungry, weary, sleepy, sad and heavy, ignorant of many things, &c. in that he was tempted in all, and after that manner that we are; Heb. 4. 15. these frailties were to be accounted as part of satisfaction. And though he bare not all our frailties personally, as not sickness: for his body saw no Corruption neither after, nor before death; for it would have interrupted and hindred him in the work of our Salvation: yet in sympathy and pity he bare them all; and in that sence fore-mentioned, that place (He bare our sicknesses) may be understood, he having a heart soft, and framed to compassion, therefore when any of his Elect were sick, and brought unto him, he by a feeling pity took their Grievs on him, and so freed them. Diseases also being rather Personal than Common Infirmities, it was not absolutely necessary that he should bear them: But he bare our Sorrows, Isaiah 53. 4. even ours in common.

Secondly, For the Miseries incident to Mans life; and herein,

1. For his eating his bread in the sweat of his brows; (besides that it was in so eminent a manner fulfilled at Christs Death, as it never was in any Man; for in drinking that Cup he sweat clodders of Blood) how eminently was it fulfilled in doing his Fathers Will, when he lived a publick life; travailing over, and Preaching in all Towns and Villages; his Zeal for Gods House eating him up, and wasting his Spirits, together with his watching whole Nights, and many Nights together, to pray, &c. and when he lived a private life, in following a Calling of a Handicrafts-man, and living upon it alone? (for his Parents were poor, as appears by their Offering a Poor mans Offering, a Pair of Turtles) So that by his daily labour he got his food from hand to mouth (as we say) he never working any Miracles to supply his own necessities; but, as when in his publick life, he depended upon what was ministred unto him: So when in his private life, he lived by his labour. Those who knew his Education, and for whom haply he might have wrought, those of his own Country, who ver. 3. are said to have known his Brethren and Sisters, and himself particularly; those did not onely call him the Carpenters Son, but more expressly, the Carpenter: So Mark 6. 1, 2, 3. And it is noted that as at Twelve Years old he disputed with the Doctors; which was God his Fathers business; so, that afterwards he was obedient to his Parents, Luke 2. 51. that is, doing Their business, and helping them in their Trade of Carpentring; this 51. ver. relating to what the Evangelist before had said, ver. 49. thereby intimating, that as in that other ver. 49. shews) so, that now he was answerably employed in his Earthly Fathers work; (which the 51. ver. declares, saying, he was obedient to his Parents.)
2. For sad Occurences and Events befalling him from the dispensation of Providence, and the Enmity of the Creatures; there were more betel him than then ever befell any Man. He was Vir Dolorum, a Man of Sorrows; which did all wear and waft him, as griefs use to do us; so that in the judgment of those that saw him, he lookt nearer Fifty Years old than Thirty, as that known speech may seem to import. Furthermore, we never read that he once laught in his life-time. And,

1. For the Enmity of the Creatures; (besides that in a Litteral sense the Earth might be said to bring forth Thorns and Briars to him, to such a purpose as scarce ever besel any Man, namely, to crown his Temples with them) At his Birth, he is denyed a lodging in a common Inn; then, the Wilderness denies him bread for Fourty Days, the Fig-tree affords him no fruit, and the Sun withdraws its light from him. The Fathers have many pretty Interpretations of that great Eclipse, but more witty then solid. The truth is; it was an Evidence of Gods anger, and of the enmity of all the Creatures. Is it in the Sun-beams to afford some glimmering comfort to a Man in Misery? they are denied him; can Darkness add to ones distress, and render it more horrid? Why he is enveloped with a Cimmerian darkness, and that, in the very Meridian and Mid-day. Yea, (that which was never denyed to any but to a Man in Hell) a drop of Water to quench his thirst may by no means be granted him; but in stead thereof sharp Vineger, which their Cruelty and scorn do hand unto him.

The Sea and Winds were once arising up in Arms against him; but that he made use of his Prerogative and extraordinary Power to quell their fierceness. And then at the last he was by all left, and by one of his Disciples betrayed: which how it grieved him the Psalmist foretold. Then,

2. For sad and cross Events from the dispensation of Gods Providence; he met with those which great Spirits account the most sad and heavy. He was crossed ere he was crucified; even through his whole life; As,

1. By a mean and poor Birth and Breeding, which was often cast in his Teeth [is not this the Carpenters Son?]

2. By a poor outward condition. He was not a Beggar indeed; for then he had not fulfilled the Judicial Law, That there should be no Beggar in Israel: but poor he was; for our sakes he became poor. It appears his Parents were poor; for at the Purification of Mary they offered onely a Pair of Turtles; which (according to the Law) were to be the Offering of the poorer sort. Again, he wrought dayly; surely therefore it was for his Living. And further, he had nothing at his Death to leave his Mother, and therefore it was that he bequeathed the care of her unto John. Now how heavy a Clog is Poverty to a great Spirit, and how does it keep him under; it puts a contempt upon the greatest vertue, and prejudices the most solid Wisdom against esteem; [no man regarded that poor Wise Man.]

*Nil habet infelix
paupertas durius
in se. Quam quod
Ridiculus Homines
facit. Juvenal
Sat. 3. V. 152.*

3. By a mean Calling. Thirty Years lived he in a Mechanick Trade; and that no better then of a Carpenter. Now for him to be hid under Chips who was born to sit upon the Royal Throne of Israel; for those Hands to make Doors and hew Logs, that were made to wield the Scepter of Heaven and Earth; and that he who is the mighty Counsellour should give his advice onely about squaring of Timber; what an Indignity, what a Cross is this? Do but think with your selves what an affliction it would be to a Profellour of Divinity in an University, to a Privy Counsellour, or (much more) to a Prince for thirty years together to be put to Cart and Plough.

4. By Company unsuitable to him; which to a great and noble Spirit is as great a burden as any thing else whatsoever. For him who from Everlasting enjoyed the sweet society of his Father in Heaven, and might there have for ever had it; for him to leave such company, and come down to Earth and here converse with Sinners; how harsh and unpleasing must it needs be to him. And therefore the Apostle might well say, Christ pleased not himself, Rom. 15. 3. meaning it of his company. To a Man Wise and Holy there is nothing more burthenfome then the company of Men ignorant and sinful; and the best company he had were his Apostles, who, how ignorant were they? even so far, that they lay as a burthen upon his Spirits, insomuch that once he cries out, how long shall I suffer you, Men of little faith or wisdom? Mat. 17. 17. They being so incapable of what he said or taught, that most would have been lost, had not his Spirit afterwards brought all unto their remembrance. And besides their ignorance, they were Men cloathed with Infirmities and Sins, and more gross corruptions of foolish ambition and contention: What a burden therefore must they needs have been to him who was Holiness it self? yea, (to conclude) every Man was a Briar and a Thorn unto him, (as the Prophet speaks) and he went through the World against the stream of a perverse and crooked Generation, and was a contention to the whole Land where he came; which therefore contradicted, opposed, and reviled him, &c. And therefore it is reckoned among his Sufferings, that he endured the Contradictions of Sinners, Heb. 12. 3. which was so heavy unto Jeremy that it made him weary of his Life: Wo is me (says he) my Mother hath borne me a Man of Contention to the whole Earth, Jer. 15. 10. So Elias complained that he was left alone, &c. and thus was it with Christ in his Times; yea, all the Sins he saw or heard became Crosses to him, and went to his heart; so Rom. 15. 3. where those words are applied to Christ [the reproaches of them that reproached thee (speaking of God) are fallen upon me] All the blows that Blasphemers at any time give his Father, he takes upon his Spirit. And what a Life then must he needs live whose Soul was so righteous? If Lot's Soul were vexed, how must his needs be, whose Spirit was so tender of his Fathers Glory?

CHAP. VI.

What were the Sufferings of Christ, as bearing the Curse of our Sins, more immediately foregoing his Crucifixion, Described in an Exposition of the first One and Twenty Verses of the Eighteenth Chapter of Johns Gospel. A Garden was the Place where he had his first Agonies, and was Apprehended. The Reasons why such a Place was Appointed and chosen by him. The first Nine Verses explained and Observations raised from them.

THE Eighteenth Chapter of Johns Gospel, and that which follows, do continue the Story of the Sufferings of our Lord and Saviour Christ, as they are recorded by that Apostle, who writing after all the other Evangelists were dead, or at least the last of them all, he inserteth divers things which they had omitted, as by comparing the one with the other will easily appear.

Christ you know had three Offices, he is the Prophet, he is the Priest, he is the King of his Church. His Prophetical Office he exercised in his Doctrine while he was here below, in those Sermons and Prayers which John and the other Evangelists record. Which when he had finished he goes forth to his sufferings, to exercise his Priestly Office also, to Offer himself up a sacrifice for his People. And now being ascended into Heaven, he there exerciseth his Kingly Office, in ruling his Church, and in ruling the Nations in order to his Church, and so he will do to the end of the World.

John 18. Verse 1. When Jesus had spoken these Words, he went forth with his Disciples over the brooke Cedron, where was a Garden, into the which he entered, and his Disciples.

When Jesus had spoken these words ; ] which hath a more special relation to that last Prayer of his, and that last Sermon which he made, recorded by John. When he had fortified his own heart by Prayer, and prepared himself to dye. When he had instructed his Disciples, and spoken all those Truths that he came into the World to speak, and laid a foundation of comfort for them, and had put up Prayers for them, and confirmed and strengthened their hearts. When he had fully done his duty. When he had spoken these Words, he cheerfully goes forth to the Place his Father had appointed him to be taken in, and giveth himself up to be sacrificed and to lay down his life for them.

He went forth.] And he went forth with his Disciples. What was the reason that Christ went forth to be taken abroad? Why would he not be taken in the City, in Hierusalem, in the Chamber where he ate the Passover, where he might have stayed if he would?

He went forth, First, That he might give his Enemies the more free scope to take him, for they feared the People (which was always the great objection against their laying hold on him) therefore that that impediment might be removed, he chose to go out of the City to a place in the fields, in a Garden, where they might have full opportunity to apprehend him and to carry him away in the Night without the knowledge of any. And Secondly, He did it that his Disciples might the better escape, for had he been in the City, there might have been a hurly-burly, and so his Disciples might have been in danger.

And he went forth also with his Disciples, First. To teach them this Lesson, that they are likewise to leave this World and to give themselves up as Men that are to suffer with him and for him; that as he himself suffered without the Gate (for the beginning of his sufferings, those sufferings that were the sufferings of his Soul, his inward sufferings, when he first encountred with his Fathers Wrath, they were in the Garden, which was without the Gate, as well as those upon Mount-Calvary which were eminently the sufferings of his body) so they also were to go forth with him, Heb. 13. 12, 13. Jesus that he might sanctify the People with his own blood, suffered without the gate; let us go forth therefore unto him without the Camp, bearing his reproach, for here have we no continuing City, &c. And likewise he carried his Disciples with him, that they might be Witnesses of his Passion and Sufferings more or less, as well as of his Resurrection. And he would have his Disciples with him too, that he might shew his power the more in preserving them, for as it follows afterwards, he doth but speak the Word, let these go saith he (which was a Word of Command from Christ as he was a King) and there was none that so much as offered to lay hands on them. He carried them out with him also that they might see their own weakness and inability to suffer, (for they all forsook him and fled) that so they might depend the more upon his strength; for so oftentimes God doth; he brings us into danger on purpose, as to shew his power in delivering us, so to teach us to depend upon him for ability to suffer. And lastly, He went forth with his Disciples, that he might shew them an example that one day they must suffer with him and for him, as they did all afterwards more or less; onely John indeed escaped Martyrdome, yet he suffered much, for you know he was banished into the Isle Patmos.

Over the brook Cedron] This brook divided Hierusalem and Mount-Olivet, as Josephus saith. It was on the East part of the City as Mount-Calvary was on the West, the two Places of sufferings, his taking was in the one, and his crucifying was in the other. He suffered in the East and in the West, and so indeed the Gospel hath reigned as the Sun doth from East to West. It is called the Field of Cedron, 2 Kin. . 23. 4. and the valley of Cedron, because it was an obscure darksome shady Place, and not because that Cedars did grow there as Olives did upon Mount-Olivet (which is a mistake of some) but it had its Name from the darkness of the Place.

Why did God in his Providence order it that Christ should go over this brook Cedron? It is a Circumstance which onely John records, for all the other Evangelists omit it, and as Interpreters observe, John doth seldom mention any particular circumstance, upon which any Emphasis is put, but there is a Mystery in it.

Book V.

We read in 2 Sam. 15. 23. That David and his Men went over this brook Cedron, mourning and lamenting when Achitophel his familiar friend had betrayed him and Absalom his Son sought his Life.

Now our Lord and Saviour Christ whose Type David was, this very thing is fulfilled in him: for Achitophel typified out Judas; that you have in Psa. 41. The Man (saith he) that did eat with me, that was mine equal, we took sweet counsel together, &c. David spake this of Achitophel in this very journey of his, and it is applied unto Judas in John 13. 18. Now as David's life was then sought after, so was Christ's now, and as David went over with his Companions, so did Christ with his Disciples, as Achitophel betrayed him, so did Judas betray Christ, and as David went over with a sad heart, so Christ tells his Disciples, that his Soul was heavy unto the death.

And that you may see the allusion to be yet more full, in Psalms 110. ult. (which is plainly and clearly a Psalm of Christ) it is said, he shall drink of the brook in the way, therefore shall his head be lifted up. He was to sit at Gods Right-hand till his Enemies were made his footstool, as you have it ver. 1. but before he cometh to be thus exalted, he must drink of the brook in the way, he must go over this Cedron with a sad Soul, for the truth is, all the while he was a going his heart was heavy, and it increast in his going much more. He shall drink of the brook in the way, not that he drank of the water of this brook Cedron, but it typified out those sufferings which lay in his way to Heaven.

[Where was a Garden] This was the Place where he had that sad encounter with his Fathers wrath, which made him sweat drops of blood. The Soul-sufferings of Christ we eminently read of to have been in this Place. Now the Fields that adjoynd to this Cedron, and that which did border upon this Place of the Garden (which Matthew calls Gethsemane) was that Place which the Jews called Gebenna, or Gehinnom, or Hell, because that Josiah had cursed that place, 2 Kings 23. 4. and because that there the great slaughter was done upon the Babylonians, and afterwards upon the Jews. And it was the Place which they afterwards called Tophet, and it is the onely word they had for Hell after the Babylonian Captivity. It was an execrable Place, and into this Place did Christ come, for indeed our Lord and Saviour Christ he did in his Soul in respect of the sufferings of it, descend into Hell. Now there was a Mistry also in this. Adam he was the most eminent Type of Christ, so he is called, Rom. 5. 13. and in 1 Cor. 15. And the Type holds in this, (for when we have a ground that such a thing is a Type we may apply it to such particulars as we find suitable) Adams fall you know was in a Garden, Satan there encountred him, and overcame him, led him and all Mankind into Captivity to sin and death. God now singleth out the place where the Great Redeemer of the World, the second Adam, should first encounter with his Fathers wrath, to be in a garden, and that there he should be bound and led away Captive as Adam was. He fighteth with Satan upon his own ground (it became him so to do) and here he gives the first great overthrow to his Kingdom and to the Kingdom of sin and death. God did suit it so, as indeed he did suit many things in that particular of the first and second Adam. Because (says he, 1 Cor. 15. 21.) by Man came death by Man came also the Resurrection. Because by a Temptation let in at the Ear Man was condemned, therefore by hearing of the Word Men shall be saved. Thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweat of thy Brows, that was part of Adams curse; Christ he sweat drops of blood for this, it was the force of that Curse that caused it. The Ground shall bring forth Thorns to thee; Christ he was crucified with a Crown of Thorns. Adam his disobedience was acted in a Garden, and Christ both his active and passive Obedience also, much of it was in a Garden, and at the last as the first beginning of his Humiliation was in a Garden, so the last step was too, he was buried, though not in this, yet in another Garden. Thus the Type and the thing Typified answer one another

[Into the which he entred and his Disciples] Still there is an emphasis put upon this, that his Disciples were with him. It is not onely said, that he went forth with with his Disciples, but that he entred into the Garden with his Disciples, who were to be witnesses of what he suffered, and for the Reasons mentioned afore, as also to shew that he had no other guard but them. So much for the first Verse.

Chap. 6.

Verse 2. And Judas also which betrayed him, knew the place; for Jesus oft-times resorted thither with his Disciples.

Our Lord and Saviour Christ, he knew he should be taken, and taken by Judas a Disciple, and that that was the place appointed by his Father wherein he should be taken; for the 4th Verse tells us, Jesus knew all things that should befall him. He knew that Judas would be there that night, and therefore like a valiant Champion, he cometh into the field first afore his enemy: He goes thither to choose, and singles out this place on purpose.

In this place Christ used to pray most, especially a little before his Sufferings; for in Luke 21. 37. it is said, That in the day time he was teaching in the temple, and at night he went out and abode in the mount, that is called the mount of Olives; and all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple for to hear him. This was but a matter of seven dayes before he was Crucified; for Christ when he saw that he must dye, and that now his time was come, he wore his Body out, he cared not as it were what became of him, he wholly spent himself in Praying and Preaching; he was Preaching in the day time, and that early in the morning, in the Temple, and at night he abode in the mount of Olives; and there sometimes he spent the whole night in Prayer privately, and sometimes he took his Disciples with him, as now he did.

In this place, which had been a place where Christ received a great deal of Heavenly refreshment from his Father in Prayer, where he had immediate converse with him, in that place of all others must Christ be first attached, and there must be the beginning of his Sufferings: For so indeed God did deal with Christ; he would have all things that were most comfortable to him, embittered to him. This was the place of his Repose, where he had sweet refreshings from God, and this must be the place where he must incounter with his Fathers Wrath: He sweat his Bloody sweat in this place, where he had so often Prayed.

And he likewise knowing that this was the place in which he should be taken, made it the place where he Prayed most, that every thing might put him in mind, and strengthen him when he came to suffer, to comfort him, and to help him, as indeed circumstances of time and place do. If a Christian would choose where he would be taken, and haled to punishment for Christ, it should certainly be in his Closet, or in a place where he had Prayed most.

Christ had oftentimes afore evaded Suffering; he would shift places on purpose; as in John 4. 1. When the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John; He left Judea, and departed again into Galilee: He flew from them: And so in Luke 4. 29. when they led him unto the brow of the Hill whereon the City was built, that they might cast him down headlong, he passed thorough the midst of them, and escaped away. But now when his last hour is come, and he knew it was the hour appointed him by his Father, now he goes to the very place where he knew Judas, that should betray him, would come.

You shall find this eminent observation in the story as John relates it, differing from all the other Evangelists; he endeavours to hold forth in a special manner the willingness of Christ to suffer. Other Evangelists hold forth other circumstances of his Sufferings; but you shall find all along, that John is especially diligent in holding forth the willingness of Christ to offer up himself, which he doth by all sort of circumstances, as in the sequel will appear. Here it appears by this that (as I said before) he goes first into the field; he goes to the place which he used to go to, and which Judas knew to be the place, and he knew too that Judas would be there. It was a matter of the greatest moment to hold forth this willingness of Christ to offer up himself, of any other. For there are two necessary things that were to be concurrent in the Sufferings of Christ to make it satisfactory for us: The one is the eminency and worth of his Person; had he not been God as well as Man, his Obedience would never have satisfied God: But the second is a free-willingness to undergo what he did; for we sinned willingly, therefore Christ when he comes to suffer, he must suffer as willingly. It is as great and as essential an ingredient to give force and efficacy to his Sufferings as the worth of his Person. Therefore in Heb. 10. 7, 8. you shall find a great deal of Emphasis put upon this; Lo I come to do thy will O God; by which will (saith he) we are sanctified. Both the Will of God the Father, and the willingness of Jesus Christ thus to sacrifice himself, was that great circumstance, or more than a circumstance, upon which our Salvation depends, and the acceptance of that offering of his. Christ therefore to shew his willingness, he goes to the place where he knew Judas would come; he went thither on purpose, put himself on this temptation, on purpose that he might put himself into their hands. It was indeed by the commandment of his Father; for so you shall find, John 14. 31. As the Father gave me commandment, even so I do: Arise, (saith he) let us go hence; let us go to the place where I must be taken.

That which we find of circumstance in the Sufferings of Christ, may oftentimes help us in circumstances of our sinning. Dost thou tempt thy self to sin? Put thy self upon occasions of sinning? And is that an aggravation of thy sinning? Thou hast this to help and relieve thee in the Sufferings of Christ, that he put himself upon the occasion of being taken, put himself upon that temptation.

And it may move thee to shun and avoid the occasions of sin, for Jesus Christ, that he might suffer for thee, avoided not the occasion of suffering; he goes to the very place in which he knew he should be taken.

Also those things which had been comforts unto Christ are (through the merit of our Sins, which do turn Blessings into Curse) turned unto Christ into a bitterness. The place where he had prayed, and been refreshed, there is his Agony and encounter. A Garden turned into Hell. His sweet communion with God there, is now turned into wrestling with Gods Anger falling on him here; and now through it, on the contrary, we may expect Curses turned into Blessings; and the worst of dealings from God to us to be sanctified to our greatest Spiritual Advantage and Comfort.

It is said that Judas also knew the place. Take notice heré of the hard-heartedness of the heart of Judas. He had all that time since he received the Sop; yea all the way he went, (which was a pretty way from the City) to think upon what he was about to do, that he was going to betray his Master, the Saviour of the World, in whom he had for a time believed. Yea, he had that place to strike his Conscience; it being the place where he himself had been often with Christ, and present at many a good Prayer, and many an excellent Sermon, which he had heard from no less than the Messiah; whose Conscience almost but would have smote him? yet so hard, so obdurate is the Heart of Judas, that he dares out-face all those Prayers and Sermons, and to come to that very place to lay hold of his Master, and to betray him with a kiss.

An obdurate Heart will break through all sort of circumstances and considerations that may keep him from sinning; so Judas doth here.

And we may learn to aggravate our Sins by such circumstances, whereof we shall find many in our lives if we study our own sinful ways, that God doth suffer to fall out to keep us from sinning, that notwithstanding such circumstances and considerations, yet we should break through all such difficulties and sin against God; this should make our Sin out of measure sinful to us. It was a circumstance that much increased the sin of Judas, that he knew the place where Christ used to resort with his Disciples (going thither often for freedoms sake of Prayer) that yet he would go thither and there betray him.

Verse 3. Judas then having received a band of men and officers, from the chief Priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanthorns, and torches, and weapons. Chap. 6.

[Judas then having received a band of men, &c.] Judas did not desire this band of Men, he did but offer to betray him: It was the Chief Priests and Pharisees that desired them; they went to Pilate (who was the Roman Governour) and told him they had a Seditious Person to take, and implored his help and assistance, and so he let them have a band of Men; and yet it is said that Judas received them; it is all layed upon him, because in Acts i. 16, he is called their guide; he was the leader of this cursed band that took our Lord and Saviour Christ; he was the fore-man in it; therefore all is laid upon him more than upon them; he is still branded in a peculiar manner, Judas the Traytor, Judas which betrayed him. All I say, is chiefly laid upon him; for the truth is, Christ took this act of his more hainously at his hands, that had been his Disciple and a Professour of him, than he did either of the Pharisees or of the Roman Souldiers, and his end was accordingly. And therefore Paul, in 2 Cor. 11. 26. when he makes a Catalogue of his Sufferings, he mentioneth those which he had from false Brethren, as the worst and chiefest.

The eminent observation that I make out of these words is this, That here is both a Band of Men and Officers from the Chief Priests and Pharisees. The Band of Men was the Roman Band; for the Romans having conquered that City, the Civil Power was in their hands, and Pilate the Governour under them kept a Band of Men about him, which he lends at their request unto the Pharisees and Chief Priests, to go with their own Officers to help to take Christ. All along this Story you shall find that there were two sorts of Men that God would have in his Providence, to have their hands imbrued in the Blood of Christ from first to last. Here is a Roman Band, and the Officers of the Chief Priests and Pharisees; here is the Civil Magistracy, and here is the Ecclesiastical State; (for as the Civil Power was in the Romans, so the Ecclesiastical Power was in the hands of the Chief Priests, the Romans notwithstanding their Conquest, leaving them to the Rites of their Religion still) they would not trust the Roman Band alone to do it; for they knew they were not such enemies to Christ, but they sent their own Ministers and Servants (and some Evangelists tell us that some of the Pharisees themselves were there) to attend them, and see the thing done. The Souldiers, poor Men! they went about they knew not what; they went to take him as a Seditious Person, and an enemy to Cæsar; little thought they that the Messiah of the World was there. This I say you shall find in the Story all along that two sort of Powers were stirred up against Christ: Here was both Jewes and Gentiles: Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? Psal. 2. 1. Both concurred here: Here is a Band of Romans and Officers of the Chief Priests; the Heathen and the People of the Jewes. Christ, as he did dye both for Jewes and Gentiles, so likewise he would have both Jewes and Gentiles to have a hand in his Death. And therefore let us not say only that the Jewes shall look upon him whom they have pierced, but the Gentiles also shall look upon him whom they have pierced; God would have the Gentiles have a hand in it as well as the Jewes: And not only so, but he would have both the Civil and Ecclesiastical State to joyn in the Sufferings of Christ; for the Pharisees and Chief Priests they were the Ecclesiastical State, they make use of the Magistrate for his assistance to lay hold of our Lord and Saviour Christ.

[They come thither with lanthorns, and torches, and with weapons.] Although it was full Moon then, and therefore the Moon did certainly shine, yet to make sure work, they come not only with Torchcs that use to give great lights, but with Lanthorns, that their lights might not be blown out with the Wind, and all to seek him, that they might be sure if he did not hide himself to find him, or if he did hide himself, to seek him out with their lights.

lights. And they came with Weapons too, though they knew he was but a poor Man to see to ; but they came with Weapons because they were afraid of the People, and because that Judas had told them, how his Master had often escaped from them before ; as when he was brought to the brow of the Hill, &c. therefore now to make sure work, both to find him and to carry him away, they come forth with all these.

Our Lord and Saviour Christ, he had dealt with them at other Weapons ; he had often disputed with the Scribes and Pharisees, and the truth is, he had alwayes been too hard for them. But now they come and deal with him at a Weapon they thought he should not be too hard for them at ; they come upon him with Torches and with Weapons, and by force they set upon him. And that indeed is the manner of those that oppose the Church in all Ages. As they dealt with Christ, so they do with his People, and will do to the end of the World.

Verse 4. Jesus therefore knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye ?

Still you see the Evangelist John holds forth, in an eminent manner, the willingness of Christ to suffer, for that's the thred he spins throughout this whole Story, because indeed so much depends upon it. He tells us that Christ knew all things that should come upon him. He did not come to this place unawares ; no, he knew that Judas knew that he usually resorted thither, and he knew that Judas would come thither, as well as he knew that he should betray him, and therefore he comes thither on purpose ; and he comes thither first. and being there, as soon as the Band and the Officers came, he went forth of his own accord, and said unto them, Whom seek ye ? He knowing all things, he might have hid himself, and evaded his being taken, as he had often done before. No.

There is a Case which Interpreters here put, whether this example of Christs be for our imitation, whether we should thus expose our selves to suffering, choose thus to suffer, or rather decline and avoid suffering in a lawful way, by lawful means ?

The Answer is clear. We have divers examples of Christs avoiding suffering ; as that in John 4. 1. when he did but hear that they knew of him, and knowing their malice, he went and removed to another place. So likewise when he was young, and Herod sought his Life, he was carryed into Egypt. And then again, when they brought him to the brow of the Hill, he escaped. All which examples strongly hold forth, that we may use all lawful means of escaping suffering. But when he knew that his hour was come in which he must be taken aside, and it being by Compact between his Father and him, for so it was, he Covenanted with God to suffer ; it became him to shew the fullest and most ready Obedience to his Father that could be, to go to the place where he must be attached, to offer himself to them as a prey, to provoke them, Whom seek ye ? Now herein Christs case and ours in suffering doth certainly differ ; we do not know what shall befall us, as Christ did, for if we did, we ought not to evade our sufferings as Christ did not ; but because we are ignorant of what shall come upon us, we are to serve the wayes of a Providence, wayes of escaping that are lawful.

Observe from hence First this. Christ you see did not only suffer willingly but knowingly ; and as his putting himself willingly upon suffering, and into the opportunity of being taken, may help us against our having tempted our selves, (which is a great aggravation of our sinning) : So likewise our Saviour Christs suffering thus with knowledge, deliberately, knowing all circumstances, is a consideration may help us against our sinning knowingly. Hast thou sinned presumptuously, against knowledge ? Our Lord and Saviour Christ he suffered as deliberately, he suffered with the greatest knowledge that could be. There was not only the greatest Will in his sufferings, but to make up that Will more eminent and conspicuous, there was also the greatest greatest knowledge, he knew all that should befall him, yet he went forth and offered himself.

Chap. 6.

Secondly, Did Christ know all that he was to suffer? Certainly then he knows all that we are to suffer. Did he know his own sufferings on Earth? Certainly he knows ours now he is in Heaven. The things we are to suffer, they are called in Colos. 1. 24. the after-sufferings of Christ, certainly then he knows them. Therefore though thou knowest not what shall befall thee in such or such a course as thou takest in professing his Name, yet comfort thy self in this, that Christ knows it. And as he, knowing all things ventured himself, so do thou, upon the confidence that he knows all things that shall befall thee, venture thy self too. And trust him and his knowledge for the ordering of all things for thy good as well as he trusted his Father to do with him what he would. It is our comfort I say, that Jesus Christ knew all his own sufferings, he certainly therefore knows all ours; I know thy labour and thy patience, saith he, Rev. 2. 2. He takes notice of it, therefore fear not the things you shall suffer, give your selves up unto his Providence, trust his knowledge, for he knows what shall befall you.

It would be miserable for us to know what we shall undergo in this World, for the thoughts of it afore-hand, would hurt us, the Anxiety of it would trouble us, it is better for us to be ignorant of it. But Christ he had strength in him, he could know what he should suffer and foresee it, and yet keep his mind quiet and composed; as you see he did till it came to the very instant: And it was necessary too that he should know all he was to suffer, because he suffered by compact with his Father, which makes a great difference between the Sufferings of Christ and ours.

Now he knowing all that he should suffer, He went forth, and said to them, Whom seek ye?

Once they would have made him a King, and then he hid himself, but when he comes to be a King crowned with Thorns, and knew he should be so to save us, then he hides not himself, but he goes forth to them. Adam (as I said) was his Type in his sinning in a Garden; but in this they are unlike. Adam hides himself, and God was fain to seek him out; but here our Lord and Saviour Christ to shew his willingness to be found, stepped forth, and saith unto them, Whom seek ye? He provokes them rather to lay hands upon him than otherwise. And so much for the Fourth Verse.

Verse 5. They answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also which betrayed him stood with them.

From hence Interpreters do observe, and I think rightly, that both these Roman Souldiers, and also these Officers of the High Priests, at their first approach to him, did not know him by sight, no, nor Judas neither; for it is said Judas stood with them when he asked them, Whom seek ye? Afterwards indeed he was the first that went to him, and kist him, and said, this is he. He asked them twice the same question, and they answer both times Jesus of Nazareth, which clearly argues, that they did not know him to be the Man. Therefore some think there was a piece of a Miracle in this, that he struck them with blindness, as the Sodomites were that beset lots House, or as the Servants of the King of Syria were that came to take Elisha. Others think that their Eyes were with-led by a Miracle, as the Eyes of those two Disciples that went to Emaus were, so that though they had often seen him before, and heard him Preach, yet now they could not know him. But however, it is exceeding likely that these Soldiers did not know him, for the Romans regarded not the Gospel, nor did they regard the Jewish Religion; so far were they from knowing of him, and the Officers it is likely they were such as had not heard him. Therefore you may observe this by the way, That the rage of Men against the People of God, it is of those that are ignorant of them; as these here were ignorant of Christ, and these the Chief Priests and Pharisees set to take him.

They answered Jesus of Nazareth.] They do not say they sought Christ, for they did not own him as such, but they call him by the Name of the place place of his Birth, and by the Name of his Countrey. And Christ owns it, I am he, saith he And he owned that Name from Heaven when he spake to Paul, Act. 9: 5. I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest. Why did he not say, I am Christ? He speaks to Paul's apprehension, I am he whom thou knowest and hast heard of by the Name of Jesus of Nazareth. He shewed himself to be Christ indeed in his appearing, but to shew who he was that Paul persecuted, he said, I am Jesus of Nazareth; for had Paul persecuted him as Christ, he had sinned against the Holy Ghost, but he persecuted him only as Jesus of Nazareth; so did these poor Men, they did not know him to be Christ, only they came to take one Jesus of Nazareth.

Jesus saith unto them, I am he.] We should boldly hold forth our Profession, when we are asked, Are you a Christian? Yes. Eusebius reports of one that being asked divers questions, as what Countrey he was of, and the like, he alwaies answered, I am a Christian, to shew his boldness in his profession, so Christ here, I am he.

And Judas also which betrayed him stood with them

This is noted first to shew that Judas was struck backward as well as the rest, for all that Company that was together fell to the ground (as you shall see in the next verse) Christ had struck an Arrow through his Conscience, dashed him, and certainly aimed at him in the confounding of these more than all the rest; therefore it is added, and Judas also stood with them. For special confusion shall befall them that profess Christ, and afterward fall away.

This Miserable Man (Secondly) was wont to stand amongst the Disciples, but now he stands where he shall stand at the latter day, amongst those that are Reprobates, and the Crucifiers of the Lord of Life; that as it is said in Psal. 125. 1. The righteous shall be like Mount Zion, but those that work iniquity, God shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity. In the end the Lord doth discover them, he will bring them into that Drove, they shall fall to that side their Hearts are with; they shall stand amongst them in the issue and end, (for so God in his Providence orders it,) with whom they shall stand for ever. And this God doth usually fulfil upon Wicked Men, though they have a Temporary Work upon them, and though for the present they profess the Name of Christ never so much, yet at last they stand, and it is a fatal standing, to sever themselves from the People of God, and betake themselves to that side that are Persecutors, or otherwise corrupt. So Judas doth here, he stands among Gentiles and Officers of the Pharisees and Chief Priests, an Epitome of Reprobates, and so he shall stand at the latter day. God will lead forth all Men that do work Iniquity with the workers of Iniquity. To go on.

Verse 6. As soon as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

Here you see the confusion that did befall them from the power of Christ afore such time as they did lay hands upon him. It is Prophefied by David in Psal. 35. 4. as a Curse upon his Enemies, and the Septuagint there use the same word that is here; Let them, saith he, be turned backward. It is a Phrase that noteth out confusion; And Christ fulfilleth it here upon these Jews in the very Letter, They went backward, and fell to the ground.

And he doth not simply say they fell backward, but it is evident he puts it upon the power of Christ that did cause them to fall backward; for it is said, As soon as he said, I am he, (or as others read it, He therefore said, I am he) they fell backward.

My Brethren there was never such a thing done in the World; Tell me in any Story that ever any King, Alexander the Great, or the greatest Monarch that ever was in the World, with a word of his Mouth did against Mens Wills, make them fall backward to the ground. Had they fallen forward, it might have been thought other force behind them had thrown them down; or it might have been thought they had worshipped him in a counterfeit terfeit way, as afterward they did at his Arraignment. But to fall backward at the speaking of a word; In the word of this King what Power was there! And therefore some of the Ancient Fathers that are Interpreters, they say that of all the Miracles that ever Christ did, this was one of the greatest. Some indeed have pitched upon that Miracle of his when he whipped the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple, and said, you make my Fathers house a den of thieves: But assuredly this was a greater than that, for there Christ had some kind of Weapon, here he had none: He was then when he did that, surrounded with People that applauded him, for they had newly brought him into the City with Triumph, the Children crying Hosannah to him, but here he had none to take his part when these Bands came out against him, but Eleven poor Disciples: There he had to do but with poor Men that sold Turtles and Doves; here with Soldiers Armed that came out on purpose to take him; yet at one word he throws them down. He doth but say, I am the Man, wherein he offers himself to them, which makes the Miracle the stranger, That that voice which did invite them to take him, that very voice should throw them backward to the ground.

Now the Reasons why our Lord and Saviour Christ deals thus with them before he would be taken are these:

First, Because he would shew them that he was God, gives them this sign of his Divinity. And the truth is, if you observe it, he did all along in the course of his Life, with his weakness mingle some Specimens of his Power and God-head. Thus when he was a Child in the Cradle, as an evidence of his God-head, there came Kings, Three Wise Men out of the East to worship him. When he was tempted in the Wilderness by Satan, he is succoured by Angels; And here when he comes to be bound, and to be carried away to be crucified, he first strikes them that were to do it, backward with a word of his Mouth. It is made the property of God alone to consume Men with his breath, Job 4. 9. and Dan. 10. 17. Now Christ shews himself to be God by this, he doth but say, I am he, and they are confounded.

Oh my Brethren, If there was this power in the words of Christ in answering but a question when he was in the form of a Servant, what power will there be in his words when he shall come to Judgment? What power is there in that word by which the whole world is upheld, as the Apostle saith, Heb. 1. 2.

He did do it Secondly that they might have some space to repent, that they might have something to strike them, to occasion their Repentance. And you see no outward means, no not Miracles will work upon the hearts of Men if God do not strike them with his Spirit. And you see likewise that Men, though their Consciences strike them in the very Act of Sin, and strike them deeply, (as this must needs do their Consciences here, especially Judas his) yet they will go on. As Balaam, he went on even against the hair as we say, and so did these.

But the chief reason why Christ thus confounded them, and struck them backward first before he would be taken, is that which John (as I said afore) eminently and visibly holds forth, namely to shew that he was willing to suffer, no Man had power to take his Life away, they had not power so much as to lay hands on him, they fall down first. All the World might think, and so might they think too, that if with his breath he thus struck them to the ground, with the same breath he might have struck them into the ground, nay, struck them to Hell, never have suffered them to rise more, he needed never to have been taken by them. But when once he had shewed that it was in his Power not to be taken, when he had struck their Consciences, then he doth willingly give himself up into their hands, but he would do this first.

And what words are they by which he doth confound them thus? They were mild words, no more but this, I am he. Yea, you shall find elsewhere that by these very words he comforted his Disciples at other times; As when he walked upon the Sea, be not afraid, saith he, it is I, or, I am he.

Book IV. he. And after his Resurrection, when he comes into the Room where his Disciples were, he saith, I am he; and here now he useth the very same words to his Enemies to the greatest Terror in the World. The very same words which Christ speaks, and which we his Ministers speak being his words, that are unto some a favour of Life, they are unto others a favour of Death. He strikes them dead here as it were with the very same words that he put Life and Comfort into his Disciples by. At the latter day, when Christ shall appear, the very same Look, the very same Presence of his that will be nothing but Grace and Sweetness to his Children, and fill all their hearts with Joy, will be horror and amazement and confusion to his Enemies, and fill all their hearts with Terrour.

And then another Observation I may make from hence is this, that as in this apprehension of Christ before they prevailed over him, he strikes them with Terrour, so wicked Men do seldom meddle with the People of God, to persecute them, or apprehend them, to condemn them or the like, but Christ strikes terrour in their Consciences for so doing. As it is in Psal. 14. 4. They eat up my people like bread, they eat them up so heartily, and seem to be so greedy and so mightily hungry after their blood, and after their hurt, that one would think they have no knowledge, Have the workers of iniquity no knowledge, saith he, that eat up my people as they eat bread? That they fall great so fast to them as they do? But what saith the next verse? Then were they in fear, for God is in the generation of the righteous. And in Phil. 1. 28. the Apostle bids them when they suffer to carry it with a confidence, and to be in nothing terrified by their Adversaries, which saith he is an evident token unto them of perdition, but to you of Salvation, and that of God. His meaning is, that when Men do carry things confidently, being in a right way, usually Gods Spirit doth blefs that confidence to a double end: First, He Seals up Salvation to them that suffer for him, even while they suffer, he breaks in upon their Spirits, and fills their hearts with assurance. And Secondly, he breaks in also upon the hearts of the Persecutors, and strikes them with Terrour. It is a sign saith he, that is, a present sign, there is from God as to you that suffer inward Joy and Comfort; so there is oftentimes Terrour in the hearts of Wicked Men that persecute you, which is as it were the first fruits of Hell, and of Perdition; And so here Christ to shew that he will one day throw them to Hell, he flings them to the ground now. Ecclesiastical Stories tell us that the very Heathens themselves though they knew not what they did when they persecuted the Christians, they had oftentimes terrours in themselves while they were executing their Cruelty upon the People of God.

And then again out of this Verse, observe this, That the Church may prevail against the Enemies thereof, and make them fall, and yet those Enemies may recover and fall upon the Church again. Men that shall fall upon the Church, and prevail against it, they may for a time fall before it. These very Men that God had designed to take Christ, they fall backward first, and they fall backward terrified and amazed, yet they rise up again, and take him. So is it oftentimes with the Body of Christ here on Earth, the Enemies sometimes are greatly prevailed against, confounded, that one would think they should never rise more; yet as Jeremiah saith, These wounded men, shall rise up every man in his tent and take the City. These Men you see that thus fell backward and were confounded, they were the Men that took Christ, for when Christ had done, and shewed them that he was the Messiah, he gave himself up to them. So it is and will be to the end of the World.

Yet you may take it as a certain sign that they shall fall one day, as this was here, it was a sign that they should fall into ruine and destruction, but they must do their work first. If God come down and help his Church, and appear in his Power, as here Christ doth, I am sure his enemies will fall backward; though these enemies, I say, may rise again and take the City; yet it is a help to our Faith, that that God that came down as a Lyon thus, and they were scattered, shall ruine them in the end, that's certain. It is the Prophets expression, when they are all preying like a company of Wolves upon upon the Sheep, He shall come down like a Lyon; and they will all run away presently. Thus you see at this day, Christ came but down amongst them, and said, I am he, and you know how they all croucht presently.

We see likewise the way that Jesus Christ useth to confound his enemies; it is with his Breath; it is with his Word. Aftoon as he had said, I am he; or, therefore when he had said I am he, they fell backward. Still Christ is said to do all his great busineses with a Word of his Mouth: There is a Sword in his Mouth that kills them: And in Isa. 11. 4. He strikes them with the Rod of his Mouth; and Antichrist is to be destroyed with the Spirit of his Mouth, and the brightness of his coming. As it was the Word of Christ that confounded his enemies here, so it is that Word shall confound them to the end of the World. And if they have any other enemies about their ears besides the Word, it is because the Word stirs them up. It is the Word that works in the Hearts of Men, and makes them enemies to the enemies of God, and brings them upon them. It is the vengeance of the Word which the People of God execute upon wicked Men.

You see likewise, when Christ will appear, what a little thing daunts his enemies. It is but a meer word I am he, and they fall backward to the ground. But to go on.

Verse 7. Then asked he them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

When they were thus fallen down and risen again, perhaps they went up and down like amazed and confounded Men to seek him, therefore he comes to them, and asketh them, Whom seek ye?

This second Question carries a mighty conviction, a mighty triumph with it over their Consciences; as if he had said, I have told you who I am, and I have told it you to purpose, have I not? Have you not learned by this time who I am, when your hearts are so terrified, that you all fell down before me a poor Man? They had been taught by woful experience who he was, when he blew them over, flung them down with his Breath, and it might have turned to a blessed experience had God struck their Hearts as he did their outward Man. But still they will not call him Christ for all this, they call him but Jesus of Nazareth.

You see the desperate hardness of the hearts of wicked Men, and it is in experience true, no means, no convictions, no miracles will work upon them. One would have thought that this should have struck the Spirits of any Men in the World, that a poor Man with his Breath should cause them to fall down backward, they should be afraid, and not have dared to have lain hold on him. They were afraid indeed afore, that's the truth on't, they had a suspicion that there was more than a Man in him, why else had they the Roman Souldiers and all these Officers armed with Weapons? And you see how he falls upon them, but with his Word, yet still they are hardened. A Man would wonder when there are such evidences of Gods taking part with his Truth; such Providences of God, punishing those that go against his People, yet that Men should go on still. Nothing will soften the hearts of those that are resolved in wickedness. There is one instance, and it is to me a mighty one, of the desperate hardness of Mens hearts; and that is, of the Men that did watch at the grave of Christ; Christ had foretold that he would rise again the third day, and the Pharisees (after he was buried) they come to Pilate the Governour, and say they, this Impostor said he would rise again the third day, therefore let us make sure work with him, and let us have a Stone rolled upon his grave, and set men to guard it, and so a watch was set: Now while they were sitting to watch him, there comes a great Earthquake, and an Angel descends from Heaven, and rolls away the grave-stone, and was so dreadful to these keepers that they fell down, and became as dead Men, (whereby it is evident that from Heaven there was a testimony of his Resurrection.) They go and tell their Masters, the Chief Priests, all these things that were done; they bid them hold their Tongues; say you (say they to them) That his Disciples came by night and stole him away while we slept, and we will satisfy the Governour, and secure you. Though Christ, even by the testimony of their own Men, had fulfilled what he himself prophesied, and it was plainly evident to them, yet they hired the Souldiers to tell this lye, though the lye contradicted it self; (as some have observed) for how could they tell his Disciples had stolen him away, when they were asleep? To this desperate hardness do the hearts of Men come; therefore never think that Truth or Reason, or any thing, will prevail upon wicked Men, all the means and miracles in the World will not do it, unless God persuade Japhet to dwell in the Tents of Sem. In Rev. 16. when the fourth Vial was poured out upon the Sun (which is thought to be that execution that is now in the World upon the House of Austria, or whatever it is) it is said, Thus though men were scorched with great heat, yet they blasphemed the name of God, and repented not to give him glory. And when the fifth Vial comes to be poured out (which is the Vial upon the City of Rome, the seat of the Beast, and it may be some of it is begun to be fulfilled, the little seats of the Beast are begun to be removed) it is said, The Kingdom was full of darkness, yet they gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed God, and repented not of their deeds. Men that are resolved in their wickedness come to such desperate hardness, that they never repent, let what will fall out. Those that harden themselves against Christ shall be hardened. So much for the seventh Verse.

Verse 8. Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he, if therefore ye seek me, let these go their way.

Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he.] There is a great deal of Majesty in this Speech, a great deal of Exprobration, I have told you, saith he, and I think that I have told you with a witness, that I am he. As was said of the River Jordan, What ailest thou that thou fledst back? So it might be said of these men; what do you ail that you fall backward at a mean Mans only saying, I am he, a mean Man in appearance. It is as if Christ had said, you say you seek for Jesus of Nazareth, I have told you that I am he; why did you not then lay hold upon me? Was it a Divine Power that struck you dead first? Then be warned by it; I am the same Man, upon your peril be it if you lay hold upon me. Yea, Christ did intimate thereby, that they could not know him, unless he himself had helped them to himself. He said again, I am he; they knew not who was he.

Which still also argues his willingness to suffer, that he should twice put himself upon them, twice say, that he was the Man. They being as blinded Men, (for so indeed they were) he might have escaped if he would, but he is so far from that, that he provokes them by a double question to know him. He would not be taken by Judas his sign at first, but by his own voluntary resigning of himself up, for that is the thing (Christ's willingness to suffer) which John doth eminently endeavour to hold forth in this Story.

My Brethren, These men took pains to seek Jesus Christ to damn themselves; had they bestowed the same diligence to seek him as a Saviour, they might have been saved; had they took the same pains to seek his favour that here they took to seek him to Crucifie him, he would have manifested himself unto them. There is no Man that seeks Christ, but in the end he saith unto him, I am he: And if they have lost their knowledge of him (as many oftentimes do) he saith it the second time, I am he; and provokes their hearts to know him. To all seekers of him he doth so, whether they be those of the left hand, such as these that sought him to crucifie him, or those of the right hand that seek him to be saved by him.

There is one general Observation that I shall give you here, upon the occasion both of this Miracle, and that of healing Malchus his Ear; for he did both these Miracles afore they apprehended him, as the Context evidently argues; and although Matthew and Mark relate the Story of Peters cutting off Malchus his Ear after his being apprehended, which indeed they do by way of narration, yet it is clear by Luke and John, that it was before; for when when his hands were bound it was not a time for him to put forth his hand to heal him. Our Saviour Christ did not put forth any more Miracles, or gave any more signs of his Divinity now, but after they had taken him he is as calm as a Lamb. Before, indeed, he doth two things, he terrifies their Consciences by casting them backward, and he healeth him, who like an enemy and a wretch came to attach him, and it seems was the first that laid hands on him.

Observ. The Observation I make from hence is this: You shall find this to be true in experience, that when you are entring into a Sin, then will God use that means that he meaneth to apply to keep you from it; he doth usually do it then: But after you are entred into it, then your hearts are let go on. So indeed it was here with these Men; Christ useth two means, and notable ones too, two great Miracles before they took him to strike their Consciences, in a way of Judgment the one, in a way of Mercy the other. But when once they had laid hold of him and got their prey, he leaves them to their own hearts lusts. So he deals with wicked Men, and in experience you will find it true. Therefore, let this be the use of it, observe what God saith to your Hearts, what means he useth to your Spirits when you are entring into any great Sin: If you neglect cleaving to God then, and making use of those means, you are in danger never to be recovered, but to be left to that Sin. And so much for that general Observation upon these Miracles of Christ.

— If therefore ye seek me, let these go their way.

Whilst Jesus Christ was ready to be taken, he takes upon him like a King. If you will have me, saith he, here I am, but I charge you do not meddle with one of these, touch not mine Anointed, let them go.

The words are to be considered, first as they are a Command from Christ, they are not a matter of Compact or Agreement only with them, or of humble Suit, Let these go their way; but he speaks as a King, as one that had conquered them before; he had thrown them backward before, they had felt of his Power, Let these go their way, saith he. And that it was a Command doth seem to be manifest by this, by the words that follow, That the saying might be fulfilled which he spake [in his Prayer], of them that thou hast given me I have lost none. As he had prayed and had assurance from God of it, so now he gives forth a Command about it: For assuredly, otherwise those which did command these Officers to take Christ, did command them to take his Disciples also; their hatred was extream great against the Disciples as well as against the Master. And therefore when all the Disciples forsook him and fled, although there was time enough to shew that Christs Power kept them from taking them, yet when there was a certain young Man that rose up, and came out in his shirt in the night, and did but follow him when he was taken and led away, they laid hold upon him thinking him to be a Disciple, and he was fain to leave his Linnen Cloth that was about him, and to fly from them naked. Therefore certainly they had as full a purpose to have taken any that countenanced him, any Disciple as Christ himself, but only here he speaks to them as you see, Let these go their way.

And by vertue of this Command it was, that though Peter did provoke them after these words the most that could be, by drawing his Sword, and falling upon a Servant of the High-Priests, and strikes off his Ear, which could not but mightily enrage them; yet the Command of Christ must stand, he had hold of their hearts, he charged them that they should not meddle with them, and they durst not lay hands on them. Peter indangered himself and all his Brethren, that after Christ had said this, he should fall upon them, and strike them with his Sword; so that though they had no malice against the Disciples before, yet this drawing of Swords and striking off an Ear, could not but extreamly provoke them, yet I say, Christs Command must stand. And Peter after this, he comes into the High-Priests Hall, and there was challenged again and again, yet this Word of Christ, Let these go, stood. And John afterward he comes and stands about the Crosse, sees him Crucified, they had no power to meddle with him, Christs word stood still, Let these go, it is as if Christ should have said, Well, I will suffer you to take me, but as I have shewn you by throwing you to the ground that you cannot take me except I please, so still, here I am, if you seek me, let these go.

Observ. 1. Observe from hence first, It is a Command from Heaven, from Christ, that doth deliver his People in all dangers whatsoever. Men could not be in a greater danger than these Disciples were in, nor were there ever any Men more malicious than these were, yet we see they are preserved by vertue of this word of Christs, let these go. In Psal. 105. 14, 15. Though they were Strangers, saith he, and though the other were Kings, and had power enough to hurt them, yet he suffered no Man to do them wrong. God from Heaven spake to their hearts, Touch not mine anointed, do my Prophets no harm, so doth Christ here speak with the same Authority, Let these go.

Observ. 2. Observe from hence, as the power of Christ to deliver us in dangers, so his willingness to preserve us. He voluntarily resigns himself up to be taken, but as for his Disciples, let these go, saith he. Was he thus willing to put himself in our stead when he was here on Earth? Do you think that now he hath suffered and is gone to Heaven where he is to intercede, to reap the fruit of his sufferings, that he doth not say to his Father upon all occasions, Let these poor souls go, I have suffered for them? If when he was crucified in weakness, he put forth such a Power to deliver his People in so great a danger as these were in? Certainly you may trust him upon all occasions to deliver you now he is glorified much more; unless there be some peculiar reason, some peculiar Decree of Gods (as there was for Christ himself) that the Father hath appointed us a Cup for to drink; and that neither shall not be till the time come. These Apostles they were afterwards to suffer, yet Christ, because their time was not yet come, gives this charge to those that took him, let these go.

This being said concerning the Command it self, we will consider the reasons why Christ did preserve his Disciples at this time. The Reasons are clearly these.

1. To shew that he could have saved himself if he pleased; For he that saved others could have saved himself: He that so with Authority did command them to let these go, could have commanded them to have let himself go.

2. He would shew that he alone was to suffer. In this work (saith he) I will have none to be my Companions. I stand now in their stead, and their sins are laid upon me, therefore meddle not with these, Let these go. As David said, Let thy hand be upon me and my fathers house, so doth Christ say, Let your hands be upon me, let the sword of God awake against the Shepherd, but not against the Sheep. You know it was the Prophecy of Caiaphas, it is meet that one man should dye for the people, therefore if you seek me, saith Christ, I am that one man, let these go.

3. Christ meant to imploy them in other Services, they were to preach the Gospel to all the world, and when they had done they were to suffer. He had other work for them to do, and until that were done, Let these go.

4. They were not yet fit to suffer. Christ he knew the weakness of their Spirits; it is true he could have given them power, but according to an ordinary course had they been called to suffer now in that state they were in, they would have all done as Peter did, denied him, for you see they all fled away from him presently, as soon as he was taken, they would never have held out, the business was too strong for them to undergo at the present. And that this is the reason is clear by the next words, That the saying might be fulfilled which he spake of them which thou hast given me, I have lost none, implying that if they had been put upon suffering now, they had been lost, their Souls would have been undone, they would have denied him: This Christ foresaw, and therefore prevents their sufferings, and so the occasion of their falling so grossly. Therefore to preserve them every way, both their Bodies and their Souls, saith he, Let these go.

The Observations from hence are these.

Observ. 1. You may see the great care of Christ; when he was to suffer, one would think his thoughts should have been wholly taken up about himself; no, you see he doth not mind himself, his care was to preserve his Disciples, Here am I, saith he, let these go. Was Christ so careful of his Disciples when he was to undergo so great an encounter? How much more doth he take care of his Saints now he is in Heaven.

Observ. 2. Christ is careful to bring us but then to suffer when he means to fit us for suffering, and when we shall be able to suffer; and if need be, and so much only as shall need be. That place in 1 Pet. 1. 6. contains a promise in it, speaking of sufferings, Wherein, saith he, you greatly rejoice, though now for a season [if need be] you are in heaviness, &c. He will not unless there be need bring Temptations upon you. If Christ had laid Sufferings upon them now, they had not been able to have suffered; you see Peter forswore him upon the assault of a Maid, how much more would he have done so, if attached and brought before the High-Priest. It is Christs manner not to call us to suffering till we can suffer, nor to lay more upon us than we are able to bear, you know the promise in 1 Cor. 10. 13.

Observ. 2. They that are of publick use, for whom God hath work to do, till the time appointed in which God will have them suffer, they shall escape abundance of dangers of sufferings. The truth is, had these Jews seized upon Christ and all his Disciples at once, they had made sure for the Gospel ever to have been propagated, according to what God had appointed, for he had chosen these Men to be Witnesses and Preachers of it, there had been none but Paul left to Preach. They might have crushed the Gospel in the very shell, had they taken Christ and all the Apostles at once: No, saith he, Let these go. So long as God hath work for Men to do, he will preserve them from being taken and seized upon, and ruined by their enemies. Let no man therefore that is in any work and service for God, fear, he shall never be cut off till such time as his work be done, and then to be cut off it is no matter; he shall not be sent for out of the Harvest till he hath reaped that God hath appointed to reap by him. Go tell that fox, Herod, (saith Christ, Luke 13. 31.) Behold, I cast out Devils, and I do cures to day and to morrow; and I will do it in spight of him, he shall not be able, for all he is a crafty wily Fox, with all his cunning to take me; I will work to day and to morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected: Till I have accomplished all my work, till the time come that my Father hath appointed me to suffer in, I will go up and down freely let him do his worst, and when I have done I will suffer, for I have vowed to do it. So here, Let these go, saith he, I have work for them to do, I must send them abroad into all the World, do not touch a hair of them, no more they did. So much for the 8th Verse. The Reason of this is given in the next words.

Verse 9. That the saying might be fulfilled which he spake, of them which thou gavest me, have I lost none.

You must not take these words as spoken by Christ, but it is the Comment that John who wrote this Gospel, putteth upon Christs speech immediately foregoing, and he openeth through the revelation of the Spirit of God the true Reason why that that Command of Christ did take place, that the Disciples were let go, because saith he, that Christ had prayed even just before, in the 17th Chapter; for if you read that Chapter, you shall find that Christ in that solemn Prayer which he puts up to his Father, saith, Those that thou gavest me, I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition. This Prayer he had put up just afore, and you see what present need there was of having it answered.

I shall give you two general Observations from this.

Observ. 1. We had need to lay up Prayers every day before we go abroad and do our business: For indeed we do not know what dangers may befall us afore we come in again. Christ here if he had not prayed just afore that all

all his Apostles might be kept, they might have been in danger, for a great danger they came into, but the efficacy of that Prayer kept them.

Observ. 2. How soon are Prayers answered. Christ had put up this Prayer but even just before, and as some think, he did pray as he came along out of the Chamber where they did eat the Passover, and that he uttered this Prayer to his Father walking from thence: For in the last Verse of the 14th Chapter, saith he, Arise, let us go hence; therefore they conceive that his Sermon mentioned in the 15th and 16th Chapters, and his Prayer mentioned in the 17th, were all uttered as he went along from the Chamber to the Brook Cedron. However certainly it was not long before, perhaps not above half an hour, and here you see it answered, the thing he prayed for is fulfilled, Let these go, saith he, and it was done accordingly; they did not touch one of them, That the saying might be fulfilled which he spake, of them which thou gavest me, have I lost none. In Dan. 9. 3, 21. you shall find that Daniel set himself to pray when as the Evening-Sacrifice began, and there was a Commission presently given to the Angel to come and give him an answer. Prayers my Brethren, are presently heard; so was Christs here, he had an answer presently. So much for the general Observations out of these words.

Now the only Question for the opening the words lyes in this. Those words of Christs in the 17th Chapter [Those that thou gavest me, I have kept, and none of them is lost] seem to have been put up for the keeping them, in respect of the Salvation of their Souls, whereas this here (which it is applyed unto) is spoken only in respect of the preservation of their Bodies, in appearance; Let these go, saith he, let them escape for this time. It is most certain that what our Saviour Christ spake in that place, referreth principally to the Salvation of their Souls; what is the reason then that here it should be applyed to this deliverance of their Bodies, to a Temporal deliverance?

My Brethren, all the Promises in the Scripture are to be taken in the largest sense that may be. As we say of Priviledges and Favours, they are to be interpreted in the largest sense, so are all Promises. That Promise made to Josua, I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee; it referred only to the carrying of him on in that War; yet all the Elect may apply it to all sort of distresses, not only that God will never leave them nor forsake them, in respect of Bodily deliverances, but in respect of their Souls also. So here on the other side, that which Christ speaks of their Souls, is extended to their Bodies too, and they reap the fruit of it in that respect.

And it argues this too, that that God that saves thy Soul, out of the same Love saves thy Body too, therefore interpret it so, for so John doth here; what was spoken in the 17th Chapter of their Souls, he applies it here to their Bodies. Will God save thy Soul? Certainly he will deliver thy Body. When we seek Spiritual things much in the height of our Spirits, then doth God answer us also in Temporal things. And as by the vertue of Christs Resurrection we shall be raised up at the latter day and saved, so by vertue of the same Resurrection we shall be preserved here in the World; the same Power that shall raise us up then, works for us lesser deliverances now. Paul in 2 Cor. 4. 10. speaking of the many deliverances he had from Temporal dangers, he attributes it all to the Resurrection of Christ: We are (saith he) troubled on every side, yet not distressed; cast down, but not destroyed, &c. that the life of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. So here, though Christ did not in his Prayer intend so much the preservation of their Bodies as their Eternal Salvation, yet their deliverance from this so great a danger was a fruit of that Prayer. The same Prayer that saved their Souls saved their Bodies too: and it was a pawn and pledge to them that their Souls should be saved, because the vertue of that Prayer wrought a deliverance for their Bodies out of so eminent a danger; for who would not have thought but that they should all have been taken, seeing they laid about them so as they did? And it was in answer to Christs Prayer; one would have thought it had been but an ordinary Providence, that they were so greedy of Christ that they let the Disciples slip away. No, it was an answer to Prayer made but a while afore.

Observ. 1. Observe from hence, that of all things else in the World, the greatest care that Jesus Christ hath, it is to preserve all his Saints, not to lose one. For he comforts himself in the Seventeenth Chapter, that of those God had given him, he had lost none, but he that was designed to perdition by God himself; and here it is repeated again, and you see what care he takes for their preservation. My Brethren, it would trouble Jesus Christ to Eternity (I may say it with boldness) if he should lose one Soul that he dyed for. Are the Hairs of your Head numbred? Certainly your Persons are numbred, and Christ will not lose one of his Toe, nor a Finger of his Body; nay, though thou beest but as a little tip of his Finger, or as his little Toe, he will have a care to save thee. When he makes up his Jewels, he will not lose any, not the least of them. Lo here am I, saith he, and the children thou hast given me, Heb. 2. 13. And this is my Fathers will, that of all those he hath given me I should lose none, but raise them up at the latter day, John 6. 39.

Observ. 2. And observe this too from hence, That Jesus Christ he can keep us in the very midst of his Enemies. He gives his Disciples here a Pass (as I may call it) when there was a Band of Roman Souldiers, divers of the Chief Priests, and Elders, and Officers from them, all about him and his Disciples, Let these go, saith he. And all to fulfil this, Of those thou hast given me, have I lost none. It is because he rules in the midst of his Enemies. Jesus Christ shewed his power before in confounding these Jews and the rest, by throwing them backward, and now he shews his Power as much in preserving his Disciples in the midst of them, and so he will do to the end of the World. He knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, 2 Pet. 2. 9. He hath the Art and Skill of it, and the Power of it too, for he awed their hearts here when he said, Let these go.

Observ. 3. Lastly, Ministers likewise should have the like care, that none of those that are committed to them, perish, for so Christ, as a good Shepherd had. And so much for the Ninth Verse.

C H A P. VII.

The Tenth and Eleventh Verses Explained with suitable Observations raised from them. The willingness which Christ expressed to come to dye, and be made a Sacrifice, and would have nothing to hinder it.

YOU shall find this (that I may give you a general Preface to the opening of the words of this Tenth verse, and those that follow) that the Evangelists in setting down the Story of Christs Sufferings, they do diligently insert the behaviour of his Apostles, how they carried themselves. It was an ill time (Brethren) for Disciples to sin, when their Master was to be taken, and yet I know not how many Sins of theirs are mentioned. They were fast asleep at that time when he was in his greatest Agony : One would think that at that time above all other they should have watched with him when he was entering into his sufferings for their sins. And now when he was to be taken, you see into what a miscarriage Peter runneth, what a furious rash act he performs. If Christ had pleased, he might have kept them from all these Sins, he had power enough to have done it ; but he would not. What is the Observation from hence.

Observ. 1. That Jesus Christ may be present with a Mans Spirit, and pray for him too (for he had prayed for these that they should be kept from the Evil of the World) and yet that Man run into Sin. If Christ when he was here upon Earth did not keep his People from falling into manifold Sins and Errors ; do not think much if sometimes thou art left to sin against him. He made good use of it, he did bring Glory out of it ; this same rash Act of Peters here, it was an occasion of two things, first of illustrating the Power of Christ the more in keeping of them according to the command he gave, Let these go, for who would not have thought but that they should all have fallen upon Peter and the rest and have killed them presently, a Company of rude Souldiers and Officers Armed ; yet they medled not with them. And it was an occasion of Christs shewing his goodness in healing the Mans Ear, and of shewing a Miracle. And this be assured of that Christ will work good out of all thy Sins, as he did here glory to himself out of this Sin of Peters.

2. Observe, That God may leave his People to sinning even at that time when he is doing the greatest things for them. But I shall pass that now, because we shall have occasion to speak of it in the following Discourse. To speak therefore a little more particularly of this Act of Peters.

Ver. 10. Then Simon Peter having a sword, drew it, and smote the high priests servant, and cut off his right ear, the servants name was Malchus.

You read in Mar. 14. 31. That the Disciples, they did all vow that they would live and dye with him as we say ; they all promised him that if he were taken that Night, they would lose their Lives in his Defence, that they would ; and Peter above the rest he was the forwardest, whoever leaves thee, saith he, I'll not leave thee. Now these Disciples having thus engaged themselves, when they saw that their Master would be taken, they asked him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword ? So Luke tells us, chap. 23. 39. And yet poor Men they had but two Swords amongst them all : And Simon Peter, as he had been the forwardest Man in promising to assist Christ, so he is the forwardest in striking, for before Christ gave them an Answer whether they should smite or no, he out with his Sword and strikes.

Chap. 7.

Peter having a sword.] There were two Swords in the company, as Luke hath it. Christ indeed had said a few hours before, He that hath a sword let him take it; but he intended it in another sense, and therefore they mistook him: However, probable it is that they knowing Christ was to be betrayed that night, they carried out their Swords to fight, having promised to do so before, which may be one occasion of Peters having a Sword; but Josephus and others say, (and it is as likely too) that those that came up to the Feast, (as these did) they travelled through Woods and Wilderesses, and so were in danger of wild Beasts, or Thieves, or the like, and therefore they carried Swords with them; and besides it was the manner and custom of the Galileans especially, to wear Swords, as hath been observed by some. Some Interpreters hence observe that it is lawful to wear defensive Weapons, which the Anabaptists of Germany did use to deny. There is the clearest evidence for it here, for they did not only wear Swords, but Christ bids them if they had no Swords to sell their Garments and buy Swords; so says Luke, chap. 22. 36. And when Peter had done this mischievous act, in drawing his Sword and striking the High-Priests Servant, Christ did not bid him fling it away, but only to put it up again into his place.

In this action of Peters, there was something good and something bad.

Something good. Its evident first that there was a great deal of Zeal and Love to his Master. He was encouraged to it likewise, because he had seen his Master to throw them all upon the ground afore him; thought he, though we be but eleven, and have but two Swords, we may venture, for our Master will assist us: There was a confidence, a Faith in the Power of Christ. And it would seem also that what he did was upon warrant, as he thought, for at the Passover Christ had said, If any man have a sword let him take it. He spake it indeed to another purpose (as I said even now) but Peter might take his ground from thence, misunderstanding his Masters words.

There was something bad and sinful likewise in this action; viz.

1. That Peter did rashly fall upon this act; for the Disciples having asked Christ whether they should draw; before ever Christ answered, he out with his Sword and falls upon the Man. Peter had a bold, and a rash and sudden Spirit, as appeared, as by a world of carriages of his toward Christ, so by this, which was as rash an act as could be; and it was a folly for him to do it; for what was he and ten more, that had but two Swords amongst them, to encounter with all that band of Men that came with Weapons to take Christ

2. That he went about to hinder our Saviour Christ from dying. That's clear to be a Sin by Christs reproof of him; for saith he, Shall I not drink of the cup that my Father hath commanded me to drink of? Wilt thou hinder me? Wilt thou go contrary to Gods Will? Thou didst tempt me once before, Master, spare thy self; and now thou wouldst keep me from dying for thee, and all thy Brethren.

3. That whereas a Lawful Power had siezed upon Christ, (a Lawful Power, I say, though they did it not Lawfully) he would lift up his Sword against the Magistrate, who had sent these Men to take him.

4. That he did indanger all the rest of the Disciples to have been presently hewen a pieces, but that the force of those words [Let these go] hindered it.

5. The truth is, there was an injustice in it, Christ having as it were made a bargain with them, Here am I, says he, let these go; it was injustice in Peter to fall upon them.

Observ. 1. Comfort to those that have bold, and rash, and sudden Spirits. Hast thou a rash, a sudden Spirit? That rashness is sinful, for Christ reproves it in Peter; yet comfort thy self, Peter that great Apostle, was a Man subject to the same infirmity. Yet take heed of walking rashly. Lev. 26. 40. If you walk contrary to me; so we translate it; but I remember Junius translates it,

Book V. it, If you walk rashly with me, I will walk rashly with you. If we walk rashly with God, though he love us and will pardon us, yet he may walk rashly with us again; give us a blow afore we are aware; come with some casual kind of cross or other upon us. God is pleased to spare Peter, for he doth not animadvert for every fault, yet in that place of Leviticus, he expresseth what he will do upon Mens rash walking.

Observ. 2. See here the Spirit of Peter, how valiant and bold he is, runs into the midst of a band of Men, and strikes amongst them; but alas, he did it out of a Humane Courage and Valour, because he had said he would dye with Christ. This poor Man afterwards denies Christ upon the charge of a Damfel; he was afraid of a Maid, and yet here he encounters a company of armed Men; he shewed his Courage with his Sword, when he would not do it with his Tongue, as Calvin saith. Let us have never so much greatness of Spirit Naturally, if we come to any Spiritual Suffering and have not Grace to assist us, our Natural Spirit will not help us in it. Certainly this act of Peters proceeded from his Natural Spirit and Humane Valour that he had, but when he comes to be put to it to suffer in a Spiritual way, Peter shrinks back.

Observ. 3. Good Men may carry on a good cause extream indiscreetly. In appearance this was as good a cause to venture ones Life in as possibly could be, yet how indiscreetly doth Peter manage it! He managed it worse than they did that came to take Christ, for you see they did not fall upon the Disciples at all, which a thousand to one but they had, whereas Peter contrary to Christs agreement with them, falls upon them: As Abimelech said unto Abraham, I am more righteous than thou, in that act; so the truth is, these Men were in this respect more righteous than Peter. In managing a good cause, Godly People commit such errors as this was, and then all the World takes notice of it. They might have blamed Christ and his Disciples, and said, they were a company of rebellious froward fellows, and the rest of them are like these: This might have been laid to Christs charge through Peters indiscretion.

Observ. 4. Our Saviour Christ would not have Peter venture his Life this way. He knew he was better at Preaching than at Fighting, therefore he would have him reserve himself for that, and therefore he bids him put up his Sword. It had been well for this Kingdom if some had ventured themselves in a way of Counsel rather than Fighting. Christ I say had other work for Peter. It is good for a Man to lay out his Life in that, which he is best in. Peter, who was designed for an Apostle, that had so many precious Notions committed to him; for him to venture his Life in such a rude manner, it was a great fault.

Observ. 5. Although Christ was an eminent Person, the Saviour of the World, yet Christ would not have Peter fight for him against the Magistrate; as in this Peter did, because it was against the Authority of the Magistrate. The Sword is committed peculiarly to the Magistrate: As Rom. 13. He bears not the sword in vain: He bears the sword not thee; thou mayest defend thy self in a private Quarrel if set upon, but here came out the Authority of the Magistrate to attach Christ; and in such a case thou art not to lift up thy Sword. Put up thy sword again into his place, saith Christ.

And yet it was the best cause one would think that ever was to fight in. If a Man might fight meerly for Religion, I say meerly for Religion, here had been the greatest colour for it in the World; why? It was to save the Life of Christ, the Lord of the World; and to fight for the Life of Christ is more than to fight for the Truth of Christ; yet, no, saith Christ, Put up thy sword again, trust me to manage my own cause. Religion may be fought for as it is become a Civil Right and Liberty of a State, for so it becometh when it is Enacted by the Power of that State, but meerly and simply to fight for Religion Religion, there is no warrant in the Word of God for it. To fight for Christ's Life was not warrantable for Peter.

Chap. 7.

Christ tells him withal (as in other Evangelists) He that kills with the sword shall be killed with the sword: He that will fight in a Quarrel that is not warrantable, he himself shall be found out one day. But I rather think the meaning is, thou needest not trouble thy self to avenge my Quarrel upon these Men, for the Sword shall find out this Nation for putting me to Death; for so you know it did, the Romans came and took away their City and Nation.

Observ. 6. Lastly, When God hath made a Promise and given forth his Word, though there may many things fall out to overturn it, yet it shall stand. Christ had said, Let these go; Peter you see had like to have spoiled all, he goes and runs into a Riot, which might have endangered them; yet notwithstanding the Word of Christ doth stand. When God hath made a Promise of deliverance, there shall those things fall out that one would think would hazard the performance, and that through Mens own default, yet God will bring about the deliverance. So much in the general for this act of Peters.

And he smote the High-Priests servant, and cut off his right ear, the servants name was Malchus.

This Servant of the High-Priests it seems was the first Man that stepped forth to lay hold upon Christ, and therefore Peter encounters him first, for as yet they had not taken Christ; for the Text saith afterward, Then the Captains and the band took Jesus. It seems therefore I say, that this Man was the forwardest of the company, which he did either to please his Master, or perhaps he was the Officer to serve the Arrest upon him in a formal way, as we do. Peter now falls upon him first, and cuts off his Ear, some think it was but the tip of his Ear (for so the word signifies sometimes) but there is no ground for that, for Luke, he calls it the whole Ear.

He saith the Servants name was Malchus; which some fetch from the Hebrew root, which signifies one bought; because as he was a Servant, so perhaps his Master had bought him with his Money, or otherwise obtained him to be his Servant. And as Caiaphas his Master was (as appears by all the Story) the greatest enemy of Christ, so this Malchus was the forwardest of all the rest to attach Christ. The Obedience of the Servant to the Master in Scripture, is exprest by lending the Ear, and by boring the Ear, and therefore for his doing this out of Obedience and Zeal to his Master, this Punishment befalls him. But I pass over that.

Peter cut off his ear.] It is certain that Peter aimed at his Head, to have cleit that down, but God in his Providence directs the blow so, that no more hurt was done but the cutting off the Ear. It's strange it should not hit his Shoulder, yet you see God guided it so that it did not.

Observ. The Observation I have from this is only this, That God in his Providence guides and directs blows, and all such casual things as these are. Such passages of Providence there are, in guiding the motions of Mens hands, and the motions of the Creatures, oftentimes for the preservation of us in dangers, and how manifold experiences have we had of them! Who almost is there but in their lives have been either near being killed, and God hath come in by his Providence, guiding and directing such accidents and occurrences, that they have been preserved! Especially those that are Souldiers, they have found strange kind of shots that have been made, and how near they have come to kill them, and yet they have mist. Or else they have been near killing others in a casual way, and God in his Providence hath prevented it. I say it is every Mans case almost, we may see many examples of the Providence of God in this kind. We see it here toward Peter, and it was a mighty Providence; for had Peter killed this Man, had there been a Murder committed upon him, there had been such a ground of quarrel that they would have fallen upon all the Disciples and certainly have cut them to pieces, but Christ had prayed that they should go away free, therefore God in his Providence guides Peters blow, so that he strikes off nothing but the Ear, though he aimed at his head, and Christ heals that Ear too, that so his Disciples might be all saved and delivered. So much for the Tenth Verse.

Verse 11. Then said Jesus unto Peter, put up thy sword into the sheath: The Cup which my father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

I have observed something before upon Christs bidding him put up his Sword; therefore I shall say little of it now. Jesus said unto Peter. Why unto Peter? For in Luke he speaks to them all not to draw their Swords, Suffer you thus far saith he; But as he spake to them all because they all asked him whether they should draw; so more particularly and personally to Peter, because he had sinned and did actually draw his Sword, for that is the manner of Christ, to reprove those, and to have those reprov'd in a peculiar manner that Sin more peculiarly. He bids him put it up he doth not bid him not to wear it, or not to use it, but put to it up only: But of that before.

— The Cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

In Matth. 26. 51, 52, 53, 54. you shall find that Christ useth other Arguments to his Disciples to be quiet and to put up their Swords. How shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, (saith he) that thus it must be; that's one Reason. What need I care for your help, cannot I pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve Legions of Angels: And, all they that take the sword, shall perish with the Sword. All these doth Christ give as reasons to them to be quiet. But the Apostle John writing after all the other Evangelists, inserts what they omitted, and he mentioneth here another reason, and indeed the highest reason of all the rest, Shall I not drink, &c.

From whence take this general Observation, that there may be many Motives and Reasons in one Action, many considerations that may keep a Man from sinning in one Action, though there be one more principal than all the rest, as this was the principal in Christ.

But why doth he use this Argument to Peter more than to all the rest? Upon a double ground.

1. Because it had been Peters sin to hinder him from suffering. And you shall see how his heart still rose against Peter for it. He had once before said, Master spare thy self; Christ calls him Satan for it, and he never called any of them Satan but Judas, Get thee behind me Satan (saies he to Peter, Matth. 16. 23.) He saw Satan in it. And now again, when he was to enter into his sufferings, Peters Zeal was so high that he would have rescued him out of their hands if he could, and have kept him from suffering, therefore Christ in a special manner speaks to him.

Observ. 1. To hinder one in any good, to hinder one in suffering when God calls him to it (though out of a foolish pity;) how great an Evil is it? With what a slight Eye did Peter look upon this thing of Christ, he thought it was only a carrying of him to Prison, and that the Life of a Man should be taken away. He saw not into the bottom of it, he was ignorant of the Scope of all this, viz. that it was the saving of the World. Peter though otherwise a good Man, and a Believer the understood it not.

2. Christ speaks this to Peter, not only to lay open his Sin in hindring him, but to lay open his own Spirit. The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink? He doth not say, a necessity is laid upon me to drink this Cup; He doth not say simply, My Father hath commanded me to drink it, But shall I not drink it? It is a Speech that implies that his Spirit knew not how to do otherwise than obey his Father; as if there were such a Natural Natural Principle in him, such an Instinct that he could not choose but do it. Even just as Joseph said, Gen. 39. 9. How shall I do this great wickedness and sin against God? So Christ here, The Cup which my Father hath given me, how shall I but drink it? It implies the highest willingness that can be: For still you shall find this to be Johns design to hold forth the willingness of Christ to suffer, that's his project, therefore he singles out a Speech that the other Evangelists omit, which most of all holds it forth, he mentions not the necessity, because of the Law, and because of his Duty, or because the Scriptures must be fulfilled, others had done that, but shall my Father give me a Cup, and shall not I drink it? He doth here shew that he doth fulfil the Commandment more out of Love than any other principle; that he was led by the greatest spirit of Ingenuity that could be; For I know not a Speech of greater Ingenuity than this is, The cup that my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

My Brethren, to fulfil the Law of God out of a principle of Love and Ingenuity, it is a higher way of fulfilling it, than merely to aim at the Letter. Christ indeed had an eye to the command, yet that was not it that principally moved him; It's true, saith he, there is a necessity laid upon me, and the Scriptures cannot else be fulfilled, yet above all this I have a principle in me that moves me, It is my Father, he hath commanded this Cup to me, how shall I not but drink of it? There is a further principle than merely Obedience to the Law, that leads on a godly Man, and lead on Jesus Christ to Obedience. For Love it is the fulfilling of the Law, so it was in Christ and so in his Apostles, and in all his Saints.

You read in other Evangelists, That when Christ was in the Garden but a matter of half an hour before, he had earnestly prayed to his Father that this Cup might pass. But when once God had set it on upon his Spirit that it was his will that he should drink it, and that it was impossible in respect of his Decree that it should pass from him, when God I say had intimated this to him in Prayer, and he had submitted to it, then he saies, Not my will, but thy will be done; Now you see how firm and strong his Resolution was, He that had prayed against it before, when once he knew Gods Will, and submitted to it; now he longs to drink of it, Shall I not drink (saith he) of the cup that my Father hath given me? Will you have me go and overthrow the Answer I have had of my Prayers? Shall I break that resolution I have taken up and expressed in my Prayer, shall I not drink of the Cup when I have yielded and submitted to my Father?

When thou see'st Gods Will determined, or when God hath cast thy heart in Prayer one way; and he calls thee to suffer, and hath brought thy heart to yield; O learn then to keep thy heart in that frame, to continue thy resolution, have no more risings against it. Christ you see had not but the highest Ingenuity that ever was to it.

Therefore now you that seek to God at any time by Prayer for any thing, and you have an Answer, you have a Resolution drawn forth in Prayer, you have a bent, a byas of Spirit clapt upon you in seeking God in some particular business, keep to it, hold to it. It is a mighty engagement to have had a Mans Spirit so and so framed in Prayer, when a Man can say I have been afore God in Prayer, and my Spirit hath submitted, and I have been brought to such a Resolution: O take heed of breaking such Resolutions, you have the highest engagement in the world to continue in them. Therefore when you pray, mind those engagements that are in your hearts to God in Prayer, and keep to them. Christ he came new from Prayer now, he had prayed that the Cup might be removed, when God had once set it upon his Spirit that it was his will he should drink of it, and he had submitted to it, and resolved upon it, you hear of no more complaints, yea, you hear complaints on the contrary, that he should be hindered in doing it. How often my Brethren do we come before God, and express our selves against such and such a Sin, we submit our selves to such and such a way of Self-denial; but when we are come from before God, how do our minds alter! You see Christs did not in the greatest point that ever ever was, when he once had submitted, saith he, I have submitted, and shall I not drink it? He had not the least rising thought against it afterward. We come and ingage our selves against such a Sin to God in Prayer, and go away with our Eyes scarce drie, and are tempted to it again: Oh how should we think with our selves, shall I do that which I have prayed against? which I have ingaged my self against? This was Christs case here, Shall I not drink it, saith he? Nay, it is more emphatical, The cup that my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it? He turns the words, the Phrase is set in such a posture as hath the most Emphasis that can be.

Senchius Antiq. convival. Lib. 3. c. 13.

The Cup which my Father hath given me. His Passion is called a Cup, so he himself calleth it, Matth. 20. 22. and Mar. 10. 38. Are ye able to drink of the Cup that I shall drink of: Speaking of his Passion: And it is called a Cup, not only because it was his demensum, the Portion that was allotted him by his Father, for the manner of the Antients in Feasts was to set every Man his Cup or Portion of Drink that was allotted him by his Trencher as it were, as we now set Bread, so they had every one his Cup, every one his Quantum or Portion. And so indeed in Scripture any Portion of Affliction or Suffering that God doth set out to Men it is called a Cup; as in Jer. 25. 17. I took the cup and I did give it from the Lord into the hands of all the Nations, and made them all to drink of it. So in Ezek. 21. 31, 32, 33. and in Habak. 2. 16. And in many other places you have the Cup put for the Portion or Measure of an Affliction. But I say he calls it a Cup, not only because it was his Portion, but I rather think that which is in this place aimed at, is, that it was his Meat and Drink to do the Will of his Father. For you see Christ is hearty in submitting to his Father, It is the cup saith he, which my Father hath given me, which Speech (as I said afore) expresseth the highest willingness. Now in John 4. 34. He saith, My meat and drink is to do the will of my Father, and to finish his work; and he looks upon this Cup when once he had prayed over it, as that which his Father had given him to drink, and therefore as it was Meat for him to do his Will, so it was Drink to him, it was pleasant to him (in some respect sweetned by an Angel) to take this Cup and drink it off.

Observ. 1. First you see the Sovereignty of God to dispose of what Cup he is pleased you shall have in your life time; which you see Jesus Christ here submitteth unto. For a Cup it is not only taken for a Portion of evil things, but for a Portion of good things, and God disposeth unto several Men, several Cups, and of several sizes as he pleaseth. It is certain that the bitterest Cup that ever was, was disposed of unto Jesus Christ, therefore no Man needs complain.

Observ. 2. Secondly, Christ did not look to what the Jews did, or the Roman Band that was with them, that were now round about him, he eyes not them, but still he looks to God, eyes him, It is the cup which my Father hath given me. Peter you see, he looked only at the Jews as his Adversaries, no Peter (saith he) it is my Fathers Cup, there is an higher hand in it. So should we do in all our Actions; as Job did when he said Job 1. 21. It is God that hath given, and God that hath taken away; God hath bid him curse, saith David of Shimei, 2 Sam. 16. 10. Therefore what have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruah? So here Christ carries himself, This is from my Father (saies he) I will not have to do with these Jews; It's true, I fall into these mens hands, but it is the council of my father, as Act. 2. 23. This Christ looks to, and so I say should we do in all our Sufferings.

Observ. 3. Thirdly, It is the Cup which my Father hath given me. Christ in his Sufferings doth not look upon God as a Judge. Nor do not you my Brethren in any of your Afflictions; suppose you see the Affliction answering your Sin, yet look not upon God as a Judge in it, but as a Father; it is the cup which my Father hath given me, saith he, and we are to be conformable to him in Afflictions. The greatest and bitterest Sufferings he sweetned to us, us, looked upon as coming from a Father; it was so with Christ, when he looks upon this as a Cup given him by his Father, he looks upon it as his drink, and it is a pleasure to him to drink it off.

Chap. 7.

Observ. 4. Fourthly, Every Man hath a set Portion of Affliction, every Man hath his Cup; It is the cup my Father hath given me to drink: Christ himself had his Cup, his set quantity; He had a Cup that was answerable and proportionable to the Sins of those he suffered for, God put in a quantity for every Mans Sin, and Christ drunk it off to the bottom, the Sins and the Wrath due for them was all wrung into this Cup which Christ drunk off, and drunk off heartily. If thou hadst drunk off that Cup, there had been Eternity in the bottom, and thou couldst never have wrung out the dregs of it, but he drinks it off heartily, and he thinks much of Peter that went about to hinder him of it; Shall I not drink of the cup which my Father hath given me?

How is his Father said to have given it him?

By decreeing it afore-hand: For he had not yet taken it, he had entred into it indeed, he had tasted of it in the Garden; but he was going on to taste more of it, and that Cup which his Father by his Decree allotted to him, he willingly takes and submits to it.

And let me add this, Whatsoever Cup it be that God in thy Life affords thee, take it, and go drink it off heartily, for whether thou wilt or no, if it be a Cup he hath given thee, thou shalt drink it. In Jer. 25. 15. Go, saith God to all the Nations, and say unto them all, Drink ye of this cup, and if any of the Nations shall refuse to drink it, tell them, that my people have drank it, therefore they shall drink it. Do not therefore only make a necessity of it, and because of a necessity submit; but do it out of that ingenuity that Christ did here, he did not submit meerly out of necessity, but with all the willingness in the World, The Cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

C H A P. VIII.

How Christ was taken and bound by those who came to Apprehend Him, and was thus led away by them as the Victims, or Sacrifices used to be to the Altar. That even this his binding hath an Influence on our being loosened from those Chains, wherein Sin hath fetter'd us.

NOW beginneth the first of Christ his outward Sufferings, his Sufferings from Men; he had suffered from his Father before, in the Garden, where now he was, when he sweat drops of Blood.

Verse 12. Then the Band, and the Captain, and Officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him.

In these words there are two things considerable :

1. The Persons taking.
2. The Person taken.

The Persons taking, is the Band and the Captain, and the Officers of the Jews.

The Person taken, is Christ himself.

And then here is what they did with him, they took him, and they bound him. Then the Officers and the Captain, and the Band took Jesus and bound him.

It is said that all of them took him. Certainly all of them at that instant could not lay hold upon him; but his being taken is ascribed unto them all, because they all rushed upon him at once with a violence. His throwing of them down backward afore had made them afraid, therefore they break forth with violence, and they did all environ him and compass him about, and in that respect it is said they all took him.

You shall find in Psal. 22. (which Psalms we may indeed call a Crucifix, it being as clear a Story of the Crucifying of Christ, as Matth. 26. is.) In that Psalms the first thing in the Story of his Sufferings mentioned there (for the rest are Prayers) is, Many bulls have compassed me, strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round, so verse 12. And again, ver. 16. Dogs have compassed me, the Assembly of the wicked have enclosed me. The Title of that Psalms (as some out of the Hebrew read it) it is the hind of the morning, so he calls himself, and they like so many Hounds here came round about him in a ring to apprehend him, Dogs saith he have compassed me, which hath an allusion to the Title of the Psalms.

Here is likewise you see a particular mention of the Persons, here is the Band, and the Captain and the Officers of the Jews; both Jews and Gentiles, which I shall give you Observations upon anon.

There is one particle which is a very small one, but there is much in it [Then] Then the Captain and the Band and the Officers of the Jews took Jesus: Some read it (and rightly too) Therefore the Captain, &c. Why therefore? Because that he had afore offered himself willingly to them, they could not else have taken him. There is a great deal of Emphasis in that little Particle, there is in every Tittle of the Scripture. (No man saith he, John 10. 18.)

is able to take my life from me except I lay it down. These Men whom he had thrown down to the ground had never been able to have laid hands on him, had he not expressed himself willing. Have I not told you, saith he, that I am the man? And he shewed his willingness too in his expression to Peter, Shall I not drink of the cup which my Father hath given me to drink? And [therefore] the Bands, and the Captain, and the Officers of the Jewes took Jesus and bound him.

