CONGRESS. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Wednesday, February 26.

Mr. Law presented the petitions of a certain widow Palmer and Edward Hancock, of New-London. The petitions state that the husband of the widow, a custom-house officer of that place, was ordered to board a vessel at a distance, he took Hancock with luni in an open boat, a sudden snow storm drove them to sea: Palmer was frozen to death, and Hancock so frozen in his hands as to be unable to do any manual labor. They pray relief. Referred to a select committee of three.

The house resolved itself into a committee of the whole, Mr. Bassett in the chair, on the resolutions of the committee of ways and means, relative to internal faxes, &c.

Mr. Mitchill was opposed to the first resoties, believing that certain articles would not bear it, and that others ought to be free of duty, and some, now free of duty, ought to pay one. For the purpose of obtaining a more complete knowledge of the subject, he moved that this resolution lie on the table : opposition, however, being made to postponement, he withdrew his motion.

Me, Smille begged the house to consider be carried. It was a mode of proceeding which he had never before seen; and of which he had never heard or read. We have been repeatedly told that the spirit of the people was up to the war point, and by the very gentlemen who now are desirous of postponing. And now, when we are ready to show them the necessary means of carrying on the war, when we present taxes to their view, we are told that they will shrink; that they will be alarmed. Did they expect war would cost nothing? If we must retreat, let it be by order of the people. If they have called so loudly for resistance, for war; let us not fly till they desire it. How do genthemen know that they will not patiently bear the taxes? They will: he would at least Given under my hand at Lyme this 28th speak for his constituents. If the motion is carday of February, in the year of our Lord ried, we shall be the laughing stock of Eu-1812, and of the Independence of the rope; we shall become the by-word of ell nations. We must carry on the first year of war upon credit, and if we delay the levying taxes, we shall be obliged to go upon credit two years. What will become of the credit of the government?