All the other Evangelists do not tell us that they bound him when they first took him. Matthew tells us indeed, chap. 27. 2. that they sent him bound from Caiaphas the High-Priests Hall, to the Common Hall to Pilate. But that he was bound at the first taking, and that by them that took him, we are beholden to John for this circumstance. Now the reason of their binding him (I speak now by way of Historical interpretation of the words) are these.

1. Because Judas had bid them (as Matthew tells us) to hold him fast, Whomsoever I shall kiss saith he, that same is he, hold him fast. Matth. 26. 48. For Judas he knew the power of Christ, he was privy to his going through the midst of a whole press of men when they would have thrown him down from off the brow of a Hill; therefore saith he, when you take him, hold him fast; and therefore they bind him, and they took him and bound him with that cruelty that the Disciples all ran away.

2. They bound him likewise as one that was worthy of Death, and so thereby to prejudice his Sentence. Such the Jewes did use to bind, as Jerome says. And it was that which is mentioned, ver. 24. as one great ingredient that had influence into Peters denial of him, and persisting in it the second time that he was sent bound from Annas, and continued still bound afore Caiaphas, and so thereby saw there was no hope for him of life; and so the more easily drawn and tempted to deny him.

3. They bound him likewise that they might cast shame upon him, that they might lead him bound, which was proper to Malefactors. And 2 Sam. 3. 33, 34. Dauids speech of Abner implies it; Dyed Abner as a fool, as a malefactor? Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters. Now our dear and blessed Lord and Redeemer, he dyed like a vile Person in outward appearance: His Hands and his Feet were bound, at least his Hands were bound. And that which might further move them to deal in this manner the more violently with him, was the fetters that he had cast upon them. And therefore in Psal. 2. 1, 2, 3. (which Peter quoteth in Acts 4. 25. and applies to the Crucifying of Christ) he mentioneth that as the reason; Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? They are mightily provoked; why? Come let us break their bands asunder. Christ and his Disciples had extremly bound them and their Consciences; now they are even with him, they clap fetters and bands upon him.

4. They did it likewise in a way of trophy; and therefore you shall find in Matth. 27. 2. when they had bound him, they led him away from the High-Priests house, in a kind of triumph, to Pilate the Governour.

So you have the Historical opening of the words, They took Jesus and bound him. And in all this, and so likewise in whatsoever befel Christ in his Sufferings, there was a further Mystical meaning, which I term so in respect of those hidden ends in it. Therefore in the next place we will consider what was the Mystery of all this: There was nothing befel Christ in his Passion, but it was both to fulfil Prophecies, and it was for something answering thereunto in us as the cause thereof; and in the merit of it, and the benefit by it redounding to us, it hath a suitable influence into something about our selves.

First, All that befel Christ was to fulfil the Types and Prophecies that went of him. The great and most eminent Type of Christ in his Sufferings, was Isaac; who was the Son of the Promise, as Christ was the promised Seed. And in Heb 11. the Apostle makes him a figure of Christs Resurrection; and as in his Resurrection so in his offering to Death. Now the first thing that Abraham did to Isaac when he was to offer him up as a Sacrifice, was,

Book V. he took him and bound him, so saith Gen. 22. 9. And Christ here, whom Isaac typified in his Death as well as in his delivery from Death, was bound. The Sacrifices of the Old Law, they were first led bound to the Priest, and then bound to the Horns of the Altar, and there slain. So was Christ here.

And so for Christ his taking; for I here put both together: The Ark was a Type of Christ, and that you know was taken by the Philistines; so is Christ now.

Adam, he likewise was his Type. There was an allusion in the Sufferings of Christ in the Garden unto the first Temptation in a Garden. Adam you know sinned in a Garden, Christ he suffered in a Garden; there doth the Agony meet him, and there he was taken. And what was the first outward act of Sin? How was it put forth? Gen. 3. 6. The woman took of the fruit of the tree (having first plucked it off with her hands) and gave it to her husband, and he took it and did eat thereof. In answering to this, Christ the second Adam, his hands are bound while he was here in the Garden. And as his being bound, so also this his being taken by them was foresignified. Thus in Matth. 26. 56. when it is said they took him, it is added, That the scriptures of the Prophets might be fulfilled. Now do but look in the Margent of your Bibles, what Scripture is quoted there? What is the place of Scripture that the Translators of the Bible refer to in that Verse? You shall find it to be Lam. 4. 20. and there it is said, The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, (the Messiah, the Christ, for so Anointed signifies in the Hebrew, the Christ of the Lord) he was taken in their pit, of whom we said, under his shadow we shall live among the Heathen. This Book of the Lamentation, tho' it was made upon occasion of the Captivity, yet because the foundation of the Captivity was laid in the taking away of that good King, Josiah; for after his Death that People had never a good day, they never thrived; so that Book relates to him: And it is clear that the Lamentations were made in relation to Josiah, as well as to the Captivity, by that in 2 Chron. 35. 25. And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah, (and these Lamentations in this Book, you know are the Lamentations of Jeremiah) and all the singing men and the singing women, spake of Josiah in their Lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel, and behold, they are written in the Lamentations; that is, in the Book of the Lamentations. Now of Josiah it is said, He was taken in their pit, so we translate it; but others, and the Septuagint agrees with it too, He was taken in their sins: The Sins of that People were the cause of his Death, which is said to be in the Valley of Megiddo. 2 Chron. 35. 32.

But whether is Josiah a Type of Christ or no, that our Translators should refer the taking of Christ to the fulfilling of this Prophecy in the Lamentations?

For that, you have Zech. 12. 10, 11. He saith there, That he will pour upon the house of David, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of prayer and supplication, (speaking of the time when they should acknowledge Jesus Christ to be the Messiah) and (saith he) they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, (meaning the Messiah) and they shall mourn for him, &c. And ver. 11. In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem as the mourning of Hadadrimmon, in the valley of Megiddon. Now that mourning there was for Josiah, for there he was taken and arrested with a deadly wound, whereof he dyed, and was taken and slain in the Sins of that Nation, and to that do our Translators refer us; and you see he was a Type of Christ too, he had kept a Passover, as Christ had done, a little afore this; they promised themselves to live safely under his shadow, even as the Disciples promised themselves that Christ would presently restore the Kingdom unto Israel: But he was taken in our Sins, and our Sins were the bands that fettered him.

Secondly, As all this was done to fulfil the Types and Prophecies of him, so we shall see, that our deserts were the cause of it, and that his being bound hath an influence to loose us from something with which we were bound. For there was nothing betwixt Christ in these his Sufferings, nothing was done to to him, but what answers to something which we had done, and which was to be done toward us.

1. Our Sins were the cause of his binding : Therefore in Psal. 40. (which also is a Psalm of Christ ; for it is, part of it, quoted by the Apostle in Heb. 10. and applied unto Christ, Sacrifices and offerings thou wouldst not have.) saith he at ver. 12. Innumerable evils have taken hold upon me, mine iniquities have compassed me about. It is plain my Brethren, that Christ speaks this Psalm of himself ; he reckoned all our Sins as his own, and by vertue of our Sins encompassing us about, and taking hold of us (which in the Garden they did) it is, that these Men take hold of Christ, and bind him, he standing now in our stead : For the truth is, Christ he could like Sampson, have broken all these cords asunder ; what weakened him ? It was because he was fettered with our Sins. Mine iniquities saith he (confessing ours to be his) have taken hold upon me ; and therefore these came all about him like Bees, like Dogs, and sieze upon him : We were Satans Captives, therefore was he theirs. In sinning against God we break all bands, as the expression is, Jer. 5. 5. therefore is he bound. Our Sins took hold of him first, and then the Band and the Officers had power to take him and bind him.

2. Consider the answerable fruit and benefit of it arising to us. Hereby we were all bondslaves to Sin and Satan ; 2 Pet. 2. 19. Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. We were led captive by Satan at his will ; so saith the Apostle, 2 Tim. 2. 26. Rom. 7. 23. Sin it insnareth a Man, Prov. 5. 22. His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins. And we were not only in the bands of iniquity, (as the expression is Acts 8. 23.) but we should have been reserved as the Devil and his Angels are, in Chains of Darknes : (Such an expression the Scripture hath in the Epistle of Jude, ver. 6. He saith the Angels which kept not their first estate, He hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day ; and Peter Ep. 1. chap. 3. ver. 19. speaks of Spirits in Prison which were once disobedient in the dayes of Noe.) Chains of the everlasting Wrath of God and of Guilt, should have bound us over to the great day ; bound and bound hand and foot, as you have it in Matth. 22. 13. Take him and bind him hand and foot, and cast him into everlasting darkness. This was our condition ; and now because we were bound with these Chains, to the end that we might be set free and loosed from them, is Christ bound : For it is a certain rule, what should have been done to us, something correspondent was done to Christ ; and the vertue and excellency of his Person was such, though it was done to his Body, it bringeth us freedom from the like due to our Souls ; and by his being thus bound and led, he himself afterward when he ascended, led Captivity captive. You have a place expresse to this purpose, and it is a place that plainly speaks of Christ, for it is applyed unto him by the Apostle in 1 Cor. 15. 55. the place is Hosea 13. 14. I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death ; O Death I will be thy death ; O grave I will be thy destruction. But what goes before this ? See ver. 12. The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up. God had bound up Ephraim and his iniquity together for Hell ; saith he, I will ransom them : And how doth he ransom them ? The truth is, by being bound himself, he standeth bound before God his Father, (for he deals with his Father in all this, he doth not deal with the Jewes here) and in Gods intentions those fetters that were to be laid upon us were laid upon him, and so he cometh to free us by vertue of himself being bound ; and thus as we should have been arraigned before the Judgment-seat of God, so was he before Pilate, the Analogy holds all along in his Sufferings.

Therefore you shall find the Scripture follows this Metaphor. In Zech. 9. 10. he tells us, by the Blood of the Covenant we are delivered, being prisoners of hope. And in Isa. 61. 1. and Luke 4. 18. He is said to be anointed to preach liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. And the like you have in Isa. 42. 7. I have given thee for a covenant of the people, &c. to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that set in darkness out of the prison house. Hence is it that when he comes to convert a Man to God, he is said to bind the strong Man : Matth. 12. 28. Whence is it that Christ hath this strength in him? (I mean meritoriously) Because he himself was bound, it is by vertue of that that the strong Man is bound.

Lastly, Will you consider the Heart of Christ all this while? For under his Sufferings it is good to consider that. Certainly Christs Heart was sensible of his Sufferings in every particular, none was ever so sensible as he. Why you shall find how his Heart took it, by that speech of his whilst they were a binding of him. Matthew tells us, Chap. 26. 55. that he said to the multitude at that time, Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and staves for to take me? I sate dayly with you teaching in the temple, and you laid no hold on me : And now they did. And Luke he tells us further, chap. 22. 52. *Jesus said unto the chief priests and the captains of the temple, and the elders which were come to him, are ye come out as against a thief with swords and staves? What to bind me as a thief? To deal so dishonourably with me? This is mentioned as a thing that grieved him, and foked into his very Soul. The dishonour of it did. So to be bound and led was most dishonourable. Thus 2 Sam. 3. 33, 34. David when he lamented over Abner expresth it, Dyd Abner as a fool dyes? That is, as a bold Person, a Malefactor, by Justice and Law convicted : Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters; as of Malefactors it was used to be ; yet this was done to Christ, his hands were bound in, as of a bold Person, and so he was led to death. So in Judas his betraying of him, What thou, saith he, my familiar friend, that didst eat bread with me, dost thou lift up thy heel against me? that was it that did sink into his Spirit. And in that Psal. 40. 13. you shall see how this act of theirs pierced his Soul, Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, innumerable evils have compassed me about, so that I am not able to look up : His iniquities took hold of his very Soul, while they were incompassing him about like Dogs. And Psal. 22. 12. Be not far from me, for trouble is near : He saw them coming. All this affected the Heart of Christ; for the Psalms lay open his Heart as the Evangelists do the outward story. So much now both for the Historical opening of the words, and also for that which is the Mystry of it. I will now come to an Observation or two from all this, that was done to our Lord and Saviour Christ, and from the Persons that did it.*

Observ. 1. First, From the Persons that did it, they are you see all here enumerated; The band, and the Captain, and the Officers of the Jewes. And Luke saith, there were some of the Chief Priests there, (and by Chief Priests were meant the heads of the Levites, of which there were twenty four) and the Captains of the Temple as well as the Captain of the Roman Band, and some of the Elders of the People. And it is said of them all that they took him, (though all could not lay hold on him) because they all consented to it, because they all gathered round in a ring about him, that he might not escape. Observe, that God takes notice particularly of every one that have any hand (yea, he doth ascribe the act to them if their consent be but to it) in persecuting his People, as he did here of these that persecuted Christ, for there is the same reason of both; they are all named, all the sorts of them are enumerated. He takes notice of any one that doth but cry Aha, at any thing that is done against a Child of God. As Edom that cryed Aha; and poor Tyrus in Ezek. 26. 2. because she cryed Aha, and said she should be replenished, she should have the trade now Israel was destroyed; God takes notice of it, and threatens ruine to her for it.

Observ. 2. But Secondly, God did so order it, that in all the Sufferings of Christ, both Jew and Gentile had a hand in them, in every particular action that did befall him. Here was the Captain of the Roman Band, and the Officers of the Jewes; and here were the High Priests and Elders of the People, at the taking of him; both the Ecclesiastical and Civil State. So likewise when he was condemned (for the Evangelists carry it along through all the Story) there was Pilate the Governour, he must have a hand in it, and there was Herod that was the King of Galilee, he was sent to him also; and there was the Roman Souldiers, and there were the High Priest and the rest of that Sanhedrim.

Sanhedrim. Ecclesiastical State, Civil State, Jews, Gentiles, all have a hand in every particular of the Sufferings of Christ.

Observ. 3. Thirdly, From the consideration of Christs being bound take this Meditation; let no Affliction, (for all Afflictions are called Bands by the Apostle; Remember those that are in bonds, as if ye were bound with them. Heb. 13. 3.) let no Band I say, be thought too much by you. Be willing to be bound for Christ if he call you to suffer; you see he was willing to be bound for us. And never let the vileness of the Persons trouble you, which indeed would even make ones Stomach rise, that such should have to do with a Man, consider the Lord of Life was apprehended and bound by the basest and vilest sort of Men; for commonly such are those that are employed in such Offices; he was taken by the rude Souldiers, that certainly handled him rudely and with violence; for it is said in Zachary, Zach. 13. 7. I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered: Now they all ran away when he was bound, therefore they smote him.

Observ. 4. And then again consider, while Christ was bound, all that whole City, the Pharisees and the Jews, they are free. Whilst wicked Men do enjoy all liberty and freedom, the Church is bound; so Christ himself was.

Observ. 5. And then further, We should therefore prize all the liberty and freedom that the Gospel affords us, because they are all fruits of Christs being bound; Christs being bound was it that purchased all our liberties.

Observ. 6. Lastly, Let the bands of his Love draw our Hearts; for as I said afore, he could have broken all these cords, as Sampson did those with which he was bound, but the cords of Love bound him as well as the cords of our Sins: It was these Cords fastened him to the Cross more than the Nails; yea, and bound him there more than our Sins did, or else he would never have suffered himself to be bound. As Paul went up bound in the Spirit to Jerusalem, bound up in the bands of Love, which made him willing to be bound outwardly, therefore he calls himself the Prisoner of Christ, and to have the bands of Christ upon him, to be the bondman, the Vinctus of Christ; so doth Christ, he is bound with the Cords of Love, so they are called, Hosea 11. 4. I drew them with the cords of a man, with the bands of love. Oh let the Love of Christ bind us and constrain us, (as the phrase is 2 Cor. 5. 14.) to bring every high thought into subjection, into captivity unto him; so he was for us. And so much for this first circumstance, or this first beginning of the outward Sufferings of our Lord and Saviour Christ, his being bound: And they bound him.

Verse 13. And they led him away to Annas first, (for he was Father in law to Caiaphas) which was the High-Priest that same year.

The Scripture doth put much, as upon his being bound, so upon his being led away. And my Brethren, as we go along in opening of these Sufferings of Christ, carry in your thoughts still the Person to whom all this was done; it was our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: Every thing he did in a way of Suffering, how great must it be think you, when nothing befel him but what was appointed him by his Father, and that in relation to the taking away of our Sins?

They led him away.] The truth is, his being led up and down is noted in the story as one eminent thing in his Suffering, and therefore is not to be past by. Those that have made the Topography of Jerusalem and those places, do account it to be seven miles that he was led up and down from first to last afore he was Crucified, which was an exceeding great indignity to him: They hurried him first from the Garden to Annas his House; from thence (as another Evangelist tells us) he was led to Caiaphas; Matthew tells us he was led from thence to Pilate to the Common Hall; from Pilate he was led to Herod; from Herod he was led back to Pilate again; from Pilate when he had sentenced him, he was led to the Cross. Thus was our Lord and Saviour Christ tossed up and down, and there is particular mention made of them all, which could not choose but put him to a great deal of pain and trouble.

And

And my Brethren, do but consider, do but think of any Person that is a Person of worth, that should be hurried thus up and down from place to place, with his hands manacled, all the People following him, using all manner of Indignities to him, think of one that you praise and value either for the Gospels sake or otherwise; I say, do but think of such a one, and then behold our Lord and our Saviour Christ in all his tossings, and he dings up and down. I remember there is this Expression in one of the Psalms, I am as a grasshopper, saith he, because he was thus hurried and turmoiled from place to place; his heart was sensible of this.

But what is the Mystery of this? For still let us look to the inward part of it as well as to the History it self.

First, There was a Type in it, for every Sacrifice was first led to the High Priest, and then offered, Levit. 17. 5. So Christ, being to be made a Sacrifice for Sin, he is carryed to the High Priest, in the way he goes to Annas indeed, but afterwards from him he was led to Caiaphas who was High Priest that year. And to make up the Type more full, which is a thing exceeding observable, It is said in Isa. 53. 7. that after our sins were laid upon him, and that the iniquities of us all did take hold on him, He was [led] as a sheep to the slaughter. Now you must know that the Garden from whence he was led stood at the bottom of the Mount of Olives beyond the Brook Cedron, and the Gate which was next to that place thorough which he was to go into the City, vvas called the Sheep-gate, for it vvas nigh the Temple, vvhich stood on that side of Hierusalem, and the Sheep and Oxen (but especially the Sheep, for they sacrificed most of them) that vvere to be sacrificed vvere fed in the Meadovvs and Fields of Cedron, and from thence they vvere led through that Gate to the Temple to be sacrificed, vvhich therefore vvas called the Sheep-gate. To make up the Type therefore more full, and that you may see how the Scripture opens it self in these things, he is led as a Sheep to the Slaughter to be a Sacrifice for Sin (for so the Prophet saith he was) even through the Sheep-gate.

My Brethren, all we like Sheep have gone astray, (so the same Prophet saith) and because we had taken our wills in Sin, and went whether we would, therefore Christ is bound and led away. It was all because of our wanderings. He was led away as a Sheep to the Slaughter, therefore in Heb. 13. it is said he was brought back again, he having been first led away as here to Death, as he was brought back again through the Resurrection, it is a Phrase that hath relation to his being led away.

How are we tossed to and fro, hurried up and down with divers lusts, with every wind of our inordinate Affections! Our Lord and Saviour Christ was therefore led from place to place, posted up and down.

And in all these leadings of his, God still would have both the Civil and Ecclesiastical State to have a hand and some Interest in every sort of his Sufferings. He was led to Annas that had been High Priest, and then to Caiaphas that was the present High Priest, they were the Chief of the Church as it may be called; and then to Pilate the Roman Governour, and then to Herod the King of Galilee. All the powers that were then in Hierusalem and over Hierusalem, and in those Countreys he was brought afore them all, that they might all have a hand and a concurrence in his ruine, that God might make his Sufferings every way compleat; that all these might cast dishonour and disgrace upon him. For as Honour depends upon the Honourer (That's truly Honour when a Person of worth honoureth one) so God would have the disgrace and contempt that was cast upon Christ to depend upon the worth of the Persons that dishonoured him. Therefore whatever was excellent in that State, either of Kingly Power, or Ecclesiastical, whatsoever pretended to Wisdom or Justice, or Learning or Religion; God order'd it that all these should have a hand in the condemnation of Christ, and so they had. The Eminency of Learning and Religion was amongst the Chief Priests, they profest it and pretended to it. Of Justice in Pilate. Of Excellency and Kingly-Power in Herod. All these concurred. Therefore if the Saints in in after Ages find that they are condemned by all sorts, let them not wonder at it.

And Lastly, He was led out of the Garden whither he used to go for the enjoyment of Communion with his Father (for the Evangelists say that to that place he did often resort to pray) and indeed it was his Paradise where he had infinite sweet Fellowship and Communion with God. Now as Adam was driven out of the Garden, out of Paradise, where he had Communion with God, as a punishment for his Sin, so is our Lord and Saviour Christ led out of this Garden, which I say was to him a Paradise, and carryed to dye and to offer up himself a Sacrifice for Sin. And so much now for his leading; They led him.

To Annas first, for he was Father in Law to Caiaphas which was the High Priest that same year.

For the opening of the Historical meaning of these words, I shall do Two things.

1. Shew who this Annas was, as the Text here holds him forth.
2. Open the reasons why he was led first to him.

1. Who he was. Josephus who writes the Story of these times calls him Annanas. Certainly he was the greatest Man amongst the Jews (of a Jew) and of the most illustrious Family: Which will appear thus; He himself had been High Priest formerly, so you have it, Luke 3. 1. In the fifteenth year of Tiberius, Annas and Caiaphas being High Priests, the word of the Lord came unto John, &c. And the High Priest was the Supreamest Officer, and in highest place among the Jews, though the Romans had the Civil Power in their hands. Here you see his Son in Law Caiaphas, who married his Daughter or otherwise his Son in Law, was High Priest after him, himself still living; and after Caiaphas, Josephus tells us, that Eleazar a Son of his own was High Priest also. So that his Family was the greatest Family among the Jews that lived at Hierusalem, being thus greatned by having the High Priesthood successively amongst them, for so they had, therefore in Act. 4. 2. you read of Annas and Caiaphas and John and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the High Priest were gathered together against the Apostles at Hierusalem, they followed their old Trade still, and as they had their hands imbrued in the Blood of Christ, so in the Apostles too. Now to this Man is our Lord and Saviour Christ first brought.

2. Why brought to Annas first? Some say because he being so great a Man and his House lying in the way to Caiaphas (as indeed it did if we may believe the new Description of Hierusalem, and the Relation of those that have visited it, for they say we have first shown you the House of Annas, and then the house of Caiaphas) he was therefore led thither first. But surely that is not all the reason. It is a Circumstance not mentioned by any of the Evangelists, but by John, and therefore here must be some other ground for their leading of him first to the House of Annas. For we read in Matth. 26. 57. and in Mar. 14. 53. That all the Chief Priests, and the Elders, and the Scribes were assembled at Caiaphas his House attending the Issue of Judas his Plot, and waiting when Christ should be brought thither. For them therefore to interrupt their going directly to Caiaphas his House, where all the Council was set, and to carry him first to the House of Annas, it must needs be for some special reason. To me therefore there are these two reasons of it.

The first is that which is expressly mentioned by John himself here in the Text; for (saith he) he was Father in law to Caiaphas, which implies that Caiaphas either because he honoured his Father in Law who was the Head of that great Family, had given some secret order to the Officers to lead him first thither; or rather indeed, because they would gratifie that great Man who was the Chief of them that had been High Priests, and withal because they would gratifie Caiaphas too, whom they knew they should please by doing this Honour to his Father in Law. They carryed him to him as a fight, as a spectacle, Lo here we have him that is the great Enemy to the High Priests

Book V.

Priests Office, that would subvert the Law, and pull down the Temple, this is the prey we have looked long for. And as in a way of gratification Pilate afterward sent him to Herod, so in a way of like gratification he is here carried to Annas first, sent to him as a gift to cheer and glad his heart. As in Rev. 11. 10. in allusion to the Death of Christ (for that Chapter carries on that allusion) speaking of the Witnesses being kill'd in that place where our Lord was crucified, he saith, they shall rejoyce over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another, because these two prophets tormented them; so here when they had gotten Christ that had tormented them so; they were so glad they had got him that in merriment Caiaphas gives order to have him carried to Annas as a gift and gratification to him, and so Pilate sent him to Herod. Thus to shew their Joy and Triumph, they send our Lord and Saviour Christ thus bound from one to another, Loe here is the Man that would destroy the Law, and then all our Honour must down, we have him now fast enough, for indeed there is nothing that more pleaseth the revenge of People malicious against Christ or against his Saints, then to see them in their hands, and to see them under, and to see them down. Come, say they in Psal. 2. 3. let us break their bonds, and cast away their cords from us. And certainly this circumstance is on purpose mentioned by John as an aggravation of the Sufferings of Christ, that they not only carried him to the High Priest, but to gratifie this wretched Man, that was his desperate and most deadly Enemy, whom they knew not only hated him, but that of all other Men this sight of Christ being taken and bound would be most acceptable to him, they carry him to his House first of all; this I say aggravateth the Sufferings of Christ the more.

But Secondly, He was carryed thither also, that there might be an approbation visible before all the People of Annas his approving of the Fact, he being the greatest Family of all the rest amongst the Jews. Therefore the 24. verse of this Chapter tells us, that Annas sent him bound to Caiaphas the High Priest, that was all he did, he did not command them to unloose him, but approved what they had done in taking and binding him, and in a way of approbation sent him bound to the High Priests Hall, which was a Matter of great prejudice unto Christ, and served a little also to take the envy off from Caiaphas.

My Brethren, What a great deal of do is here about a poor Man, in view a Carpenters Son! And how glad were the great ones of the World when they had got him down! And so it hath been in all Ages, the getting down of a poor Saint, it hath been the greatest Glory to Men carnal; as if they had done so great a Matter. When they have gotten the Witnesses down, as one day they will, they make merry and send gifts one to another. The poor Disciples all this while were a weeping, while they were making merry; so Christ himself said it should be, John 16. 20. The world shall make merry, but you shall weep.

If therefore at any time we should be made Spectacles unto Men for Christ's sake, and should be thus served as Christ was, than which there is nothing more grievous to a great Spirit, for Misery and Shame is more than Death to King, and Saul would not fall into the hands of the Philistines, least they mock me, saith he, 1 Sam. 31. 4. If I say any of us should be so served, made a Spectacle to Angels and Men, as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 4. 7. Do but remember how they led our Lord and Saviour Christ up and down as a Trophy, as a sight to cheer and gratifie those that were his Enemies. So much for this that he was sent to Annas first that was Father in Law to Caiaphas. Of Caiaphas it is said, —He was High Priest that same year.

There are some that would make both Annas and Caiaphas to have been High Priests together, because in that place Luke 3. 2. it is said, That John did baptize in the time when Annas and Caiaphas were High Priests. But the meaning of that is this, that they were High Priests in their Order; in the beginning beginning of Johns Preaching Annas was High Priest, and after him succeeded Caiaphas.

Chap. 8.

But why is it said he was High Priest that same year?

It is a thing which John observeth and none else. He useth that phrase by way of Emphasis, you have it twice repeated in the 11th Chapter, ver. 49. Caiaphas being High Priest that same year; and ver. 51. He being High Priest that year: And you see it is noted here, and noted with an Emphasis; now that it should be twice noted in one Chapter within the compass of two or three Verses, and here again, there must be some special reason for it. It is not that the High Priests Office did go year by year, as Mayors in Incorporate Towns do with us, a new one chose every year. It is clear by the Story in Josephus, that Caiaphas was seven years (some say more) High Priest: It is therefore added, He was High Priest [that same year], though he was more years besides, yet it fell out that he should be High Priest that year, when under his Authority and by his Power in a more especial manner, and by his Counsel, the Lord of Life should be Crucified.

And yet withal 2. It is to note and to hold up this before our eyes, the great corruption that was about the Priests Office when Christ was Crucified: For in Numb. 35. 25. and so in Jesh. 20. 6. you shall find that according to Gods institution the High Priests were not to be removed, but he was to continue in that Office during his Life. And likewise he was to be the eldest Son of the Family of Aaron. Now to shew that this was out of course; for the truth is, the Jews being oppressed by the Syrian Kings, and afterward by the Romans, they sold the High Priesthood as themselves pleased, and put in new ones as often as they would, contrary to the institution of God at first. To shew I say the corruption that was then amongst them, this is particularly noted with an emphasis, Caiaphas was High Priest that same year, though Annas that had been High Priest was yet alive.

To give you an Observation or two from this. He was High Priest that same year: And if you read John 11. 51. By reason that he was High Priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should dye for that nation.

The Observation I make from thence is this: That if a Man be in a place that is an Office instituted by God, though he came into it corruptly, and is not such a one as ought to be in it; yet whilst he is in it, God doth more or less accompany him according to his own institution. This instance here is clear for this, for it is certain that the High Priests then were not lawfully called to that Office; for there were three circumstances which made their calling unlawful (I do not say unlawful in it self, for the substance, but unlawful for the act of calling:)

1. They were not of the Tribe of Levi, and of the eldest Sons of Aaron, for so the Institution was, it should have gone by Birth, as in Exod. 40. 15.
2. They had not the place for their Lives, but were changed and altered at pleasure.
3. They were chosen by the Roman Prators, and by Pilate the Roman Governour, and so it was ordinarily bought and sold for Money.

Yet notwithstanding Christ, he comes to that worship which this High Priest performed, though he came into the place corruptly; and the acts which he performed (he being in the room of the High Priest) were valid. I say, the acts he performed as High Priest (tho' unlawfully called) when he went into the Holy of Holies every year, they were acts of Worship, and they were valid, why? because the Office it self was a place of Gods institution. For otherwise Christ had not had opportunity to have fulfilled the whole Ceremonial Law, if that the going in of this High Priest into the Holy of Holies had not continued and been in use; but it is clear it continued; for it is said, Paul went up to the Feast, that is, the great Feast when the Priest went in to the Holy of Holies. Christ you know he was to fulfil the whole Ceremonial Law, which he could not have done, if he had not come to that Feast which was once a year, for there was a Curse upon him that did not, his Soul should be cut off from the Congregation, and upon that day the High Priest went into the Holy of Holies, and performed those great acts of Worship that was to be done. If Christ had not been present at this Feast, and at these performances, he had not fulfilled the Law; surely therefore when the High Priest was doing his Office, Christ was present and did communicate in this case with this Priest, and with these Jews, and yet this Man had not a Lawful Calling to the High Priesthood for the manner of it, but because for the substance of his Calling it was Lawful, and he was in that Office, the acts he did were valid. Even as it is in the Laws of this Kingdom; although Richard the Third came into the place of being King Unlawfully, yet because when he was in it, it was that Lawful place settled by this State; therefore the Earls that he made, or the Barons, or the Acts of Parliament that he confirmed, they were all valid; for whilst he was in that place, the place was it (being that which was settled by the Law) that gave a validity to all such Acts of his. So it is here. And therefore let it never be said, that because Ministers are not oftentimes so called to their places as they ought to be, come not in so rightly as they should by the choice of those whom it depends upon, that therefore they are not Lawful Ministers. Lawful in this sense, that the Acts they do are valid, and are Ministerial Acts. And indeed it were a hard case if the lawfulness of all Mens being Baptized, or receiving the Sacrament, or the like, should depend upon the lawfulness of the Mans being called to his place. It depends upon the Office that Jesus Christ hath instituted in his Church, and so far forth as there is any thing of his institution, he will follow it with his Blessing. The Ordinances of Christ, the validity of them doth not depend upon the Lawful Call of the Minister, and therefore it is no Argument to say, such a Man had an Unlawful Calling to the Ministry in that place where I was Baptized, therefore my Baptism is invalid: For the act and manner of his Call may be Unlawful, yet he being in that place, he is for those acts a Lawful Minister of Christ, and his acts are so accounted by God. So it was here; Caiaphas being in the room of the High Priest, the acts he did were acts of the High Priest, and were valid: And yet further, to shew that God himself respected him as High Priest, God put into his mouth that Prophecie; therefore it is said in John 11. 51. This spake he, not of himself, but being High Priest that year, he prophesied. So that God himself was with him as High Priest, tho' for the manner of his calling to this place, he was not lawfully and truly the High Priest.

Observ. 2. Then again another Observation that I may make from hence is this. This Annas it is said, was Father in Law to Caiaphas. You see now by this, how dangerous it is oftentimes to the Souls of others to be linked in affinity with Men that are carnal and wicked. How many a Mans Soul is undone by his Father in Law, or perhaps the Father in Law by the Son; or the Husband by the Wife, and the Wife by the Husband. In all likelihood these two here, Annas the Father in Law, and Caiaphas the Son in Law, are both mentioned, as having drawn one another into this great conspiracy against our Lord and Saviour Christ, and joyning the more heartily in it, the one engaging the other in this wicked design. And therefore Men should very much consider into what Families they marry, for if into a wicked Family, it may be an occasion of much evil to them. Men are drawn to much wickedness, or strengthened in much wickedness by their Relations, as Annas and Caiaphas were here for the Crucifying of Christ, having this Relation of Father in Law and Son in Law.

Observ. 3. Lastly, These two Annas and Caiaphas, they are here noted out in a peculiar manner, above all the rest of the Pharisees, as the most eminent enemies, and those that did most malign our Lord and Saviour Christ. Observe that God takes special and particular notice of those that are the most eminent enemies of Christ and his Saints. Still you see Annas and Caiaphas are mentioned, certainly it is according to their hatred, these two had a deeper malignity against Christ than other of the Pharisees had; and therefore you read of them again in Acts 4. 6. Annas the High Priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, they are all reckoned up, they had their hands imbrued in the blood of Christ, and they go on, and that's the curse of it, that the same Men should finish up their iniquity, by laying hold of the Apostles too. And in a more special manner you see there is an Emphasis put put upon Caiaphas, for it is said, He was High Priest that same year: It is noted out as the greatest Curse that could befall that wretched Man, he having so much malignity in his heart against Christ that it should be his lot to be then High Priest, when he had opportunity enough to vent it. So that Men of much malice against the People of God, to them doth God give oftentimes most power, and dignity, and ability to do most mischief; Caiaphas he is put into the High Priesthood, and the Providence of God ordereth it so that this Man had a more special enmity against Christ, as the next words imply; It was he that gave the counsel that one man should dye for the people, and that Man must be Jesus Christ. And so I come to handle that.

Verse 14. Now Caiaphas was he that gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should dye for the people.

It implies, that Caiaphas was the first Man that made the motion to have Christ put to death, and that with the strongest and most taking plausible reason that could be supposed.

In handling this Verse, I shall do Two things.

1. Open the words.
2. Give the Reasons why they are brought in here.

And First, To open the words. Now Caiaphas was he, that gave counsel to the Jews that it was expedient for one man to dye for the people. The words you see refer to an act formerly done by him. You are therefore to have recourse to John 11. 49, 50. where you shall find the same thing recorded; only there it comes in as a Prophecie, here as Counsel given by himself. You know nothing, (saith he there; he speaks it like a carnal proud High Priest, as if he only had knowledge, taking the Glory of this Counsel to himself,) nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should dye for the people, and that the whole nation perish not. And this (saith John) spake he not of himself, but being High Priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should dye for that nation. And yet that he did speak this of himself too, is clear by these words in the Text, for it is brought in here as his great Sin, and a brand is put upon him for it; This is he, saith the Text, even as a brand was put upon Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28. 22. This is that King Ahaz; so, this is that wicked Caiaphas; this is he that was the first contriver, the first Man that made the motion, that gave the counsel to have Christ put to death.

It's strange that one and the same act should be from the Spirit of God, and called Prophecie, and said not to be spoken of himself; and the same act to be of himself, and called counsel, and one of the greatest Sins that hath been committed. But the meaning is this, that however he had a most wicked end in this speech, yet notwithstanding, the Holy Ghost (before he was aware) guided his Tongue to speak (though he knew it not) that which was a Truth, and indeed a Prophecie. He spake this not of himself, saith John, that is, not knowing or intending to Prophecie, for as it came from him it was spoken out of spleen, and malice, and hatred unto Christ: And yet he took upon him to speak like an High Priest; You know nothing at all saith he, I am now the High Priest, and I deliver this to you as an Oracle, that it is expedient for one man to dye for the people; and the Holy Ghost intended his words should be spoken as the High Priest. This he spake not of himself, but being High Priest that year he Prophecie; not that the High Priests used to Prophecie, or that he himself used to Prophecie, but being High Priest that year, an Emphasis lyes in that, wherein Christ was to be Crucified, God raised up that Ordinance of High Priesthood above the ordinary use of it: He being the highest Person in that State. And you see he delivers it as a State Axiome, and yet with extream cunning; It is fit, saith he, that one man should dye for the people. He doth not say that it is fit that Jesus should dye, (he doth not express it so at first) or that this Man should dye who is a Rebel or a Blasphemer ; but it is fit one Man (let it be him or any one else) should dye for the Nation, and what is one Mans Life to the Nation ; and so consequently he implies, that seeing it is this Mans lot to disturb the State, and to indanger it by bringing in the Romans amongst us, it is fittest that he should dye rather than the People should perish. And yet if you mark it, (to shew the wickedness of his speech yet further) though he puts a publick face upon it, and pretends the preservation of the Nation, yet the thing he aimed at was the preservation of the Clergy only, and that moved him so much : Saith he, You consider nothing at all that it is expedient for us that one man should dye. It is expedient for us, that's his expression ; for us that are or shall be High Priests, our Calling will down unless this Man be taken out of the way.

So much for the opening of the words.

Now Secondly, To give you the Reasons, why he (having said it before in Chap. 11. 50.) brings it in again here in this place.

1. It was to set a brand of malicioufness more eminently upon this Caiaphas than upon any Man else ; and to shew also what an accursed Man he was in this, that the motive or the reason that should stick with them all, why they should so fixedly resolve to kill Christ (for you must know, this speech was first spoken at a consultation they had about taking of him) should come first from him. To set I say, a note and a brand upon Caiaphas in a more eminent manner, is this circumstance here by the Holy Ghost inserted, he being the most desperate and malicious enemy of Christ amongst all the Pharisees ; for certainly God chose out the wickedest Man among all the Jews to be in the place of the High Priest that year, that he and his Father in Law Annas should eminently have their hands in his Crucifying.

2. It likewise comes in here, to shew upon how slight grounds our Lord and Saviour Christ was Crucified, it was meerly but upon politick considerations (as to them) and that upon but imaginary suppositions neither, that the Nation must perish else ; (for so as it came from Caiaphas it was meant, tho' God guided it to be a Prophecie) And so it clears the innocency of Christ so much the more, that the High Priest himself in his counsel about putting him to death should only go upon this politick reason, that it was fit one Man should dye for the Nation. They only did it as a State business, and that I say but upon a meer imagination that the Romans would else come and take away their place and Nation.

3. It is premised unto all the other Sufferings of Christ that follow, and it is inserted here in that passage of the Story of his leading to Caiaphas, to shew, that there was no equity to be expected in all their proceedings against him. Why ? Because they had resolved before ever they took him to put him to death, and that upon a State consideration, and therefore they would be sure to keep to their own resolutions, whether he were innocent or not innocent, whether they could convict him or not convict him. And Caiaphas having spoken so peremptorily, (ye know nothing at all, neither consider that it is expedient for one man to dye for the nation ;) he being the great Oracle in this business, he would certainly prosecute Christ according to his own words, therefore there was no favour to be expected. And to this end also doth the Holy Ghost record it here.

4. But to me the chiefest reason is this. You know it was foretold of Christ that he should not dye for himself ; so you have it in Isa. 53. 4. Surely he hath born our griefs, and carried our sorrows, yet we did esteem him stricken of God and afflicted ; so did the Apostles and those that beheld him. It was not for himself that he was stricken and afflicted ; no, there was something else in it, it was for others ; He hath born our griefs and carried our sorrows, and he was wounded for our transgressions, &c. Now to the end that you should not only have a word of Scripture for this, but a testimony also even from the mouths of the Jews, and from the mouth of the High Priest himself for it ; hence therefore is the Holy Ghost so diligent to record this passage, that it is expedient that one man should dye for the people ; which though Caiaphas meant meant one way, God meant another way, and therefore it is added, and not for that Nation only, but that he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad. And therefore as it was Council in Caiaphas, it was a Prophecie in God. And so you have the reasons why this passage comes in here. Now to give you some Observations out of it.

Obs. 1. You see here what Mischiefs and Sins State policie oft-times puts great Men upon. How much State-Interests prevail to move Men against the Saints, and the purity of Religion. State-policie here was the cause of the Death of Christ. And yet this very Act of theirs in crucifying the Lord of Life brought Mischiefe upon the State. Here is Caiaphas he brings the most Authentick State-Axiome that was ever brought, It's but a small matter saith he, 'tis but one Mans Life, and 'tis better for one Man to die than the State should perish: He did it I say out of the greatest Worldly Wisdom that ever Man did, and yet you know what followed. By this we may come to understand that place in 1 Cor. 2. 8. where speaking of the crucifying of Christ, saith he, We speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, which none of the Princes of this world knew, for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Life; but saith he, as for the wisdom of this World, and of the Princes of the World it comes to nought, for (as it is chap. 3. 19.) The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, for it is written, he taketh the wise in their own craftiness. By the Princes of this World it is evident that he means the Jews, the Pharisees and the Rulers, Pilate and Herod and the rest that put Christ to Death; this great Synedrim here Annas and Caiaphas and their Fellows, and Pilate; for he went upon the same worldly Principle too, for when as the Jews told him that if he did not put Christ to Death he was not Cæsars Friend, the Text saith, Therefore when Pilate heard that saying, Go crucifie him, saith he, 'twas State-policie did it. They all thought they were so wise in putting Christ to Death upon this State Axiome (and it was a fair one.) This Wisdom, saith the Apostle, came to nought, God made the Wisdom of the World foolishness, for alas, were ever Men befooled as these Men were? For this very crucifying of Christ was their ruine, that brought the Romans upon them. Yea, if you read Josephus and others, you shall find that that which strengthened them to rebel against the Romans was their very looking for the Messiah and the Prophecies they had, that about that time the Messiah should come.

Observ. 2. A Second Observation that I make upon this is this, That a State is not to put a Man to Death meerly and simply for the Publick good, unless he is an Offender. For here this State Maxime the Pharisees and Pilate took up and used as the great plausible Argument to the People, yet it being against a Mans Life supposed innocent, (whether they knew him to be the Christ or not) it is noted as an high and mighty injury, and as an Act of the greatest injustice in them. It is the greatest instance this, that can be, that no evil is to be done that good may come by it. An innocent Man is not to be put to Death, nor innocent Men to be injured or wronged (if they be innocent) for a publick good. A Mans Life is not to be taken away meerly to save a State. Indeed if a case of necessity lie so as that a Man offer himself freely up for the saving of a State, as some Noble Romans have done, that's another matter; but to condemn a Man to Death simply to save a State, ought not to be.

Observ. 3. You may observe, That Carnal Men when they would prevail with others to do any thing, they will speak to their very lusts. All their hearts here were on fire against Jesus Christ; Caiaphas now speaks the highest reason to the lusts of the Jews that could be, invents a reason upon which they should put him to Death, a most plausible one, colours it over so cunningly as might rake with all the people, It is better, saith he, that one Man be put to Death than that the whole Nation should perish; he knew this would move them all, and all that is in them. I say he gave Counsel to their Lusts, and so you shall have Carnal Men to do, speak to Mens Lusts, and vent their own Lusts too, vent their own malice; for so Caiaphas did. It is expedient for us saith he, for us that are the Priests, but puts it upon the People, that one Man should die for the people.

Observ. 4. Observe hence likewise, what a dangerous thing it is to be the first mover in any great wickedness. Here you see Caiaphas, because he was the first that gave Counsel against Christ, he is noted out in a way of Eminency with this brand upon him, This is he that gave counsel that it was expedient for one man to die for the nation. He did it cunningly and plausibly, but God for all that took notice of it, and laies this great load upon him, This is the Man. Therefore I say to be the first mover and leader in a wicked business as Annas and Caiaphas was in the great business of Crucifying of Christ, is a dangerous thing. And you see one wicked cunning Man will carry the whole: Caiaphas here spake such great reason that he carryed them all; but such Men of all others that are the Counsellors in Evil, and that are the first Counsellors in Evil, though they glory and pride themselves in it (as certainly this Man did, You know nothing at all saith he) such Men will God brand, as he branded him here, and their Damnation shall be great at last. Poor Caiaphas, there was another that gave Council that Jesus Christ should be put to Death afore thou didst, and that was God the Father, for in Acts 4. 28. Both Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done. There was not only his Wisdom, his Counsel, but his Hand, his Power in it, though it was the greatest Sin in the World. Yea God the Father had given Counsel to Christ himself to do it before ever Caiaphas had spoken, Psal. 16. 7. I will bless the Lord who hath given me counsel; And what was the Counsel he gave him? He bad him die for his People, and he would raise him up, and therefore My reins instruct me in the night season saith he; that Night when he was in the Garden, and when he was before Pilate; Gods Counsel was to him to do it, before-hand, and he bleisseth God that gave him that Counsel. This Psalme is a Psalme in relation to Christ, and it is spoken of his Death and Resurrection.

Observ. 5. Lastly, Observe this, That oftentimes the Speeches of great Persons (as of Fathers concerning their Children, &c.) which they do not speak prophetically, as in their intentions, yet they are so in the event. As Homer brings in the dream of Agamemnon: So Pharaoh dreamed, and Nebuchadnezzar dreamed. Yea oftentimes Princes and others do utter Speeches that have a Prophetical meaning in them in the conclusion. It is dangerous therefore for a Man to curse himself, to wish this or that upon himself, for whilst thou doest it in a corrupt passion, out of a corrupt heart, God may turn it to a Prophecie; therefore take heed of such Speeches upon all occasions. And so much for this Fourteenth Verse.

C H A P. IX.

Peter's Denyal of Christ. That this was an Addition to his Sufferings.

TH E R E is a great Question among Interpreters (which I will handle very briefly, because I will not trouble you much with difficulties) whether all this that follows, concerning Peters Denyal, and the High Priests asking Christ of his Disciples and of his Doctrine, was done in Annas his House, or in Caiaphas his? All yield that there were some things done in Caiaphas his House, and that he was led to Caiaphas, and that from Caiaphas he was led to Pilate, and from Pilate to Herod; but some would have what is brought in here of Peter and the Examination of Christ concerning his Disciples and Doctrine, to have been in Annas his House and by him. But the case is clear in other Evangelists that it was not. For we read in all the other Evangelists, especially in Matthew that Peters denial was in Caiaphas his House. And John here saith expressly that Caiaphas was High Priest that same year, and that Peters Denyal was when he got into the Palace of the High Priest, and that the High Priest asked Jesus of his Disciples and of his Doctrine. Now though Annas was Father in law to the High Priest, yet it was Caiaphas that was the High Priest, therefore all this must needs be done in Caiaphas his House and not in Annas his. The plain meaning then is this, that whereas Annas was Father in Law to Caiaphas the High Priest, they led him therefore first to his House, but when Annas had seen him, they (without Annas doing any thing to him at all that we read of) led him away to Caiaphas and though his leading to Caiaphas be not mentioned here, yet it is mentioned at the 24th verse, where it is said, Annas had sent him bound unto Caiaphas the high priest. So that I say all these things were done in Caiaphas his House, and not in Annas his; and therefore there is none of the Evangelists but John that mention any thing of Annas, because indeed there was nothing done in his House; only they brought him unto him because he was Caiaphas his Father in law for to see him, and when he had seen him, he sent him directly to Caiaphas; the very words [to Annas first] implies this. And the truth is that Cyril, an Ancient Greek Father he brings in even here afore he comes to the 15th verse [Annas he sent him bound to Caiaphas] and in the Copies that he had and had seen those words were found. And Beza inclines to that too, and thinks it was an omission in the Writer, and that it ought to be here inserted. So much now for the salving of that Question, and so I come to the words of this 15th Verse.

Verse 15. And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple, that disciple was known unto the high priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

It is the beginning of the Story of Peters Denyal of Christ; which Denyal of Peters is intermingled by all the Evangelists with the Sufferings of our Lord and Saviour Christ; and I think it is done on purpose first to illustrate the Sufferings of Christ, for certainly this Denyal of Peters did something add to Christs Sufferings; that at that very time when he was asked of his Doctrine, and of his Disciples, one of his greatest and most eminent Disciples should be denying of him (for so you see the context runs) which Christ knew, for in the end he looked back upon Peter, and shewed his grief for him, and that he took notice of him, and of what he had done. And 2. The Evangelists do it also for this purpose, to shew the great love of Christ, Christ, that though Peter and the other Disciples were a sinning, especially Peter for he sinned most grievously, Jesus Christ went on in his work, went on to suffer even for those sins that they were then committing. And as Christ knew what Peter was a doing then, and yet went on to suffer, so he knew what thou wouldest do against him, and yet suffered for thee. But to come to the Story.

There are in all the Evangelists recorded three several Denyals of Christ, and that by Peter; and as I go along I must compare the one with the other, and shew that there is no contradiction in what the Evangelists record.

In the words here from the 15th verse to the 19th you have two eminent things to be considered.

1. The Introduction, or the Story, that delivers how it came to pass that Peter did get into the High Priests Hall, which was the occasion of his Denyal.

2. The Denyal it self.

First, For the Story, how Peter got in. John waiting after the other Evangelists still labours to insert some Circumstances which they had omitted; now none of the other Evangelists tell us how Peter got into the High Priests Hall; they tell us indeed that Peter followed his Master afar off, but this great circumstance which was a preparation to his Denyal how he got in, and with what difficulty, it is only recorded by John: And there is a great deal to be observed in it. But first I shall open it Historically, and then give you the Observations as I go along.

[Simon Peter followed Jesus.] The other Evangelists tell us that he followed Jesus afar off. But I shall not speak of that circumstance, intending to keep principally to what John here saith. It was certainly a mixt Action in Peter, that is an Action mixt of Love and of Fear, of Grace and Corruption. For that he followed him argues that he had a Love in his Heart to Christ; yet there was fear mixt with it, for he walketh after him afar off.

The Question is here, whether Peter sinned in this, in his going to the High Priests Hall?

Assuredly he did; For 1. Christ had expressly told him (Matth. 26. 2.) that he should suffer at that Passeeover, therefore it was unbelief in him to follow him after he was apprehended to see the event of it; as Matthew tells us he went for that reason. And,

2. Christ had taken order when he was first taken that his Disciples should be kept safe and let free, Let these go, saith he, which was intimation enough that they were unable to suffer, for it follows, That the word which he had spoken might be fulfilled, of those thou hast given me have I lost none; implying that if they had then been put to suffer they had been lost, for they were weak and unfit for suffering, and it was not the mind of God to strengthen them to suffering at that time: And therefore in John 13. 36. saith Christ, Whether I go thou canst not follow me now, but thou shalt follow me afterwards; Thou canst not follow me now: for thou art not able to follow me, neither will my Father strengthen thee to follow me; but afterwards he followed Christ, even to the Cross; for as Ecclesiastical Stories tell us, he was crucified as his Master was, but yet the meaning of that place is, that as Christ went to Heaven in a way of Suffering, so he told him that he should follow him thither, but he should not follow him presently in the like way of suffering. And besides,

3. Christ had plainly and fully told him that he would denie him. Now for him having been thus warned by Christ, and having had Experience of his own fearfulness, for having struck off the High Priests Servants Ear, he fled away amongst the rest, and it was not likely that he should be more valiant and couragious in the High Priests Hall amongst Souldiers and Officers then he had been in the Garden, for him I say notwithstanding all this to be venturing, and to put himself upon that temptation, it was certainly a Sin. But still I say Grace will work with corruption, his love unto Christ wrought with with his fear, and then the words that he had spoken himself, those courageous stout words, I will dye with thee rather than deny thee, those rise in his mind, and put him upon going after Christ to see the issue of the business, and perhaps he hoped that he might happily get in with the Croud, and so not be seen.

Observ. 1. The Observation that I make from hence by the way, is this, That we should not put our selves upon occasions of suffering or danger till such time as God calls us. It is unwarrantable and it is sinful so to do. It was so in Peter.

Observ. 2. As it is unwarrantable to put our selves upon occasions of sufferings, so it is dangerous for us to tempt God by putting our selves upon occasions of sinning; to go to the Door as it were where a Man shall be drawn in to sin, as Peter here, he follows, and he goes to the Door and stands without hankering to see what would be the end of it. I say it is a dangerous thing for us to put our selves upon occasions of sinning, to tempt God, for then you see by this of Peter what the issue is; when Peter tempteth God, then doth God suffer Peter to be tempted, he leads him indeed into temptation.

But Peter had not got in for all this, had it not been for an unhappy Providence to him (for so I may call it in respect of his Sin, though God intended good by it) For the Story tells us that another Disciple went along with him, and that Disciple being known unto the High Priest went in with Jesus into the Palace of the High Priest. This is brought in here on purpose to shew how Peter got in, for otherwise there is no reason of mentioning this going in of the other Disciple. The Providence of God would that here should be Two Disciples Eye-Witnesses of Christs sufferings in the High Priests Hall, from whom the rest might have the relation of it: There was Peter and another Disciple. He is called a Disciple, for that was the Name that was given to Christians in Christs time, and so in the Acts of the Apostles till they came to Antioch, for then they were first called Christians.

There is a Question amongst Interpreters who this other Disciple was? Some say (and many good Interpreters) that it was John, and the reason they give is this, because John in this Epistle when he speaks of himself, he styles himself that other Disciple, and never mentions his Name, as in John 20. 30. But you shall find that where John speaks of himself, though he concealeth his own Name, and saith that other Disciple, yet he adds withal, whom Jesus loved; so you have it in the same 20th of John, ver. 2. But now that addition is not put to this Disciple, but it is another Disciple which was known to the High Priest. And besides to me there is this great reason that this other Disciple was not John, because there is no likelyhood, (but the contrary seems much more probable) that John should have so much knowledge and familiarity as this Disciple apparently had, both with the High Priest himself, and so by vertue of that acquaintance and greatness with him, an Interest in his Family also; so that he could command or order to have Peter let in. Now John was a poor Fisher-man that lived in Galilee, a Countrey remote from Hierusalem, and came but up with Christ at the Feast, for Christ did not live ordinarily at Hierusalem, but alwaies after the Feast went down again into Galilee the place of his usual Residence, unless he preached sometimes up and down in the Countrey, and when he went, his Disciples went with him, therefore it is not likely that he should have such Interest in the High Priests House. And then again, if it had been John, he would certainly have been questioned as well as Peter, neither would he himself have ventured in being so well known as 'tis said this other Disciple was. And the Syriack Translation favours this Opinion, that it was none of John, for it reads it thus, unus ex aliis, one of the other Disciples, not being one of the Twelve. And it was a Disciple though known to the High Priest, yet certainly he was not known to be a Disciple; for had he been known to be a Disciple, doubtless they had fallen upon him as well

Book V. as upon Peter for all his favour with the High Priest. And it had been brought in as an Argument to Peter that he was a Disciple, because he was helpt into the Hall by another Disciple, but you see it is not, only they alledge that Peter was one of them that was in the Garden, &c. But the Truth is, when the Holy Ghost hath concealed who this Disciple was, why should we go and say, who it is?

Observ. From hence I will give you this Observation, That Christ he had other Disciples besides his Apostles; many hidden ones. You shall find in John 12. 42. that among the Chief Rulers there were many that believed on him, but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him. And in Act. 1. 15. there were an Hundred and Twenty that met together. So that there were more Disciples than the Twelve, yet there were many that appeared not, as Nicodemus, that came to Jesus by night; and they did not appear till after his Death. Christ hath many hidden ones that are a long time putting themselves forth in profession. We see it in experience, it hath been known that Men have been long converted and lived privately in the Family before they made any open profession. And so now, many are Favourers of the Cause of Christ that do not shew themselves; but shew themselves they will in the end. This Man here though he would not profess himself openly, yet when he saw a Disciple, he would do him a good turn as he thought he did Peter in having of him into the High-Priests House.

The Text saith, this other Disciple was known to the High Priest. The reason why this expression is used, is, to shew that it was a hard thing to get in unless a Man had acquaintance, and it was likewise a great favour to come into this Synodrim, yea this very Acquaintance of the High-Priest himself as 'tis thought was not admitted into the inner Room where Christ was, for their proceedings against Christ were secret and hidden, they would not have this Court kept openly for the People to see their juggling dealing. Peter you see could not get in but by favour of this Disciple who was known to the High Priest, though unknown to us.

Observ. From thence we may observe that we should not presently censure a Man that he is not holy or the like, because he holds correspondency, or it may be some intimacy or acquaintance with Men that are carnal: For there may be reason why he doth so, and yet he may be a Holy Man, as this Disciple certainly was, and yet kept his correspondency with the High Priest. I will not justify in all things the Act it self, but we should not esteem Men, or think that therefore they are ungodly, for even that judgment may deceive us.

Now this Disciple he went in with Jesus, that is, he went in with the croud of the Officers, and the Band of Men that went in with Jesus.

He went into the Palace of the High Priest; into the outward Court, so it is in the Original. The question is, whether Peter and the Souldiers that were about the fire and the like, were in one Room and Christ in another? That which breeds the scruple is that in Matth. 26. 69. it is said that Peter sate without in the Palace; which seems to argue that Christ was in one Room and he in another.

The Answer is clear that they were both in one Room, that's evident, because the other Evangelists tell us that Christ looked back upon Peter, now it is not to be thought that Christ came out to look upon him when he denied him. Therefore that which is the Reconciliation of it is this, whereas it is said he was in the lower part of the Hall, the meaning is plainly this, that the High Priest and his Fellows, they sate in a place more high advanced by steps or so, all within the same Walls, and in the lower part of it there was a Fire where Peter and the rest stood, and so Christ being called afore them there, he might eminently look over all the Room.

Verse 16. But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other Disciple which was known unto the high priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

That other Disciple perceiving that Peter stood without, and knowing him to be a Disciple, and bearing Love and good Will to him, befriends him, goes

goes to her that kept the Door, and as some think, betrusts her with this secret that Peter was one of Christ's Disciples, which made her so confidently afterward charge him as you know she did; and so upon his Speech he gets in.

[Peter stood at the door without.] As I said before, it was an unwarrantable Action for Peter to follow Christ; he had had warning about his denying of him before, yet you see he would not avay; but though he found the door shut upon him, yet there he stands, and as he followed Christ in confidence of his own strength, so here in the same confidence he stands at the door waiting for an opportunity to get in. My Brethren it is a certain Rule and Truth, that though another man may suffer for Christ out of an Heroick Spirit, out of some carnal grounds and ends, yet God will not permit those that are his own Children to suffer for him upon such grounds, he will rather give them up to denying of him, till such time as they are fitted for a true and real suffering; and so he did Peter here. Above all things therefore we should by this Example learn to take heed of venturing in ways of suffering out of our own strength, for so Peter did, he went forth in his own strength, and you see what the Issue of it is.

Well, Peter you see by the help of his Friend gets in. The Observations that I make upon all this Story of letting in Peter, are these.

Observ. 1. Observe the workings of Gods Providence about this Sin and Denial of Peters. The Providences of God they were many, I shall mention them here.

1. He could not get in, Peter stood at the door without. Here now God in his Providence at first did put an impediment, a Bar to Peters attempt, stopt him in going on to that which should be the occasion of his Sin. Peter he should have taken this for a warning, he should have observed the Providence of God in hindring him, but he would not. In any way or course wherein we find that God in his Providence doth put impediments, it should strike our hearts: and we should look upon it as a Call and Warning from God to examine our grounds in going on in that way. If indeed we find our ways such as are warranted by the word, or that our Consciences are clear in it that it is a Duty and that we are called to it, then let there be never so many impediments, we are to go on in it. But otherwise, in a doubtful way, if a Man find impediments, let him observe that Providence. If Peter had done thus when he found the door shut, he had not sinned thus against Christ as he did; but he still stands at the door, tempting of God, and therefore doth God in the end suffer him to be tempted.

2. But yet though Peter was thus stopped for a while, there comes (after he had tempted Providence) the fairest and clearest Providence to bring him in to the High Priests Hall that could be. Peter spake not to this Disciple to let him in, but he spying of him, goes out and brings him in. So that on the other side, we are not in businesses to go merely by Providences, for you shall find that oftentimes Providences do lye fair for occasions of sinning. Here was as fair and as clear a Providence to bring Peter into the High Priests Hall where he should deny Christ as could be: Nay, the Providence was so fair, that one would think that God called Peter into the Hall. We are apt oftentimes to measure our ways by Providences much; but never believe the works of God unless thou hast a word of God first for thy way; for God doth lay snares, especially when Men tempt him. When Jonah was to go to Nineve; and instead of going thither, run away from God to go to Tarshish, he had the fairest Providence that could be, for he found a Ship that was fitted and all ready to go to Tarshish, he might now think here is a Providence serves me as fit as can be, Ay, but he went against the Word of God; And the Truth is so doth Peter here, and therefore I say never be ruled by the Providences of God unless thou hast the word of God; for the Providence of God doth as equally and indifferently lay temptations for Men as it doth facilitate their way in what he would have them do. In things which are not Gods way, you shall have Providences fall exceedingly fair, and in things that are Gods vway, you shall have many impediments to the contrary, to try your Faith.

When Peter novv did thus get in, he thought it certainly a very great favour and courtesie, and a special priviledge, that he should according to his desire see the Issue of things, for he vvent for that end as Matthe saith. And his Friend certainly intended to do him the greatest kindness and favour that could be. There are snares that lie oftentimes in the courtesies and kindneses of Friends: For so there is in this; he did it as a kindness, and the other thought it a favour; but the Truth is, it vvas a great snare, and in the end it proved a fatal business to Peter, as being the occasion of that great and famous Denial of his Master.

It is strange likewise that Christ vvho could tell him he should deny him, vvould not bid him take heed of the High Priests Hall. He could have done the one as vvell as the other; He that knevv all things that should befall himself knevv vvhat should befall Peter, hovv it vvas he should deny him. But yet Jesus Christ he being God as vvell as Man, he vvas not obliged to give Peter that Caveat, but though he knevv it and suffered it for his ovvn Glory, yet it is no Warrant for us to do so. God may permit sin, he knowvs hovv to punish it and hovv to get Glory out of it, and he himself is not defiled by it; but vve are not to permit others to sin. And so much for the 16th verse; and for the introduction into Peters Denial. I come novv to the Denial it self.

Verse 17. Then saith the damosel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this mans disciples? He saith, I am not.

That a Damosel should be the Door-keeper to the High Priest, some say (and indeed many of the best Interpreters) it vvas ex more gentis, from the custom of the Countrey. Thus in Act. 12. 13. you read that when Peter knockt at the door, that a Damosel went and opened the door, for it was her place so to do. And in 2 Sam. 4. 6. in the Septuagint it is in the Feminine Gender, it is not in the Hebrew indeed, but the Septuagint that Ancient Translation (which shews it was the custom of the Countrey) inserts these words, and the Woman that was the Door-keeper was winnowing of Corn. I speak it only for this, to shew the reason why a Damosel kept the door of the High Priest. But others say (and probably too) that the reason why this Damosel kept the door, was because that all the Servants were now busie and taken up in attending one way or other, the keeping of the door therefore for the present was committed to this Maid. But I take it that the first is the Truth, that it was the manner of the Countrey; it being strengthened by those two instances. However it fell out, certainly God ordered it in the greatest Providence that could be. For of all Men you know how confident Peter was, and how he had said, Though all men forsake thee, I will not forsake thee. He goes forth in his own strength; he had out of his valour cut off the Ear of the High Priests Servant, falling upon a whole multitude of Men, he alone and one other (for there was but two swords amongst them.) God therefore ordered it in his Providence, that he would confute the Pride of Peter this way, that his weakness might be seen to all Posterity, and made the more famous, at the speaking of a poor silly Maid, he denies his Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Then said the Damosel unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this Mans Disciples.

The Evangelists they do all reckon up Three several sorts of Denyals that Peter had, yet if you compare the first in Matthe, and the first in Mark, and the first in Luke with this first in John (which all must be accounted to be but one) the Story seems to be exceeding different, if you either consider what the Evangelists record her Speeches to have been unto Peter and of Peter, or what his his Speeches were unto her. In Matthew, cap. 26. 69. the Speech she there useth to him is, Thou also wert with Jesus of Galilee, that is, thou as well as others. In Mark it is thus, Thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth, now Nazareth you know was a City in Galilee. And in Luke cap. 22. 56. Her Speech is not to Peter, but to them that stood by, and it was thus, This man also was with him. Now here in John it is a differing Speech from all these, Art not thou also (saith she) one of this mans Disciples? And as her Speeches recorded by the Evangelists do vary, so you shall find that his Speeches to her vary as much: For in Matthew, chap. 26. ver. 70. it is said, He denied afore them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest; It's the highest kind of negation that can be, the meaning of it is, I am so far from belonging to him, that the truth is, it's strange to me that you should ask me any such question, I do not know the least of him; as if he had never heard of the Man before. And so in Mark 14. 68. I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And in Luke 22, 57. Woman I know him not. Now here in John, being asked, Whether he was his Disciple? He saith, I am not. How shall we reconcile this?

The Reconciliation is very easie, for they are several Speeches of hers, and several Speeches of his, whereof some Evangelists record some, and others, others: And it seemeth to have been thus (that I may hang and pin them altogether.) This Maid she first saies to the Standers by, This man also was with him, as Luke hath it, And then she turns to Peter, and saies, Art not thou one of this mans Disciples? As John here hath it. And then she peremptorily affirms it, that she upon her own knowledge had seen him with him, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee, as Matthew and Mark have it. Now she using several forms of Speeches, some to the standers by, and some to himself; at the first asking him the question only, afterward peremptorily affirming it; this is it which draws out those several Answers from Peter according to the several occasions, which all the Evangelists severally record, and all these make but this first Denyal of Peters.

Others cast it thus (which comes all to one) That she did first ask Peter the question as John hath it here, Art not thou one of this Mans Disciples? as he came in at the door. He answered, I am not. Afterwards going to the fire where Peter sate, and as Luke hath it, seeing him by the light thereof (for so it is in the Original) and as the Text there saith, viewing of him wistly, with fixed Eyes; thought she I have seen you afore now, and seen you with him: And now she doth not go and ask him, Art one thou not of this mans Disciples? But she plainly saith, Thou art one, and she tells the standers by so too, This man (saith she to them) also was with him: And therefore Matthew tells us, that he denied before them all, spake as loud as he could, that they might all take notice of it, I know not saith he what thou sayest.

You may likewise see the working of the Providence of God even in this too: As namely, that such a Woman as had seen him some time or other with Christ, should now keep the High Priests door: For indeed that seems to be plain, that she speaks of her own knowledge, Thou also saith she wast with him, that is, thou didst converse with him, so Matthew and Mark have it. And the truth is that the coherence here in John evidently carries it so, for here at the 17th verse, we translate it, Then saith the Damosel, but in the Original it is, Therefore saith the Damosel, the coherence whereof is plainly this, that she having observed him to be spoken for to be let in by a Disciple, being at the door, minds him not so much at first, but afterwards eying him more wistly by the light of the fire, having formerly seen him, she peremptorily challengeth him, She therefore saith unto him, &c. Now I say here was a Providence of God, that that Woman (it may be none of all the Family else had observed him) that she should be at the door and take notice of all these things, that she should come to challenge him, and did challenge him, or else he had not been challenged. Others of them bring other Arguments, that his Speech bewrayed him, and that they saw him with Jesus in the Garden, but the Providence of God so ordered it, that of all all the Family she should be the Woman that kept the door who had seen him and knew him to be with Christ. At first indeed she did not know him so perfectly, therefore she only puts the question to him, Art not thou one of this Mans Disciples? But afterward viewing him more strictly, and that by the light of the Fire, she comes to know him and challengeth him in a peremptory manner. So that Gods Providence did still strongly work in this great business, to discover Peter. To get him in, it wrought much, and now it works as strongly even for a discovery. And you shall see other passages of Providence afterward in the story, and how strongly they wrought too. And so much now for the Historical opening of the words of this verse.

I will give you but an Observation or two, and so pass on.

Observ. 1. You see that as God would have it manifested that all sorts of People, Jew and Gentile; Civil State and Ecclesiastical all these sorts were against our Lord and Saviour Christ, so all Sexes too. There is this Damofel here, and another Damofel afterward, as Matthew and Mark have it, that fall upon Peter, and challenge him for being his Disciple.

Observ. 2. You see likewise the weakness of Peter, he was but asked by a Damofel, and at the first but in a secret way, for I take it this Speech here in John, which occasioned his first Denial, was when he came in at the Door, 'twas then that she asked him, Art not thou one of this Mans Disciples? A Damofel you see foyle'd him: He that was not long before so extream eager, that he promised he would dye with Christ, that he would never leave him, that he would not, promised it three times; He that in the Garden was so valiant as to cut off Malchus his Ear, in defence of his Master; this Man being left to himself, at a private question that a Damofel makes him, falleth into this great lye, which afterwards he seconded with further and greater protestations as we shall see in the Story. If that God doth leave us, vvhhat poor Creatures are we! That that Peter vvhho had naturally so bold a Spirit, so great a Natural Courage, one that was a rash and a venturous, a bold and a daring Man, as appears by all his Actions, especially by that in the Garden, vvhhen he cut off the High Priests Servants ear. He that vvas so bold afterward from the Spirit of God, vvhhen the Holy Ghost comes upon him; This Peter vvhhen he is left to himself, neither Natural Courage doth assist him, but at the vvhispering of a Maid you see vvhhat a lye he tells; neither doth the Holy Ghost help him vvhho yet did dwell in his heart. What poor Creatures are the most couragious of Men if God leave them; they vvvill fall short not only of the Grace that is in them, and of the Power of the Holy Ghost that is in them, but of that Natural boldness vvhich they have, for so Peter did.

Observ. 3. When was it that Peter thus foully and grossly denies his Master? It was then when our Lord and Saviour Christ was entred into his sufferings; when he was arraigned, and arraigned for him, for his Sins, before the High Priest. Then when our Lord and Saviour Christ was about to do the greatest favour and mercy that ever was done for Creatures, and for Peter amongst the rest, then God order'd it that Peter should sin and sin thus foully and grossly. It was a very great aggravation of his Sin, even this, for so the circumstance of time is to any sin. If that at the same time that a Friend is contriving, or taking pains for me, or doing any thing for me of the greatest moment, saving my life, begging my pardon, if I should at that time wrong my Friend most, how would that heighten my unkindness! This was Peters case. Yet you see Christ goes on with his work for all that. He knew Peter was a denying of him, yet that did not make him withdraw his neck from suffering for Peter. Great Sins against God when he is doing us very great Mercies, should exceedingly break our hearts, as it did Peters here, he went out afterwards, and wept bitterly. When ever we do sin, Jesus Christ is interceding in Heaven for us. Our Sins do not hinder hinder him from going on to intercede, as Peters finning here did not hinder him from going on to suffer for him.

Observ. 4. And then again Peter being asked whether he was one of his Disciples, answers, I am not. He doth not deny Christ to be the Messiah of the World; only he saith, I am not one of his disciples: Yet Christ had said, Thou shalt deny me: He denyed indeed that he belonged to him; For any Man to flink out of the profession of Christ when he is called to it, or out of any Truth of his, though he deny not that Christ is the Messiah, and that Christ is come in the Flesh, or the great points of Salvation, yet it is a Denial of Christ. And so much now for the 17th Verse.

Verse 18. And the Servants and Officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals (for it was cold) and they warmed themselves; and Peter stood with them and warmed himself.

The Scope of this Relation is only this, to shew the occasion of Peters Second and Third Denial which John afterward tells us of. For though his Second Denial comes not in till the 25th verse, yet this Story here is related as a preparation thereunto: That the Weather being cold, the Servants and Officers were not scattered up and down, but were all gathered together in a ring and cluster in the midst of the Hall about the Fire, and Peter he was in the midst of them, and therefore if there were Notice taken of Peter, all must take notice of him, one as well as another, and hence it came to pass that Peter was so mightily afraid, that he went on to deny his Master with Oaths and Curses as afterward you read in the Story. It was to shew the publickness of his Sin, for Matthew saith he denied before them all, for they were all gathered together in a heap, and Peter in the midst. But to open it a little.

They had a Fire of Coals; of Wood already burnt or kindled, to avoid the Smoak because the Fire was in the midst of the Hall, as Luke hath it.

For it was cold, which might seem strange, because those Countreys are hot, and it was in the Spring-time (for it was in March:) But this is easily resolved, for you must know that in those Countreys as there is an extremity of heat in the day, so there are oftentimes in the Spring as well as in the Winter exceeding cold Nights, especially after Rain. And it was that Night especially a cold Night, and that was the reason of the Fire.

The Observations I make out of these words are only these two.

Observ. 1. It is said that it was a cold Night. Now this Night which thus occasionally fell out to be more cold than ordinary, it was that Night in which Christ sweat drops of Blood in the Agony of his Spirit when he was in the Garden. For that Agony of his was not many hours afore this befel him; for after he had supt he made a long Sermon and a long Prayer, and then went into the Garden, and from thence they fetcht him out, (all this was within Night) and afore the first crowing of the Cock this Denial of Peters fell out: It is noted therefore by Interpreters as a circumstance to greaten the Agony of Christ, and to set forth the extremity of his Sufferings, that in a cold Night he should sweat drops of Blood vvhich vvas contrary to Nature, and must proceed therefore from that great anxiety and perplexity his Soul vvas in. It's brought, I say, by Divines as an aggravation and evidence of those great Soul-Sufferings of Christ more than from the fear of Death, that in a cold Night he should thus sweat drops of Blood. It's noted upon that, though it comes in here upon another occasion, viz. that it being cold, there vvas a Fire, and Peter stood there to vvarm himself, as he might lawfully do but that he stood in the midst of temptations, and in the midst of Tempters.

Observ. 2. Peter stood in the midst of them, so Luke hath it, for novv he vvas in, and having once denyed him to the Damosel, to the end he might not

not further be known, he goes and shrinks in amongst the crowd thinking to hide himself, and there he stands amongst the Enemies of Christ, who being all full of Malice did certainly speak evil of him, and talked their pleasures of him, but he standing by was forced to be silent, said not a word, suffered all to pass in silence, which was a kind of a denying Christ. And so Peter having sinned thus far, God gives him up still to more sin. It is a dangerous thing my Brethren, without a special Call of God to be in ill Company, especially in evil times. Peter being amongst these Enemies of Christ it was the occasion of his being challenged, and that was the occasion of this great sin he fell into. In evil times, if a Man be in such Company either he must be silent, or if he speak, they will be ready to pervert his Speech, to put him upon a temptation. We should therefore avoid all needless Societies with carnal People. Take heed of coming into High Priests Halls; you see into what inconvenience it drew Peter to. And so much for this first Denial of Peters, which I have historically laid open. I come next to the Examination of Christ in the Nineteenth, Twentieth, and Twenty First Verses.

C H A P. X.

The Account of Christs Examination before Caiaphas, in the Nineteenth, Twentieth, and One and Twentieth Verses of this Eighteenth Chapter of John. We now come to the other part of Christs Sufferings recorded in this Chapter, and that is a strict Examination of him.

J O H N xviii. 19, 20, 21.

The High Priest then asked Jesus of his Disciples, and of his Doctrine.

Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the Synagogue, and in the Temple, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing.

Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

HERE begins a Third part of Christs Sufferings recorded in this Text. You have first his having been taken, and so bound, and then led to Annas his House in a Triumph of Glory; now here is the Third, his coming to Caiaphas his House, (for Annas had sent him bound to Caiaphas) who is called the High Priest, because he was that year the High Priest, though others had the Name also, for they still retained the Title though they were out of the Office. And being here, they fall to examining of him about his Disciples, and his Doctrine. Other Evangelists tell us of their examining of him, and bringing in Witnesses against him concerning some Speeches he spake about the Temple and about his own Office, and his being the Messiah; but this Examination here which certainly was the first they began with, and was as the Prodromus to all the rest, no Evangelist hath it but only John.

The time was (some twenty one years before) when Christ being but twelve years old, had asked them, and posed the Doctors in the Temple, and he was then (as he saith) about his Fathers business, putting forth then some beams of the Godhead dwelling in him. And now he is before them in a state of ignominy, and he is asked and examined as a Delinquent, as a Malefactor, as an Heretick and Seditious Person, and he is about his Fathers business in this as well as in the former.

And by the way here, afore we come to the particular opening of these Verses, let us consider who it was that was thus examined. It was he that was the great Prophet prophesied of by Moses, that should come into the World, of whom it was said, that whosoever would not hearken to the words of that Prophet which he should speak, he should surely be put to death. Clean contrary now, he being come into the World, he is examined as a false Prophet that they might find cause of putting him to death. He that was the Truth it self is examined and charged with false Doctrine: He that was the Prince of Peace, and came and preached Peace, (as it is Eph. 2. 17.) he is charged with Rebellion, and accused to have preached Sedition. But to come to the words.

The High Priest then asked Jesus.] Then, or therefore. Some translate it, therefore, and so it hath relation to what is said in the 13th and 14th Verses, where John speaks of the High Priest, and brandeth him to be the Man that gave the first Counsel that Christ should dye for the People. And now they having resolved to put him to death, therefore the High Priest asked him of his Doctrine and of his Disciples, seeking by Questions to ensnare him, that so they might have some plausible ground for his condemnation. Others they translate it, then, and so the meaning is this, That whilst our Lord and Saviour Christ was examining concerning his Disciples, then was one of his Disciples a denying of him; whilst he was called in question for them, and it was made an occasion of his Suffering, then was Peter committing that foul Sin. You see the love of our Lord and Saviour Christ.

The High Priest asked him.] As being the mouth of that great Assembly, the Sanhedrim, of all the Elders and the Priests who were met together at his House. For you must know it did belong to the High Priest and to that Assembly of Elders, to decide all Controversies of Doctrine that did arise; and to make enquiry into Heresies and false Doctrines, as appears by that place in Deut. 17. 11, 12, 13. therefore now for to deal with Christ about his Doctrine, had it been in any thing false or untrue it had not been unlawful for the High Priest to have done it. But see the iniquity of his and their proceedings. They proceed altogether against and without Law, for they do not lay any false Doctrine to his charge, they bring no Witnesses that this and this he had said, but meerly after the manner of the Inquisition, ask him Questions to ensnare him; whereas there should have been a Complaint made first unto him, and he should have brought forth the Evidences, and not go and wire-draw (as I may express it) and examine him upon Interrogatories, and so to get something from himself, this was altogether beyond his Commission.

He asked him (it is said) of his doctrine and of his Disciples.

The scope of the High Priest in this question, must be a little considered; for that will give us light into it; what end it was that the High Priest had in it; and what end likewise it was that God had in it.

The end and scope of the High Priest was twofold.

It was First, (as I hinted before) to fish out of Christ, whether or no he had taught such Doctrine as should come within the compass of that Law in Deut. 13. 5. for as I said, this great Sanhedrim, the Council of the High Priest and the rest of his fellows had especially to do in the case of a false Prophet. Now there in Deuteronomy the Law is this, If a Prophet arise that shall revolt from the Lord your God, (as it is in the Margent) teach Men to apostatize from God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, and set up any other God, that Prophet shall be put to death. Now because that Christ had set himself up to be a Prophet, yea and more than a Prophet, to be the Son of God, they would have ensnared him by asking him questions of what he had taught, that so according to the Law they might put him to death as a false Prophet: And because that in that Law (as appeareth ver. 6) not only a false Prophet was thus to be put to death, but if any one did secretly intice another, laying, Let us go and serve other Gods: Even as now secretly to persuade any to I'opery is death by the Law of this Land, so it was to turn from the true God, or to turn to any other God; this the High Priest had an eye upon, and would have gathered it out of Christ himself, as appears by Christs answer, in which he quits himself from any such practice of inticing any secretly, In secret, saith he, have I said nothing.

And Secondly, Another end the High Priest had was this; They were resolved he should be put to death, and they would therefore fain have gotten something out of him that should be matter or cause of death, and that by the judgment of Pilate. For you must know that all matters of Controversie in their own Law, Pilate would not meddle withal, but if it touched upon any thing that concerned the Roman State, either raising of Sedition, or that did touch upon Cesar, denying of him to be King, &c. of that Pilate was exceeding jealous (and that they knew) and about that he medled, as being within his cognizance, as the Roman Governour. You shall read in Luke 13. that Pilate had mingled the blood of the Galileans with their Sacrifices; he killed a great many of them while they were Sacrificing; what was the reason? Pilate did not regard Sacrifices nor Sacrificing, and all the Schisms that were in that Church Pilate took no notice of them, but he let all the Sects amongst them enjoy their liberty, why doth he kill these Galileans? Look in Acts 5. 37. and you shall find that there was one Judas of Galilee, that in the dayes of the Taxing, went and drew away much People after him, raised Sedition, and taught that it was not Lawful to pay Tribute and Taxes to Cesar. This was it that made Pilate to fall upon a remnant of these Galileans that came up to Hierusalem to worship, and to do it even while they were a Sacrificing. Now therefore that which this Caiaphas did fish for was this, to have matter to accuse Christ unto Pilate, for having done as that Judas did, drawn much People after him in a way of Sedition: Therefore he tryes now if he could get any thing that might drop from his own mouth, out of which he might frame an Accusation; and therefore the Doctrine which he especially aimed in this Question, was, whether he were the Son of God or no? And hence is it that we find in Luke 23. 2. when they came to accuse Christ before Pilate, the thing they urge upon Pilate against him is this, He forbiddeth to pay tribute unto Cesar, saying, that he himself is a King; and (ver. 5.) He stirreth up the people teaching throughout all Jury, beginning from Galilee to this place. They would insinuate to Pilate that he had gone up and down teaching this Doctrine, and gathering Disciples after him to make a head against the Romans, as being King of the Jems. They put all upon this interpretation, and this was it that Caiaphas in his questioning Christ fished for; and thus doth Gerrard interpret the words. And that's the reason that Pilate still saith, he found no cause in the Man to put him to death; for Pilate did not meddle with their Controversies concerning matters of their Religion, not he; but if it were a matter of right or wrong, as Gallo said, a matter of Sedition, then he medled with it. This I say was the second thing that Caiaphas aimed at in his asking Christ about his Disciples and his Doctrine; namely, to find out if he could that he had taught a Doctrine of Rebellion, and did go about to draw Disciples in a seditious way after him; which you see is insinuated to be his scope in Christs answer; you have gone into corners (saith Caiaphas) and into woods, and spread your Doctrine in secret, and have taken cunning wayes to draw Disciples after you. No saith Christ, whatsoever I have said I have said publicly, ask them that heard me what I have delivered, for I will not accuse my self.

The end that God had in this, why he should be examined about his Disciples and his Doctrine, it was.

1. To shew that he should suffer for having Disciples; that those whom he dyed for the owning of them, should be part of his crime for which they put him to death. Which is a circumstance mightily setting out the love of Christ unto us.

2. To shew what it was that they chiefly maliced him for, 'twas for having Disciples, which was the work of his Ministry: And yet they themselves had Disciples, for there was nothing more common (as all men know) than for the several Sects which were among them (and there were multitudes of them) to have their several Disciples, and liberty was given to them so to do, yet his Disciples of all the rest they maliced; and though they themselves had all the power, yet that vexed them that he should have any Disciples at all.

And they asked him of his Doctrine also, as one that had taught new matters, and had not followed the Tradition of the Elders in all things, but had corrected them in a great many of their false glosses by which they misinterpreted the Law.

Neither do they ask him at all of his Miracles, not a word of them. Whatsoever made for him that they meddled not with, but whatsoever might any way make against him, that they might fish any thing out of, of that they make enquiry; for his Miracles were they that confirmed him to be the Messiah, and confirmed his Doctrine. They asked him of his Doctrine, as that which was contrary to the Law of Moses, and as one that brought in Innovations; and they asked him of his Disciples as one that brought in Sedition, but that which confirmed the truth of both they speak not a word of. For that is the Nature of corrupt Men, that which makes for the truth in any cause or business, they let that pass in silence, not a whit of mention of that. Believe me, saith he, for my works sake. He still confirmed his Doctrine by Miracles; they would not so much as consider of them, but only barely ask him of his Disciples and of his Doctrine. They asked him of his Disciples and of his doctrine.

What is the Answer now that Christ makes? It is not to the matter of what Caiaphas said or asked him. He declareth neither what his Doctrine was, nor what Disciples he had. Only he deals with him warily as with a cunning adversary, one that was skilful to destroy. He would not go and accuse himself, but refers what he had taught to their proof, for it was matter of fact. If I have taught any thing (saith he) ask them that heard me. And he answers nothing about his Disciples at all, for if whatsoever he had taught had been sound and good Doctrine, there had been no guilt in drawing Disciples after him. And whereas Caiaphas in his examination did insinuate that he had gone about in a cunning way to draw Disciples after him; he clearly wipeth off that challenge, he never went about deceitfully to sow Tares whilst others slept; he never enticed any one secretly to any Doctrine which he had not publickly taught, but tells them that he did alwayes affect publickness, and he expresth his affectation of publickness in his Doctrine, by all sorts of expressions. This in the general.

I spake openly to the world, I ever taught in the Synagogues, and in the Temple, whither the Jews alwayes resort, and in secret have I said nothing.

I shall first open the words, and then shew you Christs scope in this Answer of his as I shewed you their scope in their Examination.

First, To open the words. You see our Lord and Saviour Christ answers them fully, and he answers them sharply: I spake openly. The word is palin, and it hath a twofold meaning.

1. That for the place where he spake or preached it was open; so the word is taken, John 11. 54. where it is said that Jesus walked no more openly, that is, in publick view. I spake openly, that is, I did not seek corners to preach in, or to deliver my Doctrine.

2. It signifies that he did speak plainly his mind; he spake out; he did not go about the bush as we say. So the word is used, John 10. 24. If thou be the Christ tell us plainly; (it's the same word that is used here) tell us plainly with a Paresia, with a freedom and plainness, whether thou be the Christ. And they themselves once gave that testimony of him, that he was regardless of any, and cared not who knew his mind; so Matth. 22. 16. We know thou regardest no mans person, but wilt speak the truth plainly. So he had ever done. I spake openly, that is, what was in my heart about the truth, I spake it plainly.

And then as he had spoken openly and plainly, so to the World; I spake openly to the world, saith he, that is, to all sorts of Men, for so World is taken: He did not restrain what he taught to a few Disciples only, but he told it to the People also, as the Syriack Translation hath it. As when a Man publisheth a Book, he publisheth it to the World; so saith Christ, I spake openly to the world.

And this saith he, I have ever done. It hath been my custom from the beginning as oft as I had any occasion to speak publickly. It was so at the first; for in Mark 1. 21. when he began first to preach, He entred into the synagogue, and taught.

I ever taught in the Synagogue and in the Temple, whether the Jews alwayes resort.

There were those two places of publick preaching, which he took occasion to preach in, and he instanceth in both. I have taught my Doctrine in all the severall sorts of publick Audiences that are amongst the Jews. First, He instanceth in the Temple, that is, in Solomons Porch, for that was the great place where they used to speak to the People; and therefore when Christ is said by one Evangelist to walk in the Temple, another saith, he walked in Solomons Porch, whether all the Jews did resort (for so some read this, whether the Jews alwayes resort) or as others, whether the Jews out of all quarters did resort. Which by the way may be an answer to that which is said, that there were such multitude of Believers in Hierusalem that they could not meet all in one place. Certainly there were mighty Audiences amongst the Jews, consisting of many thousands, when they came up to the Feast, unto whom Christ preached; therefore at one time in the Feast it is said that Christ (to the end they might all hear) lift up his voice and cryed, He that is athirst, let him come unto me and drink. There they all met, and in that respect he had opportunity to preach to many thousands at once, for all the Jews, it is said, came thither; and so that was fulfilled which was spoken of him, Psal. 9. 22. I have not concealed thy word from the great Congregation.

The Synagogues (which he instanceth in likewise) did differ from the Temple thus, that the Synagogues they had only Moral and Natural Worship in them, not Ceremonial. The Temple had Ceremonial Worship, it was made principally and especially for that, yet so as that Prayer and Preaching, &c. was exercised in it too; but in the Synagogues there was only Prayer and Preaching, and the Moral and Natural Worship of God, which is to be for ever, and they were for that use only. Now under the Gospel, that which God hath made to be the seat of all Worship, it is not so much the imitation of the Temple or representative Worship, but it is the imitation of the Synagogues, (for so particular Congregations and Churches are) and therefore in James 2. 2. If any man come into your Congregations, (the word is, into your Synagogues) with a gold ring, &c. And in Heb. 10. 25. Forsake not the assembling of your selves together; it is, assembling together in a Synagogue. Yet though for the matter of it the Congregations now be as the Synagogues then, which therefore have only Moral Worship, yet for the Priviledges and for the Promises, they are called Temples too, the meetings of the Saints in the New Testament are. Every Synagogue now, that is every Assembly of the Saints, have the Promises of the Temple made to it.

You are a Temple built up to God (saith the Apostle) acceptable to him by Jesus Christ. I ever taught in the Synagogue and in the Temple. The Doctrine which he had to deliver, he had chosen all sort of wayes to make it publick. And he addeth a Negation besides. Chap. 10.

In secret have I said nothing.

These words you have spoken of the great God in Isa. 45. 19. which he that is God applyes here unto himself.

But how is it said that he taught nothing in secret; for in Mark 4. 10. when he was alone he preached to his Disciples. And he made a long Sermon here (which John recordeth) at the Passover, and he did it when nobody was by but his Disciples. And in Mat. 16. 21 he charged them that they should tell no Man that he was the Messiah. And many Instances might be given of his often preaching privately; how then doth he say, In secret have I said nothing?

Certainly our Saviour doth not contradict himself or the truth. But this speech of his doth not refer to the act of Preaching only, as if it had been unlawful for him to teach in private: But refers to the matter, I have said nothing in secret; that is, I know nothing that ever I have spoken unto any in private, but I have spoken it publickly; I was never shy or chary of my Doctrine; I never feared the face of any Man; neither cared I if all the World heard me, but I have ever declared the mind of God to the full, and done it with all the freedom of mind that could be. And then likewise the scope of that speech is this, that he had not two sorts of Doctrine, which they would have charged him with; that he held forth his best Doctrine in publick to the World, that so he might gain applause from the People; and another private Doctrine which he reserved to himself, and taught it only to his Disciples. No, Christ was so far from it, that if you read that place in Mark 4. and compare the 10th and 21th Verses together, you shall find, that though when he was alone he did indeed explain a Parable privately to his Disciples, and so made a Sermon of it; yet what saith he at the 21th Verse? Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel or under a bed? There is nothing hid which shall not be made manifest. And look in Matth. 10. 26. you shall see his meaning to be this; Though I have opened this Parable to you in private, and so preached a Sermon privately, yet what I have said in your ear, do you go and preach it on the house top. So that Christ professeth the highest plainness and openness that could be of whatsoever he held, and he had that Spirit, that scorned to reserve himself, to deliver one thing in private and another in publick. And then he had this third scope also, that he was ready to defend what he had taught, if there were any Man that could lay any thing to his charge. I know nothing saith he, that ever I spake in private, but I spake it openly; therefore if any Man can accuse me, I am here ready to defend it. This is the scope of his speech.

Our Lord and Saviour Christ you see, he doth not answer a word concerning his Disciples: What was the Reason?

1. Because it was lawful for him, according to the custom that was amongst the Jewes, to have Disciples. The Pharisees they had so uncontrolled; and the Sadducees had so, and you know what great contention there was between those two Sects; so the Esseens, so the Nazarites, so the Herodians, and so others. And Christ he might as well justify the one as they the other.

2. It needed not, for if he could justify his Doctrine, he might justify his having Disciples. If his Doctrine were sound and true there was no guilt in this that he had Disciples.

3. He would say nothing concerning them, because he would take all upon himself, he alone would suffer. Others give this Reason, because his Disciples had forsaken him, or because he would not betray them, therefore he would not tell vvho they vere: And they observe this from it, that Men should not betray others vvhen they are asked of them, as here Christ did did not his Disciples. But I take the second to be the truer Reason, namely, that he standing to the justification of his Doctrine, his gathering Disciples, that makes no crime.

There is only this Question a little more largely to be insisted upon, whether that all private Preaching that is not in publick Assemblies, be unlawful?

It is the Objection that the Papists urged against the Churches of Christ in their first Reformation, (as Beza hath it in his Sermons upon the Passion) They say, saith he, that we preach in Chimney-corners. But what saith Calvin? It is, saith he, a Childish Argument to go about to prove by this Answer of Christs to Caiaphas, that in some cases Men should not preach the Word of God in private; for Christs scope in this speech is not to justify the lawfulness or unlawfulness either of the one or the other, but only to shew what course he had held, and to rebuke the impudent malice of his adversaries, for otherwise Christ had preached not only in the Synagogues, but in a Ship, and in Mountains; and when as the Jews went about to suppress him, you shall find that he withdrew himself with his Disciples into a desert place, and he did so a long time. And the Disciples themselves did the like for fear of the Jews, as in Acts 1. 14. and Acts 12. 12.

But Secondly, There is this may be gathered out of it too, as the scope of Christ, and that justly; That no Man should go and spread a Doctrine privately, which he will not own and preach publicly, or own before all the World, for so our Saviour Christ did. It was not but that he taught privately, and so his Apostles did too; but as they taught privately, so they did teach also in the Temple, and never scrupled to do it. It is the property of Wisdom (as it is Prov. 1. 20, 21.) to utter her voice in the streets, and to cry in the chief places of concourse, and in the City to utter her words, It is the Devils practice to sow tares in the night whilst Men slept. And the Apostle in 2 Tim. 3. 6. speaks of a sort of Men that creep into houses, and pervert silly Women. And it is certainly a sign of falshood, and argues a lye, to conceal Mens minds, or to speak that in private which they will not do in publick. Error and falshood alwayes shun the light. Our Saviour Christ you see scorned to speak any thing in private which he had not publicly vented, and he was ready to give an account of it, and so did the Apostles too; and although they held their meetings in times of Persecution privately, yet so as what they preached privately, they did not fear to profess publicly. And it is the genius of the Truth, and of them that do profess it, so to do. The Gospel is light, and it seeks no corners, and it ought to seek no corners, but ought to be spoken publicly; Acts 5. 20. Go, stand and speak in the Temple all the words of this life. 'Twas Christs charge to the Apostles.

Therefore in the third place I remember Beza gives this answer; The Papists, saith he, need not object to us, that we seek corners to preach in; for saith he, we desire nothing more than all that ever we preach or hold, to preach it to all the World. And so much now for Answer to that Question.

Now the scope of Christ in this 20th Verse (to touch that a little) is this. You see he doth not answer directly to what Caiaphas asketh him; for Caiaphas would have had something that he had taught out of him, that so he might ensnare him, which was against the Law; for by the Law he was not thus to sift him, but to have produced Witnesses. Christ therefore tells them that he had taught what he held in publick, and so puts them upon the proof, refers them to what he had delivered, which they were (if they counted it Heresie) to bring proof of. And Secondly, If I have Disciples, saith he, I have not gathered them by any secret whispering or creeping into houses, but it hath been by preaching publicly, and if I have preached any thing publicly, and gathered Disciples by it, you your selves may convince me of what I have taught, and here I am to answer it. So that I say, Christ he doth not go to answer punctually to what the High Priest asked him, for he would not give that advantage to so cruel an adversary; but here I am, saith he.

he. They ought to have produced Witnesses in a matter of fact as this was. And so much for the 20th Verse, the opening of it. I shall open likewise the 21th, and then give you Observations out of them altogether.

Chap. 10.

Why askest thou me? Ask them which heard me what I have said unto them, behold they know what I said.

Our Lord and Saviour Christ, as he had cleared himself in the former words, so here he gives the sharpest reproof, which the High Priest to the uttermost deserved, for his unjust proceedings against him, for they were according to their Law to prove every thing by Witnesses. Christ though he stood at the bar, yet he would shew the greatness of his Spirit, he speaks home you see and sharply. It became him so to do; he speaks not railingly or revilingly, but that which shewed both the injustice of Caiaphas, and that he himself, though he stood there before them as a Malefactor, was not a whit dejected. Do you ask me, saith he? I never spake any thing privately but in publick, and if there be a fault in gathering Disciples, the fault must lye upon my Doctrine; and if there be any thing in my Doctrine, you have the World to witness against me, for I have taught openly in the Synagogue and in the Temple, and do you ask me? And do you begin now to ask me? Have you not excommunicated my Disciples, and made a Law that whosoever confesseth me shall be cast out of the Synagogues, and have cast them out because they followed my Doctrine? As you never yet refuted my Doctrine, and now you bring no Witnesses about it. Do you ask me, that have dealt so injuriously with me and my Disciples? And not only so, but you have bound me, and brought me hither to your Bar, and have nothing to lay to my charge, but what I am accused of you would get out of my own words. Do you ask me in a matter of fact what I have preached, that so you may ensnare me out of my own sayings? Do you ask me? Will you have me to accuse my self? The Law allowes me this liberty not to accuse my self; no Man by the Law is to be judged without Witnesses, produce them; Why ask you me? Ask them that heard me.

Observ. It is not irreverence to Magistrates to defend our selves in such cases as these are. Christ doth not stand upon his points as the Messiah, but as a Subject to that State. And Men ought to shew great boldness of Spirit in such cases. So the Apostles, Acts 5. whether is it better to obey God than Man judge you. And Paul saith, Phil 1. that such boldness is a token of Perdition to the Adversaries, and of Salvation to the People of God.

Ask them that heard me.] This shews his innocency. I do not desire you saith he, to ask my Friends only, ask my Enemies, the worst I have, any one that hath heard me, that can testify any thing, here I am ready to defend it, if they will frame up any accusation, I will answer it.

Behold, they know what I have said.] That same Behold, hath an Emphasis with it. Some Interpreters very probably conjecture, that he did point to their own Officers, who had formerly when they were sent by their Masters to intrap him, given this testimony of him in John 7. 45. that never Man spake like him: And that therefore he did insinuate this in his speech, and perhaps did more largely explain it, for the Holy Ghost records but the sum of things; and so now he gives the greatest justification of himself that can be; saith he, your own Officers (pointing at them) that stand here at the Bar holding of me, many of those can tell what I have delivered; I have those to justify me, for they said never Man spake as I did, therefore ask them, and never stand asking of me: (It is a mighty reproof) I am so free in my self, and stand so innocent and so resolved in that Truth that I have spoken, that let your own Servants and Ministers be called, and let them speak. And so you have the answer of Christ in this 20th and 21th Verses. I shall now give you some Observations and so conclude this Story of Christs Sufferings, which were antecedent to his being Scourg'd, Crown'd with Thorns, and Crucified.

Observ. 1. You may observe, that the High Priest doth not find fault with Christ nor with his Disciples, for that they had taught without Authority. In another case, when he whipt the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple, they asked him, by what Authority doest thou these things? But here they do not lay that to his charge. Certainly they would have silenced him long afore for his preaching, if it had not been allowable by the custom of that Country. The truth is, that though none but the Priests and Levites that were skilful in the Law were to preach, yet divers others did, and were permitted so to do in that State; if they were gifted. The Pharisees did so, and so did Paul, who was a Pharisee, and sat at the feet of Gamaliel, and yet he was not of the Tribe of Levi, but of the Tribe of Benjamin. And Christ himself did not take upon him to preach simply as he was the Messiah, as holding that forth for his Warrant, though that was Warrant abundantly for him. And when they come to condemn him, they do not quarrel with him for that, but for the matter of his Doctrine, whether yea or no he did teach these and these Points, which they would have known from himself, and therefore they asked him of his Doctrine.

Observ. 2. You see they object no Vice against Christ, only his Doctrine to him, (for otherwise Christ was innocent) and his having Disciples. Observe then that his professing Christians should herein imitate their Master, that when they come to suffer, they may no way suffer as evil doers; that they may suffer for nothing but the Doctrine they have held forth, the Disciples they have kept company with, the Profession they have made, that it may be barely and meerly the truth of their Religion they suffer for.

Observ. 3. Still the great charge in all Ages that they go about to lay, as to Christ; so to his People, it is Heresie, and it is Sedition. This they would have fastened upon Christ, charging him with Heresie in his Doctrine; with Sedition in gathering Disciples to disturb the State, as Theudas and others that you read of in Acts 5. and therefore they ask him of his Doctrine, and of his Disciples, and they would have fetched out that from himself, that when he had gathered Disciples enow he would presently have rebelled. This they would have made Pilate believe. Both these, Heresie and Sedition, in terminis, were laid to Christs charge.

Observ. 4. In that Christ answers nothing about his Disciples we may gather this, (which indeed I hinted afore) That if the Doctrine be good, as to the having Disciples that do imbrace it, there is no guilt in that. If Christ had done it Seditiously indeed, which was it they endeavoured to lay to his charge, therein there had been a guilt. Look of what kind the Doctrine is, of that kind the Disciples must be. If the Doctrine be right there is no danger that Disciples embrace it. Therefore Christ in Matthew ult. bids them make Disciples, not to themselves, but to the Truth, to their Doctrine.

Observ. 5. Observe, that even these Men here accused themselves in accusing Christ. There were several of them had several sorts of Disciples, but what themselves went on in and agreed in amongst themselves, that they fall upon Christ for: For this is manifest by all the Stories of the Scripture, and by their own Rabbins, that in those times it was free to gather Disciples. There were three eminent Sects amongst themselves that still agreed in Temple-worship; there were the Sadducees that denied the Resurrection against the Pharisees, and the Pharisees against the Sadducees; there were the Herodians likewise, there were the Esseni, there were the Nazarites. All these were amongst the Jews, and it is evident that after the time of the Machabees, yea after the Captivity of Babylon, there was a permission of great differences in point of Doctrine amongst them. Yet when the true Messiah cometh to teach his Doctrine, and to make Disciples, they fall upon him for that which they themselves practised. Here were many Pharisees here present that were Sectaries, (that's the truth on't) but what was a commendation, and tollerable in them one to another, that must not be suffered in Christ: For Men will bear any thing but the truth. They themselves (saith the Apostle in the Galatians) would constrain you to be Circumcised and to keep the Law, yet they themselves do not keep the Law. It is constantly so in experience, they that that are Opposors of the Truth alwayes do so. The Papists they suffer a world of differences amongst themselves, they suffer even Jews that are opposite to Christ, and who blaspheme him: But any that do profess but the least of Protestant Doctrine or Worship, how do they oppose them! The Pharisees you see did the like, though there was a world of Division amongst themselves, and they had a liberty to differ in matters of Doctrine, and in matters of an High Nature too, yet when it comes to the Truth, there they would not permit Christ either to teach any Doctrine differing from them, or to have Disciples which yet they themselves allowed both in themselves and others.

Observ. 6. Those that were the greatest Corruptors of Doctrine (for these Pharisees and the High Priests were those that had corrupted the Doctrine of Religion by their Traditions as Christ intimateth often in his Speeches) they are they that are here most Zealous in the matter of Doctrine, who themselves I say had been the greatest Corruptors of it, and had drawn in their several wayes several Disciples after them as the manner of those times was.

Observ. 7. This very Speech of Christ may teach us this, to take heed of perverting the Speeches of Men. For this Speech of Christ if you do not take the Scope he aimed at is subject to perversion. He saith that in secret he had taught nothing, now all the Stories of the Evangelists shew that he had taught much in private, but (as I have shewed you) his meaning is this, I have not one kind of Doctrine that I teach privately, and another that I teach publickly. He doth not so much refer to the Act as to the matter.

Observ. 8. Though they had Authority to examine Mens Doctrines, yet here lay the evil of their examining Christ, that they should have done it upon complaints first brought before them. It is still as Controversies do arise. It was not that the Synedrim went and made so many Doctrines unto which they would tye Men, and they must preach no other; that Power even those amongst the Jews had not. It was lawful for Men to interpret the Scripture, and that not only by the Rule the Synedrim set out. But indeed if any Controversie did arise upon the spreading of a Doctrine, then it belonged to their Cognizance, as appeareth by Deut. 17. if a false Prophet arise, and if there were any Controversie between Blood and Blood, Case and Case, or interpreting Scripture, the thing was to be referred unto them, and it was examinable by that Counsel; But that men should be limited in their Doctrine to what all the Councils in the world should say, this is not the Rule; It was not the Rule amongst the Jews themselves, although that Synedrim had that Authority which no Council ever had since the World began, for it was by Divine Institution. Therefore I say they do not find fault with him because he had not come to know what Doctrine he should teach as from them, but that he taught a Doctrine contrary to Gods Law. They indeed acted beyond their Authority to proceed by way of examination, they should have done it by way of charge.

Observ. 9. You see the freeness of Truth and Innocency, it is able to appeal even unto Enemies, unto any to defend it self. And therefore as we should so preach, so we should so walk, as we may freely and boldly appeal unto any; for so Christ doth here. Ask them that heard me, saith he.

Observ. 10. Oftentimes Doctrines and Opinions are condemned by Prejudice, and upon hearsay only. This Caiaphas and many of those Rulers, they had not heard Christ, no, the greatness of their places kept them from that, as oftentimes great places keep Men from the Means, from that which should save them, but their Officers heard him, and by the report of malicious and malignant Spirits Caiaphas and the rest were thus informed.

Observ. 11. Lastly, It is the Law of God, and indeed the Law of Nature and Equity that there should not be an Oath ex Officio; that is, that Men should not be proceeded against either in Church, or otherwise by a bare examination of themselves, till such time as Witnesses have brought an Accusation against them. As in Act. 25. 27. It seems to me unreasonable 'twas the the Speech of an Heathen] to send a Prisoner and not withal to signifie the crimes laid against him. That Rule which is given concerning an Elder is true concerning every Brother also, though the Instance is only in an Elder, as one whose credit should be more than anothers, 1 Tim. 5. 19. Against an Elder receive not an Accusation but before Two or Three Witnesses. I do observe this difference (my Brethren) and it is very notable; when afterward the High Priest doth examine Christ of this Truth, whether he was the Messiah? And when he was punctually asked whether he was the Son of God or no? He answers plainly, I am; But when he would examine him about matter of Fact, not about the matter so much what he taught, as that he had taught thus and thus, which might be proved by Witnesses, then Christ referreth it to Witnesses, and would not answer himself. And the reason of the difference to me holds forth this great Truth, that no Man is to refuse if he be positively asked whether he hold this or that Opinion or no? Or if he be asked an account of his Faith, or demanded what his Judgment is in such or such a thing, he is freely to tell it, especially if they that ask him have Authority. It is a thing in vvhich Christs Example is held forth to Timothy by the Apostle Paul, that he vvitnessed a good Confession before Pilate and the High Priest, 1 Tim. 6. 13. A Man is to give an account of his Faith to any that will ask him (let him look to it though, whether it be to ensnare him or no.) But if any shall come and say I preached such a thing, which is matter of fact (for as it is preached it is matter of fact) and there are Witnesses that can clear whether I did or no, in that case the way is not to proceed by Examination of me, but to produce the Witnesses, and so to proceed, for no Man is bound in matter of fact to accuse himself. This I take to be the difference of Christs answer in this, when the High Priest examined him about his Doctrine, that is, asked him whether he had not preached thus or thus? Saith Christ, If I have preached thus or thus, prove it, there are Witnesses enough I refer my self to them, I will never tell you what I have preached, go to them that heard me, and bring them hither, and then examine me, and I shall give you an Answer. But when he came positively to ask him whether he held this or no, whether he was the Messiah, he answered clearly and plainly, for no Man is to refuse to give an account of his Faith though it indanger his Life if he be called to it. But for matter of fact, when as it may be proved by Witnesses (and all such things may be proved by Witnesses, though it be matter of Doctrine) a Man is not to accuse himself. It was the proceeding in that great Oath that you are now freed from, which as it was a great oppression, so it is a great Mercy to this Kingdom that it is taken away. And whereas they used to alledge that Christ accused himself, the case is different, it was not what he had preacht in matter of Fact, but in matter of Opinion and Judgment. But as to matter of Fact, Askest thou me (saith he?) Ask them that heard me. And this is the Law of Nature, and this was the Law of the Jews, and this was Christs dealing with a cunning and wary Adversary that sought his Life, and this you see he stands to. I have taught saith he where all the Jews come, I have taught in the Temple, taught in the Synagogues, taught before all the World, and now have you brought me hither, having bound me, and cast me and my Disciples out of the Synagogues, and ask me what I have preached? Here was the most unjust and unequal proceeding in the World, yet thus they did with Christ, and the Disciple is not above his Master.

C H A P. XI.

The last Sufferings of Christ coming to his Death. Both the shame and torments are to be considered in them.

WE have seen our Lord Christ a Man of Sorrows and Sufferings through the whole course of his Life. We have seen him betray'd, apprehended, seiz'd, on as a Criminal, and brought to Examination, and Judgment, and all these were the fruits of his being made Sin and a Curse. Now the next Part and Conclusion of the Curse unto which all the other tend as so many small Rivulets into the Ocean; is Death; and that,

1. Natural of the Body; [To dust thou shalt return, Gen. 3. 19. which Phrase notes out the separation of Soul and Body. So Eccl. 12. 7. it is expounded, [Dust returns to the earth, and the soul to God that gave it.]

2. Death Spiritual of the Soul;] [Thou shalt die the death, Gen. 2. 17.] which words intimate a double Death, even another Death besides that of the Body, and beyond it. Now,

1. I shall shew how Christ was made a Curse in his enduring a Bodily Death; the Circumstances whereof do all of them yet add unto the Curse thereof. You see that Death in it self (whether Natural or Violent) is by Gods first Sentence on Adam made a Curse for Sin. And thus is the Death of every Man who dies not in the Lord. But yet further; whereas there was but one particular, kind of Death that was in a more eminent manner of all Deaths else the most accursed, and that was hanging upon a tree; even that did Christ undergo, so that to be sure he might bear the extremity of the Curse herein. And that kind of Death was not accursed by Gods Law and Doom only, but was also esteemed to be a Curse among the Gentiles. Thus it was among the Romans, who when they would curse any Man unto whom they owed ill will, they exprest it by this, Abi in malam crucem. That is, I would thou wert crucified, or maiest thou die the Death of the Tree: Equivalent to which is that way of Cursing taken up by ill Tongues among us, when they say, Go and be hang'd, &c.

2. In that his last suffering the Death of the Cross (which was the Epitome of all) two things are eminently to be considered by us;

1. The Shame of that Death, and of the Circumstances of it.

2. The Pains of those Sufferings, and the Death it self, which is the Separation of Soul and Body, and the Conclusion of all. And unto these may the chief of those his Sufferings either preparatory unto, or at his Death be reduced. The Apostle in Heb. 12. 2. draws them to these two Heads:

1. Enduring the cross: which includes both the Pains of his Suffering, and Death it self.

2. The Shame that accompanied it, (in those words) [despising the shame.] And Christ himself particularly summing up all that was to be done to him, and that was foretold of him by the Prophets, (as he saies, Luke 18. 31. [Behold we go to Jerusalem, and [all things] that are written by the Prophets concerning the Son of Man shall be accomplished:]) The main particulars of which [all] he after mentions, ver. 32. 33. he expresth it in these words. The Son of Man shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spit on; and they shall scourge him and put him to death, which particulars if you will reduce them to Heads, do fall into these Two.

1. The Shame expressed in Three Particulars,
  1. Mocked.
  2. Spightfully entreated
  3. Spitted on
2. The Pains laid down in Two things.
  1. Their Scourging him.
  2. Their Killing him.

And accordingly we find Two especial Epithets of Excellency mentioned of Christ when his Sufferings are mentioned by the Apostles; on purpose to aggravate those his Sufferings from the Worth of the Person that underwent them. The first, that they killed the Prince of Life: So saies Peter, Acts. 3. 15. The other, that they crucified the Lord of glory; so Paul, 1 Cor. 2. 18. The first serving to illustrate his dying; that they should kill the Prince of Life; the Second, the Shame of his Death, that they should crucifie the Lord of glory; the Apostle mentioning his Glory together with his Crucifying, so to set out the shame of that Death above all other, and also as an evil to be considered in his Death, as great as Death it self, and greater. And accordingly in respect of Death he is called the Lamb slain, Rev. 13. 8. and in respect of shame he is called a Worm and no Man, Psal. 22. 6. being trodden on by all Men, and his Life of so poor a value with them, that they made no more of it to kill him, than to tread a Worm to Death; which to doe, no Man hath the least regret. And accordingly also, Heb. 6. 6. the Sin of Apostates from Christ is set out by their doing (so far as in them lies) that unto Christ which the Jews that put him to Death did to him at his Crucifying. It is set out by these two things, 1. That they crucifie to themselves the Son of God afresh; secondly, That they put him to an open shame. And so I reckon this of shame with the Curse of his Death, because they are thus linkt together by the Apostles; and also because indeed, in all Deaths shame is a part of the Curse; (and therefore it is said, the body is sown in dishonour, 1 Cor. 15. 43.) but especially in Christs Death; for it was more than dying, the kind of Death being the shamefullest. And though shame be not mentioned in the words of the Curse of our first Parents, yet the First Fruit, and so the first appearance of the Curse (that we read of) even in them, was shame and fear; it is said they were ashamed, &c. And so I come,

1. To the shame of this death. It is a great question, whether Shame or Death be the greater evil: There have been those who have rather chosen Death, and have wiped off a dishonour with their Blood. So Saul slew himself rather than he would fall into the hands of the Philistines who would have insulted over him, and mockt him as they did Sampson. So that King, Jerem. 38. 19. rather chose to lose his Countrey, Life, and all, than to be given to the Jews his Subjects to be mocked by them. And we see that many Malefactors that are to be condemned to dye, and though dying as Malefactors any sort of Death hath shame in it, yet to avoid a degree of shame in Death, they out of the greatness of their spirits choose a Death that is much more painful, as to be prest to Death rather than this same hanging on a Tree, which unto this day is in Mens esteem of all Deaths else the most ignoble and ignominious. Yea, Confusion of Face is one of the greatest Miseries that Hell it self is set forth unto us by. There is nothing that a Noble Nature more abhors than shame; for Honour is a spark of Gods Image; and the more of Gods Image there is in any one, the more is shame abhorred by him, which is the debasing of it; and so the greater and more noble any ones Spirit, the more he avoids it. To a base low Spirit indeed shame is nothing; but to a great Spirit (as to David) to have his glory turned into shame, as Psal. 4. 2. is nothing more grievous. And the greater Glory any one loseth, the greater is his shame: What must it be then to Christ, who because he was to satisfie God in point of Honour debased by Mans Sin, therefore of all Punishments else he suffered most of shame, it being also (as was said) one of the greatest greatest punishments in Hell. And Christ as he assumed other infirmities of our Nature that made him passible in other things; as to be sensible of Hunger, want of Sleep, Bodily Torments, of Unkindnesses, Contempt; so likewise of Disgrace and Shame. He took that Infirmity as well as Fear; and though he had a strength to bear and despise it, (as the Author to the Hebrews speaks) yet none was ever more sensible of it. As the delicacy of the Temper of his Body made him more sensible of Pains than ever any Man was; so the greatness of his Spirit made him more apprehensive of the Evil of Shame than ever any was. So likewise the Infinite Love and Candour of his Spirit towards Mankind made him take in with answerable grief the unkindnesses and injuries which they heaped upon him. And if to be abhorrent of shame be a spark of Gods Image, so as where more of that Image or of Glory is in any one, the more abhorrent he is of shame; yea, if even those in Hell are confounded with it, (they there still retaining so much of Gods Image in them) then what must so much shame and contempt be unto Christ, who was, and is the brightness of his Fathers glory, and the express Image of his Person, Heb. 1. 3. Such an Image of him as no meer Creature is capable to be, all which, he considered and took in, well knowing what and who he was, and this, before his Sufferings: So John 13. 3. and also when he was both at Pilates, and at the High-Priests Bar. As therefore the highest Lights have the deepest shadows, so all his glory being turned into shame, it made his shame the deeper and greater.

Now if we go over all the particulars of this his shame, never was any shame like unto it. There was nothing but shame, and that, the utmost that could be in all the passages of his Sufferings.

This shame I shall set forth to you by these Two Generals (which will contain several particulars under them;)

1. Their Mocking and spiteful entreating of him.

2. Other Circumstances that through Gods Providence were ordered to accompany his Mis-usage and Death, that served to heighten the shameful-ness of them.

1. For their cruel mocking, and shameful usage of him; the very words that Christ in Luke 18. 32. expresseth it in the General by, are very emphatical. The one ἐμπαυχθήσεται, which we translate, He shall be mocked, in the Derivation of it, signifies to make a child of one. They made a Child or Fool of him by their Actions and Dealings with him. Like unto which is the word that is used of Herods mocking of him, Luke 23. 11. ἐξεδυνήσας, he made no body, or nothing of him. The other word ὕβριστα principally respecteth Contumelious Speeches, and injurious despiteful railing at; ὕβρις, noting out the highest kind of Injurie, and that, done out of a despite. It is the same word whereby the Sin against the Holy Ghost is expressed; Heb. 10. 29. and is there translated doing despite. Now for him whose Name is [I am] to whom all Beings are but shadows, for him to be made nothing of; for him who is the Everlasting Father and the Wisdom of God, for him (I say) to be made a Child of; what an intolerable shame is this! Dyed Abner as a fool dies! (said David of him,) truly through their usage of him Christ died no otherwise.

But I rather come to those several particular waies wherein they express their extream contempt and despiteful mockage of him; As,

1. Their putting several Apparels upon him in derision; one while arraying of him in Purple, another while in White, then shifting him into his own cloaths again, thus making him ridiculous to all that saw him. Unmeetness and unsuitableness of Apparel is matter of shame. Jehoshua the High Priest appeared in filthy Apparel, Zach. 3. 3. and so Christ our High Priest being clothed with all our Sins. For one to be led about in a Fools Coat, what a shame is it! Yet thus was he served.

2. Their using jeering and mocking gestures: Because he had said he was a King, they therefore make a May-game King of him; And,

1. They Crown him with a Crown of Thorns.

2. They put a Reed in his hand for a Scepter, (though his Scepter was a Scepter of Righteousness, Heb. 1. 8.) to shew how powerless and weak a King he was, who had a Kingdom and Scepter as easily broken as a Reed. And therefore to demonstrate his weakness the more in respect of any such Kingdom as he assumed a Title unto, they strike him with his own Scepter; which is to a King the same disgrace and much more ignominious, as for an able Scholar to have his own Argument retorted on him to his own confuting and confusion; as for a Valiant Man to have his Weapon taken from him, and with it to be beaten.

Scepter

3. They hood-wink and blindfold him, and hide his Face. Now covering the Face is a gesture of shame, Jer. 14. 3. it is said, They were ashamed and covered their heads. Then they smite him, and when they have done it, they in scorn ask him, Who smote him; because he took on him to be a Prophet.

4. They smite him both with their hands, and with their Rods: Both are mentioned. And Majus dedecus est manu feriri quam gladio; no Noble Spirit can brook a Box on the Ear, or Buffet; but takes it in more disgrace than a wound honourably given. And therefore Micaiah (you know) was smitten on the Cheek by the lying Prophet, as a token of disdain; for to smite with the hand or fist argues subjection in the Party smitten.

5. They in mockery kneel to him, and salute him as they did their Cæsars, Hail King of the Jews. To him whom all the Angels (when a Child) did worship (let all the Angels of God worship him, Heb. 1. 6.) to whom every knee shall bow, both that is in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; to him do they in scorn bow the knee, and then as floutingly salute him with an All haile King, &c. The greater reverence is given in a disgraceful way, the greater the disgrace is; for shame is Glory turned into inglorious or shame.

6. They spit on him: And it was not one, or two of them that did this; but many, (as it is said.) Now this is the greatest indignity that may be. If a Father spit in his Daughters Face, (who yet is an Inferiour to him) shall she not be shut up (saies God, Numb. 12. 14.) in that he hath disgraced her. And Isa. 50. 6. Christ is brought in, saying, I hid not my face from shame and spitting upon; they are both linked together. The Face is the noblest of the Exterious Parts of Man, as in which Gods Image doth shine forth, and is therefore called the glory of God, 1 Cor. 11. 7. Now therefore for it to have an Excrement with which Men will not defile a clean room they tread on, cast upon it; what a disgrace is it? And if so, how much more then, for that face to be spitted upon, in which the Light of the Glory of God shines far more immediately and more plentifully; 2 Cor. 4. 6. And how Disgraces of this Nature must needs work upon a Spirit so high and so full of Glory as his was, we may see (and yet but a glimpse of it neither) by the heart of that King, (one of our own) who being Deposed, and by Night removed, was in his Journey shaved, to the end he might not be known, and set upon a Mole-Hill instead of a Chair of State, and washed with puddle-water. In the midst of which, he burst out into this pathetic Speech, I will yet have clean water to be washt with: And forthwith he shed many tears which in rivulets distilled down his Princely Cheeks, and cleansed them from that filth wherewith the Puddle-water had sullied and besmeared them. What heart would it not affect to read this Story of a King? And how much more did it affect his own heart? And yet, what was he to Christ, who in the midst of all their misusage of him knew well what a Kingdom he was born unto! as himself told Private.

7. They unbare him and make him naked, and then whip him; and both these to his shame. Nakedness (you know) is shameful, and therefore our First Parents when they were naked were ashamed. And then for whipping, it was a punishment inflicted upon none but Slaves and Villains, never upon a free-born Roman: Therefore how afraid were the whippers of Paul when they heard that he was a Roman? And Mastigia (or one that is subject to whipping,) and a base Villain are all one. Now the reason why they might whip Christ was, that he had taken upon him the form of a Servant; and so they whipt him as we use to do Run-awayes, which Peter alludes to speaking king to Servants, and setting before them Christs Example : We like Sheep had gone astray, and by his stripes were we healed, 1 Pet. 2. 24, 25.

8. They mock him and abuse him by giving him Gall before, and Vinegar after he was upon the Cross to quench his thirst with. Which therefore Christ is brought in mentioning, as being sensible of the scorn of it; Psal. 69. 21. (which Psalm is a Psalm of Christ.)

9. They wag their heads at him when on the Cross, and gape with their mouths; which is first, a Gesture of Despising: So Isa. 37. 22. it is said of Zenacharib, that Zion had despised him and shaken her head at him: Secondly, It is a gesture of detestation. So Jer. 18. 16. it is said of Israel that every one that passeth by her shall be astonished and wag his head at her. Thirdly, It is a gesture of Scorn. So Lament. 2. 15. it is said they hiss and wag their heads (at Jerusalem) and say, Is this the City that men call the perfection of beauty, and joy of the whole earth?

10. They mock and jeer him by the most contumelious words that could be, ὀνειδίζοντες, He shall be opprobriously reviled, Luke 18. 32. Yea, they blasphemed him. 1. In all his Offices; As, 1. Prophetical, They blindfold him and smite him, and then bid him prophecy who it was that smote him. Christ will one day tell him that did it, who it was.) 2. Priestly, He saved others (say they) let him save himself. Why, he was even then a saving others by bearing their mis-usage; he was then a doing that for which they mockt him. 3. Kingly, If (say they) thou be the King of Israel, then come down, &c. Thus as they mock all his Offices, So,

2. His Person, and his being the Son of God: He trusted in God (say they) and said he was the Son of God; let God now save him if he will have him. And (which is strange) in these and the like Speeches they use the very same words that in Psalms 22. were foretold should be used by them when he should be crucified: For these words of theirs you have there recorded, ver. 8. So that as Paul afterward told them, they fulfilled the Prophecies whilst they ridiculed him. Yea,

3. (Which is an inhumanity unheard of before, or since) they mock at his very Prayers which he makes out of the deepest bitterness of Spirit that ever Creature spake out of, and which were full of the saddest complaints that could be uttered, when he cryed out most bitterly, Eli, Eli, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me; they put it off and turn it into a scoffe, as if they understood it not, He calls for Elias (say they in scorn) as if he had prayed unto a Creature unto Elias, instead of the Living God: And let us see (say they) if Elias will come and help him. In Heb. 11. among other Persecutions of the Martyrs, cruel Mockings are mentioned as none of the least; Reproaches being to the Soul (as the Psalmist expresseth it, Psal. 64. 14.) as the pricking of a Sword. Now was there ever such cruel Mockings as these heard of? Christ complains in Psal. 69. 26. (for it is a Psalms of him,) They persecute him whom thou hast smitten. When God had smitten him, and he in bitterness cryed, Eli, Eli, my God, my God, they turn it to Elias. Take the most hateful Malefactor that ever was, one that hath been the most flagitious Traitor to his Prince and Countrey that ever pestered the Earth, and so had rendred himself most abominable and odious to all Mankind; yet let him come to dye for it, and though the rage and fury of Men make them not to compassionate his tortures, as being far less than his desert; yet still for his Soul, as it stands in relation to God, they wish well to it, and that it may be saved; their Malice rageth not to jeer at the Prayers he makes for the Salvation thereof: Nay Men are even ready to afford comfort and help unto, and to further such a Mans Faith, and to joyn in Prayers with, and for him. But these Jews teise at Christs very Prayers: They speak what they are able to make him despair. If ever the Devil was abroad, and the Malice of Hell in the hearts of Men, it was at that day.

In the Second place: Add unto all these mis-usages those Circumstances that accompanied both his Death and Mockings to heighten his shame the more. God contrived all things so to fall out as to make his shame above measure shameful, as our Sin had been above measure sinful; he heapt shame upon shame upon him.

The

The First Circumstance here observable is that of Time : All this was done to him at the most Publick time that could be chosen out ; even at the Pass-over, when all the Males came up to Hierusalem and many Strangers with them to celebrate that Feast : A Concourse like our Commencement at our Universities, or like the most general Assembly you can imagine.

2. The Circumstance of Place : Which,

1. For the Publickness of it was at Hierusalem, the head City of Jury, a Stage the most eminent upon which to be made a Spectacle to Men and Angels. Art thou only a stranger in Hierusalem (said two of his Disciples unto himself) and hast not known these things ? Luke 24. 18. These things were not done in a corner (as his Disciples said.) And when God would shame David, he cast in this Circumstance to aggravate it ; Thou (saies God) didst it secretly, but I will punish it before this Sun.

2. (More specially and restrictly) for the Infamousness of the Place ; He was crucified at Golgortha a Place of Sculls, as ignominious as our Tyburn. The Place had a reproach in it : Therefore Heb. 13. 13. Jesus suffered without the gate (saies the Apostle) let us therefore go forth to him without the camp, [bearing his reproach] namely, of suffering in such a Place. It shewed he was an out-cast, rejected of Men, and as Dung cast out.

3. For the Persons that mockt him ; they were Persons of all sorts ; Kings and Rulers, Herod and the Elders, the Priests, and Soldiers, together with the Multitude of Common People that followed him, and that passed by occasionally ; yea, the very Thieves themselves that were crucified with him. Now the baseness of the Persons that contemn one doth add to the contempt. Therefore you shall find Job complaining, Job 30. from the first to the tenth. That those that were younger than he, and whose Fathers he would have disdained to set with the dogs of his flock, did mock him : They are (saies he, ver. 8, 9.) the children of Villains, more vile than the earth they tread on, and now I am their song. — yea, their by-word, &c. Reproach (saies Christ in one of the Psalms made of him) hath broken my heart, Psal. 69. 20.

4. The Death it self was also the most shameful ; even the death of the cross ; which for his Disciples to preach and profess, had in the Eyes of all the World a shame in it. Therefore Paul, Galat. 5. 11. calls it the offence or scandal of the cross. And if that were a shame to profess a crucified God, what a shame was it then for God himself to suffer such a Death. The Cross was so shameful, that therefore none of all the meanest and basest of the People could be procured so much as to carry it ; so that they were fain to compel Simon of Cyrene unto it. And it was the custom ever after to call such as carried a Malefactors Cross Crucigeri, as a brand of disgrace. And for himself to carry it (as he did) was such an addition of ignominie unto his Death, as for a Malefactor to go all the way to the Gallows with a Rope about his Neck.

5. All this was aggravated also by the Persons that suffered with him, and their saving one of their Lives before his. A comparative contempt is more than a simple one : As,

1. That he should be crucified between two Thieves ; as if he were the Prince of them. It is made an heightning Circumstance of his shameful Death (in Isa. 53. last,) that he was numbred amongst the transgressours. Then,

2. (Yet further,) That Barrabas the most infamous Thief, Seditious Person, and Murderer that was in that Nation, (and so, a Proclaimed Enemy unto that State,) should be voted to live by the common voice of all the People, and this when with the same breath they crye, Let Jesus be crucified, let him be crucified. Pilate put them upon choosing one of these two, and set Jesus in the comparison with Barrabas, on purpose to get Jesus saved, not thinking they would be so shameless as to prefer him to Christ who was a Murderer as well as a Thief, and one that had made himself odious unto them all, and whom by their Law they were not to pardon or suffer to live : Yet they are content to bring both the Blood he had shed (by sparing him and Christs) also upon their heads, by crucifying him rather than to deliver him that was Innocent. Thus much for the shame of his Death and Sufferings.

C H A P. X I I.

The Extremity of pain which Christ our Redeemer indured in his Body. His being barrased day and night without a moments rest. His being Crowned with Thorns, torn with Rods, and at last Crucified.

THE second thing to be considered is the Pains and dolours thereof, which are all sorts of ways set forth to us in his Story.

1. Immediately afore his death, want of sleep, not that whole Night onely, which preceded his Crucifying, on which he was kept waking in the High Priests Hall, but three or four Nights afore (as Brugen's computeth them.) He in preparation to his Passion, and being now to leave the World, spent those Nights in prayer on Mount-Olivet, and on the days did teach the People in the Temple after his coming into Jerusalem: So towards his end pouring forth his Spirit as a Sacrifice to God and his People ere he was offered up as the Sacrifice. He knew his Tabernacle was now to be dissolved, and he spared not himself whom God afterwards spared not, Daies and Nights wearing out himself in private prayer or preaching. Lukes Words are these, Luke 21. 37. And in the Days (it is in the plural) he was teaching in the Temple, and in the Nights he went out and abode in the Mount (that is the whole Nights, as abiding implies) that was called the Mount of Olives. This was his wonted custom for the time after he came into Hierusalem, confirming by his example what in the words afore he had taught his Disciples, Verse 36. Watch ye therefore and pray always, &c. And then Vcr. 38. It follows, And all the People came early to him in the Morning (that is every Morning of those Nights, as knowing his manner and wont) for to hear him. These uncessant Prayers without rest, must needs bring a strong Body low in Spirits and weary it out. The fourth Night which was Thursday-night he was apprehended after those long Sermons made to his Disciples; which John hath recorded, and that solemn Prayer put up, John 17.

2. That Night and Next Day they hurried him up and down seven Journies from one place to another, (the Messiah had no rest, that those that were weary might have rest in him) according to the compute of six Miles and an half, or seven Miles.

3. Whilst he was that last Night in the High Priests Hall, they smote him with the Palms of their Hands (which are Bones as our Translators render that of Matthew, chap. 26. 67.) saith Matthew, and with their Fists saith Mark, and both often, others add with Rods, as the Word παριζευ signifies, derived from παρις a Rod, and these on his Mouth or Face.

4. He had a Crown of thorns platted on his head, where the Nerves tendrest of sense do meet; to harrow Men with Thorns is made an high and grievous torture and punishment, Judges 8. 16. Gideon, when by sense he would teach the Men of Succoth, by sense and fore experience to do no more so wickedly, it is said, That he took the Elders of the City, and Thorns of the Wilderness, and Briers, and with them he taught the Men of Succoth. This Crown of Thorns was kept upon his head all the time, both in his way to the Cross, and whilst on the Cross, which pierced those Veins and Sinews on the Temples and Forehead, and caused his Face besmeared also with dust in his Travail to the Cross, to be (as the Prophet speaks) more marred then any Mans, Isa. 52. 14.

5. Add to this weariness and faintness of Spirits, which appeared in the carrying of his Cross. There was that one thing onely, wherein they seemed to pity him, in calling to another to help him, Symon of Cyrene. But the truth of the thing was, That he having watcht and spent himself so many Days and Nights together, he failed so much, that they feared he would have fainted and so expired ere he came to the place of Execution, and so they should have missed of their designed Malice in Crucifying of him. We have wearyed him with our sins, and this made him weary and ready to faint. Oh come to him all ye that are weary and heavy laden.

6. He was whipt and scourged, which was twice, once by Pilate's command, and that to the end to move Compassion in the Jews, that so he having suffered so cruel a punishment, as was sufficient to assuage their Malice, and to satisfy for any Crime they could in their own Imagination think him guilty of, who in Pilate's had deserved nothing of death, they might relent and cease to desire his being crucified. And when he had scourged him, he brings him forth to publick view, and cries, Behold the Man. And after that he was again scourged (as John relates it) as of Custome, the Romans use to do those whom they Crucified. And these stroakes were laid on not by the Jews, who by their Law were limited not to exceed forty stripes, but by the Roman Soldiers who had no bounds set them, but gave as many, and as cruel ones as their barbarous Nature pleased, unto an abject Man designed and condemned to the highest Tortures.

7. He after all was Crucified. The Evangelists aggravate not that in the circumstances of it, only say, he was Crucified (but much is shut up in that one word.) The cruelty of that death being known in those days, and by the relation of it in stories, and by those who have made a Collection of it of the manner of it, in these days. The Apostle Paul put this emphasis upon his death, To death even the death of the Cross, Phil. 2. 8. Cruciatius, or the pains of the Cross, being commonly used by the Romans (among whom this death was frequent) to express the sharpest pains and tortures. The manner of which was.

1 The Cross, the Person to be Crucified was to be affixed unto being laid upon the ground, his hands and feet were stretcht out as far as they could extend, and then nailed in the hands and in the feet unto the Cross; which the Psalmist Psalm. 22. expresth by digging holes in his hands and feet, ver. 16. (as the vulgar Translation reads it) In the hands and feet the nerves again meet and Center, and so they are of the most exquisite sense. Then,

2. The rearing up the Cross with the Man nailed on it, (whilst on the ground) and fixing the Cross in the hole which was digged for it, with a violent Jog to fix it in the Earth (as was their manner) this exceeded all the Torments of our Racks. In the 22. Psalm, ver. 14, 15. himself tells us that it loosened all his bones, or my bones dispart themselves. And it is not onely said, as ver. 17. I may tell all my bones; he hanging naked, but further, ver. 14. All my bones are out of joynt.

3. And thereon they hung till death, their arms and hands bearing the weight of their whole bodies, so as they dyed of meer pains (And thus Christ hung on the Tree, Acts 5. 30.) Exhausting their Spirits. For a Man to hold his hands but stretcht out, what a trouble is it? Moses could not for a day do it, but was fain to be supported.

4. And this put them into an exquisite Feavour as such Pains do, as appeared by his thirst, as Psalm. 22. 15. My strength is dried as a Potsherd, and my Tongue cleaveth to my Jaws.

The last (of bodily sufferings) is death it self, which is the separation of Soul and Body; unto this the Curse reacht, and it was not his pains or shame or hanging on a Cross that would satisfy, unless he also breathe out his Soul. This was necessary, unless the corn fall into the ground and die (tis Christs own similitude, John 12. 24.) it abideth alone. So he unless he had dyed, had been (of mankind) in Heaven alone. He was also to be the Founder of a Will and Testament, and that is not of force until the death of the Testator, He must therefore dye, Heb. 9. 16, 17. For where a Testament is, there must also of Necessity be the death of the Testator: For a Testament is of force after Men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all whilst the Testator liveth. And he was to be the Death of Death, Hosea 13. 14. And 'tis a general rule, what he procured vertue for in Mans behalf half he did it by undergoing the same. Yea, he thereby made death a dead and ineffectual thing καταργήσας τὸ θάνατον, destroying Death, 2 Tim. 1. 10. This was held forth in the Type, Num. 35. 28. in that the Murderer or Manslayer was then set free from his Prison the City of Refuge, (which was a confinement to them) when the High Priest dyed, but not till then. Nor should we have been set free, unless our High Priest had dyed. Now for his Soul and Body thus to part, and for the Son of God united to both personally to continue that Union unto that dead Carcase of his Body laid in the Grave, what a Debasingment was it, besides all considerations else that belong to this head.

CHAP. XIII.

The greatest of all Christs Sufferings were those of his Soul. What were the Causes of those Sorrows. The Greatness of those Sufferings. Wherein they did consist. How it could consist with his being the Son of God, to be forsaken of God, and to bear such extremity of his Fathers Wrath.

BUT yet though we have seen the Wo and Curse in this life due to us by sin, passed over and sustained by Christ; and secondly, the Curse of bodily death undergone too; (yet as the Revelation to another purpose speaks, there is a third Wo,) which a guilty Conscience fears more then all the other, and which is the Curse of Curses [Thou shalt dye the Death.] Two Woes are passed: behold a third Wo is yet to come, which is the great and main Curse of the Law that is to be undergone (as the Text saies) before the Law be fulfilled. For as the life promised [Do this and live] is more then to live bodily, or as a Beast doth, or Rationally, as Men do; it being to live in communion with God, as Angels do: So [Dying thou shalt dye] is more then the bodily death and returning unto dust. And as that life promised is the Favour of God; (thy Favour is better then Life, Psalm. 36. 3. with thee is the Fountain of Life, Psal. 63. 9. says David) so this death here threatened is from the Wrath of God; which therefore is put for Hell and Death; as when it is said, We are saved from Wrath to come, 1 Thess. 1. 10. This is the second Death, as it is called, Rev. 20. 6. And it is the Original Curse, the Fountain of Curses; whereas the death of the body, and all miseries of this Life are but the streams. This is the pure Curse, without mixture, (as it is called in the Revelation) the other is the Curse in the Dregs mingled and conveyed by Creatures. All other Curses light upon the outward Man first, and upon the Soul but at the rebound; and at the second hand, onely by way of sympathy and Compassion; but the immediate and proper subject of this Curse is the Soul and Spirit: Indignation and Wrath, Tribulation and Anguish upon every Soul that doth evil, Rom. 2. 9. And this is the summe of all Curses, and in stead of all the rest. And therefore Paul, when he would express his willingness not onely to dye bodily, but to endure Hell also, for his Brethren, as Christ had done for him; he expresseth it by this, I could wish myself to be accursed from Christ; (Rom. 9. 3.) that is, to be separated from all the Comfort I shall have by him, and endure that wrath that is due unto me, though undergone by him for me. Which wish of his may help us to understand how far Christ was made a Curse for us; for it was the love of Christ which constrained Pauls heart unto this wish; and his his meaning was to undergo that for his Brethren in Christ, which Christ underwent for him, and so far as Christ underwent it, without sin. And so far as Paul wish't it without sinning (for he spake it in Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, as v. l.) so far might, and did Christ undergo it without sin also. His meaning therefore was not that he was content to be cut off from being a Member of Christ, and so, to have no influence of Grace from Christ derived to him; No, that had been a sinful wish, and not from the Holy Ghost: But his meaning is, that he could be content to lose that portion of comfort which was to be had in the enjoying of Christ, and so undergo that displeasure from him which was due unto his sins, by feeling the effects of it in anguish and pain, &c. Thus when it is said, that Christ was made a Curse, not onely in bodily miseries, but in his Soul also; the meaning is not that the Hypostatical Union was dissolved, or the influence of Divine Grace restrained, but onely, that in regard of comfort he was forsaken of God, and felt the fearful effects of his Anger due to our sins, without sin and despair.

In like manner, when it is said, Christ underwent this Curse also, Dying thou shalt dye; the meaning is not that Christs Soul did dye the second Death; the Scripture speaks it not, neither are we to speak it; but thus the Scripture expresseth it, that his soul was heavy unto death, Mat. 26. 37, 38. It is spoken of this Curse of his Soul; which did not work death in it, but a heaviness unto death, not extensivé so as to dye, but intensivé, that if he had died it could not have suffered more. As Jonas is said to be angry unto death, Jon. 4. 10. that is, he thought that Misery and Cross for which he was angry, to be even as great an affliction as death it self, and so he could out of his Anger wish for death: So Christs heaviness was as great as theirs that undergo that death; yet dye he did not; it was but unto death; as Onesiphorus was said to be sick unto death; or as a Woman in Travail is said to be at the point of Death; because if she were a dying, she could not have more pain. There is such an other Phrase, Acts 2. 24 where it is said, That Christ was raised up, God having loosed the Sorrows of Death; ἀσθivas, the throws of Death, of which it was impossible he should be held. It is evident, that it is spoken of his Soul; for if it were spoken of Bodily death, there were no sorrows that remained on his body in the Grave, to with-hold it from rising again: No, these sorrows dyed when he dyed, and were then ended; and so could not be said to be upon his body, to hinder it from rising. Again, it is not absolutely called death, but the sorrows of death: that is, the same pain and throws that dying Mens Souls have, he felt. And it is observed, that the same Phrase that is used to express the Sorrows of Hell, 1 Thess. 5. 3. the Travail of a Woman, (so Psal. 18. 4, 5. the Pangs of Hell, or Birth-throws, as the Word signifies) the same Phrase [ἀσθivas] is here used, signifying the Throws of a Woman in Travaile; and having reference to that Phrase in Isaiah 53. 11. He shall see of the travail of his Soul. His Soul and not his Person is there properly meant, for it is spoke as of a part of himself, He shall see of the travail of his Soul. Those pains were indeed Birth-throws to us, they tending to our life; but in him they were the Sorrows of Death. And so in this he bare the Womans Curse in his Soul, as well as Adams Curse in his Body; as he did eat in sweat, so he brought forth in pain, and in sorrows unto death; but yet such as did not kill his Soul; it dyed not; for he was to live to see his Seed, and have Joy in his soul for them for whom he had had most pain; so it is in Isai. 53. 10. For thirdly, these Sorrows did not hold him, had they held him, then indeed he had dyed. And the reason why he dyed not, was not, that he had not the same throws and stabs that use to kill others: for they are therefore called the Sorrows of Death, because they were the same which kill all Mens Souls in Hell: But he was too strong for them; Nature was too potent in him, and Life too vigorous: otherwise that which he underwent was enough to have kill'd out of hand all Men and Angels: but him they could not hold; it was impossible. Yet, Fourthly, they were loosened, not so, as never to have hold of him; or as if he never came in to them, (as Bellarmino trifles) No, he was in them; but (as Ps. 124. 7.) His Soul escaped as a Bird out of the snare, the snare was broken, and he was delivered. The Devils they are reserved in Chains too strong for them, Jude 5. but he like another Sampson brake these ropes, these chains:

Cords: So Pfal. 18. 5, 6. where the sorrows of Hell are called Cords; for the same word, קֶרֶב, signifies both; and so the Chaldee Paraphrast reads it. And yet Fifthly, because these were truly the Pains of Death; therefore this delivery of his Soul from them is called a Resurrection; and the greatest wonder of his Resurrection is ascribed to this; for the main power of the Resurrection was seen in raising his Soul, because it conflicted with such sorrows: For his Soul had a Resurrection, as well as his body; which Peter also, to shew he means it here, does distinctly mention, Acts 2. ver. 27. God's Promise was, that He would not leave Christs Soul in Hell (that is, under the pressures of these sorrows, there is the Resurrection of his Soul from the sorrows of death exprest) nor suffer the holy one to see Corruption, there is the Resurrection of his body from the power of the Grave; both which make up that great Resurrection of his, there spoken of. For to raise a Soul from the Terrours of Gods wrath, does as much deserve the Name of a Resurrection, and more, as to raise a dead body: Therefore saies Heman (suffering these terrours in his Soul) I am like the Slain that lie in the Grave, and wilt thou shew wonders to the dead; shall the dead arise and praise thee, Ps. 88. 15. And this Resurrection Christs Soul had before it went out of his Body; for after it went out, it went to Paradise, and encountred not with the Pains of Death; but before it left his body, it did, and was rescued: And therefore after that long conflict for three hours space, whilst the Curtains of the World were close drawn, and all washuht up in darkness; during which time he had struggled with these sorrows, and with Gods wrath, (which towards the conclusion he manifests by that bitter expression, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? After that conflict (I say) he crys out, It's finisht. Which some Divines think not to have reference to the work of Redemption; that, that work was finisht; No, for that was not as yet finisht, his bodily death being a part of it, as also the piercing of his Side, and laying of him in the Grave: but the meaning is, that now the great brunt was over; that Cup which he so feared was drunk off; his Soul was come out of its Eclipse, as the Sun did then also out of its darkness, which was a shadow or sign of this in his Spirit; unto this it is, that those words refer: And that which seems to confirm it is, that when first these kind of Sorrows fell on him in the Garden, the Evangelist notes it saying, that then his Soul began to be heavy; and now when they went off him, he shews, that then it was finisht.

As therefore we, who are his Members, have a double Resurrection in our Souls whilst they are in our bodies, John 5. 25. the time now is, &c. and in our Bodies, at the latter day, ver. 29. in the same Chapter. So had Christ; one of his Soul from the Terrours following the guilt of sin, the Sorrows of Death upon the Cross; the other of his Body from the Grave the third day; which was a manifestation of the first. And answerably those sorrows may be called a kind of Death, at least the Sorrows of Death; in the same sense that Bodily dangers and distresses are called Dying; as Paul being in jeopardy every hour is said to dye daily, 1 Cor. 15. 31. And so in that sense, and no other, may he be said to have undergone this Curse of Dying the Death. Therefore, Isa. 53. 9. we have his deaths in the plural mentioned, not his death onely; He made his Grave with the wicked in his Deaths. So in the original. And in his bearing these sorrows of Death, was the Curse abundantly fulfilled: (although he did not dye the second death) For that wrath which is the Cause of the second death in others, he underwent; and those sorrows of death which that Cause produceth, he bore: Though the same event followed not; his Soul dyed not, as theirs through weakness doth.

Having thus explained, and fitted these Phrases to our hand; we will now come to the Particulars of the Sufferings of his Soul, which are meerly and properly such, and which as that Curse seizeth on wicked Men by degrees, so did seize on him by degrees, towards his end. The first mention we have of them is in John 12. 27. four days before his passion, when on the sudden he breaks forth, Now is my Soul troubled, and what shall I say? He then saw the Storm a coming, and a black Cloud rising, which troubled him; and in the expectation of it, he saw so much to be troubled at, as he knew not how to exprest it, but cries out, What shall I say?

The

The second degree was in the Garden, as both Mat. Chap. 26. from ver. 36. to the end, Mar. 14. from ver. 32. to 51. Luke 22. 40. and John 18. 1, 2. do set it down. There it was where the storm overtook him ere ever he fell into the hands of Judas or the High Priest: and he began to feel some drops of it; and indeed the sorrows that there seized on him were such, as fetched blood from him ere these his Enemies approached him. Whereby was shewn, that he had other and greater miseries to encounter with then from Men. And whereas for all his bodily sorrows, we hear not one groan from him, as neither for his wounding with the Crown of Thorns, with Nails, &c. But as a sheep that openeth not his mouth, so was he led to the slaughter, Isa. 53. 7. Yet here in the very entrance into these sorrows we hear him lamenting, Mat. 26. 38. My Soul is heavy unto death: He names, and as it were laies his finger on the part affected, which was not his Body, but his Soul; it was there where his grief lay. And we have many words and expressions which may help us to see into his grief, what it was: Amongst which, the first and lowest expression is [λυπεσθαι] Mat. 26. 37. He had said before, that he was troubled; and we read not so much as of the least trouble of his for outward pains; but now it is said, He became sorrowful. It was no pain of his body could make his great Spirit sorrowful. Sorrow is more then pain, as Joy is more then Delight. Beasts are never sorrowful properly; and yet they have all sorts of pains of the body, which touch not their Souls with a Reflection and so cause sorrow. The cause of Christs sorrow reacht his reasonable Soul, which is the proper subject of sorrow, and not the inferior, but the superior part also. Yea Tully restrains the Word Tristis to sorrow for the punishment of sin and wickedness; Pocna sceleris tristis est. And yet this is but the lowest degree; but the beginning of sorrows; which notwithstanding reached as deep as any kind of worldly sorrow could do; for even Dauids sorrow or affliction for his Son Absalom is expressed by the same Word.

Now there were two things which made his Soul to be thus sorrowful.

1. The sins of the World imputed to him and charged on him.
2. The Curse or Wrath of God upon him for those sins.

First, The sins of the World came in upon him; and therefore ver. 38. he is not simply said to be sorrowful, but πείλυτος; which word signifies an encompassing about with sorrows, as David often expresseth it, The sorrows of Hell encompassed me about, Psal. 18. 5. His soul was plunged into them over head and ears, so that he had not so much as a breathing hole. For Intension this sorrow was unto Death; and for Extension, all the Powers and Faculties of his Soul were begirt, besieged, and imprisoned, and this expression is especially used in respect to our sins taking hold of him. So Psal. 40. 12. Innumerable evils compass me about, mine Iniquities take hold of me. It is spoken by Christ as in his sufferings; for of him is that Psalms Prophetically made. So that, I take it, this Phrase πείλυτος hath a more proper respect to the charging of our particular sins upon him, which began to encompass him, or (as Isaiab's Phrase is, Isa. 53.) to meet in him, to come about him from every Quarter. His Soul was so environed and shut up in sorrows, (or in Prisons, as Isaiab's Phrase, Isa. 53. 8. is) that he had not a cranny left for comfort to come in at. Galat. 3. 23. The Law is compared to a Prison, in which Men under the Guilt of sin are shut up; and so was Christ. Now no Temporal Miseries do so environ an ordinary Mans Spirit, but that there is some hole left to take breath at: But sin can do it; and much more, all the sins of the World, which now at once did meet at, and beset Christs Soul. As Heb. 12. 1. Sin is said to be that which easily besets us; and so do both the power and the guilt of it.

Secondly, There is yet a further expression used by an other Evangelist, that respects the Terrours of Gods Wrath seconding and following upon this his apprehension of our sins; and it is in Mark 14. 33. He began to be sore amazed, ἐκθαμβεσθαι, which is a third expression used concerning his Trouble. Our Translation rightly renders it, sore amazed; for θαμβεσθαι signifies to be amazed; but ἐκ added signifies the extremity of that amazement, such as when Men fall into it, their hair stands an end, and their flesh trembles: It signifies to be in horrour. No sooner had these our sins presented themselves to him as being our Surety, but that withal, Thunder and Lightning from God do presently strike him, and his Wrath and Curse for them suddenly arrests him; this was it that put him into such an amazement as contains in it both fear and horreur. His Father is presented unto him as an angry Judge brandishing his Sword of Justice. And as the delivering of the Law made Moses tremble, so the Curse of the Law made Christ: I quake and tremble, says Moses; or (as David expresseth it) My self trembleth because of thy Judgments, Psal. 119. 120.

Now in the Third Place follows the effect of both these two, (namely the Imputation of our sins, and the Inflicting of Gods Wrath) which was an ἀδυναμία, an exceeding heaviness upon him. Which Word both Mat. chap. 26. 37. useth, saying, ἠγέσαστο ἀδυναμεῖν, which is translated, He began to be very heavy; and the same in Mark chap. 14. 33. where it in like manner follows that former expression of his being amazed. Now this Word imports first the deep intention of his Mind, so as to be wholly taken and swallowed up with sorrow and amazement, and even to be abstracted from his own Thoughts, and to forget all comfort whatsoever, being wholly intent and thinking upon nothing else but Gods Wrath, with which he was to encounter: So full, so adequate an Object is sin and the wrath due unto it; even broad enough for Christs Understanding to be wholly taken up with it. And therefore he hath the Thoughts of our Salvation as it were struck out of his Mind for a time, all his powers being so occupied about, and possessed with these doleful sights presented, that they forgate their own Functions. Some have put a farther Emphasis upon the Word, as noting out, not onely an abstraction of the Mind, but a Distraction also upon the suddenness of the blow; such as might befall him through simple Infirmary; deriving it from a Privative, [ἀ] and [δύναμις] Populus because Men in Distractions are separated from the rest of the People; which in the sense before given may be safely attributed to him; namely, that the Powers and Faculties of Nature did for a while forget their Functions. Now all this might be without sin; as the Wheels of a Clock may be stopt in their ordinary course, and yet not put out of frame, or disordered. And this strong intention of his upon Wrath, was then, that which God did call for; for Christs business was, to suffer Gods Wrath for sin; and as taking pleasure in any thing, so suffering too depends upon the Intention. Insomuch, that some do therefore judge, that even the Damn'd in Hell cannot sin, because their Thoughts are so intently taken up with wrath, that there is no room for a thought of sin.

Secondly the Word notes out a failing, deficiency, and sinking of Spirit; it is penè exanimari, as happens to Men in Sickneses and Swoundings. So Epaphroditus his Sicknes whereby he was brought near unto death, Phil. 2. 26, 27. is called ἀδυναμία. So that we see, Christs Soul was sick and fainted. Thus Psal. 40. 12, 13. (which Psalms is all of Christ; for it is that Psalms quoted Heb. 10. 5, 6.) where Christ is brought in saying, when he came to offer himself, that innumerable Evils compass'd him about, and his iniquities took hold of him; therefore his heart failed him. Iniquities are there promiscuously put for Sins and Punishments: If sin be meant, Christ our Surety now calls our sins his; and being laid to his charge, they take hold of him. If he had stood in his own Righteousness, he would not have feared, but being invested with, and appearing in our sins, he was afraid as Adam was, and his heart forsook him; not sinfully, out of distrust, but out of simple infirmity of Nature; such a failing, as a Creature though never so holy must needs have at the greatness of Gods Wrath; the Creature being unto Gods Wrath and before him who is everlasting Burnings (as Isaiah speaks Isa. 33. 14.) and a consuming Fire, (as Moses calls him, Dent. 4. 24.) but as the Wax is to the Fire, before which it melts. Which is also Christs own expression concerning himself, Psal. 22. 14. (a Psalms throughout speaking of his Crucifying) My heart (says he) was melted like Wax; noting out that natural Infirmary and Deficiency which was in his Humane Nature as such, now when God approached to him as a consuming Fire: So as it was meerly a Natural failing, not a Moral. And this we must know, that in these his sufferings Christs Humane Nature was left to its infirmities, that he might fully suffer. The Godhead though sustaining him in Union with himself, and in Faith towards God as his Father; yet left him to the Natural ral weaknesse of a Creature, not shewing his power in strengthening him so against his Wrath as that he should not be sensible of it but in supporting him under it. Therefore 2 Cor. 13. 4. it is said, he was Crucified through weaknesse, but raised in Power. For in this work of suffering the Godhead slept, (as the Fathers express it) and left him to Natural Infirmities, (but not to sinfull;) otherwise he had not been Crucified. In respect of which Infirmity unto which he was left, it is said, Luke 22. 43. that an Angel came to strengthen him. And it argued a great inanition or emptying himself, that the Creator of the ends of the Earth, who faints not, and who is the God of Comfort, should borrow comfort of an Angel.

A third and further Degree of this his suffering was that which Luke addeth Luke 22. 44. that he was ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ at strife, or engaged in a Combat, as the Word implies, it coming from ἀγών, certamen. And yet there was no Man by to encounter with; and the good Angel who comforted him, did not wrastle with him. Christ had before wrastled with Principalities and Powers in the Wilderness: But those encounters with Satan fetcht no blood from him, as these here do; this Agony, this wrastling was therefore with his Fathers wrath which now had taken hold on him, and under which he now lay struggling. And this I make a further Degree of his Soules suffering then the former; for the former expressions set forth the trouble of his Spirit, as but at the first onset and encounter, when first he entred into the Lists, and the warning onely was given to this bloody Combat. Therefore when all the former are mentioned, it is still said in every Evangelist, He began to be heavy, and began to be sore amazed, &c. as noting out those to have been the troubles of his Spirit upon the first view, and in the very entrance, and beginning of them: But now he is in an Agony, in a set Battle; it came now to blows, to wounds, to blood: He sweats drops of blood at this Agony, so hot and grievous was it. Neither could fervency of Prayer cause this sweat, for it was this Agony that was the cause of that fervency in prayer: So in Luke it follows, being in an Agony he prayed more earnestly. What was it then that he encountred with? Even that which Job struggled with, Job 6. 4. The Terrours of God (says he) set themselves in array against me. And for the effect of this encounter and Agony, it was answerably greater then the former; it made him sweat drops of Blood. All sweat is from weakness, and an over-pressing of Nature; and so in him it argues that failing, sinking, and wounding of Spirit before-mentioned. Dying Men do uter through faintness to sweat a cold sweat; but never a bloody sweat; but Christs Soul being now heavy unto death and scorcht with Gods Wrath, does sweat Blood. These Dolours fetch not onely watery Tears from his Eyes, but he weeps Blood all over, and not by Drops onely, but clodders, and that in a cold Night: Yea it came through his Garments, and that in such abundance, as it fell upon the Ground, and left the marks of it thereon behind. Adam in Innocency should not have sweat, nor eaten his Meat with labour and pain; but Christ now taste of the Cup which he desired should pass from him, and it casts him into a sweat of Blood.

Well, but yet all this was but the first onset of this great Battle; it was but a skirmish to begin it; in which and after which God gave him a time to breathe, and to go to his Disciples, and then come again to the same Place. These Blows came but at times; not so thick, but that they suffered him to take breath: He had lucida intervalla, some flashes of comfort in this Agony, some Intermissons, some respite for a time; but the main and great Battle is yet to be fought, even upon Mount-Calvary; (and thither let us follow him) where after they had hung his Body up upon a Tree, and divided his Garments before his Face, and had a while said and done their Pleasures, Christ having made his Will, and given Heaven to the believing Thief, and bequeathed the care of his Mother unto John; after all this, on the sudden are the Curtains of the World drawn, and the Sun for three Hours loseth its light. A bloody Battle was now towards, and therefore it was a black day: Christ was to encounter with the utmost power of Darknesse, and therefore the Field he fights it out in, is Darknesse.

Two things were due unto us for our sins ;

1. Pœna Damni ; the loss of Gods Favour, and a separation from God and all good, even to a Drop of Water.

2. Pœna Sensus ; the Curse and Wrath of God. Other things are but either Circumstances or Consequents of suffering these in those who are sinners. We have them both mentioned, Job 13. 24. Wherefore hidest thou thy Face, (says he to God ; There is the Punishment of Loss or Privation) and holdest me for an Enemy? There is the punishment of Sense.

These two are the Substance of the Pains in Hell, and do now both fully meet in Christ.

1. Pœna Damni ; for all comforts fail him : If he desires but a drop of Water, it is denied him ; if a beam of light, the Sun affords none ; his Disciples had all forsaken him ; and whereas heretofore an Angel came to him and comforted him, now not an Angel dares look out of Heaven : His heart had before this melted out of fear, and failed him ; ay but (says David) though my flesh fails, yet God fails me not, Psal. 73. 26 But behold God himself forsakes Christ : So at the end of this Conflict he complains, or rather vehemently affirms it, (as the Hebrew Phrase bears it.) He is said to be forsaken, not only in regard of his being kept in the Hands of his Enemies (as some would have it onely meant.) For,

1. This then would have been uttered by him at the first, when he fell into their hands, and not now at last onely. And,

2. Though Enemies persecute us and have their Wills of us, yet we are said not to be forsaken, as 2 Cor. 4. 9. Persecuted, but not forsaken, that is, though left in the Hands of Men, yet not forsaken by God ; so that forsaken is put in opposition to being left to the Persecutions and power of our Enemies. But Christ is not only said to be left to the power of enemies, but to be forsaken by God himself ; which how it could be, I shall afterwards explain. And this was the Extremity of his emptying, emptying to nothing, as Dan. 9. 26. Messiah shall have nothing ; that is, nothing left to comfort him ; so his cutting off is exprest.

2. Pœna Sensus ; He was made a Curse, and encountred his Fathers Wrath ; which first the Darkness that was then about him may inform us of ; if ever the face of Hell were upon the Earth, it was at that day. All which while we read not of any word that Christ spake, till at last. So that as Darkness covered, so silence huilt all about him ; that so he might without interruption or intermission encounter with his Fathers wrath. And the Place was the Air, the very Kingdom of the Prince of Darkness. Secondly, the Tree he hangs on declares it, which God before had cursed ; and therefore now especially it is, that Christ is made a Curse, as the Apostle intimates, Gal. 3, 13. Where he speaks as if Christ had never been a Curse until now ; and therefore it is that Christ is said to bear our sins in his body (that is, his Humane Nature) on the Tree. And he had no Type of his being Crucified, but the Brasen Serpent, which of all Worms else God had onely Cursed. And therefore now it is, that the Treasures of Wrath are broke up, the Cataracts of Curses set open, and the Sluces pull'd up, so to let in all our sins upon him, God now afflicting him with all his Waves. And when this Eclipse by reason of Gods wrath went off his Spirit, and it received light again, then he cryed out, (as was said) it is night ; which was spoken just before his giving up the ghost, as declaring that the great brunt was over, as was before explained.

There is one thing which yet remains to be done, for the finishing of this Point, viz.

By way of Explication, to shew how it might stand with his being the Son of God to be thus forsaken, and made a Curse.

1. For the Explication ; (which I put first because it will facilitate and make way for the Proofs themselves, both by laying foundations for them, and also by removing prejudices that might hinder the entertainment of them.) There are two things which I mentioned as the Integral Parts of that Punishment due to us for sin, but undergone by Christ.

1. His being forsaken by God.

2. His enduring Gods Wrath : Both which make up this Curse.

book V.

I will speak distinctly and apart to the Explication of either, and first, how to understand his being forsaken of God; which is not to be understood

1. As if the Union of the Godhead with the Humane Nature had been dissolved; but so, as it might still be compatible, and rightly stand with it. For it was not a forsaking in respect of the Essence of the Godhead, but of his Presence, and so in a way of Sense. The Godhead was not separated, though the operation of comfort from the Godhead were sequestred. The Union Hypostatical continued still with his Soul now filled with the Sorrows of Death, as well as it did with his Body when he lay in the Grave. And so, as although his Body was united to the Fountain of Life, yet it might dye in respect of a Natural Life: So his Soul, although the Hypostatical Union continued, might yet want comfort, which is Life.

2. Nor yet is it to be understood, as if all communion had been cut off, in regard of support and the Influence of Grace; but onely in respect of Joy and comfort in, and from Gods Face; even as the Sun hath influence into the Generation of Metals buried under the Earth, whither its Light comes not. Though Grace Naturally followed from that Union, yet Comfort proceeded voluntarily from it, and therefore might be and was now suspended. Deus se communicat (says Scotus) vel qua beatus est, vel qua sanctus: God communicates himself to the Creature, either as he is blessed by comforting it and making it partaker of his Happiness; or as he is holy, by making it Partaker of his Purity. Now these two may be severed; God ceased not now to communicate himself to Christ in Holiness, but onely in Comfort and sense of Happiness.

3. This his deprivation of Comfort was possible; for he was not yet Glorified, (as John says,) Wherefore as his Deity might and did with-hold from his Body that Glory which was due unto it, whilst on Earth, and which shone so in his Transfiguration; by the like reason might the Deity with-hold all sense of comfort from his Soul, during that Hour. Subtraxit Deus Visionem, non Unionem, (as Leo Magnus speaks) Yea,

4. It was necessary that there should be such a suspension of communion of beatifical comfort, and so a sensible want of it: For had God then communicated himself in that fulness of Comfort and Joy that was Christs, due by vertue of that Union Hypostatical, Christ had not felt any Sufferings from Man at all; even as many Martyrs have not, through a Joy unspeakable and glorious. He was therefore to be left to his Infirmary, that he might be sensible; and therefore, to be forsaken in respect of comfort; and if in respect of some degrees of comfort, then why not in respect of all; So that,

5. This support was onely in respect of upholding his Faith: That as one who walketh in darkness, and hath no light, yet trusts in the Name of God, Isa. 50. 10. So Christ forsakes him not, but cries, My God, my God, and to the last cleaves fast unto him. And therefore Gods forsaking him was not such an one as befel Saul, when he also forsook God, No, Christ though he kills him does still trust in him.

Now in the second place to explain how he might endure Gods Wrath, and be made a Curse: Which is the Pæna Sensus and the second thing mentioned. There are many Difficulties in view which seem to argue it impossible; and it is therefore the more hardly to be received; both because there is no other instance of one innocent and beloved, that was made a Curse for another, or that endured Gods wrath: As also because no meer Creature can be made sin by Imputation, but that it must be defiled by it; neither can it bear the wrath of God, but must certainly despair and sink under it. Now all those Objections and Difficulties which Divines bring in against it, I shall take away by these following Conclusions; which also explain the Point.

1. The Soul of a Creature, and so, of Christ as such, may in it self properly and immediately suffer Gods wrath, and not onely mediately by compassion or fellow-feeling from the Body. This is evident; for besides that many have in their Spirits suffered the Wrath of God in this Life, when environed with outward comforts; (as David did) and therefore Solomon calls it the wounding of the Spirit, and so differenceth it from other Infirmities: It is farther evident by this, that in Hell the Soul suffers immediately, without the Body, until the Day of Judgment. And the reason of this is as plain; for God is the Father of Spirits: And as the Fathers of our Bodies can chastise them; so can God the Spirit, Heb. 12. 9.

2. That the wrath of God should be thus endured, it is not of absolute necessity that Men should be in the Place of Hell ere they undergo it; it may be endured here. For the Devils being out of that place and in the air, do still endure it, or at least may; as the Angels when out of Heaven, about their Ministration here below, are said to see Gods Face, Mat. 18. 10. Their Angels (says Christ speaking of little Children) do always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven. They are said to be their Angels, in respect of their being sent for them, and their waiting on them; and whilst they wait on them here below, still their beholding Gods face is not interrupted for they always see Gods Face. If Paul were rapt up into the Third Heaven when alive; then why might not Christ in his Spirit descend into the nethermost Hell; and this, whilst in the Body, and here upon Earth? And if he himself was as in Heaven, when Transfigured; why then not in Hell, when Crucified? For it is Gods Wrath that is Hell, as it is his Favour that is Heaven. Many wicked Men have a kind of Hell here, the earnest of Hell hereafter, (even as the Godly have a taste and earnest of Heaven in this Life) so had Cain, Judas, &c. but they cannot undergo the full Torments of Hell here; and the reason is, because their Souls would then dye, and their Bodies be consumed. The People hearing but the Law given by God, thought they should dye; of which their weakness was the Cause. As Corruption cannot inherit Incorruption, nor bear alive in this Mortal flesh the Joys of Heaven; Who hath seen him and lived? so nor could this Corruption fully endure the Pains of Hell. But Jesus Christs Soul could subsist in his Body, it being backt with the Godhead, even when filled with Gods Wrath, as well as when filled with Glory, as at the Transfiguration. The Creatures like an Altar of straw would have been burnt up by that fire, if their Souls had been to serve for the Sacrifice; whereas this Altar of Christs Body was covered with Brass (as in the Levitical Law) to conserve it from being consumed to Ashes.

3. It is not a thing impossible, or unjust, for an innocent Soul to have the sins of others imputed to it; no more then it is impossible for a sinful Soul to have the Righteousness of another made over to it. Now 2 Cor. 5. 21. it is said, that Christ was made sin, that we might be made Righteousness, and not having my own Righteousness, says Paul, Phil. 3. 9. I say, it is not unjust, and therefore not impossible, in case the Party innocent be content to become a Surety; as Judah was, Gen. 43. 9. who was content if Joseph should detain his Brother Benjamin, to take that sin and evil upon him: Let me then (says he to his Father) be always as a sinner unto thee. And the ground is, because though his own Acts make him not a Sinner, yet his own Covenant and consent do make him a Surety, and so oblige him to the others guiltiness and punishment, and wholly to bear the blame. Thus Prov. 6. 1, 2, 3. it is said of a Surety, that he may be snared with the Words of his Mouth; and so was Christ: It was by his own compact and agreement.

4. A Soul having thus taken the guilt of sin upon it, God may justly vent his Anger upon such a Soul for sin, and express that Anger against that Soul, as against the sinner, though otherwise God loves him. For it is just with God to inflict his wrath and Curse for sin on whomsoever he finds that sin, whether by personal Guilt, or by Imputation. And therefore it is no wonder if he be accursed by God, who hath the guilt of that upon him which God hates, and therefore curseth. If God Cursed the Earth because of Mans sin, which was but his House he dwelt in; then much more must Mans Surety expect wrath and a Curse, who will be so hardy as to take his sin upon him.

5. And further, That Soul though innocent in it self, may be made sensible of the Impressions of that Anger for sin thus imputed. Thotie of a contrary Judgment think, that therefore he could not have been made sensible of Gods Wrath for sin, because he had not the Worm of Conscience. But though it be true, that Christ had not an evil Conscience (which to affirm were Blasphemy) that is, not such a Conscience as that sin could ever trouble him by way of ac-cutting him, (as Sinners Consciences do) so as to make him say, What a Wretch am I, that I should do thus and thus; (which is one of the greatest Torments in Hell;) though this troubled not Christ, yet his Conscience might

1. Apprehend the evil of sin as fully, nay more, then any of ours. And to see sin as sin is Hell, says Luther. And so,

2. He might be made conscious of sin, not directly, or immediately, as sinners are; but by being conscious of his own Covenant to take sin upon him as his own. An accusing could not arise from within; but it might from without as sin was imputed. His Conscience might tell him, that he by compact did undertake the guilt of these sins which he sees to be thus evil; and so he might come to look on them as his by Covenant; and this with a grief and horreur suitable to the evil of them. So Psalms 40. 12. Mine Iniquities have taken hold on me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more then the hairs of my head, therefore my heart faileth me. That Psalms is made of Christ. Now if he confessed sins as his own, he might have Grief and Dolour for them; and so though not an accusing Conscience from within himself, yet a Conscience loaded and charged with them by God from without.

3. His Conscience looking at sin as thus evil, and deserving Gods Wrath, and as made his own by Covenant; he might in fear look upon God as a Judge. And thus afraid and amazed was Christ in the Garden, for then he appeared with our sins on him; and thereupon was afraid, as Adam was; onely Adam out of a guilt that he had done the fact himself; but Christ that knowing what Gods wrath was, he had exposed himself unto it by assuming Adam's sin. And that this may be, appears by this; for if we have Peace of Conscience from Christs Righteousness imputed to us by Faith apprehending it to be thus imputed by a Covenant, and so rejoice in God as ours; then why (in a contrary way) might not Christ have Fears and Terrours, and Impressions of Wrath from the guilt of sin, which he apprehended as made his onely by a Covenant between God and him, yet really and justly charged on him?

6. Neither did the Personal Union of his Soul unto the Godhead put in such a Bar or hindrance to all this, or make such an exception, that though the Soul of a meer Creature might be capable of all this, yet not his, by reason of this Union: For he might be forsaken, and the Union not dissolved, as was before shewn; and he might as well be left to endure Gods Wrath, and anguish in his Spirit from it, that Union continuing; as if he had not been so united. For if the Godhead might and did leave his Body to bodily pains for sin, (which were fruits of the Curse) which yet was thus united to the Godhead as well as his Soul; why might not his Soul be also left to suffer such Torments, as the Souls of Men are capable of? If it be said, that of all things else, the state and relation he stood in towards God by reason of this Union, would not admit this, that Christ should be accursed of God, and dealt withal in wrath by him, seeing he was his beloved Son: And that neither could the Father be thus displeased with him, nor could the Son really apprehend God to be so indeed and in truth, seeing he must needs know himself to be Gods Son, and so beloved of him all the while;

The Resolution is;

1. That God for his part might have both these affections towards him at once, altho' he was his Natural Son; and the reason is evident; for if Christ might bear and sustain two such Relations or Persons, the one as the Son of God and beloved of him, the other as our Surety made sin for us; then might God suitably bear towards him two such contrary affections of Love and Wrath, and accordingly express them. Or thus; As Christ stands with two respects upon him, as a Son, and as a Surety; so did God also in answer to these two, sustain two Relations towards him; of a Father towards him as a Son, and of a Judge towards him as a Surety. And these two might well stand together; as in another's Debt; though he entirely loves him as a Son, yet he must and ought to condemn him in the Suit, and exact the payment of the Debt, or inflict some other punishment on him, (as the matter he is Surety for requires) as he is a Judge; and he is to act both these parts, as the several respects in the things things themselves require: Justice in this case as well requiring that he should punish him, as well as Nature that he should love him. We may see this exemplified in an Instance fetcht from God himself and his carriage towards us his adopted Sons and Children, whom he loves with the same love, though not in the same degree that he loves his Natural Son, John 17. 23. God is upon several respects both an Enemy and a Friend unto us at once; we are at once both hated and beloved; even whilst we are in the state of Nature. Gods Elect if considered as invested with sin, and in the state of Unregeneracy, upon which God hath pronounced a Curse, they are under wrath, and Children of Wrath, and so pronounced accursed: And yet at that time their Persons as they are his chosen ones from everlasting, are beloved, and therefore called his People, and his Sheep: So were the Jews, Rom. 11. 28. As concerning the Gospel, they are Enemies for your sakes; but as touching Election, they are beloved for their Fathers sake. They are at once Children of Wrath as well as others, Eph. 2. 3. and Sons of Peace, Luke 10. 6. and this when uncalled. Now thus it may be towards his Natural Son, if he over and above takes such a relation on him, of being a Surety for sinners; onely with this difference, that Gods Love to him is natural, because he is his Natural Son, and the relation Natural; and his Anger but accidental and adventitious, and taken up by him, (yet justly) because this Relation of Christ his being a Surety is answerably, but assumed and taken up by him: Yet they are real both on the one side and on the other: And therefore, Zach. 13. 7. where God is said to smite the Shepherd, (namely Christ) it is made to be a forced Act as it were, and such as he is said to stir up himself to do by respects of Justice, and therefore he calls upon his Sword, Awake O Sword against the Man that is my Fellow. God considers he is his Son, and Natural Son, (his Fellow), and so he naturally loves him, and cannot find in his heart to strike him; yet Justice must be done, seeing he stands as a Surety for sinners; and so he draws his Sword; notwithstanding as being put upon it by Arguments, Reasons, and Considerations moving him to it; and therefore he is said to awaken it.

In a word; it is one thing to be an Enemy, and an other to carry ones self as an Enemy: So Job 19. 20. saies Job to God, Why countest thou me thine Enemy; that is, why dealest thou with me as if I were so, when as I am thy Child. Thus did God with Christ.

And in the second Place. Christ for his part might have answerable Apprehensions and Impressions on his Soul: notwithstanding he knew himself beloved: For he might apprehend (according as the Truth was) that himself stood at the present under an adventitious Relation of a Surety to bear Gods Wrath for sin, notwithstanding that withal he knew he was Gods Natural Son, and so beloved. He might look upon himself as a Son, and a Son performing an Obedience to his Father even in suffering his Wrath, and never pleasing him more then now, and in that respect most beloved of him; and yet withal, as a Surety for Sinners, and so punished; and in that respect he might apprehend God for the present angry, and full of Wrath against him, as being made sin and so a Curse for us; yet so, as to the end that he might be well pleased with sinners in him. And both these differing Apprehensions of his did Christ accordingly express in that one Sentence, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? He speaks it as apprehending himself a Son still, and United to God, and beloved of him; and yet forsaken by him, and as a Surety accursed. And to this end, there were two Principles in him that let in these so differing Apprehensions or Impressions; Faith, and present Sence. By Faith he knew himself a Son; therefore Psalms 22. when on the Cross, his trusting upon God is mentioned. And Heb. 12. 2. it is said, that he endured the Cross for the Joy that was set before him; namely by Faith; and therefore we from his Example are there exhorted unto Faith; (which is the Apostles Scope and Argument) seeing he thus believed and trusted, (who as it follows there) is the Author and finisher of our Faith.

But there was another Principle in him, and that was present Sence of the impressions of Gods anger; his Mind by Sight or Vision seeing nothing else, and his Will by the impressions on it feeling nothing else. Both which Principles, as they are in us, so they might be, and were in him, we being in Faith and Sufferings to be conformed to him, and he being in all things tempted like as we are.

And therefore Eighthly. All this Curse and Wrath did not, nor could make him miserable, although uncomfortable; both because he undertook it and underwent it voluntarily; (and as the greatest good cannot make a Man happy against his Will, so nor the greatest evil with ones Will can make a Man miserable, there being an end obtained to sweeten that Estate) and also because he knew he should eluctate out of it, and overcome it in a few hours, (as he did, when he cryed, It is finisht.)

And so Ninthly. This Curse was endured by him, without sinning or despair: For the Godhead both helpt and preserved him; as his Body from Corruption in the Grave, so his Soul from sinning whilst under Wrath. And though God left him to the Infirmities of a passible Nature, to be sensible of all Impressions to the full; yet he left him not to any Infirmities of sinning, or weakness of Unbelief, the ordinary consequents of such sufferings in others. Again, Despair ariseth not from the present extremity, but the apprehension of the Eternity of those sufferings, and a certain fore-knowledge that they shall never have end. Whereas Christ knew he should overcome, and that it was impossible that he should be held of them.

Tenthly and Lastly. This therefore was for the substance of the suffering itself, the same that we in Hell should have undergone: Onely such Circumstances were wanting and cut off in his undergoing it, as were either not necessary Ingredients to the discharge of our Debt, or but accidental Consequents; As,

1. He descended not, or went not down to the Place of the Damned, to endure Gods Wrath there. For seeing that the Place of Payment is no ingredient into the discharge of the Debt, and but a meer Circumstance; and that he could endure it on Earth as fully as in Hell it self, and that (through the supportment of the Godhead) without dying; (which no Creature could) therefore though this Circumstance were wanting, it detracts not any thing from the fulness of the substance of that Payment which was due from us; and therefore this may be accounted the same with that.

2. He endured it without Dying the second Death, otherwise then in the Sense fore-mentioned: But this hinders it not from being the same in substance that we should have endured; and so it may stand for it. For Dying, or quite sinking under this Curse is but the Consequence of undergoing the Wrath of God, in those that are meer Creatures, who cannot bear it, and live; and so is not any part of the Substance of the punishment it self simply in it self considered. This ariseth onely from the Creatures weakness; and no more indeed does Despair; it being no part of the Punishment, but the Consequent of it, through the Creatures Infirmity and sinfulness. As now suppose two Men in a like and equal Distemper and heat of a Burning-Feavor; the one through the weakness of his Brain is light-headed, and raveth, and in the end dieth; but the other having more Natural strength of Body overcomes the Distemper and survives, having through the strength and cool temper of his Brain not once lost the right use of his Sences all that while: Yet still it may be said, that their Distempers were the same, and a like intense for degrees of heat, though the Consequents of each were contrary, according to the differing Capacities and Dispositions of the Subjects. Or take two Guns charged with the like measure of Powder and Shot; the one breaks and flies in pieces when fire is given to it, when the other holds, as being of more firm and solid Mettal, or better tempered, or having all its parts more compactly cast according to Art: When yet the charge of each is for quantity and force the same. Thus the charging of sin, and of the Wrath of God upon Men in Hell causeth their Souls to despair, and dye the second Death, through their unability to bear them; when as the same sins, and the same wrath, though charged home on Christ, yet prevail not to kill his Soul; but through his strength and support from the Godhead his Spirit remains whole under them. Despair and Dying is but from being overcome, which which his Soul was not : but as a great Fire overcomes a smaller quantity of Water cast upon it ; so did the worth of his Person and sufferings in the end overcome the guilt of our sins, which falls short of the merit of his satisfaction ; and therefore this consequent of Despair and Death followed not upon it : Which therefore being an effect of suffering the pains of Hell, is not a part of the substance of them.

3. In like manner, for the same reason, though he suffered them not eternally, yet his suffering was the same, and equivalent to what we should have undergone ;

For first, Eternity is but a Circumstance of Time, as Hell is of Place : And not simply Eternity, but extremity of sufferings was the punishment due. The lying ever in Prison is no part of the Debtors punishment simply considered ; for he is to lye there but till he hath paid the utmost farthing (as Christ speaks ; ) which because he can never do, therefore he is never releast. But Christ could undergo in a few hours all the Wrath due unto sin, and so swallow up Death and Hell in Victory, 1 Cor. 15. 24. That Potion or Measure of Wrath which we by reason of our narrowness could have received in but by drops, and so it would ever have been raining down ; that his Soul might be and was so enlarged, as to receive in at once, even the whole Vials and Cataracts of it. That Cup which is so full of Mixture, that we are a drinking of it down, unto Eternity, that can he take off unto the bottom, in a few hours. Yea and by reason of the incapacity of the Damned in Hell to take in the full Measure of Gods Wrath due to them for their sins, therefore their Punishment though it be eternal, yet never satisfies, because they can never take in all ; as Christ could and did ; and so theirs is truly less then what Christ underwent. And therefore Christs Punishment ought not in Justice to be eternal, as theirs is, because he could take it all in a small space, and more fully satisfy Gods Wrath in a few hours, then they could unto all Eternity. And this may well be one meaning of those Words. Acts 2. 24. that it was impossible he should be held by the pains of Death ; not onely in respect of his Power, able to prevail against the power of Gods Wrath and Anger ; But impossible in respect of Justice, that God should any longer continue angry : Seeing that as Gods Love had such a full vent and sway in Christ, so also had revenging Justice its full process against sin in him, and wreakt its utmost, sucking from him so much blood both of his Body and Soul, as being full, it fell off of it self, as fully satisfied.

CHAP. XIV.

Uses of Christs being made Sin, and a Curse for us. We see herein God the Fathers Love, and his own. We should not regret to suffer any thing for Christ. Let us obey and worship Christ in Soul and Spirit. The troubled in Soul should be comforted. We see the bairousness of Sin by the greatness of Christs Sufferings, and the Misery of being without an Interest in Christ. We should charge our Sins upon our selves for Humiliation. We should mourn for them, and hate them.

Use I. SEE the Love of Christ, who laid not his Bodily Life down onely, but his Soul. The Redemption of the Soul is precious, says the Psalmist, Psalm 43. 8. Precious indeed when it cost not his precious Blood only, but his precious Soul also. Not with corruptible things, Gold and Silver, but with the precious Blood of Christ were we redeem'd. As the Body is more worth then Rayment or Estate, so the Soul then the Body. Christ gave not his Estate only, nor his Body only, but his Soul.

Use II. See the love of God who gave not his Son up onely to the hands of Men to be Executioners of his body, but himself laid on upon his Soul; and that because Justice called for the soul, the very soul, ere it would be satisfied. Which no Creature being able to reach, rather then we should not be redeemed, he will be the Executioner himself; ties him to the Cross and with his own hands whips him, because no Creature could strike stroaks hard enough. A tender Mother hath not the heart to whip her Child for its own fault; God bruifeth Christs soul himself for others; Zeck. 13. 7. Awake my Sword against the Man Gods Fellow; Yea Isa. 53. 10. It delighted the Lord to bruise him. So much was his heart in our salvation, that this (otherwise the most abhorred Act that ever was done) was sweetened to him by its end, our salvation, and made a matter of delight, not simply, but in relation to the end.

Use III. Let us not think much to suffer any thing in our body for Christ, he hath done more for us, he hath suffered in his Soul. All that Men can do is but to kill the Body, they cannot reach the soul, Mat. 10. 28. And therefore all that we can fear from them is but outward in comparison of what Christ endured, it is but whipping through the Cloths all that is done to the body. Mat. 20. 22. Can ye drink of the Cup he drank of, and be baptized with the Baptism he was baptized with? Rom. 8. 29. He exhorts us to chearful suffering, because therein we are conformed to Christs image, who yet was in suffering the first born among many brethren, and so had a larger portion in them than ever any had.

Use IV. Did the chief of Christs sufferings lie in his soul? Let the chief of our obedience be placed in our souls and in soul-worship. God said to Christ, My Son give me thy Soul, and Christ says to us, My Sons give me your Hearts. Obedience in the inward Man is the soul of Obedience. Sanctify the Lord in your Hearts, 1 Pet. 3. 15. there especially is God enobled. God seeks for such to worship him as worship him in spirit. Bodily Exercise profiteth little, but Godliness, &c. 1 Tim. 4. 8. There Godliness is opposed to Bodily Exercise and and therefore Godliness is put for the service of the inner Man, which is onely godliness, in which Rom. 7. the Apostle says he served the Lord, which he calls serving him (ver. 4. of that Chapter) in the newness of the Spirit. The Papists whose worship is all bodily, they are all for Christs bodily sufferings, and deny this of his Soul. But let us place the main of his Obedience in the suffering of his Soul, and so seeing his Love, give up our souls to him chiefly to obey him with.

Use V. Comfort to those that are distressed in soul.

1. You are herein conformed so much the more to Christ.
2. He knows the heart of a sinner distressed, and so is moved to pity more feelingly. He became a merciful High Priest in that he was tempted in all things as we, sin onely excepted. Pity is more kindly when it is from experience of the like extremity.
3. In that he suffered in his soul he thereby purchased comfort for thy soul. As in other things we make use of Christs sufferings to relieve us against the particulars we are distressed in, so also let usin this. When we are poor we may consider Christ was poor that we might be made rich; when we suffer from Men, we may have recourse to this that by his stripes we are healed : So when in soul, that he was buffeted in Spirit to free us ; his soul was heavy unto death that we might be comforted ; God spake to him in wrath that he might speak peace to us. Speaking comfort in Scripture Phrase is called speaking to the Heart.

Use VI. When we think of Christ crucified, let us especially think of the sufferings of his soul, so much forgotten and denied. To this end he ordained the Cup in the Sacrament ; as the Bread to represent to our Faith the body of Christ, so the Wine the pouring forth of his Soul, which is called the blood of the New Testament. That as the blood of the Old was the blood of Bulls and Goats, in which blood lies the life as the Scripture speaks, the Souls of Beasts being but the Spirits of the four Elements which run in the blood, so that thing which that Type signified, was the soul poured out, there being nothing nearer to represent the soul more lively than the blood, with which therefore all was sprinkled.

Use VII. See the heinousness of sin by this that Christ was made a Curse ; as he said if thou wouldst see what sin is, go to Mount-Calvary. 'Tis true that the utmost real evil of the thing it self which we call sin, consists in this, that it is the transgression of the Command of the great God : But the utmost representation, to make that evil known to us, is the Cross and the Curse of the Son of God blessed for ever. We seldom conceive of the greatness of injuries as they are in themselves committed, so we are apt to slight them, but we do measure them best by the anger and the wrath they beget in the Party wronged, (if he be not partial in his own Cause) and by the furious expressions of his wrath returned back again upon the Offence : So whilst we view sin in its direct and proper notion, and that it is an injury against the great God, so we should never have seen the full vileness of it ; for as God is in himself invisible so is the evil of sin ; and as Christ is the liveliest Image of the Invisible God, so are his debasement and his sufferings the truest glass to behold the ugliness of sin in, and the utmost representation to make us sensible of it. The throwing down the Angels out of Heaven, the cursing the Earth and all Adams Posterity for Adams sin, the drowning the old World, and overturning Sodom, and the Fire unquenchable which burns to the botom of Hell ; these were such Considerations as may make us stand amazed, and cry out. Oh what is sin that thou dost so remember it, or the sinfulness of it that thou dost punish it in the destruction of the best Creatures thy hands have made ? But all these Tragedies are but as lighter skirmishes and but shews of Justice and wrath in comparison of the Death and sufferings of his Son : For how greatly incensed must that anger be by sin, which so infinite, so ancient love, to such a Son could not quench nor yet alay ! How deep in guilt must that fault be, for which Justice is bold to exact no less satisfaction, then the blood of God! For what crimes are Kings at any time put to death? Here God blessed for ever is made a Curse, the light and life of the World and fountain of life is killed, the Lord of glory debased, the fulness of the Godhead emptied, emptied to nothing; He who is one with God in Essence, in title to glory, is separated and accursed from him and by him, and laid as low as Hell; and all this because he was made sin.

Use VIII. Think what a miserable and fearful condition it must needs be to be found out of Christ and in your sins. And be assured of this that either Christ or you must bear the full weight both of your sins and the Curse due to them. That Christ was made a Curse may be both an evidence of the certainty of the Curse and Wrath to come, and of the fearfulness of it. Of the certainty, for if from former examples of Gods Vengeance upon other sinners like themselves, Peter argueth the assured inevitable destruction of ungodly Men, that if he spared not the Angels nor the old World, &c. 2 Pet. 5, 6. he would therefore certainly not spare them. If further, from the chastisements brought upon his own dear Children, God himself bids Jeremy tell the Nations that they should certainly drink, Jer. 25. 28. For Lo, I bring evil upon the City that is called by my Name, and should ye be unpunished? Much more is it argued from this, that he brought all this evil and these Curses on his Son, if God spared not the natural Branch, nay the Root of Branches, which bears all his Olive Branches, how will he spare those that shall be found Wild-Olives, growing on their own stock, bearing all their Wild-Olives and their sins themselves? If he not onely upon whom Gods Name is called, but whose Name is in him, did and must drink of the Cup, shall not the wicked of the Earth drink the dregs of it? And as it may argue the certainty of it, so the fearfulness also. It was an use Christ made of it when he was a leading to be Crucified, if they do this to the green Tree, what will they do to the dry? If he who was a green Tree and was by reason of his Sap and fulness of Grace, no Fuel for the Fire, had no matter in himself for God to be angry with, yet it burnt so fiercely on him, standing but in the shade and within the imputation of our sins, if the Curse withered him that he looked like a Tree growing on the dry ground, Oh how will it rage upon dry Trees, fitted for Hell, upon Fir-trees, that are full of and bring forth Gum and Rosin, fit fuel for that Fire! And if the whole Curse did light on him and the respect to and dignity of his Person abated nothing of it, God spared him not; surely a sinner out of Christ, shall be abated nothing neither, but pay the utmost farthing. See in Gods dealing with his Son the most vive Type and Resemblance of the Curse to be executed upon all sinful Unbelievers out of him. Cursed he is throughout his whole life, as Christ also was made a Curse in his. The Curse seized on him when he was made flesh, and began to break out upon him in the spots of humane Infirmities, making him all over like sinful flesh; which Curse secretly followed him and increased upon him in the fruits of it, and left him not till it had brought him to the accursed death, when it appeared to all the World, that he was made a Curse indeed when he hanged upon a Tree. Why and cursed wert thou in thy Conception, and cursed was the Womb that bare thee; and a thread of Curses are drawn thorough the Web of thy frail life. And though a sinner may bless himself in Honours, Riches, Pleasures, yet all these have a Curse in them unto him: Cursed is he when he eats, cursed when he lies down and rests, and cursed when he awakes again; and this Curse leaves him not till it brings him to his end, and after that to Judgment, when it appears he is cursed indeed how ever accounted happy in his life. And learn to see and tremble, and to avoid it, how the Curse will then seize on thee by what was done to Christ, if it prove not then that he was made a curse for thee. Then was his day of Judgment and ours in him, Isa. 53. 8. And therefore in that days passages with him, we may raise our hearts up to see what shall be then; what was done to the Green-tree then shall be accomplished in a more transcendent manner upon the dry. When they come to lie upon their Death-beds, then do their sins and Gods wrath come in upon them, as upon him in the garden; they see them written in the Curtains, and find their souls invironed about with with Curses, besieged and see no way out; and then happily their Friends stand sleeping or weeping by, but alas they cannot help them, or save them from that Hour, as his Disciples could not; miserable Comforters thou wilt find them all. And if a Minister, yea an Angel from Heaven should come to comfort them oft times he cannot. And then comes thy Judas, thy bosom sin, with whom thou hast eaten so many sweet bits, and communed together; and that comes into thy Conscience with a troop of Curses, and threatenings, and Devils after it. And when thy Soul sits upon thy lips and is departing, an armed Band of Hell seizeth upon it, binds thee hand and foot to be cast into utter darkness; leads thee before the Throne of Gods more private and particular Judgment, as Christ was over night before the High Priest; where when thou comest thou wilt be examined of all thy ways and works, and, as that Man in the Gospel that wanted the wedding garment, wilt remain speechless, not able to answer one of a thousand, not have a word to say; Even Christ stood speechless, the guilt of our sins stopping then his mouth. And after sentence then pronounced, that thou art worthy of death, thou wilt be kept in those chambers of death, and reserved in chains of darkness, as Christ was bound in the High Priests Hall all night and there mockt, and whipt, and beaten with many stripes, as the Gospel hath it. And in the morning of the Resurrection, when the dawning of the day of Judgment shall appear, then they shall be more publickly brought forth before the throne of Christ appointed to judge both the quick and dead, a time when all the World great and small shall be assembled to thy arraignment and execution, as all the Jews were then at the feast; when God will shame thee before this Sun, and rip up all the hidden things of darkness: As Christ was put to open shame so shalt thou, and confusion of face shall cover thee, and thou shalt become a loathing and an hissing to all flesh; And though thou hast thy soul filled full of evils, yet God and the Saints shall but mock when this thy fear cometh, and laugh at thy destruction, Pro. 1. as they did Christ, Thou that destroyest the Temple, &c. and savest others; so will God say, I have called and ye refused, ye set at nought all my counsel, Prov. 1. 24, 25, 26. and now let your Gods deliver you if they would have you. And this confusion will most befall those, who profess themselves the Sons of God and were not, that saved others and now are damned themselves; with which they mocked Christ, he said he was the Son of God, and that he trusted in him, and he saved others, now let him save himself. And then after sentence is pronounced, Go ye Cursed, hurried shall they be, ere Christ riseth off the Bench, by Angels, Mat. 25. to Hell, the place of execution, where in utter darkness (as Christ also was crucified in a great darkness that was over the Land) separated and accursed from God for ever, they shall be punished from his presence, 2 Thess. 1. 9. with everlasting destruction; where a drop of Water shall be denied them, as it was to Christ, left naked and destitute of all comforts, stript as Christ also was, and with the Scrowl of their Rebellions pinned over their heads for Men and Angels to read, as Christs was in all Languages.

A second sort of Uses are to Men humbled for sin and seeking after Faith, to guide and direct poor souls to the right way of obtaining and seeking justification by Faith.

Use IX. If Jesus Christ was thus made sin and a Curse, the one charged upon him, the other inflicted, then surely all those Christ will save, he will have them also know and apprehend what their sins are and the curse due to them, though not by way of satisfaction to God, yet by way of Humiliation to them. If your sins were charged upon Christ who knew no sin, there is reason they should be charged upon your Consciences. If your sins brought Christ upon his knees (as they did in the Garden) before God as an angry Judge; they may well bring you upon your knees also. They were yours before they were his, and therefore ere you by Faith can come to lay your sins upon Christ and discharge your selves of them; you must know the burthen of them your selves: His was but an assumed guilt, yours is proper and inherent. If your sins made Christs Soul heavy unto death, they must make your soul heavy also ere ever Christ will ease you. Christ did so ordain to save you as that you should be conformable to him, and dye with him if ever you rise again with him. Now as Christ dyed and rose again so must you; and as we are said to rise again with him through faith, Coll. 2. 12. so to dye with him through Humiliation.

Use X. To this end lay all your sins to your own charge; they were laid to his charge to satisfy Gods Justice, and thou must lay them to thine own charge to humble thy soul and to make thee the more thankful. Christs death keeps many off from troubling themselves with their sins at all; they put off thinking of their sins with this, that God is merciful and Christ hath dyed; but that they were laid to his charge hinders not that thou art to charge thy self with them; onely thou art to do it to a differing end. Jesus Christ had them laid to his charge to satisfy for them, take heed of taking them so upon thy self, they will break thy back: But take them on thee to humble thee; which thou art therefore to do, because they were all thine ere his; as Christ said to his Father, of his Elect, Father, thine they were and thou gavest them me, John 17. So on the contrary mayest thou say to Christ of thy sins, Lord, mine they were and thou didst take them on me. Thus Isaiah teacheth us to do, Isa. 53. 6. He like sheep have gone astray, and God laid on him the Iniquities of us all: And therefore as David humbled himself, Lord, it is I and my Fathers House, what have these sheep done? so say, Lord, it is I that have sinned against thee, these sins are all done by me, what hath this Lamb, holy, innocent, without spot, done? And withal think what an infinite misery it will be, to be found in thy sins, if all these sins should be thine own and not to be taken off by Christ for thee, if it should fall out that thou must dye in thy sins, (as Christ threatened the Pharisees) that thou shouldst not be eased of the burthen of one sin by the death of Jesus Christ. If they made his soul so heavy when they were made his but by imputation, what will they do to thee, whose they are by inherent, by proper and immediate guilt? If the shadow of them withered him so, what will the true guilt of them in thee? Thou hast guilt of Conscience in thee of them, a Conscience of sins, which he had not, and yet they made his soul heavy, what will they do thine? Thou wilt have Despair in Hell to make thy torment greater, because of that eternity of thy torment, whereas he had faith to uphold him to endure the Cross by reason of the Joy set before him, which he knew he should receive when the brunt was over. If Christs soul was so perplexed that he said, What shall I say, John 12. how perplexed will thy soul be not knowing what to do, but wishing the Rocks to fall upon thee to cover thee?

Use XI. If God charged all our particular sins upon Christ, then go and humble thy self for thy particular sins. If God gave Christ a bill of them, do thou make bills and Catalogues of them. As Christ knew what he paid for, so he will have thee know what he pardoneth and what was paid for. This will make thee love Christ the more, as Mary did, who loved much because much was forgiven her, and it will make thee see thy self more beholden to Christ for suffering more for thee than another. Thus the through knowledge of Paul's sin wrought the more love and thankfulness in him unto Jesus Christ, 1 Tim. 1. that though Christ came into the World to save sinners, yet for me the chief of sinners. And though there are many sins which thou daily discoverest, which thou sawest not at first, ye be not discouraged, for secret sins though not confessed may be pardoned, for Jesus Christ bare all sins, and those that are not known to thee to humble thee, were yet known to Christ to pardon them to thee. And the confessing particular sins over Christ thus, will in the end bring assurance of the pardon of particulars, and be a means to strike off the guilt of particulars, for often when we think such and such sins are pardoned, we yet stick at some one, or such or such, and cannot think them pardoned: Therefore confess particulars, and bring them to God and say concerning such a sin, was not this sin, Lord, reckoned amongst the rest unto Christ? This foul sin that stares me in the face, was not this amongst the rest? Then, Lord, through his bearing of it take it off from me. And as you are to apply Christ crucified for the cruci-ying particular lusts, so for the washing off of your Consciences the guilt of particular sins. Do therefore as Men that would be sure to have a Writing croise dan blotted that the Debt-book may not be read, they not onely give general cross lines over all the whole leafe at one stroake, but they will (to make all sure) go over every line with their Pens, and cross every one in particular out; and so do thou, not apply Christs death in general, but apply it to every particular sin. And especially against a Sacrament, then make Catalogues of your sins, for then Christ is crucified afresh afore your eyes: And look what was done by God to Christ when he was crucified on the Cross for the satisfaction of his Justice, that you are to do when you come to view and by faith to receive Christ crucified for the satisfaction of your Consciences; for the application of Christ crucified is but the acting over by faith what was done by God. Especially such sins as the guilt whereof doth in a more special manner trouble you, those bring catalogues of at every Communion; that although the lines of Christs blood have been drawn over them with the rest already, yet get more crosses of his blood over them, and use his blood to cross out particulars; And as you do with Aqua fortis when you would eat out letters written in a book, if any letters remain more fresh then their fellows, remaining not so perfectly eaten out, you go over them anew; so do with Christs blood in your consciences to such sins the guilt whereof is most conspicuous.

Use XII. Take heed of resting in Duties; Christs active obedience would not have saved you, if he had not also been made a curse; and therefore do you think your Dunghil performances, as Paul calls it, will save you? You thereby dishonour Christ as much as the Jews that crucified him, you bid him come off the cross, he need not hang there for you, you can pray it out, and you can fast sin out your selves.

Use XIII. Rest on Christ alone especially as crucified. Paul desired to know Christ and him crucified especially: As they preacht so are we to believe. It is the Serpent as lifted up that is the object of Faith, so Christ presented in the Sacrament, not simply the person of Christ, but Christ as crucified and as broken for our sins: Otherwise, Christ considered in the excellency of his Person so he might be an object for the Faith of Angels, who would have been glad of such an Husband; but Christ as crucified so he is fitted for sinners, and he becomes not an object of Love for the excellency of his Person, but of Faith and confidence as a means and ordinance for the salvation of sinners; and though we are to look on him as glorified yet withal as once crucified: So that Faith is to look at once with one eye to Heaven, to Christ there as risen, ascended, interceding, so to look down with another eye to that Christ as once crucified and hanging on the cross, as made sin and a curse.

Use XIV. Labour for assurance, so see by Faith your selves one with Christ in all this he did for you, to be able to view your selves in him when he dyed, that as by Faith you believe you were in Adam when he was in the Garden, and ate the forbidden fruit, so that you were in Christ when he fulfilled the Law and hung on the cross: Therefore Rom. 8. 4. the Law is said to be fulfilled in us; though not by us, yet in us, because we were in Christ when he fulfilled it, and so it is as if we had done it. Endeavour therefore to apprehend that Christ had not onely an eye to thee and thy person and thy sins when he hung on the cross, but that he then stood in thy stead and as thy Proxie. This is that which will bring in the comfort: Though casting a Mans self upon Christ for salvation through his death is that Faith that saves, which is called coming to Christ, yet more is required; Rom. 6. Reckon your selves dead with Christ; that is, to have dyed when he dyed. Faith will help a Man to put himself into Christ hanging on the Cross, and that is to reckon a Mans self as then dying with him, and then you may see all your sins done away, purged away then, Heb. 1. and your selves perfected for ever, Heb. 10. that your sins shall arise no more. And to see this, all the World cannot help you, it must be the Spirit that knew Christs Mind then: Onely in the mean time time you may go blindfold as it were, and cast Anchor in the dark, and refer the calling of thy state to what Christ did then for thee, that if he bare not thy sins then, thou canst not be saved; desiring God (blindfold) to pardon thee by vertue of what Christ did then, say, Lord, I refer myself to thy heart from everlasting, and to Christs heart when he hung upon the Cross, and let that cast my condition. And be bold to plead Christs death blindfold, by way of questioning with God (though by absolute challenging as yet thou canst not) say, Lord, did not Christ bear these very sins that affright me so, on the Cross? did not he condemn them there and cast them in their suit? why do they accuse me now? Say, Lord didst thou not give my Name to Christ in that Bill among the rest? was not I written in his heart and thine? didst thou not eye my Person and sins in his soul as satisfied for them by him? If so Lord, pardon them, lift the guilt off from me by vertue of his bearing them. It is lawful to ask such questions. 1 Pet. 3. 21. it is called Ἐπιπέμνη, the interrogating the Challenge made of Gods Favour by a good conscience justified by Christs blood and Resurrection. So Hab. 2. 4. the Church doth, and God often whilst a Man is pleading and questioning thus, cannot deny it but affirms it to a Mans spirit. Carnal phansy hath a trick to make suppositions, and to put a man by way of supposition into such or such a condition, as suppose I were rich, or were a King, what would I do then? Now let faith make sometimes such suppositions, it is good and warrantable to inure our thoughts to such suppositions till assurance comes. Make the supposition to thy heart that all this that Christ did he did for thee, upon such a supposition see how far thy heart would work, and thy affections stir. In suppositions of carnal fanfy, you shall find corrupt affections stir, and your heart run out far in them; and in these suppositions of Faith you shall find holy affections stir and discover themselves; and as corrupt desires are nourisht and increased by the other, so a vertue comes with these to cause a Man to love Christ, to hate sin, to mourn for it; that lifts off secretly the guilt of it, easeth the burthen, maketh the pinch of it less.

A third sort of Uses is to them that have got assurance, then to make use of Christs crucifying and his being made a curse.

Use XV. To cause you to mourn and bleed for sin. His heart was melted through heaviness, and so will yours be to sorrow. His sorrow was to death, yours will be to life. As there is a sorrow to God-ward, 2 Cor. 7. so to Christ-ward; as that God is offended with sin, so that Christ was crucified by thy sin: Not to be sorry that it was done so as to wish it undone, but that thy sin should be against him that did so much for thee unknown to thee. I do not say you are to mourn for the crucifying of Christ as your sin, as some in their Rhetorick have endeavoured to perswade Men that they were as the Jews, so indeed the Jews when they are called shall mourn; but this should make thee mourn, that God should crucify his Son for these sins of thine, and Christ should have such love in him to do it; and so view every sin as dyed with Christs blood. You cannot say I crucified Christ by my sins, and in that relation mourn, for that was Gods Act and his own; but you may say he was crucified for my sins, and so mourn, both as considering sin as an offence against one that loved you so, and also as considering your very sins as that which was as the weapons, as the Instrument wherewith God wounded him. And so you may go over all your sins, and say they fetch those groans from him and those bitter crys, and shall his heart be made sorrowful by them; and shall not mine be for them? Neither is it that you are to mourn for him with a sorrow of compassion, which is all that popish Postillers would bring their Hearers unto, onely such sorrow as a man would have stirred up in him at a pitiful story of an innocent man, or a man of an Heroical Spirit thus used; this sorrow Christ now regards not, as he did not much then when he went to be crucified, for said he to them that followed him, Weep not for me but for your selves, he regarded not such Womanish Tears: But to think of thy unkindness to him in sinning who endured so much so willingly to expiate these sins; this is it that is to make the heart to gush. Again, we may mourn for our sins as the crucifiers of Christ, but not as if it were an aggravation of our our sins that they crucified Christ, but onely of his Love that would be crucified for them and by them; And so we say it is not the Executioner kills the Man, nor the Judge properly that gives the sentence and delivers him up, but the Fact laid to his charge, that is it may be said to have been his death; and so may our sins in all this be considered as the cause of all, Peccatum solum homicidium est. So we may say the swiftness of our feet to do evil nayled his feet, the works of our hands drave the Nails into his, for he was delivered up for our sins; Yea and of the sorrows of his soul, they were the more immediate Instruments and executioners, for they were particularly represented to him, and ran every one with their bodkins and pierced him through; he was beset, as being encompassed about with them, and pierced through and through by every of them, there is not a sin of them but had a stab, and his soul had a stab for it; and in that relation thou maiest mourn over thy sin and his soul and body, and mayst go forth and view every part upon the cross, his hands nailed, his side pierced, his back whipt, and look through his side into his heart and see it in agonies and horreur, and all for these sins of mine, yea and caused by these sins, which will make thy heart sweat blood as his body did if thou hast any love to him. But above all thou art to consider his love in all, that is it which above all is to work in this mourning upon the view of his being crucified. His love was stronger than death, death could not keep him in the Grave, but his love kept him on the cross for thee when he was provoked to come down. His pains were great but his love was more; thy sin and his love in all this to endure all this for thy sin, this is it must move thee. I will lay this to you, if any of you believers that have love in your hearts to Christ had been alive then, and had known from Christ afore that all his sufferings to come had been for your sins and to save you for them, and your heart had followed him to the cross full of such apprehensions, and you as John and his Mother had stood by and viewed all that really past then, and had still had this thought; All this is for me, out of love to me and my sins, I like a sheep have gone astray and God now laies on him all my sins; and then had gone over in your thoughts all your sins, how would your heart have been broken and melted! Now by Faith you may view him in this Narration, and the Sacraments as really as if you had been by, so Paul says, Gal. 3. 1, 2. Therefore get your hearts to melt and break over this Crucifix, and put your sins and his love into one cup and drink them off, and see how this potion will work. To bring the Murderer to a dead Man makes the dead Man bleed afresh, but bring thy sins to Christ and it will make thy heart to bleed afresh.

Use XVI. Work your hearts to a hatred of sin upon these Considerations also. If a Man had killed your Friend or Father or Mother, how would you hate him! you would not endure the sight of him, but follow the Law upon him (as in the old Law they did if they fled not to the City of Refuge) send out the Avenger of blood with an Hue and Cry after thy sin; bring it afore Gods Judgment Seat, arraign it, accuse it, spit on it, condemn it and thy self for it, have it to the Cross, nail it there, if it cry I thirst, give it Vinegar, stretch the body of sins upon his Cross, stretch every Vein of it, make the Heart-strings crack; And then when it hangs there, triumph over the dying of it, shew it no pitty, laugh at its destruction, say, thou hast been a bloody sin to me and my Husband, hang there and rot. And when thou art tempted to it and art very thirsty after the pleasure of it, say of that opportunity to enjoy it as David said of the Water of Bethelam, It is the price of Christs blood, and pour it upon the ground; Meer Ingenuity should move us; say with thy self,

1. If no more but the conformity between Christ and me, shall I live in that to which I dyed when my Head dyed? thus Paul Rom. 6.

2. Shall I live upon that which was Christs death? Shall I please my self in that which was his pain? Shall I be so dishonest, so unkind as to enjoy the pleasure for which he endured the smart? Shall I spend on his score, the score of his love? Kings Children when others are beaten for them it moves them to be as diligent and as fearful to offend as if themselves were to be beaten, out of Ingenuity;

Ingenuity; and that Christ was whipt for us and our sins, should move us as much against them as if our selves were every day to be Crucified as he was. I only put this to all your Considerations that love the Lord Jesus, if Christ were yet to suffer at the end of the World, and in suffering to bear all the sins you should commit (as you heard when he suffered he did) if you had any Ingenuity, how wary would you be, how you encreased his load, how sorry that you added any sin knowing it would be his sorrow, and shall he fare the worse because all is done already?

CHAP. XV.

*The Victory which Christ gained over Satan by his Death.
The Glory of this Victory displayed by the Consideration of the Greatness of that Power which the Devil had over us.*

H E B. ii. 14.

That through Death he might destroy him that had the power of Death, that is, the Devil.

THE Victory yea Destruction which Christ hath upon Satan on our behalf is the full scope of this Text, and follows as the next subject unto that of Redemption of us from sin and the curse, and is indeed the consequent of that Redemption.

There is no Text large enough to take in the whole, either of Satans power, or of Christs destroying him in respect of that his power, for this mentions on Satans part his power over death only as the Jayler; and on Christs part his overcoming him by his death is only spoken of, whereas Satan hath power, and that chiefly in matter of sin; also in ruling this World; and Christ also destroys or confounds him by his Ascension, Intercession, and judging both the Devils and the World at last: Yet you well may upon occasion of these take in all, and it may have this warrant from this Text, that it is said to be a Destruction of him, (which is a general word and takes in all) that is, of his Person wholly and totally; and so in all points of his power besides, as well as in that over death.

And again Christs death here meritoriously and vertyually reacht to all the power Satan had of any kind, and so then a total rout and destruction of him is in the Apostles scope.

And the Story hereof as gathered from the Scriptures is our present subject, and is divided as the Text is into two parts.

1. Satans power.

2. Christs Victory and destruction of him.

1. Concerning Satans power therein two things are to be considered.

1. What power Satan hath had in the World and over the Elect Sons of Men fallen under sin in common with other Men.

2. By what claim or right he came by it.

2. Concerning the second, Christs Victory, and his destroying him, therein are to be remarked.

1. The true Original Ground of the quarrel, how Christ came to be engaged and involved against him.

2. The

2. The several Degrees of Christs Conquests, and they are reduced to two Heads.

1. The first Rout, wherein the foundation was laid of the ensuing Victories; and that was got in open Battel in the plain Field at his Death, in and by which virtually the whole was at once won, and obtained; and therein I shall shew how justly Satan fell from his Power, and lost it, and this I call Christs Meritorious Victory.

2. Then there is secondly the prosecution of this first victory, and the management thereof to his own greatest Glory, and Satans Confusion. And the parts thereof are

(1.) Christs Triumphing over him after the Victory obtained in his own person openly, and that in Satans own dominions afore God and all the Holy Angels, and this singly in himself, and in his own person, although as representing us, Col. 2. 15. and this I term his Victorious Triumph, or the shew and demonstration of it.

(2.) Secondly there is his overcoming him in us. Then when Satan is still left in actual possession of the whole World, and of the Elect among them, whose Liberty and Redemption it was Christ aimed at. And this hath two Degrees:

(1.) He overcomes him in us, at our Conversion; and

(2.) He overcomes him by us, and causeth every particular Christian to overcome him in the course of their Lives, after Conversion. And these two I term Christs Actual prevailing or getting possession.

A Third Procedure, is Christ his visible setting up a Kingdom in this World, afore the day of Judgment, during which time Satan is shut up, and restrained from tempting the Elect, and from deceiving and enraging the World against the Elect, as now he yet doth, and heretofore hath done: And this is expressed in the last Chapters of the Revelations, Chap. 19. v. 19, 20, 21. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse and against his army, and the beast was taken and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image; these both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. After which follows Chap. 20. 1, 2, 3. And I saw an angel come down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand; ver. 2. And he laid hold of the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, ver. 3. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that, he must be loosed a little season. And then follows the Kingdom of the Saints during those thousand years, ver. 4, 5. And I saw Thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Ver. 5. But the rest of the dead lived not again, until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

Fourthly, Lastly, There is Christ his bringing this great malignant unto open trial, afore all the World; God, Angels and Men; which is at the day of Judgment. After which follows the Execution of him in an Eternal Destruction of him in Hell.

There is a Glory Transcendant, that will appear in each one of these particulars, but more in the whole of them, all laid together; a stupendiously excellent Glory, in comparison unto which Victories of Christ, all the great Victories you have seen are but Trifles and Shadows that have no glory in this respect, and therefore let not the rich man glory in his riches, nor the strong man in his Conquests, but let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord, and in this especially, that he knows himself is one of those poor Captives whom this great Conquerour delivered amongst the rest of the Elect, who shall stand up in his Lot amongst them.

I. To Discourse concerning Satan and his Power, and to shew what it is.

1. In general it is a Kingdom maintained and upheld by him and all his Angels conspiring in one, against Christ and his Saints, Mat. 12. 26. And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself, how shall then his Kingdom stand? And whereas every Kingdom hath an interest, the interest of this is sin, Eph. 6. 12. they are said to be Rulers of the darkness of this world, which is spoken in distinction from the good Angels, who are Rulers of this world too: for in that the Apostle says, this world to come is not subject to the Angels, Heb. 2. (he speaks of them that are good.) He Implies that now they are sent out for the good of the Elect, Heb. 1. 14. 5. and it argues that this world is subject to them in order to the good of the Elect. But now herein lyes the difference; Satan is the Ruler of the darkness of this world, and the riches, glory and Greatness of it being for the most part obtained and managed by sin and Corruption, therefore in ruling the darkness that is in mens hearts, he also comes to rule and dispose of these. Even as the Popes power (who is his eldest Son) is in pretence only ad spiritualia, yet so as in ordine ad spiritualia he takes on him to meddle in all things temporal, so his father Satan having now in Commission only spiritual darkness and wickedness, and obtaining this power over men unregenerate, yet in order thereunto over these Children here, until converted.

These of all other things are committed to him.

- I. To entice as he did Ahab, 1 Kings 22. 21.
- II. To put into the heart as in Judas.
- III. To provoke, 1 Chron. 21. 1.
- IV. To bewitch, Gal. 3. 1.
- V. To fill the heart as he did the heart of Ananias, Acts 5. 3.
- VI. To work effectually and so as to carry all before him, and cause them to do what he enticeth to, Eph. 2. 2.
- VII. And Seventhly to do all this at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26.

This power of Satan is in respect of sin or the darkness of this world. He hath a power over them in respect of death, so in the Text; but this power lasts but till the resurrection, and but over mens souls. For when the day of judgment is ended it is the good Angels that do throw wicked men to hell and not the evil Angels, Mat. 13. 41. 42. But in the mean time look as the good Angels have the Commission for carrying mens Souls to Paradise as they did Lazarus his, Luk. 16. 22. So the evil Angels have until then the Commission to carry wicked souls, when by death sever'd from their bodys, to hell.

Let us now consider (to set forth Christs victory the more) the greatness, and the extent of this Kingdom given to the Devil and his Angels.

I. As it is in the hands of the great Devil placed on his Throne; it is a Monarchy over mankind of all formes, highest for power in all ranks throughout.

II. For the subjects of it they are (as Christs subjects also are, Col. 1. 16.) both things visible and invisible, so that he hath of both kinds, especially the kinds of intelligent natures Subject to him.

1. Angels: The Devil and his Angels. 2. Us men, wholly Captiv'd to him. And further (wherein the upholdance of this great Tyrants cause is) some of these are as natural Native subjects that rule with him, and have a common interest of power with him: And they are his Angels; but we poor silly men, are as slaves Captived to them and him. Like as Pharaoh (one of his eldest Sons under the old Testament :) had for his Natural liege Subjects his Egyptians, that Ruled over the Israelites with him, and the poor Israelites as Captives and slaves unto both. And in this lyeth the greatness of the Turkish dominion in part of Europe, Asia and in East-India to this of the Mogol in East-India, to this day. So then he hath all sorts of Subjects every way.

3. As unto us men his power is universal; not a Soul of us but is by Nature subject to him. We are all born by a Statute Law his slaves, and Christ hath none, but whom he wins over from him by turning them from Satan unto God, yea, and in the issue he holds and retains a far greater Company and number to himself than Christ gets unto himself, Rev. 12. 9. it is one part of Satans Titles, that it is he who deceives the whole World.

4. In us men (the more miserable part of his Subjects) he Rules inwardly, even as Christ doth in those few he gets from him; he sits and fills and rules our Hearts till we are turn'd to God.

5. If we consider the length and continuance of this his Dominion, as he hath sinned from the beginning, 1 Job. 3. 8. so he hath entred upon his Reign from the very beginning of Mans Fall, and every Man born becomes his Subject; neither have these individual Devils given place to any, but the same Devil that ruled in Cains time, rules now in the Children of Disobedience, Eph. 2. 2.

6. For Success he hath carried it clear, for he works, and works effectually in the Children of Dis-obedience, and takes them Captives at his Will, as him Lists, 2 Tim. 2. 26.

7. He hath been Worshipp'd as a God, and so hath had more Honour and Dignity than any Prince, 2 Cor. 4. 4. He is there called, the God of this world. Some great Conquerors affected to be Worshipp'd as Gods, not being content with the highest Supreme Power, so Alexander and Mahomet, but few obtained it, but the Devil hath had both. So it was from the Flood, till Heathenisme was destroyed, and Popish Idolatry was set up as it is said, Revel. 13. 4. Thus therein they worshipped the Dragon, who gave his Power to the Beast, to the end to have Worship continued to him in another way under the Profession of Christ, even as he had afore. Thus much for the Power it self.

Secondly, The Second part to be discoursed of, is by what Claim, Right or Title he came to have this Power, seeing himself by sinning (afore Man had sinned) deserved to be in the Nethermost Hell.

1. The Legal and Fundamental Claim is, Gods Commission, and that by way of Curse upon Man. Man turning Rebel against God, he justly gave that ingrateful Creature who despised his Mild Government over unto the hard and intolerable Vassallage of this Tyrant. It was a just punishment that Man who would not have God to Rule over him, should be delivered into the Devils Power, and it was as great a punishment as could be Inflicted. Thus we find, that when David by way of Prophecie was to Curse Judas (who himself was placed in the Office of an Apostle, or a Bishop, or Overseer as Peter interprets it, and applies it to him, Acts 1. 16, 20.) Says he Psal. 109. 6. Set in office over him the wicked one, and let the adversary or Satan stand at his right hand. The wicked one is the Devil, so oft, and usually in the Epistles of John the Phrase is used, and in the Lords Prayer, &c. and accordingly we read, that Satan entered into him, Luke 22. 3. And thus in like manner Man sinning at first, God by way of Curse and Commission set the Wicked One a Ruler over him, and this Curse was but suited to his Iniquity in a just way, as the Law was in Deuteronomy 28. 47, 48. Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness and with gladness of heart for the abundance of all things, therefore shalt thou serve thine Enemies which the Lord shall send against thee in hunger and thirst, &c. and he shall put a yoke of Iron upon thy neck until he have destroyed thee.

Book V.

And besides this Curse, there was some Appearance of Legality in it; Isaiah 49. 14. The Title of Satans Power in Scripture riseth so high, as that the Souls of Men are termed his own House, Luke 11. in the 21th. Verse, Christ calls them his Palace; and all the Faculties and Powers of their Souls his Goods; and Verse 24. the Devil himself terms it his House. And the Grounds of it are,

1. Of whom a Man is overcome, of the same he is brought in Bondage by the Law of Conquest, 2 Peter 2. 19. He speaks it of Sin, but it is true of Satan, whose Interest is the same with that of Sins. Man was overcome by Satan, and caught in his snare, the Serpent beguiled our first Parents, and so they were brought into Bondage, as unto Sin, so to him.

2. Satan was the Father of Sin and Sinners, and it is his work, 1 John 3. 8. as Holiness is the Workmanship of God, Ephesians 2. 10. Now the Father of a Family was under the Law of Nature, the Governour and Head of it, and so is the Devil of whom (as I may say) all the Wicked Families on Earth and Hell is named. And God indeed Curst the Devil himself with this Power for his Ruin; and as Sin was his Work and his Invention first, truly he let him have the Monopoly of it, and all Sinners came under his Patent, and be Workers at the Trade under him, as the first Inventers of any Craft use to have the Priviledge to employ others under them.

CHAP. XVI.

How it was Christs Great Concern, and Interest, to Destroy the Power of Satan. The Conquest which he had over him by his Death, and his open, and Glorious Triumph after the Victory, expressed in Colossians 2. 15.

THE Second Part of this Discourse, is of Christs part in destroying all the Power of the Devil. And therein we are to regard,

First, The Ground of the Quarrel betwixt Christ, and him, and how Christ came to be engaged in it. The Ground of this Quarrel was either,

- I. Personal. Or,
- II. On our Behalf.

I. Personal, as he was Gods Son, and Natural Heir. What was Satans Sin? It was the setting up a Kingdom against God, and Christ his Son. He left his habitation for it, Jude 6. It is mentioned not as his punishment onely, but as his Sin. He and his Angels shook off Gods Dominion, and betook themselves to seek their Fortunes, and set up for themselves in this Airy and Visible World. Thus in Matthew 12. 26. the bottom Reason
Christ

Christ gives why one Devil opposeth not another, is, for how then shall HIS KINGDOM stand? You may observe, there is a Kingdom of his mentioned, consisting in one Common General Interest wherein they all agree. Now if there were no other Reason but that it is the quarrel of the Godhead in Father Son and Spirit, Christ is sufficiently in Person interested in it on his own, yea his Fathers behalf. For if any rebel against a Prince, who is so fit to suppress and subdue them as the Son in his Fathers behalf, (when himself also is the Heir) who so fit as he to fight his Fathers Battels, and to put him into the Throne again. But,

Chap. 16.

II. It's more then whispered 'tis talk't out by some great and good Divines, that the Spirit and edge of their first sin was pointed against the Son of God as he was to be God Man And so in our nature declared to be ordained an head to Angels and Men, and if so the quarrel was personal indeed, for it more particularly toucht Christs propriety, and Prerogative. Whether these things were so or no or that they be sufficiently proved by these intimations in the Scriptures I leave every reader to his own judgment, only if I had not inclined there to I had not at all propos'd this I add.

III. That it properly and personally concern'd Jesus Christ to come and destroy the Devil. In that Satans Kingdom (which upon his turning head against God he was in actual possession of) was that which lett'd or stood in the way to that of Christs Kingdom and took up much of the room of it. This Kingdom Christ as God Man was appointed unto, Heb. 1. 2. (and it was only as God Man that he was appointed to it, for as meer Son of God, or second person he hath it by Nature and not decree) the appointment also was, that he must win it ere he wears it, as Psal. 2. and Psal. 110. 1 Cor. 15. 1 thew. He must destroy therefore this his opposite to make way for the possession of this his own Kingdom, and therefore, Mat. 12. 28. Christ gives this as a manifest undeynable evidence, that the Kingdom of God, which the Prophets had foretold, the Messiah the Christ should (as come from God, and for God) possess and administer, was beginning to be set up upon his coming into the World, and that himself was the appointed heir therefore, yea Apparent heir by this probation, that he did by the Spirit of God cast Devils out; But if I cast out Devils by the Spirit of God, then the Kingdom of God is come unto you: The evidence lyes in this, that whilest he did it, he did profess himself to be that very Messiah, to whom that Kingdom did belong, and that the rising of his Kingdom was the downfall of Satans: And so that first promise and prophesie, Gen. 3. began to be fulfilled in and by his own very person, viz. He shall break the Serpents head. Which (saith Christ) you see manifestly with your eyes: for with the same breath at the same instant he Commands the Devils forth, and so proclaims himself to be that King to whom Satan must give way.

But the second ground of the quarrel was on our behalf, and this for sureness in the Text: The verse afore the 13th. doth bring in Christ speaking himself as a Father of many Children committed to his trust and charge by God; Behold I and the Children which God hath given me. Christ is and was an everlasting Father. Isa. 9. 6. and these Children were given to him in and at Gods first Election both of Christ himself, as Mediator, and them as members both at the same time, and Election of the one was involved in the Election of the other as relatives mutually each unto other. Eph. 1. 4. They were chosen in him before the foundation of the world, thus long afore the fall of man, or Satans sinning or Kingdom; so as Christ was plainly thus long afore entrusted to be their Guardian; and such and so great an estate of Glory was long afore bequeathed to them; Therefore these Children being by that curse and righteous law (they sinning) become now Vassals and slaves of Satan, for as much then as his, Children were partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same, that through Death he might destroy him that had the power of Death that is the Devil. It is the very account given in the Text, and imports in the coherence of these words with the former immediately foregoing, that that these his Pupils and Children having been long afore given him, and now fallen into the Devils Power: That moved therewith, He came to rescue and deliver them (as the Next words carry it on, ver. 15.) Thus zealous was Christ for these his Children and to discharge his trust; and thus, Eph. 5. 23. Christ being originally and primitively constituted an head to them, this drew him to be a Saviour. The words there are, even as Christ is the head of the Church (an head first) and he is the Saviour of the body.

These things as thus relating to Satan, to have been much in Christs heart his speeches up and down the Gospel of John and elsewhere shew. In which you may observe him discoursing, as great Princes use to do of their grand opposites, so he of Satan, and the confusion he was sent to put him into: by all which what his heart was intimately set upon in mans salvation doth eminently appear, as you may read, John 12. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. wherein he mentions this confusion of Satan with somewhat an equal affection he had to that of the Salvation of men, and both as those two eminent grand matters in which both God and Christ aimed most to be glorified. You find him at the 27. ver. struck with the thoughts of his approaching sufferings, now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say Father save me from this hour, and yet then checks himself, but for this cause came I to this hour, as if he had said, this was the business I came into the world for, and I must disanul all, if I now withdraw. But then further he cheers himself up with the great and general end which his death and coming into the world, and all served to, ver. 28. Father glorifie thy Name, unto which, God from Heaven gave answer, I have both glorified it and will glorifie it again. Then he specifies two things, wherein God was thus to be greatly glorified, by the foresight and prospect of which he further recovers his spirit, Namely.

I. Satans overthrow, now is the judgment of this world; now shall the Prince of this world be cast out, verse 31.

II. Mans Salvation: verse 32. and I, if I be lifted up from the Earth, will draw all Men unto me; and both these at once accomplish't by the cross, verse 33. this he said signifying what death he should dye. Which falls in with what the Text saith that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Devil. And with all which also that of John 1. 14. doth correspond, the Word was made flesh and ἐσθνήσας he pitched a tent amongst us, as a Souldier, for it is a military word. For his end of dwelling in flesh was to destroy the Devil in open and plain field by conquest, and suitably in this Heb. 2. 10. you have him called the Captain of our Salvation then when his destroying of Satan is spoken of. Thus much for the grounds of the quarrel.

I pursue next the several proceedings and passages of the Victory, (whereof the most eminent and fundamental to all the rest is that of his death, as all the places already handled do shew.)

I reduced them at first unto two general heads having diverse particulars under them.

I. Christs overcoming Satan in himself, that is in his own person.

In himself, is added, says Strigelius, ad differentiam victoriarum humanarum in quibus partem sibi vindicat Dux, partem milites. Nam filius Dei sine auxilio ullius creatus contrivit caput serpentis. Strigelius in locum.

II. His overcoming him in us and by us. Or thus, There is Christs overcoming Satan for us, And there is Christs overcoming him in us and by us. The account of this distinction you will easily perceive by comparing two Texts together, the first, Col. 2. 15. Where he is said to have spoiled Satan and triumphed over him ἐν αὐτῷ (cum aspiratione) in himself, and so the Margent varies it. The second is 1 John 4. 4. Stronger is he that is in you than he that is in the World. He that is in the World is the Devil, who tempts us with the World, and in overcoming the World we overcome him that wicked one, (as expressly it is twice said, 1 Job. 2. 13, 14.) and this is Christs overcoming the Devil in us, as these words stronger is he that is in you, do evidently shew.

What he did in his own person for us are two.

1. The great and total rout Christ gave Satan at his death. And,

2. His triumph over him thereupon. Which you have thus distinguished, Col. 2. 15. how [first] Christ having spoiled Principalities and Powers, he [then] made a show of them openly, (or made them an open example) triumphing over them in himself. The first was done at his death or upon the Cross. For his Cross, is that which the Apostle had mentioned just afore; as that publique open place unto which he had affixed the Law as cancelled. And then in coherence with it next follows this, that he did at the same time to the executioners of the Law, the Devils in those words having spoiled or disarmed Principalities and Powers, (namely on the Cross,) he overcame the Devil: First in the plain and open field, which field was the Cross, and the place whereit stood, so that the Battle was fought there on the Cross whereon Christ dyed. And the Text sayes through death he destroyed him, which comes to one and to say on the Cross he destroyed him, or wrought his destruction. The word in Col. 2. 15. translated, having spoiled him is ἀπεκδοάμεν which is properly to disarm (to put on armour ἐνδύασθαι is oppositly used Rom. 13. 12.) And is a manifest allusion unto what Conquerours use when they have gotten the victory they strip the conquered of their weapons, and therefore it is here put to express the victory it self by. Though the victory it self is supposed antecedent to this disarming, and the manner of such victors was to erect Pillars on which to hang those weapons as Trophies, and this sometimes on the very place, either on trees that grew nigh, or upon pillars fixed on the ground. And so he had begun this allusion in the former words in saying, that he nayed the law as cancell'd to the tree of the Cross, and then pursues it in saying that through and upon his death, he hung up all the Devils Armour thereon also: Which Luk. 11. 22. are call'd Πανοπλία his whole Armour as 'tis translated. And this he did as spoiles, (as our translatours here have render'd it.) You have this signally expressed, Isa. 53. 12. Piscator reads the words thus; therefore for his part or portion, I will give him the great ones and he shall divide the strong as spoiles that is (saith he) he shall have a victory over those evil Spirits, Principalities, and Powers, so as to be in his power as a spoil, to carry Captive, and use as he pleaseth; And this, because (as it follows) he poured forth his soul unto death. And that other reading of our translatours comes all to one, he shall divide the spoil with the strong or in the strong: That noting out the persons that were the object of that his dividing them; and is all one as to say he shall take their power from them. So then in and by his death meritoriously [because he poured forth his Soul unto death] he destroyed him wholly, and Satan and all his power was given up as lawful spoil. Thus our Lord whilest himself was stript naked, and they cast lots for his garments, then it was he strips and spoils Satan, and made him wholly naked without all weapons. And here comes now to be enquired into the just ground upon which it came to pass that through or by Christs death Satan should be bereft of that power which he had (upon the terms formerly mentioned) given unto him. And to be sure he lost it upon Christs death upon a far more fair, and legal right then at first or then ever it was given to him, Isa. 49. 24, 25, it is thus written, shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered? But thus saith the Lord, even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, &c. Be it literally spoken of Babylons Captivity and redemption, or whatever else, yet this is certain, that that and other were shadows of this of ours by Christ, and therefore applicable in the general thereunto. Now how far we were Lawful Captives unto Satan you heard, and God (though the Devil be his enemy) will overcome him fairly; Non vi sed justitia, not by force only but in justice. The Lawful Captives (as it is in Isay.) shall be delivered and that lawfully: It is also a rule fetcht from the Law of Arms and concertations in Games or the like, That if a Man strive for masteries, he is not Crowned (and so is not reckoned to overcome) unless he strive lawfully, 2 Tim. 2. 5.

Met. ap. a bellatoribus victoribus desumpta, qui hostium spoliatorum armis pro trophæo fixis— Beza in locum.

1. The truth is first that Satan ran into a preunire or a forfeiture of all his power, by his assaying of Christ (and if there were no other ground it were sufficient for the loss of all) he in assaying of Christ, and plotting and Contriving his death went beyond his Commission, and God on purpose permitted him to do it, to catch him in his snare; Satans power over sinful man was not a Natural but an accidental judicial power and so perfectly limited by Commission, which if he exceeded especially if so transcendently (as it fell out in this) he instantly made a forfeiture of it. Know this then that Satans power was over sinful man only; he was not so much as to touch or come near the man Jesus who was holy and harmless, and separate from sinners. Now he coming into the World in the likeness of sinful Flesh: Rom. 8. This Lyon that seek whom he may devour boldly ventures on him and persecutes him to death: for it was Satan that contrived Christs death: This is the hour (saith Christ) and the power of darkness: Luk. 22. 53. your hour (speaking to the Pharisees) now you are in the Ruffe of your power having me under; But know, sayes he, you are but the Devils instruments herein, who hath a greater and deeper hand in it then you. This is the power of darkness which is a further addition to thew, that the Rulers of the darkness of this World (as Eph. 6. 12.) were also and chiefly in it, yea the utmost of his power concentrated in it to effect what was in Pilates, the people, and the Rulers hearts. The Prince of darkness, and the Ruler of this World acted the Princes of this World, when they Crucified the Lord of glory. But more expressly, John 12. 40, 41. You seek to kill me, you do the deeds of your Father therein who was a murderer from the beginning, ver. 44. And Christ seems to me to give an hint of this very reason, John 14. 13. The Prince of this World comes, and hath nothing in me, as matter for him by vertue of which he should have authority to have any thing to do with mee. The Devil thus foolishly and sillily lost all, and God took the wise in his own craftiness, and Christ suffered him to go on and to have his whole will upon him, but then took him thereby Captive at his will. So God in his Righteous judgment ordered that Satan should lose the power that he had, because he exercised that upon Christ which he had not.

Sic deo iudicante, auge potestatem quam habuit, quia exercuit quam non habuit.
 Saith Aquinas out of Auttin. Sum. part. 3. quest. 49.

2. Consider that it was Mans Sin, which was the Sole and only ground of Gods giving Satan that Power at first; it was done by way of punishment and Curse. Now if Christ pays by his Death (as it was transacted betwixt God and him) a Price and Ransom for Sin, and undergoes all the Punishment due to it, then doth Satans Power fall Instantly, for it was wholly judicial, and but part of the Curse and punishment upon Man.

There was this Concatenation or derivation of Power; the Power of Satan lies in Sin, the Power that Sin hath over us lay in the Law, (the strength of sin is the Law, saith the Apostle) now he by paying a Price or sufficient Ransom unto God for Sin, the power of the Law and Devil all fell at once flat and perished together.

And the Chain of these you have in that Colossians 2. where First, in the 13th. Verse, And you being dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh hath he quickned together with him, having forgiven you all your trespasses: There is Sin gone both in the Power and Demerit of it. Secondly, Verse 14. follows, A blotting out the Hand-writing of Ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his Cross. There is the Law Cancell'd and made void. Thirdly, Verse 15. and having spoiled Principalities and Powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them. The Devil falls with these, as his power stood by these.

3. Add to these that this Christ, as a Common Person, stood in the room of us all, and therefore Satan justly lost his power over us all, in that he that represented us all did overcome him.

And here ere we go any farther, let us stay a while and stand astonished, at the Glory of Gods Design herein: There was never any Romance ever feigned so strange a Victory joynd with such a Confusion to the Person that that was Conquered, as this represents, and it is to be taken notice of here in our Transition to that other part, viz. his Triumph as a preparation to the Glory of it, that Christ a Lamb, the Lamb of God, should lye still and perden, having all our Persons and Sins under that Lambs skin, and form of a Servant, led as a sheep by Satan unto the Slaughter, until Satan should have done his worst, and then as a Lion Couchant, a Lion asleep (as Gen. 49. and Rev. 5. 5, 6. A Lamb and a Lion both) he should rouse up himself from his sleep, and take that very Cross that Satan had brought him unto, and hung him upon, and (as one expresseth it) Baculo Crucis, with the staffe, the beam of the Cross, break all the Devils bones in pieces, when he had not with all his Mallice broke one bone of his, what more glorious? To overcome them, when himself is overcome!

Chap. 16.

Thus much for Christs spoiling, yea destroying him vertyually and meritoriously at his Death. His Triumph over him next follows. For into those two parts the particulars in this Col. 2. 15. are reduced; even as Conquerors first stript the Captives, then led them as Examples, tied to their Chariot Wheels, or else they were driven afore them. In the first the Devils nakedness appears, in this other his shame and Ignominy publicly.

Christs Triumph is thus set forth. He made them an example and shew of them openly, triumphing over them; both these expressions falling in to signifie the same thing, the allusion is manifestly unto that Roman Custom mentioned, after Victories obtained, when the chief Leader rode in Triumph, leading the Chieftains of the Conquered Enemy as an open spectacle. There hath been a question among Commentators and other Divines, whether or no, Look, As Christs affixing the Law to his Cross, and his overcoming and disarming Satan thereon, was an invisible Transaction not seen or observed by any but by God and himself, (the reality thereof consisting only in Vertue and Efficacy); that so in like manner this his Triumph over the Devils should have been but Vertual and Invisible, and so this his Triumph as those other, all of them wholly transacted on the Cross alike. Or whether there was not after that Victory mentioned on the Cross, a publick and open shew made, in way of Triumph afore a World of Spectators applauding of it. For the Decision of this.

So Rollock entering upon this Word, Made a shew of them, dicitur, habens in victoria in cruce, nunc de Triumpho. See Rollock on this place.

1. Therein this difference may be considered between the Abolishing Sin and the Law, at his Cross, and this other of Triumph over the Devil. That those first must needs be only spiritually and vertyually understood, for Sin and the Law are not intelligent Persons, but only things to be destroyed, and so were capable but of a vertyual Abolition, as Heb. 1. 3.

But the Devils themselves that were the Founders of Sin, and Heads of this Rebellion, they were Rational and Intelligent Creatures, and so were capable of being made a real, and visible, open shame, which was a punishment suited to such. And the manner of the Triumphs was to lead the Persons and the Chieftains, as Heads in open view, to give demonstration of the Perfection and Compleatness of the Victory over any Prince or Nation; now such were the Devils.

2. Although neither this over those damned spirits, as neither that over sin, was visible to the men of this World we live in, yet there is another World (invisible indeed to us) unto whom the shame and ignominy done to these Devils might be (as it was) made visible, namely God and Angels, and the spirits of just Men which is the greatest Stage. Christs Birth and Nativity was known and seen by the Angels, when but to one or two in our World, as also his Ascension. Now both every word here leads unto this sense as also the thing considered in it self, and the comparing this with the other.

Angeli viderunt traductos Diabolos & triumphantem Christum, Rollock on this place. Manifestissima erat & illustrissima coram omnibus Caelitibus, Musculus. See also Tanchy.

1. The Nature of a Triumph, (to which the allusion manifestly is) was to be a publique sight, or shew, and to have the greater Pomp there there was a company of Spectators to behold it, or it lost what it pretended to be, and was not that which it is said to be. So Tully speaks of the Romans Triumphs, That Ambassadors were present on Horses, the Souldiers crying out, Victory, whilst the Conquered were led afore or after the Chariots of the Conquerour, and this for the Glory of the Conquerour, and the confusion of the Conquered. If there were none there that at present took notice thereof, it were not a Triumph, but meerly a concealed and stolen Victory.

2. It is said he made them a publique Example, and so the Word Ἐδερυα'νον here, which is all one with Ἐδερυα'νίζεν, is used by the Septuagint, Numbers 25. 4 when Moses hung up those Kings before the Sun; and so by the New Testament, Matth. 1. 19. and Hebr. 6. 6. it signifies also to make one publicly Infamous, yea to draw and dragg him through a company of Beholders and Spectators.

All which (if no more were added) argues that some publique Ignominy was done unto the Devils, before this solemn Assembly.

3. The Apostle (to fix his meaning) adds; openly, ἐν παρρησία, which word the Jews have taken into their Language, to signifie a thing done openly, in opposition to what is secretly or hiddenly; and so it is used, John 11. 34. and Chapter 7. 4. and Chapter 7. 13. and Mark 8. 32. Now this is that which I urge, that for (1.) a thing to be done by way of Triumph: 2. On purpose to make Infamous, dragging the Person made such, through a company of Spectators: And 3. Openly: Yet to say, it was some invisible Transaction, to be viewed by Faith onely, these things are a contradiction.

Thirdly, Compare this Transaction specified here with other Scriptures, and it will resolve, when and how this publique Ignominy was inflicted on Satan and his Angels. And this added to all the former, satisfieth me most of all.

We read Ephesians 4. 8. (and that Epistle is parallel in most things to this of the Colossians, as many have observed) that Christ when he Ascended, led the Devils in Triumph; When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive. This David had prophesied of Psal. 68. 17, 18. and in these Scriptures compared, there are two things more particularly expressed.

1. That it is an Allusion to the Triumphs used among the Gentiles, especially among the Romans (with whom they were in their greatest Glory) for in their Triumphs they led at their Chariot Wheels their Captives, so it is said here in both places, he led captivity captive. And,

2. The 68. Psalme speaks of the Thousand Chariots, who also were those Spectators afore-mentioned, Verse 17. the Chariots of God, which God commanded to wait upon him at his Ascension, Verse 18. are Twenty Thousand; The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: the Lord is among them as in Sinai, in the holy place.

You see then how expressly he speaks of the Angels who were his Chariots, which he rode up in and Accompanied him, and he in the midst of them.

When he came down to Mount Sinai to give the Law, then Thousands of Angels did Accompany him, for it was the Law given by the Angels. And so those were the spectators of this Triumph, and what now is wanting to make it a visible Triumph, not to Faith onely, but the Angels.

And further to carry on the Allusion to a Triumph, as they had their Missilia scattered among the People, so of Christ it is said, when he thus Triumphed, that he gave Gifts unto men.

Thus

Significat aliquando per publicum ceterum spectatorum trahere, vel ducere Zanchius in Ierem.
Drusius,
Grocus

Thus David being a Prophet, and foreseeing things as they fell out concerning Christ (as Acts 2. 30.) spoke afore, as verse 31. both of the Crucifying of Christ which was a death proper to the Romans, or at least to be brought in among the Jews with the Roman Conquerours, and not known afore unto the Jews; and also of the Triumph of his Ascension under the similitude of a compleat Roman Triumph, as their Stories have transmitted the manner of them down to us.

Now the difference of these two Victories, the one at his Death on the Cross, the other at his Ascension, is, that in the first Christ dealt as a Redeemer with God as a Judge; cum Deo tanquam cum Judice Redemptor. In the other he dealt, ut Bellator adversus Satanam, as a Warriour against Satan. The first Conquest was over Satans Works, Weapons, Power, doing that for which God gave them up to him as Spoils. The other was over his Person, as an evidence God had given all his weapons, and power into his hands.

Well but when Christ had given him this terrible Strappado, haling him up after his Chariot Wheels, and then letting him fall again, a fall as bad as the first; Christ goes to Heaven, and leaves the Devil still in actual Possession of power, still for all he had thus Chastised him and had used him as the vilest Varlet that ever was, Christ lets him go like a wretch (though we may not call him so our selves, yet in relation to Christ, and his usage of him we may) with possession of all his power as god of this World, ruling in Mens Hearts, both Elect and others, because he is to have another Bout with him, and he suffers him to hold his possession still in the World, reserving him for a further Victory.

C H A P. XVII.

The Victory which Christ obtains over the Devil, in us, and by us. How he not only Redeems us, but Delivers us from his Dominion, and Power. That not only Christ in his own Person should Conquer the Devil, and break his Power, but that we should bear a part in it with him, is implied in that first Promise in Gen. 3. That the Seed of the Woman should break the Serpents Head. That in all the several parts of that Power which Satan hath, and Acts in the World, Believers by the Virtue, and Strength of Christ are Conquerors over him. That in the Issue they Conquer him, as to that Power which he hath to Tempt them to Sin. The several Ages of Christians considered from 1 John 2. 13, 14. That by Christ Believers prevail against Satan as to the Accusations of them, which he brings before God. That Christ, and the Saints at last defeat Satans Designs, and Projects, and Enterprizes, as he is Prince of this World.

I Come now to the Second part or Degree of this Victory, namely, Christ's destroying and confounding him in us and by us.

1. In us. The Devil had still all the Elect of God then alive, among all the Gentiles, whom the Apostles wrote to, and Converted, and most of them Converted by the Apostles in Judea also fast under Lock and Key, shut up under Sin and Wrath, so as Christ must win every Soul from him, whom he meant to save; therefore at the Conversion of every Soul Converted, (which is expressedly a turning a man from Satan to God, a delivering out of the power of Darkness, Act. 26. 18. and elsewhere) he then comes and begins to bind Satan, and to take his Weapons from him, Luk. 11. 21. He speaks in relation to throwing Satan out of Mens Hearts as well as out of their Bodies. For so he applies it ver. 23, 24. and then it is that Christ begins to execute what virtually he did on the Cross, and what at Triumphant; he gave a Specimen, a publique shew of that he had power to do: Now,

First, I observe from that place, That the Devil, for all the bangs and blows he had at Christs Ascension, that he remains still in Possession in mens Hearts, and is at Peace; and possesseth an Elect Child of God, his heart as his Pallace, and reckons all his Powers and Faculties to be his Goods and Furniture, to use at pleasure.

Well, but Christ having virtually Redeemed him on the Cross, and spoiled Satan for him and in his behalf then, and Triumph't over him in that Persons stead, and as representing him, comes now with a Writ of Execution, for all his Goods detained from him; with an habeas animas, to possess himself of all, and actually to take Satans Power. And when Christ comes, he finds him Armed so so ver. 21. still, for all he was spoiled on the Cross, and as strong in us as ever. For what was then done was but spiritually, and in merito, but he now binds him, Matth. 12. 29. to his good Behaviour; that is, as in Relation to his possessing of, and working in that man; so as Satan is in a Chain. Christ claps Irons on him, that whereas Satan acted in him afore, as Lord in his own House, and he was his Goaler.

Now himself is become Christs Prisoner, bound Hand and Foot, so as he cannot stir to do any thing against us, but with his leave. Then Christ takes possession of all his Armory; so πρωπλία is to be interpreted, ver. 22. (for ver. 21. he is presented armed) so then all Satans tempting, accusing power, and the things by which he tempts and works, do all fall now into Christs hands, as his spoils paid for afore, and now Christ becomes actually possessed of them; and as he is King and Lord (to allude to what Christ said from another more general occasion) takes to himself the power and Reigns, Rev. 11. 36. Satan lyes bound; his Power, Rule, his Wit, Cunning, Force, whatever, is at Christs Feet, to order as he shall give leave and no otherwise, and he is to have Commission from Christ, ere he act or tempt.

I conceive thus of it, That as at first Conversion, Phil. 3. 12. Christ is said to Apprehend, or take our persons actually, to accomplish in us all that he purchas'd for us (which made Paul desire to have the whole given him that Christ had Apprehended him for, and received then for him of the Father by a renewed act of donation, the Graces, Gifts he shall ever bestow and give forth) so doth Christ now by a renewed act take possession of all Satans power and weapons; so as he cannot use a threatening, he cannot blow up a lust, but by Christs consent and permission; not in the ordinary providential way onely, but by special leave and licence; as the Attachment of Nobles, at least the Execution is by special Commission from the Prince; but all other persons are left to the ordinary course of the Laws, which are to be put in Execution by inferiour Magistrates as they see occasion: And this actual possession of all Satans power as a spoil is perfect also as on Christs part, as a King to have it let forth at his dispose; and is perfect in this sence that Christ takes all, once for all, in our behalf, and to be let out but as shall be for our good; and therefore Conversion is called a Translating us out of the power of Darknes into the Kingdom of his Son. We come now under Christs actual Jurisdiction, who hath taken to himself the Government of us. This difference the Apostle holds forth 2 Tim. 2. 25, 26. speaking of saving Repentance, If peradventure God will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth, that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will; whereof the meaning is, that they may not be under Satans Jurisdiction, as afore, at his will; but be so freed, as to be able to recover themselves out of his Snare.

And because even this first work is a renewed Triumph of Christs over Satan, therefore Paul sayes, 2 Cor. 2. 14. that by converting Souls, Christ made him Triumph; Now thanks be to God which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place; even as Christ himself had done upon the Cross, in turning out Satan, in judging and casting out the Prince of this World, out of mens hearts, by convincing Men of Sin, Righteousness and Judgment, Job. 16. 11. But now though Christ hath taken possession of our persons, and hath thrown out of us Satan and his Power; yet so as still Christ lets him loose, and gives Line to his tempting power, when, how long, and so far as Christ himself pleaseth, or under such and such Laws and Rules, as are in force in that invisible world between Christ and him, and on his Audit dayes, when he comes afore God, he gives an Account; of which you read Job 2 1. Again there was a day, when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them to present himself before the Lord. For both good Angels, as Zech. 1. 10, 11. do at times come and give account of their walking to and fro the Earth, as also bad in that of Job. Christ gives him a Commission in such and such Cases, and within the compass of such and such Rules, to have power to do so and so, and so to tempt us and put us to it, and he comes to give an Account how he hath behaved himself in it. But yet this his binding Satan in Conversion of us to God, is an overcoming him in us, and now therein we are altogether passive, even as in the working the habits and principles of Regeneration it self, we are said to be delivered, rescued, and the Devil cast out for us (we throw him not out) by an Eternal Hand, by one stronger than he, who comes upon him.

There therefore remains a Fourth thing, an overcoming by us as well as in us, both which is coming on through the whole course of our Lives. Christ thinks it not enough to have overcome him in himself, as Col. 2. 15. nor to overcome him in us thus at our first Conversion, but he will overcome him by us, he will have our hand actively in it also, and cause us to be more than Conquerors in the end.

Now then that the Glory of this Victory on our part, through him that loved us, may be made the more glorious; such are the dispensations of our God that though Christ hath taken into Possession all his power, yet he lets forth a great and large portion of power still unto Satan to be exercised by Commission from himself. Satan is still left to range up and down, (and in view as it were loose) to tempt, to afflict, and sorely shoot at these poor souls, thus rescued out of his hands; and all to greaten the Victory that yet remains, to be accomplished by us. Christ loves to have us joyned in it, so 2 Tim. 2. 26. that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the Devil, so 1 Job. 5. 18. he that is born of God keeps himself that the evil one touch him not. And as we are said to mortifie the deeds of the flesh by the spirit, so to recover our selves, and keep our selves from Satan, in a great measure.

That we may the more clearly, and distinctly take this into our thoughts, we are to consider that the first promise to Mankind fallen was made for a Victory over Satan Gen. 3. 15. I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, it shall break thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. Here is a promise consisting of two parts; a former part, I will put enmity between her seed and thy seed; and a latter part, it shall break thy head, &c. Now there is a controverſie who should be intended by the seed of the woman, and who that same [It] that shall break, should be? The Papists, they take the Woman for the Virgin Mary, and limit it to her; and the seed to be Christ onely, her Son, and in his own person singly considered and exclusively of us, and the Victory spoken of, it shall break, to be onely that of his in himself over the Devil by himself alone. Calvin understands by the seed of the woman, the whole spiritual Race of Believers collectively in all Ages, as more directly intended, and Christ onely as the eminentest of that Seed, and by whom all the rest obtain the victory, and so principally intended. Pareus halves it; understanding by the seed in the former part of the Promise, all Believers of Mankind: But the [It] or [He] in the latter part prophetically to point out, and terminate on Christ alone, the great He or It that on our behalf encountred Satan (as David alone did Goliath) in a single Duel, and brake his head. And it is urged, that the Septuagint reads the [It] by  $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$ , HEE, and that so it is in all the Copies of that Translation, and so the Chaldee Paraphrast, so Hierome, and others of the Antients. And also that the Greek  $\sigma\omicron\mu\epsilon\iota\omicron\upsilon$  seed being of the Neuter Gender yet the Septuagint, have rendred the [Hee]  $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$  and not [It] so making another difference. I altogether wave that first of the Papists, for the absurd glosses they make upon the words in honour of the Virgin Mary; and propound that both Christ in his Person, and Believers in their Persons as considered in and with him are directly intended in both seed and it, as making up one and the same; the one as the Noun, the other as the Pronoun answering thereunto.

1. Christ is intended as the Captain or Champion in this Warfare and Victory. (So Heb. 2. ver. 10. Christ is styled, and that in reference to this very Victory over the Devil, which follows ver. 14.)

2. All Believers, or the Children and his Brethren (as in the same place they are called) are also here intended and comprehended, so making one seed. He the Captain, they the Body of the Army, that in their turns overcome Satan also through him that loved them!

And

And unto this interpretation, all things seem to fall in to make it good and nothing to hinder it.

Chap. 17.

1. The Holy Ghost hath (as it were purposely) chosen in the original Tongue such a conjunction of Words, as might admit both Sences.

1. The word  $\text{זרע}$ , stands indifferent to either, for it is Nomen collectivum, that signifies a Race or Generation of many, (as is known;) and so is applicable to the whole Company or Family of Believers; or it signifies a sole and singular Person, as Eve her self (the woman in the Text) in the next Chapter, Gen. 4. 25. terming that one Son of hers. Seth, her seed, useth that Word  $\text{זרע}$ , and so that also is applicable to point at Christ as a singular person, singularly aimed at.

2. The pronoun also in the latter part of the Promise,  $\text{אוי}$  translated in the impersonal [It] may as well be translated [Hee] the Original Word will comply with either. And so as if you take  $\text{זרע}$ , or seed collectively, then [It] in the impersonal doth fully answer thereunto as the pronoun to it; on the other hand, if you understand  $\text{זרע}$  or seed personally of one singular Man, then read [Hee] the Hebrew will bear both Fruits, so as you may view the words in either of these postures; I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed, and It shall break thy head, &c. that is, Christ collectively taken, or together with the whole body of Believers; He and they together shall crush thee, and thou shalt bruise his, or its heel; or again you may read it thus, I will put enmity between thy seed, and the womans seed, (taking the womans seed for that one single Person Christ as alone considered) and he shall break thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel, and so the Septuagint and others alledged have translated it.

2. If we take the Materials themselves in these two promises, or two parts of the promise and the scope thereof they will as readily comply with both these sences, and then both words and things will be found to conspire in the testifying hereof.

I. That Christ personally is directly intended and his own personal Victory appears from hence.

1. This was the first promise of the Messiah, who is said to be the Lamb slain from the beginning of the World, that is, from the fall, (as also Joh. 8. 44. from the beginning is taken) and this spoken as in relation to these words here, prophesying thou shalt bruise his heel. And this is also the fundamental promise upon which the faith of the whole Church lived before the Flood, and after for Two Thousand Years, till it was in Isaack and his seed renewed to Abraham in other terms, and therefore not to understand Christ in his own Person singly as in himself, and by himself overcoming Satan to be directly intended, were to take away that great head of the Churches faith for so many ages. For we read of no other propounded but this, and so have no warrant to think that there was any other promise extant.

II. And indeed the whole race of the Elect of Mankind could not, nor cannot be supposed to overcome this so potent an Enemy, they being so weak and impotent in themselves, and now also become in a great respect captive to him, and under his power; it was necessary therefore to the believing thereof, that this Messiah or Christ whom God had designed to be one of that seed as the head of them, as Satan was the head of his seed; and who should be able (for and on their behalf) first to overcome him singly and personally himself, and so mortally break his head, as that then the rest of his Brethren might come to set their feet thereon, in the strength and vertue of him. It was necessary (I say) to the strengthening our faith that this our Christ should be presupposed in the first and chief place, to be here promised, and prophesied of; and directly pointed at, and not by consequence or implication onely, or but as in the croud among the whole seed. And can we otherwise think that God in this his first proclaiming of this great War and Victory to be obtained by Mankind, should mention onely, and set out in the field so, a company of the Sons of Men utterly disarmed, and having each a deadly wound, and not propose (as the ground and foundation of the faith thereof) Him the Christ, the Conquerour, in whom their whole strength lay? Yea could the Devil have feared feared the breaking of his head by any or all those (put them all together) is unable, even so much as to resist the least tentation of his, unless God should have aimed and set forth some one extraordinary, one of mankind that should be infinitely stronger than he?

III. The seed promised is in a special and singular manner called the seed of the Woman, (Man not mentioned) as a seed that should be brought forth not by the ordinary way of generation of both Man and Woman, and so doth in the letter of it point more especially at Christ.

2. As Christ singly in himself, so with all the whole seed of Believers as represented in him, and so representatively in him are to be understood in this promise, He shall break thy head. This assertion is made out by parts,

1. That the whole seed of Believers are intended in the former part of the promise, I will put enmity between her seed and thy seed.

2. That in the latter part of the promise, He shall break thy head. Christ is set forth in his own person so as including too, and representing the whole seed.

It cannot be denied, but that the Curse was intended of all the serpents seed, as whose head should be broken as well as the Devils: For they as well as the Devils partake of the guilt that causeth this Curse; namely, they do bruise the heel of Christ himself, or his Saints, as well as Satan doth. And the wicked Jews did it personally, and against himself as Peter chargeth them, whom ye slew and hanged on a Tree, Act. 5. 30. as well as the Devil himself that set them on to crucify him. Nor indeed could the Devil have done it without them; and therefore these, and all else, are intended as spoken unto in the Curse as well as Satan. And yet we see that the Devil is alone here both blamed and cursed, the Devil alone was present whilst this was pronouncing and none of them but he; and so it is carried as if none were cursed but he, how then can all his seed be included and involved in this Curse? No way but representatively in him; he alone personally stood by, but yet as the father of them all, and Representor and Personator of them; and he alone is made the Butt or Mark the curse is directed against, but withal it lights upon, and is shot against the whole generation of them, and was accordingly considered by God when he sent forth this curse against both him and them: As in like manner when God in the 14. Verse cursed the serpent to creep on his belly, &c. he means all the Devils his Angels with him, the whole kind of them, and perhaps as having their heads all in this conspiracy against man as in their own first fall: Though the great Devil (who got the name of the old serpent by it, Rev. 20.) did put it in execution.

Now then answerably on the other side, this our great He or (αὐτός) as John delights to stile him again and again, 1 John 3. 2, 3, 5, 6. the Devils great Antagonist, our Champion, he personally and alone was to encounter him, and fulfil this great promise of breaking his head; yet considered as the representative of us his seed involved in him. And look how the curse reacheth both serpent and seed, so the promise as fulfilled by him extendeth to Christ and us, to Christ as our great David, that overcame this Goliath for us at a single Duel; then to us as wrapt up in him, and personated by him therein. Seeing that the fates and facts of these two great Antagonists, and their several adherents are within the small compass of this one sentence, He shall break thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel, so interchangeably set opposite one to the other, in a way (I say) of correspondent opposition; this rightly supposeth the law of parallel opposition to hold in each, viz. as to this respect which is the main, that as the Devil is cursed with having his head broken and bruising Christ's heel, and his seed included as accursed therein; also in like manner, in promising Christ that he should break Satans head, and have his heel withal bruised by him, it is intended that his seed and fellows were represented in and with him: And that seeing the one holds good on Satans part to this sence mentioned, that the other should on Christ's, as including the seed, especially seeing the Scriptures elsewhere do confirm this truth, that Christ represented his seed in what was done for them.

For the proof of the first. As by the Serpents Seed is meant the whole race and generation of wicked Men, (for other Seed the Devil hath none) is evident, and of them it is Christ speaking to the Pharisees sayes, They are of their Father the Devil. John 8. 44. And the Apostle John the same, 1 John 3. 8. Therefore by the law of opposition, (and here is the highest and most general opposition put, I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed) the whole Seed of the Godly who were to come of that Woman, the Mother (upon that occasion called) of all living; that is, that live by Faith, must be understood also. And this confirms it, that these that are said to be the Serpents seed were all to be of Mankind, and so to be in the Literal sense and a Carnal respect the Seed of the Woman, as well as those other according to Natural Generation.

The word Seed imports a Race or Generation of Men, which is usual, and also 'tis applyed to some one Person as well. Thus when Eve had Seth, that one Son, she calls him her Seed, Gen. 4. 25. And accordingly the word זרע Seed being a Masculine in the Hebrew, the Pronoun זרע may be translated by the Impersonal [It] as referring to Seed, as it refers to Seed, as signifying an whole Race; or [He] as personally referring to Christ, who also was in an especial manner the Seed of the Woman, and not of Man; though the other (as Seth) are so called, Gen. 4. 25.

Yet 2. This whole Seed is intended as first represented in that one Person Christ, who should by his own strength alone break the Serpents head for them all, which is clear to me by this paralel reason out of the Text: For in that latter promise, He shall break thy head, &c. there is no express mention made of the Serpents seed, or of their being broken, but it is spoken to and of the Serpent only in the Letter, thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel; and yet none will deny but that this part of the Curse was intended unto all the Serpents Seed, of wicked Men, as well as to the Serpent the Devil. Even as 'tis true that they should bruise Christs heel, (as the wicked Jews did) as well as the Devil himself that set them on to Crucifie him. Therefore they all must be intended as spoken unto in this Curse as well as Satan, though he is alone named, and how should this be? But that he as the Father and Head of them then stood by whilst 'twas pronouncing, and was present, and he alone. And though in appearance, he alone was Cursed, and none else; to have his Head broken: Yet 'tis evident that all his Seed of wicked Men were Cursed at the same time in this Curse directed against him, for they all were to be broken and crush'd as well as he, and that for bruising Christs Heel as well as he did: And he as the Father and Representor of them was made the Butt of this Curse, and therefore was considered by God as the representor of the great Devil who lay hid in that Serpent. He is understood to have Cursed with him all the whole company of Angels that fell with him; and as perhaps having had all their hands in this conspiracy against Man, though the great Devil only put it in execution. Answerably our great He, (as John delights to call him in this 1 John 3. 2, 3, 5, 6.) the Devils special Antagonist, our Champion, is personally designed as the Conquerour of him, but we representatively considered in him, whilst himself alone did it in those words, He shall break it, and look as the Curse therein reacheth both Serpent and Seed, but the Seed as represented now by him as their Head and Father of them: So the Promise therein extends likewise to both Christ and us. To Christ, as our David overcoming that great Goliath in a single Duel. To us, as therein represented by him.

3. So as withal Thirdly, We in our persons are to have a victory over him through his strength, and not representatively only in his

[1.] Because the victory belongs personally to all those to whom the damage or conflict doth. Now the hurt, the damage we have a personal share in, as well as Christ had. The Devil and his Seed, by reason of Natural Enmity put, do bruise our Heel, and we find it personally to our cost, therefore to them also extends that victory, It shall break thy head: the same whose Heel is bruised, are the breakers of his Head. And to be sure we receive many wounds and bruifings from him and his, for we feel and groan under them daily, and all the Brotherhood in the World with us.

Book V.

[2.] The enmity that puts the difference, and is the ground of the quarrel, is not betwixt Christ only and the Devils Seed, but the whole Generation of the iust that came of the Woman, as experience in all Ages hath shewn.

But all this hitherto shews but what was done against Satan in himself, and by himself, and we are therein considered but secondarily and remotely by way of representation only.

All which have taken up the foregoing part of this Discourse hitherto at large, therefore

[3.] That this Seed shall in their succession and turns bear their parts, and have their share in an actual and personal way in breaking Satans head, as the intendment also in this Prophetick promise, comes next to be enquired.

(1.) The same of whom it is said, Satan shall bruise his heel; the same it is of whom it is there also said, He or It shall break thy head. So as look who are concerned and have a share in being bruised or wounded in the battel or conflict with Satan, the same here have ascribed to them, a proportionable interest in the victory, it being (besides the import that both are so conjoynd here) a declared Maxime by God, and that as to this very point, That if we suffer with Christ, we shall also reign with him. Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 12. Now all the whole Seed or Race have their share in their being bruised and wounded by Satan, and therefore also in that other; the bruised are his breakers. We all find to this day, by vertue of this Prophecie, the sad effects of his bruising our Heel, as well as Christ did his, and so we too in conformity unto Christ, and therefore we may as well believe our selves included in the promise it self made to these bruifings.

(2.) The enmity in the former part, that is the cause of those mutual assaults of each other in the latter part, and the issue whereof is this victory: I say, that enmity that is the cause both of his bruising our Heel, and then of the breaking of his Head, is spoken of here as in common to all the Seed as well as unto Christ personally on our behalf, and therefore the combat, and the issue of the war, the victory, are not to be restrained to Christ only, when the enmity which is the cause of it is not, but is commensurate and extended unto all.

(3.) This agrees with the general scope and intent of Gods uttering this, made good and proved by the event, and that presently began between Abel and Cain, and hath continued ever since, which is that God here first set up his Standard, (whereof Christ was to be the Standard-bearer under him) four hundred years before Christ yet came in the Flesh, and proclaims the War that was instantly to begin, and to be carried down throughout all Ages, and proclaims it in the language of an Hereditary War, such as was to be between two Houses or Families of great and long continuance, to be between two Seeds, and so from Father unto Son downwards, and the totum genus, the whole kind and generation of each, and therefore it is too narrow to restrain it only to Christ the Seed, though it is he that is the Chieftain, and of whom the whole Family in Heaven and Earth is named, and to whom the Glory of all is to be ascribed.

(4.) But that which above all convinceth me is, that both in the New Testament we find it affirmed of the Saints, that they in their persons are the overcomers of Satan, as Christ hath overcome him in his own person. So 1 John 2. 13. You have overcome the evil one, and 1 John 4. 3, 4. you have overcome the World, and with it the Prince of the World, as the reason which follows, evidently argues, For he who is in you (sayes he) is stronger than he that is in the world. So then not Christ only in himself for us, but he also, and he in us, is to overcome Satan and his together, the World and him that is in it, both Serpent and Seed.

This

This victory also is set out in the New Testament, in such expressions and phrases as evidently doth allude to this very promise in Genesis as the accomplishment of it. Rev. 16. 20. And God shall tread down Satan under your feet shortly. 'Tis God indeed treads him down, and yet it is their feet he is trodden under. Now as the Curse of the Devil in Genesis, It shall bruise thy head, is an allusion to the Serpents condition, who going on the ground, and being not able to reach the Head, yet whilst out of enmity he will be nibbling at the Heel, he is lyable to have his Head crushed by the Foot whose Heel he thus assaults; so to tread down Satan under our feet, holds as great an affinity with that promise there. Also his being called the Enemy, the Old Serpent, hath an undeniable reference to him that was that Serpent, who personated and cloathed himself with that Serpent, and therein first assaulted Eve, between whom and us the enmity is put. Yea and Christ himself is pleased to give forth to his Apostles and us in them, our part and share in this victory over Satan under the same expressions and allusion to this promise, as then bequeathed to us together with himself, Luke 10. 19. when speaking of their subduing Satan, ver. 17. and by their Ministry throwing him down as lightning, ver. 18. he utters it in those words ver. 19. Behold I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and all the power of the enemy. So then this is Christs glory, and was the scope of that first promise; that as himself so also we should tread on the Serpents, the enemies head, and so he came to have a second victory in us, as well as in himself; which as his Sufferings in us are termed ὕστερα, The after Sufferings of Christ, Col. 1. 24. so this overcoming by the Saints is the after Victories of Christ. And this second after Victory puts the Devil in some respects to more shame and confusion than the first, when he was dressed so, by Christ (as we use to speak) of which you heard, for the weaker the Victor is, the more glorious is the Conquest, and the stronger the enemy is, and the more unequal to deal with, the more glorious is the conquest, and the greater is the shame of his defeat. In Rev. 12. you have the Devil described, and set forth with all his Royal Titles heaped up one upon another, as no where else together is the like in Scripture; ver. 9. The great Dragon, that Old Serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; such is his power, subtilty and jurisdiction: And upon what occasion is this great description of him given? 'Tis after a conquest of him, a down-fall, he prevailed not, ver. 8. he was cast out, ver. 9. and his Angels with him, ver. 9. cast down, ver. 10. overcome, ver. 11. So then look as in scorn and as matter of triumph, a King when conquered should be proclaimed with all his Titles, so is he; and to make all this the more glorious, he sets out a Woman, and yet more unequal, a Woman in travail, that cannot help her self, much less resist an enemy; ver. 1, 2. and unto her, that is the Church, is the victory ascribed in the Song of triumph that is made upon it, ver. 12. They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and they loved not their lives unto death. This Woman and this Dragon are set together, to shew the inequality of this match. This confounded the Devil more, that they that Woman should be said to overcome, then that Michael and all his Angels should be so. It was Abimelechs confusion and pride, Judges 9. 54. a Woman cast a milstone on Abimelechs head, and all to break his skull; O slay me (saith he) that men say not of me, a woman slew me. The Woman began the war, Rev. 12. so that she hath the Devil under her feet at the end, cast down to the earth, as ver. 9. and so he hath the Serpents Curse exquisitely accomplished on him, Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the dayes of thy life; which analogically as applyed to Satan, notes out the most abject condition and extremity of Captivation, that as one fully conquered, he should be laid flat on the ground, and trodden on, so as to lick the dust of it; for so Captivity, according to the manner of those Countries, is expressed, by their belly cleaving to the earth, and licking the dust; Psal. 44. 24, 25. and Psal. 72. 9. And therefore though God had curst Satan to Hell afore, immediately upon his fall, 2 Pet. 2. 4. He spared not the Angels that fell, but cast them down to Hell; yet this after Curse, is a second Hell, which therefore is said to torment him all his dayes, even for ever, that he falls also by the hand and under the foot of Man, whom he so much envied and despised. And hereby is not God fully even with him? Doth he not retaliate his Sin upon him to the utmost of the Curfes. The Devil, though in the shape of a Serpent, subtilly assaults and sets on the Woman, as thinking he could easily deceive and overcome her as he did, and by her the Man: (These two you know in the Type were Christ and his Church, Eph. 5. 31, 32, 33.) Well, because thou hast done this, (says God). He never goes about to convince him of his Sin, (as he did the Man and Woman) but falls a cursing him, The seed of the woman shall break thy head. The seed, i. e. both Christ the Head and Christ the Body; Christ the Man and Christ the Woman; Christ Personal and Christ Mystical, shall do it, as the Scripture calls the Church, the whole Seed, as you have heard. And whereas he began with the Woman, and so prevailed over the Man; on the contrary here, Christ the Man deals with him first, spoils and triumphs over him, and then he turns him over to the Woman to have a second bout with him. Come (says he to his whole Church) thou shalt set thy feet, thy tender feet upon him too, and in thy strength shalt crush him. Rupertus tells it with a great deal of confidence, as having had it, he says, from those that knew it by experience, that if the naked foot of a Woman, chance to tread or touch a Serpents head, it dyes instantly, which a far greater force will not effect. Thus the Devil dyes not, nor is fully and totally subdued till she hath set her foot upon him also; and it will be thought that however Christs so hard tread may break his Head, and his Power more, yet her tread breaks his Heart; and it is no derogation from Christ, for 'tis Christ in both. Nay it is for confusion to that proud Spirit, which is as bad as wrath, and therefore after his being judged to Hell, he hath the Curse of this annexed to it, yea and for this end (among other) did Christ take up Flesh and Blood, that is, the weakneses of Mans Nature, and not the Nature of Angels in their strength, that he might in destroying the Devil therein add confusion to his Conquest; it is the reason insinuated if not expressly given, Heb. 2. 14. And upon the same reason, that the Apostle would heighten our conflict with Satan to us (thereby to prepare and awaken us) that we fight not against Flesh and Blood, but against Principalities and Powers, by the same is the confusion of Satan rendered the greater, that Flesh and Blood hath a strength given it to tread upon Principalities and Powers. But herein as Paul gives the account of it, the strength of Christ is perfected in weakness, ('tis proper as to conclude the point in hand withal) for the Apostle brings it in upon occasion of Satans being sent to buffet him; A messenger of Satan, as some; or the Angel Satan, (as others) was sent to buffet him, 2 Cor. 7. 8.

Lib. 3. de tri-
nit. c. 20.

If we would further know the particulars and the glories of these Christs victories over him, atchieved by the Saints, we must estimate them by that threefold power and advantage which Satan hath still left him over the Saints.

I. In ruling the World to bring afflictions on them.

II. In accusing them to God.

III. In tempting them to Sin. And the Saints have an answerable victory over all, and these victories also obtained in a fair and rational way, by and according to equitable rules, and not by extraordinary force. So that in handling these three ensuing particulars, I must carry along three things through each particular.

1. Satans Power.

2. How the Saints, or Christ by the Saints, do defeat him.

3. How each of these defeats is done by rule, in a rational legal way. Which latter renders these victories on our parts more slow and tedious, but more glorious: You have a Maxime, 2 Tim. 2. 3. that no Man is crowned that doth not strive lawfully; Christ himself did not overcome him by meer force, but in an equitable way (as was shewn) so nor do we.

1. Satan

1. Satan hath over us a tempting power unto the greatest Sin ; you know he is called the Tempter. I will begin with that, Peter that had been worried by him, cries out to all his fellows, 1 Pet. 5. 8. there is a roaring Lyon (look to your selves) who alwayes goes up and down seeking whom (of us Believers) he may devour ; and his outcry is τῷ ἀδελφότητι to the whole Brotherhood of Saints in the World, Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary the Devil, as a roaring lyon, walketh about seeking whom he may devour. It is as if one should have given warning to a company of Children (suppose those in Elisba's Story) a Bear, a Lyon is broke loose, hungry and roaring, seeking whom he may devour ; and who knows whom he may light on, as elsewhere Paul, Gal. 6. 1. I lest thou or thou be tempted. For Paul knew that after he is cast out at Conversion, as in the fore-mentioned Luke 11. he attempts to make re-entries. He not knowing who are true Believers, who are not, maketh the same assaults and stormings upon Men favingly converted, that he doth on temporaries : Which made Paul so jealous of all his Converts, lest by some means the Tempter should have tempted them. 1 Thess. 3. 5. In this work of temptation Satan is permitted to exercise abundance of Power more than in any of the former, unto astonishment of themselves and Angels : and they are so put to it, that indeed it may be askt, where is the blessedness you spake of? What is become of those great good tydings of perfect victory over him on the Cross and Ascension? And the actual possession of all his Power by Jesus Christ, and taken from him at our Conversion? The Apostle hath a very high expression, Eph. 6. 12. shewing how much the Saints are put to it in this particular, And having done all to stand : He had said afore, We wrestle not with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers. 'Tis true indeed, God will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear, yet suffers to the utmost what we are able to bear ; that is, he leaves us but to just so much Grace as shall be sufficient. 2 Cor. 12. 9. Many a righteous Man is scarcely saved in this respect, his Temptations are so strong, his Jaylors so many ; yet still I may say what was said of Joseph, Christ's Type and ours, I may say the same of every Christian, The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him. Gen. 49. 23. These Arrow-Masters, (as Ainsworth reads it) his Brethren, his Mistresses, his Master, they all put him unto great tryals and temptations, and so do these Arrow-Masters, these forgers of those fiery darts and arrows, (as in the same Eph. 6. 16. they are called) every Christian. But Christ hath promised as there he did of Joseph, ver. 25. But his bow abode in strength, and the armes of his hands are made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob. There is no victory but there is a battle, no battle but there must be a permission to use wiles and utmost force : We read of both in Satan, who is called the Lyon, and the Serpent. No Man is crowned, unless he strive lawfully ; 2 Tim. 2. 3. therefore Christ will do so, the Devil shall have fair play ; yea, and sometimes do his worst, and this makes the victory the more glorious. Jam. 1. 12. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tryed he shall receive the crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him : That is, one who hath gone through them and overcome them, though with infinite batterings and bruifings of Spirit. Nor are temptations there to be limited to outward afflictions, but to extend it unto tryals for Sin. For it follows, ver. 13, 14. But let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man ; but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed. Now that the Saints after some years experience in Christianity, have usually some experience of their having overcome that evil one, and that so as to be a pledge unto them of their full and final overcoming at last, (of which that in the Revel. 2. 7, 13. To him that overcometh I will give the crown of life, is to be understood) is a certain truth ; and I shall open but one Scripture that makes good this previous overcoming in hand ; 1 John 2. 13, 14. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you,
little

little children, because ye have known the Father. ver. 14. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. It is attributed here (you see) to the middle sort or age of Christians to have overcome that wicked one; by which is meant the Devil up and down this Epistle; and that the overcoming him is spoken in respect of lusts, or temptations unto Sin, is evident, because it is made the ground of an exhortation that follows, not to love the World, nor the things of the World: Ver. 15, 16. Love not the world, nor the things of the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him: For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father but is of the world. And his Argument unto these young Men (of whom he sayes, they have overcome) lyes thus; you have had already some experience of victory, having been in some battles and conflicts with the enemy, fighting against Sin. Heb. 12. 4. It hath cost you hot work, and will you now give back, and lose all you have fought for, and grow faint when the battle declines, and experience gives you so clear an hope of an assured victory; no, but on the contrary therefore be encouraged still to fight it out. Again you may observe, that this is twice said of them with repetition, and therefore is a matter of eminency to be noticed: This for the coherence of the words of that Text of Scripture; now to explain them let us remark, that he reduceth the state of all Christians to three sorts or degrees; Babes, Young Men, and Fathers; making the ground of his allusion, the proportion that Grace or the New Creature hath with what is found in Nature in the Sons of Men, wherein those three Ages are eminently distinguishable. And look as if a Naturalist were to set out the genius, dispositions and attainments of Childhood, Mans estate, and Old Age, he would take that which is most proper to each of these Ages, so doth the Apostle here in characterizing these three Ages in Christianity.

1. Babes in Christianity know the Father, are taught to run to God as to a Father, and to abound in expressing Filial and Childlike dispositions and instincts towards God as a Father, and are trained up as Children, and are allured with toys, and held by the arms and taught to go, and are carried in the arm rather than walk.

2. Old Men in Christianity know him that is from the beginning, the property of Old Age in Nature, is to talk of things antient and long ago done; these they are taken up withal: Now the Heathen could say, Who is the most antient? God, whom Daniel calls the antient of dayes. So Christ is too, 1 Joh. 1. 1. that which was from the beginning, who ver. 2: is that eternal life who was with the Father. And for all those great Mysteries of the Gospel in Election, and the transaction of the Father with the Son, a Story antienter than the World; these things grown Christians delight to speak of, and are taken withal, the knowledge of which is that Paul boasts most of, Eph. 3. 2.

3. Of Young Men the proper excellency is their strength, Prov. 20. 29. and they boast of wrestlings and victories, and if they be Military Men they have had experience of overcoming the enemy in the field, and are thereby flesh'd and animated to any encounters

Now as all true Christians are born for souldiery, and conflicts with Sin and Satan; so the Apostle points out that time between their being Babes, and whilst they are growing up to a virility and strength, and to a Spiritual Manhood: And during that Age is the proper season, and most eminent field of a Christians Life, in which the bloodiest battles with lusts and temptations of that kind are fought, and in which time (where there is truth of Grace) there have fallen out some comfortable experiments of victories, though still the assaults may be renewed and continued; for John (you see) distinguishes them them from Babes by this very thing : The truth is, that in the first Age humiliation for Sin hath stounded lusts ; the Spirit by John Baptists voice and ministry hath blown upon all flesh ; Hell and the Curse, and fear of Damnation, &c have withered all excellencies, or things desireable, and these are succeeded with sweetneses and supports, which add to the deadening of their Spirits unto temptation to Sin, and that present frame of Spirit reduceth them often to think they shall never commit a gross Sin, as Peter that he should not deny his Master, and so they are censorious of others, and then God spares them. Babes are fed with Milk, and not led unto the field unto great or notable encounters, or else the exercise of their Spirits lyes in point of Justification, and seeking Christs Righteousness, yea and then all the affections upon either the account of self-love, or gracious love, are stirred and run in one channel in pursuit after Salvation of a Mans self. But when once the Soul is settled, these first stounds of humiliation and frights are over, and lusts have come to themselves again. And then when the Soul is in some measure quieted by Faith, and yet not assured of Eternal Salvation ; (so as wonted fears are kept under, but yet the Soul attains not joyes unspeakable and glorious, which should as much heighten the affections that way, as fears had stirred them that other) when also those mercenary assistances and auxiliaries which self-love afforded are recalled and withdrawn, and if any sweetneses were, they are abated or gone, and so what is purely Grace (which now is of it self grown up to some degree of strength) is left to shift for it self, and to fight its own battles alone, then usually come the bloody conflicts, then is the tryal whether Lusts and Devil, or Soul and Christ should overcome, and whether Christ hath begotten truth of Grace, and owns it upon some assaults or other, and in some tryal and experience of victories, that it may be said, Ye have overcome that evil one : For one of these two cases have fallen out either Peters case, or Pauls, either such Christians have been kept and not foyled, (we read not that Paul ever was) or if they have been foiled, and overcome for some acts of finings, yet that hath in a recovery occasioned (as it were) a new Conversion, which was Peters case, who went out and wept bitterly, and brought in a new strength and recruit. And either of these are, and must be reckoned an overcoming that wicked one. It is no matter (that is as to this point) that thou hast been overcome ; for if God recovers thee still and renews thee by Repentance, thou hast overcome. A Town that hath been often besieged, and yet never wone or taken (as that Virgin, Maiden City of Venice) and another into which the enemy hath made great entries, and yet hath been beaten out again by them that are within it, these are both of them victorious. In these cases God accounts of it as a great matter, that Grace remains and is not excused ; and therefore John adds here, Because ye are strong, and the word of God abides in you. The Word of God abides in you both as the cause of these victories, and as the signs of them, that it should still so abide after all, when the battle hath been so great and sore, and it was doubtful by the passages that fell out in the Castle, who had the worse or who the better ; yet this is reckoned a signal of the Conquerour, that he keeps the field, and is found standing to his ground, and is where still he was, and retains and holds his Standard : That the Seed of God still remains, that the Word of God abides, this is an evidence of victory, and Christ so expresth it, I have prayed that thy faith fail not ; for after sore, great, and many such temptations, a temporary work is worn out, and abides not ; yea, when a Man is strengthened to continue to maintain the battle, and not fling his weapons down, so long Sin hath not the dominion, but Christ will bring forth Judgment to victory.

Now the reiterated experiments of having thus in part, and at times overcome or continued the fight, is to Men of that Age a pawn and pledge, that they shall finally overcome. It is so in the thing it self, and is often made such to their Faith. Experience breeds hope, and hope maketh not ashamed ; as Rom. 5. 4, 5. Souldiers that have been in many cruel battels, and are yet alive, and have their limbs whole (though with many scars) and have fought it out, and got the victory, though perhaps often rallying and giving ground, they come to have stout or strong and resolute Spirits; and whereas others hopes (namely of Babes) of perseverance is built only upon Gods faithfulness; these further have the experience of the issue of many a combate, to cause them the more soundly to hope; and in this sense some have understood these words, namely, you have overcome the wicked one; that is, you shall overcome; expressing that which is future in the time past to shew the certainty of it for the future: But that cannot be the immediate and direct meaning, because the future overcoming is as common to Believers, as to young Men, that is, that they shall overcome; whereas the Apostles scope is by way of eminency and distinction to the other, to set out what is more proper and peculiar to young Men, only this sense comes in in a collateral way, that that experience which that Age attains to, is an evidence unto them that they shall finally and in the end prevail: Even as Joshua, when they had as yet made some progress of victory over their enemies, he had the eldest of Israel come and set their feet on the necks of their enemies; Joshua 10. 24. and in the assured confidence of the promise of God at first made, whereof they hitherto had had such experience, he speaks thus unto them, ver. 25. Fear not, neither be dismayed, be strong and of good courage: for thus shall the Lord do to all your enemies against whom ye fight; and so it is here.

II. The Second thing that belongs to this, is the glory of these victories of Christ by us, as thus they are carried on to the end of our dayes: which that it may appear, the Terms or Laws set between God and us, are to be considered. In the entrance of this Discourse I proposed, that our overcoming Satan was not transacted by a sole meer outward violent force, or restraint, a pure arbitrary Prerogative put forth by Christ on our behalf, for so he could keep him off from tempting us at all: But that Christ leaves him at times to encounter with us, and to do his worst, yet upon certain Laws and Terms set between us by Christ, upon which it is he puts forth that force, and so according to those Laws it is we overcome. That Maxime holdeth here, 2 Tim. 2. 5. And if a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully. So then Laws are set between these Combatants, else there were no dealing with the Devil; and such as wherein his utmost skill and cunning to deceive, entice, perswade, provoke, are displayed.

I. The First Law is, that though he should prevail to blow up, and inflame a Mans Lusts, and affections with those corrupt Instruments of his he sets upon the will, yea, and the will it self be much won over and inclined even ready to yield, yet if the major part thereof (which is the executive Power in a Man) keeps fixed and comes not off, so long a Man is said to overcome. So as Satan must not boast that he carryed it so, or so far, but in that case the Victory is decided to be on our part, and not on his. Every Mans Will is his Castle, as the Law speaks of a Mans House, and if a Man retains but power over his own will, (as the Apostle in another case expresseth it, 1 Cor. 7. 37.) which is seen by a Mans either not morose indulgency or actings over a Sin in phansie again, or not perpetrating it outwardly, in this case God pronouncer on our sides that we have overcome, though in the assault we have had our hearts much wounded and pierced through with fiery and inflaming Darts, that at the instant did transport our Affections. Eph. 6. 13. στήθεα καὶ ἀντιστήθεα, if we be able but to withstand and stand, you may observe how that all the Weapons there reckoned up are but defensive as Helmet, Shield, &c.

We only stand and deny, and accordingly saies Peter, whom resist stedfast in the Faith, 1 Pet. 5. 9. That is, by Faith we are to retain the power of the Will: So likewise, 1 Cor. 7. 37. Stedfast in heart, having power over ones own will. I observe also, that in Rev. 12. our overcoming Satan is expressed by his not prevailing, (ver. 8, 9, and 11. compared) namely in the Issue: I enquire not how many times he prevails, that is not the measure God goeth by.

by. This may be set out by a comparison of what befel Eve and Adam (whom Austin still styles fortissimus ille, that Sampson and most strong one in comparison to us) in Innocency; or rather in the full strength of the Image of God consisting in Holyness and Righteousness, and that compleat in them.

1. We have the same vertibility of Will which they had (take it meerly as it is a Will) the strongest purpose whereof is (as I use to say) as easily diverted and turned aside, as the strongest push of a Rapier by a Straw.

2. Take Adams will, and it had perfect command over his affections, so that not a desire, no not a velleity could stir to move it, until it gave way, yea, gave forth a command unto it. As in a well framed Watch or Clock; an under-Wheel doth not stir, until the upper first themselves hath moved it. It must be so in them that the Understanding and Will were to begin to be seduced e're an affection waved this way or that. The Serpent deceived Eve the Text saies. 'Tis a slander upon Gods Image and Workmanship as it first came out of his hands, and that absolute perfect Government, God set up in Adams Soul, to say, That Lusts and Affections (the popular part of Man) had power to move themselves, which yet the Jesuits and Arminians have cast upon it. No, the Will it self was as the Almighty, that had the Winds in its Fists. Adam then had nothing inward to tempt him or draw him aside, but we have a Body of Sin and Death, full of life and activity as to sin, a weight that presseth us down, Sin that besetteth us round, Lusts that fight against the Soul, and not only Lusts to entice the Will, but the Will divided against it self, that we cannot do what we would. It was as easie for Adam to will good as it is for us to wish any thing, to think or move a Toe, the whole Bias of the Bowl led him that way; but now at best you have flesh lusting against the Spirit that you cannot do or will what you would. But then nothing without or within should check or foreflow any good motion in him, and yet the Devil overcame them.

Tanta facilitas in Adamo. Vellendi & argendi bene, quanta nunc cogitandi aut movendi pedem, quanta sola velleitatis. Nam nihil interius aut exterius fuit quod retardaret motum.
Jansenius out of St. Austin.

3. Yea, And the Devil had not power to come within him, to represent unto and fire his fancy to inflame his affections or suggest by inward motion and incitations (as he doth us) for why else did he take an external shape to tempt him in.

4. The Devil overcame them the first on-set he made, yea and upon a lighter skirmish, yea, and both of them at once, and it was not long a doing; they easily, presently, and soon yielded up all. How great then is the Glory of that Grace in us (who are every way so disadvantaged) that our wills should be able to withstand, and to stand. The Apostle in his own Example hath celebrated it, 2 Cor. 12. 7. a thorn in the Flesh, an Angel of Satan, of Satan was sent, ver. 7. to shew that Gods Grace was sufficient, and that his strength is perfected in weakness, and that he hath ordained strength in Babes and Sucklings to still the Enemy and Avenger, Psal. 8. 2.

2. A Second Law which is set by Christ between him and us, That if we do thus hold out to resist the Devil, we so overcome him as he must flie from us. And that is a Victory indeed when the Enemy is forced to fly for it. You have it expressly, Jam. 4. 7. Resist the Devil, and he will, or shall flee from you, for it is not put upon his will there, but what is the Event and Issue of such resistances. Souls that are assaulted still more fiercely every day, than other, are ready to say, Where is the promise of his fleeing, for I find his temptations doubled? Well, but God hath said it, and understand it as he hath meant it, and you shall find it true. The Sence that I give of it, is,

1. That for all fierce and set temptations there is a time limited to Satan, though we know not the measure or limits of it; some times, and to some shorter, some times, and to some longer. It is termed the hour of temptation, Rev. 3. 10. And so Christ says too, Luke 22. 53, This is your hour and the power of darkness. Now during that time, and whilst it is appointed to last, Satan may, yea, doth after many renewed resistances of thine, come upon thee yet more fiercely, but there is a period until which if thou dost hold out, he must flie from thee. Why should there not be a set time for his temptation as well as his persecution? His Commission therein is, for certain

Book V. certain dayes, as Revel. 2. 10. Satan shall cast some of you into Prison, And ye shall have tribulation ten dayes, but then the keys are remanded and taken from him, and so it is here in this case too. Now then,

2. The Law of that concertation is, That if the Soul be found resisting him at or until such a time, though perhaps with many intervening foyles, that then he must be packing and gone. Let him look to himself, it seems not only to express a promise to us, but a Law that concerns him, he will and shall flie: Even as that in Gen. 9. 6. contains both a Promise and a Law, He that sheds mans blood, by man shall his blood be shed.

3. It is expressed in the way of a Military ingagement, and an issue such as is in War. The words afore are, submit or subject your selves to God, and then follows, Resist the Devil, and he will flie from you. And he had spoken afore of their lusts marring in their members, ver. 1. 2. of which lusts (as all know) the Devil is the Leader. He had spoken of God, as the Sovereign Lord, and giver of more Grace, of Grace opposite unto our lusts, ver. 5, 6. Now then, saies James, if you would in this War prevail against your Lusts, my Counsel in the first and chief place is to submit or subject your selves to God, become subject to him as the word is, Rom. 13. 1, 5. unto the highest powers; that is, as weaker States use to do when they are engaged in War against an enemy too potent for them, their Wisdom is to give themselves up as Subjects to some other opposite Prince, that may defend and protect them, and supply them with aid. So here these to God are advised to subject themselves, that he may seasonably come in with help in time of need. Now when the Soul hath first thus committed it self, and put it self under Gods protection, then and upon that occasion (if you observe it) it is that he utters this, Resist the Devil and he shall fly from you. It is as if such a King or Prince, that is engaged for such a Town or City under his protection that is besieged and beleaguered long, should send word unto them, hold but you stoutly out your resistance, and I will come with Forces my self that shall raise the Siege, and cause the enemy to depart. And in such engagements there use to be the most punctual Observances and Trusts. Thus doth the Apostle as in the Name of God utter this here, subject your selves to God, and resist the Devil manfully, and he shall flie from you, God will enforce him to do it.

4. Give me leave to give in my apprehension of this promise, he shall flie from you, φύγεται ἀπὸ ὑμῶν, I know the word is used simply to express a suddain and swift removal, for which that Matth. 10. 23. is cited by Beza, when they persecute you in one City, flie into another; yet usually it is a flight out of apprehension of danger (at least) and even there the word imports danger in the Cities where they are persecuted, and here it coming after an exhortation to a warlike resistance, it seems such a flight as is out of such an apprehension. Some say it is out of pride, that he goes away, as being ashamed and as scorning to be resisted so much, or so often. But the Devil is not wrought upon by an affection of shame, he would by his good will continue the assaulting us even to the end, to weary us and tire us. It riseth then so high, as it is some way out of a fear of some real hurt that he knows is coming upon him if he desist not, yet alas what can he fear of dammage from us who are but Flesh and Blood? But from God (who as was said is engaged in it to take our parts) he may. God will come in as an Assistant with a Force and Power to raise his Siege, if he continues his Assaults longer than such a time, so as when he thus sees a Stronger then he coming, he is forced to take his heels and run away. It is certain that at times God rebukes and chastiseth Satan, what else is the meaning of that Prayer of the Angel Christ, Zech. 3. 1, 2. and the Angel Michael, Jude 9. The Lord rebuke thee. The Devils were in fear of a torment when cast out, or else, why say they? Why comest thou to torment us before the time? Matth. 8. 29. Perhaps when the Commission as at first granted is expired, when he is cast out at Conversion, he is for a while confined to dry places, where he hath little trading for doing Mischief, which makes him walk Melancholly, and is a vexation to him; as also where he hath tempted tempted Men to great Sins, he is confined to the place where the Facts were committed, Matth. 12. 23. And why may it not further be thought in this case, that as when wicked Men who are the Devils Instruments, do assault the Saints, and draw them before their Tribunals, that if they demean themselves so as in nothing to be terrified by their Adversaries, Phil. 1. 28. That then as there God strikes the hearts of their Adversaries with terrour, as he did Pilate in the case of Christ, (for it follows, which is in them an evident token of perdition, as to you of Salvation, and that of God, that is, as God fills your hearts with Seals and Tokens of his Love, so others at some time with horrour.) Why may not the like be thought to befall the Devil, when we manfully resist him and that of God? Sure I am the promise is Rom. 16. 20. that when he should have done his doe (as we say) in causing Divisions in the Church of the Romans; and that God had quieted those Divisions, Satan is not only said to be overcome, but to be trodden under feet. He is a Serpent, and fears his head to be bruised, to have a broken Pate after he hath bruised our heels, and therefore flees, but this is in case we be found standing out to resist him.

2. But in case we be overcome by him, as sometimes in such Conflicts with him we are; by reason of our own Lusts, and he prevail so as to lead us Captive, yet two things do make a Glorious Victory even in this case.

1. In that this Man that is overcome recovers himself again out of the Snare of the Devil through the supply of the Spirit of Christ that is in him, and stronger than Satan who is without him, and this is Glorious in another respect, Bis vincit qui victus vincit. He is twice a Conqueror, who is so after having been vanquished. It is made a Glory for the People of God to take them Captives, who had made them Captives, Isa. 14. 2. Even Christ himself in his Sphere and Capacity (though not overcome by him in Sin, yet in Sufferings, &c.) suffered himself to be overcome, and to be nailed to the Cross, so as the Devil thought he had him fast and sure, and then he removed but his foot, and crushed him all in pieces. Now then when Satan hath even devoured and swallowed up a poor Saint, 1 Pet. 5. 8, so as he hath not only a foot in his Snare, but his whole Man in his Belly, as to all outward appearance (as he had done Peter as well as Judas, for he was going (like Jonah) into the Belly of this Leviathan, and had the Weeds about his Neck. Then to have Christ with one look, with one cast of his Eye to break that Mans heart, and to cause him to repent, so that the Devil must give him up again, to have his prey thus taken out of his Teeth, it doth mightily confound the Devil. Yea, and further occasionally to make use of that his sinning to provoke him (through Zeal and Repentance) to do the Devil more Mischiefe, (so as Peters Denial upon his Repentance made him more stout and resolute than ever (as in the Acts you read) as being Converted he was strengthened so, as he turned Three Thousand Souls at once, and  Davids Murder provoked him to teach Sinners, and it hindred not but that God Converted many thereby, as Psal. 51.) and personally working in the Party sorrowing with Godly Sorrow, more Zeal and Revenge and Desire, &c. 2 Cor. 7. 11. This is perfecting Gods strength in our weakness, as 2 Cor. 12. 7, 8. And by the way it is strange that Satan sent to tempt should be termed a gift, as ver. 7. of that chap. A Thorn in the Flesh was given me, a Messenger of Satan, or the Angel Satan to buffet me, was it ever heard the Devil was a gift? Yes, in respect of the Issue of his temptations, as well as to suffer (and his temptations are termed Affliction and Suffering, 1 Pet. 5. 20, 21.) the bruising of our heel was a promise, as well as the breaking of his head.

2. A Second thing which in this case renders it glorious is, That often when a Soul is overcome in respect of its Lusts, yet at the same time it is enabled by Faith to say, I shall yet overcome and be a Conquerour, and in the confidence thereof to give thanks unto God aforehand. Such a Courage as this daunts an Enemy exceedingly (especially when he knows he must in the end be worsted,) that when he hath a Man down and under him, that Man yet spits in his Face, and saies to his Teeth, I shall yet rise and tread thee down. Thus Paul in the Name of Believers, when he was driven to the War, and taken Captain, sighs forth, Oh miserable man that I am! Who shall deliver me? And in the foresight of the Victory, cries, I thank my God through Jesus Christ, Rom. 7. 25. Well Satan (saies the Soul) thou hast me now under, but I shall up again, and say, as the Church in the Prophet, Rejoyce not against me oh mine enemy, though I fall, I shall rise again, but thou shalt be trodden down as mire in the street. God shall tread down Satan under your feet shortly.

Christs dealing with Peter is a strange Instance wherein you may perceive Christs care to support his Faith, though he knew he should be foully overcome. I have prayed (saies he) that thy faith fail not, Luke 22. 32. Christ knew the effect of this promise would not be to keep him, and preserve him from falling, and he gives him an assurance he should recover, and to that end to strengthen his Faith before the Sin committed, even with the same Breath he foretold he should so hainously transgress, he assures him he should recover from it. There is a talk by Carnal Spirits that deal with God upon the terms of Self-Love only, and the Covenant of Works that assurance of persevering hurts a Mans Spirit, and exposeth him the more to sins. If this were true, then is Christ to be blamed in this, he ventures it with Peters Spirit, and the Efficacy of his Intercession, he layes in Provision for Faith before-hand to feed upon against he should be overcome by Sin, and sets a Cordial by him afore the Disease, so much doth he delight in the Triumph of Faith in falls. You know Pauls Triumph, Rom. 8. 37. We are more than Conquerors through him that loved us. And why, because of the perswasion begotten, for I am perswaded neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, &c. He puts in to strengthen Faith what needed not, what are not real, but only supposed Enemies, as the good Angels; nor heights nor depths, that is Satan, (as Revel. 2. 24.) that is, the strangest temptations that Satan can invent, or throw us into cannot overwhelm us. He had first said neither Death nor Life; and I confess I have been most pleased and comforted with the putting in of Life, that that shall not separate: I have feared Life and the Snares of it more than Death, or Angels, or Devils. As for Death it dispatcheth a Mans Sins and dangers in respect of them at once; it like Sampson pulls down an old House that kills all the Philistines together with himself, but it is Life which a Christian is most apt to fear, knowing his own weakness: and the strength of Lusts, and varieties of temptations; but here is a Mans Life ensur'd, (as is the Merchants Language) and an assurance put in for Life, and so against all hazards of sinnings, and therefore we are more than Conquerors, because in and during the Conflicts (which in view and to sence are dubious, and hazardous which should overcome) Faith perswades us we shall overcome: Yea, vicimus vicimus (as with or after Prayer he cryed out e're he knew the event.) Ye have overcome the wicked one, 1 John 2. 12. It is as good as done; Yea, in ipso bellandi ingressu sumus victores, All that is born of God overcomes the World, 1 John 5. 4. In all Battels else Men fight dubio Marte: Sometimes the one side carries it, sometimes another; so as they are doubtful of the event, only relieve themselves with this disjunction, Aut Mors certa, aut victoria Lata, either certain Death, or an happy Victory. Fight the good fight of Faith with assurance of success (saies the Apostle:) It is a good fight indeed wherein there is ground for an assurance of Victory, and a Man can afore view sins and temptations (as that General did a goodly Army of the Enemies) and go aside and laugh out to God in confidence of the Victory. Thus Christ when he was presently to enter into the Field of Cross and Wrath, and Devil: Now is the Son of Man glorified, John 13. 31. he saies it beforehand.

2. When Satan hath any way prevailed by tempting us, he hath an accusing Power before God, Revel. 12. 10. There is great joy in Heaven when the Accuser of the Brethren is cast down, who accused them before our God Day and Night. I take the meaning to be this, That God professing himself, though a Father to his Children, yet to judge without respect.

spect of Persons here in this Life, intemporary judgments, his own Children as well as others, and to go by the same Rule therein: (Which you have in so many words emphatically, 1 Pet. 1. 17. And if you call on the Father who without respect of Persons judgeth according to every Mans work.) Hence therefore when they sin, God hath given power to Satan freely to come and urge his own Temporal Threatnings, and his worst; professing withal, that unless they be wrought about to overcome his Accusations by their Repentance Evangelical, he must and will proceed against them. And herein Satan pleads not before God as a meer Slanderer, God would never be moved with that; but as an Accuser that urgeth what the Word of God saith against such and such sins, and inordinate walkings. And Satan hath upon such occasions leave to come to Heaven (or elsewhere I dispute not) and to appear with the Sons of God, the good Angels, as you see, Job 1. 6. Christs Ears are pierced with his Complaints Day and Night, so that Text speaks: Yea, and if Satan had not Power with God to do a great deal of Mischief this way, there had not been such a rejoycing when Satan was overcome, as you read of, Rev. 12. And herein God deals by Rule between us and Satan: God will have Satan fairly laid on his back. He useth not meer prerogative. The good Angels are grieved at your Sins, (as they rejoyce when they see a Soul turned) but shake their heads and say nothing, we read not of their Accusation: Yea, 2 Pet. 2. 11. Whereas Angels which are greater in Power and Might, bring not railing Accusations against them before the Lord, (he had spoken of the Levellers of that Age, who found fault with their Magistrates, and their Mis-governments and Callings, promising Liberty, ver. 19. by Rebellling against them,) Saies Peter you do in this that which the good Angels do not do, they when they see Magistrates miscarry, they though greater in power (both then those Magistrates, and then you poor Earth Worms their Subjects, yet bring not an Accusation, blaspheming them, βλασφημούντες, which is Jude 9. interpreted by this, that when Michael strove with Satan, it is said he did not bring a railing Accusation. The meaning is, he brought none, for he said no more, but this, the Lord rebuke thee. He went not to God with the Story of his Crime, but left it to him silently, and as for them they quietly behold the Face of God to have Commission from him to punish them if he think meet. So that this of Peter is spoken by way of distinction of good and evil Angels. Evil Angels go presently and bring Accusations against Men before the Lord, but the good do not complain, no, not of the Devils themselves, when they oppose them.

Now Christ invalidates all these Accusations of the Devil by his own interceding, and pleas in the force and virtue of his own Blood, and therefore he is termed a Righteous Advocate, 1 John 2. 1. We have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous An Advocate is the perfect Opposite to the Devil his being an Accuser. It is one that takes off Accusations by contrary pleas before some Court, and his are Righteous pleas all. Of this transaction, you have a representation in that Vision, Zech. 3. 1. When Joshua was to be brought anew into the Execution of the High Priests Office, the Devil stood at his right hand to resist him, and what it was he spread before God against him you may understand by Christs Speech, ver. 4. Take away the filthy garments from him, Behold I have caused thine iniquities to pass from thee. They were all his Sins. Is this Man (said Satan to God) a fit Man to be a Priest over the House of God that hath sinned so and so? Instancing in particulars, and so he pleads against any of you; when to be ordained or called to the Ministry or any place of Eminency. Now Christ the Angel of the Lord, ver. 2. He on the other hand stands up for Joshua, The Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee oh Satan, and observes his pleas.

1. He pleads Gods Election. The Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem as his People, and place of his Worship, whereof Joshua was by Inheritance the Leader and Instrument for whose sake he was to be placed in that Office.

2. Is not this a brand pluckt out of the Fire? ver. 2. Hath he not suffered sufficiently for those his sins already? And wouldst thou have him confounded. Such things as these Christ pleads, and take away his Sins, saies he, &c. Many such transactions as these pass for and against us in Heaven when we little think of it. But Christ's Glory is not only to overcome him as accusing us in and by himself, but further causeth us to overcome him. I had once thought that Christ only deals with Satan in his accusings of us, and alone confounds him, but that Scripture, Rev. 12. 10, 11. verses compared, the Accuser of our Brethren is cast down (say the Angels) which accused them before our God day and Night, and they overcame him by the Blood of the Lamb, and by the Word of their Testimony, &c. This Scripture (I say) plainly shews, that not Christ only, but they overcame him, and that as an Accuser. He urged their failings, and how? As in Jobs case, that if tryed and put to it, they would deny Christ, and blaspheme him to his Face; now they overcome him.

First, As to their Sins by the Blood of the Lamb they pleaded that, and confessed their Iniquities. If we confess our Sins, and plead Christs Blood, God is just to forgive us, and the Blood of Christ cleanseth us from all Sin, 1 John 1. 7, 9.

Secondly, They overcame and silenc't him many of them in the other Accusation by continuing constant in the testimony of the Truth, and by not loving their Lives unto Death, which in the end silenc't Satan, and moved God to assuage the Persecutions of the Christians, and turn them into a glorious Liberty.

Thus when a Believer hath fallen into Sin and the Snare of the Devil for it, as again and again Paul to Timothy expresseth it, 1 Tim. 3. 7. and 1 Tim. 5. 14. That the Devil hath occasion to reproach him unto God and unto Men, (although as for his Reproaches of them to Men, it often falls out that his Commission is to use his own Trade of lying, and he is restrained from what are indeed their Sins) however Christ upon this sends down his Spirit (unknown to them) into their Souls, Rom. 8. 25, 26. and he intercedes as fast in their hearts, urgeth such and such promises and pleas, as Christ in Heaven doth on their behalf. He breaks their Hearts, causeth them to confess their sins, 1 Cor. 7. 1. to mourn after a Godly sort, gives them Repentance, Carefulness for time to come, Revenge and hatred against them, and fear for falling again, and intermingled with Apologies drawn from their own frailty, Christ's Blood, Intercession, &c. And thus, (as there) they approve themselves clear in that matter (namely wherein they had sinned, and for which they repented) clear that is, before God, and according unto Gods Rules, and so (as was said) though God judgeth without respect of Persons, yet they having thus judged themselves, they stand recti in Curia, according to the Equity of Gods Rules, not by extraordinary Power, but by Law which you find, 1 Cor. 11. 31. If we would judge our selves, we should not be judged: And thus the Devil is baffled, and the Man reitored.

Thirdly, Satan hath the Power of Ruling and Governing the Carnal Party of Men which the Scriptures term the World. He is therefore termed the Prince of this World, John 12. 31. And he that deceives the World, Rev. 12. 9. And the chiefest Trade and Design he drives, and Advantage he makes of this his Government over the World, is so to mould and make up the fashions of this World, as by them to persecute the Saints, Rev. 12. 17. For persecute them immediately he cannot by himself alone, although those other Powers, as to accuse them to God, and to suggest and urge Temptation, he hath of himself singly and separately assigned to him, yet to bring Persecution on them, herein he must shroud himself under the Power of the World, and make use thereof; and work mediately thereby, yet so as such proceedings against the Saints are more attributed unto him than unto the World. Infomuch as that whole Roman Empire being acted by him to per-persecute the Saints (ignorant of what themselves did therein) are tearmed the Dragon and the Old Serpent, Rev. 12. As he that deceived the World, and was anima mundi, the Soul and Form of that World that then was, and so unto this day.

Now as the Saints then by their Prayers and Tears, and holding forth the Testimony of Jesus overcame that World that then was, and thereby are said to have overcome the Devil as Prince of that World, so they have done it in several Ages again and again since; in overcoming and working all those new and great alterations in the World in relation to Religion that have been made, and the Devil hath still been overcome and laid on his back by them. And therefore John 12. 31. When Christ saies, Now is the judgment of this world: He adds, Now shall the Prince of this world be cast out. The Judgment or Reformation of the World (as John 16. 8. the word is used) is still the casting forth of the Devil who Rules and Informs it, as the Soul doth the Body. And so far as they overcome and make changes in the World, as it is opposite to Christ and unto them, so far do they overcome the Devil also.

Take but a view of the course and proceedings of matters since Christs time, downward to this Age, and you that know how the World hath gone, must also acknowledge that there have been a many new Worlds, and Faces of things, and as the Apostle tearms them, 1 Cor. 7. fashions of this world which pass away. The world hath been put into a great many new Dresses and Shapes, and under all Powers the Devil still hath sought to shroud himself, and carry on his mentioned Interest, which hath alwaies been to forme up the multitude of Men and their Spirits so, and to mould the Customs and Laws, and Power, that he may have wherewith to persecute the Saints more or less, which is his Trade.

And he hath wisely applyed himself still to the Times and Spirits of Men to effect this, and sharked to do it (as I may so speak) as the Saints have driven him out of his worldly works, and hath made the best of it in his losses. For the Saints have unrooted him, out of his former works often, and put him upon new seekings of his Fortune, and altering his play many a time.

For the making forth of which you may observe how Christ and his Apostles speaking of the world which they did live in, with this indigitation or designation, This World. So Christ in that John 12. 31. And so the Apostles, and that not in opposition to the world to come (as Heb. 2. 5. the Apostle speaks) but as in specification of that present world which was then in Christs and the Apostles times, which Gal. 1, 4. Paul calls the present evil world. Even as Peter styles the Truths that were passing then, the present truth, 2 Pet. 1. 12. Paul speaking at once both of the State of the world that then was, and also of the Devils Rule in it (as it then stood) expresseth himself thus, The spirit that now works (saies he) in the children of disobedience, Eph. 2. 2. There was a present world in Christs and the Apostles time, the Power, the Swinge, Customs and Laws of which then carried it against the Saints, and Satan was in it. There were the received Laws and Customs of the Jewish Religion which had a Toleration throughout the Roman Empire, when the Christian had not, and also the Rites of the Old Heathenish Religion I need not tell you how prevalent, which the Apostle call'd the Rudiments, of the World, Col. 2. 8. and the traditions of Men, that is of that world that then was. Now the Saints they overcame that world that then was both Jewish and heathenish, not only in their single Persons swimming against the stream, and in not being entangled with the weeds at the bottom of that stream, that is the good or evil things thereof, 1 John 5. 4. For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: But they plainly overcame the whole. You all know the Alteration made in Constantines time Three Hundred years after Christ. You read of a great Shock and Battel, Rev. 12. 3. made by the great Red Dragon with Seven Heads and Ten Horns, (which as I may so speak was the Arms of the Roman Heathenish Empire, as set out by the

Clare. Apoc.

Holy Ghost which cast, or Body of Government the Devil inspired, and so is call'd the Dragon, the Devil as fortified herein, hence therefore it is plainly said, that they, the Saints overcame him, ver. 11. And they overcame him, as there was no place found for him and his Angels in Heaven any more, ver. 8 There was not one Man left in some years that were seento worship one of their Heathenish Gods. And in doing this (which is the Glory of it,) God came not down from Heaven with Thunder-bolts and Miracles to overcome, but kept to his ordinary Laws of Providence in Ruling the Hearts and Spirits of Men. He turns the Emperour Constantine unto the Christian Faith, and he turns about the world upside down, as they spake in the Acts; and now all the Power was for the Saints, which before was against them. Well the Devil was unroofed, and his Palace or Castle (as Christ calls it,) his Fortifications or Works as then formed to annoy the Saints out thereof, were slighted, dismantled, and himself clean turned out, and turned Naked to shift to the wide World as we say. It is said immediately thereupon, Rev. 13. 1. And he stood upon the sand of the sea. You know it is read so by some who make those words the close of the former Chapter, and applyed to the Devil, who (as Mede saies) being deprived of the Roman Empire, and put out of Course, and play was put to his Trumps; and because he could not Rule and Sway things thereby any more, he stands Melancholly and Naked on the Sand of the Sea, waiting to see what new Form or Face of a New World would arise next out of the Sea. Now the Sea was the Multitudes of Nations and People then altered both to a new Form of Government, as also turned Christian; and thus chap. 17. 1, 15. the many Waters or the Sea the next Beast rose out of and sat upon is interpreted. Well the Devil upon that interim observing which way the Waves tumbled, unto which he is as the VVind or Breath, he soon spyed out a new Advantage, only seeing the VVorld was turned Christian, he applyed his Government of the VVorld unto the Spirits of Men, and he would be a Christian too, that is, carry on his Designs and Affairs under the profession of Christianity. And so that corrupt, ignorant VVorld that then was being brooded upon by this Spirit that breathed upon these VVaters, did in the end bring forth a new form of Government and Religion of Popery; the Power and Laws whereof through Satans Efficacy, the whole VVorld that then was, went again after, and made VVar against the Saints, and overcame them; as ver. 3, 7. And this our fore-Fathers have told us.

VVell, but the Saints are born to overcome this Devil, and a Thousand of his VVorlds if you could suppose them. Let him put himself into, and shroud himself under what VVorldly Power soever. Let him draw his Lines of Fortification anew, and build them as high as Heaven, or as firm as the great Mountains, yet they shall conquer him. And how they have overcome him in that Power also, the 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Chapters, and the Stories of that Reformation of Religion in all these Protestant Countreys tell you, and they are the Saints that have done, and by their Prayers shall do it, Rev. 17. 14. The Lamb shall overcome them, for as he is Lord of Lords, so they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful. And in doing this, he did not come down from Heaven with Flashes of Lightning or Egyptian Plagues, but kept to his ordinary Rules of proceeding, by which he hath governed the VVorld in all Ages, making changes in them, sometimes making use of Mens Lusts, as of Henry the Eighth: Otherwhere turning the hearts of Princes to embrace the Gospel, as in Germany and Sweden. Elsewhere inflaming the People unto popular Tumults, and an hatred of Idolatry, as in Scotland. Sometimes in giving up Princes to oppress them in their Civil Liberties as well as in their Consciences, and so to move them to cast off the Yoke as in Holland. Sometimes intwisting in one Interest Civil Rights, and the Interest of Religion as in France. All which however done, and done but by the Laws of Providence ruling Mens Spirits, have been done at the Prayers of the People of God.

VVeil

Well, but when Protestantism was set up and the Reformed Religion, so as there was again a new dress or fashion of the World, (as the Apostle speaks of it, 1 Cor. 7. 31.) yet still he made a shift so to form even the truth of that Religion up into a mixture of such common Lawes and Constitutions that had the Supream Power and People so to back them, as he could still, and hath still used that present World to oppress multitudes of the Saints, and how the Power thereof hath been broken, and the Devil again put out of trade, and made a Reformado, as to the persecuting part of his Power your selves have with your own eyes seen (if you have eyes) in this our Age; and it hath been the Prayers of the Saints have brought it about. He is half an Atheist that will not acknowledge it, and say, verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth.

And in this interim the Devil is upon those great alterations we have seen; in his dumps and musings hovering over this Island, and waiting how to form up a Worldly party, and unite them in a common interest, such as may serve to persecute again, more than with the lash of the Tongue, and this present World is as fit for it as ever any. And as it was then so it is now, those that are after the Flesh will persecute them that are after the Spirit, Gal. 4. 29. and the Devil waits but how to draw his line anew, and to raise up a fortification to effect it; which whatever it will prove to be in Gods just permission, yet in the mean time know that you have overcome the Devil, more than Men, or than that present constitution of the World forepast, and have routed the Devil in subduing the power of Men: In overcoming the present World you overcame the Devil much more, and this Paul knew and informs us, that we fight more against Principalities and Powers, than against Flesh and Blood: And I say unto you, rejoyce not that Armies or Nations have been subjected to your Prayers, but that the Spirits, the Devils themselves have been so; though above all rejoyce that your Names are written in Heaven.

CHAP. XVIII.

The last and compleat Victory which Christ and his Saints have over the Devil, both before, and at the Day of Judgment.

THE Third sort of Christs proceedings against this common enemy are more open and judicial: For when he hath let him try his skill and power every way (as hath been shewed) to annoy us, and that in all sorts of attempts (as against us made) Christ hath for thousands of years still baffled and confounded him by us; which because it is but invisibly done he is not ashamed at it, but would persist to eternity in this way, (if the World should last so long) therefore Christ hath resolved to deal with him more openly and visibly: And so it became him that when he had enabled us to overcome him in a regular way, then to fall upon him in an hostile and judiciary way. And this hath two degrees.

- I. When the World, the Time and Seat of his Rule shall grow towards a conclusion, then a strickt restraint shall be clapt on him.
- II. There will be a bringing him to open Judgment.

Book V.

I. A strickt restraint shall be clapt on him towards the end : It is time ; he had Chains clapt on him from his very fall, 2 Pet. 2. 4. and yet he hath been hitherto as a prisoner at large, that hath had liberty to walk up and down with his Chains, to take the Air, as he is the prince of the power of the air, sayes the Apostle, Eph. 2. 2. Well but when the World draws to an end, he shall be bound up in Chains, so as (at least) his ruling power over this World (which hath been the fairest flower in his Crown) shall be taken from him, whilst he yet sees (to vex him) the World of Men on Earth continue to go on in its succession before his face. How far his tempting power will be taken away I will not argue, but that he will towards the end be universally restrained of his ruling the Nations (as he had wont) to persecute the Saints, I think there is ground for it ; Rev. 20. 1, 2, 3. And I saw an Angel come down from Heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand, and he laid hold on the Dragon, that old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years ; and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled. You might without much hesitation to your thoughts think, when this is to be done, if we had no more it is enough signified in Rev. 20. that the time is the last hour or two before the dawning of the great day, and shutting up of the darkness of this World. And what is this Revelation, but a Prophecie of the fates of the Church and World ? Rev. 1. 1. and chap. 4. 1. The World therefore now that is a drawing on to its last scene, is not yet so to end but there shall be a little time for the Devil to play his pranks a little while, ver. 3. but more particularly, whereas it hath been shewn how in his ruling power the Devil, the Old Serpent, was beaten out of his holes ; and we have seen how this Mountebank (who deceives the whole World) in his several stages he hath set up in the World, hath still been beaten down, and been forced to build new. First he had Judaism, then Heathenism, in the room of which he hath set up Popery, Rev. 12. 13. We have seen how when all the World turned Christian, an Antichristian beast rose up, and all the World went wandering after him, for ver. 4. the Dragon gave him his Power, and his Seal and great Authority, and they worshiped the Dragon that gave power to the Beast, and you read of this new Beasts rule until the 19th Chapter, ver. 19, 20. And I saw the beast and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army, and the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image, these both were cast alive into the lake of fire burning with brimstone. Now when Christ and his Army (which are the Saints) have clean defeated and made an end of this last Beast, and his Power, so as that they have had a fair and open victory in the view of Men over the Devil, and all this World, and this the last tryal of skill assigned him, for Christ resolves to lay all the powers of the World, opposing his Kingdom fairly, and in an Humane way of Conquest, on their backs, (according unto that chap. 13. He that killeth with the sword shall be killed with the sword) so as the Devil that had acted all these is now left a naked Devil, beaten out of all his fortresses, what then immediately follows ? Rev. 20. 1, 2, 3. And I saw an Angel come down from Heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, &c. Now sayes Christ, your self the great actor in all these tragedies, your time is come, your turn is next at last, that he who led into captivity should be led into captivity, that your self must be bound otherwise than you have been, and bound from what ? Why from deceiving the Nations ; ver. 3. That he should deceive the nations no more, either by tempting or ruling them any more. And he never deceived the Nations more than in the time of Popery, therefore this his binding must be after all. And then to make sure of him, casts him into the bottomless pit, shuts him up with a Seal upon him, here is the Devil fast, and so it is as a restraint before his last fatal Tryal and Judgment.

The 15, 16. Chap. are the Degrees of his coming. The 17. the Explication who and what he should be. The 18. the funeral Song of the great City that is born up by him ; and Chap. 19. the fatal overthrow.

I will

I will not prosecute this further, you know where else to find it argued, to convince you that there is to be a Kingdom of Christ, and of the Saints, for a thousand years, read the following Verses. During which time it is meet, yea necessary, the Devil be in hold, as you see he is.

II. The last scene, or final proceedings of Christ against him, is his bringing him and his Angels into personal and open Judgment before God, Angels and Men. And herein to make this victory and destruction full and compleat, you that are the Saints thus opposed by him, shall be his Judges. And there cannot be supposed a fuller victory than this, that after you have overcome him, all sorts of wayes related, and God hath trodden him under your feet, that then at last you should sit, and be his lawful Judges of all his wickednesses, enmities and temptations, acted against your selves. Now look as Christ triumpht over him openly, visibly, Coll. 2. 15. before Angels and the Spirits of just Men made perfect, so shall you then with Christ more visibly and openly, even before the World. This you have 1 Cor. 6. 2, 3. Do you not know that the Saints shall judge the world; know you not that we shall judge Angels. This judging of Satan I shall explain and prove by these steps.

1. That the Devil as well as Men shall be brought to open Judgment; this is plain both by Jude 6. and 2 Pet. 2. 4. The Angels that kept not their first estate, be cast down to hell (so Peter) and reserved them in everlasting chains under darkness to the judgment of the great day, (so Jude) or delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment, (so Peter). I understand the transaction of it to have been thus.

(1.) That upon the Angels first sinning, there was a present throwing them into Hell, namely that place and state they shall for ever be in after the great day, as a taste of what in a greater fulness they after Judgment should be condemned unto; yet so as,

(2.) They were presently let out again into the Air, by reason of which they have liberty and freedom of Spirit, and they rule this World, which if in full torments they could not do, Luke 8. 31. they as dreading that place of Hell, besought him he would not command them into the deep, that is, their former Hell.

(3.) Yet in the mean time whilst they are at liberty, they are as Prisoners in Chains, suffered to walk up and down, and thereby marked out as reserved to an Assize or Judgment of the great day. And under this allusion, their condition seems to me to be different from that of Men, wicked Men, with whom God is yet in treaty, for they go under bail of Christs death, that hath purchased this forbearance for them, as space to repent. These (I say) were never yet actually cast into Hell (as the Devils upon their first Sin were) so as these are not actually Prisoners as those are that are entred into Prison, and belong to it, although they have permission to go abroad. And to shew they are so, they carry Chains of that Prison about them (which what they are I stand not now to determine) which Chains are badges that they are reserved unto a more open visible Judgment of the great day. The conclusion of all is this; look as Hell it self is said to have been prepared for the Devil and his Angels, originally for them, so they sinning first go into Hell-fire, prepared &c. and so the Judgment of the great day was appointed for them first. They in both are the mensura and pattern of wicked Men, and therefore both Jude and Peter mention their Judgment first in the head and van; and then of wicked Men, the old World, and Sodom, &c.

2. We are Secondly to take notice that during this vacation or time of liberty to them, the account and score of their sinning runs on, and is dayly added unto, so as they heap up thereby matter of Judgment, which shall be brought forth, and charged upon them at that great day. Herein is one difference between the case and condition of the Spirits of wicked Men deceased ceased, and of these Devils: The Spirits of such Men are said to be in a strickt fence (in prison) 1 Pet. 3. 19. and so the Spirits of those in Sodom are said by Jude to have been made an example, suffering the vengeance of hell-fire; so as Mens Souls shall answer but for the Sins they have done in the body; 2 Cor. 5. 10. Cain shall answer for no more Sins than what his Soul did in his Body; his score of sinning runs not on since he was in Hell; he is not only, truly and actually a Prisoner, but detained in Prison, and suffers a fulness of wrath, as there a Mans Soul is sure to do, and that takes away the demerit of sinning; but with the Devils that go abroad as Prisoners in Chains, and as belonging only to that Prison, it is otherwise. What Sins they commit personally, or in tempting us, shall then be accounted for, which is proved.

(1.) Because the Devil is cursed for having tempted both Eve and Adam; thus it is pronounced, Cursed shalt thou be above all the herd or cattel of the field. Gen. 3. 24. So that not his own first Sin in falling from Heaven shall be reckoned to him only, but also all his tempting of us.

(2.) And again he in after times should bruise the Heel of Christ (which was four thousand years after) and of the whole Seed of Christ, therefore his Head is to be broken; namely, in vengeance for his bruising Christs Heel there is a total breaking of his Head. Now if he be cursed for those, and his Head to be broken for those, then he is to be judged and cast into Hell for those, as reckoned Sins done by him, which are matter of Judgment: For in that he sayes, Cursed shalt thou be above all cattel, &c. He designs his punishment in Hell, and his meaning is, thy punishment shall be greater than of all wicked Men, the cattel of the field. And our Saviours words of them are, Go ye cursed into hell-fire, prepared for the devils: He is cursed therefore with Hell-fire for this Sin, and that as the pattern of Sinners, and all other that are cursed and punished in like manner.

(3.) It is expressly said 1 John 3. 18. that he sinneth from the beginning, as continuing so to do, and what he doth being reckoned and imputed to him, it is not only that he sinned at the beginning, but he sinned continually from the beginning; and this suits his scope, which was to shew, that that Man that continued in a course of sinning was of the Devil; that a worker of iniquity was of the Devil as his Father; for lo! sayes he, in like manner the Devil thus sins in a perpetual constancy.

3. You the Saints are to be his Judges; so 1 Cor. 6. 2, 3. Christ had first declared this to be the priviledge of the twelve Apostles to sit, and to judge the twelve Tribes of Israel; this Paul enlargeth to all the Saints; ver. 2, 4. Know you not the Saints shall judge the World, all the World, yea the Angels. And he speaks of judging in a time and proper sense, then when the whole World is to be judged at the Judgment-seat of Christ; as when Causes are heard and judged in Courts, and Persons are condemned or acquitted, according to the nature of the fact. For he brings it as an Argument why they should not carry or transfer the Civil Controversies amongst them, about matters of this Life, to Earthly Judicatures, but rather to end and decide them among themselves: Ver. 1. Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the Saints. And in the Chapter afore he had shewn how God had given power to them as a Church to judge them that were within, and so to cast out that wicked person: His Argument to this had not been proper, if he had not intended the like time and proper way of Judicature, at that great Judgment to be committed to them; where though Christ shall be the great Judge, yet they shall sit judging (as Christ sayes) as Coassessours, discerning the guilt, and carrying in the sentence, Luke 22. 30. Matth. 19. 28. and ἐν ὑμῖν is by you, ver. 2. the World shall be judged by you; ver. 4. His inference is from hence, set them, ἡσίζετε, put them to the Chair, that are least esteemed in the Church, for at the latter day they shall sit and judge: And that he speaks it of all Saints is plain; for (he saith) we shall judge the Angels, and know you not that the Saints.

Saints shall judge the world; and not the greater Saints only, but small and great; for he infers from it, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church, having before founded it on this, that if the world shall be judged by you, are you not worthy to judge the smallest matters? And to heighten their Dignity herein, he first sayes, they shall judge the world; namely of Men, and then I tell you more, yea the Angels. As Christs Glory is, that God made two Worlds for him, visible and invisible; Heb. 1. Coll. 1. so our Glory is, that we are constituted Commissioners to judge two Worlds, visible and invisible, such two large circuits we have: Thus much for the explanation and proof of it.

Now then my Brethren, let us lift up our Hearts and raise up our Thoughts in the expectation of this great day, as still the New Testament stileth it: It is termed great in respect of those great things which shall be done in it. A great and glorious day it will be, not only in respect of the splendour of the concourse of all of Mankind unto one assembly, all that have been from Adam, all Angels and Saints will be there, 1 Theff. 3. 13. but also it is great in respect of the things and matters to be judged. All the Humane affairs of this World, which the Apostle calls, things of this Life, ver. 4. which the great ones of the World are the judges of, he reckons among the smallest matters, so he terms them, ver. 2. in comparison of the things that then should be transacted in a way of Judicature, which will be the exact scanning and tryal of all actions as they pertain to Eternity, that is, the Spiritual good or evil that is in them, and as they tended to the honour or dishonour of the great God. These are the proper subjects that belong to the cognizance of that day: And now to have all the affairs of the whole World, of Men, of all their Thoughts, Plots, Counsels, Actions, and that under the consideration, as good or evil, to have them all under this cognizance, laid open and committed to the censure of the Saints with authority; what an infinite Dignity must this be to them? Yet so he heightens it, if the world shall be judged by you, are you unworthy to judge the smallest matters; ver. 2. by which he means all those things that are brought before Humane Courts of what kinds soever, and then thereupon he rises higher, ver. 3. Know you not that we shall judge Angels; as those whose Story and Transactions afford higher and greater matters by far than the Story of this whole World will do?

Now then how and in what manner the World of Mankind shall be judged, in the same kind and manner shall the Angels also be, for he casts the same line over both. Now how shall the World of Men be judged? Why every work, whether it be good or evil, shall have an exact tryal; Eccles. 12. 14. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or evil. And 1 Cor. 4. 5. Judge nothing before the time, the Lord will come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; importing that at that time all will so be discovered by the Lord, who is ready to judge the quick and the dead, as every Saint shall be able to judge too.

Now then think with your selves, if you knew but all the affairs of this present Age, all the secrets of States, State-ends, Maxims, Rules, Principles, Lusts of all the Monarchs, of all the Nobles in the World, to have (as he told the Assyrian King) all that is said in the Kings Chamber revealed, yea that are in his Thoughts, which are unsearchable, by which they rule and reign; and you had all the Story of this Age past and present, nakedly spread before you, what infinite delight would this afford you? To have a Princes Cabinet, a few letters or transactions published, how greedy are Men of them? Now know (sayes the Apostle) you shall have a greater Story one day, and of infinitely higher worth and elevation, you shall judge the Angels: 2 Pet. 2. 10, 11. The Apostle comparing Earthly Magistrates and Dignities, (and in his time they were the greatest that ever were, namely those in the Roman Empire) he sayes of the Angels, that they are greater in power and might, and as the good so the bad, for they contend each with other

other upon all occasions, as appears by the Story of Daniel, Chap. 10. and Chap. 11. and by that passage between the Devil and Michael, in Jude. The Devils Monarchy is the greatest that ever was. The Apostles and Christ that had a prospect into that invisible World, term him the Prince of the World, greater than Cesar, than the Great Turk or Mogul, &c. they are but as petty Constables, as one comparing the power and state of our European Princes with those Eastern Monarchs, speaks. The Angels they are the rulers of the World; Eph. 6. 12. So as we fight not against flesh and blood, (in comparison of them our contentions against the World are not considered, but against principalities and powers. Men are but as the puppets above the stage, when these act all. And again, the transactions between God and Satan are many, as the Story of Ahab and Job shews, and also those between the good and bad Angels are great and various. Now then as these Grandees of this invisible World excel in power and wisdom all the petty Rulers of this World; so the passages and transactions amongst them and by them, their policies, enmities, animosities, &c. must needs excel all other. Satan is renowned for his stratagems, his wiles: He outwitted Eve, and soon deceived her, yea and the whole World too; Rev. 12. 9. We are not ignorant of his devices, says Paul, 2 Cor. 2. 11. And further, his wickednesses are Spiritual, sublimated wickednesses: The worst of Earthly Tyrants and Monarchies are but carnal wickednesses unto them, and all these shall be laid open, and sentenced to a suitable punishment. All the secret counsels of his Heart, his over-reaching and going beyond poor Souls, the utmost and extremity of that malice and envy he acted all with, shall be detected, and thou a poor Believer shalt be a judge of all these. Then shalt thou see Beelzebub the great Devil, and all Hell with him (that is his Angels) brought forth in Chains, and Christ opening all their Sins, even here in this World, where they did all the mischief. What a glorious and triumphant fight (think you) will it be to the Primitive Christians to see Nero or Julian stand forth, led and haled before the Judgment-seat of Christ? How much more to see this Dragon and his Angels, that inspired all these in all their rage and malice, and to have all the Stories of their actings ript up for six thousand years continuance. In Isa. 14. 10, 11, 12, 13. when the King of Babel was brought down to the Grave, 'tis said all Hell went forth, all Kings and Nations he had tyrannized over, went out to meet him, so great a spectacle it was. How art thou fallen, Oh Lucifer, son of the morning: And even that is an allusion (as the Antients have conceived) of Satans fall and ruine.

Particularly for thy comfort, oh thou tossed, and bruised, and weather-beaten Soul, how will it rejoyce thee, if it were but to hear Christ, as on thy behalf, openly to rebuke Satan, and to say thus to him, Didst thou Satan spight, malign, vex and provoke unto Sin this poor Saint, those thoughts didst thou dart in, this train didst thou lay for him, as the fowler doth for a silly bird, and no sooner hadst thou drawn him into thy net to commit the Sin, but thou didst run to God, and accuse him of that which thou seducedst him to do, whilst he poor Soul went weeping bitterly, as Peter when he had done evil; and now will Christ say, I will save him, and damn thee, and that for all the Sins which he committed through thy instigation, of all which thou art the Father more than he. And then how comfortable will it be to hear Christ excuse thee also, that the Spirit was willing, but the Flesh was weak; and then to lay the load on him, and adjudge him to so much the greater torment because of what he did to thee, this will be much and great joy. But further will Christ say, Come thou, even thou weak Soul, up hither, sit down here by me, thou shalt be his Judge, thou shalt sit on my Throne with me, yea more, as I triumph over him so do thou now, and not as over one vanquisht only to thy hand, but as over one instantly to be condemned and adjudged to Hell; and thou shalt see it inrolled before thy face ere thou stirrest off this bench, and when thy Sentence hath concurr'd with mine, I have in readiness here about me to revenge all their disobedience, the good Angels, armed with another manner of Power than ever before, who shall throw them down to Hell, and take and burn them with Fire and Brimstone. What can be supposed a perfect victory, and triumph of Christ and his Saints, over the Devils, if this is not?
their

Chap. 19.

CHAP. XIX.

Christs Fullness for our Justification. His fulfilling the Law for us. That Justification doth not consist only in Pardon of Sin, and therefore it is not Christs Passive Obedience alone which is imputed to us. That the whole Righteousness which is in Christ is imputed to us for Righteousness.

HAVING largely proved and explained how Christ performed that part of our Redemption, which consists in freeing us from the Guilt, and Curse, and Punishment of Sin, which he did by himself being made Sin, and a Curse for us; what remains is to prove that he fulfilled the Law, and performed all Righteousness for our Justification; and that he is the Lord our Righteousness, as well as our Sacrifice and Ransom. I first lay down this General Proposition.

Prop. That the whole Righteousness which is in Christ is imputed to us for Righteousness.

The terms or words of the Proposition should be explained by some distinctions to avoid all ambiguities, and to prevent mistakes; but instead of multiplying distinctions, which often confounds instead of clearing the truth, I shall premise two or three things to shew in what limited sense the Proposition is meant, and to be understood.

1. When I say [the whole Righteousness which is in Christ] I do not understand that Essential Holiness of the Divine Nature, which is in Christ, who is God; for I perfectly reject and abhor the dream of Osiander: I mean then that acquired Righteousness of Christ God-Man, for though Jehovah is called our Righteousness, Jer. 23. 6. yet that Righteousness which is of God, is not ours.

2. We must also cautiously discern between the Righteousness of the Mediatorial Office (from which Christ is deservedly called the alone Mediator) and the Merits of the Righteousness of Christ the Mediator. For as God will not give his Glory to another, nor indeed can give it, (and therefore I deny the Essential Righteousness, by which he is God, to be communicated) so neither will Christ give away the Glory of his Mediation. That Righteousness of the Office, by which he is Mediator, cannot be imputed. But as in Logick we say that the whole Nature of the Genus is communicated to the Species, but not yet Generical Natures by which it is a Genus, for then the Species would be a Genus too: In like manner I assert the whole Righteousness of Christ the Mediator to be communicated, but not the Mediatorial Righteousness.

3. We

3. We must also make some distinction concerning this Righteousness of Christ, which I assert to be imputed to us : For I do not include in it the Righteousness of Christ the Mediator, as now Glorified in Heaven, which Righteousness yet is continued ; but the alone Righteousness of Christ performed by him in his estate of Humiliation on Earth is to be understood : For though he is said to be raised for our Justification, Rom. 4. 25. viz. that his Righteousness and the Merit of it might be applyed to us, yet he cryed out on the Cross, it is finished, John 19. 30. and after his death he ceased to merit any thing, as he will also cease to make application of his Merits to us after the day of Judgment, when God shall be all in all : And when he is said to be a Priest for ever, Heb. 7. 17. it is to be understood that he is so in his Intercession, not in meriting for us : As also when his Righteousness is called everlasting Righteousness, Dan. 9. 24. it is meant of the duration of its value and vertue, not of the continuance of its external Acts.

4. Nor do we take in all which he did while he lived here on Earth. All his extraordinary Works, as Miracles, and the like are not to be included. They rather transcend the predicaments of the Ten Commandments, than are parts of the Righteousness of the Law. They were proofs of his Divinity, and the signs and badges, rather than the duties of his Office. He indeed by them shewed himself to be the only Mediator, but he did not act the Mediator in them. And he did them, that Men might believe in his Righteousness, but they were no ingredients of that Righteousness on which they were to believe.

Now to give the right state of the Controversie ; Protestant Divines asserted against the Papists, That all our Righteousness by which we are justified, is the imputed Righteousness of Christ ; but what is in question among Divines of the Reformed Religion, is, whether the whole Righteousness of Christ be imputed.

There is a twofold Obedience visible in Christ in his humbled State ; one which consists in the conformity of his Life to the Law, the other in undergoing Death, and the Curse of the Law, of which the first is called in the Schools, Active, and the other Passive Obedience. To which may, and ought to be added, the Holiness of his Nature, which is the principle of both the former Obediences.

There are some who not only exclude that Sanctity of his Nature, but all the Active Righteousness of his Life, from that Righteousness which is imputed to us. They say indeed that both the Holiness of Christs Nature, and the Obedience of his Life are of great advantage to us, and that they concur to the obtaining of our Justification, as conditions qualifying the Mediator for that work, and as requisite to be in the Person who is our High-Priest. Heb. 7. 26. For such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens. But yet they deny all this to be together with his Passive Obedience imputed to us in the room of our Righteousness : For they affirm that it all was acted by Christ for his own sake, and on his own personal account, for Christ was bound to it as a Creature, and Son of Adam, born under the Moral Law, and as a Son of Abraham under the Ceremonial Law. And one debt (say they) can never be discharged by another. But they believe his Passive Obedience to be only imputed, both because Christ did undertake and perform it, not for himself, but purely for our sakes, and also because they esteem it an adequate and sufficient matter of our Justification.

But we lay down this contrary assertion, That both the Holiness of Christs Nature, and all that work of Humiliation (which the Apostle includes in the name of Obedience unto death) was both undertaken and accomplished for our sakes, and that it gives its joint mark with his Passive Obedience to our Justification ; in a word, That all this Righteousness of Christ whatever, is imputed to us as a proportionate conformity to that Righteousness which the Law requires from us. Which

Which assertion I shall both explain and demonstrate by a few Conclusions (of which the Proposition which I have laid down is the sum) mutually link'd together, and which being rightly applyed, will preclude the chiefest Objections of the contrary side.

There are two Principles in which both Parties agree, and which therefore remain not now to be prov'd.

The First of which is, That that Righteousness by which a Sinner may appear Righteous ought to consist in a perfect satisfaction of the Law: For though it cannot be called the Righteousness of the Law, that is (as the Apostle hath interpreted it, Phil. 3. 8.) the proper performance of the Sinner, who as being under the Law owes all Obedience to it; yet as this Righteousness is in the Person who is our Surety, and made under the Law for us, it stands good in Law, as fully satisfactory; for God gives a declaration of his Justice in the justification of the Sinner, Rom. 3. 24. but Justice is not satisfied unless the Law be so too: Whence the Apostle concludes in the last Verse of that Chapter, We establish the Law. And indeed since the Righteousness of the Law is said to be fulfilled in us, Rom. 8. 4. though performed only by our Sponsor, it shews that by the Gospel there is not made any exchange of the Righteousness, but only of the Persons.

The Second Principle that is mutually agreed on is this, That this satisfaction of the Law is the proper Righteousness of Christ, and that it is ours only as imputed, since he is our Sponsor and Surety, Heb. 7. 22. and made under the Law for us. Gal. 4. 4.

These two Principles, as granted by both, being thus laid down, I shall build upon them some Conclusions subordinate to one another. The First of which will enquire and resolve, what and how much is that Righteousness in the abstract notion of it which the Law requires from the Sinner, and how many parts there are of our Justification, whereby also will be evinc'd wherein a full conformity unto the Law doth consist. The Second Conclusion will search out what, and how much Righteousness and conformity to the Law may, and ought to be found in Christ our Sponsor, and to be imputed to us; where it will be demonstrated, that this must be no other than the whole Righteousness of the Law. And both Propositions compared together will demonstrate the cause why it must be so.

1 Conclus. In the Covenant of Works or the Law, there are two things on our part that occur distinctly to be considered. 1. The fulfilling of the Precept, which Precept is twofold, Affirmative, Thou shalt do this, to which alone the promise of Life is by God graciously annexed. The other is Negative, Thou shalt not do so and so, lest thou transgress. 2. There is the payment of the penalty of the Man transgressed, Thou shalt surely dye.

There is a great and observable, and to our purpose a material difference between the Precepts, with the annexed Promise and the denounced Punishment. And the difference is this, that those Precepts are absolute parts of the Law, which by the right of Creation simply and eternally oblige: But the imposition of the Punishment is only added as a conditional appendix, nor are we subject to it any otherwise, then on certain conditions. To which this other thing may be added for the farther confirmation of it, that the mind of the Law-giver, which is indeed the Law, primarily, absolutely, and per se requires Obedience by the Precepts, but it threatens and exacts Punishment as it were secondarily, and per accidens.

2. Conclus. From this follows the second Conclusion, That though in the Primitive state of Innocence we were only obliged to an Obedience purely of the Preceptive part of the Law, yet being fallen into Sin we now are subjected absolutely to the Precept and Punishment together, and unable to discharge them.

The Reason of it is drawn from the former Conclusion which I laid down, because since the penal payment is only conditional, and not so much required in the Law, as in the appendix of it, it will not, though satisfied, invalidate that absolute and eternal obligation of the Law it self. We are held bound by a double debt, and by a double right. As Creatures we are obliged by the Law of Creation to Obedience, and that not only for the time past, but the future; and withal, as offenders we are obliged by the right of the Judge to undergo the Punishment. Hence it is also evident, that the meer suffering of the Punishment is not sufficient to the satisfaction of the Law, because it doth not adequately answer that primary, and absolute design of the Legislator, who would rather have Obedience than the Death of the Sinner. As thrusting the Debtor into Prison doth not vacate the debt, so neither doth the throwing of a Sinner into Hell satisfy what he owes. For one debt can never be discharged by the payment of another. Nor was there ever any Law, even among Men, either promising or declaring a reward due to the Criminal, because he had undergone the Punishment of his Crimes. Now then the obligation of thy Surety, O Sinner, who undertook for all these thy debts, will not be less than thine. His Passive Obedience will not suffice unless joined with his Active, nor his Active do the work, if not followed with his Death, whether that Obedience for the future is to be performed, or was now at present owing? The Active Obedience alone would suffice if thou hadst not sinned, but then thou wouldst not have needed this Surety; but now the Righteousness required by the Law is to be considered as lost by thee for the time past, and now therefore it will not be enough to render the principal debt, when thou hast contracted a new obligation to Punishment, for thou wast unable to pay at thy appointed time. But be it so, that the Death of thy Sponsor, O Sinner, shall be able to discharge all the past Debt, and to cancel thy Bond, yet since the Law is an eternal Covenant, and thou art an immortal Soul, it will for the future require a new Obedience from thee, and that to all eternity. But that penal payment of thy Sponsor for thee, avails to no more than to restore thee to the same state in which Adam stood at the first moment of his Creation; and though he had delivered thee eternally from all thy fore-acted Sins, and past omissions which are in number finite, yet he doth not supply to thee to be imputed that Active Righteousness which the Law exacts from thee for the future. Hence the Angel in Dan. 9. 24. foretold concerning the Messiah, that when he had made an end of sins, and had expiated iniquities, he should also bring in everlasting righteousness; which being put upon thee, and thou being clothed with the Sun of Righteousness, thou mayst in Heaven be accounted Righteous before God: For the Grace of which thou art partaker, and which inhereth in glorified Souls, though it be most perfect, can never attain to the Righteousness and justification of the Law, since to that, that old Covenant must be antiquated and rendred invalid.

But as the Death of thy Surety will not restore thee to a state of Righteousness, so neither would it ever bring thee to Life: For the promise of Life is made only to the doers, Do this and thou shalt live. And therefore justification of Life, as the Apostle calls it, Rom. 5. 18. is attributed to the abounding of the gift of Righteousness. And hence another Corollary flows which shall be the Third Conclusion.

3. Conclus. All that is required to the Justification of a Sinner, which heretofore was requisite to the Justification of Adam, and of the Blessed Angels. Nay, something more is required to our Justification, because we are held bound by a double Debt. For as it is certain, that more is required to the sanctification of a Sinner, since it is described not only by a meer simple creation out of nothing, but by the Mortification of the Old Man, and the abolition of the Body of Sin, to which it is necessary the New Creature be added, so the like Account is to be stated in the Justification of a Sinner (of which Sanctification is an Image) the whole of it is not accomplished in the taking away of Sins, as the Angel speaks, unless besides this an Active Conformity to the Law be added. Also to Reconciliation (which is the Effect of Justification, and bears the likeness of its cause) all that is required which is requisite to procure a new, and simple Friendship, and something more; since it is the receiving of an old Enemy into favour. Peace and Pardon is first to be acquired, nor this alone, but also the Old Favour is to be obtain'd. This is apparent from the Example of Abolom, who was not satisfied with Peace and Pardon obtained, 2 Sam. 13. unless he saw the Face of his Father and experienced his former favour. The same is also evident by the Joint Testimony of the Angels enumerating Peace on Earth, and good Will towards Men as distinct parts of Reconciliation, Luke 2. 14. To whom also the Apostle doth Accord, Col. 1. 19, 20. It pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell, viz. of Righteousness and Holyness, but to what end? That peace being made by his blood, (for the Merit of his Blood extends no farther than Peace) God by him might reconcile all things to himself, ver. 20. which declares something farther then meer making of Peace, and that to be obtain'd also by that fulness, which God to this end would have to dwell in him.

That all which was requisite in Adam, should be an ingredient into our Righteousness, is also evidently true, unless they will assert, that we are constituted less Righteous in the Second Adam than in the First, when the Apostle on the contrary affirms, that the gift of Righteousness doth more super-abound in Christ, Rom. 5. 15, 17. And indeed it is necessary that it should more super-abound, since more is required to our Justification, than to Adams.

Hence at length ariseth the Fourth Conclusion, and which shall be the last in this order.

4. Conclus. As many things as are required from the Sinner by the Law, it is necessary that so many concur that he may be restored into a state of Justification, as parts of his Justification; of which there are two the chiefest.

1. An Absolution both from the Punishment, and from all Crimes and Guilt of the Fact, which answers contradistinctly to the Negative part of the Precept, Thou shalt not do this; and to the annex'd Appendix of it, the denuntiation of Death. And by this Absolution the guilty Person is so acquitted, that he is freed from the Obligation to Punishment, and also is reputed never to have committed such Sins.

2. There is a pronounciation of the Person to be Righteous, by which he is reputed to have done all those things which the Law commands, and is adjudged worthy of Eternal Life, which is conformable to the affirmative part of the Precept, and to the annexed promise.

And we may find so many parts of Justification distynly assigned in the Scriptures. The first of them is asserted by the Apostle, Rom. 4. 7, 8. Saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. ver. 8. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin. The Remission of Sin in ver. 7. respects Obligation to Punishment. The not Imputation of Sin, ver. 8. respects the Act of Sin it self, of which the Person is so Acquitted, so as not to be reputed guilty of the Fact. For whereas in Humane Courts of Judicature there are two things take place; The Accusation of the Fact, which is the work of a Witness, and the Condemnation, or adjudging to Punishment, which is the work of the Judge: The contrary seems to have place in Gods Court, when the business is there transacted concerning the Justification of a Sinner. He is judged so free from all Punishment, as it is said, Who shall condemn him, Rom. 8. 34. And he also is so absolv'd from the Fact, as it is said, Who shall lay any thing to his charge? ver. 33. He so imputes not sins, that neither the Memory, nor mention of them remain, and so that none are found, Jer. 50. 20.

And this may be called the State of a Believers Innocence, as the Condition of the first Father Adam when new Created, and when he had not acquired any Righteousness to himself by doing the Law, is rather called a State of Innocence than of Righteousness; which though to suppose to be a certain Middle State (by descending from a State of Righteousness to a State of Sin) would be a vain and foolish phansie; and such an one imagin'd by the Papists, wherein they say Man was in his pure Naturals, we deride as an absurd figment: Yet in the Justification of a Sinner which is by Ascending ding from a State of Sin to a State of Righteousness, such a Middle State may at least be supposed. For there is a great disparity of Reason which may be assign'd between this Case and the other.

1. For first, VWhereas Righteousness was what by Nature ought to be in Man, and necessary to him in his Primitive State, he must therefore of necessity, when deprived of this Original Righteousness fall into a State of Sin. But that gift of Justifying Righteousness, all of it freely flows from God, and therefore both in pardoning our Sins, and in giving us Christs Righteousness, his Grace illustriously shines out, and is to be acknowledged, and therefore such a Middle State is supposable that we may the better make a distinction between those two Gifts, and to give the greater Illustration of them; God who bestows one benefit, not being bound to confer the other, Mat. 20. 15.

2. The Justification of a Man in his Primitive State, did flow from his own proper Righteousness, though there was a Justifying Act of God concurring with it. And in Man thus considered, a mere want of Righteousness though he had committed no Sin, yet could not be called Innocence, because that Righteousness was what ought to be in him. But the Justification of a Sinner, as it supposeth nothing in the Man, so neither doth it expect, or wait for something to be in him, but it is a pure Act of God, and imports a respect to the mind of God Justifying, who as he calls those things which are not, as though they were; so he can look on those things as not due, which are due, and by pardoning remit them. Therefore a pardoned Sinner may be said yet to want that Righteousness which ought to be in him; yet since Justification expects nothing in the Subject, God of his meer Grace may pronounce him to be innocent, And by his Remission he may account that privative want of what should be in the Man, for a meer Negative.

In a word, though pardon and the consequent imputation of Righteousness are never to be separated (so that the State of Innocence, in which, I have but made a supposition, a pardoned Sinner to be) is never really existent) yet they are not to be confounded, and therefore that we might have distinct thoughts both of the one, and the other I made the foregoing supposition.

The same is to be said concerning Acquittal from Death, and Acceptance to Life, between which a Middle State may be supposed to be, though the Subject not existing, viz. A State of annihilation, which if God should vouchsafe to the Sinner, it would be a favour, since Christ saies of Judas, That it would have been better for him, if he had not been born, or if he should be annihilated.

Therefore over and above the Mans absolution there is some other thing to be added, viz. The Imputation of Righteousness, to which is annexed, Acceptance to Life; of which the Apostle speaks distinctly, Rom. 5. 19. when he affirms the Obedience of one Man to constitute many Righteous, which in the preceding verse he had called Justification of Life, or to Eternal Life; which contains in its self two parts of Righteousness, as the Law also requires, viz. an habitual Holyness of Nature, and active Righteousness of Life. For since we are to be constituted no less Righteous in the Second Adam, then the first Adam was to be as we said before: And since Adam in Law appeared Righteous, both by habitual Holyness in his created Nature; which certainly God approved as conformable to the Law, since he approved of all his Works as good, and then at length Active Righteousness, viz. a perfect fulfilling of the Law was to be added to Justification of Life, since these I say were requisite in him, it also is necessary that we should be constituted Righteous before God by both these Righteousnesses imputed.

And thus we have finished the first part of this Discourse, and you have heard an intire Conformity to the Law, both Active and Passive to be required to the Justification of a Sinner. VVe now hasten to the Second Part, which is to treat concerning the Righteousness which is in Christ, and here in like manner I will frame Four Conclusions.

5. Conclus. That so many parts of Righteousness, as compleating the whole Righteousness of Christ is in like manner to be seen in him, as you heard them to be required in the Law, and to be parts of our Justification, and which seem to be a sufficient payment, and proportionated answerably to our Debts, as also exactly to agree to the assigned parts of our Justification, as Matter adequate, accommodated, and squared to it. There is no need of a long and large enumeration of particulars. Would you have freedom from the Curse of the Law, Christ is made a Curse, that he might redeem us from the Curse of the Law, Gal. 3. 13. And he bore our Sorrows, Isa. 53. 4. Would you be so acquitted, that your Sins may not be imputed: He who knew no sin was made sin for us. 1 Cor. 5. 21. Neither in his Death alone was he numbred among Transgressors, Isa. 53. 11. Who was separate from Sinners, Heb. 7. But also in his Life, in his most exact subjection to the Ceremonial Law, by which he profest himself to be the greatest Sinner, since those Rights were a Publick Confession of Sins. And Christ was circumcised (as Austin rightly observes) as if he had been born in Sins, and the like may be said of his other Observances, and so both imputatively, and reputatively he was made Sin, that it might not be imputed unto us. Now I place his Obedience to the Ceremonial Law to the Account of his Passive Obedience. For what is more grievous than for him, who knew not Sin, but as the greatest of all evils, to act the part of a Sinner in the likeness of sinful flesh, not only in suffering, but in observing those Ceremonies of the Law, which were required of Men as Sinners to observe; what thing I say, more sharp and grievous than this, could so much as be imagined.

Do you desire a Righteousness of Nature to be superadded to all this? That holy thing is called the Son of God, Luke 1. 35. that by that Sanctification of our Nature in him, he might condemn Sin in the Flesh. Rom. 8. 3.

Do you further desire a Righteousness of Life: As he came not to dissolve the Law, but to fulfil it, so he did perfectly accomplish it; John 8. 29. and to what end did he this? The Apostle gives an answer, Rom. 10. 3, 4. For they being ignorant of Gods righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. ver. 4. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. Christ is the end of the Law not destructive of it, but to perfect it, (as Austin saies) but in what? In Justification, of which the Apostle there speaks, when he saies this in opposition to a Mans own Righteousness which the Jews endeavoured to establish. It was indeed the part of the Law to justify in Mans Primitive State, and to that it was ordained, but Christ only attain'd the Accomplishment of this Design. And for whom? Not for himself, to justify himself only, but he is the end of the Law for righteousness to every one who believeth. When as the end of the Law was the Righteousness of Man, Christ being now made the Lord our Righteousness, is called the end of the Law. But by what Obedience to the Law is he so? What! By his Passive only; No, for that same Righteousness must Christ bring, which if it were not brought, the Law would be frustrated of its end, or he could not be said to be the end of the Law. But that Righteousness is Active? And to put it out of all dispute, that this Righteousness is meant; the Apostle adds, That the Law saies, That by doing a Man shall live, ver. 5.

6. Conclus. The Sixth Conclusion follows, That all this complete Righteousness in Christ, which answers the Law, since it is not wholly due from him, but hath the Nature of merit in it, therefore it may be imputed to the Sinner. Let it be granted, That if some part of his Righteousness was due for himself, that could not be imputed, yet this also must be insinuated, that if the Obedience of Adam as well as his Sin by vertue of the Covenant made with us as in him, should have been imputed not only to him, but to us, though all of it was due from him for himself, why is there not the same reason in some respect that the Righteousness of the Second Adam should be so too? Let Bernard be heard speaking in this Cause: What! Is it to be

be fear'd (saies he) least thy righteousness, O Lord, should not be sufficient both for thee and me, when of God thou art made righteousness unto me. (And he speaks of that which is Active.) It is a short Cloak indeed which cannot cover two, It will, O Lord both cover me and thee.

But what though we grant it, that supposing this Righteousness of Christ be due from him for himself, that it would not suffice at least for other Sinners; Yet the contrary is proved by instances of its being Meritorious, which then it is when it is not wholly due from Christ on his own Account.

As to Christs Passive Obedience there is no doubt of its Meriting, and the same will appear to be true of all the rest. I will begin from Christs Birth.

The Sanctification of his Humane Nature is a Natural due to him, it is true, but since the Divine Person assuming it was before that Assumption free whether he would assume it, or no; and in assuming Mans Nature though most Holy, he abased himself, and in this yielded Obedience to his Father, Phil. 2. 7, 8. and he so assumed it, that after the Assumption that Holy Thing born is called the Son of God, Luke 1. 35. Hence it will obtain the account of Merit, since it was not in all respects due from the Divine Person. This Holy thing indeed is called the Son of God, as the Blood of Christ is called the Son of God, as the Blood of Christ is called the Blood of Christ is called the Blood of God; but yet this Son of God did not want that Holyness of the Humane Nature, being himself full of the Essential Holyness of God, and therefore it was not in all respects due from him, It was for us Christ was Holy, John 17. 19. For them (saies he) I sanctifie my self.

But this will be more clearly evident concerning Christs Obedience to the Moral Law. For,

1. The greatest part of it was not at all due for himself as Man, at least not due in that manner as he performed it. For he might have been Man, and yet have lived alwaies in Heaven, and then he would have been free (as now glorified he is) from many Duties to be performed both to God, and Man in this Life, which yet He whilst he lived amongst Men, performed for us.

2. When as that Holy one is called the Son of God, shall he not have the Prerogative of a Son, and not of a Servant only? And when he is called the Lord of the Sabbath, why not also of the rest of the Law?

3. What though we grant him to have been subject as a Creature, yet the Obedience is of the whole Person, and he is called the Lord our Righteousness. What therefore as a work would be entirely due from the Humane Nature, shall be called the Merit of the Mediator God-Man.

4. What though he now made under the Law, and become a Servant is held bound to the Servitude of the Law, as other Men are kept under the Punishment of Death? Yet since the Person assuming was before at his own dispose, and it was only to make satisfaction for us, that he took upon him that Condition of a Servant; this Service, though due, will be meritorious. For all Motions have their Specification and Denomination from the beginning and end of them. And as the Danger is the greater in that Condition, wherein having now made himself a Servant, he is bound to performe this Service for himself, so much greater will be the Merit, that for our sakes he expos'd himself to that Danger.

And this is yet more evident as to Christs Obedience unto the Ceremonial Law; for though he was indeed by Nation a Jew, and a Son of Abraham, yet unless he had been a Sinner, he was not bound to it, as only the Sinners of the Jews were subject to it. And though those Rites of the Law at that time were the manner of Divine Worship, yet they were not to be observ'd but by Sinners. Since therefore this whole Obedience was perform'd for our sakes, and he was born for us, and made under the Law for us, the whole of it may be imputed to us.

I will

I will also add this, that since there was no need that these things should be done on the sole account of being qualifying Conditions of our High Priest, or as conferring Merit on his Passive Obedience, since the alone Dignity of his Person brought enough of both these, Heb. 9. 14. therefore all this Obedience is perform'd on our Account, and ought to be imputed to us, since otherwise it would be to no purpose. But this will be more clearly demonstrated in the following Conclusion, which is this.

7. Conclus. All these single parts of the Righteousness of Christ, though they are of an infinite Merit intensively, yet extensively they are not so, but in their imputation unto us for Righteousness they are to be limited to that kind of Righteousness only to which they belong.

To explain the meaning of the Conclusion, and to Illustrate it by a Parity of Reason. Let us consider, That as all the Merits of the whole Righteousness of Christ performed in Mans Nature are not extended to the Angels, Heb. 2. 6, 7. though as to Mankind they would suffice to Save, and Justifie innumerable Millions, and therefore they are said to be, though not intensively, yet extensively infinite; so there is the same reason in all the several parts of the same Righteousness compar'd one with another; so that though the Merit of the Passive Obedience avails to Cancel all our Debts of Suffering or Punishment which are within its Sphere; nay, and is sufficient to expiate the guilt of the Sins of the whole World; yet it cannot stand in the room of the Active Righteousness required by the Law, because it is out of its Sphere, and Kind. And so in like manner neither can the Active Righteousness of Christ, avail to discharge the due parts of the Passive, and therefore though each of them is intensively Infinite, yet not extensively.

So then whereas there is a double Debt of Punishment and Obedience required in the Law from us Sinners, the Passive Righteousness though in it self of Infinite Merit will not suffice for both of them; and therefore since an intire satisfaction of the Law is exacted from us, the whole Righteousness of Christ Active, and Passive ought to be imputed. And God will require Obedience as a satisfaction to the Law, not only redundant in a singular kind of Merit, but as accomplished in its own particular way, and kind. And for this he would have all fulness, which denotes perfection of degrees, and all fulness as denoting a perfection of Parts to dwell in Christ, in order to our Reconciliation, Col. 1. 19, 20. that we might be compleat in him, Col. 2. 10. As it is thus in other parts of our Salvation, so in Justification also; since Christ is all in all, and is made all things to us Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification, and Redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. where since by Wisdom may accommodately be understood Inherent Righteousness, in which Sense it is often taken by a Synecdoche, and by its redundancy there it ought so to be understood, Christ is made all the other things to us by the imputation of his Righteousness, Sanctification by the Merit of the Sanctification of his Nature, Righteousness by the Merit of his Active Obedience, and Redemption; by his Passive. And in the same order, though inverted, he doth in the like manner enumerate the parts of Justification in his Epistle to the Romans, as Remission of Sins by Christs Death, chap. 4. And in the beginning of chap. 5. He says, That Christ is made Redemption; and then in the end of that Chapter he saies, That he constitutes us Righteous by his Active Righteousness, which to be meant there is certain, both in that he calls it Obedience, and not only so, but Righteousness, and also that he calls the Effect proportionate to in Justification of Life. And it is also more clearly manifest from ver. 17. where comparing it with the alone disobedience of Adam, he says, If by one offence death reigned by one, much more shall life reign by one, in them, who receive that abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness. The Comparison is so made, that the gift of Righteousness is said to be abundant, not in Merit only, but in Quantity and Number; for the Multitude of the Acts of Righteousness seem to be opposed to the one Disobedience of Adam, therefore the alone Passive Righteousness is not understood, therefore his Active is also imputed to us, and in respect of that too he is made Righteousness to us. But when at last in chap. 7. he had complained of the inherent remainders of Sin, which he calls the Law of the Members of the Flesh, and of Death: He comforts himself at the First and Second Verses of Chapter 8. in the Justification obtain'd for him by the Sanctification of Christs Humane Nature, which therefore in opposition to the other Law of Death, he calls a Law of the Spirit, and of Life; that is, a Spiritual and inward Law and Principle of Life, which he also affirms to be inherent in Christ, and this (saith he) hath freed me from the Law of Sin, and Death, and ver. 3. he affirms Christ sent in the likeness of Flesh obnoxious to Sin, and yet free from it to have condemned in his Flesh Sin which was in ours. Which parts of Justification, when the Apostle had perfectly enumerated, he adds this as a Conclusion, in ver. 4. That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, i. e. That that absolute, complete, and universal Conformity, and Satisfaction to the Law in suffering the punishment and Death, or Obedience of Life, and Holyness of Nature required of Sinners, being found in Christ, and communicated unto us by imputation is said to be fulfilled in us, as if we had accomplished it. The whole Righteousness therefore of Christ, as it ought to be imputed, so de facto it is imputed unto us.

Let me to conclude all add an eighth and last Proposition, with which I would not farther lengthen out the Discourse, if it were not necessary to clear up the Truth asserted.

8. Conclus. Though these parts may be considered divisively as composing the Merit of our imputed Righteousness, yet in the imputation it self they coalesce into one entire, and undivided Righteousness, nor is one part to be considered separate from the other. The Conclusion is thus to be understood, that though in the execution or performance of this Righteousness the parts of Christs Obedience were accomplished one distinct from another, and successively, and at length completed by various Acts, his Passive Obedience after the Active, and the Active after the Sanctification of his Nature. And though secondly an afflicted Conscience meditating on its whole Misery, and considering by piecemeal the several parts both of the Sin, and of the Punishment, can therefore in that very Righteousness of Christ apprehended by Faith, and therefore imputed run over all the several parts of it as a proportionate remedy, and applicable to every one of his Distempers: Yet such a Division is not to be thought of in the Imputation, as though that was successive, or that one part of Christs Righteousness was applyed to us after another. And the reason is this, The Law since it is an Hand-writing is not to be cancell'd, till it be satisfied to the last farthing. Therefore no part of the Debt can be said to be paid, unless it be all consider'd as paid, and the Bond cancell'd. Therefore the Active Righteousness of Christ, cannot be said to be imputed, unless also at the same time his Passive Righteousness be supposed to be imputed, and on the contrary, not his Passive without the Active. For though the Merit of one part (suppose it the Passive Righteousness) doth not depend on the other, viz. the Active, yet the Imputation of the Merit of each part depends upon the other. Hence the Apostle, 2 Cor. 5. 21. saies of Christ is made Sin, and hath taken away the Guilt and Punishment of it, that we might be made the Righteousness of God in him. Not as if that Passive Righteousness was that, by which we appear just before God, but this Active Righteousness would not be imputed, but upon supposition of the other. Hence therefore it comes to pass, that the whole work of Justification, is attributed to one part of this Righteousness, and of Right may be so, as it is often attributed to the Death of Christ, which is often inculcated by the Assertors of Justification by Christs Passive Righteousness alone. Thus we are said to be reconciled by Christs Death, and the like; and thus also the Sanctification of Christs Nature is said to condemn Sin in the Flesh. Which Expressions are not to be taken in such a Sense, as if the whole Merit of imputed Righteousness might be found in Christs Death, (and so likewise likewise as to the other) but because the Imputation of his other Righteousness depends upon this, as this also on the other. But it is attributed most often, and chiefly to Christs Death, for several reasons; the principal of which is this. Because it was the last part pay'd which cancelled the Laws whole Hand-writing, and was as it were the compleating of all the rest.

But yet of this we are to be advised, that though the whole force of the Imputation flows from each part, and in the Imputation an one, entire, and undivided Righteousness is to be considered as resulting from all the parts together, yet this doth not hinder but that one part of your Justification may be more attributed to one part of the Righteousness than to another, (as Remission of Sins to the Death of Christ, and Justification of Life to his Active Obedience :) For the like is found in Sanctification, though the whole Sanctifying Vertue, and Energy flow together from his Death and Resurrection, yet Mortification is rather ascribed to the Vertue, and Power of Christs Death, as quickning, or vivification to his Resurrection. Because Mortification hath a greater similitude with his Death, as the Effect useth to have with its cause. So likewise Remission of Sins is rather attributed to Christs Death, Justification of Life to his Active Obedience, because of the greater Congruity, and correspondent proportion. As a whole Christ is made Mediator, and that he might be a it one, it was requisite, that he should partake of the Natures of the Persons between whom he was constituted Mediator, and yet both of them should coalesce into one Person, but without confounding them together: So that the whole Mediatorial Work should proceed from both Natures, should reside in both, and should be ascribed to both, both of them concurring to every Work of the Mediator, and the whole Christ is Mediator. In like manner it is as to the Work of this Mediation, and so the Matter is, that both the Active and Passive Obedience in our one entire Justification bears some resemblance to the two Natures of Christ in one Person. For since we owed both of them to the Law, he perform'd them both; and yet in the performance, they were not divided one from the other (that I may allude to that of David concerning Saul, and Jonathan) but were joyned with a most strait and indissoluble Bond. For Christ in his Life had suffering Actions, and he sustained in his Death Active Passions, as Bernard speaks: But in the Imputation, and Application of them to us, they coalesce with almost an Hypostatical Union into one entire Righteousness, so that our whole Righteousness proceeds from both, and resides in both, and it may be attributed to both, that the whole Righteousness is imputed to us.

C H A P. XX.

That the perfect Holiness of Christs Nature is Imputed to a Believer to justifie him against the Condemnation of Original Sin.

Romans viii. 1, 2, 3, 4

THE Right Context of Scripture is half the Interpretation, and therefore I will shew the Coherence of this with the foregoing Chapter.

[Now] These words refer to the former Chapter, and it is as if he had thus spoke, It therefore follows from what I have said: What had he said? He had made in his own Person the lamentable complaint of a poor Regenerate Soul in his constant Conflict; Often foyled, and somewhat prevailed upon, as in ver. 23. The Law in my Members brings me into Captivity to the Law of Sin. But it is but the Captivity of a Prince; One of a Prince-like Spirit, though put upon drudgery to do what he hates: What I hate, that do I: And for Holy Duties: I would do good saies he, but find no strength for it.

He describes here a Regenerate Man at his worst. It is evident, he speaks of a Godly Man, one in Christ, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord (saies this Man.) Therefore he is a Man in Christ. It is the greatest Misery in the World to such a one to be thus beset with Sin. There is no Cross like it, and therefore saies he, ver. 24, 25. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death. ver. 25. I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then, with the mind I my self serve the law of God; but with the flesh, the law of Sin. He gives Thanks for that deliverance he had in his Eye; that he should be delivered from the Power of Sin at last, and that he was freed from the guilt of it at present: And in the 25th verse he makes it clear, he intends such a one, (viz. a Godly Man;) so then (saies he) I my self with the mind do serve the Law of God.

Mark then the Scope: There is therefore now, &c. As if he should say, If it be the Case of a Man in Christ, to be as I have said; If he that yet serves the Law of Sin in a great measure, is yet a Man in Christ, because in his mind he serves the Law of God; Then plainly there is no Condemnation to such a one; for here is the worst case you can suppose him in. I will premise two or three things.

1. That what is said between verse 1. and verse 5. is meant of Justification.

2. That there is yet a Conflict between Grace and Corrupt Nature; and yet no Condemnation: It is meant of Non-Condemnation for the Corruption of our Nature. It might have been said, So far as a Regenerate Man is sinful, so far he is lyable to Condemnation: No, saith he, There is [no] Condemnation to such a Man; For he is in Christ, and shall be preserved in him.

There is no condemnation to them who walk, &c.] 1 They are in Christ Jesus.

2. They walk not after the Flesh, but after the Spirit: These two restrain non-condemnation to such. Their being in Christ is the true original ground why there is no condemnation to them. Though their conflict be great, and corruptions strong; yet being in Christ, and flying to him for help, there is no condemnation to them; who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

This is a description who these are.

But

But does he mean it of such as are led captive by Sin? Is there no condemnation to them? He must intend it of such, or he had said nothing. He is led captive; but there is a Spirit of Regeneration in him that works against his lusts, even in the midst of his Captivity. A poor Soul hath some weak resistances against Sin, even while he commits it: There is a thread of the renewed Nature still runs through him; he hath a pulse still though it be but weak, and Jesus Christ knows it. There is a stream of Spirit runs out against Sin, and that's his walk: For otherwise, when a Man has but weak resistances against Sin, and is overcome, he would be out of Christ, and be in a state of condemnation.

Observ. 1. That our being in Christ and united to him, is the fundamental constitution of a Christian. The state of a Christian is express'd so. Rom. 16. 7. He was in Christ afore me; i. e. He was converted afore me.

Observ. 2. That Union with Christ is the first fundamental thing of Justification and Sanctification, and all. Christ first takes us, and then sends his Spirit. He apprehends us first. It is not my being regenerate that puts me into a right of all those priviledges, but it is Christ takes me, and then gives me his Spirit, Faith, Holiness, &c. It is through our Union with Christ, and the perfect Holiness of his Nature, to whom we are united, that we partake of the priviledges of the Covenant of Grace.

For the Law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus.] What is this Law of the Spirit of Life? It is known by its opposite, Sin and Death, that is, inherent corruption: So then the Law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus, is the Holiness of his Nature: It is called, The Spirit of life, because it is the same that is in Christ: It is born of him; and this quickens us

Why called a Law? For two Reasons: 1. The inherent Holiness of Christs Nature, is called a Law in Psal. 40. 8. (which is of Christ) Thy law is within my heart. His delight to do Gods Will, flowed from the writing of the Law in his Heart. 2. Because being in him it had a right and authority to free us. A Law has power to justify or condemn, and this Law being in Christ, has power and authority to free us, by vertue of our Union with him. And if you would know what is the reason that there is no condemnation to those in Christ, notwithstanding all the remaining corruptions that are in them. It is because there is such a perfect Holiness in Christ, which being mine by my Union with him, frees me from the Law and Power of Sin and Death.

Hath made me free, &c.] As if he should say; It is the case of all the Saints: What belongs to me as a Christian, belongs to every one that is such, though never so weak and small.

For what the Law could not do.] There was no remedy else: Had God made us new Creatures, yet so far as corruption goes, so far had we been liable to condemnation. The Law was too weak for that work, to free us from the condemnation of indwelling Sin. I have a corrupt Nature, and I am but flesh, and therefore can do no good upon it. A Man is dead, and you'll give him Physick; but though it be the strongest in the World, it works not: Why? The Man is dead; that renders the strongest Physick perfectly weak: And thus all the helps that are, if given to corrupt Nature, could do nothing, as to the freeing you from the power of Sin: But Christ is the only universal remedy. Acts 13. 39.

What did God therefore do? He sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh; and for sin condemned sin in the flesh. The Holiness that is in Christs Nature, takes away the condemning power of Original Corruption in us. [In the likeness of sinful flesh;] i. e. With all the frailties that for Sin were brought upon the flesh of Man. Nay, he came into the World as one that was born in Sin; He took upon him the personage of one born in Sin: He was Circumcised; which signified the cutting off of Original Corruption: And his Mother must be purified as being defiled by the bearing of a sinful Child. He bore our likeness every way: And the end of this was, to condemn Sin in our Nature. His was but the likeness of sinful flesh, yet had power to condemn that Sin which is in us.

Condemned sin in the flesh.] That is, He put it out of commission. If Sin had its full power and authority, as by Moses Law it would have, it would condemn us ; but being put out of office it is to be executed. It is condemned by the holiness of Christs Nature ; and being condemned it self, it cannot condemn you. This is in respect of corruption yet remaining, than which nothing can be more comfortable to a poor Soul.

What is the ground of this Assertion ? There are two Reasons for it. One is, that whatever Jesus Christ did or suffered in this World for us, it hath an efficacy to free us ; it is as good Law as ever was. The Law saith, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the Law, to do them : And it speaks it to all that are under the Law : Gal. 3. 10. How is this Curse removed ? By as good Law as that it came in by ; ver. 13. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law, being made a curse for us : He took Sin upon himself, and so freed us. Every thing that Jesus Christ did, it was for us. He was Circumcised ; and this, by a just Law, procures for us the Circumcision of our corrupt Nature : Col. 2. 11. In whom also you are circumcised. You were Circumcised with him, because you were in him, and so this his Circumcision is yours, and made good upon you. This condemned Sin in your Flesh. There is never a fore we have, but Christ has a plaiter for it.

The other Reason of it is, The Ordination of the Father. God sent his own Son ; and he sent him for that very purpose, for Sin. What came Christ into the World for ? For Sin ; (not to Sin himself) he had not come into the World but for Sin ; namely, to take it away. He took away Actual Sin by his suffering ; and Original Sin, by his taking on him the likeness of sinful flesh, which in him was perfectly sanctified.

And he was the Son of God. Had God created a Man holy, and only put him into the World in the likeness of sinful flesh ; that would not have taken away our Sins : But for the Son of God to take on him our Nature, that only could do it : 1 John 1. 7. The blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin. The blood of Angels could not have done it, but from the Son of God in our Nature comes this vertue.

That the Righteousness of the Law might be fulfilled in us.] The Law had a Righteousness against us ; and whatever the Law saith, it saith it to them that are under the Law ; and what the Law saith, it saith it to Sinners. Well, let the Law say what it will, Christ answers it. It sayes you are a Sinner : Well, but Jesus Christ was made Sin for me. You are under the Curse : True, but Jesus Christ was made a Curse for me, that I might be made the Righteousness of God in him : The Law is answered here again. There be three parts of Justification : First, The taking away of Actual Sin ; this is handled in chap. 3. ver. 24. All have sinned, &c. His passive Obedience takes away the guilt of Actual Sin. But Secondly, We ought to have an Actual Righteousness reckoned to us ; this is handled in Rom. 5. 18. As by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation ; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all unto justification of life. The Active Obedience of Jesus Christ made many Righteous. Justification lyes not only in Pardon of Sin, but in the Righteousness of Christ imputed to us, and imputed to us as Adams Sin was.

But the Law is not fulfilled yet ; for we have corruption of Nature in us ? The Apostle therefore in this, Rom. 8. 4. he brings in the third part of Justification, viz. That Christ came into the World in our Nature, and fulfilled the Righteousness of the Law, in having that Nature perfectly holy. And now the Righteousness of the Law is fulfilled in all parts of it ; here is a perfect Justification, and we desire no more.

C H A P. XXI.

That not only our Legal but our Evangelical Righteousness is excluded from bearing any part in our Justification. Phil. 3. 9. explain'd and prov'd, that the Apostle there renounceth not only his Legal and Pharisaical, but his Evangelical Righteousness.

P H I L. iii. 9.

And be found in him, not having mine own righteousness which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Christ; the righteousness which is of God through faith.

T H E R E are two things to be considered and proved.

I. That by his own Righteousness, the Righteousness which is of the Law, is meant his inherent Righteousness of Sanctification, wrought in him after his Conversion.

II. That by the Righteousness which is by the Faith of Christ, and the Righteousness which is of God upon Faith, is to be understood the Righteousness of Christ which was out of himself (and not his own) imputed by God, and received by him, through Faith.

These are two Righteousnesses so inconsistent one with the other; that if a Man will [have] (as the word is) the one, he cannot be partaker of the other. And accordingly we find in his own case and example, that he perfectly resigns up, yea renounceth the one: That I may be found, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, and wholly betakes himself unto the other; But that which is through the faith of Christ; the righteousness of God which is upon faith: And both the renunciation of his own, and his eager contention after this other, do respect his Righteousness of Justification; or serve to set out the true Righteousness thereof, both negatively and affirmatively, wherein he would be found afore God, so as to be sure to be justified. This is a matter of infinite moment for every Christian rightly to understand, and to exercise his Faith about in like manner as our Apostle here doth, and that daily, both by way of renouncing what is a Mans own Righteousness, and by way of dearest acceptation and embracement of the other; which is done by Faith.

The terms of opposition stand thus.

1. Not mine own Righteousness; but, The Righteousness which is of God.
2. Not the Righteousness which is of the law; but, The Righteousness which is by the faith of Christ: Law and Faith standing in terms of utter incompatibility, as in respect to this Righteousness.

Let the Reader take this along with him, That whatever this his own righteousness, &c. renounced, will prove to be; as also the opposite Righteousness ousness which he betakes himself to, and which he calls, The Righteousness of God through faith; and the faith of Christ; (whatever that also in the arguing may prove to be) that he yet speaks of both as in respect to Justification, or his being accounted Righteous before God at the latter day.

There are none of any opinion, that I know of, that deny a Righteousness for Justification here to be meant; only the quarrel is, about what it is should be meant by that Righteousness he calls the righteousness of the faith of Christ, and the righteousness of God, as which he would have for his Justification; and oppositely, what his own Righteousness; and which is of the Law, should be that he renounceth: But all agree, that both are spoken in relation to his Justification, both what Righteousness he would at no hand have to be justified by; and also what he would be justified by.

And if you view the Controversie about Justification, in Pauls other Epistles, you will find it stated under the same terms that here it is. See Rom. 3. ver. 20. Therefore by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin. Ver. 21. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets. Ver. 22. Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all and upon all them that believe: Which place exactly corresponds with this; and in both, that Righteousness which is in opposition to that of the Law, is made our Righteousness whereby we are justified. So as I need not trouble my self any further, that this in the 9th verse is spoken in respect to justification.

1. But the Question is concerning his Negative; what he should mean by the Righteousness of the Law, which he would not have to be the matter of his Justification; whether he means that old Pharisaical Righteousness which he had afore-hand mentioned: ver. 6. Touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless; or whether the inherent righteousness he had acquired since his Conversion, namely, that of true Holiness, and his acts of Faith in Christ, and Repentance for Sin, should be that Righteousness which he here renounceth as to his Justification, though otherwise never so excellent and desirable, and useful, to other glorious ends and purposes.

2. Then again the Question will be as touching the Affirmative; What that Righteousness of God, and of Faith, should be meant whereby he would be justified. The Question is, whether the Righteousness of the New Creature in us, as it contains all the actings and principles of Faith, Repentance, and New Obedience, thence flowing as complex together, and wrought by the Grace of Christ in us, be not the Righteousness here intended; or whether it be not the Righteousness of Christ alone, which was extra or out of Paul himself, but as imputed by God, and received only by Faith, and imputed to him upon Faith, was the matter of his justification in the Affirmative part; when he sayes, But that (Righteousness namely) which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God upon faith.

In speaking to these two, I shall not ravel into the whole Doctrine of Justification; but keep strictly unto what the Text leads me to in this 9th Verse.

1. I begin with the Exposition of the Negative Clause; Not having mine own righteousness which is of the law. Herein are two things.

[1.] Some evidences that his own Righteousness in himself, after his Conversion, and not only or chiefly that old Righteousness under Pharisaism, is meant in this his renunciation.

[2.] That this interpretation comporteth well with the phrases here used, to stile that after Conversion, both

- (1.) His own Righteousness; and
- (2.) Which is of the Law.

And the necessity of speaking to these things, lyes in that appearance which is on the adverse side ; That Sanctification and Obedience after Conversion, are not our own, because wrought by Christ (say they) and the Grace of God. Nor is it to be stiled (say they) a Righteousness of the Law, because it is new Evangelical Gospel Obedience, and wrought by the Faith of Christ, and is termed Gods Righteousness, because he is the Author of it anew.

Chap. 21.

I shall first give some General Arguments, that his Old Pharisaical Righteousness afore Conversion, is not meant : But,

1. For a First Evidence, I observe how he had dispatched his renunciation of his Old Pharisaical Righteousness, over and over afore ; and that exprelly and particularly, and apart ; enumerated ver. 5, 6. and he utters that part in the time past, as that which he had done when converted, at his first acquaintance with Christ ; and how he did it for Christ, that is, for his first obtaining of him : And for his sake then, which he expresth ver. 7. What things were gain to me (that is, in his opinion to obtain Life by) those I accounted loss for Christ ; he speaks in the time past. But this here I say, he speaks in the present time now long after his said Conversion, and so in a separate manner from that foregone : And now he speaks after this manner, And doubtless, I count all things but loss. And in this speech are included not only (if at all) those things past, but all things whatever he had, that were his own of any kind, but especially what was his own Righteousness inherent in him after his Conversion, which yet was his own in a true sense, all which as to the point of justification he professeth to undervalue in comparison of Christ, and that Righteousness which he had by the Faith of Christ, as even he had despised his Old Righteousness before Conversion. For the evidence of this let us consider, that so it was, that at that present time wherein he spake this there had been a new stock of inherent Righteousness gained and acquired by him, which Christ had wrought in him upon and after his Conversion, and therefore it was in a true and proper sense his own Righteousness (as I shall anon shew) in distinction from that without himself, which is through the Faith of Christ. All which new wrought righteousness succeeded in the room of that old righteousness of Pharisaism, and which was now to him the best thing which he had, or could be supposed to have, which might properly be called his own, and wherein (if in any thing) he might have cause to glory anew. So then there is in this 8th Verse, a second or superadded renunciation of new things acquired after Conversion, and increased in him unto that present time he wrote this, and it is expressed in this 8th Verse, with a new comprehensive addition of all things he had to that now, or present time he wrote this in, wrapt together with those things that in time past were, or had been gain ; ver. 7. And that he involves all both old and new, is plain both from the forepart of that, ver. 8. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss. Of the old he had spoken ver. 7. This all things therefore here, extends it self further than to those things which he had renounced in the Verse before, even to all things else whatever beside those. And then he again redoubleth his speech out of the vehemency of his Spirit in this point, I have suffered the loss of all things : As if he had said, I then broke, as we use to say) once for all, and for altogether. I suffered a shipwreck of all past, present, and to come, either which then I had in lading of old stock, yea and for time to come, of all future expectations from what righteousness should be again laden in me. Remember that he speaks it especially in relation to Justification, so that he reckoned all the stock of righteousness which he had to trade with, as not in the least valuable to come in payment of that strict and compleat righteousness required by the Law : The light of which did then come upon him (as in Rom. 7. 9, 10. in his own Person, and of his own Conversion he speaks) and discovered to him, that an universal perfect righteousness was it which was ordained for Life : Gal. 3. 10. I thereupon (sayes he) suffered the loss of all past, or to come, as to the obtaining of Eternal Life by any righteousness of my own for ever. His timing it ; I have counted all things loss, and I do at present count them but loss ; loss; hath this plain meaning, that those all things he had then, and these all things he hath now, as well as then, he doth alike as to his Justification, count dung. He had once for all at his Conversion renounced his old righteousness, to the end to win Christ then, whom he thereupon did actually win. He came not then to him with any righteousness of his own to be justified thereby. And thus in the same way and manner he came to him still, and still he repeats the same language, I do count them all dung, that I may win Christ; in the same way of treaty as at the first, and still he speaks of Justification. As thus therefore he at Conversion had long before cashiered his old Pharisaical blamefulness as for Justification, so he did at present in the like manner also, undervalue and count dung all that was of his own righteousness, since to the end he might win Christ, and together with him, that righteousness which was Christs properly, instead of any of his own of what kind soever, or had ever been wrought, whether by Grace after, or without Grace before. He came not to Christ with a new righteousness to be justified thereby now after his Conversion, which he had not at first. And 'tis one and the same Christ also whom he would win, perfectly, entirely, and wholly the same in both, and for ever. There is not a new Justification by Christ after, that was not from the first, but from first to last he is one and the same Christ, as he is said to be yesterday, and to day, and for ever.

Book V.

If any therefore should Query, whether under these his present new things (as I may call them) he should involve his own righteousness acquired at and by, and since his Conversion unto Christ; I would reply, That his all things, what was before, and is at present (as thus set in opposition unto Christ, and what was Christs, as here they are) must surely be included in this particular of his own new righteousness; for it is plain, he means all things besides Christ; and what is purely Christs, whom he would win; for which he thus accounteth all loss; and otherwise he would have excepted it: But he is so far from excepting it, that in the 9th Verse he begins to specify that of all other as intended: And so descends from that general of all things, to make special and particular instances of that new righteousness of his own; and therein to shew, That as he had accounted all things in general but loss to win Christ, and to have an interest in his Person, as in ver. 8. so that he accounts particularly all his own righteousness but dung, that he might have Christs righteousness, the righteousness which is through the Faith of Christ, the righteousness of God by Faith; then which coherence of 7th, 8th and 9th Verses, nothing can be alledged more consonant of one thing with and to another.

And I would demand of the opposites hereto, in what respect it can be understood, that he should account all (even what was his new acquired righteousness) to be but dung; but in respect unto Christs righteousness, which was out of himself? For in all other respects, as namely, that it was the Image of Christ, purchased by Christ, and wrought by Christ, so he set an high value upon it; and therefore it could be for no other respect, he would trample on it as dung, but as in comparison to that righteousness which was Christs, and derived by Faith. Neither needed he to have thrown that away (as he doth) to win Christs Person; for the having it, was not only consistent with Christ, but flowed from being found in him.

2. Let us attentively mark the posture, or his placing of those following words about this his own Righteousness, and his being found in Christ. He says not first in order, That not having mine own righteousness, I may be found in Christ, and so thereby have that righteousness which is by the Faith of Christ; which in all reason should have been the ranging of the words, if he had intended in this place, that old righteousness which he had had out of Christ; for look as in the former Verse he had first said, I have suffered the loss of all things that I may win Christ; so here, if his old righteousness had been meant, he would have first said, That not having mine own righteousness, I may be found in Christ: For it is absolutely necessary unto our having Christ at first Conversion; to renounce and throw away in the first place, whatever is our own, that we may obtain him; this, in the order and course course of things, is absolutely necessary to be done) as a Mans hand that is full of dirt, must first empty it self by throwing that away, ere it can receive and take into it self a new handful that is offered to it; and therefore in that order it would have been here exprest; whereas he placeth it in a different posture; and in the first place saith, That I may be found in Christ; and then, not having mine own righteousness, but that which is of the faith of Christ, &c. What doth this broadly insinuate other than this, That upon his being found in Christ (which above all, he in the first place here desires) that that Righteousness of his own which he hath had, or desires to have wrought and continued upon his being found in him, might not be that Righteousness which he would be justified by; (for a Righteousness to be justified by, is his scope) neither that what thereof he hath hitherto had, or shall ever have from him upon his being found in him, as being a Righteousness of his own: The having which Righteousness is not opposite to his being found in Christ; for he first supposeth his being in Christ, and supposeth it to have been wrought through his being in Christ, and to accompany and go along with his so being; (whereas his old Pharisaical was perfectly opposite to his being in Christ, and had been first absolutely renounced by him) but this new Righteousness flowing from Christ in him, though it were not opposite to his being in Christ, yet it being (as to the point of Justification) opposite to that other Righteousness which is Christs own Righteousness, wherein Justification doth alone consist; he therefore renounceth this of his own after he is found in Christ, as to such a purpose; and had good reason so to do, because God had provided a much better, infinitely better righteousness of his own as the Donour, and of Christ himself as the Worker, to be imputed to him and received by Faith.

And this considered, the plain scope of the Apostle in this Verse is, That whereas there was a twofold righteousness, and both flowing from union with Christ and a Mans being one with him, or being found in him.

1. One being a righteousness of Sanctification, which is from Christ as the Author of it, which yet he calls his own, because wrought in himself as the subject of it, though by Christ as the Author.

2. Another, which is the righteousness of Justification, which is the righteousness even of Christ himself, and Gods righteousness, as he calls it, imputed to him upon believing, and received by Faith.

And he is to have one of these for his Justification, to plead afore the Judgment-seat of God: In this choice I would not have that of mine own I have had from him efficiently (sayes he) since I was found in him; but I would be found in him to have that righteousness of his own, which is conveyed by a Faith going out of my self unto him for it. For if I betake my self to mine own new righteousness, though I have it from him, yet because it is mine, it comes under the power and jurisdiction of the Law, and will be judged of by the tenour of it, and so I must abide by a sentence according to the Law, in case I seek to be justified by it; and thereby, if I plead it, I shall be cast.

Add unto this (not to make a new Argument of it) that he having first said, And be found in Christ, it had been utterly preposterous to have added after it, not having mine old Pharisaical Righteousness: For his not having or renouncing that old righteousness, must necessarily be supposed first done, ere he could be found in Christ. This were as absurd as for a Wife new married to a second Husband, her former Husband being dead, for her to say, I would be found married to my second Husband, and not found married to my former Husband, when as he is supposed first dead; and so that Marriage and Obligation utterly dissolved, ere she could be married to the new. To what purpose should she say, she would be found married to her new Husband, and not to her old, when as he is dead, or she could not seek to be found in the other? This is the Apostles own comparison, Rom. 7. speaking of the very case afore us; namely, how the Law being first dead, and we

Book V. unto it, then it is we became married to Christ. I will for more plain evidence sake set down the words, from ver. 1. to ver. 5. Know ye not brethren (for I speak to them that know the law) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman that hath an husband, is bound by the law to her husband, so long as he liveth: But if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then, if while her husband liveth, she is married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God.

3. A Third Evidence is from the mind, meaning, and drift of his Spirit, or the pulse thereof, as it beats in uttering those words, Not having mine own Righteousness. We must consider that he is not here upon a set delivering Doctrinal Assentions (though they are to be inferred thence) but upon a declaration of what was now, and had been since his Conversion, the continual exercise of his Spirit towards Christ, as to the point of his living on him for Justification through Faith in this Verse, as in respect unto living on him for Sanctification, and other things in the other following Verses. This to be his general scope is apparent by the particulars he pursues, and the manner of his declaring it, namely, in his own example, which he presseth on them after, ver. 15. and 17. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in anything ye be otherwise minded God shall reveal even this unto you. Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an example. Now this being a daily exercise of his faith in living upon Christ for a Righteousness to be Justified by, he doth express his vehement Solitude, and most earnest heedfulness and warriness, that his Spirit should be carried right, and be sure, that he pitch upon what was the true Righteousness that God had appointed to justifie Men by; as being a matter of infinite moment, as his Discourses in his Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, do shew, it being said therein, That it is the Glory of the Gospel to reveal that Righteousness, &c. His inserting so careful a renunciation Negative, [Not having] as entering a Caution about it over and above, shews this. And indeed to be guided unto the right truth in this point, is a matter of wonderful difficulty, and Spiritual nicety (if I may in that word express it; for the thing in it self is truly such) Souls being apt to stumble at this stumbling stone, as Rom. 10. 3. And hence it is, we find him here in the practice of his Soul concerning this thing, to have been most wary, as to the management of his Soul about it. He had been deceived once in this point, and thought that Righteousness to have been unto Life and Justification, which proved to be to Condemnation and Death, as Rom. 7. and he would not be now deceived a second time. Whilst therefore he sayes, 1. Negatively, Not having mine own Righteousness; he utters at once a great and real danger if he should pitch upon what is not his true Righteousness for Justification, and withal, a most perfect jealousy and fear he had of this Righteousness, lest he should be left unto it after all, as his only Righteousness: But especially, lest his own Spirit should in the daily exercises of it, be tempted unto that righteousness he intends so, as to mind and regard it as that which looked like unto that righteousness, which he desires, now he is found in Christ, to be justified by; he speaks as a Man that avoided a Serpent. Now let us but consider, whether such an exercise, and frame, and apprehension of Spirit as this, doth or might at all suit with the supposition of his old Pharisaical righteousness, to be the object of this exercise of thoughts and jealousies, &c. Or at least, whether of the two, this other of his new acquired righteousness of Holiness, since he was found in Christ, doth not find more compliance and agreeableness to this exercise of his specified, and so to be intended far rather as the subject thereof.

1. For us to imagine that he meant to express any apprehension he had lest he might be found in his own Pharisaical righteousness at the latter day, and so in respect of the danger of the thing itself to befall him; this were irrational: For from whence should that arise? Not from any suspicion he should ere he dyed return unto it again, either to trust in it for his righteousness; or that he should act according to the Principles thereof again, this were to suppose he thought he might one day be tempted from Christ whom his Soul so dearly pursued after, and betake himself to his old course, and turn Pharisee again, according unto those Principles he had then walk'd in: Nor was it that he falling from Christ, and from what righteousness he now had, should have no other left for him at the latter day, but that old righteousness to stand upon afore God at that day, for he was sufficiently convinced that that was no righteousness. It cannot then be the apprehension of that fate to befall him, that made him so solicitous. This is as to what may be supposed in reality.

2. Nor was it a fear and jealousy he had lest his own Heart should betray him unto a recourse unto it for his Justification; as once when he was without Christ he had, and lived on it. But the righteousness he here speaks of, was a righteousness concerning which he expresseth a jealousy of, lest by having it in his eye in his daily exercise of Faith for Justification, he might derogate from that other righteousness he had in his aim.

The words import an avoidance of being found to have it, so much as in our thoughts, to any such purpose; not so much as to cast an eye, or look at any time upon it, as any way a righteousness to be regarded, as for his Justification. He would not be found having it in his eye, nor the least glance towards it, for any such purpose. Much more not having any such reliance in the least degree upon it, not for the whole World. And he speaks it not only for the present, but for the future all along, during the whole course of his following Life, and not in relation only to his being found in it at the day of Judgment. For the whole current of his speech whereby he utters both this and what follows, shews what was the exercise of his Spirit, the vehement contention of his Soul which he daily acted touching his Justification, he therein speaking it of himself as a practical example unto others, as was said ver. 10. Also he utters his care, that if possible, God might never take him tardy in this manner in his own Righteousness, not for a moment in his Life.

Now, if his not having mine own righteousness, hath this respect in it, then for us to think and imagine, that this care and solicitude, and daily practice of his should be ever used, and taken up about his old Pharisaical righteousness, fearing lest his heart should ever be intangled with that any more; this would be yet far more absurd. What? that Paul who had been so long and so highly acquainted with Christ, should be afraid of his own Spirit, lest it should in the exercise of it be found looking any more unto that old, cast, unrighteous (wholly unrighteous) righteousness; or to have the least regard thereto; much less to have a thought of any expectancy of a righteousness of it, or from it, who can imagine it? Nay, I may say, it were an high folly to conceive that this old righteousness could have the face, or front, or appearance, to tempt his Heart in the least thereunto. Certainly not; for he had been so thorowly and unrecoverably convinced of the utter wickedness (instead of its being a righteousness) of all those who are in that condition, as he had taken a final and eternal farewell of that, whatever should become of him, or whatever other righteousness he might betake himself unto; and that so fully and finally, as that never any such thought should so much as look into his Heart again; much less be entertained any more.

There is no ordinary Convert, that hath been thorowly convinced of the unrighteousness of his estate in Nature, that ever returns unto a good opinion thereof any more. The Law came, and I dyed, (saves our Paul of himself, Rom. 7.) and all his thoughts of Life by the Law, did perish therewith; as when a Man dyes, it is said, that his thoughts perish.

Book V.

But oppositely, if we take into consideration that other inherent new-wrought Righteousness of Sanctification within him and us, tho' wrought by Christ and by Grace, there is a real and continual likelyhood, lest that should be ever and anon offering it self to our thoughts to be look'd at for our justifying Righteousness, and so that interpretation thereof will well bear all this jealousie and exercise of Spirit about it, as to this matter. The root of the old corruption of self-confidence doth still remain, when the old Righteousness that formerly was the matter of that confidence, is wholly cut off, withered and dead; and ever and anon that old root will be sprouting forth of new branches of confidence from that new Righteousness; and daily temptations and puttings forth there are thereto. That spick and span New-Creature, the Image of Adams Holiness in his Creation, and of Christ the Second Adam, is alluring the eyes of the Soul unto it self, to trust in it; and because it is a true Righteousness before God, and accepted by him, as Acts 10. 35. But in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him, though not for Justification; yet we are apt hereupon to be diverted from Christ and his Righteousness for Justification, by glances at, yea, porings upon it, as our Righteousness for Justification also. He that discerns not such workings of Spirit in him, knows not his own heart; yea, and there is a prevailing of this in some Mens hearts who are Godly, that hath occasioned the pleading for this new Righteousness, and arguing for Justification by it.

There is nothing so Natural to us in all estates as this, both before we have Grace and after. Before we have Grace we trust to Moral Righteousness; see Rom. 10. 3 For they being ignorant of Gods righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. Men do sibi fidere, (as the Stoicks Maxime was) trust to themselves; and after Grace, upon the same Principle we are apt to trust to our own Holiness, even because it is our own; upon which ground he here renounceth it. Men are wonderfully prone to value, or at least regard it too much as a Righteousness of their own. It is a saying which the Papists quarrel at Luther for, yet spoken by him for this respect now mentioned and now insisted on, and fetch'd out of deep experience of the haunts of his own heart, in having recourse unto what was in himself; Cavendum est a peccatis, sed multo magis ab operibus bonis; A Man must take heed of his Sins, but much more of his good Works: And the danger of the hearts so trusting to them (which our Apostle was infinitely sensible of) is, that in so doing, a Man doth derogate from what God and Christ are (as was said) most tender of, and most jealous in. At so great a height do they hold up the value and the esteem of their own justifying Righteousness above all other things, wherein their Glory is concerned.

There was then a just reason for the Apostles entering his protestation so vehemently against this Righteousness, and uttering his fear and jealousie of his own heart about it; and lopping off continually these sproutings of it, as they did arise. And when ever he came to exercise Faith about Justification, he had reason to speak resolutely, what Righteousness he would have, and what not.

Only let me put in this Caution ere I conclude this: Far be it from us to understand his vote and desire here, not to have a Righteousness of his own of Sanctification, simply, or not at all; his desire is sufficiently shewn to be after that, even to a perfection of it, in ver. 12. such a perfection, as if it had been possible, he would have attain'd that which those shall have that are risen from the dead; yea, and to have had his whole portion and allotment of Holiness, which was in Christs hands to bestow, presently bestowed upon him; ver. 11, 12, 13. And yet whilst he would thus have it to glorifie God and Christ, he would not have it as his Righteousness to stand by for his Justification afore God; nor would he have his heart regard it to any such purpose. But as so considered, he divests himself of it, and undervalues it, for that superexcelling Righteousness of Christ.

My Fourth and last Argument is, That this his old Pharisaical Righteousness was not a Righteousness, nedom Justitia, as Chamier and others have urged. I add this to what they urge this way, That after his being so enlightened and possessed against his old Righteousness, and seeking to be found in Christ, he would not, at any hand have styled that as a Righteousness, nor give it the Honour to Name it such, but the perfect contrary, even utter Wickedness and Sinfulness. Would he call (think we) his persecuting the Church, though out of Zeal to the Law,) whereof at ver. 6. he had spoken) and which in his Pharisaisme he esteemed as a part, yea, the eminent Top and Crown of his Legal Righteousness when he did it out of Zeal for the Law; Would he now call this a Righteousness of the Law upon any account whatsoever? The Issue and upshot of which Zeal was to leave upon him, the style of his having been the chiefest of Sinners, 1 Tim. 1. 15. And would he honour this with the Denomination of a Righteousness? 'Tis true indeed, that of that other part, (the best part) of his Deportment in Conformity to the outward Letter of the Commands (the oldness of the Letter, as elsewhere he sleights it) He thus speaks in the same ver. 6. That touching the Righteousness which is in the Law he was blameless, yet he minceth it you see. He durst not now say, he was Righteous according unto it, in the least degree, but only blameless; that is, he had an outward Conversation as might obtain the Name of blameless as afore Men, that were not able to charge him with the breach of it in an outward gross Act: But this was far from that Righteousness which the Law commands, by the Righteousness of which, he aimed to be Righteous; but himself confesseth, he was but blameless afore Men; at best. But now, the Righteousness he had of Sanctification since he was Converted, had a true, real, inward Conformity to the Spirit of the Law in the inward Man; and so a Righteousness (though imperfect) answering to the Spiritual part of the Law, (the newness of the Spirit, as Rom. 7. 6.) as well as the outward, He was now a Jew inwardly, and not in the Letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God; Rom. 2. 29. and so had now, and never till now a true Righteousness of the Law inherent to renounce for Christ, but now he had: For in this respect, he that doth righteousness is righteous; 1 John 3. 7. In that former state, he was in a true sense, without the law, Rom. 7. 9. that is without the true Spiritual Light of the Law; and therefore much more was he then without any true Righteousness of the Laws in the least degree. It was then neither a Righteousness, nor of the Law; and therefore, if we consider but the thing it self, that which he calls his own Righteousness, must be that since his Conversion.

Tous Bishop
geth it.

But you will say, He speaks thus of it, according to the Opinion himself had of it whilst a Pharisee; then he did within himself verily think it to be a true Righteousness, and it was esteemed such by others, and therefore he speaks of it at that rate here, as often in Scripture we find things spoken of according to the opinion Men have of a thing; and so, that on this account it should be, that he styles the Righteousness of the Carnal Jews, their own Righteousness, Rom. 10. 3.

The Reply is (and it strengthens the Argument) that you must consider the Time and Season wherein he spake it, and so spake it according to his own opinion of himself at that Season: 'Tis at the present time; Now, many years after his Conversion, he saies it, as in ver. 8. he had indigitated: [I do, and I do at present] and the season was, when the darkness was now past, 1 John 2. 8. and the true light had now shined. And therefore he now speaks of things as they were in reality; the Commandment came, and so I having the true light of it, I dyed, saith he, Rom. 7. 9. to all that which I esteemed to be Righteousness, and for Life afore: And I am in so deep a Conviction of it, as never after will I call it Righteousness any more. And therefore looking now upon it with the same eyes, now when he uttered this, that he did then at his Conversion, he would not deign it the Name of Righteousness, not now at last, who at best had entitled it but blamelessness, ness, even just now afore, but would rather affirm no Righteousness to be at all in it.

And though speaking according to the Opinion that others had or might have of themselves, he terms theirs their own Righteousness, when yet they never had any; yet here speaking of himself, in his own present Case, and of his Righteousness at a Season when indeed he had both a new Righteousness of his own, truly such, and having had it long, and also new Eyes to behold things with, and was able to Judge Righteous Judgment of things as they were; should he now be thought to speak at such a rate, and call that a Righteousness which he afore never truly had, but in a false Opinion of it? What should he now express his old Opinion of it, and mean that, rather than that which is in it self a true Righteousness, and which to be sure, he had now in truth; This namely of Sanctification, conformable unto the Law, as it is a Rule of Holyness? Who can think thus of the Apostle?

When those that were Saints already converted speak of themselves, and of their Righteousness, renouncing it as to their Justification, as the Apostle doth here, Iza. 64. 6. they speak there of it in this manner, But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags: And Dan. 9. 18. We do not present our supplications afore thee for our righteousnesses, but for thy great mercies. Can we think that these meant other than the Righteousness of true Sanctification they had (though defiled with Sin! yes certainly, of their new Nature as the best thing they had since their Regeneration; and so is this Speech of our Apostle here to be parallel'd and understood.

The next Inquisition is, Whether the new inherent Righteousness of a Believer may be termed a Mans own Righteousness?

The ground of the Objection made by those that would have the Old Pharisical Righteousness only to be so understood, is this, that they do distinguish and say, That that only is properly a Mans own Righteousness, and of the Law, which is done by the strength of those Principles a Man had in Nature, and the force of that Light and Motives or Provocations of the Law, either that of Nature, or the Moral Law; and so may truly and properly be termed our own: But that which is after Conversion, that is not to be call'd ours, because wrought by the help of Grace, and is called Gods Righteousness, in that respect. And this Objection may be edged with this, That when the Legal Righteousness of Unregenerate Men is spoken of, there indeed it is called a Mans own Righteousness; as of the Jews, Rom. 10. 3. For, they being ignorant of Gods righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the Righteousness of God.

Nihil magis nostrum quam quod est infusum a Deo
Zanch. in verba

The Answer or Reply is, That Inherent Righteousness after Conversion is styled frequently in Scripture ours, or our own; and the very Principles and Habits of Graces, though infused by God; yet because we are the Subjects in whom they are wrought, and into whom they are infused; they are therefore truly styled ours. Nay, nothing is more ours, saies Zanchy on the place, insomuch as it is said, not only that they are wrought in us, but that we our selves are the workmanship that is new created, when these Inherent Graces are wrought, Eph. 2. 10. When Adam was created of God, and all his Graces with him: I hope it may be said, his Vertues were his own. And thus, the Principles or Habits, wherein we are Passive are yet styled ours. Then the Actions, Works and Operations which flow from thence, are much more ours; for therein we actively concur with God, and they are our Actions and Works, flowing from the Vital Principles of Habitual Graces and Mans Will, &c. which are in our selves, and indeed our selves: God gives indeed, that we may will, and gives us to will, but still it is we that will. There is nothing more the gift of God than Faith, Eph. 2. 8. yet that faith given us is reckoned (I trowe) Our Faith: Christ terms it their Faith

Faith, Matth. 9. 2. and thy Faith, ver. 22. and your Faith is spoken of in all the World; Rom. 1. 8.

Chap. 21.

Thus all other Graces and the Workings of them are called ours: From Me is thy fruit found, Hos. 14. 8. From God as the Efficient, and yet thine as the Subject. The Prayers we make, although one exercise, we perform, is more the work of the Holy Ghost in us, Rom. 8. 26, 27. yet it is said, They are our Prayers, and not the Holy Ghosts Prayers, or that they are his Prayers.

3. We may consider, That it is so called in opposition to that Righteousness that is anothers, which is ours no otherwise, then as imputed to us; It is not inherent in us.

Now if you will further see the ground the Scripture gives, Why the Righteousness that is thus ours, though by Grace, is excluded from justifying of us, it is even because it is ours; Subjective, or Subjectively, although wrought by the Grace of God efficiently.

And by the way it is strange, that those Men that make good Works to depend more, (or as much at least) on the Will of Man; than on the Grace of God, in Gods co-working with Man, and whilst they are discoursing upon that head, do derogate from that Grace so much, that yet they should, when they treat of the point of Justification, then magnifie these Works by this; That they are the Effects of the Grace of God, and not our own, so to prefer them to the dignity of Justifying of us, Detracting from the Grace of God in both; whilst we that ascribe so much to the Grace of God in the working of Grace in us, further than they, even to his working the Will and the Deed, should yet contend that these Works of Grace are excluded notwithstanding from all, or any ingrediency into our Justification; because they yet may be truly termed our Works, and our Righteousness, comparatively, unto a more Divine, Glorious Righteousness, which is anothers, which is styled here, The Righteousness of God, as wholly his, abstracted from any thing that is of his Work that is in us, and in full opposition to this other of ours. Rom. 4. 2. For if Abraham was justified by works, he hath whereof to glory, but not before God. And the instance from his Example is such as is invincible; for he speaks not of Abrahams Works afore his Conversion, when in Chaldea, and an Idolater, and so to exclude boasting therein, but (when in medio pietatis cursu,) when he was in the midst, and in an high course and progress of Holyness, many years after his Conversion, and to that time that Speech of his being justified, (which follows) doth evidently refer, ver. 3. But what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for Righteousness. For if any one in reasoning will fetch a Maxim or Rule, out of an instance, that instance or example, must extend and be proportioned to that Rule; and that Rule or Maxime also must suit and agree with what the instance alleadged, most properly concerns, and is extended unto. Now, the Apostles Maxime afore had been, Rom. 3. That God is so, or in such a manner a Justifier, ver. 26. as to exclude boasting by Works, ver. 27, 28. Where is boasting then? It is excluded, by what law? Of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude, That a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law. And for the proof of what Works that Maxime reacheth or is extended unto; he brings Abraham his being justified Faith without Works, even then when he had done and wrought so many Holy works after Conversion: Thus in this succeeding Chap. 4. at the beginning. Therefore necessarily must this Maxime extend to those and such Works of Abraham, as were after Conversion in a special manner; and from that instance of Abraham, it must be intended as a general Rule to all Believers, and to exclude all Mens Works, though never so Holy, as well as his: Yea, if we examine it, that is the very Ground and Reason why those Works are also excluded, as well as those afore; and it will prove to be even this in

The sincerity of [your] Love saies the Apostle, 2 Cor. 8. 8. which is called theirs; because though wrought by God, chap. 9. last, which he thanks God for, as an unspeakable gift, yet was wrought and subjected in their Wills, as Verse 10. of the 8. Chap.: You have begun not onely to do, but to be willing; and yet was from God who works in us to Will and to do, of His own good Pleasure, Phil. 2. 13. Why should I instance more? Both your Faith in Christ and love to all Saints, Eph. 1. 15. The like Phil. 1. 5. So, good works, Ours: Thy good works, Rev. 2. 2. and thy Patience: chap. 3. 10. Is your Patience possess your souls, Luke 21. 19. Psal. 18. 20, 26, 35. According to my Righteousness God recompensed me.

my Text, that they are our own, though wrought by the Grace of God: Then which, nothing is more point blank against their Assertion and Evasion: The Ground or Reason whereupon, his and all the Saints Works after Conversion, are excluded from any influence into justifying us, is, That boasting be excluded.

And if it be further demanded, wherein should the danger of boasting lye, if we were justified by such good and holy Works after Conversion: This is reduced to no other but the very same in my Text, that a Man might say, They were his subjective, and that they are Acts of his Will, and a Righteousness of a Mans own, although efficiently wrought by God.

The other instance for this is Eph. 2. 8, 9, 10. For by grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of your selves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them. Where, Observe,

1. That therefore VWorks are excluded, and Faith only admitted, upon this account, To exclude boasting, consonant unto Rom. 3. 27, and 28. Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what Law? Of Works? Nay; but by the Law of Faith. Therefore we conclude, That a Man is justified by Faith, without the Works of the Law.

2. That yet, these that are excluded are such good VWorks, and Holy Principles of Grace, together with their VWorks, as are wrought in Christ, and by the Grace of God, (which is full to the point now in hand) for ver. 10. he saies, For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. Here, both the Principles are said to be of God, we are a new workmanship created in Christ to good works, and also the works themselves are said to be from God in those words, which God hath prepared, that we should walk in them. He hath prepared them, and prepared us in that he formed and fashion'd us anew, and hath ordained those VWorks also, but still not to give us the right of Salvation by them; but, for that he hath ordained Faith (that wholly ascribes all to his Grace and to Christ) to do that; so as 'tis all one with him to say (as here he doth) Yee are saved by Grace, and saved by Faith, but Holyness and VWorks, and the New Creature he hath ordained only to be the way to the possession of that Salvation, which Grace through Faith doth Interest us into; so there 'tis said, That we should walk in them. And these good VWorks and Holy Principles, are also but a part of that Salvation given us.

3. And chiefly, Observe, How he gives this as the very reason, VWhy their VWorks are excluded; because, although wrought every way, by this Grace, (yet, because, (as is manifested) we are the Subject of them. We are his workmanship, and that we should walk in them: This [we] spoils all as to Justification and Salvation; for there would arise such a boasting as God could not bear, if we were saved by them: That is, so as to obtain right of Salvation thereby.

Yea, (which I most of all observe, this is the contrary unto what our bold Assertors do argue) whereas they say, that because they are of Grace, therefore they may justify without prejudice to Grace.

4. The Apostle carries that very thing as the reason to the contrary, and to exclude all inherent Holyness after Conversion, ver. 10. as well as afore, even for this reason, because they are the effects of a New Creation, and so given upon a supernatural Account of meer Grace, and anew bestowed by Grace, after the great forfeiture of the first Creation Holyness, and due to Mans Nature then, if God meant to have Created Man at all. VWhich Holyness so bestowed, and upon that account did then justify Man, and was so so appointed to do, as the Phrase Rom. 4. 4. spoken of the Covenant of Works; is; which yet I would rather translate Dueness than Debt. But that Priviledge works had by the Law of Creation was utterly forfeited by Sin, and God layd his hand upon the forfeiture and took it, and took Justification into his own hands, as that it should never be so more. But, if he justified a second time, it should be every way by Grace, so and in such a manner, as not at all by works of what kind soever. Which account is given in the instance of Abraham in that Rom. 4. and more fully, Rom. 11. 5. and is therefore call'd Gods righteousness super-Creation, supernatural righteousness, so that this Maxime ariseth invincibly out of this place, Ephes. 2. That the borrowed and restored Grace of Holyness since the fall shall never justifie; but these works upon Conversion are such; read ver. 10. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.

God was infinitely tender of his Glory in point of Justification above all other of the parts and pieces of the application of Salvation unto us, and so to preserve the Glory of it to himself, and as that it should be his righteousness alone, and his Son Christs; for in other respects and to other ends, he admits Works to have some share, notwithstanding they be ours. Thus when we shall come to possess Heaven and that Degree and Measure of Glory allotted us, it will be said, that God rewards us secundum opera, according to works, though not propter, or for Works. So far good Works are admitted, and yet the Saints are therein kept from boasting, because the Fundamental Original Right, and great Charter unto Salvation, is past afore, and given upon another Accompt, and in point of Justification, and our Right to Heaven, God is so tender and Jealous, as he utterly and altogether excludes Works, for giving a Right thereunto in the least: 'Tis the Apostles words, Rom. 3. 27. He will have nothing to do with them, when it comes to that Action of his, he hath not, nor will ever have any regard to them therein: Nor should he, and therefore the Apostle had no eye to them here: But it is Gods Righteousness; wholly Gods, and no way, or in no respect ours, but meerly receiving it; which is here set as the opposite to Paul's My Righteousness in the Text.

C H A P. XXII.

That God Appointed Christ to be the Great Shepherd, to take care of the Elect Souls given to him. The mighty care and diligence which Christ exercises in discharge of this Office.

HEBREWS xiii. 20, 21.

Now the God of Peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the Sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Covenant,

Make you perfect in every good work to do his Will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be Glory for ever and ever. Amen.

THE Reason of the pertinent coherence of one thing with another in a parcel of Scripture is often at first view not obvious, as here why Christ as Shepherd, and then his Resurrection, are expressed under these Phrases of being brought again from the dead, and that by the Blood of the Everlasting Covenant: How these should suit at first view is strange: And yet there is a great Harmony in the joynting every one of these one with another. Therefore for the opening the words, I shall do three things.

1. Shew their Aspect or Reference to what went afore.
2. Shew why he brings in this Title of Shepherd in this Epistle.
3. Shew their Correspondency among themselves and pertinency of each to each; Together with each particular.
4. Shew their Reference to the Prophecies of the Old Testament.

1. As to their Reference to what went afore, we may consider them
  1. In their immediate Reference to what went just afore.
  2. Remotely to some Principal Matters in this Epistle.

1. As they refer immediately to ver. 17, 18.

1. Where he had made mention of himself a Pastor over Pastors and Churches, an Apostle and other their ordinary Pastors, and from thence suitably upon this next occasion of mentioning Christ, he speaks of him as the Great Shepherd over Apostles and all, and as one that could do that for them which no Apostle or Pastor could do, viz. To perfect them in every good work; None of them were sufficient for one good thought of themselves, 2 Cor. 4. much less for any good work, or for every good work, especially to perfect others whom they were set over in the Lord, which Christ their Shepherd could through their Ministry, and therefore addresseth his Prayer for this to God through him.

2. Himself (who was a great Instrument through Christ of good unto their Souls) was now absent and far off from them. The last foregoing words were that they would pray he might be restored to them the sooner; and here here he chooseth forth such expressions about Christ, &c. as might prompt them with fit matter, or the most effectual Arguments for that request, and an help unto their Faith in that particular: Though this is done obliquely, the matter here more directly serving unto that other Petition that follows. But this Argument lies in this, That that God who had brought back the Great Shepherd by his Blood, &c. That the same God (who only could) would restore him to them out of all Dangers, &c. through the same Blood.

Observ. 1. Jesus Christ bears and bore the same Offices wherein after he places his Officers under him in the Church; thereby sanctifying of all Offices and Officers, which is a great Comfort to Church-Officers, and to the People of God and Churches. He hath the Title of Διάκονος, Minister and Deacon of the Circumcision, Rom. 15. 8. and Matth. 20. 28. and Mark 10. 45. Luke 22. 27. Bishop or Elder, 1 Pet. 2. 25. A Shepherd or Pastor, 1 Pet. 5. 1, 4, 5. An Apostle, Heb. 3. 1. Only with this difference he the great Shepherd, he the Chief Bishop, &c.

Observ. 2. The Blood and Resurrection of Christ as of the Great Shepherd, do in their Vertue bring Ministers that have a good Conscience, and their People together again: God restores them when driven away and scattered; fetcheth them out of Prison, from silence, &c. Yea, out of Deaths and Dangers, and brings them and their People together through the Efficacy of these, 2 Cor. 4. 11, 14. There is not a Church-Meeting we have, but it is in the Vertue of Christs Blood and Resurrection.

2. The words are a Prayer in the Conclusion of this Epistle, and the Materials of it do refer to some Principal Matters treated of in this Epistle, whereof the summ is gathered up into a Prayer as the Conclusion.

1. In this Epistle the Apostle affects to set forth Christ under several Titles, which the Old Testament had given him, and which had been taken for granted to be intended of the Messiah by the Jews themselves he wrote to. As,

1. A Captain of Salvation, chap. 2. As the Angel that appeared to Joshua, styles himself, Josb. 5. 14, 15.

2. The Apostle, chap. 3. or him whom God would send as the Prophet like to Moses. chap. 3. 1, 2, and so on.

3. The Great High Priest, chap. 4. and so throughout this Epistle.

4. And accordingly here at last in this Prayer he attributes to him another Title of Shepherd, as famous in the Prophecies as any which includes all of his Offices, as I shall shew.

5. Under whom these Jews were become as Sheep: One Shepherd and one Sheep-fold. And all both Jews and Gentiles who are under him called unto Peace and Unity by the God of Peace.

6. He had treated also of that New Covenant, chap. 7, 8, 9, &c. Whereof Christ was the Founder.

7. Of that Blood of his which had confirmed that Covenant, chap. 9. throughout.

8. Of the Vertue of that one Offering, Potent and Effectual to perfect for ever them that his Blood sanctifies, Heb. 10. even to a Non-Remembrance of Sins for ever, and procuring God to be at peace for ever, I will remember them no more.

9. of Gods raising him up to sit down at Gods right hand, having purged away our Sins, so chap. 1. and chap. 8.

10. He had treated of the Everlastingness of this Salvation and Covenant and Redemption.

11. And as all along and specially towards the Conclusion of the Epistle, having Exhorted to many good Works and Duties thereupon he shuts up all with this Prayer, the Summ of all these, containing a Motive and Persuasive in them with God a most Efficacious one to move him to grant Power to enable them to do all those things which he had exhorted unto, and such as had themselves withal in them the most Operative Vertue perfectly to work the same in us, Namely, his Blood and Resurrection. And, That God (prays he)

he) through these make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be Glory for ever and ever, Amen.

Observe a great Ground for Ministers to gather up in their after-Prayers the strength of what hath been said in the Sermon; which the Antients stiled a Collect, as in the Common-Prayer appears to this day in making a brief Collect of what had been just afore read out of the Scriptures, and forming them up into a short Prayer.

Why is it the Apostle should insert this Title of Shepherd and Great Shepherd in this Epistle?

Answ. The pertinency of his doing so in writing to the Hebrews doth many wayes appear. The Jews expected the Messiah to be as a Shepherd to them, as David their King, and Moses had been, who were Types of him. Moses and Aaron, Psal. 77. 20. led the People as Sheep. David, Psal. 78. 22. and under the Name of David as a Shepherd God had promised the Messiah to them, Ezek. 34. 23. And I will set up one Shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David, he shall feed them, and he shall be their Shepherd: And Christ himself when he came, had represented himself to them under that notion, John 10. throughout that Chapter.

Now those Prophecies giving Him that Title, it was meet the Apostle should somewhere in this Epistle refer unto this being as great, and the Prophecy thereof as eminent as of any other: He in this Epistle citeth, and it is his apparent design throughout the Epistle to refer unto and quote out of the Old Testament what was most eminent in Christ either about his Titles or Offices, onely he chose to do this of his being a Shepherd here last in a brevity by way of prayer.

That he hath such an eye and scope in this is evident by comparing the passages here and those Prophecies together.

I shall but single forth that one Place, Ezek. 34. and compare it with what is spoken here.

1. There, God promiseth to make a Covenant of Peace with his People by Christ as a Shepherd; so ver. 25, And here, you have 1. God in relation to this performance stiled The God of Peace. 2. The Covenant also mentioned.

2. There, he promiseth to set up over them this Shepherd, ver. 23. Here, The God of Peace brings back this Shepherd, or as Capellus reads it, brings up ἀναγαγῶν from ἀναγαρὸν rursum revocare, For it may be ἀνα and ἀνω both, and so to bring back, up, or to set up, as the word in Ezekiel is.

3. There he styles him that [one Shepherd,] ver. 23. which is in the import of it all one, as to say, The great Shepherd; τὸν μὲν, saies the Apostle here, as pointing to that one only Shepherd; in the Prophet Unicus or the Only; as of the Church, Cant. 6. 9. My Dove, my Undeiled, is but One, she is the only one of her Mother, she is the choice one of her that bore her: As Christ also saies of himself, I am that good Shepherd, and I alone: For he adds all Shepherds else are but Hirelings, John 10.

4. There, in Ezekiel he is called a Prince, here the Lord.

But the Jews little imagined what manner a shepherd he should be, and in what strange manner set up to be so. They indeed dreamed chiefly and most of them, him only to have been so entitled in relation unto such Deliverances outward as Moses had given them, and a prosperous State, such as David had set up and Solomon taking the Covenant of Peace for that of outward prosperity: They little thought this Shepherd must be consecrated, and made such by his own blood. Hence therefore,

3. The Apostle points them here, unto those other Prophecies of him, which punctually had described him to be such a Shepherd as he here speaks of him, and how that that Covenant of Peace prophesied of by Ezekiel, of him was to be made by his Blood, and that it was a peace for their Souls, and he a Shepherd thereof, and for the doing away of their Sins, and ruling and strengthening them to every good work, wherein principally this his Office of Shepherd was seen.

The first of the Prophecies which under this Relation he refers unto, is, that in Isa. 53. 6. All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. And therefore withal he there prophesies that he that was to be theirs, and our Shepherd was himself to be brought first as a Lamb to the slaughter, &c. ver. 7. And here his being brought again back imports his having been first led away to Death; hence from that of Isay it appears, That he who was their Shepherd, was first to be as a Lamb offered up; and to give his Life for his Sheep, as John 10. 11. himself saies, I am the good Shepherd The good Shepherd giveth his Life for his Sheep: Even that Lamb of God; John pointed to, and Peter, 1 Epist. chap. 1. 19. But ye are redeemed with the precious Blood of Christ as of a Lamb without blemish, and without spot; and the Lambs Blood in the Revelations often; of whom, and of which Sacrifice all their Sacrifices were Types. It is highly observable, that the Gate through which he was led to be Crucified was termed the Sheep-gate; for the Sheep that were to be sacrificed were kept in Meadows without that Gate, and so were led as he was to be Sacrificed, but they in the Temple; all which Sheep and Sacrifices and Temple were Types of him and his Sacrifice; as in the same Isa. 53. 10. The Apostle had even now said, Christ suffered without the Gate in Mount-Golgotha into which he was led, as the other Sheep were through that Gate to the Slaughter, as it is also expounded and applyed by Philip, Acts 8. 32. He was led as a sheep to the slaughter, and like a lamb dumb before the Shearer, so opened he not his mouth. It is also as evidently by Peter applyed to him; for having in his 1. chap. ver. 22. termed him the Lamb without spot, by whose Blood we are redeemed, in the 2. chap. ver. 24, 25. he cites some of those passages out of Isaiab of him, by whose stripes we are healed, and what we were referring us unto the rest, We like sheep had gone astray, and God laid on him the iniquities of us all; which he interprets in ver. 24. Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness, by whose stripes ye were healed; And that this he did for us as our Shepherd that was to lay down his Life; as so as a Sheep be led unto the slaughter for us his Sheep who had gone astray: This ver. 25. of that 2. chap. explains to us; For ye were as Sheep going astray, but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls: And again look as Isaiab saies, That as a Sheep afore the shearer he opened not his mouth, Isa. 53. 7. So Peter hath it, ver. 22, 23. Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatned not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously; thus manifestly expounding and applying that 53. of Isaiab unto him, both as a Lamb in his Death as he was a Shepherd in his Resurrection.

And considered either as Lamb or Shepherd, we find that God being angry with him whilst thus he bore our Sins, infomuch as he is said in his Wrath to have smitten this Shepherd with his Sword, and smitten him unto Death, Zach. 13. 7. Awake, O Sword, against my Shepherd, and against the Man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of Hosts: Smite the Shepherd, and the Sheep shall be scattered: And that is another Prophecie the Apostle here looks in, and refers unto: And thus God was first a God of Wrath against him for our sakes, God having laid upon him the Iniquities of us all, and remained such against him until Justice had satisfied it self thereby, The chastisement of our Peace lay upon him, or Chastisement for our Peace, Isa. 53. 5. and dye he did for these Sheep.

3. Because he was led thus as a Sheep unto Death, by which his Dying is expressed by the Prophet, therefore most pertinently of all other Expressions he singles forth this, That he was brought back again from the dead here, so setting forth his Resurrection, and his being set up a Shepherd over us: He was slain without the Gate, and his Dead Body was laid without the Gate, buried in a Tomb there without the Gate, but God brought him back again from the Dead, and he came into Jerusalem among his Disciples, and elsewhere, and then was also carried aro up to Heaven, as the word also signifies.

And

And that this Phrase here of being brought back from the dead, thereby expressing his Resurrection should yet couch under it, and impliedly point unto that manner of his dying, of being led unto slaughter may elegantly be exemplified by the like parallel in the like opposite way, and ordine inverso, in that of our Conversion to Christ (in which we are conformed to his Death and Resurrection.) Now this our Conversion to Christ Peter termeth, A returning to the Shepherd of our Souls : From whom was it that Peter fetcht this Expression? Even out of that contrary Phrase which I say had used to express our State afore Conversion, and much as we like Sheep had gone astray, and turned every one to his own way : This is Isaiab's Expression only, but the Apostle on the contrary, and in allusion to this as fitly sets out our Repentance, But are now returned to the Shepherd of our souls: ver. 25. which had imported our having turned away from him, and so Conversion is a returning to him. And,

4. Because by his Death he made our Peace, Isa. 53. 5. The chastisement of our Peace was upon him; and by his Blood made that peace for us, as Col. 1. 20. Hence God that was wroth with him then, when he was led to Death, and himself smote him, (which Phrase is used in Isa. 53. 4. as well as by Zachary, and interpreted to be Gods bruising him himself, ver. 10.) is now upon a new Style (when he brings him back) entyled The God of Peace, and that both towards him and us, Eph. 2. 14. He is our Peace by dying, That he might reconcile both unto God in one Body by the Cross, having slain the Enmity thereby, ver. 16. God's Justice being satisfied, his Anger asswaged, and now he raiseth up Christ as a God of Peace, and thereupon both justifieth us and him; and in token he was at Peace, he let our Surety thus out of Prison: 'Tis in the same 53. of Isa. 8. He was taken from Prison and from Judgment; the Suit was ended. I quote still such places, wherein his dying as a Lamb, &c. are mentioned, and for us as Sheep. And,

5. Because this was done by a Covenant betwixt God and him; therefore here that Covenant is also mentioned, as it is also in the Prophecie wherein first his being set up as a Shepherd is spoken of, Ezek. 34. 23, 24, 25. it is said to be by and with a Covenant of peace, ver. 25.

6. Yea and in Ezek. 37. having at ver. 24. promised to give them this one Shepherd; he adds ver. 26. I will make a Covenant of peace, and it shall be an everlasting Covenant; even as in express words here it is styled, The Everlasting Covenant, when he speaks of him as of our Shepherd; and this these other Prophecies alluded unto also.

7. Here it is said, The blood of the Everlasting Covenant; even as that by which Christ himself was raised up, &c. For by his Blood, and the Merit of it, it was that himself was raised up after that our peace had been fully made up by him, John 10. 16, 17 Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. ver. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again. Yea, his Mediatory Glory he did purchase over all anew, and so his Resurrection by his Death; though not his Personal. Rom. 14. 9. To this end Christ both died and rose and revived that he might be Lord both of the Dead and Living. Phil. 2. 8, 9. And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, the death of the Cross. ver. 9. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a Name which is above every Name: All which was by Covenant between God and him; as in that 53. Isa. Because he made his Soul an offering for Sin, God promiseth to raise him up, and he should see the travel of his soul, &c. And,

8. In using this Phrase, By the Blood, &c. The Apostle refers us to another passage in the Prophecie of the same Zachary 9. 11. And God makes Christ this promise, By the Blood of thy Covenant: (He speaks to Christ) I have sent forth thy Prisoners out of the pitt. Zachary speaks much of this Shepherd, and those false Shepherds that should then be when he should come amongst them, in several places of the same Prophet; and in this 9. Chap. he speaks of the Flock of his People ver. 16. and the meaning of that Speech, that that by and for the merit of his Blood it is that he gives forth all deliverances to his People from all evils, as from the Grave and Hell, and by merit of the Blood of the same Covenant which they were delivered by, it was that Christ himself was; and whereby God brought Christ back again from the Grave and Hell; and because it was not done simply by meer Contract and Covenant, but also by Merit; therefore 'tis not said only here that by his Covenant he was brought back, but by the Blood of his Covenant he was brought back.

And still you see (and it is to be observed) that all these Prophecies of him were uttered when either he is prophesied of: As, 1. A Lamb slain: Or, 2. As a Shepherd for his Sheep: Or, 3. As a Shepherd set over his Sheep; all which doth the Apostle contract and gather together into one sum in these few words.

9. Because God as the God of peace sanctifies us throughout; 1 Thess. 5. 23. And the very God of peace sanctifie you wholly, &c. and sanctifies us by Covenant through Christ his Blood, and the vertue thereof, as also through his being raised from the dead. Hence in the force and influence of all these he here prays; ver. 21. Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, &c. Because Christ had by his Blood, and once offering of himself, perfected for ever them that are sanctified, as Heb 10. it is said.

10. And Lastly, That Christ was proposed to be such a Shepherd as should perfect his Sheep in Holiness, and good Works, and that Gods Covenant was with him is as expresse in that Ezek. 37. 24. And David my servant shall be King over them; and they all shall have one shepherd, they shall also walk in my judgments, &c.

Thus you have seen that the words are a contract or summe both of this Epistle and the Prophecies; and having been thus opened in their Correspondencies one with another, as also with the Prophecies; I single out but one Observation.

Observ. Christ is a Shepherd, a great Shepherd; that great Shepherd mentioned by the Prophets. All those Patriarchs that were Shepherds were Types of him: Abel (whose Blood in crying is made a Type of his, Chap. 12. 24.) was a Shepherd, and a Type of him: And as in Abel, Blood and Shepherd met, so in Christ here, a great Shepherd and his Blood are joyned. Moses a Shepherd and a Type of Christ; A Prophet like to him; who with Aaron, led the people as sheep, Psal. 77. 20. David a Shepherd, who as a King, guided the people by the skilfulness of his hands, Psal. 78. 72. and therefore their Shepherd is named by his name, Ezek. 34. 23. A testimony we have recorded of the Devils themselves (as in the Scripture, That he was the Son of God, The Holy One of God; so in Heathen Story) that he was that Great Shepherd. Plutarch endeavouring to give a Reason why their Oracles ceased, says, "That one Thamus a Shipmaster, who Sailing, was warned by a voice "that when he came right over against Palodes, (in his Voyage to Italy) "he should cry aloud, Magnus Pan mortuus est; which having done, there "was heard by all the Mariners, a lamentable groaning and yelling of Spirits. And indeed it was so that the Cross of Christ (who was Crucified in the dayes of Tiberius) was the cause of the Oracles silence and defect, which from that time never gave answer to any.

The great Shepherd is dead, Pan the god of Shepherds.

I. This Title of Shepherd implies both his Natures.

1. His Godhead: A Shepherd is of a superiour kind to the Sheep, they being Beasts, and the Shepherd Man: Ezekiel in chap. 34. 31. interpreting that his Parable of the Shepherd and Sheep; And ye my flock of my pasture are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord.

2. His Manhood: Zech. 13. 7. My shepherd, and the man that is my fellow: says God in Ezek. 34. 24. he their Shepherd is said to be one among them, or in medio eorum; that is (as that phrase elsewhere) he is of their Nature:

As

As he is Man, he is called the Lamb, and this Lamb is Shepherd also, as those words import, Rev. 7. 17. The Lamb shall feed them.

II. This Title implies all Christs Offices.

1. Of King. Kings were called Shepherds, Παστῶν Λαῶν, &c. thus Ezek. 34. 24. where, as Christ is called their Shepherd, so their Prince, as he, who guides and leads his Sheep, Psal. 23. 2. John 10. 27. as David and Moses did the People; and judgeth between sheep and sheep; Ezek. 34. 20, 21. he will judge those that push them; and at the latter day 'tis said, The Son of Man, The King sitting on his throne of Glory shall as a Shepherd separate the Sheep from the goats, Mat. 25. 31, 32. and in that respect in the next Verse is stiled, The King, ver. 34, 40.

2. Of Priest. John 10. 11. I am that good Shepherd that give my life for the Sheep.

3. Of Prophet: Pastor a Pascendo; He feeds them; John 10. Psal. 23. 2, 5. and in Ezek. 34. 23. it is ingeminated, He shall feed them, he shall feed them; that is, eminently and immediately, as doubling the speech doth indigitate; (as Ezek. 21. 27. it doth). Thus much what this Title of Shepherd in the general doth import.

III. Christ is called, that great Shepherd.

1. In respect of other under Shepherds; so 1 Pet. 5. 4. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown, &c. And here the Apostle having made mention of other inferior Shepherds, ver. 2. 3. in this Verse he calls him the chief Shepherd; yea Kings are stiled Shepherds; but Christ is the Shepherd even of those Shepherds, as being the King of Kings.

2. He is a Shepherd of Souls: The Souls of Men are his flock; 1 Pet. 2. ult. One Soul is more worth than all the World, which is the rate this Shepherd himself that went to the price of them, valued them at.

3. In respect of the extent of his Flock; He is Shepherd over all, both Jewes and Gentiles: John 10. 16. There shall be one fold, and one Shepherd: Christ having in the former part of that Verse spoken of other Sheep which were not of that Jewish fold; he had another great Flock among the Gentiles: He therefore adds, And them also I must bring, and there shall be one fold, &c. Paul was the Apostle but of the Uncircumcision, and Peter of the Circumcision, Gal. 2. 7. and both the one and the other but for their Age; but Christ is the Shepherd of all, yea and both in the Old Testament and the New: In the Old, Eccles. 12. 11. he was then called that one Shepherd, from whom the Masters of Assemblies, the Ministers, Rulers and Elders of the Synagogues had all their words given them, and their assistance to speak them: Of the New I need not instance.

4. In respect of propriety: The Sheep that Christ feeds are his own; John 10. 14. It is not so with other Shepherds that are Ministers under him; they are but as Hirelings in respect of any propriety of feeding sheep, says Christ to Peter: They are my Sheep, says he, not yours; and they are his because he bought them: The Flock of God, which he purchased with his own blood; Acts 20. 28. He bought us, and is therefore called there in the Text both Shepherd and Lord, having bought them by laying down his Life for them. John 10. 11.

5. In respect of his Abilities.

[1.] In a particular Knowledge of all the Persons who are his Sheep; tho' they be of that vast extent and variety, yet he knows every sheep by name. John 10.

[2.] In Skill; To heal and apply him to all their sicknesses, weaknesses, wants; Ezek. 34. 16. I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away; and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick; I will feed them with judgment: [With Judgment] that is, with convenient Food and Physick for every one as their condition of Sickness or Strength requires.

[3.] In

[3.] In respect of Power.

Chap. 23.

(1.) To make them his sheep, by a new Creation : He first bought them, then makes them his Sheep ; We are his sheep, and he made us, P<sup>sal.</sup> 100. 3. that is, he made us to be his Sheep, and not we our selves, as some do read the words.

2. To strengthen them, with strength in the inward Man ; which no other Shepherd can do for his Sheep : He is able to make them perfect in every good work, as in the Text.

(3.) He protects them all against all them that that push them, and would drive them out of their pasture, or otherwise any way injure them, and judgeth likewise between cattle and cattle. Ezek. 34. 20, 21, 22. Thus saith the Lord God unto them, Behold I even I will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle, because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad : Therefore will I save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey, and I will judge between cattle and cattle.

(4.) He hath all power effectually to keep them, and to bring them invincibly to Salvation : John 10. 27, 28. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me : And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.

The Use is of Comfort to all that are Christs Sheep : In the Application of which there will still more of the greatness of our Shepherd be further set out though in a Consolatory way ; which I rather chose to do than in a meer Doctrinal.

1. In General ; If Christ be our Shepherd, and such a Shepherd : What can we then lack ? It is the Comfort that David draws from it ; Psal. 23. 1. I send you as sheep among wolves, saith Christ, Matth. 10. 15. 'twas spoken when he sent them out to the Cities of Judah, and when they returned he asks them, Did you lack any thing ? Luke 22. 35. and how came this to pass, but because he was the great Shepherd, who went with them all the while ? And though you now in this Age are as Sheep in the midst of Wolves, yet you see he spreads your Tables, gives your Ordinances in the midst of your Enemies : And what do you lack ?

But more particularly consider his Promises as a Shepherd.

1. To give you Pasture : John 10. 9. They shall find pasture ; sayes he, I will see to that ; yea Psal. 23. 2. Green pastures, the paths of righteousness.

2. Fresh Springs also, as well as green Pastures : So it follows there, that is fresh Comforts springing from the Fountain of Comforts. Thy Heart is dry and barren to day ; the next Prayer thou makest or Sermon thou hearest, thou findest a new Spring ; as they in their travel to Sion, Psal. 84. They dig up fountains still, ever and anon when they are athirst : And this Spring is by Christ himself interpreted to be his Spirit, which he gives to them that believe. John 4. 14. Even rivers springing up to eternal life, and so never ceasing until you come to Heaven.

3. Particularly, Those green Pastures are Ordinances. As,

(1.) A good Fold ; as Ezek. 34. 15. that is, a good Church, which is the seat of Ordinances, a good Church and holy Saints to be in and with : Thus Cant. 1. 7, 8. Tell me (O thou whom my soul loveth) where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon, for why should I be as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions ? And again, I will bring them into the fold, as Christs speech evidently impliyes, John 10. 16. and 'tis he that gives thee an heart to joyn with such where thou mayst be most edified : As in that Cant. 1. 8. you see how in answer to her desire he directs and guides them whither to go : ver. 8. If thou know not, (O thou fairest among women) go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds tents.

(2.) Over that he sets and finds out Pastors and Elders for thee, both according to his own heart, yea and according to thine ; that is, who do and shall suit the state and condition of thy Soul the best of any other in the World.

World Jer. 3. 14, 15. I will take you one of a City, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion: And I will give you Pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding. 'Tis a Promise made to Gospel times, agreeing with Matth. 18. as the phrase of taking two or three of a City and Tribe shews. He will either bring thee to the best means, or make those means thou hast the best to thee.

(3.) He provides and prepares all the good Sermons thou hearest, and puts those Words and Prayers too into his Ministers Hearts and Mouths. These are all from him, as from that one shepherd: Eccl. 12. 11. The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one shepherd. Yea in their providing of them, Christ as the great Shepherd, that knows the state of every one of his Flock, brings to their mind this goad to prick forward such an ones Heart; that nail to fasten on such an ones Spirit (as there) according as any one hath need. 'Tis he that feeds them with judgment, Ezek. 34. And when he hath given fit words for them to speak (the pertinency of which to every ones Heart, they are not aware of) he then gives assistance in the delivery, and drives in that promise or command home to the nails head; make that Goad of Rebuke or Exhortation to pierce a thick and brawny Heart, and makes it tender.

(4.) He farther feeds them with the strangest, yea strongest, sweetest, and most Soul-heartning food that ever was, even with his own Flesh and Blood; My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed; and so some have understood the coherence of these words here in the Text, that he is a Shepherd in his blood [in his Blood] as feeding them therewith, and giving it to save them, and so refer those words not to his being brought back again, but to his being a Shepherd in his blood: This for the first ground of Comfort; his Promises as he is a Shepherd, and we the Sheep of his Pasture, as we are called.

A Second Ground; That Christ is a Shepherd who is careful, as the opposition of Christ and Hirelings shews; John 10. 13. That office exacts care, the Sheep take none, the Shepherd all; and that which obligeth Christ to this care is his propriety in his Sheep. Other Shepherds are only hirelings and servants, and though faithful, yet only but as servants; but Christ cares for them as being their owner: They are his own Sheep; as therefore the Apostle reasoneth Heb. 3. 5, 6 Moses was faithful in his house as a servant, but Christ as a Son over his own house; which house we are.

This his care appears.

1. In seeking them out both at first Conversion, and after when gone astray, as many ways they do, and are apt to do: Thus Ezek. 34. 11. I even I will both search my sheep, and seek them out: The word implies a search even through the whole Wilderness, every hedge, every bush, every corner. Christ leaves the ninety nine (as in the Parable) to seek the poor one that is astray, and seeks all the Wilderness over, Luke 15. and in the Mountains, Matth. 18. 12, 13. yea, and looks at it as his Duty so to do. John 10. 16. Them also I must bring in, says Christ there: It is my Fathers Command; as Laban required his tale of Jacob, so will God of Christ.

2. When he hath found them, he makes sure work with them to keep them: Luke 15. 5. They are not only in his hands, but he lays them on his shoulders, and holds the fore-feet with one hand, and the hinder-feet with the other, and yet they will be struggling, but that he hath long hands that still reacheth them, and holds them, and pulls them in again.

3. His Care is seen in his inspection into the Flock, and visiting his Sheep, abiding in medio earum, in the midst of them or among them; Ezek. 34. 11. I even I will both search my sheep and seek them out: The one of the two words there used implies the searching of them out, and the other inspection. The Septuagint translates it ἐπισκέψασθαι, to visit or oversee: Hence the Apostle 1 Pet. 2. last, doth joyn both, calling Christ the Shepherd and Bishop, or overseer of our souls, ἐπισκοπος. He knows all their wants, and looks to all their their wandrings ; and as Jacob watched whole nights with the Sheep, so Christ does neither sleep nor slumber, but keepeth Israel.

Chap. 22.

A Third Ground is, That Christ is a Shepherd who is pitiful ; Mat. 9. 36. When he saw the multitudes he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd.

1. To young Converts : Isa. 40. 11. He gathers the lambs with his arm, and carries them in his bosom.

2. To those that are with young, he gently leads them ; (as in the place last quoted) that is, the grown Christians, or any that are in pains of travel not to overdrive them, as Jacob did not his Flock, Gen. 33. 13. and in Ezek. 34. there are more instances of his pity : As,

3. To those that stray after their having been brought to the Fold ; he seeks them out again : ver. 12. I will deliver them out of the places where they shall be scattered in the cloudy and dark day. Temptation is as a cloudy day ; it is a walking in darkness, as Isa. 50. 10. No beast so apt to wander as Sheep are : Christ seeks them again.

4. The weak he strengthens, who have feeble knees, and faint hands ; so ver. 16. and also,

5. The sick and broken he heals. Sheep are apt to break their Legs, and fall into Ditches, (heavy temptations) and of all Creatures are most subject to Diseases ; but Christ binds up their Wounds, and heals all ; it being the greatest work of a Shepherd to look to such things.

6. He shews his Pity and Care in providing rest and lying down for them ; Psal. 23. 2. And in Cant. 1. 7. Thou makest thy flocks to rest at noon, in the heat of the day, whether in case of distresses, pressures, hard drivings, or persecution, by giving them comfortable intermission, and sometimes for a long while quietly and safely to enjoy his Ordinances. As Ezek. 34. 25. And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land ; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

Use 2. The Second Use is of Exhortation, to Men to turn to him : We are all as Sheep going astray ; Oh now return unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your Souls ; 1 Pet. 2. 25. else God will say, as Zach. 11. 9. I will not feed you, that that dyeth, let it dye, &c. which is as much as to say, Let thy Soul dye in a ditch and there lye, I will not regard it.

Of Christ our High Priest, as entred into the Holy of Holies in the Heavens. How we are to Treat, and Converse with God, and Christ Jesus under the Notion of his being our High Priest, and being entred into the Holy of Holies. And of our having liberty to enter thither to him, and to Converse with him there through Faith in Prayer.

H E B. iv. 14, 15, 16.

Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.

Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

C H A P. I.

The words of the Text Explained, That Christ is our Great High Priest, wherein the Greatness and Excellency of his Priesthood consists.

TH E Apostle had set forth Christ as a Judge, to whom we must give an Account, ver. 12, 13. and here, he sets him forth, as a most Gracious and Merciful High Priest. The former he did, to perswade the Hebrews to get true Faith, and to beware of a Temporary Faith: The latter he does, to encourage them to continue in the true Faith. And it comes very seasonably in after the former: For whereas he had told them, that Christ knew and observed every Thought, and that his Word was

was κενός, critical in observing and finding out the least by-end; not a thought could escape Christs all-piercing-Eye: They that were sincere-hearted, being conscious of so many Imperfections and Infirmities in all they do, might think with themselves; If he with whom we have to do, be so severe, as ver. 12, 13. describe him to be: How shall we have any thing at all to do with him? How shall we hold in with him? Wherefore the Apostle in an instant quite alters and changes the Scene, and presents Christ in a new Habit, and puts on him his High Priests Robes. As before he had presented him sitting in his Judgment Seat, with his Sword (the Ensign of his Justice) in his hand, able to divide between the marrow and the joints: So now he tenders him to them with the heart of a High Priest, most tenderly affected towards them, in all their infirmities; and as sitting upon a Throne of Grace and Mercy-Seat, to which with boldness they might draw near.

From which Coherence, Observe, That,

Observ. Jesus Christ can, and will, shew himself, the most Exact and Severe Judge; and likewise, the most Tender and Merciful High-Priest. He is called (you know) both a Lyon and a Lamb: Yea, you have both in one and the same Chap. and the one in the next verse immediately following the other (even as here also the like) Revel. 5. 5, 6. A Lyon is of all Creatures the most fierce and furious, yet generous in his Wrath; and a Lamb is of all the meekest: And he is set forth under both; not in respect of those two several Estates of his when on Earth, and now in Heaven: As if a Lamb in respect of his Carriage here, and Sufferings here below: But a Lyon now possessed of his Power and Glory in Heaven. No, but a Lamb as now risen again, and as taking the Book out of Gods Hand, and so to be Gods Commissioner to Govern and Judge the World. For that is the Scope of that Chapter: He therefore as he is now in Heaven shews himself a Lamb as well as a Lyon: And a Lyon, and a Lamb are Creatures of all others the most contrary: Yet Christ hath the heart of a Lyon, and the heart of a Lamb too, because he is, and was appointed to be the perfect Image of God, Heb. 1. 3. and the Executioner of all Gods Decrees, both of Justice and Mercy, on the Elect and Reprobate. Through his Humane Nature the God-head is to express his extreamest Severity, and likewise the tenderest Bowels of Mercy; and therefore Christs heart was fitted, and tempered unto both, according to the exactest mixture and proportion that might be. God himself said of the Angel, who went with the Israelites, (which was Christ; and in an allusion unto which Type, this representation of him here, ver. 12, 13. doth come in) My Name is in him; that is, my Attributes, as of Mercy, so he went with them to lead them into Canaan; so of Justice, therefore provoke him not; for he will not spare you, and yet of Mercy also, for else he would not have gone with them.

USE 1. This shows us the Excellencies of Jesus Christ. Who hath all perfections in him, to the height; and mixtures of contraries in their full perfections. Such a Man we love, as hath a Spirit of all compositions: when highest meekness, and greatest courage and stoutness are met in one; how amiable doth it make one? Even such an one is Christ; read his description in Psalms 45.

USE 2. We should therefore look at them both, in Christ, and carry the Representation of them both at once in our eyes: Men either look upon him as all Mercy and so presume, or as all severity, and so tremble to come at him: The Devil then makes a false Christ of him in either. The Lamb can be angry; you read of the Wrath of the Lamb: And so the Lion can be Lamb-like, and gracious. Poor Souls in desertion look at Christ onely as armed with his Sword, and so tremble to come at him: As that Child in Homer did, when his Father in compleat Armour took him up in his Arms. When Christ looks sternly on thee, yet he may have a Fathers heart to thee, under that visour of terrour.

USE 3. We should have a mixture of Affections, namely of Fear and Love, answerable to this mixture in Christ; so Psal. 2. 11, 12. Serve the Lord with fear, and joyce with trembling; Kiss the Son lest he be angry: And yet again, though his wrath be a little kindled, yet joyce, and come boldly to him as a Saviour. And let us serve him without fear also, for he is a merciful High Priest. So in the 45. Psalme: He is set forth as a loving Husband greatly delighting in the Beauty of his Queen, who sits at his Right Hand, and is familiar with him: And yet she is taught to know her distance. He is thy God, worship thou him.

USE 4. It should be an Encouragement to poor Souls, who are Sinners, and tremble at every threatenng; and are afraid when they hear or see Christ angry, when he rends and tears VVicked Sinners in pieces, when they see Judgments on the Earth. You do well indeed to tremble, as Children, when they see the Servants beaten: But consider withal, that he is a gracious God to you, when his anger is never so much against others. Like a loving Husband that is General of an Army, Though he hath been in the Field killing and slaughtering Men that are his Enemies; yet when he comes into his Tent, he is as loving to his Spouse as ever, and with the same Arms embraceth her, with which he ruin'd them in fury. Such is Christ, He can be, and is as loving and familiar with his own; and will use them as kindly, as if he were not angry at all. And yet Men can hardly so command their Passions, but that they will run out one way; and when they are angry with others, they are morose, not placid even to their Wife or Friend. But it is not so with Christ; he can act both parts to the height, and loves to do it: He can turn his fierce look on others, to the most gracious smiles on thee, and that in the twinkling of an Eye. Think but how that at the latter Day, his anger will be at the highest; and yet how loving will he be to his own? 'Twill be the strangest sight that ever was; when in the same Countenance, the greatest fury, and the most sweet smiles of Grace, shall lodge, and appear together; as then they will. Therefore in Isa. 27. 4. When God was in his Armour, and in Battel array, against his Enemies, (as it is in that ver.) yet then to his Vineyard, to his own, he saies, Fury is not in me: No, I am not angry with you (saies God,) though indeed against Briars and Thorns I am, and will burn them together. When he is most angry, fear not to go forth to meet him; but rather go rejoicingly out to him; for he will use thee lovingly, if thou humblest thy self before him, Isa. 64. 5. Thus much I have said as an Introduction to the words of the Text, and from the coherence of them.

The words divide themselves into these three parts;

1. Two eminent Duties exhorted unto.
2. Three especial Discouragements from those Duties.
3. A ground of Encouragement unto those Duties, (notwithstanding these Discouragements) fetcht from Christs High-Priesthood in Heaven.

1. The Duties exhorted unto are two.

1. To hold fast our Profession: Whereby is meant, That cleaving to Christ by Faith and Obedience, whereby we do profess him to be our Saviour, and do put our confidence in him: Heb. 3. 1. He is styled the High-Priest of our Profession: That is, whom we profess to be our High-Priest, by cleaving to the Doctrine and Religion, which he is High-Priest over. All Professions have some eminent Founder or Chief of them: Of whom the Professors have their denomination. The Jews Religion had Moses and Aaron, to whom therefore they are said to cleave, and the Romish Religion and Profession hath the Pope for its Chief: He is the High-Priest of it, Pontifex Maximus; and therefore they of that Profession are called Pontificii and Papists from him. In like manner the true Christian Profession, hath Christ for the High Priest of it, and therefore we are called Christians. Now, then to cleave constantly to Christ by Faith and Obedience, in all things, things, whereby he is magnified and confessed to be our High-Priest, both in Heart and Life; this is to hold fast our Profession. And because this is chiefly done by true faith, which as a hand, takes hold of Christ and holds forth in life the profession of him; therefore he bids them hold the Profession [καταστέλλοντες, let us hold &c.] And because that Faith hath great Oppositions and Discouragements, that might pull them from it, or it from them; therefore he bids them hold fast, or, strongly; for so the word signifies.

2. The Second Duty exhorted to, is to come, viz. By Faith; for by it we are said to come to God, and to Christ, 1 Pet. 2. 4. to draw near, Heb. 10. 22. I take it therefore especially to mean coming to God in Prayer: As in Psal. 65. 2. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come. And that is meant here: For the word translated [boldly] is εὐκαταβολίας; liberty of Speech and Spirit. Come boldly and speak out your needs and complaints. And therefore also the help that is given, is called βοήθεια, that is, help upon crying; and this is correspondent to the ground of Encouragement given from Christs High Priesthood, which is an Office of Prayer and Intercession. And therefore the Apostle encourageth against all our Exigencies; both Miseries from without, and guilts of Sins within; including both these in that one word [infirmities,] as things wherein Christ our High-Priest will pity us: For these are all either expressed, or evidently implied in the words. The two first are expressed under that one word [infirmities,] ver. 15. whereby, both Persecutions and Afflictions from without, and Sins are meant, That under Infirmities, Miseries, and Persecutions, and all outward evils are meant, appears from 2 Cor. 12. 5. and chap. 11. 30. His outward Distresses the Apostle calls his Infirmities: And these he means here; for he comforts them against these, by this, that Christ in all these was tempted. Therefore notwithstanding them, hold fast your Profession, you have an High Priest to pity you in them.

Yet more especially by Infirmities he means Sins, which indeed are the greatest pressures, and which we therefore need most comfort against, and that the pity of Christ be shewn therein: And they are the greatest discouragers of us in our coming with boldness to the Throne of Grace for help against those outward Evils, and therefore they must be intended here: And accordingly we find the word on purpose used but three Verses off in this very Discourse continued about this High Priest-hood in the Type of Christ. In chap. 5. 2. The Apostle shews the Qualifications of an High Priest then under the Law, and he recites them to shew that the same Vertues as towards us are found in our High Priest but without Sin. He was the High-Priest under the Law (saies he) one that could have compassion on the Ignorant, and them that are out of the way, i. e. upon Sinners, (for by Ignorances, and strayings from God Sins are meant) in that himself (saies he speaking of the High Priest) was cloathed with Infirmities, that is, with Sins, which might move him out of a sense of the like Sins in himself to offer the Sacrifices of every Sinner which should come to him. And again, you have the same Expression used again of the High-Priest, chap. 7. 28. For the Lord maketh Men High-Priests which have infirmities, i. e. Sins, such as the People had which is spoken in direct opposition unto Christ his being Holy, undefiled, and separate from Sinners, ver. 26. But though as concerning Christ his having any Infirmities on his part, the Apostle had exempted him, and put in an Exception before the words of my Text, saying, That he was tempted in all things, yet without Sin; yet as to the pitying part, viz. to have compassion on us, under such Infirmities his Scope is to the full to shew that he is, and must be an High Priest that can have compassion more abundantly than those narrow-hearted Priests could have, though they were compassionate upon other grounds than he. They, for that themselves were cloathed, and surrounded with the same Infirmities of Sin that the People were, therefore pityed them: But he though without Sin, yet hath that innate Compassion, and an heart so made up of Mercy, that he is much more able to compassionate such even in their Sins, which are their greatest Infirmities. So then under the Word Infirmities Sins are intended, and in his alledging the parallel of the High Priest in respect of compassion towards Sinners which are out of the way; his Scope and Intention must necessarily be to shew, that Christ is thus also. His Allegation had been to no purpose at all, if not unto this, and so it refers to, and explains what is said in my Text, That he is touched with the feeling of our sinful infirmities; and they therefore are here mainly intended. And further to that end he shews, that though he kept himself from being tempted with Evil and Sin, yet he came as near as might be, being tempted by Satan unto Sin, and vexed (as the Word in some Copies signifies) with all sorts of Sins, yet still without Sin. He came I say, as near therein as might be, that he might be able to pity us experimentally. Even herein again, because the Apostle means Infirmities of Sins, as well as of Miseries, and outward temptations; therefore the Comfort and Remedy which they are directed to seek, and encouraged to find at the Throne of Grace, is in relation unto Sins. He mentions both Grace and Mercy, that you may obtain (saies he) Grace, and Mercy; Grace to help against the Power of Sin, Mercy to take away the Guilt of Sin. And our own pressures of all other are those of Sin, and Corruptions; and above all things our Hearts (who are true Christians) are carryed forth to obtain Grace, and Mercy for, and about them. So as however that Grace to help against all other Infirmities is meant, and we may find in Christ both Grace to supply Wants, and Mercy to give deliverance, yet there being two things in sin corruption, and Guilt, therefore to be sure we need Grace and Mercy to serve against these two more eminently than against all Evils else. And these are the Evils which the Saints hearts do most implore Grace and Mercy against, and therefore these are above all intended by the Apostle here.

Observ. 1. Jesus Christ is a great High-Priest. Concerning which in general. Whatever Title Christ hath, this of greatness is added to it. A Prophet, he is of a truth and that Prophet (said they) John 7. 40. yea, that great Prophet, (say they) Luke 7. 16. John was a Prophet, yea more than a Prophet saies Christ of him; Matth. 11. 9. But then, I am not worthy to untie the latchet of his shoe; saies John of Christ. A Shepherd he is, but with this addition, that great shepherd, Heb. 13. 20. A King he is; but Psal. 47. 2. the great King. It is a Psalm of Christ's Ascension, ver. 3. The King of Kings, Lord of Lords. A Priest he is here, an High Priest; yet that is not title high enough, but he is a great High Priest.

As King of Kings, so Priest of Priests. That in all things he might have preheminance, Col. 1. 18. When the Person is great, all his Titles are such Princes who are eminently excellent, have by their Subjects the title of Great affixed; as Charlemain, Alexander the Great, Henry le Grand, &c. and shall not Christ be exalted, yea greatly exalted? Psal. 47. 9.

USE 1. Men who have great Friends, how do they bear themselves upon them? And have great hopes, great thoughts, and great looks? So Rabshaketh bore himself upon Senacherib; and what big words doth he speak? 2 Kings 28. 19. thus saith the great King, and shall not we, who are Christ's Servants, bear our selves as much upon our great Lord and Master? As Paul often calls him.

USE 2. Let us serve him as becomes his greatness; not with the halt or lame; shouldst thou fend such to thy Prince, would he accept such Services? I am a great King, saies God, Malac. 1. 14.

USE 3. Let us become little, that Christ may be great; and appear such. As his alone is goodness, so his alone is greatness: 1 Chron. 29. 11. Let us become Cyphers to set his greatness out: Let us be content to decrease, that he may increase (as John did) and (like the Moon) the nearer we come to this Sun, the more we should, yea we shall wane; it is our Glory so to do. This in general.

Now to shew more particularly, how Christ is a great High-Priest. This is spoken of him,

1. Comparatively to Aaron, who was an High-Priest, but Christ a Great High-Priest; whose Priesthood the Apostle compares with his, throughout this Epistle. I will not now shew all the particulars, wherein Christs doth exceed; only in this, I instance, that Aarons Priest-hood was but a Shadow; not so much as a Picture, compared with his: So he concludes that Discourse, chap. 10. 1. As a King at Arms, who goes before a true King, such was Aaron to him: And therefore but a low, and a mean, a little High Priest to this Great High Priest.

1. In the Levitical Law, there was a plurality of Priests, which argued imperfection: But they truly were many, saies the Apostle, Heb. 7. 23. and all could not perfect the work; which plurality of theirs is implied, ver. 11. of the 10. chap. [every High-Priest] but Christ was but one, ver. 12. They were but as so many Candles, that successively were burnt out; and gave but a dim Light. But he as the Sun, which is the meaning of that, Coloss. 2. 17. where the Apostle speaking of all the fore-running Types which were The shadows of things to come, saies, But the Body is Christ; who (as his Scope there was to shew) hath disannulled all those Shadows by his coming into the World; and therefore can be no other Body but of the Sun it self in that comparison intended: For otherwise the Shadows do begin to exist, but when the Body comes; but where the Sun casts its beams, shadows flee away: Now as the Sun is called the great Light, Gen. 1. 16. because it alone doth that, which all the Stars and Candles cannot. So Christ alone discharging this Office, is called the Great High Priest.

2. They daily ministred, and offered oftentimes; and the same Sacrifices, but Christ he did it but once, and that for ever: So Heb. 10. 11, 12.

3. These many Priests, with their many Sacrifices often offered, could not take sins away; but Christ by one offering took away all Sins, and perfected us so for ever, that our sins are remembered no more, ver. 14, 17. But I will no longer insist on this Comparison: For it is not worthy of it; it being a thing very uncomely to compare the Body and the Shadow together. Therefore I come,

2. To shew how he is a great High-Priest in himself, absolutely considered.

1. In his Person: Higher than the Heavens: Heb. 7. 26. that is, then the Angels, and so all Creatures; for not of Place, but of Personal Dignity is the Highness there meant. And as Hell is put for Devils. The gates of Hell shall not prevail, &c. So there, Heaven for Angels, and such an high Priest became us as it is there: And in this Sense, he is said to be ascended to Heaven, when he was not yet ascended, in place; but onely by the Union hypostatical, Jo. 3. 13. This his personal worth and greatness is mentioned in the Text, as that which is the foundation of the greatness of his Office: Jesus the Son of God. Other Offices make the Person great, and his dignity the more; but here the Person dignifies the Office, and makes it great. For from hence proceeds all the worth of the Sacrifice he offered; and of the Intercession of this Priest. The worth of his Sacrifice being attributed to his being God, [the Blood of God] and the prevalency of his Intercession to his being the Son. Other Officers (if Great) must have a great deal of outward State, and Pomp; (as Kings have) and Ceremonies of Reverence are invented, to make them seem great: And as themselves are Humane Ordinances and Creations, so they have Humane Inventions for State and Pomp, because they want Personal Greatness to bear up respect. And such a Priest was Aaron, and his Fellows. Which (I take it) is the meaning of that Heb. 7. 16. He was made a Priest, not after the Law of a carnal command, which is spoken in opposition to the Priests of the Old Law, who were indeed made thus; and it was all their making. The Priests of old were of themselves no more fit to be Priests than than others of the Jews; it was merely a Law, which made them such, no peculiar Personal worth in the Men: As the Law makes a Child as true and as great a King, as a Man grown; and accordingly they had carnal Rites, which the Law also prescribed; in the observance of which their Priestly power and dignity did lye, and thereby was supported, and so were Priests after the Law of a carnal commandment; (so the Law Ceremonial is called, and thereby distinguished from the Law Moral, which is called Spiritual; Rom. 7. 12, 13, 14.) For the Persons being weak, as other Men; they had Rites, such as were glorious Garments, a glorious Temple, &c. to make their Office great, which yet were but fleshly, that is, weak; (as Eph. 6. 12. Flesh is taken, not with flesh, but with powers, &c.) and which wrought in the fleshly part of Men, an estimation of greatness. But this Priest is made after the power of an endless. By Power, he does not simply mean that Authority given Christ by his Fathers institution; for so those Levites also were ordained; Heb. 5. 4. No man takes this honour to himself, but he that is called of God [as was Aaron]: But he understands thereby that Personal power, and those eminent abilities which were in his Person inherent, and which moved God to pitch on him; whereby he was not a King or Priest dressed up, or set out with Ceremonies, and Carnal Rites of Reverence, but indued with Power inherent, whereby he was able to shew himself a Priest indeed. And as he was declared to be the Son of God with power, Rom. 1. 4. so also to be a Priest with power: He had the power of a Priest in his Person; which consisted chiefly in this, that he had the power of an indissoluble life, (as the word is) that whereas it was requisite that he should dye, to undergo Gods wrath, which would have sunk the Souls of Men and Angels, he could out-live it, and all the powers of Death could not hold him; as Acts. 2. 24. I lay down my life, and I take it up again (says Christ) and so can survive to perform the rest that belongs to that Office. And hence the word of the Oath pitch on him, as one of himself consecrated and carved out for it, and none else; so ver. 28. The law maketh men high-priests which [have infirmities], but the word of the oath since the law, maketh [the Son] who [is perfected] (as the word is) for evermore.

Secondly, It appears how great a Priest he was, by the great trust which was reposed in him. We judge and esteem of the greatness of Offices by the great trust that is reposed in them. This made Josephs Office great, and himself the greatest Man in Egypt. So with us the High Treasurers place is great, because of the trust; and so the Lord Keepers, &c. Now of Christ it is said, Heb. 7. 22. He became a surety of a better covenant: It was an infinite trust which God committed to him. All those great and precious promises must be made yea and Amen in him: All Gods Oaths and Covenants must otherwise have been disannulled and cancelled, yea Heaven must have been dissolved, and all the Souls saved under the Old Testament sent down again, if Christ had not been a faithful High Priest. 2. All the Glory of Gods Justice, all our Souls which God so loved, all our Sins which he desired so to be pardoned, all Gods plots hung upon him, all his affairs were committed to him: (I mention all these, because they all concerned Gods Glory as well as our Salvation; and therefore are called things appertaining to God, though for Men; that is, for Mans good: and he was faithful in them all; Heb. 2. 17.) He trusted Christ as Pharaoh did Joseph; and was not this a great High Priest then? All the good things that God meant to bestow, the purchase of them was committed to this High Priest. All Gods holy things he was minister of: Heb. 8. 2. and 9. 11. All which argues the excellency of his Ministry: Heb. 8. 6. He hath obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much he is the Mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises, and of greater trust, which he was to make good.

Thirdly, The great Solemnity that was at his Installment, argues his Greatness: It was by an Oath: Heb. 7. 20, 21. Not so the Levitical Offices. Those Offices which were small, and of no great account or trust, but put in and put out at pleasure, were wont to be bestowed without an Oath; but great ones with an Oath. And this very Reason is indeed given why Christ was made with an Oath; ver. 22. Inasmuch as he was a surety of a better testament: that is, betruſted with the rich Promiſes of a greater Covenant. Yea further, (which may be matter of wonderment unto us, as differing from all other Investitures) not he himself ſo much doth take the Oath, as his Father that made him, which was a transcendent and unheard of Honour.

At the first erection of this Office, and placing this great Officer, God himself took an Oath; whereas the usual way is, that the Party that enters upon the Office takes the Oath; but here, God himself swears. Heb. 7. 21. This Priest was made with an oath, ſayes the Apostle; and by whom was this Oath taken? Not by him who was made the Priest, but by God himself (that made him) when he made him: He was made with an oath by him who ſaid to him (mark it, by whom it was taken) the Lord ſware, and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedeck. This Oath indeed was first taken from everlasting, when God first called him to his Office, but was then solemnly renewed, and again rehearſed over, when Christ first entred upon this Priesthood in Heaven, being now ſet at Gods Right hand, as appears by comparing Heb. 5. 5, and 6. veries, and Pſalm 2. 6, 7, and 8. veries. with Pſalm 110. ver. 1, 4. where when God had ſet Christ down at his Right hand, as Pſalm 2. 6. and Pſalm 110. 1. then he rehearſes this Oath; as ver. 4. of that Pſalm; yea, renewes it; as Heb. 5. (quoting both these Pſalms to this one and the ſame purpose) doth ſhew. All this was to assure us how much Gods heart was ingaged in this buſineſs of his Priesthood, which it ſhould be exerciſed about, namely the pardoning of Sinners. Christs Office in Heaven is the Pardon-Office: He is a Priest over it, to ſue a Pardon out for Sinners: And the reason why God thus ſware, rather than Christ, was becuſe the Buſineſs to be effected by this Office, being the Pardon of our Sins, which was dependant upon Gods Will, and to be procured at his hands through Christs Mediation and Interceſſion: Now therefore to assure both us, and Christ himself likewise, when he took on him this Office, that his Interceſſion ſhould never be in vain at any time, for any Souls that come to God by him, or that he ſues for, God the Father takes this Oath. Becuſe Christs Office in Interceding being to ſue for Pardon, and it being the Fathers part to grant it; in this caſe the Oath is rather taken by the Father, to assure both us and Christ for ever of his Covenant to hear Christ, and grant what by vertue of his Office he requires; and that is, the Pardon of our Sins, which is the work of the Office, that is, the thing that the Oath intends, and not ſimply the confirmation of his Office to him; but the effect of his Office, that it ſhould procure Pardon, as is evident by Chap. 8. throughout. An Oath to a Covenant or Promiſe argues the greateſt ſeriouſneſs that may be. Even he who doth betruſt him, is ſo ſatiſfied in him, as he takes an Oath for him; he exacts it not of him; he would not ſhew ſo much diffidence in a Perſon ſo great and faithful, and able for the place; but he ſwears for him; That he ſhould be a Priest, and he would not repent, yea, he foreſaw that in Christ, that he could never have cauſe to repent that he ſaved Men by him. God ſwears, as glad to engage him in it.

Fourthly, He is a great High Priest in reſpect of the continuance of his Office: for what was it God ſware to! [Thou art a Priest for ever] (ſayes the Apostle, gloſſing upon this Oath, Heb. 7. 23.) They truly were many Priests (that is, in ſucceſſion one after another, though there was but one Priest at once) becauſe they were not ſuffered to continue by reaſon of Death. They were but as ſo many Candles (as was ſaid) that burnt out, and others were ſet up in their rooms; yea, and ſome were depoſed afore Death; they were not ſuffered to continue, though they continued to live: So Abathar. But this man (ſayes he, ver. 24.) becauſe he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable high priesthood, for that cannot paſs to any other, but is for ever in himself; and he can never lay it down, as he cannot lay down his Perſon, or his being being the Son of God. For that is the reason given, that seeing he himself continueth ever, his Priesthood likewise shall continue ever. Now Offices that are of great trust, and withal are perpetual and for ones life, and cannot be taken away, are ever accounted great. 'Tis this that makes the Office of a King so great, because he is not subject to a deposition: Therefore he must needs be a great High Priest who hath a Priesthood that cannot pass from him; yea, if he should lay it down, there is none in Heaven or Earth worthy to take it up. Princes consider well whom they put into Places, out of which they cannot again remove them, and that hold not upon a quam diu se bene gesserunt. Now such is this Office wherewith Christ is invested. But God knew him so well afore-hand, that himself durst swear for him, and that he would never repent of his placing him in it.

Fifthly, Christ is great in his Love to us to become a Priest for us. John 15. 13. Greater love than this hath no man, that a man lay down his life, &c. By undertaking of which he became a Priest; and so it may be said as in the Acts, With a great summe purchased he this office. Great was his Love, thus to become a Priest for us, that he that was equal to God his Father, and as great as he, that he should descend from his greatness, and become lesser: To be a Priest for us, (and the lesser his Person became, the greater his Priesthood): For now his Father (as Christ is a Priest) is greater than he. John 14. 28. Yea, Christ became lower than the Angels, Heb. 2. 7. and yet lower, even than Men: A worm, no man, &c. And by how much lower his Person became; by so much is his Priesthood made higher. And so at once the greatness of his Person made him alone fit to be this High Priest (as was said); and yet withal, the lowering of all this greatness, even to nothing, made his Priesthood to be so high and great: So that it hath both an height and a depth in it to make it great; and so his love is said to have (Eph 3. 18, 19.) such a height and depth in it, as it passeth knowledge.

Sixthly, He is a great High Priest in the Sacrifice which he offered; which Heb. 9. 23. is called a better Sacrifice than those of the Law; so much as Heavenly things are better than the shadows of them; as it is there, and Chap. 10. 1. For he offered up himself; Heb. 9. 14, 26. And what a Sacrifice was that? God himself hath not such another Son to offer, he has no more such Sacrifices. Had he sacrificed millions of Worlds of innocent Men, and holy Angels, even Hecatombs, they had been but as mites to the riches of Heaven and Earth, in comparison to Jesus Christ. 1 Cor. 6. ult. We are said to be bought with a price: magno pretio; so some read it. For what a Sacrifice must that needs be, wherein all the Riches, Glory, and Excellencies of God-Man were emptied, and (as Sacrifices of old were to be) consumed and burnt to ashes, to nothing. And all he offered was his own by such a title of Personal propriety (as Second Person), as it was not God the Father (though his also as Gods Creature): so as he borrowed nothing, but was himself Priest, Sacrifice, Altar, Temple, and all.

Seventhly, He was a great High-Priest in respect of the Temple and Tabernacle that was made for him to officiate in. You guess at Aarons and his Successors greatness by the Glory of the Tabernacle first, and then of the Temple, and therein of the Holy of Holies, the Wonder of the World. But the Heavens were made for this Man to be a Priest in; and 'tis the highest end next Gods Glory, that they were made for. He is an Heavenly Man, yea, the Lord from Heaven, as he is called 1 Cor. 15. 48. A Priest higher than the Heavens; and therefore he must have a place fuitable to perform the great part of his Office in. And therefore as it is said, that it became us, or, it was necessary for us being Sinners (if saved) to have a Priest, who for the excellency of his Person should be higher than the Heavens: So likewise it became the excellency of his Person and High Priesthood, that he should have a place to administer in, above the heavens. And that is also noted noted in the Text, as a circumstance that makes him a great High-Priest, that he is entred into the heavens, and officiates at the throne of grace (ver. 16.) the highest place in Heaven, as the Mercy-seat was in the Holy of Holies. Yea, he purchased this place by his Blood, and laid down a Price for it; and therefore is said to enter into the heavens by his blood; Heb. 9. 12, 24. Yea, he had a Temple and a Tabernacle yet more excellent than the Heavens, a building made of better stuff. You will wonder what that should be; his own Body and Humane Nature, which was the true Temple, as he says, John 2. 19. Destroy this temple. It was Gods Tabernacle, Rev. 13. 6. the Holy of Holies, Dan. 9. 24. in which the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily; which in the local place of the Heavens it doth not, nor is Personally united to them; and that is it which makes this his Manhood more high than the Heavens. and to be called a greater and more perfect Tabernacle, not made with hands; that is to say, not of this building. The Apostle speaks it of Christs own Body; for of the Heavens he speaks besides in the next Verse; By his own blood he entred into the Holy of Holies; (ver. 12.) namely, the Heavens, then which this of his Body is the greater and more excellent Tabernacle: ver. 11.

U S E. Let us hold fast our Profession against oppositions of Men. The Apostle speaks to them in suffering times, and we may say it in difficult times. And it is to be held fast: there is danger of being pulled from it by the Adversaries. Men who have great Masters, bear themselves upon them; and are bold to wear their Livery. The three Children saw God in his greatness, and contemned Nebuchadnezzar; and so did Moses as to Pharaoh, whose wrath he regarded not. Let us still view how great an High Priest we have, and give back in nothing. Paul loves to have this often in his mouth; Jesus Christ my Lord, so Phil. 3. and elsewhere: As Courtiers use to cry, The King my Master. Now why should not we be as bold as they? For he is able, and will bear us out against all that do oppose us. We are not careful (said the three Children) to answer thee (O King) in this matter: They saw God to be great, and able to bear them out: So we seeing our High Priest to be so great, let us hold fast to him; and he will hold us fast, and none shall pluck us out of his hands, John 10. 28. He is a great High-Priest entred into the Heavens; who will also if we hold fast to him, bring us thither. Men cleave to great Persons in great distresses, when they can give them any great hopes. Can the Son of Jesse give you vineyards and olive-yards! said Saul, when he feared the Peoples departing from him. But have any of your great Masters Places in Heaven to bestow, have they Mansions and Offices there to dispose of! (may our High Priest say) but Christ hath; He is passed into the Heavens.

C H A P. II.

The Words of the Text explained. What is meant by the Holiest. How we enter in thither.

H E B. x. 19, 20, 21, 22.

Having therefore Brethren, boldness to enter into the Holiest, by the Blood of Jesus.

By a new and living way; which he hath consecrated for us through the vail; that is to say, his flesh:

And having a High Priest over the house of God:

Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

MY Subject from out of these Words is, How in Prayer, especially secret Prayer, to converse with Christ our great High Priest; entered into the Heavens; and we to follow him thither by Faith; and treat him there when we pray, as being entered into the Holiest with him.

The Art and Skill of this high Converse with him in the Heavens; is the Apostle Pauls: who of all the Apostles (if not alone) hath most insisted on this particular: And in this Epistle he unfolds the mystery of Christs High Priesthood, as it was veiled under the Type and Shadow of the Levitical High Priesthood of Aaron, and his Successors: And writing to the Hebrews, now turned Christians, he speaks both the Doctrines and Duties of the Gospel, in the Old Testament Characters; and conciphers them: But in a special manner he had explained the mystical signification of that eminentest part of Aarons Priesthood, in his officiating on that most solemn day of Atonements, when he went into the Holy of Holies; (which was the summe and complement of the High Priests service) to be Christ entering into the heavens, as an High Priest for us: (of which you may read largely, though intermingled with other things; from Chap. 4. ver. 16. and Chapters 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. and so on in this 10th Chapter, unto these words:) And in these words (my Text) he comes to the Duties, or practical part that belongeth to us thereupon as inferred from thence: which likewise he utters in the language of the Types, of that dayes Rites and Solemnities.

And of all those Gospel Duties he begins first with this very thing which I have singled forth for my Subject; viz. How to converse with God and Christ now he is in Heaven, in allusions unto the Type thereof, and there to transact our concernments with him: (which being the first of all the other exhortations made, shews it was a principal one; and most genuinely inferred from the foresaid Type:) And to that end he first informs us in ver. 19. of our Right and Priviledge, that are Saints under the New Testament: viz. To enter into the holiest; and to go to him our High Priest thither; and the foundation of that Priviledge to be his Blood; ver. 19. And withall Secondly, pointing us the way which our High Priest hath paved, and consecrated for us; to come thither to him; ver. 20. himself having first entered as an High Priest for us; ver. 21. And then Thirdly, In ver. 22. He sets forth the Duty and Qualifications of those that will so come; and which they that that enter must seek for, or bring with them ; and these drawn and inferred either from the type of the Peoples part, performed on that day ; or by the High Priest acted for them ; or on their behalf.

There are three or four things or Phrases in the Text ; which I account it requisite to explain ; to make way for the founding of this my subject on the words ; ere I proceed upon it.

First, That by the holiest, here is meant the highest Heavens, into which Christ is entered, and where Christ is resident, and whither we are bidden to come and enter ; and whereof the Holiest in the Temple was the type : This is so much known to the most of intelligent Readers, as it needed not to be insisted on, but for the more unknowing their sake. And they may understand from our Apostle that the Tabernacle of Moses, and afterwards the Temple of Solomon, consisted of two Courts or Rooms ; see 1 Kings 16. 17, 19. one before the other : which the Apostle exactly describes, to the end that all might understand this very thing I am upon. *Chap. 9. 2, 3. For there was a tabernacle made ; the first wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread, which is called the sanctuary or the holy : And after the second veil, the tabernacle ; which is called the holiest of all : And the Priests he sayes, namely, The holy, went into the first every day to Sacrifice, ver. 6. But into the second (which was the holiest) went the high-priest once a year, &c. ver. 7. which second he again calls, The holiest of all, in ver. 8. And at ver. 9. he tells us, that this first Tabernacle (so he calls the whole, consisting of these two Apartments) was a figure for that time then present : The figure of what ? The Apostle plainly unriddles and explains it ; ver. 24. Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, (that is, into those Earthly Tabernacles which the Priests entered into every day ; and the High Priest once a year entered into ;) which are the figures of the true ; but into heaven it self ; now to appear in the presence of God for us : So then we are sure that the Heavens are the holy places : And the Heavens Christ is now in, is the holiest ; and figured out by that holiest of all : I will not at all detain you with the Question, whether there be not in the Heavens a first Court, which Christ past through ; of which the Court of Priests was the figure ; into that Heaven of Heavens, of which the holiest of all, which then the High Priest entered into, was the figure : The Apostle in that last place cited, doth in the plural mention both, in saying, The holy places : and that they were figures of the true : (And 'tis certain the true here, are the Heavens :) And yet again when he interprets what those places did signifie ; he sayes, Heaven it self, in the singular : It is enough to my present purpose, that the highest Heavens is here meant by the holiest ; those which Christ entered into, and where now he is, and into which we are here invited to come to him ; and into which our hope is said to be (in like allusion) to enter, as an Anchor ; into that within the veil ; whether the fore-runner is for us entered : Chap. 6. 19, 20. And that within the veil, is plainly an allusion to the holy of holies : So the Apostle would have us to mind and observe, from his foresaid description ; *chap. 9. 2. After the second veil was the Tabernacle, which is called the Holiest of all.

The Second thing to be explained, is ; what is meant by entring : Our entring (for it is spoken of us, and our entring ;) into the holiest ; that is, into Heaven.

1. We all know that our going to enjoy and possess Heaven, after this Life and World are ended, is termed an entring into it : Matth 25. 23. Enter into thy masters joy : And Acts 14. 22. And Christs entring into his Glory, and into the Heavens, (as in this Epistle) is said to be when he ascended.

But here this our entring must be understood of what is to be, and what we are to do in this Life : We being invited upon the declaration of our right to enter in, ver. 19. to come to, as the word is ; ver. 22. or draw near : And 'tis as an act to be done by us in this Life : An entry and coming with liberty of speech ; as the word translated [liberty and boldness] in ver. 19. also signifies.

And

And withal to come to and draw near, doth import an act of ours; and that to be with such and such dispositions, as at that present are to accompany that act of drawing near, and to be exercised therein; all which dispositions are concomitants of this Life. Moreover, it is as an entry whilst we are in via, in the way; viatores, wayfaring men; (as the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 35. terms us;) so ver. 20. We are to enter by a new and living way; consecrated for us; and that is in this Life: In the other World we are at our Journeys end.

Yet 2. There is an entring into the Kingdom of Heaven, in this Life; which is, when we are first called and converted, and born again, which indeed is done but once for all, whereof Baptism is the Seal; of which those places are to be understood; John 3. 5. Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot [enter] into the kingdom of God; which phrase is also used Matth. 19. 23, 24. and Mark 10. 23, 25. That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of God: that is, is hardly converted; and is spoken upon occasion of the rich young Mans refusal to come unto Christ: But this initial entrance is not meant here; for he supposeth them he speaks to, to have been as to this respect entred already; and therefore calls them Brethren, ver. 19. and supposeth them to have a right already to enter: Seeing therefore we have boldness or right to enter, (as many interpret it) so upon that right invites them to draw near; whereas the new Birth is that which gives that right first; as John 1. 12, 13. and therefore is not meant here: And again, that entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven by Effectual Calling at first, is as an entrance into a State, or such as into a City, to be at first admitted a free Denison of it; (The state of Grace; as Rom. 5. 1.) but is an admission into a condition or privilege, namely, that the Kingdom of Heaven should belong to us: 'Tis to be Cælo donatus, made a Citizen of Heaven; Phil. 3. But this here is an entrance as into an house, ver. 21. where some one dwells whom we would speak withal; and liberty of speech is that which this entrance serves unto: And this is into the holiest (you see) as into a place in allusion to the High Priests going into the Tabernacle, as an holy place; and such was Christs entrance into Heaven, as into the holy place, as was said chap. 9. 24. and this of ours is into Heaven, as his was.

3. It rests then this be an entrance into Heaven in this Life, by our performing such acts of drawing near, and coming to God, and our High Priest there, as are to be continued and encreased after our first Conversion, and performed between it and our entring into the actual fruition of the Glory of Heaven: And that there are such actings of Soul, in the exercise of which we do truly and really enter into Heaven, and are so called, the Scriptures are not wanting as to the using this phrase in that sense: The Apostle 2 Pet. 1. 11. having exhorted unto an exact diligence in all good Works after calling, and unto adding all sorts of Graces, as occasions call for the exercise of them, and to abound therein; from ver. 5. to 10. he then proposeth four or five Spiritual advantages that will accrue thereby, proceeding by a gradation in them, ver. 10. And the last and highest of them is in ver. 11. For so an entrance shall be ministred unto you abundantly, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. This is narrowed by most Interpreters unto an abundant free entrance into Heaven, and reception of our Spirits by Christ at our death; according as we have abounded in good Works, to be filled at our Death with Joy and Comfort answerable: As also at the latter day, when Christ shall say, Come ye blessed; for ye saw me hungry, &c. And it is certain that the word enter is used of our taking that full possession of enjoyment after Death of the Kingdom of Heaven, as Acts 14. 22. and frequently elsewhere; yet I find Calvin to take in unto this, the promise of all those rich supplies and assistances, which God vouchsafes all along during this Life, whereby to bring us to Heaven. And some Protestant Interpreters since, take it to include assurance in this Life, and a promise that Eternal Life, and the happiness thereof, shall open it self to you more and more, or be set open wider unto your Spirits, so as to enjoy the larger sense thereof in your Souls, that you may more amply and freely pierce into the inwards of Heaven, and enjoy the sense of that Life in a larger measure. I have in the Margent cited these that I may not appear alone in giving this sense; though I take the words to extend to both; viz. unto our entrance by way of full fruition in the other World; the comfort whereof at Death God often gives to those that have abounded in Holiness: That their Souls are in Heaven whilst in their Bodies; and in the Suburbs of Heaven: And they crowd not in, but have the great broad Gates set wide open to them; yet withal also that in the mean time holy walking procureth, ministreth or affordeth in the very doing, the priviledge of a more abundant entrance into Heaven every day more and more, all along this Life; by Christs manifesting himself to them; as John 14. upon keeping his Commandments: And in the coherence of the words in Peter with the foregoing, the promise hereof comes in last, as an increase or surpluse of the former priviledges; (all which are in this Life): One mentioned ver. 10. was, that we should thereby make our calling and election sure. And this of abundant entrance, is not the same with that: Not a repetition (of the same matter, of assurance namely; but an addition of a distinct and further benefit: A further, and indeed the highest degree attainable in this Life: The top of his Climax, or highest ascension of such attainments. As if he had said, you shall not only make your calling and election sure, but you shall enter more and more into Heaven, and live in Heaven afore-hand whilst you live, and take an ample possession of it in the first fruits thereof, which yet is called but an entring, (though often still renewed, because it is at highest in this Life but an imperfect attainment: And in comparison of the latter full entrance which is upon Death, but as an entrance, a first entrance, and first fruits and earnest, and yet said to be an entrance: And thus Heb. 4. We who have believed do enter into rest; and therefore going on from faith to faith, as Rom. 1. we enter further into rest, as Faith increaseth; every renewed act being a renewed entrance; and thus we are entring all our Life long; and this Jacob, that so extraordinary Saint and Patriarch, had enjoyed long afore Death: He sayes, This is the house of God, and this is no other than the gates of heaven; which in that vision (wherein he saw Christ and the Angels) he had been taken up into; Gen. 28. 17. yet and every Soul that walks very holily, and abounds in it, though he enter not into the joyes of Heaven, such as are unspeakable and full of glory; yet he may truly be said to go further up into Heaven, in his so walking; and to obtain larger roomth and place there then other Men though holy: He enters further up into the Country every day; into the heart of it as we use to say, though it be true that every true Christian is past from Death to Eternal Life, from Hell into Heaven) and when possession or fruition shall come, such a Man will find a more rich and ample provision to have been made for him there against he comes.

4. But if in the last place, more strict enquiry be made, what actings, exercises of Faith and Holiness, the Apostle doth here, in this my Hebrews Text, more especially intend, and calleth an entring into heaven, and a coming to, and drawing near? I Answer:

(1.) In General: All Gospel-worship and Ordinances, which therefore by way of Inference from this here in ver. 19. he in the 23th exhortheth not to forsake: And we must consider that his Exhortation begun in the 19th Verse, is an Inference from his Discourse afore of the Jewish Worship; and particularly of that on that solemn day of Atonement, when the High Priest went into the Holiest, which was the highest Worship that the Jewes had prescribed them; and was a day of pure Worship: They were to do no work thereon: Yea and was stiled a Sabbath of Sabbatism, the Queen of Sabbaths, and above all other Sabbaths whatsoever: And you may observe how in the beginning of this Chapter, wherein he goes on to interpret and unfold the mysteries of this dayes solemnity, he stiles them that come to it, The worshippers; the comers thereunto, ver. 1. 2. and from which (namely that his Discourse, Doctrinally treated by him in three Chapters afore) it is he deduceth his Exhortation here: So then Gospel-Worship and Ordinances may may in general be understood to be an entrance into Heaven, and the dispositions required in ver. 22. to be the inward qualifications requisite unto all such Worship.

But (2.) In a more special and eminent manner, I conceive, he understands Prayer, and especially Private Prayer: And I am so far from being alone in it, that I find my self compassed about with a cloud of Interpreters; who, almost, generally carry it unto Prayer: I could fill a Leaf with their Names and Sayings to this purpose upon some or other of these: And that Parallel-like Exhortation, (which many of them do alledge for this) Heb. 4. 14. Seeing we have a great high priest, that is past into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God: And ver. 16. Let us come boldly to the throne of grace. The Exhortation there let us come, is a coming by Faith in Prayer, imploring for help in time of need and distress; so the Psalmist useth the word to come to God. Psal. 65. 2. To thee shall all flesh [come]: How? For thou art a God hearing Prayer: 'Tis a coming then by Prayer. And the word here in my Text, Let us draw near, προσέρχουμεθα, is in the Original the very same that is there in Chap. 4. 16. And in the next Chapter to this where my Text is, (the 11th) He that cometh to God is one that diligently seeks him, and that is by Prayer: But if it were as it is translated, draw near; it likewise importeth Prayer: James 4. Draw near to God, and he will draw near to you; be afflicted and mourn, &c. Again, in that Parallel, Chap. 4. 16. it is a coming to God to obtain mercy, and find grace to help: And all that speaks Prayer. For these are the aim of a Soul that invokes God by Prayer, to obtain his Mercy for Pardon; and Grace for supplies of all their Spiritual wants, and other needs. And also the word βοήθεια there used, is a crying out for help, in case of extremity: Likewise the word there translated [boldly], μετὰ παρρησίας, with boldness; is properly liberty of speech: And what is that? but to come and speak freely to God our needs; and boldly to use all sorts of pleas with him, which Grace and Mercy in him do afford, to obtain relief and succours; to pour out our hearts afore him; and is not the very word also, that the Apostle chooseth here in my Text to form his exhortation in, the very same? We having boldness, let us come, or draw near; that is, having liberty granted to speak, and speak out our minds; our whole hearts; let us come and do it. Every word in that Heb. 4. speaks Prayer; and with that exhortation there, doth this here correspond and agree. The allusion also here of entring, refers unto the Jews, their coming to worship; which is stiled an entring into Gods courts. Psal. 100. And their coming with Praise and Thanksgiving, (which is a part of Prayer, 2 Tim. 1. 1.) in the 4th Verse of that Psalm, Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless his name. But further, the special allusion of this whole Paragraph, my Text, being specially made to the worship and practices of that day, wherein the High Priest entered into the Holiest, (which phrase of entring into it) is so often repeated in this Epistle; this brings it yet nearer home unto Prayer as meant; and shews that it is a coming to God and Christ by Prayer: For both on the High Priests part that day, as he went in by Blood into the holiest, so by Incense to make a Cloud; and by these two alone he went into the holiest: Lev. 16. 12, 13. And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail: And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony, that he dye not. This all of us that come into the holiest, are to imitate: Now not only Incense betokens Prayer, (as in the Psalms which was required on the High Priests part, but on the Peoples part also: It was required of them, that whilst Incense was offering, they should pray without. Luke 1. 9, 10. According to the custom of the Priests office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord: And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense: And if on the times of the ordinary dayes of Worship, much more on this day; the day of atonements which was appointed also for the People for Prayer, for they were to fast and afflict their Souls for Sin, Lev. 16. 27, 28. which they then confest, even of their whole Lives; and was therefore joynd with Prayer as that Duty did require for Atonement.

Book VI.

So as every thing falls in, That Prayer bears the main of the Apostles intendment and Exhortation: And those Qualifications, ver. 22. of a true heart, &c. do come in but as Concomitants, to make the Prayer acceptable.

C H A P. III.

That it is the Priviledge of Believers under the New Testament to enter into the Highest Heavens by Faith, and with the Apprehension of Faith. An Invitation to them so to do. The Dispositions which are required to make them meet for such an Heavenly Converse.

TH E S E things premised, I reduce the words to these Four Heads.

I. That all that are Believers already, under the New Testament; Their Priviledge is, That when they worship, especially in Prayer; that they should by Faith, and with the apprehension of Faith; enter boldly into the very highest Heavens; and placing themselves there, to seek Communion and Converse with God, thorough Christ. And with Christ himself as our High Priest; themselves considered as they are in Heaven; and we by Faith present there, together with God and Christ: In brief, when we pray, we should in an immediate manner set our selves to enjoy Communion with God, and Christ; as they are in Heaven.

II. A free and open Invitation here made with an Exhortation thereunto; which Invitement you have amply pressed, and enforced with the Highest Encouragements to perswade confidence in so doing: Namely, Thus to approach God, and Christ in the Highest Heavens: These two Heads you have in the 19, 20, 21. verses, Having therefore Brethren boldness to enter into the Holiest, by the Blood of Jesus: By a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, by the wail of his flesh: And having an High Priest over the House of God, let us draw near, &c.

III. The inward Dispositions, or Qualifications which are required to make them meet for such an Heavenly Converse; And which are to make their Prayers prevalent, to have power with God; to obtain what we pray for:

1. With which therefore we should enter, and approach: Or,
2. Which we should put forth, and exercise in the time of performance of that Duty of Praying: And as much as in us lies to endeavour not to come off without them: Or,

3. At least which we in our Prayers should chiefly seek for at Gods Hands; and implore his Grace and Mercy to help our Infirmities therein; these above all things else that we pray for; without doing which we shall much fall short in our obtaining those other things, prayed for by us; And these you have in ver. 22. Let us draw nigh with a true heart, in full assurance of Faith; having having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

Chap. 3.

I have propos'd this Third Head under these three several branches; That it may take in and comprehend all sorts of Believers; All of them either having or performing either the one, or the other of these three. For if we should understand, and limit the scope of these Qualifications, to be all and every of them absolutely necessary conditions, that is such, as without each of which, unless every Believer brings with him before he prays, he is not, nor shall be accepted, nor his Prayer regarded; we must exclude many of the Righteous: For 'tis certain that many do want full Assurance of Faith; which speaks an higher degree of Faith, and especially an assurance, that their Persons are accepted: Many also fall short of having their Consciences so fully sprinkled from an evil Conscience; as to their own sense, (as that Phrase would import, even to the sense of their Consciences, of which hereafter;) that their own hearts should not condemn them; in the guiltiness of many Sins that God is pleas'd to let lye bound, even upon them that are Saints, for as long as his pleasure is, thereby to humble them. And to confirm this, if we take the scope of the Apostle, I look upon the words to be an Invitation, with an Exhortation: And the scope of that Exhortation to be, what Dispositions those that would pray as in Heaven, when they pray; and that would pray after such an Heavenly rate, should labour to attain; and either bring such with them when they come; or at least are to seek after to obtain them in praying, and by Prayer: And so these things to be propos'd here, as principal matters to be prayed for: And so they serve as Rules of Direction to praying, as well as for Qualifications requisite thereunto: I find but two Interpreters that have toucht upon any such scope; and they are in Flaccius Illyricus, upon the words; of which afterwards: The other is worthy Mr. Dixon, who hath well observ'd on that word, [in full assurance of Faith]; that Gods meaning is, that he likes it better to come with a full assurance of Faith, though he despiseth not the weakest; nor quencheth Faith in the Smoak, not yet risen unto Victory in the Flame. To which I add, it being an Exhortation, Exhortations are usually made in the strain of highest attainments, not the lowest, and weakest: The Apostles did exhort to many things, weak Christians might be long in attaining: For the Copy, or Samples you set afore Learners, use to be with the perfectest; when yet they write, or work, very much short of them: And so here the meaning is that God indeed would have you come in full assurance; and this he proposeth as that which you may obtain; and exhorteth unto it as what he most desires, and would have in you: Also consider that yet the weakest Believer hath a Faith so far as to cause him to performe the main thing exhorted to; and that is, to come to God, and Christ; and also with a true heart in Prayer: Again, it is certain, that those whoever they be, that have these dispositions; he or they obtained them by Prayer: And therefore they cannot be all absolute Conditions aforehand, in all cases e're we come to pray: For themselves are obtain'd (I say) by Prayer first; and much seeking of God too: And how many poor Souls do bitterly complain of the want of these?

IV. And each, and the whole of these; both Duty, Invitation, Priviledges, &c. are infer'd from, and represented under the Analogie, and similitude, of that special solemn worship, and the Rites thereof observ'd, and performed by the High-Priest, and the People upon the Great and Memorable Day of Atonement; once again Celebrated with extraordinary Sacrifices, on purpose appointed for that Day; besides the Ordinary for every Day; the High-Priest carrying the Blood of those extraordinary ones, to make Atonement into the Holy of Holie., which he entred into but once a year. All which was accompanied with Confession of Sins and Prayer, the People also universally coming up to that Assembly; and were present at that Solemn Worship; keeping that day with afflicting their Souls for the Sins of their whole Lives past; which therefore must needs be joyned with Prayer on their part for the pardon of them, as Lev. 16. 12, 17. where 'tis said the High Priest carryed Incense within the Vail, with which, if you compare, pare the Practice of the People, what it used to be whilst Incense was offered; As in l uke 1. 9, 10. According to the custom of the Priests Office, His (namely Zacharies) lot was to burn incense when he went into the Temple of the Lord: And the whole multitude of the People were praying without at the time of Incense; It appears that the People prayed that Day, Incense on that day being offered in the Holy of Holies, by the High Priest for an Atonement in the same, Lev. 16. 29, 30. which Day was called the Day of Atonements; and in like respect styled the Fast, Acts 27. 9.

From the Types of which the Apostle deducts his Exhortation here, in these four verses, and speaks to the Hebrews in the Language thereof; carrying us up from that Holyest, to Heaven; unto God, and Jesus our High Priest there: And he presseth the substantials of our inward Worshippings, in ver. 22. from the performances of that day especially in Prayer: For, as this Days Solemnities were the Top of the Jewish Worship; and spent in Fasting, Prayers, and Confessions of Sins by the People; so is Prayer, these Duties and Qualifications of our Persons in Prayer; the height of our Christian Religion.

For the first: That it is our Priviledge, and the Gospel-Dispensation calls for it; that when we pray, we should set our selves to enter in by Faith immediately into Heaven; and Converse with them as they be in Heaven; and we together with them.

Instead of more literal Proofs, this Text being Evidence sufficient, requiring us thus to do; I shall give Reasons and Demonstrations of it.

I. A Reason in General: The Gospel (the Doctrines of it, being totally Heavenly, and the Blessings of it Heavenly, Ephes. 1. 4.) hath exalted, raised up, and enhanced all things thereof to an Heavenly State; in their several proportions, and kinds: Like the Elixar, It hath turned all the Legal Alchymie, or Carnal Earthly Ordinances; (as Heb. 9. 1. they are there called,) into Cœlestial: As in the same Heb. 9. 23, they are styled, even all the things, represented by those Types: The Gospel it self was styled with difference from the Old Covenant, The Kingdom of Heaven; and that by Christ himself, when he began to preach it: The very preaching of it is termed an Exaltation of those that heard it, unto Heaven: Matth. 11. 22. And a speaking from Heaven, Heb. 12. 25. And that is spoken in comparison to Moses giving the Law; whom he there oppositely terms, him that spake on earth: Yea, and this speaking from Heaven is attributed to the Sermons of the Apostles, and ordinary Ministers unto the Hebrews and other Christians, to the end of the World. And if their Sermons, which are Ordinances by the Ministry of another, speaking to us; are a speaking of Christs from Heaven; What then are our Prayers, especially Private Prayers? For they are purely mediate effluxes of the Soul to God himself, without the intervention of any outward medium, but what is in, and from a Mans own Soul, Elevated and Assisted by the Holy Ghost, as Rom. 8. this may certainly be entituled, Praying in Heaven.

Our Conversation, (If such as becomes the Gospel;) is to be in Heaven, Phil. 3. 20. But Prayer is here made comparatively unto that ordinary Conversation, An entering into Heaven in so eminent a manner; as if that we walkt out of Heaven when in our Callings, &c. and entred anew sometimes; but now and then; and that when we pray, and come to worship: Likewise where Christians State is to sit together in Heavens, with Christ: Ephes. 2. 5, 6. Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickned us together with Christ: And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: If you be quickned, and have the least of Spiritual Life begun in you, then hath Christ placed thee in Heaven; and our actings in Prayer should be in its degree, (and this exercise doth excel all other,) answerable to our State; and therefore should be a praying as Persons in Heaven: Certainly if any part of Worship, this in the Nature of it above all other, calls for it.

This Reason is but a General from the Heavenliness of the Gospel.

The Priviledge of Believers under the New Testament Illustrated, and proved by the difference between them, and Believers under the Old Testament, who had not this Freedom of entring into the Holiest.

TH E R E is a further special Account to be given of this Priviledge from a difference between the manner of the Dispensation under the Law, and now under the Gospel; as in respect unto this very particular of Prayer; together with an explication wherein this difference lyes of us, from the old Jew; who yet directed their Prayers unto God that was in Heaven, and implored him to hear in Heaven, when they prayed, as in 1 Kings 8. you often have it, and elsewhere abundantly.

That there was, and is, (notwithstanding this now said of them,) a difference of Priviledge between them and us in this respect; 'tis plain, that this Exhortation in the Text, to come boldly into the Holiest is spoken oppositely to what was theirs specially, when compared with other passages of this Epistle concerning them: The Text also styling this our manner of coming into the Heavens, to be a new way initiated, or new begun (as the word consecrated, in ver. 20. doth also signifie,) by the Flesh of Jesus rent, as ver. 20. And by his Blood, ver. 19. newly shed; (as the words in the Original do import: ) of which further after.

Concerning which difference,

I. I will not hold you in the Bryars of a Dispute about the meaning of that difficult place of our Apostle, chap. 9. 8. affirming that to the People of the Old Testament, The way (that is, for us;) into the Holiest of all was not yet made manifest; while as the first Tabernacle was yet standing: That is, whilst the Jewish Worship was yet in force; which was until Christ the true High Priest was ascended up into his Holiest, the Heavens: The plainest meaning to me is, that the Mystery of this was kept hid, in a great measure; that Christ might have the greater Honour in the discovery of it upon, and after his Ascension: And also to shew, That by vertue of his Blood it is that any do now, or ever did enter therein: But still so, as whatever de facto was then, that the Godly entred into Heaven at Death; yet the way to be thorough Christs entring: This was not then manifest: (I take hold of, and keep, to, the proper import of the word:) He saies not, that none had in reality, or indeed not entred; for Enoch and Elias had; but that it was not manifest: Nor yet was it, that it were altogether unknown to them, that they should one day come; thither; for the Patriarchs knew it, and expected it: Heb. 11. 10, 14, 16. All which still was but with a glimmering, obscure Light; as a dark shadow: I take therefore the Apostles meaning in the same sense that the same Apostle speaks it; of the whole Mystery of the Gospel it self; Eph. 3. 5. Which in other Ages was not made known to the Sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his Holy Apostles, and Prophets by the Spirit: Even so this particular of it was not manifest; that is, in that clear manner that it is now, upon Christs Ascension: The very Apostles (in the name of whom seems to Philip speaks it;) John 14. 5. say, Lord, we know not whither thou goest, and how can we know the way?

My

My Inference from this is, that if the way of entrance at last into that Holy of Holies, was not then so manifest to them; then much less was this way of Worshipping and Praying, by an Immediate entrance of themselves (through Christ into Heaven it self, when ever they prayed: And as present with their High-Priest himself, to present themselves by Faith unto God thorough him, and so offer up their Prayers to him; but stood as aloof, as Men on Earth, whilst they prayed unto God as dwelling in Heaven: But this the Apostle in my Text hath taught us; And this way I may safely say of it, was not manifest then, as it is now. But,

II. Besides the obscurity of the knowledge of this way of Praying; they were preoccupied from such an address immediate, into Heaven it self; (such as we have;) in that God appointed another place of his Residence, viz. his Temple on Earth; and therein specially the Holy of Holies; calling upon them to look unto, and make their Addresses to him, as dwelling also there: Whereas now he hath appointed Heaven it self immediately for us in Prayer to come into, when we come unto him; where also our High-Priest is present: Their Case stood thus: They knew indeed that Gods dwelling place was Heaven; and that when they prayed, God heard in Heaven his dwelling-place; and therefore when they prayed, they spread forth their hands towards Heaven, as Solomon in his Prayer did: But yet withal, they were first called upon to do Homage to God, as sitting on his Throne on Earth; as sitting between the Cherubims on the Mercy-Seat, which covered the Ark in the Holy of Holies: So Hezekiah directs his Prayer, 2 Kings 19. 15. O God that sittest between the Cherubims; and others in the Psalms the like: And then directed upon also, when they prayed, (though in private Prayer;) They were directed to look towards the Holy Place and Temple; as Psal. 28. 2. Hear the voice of my supplications when I cry unto thee; when I lift up my hands to thy Holy Sanctuary: This Oracle was the most Holy Place, where the Ark, the Mercy-Seat, and the Cherubims were: As you find 1 Kings 8. 6. and chap. 6. 5. And in this manner Solomon in the Dedication of his Temple, directs his own Prayer made by himself; and unto this course directed the People also; in that 1 Kings, chap. 8. He prays unto God that dwelt in heaven to hear in heaven; and yet draws down their eyes towards that House on Earth; as dwelling there; ver. 27, 28, 29, 30. But will God indeed dwell on earth? Behold the heaven, and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded; yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord, my God! To hearken unto the cry, and to the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee to day; that thine eyes may be open towards this house night and day; even towards the place of which thou hast said, My Name shall be there; that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make towards this place: And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray towards this place; and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place, and when thou hearest, forgive: So as they took God up, as dwelling in both places; but first lookt to his Dwelling-House, or himself, as dwelling on Earth; And from thence their Faith was to climb up to him, as dwelling in that other, the most Holy House in Heaven, whereof this on Earth was the Type; and thereby was to their weakness an help unto their Faith in Prayer, to have God so near them, (as the Phrase is,) as on Earth; that God should come down to Earth, and there had a visible dwelling-house amongst them; as Exod. 25. 8. And let them make me a Sanctuary that I may dwell among them; which he had not again on all the Earth.

And hence ariseth a manifest difference betwixt their Condition, and ours; that though they prayed unto God that was in Heaven, and to hear in Heaven: yet,

1. Themselves lookt upon themselves as standing afar off, at a distance from Heaven, whilst they were a praying: And entred not themselves by Faith into Heaven, as we are here called upon to do: I may therefore again say, This way of prayer in the holiest was not then manifest, as 'tis now: And,

2. Though

The word which Calvin useth of Davids praying in the 3. Plat. when he fled from Absalom was, David rediit se ad Tabernaculum convertit, unde promiserat Deus se propitium fore servis suis: On the words of the 5th ver. Mediam viam tenuit, ne vel signum visibile contemneret; quod Deus pro temporis ruditate instituerat: vel superstitiosè loco affixum, quicquam de gloria Dei carnale conciperet. ibidem.

2. Though they desired God would hear in Heaven, yet the Cry of their Prayer, and the Eye of their Faith were directed first unto, and towards his Holy of Holies on Earth; from whence, as by a rebound, (as I may so speak,) it should as by an eccho ascend up into the Ears of the Lord of Hosts in Heaven: Even as a Man directing his Speech, going immediately to such, or such an hollow place, or Cavern; the sound thereof comes back at second hand by reflection, to one that is further off; and their intercourse with God in Heaven was like as if one should send a Letter, or a Petition to a great Person; who hath two Dwelling Houses, one in a City, the other in some Village very far off from that City; and the Man is appointed to send his Petition, or Letter directly to the Country-House, but directed to him withal in his standing House in his City: So as indeed the Holiest Saint of them looked unto God in both; and did Homage to him as dwelling in both; and were not to neglect either: Whereas we take a direct course to Heaven when we pray, and divert not the least cast of an Eye to any thing on Earth, wherein God should be: We look not to the right hand, nor the left; not to one place more than another: Let prayers be made every where, 1 Tim. 2. 8. spoken in opposition to the Jews looking to their Temple.

And one Reason of this was, That God dealing then with them, as Children under Age; Gal. 4. 1. and instructing them by Figures of the Time; (as Heb. 9. 24. where he speaks of, and applies that Maxime to this very thing we are upon;) he therefore would have a figurative House to dwell in; (not such as in common he is said to dwell in all the Earth, but) separated from the rest of the Earth; which house was consecrated by himself; and wherein his Glory and Shadowy Presence did often shine and appear from forth the Oracle, the Holy of Holies, and filled that Temple: And thither their Faith and Prayers were to approach him first; and take up by the way, as we say, in their addreses to Heaven: God condescended herein to the weakness of them, whom he trained up as Children: And it was a way of Worship fit for Children, and suited to their Capacity; and yet sanctified unto them, because thus appointed by God.

You may perhaps in part understand, an Old Testament Jewish heart; and that of one that was truly penitent, by the Spirit of that poor Publican; whose Character and Frame of Spirit Christ hath lively set forth to us; Luke 18. And therein view the distance which they keep: He was a Sinner truly humbled, and an expectant of Mercy: It is said, He went up to pray in the Temple, ver. 10. (so then it therein falls pat with the Subject afore me: Now, observe what confirms the foregone differences (as on their part) I have given. 1. He stood afar off; so ver. 13. There is the distance I spake of. 2. He would not so much as lift up his eyes to Heaven: But, 3. Applied himself, and his Prayer unto God, as sitting on his Mercy-Seat in the Holiest: In those words, But smote upon his breast, and said, [God be merciful] unto me a sinner: It is that word, [God be merciful to me;] I take hold of for this: In the Original, the word ἰλάσθη, that is there used, is a Verb answering to the Noun ἰλαστήριον, the Mercy-Seat: And unto ἰλασμός, a propitiation for Sin, As 1 John 2. 2. And so it is, as if he had said, According to that Mercy; Thou O God that fittest between the Cherubims, over and upon thy Mercy-Seat, (which is called ἰλαστήριον by the Septuagint, and owned by the Apostle, Heb. 9. 5.) declaring thereby that thou art, and wilt be propitious, and merciful unto poor Sinners; according unto that Mercy thereby set forth; Be merciful to me a poor Sinner, that am at this distance from that thy Holy place thou dwellest in: Yet I do look unto that thy Mercy-Seat, and to thee who fittest thereon; and have my eye, and hopes fixed wholly thereupon for Pardon: And though I dare not look up to Heaven it self where thou dwellest; yet my Soul looks toward this Mercy-Seat, whereon thou fittest on Earth: You may, I say, understand hereby the Level of a Jewish Faith: And that word ἰλάσθη, as spoken by him, shews, that they understood, though darkly, what that Mercy-Seat did signifie: That God, that sat thereupon was merciful, and favourable to Expiate and make Atonement for Sins; and then to cover, and pardon them:

Book VI.

them : As the Hebrew word importeth : (of which more afterwards ; ) unto which the word ἱλάσκεσθαι , and ἱλάσκω answereth ; signifying both to make Atonement or Reconciliation by Christ : So Heb. 2. 17. and also to be merciful, and forgive , upon such a Reconciliation made : As by Daniel, Dan. 9. 14. and Deut. 21. 8. Be merciful O Lord, &c. Now of this Man, Christ saies, he went away justified : He being humbled, and having this Faith : I but observe here how yet he stood afar off, Two Courts off from the Holy of Holies, where this Mercy-Seat was : Yea, in the remotest place out of that outermost Court, did this Man stand ; for it is comparatively spoken unto that nearer approach, which the Pharisee forsooth made ; he going up unto the highest part of that outward Court ; thither he crowds up himself with Confidence, even next to the Door of the Priests Court : (But into that Priests Court, none was to enter , but a Levite : ) Well, but here in this Heb. 10. we see the Faith we are exhorted unto : Christ being come, an High Priest of good things to come ; not as then, but in a shadow revealed, we are bidden to enter with boldness : Yea, to draw near, when we are entred with full assurance of Faith , and Confidence even into the Holy of Holies ; the Heaven where Christ is sitting at the Throne of the Majesty on high : Under the Law the Holyest Saint of that People was not to enter into the first Earthly Mundane Tabernacle , into which the Priests came : Yea, some have said, they were not so much as to see into it ; (but that I am not fully resolved of : for they brought their Sacrifice to the Door of that first Tabernacle ; and one would think, should see it sacrificed too for them :) but enter they did not, that's certain : And to that end there was a Veil, called the first Veil, placed at the entrance of the first Tabernacle of the Priests , to shut out the People ; as well as there was a second Veil placed afore the Holy of Holies ; as the Apostle plainly insinuates, Heb. 9. 2. I will not dispute whether it was to hinder the Peoples sight of what was done in the Priests Court ; as well as the second Veil hindered the Priests sight of what was in the Holy of Holies ; but to be sure, it forbad entrance to the People, if not wholly debarred their sight.

This practical instance I have, as by the way, and in the middle of my Discourse, inserted ; to shew the difference mentioned of a Jewish Faith, and Prayer ; And as giving light to the rest of my Discourse on this Argument.

I proceed to confirm the former Notion further.

II. As in this manner they directed their Prayers unto God in his Temple, on their parts ; so answerably on Gods part he both promises

I. That his Eyes shall be open, and his Ears attent unto the Prayer that was made in that place : For now (saith he) I have chosen, and sanctified this house, that my Name may be there for ever : And mine Eyes, and my Heart shall be there perpetually : And in 1 Kings 6. 3. it is added by God, My Heart shall be there perpetually.

II. It is de facto said, and spoken of God ; that his hearing of their Prayers was out of his Holy Temple, as well as out of Heaven : And to send forth help, and Blessings, and Deliverances of his People upon their Prayers ; yea, and to work all his works of wonder, which he executes over the whole Earth, from out of his Temple, his dwelling-place on Earth.

But especially in the deliverances of his people : Psalms 3. 4. I cried unto the Lord with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill : 'Twas uttered by David when he fled from Absalom, as the title to the Psalm is ; (he having before placed the Tabernacle and Ark on Zion, the City of David, 2 Sam. 6. 12, 17. which he calls in that Psal. 3. The holy mount) and that speech of his here hath an aspect and reference unto those passages in the story of his flight ; 1 Sam. 15. The High Priest did offer to carry the Ark with him into the field ; ver. 24. no, sayes David, let it stand in its proper place, in the Tabernacle appointed for it, ver. 25. and thought he, my Prayer shall be towards it as 'tis placed in that ordained seat which God hath appointed :

And his Prayers having been heard, though at that distance from the Ark itself, he glorifies God that had heard him at that distance out of his holy hill: (Thus Calvin glosseth on the words). David's Faith glorying and triumphing in this, that whilst Absolom who came and possessed the City of Jerusalem, and so had the outward presence of the Temple and Ark with him; (and let him take that to himself;) but David in the mean while, though removed from it, bent his Prayers thither, and those Prayers prevailed, and were heard therein (sayes he) whilst his wretched Son was rejected, who had the local being of the Ark close by him and with him, for he was possessed of Jerusalem: (Let these things be compared with the Story). In like manner, Psalms 20. he brings in the people praying for their King; their petition ver. 2. is, Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Sion. And so, as he hears the Prayer in his Sanctuary, so the performance of it is likewise said to come from God, as dwelling in the Sanctuary; from thence it was he gave forth his commands for the execution; and yet so, as Heaven thereby was signified too: And therefore upon this experiment, David (who was the King they had prayed for) strengthens his Faith for the future: Ver. 6. Now know I that the Lord saveth his anointed, he will hear him from his holy heaven, with the saving strength of his right hand.

Many other like passages you may find scattered up and down in the Psalms, and elsewhere; that what God doth at the Prayer of his people, he is said to do it in his Temple: That is, that from out of his Temple, the sentence to come forth, to render recompence to his enemies, is said to be a voice out of his Temple. Isa. 66. 6. A voice from the temple, a voice of the Lord, that rendereth recompence to his enemies. For God sat as a Judge in his holy Temple, and ruled thence the whole earth, Hab. 2. 20. And Psal. 99. 2. The Lord is great in Sion; and he is high above all people: And terrible out of his holy places; Psal. 68. 35. The great deliverances of his people when threatened to be besieged by Zenacharib and his Host, in Hezekiah's times: Psal. 76. 2, 3. In Salem is his tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Sion: There brake he the arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battle: Selah. Observe how it is said, [There] he brake; namely in his Temple; his habitation there: For unto that his Temple doth the coherence in the Verse afore carry it, for that was last in mention, and with the greatest emphasis above the former; either Jerusalem, or the Land of Judah; ver. 1. And there he brake the spear, &c. that is, frustrated and made void all their Weapons prepared for the Battle, though not one stroke were struck: So he is said to break the arm of the King of Egypt, Ezek. 30. that is, to weaken his Power: But that which puts the greatest notoriety upon this, as to our purpose in hand, is that in the story we read, how that Zenacharib's overthrow was from Hezekiah's Prayer in the Temple; for upon Zenacharib's Letter, and Hezekiah's hear-say of the Blasphemy, he took himself thither, went instantly into the Temple, and began his Prayer thus; O thou God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims. He invokes him under that title of his dwelling in the Holies, and so hearing Prayers there: Thus you have it recorded both in Isaiah and in 2 Kings 29. 15. And how suitably in answer hereunto is it said here in the Psalm, that God gave forth sentence presently out of his Tabernacle; yea and that so suddenly too, as that the very execution is said Unto Zenacharib's Invasion doth Calvin refer it; for which he gives his Reason. And Piscator in the very Title doth the same. And Ainsworth on the last Verse aptly applies it to the Chieftains of Zenacharib's Army; which is a most apt accommodation of the conclusion of the story, with a concluding Admonition given to Kings and Princes: Ver. 12. He shall cut off the spirit of Princes; he is terrible to the Kings of the earth. The word translated Princes, is Antecessors, Leaders (see Junius Translation) next to Kings, (which follows) God doth cut off their spirits; gather or take away their spirits; their Lives in a moment at once; and with as much ease and liberty at pleasure, as a Gardiner prunes the Leaves and Branches of Vines: Or as he would gather the bunches of the Grapes when fully ripe; and makes no matter on't to do it. How fitly this doth correspond with the event in that story, you may see but by reading these few words, which are the conclusion of that story too, in 2 Chron. 32. 21. And the Lord sent an Angel which cut off all the mighty men of valour; and the [Leaders] and Captains in the Camp of the King of Assyria. And for those other words in the Psalm; He is terrible to the Kings of the earth; take those other words in the same Verse in the Story: So he returned with shame of face to his own Land. What a dread and confusion must it needs strike the Heart of that haughty Prince with: But that was not all; read but the Verse; And when he was come into the house of his God, they that came out of his own bowels, slew him there with the sword.

to be done there; that is, from thence: And yet again in the 8th Verse of the Psalm, it is said to be a sentence from Heaven too: Thou didst cause judgment (so called because it was the sentence of God as a Judge) to be heard from Heaven. Thus Hezekiah prayed, and thus God heard; and both as in the Temple.

C H A P. V.

That there is a fair and open Invitation to enter into Heaven when we Pray. And in such a manner to Pray, as those that are thither entered.

As Rev. 11.
12. 'tis spoken of the Witnesses.

IT being the condition of many New Testament Saints, (so much of Moses vail remaineth on their hearts) that they dare not approach so near as to believe themselves in Heaven, or to be called up to Heaven, when they are to pray: They hope indeed in the end to enter in thither when they dye, (and 'tis true they shall) but stand at present afar off: Our Apostle therefore vehemently exhorteth them in these words, to draw near: ver. 22. And to enforce this his Exhortation, tells them they have a liberty, yea a right to enter. And then he follows to back that with other most potent Arguments to perswade them hereunto.

Concerning this his scope in the General, Observe.

1. That this Invitation with that Exhortation, ver. 22. is of such Persons as are actually Believers already: For 'tis of such that at present have a right to enter, and cause of boldness. 2. That they are supposed to have a true Heart, and a saving Faith wrought in them; and thereupon are exhorted to draw near, yet nearer, with a full assurance of Faith, which is a further degree of Faith, in believing their right and interest, and of the acceptance of their Persons and Prayers when they come: And such a Faith of Assurance always presupposeth a first Act of Faith of Recumbency to be already begun; 'tis that begins their interest; which Faith of Recumbency the Apostle Paul saith, was the foundation Faith of himself, and Peter, and the other Apostles and Christian Jewes: Gal. 2. 16. We believed on Jesus Christ that we might be justified. Likewise 3. Those he thus invites and exhorts, he termeth Brethren: Seeing therefore [Brethren] we have a liberty, &c. Let us draw near or come to.

There is another Invitation to come to Christ, which is on purpose directed to such as are but as yet under a work of preparation unto their coming to Christ; namely of those that are weary and heavy laden: Matth. 11. 28, 29. Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your Souls. And that indeed is that coming to Christ, by Souls that are now a converting. And so the Exhortation there is for them to put forth that first Act of Faith, which they never had done before, that they may be saved: But this here is an Invitation with an Exhortation to those that have come to Christ for Salvation already, that they would enter into Heaven in Prayer: And it is certainly a mistake in those Interpreters, that do extend the direct scope of this here unto Men who as yet have not believed, to come in at first to believe. I say this is not the direct scope of our Apostle; though I acknowledge (to the honour of this portion of Scripture) that many of the Grounds, Perswasives and Instructions here given

Believers

Believers to come into Heaven, by Prayer to Christ, may powerfully be made use of as pertinent invitations, persuasives and directions to those whom we preach to; and by themselves to persuade them, being humbled and heavy Laden for their first coming to Christ: As namely, 1. That they are immediately and directly to come to Christ, as the way to God the Father: (As my Text also teacheth, and as Christ is here represented). And 2. To come unto him as an High Priest, to sprinkle their Consciences with his Blood, as ver. 20. 22. Likewise 3. To come to him as an High Priest that is over the House of God: And so as to him that hath the power and commission of admission of Souls into that house at first; the Household of God his Father, to own and receive them: (And this is most proper unto the first Act of Faith). And 4. To come to God the Father with Christs Blood: To be justified by him freely by his Grace, through the Redemption that is in Jesus Christ, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his Blood. And thus to be sprinkled from an evil Conscience; that is, from the guilt of all their Sins: which chap. 9. he terms a purging by his Blood their Consciences from dead works, (which word dead works is proper unto the Sins and state of a Person that hath been unregenerate; their works are wholly dead works.) And 5. To come both to God the Father and the Son, to give them true and sincere hearts unto God and his interest. Also 6. To have their Bodies put Synecdochically for the whole Man: Washt; that is, sanctified by pure Water; and their outward Conversation made holy and pure by the power of the Holy Ghost, working as clear Water.

And as all these are undeniably the main substantials of saving Conversion; and which humbled Sinners, invited to come to Christ, do seek for at Christs hands, and God the Fathers, so they are all found in the Text: And it is also as certain, that after we have believed and been converted, that these are the great things which in Prayer we drive at, and treat with God and Christ for, even ever after, till we come to Heaven:

And so the words of the Text may serve for both: And the most of these you will find in  Davids renewed Faith and Repentance, in Psalm 51. And indeed it falls out that all the same Essentials that are wrought in, or that are to be sought by Converts at the first for their Salvation; the very same the most growing Christians are to continue to exercise in their renewals of Faith and Repentance in Prayer; as David there did: And like as that Invitation, Matth. 11.

Come to me all ye that are heavy laden, &c. (directed to beginners) yet serves many a poor Souls turn, that hath been long and truly turned to Christ; when in temptations, that double Sins afresh come in upon them; and the Spirit of God makes use thereof for their relief: So on the contrary, this invitation, &c. in my Text, though setly intended for Believers already, as encouragements to Prayer; may with an easie alteration be used and turned into persuasives unto those that have not yet believed, to persuade them to come in.

2. It is an universal Invitation of all such. He exhorts them therefore under the title of Brethren; and speaks it as including himself and all other Christians: Seeing we have, Brethren, all of us the like liberty, let us draw near, even whoever is a brother with us. As if he had said, in this matter both of Priviledge and of Duty, we are all alike; the case is all one with me who am an Apostle, and all my fellow Apostles, with all Christians: The weakest in Faith and Hope may crowd into Heaven together with the strongest; you may all come into the Holiest, and get up into it, as high as you can get.

Yea 3. This Exhortation and Invitation is specially directed unto the weaker sort of Christians, (if to any more than others) that stand farthest off; that is, that are under the greatest discouragements in their own Spirits to come; and are most backward, and stand aloof in and through the sense of

See Calvin on these words

There is this seeming appearance for the other Interpretation, that in ver. 19. it is called an entrance which in usual speech notes a first beginning to enter. But for Answer; 1. Every new Prayer is a new Entrance into the Holiest, in comparison to thy ordinary walking in thy Calling. Every time we pray, we are to enter into Heaven. 2. That act of drawing near, or approaching, ver. 22. supposeth one first, as ver. 19. entered into the Holiest; and notes a going on further, to approach to God there.

Book VI. their own unworthiness, or weakness of Faith and Holiness : Unto you it is I more especially speak of all others. As if he had more familiarly said, Come you and draw nearer, you that stand afar off; the outmost of all the company. Come to, why keep you at such a distance; your right to draw near is as much as ours that are nearest. Like to that proclamation of Peace, Isa. 57. 19. To them that are afar off, and them that are near.

These Generals being forelaid to clear the Apostles scope; all which I might have reserved to Applications at last, but perhaps do stand as advantageously at this entrance; not only to shew his drift, (necessary at the first) but chiefly that all sorts may know how to make use of, and apply the encouragements that now are to follow, unto themselves. For that which I purpose to insist on are the Perswasives, with which this Invitation is strengthened. And as the thing invited to, is the greatest; namely, A communion with God in the Heavens, by faith in praying, thorough Christ, as if we were with him there; (the summary of this Scripture); so the invitements, or things inviting, or proposed to us to persuade us to the exercise of this, are the most alluring and forcible; and all framed after the image, and similitude, or allusion unto the coming to God in his own house, by the Jewish Worshippers, or comers unto, (as they are stiled ver. 1. and 2. of this Chapter): And when they came to pray in the Temple, especially on that day of Atonements; who are thereby said to appear before God; to approach and draw near, (although with that local distance from the Holiest): As also after the similitude of the High Priest his entering into the Holiest; both as High Priest, and in the behalf of the People: For remember to carry along with you how I have proposed these as my pattern, to draw the particulars of what in this Subject I shall handle; and shall keep to it all along.

CHAP. VI.

An enumeration of the particular Invitements unto Communion with God and Christ, by thus in praying, entering into Heaven through Faith.

I. THE Invitement is to come to Gods House; which you have in terminis proposed, ver. 21. even to his standing House of his Continuing, and Everlasting Abode: The usual and common Style that Invitations run in, is, Will you come to my House; and see me there: And if you read but what the Holy Men of old, (that were kept at that distance;) speak of what entertainment they found, when they came to Gods House; (as Moses Tabernacle and Temple were called;) the Type of our Heaven, and what they express of it in their Old Testament Language, you must needs expect far higher from God, when you shall in Prayer come to Heaven to him: They speak of the Fatness of Gods House; Psal. 36. 8. They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures, noting a fulness of all that is good. Of goodness: Psal. 65. 4. Come to a great Mans House, and what a plenty do you find it furnished with; when you come but as a Stranger, at times, and not as an Indweller: Yet their Holy of Holies was but the shadow of good; of goods, in the Plural; so in the Original, Heb. 10. 1. That is, both of what is substantially and truly good, and only good; as also

also plenty of all sort of good things. And notice, that he precisely speaks this, in that Heb. 10. of their Holy of Holies, as the shadow into which their High Priest there (he says) went). Thou comest to pray, that's thy business; and so when thou settest thy foot but in, thou mayest behold a new World of Heavenly good things, which this Earth affordeth not. All that thy Soul needs for it self, to be sure are to be had there, and from thence, by Faith and Prayer in this Life. Thy Soul hath a choice set afore it; and my Text tells thee, thou mayest be bold to pray for whatever is truly good; the Commodities of that place which God hath given thee but an heart to will and desire, and to pray for. And what good is there, or can be, which Gods House will not afford?

But II. Who is it in that House we are invited to come to, and speak withal there? God, who is the Master and Owner of that House; the Supreme Lord of it. The house of God, saith he, which Christ is over; ver. 21. and set over by God his Father to be the Governour of it, whereof the Father is the Original Owner, which Christ therefore calls his Fathers House; John 14. And which although it be Christs own House also; yet but as the Sons, Heb. 3. so as God is thereby set forth to us, as he to whom we are invited to come, and by whom we are invited to come.

The good Welcome to any House, and the Entertainment, depends on him that is the Supreme in it: And therefore it is God (and that as here propounded) whom we are ultimately to come to. It is God we ultimately come to, and in Prayer do and must apply our selves unto: For this House is called the Holiest; ver. 19. so called, because the Holiness of God dwells there: In the high and holy place, created by him on purpose to display his Glory in; which that and other Scriptures term his Throne, as Christ also entileth Heaven: And there his Face is to be seen. His Presence. Even Christ here is said but the way, ver. 20. but God is our Journeys end. Where there is a Way, there must be a Journeys end. Though we are come to Christ first by Faith, yet it is, that he may bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 19. and that we may have access through Christs own going to Heaven, who was to appear in the presence of God Heb. 9.

Now what Entertainment you may have coming to God in his House, take in Old Testament language also: They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt cause them to drink of the rivers of thy pleasures; out of the same himself drinks of; even of the pleasures God himself hath. His own blessedness is thy utmost happiness. There can be no higher entertainment, than to be at the Kings table, and to eat of what himself eats, and to drink of what himself drinks, [of thy pleasures] saith he. As also Christ; Enter into thy Masters joy. And sipping hereof thou mayest have in this Life, (if thou seekest it in Prayer as for thy Soul) find the first Fruits. For David spake this of what himself, and many Old Testament Saints, had in their Prayers to God, and other Worshippings of him at their Temple, or towards it, in this Life found: Psal. 65. 2. compared with ver. 4. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come. Blessed is the man whom thou chooshest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts. We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple.

But III. The liberty (as our Translators in the Margent) and freedom that is proclaimed to us to come, being added to these, makes the invitement fair, and far more encouraging. The former are the real inducements, but this addition makes the encouragement as to us: And that's the third Branch. For if the plenty the House affords, were never so much; the entertainment never so great; yet if all this be not accompanied with a freedom for us declared, that we may come and be welcome; we should be afraid, and still keep at a distance.

Now for the clearing and demonstration of this, I must a while insist upon the interpretation of the word, ἐξουσία [παρρησία], which is translated [boldness]:

Book VI.

[boldness]: Having boldness: As that which is purposely set to declare this liberty to us.

Finis, who will cast these Verses into the form of an Invitation, expresseth it thus: 1. Domus est aperta: The House stands open, 'tis but our coming. 2. Fus in- grediendi datum: A right for us to enter, given us ver. 19. 3. Via comparata: The way cast up, made plain, consecrated for us, ver. 20.

I shall here give a Premonition concerning the translation of the word παρρησία, here rendered boldness.

I acknowledge that in that Parallel place to this, Heb. 4. 16. Let us come with boldness; (where it is the same word παρρησία) it doth signifie a bold confidence in us to come, &c. But there it is a simple Exhortation, and the whole of the Exhortation: But here it is made the ground of the Exhortation that follows. Let us therefore come, &c. that is the Exhortation: And seeing we have the boldness, &c. that is, the Ground premised or forelaid, to draw on the thing exhorted to. Again, there it is joined with μετὰ, [with] boldness, as an act of Confidence within our selves, which we are bidden to come with: But here it is, ἔχοντες παρρησίαν, which is translated, We having this boldness: As having an act of Boldness and Confidence, already begotten in our selves, which as it stands in this place seems not so proper unto that following Exhortation, ver. 22. And my Reason is, because in that Exhortation, Boldness or Confidence, (as 'tis a Grace in us wrought) is one main thing exhorted to in that clause; namely, [with full assurance of Faith], that is, with full Confidence and Perswasion; which is that which causeth Boldness as the effect of it: And thus it would be as if he had said; seeing therefore we have the boldness, &c. Let us come to, or draw near with full assurance of Faith; which in sense and substance are all one and the same thing. Yea and it were to make this boldness (supposed) which is the effect of assurance of Faith (as was said) to be the Ground or Perswasive, and so the cause of this assurance of Faith, and of our coming with this assurance.

But yet unto this Objection it may be Answered, That some good beginning of Boldness and Confidence being wrought already in us, encourageth us to enter; and that then Christ gives more Assurance and Confidence. For as Faith begun goes to Christ for more increase of it self, Lord increase our Faith, so doth Confidence, for more Confidence. Like unto that Exhortation, Psal. 37. 14. Be strong, or of good courage (which are all one) and he shall strengthen thy heart.

It is far more congruous to interpret it thus; Seeing we have such cause of Confidence; or such ground of Boldness; which by a Metonymy is so called Boldness: Let us draw near with full assurance. And indeed our best Interpreters do understand, and carry all the particulars that follow after, or that come between in this 19, 20, and 21, Verses; yea and this word it self unto this: To beget assurance of Faith, which we may draw near with; They turn all those lesser streams into that one channel, that they might all fall into this issue of creating Assurance and Boldness in us, which each doth Naturally tend unto.

That therefore which comes to be my present work, is to explain the particulars that follow, in this their tendency; viz. As they are grounds of encouragement unto us, to come and enter into Heaven, when we pray; as that which all and each particular tends unto, as the true center of them. As for Example, Take that one that Christ being our High Priest is entered into Heaven for us, and there resident to entertain us, &c. this affords us just ground of Confidence and Boldness, to enter thither to him with full assurance of Faith, that we shall be received, and accepted, and our Prayers.

And in order to this issue, unto which all those other particulars in their several tendencies drive, I begin with this very first word it self: Seeing we have the liberty, &c. and I will give you the unfolding the word παρρησία, translated translated Boldness; as it serves to manifest this third branch; the Freedom and Liberty we have to enter into Heaven, &c.

Our Translators have in the Margent varied it, [Liberty:] This I choose rather to follow, and insist upon.

The Greek word is an extensive word, and comprehends many things in the significations of it; whereof what shall serve to the present purpose, I shall particularize: It comprehends all sorts of what you use to term Freedom and Liberty.

I. A freedom from fear, or shame in coming, that may arise from the sense of unworthyness: Many that are invited to a great Mans house, may be bashful to come, and incident to shame: But we Sinners who have been made sensible of our vileness, as all Believers have been; (I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, O God, &c. Ezr. 9. 6.) And likewise Fear, which ariseth from guilt, which guilt condemning us in our selves, works fears: Now the word here used, imports the Removal, First of shame: 1 John 2. 28. Abide in him, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming: The word translated confidence there, is the same that here: Also of Fear which ariseth from Guiltness condemning: 1 John 3. 21. If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God: The same word, it imports a being freed from Fear: Malefactors found guilty, had their Faces covered for the shame of their guilt; and so hurried to Execution: As Hamans face was covered, no more to appear before the King: In the Gospel when Christ asked him, How cam'st thou hither without a Wedding Garment? He was speechless: Whereas παρρησία, is an appearing without shame, or cause of shame; with open face to behold the glory of the Lord; their Sins being forgiven, there will never be any Cause for it: And so as if he had said, we have good ground to appear before God; and look him in the face with free and open Countenances, not as guilty Persons: For if we believe our Sins are forgiven us: Likewise upon the same ground we may appear, and enter without Fear.

The word also doth import a freedom from any cause of danger, that might be supposed upon a Mans doing this or that: And therefore in the Negative one is said not to have παρρησία, to walk openly, and abroad; when his Person may be supposed to be in danger if he does: John 11. The Jews consulting to destroy Christ, ver. 53. At the 54. ver. 'tis said, ουκ ἔτι παρρησία, That Jesus walked no more with freedom: 'Tis Translated openly, but 'tis the Negative; the same word that is used here: He forbore to appear in publick; withdrew himself as apprehending danger: And the very Acceptation of the word fearlessness from danger, is exceeding useful to be taken in, here in this place; for it plainly serves to express a difference between us under the New Testament, and the Jew under the Old: And the Apostle carries it much in his Eye, and Scope, and offers to set out those differences thereby, to exalt and magnifie the Gospel.

Now 'tis evident that God carried things so, under his Old Testament Dispensations, as to keep them under a fear of being cut off from their People, and so of Death; if in their approaches to the Publick Worship they omitted, or neglected such and such Observations prescribed them: Take for instance the case of the High-Priest, in his goings into the Holy of Holies; (for 'tis pertinent to the purpose in hand; for the allusion here is made thereunto:) How solemnly was he forewarned to take heed, how to performe the outward Rites prescribed, in his officiating on that day; with this threatning, That he dye not: You have it twice inserted and rehearsed in Lev. 16. (The Ritual for that day:) 'Tis at the beginning of the Prescripts, ver. 2. And in the middle, ver. 13. It was a matter of danger for him to enter in thither; and must needs cause fear to him that entred, least he should thorough Omission have miscarryed, or thorough Casual Uncleanness: But we are here invited to enter into the Holiest, upon the assurance of the contrary: That we have a παρρησία, no cause of fear written over the Door of our entrance: Therefore let us draw near, but with a True Heart, and full Assurance of Faith, and there is no danger at all. Likewise,

2. The Inferiour Priests and Levites, in their Officiatings and Transactions about the Utensils of this the Holyest, about the Ark namely, and the rest in Numb. 4. when the Tabernacle was to be taken in pieces, and removed by the Levites; when Aaron and his Sons, (who are only appointed to do it,) had taken down the Vail afore the Holy of Holies, and had covered the Ark therewith, ver. 5. and ver. 8. And in like manner all the Sanctuary, and the Vessels in it had been covered by them with other coverings appointed for them; what saies ver. 15. And when Aaron and his Sons have made an end of covering the Sanctuary, and all the Vessels of the Sanctuary, as the Camp is to set forward; after that the Sons of Kohath shall come to bear it: But they shall not touch any Holy thing, lest they dye: These things are the burden of the Sons of Kohath; in the Tabernacle of the Congregation: And also ver. 20. The Kohathites that were to be imployed about those Holy things, ver. 18. yet at ver. 19, 20. it is said, But thus do unto them, that they may live and not die; when they approach unto the most holy things: Aaron and his Sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service, and to his burden: But they shall not go in to see when the Holy things are covered, lest they dye: They were neither to see those Holy things with their Eyes, nor touch them with their hands: Oh but Brethren, the case is altered with us under the New Testament: Read I John 1. 1. where the Apostle proposing Christ unto us Believers of the New Testament, whom he decyphers to be Him that was from the beginning, and the word of Life; him, saies he, whom our eyes have seen, and whom our hands have handled; that which was from the beginning, which we have heard; which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the word of Life: Such familiar Converse had the Apostles with him, when he was come, whom the Vessels of the Sanctuary, the Ark, &c. shadowed: And whom the Apostle doth in these words there expose unto all the Spiritual Senses of all Believers; (for the Acts of New Testament Faith on Christ, are said to have the exercising of these three Senses there mentioned; Hearing, Seeing, Handling: And of the other two also in the Scriptures.)

And this very comparing as to this very respect of fear and danger, between the State of the Old Testament and the New; our Apostle doth institute and at large spreads forth in chap. 12. towards the close of this Epistle, from ver. 18. to ver. 25. and instanceth on the one part how it was with the Jews Spirits at the giving of the Law, when God brought the Shadow of Heaven down so upon the Mount, Exod. 24. 10. They, Moses, Aaron, and the seventy went up the Mountain, and they saw the God of Israel; and under his feet the body of heaven, &c. And utters it in the same word wherein the Exhortation in my Text speaks in: Let us come to; and there 'tis ye are [not come unto] Mount Sinai, (as they were;) which might not be touched, insomuch as if a beast (that was not capable of the Command) touched the Mountain, he was to dye: And so terrible was the sight, that Moses (their Mediator, to approach to God for them;) said, I exceedingly fear and quake: Thus 'twas on the Jews part, in their coming to: But oppositely he sets out our coming to, with all that is Amiable, Delectable, and Alluring, ver. 22. But ye are come unto Mount Sion, the Heavenly Jerusalem, &c. whither to come there is no danger, but all that may make blessed: The danger is only in refusing, as ver. 25. In that other their coming, there was presented on all hands a danger; yea, of those who by warrant from God were called up into the Mount; and saw the God of Israel, As in the same Exod. 24. 11. is repeated; and that they did eat and drink before him: It is in that verse recorded as a wonderful thing; That God laid not his hand upon them, He did them no hurt: 'Tis noted as a strange extraordinary thing, that they should come down again, without being destroyed: They were in danger; yea, but we are invited: Let us come to; seeing we have a security, a freedom from fear and danger: A παρρησία, to enter ter : So the Text, there was never no Man got any hurt by entering into Heaven to pray : These are the first step and the lowest of the import of this word : And I begin with this the lowest, because I mean to make a Climax, or an Ascend of the significations of it.

Chap. 6.

II. 'Tis a Liberty to enter ; and that importeth all free leave to come ; Licentiam intrandi, Licence to enter, if you have but a Will : According as we use to say, You may come if you will : There is no extrinsecal barr, or hindrance from without : No unwillingness or want of freeness in the hearts of God and Christ, the Inviters ; but all heartiness and readiness to entertain those that will : And they may take as freely when come, at they may come freely without needing any new Invitation : Whosoever will (come) let him take of the waters of life freely.

And so you may take in the freeness that is in the heart of him that inviteth you ; though not upon the signification of the word here ; yet upon the merit of the thing it self : I confess the word παρρησια in my Text imports not directly this freeness, as in the heart of the Inviter ; but yet supposeth it : for whence is it that you have the freedom to come, but because he that biddeth you come, hath that freeness in his heart. And thus much the word that is annexed in that passage of the Revelation, doth tully make up ; freely, δωρεαν, is the word ; which notes an offer of the Inviter, out of pure liberality, and munificence, to proceed from a largeness of heart : A free heart in the Doner : And in God out of pure Grace : And thus these two are yoked together, both Grace, and Freeness ; Rom. 3. 25. Freely by his Grace ; and Rom. 5. 15. You may therefore come, and take ; (and by seeking you do take) freely, on Gods part ; that is, without his, the least thinking much, or grudging at it by God, or ever upbraidure afterwards for it : (as James hath it : ) God gives richly, yea, with his whole heart, and upbraids not : Therefore so far as your will is within it self really, and in earnest raised up to desire, seek, and ask ; and continues in that posture ; so far you have freedom, without any check to take : And the waters of Life are all those streams of blessedness in Grace and Glory ; all that Heaven affords : So you have it declared in the beginning of the same Chapter, Revel. 22. 1. And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb : that throne is in the Holiest.

But who is this that saies this ? Our Lord Christ himself, and that from Heaven, ver. 16. I Jesus, &c. It is I that speak those things that you have now heard, and that follow in ver. 17. And take notice that they are my last words that ever I will speak to Men on Earth : And being to speak but this one, I choose, and leave it as my last farewell unto the Sons of Men ; Yea, they are the last words I ever intend to have written, by any Apostle, or other Pen-man, as Scripture given from me, or by my Inspiration ; so ver. 18. If any man shall add unto these things ; &c. So much must we suppose his heart to be deeply engaged in this saying, above all other : And that he might be believed in it, he again sets his Seal to this, and the other sayings in this Book, as the close of all : He that testifieth these things, saith surely, I come quickly ; ver. 20. They are Christs words also, as those ver. 16. and 18. and the Seal of all ; not the Angel only I send, but I my self testifie these things : And yet I alone testifie them not ; the word is συμμαρτυρομαι, I witness with another Witness ; not the Angel he sent ; ( for as he, the faithful Witness needed not the testimony of Man ; as in John, so nor of the most Glorious Angels from Heaven ; ) but I witness, and the Spirit with me, ver. 17. yea, and my Father, who himself from Heaven witnessed this of me : This is my Son, hear him, and believe him : And whatsoever I speak (saies he elsewhere, ) even as the Father said unto me, so I speak : John 12. 50. And therefore if ever you believed, or will believe any word of his, believe this : And to be sure it is of the most Concernment to you, of any word that ever he spake ; and you shall never have any such word from him anew, until himself comes ; and loe it is to invite you, (till himself shall come to you ; ) that you would come in the mean while unto him ; for whatever you have a Will to have, which himself hath; and if this Speech of Christs extends to those (as sure it doth) who do not yet believe on him, to invite even such to come for Life at first; as Matth. 11. 28. it is intended; then much more it intends those that have come already, that they would continue to do it, until he comes; for such have a right and boldness, saies the Text, let us therefore come, &c. But,

3. It may be said, and is by many, though I have free leave to come, and ask freely; and need not be either ashamed, or afraid; but I cannot speak what I desire: There is for this a further signification of the word παρρησια; A Relief which will prompt you in this: It signifies in a most proper meaning of it, a freedom of speech, which imports two things: 1. Free leave and liberty to the thing it self, to what you will speak; according to Gods mind warranted in his word; 1 John 5. And 2. Not as it is a leave to speak only, but a new endowment of Spirit in you; emboldening you to utter your minds: An enlargement of Heart to express your desires one way or other acceptably to God: And this must needs still hearten you; for the business you are specially exhorted unto is, to pray; and to ask, as I proposed it at first.

And that it is a most proper signification of the word, cannot be denied,

Acts 2. 29. Let me speak freely to you, saies Peter; (the same word;) And there it is both a taking free leave to do it; and also to utter what was in his mind freely about it: Great is my freeness of speech to you; saies Paul, 2 Cor. 7. 4. His heart was so enlarged by love to them, as in the verse afore; You are in our hearts to dye, and live with you; that he tells them he can say any thing unto them, ver. 4. and pour out his very Soul: And pectus ditertum facit: Here it imports a power of Affection to utter ones heart: And in Acts 4. 27. The Apostles and the whole Church prayed, that the Apostles might speak the word with all freeness, not boldness only, (as 'tis translated;) but with all Ability to utter the Truths of it; for it is all sorts of freedom, as there; They were filled with the Holy Ghost, as there; who is said to give utterance to them, chap. 2. 24. Such as were of free Spirits to express themselves, are called παρρησιαι ἀνεγεί: Arist. Rhet. lib. 2.

and is generally agreed among Criticks: And the New Testament so useth it frequently, and it is often put for plainness of Speech; when one speaks what is in his Heart; as 'tis there, John 10. 24. If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly, ('Tis the same word,) The Etymology of the word παρρησια is from πᾶν omne, and ῥῆσις dictio, A telling all:

By Nature all Mens Mouths thorough guilt are stopt before God, Rom. 3. 19. That every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God: And so when they come afore God to pray, being condemned in themselves, Guilt stops their mouths, and they are speechless: As he, Matth. 22. 12.

But when a Man is by Faith, and Regeneration, become actually a Member of Christ; Christ gives him a new Mouth as well as a new Heart: A Spirit of Prayer and Supplication: There is a Ceremony, that after the Pope hath made a new Cardinal, and put him into that Dignity with Esto Cardinalis, he hath a further Solemnity, (which they term the opening a Cardinals mouth,) which is to give him leave to speak, and vote in their Conclave, with the rest of them: This he doth in a vain shew, having no power to give more Ability of Speech then he had before, but permission only; but to be sure, Christ hath Power, and doth exercise it to them, whom he makes Fellows with him, and Members of him: Open thou my lips, &c. Psal. 51. And it is a wonderful work to see how Christ gives to poor weak Souls, ignorant and dead-hearted afore Conversion; how he gives, I say, a Glorious Liberty and Freedom this way, to ask what concerns their own Salvation: When Paul's three days of lying in of the New Birth were not yet out; Behold he prays; saith Christ from Heaven of him, Acts 9. 11. And whereas they know not what to ask, Christ sends his Spirit into such Souls, to help their Infirmities, Rom. 8. And what we are not able to cloath with words answerable to our desires, or to express what we desire: He draws out inward groans, and sighs unutterable: And God knows the meaning of the Spirit: That is, of the New Creature, which he hath wrought within us; as if they had expressed them in words: He knows what it would have, when it yet cannot utter; so that very Soul hath a vent one way or other; either by inward words; (and the Groans, Desires, and Thoughts, and Affections of the mind and inward Man, are in Scripture often termed words;) or else by outward Ability of Speech, whence there is nothing in our Hearts but are one way or another made known to God by us: The word παρρησία is, as I said, πᾶν πῶτος: To tell all: It warrants thee to go, and tell God all: A Soul hath liberty to pour forth his whole heart, Psal. 62. 8. Pour out your hearts before him: To pour out, implies, 1. A fullness of matter, which the heart conceiving within it self, pours forth on the suddain, and easeth, and disburtheneth it self of it, and empties the Soul of all that is in it: Yea, God enlargeth the heart, and causeth good Materials for Prayer to boil up within a Mans Spirit: And by these fore-preparings of the heart provoketh the Soul to Prayer, and to pour them all forth: And so is fulfilled that of the Psalmist, God prepareth the heart, and hears the Prayer: And thou mayest in telling God all, use plainness of Speech; (as was observed the meaning of the word to be;) even as plainly as ever thou art able to utter them; as thou wouldst do to any thy dearest Friend: All thy Grievs, Fears, Wants, Psal. 38. 9. All my desires are afore thee; yea, all thy Sins, and then mayest make Apologies for thy self; (as the word clearing of your selves is,) 2 Cor. 7. 11. I mean not Excuses, but all sorts of pleas which may move God to pardon thee, which thou findest in the word belonging to thy case: Thou mayest take all the words to thy self, Hos. 14. 2. that Free Grace hath written, and prompted in this Book, and use them as pleas for thy self.

And what a mighty encouragement then is this third branch, being added to the former?

IV. The word παρρησία hath a promise from God, that follows it, annexed to it, and entail'd upon it: And that is, That God will grant whatever of Heavenly and Spiritual things you ask: This you have, 1 John 3. 21. Beloved, If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God: And it follows, ver. 22. Whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandment, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight: The word in the 21. ver. Confidence, is our word here in the Text. And he mentions it there for this end and purpose, to encourage: That if with confidence, and boldness we use and exercise the forementioned freedom of speech in praying; (for the word imports boldness, and freedom of speech both,) then whatever we ask, we shall receive of him, sooner, or later: If you take it an Universal Promise, (as 'tis whatsoever,) then understand it whatever blessings, Spiritual, Heavenly; as Ephes. 1. 3. they are styled: We are to make our Prayers as placed in Heaven, (as was said:) And our Prayers should be answerable thereto; and the liberty that our desires take in asking, should run after things Heavenly, as our Affections are called upon to be: Colos. 3. 1, 2. If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God: Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth: Look what Commodities that Country affords, there you may be free, and as free in asking them, as you have hearts raised up to desire them: Yea, and you have in effect the things you ask given you: If your hearts so ask them, and from your Souls ask them: Those are the Commodities of that place, and of its own growth; only take in what follows in the same, ver. 22. Because we keep his Commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

C H A P. VII.

The Exercise of Faith in Prayer, which aptly present themselves under the Notion of coming to God, and Christ as our High-Priest, so far as the Type of the High-Priest, when he went into the Holy of Holies, doth represent.

I Limit my self unto that Converse with Christ, and God thorough him, by Faith exercised in Prayer: And therein I intend but only such Exercises in Prayer as aptly present themselves under the Notion of coming to God, and Christ as our High-Priest; so far as the Type of the High-Priest in the times of the Old Testament, when he went into the Holy of Holies, doth represent, and yet therein I shall instance in some more principal ones that are obvious in that dayes Rites, leaving your own thoughts to search and find out more of the like (that are to be found therein not insisted on by me) for your own help and advantage.

I. Acknowledge thine Infinite unworthiness to enter and to draw near: As being so high a Priviledge. You read, Levit. 16. 17. that the very Priests in the Old Law that entred daily into the first Tabernacle, Heb. 9. 6. Accomplishing the service of God; that yet when the High Priest went into the Holy of Holies, they were all turned out: And there shall be no Man in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, when he goeth in to make an atonement in the Holy Place, until he comes out, and have made an atonement for himself and for his Household, and for all the Congregation of Israel: As to shew, that as it is Christ alone that makes our atonement: So withal, our utter unworthiness to come thither to him.

2. Acknowledge that it is purely by the Blood of Christ, thou hast the right and boldness to draw near, so my Text, ver. 19. By the Blood of Jesus. Shall I tell you, Christ himself having been made Sin for you, and undertaken for Sin, should not himself have entred into the Holy of Holies, but by, and thorough his own Blood, first shed; and therefore it is expresse in the 12. ver. of the 9. chap. That [by] his own Blood he entred into that Holy Place: He had not come thither else. And the reason is, that although in his Original, Personal Right, it was his Inheritance, and ordained for him; yet having appeared with Sin for us in this World; that is, with the guilt of our Sins taken on him; a Demurrer stood to hinder him the Possession of it: And compare for this, Heb. 9. 26. and 28. In ver. 26. it is said, He once in the end of the world appeared to put away Sin by the sacrifice of himself: And observe how this is plainly called an appearing with Sin; And was his first appearance in this World; for in ver. 28. he saies, Christ was once offered to bear the Sins of many; And unto them that look for him, shall he appear [the second time without Sin] unto Salvation: This second appearance without Sin, shews his first to have been with Sin, which is also expressly said, ver. 26. Bearing (as the word is in that verse) the Sins of many; which his bearing of them, and then his offering of himself for them, was that which did put them away from himself, as well as from us; And was the reason why, that after he had done this, that he is said to appear the second time without Sin.

Yet let no Man here apprehend, as if I meant that Christ offered one Sacrifice for himself, and then for the People, as his Type the High-Priest is observed to have done, with difference from Christ our High-Priest is by our Apostle, chap. 7. 27. Who needeth not daily, as those High Priests, to offer up Sacrifice, first for his own Sins, and then for the Peoples: And the reason is, because the High-Priest was a Sinner himself, by inherency: And therefore they are there called [his own Sins]; and so he needed to atone for himself apart, by one sort of Sacrifice; as in Levit. 16. You read how on that day he did; that so he might be capacitated to offer another for the Peoples: Each of which he did at two successive turns, and vices; as you find by comparing the 6. and 11. verses with ver. 15. But it was infinitely otherwise with our High-Priest; as it follows in that Heb. 7. 27. This he did once when he offered up himself: He made but one work of it, in one entire Sacrifice of himself: And the reason of that was, because they were really, and indeed our Sins alone, which he was to offer for; but made his only by imputation: He barely taking on himself the guilt of them: And 'twas himself was the sole Sacrifice, (as there:) And thereby it came to pass, that in offering up himself for our Sins, he by that one Act of but one Sacrifice, discharged himself of the imputation of them; even as a Surety that is bound for another, by paying the full Summ of the Debt for that other at one single payment; acquits himself of the Debt, and the Principal Debtors too; until which be done, (in case he whom he is bound for be utterly insolvent and unable,) he stands bound for himself, as well as the Debtor.

But still so, as until he had performed this, and brought his Blood shed for our Sins, and himself came in the vertue of his having been offered up for them, there had been no appearing for him in Heaven, (as not for the High Priest into the Holiest without Blood;) There were no room for Christ himself there, (not according to Gods Ordination and Compact with him) until that were performed: God would have shut Heaven Gates against him without this Offering made: And Christ himself in the 16th. of John insinuates as much: The Spirit shall convince the world, (the gentile World that was to be converted) of (my) Righteousness by the Apostles Ministry [of righteousness]; That is, that his Righteousness was the true Righteousness, ordained to justifie Men, when they had first convinced them of Sin: (as in the verse afore he directs them:) And he gives them this invincible Evidence that it was, (as he had formerly taught) the true Righteousness, Because I go to my Father, and you shall see me no more: Was that such a Sign and wonder, (may some say) that he who was the Lord from Heaven, and whose Right, and Due therefore 'twas, to go thither at any time he would, without more ado, could there be the least supposition made, that they might see him sent down again? You must know that he speaks of himself, as having undertaken with his Father, to performe a Righteousness for Sinners here on Earth, to take Sins away, e're he should come to him in Person: Without the exact fulfilling of all which Righteousness first, there had been no coming for him thither, so as to keep his standing there: But they should have seen him again. My Father would not have admitted me, I must have come back again to have compleated what had been wanting, if any thing had been: Take it therefore, saies he, as an Invincible Evidence, that all will be finished according to agreement with my Father, That I go to my Father, and you shall see me no more: And therefore 'tis called, The Blood of the Covenant, by which he (Christ himself) is said to be sanctified, Heb. 10. 29. where setting out the Sin and Punishment of a Defertor of Christ, he saies, Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God; and hath counted the Blood of the Covenant wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing: The word [He] &c. not so fully referring to the Apostate; as if he had been ever truly sanctified by that Blood; as it doth unto Christ's having sanctified himself thereby, in offering up himself a Sacrifice unto God: And that Clause is added to aggravate the Sin of Apostates, in counting that Blood to be but as a common thing, when as Christ himself, whose Blood it is was consecrated thereby, to be the Mediator of the New Testament: In the same sence that chap. 13. of this Epist. ver. 20. Christ himself is said to be brought again from the dead, by the Blood of the Everlasting Covenant: His very Resurrection was from the Merit of his own Blood.

Yea,

Book VI.

Yea, Heaven it self was to be purified with his Blood; for though we Sinners never had been there to defile it, yet because Sinners were to come thither, it was to be purified: And so in the Type, lev. 16. 16. when the High-Priest was entred into the Holy of Holies, he was to make an atonement for that Holy Place, because of the uncleanness of the Children of Israel: And 'twas not for their Ceremonial Uncleanness only, but because of their transgressions in all their Sins: Brethren, this is strange, that the place called the Most Holy, whereinto the People never entred, no, not by one Room off, (for they went not into the first Tabernacle that was afore it,) that their ordinary Sins should reach, and defile that Holy Place, so as that an Atonement, or Expiation for Sin must be made for the place: How was it then defiled? Persons only, not Places, or Things, are capable of having Sins imputed to them, whither they be their own Sins, or anothers: For Persons only are capable of the guilt of Sin: Yet 1. By a Relation that Places may, or do bear unto Persons, they are defiled: Titus 1. 15. And it was Ceremonially seen, in the defilement of the Lepers House, and Walls: And so although the People during that Dispensation, were not to come thither, yet the High Priest came in their stead, into the most Holy Place, on purpose to make an Atonement for all their Sins, as being the place appointed, and ordained by God, to have an Atonement made therein for their Sins: And in relation unto the making that Atonement for them as Sinners, the very place wherein it was to be done, was it self first to be Sanctified, and Atoned, which the High Priest was to do with the Blood he brought thither with him distinctly and apart for the place; and then to make the Atonement for them: Their Sins were of so great a guilt, as the very Holiness of the place forbade any Atonement to be made in it for the Sinners, until it self were purified with the same Blood.

Now this Type was to be fulfilled, and it is certain, that the Holy of Holies that was then, was the Type; or (as the 24. ver. of Heb. 9. styles it) the Demonstration, or Scheme, or Pattern of the Highest Heavens; unto which place in the end, (though it was not manifest as then to the Old Jew,) yet they and we, even all the Saints of both Testaments, were ordained unto, are at last to come: Thence and therefore it came to be necessary, that the Holy Place of the Heavens was to be purified by Christs Blood, as Aarons most Holy Place was instituted to be purged by the Blood of those his Sacrifices; so as it was not only, or so much to fulfil the Type; (which yet they being given out afore as Types, was necessary; for though they be but Shadows, yet they are Prophetick, and must have an answerable performance in the Truth, and Substance signified thereby: ) But the Original Reason, and for which the Type it self was appointed, was, That the Holy of Holies in the Heavens was it self fore-ordained, to be the place for us Sinners to come unto; and did bear in Gods fore-decrees the Relation of being their Eternal House they are to dwell in for ever: And Gods Holiness and purity is such, (having made that place the Seat of his Presence-Glory, and placed his Throne there;) as to shew how deeply he resenteth Sin, he would have the place of his Childrens Residence (having once been Sinners,) it being so near to him, and afore his Face, first purified as well as the Sinners themselves: Not that it was defiled in it self, for the Presence of God makes it most Holy, but even that was it made it to be too Holy for Sinners: And therefore in relation to its becoming their actual Abode there, it was now to be atoned for their sakes: And upon both these Reasons, especially the latter, it was, That this which was the Truth, and Substance of the Type, was not so much to be conformed to the Type, as the Type was framed and formed by this fore-Ordination of Gods, which was the Original Proto-Type of all: And upon this it is, that the Apostle pronounceth in the 23. ver. of the said Heb. 9. It was necessary that the patterns of things in the Heavens, should be purified with these, but the Heavenly things themselves with better Sacrifices than these.

But

But besides these general Grounds of Analogy of the Type and Antitype; the words of the next Verse do expressly determine, that the Heavens, considered as the place, were purified by Christs Person and Blood: For it follows. *ver. 24. For Christ is not entred into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, [but into Heaven it self,] now to appear in the presence of God for us: They are those places in the Heavens (Heavenly places as they are elsewhere rendered) answerable to those on Earth that were to be purified: And he here speaks of them as of the place or places; as the word [entring into] imports: Even as when in Eph. 2. we are said to [sit in] Heavenlies; it is aptly and necessarily to be understood, to sit in Heavenly places; for so the word sitting doth require. Thus likewise here, the word entring into Heavenlies, argues those Heavenlies spoken of, to be the places of Heavens; whereof the Tabernacle, or Tabernacles of Moses, which were called also the Tabernacle, in the singular: Of these, as the place or places, the Apostle sayes ver. 21. Moreover he sprinkled with blood, both the Tabernacle, and all the vessels of the Ministry. So that not only the Vessels, the Furniture, the Supellex, the Utensils in the Tabernacles, (and accordingly the Saints that are to be brought in thither; that is, into Heaven) but the place it self that contained them was purified also by Christs Blood, that it might receive Sinners, and be their Domicilium, their Habitation for ever: And of all these, both Tabernacle and Vessels, he sayes that they were Figures and Patterns of the true, in the Heavens, in their several kinds of Analogy. The Tabernacle it self, the Utensils of the things in that place; and all to be purified with better Blood than these; and especially the place of the Holy of Holies in the Heavens: For in ver. 24. it is peculiarly specified and said of it; For Christ is not entred into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into Heaven it self, now to appear in the presence of God for us. And in that place the Mercy-seat we read, was sprinkled with Blood; and the Pavements of the place, that were afore the Mercy-seat, were sprinkled seven times. *Levit. 16. 14. And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the Mercy-seat Eastward: And before the Mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger, seven times.

I cast this in further, to shew the necessity of Christs Blood for our entring into the Holy of Holies in Heaven; either now by Faith, or hereafter by possession and enjoyment, that even the Mercy-seat it self, the Throne of Grace, that is, of God himself, whereon God, merciful, gracious, long-suffering, pardoning iniquity, transgression and sin, sitteth: That that also was sprinkled with Blood, Levit. 16. 14.

But you will say, Did Gods Mercy-seat need sprinkling with Blood, or a being purified?

No surely, not in it self. The Mercies of God are pure and holy Mercies, Acts 13. 34. τὰ ἁγία, the holy things, they are called (see the Marginal Note): But yet if Sinners shall come to have Mercies from God, his Mercies must be mingled with Christs Blood to purchase them, that God may be just in having received the Atonement, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus: So as still in respect of us that are Sinners, the Mercy-seat must have Blood, that we may be justified, even as the Heavens were to be purified with Blood, because Sinners were to enter there.

The Conclusion of this is, That if the Heavens were to be purified with Christs Blood because of us Sinners who were to come thither; yea, if Christ himself having undertaken for Sins could not have entred thereinto, unless he had brought the vertue, efficacy, Spirits of his own Blood with him, and that in and by the Merit thereof, it was that he entered thereinto; and that his very Humane Nature was through the imputation of our Sins to him, when he Tabernacled among us, John 1. was to have an Atonement made for it by his Blood, and by the rending it in two, in the separation of Soul from his Body, that so he (as representing us) and we as one Mystical Person with him, might enter into Heaven, and else not; then when ever thou comest to pray more solemnly, (whereby thou enterest and approachest unto that Holies in the Heavens) acknowledge how it is by and through his Blood, that thou a wretched Sinner, not by meer imputation such only, but in reality of guilt; and that thou shouldst be in Hell whilst thou art admitted into Heaven itself whilst thou prayest, Oh this Blood, this precious Blood, let it be precious to you, and let him be precious that shed it: And because he was so precious in his Person though debased, therefore it was that his Blood is so precious, as you may collect by comparing 1 Pet. 1. 19. with ver. 6. of chap. 2. His Person made the Blood precious; for it was the Blood of him that was made higher than the Heavens; Heb. 7. 25. yea, of God. Acts 20.

CHAP. VIII.

Another Exercise of Faith in Praying, is to confess all our Sins unto God over Jesus Christ, as Typified by the Live-Goat, the Scape-Goat.

Confess all thy sins unto God, over Jesus Christ as the live-goat, the scape-goat. What the signification of this is, I hope I shall make you understand. There was that day, and on that day only, when the High Priest was to go into the Holy of Holies; before he went in, in order to his going in, there were two Goat-kids presented afore the Lord: Look into Lev. 16. 3. Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place. And at ver. 5. He shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin-offering. And then at ver. 7. the High Priest shall take the two goats, and present them before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And then at ver. 8. He casts lots upon the two goats; and the one lot is said to be for the Lord; because that Goat, that lot for the Lord fell upon, was to dye, and to be sacrificed to the Lord for sin. And again, ver. 9. 'tis said of that Goat, that it was the goat the Lords lot fell upon; for 'twas set apart, and appropriated to him as a Sacrifice, and so the Lords in a special manner, in comparison to that other; namely, by way of Sacrifice: As it follows in that ver. 9. Aaron shall offer him for a sin-offering: And afterwards he was burnt without the camp, ver. 27. And the other lot is said to be for the Scape-Goat; that is, for its escaping, being sacrificed as the other was. And it follows ver. 10. But the goat on which the lot fell, to be the scape goat, shall be presented alive before the Lord, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness: And they both are called a sin-offering, ver. 5. that is, both were ordained to take Sins away: And this latter Goat that stayed and lived, is said ver. 10. To make an atonement with God, as well as the dying Goat did, but each in their several wayes; the one by bearing our Sins, and the punishment of them by Death; the other by escaping, and by his Life carrying them away. You read not that he was carried away into the Wilderness to be there destroyed; nor was he in that which belonged to its part, made at all a Sacrifice: But look, as the dying Goat was made an Atonement for Sin, in his way, by Sacrifice in dying; so the other let go alive, made an Atonement in its way, namely, by carrying away the Sins confessed over him into the Wilderness, by means of his Life: And that was transacted by confessing their Sins over the head of that Live-Goat, after that the other Goat had been offered as a Sacrifice for them, that their Sins being so confessed and sacrificed for, he might carry them them away: Ver. 9, 20. And after he hath made an end of reconciling, (namely the Sacrifice) he shall bring the live-goat; ver. 21, 22 And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live-goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, in all their sins; putting them upon the head of the Goat; and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness: And the Goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities, unto a land not inhabited, and he shall let go the Goat in the wilderness. Brethren, will you have the mystery of this? Our dear Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, he is both these Goats in the Types, but as considered under two different Notions; viz. Christ dying for Sin in the first, and Christ risen, and alive, and carrying Sins away into the Wilderness. But you will ask, why two such utterly differing Types; might not one have served? Brethren, the case stood thus; no one Type could represent these two grand Mysteries of Christ at once: And therefore Gods institution was, to represent one piece of him by one Type, and another piece of him by another: Now the same individual Goat that was killed, was not to be raised again; being a brute Creature, (that is proper only unto Men): Hence he takes one Goat that should dye, to represent Christ in dying; and as such, bearing our Sins and Punishments: And he takes another Goat that lives, to represent him alive again. You find the like parallel to this in the case of cleansing the Leper: Lev. 14. There were two Birds, ver. 4. one to be killed, ver. 5. and another called the living Bird, that flew away, ver. 6, 7. Then shall the Priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed, two birds alive, and clean; and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop. And the Priest shall command that one of the birds shall be killed in an earthen vessel, over running water: As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird, in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water. And he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosie, seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let the living bird loose into the open field. You read in Revelations 1. 18. how our Lord speaks of himself, saying, I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore. You read in Romans 5. 10. what singular differing purposes these two especially serve for; that as we are reconciled to God by the death of his Son, as a Sacrifice, so we are saved by his life. There is his Death, to pay the Price or Ransom for our Reconciliation; and there is the actual application or communication of Eternal Salvation unto us; and that is said to be by his Life. You have the like both again, in Rom. 4. 25. He was delivered for our offences; there is the dying Goat; and he rose again (and liveth) for our justification; there you have the living Goat.

Sin is done away two wayes by Jesus Christ: Either Meritoriously, by the Sacrifice of himself, in dying, as a price paid; which the Scripture every where speaketh of; Heb. 9. 26. Once in the end of the world he appeared, to put sin away; by offering himself, and bearing their sins; as ver. 28. Secondly, There is a taking away of Sin by the actual application to us of what his Death merited for us; and so Christ takes Sins away when we believe, and come to him for Pardon. The word John Baptist hath in John 1. comprehends both: Behold the Lamb of God, that takes away the sins of the world; the word is αἰσῶν; it signifieth both: 1. To bear the guilt of them; and then John saw him bearing, and loaded with all our Sins upon him; which did bring him to the tree, and caused him to dye: He was made sin for us, who knew no sin. And 2. It signifieth to take away Sins, by a removal of them from off our persons: To which the Latin word tollo, answers; but the Greek word αἰσῶν intendeth both. First, take the dying Goat; and that is Christ, bearing the sins of many; as 1 Pet. 2. 24. when he was Crucified; who his own self bare our sins in his own body upon the tree. And thus to lay our Sins upon him to this end, that was Gods Act; and his own, in taking our Sins upon him; not ours. We were not then; neither did the Saints that were then alive, understand or think of it: But that was Gods, and transacted between God and Christ. God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself; who made him sin for us, and a curse, that knew no sin: And God,

Book VI. says the Prophet, laid on him the iniquity of us all, when his Soul was made an offering for sin : And therefore also the dying Goat is called the Lords lot. The Priest did but barely cast the lot, but 'twas God that disposed it to that Goat ; he would have him dye. Nor do you read that the Priest that was a doing, did confes our Sins over the Goat that was to dye ; 'twas a single, sole Act of Gods : And so he bore them, in his being sacrificed and offered up.

But come we, Secondly, to the living Goat, Jesus Christ. And he, after he hath made an Atonement by his Death, is yet to take our Sins away by an actual Justification of us. And in respect both to his sacrifice and offering up, as also for the application of it to us by Faith to justifie us, at and upon our believing, he is called a Propitiation for us. 1. In respect to that made at his Death ; in 1 John 2. 2. Who is the propitiation for the sins of the world. This must be understood of him in dying ; for there were many in the World, and yet to come into the World, he was made a Propitiation for, who as yet believed not. But 2. Rom. 3. 25. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood. Observe here how he is said to be fore-ordained to be a propitiation through Faith on that his Blood, which was afore made a Propitiation on the Cross : For then it is his Atonement comes to be actually a Propitiation to us, when we through Faith come in to God and plead it, and not till then, and that in a true and real sense. This his being a Propitiation in that place, must therefore be understood in the application of him to us. And we may distinguish of them thus ; the one is Christ, a Propitiation for us ; the other, the same Christ, a propitiation to us ; even in the same differing senses and respects, that the live Goat, and the dying Goat are, in the foresaid Lev. 16. 5. both called, a Sin-offering, and for Atonement. And now when this Atonement is to be applyed unto us at our Conversion, and ever after ; then it is indeed that the actings on our part come to be done, towards the Pardon of our Sins : As to believe on and plead his Death and Blood ; and also what the Type instructs ; viz. to come to him as he is now alive, and lives for evermore ; for him to take our Sins to himself and take them away from us ; to lay hold on him with both hands, as it is in Lev. 16. 21. and confes our Sins over him ; and until then we remain in our Sins, for all that he was offered as a dying Goat for us. And this is the thing that I have aimed at, and made way for, in telling you this long Story out of the Old, and the Mystry out of the New Testament. The Priest we see did confes over this live Goat ; and therein the High Priest performed the Peoples part ; for it was done in a way of Confession, and that Act in no sense must be ascribed to God, in his laying our iniquities upon Christ. He confest not them for us. So then we, when we would be saved and forgiven, must perform that part, and come and confes our Sins over Christ, the live Goat. God the Father hath done his part in sacrificing his Son ; and Christ the dying Goat, hath done his part in purchasing our Pardon ; but he as the living Goat must do another ; and that is, both to cause us to come to himself, and lay both our hands upon him, and confes it was Gods part to lay our Sins upon him, but it remains to be our part to lay our Sins upon him, by confessing them over him, and afore him to his Father, now he is alive for the pardon of them. Look into the Type, in Lev. 16. 21, 22. it is most express : Aaron at the 20th Verse, (mark well) when he had made an end of Reconciliation ; (that is, when he had done his work, belonging unto that of the Goat to dye, killed him and then sprinkled the Blood) Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, in all their sins, and send them away into the wilderness : And he shall bear them away unto a land not inhabited, and he shall let him go alive into the wilderness. The mystry of this I take to be, that after the Reconciliation made for us by Christ in his Death, which was done without our knowledge ; he then rose again, and is alive to justifie us : But then we must come to him, acknowledge as the Priests did, and confes them in their names, all the Sins of all all the People of Israel, of what kind soever : And then this live Goat carries them away into the Wilderness.

If you demand the Mystery there of the Answer ; it is a like expression to that in Micah 7. 10. That he will cast our iniquities into the depth of the Sea. What is thrown thither, never rises more : As that Roll into Euphrates, to signify Babylon should never rise again. Heaven is not indeed a Wilderness, to which place our live Goat is ascended ; but it is in the utter taking away of Sins, and hiding them for ever, so as never to be found or remembered, which is here aimed at : And so Christ takes Sins away, and carries them into that oblivion and forgetfulness, as none can find them ; never to be remembered more, as the Scripture speaks.

The issue which I drive at is, as to exhort you hereupon when you come more solemnly to converse with Jesus Christ in the Holy of Holies, or with God through him ; not only at your first Conversion and Faith on him, but when you come setly to pray ; especially on great occasions to lay hold on Jesus Christ with both hands ; (as it is in this Type) that is, with all your might : And then to confess all your Sins particularly over him, as the High Priest did over the head of the live Goat ; who by his Resurrection and Ascension into Heaven, is escaped from Death and Wrath for Sins ; and in confessing them, transfer them from off your selves, and implore him to take them upon himself ; discharge your selves of them, by desiring him to take them ; (who knows what to do with them) not now to suffer for them ; he hath done that once perfectly for ever ; but to carry them away into an utter forgetfulness, and to be thy Advocate to God, to remember them no more ; seeking of God not to impute thy Sins to thee, but to him that was made Sin, that thou mayest be made the Righteousness of God in him : And so to make an exchange with Christ ; he to take thy Sins, and to bestow his Righteousness upon thee, instead thereof.

And Secondly, To make use of this Notion to help them over one difficulty, which those, whose Judgments are that Christ dyed not for all Men intentionally, may, or perhaps do sometimes meet with, in their coming to Christ. They must not, nor ought to come to him now to dye for them ; that is past and over, and were vain and blasphemous : Nor yet can they assuredly say and believe that Christ dyed for them, and bore their Sins in particular. And although that declaration Paul makes, brought home to the heart ; That Christ came into the world to save sinners, he speaks indefinitely, Sinners, and all sorts of Sinners, even the greatest, for he saved me, sayes he there : Though this be a sufficient ground to draw a Sinner that sees himself lost utterly, and sees Christ with a Spiritual eye, as John 5. to come to him ; yet if this course in the way of believing that I have now urged, be well weighed and made use of, it may conduce to ease the heart much more, as to any such stick and demur in his coming to Christ : For though I cannot plead that whilst he was a dying, he had my Sins for my particular, laid upon him by God ; yet now he is alive again, I may, as now I have been instructed, come in my own person to him, and lay my hands upon him, to be the live Goat for me ; and confess all these my particular Sins to him and over him ; and also unto God and before God ; having his Christ by him present in the view of my Faith. And that I may lay all my Sins upon him with this end and aim ; joyned with the most vehement implorement of him, that he will freely take the guilt of them off from me, and carry them into a Land of non-remembrance, as into a Land not inhabited, and therefore never to be found : And to mediate with his Father, to pass an Act of Oblivion upon them, and remember them no more. And I may be sure and certain, that I am warranted thus to confess and lay my Sins upon him, to the end that he should carry them away ; And that this is an Act, as now to be performed by me and him : And I may now come to him to do it for me in my particular : And my Faith needs not proceed here upon an indefinite ground, that should any way admit of a scruple, whether I am the person that he intends or no ; for I am, and every humbled Sinner, is now absolutely and definitely required to do all this for his own Salvation, and for his own particular. And this admits no doubtfulness at all; nor requireth a certain resolution first to be had by us, that God laid upon Christ at his Death, his iniquities: And it is a great relief and help to the exercise of our Faith; and an infinitely gracious dispensation of God to ordain such a Type, as after was left for us to perform this part, in a way of our coming to Christ, after this manner; to become a Propitiation and Atonement for us in particular, through Faith in his Blood. That God I say hath left us so certain a way and course for us to put in practice; and in the practice and exercise of it, confessing our Sins with mourning and brokenness of heart, that therein we shall certainly find Christ, and God through Christ, take away our Sins thereupon: And this, this performance upon the day of Atonement, teacheth us to do.

Exercise Faith for the forgiveness of all thy Sins. This that dayes practice doth for our comfort in a special manner instruct us unto; for it was that which those dayes Sacrifices were ordained for; that whereas they had particular Sacrifices appointed for particular Sins, as occasionally they were committed, for which they were to bring a Trespass-offering to the Priest; and he by offering his Sacrifice for him, made an Atonement; and the promise was, it should be forgiven him; of all which you read in Leviticus, the 4th, 5th and 6th Chapters: Yet notwithstanding these, as also that there were daily Sacrifices, twice a day (of the intendment of which afterwards) the expiation on this day was singularly appointed for a general Pardon of all Sins at once, past unto the end of that year; for that outward, Typical, Legal Atonement, signified no further; there being, as the Apostle sayes, a new remembrance of Sins every year; so as they were forgiven by the year, as we say, and yet universally. All which I shall demonstrate in the close of this Head.

But I find it necessary for me to speak first of the intent and scope of those particular Atonements for special Sins, because that will give some light towards the clearing that universal Atonement of this day: And also the knowledge thereof will conduce to the Comfort of Believers, and to the direction of the Faith of Believers, in case of occasional sinnings.

CHAP. IX.

Of occasional Sacrifices for particular Sins. Their intendment then, unto us now.

NOW as touching those particular Sacrifices for occasional Sins, we find how that there were some special Sins that were excepted, and left out from having Atonement made for them by those kind of Sacrifices: As namely, Murther, Adultery and Blasphemy. And this hath occasioned a great stumbling to some Men, least their being Types of Gospel proceedings in pardoning, the Sacrifice of Christs Blood should not extend to such Sins as these; but the same exception should now continue. Now to solve this, and to clear up the matter of our universal Pardon, which is now the thing I drive at: The first enquiry must be into the ground of difference then made; what that should be, that there should be no occasional Sacrifice for those Sins, was appointed: Some have founded the difference to lye in this, That Murther and Adultery, &c being Sins apparently against Conscience and special Light, and therewith committed with consent of

of Will, deliberately; and upon that ground no Atonement: And that those other Sins, for which expiation was made by Sacrifice, were only Sins of Ignorance: And that that was the reason why those of Murther, &c. were excluded from Atonement.

Chap. 9.

This some have deemed, because that at the entrance of those Commands and Prescriptions for such particular Sacrifices; in Leviticus, chap. 4. God seems to limit them, for which such Atonements were to be made, unto Sins of Ignorance, as the general Rule about them is in ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of the Lord; (concerning things which ought not to be done) and shall do against any of them: But yet that that was not the ground of that difference, it is manifest; in that in chap. 6. there is the same provision of expiation made for Sins against Conscience, and deliberately and willingly committed. As in case of a Mans having had Goods of another Mans, or some other matter committed to his trust: Or of a Man that had violently stole, or taken any thing from another; and the Person intrusted having so defrauded his Neighbour, did besides utterly deny any such thing to have been committed to him; and so added a Lye to his Theft, which alone was against Knowledge: Yea, and yet more wickedly had superadded Oaths to those Lyes and Denyals; forswearing himself. Here were Sins sufficiently against manifest Light of Conscience; and an whole cluster of such; and as high against (simple) Knowledge as high could be, and as deliberate as deliberate can be.

Yet notwithstanding, upon restitution, ver. 5. he shall bring his Trespass-offering unto the Lord, and unto the Priest: And the Priest shall make an Atonement for him before the Lord, and it shall be forgiven him; for any thing of all that he hath done in trespassing therein; ver. 6, 7. Nor is it limited to circumstances of times, as if he had but once or twice done thus.

It is an error of the highest cruelty unto Souls, as well as of derogation to Gods Grace, and Christs Satisfaction, which the Socinians have taken up; That for gross heinous Sins against Light, committed after believing, there is no forgiveness to be expected from the Covenant of Grace: But if any, it must be by an extraordinary way of Mercy, and not by vertue of the ordinary Covenant of Grace. But what it should be which hath induced them unto so desperate a condemnation of many poor Souls, that were penitents after such Sins committed; this I have much wondered at: Whether it were to make their Profession of Religion highlyer admired; or perhaps rather, that they in their other Doctrines, levelling Christs most extensive meritorious Sacrifice, with the Sacrifices of the Old Law; in their affirming that Christs Sacrifice doth take Sins away, but in the same way and manner that the Sacrifices in the Old did; (though they acknowledge Christs Sacrifice to be the more excellent) that therefore they should measure the extent of Christ his taking our Sins, by the scant standard of the particular occasional Sacrifices, instanced in the Law, in their taking away of Sins: And from thence to judge, that as the Sacrifices of the Old Testament served not to signifie the taking such great Sins away, that therefore Christs also should testifie and declare (for no higher end do they make of it) no more of Gods favour toward Sinners, then to pardon such Sins as those particular Sacrifices did extend unto the pardon of: For they would make Christs Sacrifice, though they would seem to cry it up for excelling above those of the Law, yet to be but Metaphorical and Figurative, even as those were; that is, meerly serving to signifie and shew that God was pacified, and in favour and grace with us; but not at all by way of Merit and Satisfaction from the merits of Christs Sacrifice, no more than through those of old.

But you see that even according to this their own measure taken from them, (which is most wicked) that particular Sins against Conscience, and those of an heinous Nature, were forgiven, upon the Atonement made by those particular Sacrifices; neither was there any exception against their Atonement, though reiterated, or again and again committed.

But

But blessed be God, we have not so learned, either his Grace, or our Christ: Nor do we esteem that infinite satisfaction of his, once offered up for all the Sins of the whole World, at so low a rate; as if it had no further efficacy than what is Figurative, (as those of the Old Testament were of;) or of no larger extent of dominion over Sins, for the expiation of them, than what those several particular occasional Sacrifices did reach unto; which were so limited unto those Sins, because, although the expiation of such Sins against Knowledge forementioned, made Atoneable by such occasional Sacrifices, did signifie to them that were Believers, that such Sins as they were, committed against the Moral Law, were made pardonable through Christs satisfaction to come, as well as Sins committed of mere Ignorance: For Christs Sacrifice was fore-signified in all the Sacrifices, and so in these: And so may confirm our Faith, that for such Sins in a special manner Christs Sacrifice was ordained, so to relieve the Hearts and Souls of such as have become guilty of such Sins; that if any Man so sin grossly, Christ is a Propitiation, an High Priest, a ready Advocate at hand upon such an urgent occasion, to plead his Sacrifice for their Pardon; as in 1 John 2. 1, 2, 3. and 1 Cor. 5. 1, 2, 3. and the latter end of the 5th Verse; yet there was a further larger intention of Gods appointing these occasional Sacrifices to the People of that Nation, and as they were Members of that: A Nation and Typical Church: That as every Sin deserved Corporal Death, as well as Eternal; and these especially God was pleased to remit, and pardon them unto them upon Sacrifice; after which externally performed, they still stood and remained members of that Nation, and not to be cut off from that Land for them; yea, and might still have the priviledge of that outward Communion in their holy things, Temple-Worship, &c.: For we must know that God was to be considered a Sovereign Judge unto that People in a double respect. 1. As he is the Judge of all men; (as his stile is Heb. 12.) or Judge of all the world (as Gen. 18.) Or 2. As he took upon him to be the King of that Nation in particular, and Sovereign Governour of that Country; in such a manner as he owned no other People in the World: And thereupon set up their Judges, and chose David, and his Seed after him immediately as his Lieutenants: And thereupon gave them Judicial Laws for the government of that Nation. And in this latter respect he appointed an Atonement by occasional Sacrifices for such Sins as deserved Eternal Death from him, as he is Judge of all the World; which yet as Judge of that Nation, he was pleased to appoint and receive an Atonement for: And so these Sacrifices in that respect and absolutions thereupon, are to be referred unto his Judicial Law; from which priviledge he yet exempted the sins fore-specified, Adultery, &c. which he as the supream Law-giver of that Kingdom, had peremptorily designed for a being cut off from that People. And this was the ground of difference of such Sacrifices, acceptable for other sins, when not for those.

Yet notwithstanding this political end and use of such Sacrifices for such sins, that they might continue free Denisons of that Church and Kingdom; this did not hinder, or prevent and exclude the faithful amongst them from having an eye unto that other use and end mentioned, a Spiritual forgiveness of those particular sins, as an Atonement for their Souls, when ever they had occasion to offer such Sacrifices upon their sinnings: Yea, they were therein called thereunto; for Sacrifices were not meer Civil Acts, as Presents made unto a Civil Prince; but Religious, as unto God that was offended: Yea, they were called sin-offerings, in common with all other, that were Sacrifices for their Souls; and the Blood of them was sprinkled seven times afore the Lord, before the Veil of the Sanctuary, and on the Altar of Incense, with all such Rites performed about the Blood that were used in the daily Sacrifices; as you read Lev. 4. from ver. 4. to the end: And of all Sacrifices with Blood (whatever they were) God indifferently and alike sayes, Lev. 17. 11. that the Life was in the Blood: For the life of the flesh is in the Blood, and I have given it to you upon the Altar, to make an atonement for your Souls; for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the Soul. And therefore the one as well as the other, served for the expiation of their Souls; if any of them did so sin. Moreover the circumstances of those particular sins were forgiven as well as the outward fact : And therefore these Sacrifices were expiations, if they had true Faith for their Souls. Accordingly you find in the forecited Lev. 6. 7. in the case of forswearing a Mans self, &c. the Atonement, his Sacrifice runs in these terms ; It shall be forgiven him, for any thing he hath done, in trespassing therein. Wherein God supposing that many aggravating circumstances might accompany such sins, beside the outward fact, let them have been what they may prove to be ; they shall be [even any thing therein] forgiven him : This a burthened Conscience amongst them would take heed of ; for Circumstances lye heavier on the Soul than the Act.

And surely if David could spy out a Soul-forgiveness for such sins as were exempted from particular expiation by Sacrifice ; namely, his Murther and Adultery, for which there was no particular Sacrifice allowed to atone him from bodily death : And therefore sayes to God, Thou desirest not Sacrifice, (namely for these sins) else would I give it ; Psal. 51. 16. yet notwithstanding he cryed out for a Soul-forgiveness of them : ver. 7. Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean ; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. And again, ver. 16. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness O God, thou God of my salvation ; and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness. He expresth how he had in his eye a further Righteousness ; (even that which the Apostle calls, The righteousness of God through faith) then surely from hence I argue, that if David had committed any of those other particular sins, for which a particular Sacrifice was appointed ; his Faith in offering that his Sacrifice would have lookt for Soul-forgiveness of that sin : And in like manner, other believing Jews, in their particular offerings for those sins, had or might have had an eye unto the like forgiveness also.

And the Use and Comfort from the instances of these particular Atonements under the Old, may be very great to us under the New Testament, to relieve our Faith in case of relapsing into presumptuous sins, against Conscience ; and those the most heinous, reiterated, and deliberately committed : And that notwithstanding such we are not excluded, but may have access to God through our High Priest for the forgiveness of them, in the faith and invitation of his Sacrifice ; which certainly being the truth and substance of all Sacrifices whatsoever, must be supposed to have been the ultimate end and scope of all, and aim in them all ; and to have an infinitely greater efficacy to do away any, or all particular sins, in the Moral guilt of them, then those meer shadows had ; to expiate, either individual guilts of Corporal death, or to be so much as significant also of the forgiveness of their Souls, as in the shadow.

Yea, and I further suppose, that this was one special aim and intent, why God did appoint such occasional Sacrifices for occurring special sins : To teach and instruct us (as it did the Saints in those times) to turn unto our only Priest and Mediatour Christ Jesus, and unto God through him, in a more set and solemn manner, for a special Atonement of such occasional sins, (which the Apostle terms, being overtaken in a fault, Gal. 5. 1.) as they do or may fall out, over and besides our dayly begging forgiveness for sins of ordinary infirmity and incurfion.

And I have made the larger excursion about these particular Sacrifices for particular sins, because I take it, the Apostle John doth, under the language of allusion unto the Atonements made by them Sacrifices of old, direct us unto the like practice, to have an alike recourse unto Christ our High Priest and Propitiation for occasional sins : In his First Epistle, chap. 2. ver. 1, 2. My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not : And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous : And he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. For the obtaining the special and more direct aim and meaning of which words, we may look back and consider, how he had in the foregoing Chapter, first spoken of the forgiveness of such dayly unavoidable finings, as accompany Believers in their strictest walkings; chap. 1. ver. 7. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another; and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin. And how that for these there is a Pardon of course, (as we use to speak) though yet upon our confessions thereof: And we may by comparing them together, observe, how in this chap. 2. he proceeds to a special case of Believers finings; and that is the case of sinning more grossly: My little Children, these things I write to you, that ye sin not, (that is, willingly and deliberately, against that light, which he had said chap. 1. 7. that the Saints walking in, have fellowship with God, who is light.) and if any man sin; that is, who so sins against his own light, and contrary to the light of that fellowship with God, he is called to enjoy and walk in: This is the case. Now in the words afore, chap. 1. 8. he had Apostolically declared against a state of Perfection; the Saints having no sin at all, the experience of himself [if we] and all other Believers, utterly confutes that dotage. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive our selves, and the truth is not in us And thereupon exhorts us ver. 9. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness: Meaning ordinary infirmities, that fall out in those that walk most exactly. It had been utterly incongruous that after this, he should come in with an [If,] If any man sin, &c. unless he had intended such kind of finings as were not included in those ordinary finings, that accompany all sorts of Believers; 'tis therefore a special exception of sins committed against light, and with deliberate indulgency of our Wills: And also that first of those passages, These things I write that you sin not; after those his foregone so positive assertions against the Perfectionists of that Age, is not that you never have no sin in you, for that had been in vain, and contradictory to what God had declared to be a truth, during this Life: But in that coherence it hath this scope, that you never sin against your light; and that is attainable in this Life; which his Fellow Apostle Peter thus utters it, That you never fall; that is, willingly, against the knowledge and dictates of your Spirits: And that Apostle in that place shews it to be attainable.

Thus much concerning peculiar Sacrifices for special Sins, and the use our Faith is to make of them; which was the first Branch.

CHAP.

C H A P. X.

Of the General Atonement made for all Sins once a Year, when the High Priest went into the Holy of Holies.

I Come to the Second Branch, which was the main thing proposed, and intended under this Head, at the beginning of it, viz. That there was a General Atonement, when the High Priest went into the Holiest, for all Sins, once a year, which we are to make Improvement of; to seek the Pardon of all, and any Sin whatever throughout our whole Lives from and thorough our High Priest, who is now resident and officiating in the Holiest.

The Jews then had indeed, besides those Occasional Expiations, and this General Atonement once a year; Continual Sacrifices, (as the Old terms them;) offered up daily, (as the new;) twice a day, Morning and Evening Sacrifices, in the first Tabernacle, which were offered up also by the High Priest, Heb. 7. 27. as well as the Ordinary Priests, Heb. 10. 11. And these also all were Types of Christ, and of his One alone sufficient Sacrifice; (for he and his One Sacrifice were the Substance of them all; Heb. 8. 3, 4, 5. Heb. 10. 1. Heb. 9. 11.) And they were offered up for their own Sins, and the Sins of the People, Heb. 7. 27. Who needeth not daily as those High Priests, to offer up Sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the peoples; for this he did once, when he offered up himself. And not occasionally only.

But over, and besides both these sorts of Atonements, God did institute this Solemn Expiation once a year, upon a Solemn Day; which is therefore by way of singularity called the Day of Atonement; and appointed not for this or that particular Sin only, as the occasional were; but for all Sins whatsoever: And likewise that Days Atonement excelled those other daily Sacrifices: 1 In the stile it bore in that the day was ἡμέρα τῆς ἀποκαθάρσεως, called, The Day of Atonement, thorough out Moses: It carried the Day from all other Days, in that respect: Moreover the killing and offering of that Goat that day, was in like manner singularly stiled, The Sin-Offering of Atonements, Numb. 29. 11. whilst yet the ordinary daily Sacrifices that were Atonements also, are made mention of; so that as the Day, so the Sacrifice proper to the Day is above all other the Sacrifice of Atonement; as if none had been such, but only it; which shews the eminency of this Atonement. And,

2. All the particular Solemnities, Rites, and Sacrifices performed that Day, declare as much; for they had all those ordinary Sacrifices that were offered up every day; offered up twice on that day also, as duely as on any other day; Numb. 29. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Lev. 16. 24. And there were moreover two extraordinary special Sacrifices of a Bullock and a Goat; that were proper to that day, killed in the outward Sanctuary: And then their Blood was carried into the Holy of Holies: And no other Blood of Sacrifices, not any of them was so employed, or made use of to that purpose; no, not the Blood of those daily Sacrifices, although offered up on that day, as was said, whereon the High-Priest did go into the Holy of Holies, was not carried in by him: But of those only; namely, of the Bullock and the Goat, peculiar to that Day: Moreover it was the Bodies of those two which were burnt without the Camp on that day, and not the other Beasts sacrificed on that day; as in Heb. 13. 11. the Apostle expressly limits them: The Bodies of the Beast (saies he) whose Blood is brought into the Sanctuary by the High Priest for Sin, are burnt without the Camp. All which Remarks do denote the super excellency of that dayes performances: The Lines, and Shadows thereof being drawn nearer to the Life, in setting forth

I. Christs Crucifixion, as a Sacrifice in the First Tabernacle, which eminent Note the Apostle puts upon it, ver. 12. Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctifie the People with his own Blood, suffered without the Gate: As also of Christs making Atonement in Heaven, whither he is gone to appear in the Presence of God for us; and pleading that his Blood; and from thence applying it to our Souls by sprinkling of it upon our Hearts and Consciences; so as all the substantial parts of his Mediation were most conspicuously held forth in that one dayes Ministry.

II. All this was to signifie as the Issue and Tendency of all the extent of that Atonement, to be Universal as to all Sins; and the signification thereof, to have been the special design of that day, with difference from both occasional and daily Sacrifices; and is indeed so expressly notified and inculcated, as makes it seem an appropriate end of it; for I find not to my Observation, that of any other of these dayly Sacrifices, it is in express words said with a Note of Universality for all Sins, as of this dayes Sacrifice it is. This Honour had this dayes work alone to be the open and publick testification of this Priviledge which we have by Christs Sacrifice; that it is for all Sin, it being utterly impossible that the Blood of Bulls and Goats should take away Sins; as Heb. 10. Here was, I say, a Condemning Remembrance of all Sins past which came up before God, and in their Consciences every year, and therefore God applied a Catholicon, or Universal outward Plaster every year, and yet that did but outwardly skin over the Sore every year in a Carnal Jews Heart, but not healed perfectly, and throughly, but so that it would break forth again. Yea, the very renewing of these Sacrifices every year was a real testification that even these yearly Sacrifices took not Sins away; for why else should they be renewed again and again, if the Guilt of them did not remain, which are the Apostles arguings, Heb. 10. 1, 2, 3, 4. yet the intention was to publish an Universal Pardon for Sins past at every years end, when the Atonement was made, such as that Law could give, but withal in the Shadow and Type of it minding them of a perfectly extensive Atonement which was to come, which should take away all Sins at once. By one thing God would take away all Sins of the comers to Worship. Now by the same Reason that Sacrifices every year serv'd to take away Sins past for that year, and therefore are called the sacrifice once a year, by the same Reason the Sins of the Nation in a like manner coming up in remembrance before God every day, the dayly Sacrifices served but to signifie the Atonement of them for that day, and reached no farther; and because a remembrance of them was renewed every day, therefore it was that the Sacrifices were renewed every day. But in this days Sacrifice there was a remembrance every year, yet not of that years sinings only, but of all Sins past whatever to the title of the years then ending, so as there was an Atonement then made for all Sins past whatever.

And if it be said that Murder and Blasphemy were excepted; I further answer, no. They were not left out from the intent of the significancy of that days Atonement, which was to point them unto Christs Atonement, which should be made by him once for all, for all manner of Sins. The Intent of his Sacrifice not being at all to exempt Men from bodily Death, which by the Judicial Laws of Supreme Governours is due to any Crimes. It was not the design of this days Atonement neither to Expiate any Crime under that consideration, but it was significant of an Atonement for the Sins of their Souls by a more perfect Sacrifice of Christs to come. There was left this Remark of Imperfection on it, that it was reiterated every year, thereby to drive them to eye, and expect the most perfect Sacrifice signified by these, which should perfect for ever them that are sanctified, (as in that 10th. Chap. of the Hebrews, he concludes that his Discourse of this Type) and be but once for for all offered up. If therefore any Sins were under the Type excepted for any respect, yet that one Sacrifice to come was before-hand ordained to take away all at once; as Acts 13. 38, 39. Paul told his Countrey-men, Be it known unto you therefore Men, and Brethren, that through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of Sins, and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which you could not be justified by the Law of Moses, neither Moral, nor Ceremonial, nor Judicial. And he spoke it to signify this, as far as that present Dispensation would bear, that there was an Universal Atonement for all Sins put into the Great Charter of that dayes pardon. It is not any where in expresse words said, or uttered of any of them that they were for the forgiveness of all Sins, but this Honour had this days Work, and Issue alone to be the open, and publick testification of this Priviledge, (which is the point I drive at for your Comfort and Direction.)

I am loath to make a Dispute of it, whether the Davly Sacrifices were reipfa instituted to hold out an Universal forgiveness of all Sins. I rather rest in this as a Rule that the Legal Ordinances, and Sacrifices as they were imperfect Shadows in themselves, so where in their Imperfection in their signification should lye, is much to be judged of by what we find said, or declared of them when they are spoken of as to their proper intent, and extent, and therefore I think it safest to say, that the difference between the Sacrifices of this day, and those dayly may be, that the Dayly Sacrifices eminently pointed at a continual forgiveness of Sins as they were every day committed, they were for the Errors of that day, as the Name imports. But these Sacrifices, and the Expiation by them once a year was ordained for all Sins past of their whole Lives, especially that had been committed that year. They were forgiven by Wholesale, by the Great and Lump on that day. Though even in these Sacrifices this mark of imperfection was left upon them, that there was a legal condemning remembrance of Sins past.

Now that this Universality of Pardon of all Sins was the great design of this one dayes Atonements is in most expresse Words, and not in Figures, avowedly declared, and so often repeated, as all Men must acknowledge that to have been the eminent Scope thereof: For, 1. It is commaunded that all the People should afflict their Souls, for all their Sins, Lev. 16. 29. I say for all their Sins: For so the very next words warrant me, which are the Reason annexed to that Command, ver. 30. For on that day shall the Priest make an Atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord. And 2. When the two extraordinary Sacrifices were killed, and their Blood taken to be carried into the Holy of Holies; this is the declared intent of both, Lev. 16. 15, 16. Then shall he kill the Goat of the Sin-Offering, that is for the People; and bring his Blood within the Vail, and do with that Blood, as he did with the Blood of the Bullock, and sprinkle it upon the Mercy-Seat, and before the Mercy-Seat: And he shall make an Atonement for the Holy Place, because of the Uncleanness of the Children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their Sins: And so shall he do for the Tabernacle of the Congregation, that remaineth among them, in the midst of their uncleanness: Again 3. When that extraordinary Atonement, by those Sacrifices was perfected; and that the High-Priest came forth from out of the Holy of Holies; then Aaron took the live Goat, ver. 20, 21, 22. And when he hath made an end of reconciling the Holy Place, and the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and the Altar; he shall bring the live Goat; And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live Goat, and confess over him all the Iniquities of the Children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their Sins, putting them upon the head of the Goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit Man into the Wilderness: And the Goat shall bear upon him all their Iniquities unto a Land not inhabited: And he shall let go the Goat into the Wilderness: Here are still you see, both all, and all sorts of Sins in three several words expressed; to the end, that all Sins whatever might be sure to be comprehended: Again, you have that [All] inculcated in the last verse, as the special design of that day, ver. 34. And this shall be an Everlasting Statute unto you, to make an Atonement for the Children

Book VI. Children of Israel, for all their Sins once a year, and he did as the Lord commanded Moses.

The Occasional Sacrifices served but for the Expiation of particular emergent sinnings, and each served but for one Turn, for that one Sin, and no more: And if they fell into the like again, a new Sacrifice was to be offered for that Second, and so a Third: And yet in them the believing Jew might spy out another manner of Sacrifice, shadowed out for their Souls: Again, in the dayly Sacrifices they might discern the same Sacrifice Typified, for dayly sins committed every day; whilst yet the Ritual Sacrifice it self, reacht but to that days sins: And still there was a remembrance of all these Sins every year, Heb. 10. 1. For the Law could never with those Sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect: And ver. 2, 3. For then would not they have ceased to be offered, because that the Worshippers once purged, should have had no more Conscience of Sins? But in those Sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of Sins every year: And this shewed the Imperfection of that Ritual Sacrifice; yet still so as in the Type and Shadow it Adumbrated an Universal Pardon, thorough a perfect Sacrifice once offered to come, ver. 12. But this Man after he had offered one Sacrifice for Sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God: In which there would be no more remembrance of Sins, ver. 17.

And although neither this dayes Atonement, nor no other of these forementioned Legal Sacrifices, served not to acquit them from those Sins excepted; as Murther, Adultery, or Blasphemy; so far as God, as King of that Nation, in his Judicial Law (as was observed) required Bodily Death for them: That Dayes Expiation freed them not from that extream Punishment, whether they had been committed afore that Solemn Day; or whether they had been discovered after that Dayes Expiation had past upon them; They could not have pleaded that Dayes Atonement to free them of Death; no, They dyed without Mercy, As the Apostle tells us.

But still all these did in their several significancies, set forth that one perfect and All-sufficient Sacrifice, which was the Substance and Center of them all: And as these on that Great Day, performed, excelled all the other in the significancies of it; (They being offered on purpose, on that Day the High-Priest went into the Holy of Holies: Thereby firstly notifying this our High-Priests alone Sacrifice, immediately afore his entrance into Heaven:) So especially, and most eminently they were designed to shadow forth the extent of that of Christ his Sacrifice, as reaching to the Pardon of all sins, holding out an Universal Pardon of all sorts of sins, of what kind soever, (but only that against the Holy Ghost, which in the 10th. Chapter the Apostle alone excepteth:) This was the proper intendment of that Dayes Atonement: And if in those occasional Sacrifices for grosser particular Sins, the Believers then might understand thereby, that there was a Sacrifice for the forgiveness of their Souls represented thereby, as well as a present freedom from the punishment of Gods either immediately cutting them off from their People, or by the Hand of the Magistrate, according to any Judicial Law, threatening Bodily Death; Then for the like Reason, the Sacrifices and Atonements of that Day; being so expressly, and lowdly proclaimed, to be for all their Sins whatever; they must be understood to have intended an alike Universal Atonement of Sins, unto all that come unto this Great High-Priest, confessing their Sins, afflicting their Souls for them, and seeking to be sprinkled with his Blood, and their Bodies washt with Water, as it hath been Explained.

And therefore let it be observed that the High-Priest alone performed the whole of that dayes Service, which was to be done in either Tabernacles, whether of extraordinary, or ordinary Sacrifice; to shew that there was one, and but one Great High-Priest that was to come; who should by one offering perfect for ever those that were sanctified, Heb. 10. 14. In whose Sacrifice all the Sacrifices concurred and met, as Lines in a Center; whether it were those of the High-Priest once a year, which he had instanced in in this Heb. 10. from ver. 1. to ver. 11. or of every Priest dayly ministring, in ver. 11.

These

These all are swallowed up as shadows into this great Body and Substance of them.

But especially this Dayes Atonement instituted to signifie this General Atonement; is for this cause so largely insisted on, and above all other explained, and exposed to our Notice by our Apostle in the 9 and 10. Chapters; as also chap. 13. 11, and 12. verses. And those Atonements made by the Ordinary Priests but in one passage of chap. 10. ver. 11. Although their Dayly Sacrifices also, imported the dayly taking away of all Sins for every day.

Seek then to Christ to cause his Face to shine upon thee, and his Fathers thorough him: This I mention upon two grounds, proper to our High Priests being in the Holy of Holies; from the Type in Lev. 16. You read how the High Priest took Incense, with Coals of Fire, from off the Altar of Gold; and then going into the Holy of Holies with the Censer of Gold with those Coals, and casting the Incense thereon, he caused a Cloud of Smoak to ascend: And thereupon God manifested himself in a Glory shining on the Cloud: For this compare ver. 2. with the 12, 13. I will appear in the Cloud, (so God promiseth, ver. 2.) which how it was fulfilled: The 12, and 13. verses tell us, He shall take a censer full of burning Coals of fire from off the Altar before the Lord; and his hands full of sweet Incense, beaten small; and bring it within the Vail: And he shall put the Incense upon the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the Incense may cover the Mercy-Seat that is upon the testimony, that he die not: The cloud of Incense, or the smoak thereof, Typified Prayer, as in the Psalms: And answerably, and in allusion unto this, the Penner of the 80. Psalms doth in the Name of, and for the People, frame his Prayer thus, ver. 1. Give ear thou that dwellest between the Cherubims, (in which was the Holy of Holies;) Shine forth so, ver. 1. Then in ver. 3. Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved; which he repeats twice after in that Psalms: His Faith that penned that Psalms for them, had in his eye that promise of Gods appearing in the Cloud: As in Lev. 16. Witness the Compellation he gives of God, Thou that dwellest between the Cherubims: He understood full well, that although himself, nor the People, on whose behalf he made this Prayer, did follow God into the Holy of Holies Personally themselves, but the High Priest only; and that yet that appearance of Gods in the Cloud from the Mercy-Seat unto the High-Priest, when he went into the Holiest, did signifie that unto those that lookt by Faith unto that Mercy-Seat, and Invocated God with Fervent Prayer for Grace to help them in their Occasional or constant Need; that God would shine forth, and appear unto them, in answer unto their Prayer graciously, some way, or other; especially when it is the Face of God himself which they seek; and that their hearts are carried out in Prayer to seek the shine thereof.

We must know that the Phrase of seeking Gods Face is more largely used; for seeking his Face, that is his favour in any particular request we would obtain at his hands: And it is a wonted speech in Scripture used to that purpose: But it is taken more strictly for seeking the shine of his Favour itself, to be manifested to a Mans Soul: 'Tis the Character of Saints in the Psalms, That seek thy face: And when their hearts are pitcht upon that request above all things else; Oh then, he that dwelleth between the Cherubims will shine forth, according to their desire, and his promise: As he often did unto particular Persons, amongst them that came to the Temple to worship; God shone forth upon their Souls, whilst they were praying there, which caused David to utter his request in this manner; in Psal. 63. 2, 3. To see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the Sanctuary; because thy loving-kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee: Observe how he saies, [so] as I have seen thee in thy Sanctuary: Calling to remembrance Gods gracious Treatings with him in former times, when he used to come there to worship.

There are Two things contained in that Petition, shine forth; which do thou, when thou conversest with God and Christ in this Sanctuary, seek for at their hands.

I. That

Book VI.

I. That he would cause the Light of his Countenance, in his Electing Love to shine upon thy Soul: That is, to give thee the assurance, with a taste of his loving-kindness, or special Love borne towards thee; in which he at that present doth graciously accept thee in his beloved; and from Everlasting had pitcht, and fixed to manifest towards thee in his Son: This is David's meaning there; for one sight which he desires to behold him with in his Temple, is that of his loving-kindness, which he therefore specifies in the following verse, Thy loving-kindness is better than life: ver. 3. And this is one, and a chief part of what my Text intendeth, by drawing near with a full assurance of Faith: That is, with assurance of our being accepted of him: The shine of which David desired to have, from out of his Temple, whilst his Faith looked to the Holy of Holies, unto which my Text invites us to come in Heaven.

The 2d. Is to manifest himself to a Mans Souls: To see his Glory and his Power, as he had seen it in his Sanctuary, ver. 2. That is, to have a view of his Personal Excellencies, and Glories: And thus I interpret it: For the wonders of Power and Glory, which God shewed by outward works done for his People, were works in the Execution of them acted out of Doors (as we say:) They were Transacted abroad, and in the World: The sights therefore which in the Temple he sought to see, were those of his Personal Greatness, Power, and Glory within himself, which were the Cause and Workers of those wondrous Effects from out of his Holy Temple, as those abroad in the World are said to be.

And if you apply this to the seeking the Face of Christ, the Direction then is, that thou wouldest seek a view of him, not simply in his High-Priesthood-Glory, (which is his Office;) and so what therein thou needest to have from him, to make use of him for, as thou art a Sinner, but a view of the Glory of his Person, abstractly from his Office; when therefore Psal. 80. 1. he saies, Thou that dwellest between the Cherubims shine forth; and ver. 3. cause thy face to shine. The highest and furthest intendment of those Petitions is, That he would shine in his Personal Excellencies. For indeed the Face of God, and Christ, are put for the Person of each: 1. Of God; Thou shalt have no other Gods before my face, to behold the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ: That is, my self. 2. Of Christ, 2 Cor. 4. 4. And his Face imports as the lifting up the Light of his Countenance in his Love and Favour; so the Excellency and Glory of his Person, as in 2 Cor. 4. 4. The glory of God shines in the face of Jesus Christ. The word προσωπον is in the Person of Christ: And that which follows, shews it is his Personal Excellency mainly intended, who is the image (saies he) of God; which both in Col. 1. and Heb. 1. are primarily spoken of him in respect to his Personal Glory: Now in that 80. Psal. where 'twas we founded this head, Oh thou that dwellest, &c. shine forth, as ver. 1. So he begins: But then in the 3. ver. it follows, cause thy face to shine; which face of his is elsewhere styled his Beauty; which denotes the Excellency, and Glory of his Person; and is also still spoken of him, as shining in, and from his Temple; and as therein and from thence he was to be viewed, Psal. 27. 4. To behold the beauty of the Lord, and enquire in his holy Temple: And that Beauty is eminently termed his Holyness; Psal. 110. 3. And as his favour, Grace, and Love, is the Light of his Countenance shining towards us; so his Holyness is the Personal Glory in himself; as that Vision in Isaiah, chap. 6. 1. Given of Christ when on his Throne; that Throne is that Seat in the Holy of Holies; whereon (now he is ascended into Heaven) he sits at the Right Hand of God with his Angels about him, worshipping of him, as there: And the Place, or Scene of that Throne, is in the Vision made the Holy of Holies in the Temple; for 'tis said that his Glory (that is, the Train and Gleam that came from it;) filled the Temple; that is, the rest of the Temple from the Throne: Now that Glory is that of his Person; for Christ himself refers this of Isaiah unto himself, John 12. 41. Now that Glory there in Isaiah is said specially to be his Holyness; as appears by the Angels celebrating him, and that his Glory with crying out, Holy, Holy, Holy; therein adorning adorning him for that; as wherein his Glory specially consisted; which when Isaiah saw you read how he was affected with it.

Chap. 10.

Also Heaven is the Holy of Holies, and it is the Personal Glory there of him; both these appear; (who is the most Holy, and the Messiah, and the anointed one, Dan. 9.) which our Saviour desireth we might behold, John 17. 24. And therefore a foreliand sight and glimpse by Faith of this his Personal Glory; (and so far as Faith is capable of it) is of all sorts of Actings or Receptions rather by Faith the most desirable and delighting, and fills the Soul with Glory; whom having not seen, (that is as we shall doe;) yet so far seeing as Faith will capacitate us, and may carry us, this works Joy unspeakable and full of glory: And such sights the Primitive Christians were much inured to, 1 Pet. 1. 8. verse.

It falls out sometimes, that when thou thy self comest to him, and afore him, that himself doth cause some Rayes of that more mean and little Beauty that is in thy Soul also (which is the Reflection of his shining on thee to break forth afore him, whilst thou art in his Presence: And he to please himself in thee, draws out thy love to him, and causeth thee to tell him, (he thereupon enlarging thy Soul that way whilst thou art a doing it,) how well thou lovest him; and to relate to him how Holy thou wouldest be; (which Will in us to be so, is our greatest Holiness in this Life;) and herewith do both God and Christ, wonderfully delight themselves; as in Psal. 45. it is said both of the Father, (for his Speech it is,) and of Christ the Son: He is thy Lord, and worship thou him; so shall the King, that is Christ, greatly delight in thy beauty: And Ephes. 5. Christ doth present the Church to himself: How, and why to himself? You have heard how he presents us to God, but here 'tis said he doth it to himself, as his Spouse: For of that he had spoken afore: He takes a view of a Soul that comes to him, and is taken with her himself first, and pleaseth himself first in her; and then covereth her all over with his Righteousness; and then gives, or takes a kiss of her himself, and so presents her to his Father. Now therefore when thou comest afore him, obtain (if possible) ere thou comest off, or out from him, a view of his Person, and of his Holiness, and Beauty; and beg hard, be instant for it. And to that end I counsel thee, Let thine Eye be fastned on him in what he is in himself: See what thou canst spie out to be in him, or from him, over and besides thy Redemption by his Priesthood, that should make thy Heart mote to cleave to him, and mote to love him, and delight in him. And when but the first Glimpses, and thereupon Motion of such Affections do rise and enkindle; follow them, and blow up those sparks to a Flame, let thy Heart dwell upon such interviews. Likewise every Holy strain, or disposition of Spirit which he draws forth out of thy heart of pure love to him, whilst thou art in his presence, they are so many Gleames and Lines of Beauty in thee, with which his Heart is delighted, whether they be brokenness of heart, and relenting pangs of sorrow for Sin, or submission to his Will with all cheerfulness, because it is his Will, putting thy Mouth in the Dust, in thy deepest Tryals and Temptations: Or that thou canst with all that is within thee, fall a blessing him for what he is in his own Blessedness and Glory, though thou shouldst not be partaker of it in him, and with him, rejoycing that Christ, he is with the Father at his Right hand in Glory, whatever becomes of thee, which Christ told his Disciples, that if they loved him, they would have done; because I go to the Father: These are each so many Casts of a Gracious Beauty in thy Soul, with which in thy Converses with him, he is favisht: These interviews, and intercourses of love of the Soul to Christ, and of Christ to the Soul you may read of Cant. 7. chap. throughout; both on Christs part, from ver. 1. to the 10. And on the Churches part, from ver. 10. to the end.

But to wind up this Head, and to bring it back again to the Language and signification of the Type it self, which we begun in, and made the rise of this head.

There were two things in that Holy of Holies, principally ordained to represent our Lord Jesus Christ : 1. The Ark, whose Residence was continually therein : 2. The Person of the High Priest, who came in but once a year : And then whilst he was in it, did but Personate our Lord to come to Heaven : The Ark it self alone I take (and submit it) Typed forth his very Person, simply considered : A Chest it was, made of plain Boards of Shittim-wood, covered both within and without with pure Gold : The wood signified his Humanity ; the Gold his Divine Nature, as joynd both in one : The fulness of the Godhead dwelling in him Bodily, and inclosing or incompassing his Humane Nature, with the fullness of it self : Exod. 25. 11. And this Ark is termed the Glory, and Beauty of God, Psal. 68. 71. As also of all Israel, 1 Sam. 4. 21. And it was under that Style declared of his Person, by Old Men, when but eight dayes old, Luke 2. 32. The Glory of thy People Israel ; crowned also it was with a Crown of Gold ; denoting all Excellency and Right of the Dominion ; having the Testimony, or Covenant of the Law in it, as Christ had the Law in his heart, Psal. 40.

The Second Representative was the High-Priest, who came in but to performe the works of a Priest, who was the Type of Christs Office of Priesthood, which is but additional to the Glory of his Person : By these two we are taught to view, and that distinctly 1. His Person, and the Glories thereof simply considered ; and that of his Office in performing the work thereof ; as a Mediator for us, and as an Atoner for our Sins : And as the Ark was the most eminent, and first bespoke to be made, Exod. 25. 10. so is and was the Person of Christ first ordained, and is to be esteemed accordingly in, and for his Person, the most pretious above all other ; being the most Holy, Dan. 9. And certainly his Person is far more Excellent than any, or all his Offices for us, and accordingly to be sought for by us : And the Priviledge hereof Christ hath promised to some special Favourites of his : John 14. 21. He that hath my Commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me ; and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father ; and I will love him, and will manifest my self to him : Mark how he saies, I will manifest my self : Having said, I will manifest my Love in those words, I will love him ; as distinct from, and short of this : Now to love us as in his own heart, his Love is seated in common to all Believers, whereas this is uttered as a special favour to them that keep his Commands, in a special and intense manner ; and therefore is meant of the manifestation of that his Love : And then the next words, I will manifest my self to him ; is a further additional, beyond that Discovery of his Love, or his Fathers ; and so of his Person which is usually called himself : And it was a Priviledge not vouchsafed the Apostles, until himself was ascended ; and poured out his Spirit on them : And then their Union with his Person, as his with his Fathers, was manifested to them, as in the verse afore, ver. 20. At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you : Which is expounded by this Speech of his in *ver. 21. Sure I am (that so I may still express it by the Type, which hath led me unto this,) that the perfection of that Glorious State which the Saints on Earth shall attain unto, is Typified forth under the Shadow of the Holy of Holies in a comparative unto the foregoing States of the Church less perfect, described by the Model of the outward Court ; and then the Court of the Priests, (whereof Rev. 11. chap. 1, 2. verses, and the last verse gives us the Scheme :) But after these Two Courts are passed in ver. 1, 2. it is said ver. 19. That the Temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his Temple, (The Seat of which was that part of the Temple called the Holy of Holies ; ) The Ark of the Testament : Oh how will Men then more continually rejoyce in the Contemplation of his Person, and above all, love him, value him, for what he is in himself, and for himself ; whereas* now it is a rare Priviledge vouchsafed to some, and yet attainable : But will not in the height of it be communicated, until these more imperfect and dead-heartē Churches, the Court of Priests which foregoes it, be purged, and more refined ; and that by the laying dead the Two Witnesses, which are both the Churches themselves, the Golden Candlesticks, and the Persons of the most eminent Professors, both of Ministers and People : After which, though we with the rest of the New Testament Saints are said all to enter into the Holyest, when we worship, as in the Text ; yet God hath provided last for them of those times, after their Resurrection and Ascension into Heaven, that is, a more conspicuous Glory of intercourse with Christ ; such as is an enjoyment of his Person, as the Ark in the Holy of Holies ; in comparison unto what is now but as in the Court of Priests : And yet let every one now seek it, by growing up unto perfect Holyness, and keeping his Commandments ; for unto such that promise is in all times made, and is to be attained by some that seek it, as a fore-running Glimpse, and pledge of the like, as then more common Glory of the Saints in those Times.
